There is one feature of this matter that I think would indicate my feelings about it. Just, before I came into the house this afternoon, I was checking the resolution introduced by the former member for Fort William, Mr. McIvor, in the 1957 session. It will be found in the debates for December 16, 1957 at page 2420. That resolution is in terms remarkably similar to those of the present resolution introduced by the minister.

I spoke at some length on that occasion, and I think perhaps there is no need to repeat those remarks here. For some considerable number of years I have felt that hardship was being suffered by a considerable number of persons pensioned from the public service, whether under the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the mounted police act, or the other legislation, although I must say that the obvious answer can be given, namely "Why were you not able to get something done about it?" Be that as it may, that has been my feeling for a considerable number of years.

I am glad to see what is being done. I think it could be extended and improved. I will have more to say about that matter at a later stage when the measure is before the house. There are one or two things that require improvement over last year's regulations, even apart from the question of increasing the rates. There are certain parts that are, as I think experience has shown, inadequate.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. McIlraith: Before it carries I should like to ask the minister this question. Can he tell us what is the anticipated expenditure under the new legislation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is the amount contemplated in the item before the house in this year's estimates. In item 123 it is estimated for the present fiscal year to be $3,100,000.

Mr. McIlraith: Is that the same rate as last year, but allowing for the full year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, that is correct. It is on the same basis, this time for a 12 month term.

Mr. McIlraith: So there are no new classes being brought under the legislation, and no increases in the rates of any of the classes there; is that right?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to raise some points on that, but I think that can be done when the clauses of the bill reach committee stage.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-60, respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway company to make capital expenditures in the year 1959 not exceeding $348,900,000 and to make certain capital expenditures and enter into certain contracts prior to July 1, 1960; to authorize the national company to issue securities to provide amounts required for the authorized expenditures; to provide that, except as expressly provided, the aggregate principal amount of securities outstanding at any time shall not exceed $289,900,000; to authorize the governor in council to guarantee the principal and interest of securities issued by the company for the purpose aforesaid; to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the said company secured by such securities and not exceeding $289,900,000 in principal amount to enable the said company to meet such expenditures and with authority to give financial aid and assistance to other companies of the national system.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister make a statement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this is the annual resolution which precedes the introduction of the annual Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act. It follows the annual review by the special committee appointed by the house to review the statements of the Canadian National Railways, Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited and Trans-Canada Air Lines. That committee sat in the first week of May. It will be recalled that the government was requested to defer the present resolution, or at least defer proceeding with it, and having acceded to this request, Mr. Chairman, it now becomes somewhat urgent that the legislation be quickly proceeded with because it is desirable that it should be completed before the end of this month, for reasons which will be obvious to all members.

Hon. members will be interested to know that in 1952 the form of this annual resolution was changed so as to include the financing of all capital expenditures, whether authorized in that act or in earlier financing and guarantee acts. This procedure has been followed again this year.

The bill to follow the approval of the resolution is divided into three specific parts. The first part is to authorize the Canadian National Railways to incur capital expenditures of up to $348,900,000. The second part authorizes the railway company to make capital expenditures prior to July 1, 1960, to discharge obligations incurred under this act which become due and payable after January 1, 1960 in the amount of $130 million. The third part authorizes the railway company to enter into contracts for the acquisition of new equipment and for general additions and betterments in the amount of $81 million.

To summarize, Mr. Chairman, parliament is being asked to approve financing, either by way of the issue of new securities guaranteed by the government or by way of direct loan, in the amount of $289,900,000. For the convenience of hon. members I would ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to place on Hansard at this point a table giving the details of this sum.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. minister permission to place this table on Hansard at this point?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The table above referred to follows:]

Canadian National Railways

The amount of $289,900,000 appearing in clauses 4(3) and 6(2) is computed as follows:
Road property	$172,295,000
Branch line construction	10,141,000
Hotels	3,568,000
Equipment	88,480,000
Investment in affiliated companies:
Trans-Canada Air Lines financial requirements $57,000,000
Others $17,416,000	74,416,000
		$348,900,000
Less:
Uncompleted work		38,000,000
		310,900,000
Add:
Interim financing authority January 1 to June 30, 1960, on obligations incurred prior to January 1, 1960		130,000,000
		440,900,000
Less:
Depreciation accruals and amortization of discount on funded debt, etc. in relation to calendar year 1959	101,000,000
Depreciation accruals and amortization of discount on funded debt, etc. in relation to period January 1 to June 30, 1960	50,000,000
		$289,900,000

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not need to dwell, I am sure, on why it is necessary to make provision authorizing commitments to be made in the first six months of 1960. That follows the practice which has now become well established, and permits the railway to carry on its functions having regard to the normal time of the sitting of parliament and the pressure of parliamentary business, and to afford ample time in the session of next year for the house to appoint the committee which conducts the annual review of the affairs of the Canadian National system.

In addition to the features I have mentioned, this year's bill will provide, as did the bill of last year, for the appointment of the auditors of the Canadian National Railways for the year 1960, that is the calendar year 1960.

Mr. Benidickson: Are they different?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Prior to 1955 the appointment was made by a special bill. As the appointment of auditors relates to the functions of the railway, it was felt appropriate to include it in the annual financing and guarantee act, and parliament has followed that practice since 1955.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent on the day in the session of 1958 when this particular legislation came before the house, and in my other five or six years in this house I was on the other side and it was my duty, as assistant to the minister of finance, to pilot this legislation through. Probably I more ruefully appreciate now the predicament of the former financial critic, the hon. member for Greenwood, when speaking at this stage of the legislation, because I find there is not a figure which is referred to in the resolution before us that can be related to the evidence before the special parliamentary committee on railways and shipping without a great deal of ingenuity. I do not think the figures are there—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I say to my hon. friend that the figures which will appear in the bill—

Mr. Benidickson: Quite. I know that from experience.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —accord with those—

Mr. Benidickson: Therefore I shall not refer to the matter now or disturb the Minister of Finance in this debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They accord with those given to the committee and are to be found at page 215 and following of the proceedings of the special committee.

Mr. Benidickson: I was just going to come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that it is very confusing to this committee of the whole, which includes members like myself who did not serve on the railways and shipping committee, to find that there is no figure in the resolution before us that can be directly related to the printed evidence that the Minister of Finance has suggested is available in the committee Hansard of this session, on page 215 and following. But I know the Minister of Finance has, as I did in the past, with the consent of the committee tabled some additional information, and the particular paragraphs of the bill do, as it happens, tie themselves in with the evidence before the committee. But I do offer the suggestion from experience that those who draft resolutions of this type might look to ways and means of making it more possible for more than the 30 or more members who have given such great service on the special committee to see something in the resolution which ties in with the evidence that has been given before that committee.

I have looked at the resolution and it does in every respect, except for the figures, follow the pattern of resolutions in previous parliaments. I do, however, think it is appropriate for some of us to comment on certain of the factors which are presented to us at this stage. I was particularly impressed after reviewing, as a non-member, the very voluminous evidence of the railways, air lines and shipping committee in connection with several factors to which I wish to refer briefly. I hope that either at this stage or on second reading or in committee after second reading the Minister of Finance will comment on something which I regard as unusual, and I am referring to the bottom of page 3 of the financial report which the auditors of the C.N.R. made for the year 1958. Paragraph 2 says:

> The financial statements for 1958 indicate a deficit of $51.6 million which is the highest recorded deficit since 1938. As explained in the notes to the financial statement—

This is the reference to which I wish to direct the minister's attention. The auditor says:

> —on the suggestion of the Minister of Finance a different policy was adopted with respect to the obsolescence of steam locomotives.

All members of the committee may not have examined this balance sheet, but my complaint is this; that to those of us who are laymen it appears as though this figure of 7.1 or 7.2 in the balance sheet of 1957, re steam locomotive obsolescence translated to 1958 has been adjusted in such a way that the deficit of the C.N.R. for 1958 would have been greater to that extent than the figure reported in the press. In other words it would have increased the deficit of the Minister of Finance as announced in his budget speech by the same amount, had not, in the words of the auditor, a suggestion been made by the Minister of Finance for this $7 million-plus adjustment between the accounts of 1957 and 1958. I hope the Minister of Finance will, at a proper time during the discussion of this report, comment upon this point.

I should also like the minister to indicate to us in the same sequence, since this is a matter relating to capital works and capital requirements, the degree of success or otherwise which has attended the latest bond issue by means of which the C.N.R. is asking the public rather than the minister for funds in a substantial amount to enable the railway to carry out its responsibility. I hope the minister will give us full information on this subject.

I can remember when the hon. member for Greenwood, now Minister without Portfolio, used to have the function which I now have under our parliamentary system, that of examining the proposals of the government and, to the extent that he felt it was in the public interest, questioning some of them and in certain cases criticizing them even though they involved the affairs of a crown company.

I wish to refer to the auditors' statement. I am not knowledgeable about some of these matters which involve high finance, but I had the feeling after reading this report by an experienced international firm of auditors, that they were somewhat alarmed about the rapid growth in the bond indebtedness of this, the largest crown company we have, and in consequence the fixed charges that result from the type of capital borrowing which we are permitting if we approve the proposal which is now before us.

The auditors showed on page 4 of their report to parliament for 1958 that the fixed charges of this railroad—irrespective of the obligation of the government to buy a certain percentage of preferred stock each year, thus introducing new capital into this company, unlike a private company—as a result of this legislation and legislation introduced over the past four or five years and in many years under the previous administration, has resulted in an impost before a profit is earned of the difference between $25.4 million in 1952, after the reorganization of the system, and $46.5 million in 1958. The auditor, to quote his words, said this:

> It will be observed that during this period, fixed charges have come close to doubling and there was a particularly marked increase in the years 1957 and 1958, fixed charges going up $5.2 million in 1957 and $9.5 million in 1958.

I only want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that there was no person in the House of Commons who did more to create an atmosphere of doubt or caution in this respect than his colleague the hon. member for Greenwood, and I hope the Minister of Finance is keeping the debates of previous years in mind when he asks in this resolution for authorization of new capital expenditures not exceeding $348 million for 1959 which, in turn, will increase these fixed charges.

I hope, also, that the minister will give us a little more information concerning capital investment with respect to the trucking operations of the C.N.R. As I say, I did not have the benefit of being a member of the committee, although in the hurried way in which we do these things under the stress of the life we lead, I did peruse the evidence placed before the railways and shipping committee. As I read it I found that for the first time in many years the government's investment in stock of the C.N.R. has risen very substantially. I think the increase amounts to something in excess of $50 million. My closest investigation indicates that a substantial portion of that increase relates to the assumption of certain capital assets of the Hudson bay railway, but as this is a relatively new departure and certainly the greatest rise in government investment or transfer of investment from government back to the Canadian National Railways since 1952 I believe the minister should give us some explanation.

The figures I have indicate that this is a rise since 1952 of $52.9 million. I refer the minister to page 5 of the auditor's report. I have already indicated that the deficit for our largest crown company in 1958 was the largest deficit since 1938, a deficit of $51.6 million; and except for some bookkeeping, the reason for which I have not been properly persuaded, I suggest that this deficit would be an additional $730,000 or $740,000, and I hope the minister will inform us on this particular point.

I have indicated that I was not present in the committee the day this was debated in 1958, but I do not recall that we have ever had any difficulty debating general matters with respect to the Canadian National Railways and I feel it is quite proper at this time to ask the minister what is the present position of this government respecting railway pensions, because he ultimately would have this referred to him from the Minister of Transport. I ask what is the position of the present government, having in mind the long time attitude of the Prime Minister with respect to Canadian National Railways pension increases. I think this is all the more pertinent because of the resolution that was recently disposed of. There was no reference whatever in that resolution to the C.N.R. and I think we should hear from the minister in this respect.

I have in front of me four or five pages of Hansard references to speeches of the Prime Minister in past days as to what should and would be done if he had authority with respect to the enlargement of pensions for retired Canadian National Railways employees. As has been properly said, none of these things that come before us as a parliament could mean too much to us if we did not all have a pretty broad and large confidence in government policy with respect first of all to management and second with respect to the board of directors.

I am not familiar with some of the new directors who have been appointed by order in council by this government. I cast no aspersions upon them, but without any intimate knowledge of the individuals concerned the committee would surely understand that sitting as I do on this side I must have some doubt when I note that one of the replacements on the board was a defeated Conservative candidate and another was a campaign fund collector for the Conservative party. I am just hoping that the government is not looking on this organization, our largest crown company, as another Harrington lake private preserve. I hope that will not be the attitude of this government.

There are one hundred and some odd thousand employees of this railway. They are watching this government very carefully. I want to tell the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that they are very concerned about appointments of this kind to the board which directs the management of this tremendous corporation. I have looked up "Who's Who" as indicative of the achievements of the replacements recommended by this government. I am not going to delay the committee by giving that information. It has always been my view that anything as large as the Canadian National Railways should look very carefully at the manner of appointment of directors of its chief competitor, the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In this respect I find two faults. I am an amateur in this game of public finance and business, but as I look at it my first criticism, offhand, would be that the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways is too small. I think it is 6 or 7 compared with 25 or 26 on the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I speak of this with some personal knowledge, because I know five or six of the directors of the C.P.R. and three or four of those of the C.N.R. I do know that a C.P.R.

director takes his job seriously. He is connected with a great number of other corporations, and in consequence it is his labour to try and bring business, freight and everything else, to the benefit of his company. I am sure that C.N.R. directors now and in the past have a similar obligation in their minds, but I question whether or not the appointment of lawyers, investment dealers and the like—and I remind the committee that I am a lawyer—represents the appointment of adequate replacements.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does he approve the reappointment by the present government of directors appointed by the former government whose terms have expired since we came into office?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I inquire who those members were?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Wilfrid Gagnon and Mr. J. A. Northey.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, I am familiar with the business connections of both those directors. They are good businessmen and have connections with a great number of business corporations in this country. They would likely develop and direct freight and business to the C.N.R. I refer in no disparaging terms to the former if not the present treasurer of the Conservative party, Mr. Bickle. I think it is an admirable thing that a man of his status would take on this public service job which I agree has to be done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When was he appointed?

Mr. Benidickson: I believe he was appointed for the C.N.R. board to replace another eminent businessman who had a great number of corporate connections across the country, Mr. Symington.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, one of the best.

Mr. Benidickson: I think that could be related, and I have no particular quarrel there. I am not sure, however, that a lawyer from Moncton who is listed in "Who's Who" as a publisher and general trusts executive is an adequate replacement for someone more active in maritime business. I think we should have had another labour man from Moncton. With respect to the western appointment I question whether a fuel dealer is a proper replacement for the president of a wheat pool, an industry which as everybody knows supplies the greatest amount of bulk traffic to the railway as a grain dealer in the west.

I repeat that there is a necessity for geographic representation on the board of directors. The board of directors is the same size as was approved by the previous administration I admit, but I am inclined to believe that the minister should advise his colleague the Minister of Transport to look for a little broader representation. I have no knowledge as to what a director of the C.N.R. is paid. I have never, outside a sense of smell with respect to the C.P.R., and that is all I have—the Postmaster General laughs but he is one of the first to use an advertising phrase of that nature.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): But we do not have such a thing as a sense of smell in advertising.

Mr. Benidickson: I am not at the moment making any scurrilous suggestions with relation to the word "smell". I am saying I have a concept or indication—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): A suspicion.

Mr. Benidickson: —from very few direct contacts with the directors of the C.P.R. I know three of them and I do not think I have seen any of the three more than once in the last five years. I have a feeling that they are real salesmen for their road, and I am simply urging, as I urged upon the former government, that we entice to the board of our nationally owned railway people who have a connection with business across Canada as well as others. I have referred to labour already. I made some inquiry about the replacement for a gentleman who was a close neighbour of mine when I was a boy and who was the labour representative on the C.N.R. board. I find that Mr. Daley was replaced by Mr. James Griffiths, assistant general chairman of the carmen of America. I think that is a very worth-while practice but there is one point about which I want to make sure. Mr. Daley was in the inner circle in that he was a member of the management committee of the board of directors which meets constantly in Montreal. I have forgotten the number of members of that committee but it is not more than five. Mr. Daley, representing labour, was for many years a member of that subsidiary but so important executive committee of the board of directors. Is Mr. Griffiths acting in the same capacity?

I want to direct the attention of the minister to one other matter at this point. We have all become familiar with the effect of automation on the railways and I believe we are all acquainted with the fact that, combining the C.P.R. and the C.N.R., roughly 14,000 employees were displaced in 1958. This has a direct bearing on the kind of legislation we have before us now having to do with capital investment and replacement of old equipment with new that requires less labour. I want to say to the minister and the committee that we are constantly hearing from management of railroads not only in this country but in the United States about featherbedding. In presenting this legislation to us I hope that the minister has had a good look at the standard of efficiency in the operation of the railroad, having regard to the displacement of labour. I also hope he is looking behind the scenes and asking whether or not there have been similar reductions in the number of managerial and other staff in view of the fact that we are being asked to approve capital expenditures for the purpose of increasing efficiency. I hope that on second reading or later the minister will reply to some of these observations.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, every year the House of Commons has to deal with a resolution and bill similar to that now before us seeking the authority of parliament for capital or other expenditures running into hundreds of millions of dollars on the part of Canadian National Railways. Sometimes there are questions raised but the legislation is always passed and I think that is as it should be. However, personally I hope that the time is not too far in the future when it will not be necessary for the parliament of Canada to be asked to make these expenditures.

I am not going to make any charges whatsoever but naturally I am somewhat curious with respect to certain aspects of the operations of the Canadian National. I have not been a member of the special committee that deals with the Canadian National but I do have a keen interest in the operations of the railway. Canadian National Railways is a publicly owned system. In the past 26 years I have travelled from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast or from the Pacific coast to Ontario so often that I cannot possibly remember the number of times I have made the trip. My travelling has been both on the Canadian National and on the Canadian Pacific, and in making these long trips I have had a great many conversations with locomotive engineers, firemen, brakemen, passenger and freight conductors. These conversations have resulted in my present curiosity. I sincerely hope that either now or on second reading the Minister of Finance will answer certain questions I have in mind arising from my conversations over the past 26 years with the men who are on the job and also because of the number of letters I have received in the past week as a result of the publicity given to the hearings before the special committee of the house which investigated the Canadian National.

My main question is, what was the relationship and attitude of the previous government with respect to the C.N.R.? If the minister cannot answer that, what is the attitude and relationship of the present government with respect to the C.N.R. as a publicly owned system compared with the Canadian Pacific, a privately owned railway? Does the government support the morale of the employees of the publicly owned system? Is there any direction at all from the present government to the Canadian National to operate in the most efficient way it possibly can and do the best job it possibly can? I should like very much to have an answer to that because from what I have been told by C.N.R. employees there is either a peculiar situation on that railway involving direct or indirect sabotage or else there is not sufficient backing of the publicly owned company. I have yet to find a person operating trains on the Canadian National, locomotive engineers, firemen, freight conductors or passenger conductors who will not say that the Canadian National could beat the blazes out of the Canadian Pacific on time from the Pacific to the Atlantic. But, Mr. Chairman, the schedules make the running time of the Canadian National a little bit slower than that of the Canadian Pacific. Why is this so?

The Canadian National has not the steep grades of the privately owned line. Those who do the running say that they could beat the privately owned line by hours. We, the people, own the Canadian National so why do we not do what all the conductors, engineers and dispatchers say can be done? If what I am told by businessmen is correct, and I think it is, then speed is money in so far as transportation matters are concerned. Who sets the scheduled time of passenger and freight trains on the Canadian National? Why is it, especially with regard to the Rocky mountain section where there are practically no grades at all compared with the Canadian Pacific grades, that the freight situation is the way it is?

I say, Mr. Chairman, it is curious, and I hope the minister can tell us why that situation prevails, and whether or not there are any controls being placed upon the Canadian National to limit the time in which those trains, either passenger or freight, can traverse the country from ocean to ocean. I am very glad the Postmaster General is here. I am not speaking of the past two or three years because I have made no check during that time, and I want that clearly understood. I do know that previous to that I have actually seen Her Majesty's mail being transferred from Canadian National trains to Canadian Pacific trains at the first junction point, and yet the Canadian National train would reach Vancouver three hours before the Canadian Pacific train to which the mail was transferred. I have actually seen that happen, but not within the last two or three years. Does that situation still apply, or does it apply in similar circumstances across our entire transcontinental system?

There are other questions that come to mind. We have just recently opened a $11 million post office in Vancouver. Well over $1 million, I know, must have been spent on the tunnel from the post office to the Canadian Pacific station—it might well be $2 million, including equipment. Is there any reason why no tunnel was constructed to the Canadian National and Great Northern station, the Canadian National carries mail across Canada and the Great Northern to the United States? Is there any reason why there is only a tunnel to the Canadian Pacific station and not to the Canadian National? There are many questions. The Canadian National, I believe, is known as one of the greatest transportation systems in the world. We are certain it could be a lot better, so why is it not allowed to improve?

I have travelled Canadian Pacific for the last few trips I have made between Vancouver and Ottawa. It is amazing, Mr. Chairman, when you get into a discussion with travellers who have travelled on both lines to hear them say they will only travel by Canadian Pacific. I usually ask them why, and they will say that the Canadian Pacific has the dome cars and the Canadian National has not. Why, in the competition for passenger traffic and with far less tunnels than the Canadian Pacific has, has the Canadian National not the modern equipment? I am told that the Canadian National is losing out on passenger traffic because they have not the equipment. The Canadian National would not have to spend anywhere near the money on tunnel changes that the Canadian Pacific has, and yet they have not the type of equipment that the privately owned line has.

Is it deliberate? Is there any influence brought to bear or is it poor management? There must be answers somewhere to these questions which are posed to me either directly in conversation or by correspondence. I do not know the answers. All I do know is that year after year we have to vote hundreds of millions of dollars for the Canadian National. There is no objection at all. Could the amount be reduced by greater efficiency? Could the amount be reduced by a speedier service? Could the amount be reduced if the Canadian National were permitted to operate on an absolutely competitive basis? All the information and evidence I have would lead me to believe that it could.

I hope that the minister, either now or on second reading, will make clear the policy and attitude of this government toward the operation of the Canadian National. Are they allowed a free hand in competition? Are they allowed a free hand on service and on equipment? As soon as the minister can give us answers to these questions, then we will know where to place the responsibility, either upon the government or on the management of the Canadian National.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of delaying this resolution unduly. There are, however, a number of points that I should like to bring to the attention of the committee and of the government as well. They arise, not only out of the statement made by the minister but out of other extraneous matters, some of which have been dealt by my colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

I have listened with interest to the speech which has just been made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Not being on the other side of the house any longer, I have no intention of stating what the policy of the former administration was with reference to directing or not directing the affairs of Canadian National Railways. The minister, I am sure, will be able to give the position of the government if he chooses to reply to the query made by the hon. member.

However, I rose to deal with a number of other matters. In making his introductory statement the minister said that the bill divided itself into three parts. First, the bill authorizes the C.N.R. to incur an expenditure up to $348 million. Next, it authorizes the C.N.R. to make expenditures prior to July 1, 1960 in an amount of $130 million. Third, it authorizes the C.N.R. to enter into contracts for new equipment in the amount of $81 million, I believe. This information prompts me to discuss a matter which I have already brought to the attention of the government and which arises out of the establishment of the royal commission on transportation.

While no indication has yet been given by the Prime Minister or by the Minister of Transport as to the likelihood of the royal commission inquiring into certain aspects of the operation of the Canadian National Railways other than the broad terms of reference which have already been announced, it seems to me that some consideration ought to be given to that matter. It seems to me that, because of the position in which Canadian National Railways finds itself at the moment, active consideration ought to be given by the government, not to going into the whole financial aspect of the railway but at least to going into some of the aspects which fall to be determined by a royal commission of this nature on transportation.

I can think of a number of matters to which consideration might be given. It seems to me that the commission might well look at the C.N.R. finances; I refer to the overall capitalization. My friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River spoke about the deficit position and the increase in certain costs such as fixed assets. He drew the attention of the committee to the fact that over a period of years these costs have gone up considerably because of inflation, increase in the costs of materials, increase in the cost of equipment itself and also the dieselization program of the C.N.R. It also seems to me that the commission might well look into the terms under which the government capital should be provided.

I also wonder whether the time has not arrived to examine into the whole question of the financing of Canadian National Railways and to take another look at the capital structure of Canadian National Railways. As the committee knows, this was done in part by the former royal commission on transportation which made a substantive recommendation having to do with the recapitalization of the C.N.R., which recommendation was later implemented by the then government.

Is it necessary to give consideration to a matter of this kind at this time? I believe it is necessary. I do not think the minister will disagree with what I am saying, at least in its broad aspects. Again I want to make it clear that it is not possible to make a study of matters which have been entrusted to the royal commission and to go into the whole matter of the financing of the Canadian National Railways. However, I think there are aspects which might well be studied within the broad terms of the commission's reference.

May I now pass to another matter. The minister said that this bill deals with the appointment of auditors for the Canadian National Railways. I must say to him that I view with concern the appointment of an auditor for the year 1960 other than the firm which has given such excellent service to the Canadian National Railways over a period of years. I view it with concern for more than one reason. In the first place, I am informed —and I believe this to be so—that the present auditors, George A. Touche and Company were not given notice that they were to be replaced by another firm. In the second place, I view this matter with concern because it was my experience when I sat on the other side of the house that the operations of the Canadian National Railways are such that they are to be found not only from one end of this country to the other but also in the United States as well. The Canadian National Railways have always argued that it is difficult if not impossible for an auditor to do the kind of job that should be done unless that auditor has subsidiaries or branches in the United States as well as in the large cities of Canada.

George A. Touche and Company have such subsidiaries. The Canadian Naional Railways operates a number of lines in the United States and, I need hardly add, lines in every part of Canada. The auditor who has been appointed for the year 1960—and I say this without wanting to reflect on him personally in the slightest degree—is, as the minister knows, a former defeated candidate of the Progressive Conservative party in one of the Montreal ridings. I do not want to pursue the matter unduly but I fear—and I shall have something to say about this subject a little bit later on—the danger of introducing politics into a railway of this magnitude.

I come back again to the point of the importance of and the necessity for an auditor of a crown corporation such as the Canadian National Railways having offices in the various regions of Canada, particularly a crown corporation with assets such as those possessed by the Canadian National Railways which include railways, airlines—I take it that the appointment of the auditors for 1960 also covers Trans-Canada Air Lines; if I am mistaken I stand to be corrected—telecommunications, transportation facilities, hotels; all of which, added up, come to many hundreds of millions of dollars; I believe the amount is well over $3 billion. Those are substantial assets. It would seem to me that the person who is going to audit such a corporation should at least have had some experience in that field. George A. Touche and Company have had a great deal of experience. I can remember that on another occasion many years ago, when there was a change of government there was also a change of auditors. On that occasion—and now I speak, of course, only from memory—the firm appointed was one which had offices all over the country and also in the United States.

Mr. Benidickson: They have international connections.

Mr. Chevrier: That is extremely important for a crown corporation such as the Canadian National Railways.

I deprecate also, Mr. Chairman, the appointment of some of the members of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways. Again I do not want to reflect on the person of any of these individuals, but I do feel it is a mistake when on a board of this importance men seem to be appointed rather because of their political affiliations than because of their business competence or business connections. I refer now to the successor to Mr. Ralph Brenan. I would like to put on the record a portion of an editorial which appeared in the Fundy Fisherman of January 28, 1959. The editorial is entitled, "Name Political Leader to C.N.R. Board", and reads as follows:

There will be widespread concern throughout the Atlantic region at the replacement of Ralph B. Brenan, one of the region's most outstanding business leaders, as director of the Canadian National Railways. It is well known that the difficulties of the C.N.R. are very great and require the most experienced management to surmount. Mr. Brenan brought to the board of management gifts of understanding of regional problems that are widely recognized as being of exceptional calibre.

The announcement from the office of Hon. George Hees, Minister of Transport, said that Mr. Brenan's term of office has expired. His replacement, W. Gerald Stewart, Q.C., is a past president of the New Brunswick Progressive Conservative Association.

Mr. Benidickson: And a defeated Conservative candidate.

Mr. Chevrier: I continue:

It has long been recognized that there should be a minimum of political weight given to appointments to a board of directors such as the C.N.R. and that business management qualifications are of paramount concern. The great seaports of Halifax and Saint John, faced with growing difficulties, had, in Mr. Brenan, a representative on the board thoroughly intimate with the problems of freight movements as they affect ocean shipping. His place will be difficult to fill.

Then I come to the final part of this editorial:

In the loss of the services, guidance and knowledge of Ralph B. Brenan, the C.N.R. has been given a severe blow. In a time of economic recession when the most efficient and capable management and direction is important, it is particularly unfortunate that his outstanding business ability is lost to a public board of such importance to the well-being of the Atlantic region.

Saint John citizens, who have for many years intimately known Mr. Brenan's exceptional gifts as a community leader and selfless devotion to public duties, will especially regret that his services are no longer available to an organization which is so important in many ways to the seaport.

Those are not my views; those are the views of this newspaper.

Then there is another appointment which has been made to replace that of Mr. Parker from the province of Manitoba. The minister also will correct me if I am wrong in this respect. My information is that the person who has succeeded Mr. Parker has far more information and is far more competent in affairs concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than in those concerning the Canadian National.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Mr. Parker was president of the Manitoba wheat pool and he is still available?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I understand that is the case, Mr. Chairman. However, this appointment has been made to succeed that of Mr. Parker's. If that is the case, as I have indicated, then I believe that that is not a good thing for the adequate operation of the Canadian National Railways.

There are a number of other matters that I might go into, but I desire to mention but one, and that has to do with the lay-offs on the Canadian National Railways. Unfortunately I am not in a position to place the facts on the record concerning that because we have not been given the information in that respect that I think we should have had. It was the practice of the former administration when asked questions of this nature to place on Hansard on orders of the day or on other occasions the position in so far as the C.N.R. lay-offs were concerned. I remember when I occupied a position on the other side that I was taken to task on more than one occasion by the then hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre because of the lay-offs which took place from time to time, and they were not nearly as great or substantial as they have been during the course of the years 1958 and 1959. As I say, I was taken to task because of lay-offs arising out of the information that I gave on the orders of the day.

But we have not been furnished such information. Questions have remained unanswered, or questions have been answered by indicating that the information could be obtained in committee. This information was not obtained in committee. Nonetheless, it seems to me that it should have been given in the house. The fact is that we have not received a comprehensive up to date statement about the lay-offs on the Canadian National Railways although we know that they are pretty substantial. It would seem to me, that before this bill passes the minister should give some indication of what these are.

There are, I am informed, employees of the Canadian National Railways having in some cases seniority of 35 and 40 years who have been laid off. Is there any reason for this? Is it because the freight and passenger business of the Canadian National Railways has declined to the point where it has been necessary to do this? If that is the case, then I think the minister should give a full and frank statement of what the position is in all the regions of Canada, and then we will know the answer to that question.

I desire at this time to bring these points to the attention of the committee because I feel that before this measure passes they should be given consideration not only by the government but also by the minister who speaks for the government on this occasion.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question. Does the hon. member know that Mr. Brenan, who he referred to as being replaced by Mr. Stewart, has been a treasurer of the Liberal party in the Saint John area for some time now? I do not mean to suggest that he is not a good citizen, but—

Mr. Benidickson: I suggested the other good citizen was Mr. E. W. Bickle, the former national treasurer of the Conservative party.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the hon. member's question. The information I have put on record is that Mr. W. Gerald Stewart, Q.C., is a past president of the New Brunswick Progressive Conservative association.

Mr. Benidickson: And he is a lawyer.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, there is one problem in connection with the operation of the Canadian National Railways in Newfoundland which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time, and through him to his colleagues in the government. The railway service in Newfoundland is different, I think, from that in the other provinces in that it serves both inland and coastal settlements. The coastal settlements are served by coastal boats which are operated by the railway. In addition, the railway operates ships which transfer freight from mainland ports to ports in Newfoundland.

The problem I wish to describe to the minister is one which concerns freight claims. If an accident happens to a train, and goods in transit are damaged or lost the person to whom the goods are consigned can submit a claim, and that claim may be recognized and paid. If a ship transporting goods for the C.N.R. from mainland ports to Newfoundland ports runs ashore or meets with an accident, the same process is followed—the person to whom the freight is consigned can submit a claim and obtain compensation in respect of damaged or lost goods. But the people in the coastal regions who are served by coastal boats do not have this privilege. A person who loses freight or whose goods are damaged because a coastal boat runs ashore or meets with an accident cannot obtain satisfaction of a claim for loss or damage, the reason being that these coastal boats operated by the C.N.R. are exempted by the water carrier act. Because of these circumstances there is discrimination between people who live inland and people who live on the coast and who are served by the same company. It seems to me that the answer is to have the coastal boats excluded from the terms of the Water Carriage of Goods Act in this respect, and I would ask the minister to look into this matter and see if something can be done about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, a number of the hon. members who have spoken this afternoon have asked questions which are perfectly proper questions to ask on this matter. But a number of questions have been asked which pertain to the operation of the Canadian National railway system. As to the latter, I must say that the government does not operate the system, and with regard to any such questions all that any minister of the government can say—and all that the government ever does say—is that it will submit the questions to the management of the C.N.R. That is all I can do with respect to questions pertaining to operations.

In addition, we heard some rather surprising statements made here this afternoon. I had not expected hon. members opposite to be introducing personal considerations with respect to distinguished men who are giving worthy public service on the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Chevrier: There was nothing personal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I must say I deplore that being done. I do not recall that it has ever been done on previous occasions.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order. I made it quite clear in my remarks that there was nothing of a personal character intended, and it was quite clear, also, from the remarks of my hon. friend the member for Kenora-Rainy River that his remarks were not of a personal nature either. So I do not believe the minister should pursue that angle any longer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman was not the only one who spoke. But he was the one who used an expression about "the danger of introducing politics" into the Canadian National system, and I wish to say to him that there is nothing in what he said, or in what has occurred, which would justify such personal assertions.

Mr. Benidickson: Why so many defeated candidates?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is an interesting question from the hon. member from Kenora-Rainy River. If his assertion is that anyone who is a defeated candidate or who has at any time been a defeated candidate is unfit to hold public office, then I think he is introducing something which will, on reflection, occur to him as being a dangerous principle, because there are quite a few people in the government service who have at one time or another been unsuccessful candidates. What is sauce for the goose must be sauce for the gander. I presume the hon. member would reconcile that situation with what he said by insisting that he was only referring to those who were defeated Conservative candidates.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I am referring to the biggest crown corporation—the C.N.R.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Apparently it is all right if those who preceded us appointed their defeated candidates to public office, but it becomes all wrong when the present government appoints to public office distinguished and worthy citizens who happen to be defeated candidates—

Mr. Benidickson: A point of order. The minister has asserted that the previous government appointed former defeated candidates. Who were they?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I could mention a considerable number.

Mr. Benidickson: To the C.N.R.? That is what I am talking about.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am speaking about government appointments in general. Surely, if the principle is good it must be a sound principle of general application. I do not hold with the principle just put forward by hon. members opposite. I do not think the fact that a man has been a candidate for public office—whether he has been successful or unsuccessful in obtaining it—is any disqualification for public service.

Mr. Benidickson: I agree.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If he has the proper qualifications for public service, surely his candidature should not be allowed to stand in his way, regardless of the party whose candidate he was. If this applies in the case of one party I think hon. members opposite should be fair enough to recognize that it applies to persons who have been political candidates for parties other than their own.

Mr. Benidickson: It has been too conspicuous in this one big crown company.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me make it clear that there have been four or five vacancies which have occurred in the ordinary course on the board of the C.N.R. since this present government came to office two years ago. I referred, in my question to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, to two members of that board who had been reappointed by the present government. I note that the hon. member has no fault to find with those reappointments, but when the present government appoints others he has fault to find at once.

Mr. Benidickson: Just alarmed and worried.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me say that the government considers these new appointments to be of men of high accomplishment and seasoned experience who are capable of making a notable contribution to the direction of the affairs of the Canadian National system as members of the board of directors. I think we have been fortunate in the quality of the men we have been able to appoint to the board.

Mr. Benidickson: Can I ask the minister a question? Would he just describe the past connections of these men that might be translated into business for the C.N.R., or their experience other than being a lawyer or an investment dealer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You will note that that question comes from the side of the house that disclaims any idea of introducing personal considerations into this question. Here we are asked to sit down and rake over the whole personal story of every one of our appointees, and yet we are told: Oh no, this is not prompted by any personal consideration.

The present set-up of the C.N.R. with a seven-man board was devised by the former government. We have made no change in that. It was decided by the former government, supported by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, that it should be small rather than a large board.

Mr. Benidickson: In that, perhaps I was wrong.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The present government did away with the commission form of management of the C.N.R. in favour of a small board of directors. We have made no change in that respect whatever. I expect in the light of what we have heard this afternoon that if we had enlarged the board of directors we would have been told that we had enlarged it for the purpose of appointing Conservatives to it. We have made no change whatever but have left the board precisely as it was.

The board has been set up from the beginning on a different basis from that of the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific railway for reasons the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River recognized in his remarks this afternoon. The nature of appointments has been different because of the difference in the size of the board and the fact that in one case you have a private corporation and in the other a public corporation. Those whom we have been fortunate enough to enlist in the public service by accepting appointments to the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways are highly fit and qualified men who will give important and valued service on the board of directors of the C.N.R. system. The same applies to the other appointment which was mentioned and which can more properly be discussed on the bill.

Let me now deal with a point raised by the hon. member for Laurier who spoke about the present royal commission and suggested that it ought to examine as well the capitalization of the Canadian National Railways system. I would recall to his mind that the royal commission is a commission on railway freight rates and the scope of the commission does not include inquiry into the capitalization of the C.N.R. system. May I remind him, however, of the fact—

Mr. Chevrier: The terms of reference are pretty broad.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I speak subject to correction but it had not occurred to me that the terms of reference contained any provision that would include under any of the paragraphs an inquiry into the capitalization of the national system.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister would permit a question at this stage. My recollection is that a portion of it had to deal with railway transportation and the effect on railway transportation. I do not have the terms before me. That is why it struck me, however, that perhaps it would be possible to give consideration to some aspects of railway financing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I remind the committee, Mr. Chairman, that under the present financial provisions inscribed in the statute of this parliament the C.N.R. sells to the Minister of Finance each year preferred stock equivalent to 3 per cent of the gross earnings of the railway. Last year that involved a purchase on the part of the Minister of Finance of $21 million of the 4 per cent preferred stock of the corporation and this year it will involve a purchase by the Minister of Finance of $22.7 million of that preferred stock.

Mr. Benidickson: Is that realistic?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what the statute requires.

Mr. Benidickson: I know; introduced by the former government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. That is what we are following obediently. That is the will of parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: You have taken no decision to change it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This bill makes no provision in this respect and no other legislation on this subject has been indicated for the present session.

Let me quickly run through the other points raised by hon. members who asked for information. The hon. member for Vancouver East asked about the schedules of operation. This is entirely a matter within the power of the management of the Canadian National Railways system. It would be intolerable if the government or parliament interfered and told the C.N.R. system in detail how it should operate the trains or whether a transcontinental train should cut half an hour off its running time. It is obvious that this is clearly a matter falling within the scope of management and it would be highly improper for the government to interfere in the details of operations of that kind.

As to raising questions of this nature may I point out to the hon. member that that is the function and purpose that is served by the appointment annually of the special committee of the house because there hon. members, including at least one member from his own party, attended and asked a great many questions about operations. If he did not ask this question then perhaps the hon. member could put it on the list of questions to be asked the next time the officials of the system come before a parliamentary committee for questioning.

I was asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River concerning the increase in the government investment in the national system. Here may I point out that apart from several small items the increase in the capital investment by the government of Canada is accounted for by two large items. The first is the investment in the Hudson Bay railway which has been transferred to Canadian government railways; the amount is $34,682,534.80.

Mr. Benidickson: That was under the present minister's regime?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, in 1958. The next item is the investment in the northwest communications system which was transferred to the Canadian National Railways; the amount is $17,833,075.52.

Mr. Benidickson: Had there been any similar increase in the previous five years?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will make inquiries on that subject, Mr. Chairman.

A question was asked about the C.N.R. loan. I thought I had reported in the house already on this. On May 15 last the Canadian National Railways issued $150 million of 5 per cent bonds. These were duly sold, being $60 million of 1968 maturity and $90 million of 1977 maturity.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I believe I inquired about the effective rate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was a 5 per cent coupon. The 1968 maturity was sold at $98.75 to yield about 5.18 per cent. The 1977 maturity was sold at $98 to yield approximately 5.17 per cent to maturity.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister permit a question at this time. I recall from my experience that when dealing with the large annual financial volume of requirement for the C.N.R. it has been customary for the government to underwrite it until such time as the bond market seemed to be propitious for the Canadian National Railways to go itself into the normal courses of the investment field for funds on a longer term. What would be the position at the moment with respect to the requirements contemplated in this bill which I believe the resolution says are approximately $348 million? What would be the picture for the next twelve months if the C.N.R. could not go into the financial market and get it own bonds on a long term basis? What are we really committing ourselves to in approving of this capital expenditure in so far as interest rates are concerned?

The other question I have in mind is this. To whom would the minister or alternatively to whom would the C.N.R. apply for getting these large amounts of capital funds? I think it is relevant now because we have to consider the present market. I did not feel the minister answered me very properly this afternoon when I gave to him the benefit of what was admittedly my own arithmetic after looking at the offer the minister had made for a new $200 million government of Canada loan requirement. What would the position be in connection with these capital requirements of the C.N.R.? Is it correct that if they needed money for only nine months and if they had a nominal interest rate on the bonds at 2¾ per cent and they were sold at a 2 point discount, anybody paying a 50 per cent income tax rate would find that that would be equivalent to 8.2 per cent compared with a par offering for nine months for the same amount of money?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously the hon. gentleman is wandering far from the subject matter before us and from the real purport of the inquiry he directed to me. He knows quite well, I am sure, that Canadian National Railways borrow money from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Benidickson: If they cannot get it from the public.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This has been the practice for a long time. It certainly was the practice before we came into office because when we came into office we found that Canadian National Railways had borrowed from my predecessor as minister of finance—I speak now subject to correction as to the amount—something like $300 million. That was the indebtedness of Canadian National Railways to the former minister of finance when we came into office two years ago. That is the position. The first place of borrowing by Canadian National Railways is from the Minister of Finance, and periodically the company goes into the market to borrow money there by an issue of bonds guaranteed by the government. Canadian National Railways went into the market with the largest issue of bonds in its history in January 1958—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Three hundred million dollars.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and recently, as I have indicated, went in for another issue.

Mr. Benidickson: Another big one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member asked me what the rate would be for the next 12 months. I cannot predict the rate, Mr. Chairman. If I were able to do that I would be able to do something that I am sure nobody in Canada professes to be able to do at this moment.

Mr. Benidickson: May I assure the minister—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I continue, Mr. Chairman? I am trying to answer.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister allow me to ask a question—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I finish what I am saying?

Mr. Benidickson: —in this context, may I say that the minister was probably justified—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benidickson: —in interpreting my remarks in the way he did. What I said was, would he confirm to this committee that if funds were not available outside—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River wishes to ask a question, perhaps he will wait until the minister has finished.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member asked that question before, in fact, several questions, and I am endeavouring to answer them. If I may continue, the hon. member will hear such answer as I am able to give him. It may not be the one he wishes but it will be such as I am able to give him.

This is the practice that has been followed. It is the practice that is in effect at the present time. What the bill will do will be to follow the usual provisions that have been in effect now for many years governing the financing operations of Canadian National Railways in this respect.

The next question I was asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was in relation to trucking operations on the part of Canadian National Railways. I draw his attention to page 69 of the proceedings of the committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government for May 4 where he will see that subject reviewed by the president of Canadian National Railways. He indicated on that page the circumstances under which the management proposes to enter on a trucking operation, saying that they needed to do so to be able to maintain their competitive position. If the hon. member will look further at page 221 of the proceedings he will see the amount given there in the statement tabled by the president of Canadian National Railways, Mr. Donald Gordon.

Mr. Benidickson: Was it $15 million?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is $15 million for investment in capital stock of Canadian National Transportation Limited.

The final matter on which hon. members asked me questions concerned a difference in relation to a bookkeeping item amounting to something over $7 million. This also was discussed in the committee. The hon. member for Laurier raised it there. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River will find it dealt with at pages 195 and 196 of the committees proceedings. The hon. member for Laurier introduced it at some considerable length and Mr. Gordon made the following comment on it:

> This whole affair arose out of a difference of opinion between technicians, in a sense. Our accountants—

Mr. Benidickson: You advised this. Are you the technician?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member will wait until I have read the whole answer I think it will be quite clear to whom Mr. Gordon refers.

> This whole affair arose out of a difference between technicians, in a sense. Our accountants, supported by our legal department, felt that the entry for depreciation, as you have described it, was the proper way to handle this. When the matter reached the Minister of Finance, in terms of its being an item which should add to our deficit for that year, he took the position that it was not a proper entry as contemplated by the legislation. As I say, there was a difference of opinion. That difference of opinion was referred to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice gave a legal ruling, supporting the position of the Minister of Finance. In the light of that, there was nothing else we could do, and there was nothing else the Minister of Finance could do, because the ruling was given in the terms of an interpretation of the legislation that existed.

Mr. Benidickson: With respect to the concluding remarks of the Minister of Finance, probably I should not have interrupted him with some vehemence, but does he recall that I quoted a very authoritative source saying that he was the one who advised this change? I do not find that there is too much departure in the evidence he has just read to the committee from page 195.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can clarify that if there is anything further to be added. When this matter came to my attention it was quite clear what the views of Canadian National Railways were, but we are not necessarily bound by them. My accounting advisers took the opposite view and in view of the difference of opinion the matter was referred to the Department of Justice for a ruling with the result that Mr. Gordon indicated in his testimony to the committee.

Mr. Benidickson: If the Department of Justice had not so ruled, the deficit as reported to the house in April would have been more than $7 million larger than was reported?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is the approximate figure. I think it was just over $7 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are a few questions I should like to ask. My hon. friend has referred to the fact that the C.N.R. has two methods of financing its operations. One is by direct loan from the government of Canada and the other by borrowings from the Canadian people. He has referred to an issue of $150 million on May 15, I think it was, and I believe the rate of interest was 5 per cent. Is that the correct rate of interest?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is correct. That was the coupon rate on both maturities.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are these loans from the public undertaken by the C.N.R. the result of agreement on the part of the government or the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What kind of agreement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the Minister of Finance concur in the decision to make a public borrowing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The timing of the issues by Canadian National Railways is, of course, a matter for prior discussion between the management of the national system and the Minister of Finance because the Minister of Finance is required, pursuant to legislation contained in this type of bill, to guarantee the issue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is what I thought. Would I be correct in saying that one of the reasons for the decision to have this borrowing of $150 million undertaken was the failure of the $300 million issue that came out in January of 1958, I believe?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is entirely wrong for the hon. member to suggest there was any failure in connection with that January, 1958 loan. It was a very successful loan and was oversubscribed.

Mr. Benidickson: The Bank of Canada report says it was accompanied by softness in its relationship with the commercial banks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The loan was substantially oversubscribed. We were very pleased with the result of this offer of Canadian National bonds.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance says that this was a very successful loan, and he will of course recall that it had very considerable difficulty at the outset.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says, no; I think he will find that is the case. The governor of the Bank of Canada, at page 24 of his report, said that it involved initially a large increase in bank loans to security dealers, which is another way of saying that the loan did not meet with immediate public response. Certainly, the fact that a year later these bonds had a market value of between 85 and 89 is an indication of their reception and also of the state of the bond market at that time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at that time, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A year later, I said, these bonds were worth around 85 or 89.

One of the reasons suggested for the investment of some of the trust funds of the unemployment insurance commission in this particular Canadian National 4 per cent bond issue of $300 million was to encourage the public to participate in this borrowing which I say was not, in spite of what the minister says, a success at the beginning. What I want to ask the minister is this: Did the unemployment insurance commission investment committee decide to invest $15 million in what I say was, at the outset, an unsuccessful issue or certainly an issue that was not readily responded to, with the minister's knowledge? Was the minister aware of the decision to make this investment by the unemployment insurance investment committee, of which the governor of the Bank of Canada acts as chairman?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is entirely wrong in the statements that he is making. He keeps on talking about the reception of the loan. The reception of the loan in January, 1958 was most cordial. I might say that the loan was very heavily oversubscribed. It was almost a record oversubscription, and that on the largest loan ever offered by Canadian National Railways.

Now, if the hon. gentleman talks about any drop in the quoted market value of bonds since then, he could take other examples as well and he could compare them as I had occasion to do not many weeks ago in this house. There was a substantial drop in the market value of all kinds of government bonds in this country in the years 1955-1957, bigger drops than have occurred since.

Mr. Benidickson: Not like the one now!

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I shall be glad to go back and put those on the record again if it gives any comfort to hon. members to contemplate this subject.

But I come to the question asked by the hon. member. The Minister of Finance does not stand peering over the shoulders of the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission to supervise, day by day, their financial transactions. These are highly competent men, I am sure the best available for this very important service. Whatever investment they made at that time I am sure was the kind of investment that would have been advised by any other competent person under the circumstances existing then.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one quarrels with the competence of the governor of the Bank of Canada or the members of the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Benidickson: If the minister does not look over their shoulders.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The question of their competence only beclouds the issue. I say again that this loan had great difficulty in getting under way, and the decision of the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission to invest trust funds, largely the contributions of workers and employers in this country, was taken at a time when this issue was having the difficulty which I have mentioned, and which the minister denies but I think the fact will support what I am saying, as indeed does the report from the governor of the Bank of Canada which I have read.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He is referring to the after market, which is a different thing altogether.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I also referred to the after market. A year later the value of the bonds was between 85 and 89. It will be seen that the market value of the issue, almost from the date of issue, was one of diminishing value. I do not have the exact figures before me, I wish I had. I think it will be found that within six months the value was at a figure that was comparable to the highest quoted figure of 89 which I mentioned a while ago.

What I am trying to get from the minister is this: Was the minister aware that the investment committee, including his own deputy minister and the governor of the Bank of Canada, had decided to invest some of the unemployment insurance funds in this particular issue? Was that decision taken with the minister's knowledge, with his concurrence and with his advice? I am not now criticizing him if that was done, but I want to find out.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With great respect, that has no relevancy whatever to the measure before us. The hon. member seems to think we have already reached a later item announced for today's business, namely the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. His question has no relationship whatever to the present measure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend says this has no relationship. We are now discussing the financing of the Canadian National Railways. The minister has referred to an issue of $300 million in January, 1958, and that is the issue about which I am talking. It bore an interest rate of 4 per cent maturing on February 1, 1981. It is interesting to compare this issue with the subsequent issue of May 1959, in the amount of $150 million which, incidentally, had a maturing date four years earlier in 1977.

If my hon. friend is suggesting that we cannot discuss this particular issue under this item to ascertain what was in the government's mind when it allowed trust funds to be invested in this particular issue, then I have no appreciation of the value of order in this committee. It is because I feel I am on sound ground that I ask the minister now to tell us whether or not he, as Minister of Finance, approved of the decision of the unemployment insurance investment committee to participate in this issue?

The Deputy Chairman: Order; questions regarding the financing of the bonds are in order, but questions as to who purchased the bonds, in my opinion, have nothing to do with this resolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, sir, I would ask you to reconsider what you have just said. Here is the government of Canada, represented by the Minister of Finance who has to deal with these things as the minister of government responsible for the financial operations of this crown corporation, whose operations are dependent upon direct loans from the government of Canada and the Canadian public. Surely one is entitled to ask whether another arm or another division in the government of Canada made an investment in this particular issue with the knowledge and concurrence of the Minister of Finance.

If that procedure is not in order, Mr. Chairman, then I am not following the rules of the House of Commons. The Minister of Finance, of course, says that is the case. I know you will appreciate that this is an important matter. This is one involving not only an issue offered the Canadian people but at the same time an issue that was helped along its difficult way by investment from funds supplied by two segments of the Canadian people. All I am asking the Minister of Finance is that he tell the committee, if that investment was made respecting this $300 million issue which he approved, with his knowledge and concurrence.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. As I mentioned previously, I feel that is a question to be asked at another time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope the Minister of Finance will be here.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not think that at this time we should go into the question of who bought every bond.

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to speak to the point of order, Mr. Chairman. At this point we are involved in $338 million of capital financing for the C.N.R. as referred to in the resolution on the order paper to which the minister has attached his name and which we are now debating. I want to refer

Your Honour to the annual report of the C.N.R. which indicates in detail the kind of financing that has been necessary in relation to these capital funds. The hon. member for Essex East has said that the Minister of Finance under certain circumstances in relation to the C.N.R. is obligated to give his opinion about certain matters related to the investment arena. I think that this is an extremely important matter, namely whether the Minister of Finance did or did not advise the C.N.R. that it would be better, for these capital expenditures last year and now in relation to next year, to go to the market or to rely on him and his policy in respect of government financing.

The Deputy Chairman: That was not the point I was discussing. I was discussing the point whether or not the minister had caused the unemployment commission to buy those bonds. The reply was that we were not dealing with the question of who purchased the bonds. That was the only point I was making.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point, if I may be allowed to say a word, I should like to say this. The resolution as well as the bill deals with an issue of C.N.R. bonds. In fact, although I have not the notes which I took—

The Deputy Chairman: I realize that fact. I am not saying anything about that matter. The question arose whether or not the minister should say whether he allowed the unemployment commission to buy those bonds. I said that this resolution is not concerned with the individual purchasers of the bonds but that it is just concerned with the sale of the bonds; that to whom the bonds went was not the concern of this committee: that we were concerned with what it cost to raise this money, whether we raised the money and whether or not we raised it in the ordinary way. That is the point.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not going to pursue the matter further. I think that the point made by the hon. member for Essex East was well taken. But since Your Honour has ruled on the matter—

The Deputy Chairman: It might be raised in another committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope that Your Honour wil be presiding over the committee and that the Minister of Finance will be here.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to pursue another matter and to bring to the attention of the minister, if I may—and I hope he will follow me—the terms of reference of the royal commission on transportation was made earlier. In his announcement the Prime Minister made it quite clear that it was a commission dealing with railway transportation. He went on to give the terms of reference which were more particularly itemized as follows. I am not going into them all but we find amongst other things the following:

> (b) the obligations and limitations imposed upon the railways by law for reasons of public policy, . . .
> (c) the possibilities of achieving more economical and efficient railway transportation;

And this is the one to which I direct attention.

> (d) whether and to what extent the Railway Act should specify what assets and earnings of railway companies in businesses and investment other than railways should be taken into account in establishing freight rates; and > (e) such other related matters as the commissioners consider pertinent or relevant to the specific or general scope of the inquiry.

It struck me that within all these specific and broad general terms one might well go into some of the financial aspects of the C.N.R.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It will, of course, be a matter for interpretation on the part of the members of the royal commission itself as to what are the meaning and the scope of the terms of the order in council binding them which the hon. member has read. I had not thought those terms included an inquiry into the internal capitalization of the Canadian National Railways. I think there will be no advantage to be gained in my making any further comment on this subject except to say that, while I cannot speak for my colleague the Minister of Transport, I have received no representations on this subject of revision of the capitalization of the system or inquiry into that subject. That is not to say that others may not have received representations. However, I have not received any.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister not think that this might be an opportunity for consideration? It is not only a question of representation by the Minister of Transport. I doubt whether he has made any. I presume he has not done so. The Canadian National Railways may well have done so. I do not know whether or not that is the case. If there is a point in what I have brought to the attention of the committee—and I believe there is, and other hon. members agree—does the minister not think that this matter might well be given consideration?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I doubt whether I am the person to whom to put that question. I would just add this one observation. I would think it would be regrettable if more subjects were added to those already assigned to the royal commission with the result that such additions might have the effect of delaying the report on this urgent question of the whole basis of establishing railway freight rates in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: I think it should be recognized that the minister may probably not be up to date on the views of the Minister of Transport with respect to approval of a new pension plan for retired employees of the C.N.R. But having sat in the house for the same length time as I have—and I have been here since 1945—I think the Minister of Finance has listened, as have I, to the views of the Prime Minister with regard to the necessity for or the desirability of enlarging the pensions of the C.N.R. employees previously retired. I imagine that in the last two years no scheme of this kind—and we have gone more than two years since this government has come into office—or no proposal of this nature would come to the government without reference to the man who must find the money to pay for it, namely the Minister of Finance. I therefore wonder whether the minister would make a comment about the possibility of adhering to the recommendations that were made by the Prime Minister when he sat in opposition with regard to the desirability of augmenting pensions for retired C.N.R. employees.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I know that representations have been made on this subject occasionally, I think largely by individuals and perhaps by some organizations. The matter has been given study but no decision has been reached on it yet.

Mr. Benidickson: I was astounded to hear the minister say, with two years cabinet experience, that these representations had been made by individuals only and perhaps by some few organizations. If I may be permitted to do so, I might indicate the national nature of the representations that are available to the minister. I thought he rather confessed the fact that he had not seen anything except the odd letter or individual representations. They have come to a great number of members of parliament on a provincial and national basis.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was speaking of those which have come to my attention in the past two years.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a further word concerning the problem which I raised earlier today on the resolution. I was trying to be brief and not take up unnecessarily the time of the committee, but perhaps I did not make myself clear, because the minister indicated in reply that it was a problem of operation and that all he could do was to pass it along to the management of the Canadian National Railways. The problem which I described is not a problem of management at all, and there is no point whatever in passing it along to management, because there is nothing whatever they can do to remedy this situation. Whatever action is to be taken must be taken by the government.

The minister will recall that at the time of confederation the railway property and the coastal boats were the property of the Newfoundland government. On confederation the ownership of that property was vested in the government of Canada; it is not the property of the Canadian National Railways at all. The government of Canada appointed the Canadian National Railways as their agent in operating the facilities and they laid down certain conditions under which that operation would be carried out. One of the conditions was that the ships carrying freight across the gulf from mainland ports in Nova Scotia to the Newfoundland terminal would be regarded as a continuation of the Canadian National Railways. It was because of that condition that when any of these ships have an accident compensation for any losses or damaged goods can be claimed by the people to whom the goods are consigned. We had a case like that a year or two ago when the gulf ferry the Cabot Strait ran ashore near Port aux Basques with a considerable loss of freight in addition to a lot of other goods which were damaged. The people to whom those goods were consigned were able to claim their losses from and get paid by the Canadian National Railways.

The Canadian National Railways has nothing whatever to do with the operation of the water carriers act. That is an act of this government, and any change must be made by the government.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member has answered his own question and is not talking on the resolution now. This is strictly a financial resolution. I think the hon. member's questions are more a transport matter than a financial matter, and I cannot see how they refer to capital expenditures.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, if by a decision of the federal government the ships which ply across the gulf are considered to be a continuation of the Canadian National Railways, surely it is logical that the coastal boats should be put into the same category and that they too should be considered a part of the Canadian National Railways. Then in that case people who lose goods on one ship operated by the railway will be treated in the same way as people who lose goods on another ship operated by the same company in the same service. That is all I am asking and it is government action, not C.N.R. management action, that can remedy the situation.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-61, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATIONS, PROVIDE FOR MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to extend its operations for a further period commencing on the 1st day of April, 1959 and ending on the 30th day of June, 1962; to provide that the maximum amount of bank loans made in the new period and guaranteed under the Act shall be three hundred million dollars; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to permit the introduction of a bill to extend the Farm Improvement Loans Act for a further lending period and to amend the act in certain other respects.

This legislation was originally enacted in 1944 and came into force on March 1, 1945. The act was designed to encourage the granting by banks of intermediate and short term credit to farmers for the improvement and development of farms and for the improvement of living conditions thereon. The purposes for which farmers may obtain loans are many and varied and include loans to assist in financing the purchase of agricultural implements, livestock, agricultural equipment, farm electric systems and irrigation systems and to assist in financing the construction or alteration of farm buildings and improvements or developments of a farm, such as fencing, drainage, irrigating, breaking, and similar projects.

These loans are made by the chartered banks under a guarantee provided by this legislation. The government's liability to a bank is limited to 10 per cent of the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed farm improvement loans made by a bank during a lending period. This liability has also been limited to a total lent by all banks during a lending period of $300 million. The maximum amount of a farm improvement loan is presently set at $5,000 and the interest rate is five per cent simple interest. Repayment terms of loans are for varying periods up to 10 years, depending upon the amount borrowed and the purpose for which the loan was obtained.

Loans under the act during 1958 totalled 70,278 in number and $90,539,743 in amount borrowed. This represents an increase in lending of approximately $20 million over the amount lent during each of the preceding three years. Repayments during the year amounted to $76,946,506.

As I have indicated, lending during 1958 was substantially larger than in each of the preceding three years, and for the months of January, February and March, 1959, a further increase has occurred over the corresponding period in 1958. In these three months the sum of $14,707,086 was borrowed in 1959 as against $10,436,991 in the same period in 1958. This represents an increase of almost 41 per cent over last year, so that lending during 1959 may be expected to reach a record volume.

Since the inception of the act to December 31, 1958, that is to say 15 years ago, a total of 723,675 loans have been granted for $813,499,097. Repayment of loans to December 31, 1958 amounts to $675,433,667, which is approximately 83 per cent of the amount borrowed. Accumulated losses under the guarantee since inception of the lending to December 31, 1958 amount to $835,772, of which $60,614 has been recovered. Therefore the loss ratio on $813 million lent is less than one-tenth of one per cent.

The figures give some indication of the credit service which has been rendered to Canadian agriculture through this legislation. The credit has been available and utilized in all provinces, and for the information of the committee I might place on the record a table indicating the extent of the lending by provinces for the years 1957 and 1958. It might meet the convenience of hon. members if it were incorporated in Hansard at this point in my remarks.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. minister the permission of the committee to include this material in Hansard as described?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Farm Improvement Loans Act

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It will be noted that there has been an average increase in the amount lent in all provinces of 30.4 per cent in 1958 over 1957.

Specifically, the purpose of the present resolution is to permit the introduction of a bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act in order to achieve the following objectives:

1. To include beekeepers as qualified borrowers under the act. At present it is not possible for persons who have a principal occupation of beekeeping to obtain loans under the act. It is felt that lending should be made available for such persons.

2. To increase the maximum loan allowable under the act to $7,500. This is considered warranted by reason of the additional capital requirements for farming in this mechanized age. The present limit on any one loan is $5,000. A loan of $7,500 would, of course, be beyond the repayment ability of the average farmer over a four-year term, but the increased amount could be utilized by banks in the case of large operators.

3. To extend the provisions of the act for a further lending period. Lending since inception has been done within certain lending periods and the latest of such periods expired March 31, 1959. It is proposed to have the new lending period extend from April 1, 1959 to June 30, 1962. Although most lending periods have been for exactly three years in the past the proposed expiry date of the new period would make it possible to amend the act to set up a new period at a more appropriate time than is the case when a period ends March 31st. Although the latest lending period under the act terminated on March 31 last, I might say that the lending operations have been continued by the banks on my undertaking to introduce the present measure at this session.

4. To limit the liability of the government under the guarantee to a maximum of $300 million which may be lent by all banks collectively during the new lending period. As I have mentioned previously, the contingent liability of the government with respect to the lending was limited, in the lending period which recently ended, to a total of $300 million lent by all banks. That is to say, the liability is based on 10 per cent of the lending of each individual chartered bank up to a total lent by all banks of $300 million. In the period from April 1, 1956 to March 31, 1959 there was approximately $240 million lent by all the banks and consequently it is felt that the $300 million figure is likely to be adequate for the servicing of this credit for the period proposed, namely from April 1, 1959 to June 30, 1962.

Mr. Benidickson: I think the committee generally will welcome the announcement of the minister. I was particularly pleased to hear the tributes which the hon. gentleman paid to this particular statute, the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This was one of the many statutes which were made available or which were created after the war to take care of the economic transition which was expected to take place at that time.

Unfortunately, members of the committee have not available too much information. I do not say that this is a new situation. The last time we were asked to amend the act in 1956 we were asked to do so for another expiry date, and legislation was introduced in March of that year, 1956, when there was more excuse for not having available to the House of Commons the latest report for the calendar year. I find that my remarks must be somewhat limited by the fact that the latest report available to members of the House of Commons is the report for loans made under the act for 1957.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. gentleman must be mistaken. The 1958 report has been printed, and I have a copy in my hand.

Mr. Benidickson: I can assure the minister that having received notice on June 8 of his intention to proceed with this matter I made the usual inquiries, not directly, but through my secretary; no, I did so directly, and I was informed by the distribution office that the 1958 report was not available or, certainly, was not available as of last Thursday.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am surprised. I think there must be some mistake.

Mr. Herridge: May I say that I had exactly the same experience. I have a copy of the 1957 report, and I was told that this was the last report available for distribution.

Mr. Benidickson: As soon as I was told that this matter would come up for debate I endeavoured, as any hon. member would, to obtain a copy of the last available annual report. I found that in my personal files I had only a report for the calendar year ended December 31, 1957. I remember an experience of this kind last year with respect to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. Maybe we were derelict in the past, when the Liberals were on the government side, but I want to be fair. I want to say that any minister introducing legislation of this kind, certainly when it is legislation contemplated in the speech from the throne, should do his utmost to make sure that the report of the operations of the crown agency concerned should be the most up to date possible. I have looked into this, and I want to assure the minister that when the amendment of this particular statute came up in 1956 the House of Commons did not have available to them the 1955 report.

However, I would point out that it was indicated in the speech from the throne, in January this year that this present subject would arise this session, and there is a substantial difference, I suggest, between the situation in 1956 and the situation before us at the present time in that the resolution amending the statute in 1956 was introduced three months earlier in the year than the amending legislation at this time. I think that in the circumstances, in courtesy to the house and to avoid, perhaps, the necessity in some instances of asking that reference be made to a parliamentary committee, an up-to-date report should be available to members before legislation of this kind is introduced.

The minister knows—and I am not scolding him for this—that in addition he will be including in his bill a request that the house approve retroactively this new term of three years, because the last term expired on March 31 of this year. This was known to the government. It was enunciated in the speech from the throne, and there is very little excuse for this kind of discourtesy, shall I say, to members of the opposition. Information of this kind is available to the government. It is available to the minister, and I hope when subsequent amendments of this sort come before us other hon. members will remember that if there is some information in annual reports they will hurry up the presentation of annual reports to the House of Commons even though in this instance the statute does not state a particular time when annual reports must be presented.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would my hon. friend permit me to say that since he began speaking I made inquiries of my officials. I was sure that the 1958 report had been tabled. The officials to whom I directed the inquiry while my hon. friend was speaking tell me that the 1958 report was tabled and distributed in both languages some time ago. There may be some mistake at the distribution office. If there has been, I am sorry about that and I will certainly be glad to see that hon. members receive copies at once if there has been any misdirection in this respect. I am assured by my officials that the report was tabled and distributed.

Mr. Benidickson: I accept what the minister has said and I know he will accept my word when I say that on Thursday I personally inquired at the distribution office—and I am supported in this by the hon. member for Kootenay West—and it was not available. I can't now understand why. I do not want to delay the committee but I have dates concerning the distribution of this report in previous years. The report for the calendar year 1955 was tabled on June 8, 1956. The report for the calendar year 1956 was tabled on October 23, 1957. The report for 1957 which is the last available to us debating this as I know now was tabled last year on July 22. I do not complain too much except to say that when an act is likely to be amended as specified in the speech from the throne a special effort should be made to have copies of reports made available to hon. members. They should have the last available statistics before them. Knowing that this might happen I personally asked some questions about the 1958 results and they appear on page 750 of Hansard for this year. I am not going to refer to them. I know there will be others who will want to speak to this and we are now within five minutes of the dinner adjournment.

The other point I want to emphasize is in my opinion a very serious one. I invite him to look at the wording of the resolution. I have looked at it and compared it with the resolution when the last amendments were proposed to the house in 1956. I will agree there is very little difference in wording. I have not checked newspapers to find whether there is any difference in actual effect or end result. I complain very seriously to the minister and the government about the vagueness of the resolution when details have been released to the press. Only last night I read an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of June 10 in which reference was made to some particulars of the bill we are going to discuss on second reading. Reference is made to the fact that there is likely to be an increase in the maximum loan under which the government would guarantee the banks, and reference is made to beekeepers and some other things. I know the difficulty of keeping security in some of these matters. The minister has been a member of the House of Commons for as long as I have been and he has been in opposition longer. I know he has great respect for the necessity of maintaining some security in these matters. I hope he will ensure in future that information will not be available to the press when it is not included in the resolution and when he has not yet made an announcement in this chamber.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I assure my hon. friend I am not aware where the Winnipeg Free Press got the information which they appear to have published.

Mr. Benidickson: That I can imagine, Mr. Chairman. I am simply asking the minister and those of his ministerial colleagues who are in the house—not many of them are here—who subsequently will be introducing legislation of this kind not to be vague in wording resolutions if they allow their officials to give details to the press that are not contained in the resolution between the time a resolution is placed on the order paper and the time it is debated in the house. The date of the press release in question is June 10, 1959. How strange it is to compare the speech of the minister given before mine with the press release I have in my hand in which it is stated that individual farm loans may be boosted from a maximum of $5,000 to $7,500, that the rate of interest will remain unchanged at 5 per cent, and that beekeepers are to be included, et cetera. I am not criticizing the minister. I know that he and his colleagues will rectify this for future debates. I know the minister will agree that it is a most incongruous position to be in when you prepare for a debate at the resolution stage and the resolution is vague but details are announced in the press. The ministry wants the debate at the resolution stage to be not very lengthy. They hope that on second reading the major debate will take place. If information is given to the press and the facts are published, we have to anticipate debate on second reading and make our comments at this stage.

I think the committee will welcome the information given in this resolution. I reassert that having regard to the announcement made on January 15 through the mouth of the governor general to the effect that this would be done, this legislation has come before us in inadequate form and so late that the government has had to insert a clause in the bill that will follow to make it retroactive to March 31.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the members of this group are very pleased to support this legislation which provides for the continuation of a very sound and what proved to be useful act. I must thank the minister for giving us a copy of the 1958 report which I understand failed to get into our hands through a mistake on the part of one of the officials. We must not be too concerned about that because we all make mistakes, as Mary said when she kissed the cow. But I must say that like the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I take some exception to the details of legislation appearing in the press before they are presented to the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I tell my hon. friend that I share that feeling very strongly.

Mr. Herridge: I am quite sure the minister does. I quite understand that it makes a member feel foolish on occasion when, on account of these articles in the press containing details of legislation to come before the house, people make inquiries and you have to reply and say that you have no knowledge of the legislation. I am quite sure there has been a mistake on someone's part.

I feel more at home with this type of legislation, Mr. Chairman, than I do with legislation dealing with bonds in respect of Canadian National Railways. I have had very little experience with bonds but as a country man who has aimed to make his living from the soil for over 50 years I have had a lot of experience with various aspects of farming and with farmers. I have known some most interesting farmers. I know their history in our district which includes a great deal of privation and hard work in the early days as well as hard work today. That reminds me of a story. Some years ago an old gentleman came to me in great distress and wanted me to lend him the services of a chap who was working for us at the time. He said, "You know, Mary has let me down." Mary was 86. "You know," he said, "she absolutely has gone balky. She refuses to climb those 20 foot ladders and pick apples any more." He was a very prominent member of the Conservative party.

However, Mr. Chairman, I must say I never deal with this type of legislation without seeing in my mind's eye the application of this act. I have seen farmers in my district building new houses and other buildings or repairing houses and buildings. I have seen them looking at livestock they have purchased as a result of having taken advantage of the act. I have seen them clearing and breaking land as a result of loans under the act. I have seen them building irrigation and water systems, draining fields, doing fencing. I have seen them able to secure new implements. That is why I say this is very sound legislation, and the record of its administration, the record of collections and the record of the benefits bestowed through the provision of short or intermediate credit prove that this is the type of legislation that produces, shall I say, unusual results from the amount of government expenditure. It is government support behind the legislation that makes its application so much easier and so much more widespread.

I do want to say that in my experience those administering the act have received excellent co-operation from the local bank managers. I know of several cases where bank managers have gone out to the farms and have done their best to explain the working of the act and to assist the farmers in arranging credit. I think we should give credit where it is due because this type of legislation would not be successful unless everyone concerned from the administration to the bank managers, including the farmers themselves, co-operated to make it successful.

I notice in the annual report that by far the greater percentage of loans are obtained in the three prairie provinces and Ontario and Quebec. I presume that in the prairie provinces the large figure is brought about by the heavy investment in farm machinery. I am of the opinion that the farmers of British Columbia could make better use of the act that they have in the past, and while the local bank managers carry the literature and wherever possible do what they can to advise the farmers of the terms of the act and its value to them, I think a little more could be done to contact the farmers' organizations directly. Quite frequently I meet farmers who seem completely ignorant of the terms of the act. Many of them are under the impression that it is only for the building or improving of houses and the building or improving of other buildings. I think something more could be done in co-operation with the farmers' organizations to bring about even greater utilization of the act than occurs at the present time. I make that suggestion.

I presume the amendments are the result of the experience of the administration, representations from the farmers' organizations and also some consultation with the banks because it is from experience at the local bank level that deficiencies in the legislation would come to light in the first instance. When the minister was speaking he mentioned four particular amendments, the first one being to include beekeepers. I could never understand why beekeepers were excluded from the original act. I presume it was one of those oversights that occurred because we usually think of farmers in other terms. I am very glad to see that amendment is going to be made in the bill that will follow the resolution.

I think the increase in the maximum amount of individual loans from $5,000 to $7,500 is just about right. It will meet the need for more money at the present time to do the same things. The third amendment will extend the act to June 30, 1962 and I understand that the fourth amendment will increase the total liability of the government to $300 million. We support all these amendments and we are glad that the minister has introduced them. I presume that the interest rate is to remain at 5 per cent. The minister said nothing about that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no change in the interest rate proposed in the bill.

Mr. Herridge: I presume that the terms surrounding loans are the same.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Herridge: I am very glad to hear that. This is sound legislation. As I said before, it has been proven most worth while. It shows that the government is anxious to contribute its share by its credit backing in support of those who are willing to do their part in the development of agriculture in general and in the development of the economic family farm which is so essential to the welfare of Canadian rural society.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I have very little to add. Because I was looking at the clock before the supper adjournment I omitted one or two things that I had in my notes. Would the minister indicate whether or not the regulations have been altered since January 3, 1957, the date of what I happen to have in my file?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is correct. I may say—

Mr. Benidickson: That was a consolidated revision.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There were several amendments, and I might refer to those. There was P.C. 1958-1636 of December 3, 1958.

Mr. Benidickson: What was the purpose of that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will just list them. There was P.C. 1958-961, July 10, 1958; P.C. 1958-384, March 18, 1958. I think it would be simpler, rather than to go into these, if I just gave my friend copies.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes; then, with respect to section 11 of the act itself, it indicates that appointments for the performance of duties under this act are to be made by order in council. Perhaps the minister might make a statement as to what appointments have been made by order in council under the present administration. I believe that the former chief officer under the minister, Mr. MacRae, retired about a year ago. I think it is a great tribute to him that some $800 million have been lent under this statute with losses, I think, of one-twelfth of one per cent of that amount, as referred to in the 1957 report.

The only other thing I want to say, Mr. Chairman, is that prior to our supper adjournment I was complaining a bit about the failure to provide this committee—the statute does not provide a time requirement —with copies of the annual report for the latest possible period, 1958. The minister has explained to me that this report was made available. He has accepted, I think, the word of the hon. member for Kootenay West and myself that we had endeavoured to find it through the usual sources, and it was not available. I want to thank the minister for his forethought in making the report available, and I think this should be the standard practice. If something is coming up for debate in a session, and that is known at the time of the speech from the throne, I think a special effort should be made to have these things available. It was made in this case but, through inadvertence, the report was not available.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

INCOME TAX

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FINLAND FOR THE AVOIDANCE OF DOUBLE TAXATION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to implement a convention between Canada and Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income. As hon. members are aware, the bill is in the same form, and the convention it is intended to ratify is in the same form, as others which have been before the house in recent years. The substance of the convention follows the general pattern of the income tax conventions which Canada has entered into with the United States, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, France, Sweden, Ireland, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Union of South Africa, the Netherlands, Australia and Belgium. All of those were, in their turn, swiftly approved by the house.

In particular, the provisions of this convention are similar to those in the convention between Canada and Denmark. I have no doubt, therefore, a general account of the terms of the convention will suffice for present purposes.

The main purpose of the convention is to avoid double taxes on income of persons both individual and corporate, who are resident in one of the countries and receive income from the other country. The taxes included in the scope of the convention are the Canadian federal income tax, including surtaxes, and the old age security tax on income and the Finnish national income tax. As in Canada, this tax applies to the income of both individuals and corporations. There is no equivalent in Finland of Canada's old age security tax on income.

The chief means of avoiding double taxation is by a reciprocal system of tax credits where the country of residence gives credit for the tax imposed by the country where the income has its source.

Another means is by providing that in certain instances the country in which the income has its source is not to impose tax on that income. In this case it will be taxed only once—by the country of residence. This rule applies to the following kinds of income: Profits on shipping and aircraft companies; copyright royalties from certain artistic activities; purchased annuities; pensions paid in consideration of past services, and business profits not derived through a permanent establishment. In some instances it also applies to the remuneration for personal services rendered by visitors who are businessmen, members of professions, professors, teachers, students and apprentices.

Double taxation is also reduced by restricting to a maximum rate of 15 per cent the withholding tax on certain income going from one country to the residents of the other. It is reduced also by the prohibition of discriminatory taxes against citizens of the other country and by the provision for settlement of special cases of double taxation by mutual agreement.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I recall the minister rather comparing this bill specifically with a similar convention on taxation with Denmark. It just so happens I am not familiar with that particular statute. I have looked at the agreement with Belgium, the most recent I think; with the Belgian Congo in the last session; with Australia in the session of 1957-58; with South Africa in 1957 and with the Netherlands in 1957. I believe this bill is in similar form to those, but I wondered why the minister particularly chose as his example of similarity the agreement with Denmark. Was that a more recent one than those to which I have referred?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it simply happened that in the course of negotiations the result approximated more closely the result in the case of the agreement with Denmark than with any other. There are no departures from the others, but actually if one is measuring the matter in fine scales, the present convention before the house more closely resembles the one with Denmark than any other.

Mr. Benidickson: Last year on July 16, 1958, at page 2307 of Hansard, the minister is reported as being just a little more specific with respect to the similarity of a bill of this kind with its predecessors. The minister has no hesitation in saying that, basically, this bill is without material difference to the same kind of bill that has been presented to the house in past years with respect to the other countries we have mentioned so far in our discussion?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benidickson: I would hope that, as we come to the further stages of debate, the minister might indicate why, under the new administration, it seems that a bill of this kind is piloted by the Minister of Finance. As I recall it, under the previous administration, bills of this kind were piloted by the minister of national revenue. In fact, I think if the minister will look at article II (m) of the present bill, when the Canadian minister is involved he is described again as the minister of national revenue. I was wondering why it happens to be piloted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), contrary to the previous practice.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group support this bill on the understanding that it extends to Finland with respect to the double taxation of individuals and corporations the same consideration as we extend to other countries.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker; to the other named countries.

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the only matter that requires comment is the one raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River as to the minister who is piloting the bill through. These are bills from the finance department. The agreements are signed by the Minister of Finance. It was by arrangement between the two ministers, namely the minister of finance and minister of national revenue in the former government, that the minister of national revenue piloted at least some of these measures through. Perhaps the reason I am piloting this one through is that it was thought the Minister of Finance did not otherwise have enough to do.

Mr. Benidickson: I doubt that.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, when you said "Shall the schedule carry?" were you assuming that each article would carry ipso facto? I think if you just ask for the carriage of the articles one by one it might facilitate procedure in debate.

On article I.

Mr. Benidickson: On article I, may I ask whether it is customary that bills of this kind have no reference to an estate tax agreement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The practice has been to have a separate agreement with respect to estate taxes or succession duties or death taxes.

Article agreed to.

On article II.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister care to make any explanation as to the difference under section I (e) in defining "resident of Finland" and "its business is not managed and controlled in Canada" and the fact that the same language is not used in reverse with respect to a Canadian resident?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not sure that I follow my hon. friend's observation. This clause which contains all the definitions for the purpose of the convention embraces in the one subclause the two definitions: first the definition of the term "resident of Finland" and second the term "resident of Canada". I do not find any difference between the two definitions. As I read them, the one is the precise counterpart of the other.

Mr. Benidickson: If one simply looks at the number of words used I think he will see that they are not counterparts. But having regard to the fact that the terms used in this bill are identical with the terms used in bills of this nature passed previously I will not argue further about the matter.

Article agreed to.

Article III agreed to.

On article IV.

Mr. Benidickson: I just repeat what I said before in my inquiry. In article II (m), page 4 of the bill, the minister will recognize that it is indicated there that in the case of Canada the minister of national revenue seems to be the authorized or designated minister who would normally have responsibility for this kind of legislation. I accept what the minister said on second reading, namely that he has not enough to do and so he has taken on this responsibility in addition to his other heavy responsibilities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Minister of National Revenue is the minister charged with responsibility for the administration of all tax legislation.

Mr. Crestohl: May I ask a question for the purpose of getting some information? I note that this convention has already been signed by the Minister of Finance and by the representative of the Republic of Finland. Is there anything that the house can now do other than approve this convention? Has the house any choice other than to approve a document that has already been signed by both parties?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course the house can refuse to ratify it. That, of course, is the right of the house if the house chooses to exercise it. But if the house did so, it would be reversing a practice which the house has always approved in times past.

Mr. Crestohl: I am not suggesting by any stretch of the imagination that we do otherwise than approve it. I am just inquiring. Here is a document that has already been signed and confirmed. I am wondering whether the more appropriate procedure would not have been to submit to the house a document for ratification before it is signed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That would be an entirely unconstitutional practice. Under our parliamentary system the practice is for the agreement to be signed by or on behalf of the government and then to submit it to parliament. In some cases a convention or international agreement will take effect on signing. In other cases it will take effect upon its ratification. The provision for ratification of this convention is contained in article XX. The provision with regard to its coming into effect is contained in article XXI.

Mr. Benidickson: Just as a matter of curiosity as to who comes first, may I ask this question? Has the equivalent legislature in Finland yet approved this convention?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I believe so.

Article agreed to.

Articles V to XIX agreed to.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is because you are not raising your voice or whether it is because the microphone in front of you is not working, but we can scarcely hear you.

On article XX.

Mr. Crestohl: Can the minister tell us whether the convention has already been approved at Helsinki by the Finnish authorities?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was asked that question just now and I replied that I believed it had been. I now verify that.

DEFENCE SERVICES PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO REVISE AND CONSOLIDATE CERTAIN PROVISIONS

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the revision and consolidation of certain of the pension provisions of the Defence Services Pension Act, for the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of superannuation and other benefits to members of the Canadian forces and their dependents and for matters incidental thereto, and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister not going to make a statement?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to introduce a bill entitled the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act that will revise and re-enact part V of the Defence Services Pension Act.

The Defence Services Pension Act, as hon. members know, is divided into five parts. Parts I to IV apply only to persons who were enrolled in the regular forces prior to March 31, 1946. Part V applies to those persons enrolled in the regular forces since March 31, 1946 and those enrolled before that date who had elected to come under part V.

The pension schemes under parts I to IV and part V are basically the same. The principal difference is that under parts I to IV an other rank, that is a non-commissioned officer or man, contributes nothing to the pension fund but has no pension protection for his widow or dependent children. Under those parts officers contribute 5 per cent of their pay and allowances to the pension fund. Under part V both officers and other ranks are required to contribute 6 per cent of their pay and allowances and all officers and other ranks have protection for their widows and dependent children. Under both pension schemes the amount of the pension is one-fiftieth of pay and allowances for each year of service. The pay and allowances under parts I to IV are based on the average of the last three years' service; under part V they are based on the average of the last six years. Under the new act parts I to IV basically stand and only very few minor amendments are made. Part V is repealed and replaced by the new act.

The new act will not deprive anyone now serving in the forces of any of his substantial pension rights. The principal purpose of the new act is to simplify administration, correct certain anomalies and bring the regular forces' pension scheme into greater conformity with the Public Service Superannuation Act and the proposed new Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation act, the resolution of which was introduced this afternoon.

Whilst the basic pension scheme of part V of the Defence Services Pension Act is retained in the proposed new act, the following important changes will be made. Men who are granted commissions for a fixed term of service will cease to be contributors under this act; they will receive a gratuity under the act for their service as a man and a gratuity under deferred pay regulations in respect of their commissioned time. This will obviate the payment of pensions to relatively young men. Officers who are permitted to retire voluntarily and have 25 years' regular service will be eligible to receive a pension reduced by 5 per cent for each year under their retirement age. Previously they only had to serve 20 years. The maximum benefits payable to widows and children will be raised to those contained in the Public Service Superannuation Act; that is to say, from a maximum of 75 per cent of the contributor's pension to 90 per cent. Only a return of contributions will be payable in future except in the case of death or disability of a contributor where he has served three years or less in the regular forces. Members of the forces to whom parts I to IV of the Defence Services Pension Act are applicable will be given one more year within which to elect to come under the new statute. This will permit men under parts I to IV to obtain protection for their families. The proposed new act will be very similar to the Public Service Superannuation Act which was enacted by parliament in 1953.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his statement. It would appear that the changes proposed will eliminate certain anomalies in the law as it presently stands. I think we also welcome the fact that it will bring this act into greater conformity with the Public Service Superannuation Act. As most of the suggested changes are of a technical nature, I think we will reserve our comments until the bill has been introduced in the house. I think it is only fair that the provisions be amended so that people who serve for very short periods of time receive gratuities instead of pensions, which is more closely in line with the practices in private enterprise and private service. I think we also welcome the fact that the provision will be changed so that widows and children will have the opportunity to receive a larger percentage of the pension of the deceased father. I think the minister is being fair in providing one year additional for election under parts I to IV, and in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that in general we welcome these amendments. We will reserve comment on the specific items until we have had a chance to see and study the bill.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, with my colleague for Trinity I welcome this resolution. I have one question to ask the minister. Is there in this act that is to be presented to parliament an increase in the pensions of service men who are concerned with the act?

Mr. Pearkes: There is no basic increase in the pension which will still be based on one-fiftieth of the pay and allowances that he receives each year.

Mr. Roberge: Is there an increase in the contribution to be paid by the member?

Mr. Pearkes: Those who have been under parts I to V, if they were not officers, have paid nothing, but their widows and children receive no pension benefit. Under part V they will now contribute 6 per cent of their pay and allowances. Officers who were, under part IV, contributing 5 per cent of their pay and allowances will now contribute 6 per cent.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pearkes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-62, respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian forces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Unemployment Insurance Act

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-43 to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister going to explain?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this bill has gone through second reading, and a considerable time was spent on it clause by clause in the industrial relations committee. I have spoken on second reading and made many statements in respect of all these clauses when this bill was under consideration in the industrial relations committee, and at the moment there is nothing I can add to what I have already said.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: It is true that we discussed the bill at great length at the resolution stage and also on second reading as well as in the committee on industrial relations. But, to our mind, the bill is of such capital importance, and the various public bodies called before the committee on industrial relations made such significant representations that we must insist again on this legislation not being passed in its present form.

I have here certain items from representations made to us which indicate that people are practically unanimous in their condemnation of this bill. I am taking them up at random as they reached me, and I see that the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto among others wrote us the following:

(Text):

An increase in contribution costs of this dimension constitutes a considerable problem at a time when business is being urged, and is endeavouring, to hold the line on costs.

(Translation):

That should be considered significant action.

It is true that the government, and more particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), asked industrialists more than once to try and maintain production costs at their lowest level so as to check inflation in Canada.

Now the government is submitting legislation which provides for new taxation for, after all, this is a tax that is being imposed, not upon everybody, but in respect of two particular groups: workers and employers. Yet, in spite of all this, the government seems to ask us to hold the line.

I also see that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which appeared before the committee on industrial relations raised several objections to the present bill. This is what they said:

(Text):

If relief is required for persons unemployed in the off season it should come from a public assistance scheme and not from an insurance plan based on actuarial principles. We also feel that this proposal should have had a proper review and consideration by the advisory committee before being recommended to parliament by the government as an amendment to the act.

However, we point out that we think it should have been the proper function of the advisory committee to have reviewed this proposal and made its recommendations before the stage was reached of an amendment being proposed by the government to parliament for approval.

This proposal for increased contribution rates in all present classes for employees and employers only is one which the association believes to be unrealistic and should not be approved especially at this time when the government itself is urging industry to hold the line on costs and maintain steady year round employment.

(Translation):

This, Mr. Chairman, is very similar to the views expressed by the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto.

(Text):

In amplifying its reasons for the recommendation that the fund be stabilized by the government contribution being "made equal to one-half that of the combined contributions from employers and employees" it must also be recalled that the advisory committee called attention to "some of the expenditures with which the fund had been burdened and for which provision for sufficient balancing revenue has not been made."

Despite the recommendations of the advisory committee, we note that no mention has been made in the bill now before parliament of the government's intention to increase its own contribution rates.

If employers and employees are expected to contribute more to the fund, it is all the more reason that the government should increase its own rate of contribution so that responsibility for providing revenue to the fund would be equally divided between all contributors, as the advisory committee recommended.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether he is not aware that the government is also increasing its own contribution by 30 per cent?

Mr. Caron: I may tell the minister that I am just reading what I find in the brief of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It is a fact that the government may have slightly increased its contribution but not to the degree asked for by various bodies and certainly not in accordance with the increased cost of living and increased salaries.

(Translation):

The Manufacturers' Association goes on to say:

(Text):

No changes in the present Unemployment Insurance Act and scheme should be made until a complete review, such as we propose, has been completed.

(Translation):

That is something we had been asking for. We asked for a fuller and more detailed study, more in keeping with the needs, in Canada, of both labour and management, and yet, the department ignored our recommendations.

And the Canadian Manufacturers' Association goes on to say:

(Text):

No increase in the contribution rates of employers and employees should be made at this time until there has been a thorough re-examination of the act and scheme. If it is found that an increase in contribution rates is required it should not exceed the increase recommended by the advisory committee and actuarial authorities. If employer and employee contribution rates are to be increased, the government's own rate of contribution should be increased equally.

(Translation):

Those recommendations were put forward by an interested public body, the Canadian Manufacturer's Association, and what strikes us in those recommendations is the fact that for once, at least, the representatives of a labour organization, as those of the manufacturers, were in full agreement about their recommendations to the said committee. And here is what the Canadian Labour Congress states:

(Text):

The fact remains, however, that additional amendments have been found necessary since 1955 and these seem to point to the need for a much more thorough going review of this act than has yet taken place—

We will go so far as to say that the proposed amendments not only retain an unsatisfactory ratio between wages and benefits but impose an unjustifiable burden on the insured population, one which should be more equitably distributed.

It seems to us to point to an assumption of continuing high unemployment since if high employment such as we knew in the immediate postwar years were to be resumed the fund would presumably replenish itself without the need for such a marked increase in the contribution rate or any increase at all.

We believe that these payments should never have come out of the unemployment insurance fund but out of consolidated revenue since they represent a payment over and above the normal unemployment insurance benefits for which the act was designed. Seasonal benefits are a reflection of a special and serious condition of unemployment and should be a charge on the national purse and not on the insured population alone. If supplementary and seasonal benefits had in fact been paid out of consolidated revenue, the balance in the fund at February 28, 1959, would have been over $818 million instead of $547 million and the present concern about the state of the fund need never have arisen—

(Translation):

This, Mr. Chairman, we have already said here. We pointed out to the government that neither the employees nor the employers should assume the responsibility of the situation then prevailing in Canada. We pointed out that, if we were in the grips of a depression the burden should not be shifted solely to the workers and employers, especially when thousands of people are without jobs, through no fault of their own but merely on account of an economic situation for which they are in no way responsible and to which they cannot change anything.

Here is now what the national congress of labour added; it repeats what Mr. Gordon Graydon said, as a Conservative member in this house in 1950, as recorded on page 214 of Hansard:

(Text):

—it seems to me we have reached the limit of absurdity when we ask the workers of this country to put up more money to solve the unemployment situation. That is the government's job, not the workers.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, those words were spoken by a Conservative member at the time he was sitting in the opposition. If this government does not react in the same way, it is because it is afraid the deficit might be higher still if the situation were shown as it should be.

And here is what they say:

(Text):

Experience in the past has shown that only a relatively small number of claimants used up benefits beyond the thirty-sixth week.

(Translation):

I am told that it is about 5 per cent.

(Text):

We wish to state also that this one improvement in the degree of protection afforded by the act—

(Translation):

This is a change from 36 to 52 weeks.

(Text):

—is not sufficient in itself to overshadow the very heavy burdens which have been imposed on the insured population through the increase in the contribution rates.

(Translation):

And the Canadian Labour Congress goes on to say:

(Text):

We believe that unemployment assistance for employable unemployed is fundamentally a matter of exclusive federal concern, not necessarily in constitutional but in terms of the economic facts of life. We would therefore urge upon you and the government the effective coupling of unemployment insurance and unemployment assistance, with the latter conceivably administered through the offices of the unemployment insurance commission but with payments coming exclusively from federal revenues. We repeat that this is a matter of urgency. We hope your committee will make a strong recommendation along the lines we have suggested.

(Translation):

In that regard, Mr. Chairman, at the industrial relations committee we asked the government, as we had done on second reading, and as was done particularly by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr.

Martin), to assume its responsibility in helping the unemployed who are not casually so but who are seasonally unemployed. The government, however, seems to delight in refusing to accept recommendations submitted by public bodies.

We have made suggestions to the government, and the government turned them down. Yet when we criticize without making suggestions, we are accused of being irresponsible. Really, I find it difficult to understand the government's attitude at the present time. The Canadian Construction Association, which appeared before the committee, submitted a brief from which I should like to quote a few short excerpts. Among other things, the association stated:

(Text):

For some time now our association has been concerned over several developments in the unemployment insurance scheme. The association has recently, in view of this bill, adopted a motion recommending that no amendments be made to the Unemployment Insurance Act which had not previously been studied and approved by the unemployment insurance advisory committee and, indeed, that no major amendments be made until the whole scope of the present act is carefully reviewed and reported on by an impartial body which contains or can call upon independent expert advice.

(Translation):

That suggestion is similar to those put forward by other public bodies, namely that the act should be gone into more thoroughly and more intelligently.

(Text):

The considerations prompting the members of the association to endorse this motion were:

The unemployment insurance advisory committee recommended that any increase in rates of contribution should be borne by the government from general revenues since they could be classified as general welfare measures rather than burden workers and employers with paying for the new features. The government's proposal that participating companies and their employees pay larger contributions will result in a considerable increase in labour costs...

Whereas the government has resisted pay increases to the civil service and armed forces on the grounds that such action would have an inflationary tendency, the new proposals will have just that effect.

The average increase in construction contractors' contributions will not only amount to 30 per cent but to about 50 per cent of the rate now being paid. This is due to the high hourly wage rate level in the construction industry. This will cause a particularly difficult problem for contractors engaged in carrying out long term lump sum construction contracts.

(Translation):

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, no matter what representations are looked into, whether they be of this or that public body, they are astonishingly similar and seem to coincide with those put forward by the Liberal party in the house at the resolution stage and on second reading. We also attempted to put forward those same suggestions in the industrial relations committee; unfortunately, we have sometimes met with little success.

About unemployment insurance, the Vancouver board of trade also submitted a brief from which I quote:

(Text):

Unemployment insurance has been in effect long enough now, with the experience of varying economic conditions, to make a review completely practical. We firmly believe that such a review is now warranted in the public interest. The Vancouver board of trade therefore recommends that a royal commission or commission of inquiry be established to evaluate and make recommendations in respect of unemployment insurance. We further recommend that the terms of reference to such commission should include the purpose and function of unemployment insurance, and maintenance of the fund on an actuarial basis, consideration of the rates charged, and the method of levy, and discriminatory features as between classes of industry and classes of workers.

(Translation):

Everywhere we run across similar suggestions: a closer study by an investigation committee, a royal commission. Now, the executive board of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has this to say:

(Text):

Any additions to the already extensive welfare programs should be carefully assessed not only with regard to their initial costs but also with regard to their foreseeable growth and supplementary requirements over the years. In principle the chamber believes that any additional welfare expenditures should be delayed until the full impact of present commitments can be assessed.

(Translation):

This group too is calling for further study.

(Text):

Provisions of the bill opposed by the executive council.

The present rates are scheduled to rise by approximately 30 per cent average if the bill is passed. If, however, the top rate in the present legislation (60 cents) is compared with the top rate in the bill (94 cents), it will be noted that there is an increase of over 50 per cent proposed. If, on the other hand, interpolating the normal progression and allowing for a top rate of 72 cents as compared with the new top rate of 94 cents, the rise is over 30 per cent. The 30 or 50 per cent figure, whichever is used, is well over the 20 per cent figure that was set out in the unemployment insurance advisory committee report, dated July 8, 1958, as the percentage of increase in the contribution rates that would maintain the fund at the present level.

The executive council submits that the average increase in rates should not be implemented, as it will greatly add to the cost of doing business and is partly based upon certain built-in drains on the fund, to which we will make reference in the following section.

(Translation):

I am still quoting words from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce:

(Text):

We are of the view that before an increase in rates is imposed, a number of areas of drain should be examined; alternative methods of financing should be reviewed and the question of coverage be studied. . . .

We note that the same committee submitted to the government that the loss to the fund caused by extending benefits to fishermen should be paid from sources other than regular contributions . . .

There is reference in the report of the unemployment insurance advisory committee to the drain on the fund occasioned by the extension of the seasonal benefit period, and a recommendation is made that a grant should cover this drain. There is also a recommendation from the same committee that the division of responsibility for revenues to the fund between employers, employees and government be adjusted so that the provision from each be made equal. We find no reflection in the proposed bill, however, of these recommendations of the advisory committee . . .

The foregoing are matters that, in the opinion of the chamber, should be examined by a special commission of inquiry . . .

The executive council opposes the provisions of the bill dealing with extending the duration of benefit and increasing the contribution rates.

The executive council recommends that a representative commission of inquiry be appointed to examine the operations of the act as to sources of drain, coverage and financing before any increases in rates are contemplated; the said commission to report back by December 1, 1959.

(Translation):

As you see, Mr. Chairman, these recommendations which are very similar came from all groups which have appeared before the industrial relations committee.

The Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour has also been heard. Here is what they had to say:

It seems obvious to us that, of late years, the Canadian government has been inclined to have the unemployment insurance fund assume certain expenses which normally should be paid from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, or by special social security measures. We believe that the rather rapid decrease in the level of the fund is much more the result of that policy than a consequence of inadequate contributions by employees and employers in relation to normal costs incurred by the administration of the act.

That is why we fully support the Unemployment Insurance Commission's advisory committee recommendation to raise the government's contribution to a satisfactory level in order to cover the cost of unemployment insurance elements which have been introduced in the legislation. That government's contribution should be at least half the overall contributions of both employers and employees.

Finally, for the reasons we pointed out in the above paragraphs, we are opposed to the proposed contribution increase. In our opinion, it is unwarranted and saddles the insured with a financial burden which should be taken care of by another fund than the unemployment insurance.

Here now is a brief submitted by the Canadian Retail Federation, which says:

(Text):

Generally speaking, it seems to us that government has two means at its disposal to ease the effects of unemployment both in regard to the individual unemployed and to the economy of the country.

One is a scheme of unemployment insurance based on sound actuarial principles and designed to pay out benefits to those insured persons who become unemployed. The other is a program of public assistance designed to provide for those not protected at all or not protected adequately by unemployment insurance and to assist in those periodic times of economic recession during which unemployment rises to abnormal heights.

We do not criticize the humanitarian motives of government in making changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, intended to cope with such problems as those produced by seasonality in economic activity, by industries that are essentially seasonal in character, or by economic recession with its attendant and often substantial degree of unemployment which may be of considerable duration. We are intensely concerned to see what we believe to be undue and even unfair demands made upon the unemployment insurance fund, demands which appear to violate the actuarial basis of a good insurance act and which pertain rather to a program of public assistance than to a sound insurance scheme.

The results of such mingling on any wide scale of the two concepts of unemployment insurance and public assistance are only too likely to be reflected in an unsound fund, an effect which seems to be already unfortunately in evidence.

In the act as it now stands this discrimination against the main body of supporting contributors appears to have occurred to a considerable degree.

For example, in covering the employee in stable, year-round work the risk involved is unexpected unemployment, but with highly seasonal industries the risk is expected unemployment during some part of each year. Unless the highly seasonal industries are protected under some other legislation, it would appear that only higher rates for them, in recognition of a greater risk, can avoid the effect of subsidization by both employers and employees in the more stable industries. Lack of recognition of this would seem to involve unfair discrimination against the bulk of contributors who may reasonably expect their contributions to be used to cover the contingency of their unexpected unemployment.

Summary and Recommendations

(3) The federation recommends that a royal commission or similar body be established to completely review the Unemployment Insurance Act.

(Translation):

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, a study of our suggestions and of all submissions made to the industrial relations committee would indicate that, according to all public organizations without any exception, the increase is acceptable neither to the employees nor to the employers. Moreover, it is claimed that, unless a more serious investigation is made by a royal commission or some specially set up independent committee responsible for studying the question and reporting to the government, it will be impossible to establish clearly what exactly the government intends to do at this time.

As a matter of fact, if we consider the figures supplied to us, we see that the unemployment insurance fund has dwindled appreciably, not necessarily as a result of inadequate contributions—though this decrease was particularly noticeable for the years when unemployment figures were up.

We find that in March 1958, the unemployment insurance fund had assets of $744,200,-124.87, while in March 1959 the amount was down to $496,251,386.48. This means, Mr. Chairman, that as a result of the recession we have been through, considerable amounts from this fund have had to be paid to the unemployed, at the expense of people who had paid contributions in the hope that they might benefit in the event of their becoming temporarily unemployed in the course of their lifetime. I think the government is seriously derelict in its duty if it fails to take from the consolidated revenue fund the necessary money to put back the unemployment insurance fund on a sound basis. In such a case, the government will simply be holding two classes of society responsible for all the trouble we have been having in Canada for some time.

We also notice in report No. 6 which has been submitted to us and which refers to the addition of new changes introduced by the bill under study—

(Text):

Increases in benefits arising from the addition of two new classes.

(Translation):

We notice that an increase of $9.4 million—

(Text):

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I want to say something concerning these amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I may say that I joined the committee rather late, and most of the briefs had been submitted. However, several briefs were presented, and those which I heard, as well as those which I read, were practically all critical of the amendments that have been presented.

In looking over the briefs I find most of them are against the rise in the contributions or against the fund paying the supplementary benefits, more particularly the seasonal benefits. They recommend that the whole matter should be referred to a committee of actuaries who would devise some better methods than those contained in these particular amendments. Labour, for the most part, agreed with the increases in benefits and the extension of benefits from 36 to 52 weeks. However, they objected greatly to paying contributions out of all proportion to the cost of these increased benefits. So far as I can see, the government has paid no attention to these recommendations that were received by the committee through the different briefs that were submitted.

I know the government has a big majority, and they will probably carry through this measure. However, I believe they should listen to some of the advice that has been given, and some of the representations made, particularly from employers and from labour. From the manufacturers' point of view, these amendments certainly add to their cost of production in a highly competitive market. It is difficult for many of our manufacturers to maintain themselves in some products even in our home market. When their costs rise, this rise will tend to increase unemployment even further. To give you some examples of what the manufacturers think of these amendments, I have only to refer to one presentation which is typical of several that were submitted. They say this:

The present wording of the act with reference to eligibility qualifications has many ambiguities which make it extremely difficult for the local offices to prevent abuses.

I might say that I can refer to this particular reference in some of the labour representations. The manufacturers also state as follows:

The extension of the plan in recent years whereby additional occupational groups of employees have been included and by which benefit periods were increased in length has thrown the unemployment insurance fund into jeopardy . . .

The scheme has departed from its original concept of an actuarially sound insurance plan designed to tide employees over periods of temporary unemployment. Generally speaking, the operating deficits in recent years may be attributed to the above-mentioned extensions of both coverage and benefits.

One has only to go to the representation made by the Canadian Congress of Labour to see what they say about these amendments. They say this:

We think that the fund, to the extent that it needs replenishing through means other than a return to full employment, should be replenished in other ways and from other sources.

They make certain recommendations. They say:

The congress believes that there are other amendments which should be made to the act. We have already referred to the need for much greater coverage than now exists, more particularly to the justification of immediate inclusion of hospital employees.

Being connected with some hospitals, I might say that I think that hospital employees across Canada, or at least those in the part of Canada in which I live, would like the opportunity of being included under this act. The paragraph continues:

Other amendments that we recommend to you for your consideration are:

(1) the elimination of the waiting period;

(2) the elimination of the anomalies in regard to benefits during illness whereby benefit would be available if and as soon as employment was lost due to illness;

(3) modification of the disqualification resulting from unemployment due to a stoppage of work whereby such disqualification would not result if the stoppage is a lockout imposed by the employer,—

Then they go on to recommend prohibition of referrals to struck plants; restoration of dependency status for dependents residing outside Canada and so on. I think I have referred to sufficient here to show that both labour and industry are opposed to the amendments proposed by the government.

In looking over the state of the fund, according to page one of the unemployment insurance supplement that was issued, we find that at the end of the fiscal year 1957—that is at the end of March, 1957—the fund had $874 million and that at the end of the fiscal year 1959 the fund had $496 million, a drop of $378 million. According to the investment position changes tabled in the house the figure for government securities on hand as of March 31, 1959 was $490 million, down over $250 million from the previous March 31. As at the end of May many of these $490 million of bonds—

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McMillan: When I get through.

Mr. Grafftey: I do not blame the hon. member.

Mr. McMillan: Many of these $490 million of bonds were hypothecated against a $80 million loan from the Minister of Finance, on which they had to pay interest of 5 per cent. The value of the bonds in the portfolio had depreciated so much in value that the equity of the unemployment insurance commission in that fund was actually only $350.3 million as of the end of May, 1958. I think Mr. Coyne gave us the figure each month. At the end of March it was $357 million. I am giving the figure to the closest million. At the end of April it was $353 million. At the end of May it was $350.3 million. We know that the bond market has fallen considerably since the end of May and I would say it is now down considerably under $350 million. We were told that at the beginning of June the fund would just about balance; that is that the intake and the outgo of the fund would just about balance. If that is true, then the fund is below $350 million at the present time. We know that the fund has already taken a loss of over $10 million in securities that were sold.

Mr. Grafftey: That is wrong.

Mr. Benidickson: That is correct.

Mr. McMillan: The fund has already taken a loss of over $10 million in securities that were sold. The conversion loan and the government's fiscal policy of having high current deficits have both helped to force the bond market down, have caused higher interest rates and have helped to put the unemployment insurance fund in jeopardy.

As we know the fund borrowed $80 million at 5 per cent. The commission has done this in order to retain its position intact. As Mr. Coyne told us, if they put a great many bonds on the market that procedure would tend to depress the market further. Certainly we do not want anything to help to depress the Canadian bond market. If you go to New York or if you go any place you will find that it takes only about one sale to knock them down about a point or so. You can see that happening in New York. I ask anybody to pick up the New York Sunday Times. There he will see that if one or two Canadian bonds are sold there they go down a point while probably Australian bonds are going up.

Mr. Benidickson: What about Cuba?

Mr. McMillan: Cuban bonds are higher than equivalent Canadian bonds in New York at the present time and they were much higher in February. In February the Cuban four and a half per cent 1977's were selling at 104.25 while Canadian four and a half per cent 1983's were selling at 94.

Mr. Benidickson: They had Castro instead of Fleming.

Mr. McMillan: That was true whether it was under Castro or Batista because the range of the Cuban bonds was 102 to 104.25—that is for the previous fourteen months—whereas here in Canada the bonds of the Diefenbaker government certainly were not as good as the Batista or Castro bonds in New York.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benidickson: That is a fact.

Mr. McMillan: It is nothing to laugh about because the people who bought these Canadian bonds have certainly lost a great deal of money. I think there are two excellent reasons, and the government has given two excellent reasons, why we should not increase these contributions toward the unemployment insurance fund. First of all, the Prime Minister went around the country at last election time and said there soon would be no unemployment. In fact, one night I remember sitting at the television and hearing the Minister of Labour himself say that within two or three months there would be no unemployment. That being the case, and it is nearly two years ago, why have they not cleared up the problem of unemployment in two years? If the unemployment were cleared up there would be no need to increase the unemployment insurance contributions, because the fund would be rising by leaps and bounds at the present time.

Then there is another reason. The Minister of Finance said—and he said this at the time of his budget—that the gross national product would rise by 7 per cent up to about 34.5. I think that only today he said it would not be necessary to borrow so much money, and I take it from that that the gross national product is up more than he expected, and that certainly the gross national product will be higher this year than any year. So why do they need to collect more contributions from the workers when the gross national product is higher than it has been at any time heretofore?

All the segments of the population are being taxed and certainly the working man is paying more taxes. The working man is paying more taxes because of the excise tax and because many smoke cigarettes and drink beer. But this government is putting this extra tax on the working man. The working man is having to pay more tax because of unemployment. I maintain that the working man alone should not be paying what the Canadian people as a whole should be paying. If the government thinks that the unemployment benefits should be extended from 36 to 52 weeks, I think the working man should be charged with that amount and that amount alone. If he is charged with that amount alone, he would only be charged about one-eighth of what he is being charged in increased contributions under these amendments.

Mr. Benidickson: One-eighth of the extra payment.

Mr. McMillan: One-eighth of the extra premium. The government is making a great pretence to the working man. I heard Conservative members in the committee say that we must hurry up and get this through to help the working man. The government is making a great pretence to the working man that they want to get this through to help him. The point is that they want to get this through to get the working man to help the government. They are wanting the working man to pay increased contributions because they are not going to pay him back in proportion to the amount they collect from him in extra premiums. I maintain this will not fool the people of Canada. It certainly will not fool the working man himself, and I do not think the working man should be called upon to pay these extra premiums. He is really paying the tax that the Minister of Finance should be collecting from the people of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to go on with the few remarks I had started to make?

(Text):

Mr. Martel: Not again!

Mr. Caron: Yes, again, and it may be longer than you think.

An hon. Member: A filibuster.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman—

I am waiting for hon. gentlemen to stop making remarks.

According to report No. 6 with regard to unemployment insurance, which was sent to us by Department of Labour officials, the addition of two classes would cost the unemployment insurance commission $9,400,000, and the increase resulting from the 36 to 52 weeks' extension of the benefit period would amount to $11 million. The adjustment would equal $3,100,000, which brings the total of new expenses for the unemployment insurance commission to $23,500,000.

When it is known that a 30 per cent increase would represent an amount of $78 million, while new expenses are supposed to amount to no more than $23,500,000, we can well believe that there's something wrong in the way this act was put together.

Besides, if losses had occurred simply because the commission had had to pay somewhat more to keep the jobless provided with the basic necessities of life, we might understand the situation. But we have been told that the unemployment insurance commission was advised by the investment committee to exchange a number of securities it held for long term conversion bonds, which resulted in a 10 million dollar loss. However, that figure does not represent the actual value of those bonds, which has been reduced to the extent that, if we were forced to sell those we own, in order to obtain enough money to pay the people who need unemployment insurance benefits, the commission would have to take an additional loss of $62 million, which added to the $10 million, gives a total of $72 million, i.e. approximately the amount needed to replenish the fund which has been depleted for the last few years.

Mr. Chairman, the worker and the employer should not be called upon to shoulder the total cost of the damages brought about by a somewhat faulty administration, because I understand there was incompatibility between the chairman of the investment committee and the one who acted as adviser for the unemployment insurance commission. In fact, the latter was caught in an extraordinary dilemma, as he was at the same time adviser to the Minister of Finance, in which capacity he advised him to issue a conversion loan. On the other hand, on account of the secret he had to keep, he could not advise the unemployment insurance commission that there was some risk in keeping any longer the treasury bills which it still had in hand and that it would be preferable to sell them on the market to get a better price. So, the commission kept its treasury bills till the last moment, which led to the exchange for conversion bonds, and to that considerable loss. Furthermore, unemployment had increased enormously. Now, instead of buying treasury bills which could have been sold on the market when they would have brought more money, the unemployment insurance commission was practically forced to accept long term bonds in order to give the Minister of Finance the credit of having made a marvellous deal. On the other hand, we know that certain other public bodies having bonds sold them in time and did not incur the losses incurred by the unemployment insurance commission. Furthermore, those losses were caused by an urgent need of money, brought about by the need for paying unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Chairman, according to the table I have here the percentage of outlays compared to revenues in 1952 was but 44.2 per cent; in 1953, that percentage was 64.9; in 1954, 86.3; in 1955, 118.7; in 1956, it was back to 94.1; in 1957, to 91.9 and in 1958, to 151.2; finally, in 1959, it reached 207.5.

Mr. Chairman, this means that employers and employees are now being taxed for the administration's mistakes, whereas the money should be drawn from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

We note that in 1958, employer and employee contributions amounted to $718,409.64, while the government's share was $143,681.93. In 1959, the share of employees and employers will be $778,008.07, while the government's share will be raised to only $155,601.41. This means that there is a drop in the share to be paid by the government as compared to the share that employees and employers are being forced to pay.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at the bill, we find that there are certainly some items we can accept. However, we cannot see how the government can introduce this bill and ask us to pass it, and take advantage of its majority to push it through, when all public organizations we have heard are unanimous in objecting to the bill as it reads. Despite this disapproval, the government apparently intends to ram it down the throats of the Canadian people.

If objections had come only from labour organizations, I would say that perhaps they are a little biased, but we find that not only the workers, but employers, chambers of commerce, manufacturers and builders throughout Canada have all, without exception, objected to the bill, that all have described it as impractical and have suggested that it be studied by a special committee or by a royal commission appointed by the government. And when we ask that the bill be postponed out of deference for the wishes of the great majority of people in every part of Canada, they say "we want to help the workers". Yet when we suggested that at the beginning of this session the house adjourn for the purpose of studying the unemployment situation, the government objected that there was no urgency at the time, although there were 500,000 unemployed in Canada. There was no urgency! But today when, according to them, the number of unemployed has decreased, they want to put through legislation which is not practical and which will please no one. Besides, when we asked for information in order to study this legislation, it was refused to us.

On several occasions, in order to be able to have a good understanding of this bill, we asked for certain information which, by the way had been printed in the newspapers, but was never given officially in the house, at the committee, they took pleasure in putting grit in the bearings, almost continually.

Mr. Chairman, I could take any report from the committee and show you that we were discriminated against, because they did not want the truth to come out. We were repeatedly insulted because we asked for information that the government was not ready to give out. At this stage, I want to be fair and say that when he appeared before the committee, the minister gave us enough leeway and answered our questions fairly well. However, we were not allowed to seek advice from the unemployment insurance advisory committee whose members were in a position to give us plenty of information on that question, since the advisory committee had not recommended that measure. Despite the fact that the advisory committee put forward the same reasons as those submitted by the various public organizations, the government is bent anyway on by-passing those suggestions and intends to thrust that bill upon us.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the attitude shown, at the industrial relations committee meetings, toward members of the Liberal party and C.C.F. members present is a glaring injustice. Every time a question was asked, the chairman rose and declared it out of order, even before we had a chance to express an opinion.

He led the discussions of this committee in a deplorable way and prevented us from obtaining the information we needed to debate the matter further in the house.

Mr. Ricard: This is a tissue of lies.

Mr. Caron: We have in this house a committee member who is largely responsible for that unfair treatment within the committee—

Mr. Ricard: A tissue of lies!

Mr. Denis: Don't spoil your chances of being appointed parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Ricard: Keep an eye on your own chances!

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I said that we had a right to protest, and now that the bill is back before the house, where those members who were forced—

Mr. Ricard: It is a tissue of lies.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, now that peace is restored, I might go on with my remarks.

Mr. Chambers: Are you calm?

Mr. Caron: Is there anyone who wishes to say something?

Mr. Chambers: I asked you if you are calmed down.

Mr. Caron: I did not understand a thing.

An hon. Member: He doesn't understand anything.

Mr. Benidickson: He does not speak French well.

Mr. Grafftey: Continue.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, those interjections indicate that our complaints are justified.

I was going to suggest to the Minister of Labour whose responsibility it is to recommend members to be appointed chairmen of various committees, that if he intends again to recommend the appointment of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) as chairman of the industrial relations committee next year, he should set up a special class in order that the hon. member may get acquainted with parliamentary procedure and the way to preside at meetings. In fact, twice we had to leave the meeting in protest, because we were being denied the required information, and this as a result of the line followed by the hon. member for Danforth who was chairman of the committee. Therefore, we missed part of those sittings and the opportunity was taken to rush things through.

Mr. Chairman, I referred a while ago to labour representatives who appeared before the committee to present their views. This advisory committee included labour representatives who had to resign because they did not agree with the way the government was dealing with Canadian workers. And when we discussed the situation, a certain member whose riding I do not recall said something like this:

(Text):

The resignation of the labour members has been a service to the commission.

[Mr. Ricard.]

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, these words could give the impression that the workers' representatives within the commission were not acting according to their conscience or in a way that would help the committee and advise the minister with insight and objectivity.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I contend that, at this time, we are not in a position to pass bill C-23, for lack of relevant information.

We received protests from organizations throughout the country. I believe that, as long as we have not received the necessary information which would enable us to consider the bill, we, in this house, cannot vote in favour of a legislation which can, at present, be considered unfair, because it throws upon only two groups of our society the whole burden of the errors that have possibly been committed by the present government since it has been managing this country's business and which may have been the cause of a decrease in our international trade and thus of a lack of employment in Canada.

This decline in our trade also caused some industries to close down, at least for a while. Warehouses were chock full of goods and manufacturers were being forced to stop production while waiting to sell part of the accumulated stock.

Mr. Chairman, if that is the government policy, there cannot be any doubt that the resulting unemployment is responsible for the deplorable condition of the unemployment fund. It rests with the government to replenish the unemployment fund. It is also up to the government to contribute $400 million to the fund, if necessary, so as to restore it to the level it was at before the economic recession, so that employees and employers shall not be requested to pay larger contributions into this fund which is designed to help those who lost their jobs, as a result of the difficult economic conditions which the country has been facing these last few years.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the minister to adjourn the debate on that measure and to set up a committee to study it further. I am satisfied that in acting upon this suggestion, it would be granting the request of the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian manufacturers, the Board of Trade of Canada, the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade of Toronto, and of all who appeared before the committee. Then we will be in a position to draft a bill more suited to the needs of the country, of the worker and of the employer, because, and we should not forget it, as a result of the proposed increase of the contributions, certain industries which produce particular items will see their production cost increased by as much as $16,000 a year. That fact was brought to the attention of the committee on industrial relations by the Canadian manufacturers.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, can we reasonably require that only two categories of people in Canada be responsible for all the troubles that this country is experiencing today? Can the minister logically attempt to keep on imposing on us such a measure when he personally knows that the advisory committee, far from recommending it, even criticized it?

Can he logically ask this house to pass it, unless he uses a servile majority to force it upon us.

I say that we propose to fight it. We are trying to get the minister to allow us at least the time to go into it more thoroughly. Meanwhile, let the government, which is responsible for that sorry plight, pay out of Canada's consolidated revenue fund the amount required to replenish the unemployment insurance fund, because we know that if next winter we have anything like last winter's unemployment, it will cost at least another $250 million. And in view of the fact that there is only some $350 million left at the present time and that the market value is lower than the book value, it is my contention that if we have that kind of unemployment next winter, the fund will practically be exhausted and the government will have yet to draw from the consolidated revenue fund to maintain conditions across the country.

So, if the government, by reason of the dangerous state of the fund, has to draw additional amounts from the consolidated revenue fund, why should it not do it right now? Then it could have this bill studied by an independent body, which could be made up of persons having made special economic studies who could advise the government. If their views were similar to that of the advisory committee, that would mean that the government would be in the wrong, and then we would vote against the bill. If, on the other hand, that particular committee advised the government to follow its present policy, well, we could say to the government: assume your own responsibilities. We would let the bill go through with all the more satisfaction since it would have been thoroughly examined.

There are things which are not accurate in this bill. For instance, it is claimed that the increase will average 30 per cent. But when we consider the new classes, we realize that the increase will reach 64 per cent in certain cases. An increase of 64 per cent, both for the worker and for the employer, means an increase in the cost of living. An increase in the cost of living means an inflationary upsurge in the country. An inflationary upsurge in the country means that the cost of our goods will increase to such an extent that we are going to go on losing our markets abroad. And if we keep on losing our markets abroad, there will be an increase in the number of unemployed in Canada.

Can we afford, here in Canada, a small country in terms of population but large in size, to wait until that calamity is upon us before we react? I say that the ministers are too responsible to accept such a view. I say, as the Minister of Finance did say himself, that we must assess the situation and check that increase, in order that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) may find markets for the products we have at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, we want the minister to change his mind and grant us a more detailed study of the bill before it is adopted.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

(Text):

Progress reported.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I have leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of giving first reading to the bill entitled an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act pursuant to the resolution which was reported and agreed upon earlier this afternoon?

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to revert to the introduction of bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATIONS, PROVIDE FOR MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what the business is for tomorrow? I presume we shall start, as the house leader said on Friday, with item No. 19 and thereafter, I take it, the leader will indicate what the business is.

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will start with item No. 19 on today's order paper and then continue the debate on the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act; then take item No. 10 respecting the superannuation of the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; then item No. 3, an act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and then item No. 11, an act to amend the Criminal Code.

Once those are finished we should like to go on with the bills following the resolutions that were passed today. I believe three of them are under the Minister of Finance and one under the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the estimates be the same as indicated last Friday?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, although there may be a change in the order. We may take the estimates of the Department of Finance ahead of those of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: Will they start in any case on Thursday?

Mr. Green: I would hope we could start them on Wednesday. It will depend on what progress we make with the legislation.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

GASOLINE PUMPS AND REPAIR SHOP, ST. JEAN, QUE.

Question No. 418—Mr. Dupuis:

1. Were tenders called for the granting of a concession for the operation of gasoline pumps and a repair shop for motor boats on a parcel of land belonging to the government, on the western bank of the Richelieu river at St. Jean, south of the Canadian National bridge between St. Jean and Ibervillle?

2. If so, what are the names of the persons, companies or corporations who submitted tenders, and what was the amount of each tender?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1 and 2. Tenders were not called for the lease of the government wharf and adjoining water lot at St. Johns, P.Q. It has not been the practice to call for tenders under circumstances similar to this case. When applications are received for the leasing of departmental land the normal procedure is to determine whether or not such land may be leased by the department and when there is no objection from the departments standpoint to its use for the purposes indicated by the applicant, a lease may be granted. A rental based on current land valuations in the area is set and the applicant informed accordingly. A lease has not yet been executed.

SCIENTIFIC POSITIONS, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 433—Mr. Argue:

1. Were any senior scientific positions in the field of botany above the salary of $9,000 (a) created; (b) unfilled, in any section of the former science service division of the Department of Agriculture between January 1 and March 1, 1959?

2. If so, in the case of (a) on what date were they created, and in the case of (b) on what date did they become vacant?

3. What positions were they, in what section, what salary, and what was the nature of the work?

4. Was a civil service competition opened for any of these positions?

5. If so, for which ones, on what date, and what was the number?

6. If not, what was the authority under which each of them were to be filled?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. (a) No; (b) Yes.

2. (b) October 1, 1958.

3. AGR-517 SSB-1, Chief research division (agric. 1), botany, salary $9,600 to $10,140.

4. No.

5. See answer to 4.

6. Held vacant pending reorganization, research branch.

RADIO LICENCES ISSUED SINCE JANUARY 1, 1959

Question No. 444—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the board of broadcast governors issued any licences to operate radio stations since January 1, 1959?

2. If so, (a) what stations have been licensed, and on what date; (b) to whom were they issued, and who is the licensee of each; (c) what town or city are they to serve; (d) what persons sit on the board of directors of each station, and who are the owners?

3. Are the licensees of any of these radio stations engaged in (a) operation of any other radio or T.V. stations; (b) other commercial enterprises?

4. If so: (a) what is the nature of the businesses upon which each is engaged? (b) what is the name of each of the companies owned by each licensee? (c) who are the directors and officers of each? (d) who are the owners?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. The board of broadcast governors makes recommendation on new applications to the Minister of Transport but the board does not issue licences. Such licences are issued by the Minister of Transport upon the approval of the governor in council. Following the approval of the governor in council for the issuance of a licence, authority is granted for the establishment of the station but authority for its operation is not granted until the station has been established and the licensee organization set up in accordance with the approved application. Authority has been granted for the establishment of 14 private commercial broadcasting stations since January 1, 1959 but the stations have not yet been established.

FERRY SERVICE, ST. JOSEPH DE LA RIVE-ST. BERNARD DE L'ILE AUX COUDRES

Question No. 454—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

1. Have complaints been received by the Department of Transport or the Canadian Maritime Commission concerning the ferry service operated by Rosario Harvey between St. Joseph de La Rive and St. Bernard de l'Ile aux Coudres?

2. If so, of what nature were such complaints?

3. Did the department or the commission make an investigation of such complaints? If so, what were the findings?

4. Did the Canadian Maritime Commission inform Mr. Harvey of the cancellation of subsidy in connection with this ferry? If so, on what date?

Questions

5. Did Mr. Harvey hold a permit issued by the public service board of the province of Quebec for the operation of this ferry service? If so, during what period?

6. Is this ferry service being operated at the present time?

7. If so, by what person, company or partnership, when was the contract awarded and what is the amount of the subsidy?

8. Did the present operators hold a permit from the public service board of the province of Quebec for this ferry service when awarded the contract by the board or department?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Resolution of the council of the municipality of St. Bernard de l'Ile-aux-Coudres, also delegations from the island to interview the Canadian maritime commission. Complaints were:

(a) concerning the alleged poor condition of the vessel and doubts of its stability and safety;

(b) concerning the way in which automobiles were loaded on the deck of the ferry in such a manner as to preclude the possibility of their occupants escaping from them in an emergency;

(c) inadequate capacity for the traffic in that many automobiles were alleged to be left behind on frequent occasions owing to lack of sufficient space;

(d) concerning the type of vessel in use, which was a converted goelette.

3. Yes.

A. The board of steamship inspection, Department of Transport, reported

(a) that the ferry was in a satisfactory condition;

(b) that the senior steamship inspector, at the port of Quebec, was instructed to draw again to the attention of the ferry operator public notice 1013 which points out that the deck stowage arrangement of vehicles should be such as to provide ready escape from any vehicle, in an emergency;

B. The Canadian Maritime Commission reported

(c) that traffic has increased steadily over the past few years and that day excursionists, on Sundays and holidays, were also increasing, thus creating congestion on week ends, particularly on Sundays. Supplementary trips in excess of the schedule had been made on 22 occasions to endeavour to satisfy the public demand. However, the complainants maintained that many would-be users of the ferry had turned away rather than wait an indefinite period to make a crossing. The week day traffic had been accommodated without much trouble;

(d) it is true that this vessel was a converted goelette and lacked luxury accommodation.

4. Yes. February 26, 1959.

5. Yes. From April 30, 1957, until March 19, 1959.

6. Yes.

7. By la Cie de Navigation Cartier Limitee; the contract was executed in May, 1959, for an annual subsidy of $15,000.

8. Yes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 16, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Second report of standing committee on agriculture and colonization—Mr. Stanton.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REFERENCE TO MOTION ON "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS" OF TODAY

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day I should like to call the attention of the house to a notice of motion at page 11 of Votes and Proceedings of today, which has given me some concern as to its disposition at this point. Normally it would go on the order paper tomorrow, and the question is as to what is its proper place on the order paper. In accordance with some of the precedents in the past, if it is a proper motion dealing with a matter of privilege it would appear on the order paper tomorrow under routine proceedings and be dealt with at that point.

What I have in mind is directing that it be placed on the order paper for tomorrow under routine proceedings, and when it is called and before the motion is put I would like to ask the house for advice as to the propriety of that course, namely whether it is a proper motion on a question of privilege, so that a decision can be made then, if that course recommends itself to the house, and the motion disposed of.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL-KINGSTON—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to report upon the discussions which took place recently, concerning the Montreal-Ottawa-Kingston pilots, between the minister's officers, those of the shipping federation and the pilots themselves, concerning certain grievances about which questions were asked earlier? Is the minister in a position to say what has been the progress of these discussions and the negotiations?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Just to say this, Mr. Speaker, that the discussions have been going on, as the hon. member for Laurier has said, and we consider that very satisfactory progress has been made.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED CANADIAN CONTRACT FOR REPAIR OF FLYING BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the minister any information on the awarding of a contract to a Canadian firm for the overhaul and repair of 100 of the so-called flying box cars?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, one Canadian firm has been asked by the United States army to submit tenders for the repair of the flying box cars. It is Northwest Industries, Edmonton.

AGRICULTURE

HONEY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister in a position to announce a support price for Canadian-produced honey, as the honey producers are approaching another crop season?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to provide a support price for honey produced in Canada and delivered by producers to registered packers in the 12 months starting July 1, 1959.

The support price authorized will allow the board to make up the difference, if any, between the average Canadian price to producers and 13½ cents per pound, basis white No. 1 grade extracted honey. The authorized price of 13½ cents per pound is a national average based on the return to the producer for honey delivered in bulk at the plants of registered packers. This prescribed price is equivalent to 104 per cent of the 10-year average, compared with the provision of a price support of 12 cents per pound for the 1958 crop, which was equivalent to 91 per cent of the 10-year average price.

The number of colonies of bees in Canada has shown some decline in recent years. In 1958 domestic disappearance of honey was about three million pounds greater than Canadian production. This assistance should help maintain and stabilize the Canadian honey industry.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARCTIC ISLANDS—APPROVAL OF NEW OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. Would the minister tell the house whether or not the new oil and gas regulations for the Arctic islands have been approved by the cabinet and, if so, would he care to comment on these new regulations?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is, no.

[Later:]

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the answer given to me a moment ago by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources I wonder if he would tell me whether or not the "no" answer he gave was applicable to both questions I asked, or applicable only to the question concerning whether or not cabinet has approved the new oil and gas regulations which have been under consideration now for over two weeks?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question was no, and the answer to the second was not applicable.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—BUREAU OF STATISTICS FIGURES FOR MAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister inform the house as to the latest figures of the dominion bureau of statistics in regard to unemployment in Canada as a whole and in the Pacific region in particular?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Figures for May released today by the dominion bureau of statistics show that there were 188,000 more people at work in Canada than there were in April. There were 102,000 more Canadians at work than at this time last year. Job seekers, at 334,000, are 111,000 less than last month, and 36,000 fewer people are seeking work than were seeking work this time last year. The labour force, at 6,186,000, probably constitutes a record for the month of May. It is 66,000 higher than last year.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Would the minister give us the figures for the corresponding dates in May of 1958 and 1959 as to the number of unemployed in Sydney?

Mr. Starr: Figures issued by the bureau do not give a breakdown by municipalities or even by regions.

Mr. McIlraith: It is on the third page of the report from which the hon. gentleman has just read.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Would the minister give the percentage of the labour force seeking work as of that date in May?

Mr. Starr: It was 5.4 per cent, compared with 6 per cent.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): In view of the fact that the number still out of work is very large, is the minister in a position to announce at this time whether or not the government has any plans for winter work or any other plans to put this large number of men and women who are unemployed back to work?

Mr. Starr: The figures I have quoted are for the middle of May. I know they are much lower now, and I am sure that when the next figures are released they will be much lower than these figures I have quoted. This is the result of the work which has been done by this government and the plans that have been formulated by this government to bring the figures down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that the Prime Minister of Canada said that as long as there was—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask hon. members to give the hon. member who has the floor an opportunity to ask his question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can very well understand the concern of hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Labour not aware that the Prime Minister of Canada said that as long as there was one person out of work in Canada no one would suffer as a result of the policies of this government? I would suggest by way of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East, I think has gone—

Mr. Fraser: Too far.

Mr. Speaker: —further than I would normally have allowed by reason of the statement the Minister of Labour made, but he has asked a complete question and I suggest that it be dropped there. It strikes me this is not the sort of question that calls for a reply.

Mr. Hees: It was a speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the question of the hon. member for Vancouver South was in order, my question was equally in order because it reminded hon. gentlemen opposite of solemn promises made to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is some doubt about the regularity of the whole proceedings at this point. I allowed the hon. member for Essex East to pose his question, which was really an argumentative question not calling for an answer, because the Minister of Labour had replied in the same vein, but I think the subject might be dropped at this point.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether any plans have been formulated for a winter work conference with the provinces and, if so, when it will be held?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the Leader of the Opposition is so keenly interested in conferences, especially after this government initiated them, which is something the former government had not undertaken previously.

For the hon. gentleman's information, in case he does not know this, I may say we did hold such a conference in July.

[Later:]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day in the midst of an answer to a question I had asked I made an interjection when the minister gave the reply that he did not have the information. I said the information was on page 3 of the document he was reading from with regard to the unemployment situation. The information is to be found on page 5 of the document.

NATIONAL REVENUE

BOISSEVAIN, MAN.—SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OF CHILDREN OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in replying to a question raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on June 9 regarding an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press to the effect that customs officers at the port of Boissevain, Manitoba, are obliged for financial reasons to send their children to school in North Dakota, I actually had in mind another article appearing in the same paper. I answered in part and said I would obtain further information, and I wish now to clarify the matter by referring to the article to which he had reference.

The facts of this case are that the situation is not as represented. Authority had been granted by the department, with the concurrence of treasury board, to pay a car mileage allowance to the officer for the transportation of his children to and from the school at Horton, Manitoba, a distance of 9 miles. The officer, however, made arrangements to send his children to school at Dunseith, North Dakota, a distance of 13 miles from the international border.

The reasons given by the officer were that the road to Horton was hilly and heavily wooded, thus causing hazardous driving conditions; that the school board at Horton classified the children as non-residents, resulting in the officer having to pay tuition fees; also that Horton, being a rural school, taught only grades 1 to 7, which would result in the officer's eldest child having to attend school at Boissevain with the resultant tuition fees charged non-residents, as well as board and lodging. Furthermore, the North Dakota school bus proceeds to the border each morning and returns each evening, making it very convenient for the children as well as the parents.

The customs buildings and residences are located in the Turtle mountain forest reserve and are not included within a municipality. Consequently the officers are not required to pay taxes but pay rental to the department, amounting to $30 or $40 per month, depending on the type of house in which each officer lives.

The department makes every effort not to place officers with young families at isolated border offices, but when it is realized that we have 125 offices located along the international boundary it will be appreciated that it is not always possible to arrange this, having regard to the competitive system of filling positions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the hon. gentleman a supplementary question. Can he give us the number of border crossings at that particular point?

Mr. Fulton: That is hardly a question for the orders of the day.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he is in a position to tell us if any progress has been made in the strike at the Polymer Corporation at Sarnia, in connection with which many men have been out of work for such a long time?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, very favourable progress is being made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are still out of work.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY IN COUNTY OF GATINEAU

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the schedule to the Prime Minister's Residence Act to bring certain property in the township of Eardley, county of Gatineau within the scope of the act.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, hon. members will notice that this resolution is preceding the introduction of a measure to amend the schedule to the Prime Minister's Residence Act to bring certain property in the township of Eardley, Gatineau county, in the province of Quebec, within the scope of the act. As the Prime Minister's act was originally passed it contained in the schedule only one property, namely the house on Sussex street in the city of Ottawa. The bill which will follow this resolution merely adds to the schedule the property in the Gatineau hills which is ordinarily referred to as the Harrington lake residence.

It will be remembered that about three weeks ago the hon. member for Kootenay West asked a question on the orders of the day in the following terms:

In view of the general concern that the historic and beautiful Harrington lake residence and property be preserved and used to the best advantage, will the government recognize this concern and interest by the introduction of legislation that will establish this property as an official government country residence for use by the Prime Minister, his distinguished guests and other appropriate persons?

To that question I replied as follows:

I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The suggestion he makes will be given serious consideration by the government, and should it be the wish generally of hon. members that such a course be followed I should think legislation could be introduced at this session.

I mentioned this proviso because legislation of this kind is not the type that any government wishes to introduce, and in particular that no prime minister wishes to have introduced, unless members are agreed that such steps should be taken. I remember the reaction of Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent when the Prime Minister's Residence Act was introduced originally, and it was just the same as the reaction of the present Prime Minister to this proposed amendment.

These men, in a position of great responsibility, think of themselves last. If it were not the wish of the house generally to have the amendment which I am moving today passed, the government would not, of course, proceed with the measure. May I hasten to add that the other members of the cabinet, and I am sure the members of the last cabinet, feel very keenly that this measure is appropriate and, as a matter of fact, is badly needed in order to help ease the burdens of whoever may happen to be the prime minister of this nation.

The property which will be placed in the schedule if the bill carries is not the whole of the Harrington lake property, but merely 13.4 acres with the house which is on that particular portion. This property is part of a much larger property consisting of some 4,286 acres which was purchased by the federal district commission in 1951 as part of a program for the acquisition of property for the Gatineau national park. The 4,286 acres were jointly owned by Colonel C. M. Edwards and Hon. W. D. Herridge and included the Edwards home, which is on the property now being included in the schedule, and also the Herridge home, and two farms which will remain under the administration of the national capital commission. I should like to make that clear that all the 4,286 acres, with the exception of the 13.4 acres which would be placed in the schedule to the act will remain the property of, and under the sole jurisdiction of, the national capital commission.

There has been some suggestion that the intention was to take the whole 4,286 acres and restrict anyone from fishing in Harrington lake, and a lot of such rumours, but such is not the case. All that is being done is to place the house, together with the surrounding grounds, totalling 13.4 acres in the schedule to the Prime Minister's Residence Act. The home would be available for the use of the prime minister in the summer months and also for the entertainment of distinguished guests visiting this country. Hon. members will recall that last year Her Royal Highness Princess Margaret, during her visit to Ottawa, spent a very happy time at this residence on the shore of Harrington lake. I am sure that from time to time there will be other distinguished guests coming to Ottawa who could be entertained there during the warm summer weather.

In the course of my negotiations with members of the other parties someone made the suggestion that perhaps the leader of the opposition could have the use of the house for one day a week; and the house leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Laurier, thought he might have the use of it once very two weeks. I wondered where that left the house leader on the government side, and thought he perhaps might be able to use it once every three weeks.

In any event, indication was given from both the opposition parties that they were heartily in favour of a measure of this kind being introduced; and because of that understanding, and of the original suggestion by the hon. member for Kootenay West, I place this resolution before the committee this afternoon.

(Translation):

Mr. Leduc: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the remarks made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) when he brought forward his resolution to annex the lake Harrington property to the present summer residence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). Personally, I am very pleased with the government's decision and I can assure the house that the people of Gatineau riding are very happy about it. Moreover, the official opposition supports the government's policy.

The choice of this property as permanent summer residence for succeeding prime ministers of Canada is a most happy one. The site is marvellous. I know that few members had the opportunity of visiting this wonderful place in Gatineau park.

A former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, had a summer residence at Kingsmere in the Gatineau park. It was a modest residence. So is the residence where the Prime Minister spends the summer months at present, but with respect to the site, there is no comparison between the two places. In fact, that spot at Harrington lake is the most beautiful that I know of as a summer residence, and I don't mean in the Gatineau constituency, because I am sure we would have to search through many other constituencies and many other provinces before we could find an equally picturesque spot. Not only are the mountains a pleasant sight but, as the Minister of Public Works stated, there is also beautiful Harrington lake, about 3 miles long, where the fishing is very good and where splendid salmon trout and big bass can still be got.

It is a wonderful spot, where the person who occupies the position of prime minister will be able to rest and invite the distinguished guests of Canada.

I am sure the other ministers will also have access to it. I am also certain that the new Secretary of State for External Affairs will have the opportunity of staying there a while to rest and, at the same time, to discuss important problems with distinguished visitors from other countries.

Mr. Chairman, I am most pleased with this government measure and we, on this side of the house, support it very heartily.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to express the support of this group for this measure, which provides a most fitting and appropriate use for certain property owned by the government of Canada, namely Harrington lodge and approximately 13 acres of land. Before proceeding I must say that I was extremely pleased to hear the explanation by the Minister of Public Works concerning this measure, and was pleased to hear him scotch the various rumours that have prevailed largely because of one vivid imagination projected through a pen onto paper.

The act to provide an official residence for the prime minister of Canada was given unanimous approval by the House of Commons on January 18, 1950. At that time Mr. Coldwell, the leader of the C.C.F. group, as reported at page 3345 of Hansard of that year, said:

> I think our country is doing the proper thing, in conformity with what other countries have done, in providing the first citizen of this country with a residence in which he may receive distinguished guests from at home and abroad.

I might say on this occasion, Mr. Chairman, that we in this group think our country is doing the proper thing, having a knowledge of all the circumstances, in providing Harrington lodge as an official country residence for the present and future prime ministers of Canada.

The prime ministers of Great Britain have long enjoyed an official residence and an official country residence since 1921. I might say that so long as we follow in principle the precedents, the practices and the customs of the mother of parliaments we shall not go very far astray in this parliament. With respect to our prime minister's residence in Canada, public response and experience have proven this was a wise decision.

The whole world knows No. 10 Downing street in London. Every morning one can find the Londoner, his country cousins and overseas visitors from other parts of the commonwealth and various parts of the world gathered in front of No. 10 to witness the departure of the prime minister for the House of Commons, or for his office when the House of Commons is not in session. I should like to say that in performing this daily ritual these people are using the loom of sentiment to weave the tapestry of national strength. No. 24 Sussex drive in Ottawa is the Canadian No. 10 Downing street.

During the first world war the prime ministers of Great Britain found it increasingly necessary to leave London and find refuge in the country homes of their friends on numerous occasions. On that account the need for an official country residence for the prime minister under the trying conditions of political life in modern circumstances was increasingly recognized.

This need was met by the gift to the nation in 1921 by Lord and Lady Lee of Chequers Court in Buckinghamshire, to be used as the official residence for the prime ministers of Great Britain forever. I am going to read the beautiful inscription that was placed on the front of that residence, because I am very interested in this sort of thing. The following gracious inscription commemorating this munificent gift is found on the front wall of Chequers Court:

> "This house of peace and ancient memories
> Was given to England as a thank-offering
> For her deliverance in the great war, 1914-1918,
> And as a place of rest and recreation
> For her prime ministers forever."

Since that time Liberal, Conservative and Labour prime ministers have found rest and solace in that beautiful residence during times of stress and strain.

One former prime minister of Canada, namely Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, had his Kingsmere; another former prime minister, namely Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent, enjoyed his Quebec retreat. We believe, as apparently do all members of the House of Commons, that the time is now ripe for Canada—with a knowledge of all the circumstances and the availability of this property—to provide an official country residence for Canada's prime ministers and their distinguished guests.

This Harrington lake property, situated among woods and near water and within a reasonable distance of Ottawa, will provide a most suitable retreat for Canada's prime ministers and their distinguished guests forever. From my personal experience since coming to Ottawa, particularly during the hot and humid days of an Ottawa summer, I might say as someone has said—I cannot recollect at the moment who it was—that at times all human beings, particularly those with heavy responsibilities to their fellow men, need the opportunity to witness the resonant far listening dawn, to enjoy the honey light of noon through leaf-laced greenery, to listen to the sounding silence of forest solitude.

Mr. Chairman, Harrington Lodge provides this opportunity. It belongs to the nation. We are pleased to know it is going to be used to the best advantage. Not only the members of the House of Commons in all parties but other people in Canada have the same opinion. I want to quote in part from an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen of June 11 which I thought was most appropriate. This is what was said in this editorial on this question:

> Summer Home for Prime Minister
> The use of Harrington Lodge as a summer residence by Canada's prime ministers is now in prospect. A move to convert to that purpose should receive wide support in the Commons, for every indication has already been given that there is no substantial opposition to such a measure. There should also be broad public support for this move.
> Harrington Lodge, on Harrington lake, was acquired by the federal government several years ago as part of Gatineau park. To convert it to a summer home for the nation's prime ministers would require no large capital outlay . . . It is only common sense to place the property at the Prime Minister's disposal . . . The country will benefit, because whoever is its prime minister can enjoy relaxation during the summer in a location virtually on Ottawa's outskirts.

Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion that we in the C.C.F. trust that the present and future prime ministers, including we hope future C.C.F. prime ministers, will find in this sylvan glade recreation, repose, rest and restoration of mind, body and spirit.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, everybody in this house is happy that the government has decided to offer a summer residence for the prime minister, and I have only one question to ask the Minister of Public Works. When I was a kid we used to spend our summers at Meach lake, and at that time the lake was called "Mousseau". Could the minister tell us why and when the lake was rebaptized and named "Harrington"?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have heard of Harrington lake having another name.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All good fishermen recognize it.

Mr. Green: However, I will make inquiries. I was afraid the hon. member for Hull was pulling my leg.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the "moose's" leg!

Mr. Green: I would just like to say a word of thanks to the hon. members who have spoken, Mr. Chairman. I believe the hon. member for Gatineau represents the loveliest constituency in Canada, outside of those in British Columbia. I really had to add that in self defence. The Gatineau valley and the Gatineau hills are wonderful spots at any time of the year, and I do not think there could be a finer location for a national park in the vicinity of the national capital than the Gatineau national park. I am sure those of us who have been privileged to spend much time here down through the years have learned to love our visits to the Gatineau valley and the Gatineau hills. As to the hon. member for Kootenay West, he comes from a constituency which is full of beautiful spots, and I can quite understand his words this afternoon when he spoke so feelingly and so eloquently of this site at Harrington lake.

The government is very grateful to the members of the two parties for their support of this measure, and I am confident that the result of this action will be to give great encouragement and renewed physical strength and vitality to whoever may happen to be the prime minister of this nation in the years which lie ahead.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Green thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-64, to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, now.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Chevrier: May we have the bill?

Mr. Caron: Has the bill been printed?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I gave a copy last night to the leaders of the opposing parties.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I see it is again referred to as Harrington lake. To my recollection the name has always been, at least up to a certain time, Mousseau. I really believe it would have much more appeal when the prime minister moves from his residence in Ontario to Quebec if it would come back to its old name of Lac Mousseau. I think they have robbed us of a name and I would like restitution, and that is what I ask the minister for now.

Mr. Starr: It was done when the Liberals were in power.

Mr. Green: I presume that in drafting the bill the law officers have referred to the name which appears on the maps. This question would really come under the jurisdiction of the national capital commission, as all the property in that vicinity is part of the Gatineau national park. I shall be very glad to bring the hon. member's suggestion to the attention of the chairman of the national capital commission.

Mr. Caron: I may be mistaken, but I would like the minister to find out. I know it was called Mousseau lake for over 50 years. It may not have been the official name but it was the name. If you go to Masham or any of these places today the old residents over there will still call it Lac Mousseau. I do not want to interfere with the passage of this bill. The only thing I ask now is that if it happens to be declared that Lac Mousseau was the official name, would the minister promise to try to bring it back to what it was before the change was made?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the only place the name of the lake appears in the bill is in the metes and bounds description of the property. This bill would have no effect in perpetuating any name at all. As I have said, these names are merely used in order to work out a description of the property. However, I shall be glad to bring the hon. member's suggestion to the attention of the officials whose responsibility it is to see that the proper names are used for these lakes and other geographical descriptions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister consider having his colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, under whom I think the geographic board comes, move an amendment to put in brackets "Lac Mousseau" right after "Harrington lake" wherever it occurs? That is the way it is on the maps.

Mr. Lennard: How does the hon. member know that is correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have seen it on maps many times.

Mr. Lennard: That does not say it is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just a suggestion. I was trying to be helpful.

Mr. Green: There would be no objection to that, to adding the words "Lac Mousseau" after the words "Harrington lake" where they appear in the schedule.

Mr. Comtois: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I think that within the limits of a province, the names of lakes should be chosen by that province which, in this case, is the province of Quebec. I think that only Quebec has the jurisdiction to change those names.

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Chairman, I think I am in a position to say a few words about this, because this matter is a responsibility of the Canadian board on geographical names.

I do know that, before changing a name on our maps, we have to get in touch with the provinces concerned and come to some understanding with them before we are authorized to proceed. I may add that it will be a pleasure for me to communicate with the committee on geographical names, in order to have the name of this lake changed. Still, I doubt very much that the name was changed within the last two years. It probably was changed before this government came to power.

Mr. Caron: I admit that the name probably was changed before the present government took over, and I even recognize that, to change a name even within the limits of the national capital, provincial authorities must be approached. But the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) does not actually change anything; it simply purports to have the name "lac Mousseau" put in brackets after the name Harrington, in order to clarify the situation.

Mr. Denis: I fully appreciate the offer of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) to communicate with Quebec authorities, but I am afraid he will find it rather hard to meet with the premier of that province, because when other matters were raised in this house, we never got any reaction, either by letter or by telegram from the Quebec premier. This was the case for fiscal relations and hospital insurance.

Mr. Ricard: Please hold your tongue!

Mr. Denis: May I point out to our friend, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) that there is in Ottawa a board which has the responsibility of finding names for newly discovered places, whether they be lakes, mountains or anything else. Every province has a representative on that board, save Quebec. Now, if a representative of that province had been present when a new name was chosen, the hon. member could not now complain that Quebec was not represented—

Mr. Ricard: They are going to discover you!

Mr. Comtois: I have to disagree with my hon. friend from St. Denis (Mr. Denis), for the province of Quebec actually is represented on that board.

Mr. Denis: I have neither the jurisprudence, nor the facts nor the act before me.

Mr. Dubois: You lack many things indeed.

Mr. Ricard: There are quite a few other things you lack!

Mr. Denis: However, I have here some press clippings about the choice of geographical names, etc. and the province of Quebec is never represented on that board.

Mr. Dubois: As long as we have the organization, it is all that is needed.

An hon. Member: You still have a great deal to learn.

(Text):

Mr. Matthews: I am very anxious that the present Prime Minister should get this house, but may I say that if he would like a lake out in our beautiful Nanaimo area he could name it anything he wanted.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not quite sure whether I understand this correctly, or whether this is what is desired. An amendment has been moved by Mr. Comtois that the words "Lac Mousseau" be inserted in brackets after the words "Harrington lake" where the same appear in the bill.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt this motion?

Amendment agreed to.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, just a further word. As all hon. members have admitted, that lake and that residence will be one of the finest sites in the province of Quebec, and even in the whole of Canada. The people of Quebec are happy to learn that the Prime Minister, and especially those who will succeed him, will spend some time at that place. As the government is no doubt grateful it should be generous towards the province of Quebec and, in my opinion, the only way to reward the province of Quebec for that fine site, which will be of benefit to the prime ministers from now on, would be to see to it that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), as well as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), find jobs for the unemployed in the province of Quebec, who are more numerous than anywhere else and who do not even benefit from the advantages available to the other provinces.

An hon. Member: Sit down. You are merely displaying your ignorance.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Keep quiet. Sit down. Order!

Clause as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

The house resumed from Monday, June 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act—Mr. Starr—Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Caron: To conclude the remarks I began last night, I should just like to point out that last evening, before I had received the latest statistics on unemployment from the dominion bureau of statistics, I said I was afraid that next winter would be very bad. I have now the confirmation of that, because the figures show that on May 14, 1959, in a beautiful season for construction work, there were 585,489 people unemployed in Canada. These figures are much higher than we would have expected.

Mr. Starr: Are those dominion bureau of statistics figures?

Mr. Caron: These figures have been given in a joint press release by the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. Starr: I think the hon. member is misrepresenting the figures. What he is quoting from are the registration figures of the national employment service.

Mr. Caron: Yes, but they were published and released today.

Mr. Starr: That is only an appendix to the release. It is not part of the dominion bureau of statistics release.

Mr. Caron: But it was published and released today under the responsibility of the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics, so we have to accept these figures as they are. They are registrations at national employment service offices; I admit that. The figure given here is 585,489, so it is much higher than we expected to find during the month of May when employment is supposed to start anew and build up for the summer work. If this situation continues, and the government do nothing else to increase the rate of unemployment insurance contributions I do not think they can go very far next winter on the small amount they will get out of the funds in the portfolio. The sum of $3 million-odd will be about the best they can get, and they will not be able at that time to cope with the expenses that will arise out of the fact that unemployment will be much higher than expected by the minister.

Let us consider what was said by the Minister of Labour when he sat on this side of the chamber as a private member. As reported at page 827 of Hansard of February 3, 1955, the present minister said:

> It is this utterly unrealistic added burden of taxation on one of the most important and, I might add, most expensive necessities of normal life under modern conditions in this country, which should be removed.

The minister was speaking about a proposed increase under the Excise Tax Act. At page 3937 of Hansard for May 19, 1955 the present Minister of Labour is reported as having said:

> I feel that the Department of Labour and this government should make strenuous efforts to alleviate the present condition of those who find themselves unemployed.

This is what we have been saying. It is not so much a question of increasing the amount spent under unemployment insurance as a question of it being the duty of the government to try and get work for those in Canada who are in need of employment.

I have in my hand briefs and memoranda from the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto, the Vancouver board of trade, the Canadian Retail Federation, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Construction Association. All these put together represent the most important part of the population of Canada. If we take into consideration the families of those interested in these associations we can see that this represents almost the entirety of the Canadian people. They are all opposed to the bill as it is now proposed to the committee. I do not understand how in the face of so much opposition from various important groups in Canada the minister feels he can impose his own views on the Canadian people, or perhaps the views of the Minister of Finance or of Mr. Coyne, who was a Conservative.

We can find in history examples of people who have sought to impose their will on the majority, who thought their views better than those of the rest of the world. There is one particularly dramatic example which comes to mind of one who followed this course of action. He enjoyed brief success for a limited time, but finally was defeated and licked. If the minister does not want to be defeated and licked with the present government he should do as we ask and suspend the study of the bill and allow an independent commission to study it so we may come up with legislation that will be acceptable to the majority of people in Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have two reasons to take part in this debate. First, I should like to make some general remarks with regard to this legislation and, second, I should like to set the record straight about the statements made by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron).

The object of this legislation, Mr. Chairman, is to ensure greater protection for labour as well as to provide for the stability of the unemployment insurance fund. The bill, of course, indicates to what extent this government thinks in terms of the have-nots; it follows upon the improvements introduced since the Conservative government came to power, and improves the unemployment insurance act in various ways.

The improvements brought about since June 1957 mean that $68 million have gone to the workers under various types of protection, when they were without jobs.

Mr. Chairman, the negative attitude of the Liberal opposition is inadmissible, since it is directly contrary to labour interests. All the noise made by our friends has but one purpose: to distract public attention so that people might forget about our friends' indifference towards labour.

The Liberals, as you know, in the course of the last two sessions, kept drumming into our ears: "What is the government going to do to help the unemployed whose unemployment insurance stamps are now exhausted?" Well, sir, we now have before us a bill designed to improve the situation. But, through their obstruction, Liberal members are merely delaying its adoption.

They objected so much that it has become impossible, Mr. Chairman, to adopt this bill for the 1st of July. As a result, the unemployed, that our Liberal friends want to hold so close to their heart as to stifle them—will be deprived, because of the lack of co-operation of the Liberals, of the aid that we, the Conservatives, wanted to give them.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the working people will not easily forget the lack of co-operation of those who criticize us for not doing enough for the working class.

Besides, because of their obstruction, according to the press, the delay in adopting Bill No. C-43 has deprived Canada of a great honour that was being done to it this year. In fact, according to the press, we know that our Minister of Labour had been asked to preside at the International Labour Congress which is to meet in Geneva. It is clear that our Liberals friends, who never had a similar honour offered to them, were quite disappointed about it. So, they went out of their way to force the minister to decline this invitation.

Mr. Chairman, I spent nearly twenty-five years of my life among workers, and I do not think I am boasting when I say that I know something about the sentiments of labour. Every weekend, so as to keep contact between grass and brass, I have interviews in my St. Hyacinthe office with workers of various classes and manufacturers of my city. I discussed this bill with them and all of them, without exception—whether they represent the textile or metal industry or any other industrial branch—recognize the necessity of this legislation and are unanimous in their support. The workers are pleased with the concern shown them by the Minister of Labour who can claim to have been a real workman himself. Therefore they are ready to play their part, knowing that if they do not personally benefit from the bill, some fellow-worker will. And I may add, Mr. Chairman, that our workers are indignant about the Liberal attitude.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee on industrial relations, I attended practically all meetings save one or two, when business kept me away. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Hull shows that some people want to create in this house the same atmosphere that prevailed when this bill was considered in committee.

We witnessed some pretty disappointing performances. Indeed, we had expected a better example from the—I might say distinguished members of the opposition. We only need, Mr. Chairman, to refer to the press of May 27 or 28 and June 4 and 5 to realize that this was due to two men only who wanted to steal the show and get their names in the papers. That exhibition, Mr. Chairman, was most discouraging for us younger members who have been here only a short time.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday we saw the member for Hull play the martyr, claiming that the Liberals were given a raw deal by the chairman of the industrial relations committee. In an attempt to mislead people of good faith, he built up a pack of lies so as to have people believe that the Conservative members, and especially the chairman of the industrial relations committee, had been unfair to the Liberals. Mr. Chairman, it was quite the contrary. In fact, the hon. member for Danforth did an excellent job as chairman, but he had no choice when Liberal members—especially the member for Hull and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin)—were out of order.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that members who have been sitting in this house for some time know quite well that those two members are no novices and have more than one trick up their sleeves when it comes to making their views known to the public, even when they know that they are out of order.

At this point of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to the speech that the hon. member for Hull made yesterday. Here is what the hon. member had to say, according to page 4754 of the English Hansard:

> In fact, twice we had to leave the meeting in protest, because we were being denied the required information, and this as a result of the line followed by the hon. member for Danforth who was chairman of the committee. Therefore, we missed part of those sittings and the opportunity was taken to rush things through.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that when the Liberal members left the committee meeting for the first time, we were discussing the bill. However, when they left the room for the second time, the committee was studying the submission of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour. Therein lies the falsehood advanced by the hon. member for Hull when he claimed that we had refused the required information.

May I refer to report No. 4 of the industrial relations committee and read the following from page 169:

(Text):

> Mr. MacInnis: I would like to draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, and to that of the clerk of the committee, that the Conservative members alone with the C.C.F. members of this committee have stated that we should continue this discussion at the desire of Mr. Marchand who said he would like to continue and finish the business of the committee.
> The fact that the Liberal members have walked out is in no way a reflection on the Chair, and is not in accordance with your wishes or those of any member of this committee because we, along with Mr. Peters of the C.C.F. are abiding by the wishes of the gentleman presenting this brief.

(Translation):

As witness page 296 of the 8th report of the committee on industrial relations, the hon. member for Essex East was saying:

(Text):

> Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have to leave now. We have this other engagement. It is most unfortunate. But would you care to put that on the record?

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, in the light of those facts, it is obvious—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was it a question that I was putting to someone?

Mr. Ricard: I will answer your questions when I am through with my remarks, if you don't mind.

It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the facts, that the Liberals did not leave the committee meeting because they were being denied information, but because they wanted to be dramatic and attempt to divert public attention, knowing full well they were wrong in so leaving.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is no argument.

Mr. Comtois: They are veteran actors.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, this bill is of such merit as to command the good will and the co-operation of all members of the house. I therefore ask all hon. members to co-operate in putting it through as soon as possible, for the benefit of all who are unemployed.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: In rising to speak to this bill, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be only fair to the members of the industrial relations committee that an answer be made to some of the charges that have been levelled by the previous speaker, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. He pointed out that delays which took place were brought about by the opposition—

Mr. Ricard: I was referring to the Liberals only, not the C.C.F.

Mr. Peters: We are part of the opposition.

Mr. Starr: One and the same.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is the hon. member for Essex East your leader?

Mr. Peters: Not necessarily the same, but I think we are subjected to somewhat the same pressures as are exerted on the official opposition, and certainly the conduct of this particular committee bears some investigation.

I should like, first of all, to comment on this particular committee. It seems to me that perhaps this is a good time to suggest that the chairmen of the various committees be given some instruction in conducting the operations of committees so that those committees will produce what the committees were set up to produce, and so that they will handle business referred to them. It seems to me that in discussing these amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act we were entitled to a full discussion of all the aspects, all the ramifications of the amendments, and to receive all the advice possible in order to make the best decisions for the Canadian workers.

It has been said that in asking these questions and in making this appeal we were assisting in the delaying techniques. I should like to make it very clear that we did not delay on this particular matter. There is no hurry to pass this particular legislation which is going to affect a lot of people and which is going to confer upon the workers of Canada very limited benefits. In my opinion these amendments will result in not over a 5 per cent increase in the three categories to which the amendments apply, while at the same time there will be a 30 per cent increase in the contributions to cover this small increased benefit.

I am unhappy that this bill has to be introduced at this time, and that this has prevented the Minister of Labour from attending the conference in Geneva. I think he will be aware of the high regard in which he is held by the Canadian people generally and he will be also aware that his personal magnetism and appeal have carried him into a position where he was offered this honour. It is unfortunate that the members of his party did not see fit to delay this legislation to allow him to attend this conference. I think we are all very happy at the honour which was accorded to him, and certainly we will not oppose the postponement of this bill if he wants to get on a plane this afternoon to attend that conference. I do not believe it can be fairly said that we wish to delay him here and prevent him from accepting this particular honour.

This particular industrial relations committee, Mr. Chairman, was conducted in what I consider to be a most unparliamentary manner. I think it was being run like a fraternal order, and the chairman, having had some experience in that field, followed the procedure he learned in these other organizations and certainly did not follow parliamentary procedure. I should like to refer to some of the instances in which this was quite obvious. I have always believed that a chairman's duties were to conduct the meetings in a parliamentary manner and that his duties as committee chairman did not include direction. He is not supposed, in my opinion, to be giving directions, according to Roberts' rules and orders or any other book on parliamentary procedure that I have seen. I should like to give one example which is found on page 20 of the evidence of the committee, and I quote:

> The Chairman: You are asking him for two opinions, you are asking his opinion as a representative of the Canadian Construction Association and then you tie it in with his appointment as a representative on the unemployment insurance advisory committee. That has political implications. I will rule it out.

Then, there is some discussion about whether or not there is anything wrong with political implications. Later, on the same page, we find this:

> The Chairman: Just a moment. I rule that the individual himself has the choice as to whether he will represent the construction association or represent the unemployment advisory committee. When he has made that choice, then I will rule on whether or not he will answer the questions.

This ruling was not questioned because the hon. member for Essex East asked whether we would be allowed the opportunity of questioning the members or the chairman of the advisory committee and at that time the chairman of the committee said that would be all right; there was nothing wrong with that. On other occasions, when rulings of this nature were made, they were challenged. On page 40 of the evidence of the committee, we find this:

> The Chairman: Let me make this clear. I made a ruling and I wish it distinctly understood that when I make a ruling it will stick. There will be no argument at the time as to whether it is right or wrong.

I agree that it is up to the committee to make a decision. It is quite all right for the chairman to make a ruling if he wishes, but that ruling is subject to the committee's decision. There is no discussion permitted at such a time, and the question has to be put immediately. There is no point in arguing the matter by the hour, and then finally having the chairman suggest you withdraw it or do something else. This is not the duty of the chairman, yet that continually happened. Again, on page 154, we see that there was a lot of discussion and then we find this:

The Chairman: You have asked a question and I maintain it is a leading question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That does not matter; this is not a court of law.

The Chairman: It does not matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to you that you learn the rules of how to conduct the chairmanship. To suggest this reveals your incompetence to sit in that chair.

There is some further discussion and then the chairman says:

I am going to exercise my rights as chairman to the best of my ability.

There is considerable discussion, which there should not have been, and then the chairman says:

I am asking now that the Chair's ruling be sustained.

There was a motion before the committee at the same time, but these matters never came to a vote. They were usually decided by the chairman himself. He made the ruling and he was always quite willing to do these things. I do not believe that that is the duty of the chairman of any committee. I have sat as a member of a number of committees of this house, but this one was about the worst conducted committee of them all. In fairness to the chairman I will say that he was dealing with several people on that committee who had a great deal of experience in committee work, and they took full advantage of their experience. I do not believe that is a bad thing, but it may make it very difficult for a chairman. I believe some training should be given to chairmen of committees so that this does not happen again because, in my opinion, such happenings reduce the value we receive from committee work. If the chairman of the committee is going to decide what is going to be asked, who is going to ask it and many of these other things which are not proper duties of the chairman, then it seems to me we are going to eliminate a great deal of the value of committee work.

It seems to me there were two implications in these amendments. In the first place, the officials of the department had taken a particular position, which I would expect them to take. Having been advised by the senior officials of the government, they made certain studies which resulted in certain figures and facts. These men are civil servants and therefore have to pay attention to the dictates of the government or they will get the axe, just as many people in the past have got the axe for not following the dictates of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: There is no point in naming them. The same thing has happened since this particular government has been in office. Quite a number of people have been resigning with a little help. I do not think that there is any need to go back farther than a day or two when we were informed that one was resigning. I do not know whether or not he has done so.

An hon. Member: Why don't you get down to the bill?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion we had this type of interjection all through the committee discussions, such as "Why don't you get down to the bill?" "Why don't you leave the advisory committee alone?" and, "Why don't you quit asking these people embarrassing questions?" I maintain that one of the major sources of information was the advisory committee. At no time were we allowed to discuss this matter. In my opinion the chairman misrepresented some of the decisions that had been made in the house. He misrepresented the contention that the advisory committee was not to be called or was not allowed to be discussed.

Mr. Grafftey: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I should merely like to suggest that Mr. Speaker has already made his ruling in the house on the calling of the advisory committee. I suggest that the hon. member is out of order in raising the matter again at this time, as His Honour the Speaker has already made his ruling.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we do not want to take time away from the hon. member who has the floor but I want to say that this intervention is not correct. The Speaker of the house never ruled on the discussion of the report or the actions of the advisory committee whatsoever. I am sure that on reflection the hon. member will realize that he has made an error. I think the hon. member who now has the floor is in order.

The Deputy Chairman: As I understand it, the hon. member is referring to what happened in the committee. Is that right?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: The proceedings of this committee have been reported to the house. They are now in the hands of the house. The hon. member for Timiskaming may continue.

Mr. Peters: I think this is the type of interjection—exactly the same as the one you have just now witnessed—that we were continually faced with, not only by the chairman but by certain members of that committee and they misrepresented and gave incorrect advice I would suggest to the chairman of that committee.

Mr. Spencer: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has made an allegation that the chairman of this committee misrepresented to the committee what occurred in the house. In my opinion that statement is out of order, is a reflection on an hon. member of this house and should be withdrawn. That is my point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Caron: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it was proved in the committee that what the chairman said was not exactly what the Speaker of the house had said on the matter that was being discussed at the time. If that is not misrepresenting the words of the Speaker, I do not know what you can call it. I believe it was misrepresented.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not care for the word "misrepresented" I do not think that is quite fair. One might say something similar. I hope the hon. member will withdraw that word.

Mr. Peters: Probably the word "misinterpreted" would be a more parliamentary word although probably not quite as accurate.

Mr. Spencer: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not think it is quite right for the hon. member not to make a complete retraction of that word. There is no doubt that he represented to this committee that the hon. member had misrepresented something in the committee. If he wishes to use the word "misinterpreted" in its proper sense I would think that would be quite in order. However, I do not think it is proper not to retract the word "misrepresented".

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. I have never previously heard it argued that the word "misrepresented" was unparliamentary. If it were imputed to an hon. member that he had deliberately misrepresented something, I think that would create for that hon. member a question of privilege but that it would not create for some extraneous hon. member, a friend of the hon. member, any question of privilege. It seems to me that the only hon. member who would have a question of privilege is the hon. member who is chairman of this committee.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Peters: In referring to this matter at all, Mr. Chairman, I was trying to point out that we have maintained—and I think it was certainly maintained by the minister himself when he tabled one of the minutes of the advisory committee—that they have a bearing on the matter under discussion. I should just like to read from the submission made to the committee by the Canadian Manufacturers Association in which they point out the functions of the unemployment insurance advisory committee. They state as follows:

> What was intended to be and might well have been the most effective safeguard for the unemployment insurance fund is the unemployment insurance advisory committee. The act provides that it shall consist of a chairman and from six to eight other members. At least one of the members other than the chairman is to be appointed after consultation with organizations representative of employees and an equal number after consultation with organizations representative of employers.
> The main function of the advisory committee under the act is to make a report to the governor in council on the financial condition of the unemployment insurance fund at the end of each fiscal year and at such other times as it thinks fit. If the fund is or is likely to be insufficient to discharge its liabilities or is more than reasonably sufficient to do so, the advisory committee is required to recommend appropriate amendments of the act or the regulations (Sec. 89). The governor in council may also direct the advisory committee to investigate (1) the provision of unemployment insurance for any excepted employments either by extending to it the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, modified if necessary, or by special or supplementary schemes; and (2) the rates of contribution and benefit of insured persons having regard to their earnings (Sec. 91).
> The constitution of the advisory committee is based on the recommendations of the final report of the Gregory royal commission on unemployment insurance in England which in 1932 inquired into the provisions and working of the British unemployment insurance scheme.
> Unfortunately the government has not always asked or paid attention to the advice of the advisory committee on the many important financial and other problems which have arisen during the eighteen years which the Unemployment Insurance Act has been in operation.

Because of the importance that has been attached to the advisory committee it was felt that this committee's findings and its deliberations were going to be heard by the committee. I think this procedure would only be fair if people were really interested in knowing what the situation was and what the situation was with regard to the recommendations of people appointed by various organizations to help decide on what amendments were necessary because of the unsatisfactory condition of the fund. I think that is only a fair assumption.

But if the government believes that political implications would accrue from such an investigation, then I can well understand the attitude taken. Having knowledge of what its deliberations were the government and the chairman of this committee may well have decided that it would be advantageous to prohibit the investigation or the interrogation of the members of the advisory committee. However, when investigating and hearing the presentation of the first organization, namely the Canadian Construction Association, it was extremely interesting and most informative to note that their representative Mr. Urquhart also informed the committee that he was a member of the advisory committee. In discussing this matter with him and what he as a member of the advisory committee thought of the various amendments being proposed to the Unemployment Insurance Act, I think many facts were obtained by the small amount of discussion that took place before this matter was ruled out of order.

It was at that time pointed out that you could not sit on these two organizations, and I was given to understand we would be able to call him at some later date when he could represent not the Canadian Construction Association but the advisory committee which he sat on. I think it is not fair for the chairman to say he could not represent two organizations, because he was appointed to that advisory committee by the government as a representative of this other organization. They just did not go out onto the street and pick up John Doe and say, "You are a member of the advisory committee". They chose him because he was a representative of this large body, the Canadian Construction Association.

So I think the committee was not given all the facts. They were not given an opportunity to discuss with these people who have a working knowledge of what was to be accomplished by the unemployment insurance fund what advantageous amendments might be made, and what the extent of the contributions must be to maintain the fund. They could have suggested, as he suggested every time he had the opportunity, that there were other fields of unemployment insurance besides those which were covered or expected to be covered under an actuarial basis. I think we would have found out that our contention made a few weeks ago when this bill was introduced at the resolution stage, because of the fluctuation and the boom and bust in unemployment and employment, was correct and that it was absolutely necessary to establish now two separate funds rather than trying to fit everybody into the unemployment insurance fund.

It has been pointed out that this fund had reached the sum of $900 million. When we asked this representative who had sat on the advisory committee if he felt that this was too high, he said that in his opinion he thought it was a suitable figure. He went on to point out, as did very one of the delegations which came before the committee in my attendance, that the fund now a little over $400 million was in an unsatisfactory position financially. Everyone, with no exception, pointed out they were opposed, and violently opposed, to the amendments now being introduced to the method of obtaining an increase in that fund by the contribution ratio of 40 per cent from the employees, 40 per cent from the employers and 20 per cent from the federal government treasury. In every case they suggested the contributions have to be rebalanced so that a bigger share of the contribution would come from the federal government treasury itself.

In the previous suggestion that two funds be set up, I think from the discussions that took place in the committee this is the only type of recommendation that the industrial relations committee should have brought in, that there has to be established from actuarial figures how many people are employed in a normal period of economy. It has been suggested that the unemployment in the years 1954-55 and 1957-58 was abnormal, and that even balanced out over a period of five years we would have to have sizeable increases in this fund which has now dropped from a figure of close to $900 million to a figure of $454 million. These figures do not take into consideration the unemployment in the period 1958-59. I think it is plain to all hon. gentlemen that if we are going to compensate for large scale unemployment which is not in an insurable category, then we are going to have a different type of fund, a fund which is to be taken out of general revenues and would put into circulation the amount of money we are not able to carry. If this fund, with the unemployment which has taken place in the two periods 1954-55 and 1957-58, excluding 1958-59, has been reduced by one-half, then I suggest we would not be able to carry the fund no matter what the contributions were increased to over the next two or three years, if the fund continued to be depleted at the rate it now is.

It has been suggested that these contributions, the 30 per cent we are being asked to grant, are going to produce something like $78 million. There has been a great deal of discussion, Mr. Chairman, as to whether that is the right figure or not. We have heard many discussions about what are the actual figures. The director of insurance has pointed out on several occasions that these figures are estimates. Apparently if you estimate it one way you get one set of figures, and if you estimate it in some other way you get a completely different set.

Mr. Humphrys, the assistant superintendent of insurance, stated that instead of the 78 per cent figure given to the house previously the amount of increased contributions would amount to $97 million. He also pointed out that rather than the $20 million that was going to accrue to the workers in benefits, it could be as high as $24 million. He pointed out that the benefit in extending the period from 36 weeks to 52 weeks was only going to cost $11 million. Those new categories would receive an estimated benefit of $9,400,000, and those in the higher earning categories would receive a benefit of $3,100,000. It has been pointed out by all the organizations that it is unfair to ask the people who are employed in steady employment, the people who are not going to be unemployed, the people who will in most cases not receive any benefits at all from this measure, to raise their contributions to pay the extra 30 per cent to raise a total of $97 million. This is not fair when the workers can at the maximum only receive in return a sum of $20 million or $24 million.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this matter be returned to the committee and that the committee be empowered to investigate the reports—yes, and the resignations—of the advisory committee, and that we should go very carefully into their recommendations and find out at least why they were unanimously opposed to the decision that the government has now taken in moving amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In a matter of this kind, following the prolonged discussion we had in this house on this bill and the discussion which took place in the committee, one would have thought, particularly in the light of the almost unanimous representations made by national employers' and employees' organizations in Canada, that the Minister of Labour would have taken advantage at the earliest opportunity to put forward the government's point of view on this very important proposal, which imposes a burden of almost $80 million a year more on the workers of this country and on the employer groups.

However, the minister is responsible for his own policy. He is responsible for his own actions, and I have no alternative but to indicate that thus far the only speaker from the government side who has addressed himself to this matter was the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot who said it was welcomed by the labour groups of this country, although, of course, such was not the case as has already been amply demonstrated, and as I will join my colleagues in proving.

We discuss this amendment now against a background of representations which have been made by a number of national organizations representing both the employers and the workers of this country, all of whom, in a remarkable display of unanimity, expressed their keen dissatisfaction with this particular bill, a bill which has received at the hands of the opposition both before and during the discussions in committee, and now, in these proceedings, an expression of objection consistent with what we believe to be the merits of our case and of the representations made by these various national organizations.

We now have further information which was denied to us during the course of the debate on second reading, information which was made available to us by officials of the unemployment insurance commission, in particular, during the committee proceedings. We now know that the proposed additional contributions now run, on the average, not as we thought up to 30 per cent more, but from 25 to 56 per cent more, and this without any change in the pattern of benefits. We now know that while an additional $100 million by way of revenue will be derived from the additional contributions by the workers and employers and by the additional contribution of the government of Canada, there will be less than $25 million by way of benefit. We also know some of the reasons why the government, faced with the perilous state of the unemployment insurance fund, was obliged to come before parliament this year and recommend some particular method by which this perilous state of the fund—this trust fund, as it was referred to by the governor of the Bank of Canada—could be replenished, keeping in mind possible unemployment in the fall of 1959 and the winter of 1960.

We now know that the losses suffered by this trust fund practically equal the additional contributions which this measure seeks to impose on the two main groups of contributors, the workers and the employers of Canada. We know that there was an actual loss of over $10 million—a realized loss—as a result of the investment by the investment committee of some of the securities held by the unemployment insurance fund. We do know from the evidence which we were able to adduce from the governor of the Bank of Canada that there was, and that there is, a book loss at market valuation as of about a week ago of $62 million, which makes, at the moment, both in terms of a realized and an unrealized loss, a loss of $72 million. Undoubtedly that, together with the heavy drain on the fund as a result of serious unemployment—a problem which this government was going to correct—has placed the government in the difficult position, in the light of its future obligations, of seeking to replenish a fund contributed to by the three main partners in Canadian society, a fund which at one time stood at over $800 million and which, when we began our deliberations, was revealed as having a book value in terms of its securities of about $496 million. But, as the hon. member for Welland pointed out last night, that fund at the present time, taking into account book values and taking into account what its securities will realize, stands at well below $400 million and closer to $350 million.

When one takes into account the amount of money which was required this year to provide maintenance for unemployed people who could qualify for benefit, it is clear that if we have comparable unemployment next fall and next winter there will not be sufficient money in the insurance fund to provide what these contractual arrangements, dedicated by an act of parliament, were intended to provide for the unemployed, for the workers of this country who made provision, along with the employers and the government and the people of Canada, for this measure of insurance in preparation for such a high level of unemployment as we have experienced during the past 18 months.

That is the situation. Hon. gentlemen opposite say we are holding up a bill which would bring great benefits to the workers of this country. Assuming, just for the sake of argument, that there was validity in that proposition, let it not be forgotten that this bill was referred to in the address from the throne last January. Let it not be forgotten that on this side of the house on four different occasions we urged the government to introduce this legislation in the early stages of this session. Let it not be forgotten that this bill was reported out of the committee on the ninth day of June, and we were told in the committee by the director of the unemployment insurance offices that in order to make its benefits applicable by June 28 the bill would have to be passed and considered in parliament by June 11.

What reason did the government have, assuming the validity of its arguments, which I deny, for not bringing this measure forward at once when the bill was reported? Why did not the government bring in this bill in the month of January, or in February? The reason, I suggest to you strongly, Mr. Chairman, is that notwithstanding all the advertisement in the speech from the throne, the government had not settled on a policy at all. That was the reason for these delays and now in the dying days of this session, in the face of the opposition which exists all over the country to this measure, hon. gentlemen opposite suggest that we have been holding up the legislation which they pretend will be of great value to the workers and the employers of this country, although it is a bill which does not change the pattern of benefit at all, a bill which provides benefits of less than $25 million and which exacts further impositions from the workers and employers of this country to an extent of almost $80 million. The hon. member for Welland was correct. What this government has done, faced with this serious situation, is to saddle on the workers of Canada and on the employers the responsibility of doing something which this government itself has failed to do. That is the real proposition that confronts us now as we begin in this chamber the discussion of this bill.

In this committee we were supposed to be given an opportunity of knowing all of the facts involved in this matter. "When we get to the committee," we were told by the minister "you will be able to inquire about this and about that." We went to the committee. I want to indicate how inconsistent were some of the positions of the majority of the members of that committee who made it impossible for the small minority represented by this group and the group sitting immediately to the left of Mr. Chairman to carry on their work and to ascertain what were the facts.

We had asked that the members of the unemployment insurance advisory committee, the men who by experience, representing labour and representing the employers, would have been in a position to tell us why they were opposed unanimously in the summer of 1958 to this particular formula of increased benefits unless the government contribution was made to represent one-half of the total contributions of the workers and of the employers. Were we given an opportunity of examining the members of the advisory committee? No. On two distinct occasions we tried pursuant to the suggestions made when we were debating this matter on second reading and pursuant to the reports that were tabled by the Minister of Labour—one of which was tabled with great reluctance by him—to arrange to interrogate the members of the advisory committee as to why they could not accept the formula proposed by way of additional contributions. No, that was something that had been denied the members of the House of Commons when this was discussed on second reading, it was alleged this allegation was contrary to the facts. No, this advisory committee of the unemployment insurance commission had nothing to do with the bill and because of that no opportunity would be afforded to the members of this committee to ascertain from five employers and from five labour men and the chairman of that commission why that particular body was opposed to increasing the contributions without changing the pattern of benefits.

And to show how inconsistent was that position taken by the majority of the committee, a motion was made by the hon. and respected member for Hamilton South that we be given an opportunity to examine the members of the investment committee, the governor of the Bank of Canada and his two colleagues, the deputy ministers of labour and finance. That motion supported by the opposition was, of course, carried. What difference in principle was there in allowing us to examine, as we were properly entitled to examine, the members of the investment committee and at the same time denying us the right to examine the members of the advisory committee?

This government and the majority of the members of the government party on that committee will undoubtedly pass this bill by sheer force of numbers but in so doing the record will be clear that they denied the minority of the committee the right to examine the members of the advisory committee who more than any other group were seized with the reasons which justified or failed to justify this additional imposition on the workers of our country. That no hon. gentleman in this chamber can deny and there is no escape from that situation now for hon. gentlemen who sit to Mr. Chairman's right.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Essex East a question. Did the hon. member confer with the advisory committee in 1950 when he piloted a bill through parliament to include seasonal workers and when he raised the rates of contribution by 15 per cent?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will be very glad to answer that at some point but my time is very limited—

Mr. Starr: Now, if you will.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, my time is limited and I am going to get this over.

Some hon. Members: We will give you the extra time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At five o'clock we have to proceed to the consideration of private bills. However, I shall deal with it. Not only were we denied the right to interrogate the members of the advisory committee but we were denied—

Mr. Broome: Answer the question. Say "yes" or "no".

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Here is the old steamroller again, the same kind of obstruction that attended us throughout the thirteen sitting days of this committee.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When I am through. The record will let the workers of this country know that now when we are discussing this measure in the chamber the same tactics are once again being employed by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Starr: You are employing them now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We were denied the opportunity of seeing the report of the actuary. One report of the actuary, Mr. Humphrys, was placed before the committee. I complained at one point that we were not given the report and the chairman in a display of great generosity said, "Oh yes, here is the report; you may have it." Sure enough, it was a report of the actuary, but it was not the report for which we were looking. It was not the report referred to by the advisory committee in the month of July, 1958.

What are the facts? The advisory committee in the month of July, 1958, when it took the position that it could not agree to this particular formula of increased contributions, asked for a further report from the actuary. That report was given to the advisory committee at a subsequent date. Why was that report not made available to the members of the committee? If the previous report was properly tabled and properly open to the scrutiny of the members of this committee, why were they denied the second report? Is there something in that report that further confirms our apprehensions about the invalid and untenable position taken in this bill, when the government seeks to impose contributions without arranging for an improvement in the pattern of benefits, seeking to impose on the two main contributing groups the responsibility which I say rests with the government in the face of the large unemployment that has prevailed in this country over the past two years?

The fact that men who have exhausted their benefits have continued to receive assistance out of the insurance fund rather than out of public assistance means only one thing, as the hon. member for Welland properly indicated last night, and that is that the government faced with a heavy deficit position in the country as a result of the budgetary picture given to us by the Minister of Finance on April 9, seeking to minimize its difficulties in that particular has sought to replenish the fund at the expense of the workers and the employers of Canada. That is the gist of the representations made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question at this point?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well—

Mr. Starr: Did not the hon. member for Essex East vote for the extension of seasonal benefits?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course I did, Mr. Chairman, and I am glad I did. But when we provided seasonal benefits, unlike this government we replenished the unemployment insurance fund out of consolidated revenue on three occasions. This is the whole nub of the argument.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, what the hon. member for Essex East has said is not true. The hon. member piloted a bill through this house which included seasonal workers and raised the contributions by 15 per cent—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, this is argument and my hon. friend can deal with it on the proper occasion but I am afraid he will find he is wrong.

Mr. Starr: I am simply trying to set you straight on the facts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the three occasions when that course was taken by the government I gave the dates and I gave the amounts.

Mr. Starr: It was $1,800,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government consolidated revenue fund was used to replenish the fund.

Mr. Starr: The statements the hon. member is making are all malarkey.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can well understand how anxious my hon. friend is because he—

Mr. Starr: Is just giving the facts, and the hon. member cannot repudiate one of them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —knows that it is not a very popular measure with labouring groups in our country. I call his attention to a statement which may have escaped him. He and I live in constituencies where there are automobile workers. One of the members of the advisory committee representing labour was Mr. George Burt, the director of the united automobile workers. Here is a telegram he sent to the committee.

An hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Page 321. The chairman read it out. It reads as follows:

> Deeply concerned about proposals made to your committee by Honourable Michael Starr concerning amendments to Unemployment Insurance Act. As a former member of unemployment insurance advisory committee I am fully aware of the discriminatory result of such proposals upon insured population if they are put into effect. Urge your serious consideration of proposals made by Canadian Labour Congress to your committee recently most of which have been supported by opposition members of your committee.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot still suggest that the labouring groups of this country welcome this measure? Let me remind him of the words of Mr. Marchand of the Catholic syndicates and see whether or not he supports the view of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot?

An hon. Member: Page?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Page 4 of the brief presented to this committee by Mr. Marchand.

(Translation):

> Finally, for the reasons we mentioned in the previous paragraphs, we are opposed to the proposed increase in the amount of the contribution. In our opinion, it is unwarranted and saddles the insured with a financial burden which should be taken care of by another fund than the unemployment insurance fund.
> We wish to stress here that we are not opposed in principle to higher contributions provided they are designed to increase the benefits of the insured.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the approval of the Quebec workers.

(Text):

Then, we have the observations of the retail merchants association, the Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Never were labour and management so united in a common position against a measure taken by any government, I believe, in the history of our country.

It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that this measure is one which deserves to be passed quickly. It does not matter they say whether it imposes almost a third by way of additional hidden taxation on two segments of the people of Canada that is proposed in the recent budget; it does not matter whether 25 per cent to 50 per cent by way of additional contribution is going to be imposed upon the workers of this country. This fund has to be replenished, says the government. We have heavy unemployment. The fund is running out and although we have used a good part of that fund for purposes of public assistance we, nevertheless, because of the financial situation facing us in the country, must impose that burden on the workers and the employers of this country. That is what this bill means in so far as clause six is concerned.

Let us examine some of the features of this bill. The increase in benefits, we are told, derived from the addition of two new classes of benefits, will come to something between $9 million and $10 million. The estimate of additional benefits to be provided by the extension of the benefit period from 36 to 52 weeks will be somewhere between $10 million and $12 million. The estimate of new benefits which may result from higher allowable earnings will amount to something between $2 million and $3.3 million. Therefore, the total additional benefits provided by this bill will vary from $21.9 million to $25.3 million.

Now, let us look at the added revenue that is going to be derived from this measure. What is the expected additional revenue resulting from the addition of two new classes of contributions? Something between $15 million and $17 million, we were told. What will be the additional revenue derived from the raising of the income ceiling from $4,800 to $5,460? The answer is somewhere between $2 and $3 million. What will be the additional revenue provided by the increase of between 25 per cent and 56 per cent in the level of contributions? It will be somewhere between $75 million and $80 million. The government's contribution will be roughly $16 million. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the total increase in contributions of about $100 million, of which the government will pay about $16 million, is the revenue position. The workers and industry will pay $85 million more annually and will receive a little more than $20 million in additional benefit. That is in general the reason, one of the main reasons, why the opposition groups, representing in this instance the employers and labouring groups in Canada, are vigorously opposed to shouldering on labour and industry the responsibility that belongs to the government of Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 15 (3), to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed with the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15 (3).

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

PRIVATE BILLS

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF PRINCE RUPERT

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-23, respecting the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to move the second reading of Bill No. S-23, respecting the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert. As sponsor of this bill, it is my privilege to provide information to this house and reasons why favourable consideration should be given to its passage. The area served by the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert comprises 135,000 square miles between the 53rd and 58th parallels of latitude and from the Pacific to the Alberta border in British Columbia, including the Queen Charlotte islands. The total population of the area is between 85,000 and 90,000. The catholic population of 12,500 includes about 4,000 Indians. There are seven schools with four more in the process of being built, together with 12 churches and 12 rectories. This compares with four churches, four rectories and one school at the time of incorporation in 1924. Most of the towns in the area have doubled their population in the last five years. This recent increase and the anticipated increases in population are the reasons for the removal of the restrictions on the value of real estate held by the corporation and the period during which it may be held.

As to subclause 3 of clause 4 of the act in its present form, several recent statutes incorporating religious or eleemosynary bodies contain no limitation on the value of the real property which may be held by such bodies. Moreover, in several recent instances private acts have contained provisions removing such limitations not only for the future, but retroactively. Provisions imposing a time limit on the holding of unused real estate, such as are contained in subsections 4 to 7 inclusive of section 4 of the act in its present form have been omitted in some recent incorporations of religious bodies, such as the act to incorporate Oblate Fathers of Assumption Province and Bill No. S-18 which received third reading in the Senate on April 23 last, an act to incorporate the Lutheran Church of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of divorce bills standing on the order paper for second reading. Is it the pleasure of the house that these bills be taken in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXTENSION OF RIGHT TO VOTE AT ADVANCE POLLS

The house resumed from Friday, March 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fisher for the second reading of Bill No. C-10, to amend the Canada Elections Act (voting at advance polls).

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) introduced a similar bill at the last session of parliament, and at that time I supported the bill. I think it is rather significant that this bill was under discussion last year on June 17, one year ago tomorrow. I have not discovered any reason during the past year for changing my opinion about the bill in principle. The proposal by the hon. member for Port Arthur is a sound one.

I believe that the provision for voting at advance polls must be enlarged. I have certainly no intention, Mr. Speaker, of repeating the speech I made last year in connection with a similar bill. At that time I did mention various cases where the narrow provision of the act as it now exists prevented people from voting at advance polls who should have voted. I pointed out the provision which limits the class of persons who may vote, and there is a restriction even within that class. I felt also at that time that the ninth and tenth days before polling date were actually too early to give the voters a proper picture and a proper opportunity to evaluate their candidates.

In view of the discussion we had last year, I took very special note of the voting in the recent Ontario provincial election, particularly with regard to advance polls. We all know, I believe, that in Ontario the privilege of voting at advance polls is very much the same as proposed by the hon. member for Port Arthur. In other words, any person who is otherwise qualified to vote, and who has reason to believe he will not be present in the riding on polling day has the right to apply for and receive a ballot at the advance polls. There is no class of persons specified and there is no limitation on the persons who may vote. If a voter has good reason for believing he will be absent, then he may vote. I also noted during the provincial election that there did not seem to be any great rush of voters to the advance polls; there did not seem to be any snarls. I must say that I, myself, took advantage of the opportunity of voting at the advance poll in my home town when it appeared that I would be absent in Ottawa. I was rather pleased to have the opportunity of seeing how the voting was carried out and how it would work out if we used the same provision in federal elections. I certainly was unable to see any objection to it.

There have been objections raised to enlarging the class of persons who may vote at advance polls. One such objection is that too many people would vote and that, in effect, we would have four polling dates instead of one. This seems to have been an objection raised by the electoral officials, and it is one which has been raised from time to time by other persons. We have a rule that there shall be one polling day in Canada, and the fear is that we might have more than one if a large number of persons were to vote at advance polls. Certainly the experience in the past has not indicated that would happen in federal elections. The experience in the last provincial election has not indicated there would be that large number of persons voting so that there would be, in any way, an infringement of the rule against more than one polling day. I observed that the D.R.O. and the poll clerk seemed to have plenty of time to handle the votes, and in fact could have handled a great many more without any difficulty. For these reasons, I feel that this objection would not be valid.

I have heard it stated that enlarging the advance poll provision might make an election more expensive. This may be true to a very slight extent. I would imagine more forms would have to be printed, and so forth, but I cannot see that such a provision would necessitate any additional polls being established. The present provision for advance poll and those who present themselves the advance poll staff could handle three, four or five times as many voters as they do. I cannot see that any great increase in expense would be required.

There has not yet been sufficient time to analyse the results of the advance polls in Ontario during the recent election. From what I have been able to learn from electoral officials and others, I would say that no great difficulty was experienced and a lot more people could have been handled if they had appeared.

In so far as the hours of voting are concerned, the present act requires that the polls shall be open from two o'clock in the afternoon until ten o'clock in the evening. I am prepared to agree that this provision is proper and that there is no reason for changing it. I think that many people who are going to be away on voting day are people who would work during the day and who would have to have the privilege of voting in the evening in order to take any advantage of advance poll arrangements.

I should like to discuss for a moment the actual days when the advance poll should be held. I have done a great deal of thinking about this matter since it was raised last year and also since it was raised recently in the committee on privileges and elections. There are really three possible days or three possible sets of days on which the advance poll could properly be held. As proposed by the hon. member for Port Arthur, the poll would be held on Friday and Saturday, the tenth and the ninth days before polling day. I said last year—and I am still of the same opinion—that this is quite a long time before polling day on which to hold the advance poll. It has, however, the advantage of including Saturday; and I think Saturday is an important day on which to hold an advance poll. Those who will be away during the week on voting day will have the advantage of voting on Saturday and I think that is essential.

We could also have the advance poll held as at present, namely on the Thursday, Friday and Saturday immediately preceding the polling day on Monday. Last year when the matter was discussed I felt that these were preferable dates and I still think so. I think this is the case in view of the fact that the actual number of people who will vote should not increase too much merely because of enlarging the class of people who may vote.

There is the difficulty that the advance poll is very close to the polling date and that if any cross-checking of lists is to be done as between those who have voted at the advance poll and those who present themselves the following Monday it certainly does not leave much time for checking lists from the time when the advance poll closes on Saturday night until the time when the regular poll opens on Monday.

There is a third possibility which I should like to put forward and which I think would be worthy of consideration, namely that the advance poll might be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the seventh, sixth and fifth days before the polling date. This time would appear to be most suitable. It is in accordance with the practice in Ontario and it is a reasonable time before polling day. It allows three days in which lists may be cross-checked, if such cross-checking is required, and it still is not too close to the voting day. The only difficulty with regard to Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is that there is no Saturday voting date and there may be a class of persons who cannot vote on the Monday because they are away working and who would still be away on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the previous week. I think the actual voting day is a subject that could very well be considered in the committee on privileges and elections. But pending any such decision I would feel that the present date—that is, Thursday, Friday and Saturday before polling date—would be the most suitable one.

The privileges and elections committee is now discussing the whole situation with respect to the elections act. However, the committee is at the moment considering only those suggestions that have been made by the chief electoral officer. It is rather interesting to note that the chief electoral officer has not recommended any changes in the advance polling arrangements. What is being discussed—and what he has proposed—is mainly a series of procedural changes brought about to tighten up the provisions of the act and to prevent certain fraudulent and improper practices that prevailed as a result of two certain elections in recent times. I believe these amendments are suitable and will be adopted.

However, owing to the late date on which the election act was referred to the committee, the whole consideration of the act has not been undertaken and probably it will not be undertaken at this session. I am hopeful that next year the privileges and elections committee will have the act referred to it in its entirety and that we shall have broader terms of reference so that the act can be studied and revised throughout in preparation for the next general election.

I would also hope that next year the committee would be set up earlier so that it can get at this most important amendment and take some time at it. One of the difficulties of this committee this year has been that we were late in starting. We have been competing with a large number of other committees for attendance and it has been most difficult to get down to a serious discussion of the broader terms of the elections act. I think there is no point in referring the present bill to a committee at this session, particularly the privileges and elections committee. I know it is the intention at the next session to consider advance polling arrangements along with various other substantive changes in the act. If the bill should come to a vote today I would vote in favour of it because with the principle of it I am entirely in agreement. However, I do not think that this is a case where any particular advantage would be gained by bringing the bill to a vote.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house this afternoon is one of those hardy perennials that appear on the order paper from year to year. It is inevitable, of course, that all hon. members should be interested in the subject matter of the bill, namely increasing the interest and the percentage of the electors participating in our regular federal elections. One of the problems of democratic government is, the tendency for a large percentage of the voting population to be lukewarm in their interest in the electoral process. In recent years from time to time we have had drawn to our attention the fact that a relatively small number of voters, as compared with the total possible, exercise their franchise. In the past two federal elections there has been an encouraging increase in that percentage; but as we get down to the lower levels of government, particularly to the level of local government, we find that there has been unfortunately a declining interest. I think the hon. member for Port Arthur who is responsible for sponsoring the present bill before us is to be congratulated, because it is an attempt to deal with a small segment of the general difficulties arising from the operation of our democratic process.

In addition to the solution proposed—and I will go into further details in regard to the suggestion of enlarging the opportunities for advance polling—there are other ways and means of increasing interest in the electoral process and encouraging our voting population to exercise their franchise. In some countries, for example, resort has been made to the system of compulsory voting. I am always interested to hear comments from the chief electoral office in regard to suggested reforms of this kind. Our chief electoral officer for Canada is a man of vast experience.

As a matter of fact, the post has been in the one family for two generations. The present incumbent worked alongside his father in that post and acquired all the experience of his father in that position, and now he carries on on his own from that broad perspective. In the recent meetings of the committee on privileges and elections it is interesting to note—and the previous speaker referred to this fact—that the chief electoral officer, the one who understands thoroughly the operations of our election machinery, is rather lukewarm to major reforms even of the kind indicated in the bill before us. With reference to the suggestion of compulsory voting, of course the major objection is that it is contrary to the spirit of the free exercise of the right to ballot, the right to exercise the franchise.

We have had other suggestions from time to time from members who have been subjected to the electoral process on one occasion or another. There is a feeling abroad today that we would create a broader interest in our federal elections if we shortened the duration of time occupied by elections. The modern means of communication and the improvement in the mass media of publication make it possible to put the issues much more quickly and effectively before the electorate, with the result that a long, drawn-out election period seems to dull the enthusiasm rather than increase the interest of the voter. These are merely two additional methods that have been proposed from time to time to encourage greater interest in the electoral process and to help in some measure to overcome the apathy that is unfortunately all too common in the responsibilities of democratic citizenship.

Coming specifically to the subject matter of Bill No. C-10, the suggestion that the privileges of advanced polling be broadened is one of the reforms that I think most obviously occurs to the candidate who has had at least one election experience. It has been my privilege to have stood for election during four campaigns. I recall in the first campaign that one of the most distressing reactions I received from the electorate in my constituency were the urgent complaints on election day that they had been involuntarily disenfranchised because of the restricted advanced polling privileges. As a newcomer to the political field I immediately made my protest in the only form available at that time—letters to the chief electoral officer. I have been interested to note as I have gathered more experience in campaigning that one of the most frequent and common complaints presented to the chief electoral officer is this one of the restricted advanced polling privilege. But the more experience acquired in the field, the more one becomes aware that it is not so easy of solution as first glance would indicate.

I think the most glaring recent experience of the inequities of the restrictions occurred during the famous summer election of 1953, I believe it was, when the election occurred for the first time in many years on August 10. The date, of course, came at the peak of the Canadian holiday season and there was a great barrage of complaints from Canadians who were absent from their constituencies and were unable to cast their ballot. An interesting group in this class were teachers, who usually take a most active part in our democratic process. They found themselves studying at various universities across the country, taking summer courses to improve their qualifications in the teaching profession, and they were most incensed to discover that they could not exercise their franchise during that important election. At that time, being intelligent citizens keenly aware of public issues, they got together and made a concerted protest over the problem that this bill attempts to deal with. I imagine that subsequent to that occasion there was more discussion on this point in the House of Commons than we have had in a good many years.

I think the sponsor of this bill has laid this fact down as the main reason for the reform, and that is the increased mobility of our population under modern conditions of living. It is not uncommon to find segments of the Canadian population hundreds of miles away from the various constituencies during election period. This arises from the improved means of transportation as well, of course, as from the great expanse of geography in Canada.

While there is a solid case for a reform of this kind, and most hon. members who have spoken in the debate have generally expressed their support for the principle, there are some real technical problems arising from changes in the operation of the electoral machinery which have caused the chief electoral officer, the authority on these matters, to have rather a negative opinion as to its effectiveness. The problem of setting up a sufficient number of advance polls to cater adequately for voters in our larger constituency areas is one that must cause serious second thoughts. The privilege of voting at advance polls would, of course, have to be extended universally, if at all, and some of the areas involved cover hundreds of miles. The provision of adequate advance poll facilities would obviously mean a considerable financial outlay. In my own constituency, which is an average western prairie constituency, we have two advance polls only, and even in present circumstances the distances involved are great enough to disenfranchise some of those who would otherwise be interested in casting their ballots.

Then, too, we must consider another difficulty, namely that all the issues would, probably, not be presented to the voters before the day of the election. In my experience in four election campaigns I found that very often the last two days before the election were the crucial days. The most successful campaigns are those which begin slowly and build up to a climax on the eve of the election. Sometimes basic issues are withheld until the final days, or even hours of the campaign for the specific purpose of stimulating interest in the election and reaching the climax of the campaign just at the precise psychological moment. These are all matters which have to be taken into consideration when we are contemplating making amendments to the Canada Elections Act as purposed in Bill No. C-10.

Returning to my original theme, I take it that the sponsor of this measure has as his main purpose in proposing the amendment a desire to increase the turn-out of the electorate at the polls, a desire to make it possible for every Canadian to exercise his franchise. If that were the basic motivation behind this amendment, the present bill would, of course, have only a relatively small impact on this problem, because even with extended advance poll facilities there would still be a large number of voters in Canada who would not be able to exercise their right to vote. That situation arises mainly because of increased mobility. The present arrangements restrict advance poll privileges to a relatively short period of time. As has been said by the former speaker, it might be desirable, if the house contemplates proceeding with amendments of this kind, to change the present days prior to the election in which it is possible to vote at an advance poll—to advance it by several days. Even this, of course, would exclude some people who might be absent from their constituencies at that particular time.

One way of approaching this problem might lie in extending absentee voting privileges. All members of the armed forces who served overseas during the second world war will recall that absentee voting was carried out efficiently in all parts of the world. For example, I remember casting my ballot in the city of Cairo in the election of 1945 which, I believe, took place in June of that year, and I had no difficulty at all in obtaining information concerning the candidates and their qualifications. The principle of absentee voting has been established in connection with the armed forces and if the technical difficulties were overcome its more general adoption would increase to a substantial extent the ability of Canadians to participate in elections no matter where they were on election day.

This matter, together with the general subject of amendments to polling privileges, has been under discussion in the committee on privileges and elections. The previous speaker indicated that this committee, of which I happen to be a member, got under way at rather a late date in the parliamentary session, with the result that we will not be able to come to grips with some of the complexities of this subject. However, there is still ample time before another election to investigate thoroughly these proposals. It is my wish and hope that during the next parliamentary session considerable time will be taken in examining the proposals of the chief electoral officer in this regard and in examining the implications of amendments such as this which we have before the house this afternoon. I say this because I think it is vitally important that this house should make it possible, as far as we are physically able within the restrictions of the electoral machinery, for every Canadian who desires to do so to cast his ballot.

Mr. A. R. Webster (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a very wise practice to review and, if necessary, amend the Canada Elections Act every ten years, otherwise we shall probably be stuck with a lot of outdated rules and regulations which would not coincide with the changes in the manner in which we are trying to live. At the present time I understand the committee on privileges and elections is holding meetings, and although this year the committee started a little late I have no doubt that when the report comes in it will contain several proposals, some of which will possibly have to do with advance polls.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) when he was explaining the bill and my reaction to this proposed legislation is somewhat along the following lines. If the privilege of voting at an advanced poll were extended to include all the people who are entitled to vote instead of just to restricted classes as at present such as commercial travellers, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, fishermen and others, we would require a greatly increased number of advance polls.

If I may become personal for a moment I should like to refer to my own constituency of St. Antoine-Westmount where we had one advance poll in the last two federal elections. If the privilege of voting at advance polls were extended to all eligible voters the number of polls required in each constituency would vary. Approximately ten advance polls would be required in my constituency. I am doubtful however, that they would serve any great purpose. Approximately thirty votes were cast at the advance poll in my riding in the last two elections. It seems to me that the extension of this privilege would result only in increased expenditures for the crown without serving any great need. It is true that my constituency is urban and it may be that rural ridings would require a different set-up to take care of the matter.

Another consideration is that if this proposed bill were to become law, instead of a general election lasting one day it would last perhaps three days. Most of us are nervous enough having to sustain a one-day election and I do not know how we could suffer through an election lasting three or four days.

My understanding of the act as it now stands is that it requires a returning officer to notify the deputy returning officer as to the number of people who have voted at the various polls. The extension of the privilege proposed by this bill would put a considerably increased load on the shoulders of the returning officers in ensuring that all the deputy returning officers have been notified and that there are no cases of fraud, intentional or not.

I understand that advance polls exist in Ontario for the benefit of any voter and that in introducing this innovation the number of advance polls had to be increased from approximately 240 to approximately 1,100. This was an expensive propositon. As the result of the increase in advance polls the province of Ontario managed to merely double the number of voters from approximately 5,000 to approximately 10,000. This would appear to be an indication that the public is not much interested in having this privilege. The people who do not want to vote are not going to vote in any event and I do not know that we are right in worrying too much about them. I might say that the figures I used for the purposes of this illustration were taken not from the election held on June 11 last but from the previous one. The figures concerning the June 11 election are not available as yet.

I would suggest that instead of advance polls it would be much better if it were possible to establish a permanent election list so that everyone could have, as it were, a voting credit card or something of that nature and thus a voter from Halifax could vote in Vancouver at an advance poll. It is true that if this suggestion were implemented it would cost in the neighbourhood of $4 million or $5 million to maintain the list up to date, but it is perhaps deserving of consideration. One disadvantage I can readily see is that there would be a delay in obtaining election results. One would have to wait for ten days or two weeks before the full results came through. The armed services have an absentee voting arrangement but they begin voting three weeks before the general public and despite that early start there is a delay of a week or more in tabulating and returning the results.

I suppose it is trite to say that the privilege of voting is one given to all citizens of Canada who have reached age 21 and that we should not stand in the way of anyone exercising his right to vote no matter what it cost the country but I think we sometimes are inclined to go a little too far in the direction of allowing people to take advantage of statutory provisions that are laid down and perhaps we should encourage them to take the initiative with respect to the basic freedoms.

As I say, approximately 30 votes were cast at the one advance poll in my riding in the last two elections and on the basis of my observations I fail to see how the proposed bill would serve to increase the number of votes cast to any valid degree in proportion to the total cost not only in dollars but in the expenditure of man-hours and energy. It was suggested by some previous speakers that the advance polls be opened a week or ten days in advance. This would give you less time in which to conduct your election. There is already talk of attempting to shorten elections but if the time were reduced to five or six days it would not give a candidate very much time in which to place his views before the people.

(Translation):

Mr. Robert Lafreniere (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to state my position with regard to the matter raised by consideration of bill C-10 now before the house. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I regret that, because of the limited time at my disposal, I shall not be able to go into any details.

However, I want to tell this house that the franchise is obviously a sacred right, one on which our whole democratic system rests, and any legislation designed to promote the exercise of that right should obviously be encouraged by those very people who represent the nation. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, you will realize that, if we have the franchise, we should also consider it our responsibility to avail ourselves of this right, and that the exercise of a duty necessarily implies some degree of personal sacrifice.

Bill C-10 tends to promote the use of the right to vote, but there are, nevertheless, certain technicalities to observe when carrying out such duty. Therefore, I wonder how we can go about establishing a large number of advance polls throughout the country unless certain restrictions are imposed in respect of the exercise of franchise. Obviously a privilege is always granted for very special reasons or in extraordinary circumstances.

For instance, there are advance polls for commercial travellers, for seafarers, for fishermen or railway employees. Those people's life-work force them to be away from their home for long periods of the year. It is therefore reasonable that the law should grant them some special privilege in the exercise of their franchise. However, as far as the citizens of this country in general are concerned, I think we should think twice before passing a bill like the one introduced this afternoon.

In brief, this legislation provides that for some reason or other, a citizen should have the privilege of voting in an advance poll.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think that if we approve such a bill, without further specifying the reason which a voter who wants to avail himself of his franchise might put forward, we might run into complications that might be very hard to get around, and, in addition, as mentioned by the previous speaker, because many rural ridings in Canada are so large, the establishment of advance polls would give rise to a good number of technical difficulties and also mean a tremendous expense.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the committee responsible for studying part of the Canada elections act should continue its research work so as to determine more clearly the elements of this bill while not losing sight of the fact that we should encourage Canadian citizens, whatever their country of origin, to use their franchise and thus actually share in their country's government. Moreover, those technicalities should be clearly set out and the privilege only be granted for very special reasons and in extraordinary circumstances which, I think, should be defined in the bill.

(Text):

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am in general agreement with the intent of this bill. I have spoken on this matter in the house before. I have in my election campaigns found people who were deprived of their franchise through no fault of their own. They had to go to hospital. In one case I know of, an auditor was accompanying his salesman. If he had had a letter saying that he was a salesman he could have voted, but he could not; he was an auditor. Therefore, he did not vote but the salesman did.

As far as the expense referred to by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Webster) is concerned, I checked in my own riding on the advance poll which was open for two days between the hours of two and ten p.m., and there was hardly anybody coming in. The total advance poll would have been about 150 and they could easily have taken care of eight times that number. Therefore, although there might necessarily be more advance polls set up in a riding, I do not think it would be of the order of the magnitude that the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount indicated.

I do agree with the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lafreniere) when he said that expense is not the criterion in regard to whether a person should have the right to exercise his franchise or not. Parliament is an expensive institution. In many ways it is an inefficient institution; but the people of Canada and the people of the western world are willing to pay the monetary price to have parliament because through parliament they have democratic government. Therefore, it is not a question of how much it will cost but it is a question as to whether we are depriving any citizen of a right which is his and which any government should be most anxious to maintain and to make it possible for that citizen to exercise that right if he wishes to do so.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) did point out that the time—and this is one place where I find myself in disagreement with the bill—at which the advance polls are held is on the tenth and ninth days before the regular polling day. I assume that is because in many ridings the returning officer has to send the lists to the deputy returning officers, and give time for those lists of people who have used the advance poll to get into the hands of the deputy returning officers. It does seem to be an excessive length of time.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock the house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act—Mr. Starr—Mr. Rea in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I understand that your watch establishes the fact I have but 2½ minutes to go, and as we are in committee and I shall have the opportunity of speaking further if I think there is occasion so to do, I thought I would simply say to the Minister of Labour that if he has any questions which he wishes to put to me now I would be only too anxious to try to deal with them. I would not want him to believe that I was discourteous today, but I was anxious to have as consecutive an argument as possible.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Essex East was speaking I availed myself of the opportunity to ask him a question as to what happened in 1950 when he was the acting minister who piloted the unemployment insurance amendments through the house to bring the seasonal workers under the act? This had the effect of increasing the rate by 15 per cent, without any consultation with the advisory committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In answer to the hon. gentleman, I would simply say, and I would underline that he himself has mentioned I was at that time a parliamentary assistant, I think, to the minister of labour, or perhaps I was acting minister, I forget which. In any event, I was acting in the place of the minister of labour who for one reason or another was not available at that time. Whether or not he had consulted the advisory committee, I do not know. I certainly had not. I was simply charged with the responsibility of piloting the measure in the house.

I would say, however, by way of additional reply, that the introduction of seasonal benefits by a Liberal administration was followed on that particular occasion, as on three others, by the replenishment of the fund from the consolidated revenue account. It is true that the amounts were not at all comparable with those which confront the hon. gentleman in this day of heavy unemployment. I can only say in answer to that, of course, that while we were in office there was not the high level of unemployment and consequently not the same necessity of providing seasonal benefits on so large a scale.

Mr. Starr: Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, if I may ask the hon. member, that in that instance the fund was not replenished from the consolidated revenue fund, but was later replenished by increasing the contribution, in some cases as high as 50 per cent in certain categories, and that during all the years the fund was in existence all that was put into the fund from the consolidated revenue fund was an amount in the neighbourhood of $1,800,000?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Which represented the amount of seasonal benefits paid out.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon hon. members saw the hon. member for Essex East wind up his remarks and they thought they saw a pretty good show. However, let me tell hon. members in the committee this evening that they saw nothing to compare with what we saw as members of the industrial relations committee.

Mr. Robichaud: Was it drafty?

Mr. Grafftey: I admit I am a comparative newcomer to this place. Just about the time I began to think perhaps we could use committees in a bipartisan sense, and that perhaps committees would be a good place in which we could examine legislation and estimates on a bipartisan basis, I was proved wrong, because out of the wings came the hon. member for Essex East who proved my approach was a hollow one.

This afternoon the hon. member for Timiskaming made some remarks and cast some aspersions on the chairman of the industrial relations committee. He made certain accusations. I will say this, Mr. Chairman, that the difficulties caused in that committee were caused, in my frank and sincere opinion, by the longest series of diabolical political behaviour I have ever seen in my life. Before that committee came expert witness after expert witness. Were they asked questions? No, Mr. Chairman; we had a series of statements, one after the other. We had top experts from the Department of Finance. We had top experts from civilian agencies. We had top experts from the Department of Labour. However, statement after statement was made. Up went the strawmen. Up went the smokescreens, and all of a sudden there came the heat from the hon. member for Hull and the strawman caught on fire. His pompous forensics got so heated that they often burnt the logic out of the fabric of his diatribe.

I should like to say this about the few remarks made by the hon. member for Essex

East. I should like to return the sincere compliment he paid to me, and in all sincerity too. He said that outside the political arena he held me in a certain amount of affection. This feeling, I will say sincerely, is mutual. It is mutual for a very good reason, because I regard the hon. member opposite as the only true politician on the front benches of the opposition. I have often wondered whether the hon. member for Laurier was running the seaway or was in the political arena. The same holds true with regard to the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I often wondered whether he was advising the Right Honourable Mackenzie King in the privy council or whether he was in politics. This is not true of the hon. member for Essex East; for from beginning to end, he is a true politician, and I cannot help but admire him for it.

The hon. member for Essex East, Mr. Chairman—I admit I am getting a little off the point but I shall be right back—in his conversations with me often wonders why the youth of this country left the Liberal fold. He made that remark in a speech the other day. Well, in the industrial relations committee, he made such remarks—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I think the Chair is being quite lenient in this personality discussion, but we are discussing Bill No. C-43.

Mr. Grafftey: I was only going to refer to the fact that at one time or another during the committee hearings the younger members of the government were called schoolboys; told to please be quiet; to stop this juvenalia—I thought it was relevant.

Now, the time has come to deal with the merits of the actual bill.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah!

Mr. Grafftey: We have heard a lot of remarks by hon. members opposite, but let us flip the coin over for a moment because I feel certain there is another side to it. The hon. member for Essex East said that this legislation was going to help nobody. Last night the hon. member for Hull tried to leave the general impression that no brief which was brought before the committee was in favour of the proposed legislation. Mr. Chairman, such is not the case. I would be the first member to admit that many of the briefs disagreed with this proposed legislation in detail, but I would be the last to swallow the arguments of the hon. member for Hull. The hon. member for Essex East said that every brief that was before us was, holusbolus, against this legislation, but such is not the case.

An hon. Member: Name one?

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member said this proposed legislation is not going to help anybody. He has neglected to mention the extended benefit period. He has neglected completely to mention the new class of wage earners who will be benefited by this legislation. But there is an apparent contradiction in the arguments of the hon. member for Essex East.

First of all, in the beginning of his speech he told this house that the proposed legislation is going to help nobody, that it is going to help none of the working force of Canada. Then in his analysis he went on to say and admit—although I am not ready to agree with the figures he arrived at—that the labourers of this country will be helped to the tune of approximately $25 million. While we were in opposition we had the old tune of Mr. Howe "What's a million?". Now we have the tune of the hon. member for Essex East "What's $25 million?".

I should like to return to another point. In 1950 legislation similar to this legislation that we have before the house was passed quickly. We never even talked about it in committee. The hon. member for Essex East well knows that that legislation was shoved through quickly by parliament. It was not even submitted to a committee, let alone there being a committee calling for briefs from private agencies. Yet it was legislation similar to this. Let me hark back to remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East in 1950 when similar legislation was being discussed in the House of Commons. He said:

> Mr. Martin: My information is that there is about $17 million in cash, for obvious purposes, and that the rest is in government securities. That is a trust account. That is the way it should be. That is the way the act provides it should be, and there is no intention on the part of anyone that it should be treated otherwise. That money belongs to those for whom it is held in trust; and I know that no one would want to give the impression that the situation is not as I have stated it.

Today we hear quite a different story, do we not, Mr. Chairman in comparison with their behaviour back in 1950. The present government in committee has consulted with the committee itself and with civilian or private agencies.

There is another smokescreen, another strawman that was whipped up in the air, although I notice that it was not raised in the house today for obvious reasons. The opposition in this committee kept asking for information. They tried to give the people of this country the impression that we were withholding information. Mr. Chairman, I ask them this question now, as we all asked them from the government side of the committee: What information was withheld from hon. members opposite which they wanted to have and did not have? This question was put repeatedly. It was not answered and I rather suggest that it is going to stay unanswered.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has asked a question and I should be glad to answer it. The information that was denied us was the information that could have been supplied if we had been given the opportunity of interrogating the members of the advisory committee to the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Grafftey: I suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that a good part of the membership of this advisory committee had resigned. Had we requested them to appear before the committee we would only have been requesting management to attend and I feel that such a procedure would have been a gross injustice. What the hon. member for Essex East wanted was the minutes. What hon. members opposite really wanted was the minutes of the unemployment insurance advisory committee, a privileged document. Moreover, there would have been found in those minutes no information that was not in the report that was tabled a long time ago.

Then we have another strawman, another smokescreen and this one really caught fire. Do you know what it was, Mr. Chairman? I will tell you. Here is what it was. The hon. member for Essex East tried to give the impression that we were really overburdening the employers and the employees of this nation. Oh, this was a terrible thing, according to him. Why? I will tell you why, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members opposite, in past years during the Liberal administration, when things really became tough with the unemployment insurance fund, said that they came to the rescue of it by whopping big transfers from consolidated revenues. I thought that might have been a good point so on my own behalf I did a little bit of investigating and do you know what I found? Do you know what these whopping big transfers were? In a fund that sometimes reached practically $1 billion, the whopping big transfers amounted to $1,800,000. That is the way in which they came to the rescue of the workers of this country. Let us keep the record straight and things in proper proportion.

Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, appeared before this committee. By hon. members opposite he was subjected to exactly the same treatment as that accorded to other witnesses: no questions. Here we had one of the senior civil servants of this country appearing before a committee in order to help us make legislation for the benefit of the workers of this country and what did we have? We had one political statement after another from hon. members opposite. Up went the strawman; up went the smoke. It all caught on fire and chaos reigned. Then they have the temerity to tell us that the chairman allowed things to get out of order. The hon. member for Essex East was wily but I suggest that there are two sides to every story. I hope I am exposing the other side now.

They talked about losses in the unemployment insurance fund. I suggest that they talked about losses before they were ever realized and that they arrived at the calculation of these losses, even in the face of the expert testimony given by Mr. Coyne of the Bank of Canada, without taking into account any interest gained from the bonds. I suggest that that is another side of the coin which they might have looked at.

In analysing the position of Mr. Coyne on this investment committee hon. members opposite tried to point out that his position was incompatible. I think it was an interesting argument and I am going to try to discuss it in as cool and objective a way as possible. They tried to point out to the committee that his position on the investment committee of the unemployment insurance fund was incompatible with his job as a senior adviser to the Minister of Finance. I should like to point this out to you, Mr. Chairman. Time and time again Mr. Coyne told the committee that a fund of this nature could not be considered outside the principles of sound national debt management.

But I was not surprised because this is not the first time that hon. members opposite have tried to divide labour's interest from the national interest. I well remember sitting in that committee when one of the hon. members opposite said this, "Mr. Chairman, we have heard the brief of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Tomorrow we shall hear the other extreme, the other side of the story". I say that the attitude here is wrong. Hon. members opposite went into that committee and tried to show the people of Canada that they were the champions of labour and that we, by this legislation in particular and by our attitude in general, were against labour. Such is not the case, Mr. Chairman. That is part of their game of divide and rule. As everyone well knows, this government has created a marvellous atmosphere of co-operation between management and labour and in turn between management, labour and government. In the future I should like all members of this house to refrain from trying to use measures of this type for political purposes and for political gain. I would have thought that bipartisanship should have been underlined in touching upon measures of this nature.

Mr. Chairman, remark after remark was made in the committee, as it has already been made in the house during the debate, to the effect that since this party came to power the fund has gone into a terrible decline. The first question I put to hon. members opposite is this. Would they suggest that the government should have withheld payments from the unemployed men in Canada during the recent recession? I ask that question because, let us be frank, forthright and sincere, that is the major and only reason why there was a drain on the fund. But we were told that since we came to power there has been a terrible decline in the fund. We were told this in spite of the expert testimony we were given by officials of the Department of Labour, who told us in their report that the per capita value of this fund started declining back in 1953 and 1954. Another straw man burned.

I think it is obvious why this legislation has been brought forward. I am not going to get caught up in what I call a philosophical argument as to whether it is a welfare or an insurance fund. I put the question on repeated occasions to witnesses who appeared before the committee, and even they were not clear in their thinking. No more do I feel should I get into a debate at this point as to what constitutes putting the fund on a sound actuarial basis. Admittedly many of the briefs brought before the committee, which I think treated the matter logically, did suggest that those parts of the fund which smacked of welfare notions perhaps should be handled under a separate management; and the Minister of Labour repeatedly replied to hon. members on the committee that this question was being given careful, active and fast consideration by his department. I would suggest that especially when the government pays the administrative costs of this fund it will be difficult to determine when, how and if you can put it on a sound actuarial basis. This is only a personal observation, but it is more than an insurance fund; it is an insurance-welfare fund, and I think we should be realistic and regard it as such.

I would like to say it is my view that, if the committee was not subjected to such a long filibuster this legislation would have been passed long ago and the workers of this country would long ago have been able to take benefit of the 52 week period. But such is not the case. I suggest we saw in that committee one of the all-time great political filibusters, and I think it is about time the workers of this country knew. I would say again to the hon. member for Essex East that he asked us to get witnesses before this committee in their capacity as members of the U.I.C. advisory committee. He knew as well as I did that a good part of this committee had resigned and we would only have been able to call the management side of that committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about Mr. McLean?

Mr. Grafftey: What was that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about Mr. McLean, the representative of the railway brotherhood?

Mr. Grafftey: What about him?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We would have liked to call him as a continuing member representing labour.

Mr. Grafftey: Such obviously did not seem to be the case, Mr. Chairman. Many propositions were advanced by the hon. member for Essex East. I would like to make a confession before hon. members of the committee right now. I was not able to follow his figures. I tried hard. Maybe I am slow at catching on, but by the time he got in and out, in and out, and then round and about, I was lost. At any rate, some of the figuring I have here on one of the plans he advanced before the committee showed that a saving would be made to the employers of approximately $28 million. This seems strange to me on the part of one who was trying to court the labour vote in this committee. He seemed to mention the briefs of the Canadian chamber of commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Construction Association, but not too much mention was made for the case of labour.

Mr. Benidickson: What about the united auto workers and the C.C.L.?

Mr. Grafftey: I know the Minister of Labour would have liked to have this legislation go through quickly tonight, but I do feel that certain arguments and delaying actions were put forth by members opposite which most certainly had to be answered, and for that reason I claimed the floor this evening only to say that there is another side of the story. I sat on that committee and I sincerely feel that the workers and the employers of this country do not want taxes to go up by any hidden methods through taking funds out of the consolidated revenue. Unknown to hon. members opposite, the workers of this country are willing at all times to shoulder their responsibilities; they welcome this legislation as do the employers and the people of Canada, and for that reason I feel that it should commend itself to all hon. members of this house.

Mr. Ratelle: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take part in the debate on this bill. However, after listening to certain speeches by hon. gentlemen opposite, I thought it my duty to rise and state my views. I represent the riding of Lafontaine, which has a sizeable labour population in addition to people in other walks of life and I think I ought to say a few words tonight on this bill.

After I had read and re-read this bill, I heard the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) tell us that the working class, who are excellent people, recognized this legislation to be in their own best interests.

It is true that I do not represent the people of St. Hyacinthe nor, in particular, the working class of that riding. But I am speaking on behalf of the workers in my own riding.

I am the member for Lafontaine, but I have to represent in this house all the people in this country. When I sit here in the Commons, I am conscious of my responsibility. I know that when some issue arises in parliament, I have to face it as it is, with all its consequences. Therefore, when I cast my vote, I do so in all sincerity, in the best interest of the people of Lafontaine riding, as well as of all parts of Canada. Indeed, it is impossible to represent just one riding, even if we should attempt to safeguard the interests of the people who sent us here. The bill which has been submitted to this house must be considered on its merit with regard to the people of each province, and even more so when it does not favour the whole Canadian working class.

After listening to the hon. member, I feel I am in a position to tell him that he is ignoring the facts when he says that we wanted to delay the adoption of this bill. Besides, I disagree with him all the more because the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe knows perfectly well that the social measures introduced here in the house to help labour, such as the Unemployment Insurance Act, were indeed introduced by the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King.

You will probably say that, after the measure became law, amendments were made as needed to meet certain cases which could occur. But, when it is suggested that the Liberal members on this side of the house are delaying the adoption of a law which provides for the welfare of the population, I say: "No! you can't get away with that" because only the Liberal party, my hon. friend, from St. Hyacinthe, can introduce legislation to help labour. Furthermore, I challenge you to name one which has not been introduced for that purpose. So, now that you are part of the government, go ahead and introduce logical measures in the interest of the population and we will support them.

Mr. Ricard: Don't venture too far in that direction, because we might have something to say too.

Mr. Ratelle: Mr. Chairman, it was wrong to suggest any such thing. Moreover, what had been done for labour was being ignored when the members on the committee were refused all the required opportunity to gather the information necessary for a detailed study of the bill. Really, I could not make head or tail of the reasoning of the member for St. Hyacinthe when he tried to explain what happened when he was sitting on the committee.

Mr. Chairman, what is going on here at present seems to me very strange, especially since the Conservative party has been sitting on the other side of the house, not so much from a political standpoint as from a legislative standpoint.

When the Conservatives were on this side of the house, everything was allowed, and now that they are on the other side, nothing is allowed. But, good heavens, why doesn't the government accept our opinion when we have something significant to offer, as we used to do when we were on the other side? Isn't that so, Mr. Chairman? You were here and you know that under the Liberal administration, when the opposition suggested an amendment calculated to improve a bill, we accepted it. We did not act in a narrow partisan spirit, like the government members do now.

It is time to put a stop to this policy of strife because it is not in the public interest. The public needs protection, and if you do not protect the electors, tomorrow the electors will not protect you. It is time to put a stop to those fights that are not in the interest of the population.

I was telling you a while ago that I was astonished. Listening to the speech made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe this evening, I remembered the speech made on March 27, 1957 by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) during the budget debate for the fiscal year 1957-58 where—I only took a few notes,—as reported on page 2557 of Hansard for March 21, 1957, he criticized his predecessor. The then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, had predicted in 1956-57 a surplus of $112 million which at the end of the fiscal year increased to $382 million. However, taking into consideration the budget introduced by the present Minister of Finance and on the basis of the same expectations we are justified in believing that he will end the 1958-59 fiscal year with a $422 million deficit. If we had so much money, how is it that the deficit should be so high now and that we should be showing such heavy losses?

Mr. Chairman, if there was so much money in the fund and if, in spite of that we have become so poor, it is because unemployment has increased. However, I regret to say this, but that has not happened under a Liberal government and the Conservatives are responsible for it. I know what I am talking about because I have noticed that in my constituency and in the neighbourhood, an industry which had 6,000 employees on its payroll in March 1957, had only half as many by September of the same year. In another industry where there were 6,800 employees, there were only 2,000 a few months later. That has happened because those industries lost contracts they had held, and consequently, work had stopped. Therefore, it is time to react.

I must add that if the unemployment insurance fund is absolutely in need of aid—as I have already indicated during the debate on the speech from the throne, last year—the government must take care of it. I think the existing deficit should not be hidden, and should not be made up by contributions extracted from the employee and the employer. It should be divulged so that we may realize the full extent of the deficit of the unemployment insurance fund, and of the financial difficulties that this country must face.

I will be brief, because I do not like long speeches. But I think it is a pity that, after so many years of prosperity, there should be so much hardship, so many people destitute looking for work and unable to earn a living. I believe that we should draw the required money from the consolidated revenue fund, and not from the employer's and employee's pockets.

The time has come to put an end to it. That is my last word.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear! Hear!

Mr. Ratelle: But in heaven's name, let us put an end to this fratricidal strife and let us get together in helping out the poor people! Let us try to draft sensible legislation, in the best interest of society. If we were living in contentment in 1956-57, why should the years 1958-59 be years of discontent? Let reasonable legislative measures be introduced and if you ever happen to make a mistake, be honest about it, and we shall help you. But do not carry on as you do now.

Even if I am alone to do so, I will not support this Bill C-48 unless some amendment is introduced in favour of the employer and of the employee. I am prepared to do my very best, provided the government is sincere. I am the workers' servant, I know unions and I know their needs. I have never been in favour of paying $12,000 to someone who earns only $10,000, or $110 to a man who earns only $1,000. I have always supported the workers' fair and reasonable claims and I have fought for those people at the city hall. I even fought my own party for the sake of the working population whom I represent. As a candidate, I did not come forward as a labour man, but as a representative of labour, aware of the responsibilities of his mandate.

That is all I have to say tonight. For the common good of the people, I would like to see an end to all this strife, so that we can all lead a happier life.

(Text):

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I do not intend to take up much of the time of the committee this evening, because there has been so little argument put up by the opposition that I am sure the committee will be ready to put this measure through without delay.

However, in the industrial relations committee we did receive a number of briefs, and I think it is only fair that something should be said about those briefs in answer to some of the representations which were made.

One of the big cries of the opposition has been that we should increase the contributions and that they should come out of the consolidated revenue fund but no argument has been put forward to support why this should be done. Hon. members of the opposition merely keep on screaming and raving in this respect hoping to create the impression that in their suggestions they are favouring labour. I think this represents a dangerous suggestion and during the course of my remarks I shall attempt to make a comparison between our unemployment insurance fund and the unemployment insurance fund of the United States where no proper contribution is made to that fund by employees. I shall offer this comparison in an endeavour to illustrate some of the dangers that can arise when the fund is not properly financed and is not paid into to a proper extent by the people who are going to benefit from it.

I have gone over the annual reports for the past three years and taken from there figures showing the contributions that have been made to the fund in Canada. In doing so I have been eager to ensure that my figures would be better than those we have been accustomed to hearing from the Martin bureau of statistics and to this end I have checked my figures with an adding machine. The contribution of the government for the three years 1956, 1957 and 1958 amounted to $197 million in round figures. I shall ignore the small amounts and express the figures to the nearest million. The three-year cost for administration and seasonal benefit was $184 million. In actual fact, then, the government has paid for the administration of the act and for seasonal benefits.

One of the arguments advanced has been that seasonal benefits have been a drain on the fund. That is the reason advanced for the government increasing its contribution from consolidated revenue. Another argument put forward was that the advisory committee made the recommendation that the government should increase its contribution. I dealt with this matter in the committee but I should like to bring it to the attention of hon. gentlemen now.

While the advisory committee is an admirable board and is able to offer advice to the unemployment commission on many matters it must be remembered that the board is made up of four members representing management and four members representing labour. When the witnesses from the Canadian Labour Congress were present in the committee I made the following suggestion. I said that if there was going to be a suggestion made that the burden should be taken from the employees and placed on the general taxpayers of the country, would they not agree that some representatives of the general taxpayers should be present in order to have some say in the matter? I indicated that I felt it was rather beyond the scope of the advisory committee to make a suggestion of that nature. Mr. Jodoin said that that is what the members of parliament are here for, to protect the interests of the general taxpayers. That is why I make the suggestion now that the fund has to be properly paid into by those who are going to benefit from it.

In the United States the government makes no contribution whatever to the fund. They have a tax of 3 per cent on all payrolls in the United States. Of that tax 0.3 per cent is taken for the administration of the fund so they pay nothing into it. As a result the United States legislation is not nearly as effective as ours. There are many reasons for this. In the first place the Canadian Labour Congress suggested that the ratio of the benefit to wages is not sufficient and that it should be approximately 60 to 75 per cent. In the United States, because employees do not pay a proper share of the fund, it has steadily been reduced and at the present time the ratio is only 30 per cent compared with 50 per cent in Canada.

I wish now to refer to a booklet entitled, "Comparison of State Unemployment Insurance Laws as of August 1954", a publication of the United States department of labour on page 72 of which we find the following:

> Ten states have more specific provisions for reducing benefits in one or more respects when the fund falls below a specified amount or a specified ratio to benefit payments for a given period. California's is the most general of these provisions: if the commission determines that the fund will be unable, within six months, to pay probable benefit liabilities in full, it may, by rule, reduce or cease such payments.

Drawing the information from the above publication, let me point out some of the other actions that may be taken by various state governments in the United States whenever they see fit. They may reduce the minimum weekly benefit, reduce the duration of benefit, increase the waiting period, change the qualifying requirements, eliminate part of the benefits and reduce dependants' allowances. That is the sort of thing that happens when a fund is not properly financed.

A leading spokesman for the Liberal party, the hon. member for Essex East, feels that many people under the act should be on some form of relief and should not be under the act at all. I believe he made that clear in his remarks this afternoon. I can see no reason for taking that attitude at the present time. The people that are included under the act in the present amendments are not going to be any detriment to the act. He could therefore have been referring only to those who have been covered by the act for some length of time. As I said in the committee I had rather hoped that the thought today would be that we wanted to give the Canadian people these benefits as a right and not have them given at the whim of a government which could change its mind or increase the benefits for election purposes and reduce them at another time. I am sure the people of this country do not want to go back to some system of relief which is the only alternative to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about the Public Assistance Act?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): That is only another form of relief. That is exactly what I believe the Canadian people do not want. They want something that will give them a guaranteed amount. The labour force as a whole wants to be assured that they will receive benefits when unemployed as a right and not at the whim of government.

As to the argument that all the briefs referred to were opposed to the present amendments I should like to dispel that idea at once because most of the briefs were in favour of the amendments or some of them—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: That is not true; none of them was.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Just hold on a minute. I said that they were in favour of most of the amendments. The only thing they did not want was to pay the increased contribution. I suggest that this is a natural position for them to take. Representations are made to parliament from time to time by various groups. Everybody wants something lowered. That is a natural attitude to assume. However, when I put the question directly to Mr. Jodoin as to whether he would prefer nothing at all or the opportunity of taking the present amendments as they were he said he certainly would take them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, would my hon. friend show me the exact statement that Mr. Jodoin made and will he refer to the point Mr. Jodoin made in his brief in that very context, which was exactly the opposite?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I appear to have misplaced the reference for the moment but I can assure the hon. member it is in the committee proceedings. I will come across it in a moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said it was an iniquitous bill.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway give us the page?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I refer hon. gentlemen to page 216 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 6 of the standing committee on industrial relations dated Friday, May 29, 1959. I shall read from the evidence:

> Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I understand that if we do not feel we could accede to the requests made by you, you would still prefer that the bill should go through?
> Mr. Jodoin: Certainly.

Those words appear in the centre of page 216.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend read what Mr. Jodoin said on that point in his own brief?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have read directly from the report of the committee and the hon. member can examine it for himself. I suggest that he make his point afterwards.

What was the position Mr. Jodoin took? I think it is clearly indicated by what I have read. He said that he came here wanting certain things. He was making representations and it is natural that people representing labour and doing a good job on behalf of the working people of this country would try to get a better deal for them. Nevertheless these people realize that all these measures have to be paid for.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did Mr. Burt say?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Burt did not appear before the committee, as I recall it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Burt sent a telegram in which he stated his position.

An hon. Member: Who is Mr. Burt?

Mr. Ricard: Make your own speech.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Hon. members are privileged to ask the member who has the floor a question but not to get into a debate. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I just did not quite catch what the hon. member for Essex East said, but he was referring to Mr. Burt, I believe, and I also believe that Mr. Burt sent a telegram as a private individual. It was not sent on behalf of any organization. Mr. Burt is a very competent man but he is still one man. Apparently he did not have the support of his organization in making the representation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He had the support of his organization and you know it.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Just to show what I mean when I say it is natural that the Canadian Labour Congress would not want to pay more money, here is one of the suggestions taken from the official organ of the Canadian Labour Congress, Canadian Labour of January, 1959. Here is what they had to say and why I think it would be natural that they would not want to pay any more money. This will show what I mean:

> Some editorial comment on the statements made by the congress and by president Jodoin indicate that the congress has done nothing more than to criticize the government for its failure to meet the challenge of unemployment. The fact is, however, that, almost a year ago, at its meeting in February, 1958, the executive council of the congress gave special consideration to the problem of unemployment and outlined a positive program for action on national, provincial and municipal levels, as well as by employers and labour unions.

This was their recommendation to the federal government:

Among the proposals for action by the federal government was the provision of a greatly expanded program of public works; the provision of funds to subsidize housing and thus permit N.H.A. interest rates to be lowered, and the introduction of a budget which would reduce taxes to provide increased purchasing power.

In addition, the government was urged to increase unemployment insurance benefits and lengthen benefit periods for unemployment insurance; increase the federal share of unemployment assistance from 50 per cent to at least 75 per cent; increase old age pensions, family allowances, and other social security payments; raise farm purchasing power, and adopt a generous program of aid to underdeveloped countries.

We are getting along pretty well with this program but it is going to take a little more time. I think the general membership would realize that if we are going to do all these things we are going to pay a little more money to get them. This is my opinion from the contacts I have had with the average working people in my riding. The maximum amount that is going to be paid under this proposed scheme is 94 cents a week by way of contributions from the employee. This is the amount that will be paid by anybody who is making over $70 a week. I am quite satisfied that every working man in this country is quite willing to pay that amount to protect himself and get 52 weeks benefit under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

One of the other matters which came up in the committee was the one which the hon. member for Timiskaming raised this afternoon, namely that there should be two funds and that some people should be taken out of this fund. I do not know how he is going to describe a seasonal worker. He indicated in the committee that seasonal workers should not be in this fund, although I have already pointed out the government pays more money into this fund than is necessary to cover the seasonal benefit and the administration of the act.

I went out the other day to the offices of the unemployment insurance commission and looked very carefully over the result of the operation of the fund in the last few years. At the committee I asked repeatedly who was described as a seasonal worker and we got varying answers. Some said fishermen; some said loggers. What I would like to know is where anybody would draw the line. I started to go down the list and I found that construction was very close. It was third behind the loggers and the fishermen. It seems to me that if we started to follow that principle all down the line pretty soon we would be getting to the point where those who were working would not have to pay into the fund at all, and the end result would be that we would not have any Unemployment Insurance Act at all. That is the only conclusion one can come to. You are going to have to build up the fund. Obviously, there would be no sense in not having it because if we did not have it we would have to go back to some system of relief.

What I am pointing out is this. The opposition are presenting these arguments that the money should come from the consolidated revenue fund. They must know in their own minds that if the federal government started contributing to this fund as a welfare scheme it would not be very long until we would have people from one end of the country to the other demanding that there should be a means test. That is a thing the working people of this country do not want. They want to know that when they are out of work they are going to be protected as long as necessary. These representations were made to me in my own riding when I was home between sessions last year, that we should extend the benefits of the act.

I pointed out to the Canadian Labour Congress in Vancouver at that time that it was all very well to have this, because I was perfectly in favour of that, and I said, "We shall also have to increase the contributions". Nobody raised any objection at that time. I am sure they do realize the dangers of putting this thing on some sort of a welfare basis with the government doing all the contributing. They see the dangerous elements that I have referred to in the United States where the rates of benefits are lowered, where they are not even guaranteed any payment and where at the whim of the state government the payments can be cut off tomorrow. I am sure the working people of this country will be very well satisfied with the amendments we are putting through here.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I certainly would like to mention what the C.L.C. has done in this country. Last year, when they made the announcement that they intended to get into the political field, they certainly perked up a couple of old parties in this country. I think there has been more attention paid to labour throughout this session than I have ever seen or read about before this parliament.

Before I come to my main remarks I should like to deal with one matter raised by the hon. member who just resumed his seat. He was very careful to read one question and answer on the page from which he quoted, but he failed to go a little farther down the page. I think if he had gone a little farther down the page after the word "certainly" where he left off quoting from the minutes of the industrial relations committee he would have found this. Mr. Jodoin was asked another question by the hon. member for Cape Breton South who said, and I quote:

> You are in favour, rather than seeing it dropped—you would rather see it go through as is?
> Mr. Jodoin: We have indicated that there are some improvements. There is no question about that. For instance, from 36 to 52 and so on. But if a question were asked, pertinently and directly, whether we favoured it or not, my answer is that our position is clear by the suggested amendments we have made before you, and our position would be the same.

A little farther down he said:

> I know that you favour answer of yes or no, but you cannot always answer in that way. You will realize that for obvious reasons.

Still further down he had this to say:

> I might have another suggestion with respect to the bill; I think the term you used in the house is hoisting; the bill might be hoisted to give an opportunity to the advisory council, for instance, to make a complete study of it, and to come forward, perhaps with some other recommendations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite different.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It gives an entirely different picture from the one given by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Grafftey: Not much.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act before us today are there to solve one particular problem—I think we all agree with that—namely the very serious depletion of the unemployment insurance fund which has been brought about through the combined factors of very heavy unemployment and actions of last year by the present government. I think it might be appropriate at this time to turn to Hansard of last year at the time the act was being amended. I had occasion to speak on it, and I think the words I used at that time are as appropriate today as they were one year ago. On page 95 of Hansard of May 15, 1958, I said this:

> Welcome as it is, this measure is nothing more or less than one extending payments for certain classes of unemployed. There is no provision for the unemployed without sufficient contributions.

A little farther down I said:

> It is fine to help the ones this legislation will help, but what about the ones it does not touch?

I say, Mr. Chairman, that these same problems that were ignored one year ago are being ignored just as completely today. A little farther down on the same page, I quote:

> There is one other aspect of this measure about which I should like to have more information. It is not clear to me yet where this additional money is coming from.

Then, over on the next page, page 96, I find this:

> This is not normal unemployment as we have known it in the past. An emergency measure should not be charged to a normal fund. It should be handled out of the consolidated revenue fund. It should not be handled by the relatively small numbers of insured people in this country. The emergency should be met by the people of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): From whose remarks is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): These are my own remarks made on May 15, last year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the minister has answered the question I asked last year, from what source is this money coming? We see the answer in this bill now before us. The money necessary for the implementation of the legislation passed last year is being charged to future contributions. I feel, that this action, along with the action taken last year, has contributed very greatly to the confusion that we see reigning in this country today. Probably it has had a good deal to do with the resignations of members from various government committees. In fact, this is just another in a series of confusing events that have been caused throughout this country by this government.

There has been confusion in the bond market. In spite of the brave words of our Minister of Finance, the last quotation I saw for the famous conversion bonds of last year was something like $90. Confusion has been caused throughout the country by the ever-climbing interest rate. Confusion exists with regard to defence in this country. Now, we have the answer to this problem in the bill before us, and the reaction of this government, as we see it, has certainly accomplished one end. We have the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Labour Congress both agreed on one thing. It is not very often that happens, Mr. Chairman, and it takes an action by this government before we can bring about that situation. We have all this demonstrated as well in the briefs presented by the various organizations.

What is the action of this government in the face of all this criticism, and in the face of all these suggestions by the various organizations representing the majority of the people in this country? Their answer is very simple. They say, we have a majority of 208 and we will put the measure through regardless of what anybody in this country thinks about it. We have three years left in which to patch up things before the next election. This action, along with the others I have mentioned, was mainly responsible for the phenomenon we saw last week. Certainly, if anything should make this government stop and think, that should, because apparently the people of this country are turning back to the Liberals. What a horrible thought! Even Tory Toronto is turning back to the Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —for the first time in 22 years. That is something that should make this government stop and think.

Mr. Henderson: All you need is another pillow to get right into bed with them.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I think that if this government is going to carry out the job it should be doing it should remember just what this fund is. This is an unemployment insurance fund. I feel it is about time it was put back on an insurance basis or else the name should be changed. If you are going to change the terms of the measure, then you should change the name of it. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this government has caused enough confusion in this country. Is it not time to turn this fund back into a proper insurance fund and not try to make it into a glorified welfare fund? It should be put back on a proper basis, and instead of all this camouflage we see here, and in place of these amendments we have before us, some amendments should be introduced to look after the unemployed of this country better than they have been looked after in the past.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, there are some other aspects of this matter which, I believe, require discussion in this committee. It was indicated this afternoon that the unemployment insurance fund must be regarded, in every sense of the word, as a trust fund. We have had pointed out to us that when this government took office the unemployment insurance fund was over $800 million, and that at the present time, taking into account the securities in the unemployment insurance fund and their related market value, that fund is now under $400 million, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $350 million.

We are called upon to deal with a proposal for increasing the contributions made by three contributors, notably the employers and employees, largely because of the depleted character of the fund. It is our duty and our responsibility to inquire why the fund has reached, to use the language of the advisory committee, the perilous state in which it is now to be found. Undoubtedly the main reason for the drain on the fund is the fact that during the past 18 months this country has experienced the highest level of unemployment since the days of 1930-35. While we are all happy in the thought that we did have a fund, created largely as a result of contributions by employers and employees, we all regret that circumstances, some of which were within the control of this government, have been such as to cause the fund to reach this present stage of dangerous depletion.

Not only is the fund in this dangerous state because of the heavy drain made on it during the past 18 months by a high level of unemployment but because, at the same time, there has been an obligation imposed on the government, and on parliament, to provide ways and means for the maintenance of unemployed workers and their families, unemployed workers who were no longer able to qualify for the normal unemployment insurance benefits. We sought in this parliament to give assistance to this group by seasonal benefits.

This practice, as the Minister of Labour pointed out earlier tonight when he interrogated me, had been established by the previous administration. However, the difference between the situation in that regard in relation to the fund under the previous administration and under the present government is that the former, on three distinct occasions when it did provide for assistance by way of what were called then supplementary benefits out of the fund, took occasion to replenish that fund out of consolidated revenue. This was done on three occasions. The Minister of Labour pointed out that this was done on the first occasion only in the amount of some one million and several hundred thousand dollars. That is true. But that situation arose because that was the extent of the replenishment that was then required. But as the Minister of Labour also knows, on the two subsequent occasions the amounts refunded to the fund were larger proportionately to the amounts paid out of the fund.

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member tell us on what occasion there were these two extra supplements?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will look at my statement when we debated this matter on second reading he will find the exact amounts and the dates. I gave them then.

Mr. Starr: Is it not true that all the money that was ever put from the consolidated fund into the insurance fund amounted to only $1,800,000 which is correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I regret to say that my hon. friend is wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen say "Oh, oh". Of course, if they can point out that I am wrong, I shall be happy to be shown. However, in my statement in chief I have given the three occasions, the dates and the amounts.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): One occasion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend the hon. member for Saint John-Albert who is an authority on this matter, says "one occasion". If he can point out that I am wrong, I should be happy to be shown. I ask him while I am speaking, to look at what I said previously. If he does so, he will find the dates and the amounts. Then we can deal with the matter by way of interrogation at the conclusion of what I have to say.

In the industrial relations committee we dealt with an extremely important aspect of this matter that has not been fully dealt with yet. The government comes to parliament and says that the fund is in a perilous state; the labour representatives and the employer representatives on the advisory committee have said that the fund had reached an extremely perilous position. The government now says we must replenish the fund because we may have unemployment on a serious scale next fall and next winter. In order to make sure that we have enough money to provide for our contractual obligations—and that is what is involved—we must see to it at the present time that this fund is replenished by the contributors.

We say that it is not fair, just or in keeping with the traditions of this legislation—which was introduced by a Liberal administration in the dark days of war—to impose on the two main contributing groups an obligation which, just as in the case of public assistance, must be widely shared. No hon. gentleman from the government benches who has spoken in this debate thus far has dealt with this point. What justification is there for imposing on these two particular groups the responsibility of providing assistance to men and women in this country who, having exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits, require assistance from the national community? Why should that burden be imposed upon those two groups? That is the main point of our opposition to this measure; and no one speaking on behalf of the government has yet addressed himself to this point.

Mr. Chairman, we contended on second reading of this bill—and it is the argument which we made in the committee and which we make now—that if there were mistakes in the way in which this particular unemployment insurance fund was handled with regard to its investments, the consequences of lack of judgment or incompatibility of function should not be laid on the shoulders of the two main contributing groups.

We were told by the governor of the Bank of Canada, an able and competent public official—as we would have been told, I am sure, by the deputy minister of finance and the spokesmen for the Department of Labour who share with the governor of the Bank the responsibility for the investment of the unemployment insurance fund—that in the exercise of their responsibilities they had sought to display, to demonstrate and to exercise the best possible judgment. I have no quarrel with their good intentions nor do I in any way suggest bad faith on the part of any one of these three gentlemen. But the fact of the matter is that with respect to this fund they had the responsibility—just in the same manner as any trustee of any fund has a responsibility toward the fund he administers—to make as their exclusive concern the problems of and all the circumstances attending the trust fund. Under any trustee act in the administration of any estate in the discharge of any responsibility as trustee there is imposed, both by way of the written and the unwritten law, an obligation on the part of the trustee to regard as his exclusive concern the interests and the integrity of the fund of which he is the trustee.

What I say is this. Under section 20 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, a section which endows these trustees of the fund with full responsibility for all of its investments, there has arisen since this government came into office a situation that did not confront these gentlemen as trustees previously under the former administration. They were not then confronted with a situation in which the government had a large and dangerous deficit. They were not then confronted with a situation that revealed an extremely high level of unemployment making serious drains on the fund. So after this government came into office in the fall of 1958 or, I will say, in the summer of 1958, there arose an extremely important development, a responsibility of which this government should have been aware and which they should have discussed with the members of the investment committee. When the government decided to embark upon its bond conversion scheme there at once arose, as between the governor of the bank and the members of the investment committee as gentlemen responsible in part for the debt management policy of this government, an incompatibility in the face of their responsibility as trustees of the unemployment insurance fund.

This fund is not something that belongs to the government of Canada. This fund is something that belongs to the employers and to the workers of Canada in the main. It is not money that is the property of the people of Canada through the government of the nation. This is property that belongs to the workers and to the employers of the nation. The same regard that one would display with regard to any private trust fund or any private estate must attend the administration of the unemployment insurance fund. I say that there was on this government a responsibility to free the members of the investment committee from the dual position in which they found themselves a few months prior to the introduction of this government's well known, doubtful and controversial bond conversion scheme.

It was in the interests of those responsible for the debt management policy of the government to see to it that the Canadian public were encouraged to invest, or having invested to continue their investment, in long term securities. That was the main characterization of the plan, and inducements were given to those holders of victory bonds to convert their victory bonds into long term securities, characterized by the bond conversion scheme covering some $6 billion, $1 billion of which was held in the hands of private individuals and the rest for the most part by institutions in one way or another.

I say, and in the committee it was so revealed, that it was not in the interests of this fund that the securities of the fund should have been invested in long term securities, and particularly in the bond conversion scheme proposed to this country by the Minister of Finance. I am not now concerned with the merits of the bond conversion scheme, but I am saying that the interests of the government in respect of its debt management policy and the interests of this fund were diametrically opposed. First of all, when the bond conversion scheme was announced the government made it clear that the holders of victory bonds, those bonds which it was encouraging the Canadian public to transfer or to convert into the bond conversion scheme, could be sold on the market, and because the Bank of Canada was supporting that market from July 1958 to the end of October 1958 any seller of those bonds in that period would have received par or its equivalent. The bond market was, as I say, being supported at that time by the Bank of Canada, and if the investment committee of this unemployment insurance fund had decided, to enable those securities to be sold, to take advantage of the market opportunities at the moment, the fund would have very considerably benefited in the appreciation that would have flowed from that kind of sale. But it was not in the interest of those responsible for the debt management policy of the government to encourage such a sale. There was clearly a conflict of duty between the members of the investment committee, who also had a responsibility as important government officials in the debt management policy of the government.

Is it conceivable that the governor of the Bank of Canada or the deputy minister of finance, in respect of a fund so large, the largest trust fund in the nation, could have taken a step contrary to the admonitions and the urgings of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of Canada?

Mr. Benidickson: And the advice they gave.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And the advice, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River points out, which they gave to the Canadian public. Of course the members of the investment committee were in a difficult position. They were in a dilemma, and I have no doubt that each of them must have been greatly concerned about the position in which he found himself as a result of the policy of this government. If those five issues of victory bonds held by the unemployment insurance commission, totalling over $300 million, had on a day to day basis—I do not say all at once—been sold on the market, a market which was supported by the Bank of Canada, then instead of reporting now a book loss of $62 million marking the level of the unemployment insurance fund at this time of $350 million, that fund would be up very considerably and would have provided the Minister of Labour with a less justifiable reason for coming to parliament and asking that this fund be replenished by imposing additional burdens on the workers and employers of this country. That is the situation which the facts as revealed in this committee clearly establish.

But they did not sell the victory bonds. They converted these bonds, $380 million worth of them. I say that at that time the interests of the fund demanded it be in liquid state. The governor of the Bank of Canada and the government of Canada must both have known at that time that the unemployment situation in our country demanded that this unemployment insurance fund be in a state of great liquidity. Unemployment was confronting us. It existed all during the summer of 1958 and it was clear from every index that it was going to persist in 1959, as we now know it did in the unusually high proportions that we all saw during the last winter. Because of that condition, does any hon. member, including the Minister of Labour, care to argue seriously that it was in the interests of the unemployment insurance fund that its securities should be invested in long term instruments at a time when it should be liquid so as to meet the continuous heavy drain imposed upon it as a result of high unemployment in our country?

That is the situation that confronted the investment committee, and I say to the Minister of Labour that he and his colleagues had the responsibility of discussing this with the investment committee, of recognizing the duality of their functions, and saying to the investment committee, "Obviously you are placed in a difficult position; we have no right to ask you to be placed in a position where you have to select between two duties, between two trusts." Under the act as it stood and as it now stands no one else but these three or their nominees could act as members of the investment committee. Parliament was sitting in the summer of 1958. We met here shortly after the elections of March, 1958. There was no reason why the Minister of Labour could not have suggested an amendment to section 20 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and we could have had placed, in the place of these three, three other trustees of competence and of knowledge.

Mr. Benidickson: Two others.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two others, the Department of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada—whose duties as trustees would not have conflicted with their obvious duty to the government and the people of Canada as a whole. Because that was not done, this unemployment insurance investment committee having to make the choice it did, made a choice that was not in the interests of the fund, and it was not in my judgment in full compliance with what one must exact from any one exercising his trust toward a fund of this character. This was a fund in which the over-all concern was what is in the interests of the fund, even if that interest conflicted with policy of the government or with the welfare of the concerns of a wider constituency of the Canadian people.

That is the situation, and because these bonds were converted and they are long term bonds, we are faced with the position as the hon. member for Welland pointed out, that as a result of current market values there is a book loss of at least $62 million. Let no one say that because it is merely a book loss that it is not a serious matter. At any time this fund may have to be liquidated. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if I am wrong in suggesting that when the government of Canada decided on April 2 to extend for the first time cash loans to the unemployment insurance commission there was not a requisition from the unemployment insurance commission for the sale of certain securities.

I hope the Minister of Labour will deal with that question at some time, because we were informed, with some reluctance by the Minister of Finance, readily by the Minister of Labour, that there had been loans extended under two different orders in council bearing interest at 5 per cent under section 96 of the unemployment insurance act to the unemployment commission. To give some indication that these victory bonds, supported by the Bank of Canada, could have been sold at par and more some time between July and October, I point to the fact that on September 15, 1958 $17 million worth of the same victory bonds which had been converted were sold on the open market at the instance of the Bank of Canada. If it was possible to sell that group—and they were sold, as I indicated, at a profit, because those bonds were at that time being supported by the Bank of Canada—there is no reason why a careful policy of investment during this three-month period should not have seen to it that a larger proportion of these holdings were sold so as to benefit, by way of increased appreciation, the unemployment insurance fund.

Not only that, but at the time just prior to the bond conversion scheme the unemployment insurance fund could have had these securities invested, as did the large insurance companies, in treasury bills, short term securities or something which would yield a principal value close to par, bearing some rate of interest, and certainly producing a revenue greater than was produced in the situation which now confronts us in our analysis of the security position of the unemployment insurance fund. Treasury bills and short term securities would have been more in keeping with the demands, the needs and the problems of the unemployment insurance fund than the purchase of these long term investments.

There was no reason for the investment committee deciding on the course it did simply because it would serve as a means of encouraging the sale of conversion bonds, the prized possession of the Minister of Finance. It was contrary to the interests of the unemployment insurance fund to use this particular investments as a means of trying to encourage a wider participation in the bond conversion scheme of the government of Canada, because, I say again, this was a trust fund, and the only consideration should have been the question of what was in the best interest of that fund.

But it was not only in regard to this particular situation that circumstances of this kind arose. We had, in 1958—and this was mentioned yesterday when we were discussing the financing of the Canadian National Railways—another example of this kind. And I may say that when this matter was discussed yesterday I was precluded from pursuing it further because it was argued that it was out of order. I was told I would have to wait until this matter came before this committee. I said that if this was the position I hoped the Minister of Finance would be in the chamber when we discussed this question on the unemployment insurance bill. This was a borrowing on the part of the C.N.R. in January, 1958, with the knowledge and full approval of the Minister of Finance, providing 4 per cent with bonds maturing, I think in 1980.

An hon. Member: A silly argument.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone said: "a silly argument". I hope whoever did so will rise immediately after me and point out where this argument is silly. The investment committee decided to invest $15 million of the securities of the unemployment insurance fund in this $300 million C.N.R. issue. I say to the Minister of Finance, as I said yesterday, that this was a difficult issue. It was not readily accepted by the people of Canada. And it would seem that one of the reasons why unemployment insurance securities were invested in this issue was so as to encourage a wider participation in that issue by the Canadian people, and I think the situation one year later confirms what I have said.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to take a few moments to straighten out one matter to which the hon. member for Essex East has referred. The impression was, I think, wrongly created by the hon. member that on three separate and distinct occasions amounts were taken from consolidated revenue and placed in the fund. I have read the hon. gentleman's remarks on second reading, and they are exactly the same as were made during the discussion we had as reported on page 170 of the industrial relations committee reports.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Have you got the remarks I made?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would you read them out?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This is the great statesman, the hon. member for Essex East, speaking as reported at page 3540 of Hansard for May 11:

> I said that when we invaded the fund for the purpose of providing supplementary benefits we took steps to replenish the fund. That was done in the years 1949-50, 1950-51, and in 1951-52.

And Mr. McGregor, speaking in the standing committee, referred to exactly those amounts. And then, as reported on page 170 of the committee proceedings, the hon. member for Hamilton South said:

> You were just keeping up with the balance.

To which Mr. McGregor replied:

> That is right; keeping things cleared up.

The rest of the exchange on this point reads as follows:

> Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What was the reason for those two small amounts?
> Mr. McGregor: This went into effect on February 28, 1950 which was pretty close to the end of the fiscal year. $1,728,964.94 was carried into the next fiscal year before it was reimbursed to the fund.
> Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would it be fair to say there was just this one large $1 million odd payment, but due to this particular time of year it was spread over into other payments?
> Mr. McGregor: That is right.

In other words, there was just the one, single and distinct payment from consolidated revenue into the fund, but due to the fact that it came at a bad bookkeeping time during the year there was a little spread before and afterwards of a few thousand dollars.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since the hon. gentleman has asked me a question, may I refer to what I said?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There was no question. I made a statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I presume the hon. member wants the full facts. Let us get this straight. As reported at page 3540, my remarks were:

> I said that when we invaded the fund for the purpose of providing supplementary benefits we took steps to replenish the fund. That was done in the years 1949-50, 1950-51 and in 1951-52. In 1949-50, vote 585 provided for reimbursement to the fund under section 87(f)(1) of the act in the amount of $1,500,000. The actual expenditure amounted, however, to only $13,425.56. The following year, vote 597 provided for similar purposes the amount of $1,780,000, which was fully expended. In 1951-52, vote 717 provided for $40,000, of which $35,438.35 was spent.

Now it is not the fault of those who sit on this side of the house if when we were in power unemployment was not as great as it is now under hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East who just spoke introduced something there was not an opportunity to pursue in the committee because, as I recall it, the information was not available. He asked the Minister of Labour whether or not just prior to the time of the April 2 order in council, under which it was decided to borrow from the government henceforth rather than sell securities on the market, there was a normal monthly requisition from the unemployment insurance commission to the Bank of Canada, their agents, asking them in the forthcoming month to provide to them certain cash funds.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, neither the investment committee nor the unemployment insurance commission conferred with me at all in that regard.

Mr. Benidickson: That is not the point, Mr. Chairman. The minister is quite familiar with the procedure under which on a monthly basis the unemployment insurance commission indicates by requisition—I believe that is the word—to the Bank of Canada what its cash needs are likely to be in the forthcoming month. The minister knows that I was by no means satisfied that the provisions of section 86 of the Unemployment Insurance Act had been complied with in the flimsy, informal manner which we heard in the committee was utilized and which resulted in this cabinet decision, not on the part of the unemployment insurance commission, as I gather it, but on the part of the government, and not even the experts in the field, the investment committee, as contemplated in section 20. It was astounding to me to hear that this investment committee composed of the governor of the Bank of Canada, the deputy minister of finance and a nominee of the Minister of Labour were not consulted in any way, shape or form in this decision.

Mr. Starr: What decision?

Mr. Benidickson: I am just explaining. In this decision to henceforth desist from selling government bonds in the fund but to borrow from the government.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what transpired in the earlier sittings when the investment committee was present but I do know that I attended with the chief commissioner and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River personally questioned us on that and we gave him information to the effect that the decision was made after consultation with the commission.

Mr. Benidickson: That is perfectly correct, Mr. Chairman, but I pointed out to the minister at that time, as I have indicated to this Commons committee, that I have very grave doubts concerning whether the language of the statute in section 86 of the Unemployment Insurance Act was complied with through this informal, flimsy procedure of conversation between the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission and the Minister of Labour and another conversation which was referred to in the evidence between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour. The language of section 86, subsection 1 of the Unemployment Insurance Act is as follows:

> Where the amounts standing to the credit of the unemployment insurance fund in the consolidated revenue fund are not sufficient for the payment of benefits under this act, the Minister of Finance, on the requisition of the commission—

May do such-and-such.

"Requisition" is a formal word. I do not have a dictionary in front of me but there are a great number of lawyers in this house and I think they would question whether or not "requisition" would be satisfied by a mere statement on the part of one member of a board of three, the unemployment insurance commission, to the effect that the minister to whom the board reports engaged in a conversation with him and then in turn that minister had some conversation with the Minister of Finance. This statute says that the direct contact must be from the commission by formal procedure and I believe that "requisition" involves some formality directly from the commission of three to the Minister of Finance. That was not done. A decision was made and the amazing thing is—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt at this point to say that it is doubtful that I could convince the hon. member or even endeavour to prove to him that everything was done in the right way. Possibly I should not have entered into the matter at all but I was concerned about the fund just as I am concerned about all the responsibilities I have. Although I have not followed the procedure the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is convinced I should have followed, none the less whatever was done was done in good faith.

Mr. Benidickson: Oh, Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who would ever question the good faith or good intentions of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Starr: But you are.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I am not.

Mr. Starr: You say the whole procedure was wrong.

Mr. Benidickson: I am saying there is a duty on the part of every member of the cabinet because they are always supported by a great number of legal and other types of advisers to make sure that in matters of consequence of this nature that a statute, a parliamentary direction, is observed in the utmost respect. I say that the language of this statute is very clear.

In examining the members of the commission in the committee we did find that there had been nothing more than a word of mouth conversation on the part of one member of the commission and his minister, the Minister of Labour, that there was some anxiety about these losses.

We have had the evidence that there were capital losses last year of some $10 million. They were also aware, of course, that the market value at about this time in relation to the book value was down by $62 million, as several hon. members have said in this debate. A decision was made of utmost importance. I do not blame anyone for bad faith in this but I do cast blame for not following the procedures parliament lays down. Some decisions are matters of judgment. I know a decision would be taken in good faith and there is no question about that. I have the same feeling with respect to the investment committee. However, I share the views of the hon. member for Essex East when he asserts that when times are difficult for the government and when two members of the investment committee have dual responsibilities and when $8 out of every $10 represents trust funds and not government funds, we should be considering at this time the possibility of relieving admired civil servants or government officials of the type that are on this investment committee of any question about dual responsibility or incompatibility in connection with their investment responsibilities for this fund.

The point I am concerned with at the moment is that a decision was made by order in council on April 2 to desist from selling further of the bonds in the portfolio of the unemployment insurance commission. It is not astonishing to think we have an investment committee in charge of an investment portfolio—even though depleted as it was by $62 million in terms of the market value—still totalling something in excess of $360 million. These were experts, the governor of the Bank of Canada, the deputy minister of finance and a third member, a nominee of the Minister of Labour who had been on this committee for almost a year and who presumably had experience, who attended, although I am rather doubtful about how many meetings anybody on the investment committee attended. None the less, certainly two out of the three were experts in the investment field.

We had evidence from the governor of the Bank of Canada before our committee that he was not asked whether or not it was propitious, wise or unwise, to follow the course set out in that order in council. That was a decision made politically by the government. We have no evidence that under section 86 there was on the part of those three members of the unemployment insurance commission, acting in concert, acting officially, a decision that the time had come to requisition the Minister of Finance and get from him certain funds on loan rather than by utilization of the capital funds that belonged to the unemployment insurance commission.

I think this has never been cleared up either in the committee or in any explanation we have had subsequently. As far as I know, another usual type of requisition was made by the unemployment insurance commission late in March indicating in the customary way they would need net cash requirements in the month of April of whatever the amount was, perhaps $50 million. This had been the customary procedure, and within a matter of a few days it is the cabinet that decides by order in council, after informal conversation between the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance. Are they the experts in this field? Are they the technicians? They never spoke to the governor of the Bank of Canada about this. Apparently they never consulted the other members of the U.I.C. investment committee with financial long time background, such as the deputy minister of finance, as to what should be done in the interests of the unemployment fund, $8 out of every $10 of which were trust funds from outside government sources. This of course is hindsight and I know the decision that was made was made in good faith. I am challenging the authority for making this decision and the procedure under which the decision was made. I say that the cabinet over rode the statute. It did not consult the investment committee; it did not get from the unemployment insurance commission a requisition. It cannot produce in this house what is called in this section a requisition from the unemployment insurance commission saying that the time had come for the Minister of Finance to do something by loan rather than the regular procedure of liquidating the assets they still had in the fund. I think this has to be answered by the Minister of Labour.

Let me come back to the point I made. They pledged rather than sold, as outlined in the order in council of April 2, some $80 million-plus of 4½ per cent conversion loan bonds maturing in 1972 as security for a loan, through the Minister of Finance, upon which the unemployment insurance commission was obliged to pay 5 per cent interest. I indicated that hindsight is very easy, and I want to be fair. But the result is they reached this decision without expert advice; they did not consult the investment committee.

We have the evidence of the governor of the Bank of Canada on that. The fact is that market-wise the very securities that were pledged for those loans have in the next seven or eight weeks depreciated further in value beyond the $62 million that was referred to by the hon. member for Essex East, by another $6 million or $7 million. In addition, the unemployment insurance commission, whose funds are 80 per cent trust funds, is obliged to pay 5 per cent on $72 million or $73 million that they have received by loan since April 1 in connection with this order in council.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this committee and the average member of it—and I include myself as one—surely knows a minimum about business to think that we would expect that if there was an investment committee in which the administration says it has supreme confidence, that no cabinet minister amateurish in big finance or otherwise, in a little conversation with his colleagues would decide on something as momentous as this which has resulted in a $7 million loss in seven weeks, without consultation with someone with experience. In addition, the moneys were trust funds. They were not funds that were contributed to by government departments, although these are still trust funds in that they are contributed to by taxpayers. They were insurance funds $8 out of every $10 of which was contributed by employees and employers.

These informal conversations should be inquired into further by this committee. I refer to the conversation between the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission and the Minister of Labour and next the conversation of the Minister of Labour with the Minister of Finance, which resulted in this order in council. I suggest this order in council was superimposed beyond the conception of section 86 of the statute, superimposed on the commission which I challenge the minister to suggest did formally requisition and decide that this procedure should take place.

In the statute the onus is upon the commission of three to make a decision of this kind.

I see that it is ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with this debate. We will go right on through with it for the rest of the week if it is not finished in the meantime.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We should finish it by next week.

Mr. Green: If we finish it tomorrow we shall then take the order of business I listed last night. If we finish it on Thursday we shall then take the estimates of the Department of Justice, followed by those of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

TAX RENTAL AGREEMENTS—PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 458—Mr. Meunier:

1. What amount was paid each year, since 1953 to 1957 inclusive, to each province which signed the dominion-provincial tax rental agreement?

2. What amount would the province of Quebec have received in each of the said years had it signed this agreement?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

	1952–53	1953–54	1954–55	1955–56	1956–57
	$	$	$	$	$
Newfoundland	10,735,033	11,824,613	12,547,103	12,483,742	13,805,028
Prince Edward Island	3,262,631	3,657,465	3,912,863	3,680,762	3,073,264
Nova Scotia	18,127,623	19,507,991	20,475,440	19,856,134	22,333,082
New Brunswick	14,986,427	16,178,111	17,047,327	16,630,001	17,806,998
Ontario	123,327,363	134,447,814	142,746,809	138,345,269	160,558,129
Manitoba	23,087,257	25,038,772	26,200,968	25,656,149	27,888,568
Saskatchewan	23,583,638	25,253,662	26,646,501	25,986,269	27,431,898
Alberta	27,312,973	29,802,544	31,816,130	31,592,934	37,310,747
British Columbia	40,354,837	43,516,016	46,051,964	45,392,814	55,730,441
TOTAL	284,777,782	309,226,988	327,445,105	319,624,074	365,938,155

Ontario did not rent the succession duty field.

2.

	1952–53	1953–54	1954–55	1955–56	1956–57
Quebec	112,562,875	121,824,632	127,908,098	126,680,838	140,433,508

The amounts specified assume that Quebec had rented all three tax fields.

The amounts specified in questions 1 and 2 above exclude the payments made to all provinces under clause 6 of 1952 c. 49 which payments involved the remission of 50 percent of the net income tax collected from corporations whose main business was the distribution to or generation for distribution to the public of electrical energy, gas or steam. These payments were not in the nature of tax rental payments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS—TEMPORARY LAY-OFFS

Question No. 460—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Are members of Canada's labour force who have the necessary contribution stamps, and meet other requirements, who are temporarily laid off from their employment, eligible to draw unemployment insurance benefits?

2. Do unemployment insurance benefits cease if a beneficiary engages in repairs to his own property from which no cash revenue is derived?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Yes.

2. Each case has to be considered on its own merits after the full facts are known.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 17, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PAYMENTS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that the government has approved initial prices to be paid by the Canadian wheat board on the basic grades of wheat, oats and barley for the crop year commencing August 1, 1959.

For wheat the initial payment is $1.40 per bushel, basis No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver. For oats, the initial payment is 60 cents per bushel, basis No. 2 Canada western oats in store Fort William, Port Arthur. For barley, the initial payment is 96 cents per bushel basis No. 3 Canada western six-row barley in store Fort William, Port Arthur. The new initial prices are the same as the initial prices in effect for the present crop year.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—TABLING OF U.S. NOTE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a note dated June 12 from the department of state of the United States addressed to the Canadian ambassador in Washington. I also ask the permission of the house to have the text of the note printed as an appendix to today's Hansard, which has been the practice, I believe, with other notes dealing with the same question. The note deals with the proposed diversion of water from lake Michigan at Chicago and is in reply to the Canadian note of April 9, 1959, which was tabled in the house on April 16. I propose that the note be tabled and printed, because a large number of members have indicated a continued interest in its subject matter.

Briefly, the United States note informs us that the Canadian note was transmitted to the committee on public works of the United States senate. Second, it sets forth that the department of state is not in accord with all the points in the Canadian note and that consequently it must reserve its position with respect to allegations of a legal nature. I suggest that this is a normal and proper precaution when there are so many agreements and understandings referred to in the Canadian note. Third, and perhaps most important, the department of state suggests that consultation should take place between the two governments. Consultation is a satisfactory approach, and I am sure all hon. members will welcome this proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister leave to have the document printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of note referred to above, see Appendix A]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF MOTION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION ON TODAY'S ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday I raised a question with respect to the notice of motion which hon. members will see standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition at this point in the routine proceedings. There is no question in my mind as to the right of the hon. member to give this notice of motion. The question with which I was concerned, as I indicated yesterday, is where the notice of motion should go on the order paper, and that would depend on whether the proposed motion raised the question of privilege.

Yesterday I indicated that I had authorized the notice of motion to be put under routine proceedings, having in mind that the preliminary question could be dealt with at this stage. If the question raises a proper question of privilege, it seems to me it should be dealt with under the heading "Routine Proceedings". If it did not raise a proper question of privilege it would go under the orders of the day as a notice of motion.

I should like to refer hon. members to rule 17 with which they are all familiar, namely, that a question of privilege has to be taken up at the time it arises. The exact words are: "Whenever any matter of privilege arises it should be taken into consideration immediately." The effect is, of course, that a question of privilege, or a motion based on it, is a debatable motion and occupies the time of the house at that stage.

May I refer to the practice in these matters as explained by May in his Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, at page 382:

It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question whether the case conforms with the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence of the notices of motion and orders of the day standing in the order paper of public business, and does not extend to deciding the question of substance whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the house itself.

And a little lower down it says:

A prima facie case of a breach of privilege must be made out.—In judging whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been made out the Speaker excludes any matters which are otherwise properly to be dealt with under the practice or standing orders of the house.

Then, after noting that the matter must be raised at the earliest possible opportunity, the learned author proceeds at page 383 as follows:

As precedence is naturally desired by members, care has been taken by rulings from the Chair, not to extend that claim to any motion which does not strictly relate to matter of privilege, properly so called.

Then instances of refusals by the Speaker to grant precedence to matters claimed by hon. members to affect privilege are given. I shall not take the time of the house to deal with those but shall pass to page 384 and read this final paragraph:

Many motions more or less affecting privilege have been brought on in their turn with other notices of motion and on occasions matters to which the Speaker has refused precedence as a matter of privilege have been raised on a motion moved at a later date.

The issue at this time on which I indicated I would draw assistance from the house is really a procedural one; whether this motion is of a character which entitles it to be taken at this stage and be debated now, or whether it is not of that character; and I remind the house that of course by unanimous consent the house could hear the motion at this time regardless of its character.

I am going to ask the house to assist me in this matter before deciding whether or not a prima facie case has been made out. I think it might be relevant to draw the attention of hon. members to the question of what privilege has been infringed. This motion is based on a document which has been tabled, namely a judgment or the reasons for judgment of the president of the exchequer court. The motion recites a certain number of conclusions or observations which occur in the judgment. They are numbered from one to eight. That is the foundation for the motion.

If it is a motion of privilege and if any privilege of the house has been infringed it would, I think, depend on the significance of these conclusions which are set out from the judgment. If one assumes that all the conclusions are correct and that they may be taken as facts, the question in my mind is what privilege of the house is involved in the conduct of the hon. member for Peel to which these observations in the judgment relate. What privilege of the house would be involved and what is the nature of that privilege? If there is a breach of privilege which could be deduced from these facts, assuming these facts are correct, one would have a basis on which to go. Perhaps I should call on the mover of the motion to speak to this preliminary question.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this motion was moved by me solely as one which deals with a matter of privilege which affects the house itself, and for no other reason. I believe that in the past it has been the custom for a member moving a motion of this kind to make a complete statement giving the reasons for the motion, the background of the motion, the circumstances surrounding the motion and at the end of that statement the motion has been moved. Until the motion is moved, though it is on the order paper, I submit that there is nothing before the house. You have asked me, however—and naturally I am not questioning your right to do so—for advice on this preliminary question dealing with a motion that is not yet before the house.

The motion will be moved by me, as I have said, as a question of privilege. It is a motion to refer to the committee on privileges and elections certain findings or certain reasons for judgment given by the president of the exchequer court, which findings and reasons seem to reflect on the conduct of a member of parliament. It is my submission that the implications of some of the passages in this judgment, of some of the conclusions, are too serious to be ignored by the House of Commons.

Some of these, Mr. Speaker, are included in the motion itself, and it is not necessary for me, at least at this stage, to go into them in detail; but I do submit, Mr. Speaker—and you have had a chance to study the motion—that these do raise questions of propriety, questions of the conduct of a member of parliament, which should be examined by the appropriate committee as a matter of protecting the privileges of the whole house, especially as they are included in a judgment given by the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

I call Your Honour's attention to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, at page 162 under the paragraph headed "Questions Affecting Members Referred to Select Committees". The paragraph reads in part:

A reference to a committee is no doubt the proper procedure in all cases in which there are reasonable doubts as to the facts or the cause that should be pursued, especially when it is necessary to examine precedents or witnesses.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is a proper question of privilege; that it is properly on the order paper; that I should be given the opportunity to move this motion to the effect that the matter should be submitted to a select committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition refers to the conduct of a member of parliament and to the privileges of this house. I would ask him whether he can go further in relating the conduct of the member to the privileges of the house, because it is not obvious how the conduct of the member affects the privileges of the house. What was done was not done in the house, if one accepts the conclusions or the observations in the judgment. What was done was not done in the house or in relation to the business of the house.

I know that the privileges of parliament are not a settled category, and they have not been fully defined. Unless there is some conduct which makes a member unfit to sit as a member of parliament, or unless his conduct relates specifically or directly to the house, its business and its dignity, then I am asking the hon. member, is there a question of privilege involved, assuming that all the facts are established? If so, what is the conduct that infringes the privileges of the house, and what privileges of the house are affected? These are really the two points which bother me.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if I went into that in detail I would be giving the statement which I expect to make when I move this motion, and it would be a very lengthy statement indeed; but the motion itself does indicate that the judgment of the court includes certain statements, makes certain observations, comes to certain conclusions and gives certain reasons which affect the conduct of a member of parliament in a matter of public policy, and a matter which affects the revenue as well. Surely, Mr. Speaker, these conclusions, these findings, which appear to reflect on the conduct of a member of parliament and also on his conduct in relation to a minister of the crown, are such as to warrant an investigation by a committee of parliament.

That is all we are asking for, Mr. Speaker, that this matter should he referred to the appropriate committee so that inquiry can be made into the statements which are included in a judgment of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada, a judgment which does repeat certain statements affecting a member of parliament, certain statements which have been contradicted by another member of parliament who is a minister of the crown, and certain statements which have also been contradicted outside parliament. In view of these statements, in view of these contradictions, and in view of the implied reflection on a member of parliament, it is our submission that the privileges of the house are affected and that the whole matter should be cleared up by an examination through the appropriate committee.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, you have asked for some assistance as to whether or not this motion should be allowed at this stage, whether or not it raises a prima facie question of privilege. I have before me the citation from May to which you referred, and I have no hesitation in saying that on a number of grounds the motion is not in order. I shall deal with the less substantial grounds first.

You yourself directed attention to page 382 of May, and you said it is there laid down that the Speaker has to satisfy himself that the motion makes out a prima facie case of breach of privilege and, second, that it is being raised at the earliest opportunity. I shall deal with the second ground first. I point out to you, sir, that the Leader of the Opposition has fiddled around with this matter for over a week now showing, I suggest, a fear of coming to grips with it. I can understand his reluctance—because, of course, there is here no question of privilege—to do so; but his very conduct arising out of that reluctance has shown that he had plenty of opportunities to raise this matter before had he had the fortitude to come to grips with the matter as he should. He has not done so and on that ground alone it is clear from this tender footed approach, this shrinking violet approach that the hon. gentleman has made, that he is himself abusing the privileges of the house when he now seeks to have this matter raised and given priority and precedence over the other business of the house.

On the question of whether or not there is here a prima facie question of privilege, let me point out to you, Mr. Speaker, in accord with my submission that this is not a privilege motion, that even yet the Leader of the Opposition has not had the courage to come to grips with the issue and take the course which any member must take if he is going to raise a question of privilege of this sort: he has not made a charge against the member concerned. After more than a week, as I say, of fiddling about with the matter, mincing up to it and then backing away from it in a most extraordinary manner, my hon. friend now solemnly tries to have parliament deal with this matter as a question of privilege, but he still lacks the fortitude to do what, as a member of parliament accepting his responsibilities, he must do if he wishes to raise this as a matter of privilege, namely say what charge it is that he founds and brings against the member concerned.

Every motion of this sort that I have examined, where questions of privilege have been raised on the basis of misconduct of members or conduct of members which requires to be investigated by the house, has stated specifically that the member making the motion is credibly informed and believes that he can prove his allegations, and then has specified the facts which it is believed he can prove, and the member makes a charge as to the specific conduct which he says should be investigated by the committee. The Leader of the Opposition still lacks the fortitude to follow that honourable course in this case.

Let me point out to you, sir, what other motions have said. I have here as a model a motion to have a matter referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections in 1891. This is found in the House of Commons Journals, volume 25, 1891, and it is in these words:

Mr. Tarte moved, seconded by Mr. Guay, and the question being proposed, that Israel Tarte, Esquire, the member representing the electoral district of Montmorency in this house, having declared from his seat in the house that he is credibly informed, and that he believes, that he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence that—

Then follows the specific allegation of the matter alleged as misconduct on the part of the member concerned.

In 1894 a motion is recorded in the House of Commons Journals, volume 28, page 155 in which Mr. Bruneau moved, seconded by Mr. McGregor, and the question being proposed:

That Mr. Arthur Aimé Bruneau, member of this house for the electoral district of Richelieu, having stated in his place in the house that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish:

1st. That Arthur Joseph Turcotte, Esquire, a member of this house for the electoral district of Montmorency, and while he was a member of the house, to wit: from the eleventh day of March, 1892, until the first day of February, 1893, was a partner in the firm of Messieurs Turcotte & Provost—

Then it goes on to make specific allegations that he used his position as a member to obtain contracts for that firm. In a motion recorded in the House of Commons Journals, 1910-1911, page 224, Mr. Blondin, member of parliament for the electoral district of Champlain, declared:

—I am credibly informed, and I believe that I can establish by satisfactory evidence:

That in the course of the years 1908, 1909 and 1910, irregularities, abuses, frauds, malversations and robberies have been committed in the shops and stores of the government of Canada—

—at a certain place, and that certain things were illegally and fraudulently taken from this place at the expense of the government of Canada and transported to the house of Mr. Adelard Lanctot, a member of parliament.

In every case, therefore, where a member has really felt that the conduct of one of the other members of the House of Commons should be examined, that member has followed the correct and honourable course of making specific charges so the member concerned will know what it is he has to meet. The member has also referred specifically to, and dealt specifically with, the evidence upon which those charges are based, and that has been done in the motion itself. There is no such honourable course being followed here, Mr. Speaker. All that is happening here is that under the guise of a so-called motion of privilege an attempt is being made to smear one of the members of this house, without alleging in any single instance what is the conduct that is supposed to be unbecoming to the member of parliament.

What are the words used by the Leader of the Opposition when you, Mr. Speaker, gave him an opportunity this morning to do that which he should have done from the outset if he were really serious about this matter? Here are the words he used. He said the judgment, the findings and the reasons, seem to reflect upon a member of this house. I challenge him to say how it does reflect. What specific charges does he make? He says it contains findings too serious to be ignored by the House of Commons. He is not able to mention one single finding he regards as serious.

Because of course there is no finding against a member of the House of Commons. He says it raises matters that question the propriety of the conduct of a member which should be examined. In all these things the hon. member uses the camouflage about raising questions with regard to the conduct of a member that require to be examined, but when it comes down to it and he is given the opportunity, he cannot, he refuses, or he is afraid, to pinpoint any one single specific charge. What is the conduct he is complaining about, Mr. Speaker? My submission is that in the absence of anything specific, this is not a question of privilege.

Now let me refer Your Honour to the most outstanding example of this nature, and that is the case in 1907 when a motion in somewhat similar terms, a similar rather sneaky motion, was made to try to get the conduct of a member brought before the committee on privileges and elections without the mover having the fortitude to state in particular what was the conduct that was complained of. In that case there had been a report of a royal commission which had been set up to study life insurance. The allegation made in that sneaky manner on that occasion arose out of the report of the royal commission, so there is a direct parallel with what is happening here. My hon. friend seeks to hide behind a judgment of the exchequer court. Both cases, then, have arisen by way of reports originating outside of the house, and attempts being made to bring them into the house to smear a member.

In the case in 1907 the royal commission referred in passing to the activities of certain members of parliament, but that royal commission report itself was different from the present judgment with which we are concerned in that it shed very serious doubts on the integrity of certain members of parliament. In particular, they were alleged to have used money from insurance companies of which they were directors to finance their own private undertakings, and to speculate in the stock market.

Now, as I say, a motion was founded upon that report by Mr. Bourassa on March 26, 1907, when he moved:

> That the report of the royal commission on life insurance and the evidence connected therewith have made public various transactions in which members of this house participated—

Then the members were named in the motion. The motion also went on to point out that such transactions had been commented upon by several organs of public opinion in terms reflecting upon the honour, the integrity and the independence of the named gentlemen. It went on to say that references to such transactions had been made in the house during the present session, and then it detailed the occasions upon which references had been made in the house to the members named in the royal commission report. There are a number of specific references to the occasions on which comments had been made on that matter. The motion then went on as follows:

> That the government should therefore ask the house to constitute a special committee to conduct a strict and impartial inquiry as to whether any ministers of the crown or members of parliament have improperly made use of their positions as such for their private gain or have otherwise been guilty of personal misconduct under such circumstances or of such a character as to justify the intervention and censure of this house.

Then we find these words:

> That any charges that may be preferred against any member of the government or of the house should be formulated before that committee, and that members of this house or other persons who have material or data at their disposal with reference thereto should divulge them to that committee.

What was asked on that occasion, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what is being asked on this occasion. Innuendos were raised against members in general terms, but no specific charges were made against those members. The house was asked to authorize a witch hunt before a special committee, and that is what we are being asked to do here, to authorize a witch hunt before a special committee. The House of Commons did not accept that motion, but it was very properly rejected on the grounds that it was an improper one, just as this is an improper one.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier had occasion to make a lengthy statement about the proper principles and the proper bases upon which such inquiries should be asked for and granted. He said this, as reported at page 5458 of Hansard for 1907:

> If there are rumours against me, or against any of my colleagues, it is open to any man to take up these rumours and to bring them forward in the shape of a charge which I can meet—

I ask my hon. friend the Leader of the Oppositon, who has succeeded to the position held by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and who I am sure would like to be worthy of that position, to bear in mind these manful and honest words and to model his own conduct upon that admonition.

> —to which I can oppose my denial or in regard to which I can offer my explanations. But, sir, it is absolutely unprecedented in any British parliament that the House of Commons has ever investigated or has ordered one of its committees to investigate rumours. The House of Commons has never, either in this country or in the mother country, ordered an investigation except upon a charge which the man against whom it is levelled can face and to which he can give an answer.

Later in the course of the same debate Sir Wilfrid said:

> The house has affirmed, and it is also the rule of the house which has come to us from the mother of parliaments, that the conduct or standing of any member of the house cannot be impugned except upon cause being shown and until a member rises in his place in the house and says: I have reason to believe and I can prove such and such a thing against a member.
> Otherwise there is no occasion to go into this general inquisition which is proposed by the hon. member for Labelle. Under such circumstances it seems to me that the course taken by the Speaker is the correct one and we have nothing to do but stand by the ruling of the Chair. If, at a later period, the hon. member for Labelle or anybody else, thinks there is in this house any member who ought not to be a member of it, who has disgraced himself, or whose conduct ought to be investigated, it is open to him to demand such an investigation, but the house, I hope will not depart from the sound traditions which have come to us from England and according to which there could be no inquisition into any man's conduct or standing except on charges made specifically.

Then he went on to say:

> I think the common sense of the house will not allow a departure from what is a well known law of parliament, or from the rules which would be applied in England, if cases of this kind were to arise, and therefore it seems to me that we have only to maintain the traditions and rules of the house and of parliamentary government.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that the proper course for the Leader of the Opposition to follow would have been to make his charges and state the evidence upon which he relies to prove them, and if a motion of that kind were put forward there would be no hesitancy, not an instant's delay, in accepting it and setting up a committee to make inquiries into the specific charges made. But this parliament has always rejected, should reject, and will I hope continue to reject, allowing itself to be used as an instrument of smearing or witch hunting, and going to the formality of setting up a committee and looking into what? Charges? No; innuendos.

We have the allegation that there is something here too serious to be overlooked; yet the hon. member cannot find a single specific charge to base on something which he says contains allegations too serious to be overlooked.

If the motion were in a form such as I have indicated and such as would comply with the principle set out in the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then as I say I am certain there would be not an instant's delay in accepting the motion and setting up the committee. Surely it is not the function of the committee on privileges and elections to find out whether there is something on which a charge can be laid. That is the obligation of the Leader of the Opposition if he believes what he says. It is his obligation to make specific charges, and the proper role of a committee is to examine whether or not complaints so made are justified, not to examine whether there would be a case for a member of the house to make a complaint of breach of privilege out of the study of this judgment or any other documents.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my grounds upon which this motion should be rejected. First, the hon. gentleman has deprived himself of the opportunity to bring this up at the right time; he has brought it up too late. It is a proper and sensible rule that if a man wants to raise a question of breach of privilege he should do it at the earliest possible moment, because such questions should only be raised when the member raising them really believes that they are serious, and a test of his seriousness is whether he raises them at the earliest possible moment. The Leader of the Opposition, as I said, has backed and fiddled and minced around this thing to such an extent that it brings him into conflict with the sensible and sound rule which I suggest was placed there to ensure that if a member wants to raise a matter he must be sufficiently serious about it to raise it at the first possible moment.

Second, the motion is not in proper form to raise a matter of privilege. Let me say here, sir, that this is the most harmful aspect of this motion, because it is a motion which is not and should not be expected to be moved in this house. Yet what has been done? There is a printed motion on the order paper, general innuendos and insinuations are made, and by our rules and in order to preserve the dignity and tradition of parliament the member referred to in the motion has no opportunity to answer. That is the position in which the Leader of the Opposition has deliberately placed a member of this house. I cannot find words strong enough to condemn that course of action, sir.

I think I have said enough on the question of order, Mr. Speaker. If I were to say any more I would be bound to go even further than I have into the substance of the motion. That I do not propose to do because we are discussing here a point of order, and in the second place I submit there is no substance to this motion. There is merely shadow, innuendo and smear of a nature which should not be brought before this house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I propose to follow the example of the Minister of Justice in one respect and in one respect only, and that is to go into the whole question of this motion as he has done. Naturally I had expected that that would be done when I was called on to move the motion after you declared it in order, if you did declare it in order; but in view of what has been said I know you, Mr. Speaker, will give me exactly the same right to deal with this matter that the Minister of Justice took unto himself.

I am not going to say anything about the minister's personal observations. When a minister of the crown in an argument dealing with a point of order starts referring to the fortitude and the courage of a member who is taking the other side, he condemns only himself. This is a matter Mr. Speaker, which I thought could have been discussed without that kind of slurring, personal observation. It is not becoming to any member of the house, especially the Minister of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: It merely shows, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is a little worried about the substance of his case and had to fall back on that kind of talk.

The minister has talked about the Leader of the Opposition fiddling around with this motion. I would point out to the Minister of Justice that the judgment of the court on which this motion is based was tabled in this house on Monday last, and this motion was submitted to you, Mr. Speaker, on Monday last. If a motion in this form had been placed on the order paper, or if we had requested that it be placed on the order paper before the judgment had been tabled, the Minister of Justice would have been the first to say that it was out of order because it was referring to a judgment which had not been tabled in this house. And why was it not tabled earlier, Mr. Speaker? Ask the Prime Minister. We asked the Prime Minister to table this document on the first occasion the matter was brought up in the house, but the Prime Minister said, "If you want it tabled, table it yourself." The Prime Minister said, "Table it yourself."

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend had it.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not before the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, since when has it become the function of the opposition or the right of the opposition to table documents in this house? Then the Prime Minister said, "I see no reason why it should not be tabled." That was a week or so ago, but even then he did not bother to table it. Then when it was brought up again the Prime Minister said, "Well, I have a copy, but it is all marked up and I cannot table it." Finally, when was it tabled? On Monday last, and we put this motion on the order paper on Monday last. Who then was fiddling around with the motion? The Prime Minister will no doubt deal later with his obvious reluctance to table this document which would make possible this kind of motion.

This motion, then, Mr. Speaker, was put on the order paper as dealing with a question of privilege. That of course was not required under our rules. It would have been possible under our rules for me to have risen at any time once this document had been tabled and raise this matter on a question of privilege without any notice at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on every previous occasion when a matter of this kind was brought up in the House of Commons affecting a member of the house, notice was not given; the question of privilege was raised by a member of the house, and his motion was moved without notice. We put it on the order paper so that members of the house would have time to examine it and go into the question. As a matter of courtesy to the house we gave 48 hours' notice, and then the Minister of Justice said we were fiddling around. It was perhaps the kind of courtesy from the opposition that the minister does not understand, because he rarely gave it to us when he was over on this side of he house.

Well, this is a perfectly proper motion, and it is placed on the order paper in accord with a good many precedents, some of which I will proceed to deal with. As the Minister of Justice has brought up one or two to support his case, I will be glad to refer to one or two of those he has mentioned as well. I suggest that the action we have taken on this side was required once the exchequer court judgment was made public and that judgment was tabled in this house. We have now taken action in a form in which it could not have been taken before that judgment was tabled.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not right.

Mr. Pearson: That does not mean that this matter could not have been raised in the House of Commons by those concerned, and I suggest that the first person who had an obligation to raise this matter in the House of Commons was the hon. member for Peel. He owed it to the house, once this judgment was made public involving him and making references to him—references which were contradicted by a colleague in the house, the Minister of Transport—to make a statement.

Once that was done, perhaps it would have been a good thing, and perhaps it would have avoided a motion of this kind if the hon. member himself had made a statement to the House of Commons. He chose not to do so, though there were occasions last week when that could have been done. Last week, too, there was a discussion of this matter on the estimates of the Department of Transport which would also have given him the opportunity to make a statement. But the hon. member, as was his right, chose to remain silent with respect to this matter and with respect to statements made by the president of one of the highest courts in this land.

Then, I suggest, it was the duty of the Prime Minister, as leader of the house, to make a statement on this matter.

Mr. Fulton: What are your charges?

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister has often talked about the desirability of maintaining the rights and privileges and dignity of parliament. Why, then, did not the right hon. gentleman, when this judgment was made public and when there was included in this judgment certain statements which certainly reflected on a member of this house, make a statement on this matter? Sir Winston Churchill did so in 1940 in a situation similar to this, which I will go into later.

Mr. Fulton: Where are the charges?

Mr. Pearson: If the Minister of Justice would remain silent, as I remained silent when he talked about me, I will give him all the details later. This will take a good deal of time, so the hon. gentleman might as well contain himself in patience. If he cannot enjoy it he can at least relax.

The Prime Minister chose not to take this course. He chose to place the onus of raising this matter of requesting an inquiry on the opposition. He said, make a charge. The Minister of Justice has repeated that this morning. Then the Prime Minister said, "If your charge does not stand up, you can be charged with a breach of privilege". This, I suggest, was intimidating nonsense. The Minister of Justice said the same thing this morning; make the charge. I will come to that a little later. I propose now to read to the Prime Minister the words of Sir John A. Macdonald in 1877 when a similar suggestion was made to him as leader of the opposition at that time. Asking why he should take the responsibility of asking for an inquiry, this is what he said at that time as reported in Hansard of that date.

> Why had the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) called upon the opposition to move this resolution? Why should he think it the duty of the minority to call the attention of this house to the matter, and to protect the rights of the people? Why should it be supposed that it rested peculiarly upon the weaker half of parliament to vindicate the independence and the rights of parliament?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Leader of the Opposition say what was the nature of the allegation at that time?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to send that information over to the Prime Minister in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, you have not got it?

An hon. Member: Yes, he has.

Mr. Pearson: I have no apology to make for the course we are taking in this matter, and in particular I have no apology to make to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Might I ask the Leader of the Opposition a simple question? Would he give us the page reference in Hansard for the quotation he has just read?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. It is Hansard for April 9, 1877, page 1312. Perhaps the minister would like to send out for the volume.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We shall check it to make sure.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: We reject the insinuations and the accusations of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition has suggested he will be some time yet, and we have run across another rule of the house which requires questions marked with an asterisk to be taken up within one hour of opening unless the house agrees to deferring those questions until this matter has been disposed of. Does the house so agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: I reject the accusations and insinuations that we had some nefarious intention in bringing to the attention of the house something which the Prime Minister himself should have brought to the attention of the house, since this concerns a judgment of a court of this land.

Last week we discharged to the best of our ability our duty of trying to get information on this matter while the estimates of the Department of Transport were before the committee of the whole. All we got in return for our pains on that occasion—and if we had got the right kind of information and the proper statements perhaps this motion would not have been necessary—was a political harangue from the Minister of Transport, and a suggestion on his part that our motives were unworthy; that we were in some way—and these are his words, not mine—investigating kickbacks—an idea, and a phrase, which had never appeared on this side of the house from the beginning to the end of our discussion on this matter. We heard nothing, of course, from the hon. member for Peel.

What we are doing in this motion now, which is, I submit, a perfectly proper one and perfectly in order, is this. We are asking for an inquiry into certain statements which were made in court, certain statements which reflect, or appear to reflect, on a member of this house. I suggest that standards of conduct are involved in these statements which appear in this judgment, and for the benefit of the Minister of Justice I will document these statements in a few moments. Furthermore these statements, as I have already said, involve contradictions between the words of a member of the house and the words of a minister of the crown, as I will also show later.

Therefore is this not a matter which should be looked into by a committee of this house? Is there something wrong in suggesting that a committee should look into these statements? Our feelings in this matter are not unlike those of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who, speaking on behalf of his group on June 11 said, and perhaps he will permit me to quote him:

> We in this group think it is most unfair for this issue to be left in the air. It is most unfair to the hon. member concerned, and to the house.

That is from Hansard at page 4589. Then the hon. member went on to say, on the following page:

> But I think in fairness to him the whole matter should be cleared up, and on that account this group would support the request of the official opposition that a committee be appointed to inquire into the whole thing to settle it once and for all.

That is what we are suggesting in this motion. Some hon. members might ask why we do not in our motion request that the entire document, the full judgment, be sent to a committee. That, I think, would be improper because it would leave a suggestion that the legislature is examining and reporting on a court judgment. In that sense it would no doubt be exceeding its powers; but the conclusions in this judgment and the reasons for the judgment expressed in this document affecting the actions of a member of parliament are something else again, and quite proper for examination by a committee of the house.

I want to deal with some of the procedural matters raised in opposition to this motion by the Minister of Justice once he got around to that part of his statement. I shall deal first with how the House of Commons has acted in the past in providing for an examination in committee of the conduct of a member, and second with the reasons for judgment in this exchequer court judgment I shall specify, because I was asked to do so by the Minister of Justice among others, the particular matters which give rise to questions relating to the propriety of the actions of the hon. member for Peel.

If I spend some time on the procedural aspects of this motion I do so not only because of the importance of the question in itself but also because of the wholly unjustified conclusions drawn by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Justice this morning from past actions taken in cases of this kind by the House of Commons. We certainly do not intend to let these conclusions remain on the record unchallenged and uncorrected, and perhaps in correcting them it may assist you, Mr. Speaker, in the decision you will come to as to whether or not this motion is in order.

The Prime Minister made a number of comments in this house the other day in connection with procedure in such cases, and the Minister of Justice made some comments this morning. The Prime Minister particularly made some comments with regard to the circumstances under which a committee of this kind is set up, and the Minister of Justice followed him in this respect this morning.

I asked the Prime Minister a question on this point, and it will be found at page 4410 of Hansard for Monday, June 8. This was the question:

> I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not agree from a study of the judgment—and I had not an opportunity of making that study last Friday—that there are contradictions between statements in this judgment about a member of parliament and statements made outside the house on the same matter by the same hon. member, contradictions which in fairness to all concerned should be cleared up?

The Prime Minister replied to that statement as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I know of no contradictions such as are suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

Perhaps he will know about them after I finish my talk this morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not rise in order to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but this discussion is far afield from the point you raised as to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —whether or not this is a proper question of privilege and whether the motion is in order. I have no objection to a general discussion if the motion is held to be in order, but Your Honour did ask that the discussion be confined to certain particulars; namely, is there a question of privilege, and what, if anything, is comprised within this motion within the purview of privilege? What the Leader of the Opposition is now doing is proceeding to make an argument and stating that when he gets through—having cluttered up the record with all these observations—then you will make the ruling, thereby defeating the very point that Your Honour must have had in mind when the question was raised as to whether or not discussion at this time on this motion is within the rules.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, apart from the fact that a point of order cannot be raised even by the Prime Minister on a point of order, which is what we are discussing, I call to your attention that if I am straying afield it is because the Minister of Justice set the example in that regard, and strayed so far afield that he found it necessary to call to the attention of the house some of my personal qualifications for introducing this motion at all. Then after the Minister of Justice made that kind of speech, and at a point when I am dealing with the precedents in this matter, the Prime Minister gets up and tries to halt the debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In answer to that may I say, Mr. Speaker, that we would be very happy to hear what the hon. gentleman has to say but the point of order is that the hon. gentleman is out of order and is endeavouring—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Leader of the Opposition has yielded the floor to the Prime Minister I will hear what the Prime Minister has to say.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will now continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood that the Leader of the Opposition had yielded the floor to give the Prime Minister an opportunity to reply.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: If not, I will give the floor to the Leader of the Opposition. I think the observation is correct that we are discussing a point of order and it cannot be superseded by another point of order. I believe that what was said about the course of this discussion is correct. I allowed some latitude because of the remarks that had been made by the Minister of Justice which were not strictly on the point of order. I think if we are to secure the advantage of this discussion at all, it is to prevent the time of the house being taken in long debate, so we should come to the conclusion as rapidly as we can. I do want the Leader of the Opposition to give me all the precedents he can to be specific about the conduct which he says amounts to a breach of priviledge, accepting the facts set out in the judgment.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Justice challenged me to produce precedents which would support this motion, he having produced some on his side. He also challenged me in no uncertain terms—in fact he reflected upon my courage because I had not done so previously—to produce the details in the judgment which reflect on the conduct of a member of the house, and that is what I am going to do.

Some hon. Members: State your charges.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the house kindly let the hon. member who has the floor proceed.

Mr. Pearson: I wish now to return to the Prime Minister's statements, which have a bearing on the nature of this motion and which certainly have a bearing on what the Minister of Justice said in regard to the necessity of introducing a charge in a matter of this kind. That is what I want to deal with now, because as the Minister of Justice said it is a very important aspect of this whole situation both procedurally and in substance.

I asked the Prime Minister a question on this point, concerning the circumstances in which a committee should be set up to inquire into a matter of this kind. My question was asked on June 8 and although I believe I have already placed this on the record I should like to repeat it:

> I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not agree from a study of the judgment—and I had not an opportunity of making that study last Friday—that there are contradictions between statements in this judgment about a member of parliament and statements made outside the house on the same matter by the same hon. member, contradictions which in fairness to all concerned should be cleared up?

The Prime Minister replied, as I stated a moment ago, that he knew of no contradictions such as I suggested. Then he went on to say something that has a bearing on the nature of this motion and the question as to whether or not it is in order. The Prime Minister said:

> I may say a committee is not set up for the purpose of resolving contradictions. The circumstances under which a committee is set up are very clearly shown to be based upon a charge or charges made by a member of this house.

This assertion was repeated this morning by the Minister of Justice. The Prime Minister quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and I think the Minister of Justice repeated the quotation this morning with a few observations of his own on the desirability of my following in the footsteps of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which of course had very little to do with this motion. Later the Prime Minister quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the effect that:

> —there could be no inquisition into any man's conduct or standing except on charges made specifically.

Again, on the following day, a question was asked by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) which is reported at page 4457 of Hansard. The question was:

> I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he will provide an opportunity for a parliamentary examination in order to elicit the facts and clear up contradictions.

The Prime Minister again returned to the theory he had advanced the previous day, and I quote now from page 4457 of Hansard, where he said:

> The committees are set up in respect of matters affecting the privileges of parliament. If the hon. gentleman in the ordinary course desires such an investigation then he will make the necessary charge, and when the charge is made action will be taken in accordance with the principles that at all times—

I repeat these words:

—that at all times have been applicable to parliamentary procedure.

In support of his contention the Prime Minister also made this statement, and I quote again from page 4410 of Hansard:

I think I should refer to the authorities so the record will be complete in this regard. I say, first, that on the basis of the experience of the past and of the traditions of this house, all the cases referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections since 1867—

And I repeat that:

—all the cases referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections since 1867 had to do with alleged improper conduct whereby a member allegedly had used his public position in order to further his private interest. Those cases go back to 1877.

The Prime Minister then proceeded to put on the record in detail information in respect of the following cases; the case of Mr. Speaker Anglin in 1877; the case of Mr. Rykert in 1890; of Mr. McGreevy in 1891, and of Mr. Foster in 1915. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have looked up the precedents, including these four cases, and they are the only ones I will deal with at this time. If the Prime Minister had made the same kind of study he would have found that in only one of the four cases was a charge or charges embodied in the motion. Therefore the Prime Minister's contention that a charge is required, the statement of the Minister of Justice that a charge must be embodied in the motion, and the Prime Minister's contention that there has to be an allegation of improper conduct whereby a member has used his public position in order to further his private interest, has no foundation whatever.

Mr. Speaker, for your information in case you have not had the opportunity to look up these cases, and for the information of the Prime Minister who obviously did not have the opportunity to look at them, we can prove, I think without any possibility of doubt, as I have said, that in only one of the four cases cited by the Prime Minister was a charge or charges incorporated in the motion referring the matter to the committee on privileges and elections. I call this to the attention of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: I have read them.

Mr. Pearson: This is rather flimsy evidence for the sweeping claim of the Prime Minister that "the circumstances under which a committee is set up are very clearly shown to be based upon a charge or charges made by a member of this house".

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member misread the motion.

Mr. Pearson: And that such a course "is in accordance with the principles that at all times have been established as to parliamentary procedure".

Mr. Fulton: The motion shows clearly that there was a personal charge.

Mr. Pearson: I go on. I will proceed to deal with the first case, that of Mr. Speaker Anglin. The motion will be found in the Journals of the house—and the Journals of the house are the authoritative record in these matters—for April 9, 1877; and for the benefit of the Minister of Finance it is on page 236, volume II.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you.

Mr. Pearson: The motion reads as follows:

On motion of Mr. Casey, seconded by Mr. McDougall,

Resolved, that the attention of this house having been called to the reports, returns and vouchers laid upon the table, touching the payment of public moneys to the Hon. T. W. Anglin, member for the electoral district of Gloucester, for printing and stationery for the Post Office Department, the said papers be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections, and they be directed to enquire into facts, to search for precedents, and to report the result of their enquiries.

Mr. Pickersgill: No charge whatever.

Mr. Pearson: Where is the charge there? The papers were laid on the table and were referred by the House of Commons to the standing committee, and the standing committee was asked to report back its findings on the papers.

Mr. Speaker: To assist the Leader of the Opposition, may I say I have read all four cases to which he is about to refer and I am informed of them.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to put them on the record just the same in view of what has been said about them by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: I was not trying to direct the hon. member as to how he should deal with them.

Mr. Pearson: I am sure it was presumptuous on my part to think perhaps I could enlighten you by reading these cases, but perhaps it is not presumptuous to assume I may be able to enlighten the Minister of Justice. The second case was that of Mr. Rykert, in 1890. I think he was the member for Dundas at that time. Sir Richard Cartwright proposed a motion which concluded as follows:

That the conduct of the said John C. Rykert in the premises—

There is a long list of charges in this one.

—is and has been discreditable, corrupt and scandalous.

Well, these are certainly charges. No one will deny that these are specific charges; but the house, Mr. Speaker, as you know, refused to accept the motion in that form with these charges, and the house finally sent the case of Mr. Rykert to a committee on the basis of an amended motion from which all specific charges had been removed. The final motion simply sent certain papers to the committee on privileges and elections. The final motion, for the benefit of the Minister of Finance, will be found in the Journals of 1890, volume XXIV, page 198. The final motion merely said this:

That the said papers be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections.

Was that witch hunting? Was the previous case witch hunting? Do these cases justify the Prime Minister's statement that in all cases since 1867 charges had to be included in a motion of this kind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: They do.

Mr. Pearson: The next case was that of Mr. McGreevy in 1891. There is no doubt that charges were included in this motion, and this is the very case to which Sir Wilfrid Laurier referred in the references made by the Prime Minister. There is no question about that one, and that of the four cases it did include charges; but I would now conclude my survey of the cases cited by the Prime Minister by reference to the last case he cited and it gets a little closer to our own time. It is the case of Mr. Foster in 1915.

This case will take me a little longer to recite than the previous one, Mr. Speaker, because it is more recent and because this all occurred eight years after Sir Wilfrid's statement on which the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister relied, and finally because it is the most recent precedent mentioned by the Prime Minister. I think this particular case will serve to make a complete and permanent shambles of the contention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that the house has taken action only on the basis of charges.

The sequence of events in this case is shown in the Journals of the house to be as follows. Mr. Maclean, a member I think of the opposition at that time and the member for Halifax, moved for correspondence between the auditor general and the militia department, which was produced as sessional paper 122 about two weeks later, then ordered printed on a motion of Mr. Borden a week later. He was the prime minister at that time, and he adopted a different attitude in respect of this matter than the Prime Minister adopts today in respect of the situation before us. Mr. Borden ordered that the correspondence be printed as a sessional paper, and a week later it was sent to the committee on public accounts on the motion of Mr. Maclean.

I should like to put that motion on record. It is found in the Journals of the house for March 12, 1915, page 134. Here is the motion:

On motion of Mr. Maclean, seconded by Mr. Carvell, ordered, that sessional papers numbered 122 of the present session of parliament, and all other papers in relation thereto, being copies of correspondence between the auditor general and the Department of Militia and other departments of government, laid upon the table of the house, in respect to expenditures under the War Appropriations Act, be referred to the select standing committee on public accounts.

The prime minister, Mr. Borden, who spoke in the very short debate which took place before the order was accepted—and it was accepted—fully realized the implications of the passing of this order because at that time he said, as found at page 945 of Hansard for 1915:

I am also the more inclined to accede to the motion of the hon. member for Halifax for the reason that a member of this house, the hon. member for Carleton, Ont., came to me some time ago and asked that matters in this correspondence that have been commented upon especially in the press of this country as touching his own position in the house should be fully investigated at the earliest possible moment.

That was the attitude taken by the member affected at that time, and that was the attitude taken by the prime minister at that time in regard to a motion to submit this correspondence to a committee of the house. The member for Carleton of that day, Mr. Garland, fully realized that passing this motion would involve an inquiry into his actions. He was under no illusions about that, but he asked for it just the same. Mr. Garland said, and I quote from page 947 of Hansard for March 12, 1915:

First of all, since I have become a member of parliament, I have not been in any way whatever interested in contracts with the dominion government, and have never been and am not now, directly or indirectly, by understanding, secret or otherwise, or in any other way whatever, interested in the dealings which Mr. Powell had with the militia department, or with any department.

If any further evidence is required that the house in that motion, and it has much similarity to the motion before the house today—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the similarity?

Mr. Pearson: That certain papers were being referred to a committee of the House of Commons which included information dealing with a member of parliament. The circumstances are well known to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no personal wrongdoing as in the case cited by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pearson: If any further evidence is required that the house in that motion realized that it was dealing with its privileges and with the actions of two of its members, I have only to mention that unless the house had realized that it was dealing with privilege it could not have entertained the motion of a private member to refer correspondence to a standing committee of the house, because that is the only kind of motion that a private member has the right to move.

From the inquiry launched in the manner I have described came a report of the public accounts committee to the house on April 15, and from it certain parliamentary consequences ensued. At that time Sir Robert Borden made, I think, a courageous statement in the debate. He dealt very carefully with both Mr. Garland and Mr. Foster, and he expressed the strongest disapproval of their actions. But I want to draw particular attention to one sentence that Mr. Borden used in reference to Mr. Foster. As found at page 2614 of Hansard for April 15, 1915 he said:

> So far as Mr. Foster's connection with the matter is concerned, it should be taken into consideration that he is a very young man, altogether inexperienced in business, and that he is not shown to have profited in any way by the transaction.

"He is not shown to have profited in any way by the transaction", said Sir Robert. Perhaps that statement may cause the Prime Minister to revise his claim made on June 8 that he could find no case in which any such submission to a committee was ever provided for except where it had been alleged that there was on the part of the hon. member improper conduct resulting in his personal gain.

There is one other case, Mr. Speaker, which I want to bring to your attention. Perhaps you have not had an opportunity to study it. It is a United Kingdom case, and it is even closer to the present situation. It is the case of Sir Robert Boothby in the British House of Commons in 1940 and the action taken by the prime minister, Sir Winston Churchill, and the House of Commons in regard to this matter. There was a motion in the British house to refer the conduct of Sir Robert Boothby to a select committee. There was no charge levelled in that motion. The prime minister of the United Kingdom at that time reached a decision himself to refer the matter to a select committee because he thought the circumstances justified an inquiry of that kind. These grounds, said Sir Winston Churchill, these circumstances seemed to raise the question of whether Sir Robert Boothby's action had been in accordance with the usages of parliament or the standards it is entitled to expect of its members, just as we say in connection with this motion that the findings of a court raise certain questions which should be examined as they affect the conduct of a member of parliament and the propriety of his conduct.

Mr. Churchill: Will you give us the reference, please?

Mr. Pearson: The reference to the United Kingdom Hansard is October 17, 1940, page 830. It is a very well known case. At that time Sir Winston Churchill, then Mr. Winston Churchill, felt that the circumstances justified submitting to a committee, without, as he said, prejudicing the issue in any way, this particular situation which concerned a member of parliament who was a member also of his own ministry. He was not in the cabinet but he was in the ministry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What were the facts?

Mr. Pickersgill: The facts were to be found by the committee.

Mr. Pearson: I will read the motion. Mr. Churchill's motion may be found in the British Hansard for the date and on the page I have given. It reads as follows:

> That a select committee be appointed to investigate the conduct and activities of Mr. Boothby in connection with the payment out of assets in this country of claims against the government of and institutions in the Republic of Czechoslovakia: to report generally on these matters and in particular to consider and report whether the conduct of the hon. member was contrary to the usage or derogatory to the dignity of the house or inconsistent with the standards which parliament is entitled to expect from its members.

The prime minister and the house made no charge in this motion. They asked that the circumstances surrounding these transactions, claims against the government of and institutions in the Republic of Czechoslovakia and Mr. Boothby's relationship to them, should be investigated by a committee without prejudicing the issue, as the prime minister said at that time. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is a very close relationship indeed between that situation and the one we are concerned with in this motion.

Let me conclude by discussing this particular situation in the terms which the Minister of Justice challenged me to do a few moments ago when he said that I did not have—I forget the word—

Some hon. Members: Fortitude.

Mr. Pearson: —the fortitude to bring forward specific statements in specific cases from this judgment on which to base our motion.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, no.

Mr. Pearson: I will go into that now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Your charges.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: There cannot be a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: You are out of order.

Mr. Fulton: On a question of privilege, I did not say what the hon. gentleman alleges. What I said was that he did not have the courage, the fortitude, to bring forward specific allegations and base charges on them specifying what improper conduct he is complaining of.

Mr. Pearson: Exactly; well, Mr. Speaker, I have been spending about half an hour showing the Minister of Justice and other members of the house that contrary to what he has said, motions of this kind do not require specific charges. There are a great many cases in which specific charges are not made for many reasons. I have just cited one in the British House of Commons under the leadership of Sir Winston Churchill against a member of his own ministry which did not include charges. Does the Minister of Justice suggest that Sir Winston Churchill was lacking in fortitude in taking the course he took?

Mr. Fulton: My reference was to you, not to Sir Winston Churchill.

Mr. Pearson: No doubt if the Minister of Justice had been in the British House of Commons he might have made that charge, because he certainly has verbal fortitude.

In this particular matter we are dealing with a case which in one respect at least is unique and different from all these cases which I have cited and many others which could have been cited. We have laid the foundation for our motion upon grounds to be found in a document issued over the signature of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada, a document which was finally tabled by the Prime Minister last Monday, the day we submitted our motion. The responsibility for statements in this document rests upon the president of the exchequer court.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not take the responsibility?

Mr. Pearson: Of course it rests on the president of the exchequer court. These are findings of the exchequer court which we are entitled to take into consideration in this House of Commons when they refer to a member of parliament. Does the Minister of Finance deny that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask a question of the Leader of the Opposition? Is the Leader of the Opposition going to take any personal responsibility, as a member of this house, for what he is about to do?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed I do, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the opposition I take responsibility for submitting this motion to the house, and no member of the government will take any responsibility for making any inquiry into this matter. What responsibility does the Prime Minister take? He says, washing his hands of the whole thing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition is getting to the point now in which I am particularly interested, that is his discussion of the statements in the judgment as they relate to the privileges of the house.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, but I felt it necessary to answer the Minister of Finance who found it necessary to interrupt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These interruptions should not be permitted.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question by the Minister of Finance I was saying that I take responsibility by putting my name to the motion; but no member of the government including the Prime Minister, is willing to take any responsibility for making any inquiry into this matter. The Prime Minister has gone so far as to say that there is nothing into which to inquire. The Prime Minister went even further. He said there were no contradictions even into which to inquire.

This is the point to which I am coming now, and I know you will be interested in listening to what I have to say. I should like to assist you in this matter by mentioning certain specific grounds which in our opinion justify a committee of inquiry. I shall mention certain questions arising out of these findings of the exchequer court which we think should be answered or to which a committee of this house should try to find the answers. All these questions, Mr. Speaker, are mentioned by me only because they are included or are implicit in the judgment of the exchequer court. This is the basis upon which we bring them before the House of Commons, because they have appeared before the public.

The first question is, is it proper for a member of parliament to bring pressure upon a government department to appoint an independent appraiser to value property, some of which has already been valued approximately six times according to the Minister of Transport, and with which valuations the Department of Transport, according to the evidence before the courts, was satisfied? Another question arising out of this judgment is, is that course and its acceptance by the minister unfair to those 180 property owners who had already settled and who had no opportunity of participating in the new and upward valuation? Also is it proper for a member of parliament to seek to bind the crown by agreement in advance to accept a valuation? Is that not a question which affects the privileges of parliament?

The hon. member for Peel, Mr. Speaker, testified under oath that agreements had been reached to accept the valuation of an independent appraiser, Mr. Clare. Being satisfied in his own mind that the crown had been successfully bound in advance to accept the valuation, was it then proper for the member to secure the appointment as such independent appraiser one with a special relationship to the member, such as Mr. Clare admittedly had? The hon. member for Peel, Mr. Speaker, stated under oath that the minister had accepted his proposal that the crown be bound to accept the Clare valuation. The minister told us he had made no such agreement. There is one contradiction to which I call the attention of the Prime Minister. This committee to which we suggest this matter should be sent is justified in our view, if only to clear up this grave contradiction and to set out the facts.

The word "agreement" is a matter for further clarification. Relying on the oath of the hon. member for Peel, are we not entitled to find out whether the acceptance of a proposal means, in the mind of the Minister of Transport, something entirely different from making an agreement? Is this contradiction only a matter of semantics? If it is only a matter of semantics, then what is the responsibility of the minister in this matter? If, as the Minister of Transport states, no such proposal was accepted in any form, was the hon. member for Peel acting properly in representing to his constituents and later to the court that his proposal had been accepted? These are questions which surely should be cleared up.

Here is another question arising out of a statement in the judgment of the court at page 9:

> On December 9, 1957, Mr. Pallett sent Mr. Clare's valuation reports to the minister's executive assistant and they were then placed before the minister.

Is this regular procedure? Is it proper for a member of parliament to receive reports of this kind from an independent valuator? Did Mr. Clare review his reports in detail with the hon. member before later transmitting them, not to a departmental officer but to the minister's executive assistant, who is a political officer?

Now, turning to page 16 of the judgment, at the bottom of that page there is this statement by the then presiding judge:

> I have no hesitation in rejecting Mr. Clare's valuation. I do not believe he was a free and independent appraiser.

Then the president of the court proceeded to give reasons for this conclusion. This surely is where parliamentary privilege enters again. These are the reasons given by the president of the court for the statement I have just quoted. He said:

> He admitted—

That is, Mr. Clare.

> —that Mr. Pallett, who had recommended his appointment, said that he wanted a good price and on his cross-examination, after long hesitation, he admitted that Mr. Pallett had instructed him to put as generous a valuation as possible on the properties and he told Mr. A. A. Speer, the Department of Transport's district land agent, that it was difficult for him to carry out his instructions.

Later in this house, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport said that the hon. member for Peel was not interested in securing any more than fair and equitable treatment for his constituents. Well, there is a contradiction between this statement and also the statement the member himself made outside the house, and this finding of the court.

The next question, Mr. Speaker, is at the heart of the matter. Were any instructions given by the member for Peel the cause of the evaluator losing his freedom and independence; because the president of the court said he could not consider him as a free and independent appraiser? Did those instructions influence the evaluator in reaching land values which were erroneous and excessive? Were they the cause of his reaching property values that were out of line with the other property values and settlements in Malton? Were they the cause of Mr. Clare reaching valuations which, if accepted, as the hon. member for Peel expected them to be accepted because he felt an agreement had been made that they should be accepted, would have placed an extra burden on the treasury?

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons is entitled to inquire into these questions which concern the propriety of the conduct of one of its members and which are raised in a judgment of the Exchequer Court of Canada? We think the government should have asked for this inquiry days ago. All we on this side of the house are asking for is that there should be an inquiry into these observations and conclusions in the judgment of the exchequer court which affect a member of parliament, so this whole question can be cleared up and a report made by that committee to the House of Commons. That is all we are asking for in the motion, and I suggest we are entitled, Mr. Speaker, to ask for this inquiry and to make this motion which I respectfully submit to you is quite in order.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition one further question about the last part of his submission that privileges of the house are involved. First of all, is he founding his motion now on matters extraneous to the judgment? The hon. member has referred to statements made outside, and it may have a bearing on the case; or is he asking the committee to deal solely with the judgment?

Mr. Pearson: We are founding our motion on the statements made in the judgment of the exchequer court, and on any comments made on those statements both in the House of Commons and outside the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I had not realized that, and of course that would have a bearing. I had understood the hon. member to say at first that he was basing his motion upon what appeared in the judgment. The other question I wish to ask the Leader of the Opposition is this. Assuming that the observations of the learned judge are substantiated on an inquiry, then what specific misconduct does the hon. member say is involved which affects the house?

Mr. Pearson: On that point, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be quite improper for me to attempt to answer such a question now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I have put this question in the form of a motion and called attention to certain statements made in the judgment. I suggest that it is the responsibility of the committee of this house on privileges and elections to go into this matter and decide whether any misconduct has been committed, and if so what it was. I submit that it is not my responsibility in moving this motion to answer that question at this time.

Mr. Churchill: It is brinkmanship, that is all.

Mr. Speaker: I will not pursue the matter further, but—

Mr. Pearson: If I may be permitted, may I ask, when Your Honour has considered it, whether it is proper for me to answer this question in the house at this time?

Mr. Speaker: The reason I asked for the advice of the house—and I have probably taken the wrong course, because we have had the debate which I thought might have been out of order—was to be advised if the select committee made the findings which are suggested, would any question of privilege of the house be involved as a result? If that were not the case then I would not consider the motion one of privilege.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I must intervene to say that I have suggested no findings that a committee might make, of any kind. I suggested certain questions which the committee could look into to find the answers, but surely they will decide what report to make.

Mr. Speaker: Let me put it more specifically. I am really trying to shorten the matter and dispose of it. Assuming that there was no discrepancy in the evidence as stated, what privilege of the house is involved? Of course if a member were convicted of perjury that might be a matter of privilege of the house; but I take it there is nothing in the judgment to suggest anything other than a conflict in testimony.

Then there is the question of the valuator. Does the appointment of the valuator raise a responsibility of the department or of the member? This motion is phrased as a question of privilege relating to the conduct of the member for Peel.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. The Leader of the Opposition has attacked my accuracy and called into question the statements I have made with regard to the motions which have previously been made when a matter such as this has been referred to a committee. It is my understanding that a member clearing up inaccuracies is bound to do so at once. I understand that other members wish to speak, and I just wish to rise at this point merely to say that I regard it as necessary, and I believe I have the right before this discussion closes, to set the record straight and place on the record the motions as they appear in the Journals, and correct the inaccuracies of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must say that, as everyone knows, I am a sort of plain and simple person, and I lay no claim to be a student of the niceties and technicalities of law or parliamentary law and procedure. If I have a problem in life, Mr. Speaker, I usually try to approach it from a common sense point of view.

However, I have listened very carefully to the debate this morning, in particular to the case made by the Leader of the Opposition, and I think he has made a very good case in support of his claim that his motion is in order. I do not pretend to be an expert in that respect, Mr. Speaker, but after listening to both sides of this argument today and on previous days, I say—and I speak for this group on this occasion—that regardless of the technicalities of parliamentary procedure in our opinion the Leader of the Opposition is on the soundest moral grounds in asking for a parliamentary inquiry into this matter.

I listened with particular interest, Mr. Speaker, to the statements made by the Minister of Justice. I always listen with interest to any statement or speech the minister may make, but I thought today that his argument was not quite on the high level it usually is.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. member for Kootenay West was involved in the former argument which strayed off the point of order, but I would appreciate it if the hon. member would speak to the point of order so this matter does not extend into an indefinite debate. The point of order was whether there is a question of the privilege of this house before us, and, if so, what does that involve.

Mr. Herridge: I bow to your ruling, but Your Honour does on this occasion fence me in more than some of the other speakers. I have suffered that experience in the past. But I do wish to say, dealing with the argument put forward by the Minister of Justice, that I was a bit shocked to hear him refer on one occasion to a statement from judgment of the exchequer court as "rumour".

Mr. Fulton: I said no such thing.

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. Herridge: Such a statement, with reference to a judgment coming from the Queen's bench, would tend to undermine the prestige of the courts of this country.

Mr. Fulton: On a question of privilege, the hon. gentleman has of course misstated what I said. I said no such thing. The rumour to which I was referring was the rumour raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Herridge: We can read the record tomorrow and see who is correct. I want to say this on behalf of this group. This group believes that in fairness to the people of Canada who are taking an increasing interest in this case—and this is evidenced by the correspondence we are receiving, and the correspondence coming from the neighbourhood concerned—in fairness to the minister, and in fairness to the hon. member whom we have particularly mentioned, and in order to remove the miasma of suspicion, bewilderment and dissatisfaction, and to establish the truth, the Prime Minister should agree to the referring of this question to a committee as the Leader of the Opposition suggests.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am going to direct my attention particularly to the question of privilege, and to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition with respect to other occasions in the House of Commons when such motions have been made.

The hon. gentleman referred to the four motions to which I made earlier reference, and by a play on words endeavoured to lead the house to understand that no charge had been made as a preliminary to the motion in question. In every case, and I reiterate that, there had been charges made of wrongdoing or personal aggrandisement or actions which involved moral turpitude in a financial way, and in every case which was cited, from the beginning to the end, the Leader of the Opposition endeavoured to delude the House of Commons into believing that there had in fact been no charges made in the various cases.

He ended up by dealing with the Boothby case in the United Kingdom. That was the case of a minister of the crown—and I speak now from recollection—who allegedly had engaged in certain transactions through his company in a manner which was believed to be derogatory to the privileges and rights of members of parliament. The prime minister of that day, Mr. Winston Churchill, believing on the face of the allegations made that there was such a degree of wrongdoing as to be incompatible with the position of a member of parliament, took the course he did. Every case to which I referred, and I repeat every case which has ever taken place in Canada when there has been a submission to a committee, has followed charges and allegations made in this house.

Now what is the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition? Insinuation; inference. But hon. members will have noticed how, when he is asked what is the nature of the allegations of wrongdoing, he adopts the clothing of injured innocence. "Don't place me in such a predicament", he says. If the Leader of the Opposition—and I challenge him now—will make any allegation of wrongdoing that is in any way incompatible with the position of a member of parliament, I will ask this house immediately to support the setting up of a committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Another Diefenbaker diversion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know his defence, Mr. Speaker. He knows there is none. He admitted that he agreed with me when the matter first came up. I had the Hansard here a moment ago. When the matter first came up on Friday June 5 his words were, in effect, that he agreed with the viewpoint that I expressed on that occasion—

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, I made no such statement. Perhaps the Prime Minister had better read what I said. I said I had no quarrel with what the Prime Minister said at that time, that he would look into the matter and report back. And that is all. Now read it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What a retreat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, indeed, is a retreat. The hon. gentleman said nothing like that the other day when I mentioned it.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Prime Minister, but it is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister had the floor when we adjourned and I believe the Minister of Justice wishes to intervene again shortly to reply to some argument that was made and I dare say some other members may wish to intervene, but may I say that we are discussing a point of order. Obviously it is an important point or I would not have felt the necessity of bringing it so fully before the house, but I hope that we can deal with the point of order and keep the discussion to that and perhaps not make it too extended.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly endeavour to keep within the ambit and circumference of your suggestions. At the moment of adjournment, as I recall it, I had made it very clear that in every case to which I referred on an earlier occasion and which I understand the Minister of Justice will refer to because of the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition, whatever the wording of the motion had been there had always been a charge. I made that abundantly clear and I re-emphasize now that if the Leader of the Opposition or any other hon. member will make a charge in this connection there will not be one moment's delay in asking for the convening of the committee on privileges and elections.

I do not want to enter into a controversy with the Leader of the Opposition but just as I was concluding at the time of adjournment I referred to the fact that there was no charge made by the Leader of the Opposition. I leave those who are inclined to reason to determine whether or not I misrepresented the situation when I made the following statement as reported at page 4361 of Hansard of Friday, June 5:

> —I think I should say at this time that in so far as any reference to any hon. member in this house is concerned, and in particular to the hon. member for Peel, the integrity and honesty of purpose of that hon. member leaves no question in my mind.

Let me quote exactly what the Leader of the Opposition said as reported on the same page:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of statements made in the judgment—and I am not quarrelling in any way with what the Prime Minister has said—has the Prime Minister considered referring this matter to the appropriate standing committee of the house so that it may be given the fullest and most impartial examination?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the Prime Minister has left out a very important sentence which he should have read when quoting his remarks. Before saying the words he has read into the record the Prime Minister, as reported at page 4361, said:

> It is my purpose to examine the judgment and the surrounding circumstances.

That sentence appeared in the context immediately prior to the sentence the Prime Minister did read.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know that Hansard has no conscience and is never able to alter itself after the events. I would point out that on Monday, June 8, as reported at page 4409 of Hansard, I referred to that statement and at the top of the page I am reported as having used these words to which the Leader of the Opposition raised no objection. His conscience had not started to operate until the subsequent import became known to the hon. gentleman. Let me read what I said as reported at the top of page 4409:

> I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition for the support he gave me in this regard—

I was referring to the integrity of the hon. member for Peel. I continue:

> —when he said:

I then read into the record the words of the Leader of the Opposition to which reference has already been made, which words are reported at page 4361 of Hansard. Let me place them on the record again:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of statements made in the judgment—and I am not quarrelling in any way with what the Prime Minister has said—has the Prime Minister considered referring this matter to the appropriate standing committee of the house so that it may be given the fullest and most impartial examination?

I then went on to say:

I repeat that I very much appreciated the attitude taken by the Leader of the Opposition in entirely supporting me when I said that the honesty and integrity of the hon. member left no question in my mind.

Mr. Speaker, there was not one word and not a hint or suggestion to the effect that I misrepresented the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege again. The Prime Minister has misrepresented what I said because immediately after the Prime Minister sat down I corrected that statement and if he will refer to page 4410 of Hansard he will find out how I did it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall proceed to read it because I know how the hon. gentleman feels. At page 4410 of Hansard the hon. gentleman is reported as having said:

Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's reply and particularly in view of his reference to myself perhaps I might be permitted to make an observation. It is quite true, as the Prime Minister has said, that I stated in the house on Friday that I had no quarrel with what the Prime Minister said on that occasion. Of course I would have no occasion either to quarrel with or support any statement the Prime Minister made on that occasion, because it was a preliminary statement pending the examination which at that time he promised to make.

And then, these were his next words:

Naturally I am glad to confirm what I said on that preliminary occasion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister not read the rest of it? I urge him to read the full paragraph.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I will read it and gladly proceed to the end because this type of equivocation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in which the hon. gentleman has indulged this morning and in this resolution needs to be clearly brought to the attention of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Why not follow the record then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman went on to say:

We on this side will now study the Prime Minister's very important statement today. If that statement seems to require further discussion in the house no doubt there will be an opportunity later to refer to it.

Mr. Pearson: Go on. Read the next paragraph.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I will. No amount of twisting and turning can get the hon. gentleman out of the position in which he has placed himself today when he went back on the statements he had made earlier. I read on:

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not agree from a study of the judgment—and I had not an opportunity of making that study last Friday—that there are contradictions between statements in this judgment about a member of parliament and statements made outside the house on the same matter by the same hon. member, contradictions which in fairness to all concerned should be cleared up?

Nothing that has been said by the hon. gentleman today derogates from the fact that on two unchallengeable occasions the hon. gentleman unequivocally admitted the honesty and integrity of the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. Pickersgill: More diversion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, the hon. gentleman equivocated on the question that the judgment was not available until Monday. The judgment was in his hands. He was quoting from it on Thursday or Friday when the estimates of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) were before the house. They were quoting from it; they were excerpting it. All of this alteration of the point of view, Mr. Speaker, simply comes back to one thing. They do not want to say, they dare not suggest, that the honesty and integrity of the hon. member for Peel are challengeable, and that was accepted by the Leader of the Opposition. On the other hand they lacked that something that every leader of the house from 1877 to 1943 demanded as the basis in respect of which such a motion would be permitted to be moved and considered by a committee. No amount of denial of that will meet the situation. Whatever the wording of the motion, in every case there had been charges made.

The hon. gentleman says he cannot be challenged and placed in the position where he would make a charge. No, sit back; make your indictment by innuendo, make your statements by a suggestion. That is not what Mr. Mackenzie King said was the proper course to follow. In the days when Mackenzie King and Arthur Meighen were in the house that was not the course accepted as the course of parliamentary responsibility.

During the noon hour I looked up the first case I want to refer to, which is that of Mr. Murdock of the Home Bank. I refer to Hansard of May 22, 1924. Mr. Porter, the then member for West Hastings,—

Mr. Pickersgill: What page?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —brought this matter before the house. He referred to the press alleging that certain wrongdoing had been committed by the Hon. Mr. Murdock who was subsequently cleared.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What page?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Page 2402. It was discussed at some length. He went into detail and finally moved the motion, which is found at page 2405. He took the course—not the course of innuendo, insinuation and inference—that members have taken in every generation in this parliament. He made a charge, and this is the motion he made:

> That E. Guss Porter, a member representing the electoral riding of West Hastings, in this house, having declared from his seat in the house, that he is credibly informed and that he believes he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence that:
> The Honourable James Murdock, Minister of Labour, did withdraw from the Home Bank, at its Ottawa branch, on the 15th day of August, 1923, two days before such bank's failure, thousands of dollars on deposit therein, to his credit, using certain information he had received as such minister, of the likely immediate failure of said bank, and had received advantage and profit to himself to the extent of such withdrawal, contrary to his obligations as such minister, and in derogation of his office and the honour, dignity and traditions of parliament:
> That it be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections of this house to inquire fully into the said allegations with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath or affirmation, and that the said committee do report in full the evidence taken before them, and all other proceedings on the reference, and the result of their inquiries to this house for such action thereon as the house may determine.

I want to make it perfectly clear that the committee absolved him. During the course of the discussion, at page 2408 of Hansard, Mr. Meighen set for the rule, the same rule as I will refer to in a moment, which was enunciated by Mr. Mackenzie King in this house during the days when I was a member. Mr. Meighen said:

> On this occasion the proper course undoubtedly has been pursued by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter). He has made allegations of conduct against a minister of the crown, conduct inconsistent with the traditions and honour of parliament, conduct designated as improper in every case where similar questions have arisen in this or in the British house. He has taken the full responsibility, and in a speech temperate in tone and very fair in every respect has laid his charges and made his motion. The motion is the right motion. The privileges and elections committee historically is the committee which always deals with any contested questions affecting the privileges of parliament. There has never been a case in our history where, a charge being formally laid, the full responsibility being taken and a reference to this committee asked for, such a request or such a resolution has been negatived.

I repeat that if either the hon. gentleman or anyone associated with him will take that responsibility he will not have to wait hours, but within minutes provision will be made for the convening of that committee and an opportunity given to have the charge proceeded with. Mr. Meighen continued at page 2410 of Hansard:

> The motion in your hands, Mr. Speaker, embodies the proper procedure, and when charges are formally laid the committee on privileges and elections is the proper tribunal.

The motion was immediately agreed to unanimously by the house. Mr. Mackenzie King was the prime minister at that time. In no way to be challenged is the fact that this course is not only in keeping with the decorum of our traditions of parliament but it is the course that has always been followed. Arising out of this, during the noon hour I recalled a case that occurred during the days of the war when Mr. Liguori Lacombe, a member of the house, made some statements. He said, as reported at page 4175 of Hansard of June 29, 1943:

> We have in the government three new millionaires since the declaration of war. We will denounce them at the proper time and place. Fortunes are being built up.

Now, that carried with it, of course, the suggestion that there was on the part of one or more members of Mr. King's administration ministers who were, at least by reason of their advantageous position, making fortunes. There was no basis for that, but that was the statement made by Mr. Liguori Lacombe. At page 4073 of Hansard Mr. King said this:

> I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member should be obliged either to withdraw the statement completely or else to convert it into a specific charge to be investigated in the usual manner, and the consequences of the investigation also to be followed up in the usual manner.

That is exactly what I said the other day. In this house we cannot make charges against one another. We can, in the course of debate say those things that sometimes we regret but, as Mr. King says, charges should be made in the usual manner. He asked Mr. Lacombe to make the charges specific. If charges are made we will then have the necessary machinery set in motion with a view to assuring fairness in the conclusion. At page 4176 of Hansard the Speaker said this, in dealing with the privileges of the house:

> I wish to say that the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains has made a grave accusation against three members of the government, so grave that the implied and, it seems to me, the only meaning which can be drawn from the statement is that these three unnamed members are using their position to accumulate fortunes. Although unnamed, as the statement now stands, all and every member of the government stand accused.

Then he goes on to point out how serious this is, and he says:

> The Prime Minister has challenged the statement and has asked that the hon. member should be obliged either to withdraw the statement completely or else to convert it into a specific charge to be investigated in the usual manner.

Those are the two latest cases. In every respect these cases bear out the interpretation I gave in respect of the four cases I named last week. That is the course of conduct that the experience of several hundred years of parliamentary life has made necessary. Otherwise all you would have to do would be to produce a shilly-shally motion such as this wherein nobody takes a stand on anything and wherein the Leader of the Opposition, instead of saying "I say that", says that a document, a judgment of a court in a case, affirms certain matters. If that were the basis, Mr. Speaker, upon which members could make charges in this house then none of us would be safe because we would always be in the position of having placed before the house a suggestion made outside the house, a judgment of a court, if you will, wherein there is no evidence of wrongdoing within the meaning of wrongdoing as established throughout the years as a basis for submission to such a committee.

I am going to say no more than this, Mr. Speaker. I will at all times, regardless of the personality of the individual in the house, try to uphold the dignity of the house and of parliament in the tradition of Mackenzie King, Mr. Meighen and all the others who were prime ministers throughout the years. Mr. St. Laurent did not have a case such as this to deal with.

Mr. Pearson: The C. D. Howe charges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will uphold the dignity of the house and of parliament in order to assure—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say this to hon. gentlemen opposite, and the Leader of the Opposition is one of those who will know what I mean. We shall not permit, we shall not allow, in our country that something to occur which brought about devastating effects on a responsible government in another country whereby individuals were tried by television, whereby evidence was introduced by innuendo and hearsay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say this, that it ill becomes anyone in the house to bring forward a shadow of a motion that in no way offers any proof and behind which the mover does not stand. I will do my utmost to protect the rights of parliament. It is one of the glories of the Canadian parliament that there are few cases in our history where there has been wrongdoing, but where there is wrongdoing it is the responsibility of the prime minister and all members of the house to do their part to see that it is punished. Here we have but a piece of paper containing a motion ingeniously contrived in order to sow suspicion. The hon. gentleman moving the motion will not take his stand behind the truth of the allegations and the alleged wrongdoing of the hon. member for Peel. I say this. I hope I shall never allow any hon. member to be struck in his honour and integrity by a motion such as this, a motion of suspicion fortified only by questions, with the mover holding the high and responsible position of Leader of the Opposition refusing to accept his personal responsibility to make a charge on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of wrongdoing by a judge.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Take the hide off him, Paul.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: What a hope.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all of us in the house are seized with the solemnity of this particular proceeding. It is only correct that we should seek to address ourselves to the matter before the house in the spirit of seeking to preserve the strength of the traditions and practices of this house, and to recognize, no matter what position we take on this matter, that this is the only consideration that should motivate any of us. I suggest to the Prime Minister, (Mr. Diefenbaker), understanding as I do the difficult position that he as head of the government and Prime Minister has in a matter of this sort, that I do not think it is unfair to indicate that if, when this matter was first raised, he had sought to act not as leader of his party but as Prime Minister of the country this matter would not, I am sure, still be before us and under discussion.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that if he will look at the records of the proceedings of this house and in the United Kingdom, where matters of this sort have fortunately rarely presented themselves, it will be found in practically every instance that the prime minister—there is no better example than Sir Robert Borden—took a position of objectivity, one in which he sought to picture himself as adviser to the house and not as counsel for any individual particularly involved. From the beginning of these proceedings the Prime Minister, possibly habituated by his great experience in the criminal courts, has sought to defend instead of directing the house in the course which he thought it should pursue. Because the Prime Minister has taken that course he has unwittingly, I think, been the cause of these proceedings being protracted and having reached the stage in which we now are. I suggest to him that this matter could have been resolved effectively if the hon. member involved had been encouraged to make a statement in the house, a statement which I think would have been readily accepted, at any rate, a statement which under our rules would warrant acceptance in the face of possible argument to the contrary.

But no; that is not the position taken by the Prime Minister. He has asserted that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) seeks to embark on an expedition to malign and to destroy the character and the integrity of an hon. member of this house. The Prime Minister has not done himself the kind of justice which I think he would want when he charged the Leader of the Opposition with having ulterior motives and when he charged that the Leader of the Opposition did not have the courage to address himself to the matter by making a specific charge. The only one who has mentioned repeatedly the making of a charge has been the Prime Minister.

The Leader of the Opposition quite properly has said: "This is not a question involving a charge; I am making no charge. I am simply pointing out that whatever charge exists is to be found embodied in a judgment of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada." Why the Prime Minister—experienced lawyer that he is—should persist in seeking to encourage the laying of a charge I find it difficult to appreciate. Certainly I do not think it lies within the power of the Prime Minister in this context to suggest that this was the motive of the Leader of the Opposition or that a charge should be made.

The Prime Minister referred to various cases, particularly the Home Bank case involving a minister of the crown, and the Lacombe case. He said that those two cases, as do others, indicate that there was a reference to the committee on privileges and elections following the making of a charge. Let us examine these cases once again because the Prime Minister has not properly interpreted them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As far as the Lacombe case in concerned, I never said it went to a committee. Mr. Lacombe withdrew the motion.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the Lacombe case the circumstances were altogether different. What was in issue in the Lacombe case was an alleged statement of one hon. member of this house against a minister of the crown. That is not what is involved here. As to the Home Bank case, that too was based on a charge made by an hon. member of this house; likewise in the Anglin case, the Foster case, the Hooper case and in other cases which one could refer to. The question in those cases did not involve a charge made by anyone. There was no charge made in the Foster case. My hon. friend distinguishes those cases from the case confronting us by saying that while it is true that in some of these cases no charge was involved in the specific motion—and I think I interpret the Prime Minister correctly; he nods his head now—in the subsequent discussion a charge was levelled of one kind or another.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the previous discussion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the previous discussion. All right. How does that affect those cases? The decision in those cases was not based on the discussion. The vote was on the motion. Let us look at these motions. Here is the motion in the Foster case. I have before me the Journals of the House of Commons for 1915, page 134:

> On motion of Mr. Maclean, seconded by Mr. Carvell,
> Ordered, That sessional papers numbered 112 of the present session of parliament and all other papers in relation thereto, being copies of correspondence between the Auditor General and the Department of Militia and other departments of government laid upon the table of the house, in respect to expenditures under the War Appropriations Act, be referred to the select standing committee on public accounts.

Where is the charge there, Mr. Speaker? There is no charge whatsoever any more than there is involved in the motion now before the house. Then let us consider the Anglin case. Obviously the Prime Minister has not carefully analysed these cases. I have before me the Journals of 1877, volume II where at page 236 we find the following:

> On motion of Mr. Casey, seconded by Mr. McDougall (Renfrew),
> Resolved, That the attention of this house having been called to the reports, returns, and vouchers laid upon the table, touching the payment of public monies to the Honourable T. W. Anglin, member for the electoral district of Gloucester, for printing and stationery for the Post Office Department,—

Mr. Fulton: That is a charge.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the Minister of Justice will just contain himself and listen instead of interrupting, I should be obliged. The quotation continues:

> —the said papers be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections, and they be directed to enquire into the facts, to search for precedents, and to report the result of their enquiry; and whether the said Honourable T. W. Anglin has vacated his seat.

There was no charge made in that motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was a recital of the facts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, it was a recital of the facts, just as is being done in the case before us. But let us assume that there are some cases in which there was a charge, and there are such cases. My hon. friend has referred to statements made in this house by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. That is an argument, but it is not an argument in answer to the contention made by the Leader of the Opposition. The very fact that we have now been engaged for two and a half hours in a discussion of this matter surely establishes the correctness and the validity of the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is obviously a question of privilege involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friends laugh, but laughter is no substitute for argument. We were reminded by Mr. Speaker himself this morning of the principle applicable to this very point. He directed our attention to the words of Sir Thomas Erskine May in May's Parliamentary Practice at page 382, 16th edition, and these words bear repetition:

It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question whether the case conforms with the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence of the notices of motions and orders of the day standing in the order paper of public business; and does not extend to deciding the question of substance, whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the house itself. The conditions with which a claim of privilege must comply in order to be accorded precedence are those mentioned above (1) a prima facie case of breach of privilege must be made out—

Does any hon. member seriously argue that that has not been done?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice says yes. I say to the Minister of Justice that, as Minister of Justice, he should be the last one in this house to repudiate a finding of one of Her Majesty's judges.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In a matter of this sort I think hon. gentlemen will want to hear all sides express their point of order without the use by them of their numerical strength in this house. The Prime Minister referred to this same judgment as an alleged finding. No

Mr. Diefenbaker: An alleged finding?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister's words are there to be scrutinized and observed by everyone. The Prime Minister said that. While this might be understandable in the mouth of a lay prime minister, it certainly is not proper for the Prime Minister, a distinguished advocate in the criminal courts of our country, to refer to a finding of a judge as an alleged finding. Whether we agree with the decisions of our courts or not, once those decisions are made then unless appealed they must not be referred to in the language used by the Prime Minister as "alleged findings".

A suggestion was made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) which I did not think was worthy of him. After all, in a matter such as this he could easily have taken the position that a famous lord chancellor is said to have taken in the latter part of the nineteenth century, when he said that in a matter of this sort it was clearly the duty of the lord chancellor to associate himself with the Queen's first minister and give the house direction rather than act as a partisan on one side or the other.

That is not what the Minister of Justice did this morning. He indulged in a personal attack on the Leader of the Opposition. He accused him of lack of fortitude. He accused him of lack of courage. I suggest that one might say about the Leader of the Opposition that those are two characteristics which do not fit him. The reason for the course taken by the Leader of the Opposition was because in the face of this judgment—which stands, and unless answered there will continually be uncertainty on the part of members of this house and by the public—he thought the duty of the Prime Minister was to initiate proceedings in the matter. Because the Prime Minister did not do so he, as Leader of the Opposition and an officer of this house—and that is what the Leader of the Opposition is—felt that it was his duty objectively to bring this matter forward to the attention of the house in the way he has done. No one can say that his presentation today or on other occasions of this matter has in any way run counter to the highest standards that one would expect from one who occupies the post of Leader of the Opposition. He made no charges, that is true. That is his continuous answer to the Prime Minister who repeats, "Make charges". The Leader of the Opposition said, "We have no charges to make".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Leader of the Opposition says that we have no charges to make. But what we do say is this.

Mr. Harkness: You only have insinuations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why does my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) want to mar a fairly unimportant record of achievement by this further intervention? What the Leader of the Opposition has done is to say that there is a judgment of the president of the exchequer court which makes certain affirmations, and among those affirmations are:

(6) That Mr. Clare was not a free and independent appraiser;

(7) That according to Mr. Clare's own admission, Mr. Pallett instructed him to put as generous a valuation as possible on the properties and that Mr. Clare told Mr. A. A. Speer, the Department of Transport's district land agent, that it was difficult for him to carry out his instructions;

(8) That Mr. Clare's land valuations were quite erroneous and excessive and that his property valuations were out of line with other valuations and settlements made in the Malton area.

The Leader of the Opposition made no charges. Whatever charge is involved lies in this judgment of the president of the exchequer court. Does the Prime Minister say to us that parliament is free to ignore this finding of the exchequer court? Does the Prime Minister not agree that in fairness to the hon. member concerned—and I put it on that ground first, in fairness to him—and out of respect for the traditions of this house this judgment should not be allowed to stand without some answer being made on its merits by those who are in a position so to do? What other vehicle is there for such a presentation unless it is made in the committee proposed in the motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition? There is only one answer to this argument, and that is a statement by the hon. member involved himself.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that the course taken by the Leader of the Opposition is in keeping with his duty as Leader of the Opposition and in keeping with our traditions in this house. They were honourable proceedings initiated by him. It would have been easily possible to suggest, as some outside have suggested, making political innuendos as the Prime Minister has said was being done in this case. But what innuendo was ever made? What fairer statement could be made than that which I have made supporting the statement already made by the Leader of the Opposition? No charge is being made by any member in this house. All we are calling the government's attention to, as well as the attention of all hon. members in this house, is a judgment of a court.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

In the absence of an appeal from that judgment to a higher court is there any other course open, I suggest to the Prime Minister, than to recognize (a) that this is a question of privilege, and (b) that it should be referred to a committee so that it can be resolved in a manner satisfactory to all concerned?

I cannot understand the Prime Minister failing to take this course. The Prime Minister shakes his head. I suggest to him that if this matter is not regarded as a question of privilege, if this house declares that it is not a matter of privilege, if this house does not accept this motion and give the opportunity for a final settlement of this matter, there will always rest in all its power and sanctity a judgment of the court which reflects seriously upon the conduct and actions of one hon. member of this house. I say, then, that what ought to be done forthwith is for the Prime Minister to recognize that in this matter he does not speak as a leader of a party; he speaks as the Prime Minister in this house. He should give us a lead, a lead which will enable us to determine whether or not there is an answer to the findings made by the court, instead of resting upon the argument that all the precedents show that a charge must be made, when the documents before us clearly indicate that is not the case. I ask the Prime Minister to rise from his political moorings to recognize his responsibility to this house, and to give it the kind of direction and leadership which this parliament and this country I know will demand.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this stage primarily for the purpose of setting the record straight with respect to an erroneous statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) this morning as to the pattern of previous motions of this sort. Mr. Speaker, I shall prove that the Leader of the Opposition has completely misstated the effect of those motions, as I shall show by reference to, I believe, every motion of this sort since confederation.

If the Leader of the Opposition has read, as he said he did, the full text of these motions, I am completely unable to understand how it was he could come before the house this morning and make the statement that he did make as to their effect. What were the statements with which the Leader of the Opposition was dealing when he said that motions of this kind did not necessitate the laying of charges? They were statements made by the Prime Minister and by myself to the effect that always, in motions of this sort, specific charges had been made, and that certainly they had been made before the house would take into consideration a motion of this sort or refer it to a committee.

Let us look at the history of these motions. Here is what the Leader of the Opposition said about that statement as I took down his words this morning and made notes of them and if he believes I am misrepresenting them I shall be glad to be corrected. As I understood him this morning; he said that the Prime Minister's contention that a charge would be required, and the statement by myself that a charge must be embodied in the motion, and the Prime Minister's statement that there had to be an allegation of improper conduct whereby the member concerned had furthered his private interests, had no foundation whatsoever.

Let us look at the motions as they have been laid since confederation. The first is dated April 9, 1877 and is a charge against an hon. member of that day, the Hon. Mr. Anglin, to which reference has already been made. I may say that the Leader of the Opposition and members of his office have apparently taken all the English Journals out of the library—and I have only the French copies. I find the same situation applies with reference to several other volumes of the Journals, which hon. members opposite have been reading, or to which they referred, and, as I say, if they have read them I find it difficult to understand how they could have made the statements which they did make.

The motion, in this 1877 case, contains these words:

> That the attention of this house having been called to the reports, returns and affidavits laid on the table concerning the payment of public money to the Hon. Mr. Anglin . . . for printing and stationery for the Post Office Department, the said papers be sent to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

If that is not a specific allegation of the misuse of public money—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Fulton: —I am unable to agree with hon. members opposite about the use of words.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is a statement of fact.

Mr. Fulton: The statement made is that the Hon. Mr. Anglin was paid public moneys for printing and stationery for the Post Office Department.

Mr. Pearson: A report was to that effect.

Mr. Fulton: Hon. gentlemen opposite may try to make all the refinements they wish, but I believe I have correctly stated the effect of that motion and it bears out what the Prime Minister said, namely that before any hon. member can ask this house to look into this matter or refer it to a committee there must be an allegation of improper use of public office for private benefit.

The next motion was in 1890, as reported at page 175 of the Journals, the Rykert case. I am not going to read the motion in detail. It is true that the motion as finally adopted was amended. But what did the hon. member who brought the matter before the house do? He adopted the proper course. He said that it appeared from certain documents and correspondence:

> That the said Rykert did make use of his position and influence as a member of this house, in the matter of the said limits, for his own pecuniary advantage; and that he did afterwards make a statement, from his place in this house, with regard to his connection with and the obtaining the said limits, entirely at variance with the facts, and calculated to mislead the house and the country.

I hope hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to argue that this was not a specific charge of improper conduct, and conduct for the personal advantage of the member concerned.

Mr. Pearson: It appeared in documents.

Mr. Fulton: It appeared in documents, yes, but the member making the motion that the committee be set up made the specific charges himself.

Mr. Pearson: And the motion was amended to take them out.

Mr. Fulton: In this particular case, yes. The motion was amended to take out the charges. But the charges had been before the house. Let us now look at all the other motions, because the Leader of the Opposition said he had read them all and that they did not support the statement made by the Prime Minister. We come to the McGreevy case and here again I point out that the member making the motion made a charge from his seat alleging specific evidence of specific improper conduct. Here is one of the allegations:

> That before tendering, and in order to secure the influence of the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, then and now a member of the parliament of Canada, and a member of the Quebec Harbour Board by appointment of the government, Larkin, Connolly and Company, took into partnership with themselves Robert H. McGreevy, a brother of the said Hon. Thomas McGreevy, giving him a 30 per cent interest in the firm, and this was with the knowledge and consent of the said Hon. Thomas McGreevy.

The next case was in 1894, and the allegation moved by Mr. Bruneau, contained the following:

> That the said Arthur Joseph Turcotte, while a member of this house, sometime in the year 1893 was interested in contracts and agreements with the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the government of Canada, on behalf of the crown, and large sums of public money of Canada were paid under said contracts and were received by the said Arthur Joseph Turcotte, which said contracts were for the supply of groceries and similar goods for the use of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

That motion contained an allegation, as in the case of the previous one which I read out. The next case in 1903, was the case of Mr. Loy, and again it was moved by the hon. member who made charges in the house specifically to the following effect:

That from the time the said George Loy handed his said property to Archambault up to the day of the sale of said property to the crown or government of Canada, he never ceased to be the proprietor of said property, and that at the time of the sale of said property, on the 20th January, 1903, said Robert Brice Johnston was merely acting for and on behalf of said Loy, who in said manner did indirectly sell his said property to the crown or government of Canada, in violation of Chapter II of the revised statutes of Canada 'An act respecting the Senate and House of Commons'.

The next case in 1911 is one to which I have already referred this morning. It is the motion against Mr. Lanctot, and it contained a definite allegation, and I quote:

That said goods were so fraudulently appropriated to, and said work so fraudulently done at the expense of the government of Canada, for the benefit of the said Adelard Lanctot, then and now a member of the house as aforesaid, with his knowledge, assent and approval, the said Adelard Lanctot abusively and fraudulently profiting at the public expense and to the public detriment, by his position as member of the house.

That motion, also containing a charge, was adopted by the House of Commons. Then we come to the Foster case in 1915 about which hon. gentlemen opposite have sought to make so much. Here, the motion was to refer a report to a committee. That is true, but the great distinction in this case was that there was no allegation sought to be made against a specified member, and there was no motion to refer the matter to the committee of privileges and elections. The matter did not arise as a breach of privilege at that time; it was a motion asking that certain public documents, being accounts of financial transactions, be sent to the public accounts committee. When the hon. gentleman finds himself on such extraordinarily weak grounds that he is driven to this case in order to attack the statement that in every motion of this kind a charge has been made, it clearly shows the weakness of his case as a whole. The motion in the Foster case is in no sense applicable to this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question about the Foster case?

Mr. Fulton: The final cases were in 1924—

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question about the Foster case? Would the Minister of Justice maintain that Mr. Maclean's motion was not a motion of privilege?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Maclean's motion speaks for itself.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly. He was a private member.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Maclean's motion was to the effect that sessional papers numbered 122 and all other papers in relation thereto being copies of correspondence between the auditor general and the department of militia and other departments of government laid upon the table of the house in respect to expenditures under the War Appropriations Act be referred to the select standing committee on public accounts. In that motion, Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest reference to the conduct of a member.

Mr. Pearson: He could not have made it except as a matter of privilege. He was a private member.

Mr. Fulton: What we have said is that if one wishes to attack the conduct of a member then the person making the motion must be specific with reference to the conduct he seeks to attack.

Coming down to the cases of 1924, there are two cases in that year. Again I only have available the French copy but I believe I am translating correctly when I read from page 299 of the Journals of 1924 in French which accused James Murdock, as has been pointed out by the Prime Minister, of having received advantage and personal profit to the extent of the withdrawals that he had made contrary to his obligations as minister and in contradiction to his function and the honour, dignity and traditions of parliament. That, I think, is the last of the cases.

I have cited these cases at length, because this list, I believe, covers every case of this nature which has come before parliament since confederation. These recitals establish that in every case where a motion of this sort has been made and has sought to raise the conduct of an individual member as a matter of privilege and have that matter referred to the committee on privileges and elections then the member making the motion has been required to state specifically what is the conduct that he complains of, how in his view it amounts to a breach of privilege and what is the evidence or proof that he intends to rely upon to prove his charge.

In every case the matter has been brought before the house by way of a motion containing a personal charge. That has been true in every case of this sort. I believe it is important to have those cases on the record because of the extraordinarily misleading statements made about this matter by the Leader of the Opposition this morning.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that there is a compelling reason why in making a motion of this kind the mover must state in what respect he alleges or charges that the member of parliament concerned has been guilty of a breach of privilege. The reason is this. It is the duty of the Speaker to decide whether or not in fact a breach of privilege or the privileges of the house are involved here in order that such a motion may take precedence over the other business of the house. It is, of course, impossible for the Speaker to determine whether there is a question of privilege or a breach of privilege here unless the hon. member making the motion follows what I suggest is the honourable course of stating specifically how it is that he alleges this is a breach of privilege. Otherwise we have nothing but these vague generalities to go upon.

So the issue is simply this. There is here a judgment in the exchequer court. I am surprised—perhaps I should not be surprised because it is done often, but shall I say, I could not help but note—that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and I think also the Leader of the Opposition and one or two other hon. members have attempted to suggest that I am criticizing the judgment of the exchequer court.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The "alleged" findings.

Mr. Fulton: I have in no way criticized the judgment of the court nor have I at any time attempted to repudiate the court's findings. The judgment is there. But the interest of the situation arises from the fact that when we ask hon. members opposite in what respects they suggest that the conduct referred to in that judgment amounts to a breach of privilege they are suddenly overcome with shyness and modesty and say, "Oh, that is not our job."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Look at the motion.

Mr. Fulton: They say: That is not our job; we want a witch hunt, we want the committee to find out if there is anything at all that can be suggested or dragged in on the basis of which a charge could be made.

The record is there for us to examine. The exchequer court's judgment speaks for itself. We say that if it discloses a breach of privilege—and that is the allegation made by my hon. friends opposite—we would be extremely interested in knowing in what specific ways they say there has been a breach of privilege.

Mr. Pearson: Why do you not listen?

Mr. Fulton: Surely, Mr. Speaker, when you are confronted with the extremely difficult and important duty of making the decision you have to make, when you yourself have besought hon. members opposite to give you the assistance you need by specifying the ways in which they say the conduct referred to in the judgment constitutes a breach of privilege—

Mr. Pearson: What about the agreements?

Mr. Fulton: —and when, as I say, they are overcome with shyness and modesty when confronted with these simple questions, then to my mind, and I am sure to Your Honour's, it is a complete indication that in fact they know that the document itself discloses no breach of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Laurier feel he can add anything at this stage to this debate?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: We have heard from both sides of the house for two and one-half hours and I think the advice and assistance I have had are all that I can bear. However, I do not want to prevent any hon. member who feels that he can contribute to this point from doing so. After all, it is a very important issue which seldom comes before the house in so definitive a way as it has in this motion. If the hon. member feels he can contribute something useful, I am prepared to hear him.

Mr. Chevrier: May I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Minister of Justice has already spoken twice on this matter?

Mr. Fulton: So has the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I believe I have heard equally from both sides but if the hon. member has something to contribute I will hear him. I trust, however, that he will be the last participant.

Mr. Chevrier: It will be up to you, Mr. Speaker, of course, to determine whether I have something to contribute in the course of this debate, but I am prompted in rising not only because of the statements that were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) but more particularly because of the statements made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton). He rose on two occasions. The two occasions on which he spoke are entirely different in so far as the nature and the tone of that participation is concerned.

This morning he directed his attention to personalities, as the house well knows, and made it quite clear that we lacked the fortitude and courage in that a substantial charge had not been laid. This afternoon he proceeded to put on the record some of the earlier charges and some cases—

Mr. Fulton: All of them.

Mr. Chevrier: —and he wound up his remarks by stating that it was the responsibility of the Speaker to decide whether or not there had been a breach of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hansard will show that that is what you said.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what the Minister of Justice said. My submission to you is that that is not the case and I say it with deference because if Your Honour looks at what is contained in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, citation 104, paragraph 5, you will find this:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

Those, I submit, are the two points upon which Your Honour has to determine whether or not this motion is in order. Your Honour is not called upon to determine the question of privilege, it seems to me, with all deference. That is a matter for this house to determine. I go a step further in dealing with paragraph 5 of citation 104. It reads as follows:

> If he—

That is, the Speaker. I continue:

> If he is not so satisfied he may allow the member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out. The right of making complaint of a breach of privilege is open to any member of the house, and, even if an individual member alone is affected, is not confined to that member.

Mark you, there is no question here of a charge. It is clearly stated:

> The right of making complaint of a breach of privilege is open to any member of the house, and, even if an individual member alone is affected, is not confined to that member.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

I say to you, sir, that this motion which is now before you and before the house is properly before the house.

It has been suggested here by both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that this debate must be circumscribed; that there must either be a charge on the one hand or on the other hand nothing at all. That is the effect of the statements made by both hon. gentlemen. Either put up or shut up. That is the effect of the statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: I knew that that would immediately draw strong applause from the other side. In other words, it means this. Either you must lay a charge or you cannot do anything. That is not the procedure laid down in the rules and in the motions and debates that have taken place previously. Anyone trying so to establish it, even if it be the Minister of Justice, is making an inaccurate and an erroneous statement, because these are not the facts. If that were the case, then it would be impossible ever to question or ever to seek information having to do with the propriety of an hon. member, and that is certainly what the Leader of the Opposition is attempting to do by the motion which he has now put on the order paper.

The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister referred to a number of cases. I shall not prolong the debate by dealing with those cases save two of them which have not been discussed, at least they have not been discussed thus far. The first of those is the Schell case. It came up in 1903 and the discussion of it can be found at page 4959 of the debates of June 18, 1903. Mr. Fowler asked this question:

> Is J. T. Schell, member of the House of Commons, for the electoral district of Glengarry, a partner in the firm of McPherson and Schell, who supplied goods to the Department of Agriculture?

The amount of goods supplied in this case amounted to $5.50. It was the alleged supply of barrelheads by the hon. member to the Department of Agriculture. The reply of the minister of agriculture was that the government had no information as to the personnel of the firm referred to in the auditor general's report in connection with the item of $5.50. Then, on June 25, 1903, at pages 5416 and 5417 of Hansard, appears this statement on a question of privilege regarding the question asked previously, given by Mr. J. T. Schell, in which he said, and I quote:

> I submit myself and the whole matter to the judgment of this honourable house.

Whereupon the minister of justice, conducting himself in an entirely different fashion in those days from the Minister of Justice today, moved:

That the statement just read by Mr. Schell, the member for Glengarry, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

And the motion was agreed to. Was there any charge in this case? There was not the slightest iota of a charge. Then, a little later on in the course of the debate, Mr. Sutherland presented the first report of the select committee on privileges and elections and it was found that from the evidence adduced the committee found that the goods in question were sold by the firm of McPherson and Schell to the said Scott personally and therefore there has been no infringement of the law respecting the independence of parliament in this case. There is a clear cut case having to do with a very small amount which showed how in those days there was a great deal of jealousy in so far as the privileges of parliament were concerned.

Then, I come to the Daoust case, which has not been referred to during the course of the debate. In this case Mr. Taschereau moved on March 16, 1876 that certain papers be referred to the committee on privileges and elections as follows—and this will be found in the Journals of 1876, volume 10, page 160:

On motion of Mr. Taschereau, seconded by Mr. Laurier;

Resolved, that it appearing from the statement of Mr. Daoust, the member for Two Mountains, made in his place, that he is the person referred to in the papers, in the case of the Queen versus Daoust, the said papers be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections, to examine into the legal questions arising in the case, and to search for parliamentary precedents applicable thereto; and to report to this house the result of their enquiries, and whether any, and if so, what further proceedings should be taken by this house in the premises.

The committee reported back on March 28, 1878, and the conclusion which can be found in the Journals of 1878, volume 10, page 209, is as follows:

That for the reasons mentioned in the first and second resolutions, your committee are of opinion that the seat of Mr. Daoust is not vacant by reason of the premises, and therefore your committee do not recommend that any further proceedings should be taken by your honourable house in the premises.

Again, there was no charge, and not even the suggestion of a charge of the nature or kind that has been mentioned by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. There was nothing other than an assignment to a committee to deal with the matter that was before the house.

Then, there is the case which has been mentioned both by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, in which there was a charge. I should like to put this charge on Hansard so that it may be compared with what was done in the Daoust and the Schell cases and in this case which I am about to deal with now, so that the house can clearly see what is a charge and what is not a charge, and how in certain cases the house has proceeded by way of a charge and in other cases it has proceeded in the same manner and to the same effect as the resolution which is now on the order paper. I refer to a definite charge proposed by Mr. Israel Tarte, which is to be found at page 146 of Hansard of May 11, 1891. Mr. Tarte rose and said this:

I believe, sir, I have every reason to believe, that I am in a position to prove, by documentary evidence and verbal evidence, every statement contained in the motion I am going to place in your hands; and those statements are to the effect that, since 1882 or 1883, the secrets of the Department of Public Works have been penetrated and divulged, for money considerations, to public contractors, by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy), who, according to the evidence I have in my hand, has been paid year by year, contract after contract, large sums of money; that, during that period of time, he has used his influence, as a member of this parliament and as a member of the Quebec harbour commission, against the public interest on numerous and important occasions.

There is a charge, and there is all the difference in the world between that and the two cases I mentioned earlier, those of Schell and Daoust. Therefore, I say there is no truth in the fact that in order to bring a matter of this kind before the house, or before a committee of the house, a charge must be laid. Those who attempt to circumscribe the debate to that extent by saying that a charge must be laid are not doing justice to themselves and to the precedents of parliament.

I have a final case to bring to the attention of the house. Mention was made of it earlier, but some of the statements contained in this case I do not believe have been put on the record. I would like to put them on now. It is the case of Mr. Boothby, which can be found in the United Kingdom parliamentary debates, fifth series, volume 365, at page 830. On that occasion the prime minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Churchill, rose and made this motion:

That a select committee be appointed to investigate the conduct and activities of Mr. Boothby in connection with the payment out of assets in this country of claims against the government of and institutions in the Republic of Czechoslovakia: to report generally on these matters and in particular to consider and report whether the conduct of the hon. member was contrary to the usage or derogatory to the dignity of the house or inconsistent with the standards which parliament is entitled to expect from its members.

That is in essence the same kind of language which is to be found in the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition. Listen to what Mr. Churchill said on that occasion. He said:

I have placed a motion on the paper, which is in the possession of hon. members, the terms of which they have no doubt studied.

That was the reason why we gave 48 hours notice of this motion. It was incumbent on the part of the Leader of the Opposition to have raised this matter without motion, without notice, because under the privileges of the house any hon. member may, before the routine proceedings of the day are reached, raise a question of privilege. Yet because the Leader of the Opposition gave 48 hours notice he is being censured and it is stated that he lacked courage. The same thing was done in the United Kingdom. Mr. Churchill went on:

It will be remembered that after the occupation of Prague—

Mr. Churchill: Read the sentence before that.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry. Let me begin again, if I may, so there will be no doubt about it.

I have placed a motion on the paper, which is in the possession of hon. members, the terms of which they have no doubt studied. The house will require to know the grounds on which this motion has been put down.

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

Mr. Pearson: What do you think we have been doing this morning?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Chevrier: There are at least ten grounds to be found in the motion. May I go on?

It will be remembered that after the occupation of Prague certain Czech assets were blocked in this country, and there arose the question of payments from these assets to those who had claims against the Czech government or institutions in that country. The hon. member for East Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) took a very active part interviewing ministers in this matter, pressing for legislation, and he spoke in this house on the bill which was subsequently introduced. He became chairman of an informal committee of Czech claimants, and has pressed for the payment of claims. Evidence has recently been placed before the government which indicates that the hon. member had a financial interest in one large claim. This appeared to be inconsistent with a statement he had made to the former chancellor of the exchequer, and, together with other evidence, it seemed to raise the question whether his action had been in accordance with the usages of parliament, or the standards it is entitled to expect from its members.

Is there a charge by Mr. Churchill?

Mr. Churchill: A charge with regard to financial interest.

Mr. Chevrier: Then he went on to say:

When I communicated these apprehensions to the hon. member it became clear that there was a conflict between the evidence in the possession of His Majesty's government, and the facts as he described them. The matter, therefore, requires to be investigated by a committee of this house. I considered whether I should then move that it should be referred to the committee of privileges but, after obtaining guidance as to the precedents, I came to the conclusion that as the case appeared to raise other issues besides that of privilege, it was better that it should go to a select committee, so that the truth could be ascertained and the conduct of the hon. member considered.

I could go on and read the rest of Mr. Churchill's statement but there are just one or two other sentences that I want to put on Hansard. Mr. Churchill added:

I do not consider it fitting at this stage to call for the hon. member's resignation of the office which he holds with distinction in the government, as this might appear in the eyes of the public to prejudice the issue. The hon. member has, however, asked to be suspended from his duties in the meanwhile, and I am prepared to make the necessary arrangements for this.

Then, a little farther on:

It would be manifestly improper for me to enter into detail upon the matters which will be investigated by the select committee—

That is the point under discussion now.

—and, still more, that we should debate matters which, if this motion is accepted, will at once become sub judice.

That is what members on the other side of the house want us to do. They want us to debate matters now which, if we did, would become sub judice if the matter is referred to a select committee or to the committee on privileges and elections.

The terms of reference have been widely drawn, but when the evidence is heard I do not think the committee will have any difficulty in deciding what matters are relevant to their inquiries.

There is a precedent in the mother of parliaments, as it has often been called, which clearly indicates—I say this in all frankness—that on a matter far more serious than this one now before us there was no charge laid but none the less it was referred to a committee. This business of trying to scare members of the opposition into laying a charge or doing nothing has had absolutely no effect at all, first, on the Leader of the Opposition and, second, on the rest of us. You may go on making that statement as long as you like. That is not the practice which has grown up in the house and I am sure it is not going to be the practice in the future.

May I pass on now to another aspect of the case? What is being done by the terms of this motion? We are not prejudging the case at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: This is not a censure on the member. We are putting the judgment of the court before the house. It is the judgment of the court which censures the member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: How?

An hon. Member: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friends say, "Nothing of the sort". The judgment of the court says this, and I will put it in the form of a question rather than an affirmation so that I will not be accused of being unfair to the hon. member. The question arising in the judgment is this: Is it proper for an hon. member to recommend the appointment of an independent appraiser with the one hand and with the other make sure that his independence is lost altogether? That is the point which arises out of this judgment. That is the gravamen of the judgment, and unfortunately that is what hon. members have sought to avoid altogether.

An hon. Member: Is that your charge?

Mr. Pearson: It is the judge's charge.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: Let me pause for a moment to give some indication of how these valuations take place, if I may. There is in the Department of Transport a very efficient lands and real estate branch. It has officers all over the country and it has a number of officers in the city of Toronto. When a property is sought by Her Majesty the Queen for the benefit of Canada a notice of expropriation is filed against that property and then the valuator or appraiser proceeds to discuss the question of settlement with the property owner. Sometimes a settlement is arrived at without difficulty. At other times owners will not accept the amounts offered by the appraisers.

In such cases, as mentioned in the judgment, there were a large number of property owners who had accepted the amount of compensation set by the appraisers of the department. But there were some eleven who were not able to accept the valuations. In the preamble to the judgment it is stated that an agreement was made between the minister and the property owners that they would be bound by the valuations of Mr. Clare. The minister, of course, denied that statement. The question which arises is this and it is one which has to be determined by you, Mr. Speaker. Is it proper for a member to seek to bind the crown in such a manner? That is a question which falls to the determined—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member whether he said that the judgment found that the department had agreed to be bound by the valuation?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that. I said that in the preamble of the judgment it was alleged by the suppliant in the issue that that was the case. Then further the question which arises is this. Is it proper for a member of parliament to proceed to act in this fashion? Is it proper for him to receive, as was stated in the judgment, the valuations himself from Mr. Clare and give them to the minister's executive assistant? Is that a proper act? Again that will be a matter for the committee to determine. Was the member interfering improperly in the administration of the affairs of the Department of Transport by so acting? A couple of the officers of the Department of Transport or at least one of them, the assistant deputy minister, Mr. Booth, made it quite clear to the minister that all this was irregular and that it should not be done.

Then, of course, there is the matter of the independent evaluator. The minister, I believe in the course of the consideration of his estimates, said that he was satisfied with his qualifications as a real estate appraiser. But that is the whole point. Was he an independent real estate appraiser in the ordinary sense of the term or in the ordinary common parlance? If he received instructions whereby he was bound beforehand, then he was not a qualified real estate appraiser. Neither was he an independent appraiser. These matters are to be found in the judgment and are matters of record.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there were several valuations that had been made of the property. I believe it was stated that six valuations were made. Why was it necessary to make another one? I can see no reason why, under normal circumstances, there should not be an independent appraiser. There is nothing abnormal about bringing in an independent appraiser when the officers of the Department of Transport are unable to get agreement on the valuation of a property. But when there have been six such so-called independent evaluators called in, is it necessary to have still another? That is a matter which I believe deserves clarification. The judge made a clear finding that there was no indication whatever of an independent valuation.

Mr. Hees: May I be permitted to ask a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member has suggested that there is something irregular about having an independent valuation after five or six independent valuations have been taken. His predecessor in office had these five independent valuations taken previously. Would he say that his predecessor in office was at fault in having a third, fourth, fifth or perhaps sixth valuation taken?

Mr. Chevrier: Apparently the minister was not listening.

Mr. Hees: Oh, yes; I was listening.

Mr. Chevrier: I clearly stated that there was nothing the matter with bringing in an independent appraiser. I made that statement quite clearly. But I said that when there had been as many as six appraisers already on the case and when the officials of the Department of Transport were satisfied with the appraisals that were then made, I asked the question—as the judge must have asked himself—whether it was necessary to call in an additional one. If the valuation was too low which the independent appraiser—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. What has this matter which the hon. member is now discussing to do with the essential question of whether the privileges of the house are involved?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Chevrier: That is exactly the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking a question but perhaps not indicating that, if the answer is of a particular character, there is a breach of the privileges of the house involved. I was hoping that he was coming to that and I therefore allowed him to continue. I expect that the hon. member is near the end of what he has to say.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friends cannot have it both ways. They want us to lay a charge. We have proceeded to show that a charge need not be laid or rather need not necessarily be laid and that there are many occasions as shown in the debates where charges were not laid and where investigations took place. I am now proceeding to indicate the statements contained in the notice of motion and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance rises and says that this procedure is irregular. Let me just read—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member who is dealing with the affirmations as they are called in the judgment, would not simply ask a question, assuming that the valuator was not independent, for example—and that was one of the questions—would then go on to indicate what privilege of the house has been thereby breached, that would answer the question which I initially asked him.

Mr. Chevrier: Then may I put on record a statement of the judge—

[Mr. Hees.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: —dealing with this matter. It is to be found in the judgment.

Mr. Speaker: I think that the hon. member might confine himself to the allegations in the motion itself which have been abstracted from the judgment and which are all that are before the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Will Your Honour just allow me to read one short sentence. It deals with the matter which is now under discussion and which is also in the motion. It reads as follows.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: The president of the Exchequer Court of Canada has said this:

> I have no hesitation in rejecting Mr. Clare's valuation. I do not believe that he was a free and independent appraiser.

I do not want to go any further than that. That ought to dispose of the matter having regard to the point about which His Honour the Speaker inquired.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member accepts that statement of fact, would he then say that by reason of that statement the hon. member whose conduct is impugned is not a fit member to sit in the house?

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: He is afraid of that.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that question is a proper one coming from the Speaker of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated at the beginning of this request for the assistance of the members of the house that I was concerned to know whether, if all of the affirmations in the judgment were accepted as fact, a breach of the privileges of the house would thereby arise and, if so, in what way. I have had no answer specifically to that question. I had hoped that the hon. member who has the floor would give me some assistance. He must appreciate the fact that I accept his statement and the other statements of law that it is my duty to determine whether there has been established a prima facie case of breach of the privileges of the house. If it is alleged that there is a breach of the privileges of the house it seems to me that I should know what privilege has been breached.

Mr. Chevrier: I agree that that is a responsibility which is yours, Mr. Speaker. But with great deference I say that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to draw from me a conclusion which belongs to the house.

It is a statement which it is the responsibility of the house to determine as to whether or not there has been a breach of privilege. I submit, sir—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may have silence perhaps I can proceed. I submit there is a prima facie case the moment the judgment is produced. The moment the judgment is produced and is read there is to be found there, and I say this with deference to you, sir, everything that embodies a prima facie case which throws the presumption on the other side of the house to rebut. The only way in which that presumption has been rebutted is in this fashion: "Oh, lay a charge. Lay a charge or shut up."

I submit that the precedents show quite clearly that there is an intermediate position between laying a charge on the one hand and doing absolutely nothing on the other. Therefore I would ask this final question.

Mr. Drysdale: Get off the fence.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend behind me says, "Get off the fence". There is no better example of people sitting on the fence than hon. members who sit in the cabinet of the present government, so let my hon. friend not interrupt me with a remark about fence sitting.

I ask this question: If the hon. member had not been a member of parliament could he have done what he did effectively? If he were not a member of parliament, particularly a government member of parliament, could he have recommended the appraiser with the one hand, assuring the department that he was independent, and with the other hand have given him instructions to make sure that he was not independent? As I have stated by citing the statement in the judgment, here is a question calling the conduct of the hon. member in question. But we have had other examples of this before, and I would just like to remind the house of a statement made by the former leader of the opposition against the Right Hon. Mr. Howe. There was no question here of a charge of the nature of the McGreevy case. In this case Mr. Howe rose and made these remarks, which will be found in the debates of March 5, 1951, page 901:

> That is the cheapest remark that has ever been made in this House of Commons. C. D. Howe and Company Limited has been in existence for thirty-five years. I severed my connection with it in 1935. The trade was notified, and so were the customers, that I had no association with it. I do not seek advice from it, and I do not go into the company office. I suggest that my hon. friend has gone down in the estimation of this house by such a remark. I never thought too much of him before, but I shall think less of him from now on.

Did the hon. leader of the opposition resign his seat because of this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the allegation?

Mr. Chevrier: The allegation was that the right hon. minister had an interest in the C. D. Howe Company.

Then again there is the case of Mr. A. E. Dewar, the former member for Qu'Appelle, against whom certain statements had been made both in and out of the house, and I will give the house an idea of what was done on that occasion. A statement was made by the hon. member, and it is to be found on page 29 of Hansard of 1953.

Mr. Churchill: He resigned.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, he resigned, but at least he made a statement. So did others who found themselves in similar circumstances.

Therefore I say that the precedents are not as our hon. friends on the other side have indicated. There is an intermediate position. It is not necessary in order to have the matter investigated to lay a charge. That is not the practice or the jurisprudence in the House of Commons. But it seems to us on this side of the house that there has been established a prima facie case to allow this matter to go to a committee for investigation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to ask Your Honour one question before you make your ruling? It arises out of the motion and the excerpts from the court judgment which we have included in the motion. My question is this: If this motion is ruled out of order, does it mean that no question of privilege can be raised in this house for submission to a committee which arises out of allegations, direct or implied, made against a member of this house outside the house by a judgment of a court or in some other way, unless a member associates himself with those allegations to the point where he has himself to lay a charge against another hon. member?

Mr. Speaker: I think there is a fairly clear difference of opinion on the question which the hon. Leader of the Opposition has just raised. We have had a very full and lengthy discussion of the legal principles of procedure which are involved in dealing with a motion of this kind, which purports to be a motion on the question of privileges of the house.

I feel sure that hon. members would want me to give a fully considered judgment in a matter of this kind, and as I see that no harm will be done by delaying the delivery of the judgment I would ask hon. members to give me that forbearance so that I can consider what has been said and come to what I hope will be a correct solution to a point which to my mind is of great significance. It is for that reason I make this request.

As I said, it is not a frequent occurrence in the house, fortunately, but it does involve a matter of procedure of great importance to hon. members, namely what ground has to be laid before it is the duty of the house to take under consideration as a matter of privilege some conduct of one of its members. What turns on the decision, of course, is whether this motion is debated at once or whether it is a notice of motion which stands on the order paper for later consideration and is not a motion of privilege because, as I said at the beginning, the motion can clearly be brought. At least I am reasonably clear that it may be brought by any member as a notice of motion, but if it is asserted that it is a motion of privilege, then the preliminary question is, is a prima facie case of breach of privilege of the house involved? That is the point which I shall deal with later.

May we then pass to the next order of business.

TRADE

WHEAT—MOTION FOR APPROVAL OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the order: Government notices of motion.

June 15—the Minister of Trade and Commerce—the following proposed resolution:—That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the international wheat agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

STARRED QUESTIONS

AVERAGE YIELD TO GOVERNMENT ON BORROWINGS

Question No. 69—Mr. McMillan:

What is the present average yield at price to the government, including all costs, on all borrowings made since July 1, 1957, and including the conversion loan of 1958?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 4.128 per cent for an average term of 9.629 years.

BOARD OF REFEREES CHAIRMAN, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION, TORONTO

Question No. 88—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Has the chairman of the board of referees of the unemployment insurance commission at Toronto been relieved of his duties?
2. If so, what was the reason for his dismissal?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is as follows. Chairmen of boards of referees are appointed and hold office at the pleasure of the governor in council. Mr. Cooper, the chairman referred to, was appointed in February, 1942. His replacement was made in accordance with a policy to review all such appointments and to make new appointments where it was felt necessary to do so in line with changing conditions.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

BOARD OF REFEREES CHAIRMEN, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 100—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What were the names of the chairmen on the board of referees operating under the unemployment insurance commission as of June, 1957?
2. How many of these are still acting in this capacity?
3. Have any been replaced? If so, how many and for what reason in each case?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that the answers to this question are of great length and detail I would request this be made an order for return.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May we have an answer fairly quickly?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

FERRY SERVICE, ST. JOSEPH DE LA RIVE-ST. BERNARD DE L'ILE AUX COUDRES

Motion No. 120—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

For a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports and other documents exchanged since August 1, 1958, between all persons or public bodies, and the Canadian Maritime Commission or the Department of Transport, regarding the ferry service operated by Rosario Harvey between St. Joseph de la Rive and St. Bernard de l'Ile aux Coudres, in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have had a word with the Minister of Transport with regard to this motion and also with the chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission, and as I have been supplied with the information required I wonder whether with the unanimous consent of the house I could withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SARNIA INDIAN RESERVE—LAND ACQUISITION BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Question No. 123—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications including memoranda of telephone conversations, since January 1, 1958, between the Ontario hydro or any of its officials on the one hand; and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or any officials of the department, on the other, regarding the acquisition by Ontario hydro of land on the Sarnia Indian reserve.

Motion agreed to.

TERRA NOVA NATIONAL PARK—EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 124—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or any official of the department at Ottawa since February 18, 1959, regarding employment in Terra Nova National Park, together with a copy of all replies thereto.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have no objection to this motion, except the usual reservation with regard to privileged documents.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I just put a question to the minister. Since this question does not refer to private correspondence, what does the hon. gentleman mean by "privileged documents"?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Those which have been accepted as such under the rules and practice of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. I know of no such reservation. Certainly that phrase was never used when we were in office. If it is not already quite obvious, this question is certainly not intended to cover intergovernmental communications with regard to which the phrase has, of course, been used in the past, and in these circumstances it does not seem to me that any reservation of any kind should apply.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could state more explicitly the reservation which he desires to attach to the acceptance of this motion.

Mr. Benidickson: Political reservations.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I know of no document which I cannot table, but I think it is customary that when documents come marked "personal and confidential" they should remain so.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry, subject to the reservations expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that the Prime Minister, according to the press, made a very interesting statement in the United States yesterday on the work of the Geneva conference, I wonder if he would favour the house with the views of the government regarding this very important matter.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In answer to the question which has been asked, I think it is correct to say that a crucial stage has been reached in the foreign ministers' conference at Geneva. A private meeting is being held today at which the three western foreign ministers will be tabling revised proposals for an interim solution for the problem of Berlin. The Soviet foreign minister had previously submitted proposals for Berlin which the western powers found unacceptable, particularly so because they seemed to contain a threat of unilateral action toward the elimination of western rights in Berlin if certain conditions were not met. It is to be hoped that a sufficient common basis can be found for the continuation of negotiations.

I think perhaps there would be very little which would be helpful that I could add at this particular time.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DES ORMEAUX CENTENARY—INQUIRY AS TO COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Will the Post Office Department issue a special stamp in 1960 to commemorate the third centenary of the heroic deed of Dollard des Ormeaux at Long Sault?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the choice of postal stamp designs for 1960, and we shall probably have a detailed announcement to make in this regard before long.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON STATEMENT BY PREMIER OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Labour if he has any comments to make on the statement of the premier of Quebec that employees of the provincial government should not seek to be included under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act which was introduced by a Liberal government in this house in 1940?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works, each of whom has a responsibility in this matter. Does the government intend to introduce legislation this session to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act with respect to certain misuses of our navigable waters?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act —Mr. Starr—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Benidickson: When we were discussing this matter at the time of adjournment last night I had not completed the few remarks that I wanted to make. I was drawing attention particularly to the decision made by the cabinet, and the suggestion that this decision was not in strict compliance, or adequate compliance, with section 86 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I pointed out that this section directs the unemployment insurance commission to requisition directly to the Minister of Finance for a loan. This is the first time a loan has ever been made, and I suggest this has been taken in a very casual way.

We heard references in the committee to conversations between the Minister of Labour and one member of the unemployment insurance commission, and then the minister told us he had a conversation with his colleague, the Minister of Finance. We know that on April 1 or April 2 there was an order in council authorizing a loan of $80 million, with the bonds of the unemployment insurance commission pledged with respect to the repayment of that loan. Overnight, I was confirmed in the view I held that the procedure had not been strictly complied with, and my curiosity has increased as to what went on in the latter days of March in this respect. The minister will recall that in the last sittings of the committee there were a couple of unanswered questions. These questions have subsequently been answered by the chief commissioner of the unemployment insurance commission. One of those questions was asked by the hon. member for Essex East, who inquired:

Did the commission recommend to the Bank of Canada that sales of securities be made to take care of the cash requirement for April 1959?

The chief commissioner has supplied the hon. member for Essex East with an answer to that question, and has also supplied a copy of his requisition, which is in formal form, unlike the kind of informal conversations which took place with regard to a matter of this consequence with respect to section 86 of the act, and my surprise was increased when I found that this requisition is dated March 25. We know it takes time to make submissions to the cabinet, but somehow between March 25 and April 1, this other decision was reached and without the type of requisition or request on the part of the unemployment insurance commission sitting as a commission and acting as a commission and dealing in an adequate and formal and proper manner as contemplated by the statute on something as serious as this.

Last night I made reference to the fact that while we are using hindsight as our base it turns out that perhaps this decision has not been particularly profitable for the unemployment insurance fund in that if the bonds had been sold earlier they could perhaps have been sold more satisfactorily than one would imagine at the moment because of the drop in the market value. I want to apologize to the committee, however, in that I had in mind the actual total drop from book value to present market value when I referred to $7 million. The actual drop as I calculate from April 1 to the present time would be about half that amount but that does not in any way reduce the import of my argument.

My argument simply is that a further substantial capital loss has taken place. I base this calculation on a figure of approximately 94¾. According to my notes that was the market price of the 4¼ 1972 bonds around about April 1. If hon. members had looked at the Montreal Gazette this morning they would have seen that there is a 90 to 91 quotation in connection with these particular bonds.

I want to correct the statement I made last night in this category. The proper figure would be a further drop in market value of $3,500,000 with respect to the securities which were pledged. The argument remains the same, however. Why was not the commission asked for a requisition as contemplated in section 86? Why in something of this magnitude were the investment committee avoided? What were the general financial considerations that resulted in a decision which I say was taken by the cabinet itself in a way not contemplated by the statute?

Later in our discussion I shall perhaps have an opportunity to refer to the matter which in the committee on industrial relations we regarded as very serious concerning whether or not it was proper under such conditions as we have had in the last year or so to have two senior officials who are the chief advisors on debt management of the Minister of Finance sitting as two members out of three on an investment committee concerned with trust funds of this magnitude of which almost 80 per cent comes from non-government sources.

I was looking over the report of the committee discussion this morning and in that connection I find that I was misquoted in the committee on industrial relations. At page 379 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence dated June 9, 1959, when questioning Mr. Coyne I was reported as having said:

These witnesses—

Of the investment committee. I continue:

—were brought here on the motion of two government supporters. There is every justification to decide whether or not there is any possibility of having a dual responsibility or incompetency, as Mr. Martin said, in the investment committee—

Neither the hon. member for Essex East nor I used the word "incompetency". The word we used was "incompatibility". I am sorry this has remained so long in the record without my noticing it. I think that is confirmed by the final sentence of my remarks on that page where I am quoted as using the word "incompatibility". That was the word I had used previously. I went on to say:

That the committee said, is not so; that there has been no incompatibility—

"Incompatibility" rather than "incompetency" was the word I have consistently used in connection with this type of review.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon when I had occasion to speak briefly on this clause I dealt with two points. The first was the confusion which has been caused by this government and the second was the arrogance shown by this government with its tendency to use its vast majority to ride roughshod over the wishes and advice not only of the opposition but of various organizations throughout Canada.

This morning I received a letter which beyond any shadow of doubt bears out both points I made yesterday. I should like to place this letter on the record and then deal with the matters it raises. The letter is postmarked St. Catharines, Ontario, and reads as follows:

In the office where I am employed we have received (a week or more ago) from unemployment insurance commission, Ottawa, under date of June 1, 1959, their bulletin No. 20 advising changes in contribution and benefit rates effective June 28, together with table of amounts form UIC 465 (4-59).

Upon calling the local unemployment insurance commission for two more copies of these bulletins for use in our office, I was told they knew nothing about the matter, that they had no information, and did not believe the changes were in effect. I was advised to ignore the information!

I later called the post office, and they said they had had people coming in all day asking for the new stamps—which I was asking for—and that they knew nothing about the matter.

Does this mean that such changes have to be passed by legislation and, if so, does it mean that Ottawa has printed and sent out this advice, ignoring parliament? I am greatly disturbed at the thought. At the very least it is a muddle of muddles with local unemployment insurance office and possibly offices, not being advised.

I do not know how this came about but it illustrates the two points I raised yesterday, the confusion caused by this government throughout the country and its arrogance.

The hon. member for Hull placed on the record a list of organizations that presented briefs to the government on the measure before us today. This list included the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Labour Congress, the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto, the Vancouver board of trade, the Canadian Retail Federation, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Construction Association and there may have been others.

Something else of interest came to my office today and possibly it reached the offices of other hon. gentlemen. I refer to a newsletter issued by the department of economic development of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I mentioned yesterday that the actions of this government have had the effect of making strange bedfellows throughout this country. I never thought I would see the day when I would be in relatively complete agreement with so many things promoted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. It has not been my experience in the past to find myself in such agreement with many of the things they say. The newsletter contains some things that I think are very pertinent to the debate before us now. In the second paragraph it says:

At that time the executive council urged the government to appoint a representative commission of enquiry to examine the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Act as to sources of drain, coverage and financing before any increases in unemployment insurance contributions are made.

Surely, this is a very reasonable request. I think that when a C.C.F. member finds, as I said before, that he can agree wholeheartedly with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, then surely there is no reason why this government should not take this into consideration. Farther down in the newsletter the following appears:

> The chamber brief held that over the years there has been a gradual attrition of the insurance principles and actuarial soundness of the unemployment insurance fund, brought about by working into the provisions of the act arrangements that were never contemplated under the original concept. The view was expressed that before a large increase in rates is added to the existing structure, the whole basis of unemployment insurance should be examined and that in addition to reviewing areas of drain and alternative financing, examination be given to the restricted coverage now in the act, with a view to seeing if excluded groups cannot now be properly covered.

Is that not exactly what the members of this group have said, not only this year, last year or the year before, but for many years in the past? Still farther down in this newsletter we find this:

> The spokesman for the executive council made it abundantly clear—

This is the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce:

> —that the brief was not in any way opposing the principle of unemployment insurance. Indeed, reference was made to the fact that the successful operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act has been a strong bulwark against the hardships that workers suffer from unemployment, and has been a factor in maintaining the purchasing power that has held down the recession.

We find, Mr. Chairman, that we can go along in complete agreement with these remarks of the chamber of commerce.

All these organizations that I have listed have presented briefs to this government. I do not know exactly what answers they received from the government, but I am sure they would fall within some of the categories I have here which have been so often expressed in this house by the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet. I am sure the statements given to them will fall somewhere in those categories: that it was being given consideration, or serious consideration, or continuing consideration, or active consideration, or sympathetic consideration, or due consideration, or proper consideration, or careful consideration, or further consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or still further consideration.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I am sure it would fall into one of those categories, because those categories are becoming all too prevalent in the replies which we receive in this house from the Prime Minister and the other members of the cabinet. I think it goes to show, Mr. Chairman, just how empty and hollow are all of these considerations which are being given to these various organizations by the present government. I would say further, Mr. Chairman, in view of this letter which I have just read, it is shown very clearly that all of these considerations, regardless of what adjective goes with them, mean nothing whatsoever because it is quite apparent that the government had already made up its mind, strictly aside from anything that the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition may say, or strictly contrary to any advice given by any organization in this country. The government had already made up its mind what it was going to do and that they would just go through the motion of presenting it to parliament.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the action referred to in this letter is an insult to all of these organizations; it is an insult to the opposition in this house; it is an insult to parliament itself. I would ask the government even at this late date to reconsider this matter. It is still not too late to redeem itself. It still has time to convert this fund and put it on an insurance basis and not just on a purely political basis.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the hon. member takes his seat, may I ask him a question? I was engaged in something else at the time. When my hon. friend spoke at the outset he referred to a letter that had been sent out by the unemployment insurance offices, I understood, to someone in a particular community in Ontario. Would my hon. friend be kind enough to say what the effect of that letter was and would my hon. friend indicate the purport of the letter? If I understood it correctly, it would seem to represent a very serious situation which calls for response at once on the part of the government.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to accede to the hon. member's request. I said this letter was sent from St. Catharines, Ontario. The first paragraph reads:

> In the office where I am employed we have received a week or more ago from unemployment insurance commission, Ottawa, under date of June 1, 1959, their bulletin No. 20 advising changes in contribution and benefit rates effective June 28, together with table of amounts form UIC465 (4-59).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will have to pursue this very serious matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Pickersgill: I was recognized.

Mr. Starr: All right.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister would like to reply—

Mr. Starr: No; go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want in any way to interfere with the minister's reply.

Mr. Starr: You did.

Mr. Pickersgill: If he wishes to reply briefly; otherwise, I want to speak about something which the hon. member for Timmins was also speaking about, namely the newsletter issued by the department of economic development of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Unlike the hon. member, I cannot find myself wholly in agreement with this newsletter, though I fully sympathize with the main point made by the chamber of commerce which is, I think, the point that was made by us at an earlier stage in the debate, namely that there are certain groups and they are not just fishermen. I may say that the fishermen very much resent the fact that they are always singled out. There are other groups who are also seasonal workers which are a much bigger drain on the fund than fishermen; but I admit very readily there is a situation that ought to be corrected. It is the situation of those groups which have been progressively added, and when we were in office we included some of them.

Mr. Starr: All of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is saying the present government has included nobody.

Mr. Starr: All of the seasonal groups that are now under the fund were included by the former government. All these anomalies were created by the former government. The hon. gentleman invited me to answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I merely asked a very simple question.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member does not want an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister loves to make speeches. When one word would do the minister always uses 10.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You are no shrinking violet yourself as far as speaking is concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: At least I once in a while rise in my place when I speak. I do not always speak from my seat, as does the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, though I occasionally do speak, I hope, with a little more effect.

I want to come back to this matter. The Minister of Labour has given the Liberal government credit for bringing under social security all the seasonal occupations in the country and I thank him for giving us that credit. I am very proud of the fact that we did it but I admit—and I have never pretended to the contrary—that by themselves these groups do, taking one year with another, probably draw more out of the fund than they pay into it. I have taken the view—I do not mind admitting that I took this view even when I was a minister—that for these groups some special provision should be made out of the treasury into the fund. In considering this matter we should not forget that everybody who is insured gets a contribution from the taxpayer because, under the present law, the fund as to 20 per cent comes out of the treasury. So that the insurance of none of these groups is completely actuarially sound.

In fact, there are two elements in unemployment insurance. One is the element of insurance and the other is the element of social security, if I may put it that way. That has been the situation from the beginning. The addition of seasonal workers has undoubtedly increased the proportion of those who are covered by social security and I think it has increased the grounds for a larger contribution from the treasury.

But what I and the people I represent object to are these statements that seasonal workers of any kind should be removed from the operation of the act and put into some special scheme. I will state very briefly why the fishermen resent that. Fishing everywhere on the Atlantic coast is a seasonal occupation and the men who pursue the fishery want to be able to use the stamps they get from fishing and combine them with the stamps they get from logging and other occupations at a time when there is no fishery in order to work as long as possible and still be covered. We do not want to put a premium on idleness. We have never wanted that, quite the reverse. I understand that the chamber of commerce changed its position considerably from the time it first appeared before the committee until it left and I hope there are others who have also changed their position because it would be a very retrograde step in my view to try to cover fishermen, loggers or any other seasonal group by some other scheme than the unemployment insurance scheme.

But I agree completely with the hon. member for Timmins who spoke a few moments ago that the fund does need replenishment from the treasury on a larger scale for these groups than it does for those who approach more nearly to being actuarially covered by their contributions. In order to emphasize the point, and this is repetition, I want to say again that it would be a very retrograde step to bring fishermen or loggers or, in my view, any other group of seasonal workers out from under the operation of the act into any other scheme, no matter how beneficial that scheme might be.

Mr. Regier: I wonder whether the minister has an answer to the rather serious charge made by the member for Timmins.

Mr. Starr: I have endeavoured to do so on two or three occasions but there are too many who are very anxious to take part in the debate at this time. It is not a serious charge at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is serious.

Mr. Starr: Did the hon. member for Essex East say something?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said I thought it was serious.

Mr. Starr: If the hon. member for Essex East can contain himself sufficiently for me to give the explanation—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Parliament is a very important body.

Mr. Starr: I think I appreciate parliament far more than does the hon. member for Essex East, for various reasons. With regard to what the hon. member for Timmins has said about bulletin 20, I was not aware of it but the unemployment insurance commission has sent me the following information. Bulletin No. 20 for employers had to be prepared in anticipation of the bill being passed. They were not to be issued unless and until the legislation was passed. Unfortunately and inadvertently some of them were placed in the mail last week, and the commission assures me that there was no attempt to circumvent parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: I take it from that statement that a great deal of the preparation for the new regulations and benefits has actually been going on. I would not think it would be practical for the unemployment insurance commission to anticipate that the minister would probably be successful in putting through this unpopular bill.

Mr. Starr: If it is unpopular, I do not see why there is this opposition.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister knows that nobody came before the committee to make representation whose complaints did not exceed any commendations they had.

Mr. Starr: Then I cannot understand the opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You cannot?

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he cannot understand the opposition. Will he tell us specifically what he means by that?

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River says that this is a very unpopular bill. Therefore I would presume that he and the hon. member for Essex East would like to have the bill passed.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This bill is unpopular because it is unjust, it is unfair because the minister persists in imposing additional contributions of almost $100 million on the workers and employers of the country and giving $20 million or thereabouts in benefits. That is what is wrong with the bill. Further, what is wrong with this bill is the fact that the fund has been put in a perilous state as a result of some of the policies of this administration, policies for which the Minister of Finance is largely responsible.

Mr. Starr: Of course, that is the opinion of the hon. member for Essex East and I for one would not pay too much attention to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think what the Minister of Labour has said is an insult to every member of the opposition. To suggest that we would want to put through unpopular legislation just for the sake of creating some unpopularity for the government is a most unworthy imputation. We are here trying to do our best for the sake of the people of Canada and the minister has made an unworthy suggestion.

Mr. Starr: Let the people of Canada decide that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is nothing unusual for the hon. member for Essex East to give free rein to his imagination and indulge in a multitude of slippery and baseless accusations. His speech yesterday, to be found at page 4798 and following of Hansard, represents a new high in my opinion on the part of the member for Essex East in making false accusations, false charges.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I certainly think—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —I am rising on a point of order. The minister saw fit to remain out of the house yesterday in spite of the undertaking of the day before. The minister has said that I have made false accusations. You can say that in your judgment I have made an inaccurate observation, which is quite different, and I ask the hon. minister to withdraw his remark.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my remark is not only parliamentary but correct. It is an expression that has been used in the house quite often. To refer to the charges that have been made as false charges is not unparliamentary. I and other members have used that expression in the house and in this case it is, as I shall proceed to show, an accurate observation with respect to many of the statements made yesterday by the member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The first assertion that the member began with was that there is some fundamental incompatibility in the positions of the members of the investment committee under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act. If there is any incompatibility in that respect it was created by parliament itself, and was there before we came into office, for we have made no change whatever. There has been no change whatever in the case of two of the three members of the investment committee. The gentleman who represents the Minister of Finance on that committee is the same gentleman, the deputy minister of the Department of Finance, who was there before I became minister of the department. He is a highly competent and qualified person to sit on the investment committee and I do not propose to make any change in that respect.

The governor of the Bank of Canada was there before we came into office and we made no change. The only change made followed the retirement of an assistant deputy minister in the Department of Labour. His successor in that department was appointed to take his place on the investment committee. There has been no change in the structure of the committee since we came into office, and if the hon. member is talking about incompatibility of positions then I suggest that his quarrel is with the legislation enacted by parliament and also with the government of which he was a member which was responsible for the creation of this situation. If there is incompatibility he and his colleagues created it. That is my first observation about incompatibility.

But the hon. member went on from that, in his imaginative flight compounding these false charges that he levelled against the government, to say that the members of the committee were in a dual position. The members of the investment committee were not in a dual position. They discharged their responsibilities under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act and there was no interference with them whatsoever. There was no duality of interest or responsibility on their part.

The whole basis or the whole argument of the hon. member for Essex East was that there was some kind of subtle interference with the members of the investment committee in their decisions with regard to the purchase of bonds or the conversions of bonds. Mr. Chairman, there has been no interference whatsoever with the members of the investment committee in their free decisions with regard to the acquisition of obligations of the Dominion of Canada in accordance with the provisions of this act. There has been no suggestion made to them at any time as to what obligations they ought to invest in. There has been no interference of any kind whatsoever. They have their responsibility under this act and, as Mr. Coyne stated in the evidence he gave to the industrial relations committee, they performed their duty to the best of their ability and they have done so without the slightest interference on the part of the government or of any minister of the government. I trust that statement will dispose of the second false charge in which the hon. member for Essex East indulged himself.

Next—and I am taking them as I find them in this extraordinary speech of his which is full of aberrations and excursions into the realm of fiction—he said that there was some fault on the part of the investment committee in that they did not sell out all their holdings of bonds something like a year ago and realize on them all because the bond market in this country, like the bond market in the United States, weakened after that time. As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was frank enough to say this afternoon, the opposition in this respect is proceeding on the basis of hindsight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not say that.

Mr. Benidickson: Not on that point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I suggest that it would not be unfair to ask the hon. member for Essex East if he foresaw in the summer of 1958 the course of the bond market in the next year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are you asking me that question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If he did so, then I suppose he sold out all his bonds in the summer of 1958 and proceeded then—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —to take advantage of any weakening in the bond market that has taken place since that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Finance must learn to respect the Chair and to observe the rules of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What the hon. member means is that the Minister of Finance must learn to respect the hon. member for Essex East.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. minister for whom, on most occasions, I have a high regard, has asked me a question. Does he wish me to reply now?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member will have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do not ask me these questions then if you will not allow me to reply.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said that if the hon. member for Essex East had all this foresight that he expects of others we can presume that he liquidated his bond holdings last summer and has made a fortune since then because anybody who had the foresight that he expected the investment committee to use in the summer of 1958 could not have failed to make a fortune on the basis of that foresight.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the minister do that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not know whether or not the member made a fortune, if you are asking me that question. But I am saying that if the hon. member for Essex East had the foresight that he evidently expected of the investment committee, that would unquestionably have been the result.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister misunderstood my question. I asked does the minister admit that anyone who had the foresight could have made a fortune?

An hon. Member: You changed your question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Anybody who could foresee the trend of the market in that space of time could always, I should say, make a fortune, from the movement in the market.

Mr. Benidickson: Can you sell bonds short without owning them?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend had better ask the hon. member for Essex East about that matter.

The next observation on the part of the hon. member for Essex East was that there had been book losses, and he tried to associate the introduction of the present bill with the alleged book losses. Mr. Chairman, actual losses occur only when securities are liquidated. The hon. member is talking about book values of obligations of the Dominion of Canada that are held by the investment committee. He is not talking about losses that have occurred. The loss that occurred, as was indicated earlier, was a loss of $10 million. But he has gone on from there into astronomical figures on the assumption that the unemployment insurance commission proceeded to liquidate all its holdings. It has not done so.

I remind the hon. member for Essex East that, as against the actual loss of $10 million on sale, when his government was in office there were losses in precisely the same way; but he does not face up to that fact. He does not say anything about it. I remind the committee that in the last month in which the former government was in office there was a $2 million loss in that one month in respect of realizations by the commission on its holdings of Dominion of Canada obligations. It will therefore be seen that there is nothing new or unprecedented about this experience. It has occurred previously.

But let us go further with this question. The hon. member says that this matter has something to do with the present measure. The reduction in the book value of the commission's holdings of Dominion of Canada obligations has nothing whatever to do with the introduction of the present measure. It was a most palpable pretence on the part of the hon. member for Essex East in the deliberations of the committee on industrial relations to pretend that this bill arose out of the fact that there has been a shrinkage in the market value of bonds. Mr. Chairman, the complete answer was given to the hon. member for Essex East by Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada and chairman of the investment committee, when he appeared before the committee on June 9. The fact is and it is incontestable, that the situation with regard to the bond market had nothing whatever to do with the introduction of this present measure. This present measure is designed to put the contributions to the fund on a basis of equality with the outgo from the fund, based not on any short period but on the average over a period of the past five years. That is the simple basis. The present measure will not do more than that. It is not based upon a period in the winter of 1957-58 or the winter of 1958-59. It is not built up to meet the withdrawals from the fund at the rate that prevailed in those two winters. It is based on the average over the last five years. I say to this committee that that is a sound and fair approach and that this bill has nothing whatever to do with the bond market or any shrinkage in the market value of bond holdings of the unemployment insurance commission.

Then we had from the hon. member for Essex East another charge which has no foundation or truth in it whatever, and it was echoed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I did not expect the hon. member for Essex East to exercise very much care in the statements that he has been making on this subject. He has been engaging in utterly reckless statements all the way through at the various stages of this measure. But I will say to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that I expected from him something a little more responsible than simply to echo the errors of the hon. member for Essex East.

The hon. member for Essex East says that the terms of the statute were not observed in the matter of the loans because there were no requisitions. That is his statement. You will find it in his speech of last evening. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said the same thing last evening.

The hon. members have taken it upon themselves to make an assertion as if it were a statement of fact that there were no requisitions pursuant to the terms of section 86 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and that the Minister of Finance proceeded to make loans to the unemployment insurance commission, a number of them, without having any requisition. Mr. Chairman, the statements made by both these members of the opposition are completely wrong. There is no truth in their allegations that there were no requisitions.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister table the requisition he speaks of?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall have reference to those requisitions right now. The terms of section 86 are to this effect:

(1) Where the amounts standing to the credit of the unemployment insurance fund in the consolidated revenue fund are not sufficient for the payment of benefits under this act, the Minister of Finance, on the requisition of the commission, may, . . .

(b) on the security of such obligations, credit further amounts to the unemployment insurance fund . . . on such terms and conditions as the governor in council determines.

When speaking in this house on second reading on May 14, I gave the house full information concerning the two orders in council which gave authority to the Minister of Finance to make these advances to the unemployment insurance commission and determine the terms and conditions upon which those advances should be made. The act does not say that those requisitions must be in existence before there is any approval given. It says that the Minister of Finance may, on receiving the requisition of the commission, make advances on terms approved by the governor in council. That was done. The terms of the statute were observed literally and in the spirit.

Mr. Chairman, there was a series of requisitions on this subject. The first of these came to the Department of Finance from the unemployment insurance commission properly transmitted through the chief treasury officer of the unemployment insurance commission. The first of these was on April 3 and it reads as follows:

In accordance with authority contained in order in council P.C. 1959-383, dated April 2, 1959, will you kindly arrange to grant the unemployment insurance commission a loan of $10 million on April 7, 1959.

That was the first requisition and the others were in the same form. There was a requisition—

Mr. Benidickson: That was after the loan decision was made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These hon. members evidently still have not read the statute, and they are back in the same position and labouring under the same confusion and mental fog as they were in the debate on second reading. The act says that the Minister of Finance may on requisition from the commission make loans to the commission. In each case where a loan was made by the Minister of Finance to the commission, a requisition was received from the commission. No loan was made to the commission without the proper requisition from the commission being first had and obtained.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member has just indicated that that is not the case.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have just indicated that that is the case, and the hon. member for Essex East is just going round either in a deplorable mental fog, or he is still engaging in utter recklessness in these misleading statements which simply pour from him at any time he rises in this house to speak about unemployment insurance. We have adhered to the statute to the letter. I think it is quite clear, that the hon. member for Essex East evidently does not wish to know what the statute provides because it cramps his freedom in saying these foolish and misleading things which we have now come to expect from him.

I proceed now to the next of the errors, those numerous and egregious errors, of the hon. member for Essex East. The last one is to be found at page 4802 of yesterday's Hansard, and here he was saying that the Minister of Finance had applied some pressure on the unemployment insurance commission to persuade the commission to acquire bonds of the Canadian National Railways bond issue of January, 1958. Mr. Chairman, there is not a word or tittle of truth in the statement made by the member for Essex East in that regard. At no time have I ever made a suggestion or a hint to the members of the investment committee under the Unemployment Insurance Act as to how they should proceed to invest. They have a trust laid upon them by parliament and it is to parliament that they are responsible for the discharge of that responsibility. Never have I interfered in the slightest degree with their right, their freedom and their responsibility to make the investments that commend themselves to that very capable and competent investment committee acting pursuant to the terms of this enactment of parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: On this point, Mr. Chairman, would the minister indicate if the Bank of Canada is not his agent in the matter of sales not only of government of Canada bonds but government of Canada guaranted bonds?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows quite well that under the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act the Bank of Canada is the fiscal agent of the Minister of Finance. But what has that to do with the matter now under discussion? The situation was the same when the former government was in office.

Mr. Benidickson: I said that in the industrial relations committee.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The situation was exactly the same when the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was parliamentary assistant to the minister of finance, and we did not hear then any of this silly, vapid talk about any incompatibility of the functions of these very competent men. I think the government can consider itself fortunate that it has in the investment committee under the Unemployment Insurance Act three men of the competence of those who now constitute that committee. I do not know how the public interest could be more competently served than it is by those men.

I wish to refer to the attempts made by the hon. member for Essex East and the exhibition he put on in the industrial relations committee, making long speeches under the guise of asking questions of the governor of the Bank of Canada when he appeared as a witness on June 8. It was an exhibition of which I am sure only the hon. member for Essex East among all hon. members of this house is capable.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend is too modest. I can remember him recently in past days.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, however it may be, I think the hon. member for Essex East is in a class by himself when it comes to putting on these matinee performances. He is pre-eminent as a matinee star in this House of Commons, and I was told he was at his matinee best in his conduct in the standing committee on industrial relations. He did not give the witnesses a chance to answer questions; he just went on making long speeches. This was the way he asked his questions; it was a series of propaganda harangues. Mr. Coyne had at least an opportunity to get a word in once in a while, sufficient at any rate to enable him to make it crystal clear that all the nonsense the hon. member for Essex East had been talking about bond values, conversion loans and investments, had nothing whatever to do with the circumstances which gave rise to the necessity of introducing this bill; that is simply a matter of equating the contributions to the fund with the outgo from the fund on the basis of a five-year average, which is a sensible spread.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say to you that we have had to listen in this house to a compound of one false charge upon another brought by the hon. member for Essex East, and in the speech he made last night I do not think there is one thing he had to say that had any basis in fact, that had any relationship whatever to the responsibility of the government. He has just recklessly put aside the facts here and engaged in a series of charges which has not behind them the slightest tittle or basis of truth.

Mr. Benidickson: Now the debate will start all over again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that my friend the Minister of Finance, after the many fine tributes he has paid to the member for Essex East, would expect that hon. member to acknowledge those tributes in a spirit of gratitude.

They touch me so deeply, I must say, as to be almost beyond my ability to properly acknowledge them. I thank the minister for his high estimate of my worth—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I overestimated it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I only wish I could reciprocate but I find that the hon. gentleman in this particular matter, and particularly in the highly emotional state of his last utterance, is not deserving of reciprocity.

I hope the Minister of Finance will not think I am ungrateful or that I do not fully appreciate his own high motives. I can only say to him that notwithstanding his tributes, we in the opposition feel we have an obligation not to be unduly influenced by bouquets of this sort, and that we should continue to discharge our duty as we see it. As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has indicated, this most unusual interruption from the Minister of Finance, who has learned the art of being phlegmatic, has dodged continuously the real issues of the indictment which members of the opposition have made against this administration.

The Minister of Finance has not, of course, taken the committee into his full confidence, and I hope he will do me the honour of listening to what I have to say, because I think he should reflect carefully on what I am going to tell him. The real reason for the hon. gentleman's outburst of impatience for his undue sarcasm, for his use of words the meaning of which he has not fully comprehended is, I am sure, because the hon. gentleman is in this particular matter charged, by implication, with having failed in his budget to disclose to this nation the full obligation which he intended to impose by way of additional taxation. That is the reason for the hon. gentleman's impatience and concern today.

The hon. gentleman brought in a budget in which he imposed some $350 million of taxation on the people of Canada, notwithstanding the fact that his government and he himself had promised to reduce taxation without disturbing existing benefits. Having done that, a few days later through this bill, the hon. gentleman, resorting to back door tactics, imposes, or seeks to impose by this method, without raising any benefits and without changing the pattern of benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, an additional burden on certain groups of taxpayers in this country. I am sure this act of the Minister of Finance has never been paralleled by any of his predecessors. The hon. gentleman laughs, and I know why he laughs. I know he does not like this. He did not like it when I mentioned this subject on a previous occasion.

When the Minister of Finance introduced his budget he should have told the country that within a few weeks the Minister of Labour intended to bring in this particular measure imposing an additional burden of taxation on the people of this country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? When he talks about this not having been done before, has he completely overlooked that this was precisely what was done when the Unemployment Insurance Act was introduced by a Liberal minister and that when it was amended by Liberal ministers, on every occasion it was not introduced as part of the budget but was kept quite separate from it and was not referred to in the budget?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman usually seeks to clothe his arguments with some material. All he does now is to wear an old coat, and that old coat does not appear well on him. The minister does not answer one argument by a denial. That is all he has done. I remind him that we have made certain charges against this government predicated on the fact that we are disturbed by this particular bill which imposes on the workers and employers of this country a responsibility which we believe belongs to the government, a responsibility which this government is not discharging. That is the reason for our concern, and the reason we have gone into the operations of the investment committee was that we feel that certain decisions taken by that investment committee have resulted in actual and in-book losses in the security holdings of the unemployment insurance commission, and because of that circumstance this government, faced with a fund which is in a perilous state, has had to find methods of restoring the fund to a financial state which will permit the characterization of it to one no longer in a perilous state. That is why we have referred to the operations of the investment committee.

There is nothing we on this side of the house have said which warrants the implication by the hon. gentleman that there is no appreciation of the competence of the personnel of the investment committee. We have acknowledged their competence. As he said, we were responsible for their appointment, and the former government would not have made these appointments if it had not felt that the men appointed were competent individuals. That is not the point. The point is that the policies of the hon. gentleman, his policies as Minister of Finance, have placed the members of the investment committee in a most difficult position. Any incompatibility about which we have spoken has arisen because of the financial policies of the hon. gentleman, and he knows that what I am saying is the case.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I know it is nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister said that these members of the investment committee had been appointed by the previous administration and that if there is any blame attached to their operations and their judgment, then the government which appointed them should bear the responsibility for it. What the hon. gentleman forgets is that at no time when that investment committee was in existence during our administration did its duties conflict in any way with the general interests of the nation or the policy of the government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member forgetting that the values of bonds in the market were dropping from 1955 to 1957; in other words, that throughout the last two years of the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member the same situation faced the investment committee as has faced it since?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right. There is no denial of that. But that is not the question. It is a characteristic speech gratuitously uttered by the Minister of Finance, and he has missed the point. And that is the sad thing about this whole situation—that he does not understand the point which is involved in the very serious criticism which causes him at this moment such laughter at a time when it should be causing him serious consideration—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am laughing at you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and when he should be indicating to the country that he is really concerned about the problems and welfare of the people instead of treating this matter in the cavalier manner in which the hon. member for Eglinton, the Minister of Finance, is treating it now.

What the hon. gentleman fails to realize is that the previous administration did not present the investment committee with a situation involving a huge deficit. It did not present the investment committee with a situation where there was an extremely high level of unemployment causing an unusually large drain on the fund. What the hon. gentleman has not pointed out was that the previous government did not embark on a program of bond conversion which was contrary to the interest of the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "nonsense".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I certainly do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us see how much nonsense there is in this. My hon. friend introduced his bond conversion scheme. Under that scheme he and the Prime Minister in addresses to this house and at Canadian clubs and at organizations of all kinds and over television using every conceivable vehicle urged the people of Canada to convert victory bonds into the bond conversion scheme.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is more of your imagination.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister joined my hon. friend in this great outflow of Eglintonian rhetoric.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not appear before any groups of women or Canadian clubs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister joined with my hon. friend in urging the Canadian people to convert their bonds into this scheme to which the Minister of Finance has been dedicated. I am not arguing this point now but while my hon. friend may claim that the bond conversion scheme was a desirable operation I say that it was not desirable for the investment committee to convert the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th victory bonds in the amount of over $300 million under that scheme. Certainly it was desirable that the fund should have remained liquid because there was going to be a heavy drain on the fund. What I say my hon. friend by his program caused the members of the investment committee to do because of the dual position in which they found themselves was to invest in long term securities that were not at that time in the interests of the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They made a free decision.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says they made a free decision.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They certainly did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us see how free that decision was. Here the deputy minister of finance by virtue of his office must have been associated as the loyal servant he is with the Minister of Finance in the prosecution of the bond conversion scheme; a member of this investment committee in one particular status urging the people of Canada to convert their bonds and in another capacity as a member of the investment committee being called upon to consider the extent to which he as one member of that committee should participate in long term investments of the unemployment insurance commission. How was he a free agent? If the deputy minister and the governor of the bank had invested those securities in short term securities, as they should have, in treasury bills, or if they had sold them on the market—a market which at that time was supported by the Bank of Canada—they would have, I am sure, run into the criticism of the Minister of Finance who with respect to the largest trust fund in our country would have said, "How can you justify not investing this money in the bond conversion scheme when we, including you, are urging the people of Canada so to do? How can you justify putting these securities into anything other than the bond conversion scheme?" The Minister of Finance says that these officials were free agents. I say they were not free agents. I say they were confronted with a conflict of interests and a conflict of duty, a serious conflict that should have been removed by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Grafftey: How?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How? I have already indicated that. It could have been removed by coming to parliament and amending the act thereby releasing these highly competent individuals from the conflict of interests which confronted them as a result of the policy of bond conversion of my hon. friend.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says I was absolutely wrong in attributing in any way his having anything to do with the decision made by the investment committee to invest some $15 million or $17 million in the 1958 $300 million Canadian National Railways issue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member a question before he leaves that point?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What are the facts of that? Let us examine the situation in detail.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Before my hon. friend leaves the conversion loan and the decision of the investment committee to convert its holdings of victory loan bonds into the conversion bonds, would he permit a question? The hon. member will recall that this occurred last summer while parliament was in session. With the foresight that he has enjoyed why did he not at that time raise this question in parliament while the conversion loan was in progress? Why did he not raise this question as to the alleged incompatibility of interests? Why did the hon. member wait for a year to do that, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I do not mind my hon. friend putting questions to me but I do not want him to make any more speeches. The reason I hesitated to answer his question is that every question he asks is in the form of a speech. I will answer the hon. gentleman's question right now concerning why I did not do it last year. I will tell him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, with all your foresight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I had had the information that the members of the investment committee had and if I had had the information about government policy that was in the mind of my hon. friend I would certainly have unhesitatingly recognized that there was a conflict of interest between the bond conversion scheme and the interests of the unemployment insurance fund, and I would have come into this house and urged that section 20 of the act be amended so that it would be possible for this house to authorize the government to nominate members of a committee that would be free from any conflicting interests. I certainly would have taken that course.

My charge and my indictment against the Minister of Finance in particular is that he did not take that course. Instead he left the members of the investment committee in this very difficult position where they had conflicting interests and conflicting obligations. As a result of that investment—whether or not my hon. friend considers a book loss important—the fact is that in addition to the realized loss of over $10 million there is this unrealized book loss of $62 million and that represents a serious situation because this fund must at all times, particularly in the face of heavy unemployment, be in a liquid position so that the contractual obligations of the unemployment insurance commission could be performed for the benefit of the insured working population of Canada.

As a result of the investment in this bond conversion scheme, not only have there been these losses but these securities are tied up away beyond the time accorded certain large corporations in this country. Certain corporations in Canada participated in the bond conversion scheme at the outset but there is one corporation, and the minister knows the name of that one, which in spite of its heavy investment was permitted to retire from the bond conversion scheme and invest its securities in shorter term securities and in some cases to actually sell its bonds on the open market receiving 100 because the price of the victory bonds at that time during the months of July and August, September and October, 1958, was supported by the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, that simply is not true. The hon. member has made a serious statement which is completely untrue. Any person, or any corporation—or anybody—who subscribed and signed a binding subscription for conversion loan bonds was called upon to carry out the contract. There were no exceptions made. The innuendo and the statement we have just heard are baseless and represent another false charge.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend suggests that I am advancing a false charge. I ask him at this time if he will deny that some time between the months of July and August, September and October, a large insurance company in this country that had decided to participate in the bond conversion scheme was able to extricate itself from that obligation and with the proceeds representing almost 100—because the price was supported by the Bank of Canada—was able to re-invest its securities in other forms of investment? Will the minister deny that that is the case?

The Chairman: Order. I must remind hon. members that we are discussing the Unemployment Insurance Act and this present discussion is completely out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, with great respect I say that it is in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, in view of the very serious statement the hon. member has just made let me say that if he is saying to me that anybody or any corporation, insurance or otherwise, was permitted to withdraw from a binding contract, there is no truth whatsoever in his statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see as to whether or not there is validity in what I say.

The Chairman: Order. The question has been asked and answered. I still declare that this debate is out of order.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, may I simply say this. If you examine the minutes of the industrial relations committee which examined this bill you will see that the investment committee was called before that committee for examination of the investment of this very substantial fund. The interest earnings alone are a very considerable factor in connection with the establishment of rates, assessments, benefits and everything else. Some $270 million of earnings on interest alone have resulted from the investment portfolio. I simply must point this out to you, because I think you have overlooked the fact that this was pertinent to the committee which held the investigation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, before the end of this debate I shall show whether my statement is without foundation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can tell you right now it is without foundation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I give my hon. friend the opportunity to examine not only it but other cases as well. My hon. friend will recognize that in the month of September—I think on September 15—some $17 million worth of the commission's participation in this bond conversion scheme was sold at a satisfactory price supported by the Bank of Canada. If that was possible on September 15, it was possible on a program basis in between, let us say, early in July and the end of October. If that course had been followed the fund would have appreciated; there would be more money in the fund now and it would not have been necessary perhaps for the government to come to parliament and ask that we increase contributions on the workers of this country from 25 per cent to 56 per cent in order to keep this fund in a replenished state.

My hon. friend diverted me from the C.N.R. issue. I asked him the day before yesterday, when we were discussing the financing of the C.N.R., whether or not any decision taken by the board of directors of the C.N.R. with respect to borrowings it proposed to make were as a result of collaboration and concurrence by the Minister of Finance and he replied yes. Therefore, my hon. friend knew of the decision of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways to float this issue—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in January of 1958. My hon. friend says "of course". Now, last year—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You surely do not think I would give a guarantee without knowing about the issue?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course he knew about this. I presume there was a meeting between the president of the Canadian National Railways and the minister or some other appropriate officer of the Department of Finance. I say the facts are that that issue was not popular when it was offered.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend can deny it. I say these are the facts. This issue was not one that was readily taken up and—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You just do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —when the unemployment insurance commission decided to invest $15 million in that issue, they took a loss—because a year later the bonds sold at around $85 and $89—that could have been avoided. I suggest that one of the reasons why the unemployment insurance commission securities were invested in that particular issue was for the same reason that the securities of the unemployment insurance commission were placed in the bond conversion scheme of my hon. friend. I say, in the first place, there was participation in the bond conversion scheme because that was regarded as one way to stimulate, to encourage and to popularize this controversial bond conversion plan. The reason that $15 million of the unemployment insurance commission securities was invested in the C.N.R. issue at 4 per cent, maturing in 1980, was that that was an unpopular issue and it would have popularized it for the public to have known that funds contributed to by workers and by the employers of this country were being invested in the C.N.R. issue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say further that when the minister concurred in the decision to have this loan he must have had knowledge of the intention of the investment committee to make this investment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was a bad investment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): At the time of the approval of the C.N.R. loan?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, I did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he did not. I accept his word; I have no other course. If he says he did not I believe him; but I say the facts are so significant in their implications as to cause one to wonder greatly whether or not the unemployment insurance fund has been used to bolster up doubtful programs of finance, which were very close to the heart of this government, and particularly to the Minister of Finance. In any event, we have had our lesson. The Minister of Finance sees the situation now. He knows that there is conflict of duty and function. Whether he admits it or not there is a conflict of interest between the members of the investment committee when the same gentlemen are participants in the debt management policy of this government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I just denied it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend denied it. The more denials he makes the more ridiculous he makes himself in this particular situation. Here we are asking for further contributions from the employers and the workers because of bad judgment in the investments of the unemployment insurance commission, as well as other contributing circumstances.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is absolutely untrue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that is not true. That is no argument. I am stating the facts here.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are making ridiculous statements and utterly untrue statements.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am trying to show why this government is trying to saddle the people of this country with a form of hidden taxation not disclosed in the budget in order to relieve this government of responsibilities which it should be courageous enough to shoulder. That is the situation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would not be permitted in this house to say what you are trying to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the members of the two opposition groups had not persistently in the committee, in the face of great opposition, in the face of great obstruction, sought to elicit some of these facts we would not have been able to demonstrate to the Canadian people why this bill is so inadequate and undeserving of support. No wonder the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Labour Congress, les syndicats catholiques, and the director of the united automobile workers and others have protested against this bill. They have protested against this bill because it represents one of the unfairest and most ill-conceived propositions ever put before parliament by a government of this country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I hope it will be fully appreciated by the members of the committee just what it is that the member for Essex East has been saying. I offer the committee this extract from the evidence of Mr. Coyne, the chairman of the investment committee, given to the standing committee on industrial relations, in part, on page 363 of the committee's proceedings of June 9. Here is what Mr. Coyne had to say to the committee about the work of the investment committee:

> We did what we thought was in the best interest of the fund, and we have done this throughout the period when we, or our predecessors, have been acting as an investment committee for the fund.
> The fund is not one which can quickly, or in large volume, switch out of one kind of security into another. There are times when it seems desirable to do that, but usually it can only be done on a limited scale without taking a loss, or indeed having an adverse effect on the market.
> In the circumstances, it is our opinion we did what was in the best interests of the fund as we saw it from day to day, week to week, month to month and so on, over this period.

The member for Essex East says that the committee should not have converted their bonds. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, if they had not converted their bond holdings of the remaining victory loan issues, the fifth to ninth inclusive, their holdings would be worth much less today than are the conversion bonds into which the committee converted its holdings. Moreover, they have by that conversion added 1¼ per cent per annum to their interest yields on their holdings of those bonds, and that is a very substantial gain to the unemployment insurance commission. The fact remains—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With pleasure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend say that if the securities amounting to $300 million had been sold on the open market at a time when these bonds were backed by the Bank of Canada they would not have yielded a greater principal and income return than the situation that now exists?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That would depend entirely, of course, on what was done with the proceeds. This is what the hon. member for Essex East does not face up to. He says, "Oh well, the investment committee should have foreseen that the values of all bonds were going to drop in the markets of this country and of the United States and therefore they should have sold them in the summer of 1958". What would they have done with the money? You see, Mr. Chairman, evidently he is assuming that the money lies idle or that at some time or other it would have been invested in something more profitable. He has made a series of assumptions of that kind—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and if the hon. member for Essex East has that kind of foresight in relation to the bond market then he is either a mighty success in the bond market himself or he is depriving himself of the legitimate fruits of a foresight that is not possessed by any other person in this country. I do not think that the people of this country—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question? My hon. friend overlooks the fact that the unemployment insurance fund does not have the status of a private investor. There were reasons why the fund should have cash on hand. It had heavy obligations to meet. Thousands were out of work as a result of the policies of the government. That is why they should have been in a liquid state. My hon. friend says, "What would they do with the cash?" They would have given that cash to the unemployed in our country in accordance with contractual obligations.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, does your mind carry you back five, ten or fifteen minutes ago when the hon. member for Essex East complained that when I asked him simple questions I was introducing statements? It is very interesting now to sit back here and listen to him ask a question which is but one more declamatory speech full of the same kind of errors and misleading propaganda as practically all his interventions in this debate and quite on a par with the way he conducted his questioning in the standing committee on industrial relations.

I tell the hon. member again that the transactions on the part of the investment committee in 1957, 1958 and 1959 have nothing whatever to do with the bill. They have nothing whatever to do with the reasons for coming to parliament for the enactment of this bill. If the bond market had not weakened this measure would still be here because it was necessary to bring into balance measured over a reasonable period of time, in this case the last five years, contributions to the fund and outgo from it, and nothing that the hon. member for Essex East has said in these aberrations of his will change that fact.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the Minister of Finance going to be with us tomorrow as we continue discussion of this bill? I have a few questions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Why not go ahead and ask them?

Mr. Benidickson: I will indeed but I was wondering how much we would get from the presence of the Minister of Finance and his interventions in the debate. He made the point in connection with some of the references to section 86 that there had been no interference with the investment committee with respect to acquisitions. With respect to the decision to sell or not to sell, on that point it seems that the cabinet has in this case intervened with respect to a decision not to sell and has completely avoided the advice of the investment committee. We heard the governor of the Bank of Canada state in the standing committee that he was not consulted about this matter by the unemployment insurance commission. Did the Minister of Finance consult him when he had the responsibility for taking to his colleagues in the cabinet a decision of this import, a decision to lend $80 million involving the question of whether or not that was the right thing to do as opposed to selling Dominion of Canada securities? Did the Minister of Finance consult the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As the governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out in his testimony before the committee, the investment committee has nothing whatever to do with operations under section 86. Their responsibility is with regard to investment. The responsibility created by section 86 is on the commission, the Minister of Finance and the governor in council whenever there is a question of a loan by the Minister of Finance to the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Benidickson: We have been discussing this question of dual responsibility. As one of the members of the investment committee with a responsibility established by parliament, Mr. Coyne said that he had nothing to do with the decision to sell or refrain from selling securities of the unemployment insurance fund. In his other capacity as governor of the Bank of Canada, a capacity which we have suggested might at times be incompatible, did the Minister of Finance consult the governor of the bank when a decision had to be made by the cabinet with respect to whether or not securities of the fund should or should not be sold?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not recall having any discussion with the governor of the Bank of Canada about the question of loans by the Minister of Finance to the unemployment insurance commission. I have said already that the investment committee has nothing to do with that question.

Mr. Benidickson: It was with respect to his other capacity that I asked the question.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there any change in the plans for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker. We will continue with this debate and then take the estimates of justice.

Mr. Pickersgill: They will be followed by veterans affairs?

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: There will be no finance estimates this week?

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the Minister of Public Works say whether the Minister of Finance will be here tomorrow?

Mr. Green: It would seem that the hon. member for Essex East has lost his courage and is not willing to ask the Minister of Finance himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He will not talk to me.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

OPENING OF TRANSPORT TERMINAL, GANDER—OFFICIAL ATTENDANCE

Question No. 465—Mr. Argue:

1. Will an official party be sent from Ottawa to attend the opening of the Department of Transport terminal in Gander, Newfoundland, the week of June 15th, 1959?

2. If so, what is the name of each person, their position with the government, in what department?

3. By what means will the members of the party travel to Gander, on what date do they leave and on what date do they return?

4. What is the estimated cost of the travelling expenses to be incurred, and by what agency will they be paid?

5. What accommodation has been provided for the members of the official party at Gander, and for what length of time?

6. What is the estimated cost of this accommodation and by what agency will it be paid?

7. What is the estimated cost of the official reception opening the Gander air terminal and by what agency will this be paid?

8. Will there be any persons travelling with the official party who are not attending the opening of the Gander terminal in an official capacity?

9. If so, what are their names, the reasons for inclusion in the official party, what is the cost of their transportation and accommodation, and by whom will this be paid?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Hon. George Hees, Minister of Transport, and Mrs. Hees. J. R. Baldwin, deputy minister of transport. A. de Niverville, director general of air services, Department of Transport. J. R. K. Main, director of civil aviation, Department of Transport. H. C. Connolly, director, construction branch, Department of Transport. W. A. Ramsay, chief architect, Department of Transport. F. G. Nixon, director of telecommunications, Department of Transport. Dr. Andrew Thomson, meteorological services, Department of Transport. Mr. H. A. L. Pattison, civil air and communications attache, office of high commissioner for Canada, London, former director of civil aviation for commission government of Newfoundland and former manager of Gander airport, and Mrs. Pattison. Mrs. R. Taylor, associate private secretary to the Minister of Transport.

3. D.O.T. aircraft departing Thursday afternoon, June 18, and returning Friday evening, June 19.

4, 5 and 6. Expenses other than transportation will be reported in normal manner by departmental officials concerned. No special accommodation has been provided.

7. Treasury board authorized an expenditure up to $1,250 by Department of Transport.

8 and 9. Hon. George C. Marler, who was minister of transport during earlier construction of the new terminal building at Gander, and whose expenses at Gander will be his own private concern.

APPENDIX A

CHICAGO DIVERSION—NOTE FROM U.S. GOVERNMENT

Excellency:

I have the honour to refer to your note No. 184 of April 9, expressing the concern of your government with regard to legislative proposals to increase the diversion of water from lake Michigan at Chicago, which are now pending before the United States congress.

The department transmitted copies of this note to the committee on public works of the United States Senate on April 16. Additionally, the department has been giving careful study to its contents with particular regard to the allegations therein that certain enumerated agreements and understandings between the United States and Canada would be broken should unilateral action be taken to increase the diversion from the great lakes watershed at Chicago. It is to be noted in this connection that the department is not in accord with all of the points made by your government in the aforesaid note and consequently must reserve its position with respect to those allegations of a legal nature contained therein.

The department considers that further consultation between representatives of our two governments might prove useful. Accordingly, we would be pleased to receive the views of your government on the desirability of such consultation taking place in the near future.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration, for the acting secretary of state:

Ivan B. White

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN (ESSEX EAST)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JUNE 17

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege. In today's unrevised edition of Hansard at page 4829 I am correctly reported as having said:

The Prime Minister referred to this same judgment as an alleged finding. No prime minister—

Then there was an intervention by the Prime Minister:

An alleged finding?

The Prime Minister's words are there to be scrutinized and observed by everyone. The Prime Minister said that. While this might be understandable in the mouth of a lay prime minister, it certainly is not proper for the Prime Minister, a distinguished advocate in the criminal courts of our country, to refer to a finding of a judge as an alleged finding. Whether we agree with the decisions of our courts or not, once those decisions are made then unless appealed they must not be referred to in the language used by the Prime Minister as "alleged findings."

At page 4827 of the unrevised edition of Hansard now on our desks the following words are given as being the words in the concluding part of the Prime Minister's speech of yesterday:

—a charge on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of wrongdoing by a judge.

My question of privilege is that this change in the unrevised edition of Hansard alters the meaning of what I said. What the Prime Minister said was "a charge on the basis of his opinion and belief in respect to the alleged findings of a judge in that direction." These were the words I took down as being the words uttered in this house yesterday by the Prime Minister. I find that this is confirmed by some of my colleagues who likewise took down the Prime Minister's words. But lest there be any doubt in the matter I have yesterday's Hansard blues which confirm what I myself took down and which read as follows:

A charge on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of a judge in that direction.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the matter be left at this point, as the Prime Minister should have an opportunity to comment on it, and he is not in his place, and is involved in the point of privilege raised by the hon. member.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park) presented the seventh report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ATOMIC ENERGY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF ATOMIC POWER STATION

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is to begin immediately the final design and to plan for early construction of a large scale atomic power station. The plant is estimated to cost about $60 million exclusive of design and development costs, and could be completed and in operation late in 1964 or early 1965, at a site yet to be determined.

Known as CANDU, Canadian deuterium uranium, the power station will produce 200,000 kilowatts of electricity and will use a natural uranium-heavy water system. It will be similar in general principles of operation to the NPD—nuclear power demonstration—atomic power station which is now under construction near Rolphton, Ontario, as a joint project of A.E.C.L., Ontario hydro and Canadian General Electric Company Limited. The NPD station will produce 20,000 kilowatts of electricity when it goes into operation in 1961.

In February, 1958 A.E.C.L. was authorized to establish a nuclear power plant division in Toronto to carry out design and development studies for a large scale power plant. This was to be an advanced stage of the work that was previously done in a CANDU feasibility study at Chalk River during 1957. The work of this division, together with results of development work at Chalk River and the design work on NPD done by the Canadian General Electric Company Limited in Peterborough, has increased the confidence of the engineers and scientists involved in these programs to the point where they are convinced that a large scale natural uranium-heavy water atomic power station offers the best promise of producing economic atomic power in large base load units in a public utility in Canada.

In addition to substantial support in the design of this CANDU station, Ontario hydro will provide a site, co-operate in its construction, and operate it as a unit in its power distribution system. Ontario hydro will buy the power produced and will purchase the plant when it has demonstrated that it has suitable characteristics for hydro's power system. The formula for the purchase price would permit production of power from CANDU that is competitive with the cost of power from modern, coal-fired power plants of a similar size.

The increase of confidence of Canadian scientists and engineers in the possibility of success in achieving economic power with the natural uranium-heavy water system, coupled with the growing need for a new source of power and for markets for uranium, resulted in a decision to go ahead with the CANDU plant sooner than was planned early in 1958.

In some areas of Canada, particularly southern Ontario, the hydraulic sites remaining to be developed are limited. Thus there will be an increasing dependence upon coal-burning stations. Ontario hydro has estimated that if nuclear generated electricity were not available at a competitive cost by 1980 it would have to be importing from the United States 26,500,000 tons of coal annually at a cost of some $300 million.

Other areas in Canada will also need to supplement their present sources of power in the coming years, in order to meet the continuing growth in the demand for electricity. For example, by the late 1960's Manitoba and the maritimes may be considering installing large power stations of the 100,000 to 200,000 kilowatts size. The utilities which foresee a potential application of nuclear power in their systems are interested in the construction of a large nuclear power station at an early date so there will be a proven unit when their requirements materialize.

Although only about 75 tons of uranium will be required for an initial fuel loading of CANDU, an amount relatively insignificant when the size of Canada's uranium production is considered, nevertheless as economic nuclear stations are demonstrated the possibility is increased that they will be installed around the world, thus opening up a substantial non-military market for uranium.

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): I am glad to hear this news from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I suggest to him that the logical place to put this plant is beside the plants at Deep River or Rolphton. The hydro-electric power commission developed at Des Joachims about 450,000 horsepower, and that energy was directed to southern Ontario so the natural heritage of the section of the country that I represent was taken away from us. Here is an opportunity, because of the shortage of power in our section of the country and because we are anxious to secure industry, to divert part of this power from the transmission lines going to southern Ontario and other parts of Ontario and retain it in my section of the country, which is Renfrew county. I should be very happy indeed if the minister would consider this situation and see whether he cannot do something to assist us to secure further industry.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group listened with great interest to the very important statement just made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a statement of national importance and of growing importance in the years to come. We are very pleased to hear of this development of atomic power for peaceful purposes and to know of the contribution that Canadian scientists are making to this development and the contribution this development will make to the economic advancement of Canada as a whole.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF MOTION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION ON TODAY'S ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the motion standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, I trust it will be agreeable to the house if I render my decision on the point of order which was debated yesterday at the opening of the session tomorrow morning.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

SUGGESTED CHANGE OF NAME FROM DUCK ISLAND TO DULLES ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the leader of the house whether the government is giving consideration, and it will perhaps require consultation with the provincial government concerned, to the changing of the name of Duck island in lake Ontario to Dulles island?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. I am not an expert on the names of islands, lakes and features of that kind.

Mr. Herridge: Is the minister ducking the question?

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO OVERSUBSCRIPTION OF NEW BOND ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Was the recent loan involving $200 million in government of Canada bonds oversubscribed, and in what time?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as was announced to the public this loan was fully taken up, and the allotments made of the two issues were as follows: 2¾ per cent bonds due April 1, 1960, $125 million; 3 per cent bonds due December 15, 1960, $75 million. As to the time, I may say that the announcement made on Monday morning when the wires were sent out in the usual course was that the books would open on Monday evening and would remain open until at least eight o'clock eastern daylight time on Tuesday evening. They were actually closed at 9.30 o'clock eastern daylight time on Tuesday evening. In that hour and a half subscriptions were still coming in, and it was to equalize conditions as between eastern and western Canada that the issue was closed at 9.30 Tuesday evening.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED SIGHTING OF UNIDENTIFIED SUBMARINE OFF BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I regret that I was not able to give him notice of it.

An hon. Member: We know why.

Mr. Fraser: That was the note that was passed down to you from above.

Mr. Drysdale: It may be a better question than usual.

Mr. Howard: I was just waiting for the noise to subside to say that my friend has given expression to his usual stupidity.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pickersgill: Nail it down.

Mr. Fraser: —this morning when we came in here not just one person but a dozen or more saw a note passed from the gallery above to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid there is no question of privilege involved in that. Will the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Howard: Is the Minister of National Defence able to give the house any information regarding the reported sighting of an unidentified submarine off the coast of British Columbia?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, from time to time there are reported sightings of unusual objects off both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada. In all these circumstances an investigation is carried out by our naval and air forces.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Have any of these investigations led to any information which would indicate that there are submarines of foreign nations operating in our waters?

Mr. Pearkes: In nearly every case these investigations have been carried out in parts of the ocean beyond the territorial waters of Canada. I am afraid I cannot give an answer to the hon. gentleman regarding the results of these investigations, as that procedure would be contrary to the public interest.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL-KINGSTON—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF PILOTAGE DUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, the acting minister of transport. He might take this question as notice. In view of the dispute between pilots of the Montreal-Kingston district and the shipping federation, why has not the minister had the pilotage dues approved by the governor in council as required by the Canada Shipping Act? Will the minister see that they are approved without delay?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

HEALTH INSURANCE

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the New Brunswick minister of health was in Ottawa this week, can the minister advise the house whether an agreement has now been signed with New Brunswick under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the agreement has not yet been signed but negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. McWilliam: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister consider obtaining the concurrence of the New Brunswick provincial government with regard to tabling the documents in this matter?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker. However, I think these agreements or copies of them are automatically tabled after they are signed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not unless they are asked for.

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement made by the premier of Quebec yesterday with regard to his view on hospital insurance, does the minister not think this might be a propitious moment for him to show the effectiveness of his initiative by seeking to persuade the premier of Quebec as to the desirability of Quebec's participation in the scheme of hospital insurance in Canada?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the hon. member's usual lengthy questions. I think there was some intimation that there was a lack of initiative on the part of the minister?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Thank you very much. I should just like to point out that more initiative has been shown by this department in the last two years than was shown in the preceding several years. Not having seen the article referred to by the hon. member, I shall withhold comment.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether any progress has been made toward renewal of the trade agreement with the Soviet union which expired last February?

[Mr. McWilliam.]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had a series of conversations with the representatives of the U.S.S.R. I hope very soon to be able to announce the conclusion of an agreement.

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR RECIPROCAL TREATMENT ON EXPORTS TO U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a question of the minister. My hon. friend will recall that a few weeks ago I asked him a question about a trade agreement between the United Kingdom and the Soviet union under which the Soviet union was given the right of selling in the United Kingdom automobiles made in the Soviet union. I asked the minister whether he would not give consideration to taking steps toward providing at least the equivalent opportunity for sale in the United Kingdom market of automobiles manufactured in Canada.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes; consideration is always given to the hon. member's suggestions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will we ever get any results? That is the point.

Mr. Churchill: We will get far better results than you were ever able to produce in this house.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act—Mr. Starr—Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great care to the evidence given in the committee on industrial relations by the governor of the Bank of Canada, by the deputy minister of finance and by others. I do not want to criticize anyone personally, but I cannot help but believe that the members of the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission, by virtue of their positions there and in also directing the fiscal policy of our country, have a dual role. By nature of their positions in this dual capacity they cannot help but have duties which are in considerable measure diametrically opposed one to the other.

This position becomes more evident at a time when we have a falling bond market, and at a time when it is difficult for the Minister of Finance to dispose of bonds to the public. The fund contains many government bonds, and according to Mr. Coyne at one time there were more bonds in this fund than in all the insurance companies combined. I take it that the economic outlook is and should be available to the members of the industrial relations committee. I take it also that estimates about future unemployment are available to them from the Department of Labour, and if the Department of Labour does not supply this service it certainly should do so.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to give one example of which many might come to mind where the dual capacity of the investment committee would come in evidence, where their interests could and possibly did conflict. There was a time last fall when the Bank of Canada supported the price of the new conversion bonds. They supported these at par or near par. Suppose we assume that they thought these bonds were going down in price and they had every reason to think they would be going down because they had to support the price of these bonds, would this not have been a good time, therefore, for the investment committee to sell enough bonds and buy treasury bills to meet all possible obligations they might have in the unemployment insurance fund for a year or more? This might have been calculated from the economic outlook which was denied to us, and also from reports of the Department of Labour. To have sold them would have made it better for the fund but worse for the Bank of Canada supporting the price of these bonds. To keep them, as they did, made it worse for the fund but better for the Bank of Canada and the bond market, and therefore better for the Department of Finance.

Surely there is a conflict of interest here, and no amount of talking on the part of the Minister of Finance could convince me or many other people in Canada otherwise. I do not think it is humanly possible for any man, no matter who he is, to serve two masters well. It is natural that the Minister of Finance would want to keep bond prices as high as possible in order to get interest rates as low as possible. It follows that anyone working for the Minister of Finance, whether or not he had direction from him, would have the same wish or the same aim. Supposing the fund needed cash as it did long ago, and on two or three occasions in the last year; would not the deputy minister of finance have conflicting interests in his dual position? He would have a responsibility to the fund; he would have a responsibility to the Minister of Finance as well, because if he sold these bonds it would depress the market. I think Mr. Coyne told us that if they sold these bonds in any volume at all it would depress the bond market. I know the Minister of Finance would not want this to happen, and he has an employee under his direction who is torn, we will say, between two ideas; should he sell or should he not sell?

We know that the bond market has gone down in spite of this. The bond market is going down regularly and certainly is going down very fast if you start to compute the high interest rates paid on treasury bills and the true net cost of the recent bonds as announced this morning, and which were oversubscribed. This net cost to the treasury is something out of this world.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is apparently beginning to discuss an issue of bonds sold this week. What on earth has that to do with the measure now under debate? We have had debate straying, goodness knows, all over creation in committee on this first clause of the bill. Certainly there is nothing in this week's bond issue which has the slightest relationship to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I do not think you were in the chair at the time, but yesterday the minister himself discussed the price of bonds. He discussed the foresight and the hindsight of selling bonds. He discussed the conversion bonds in connection with raising money for deficits and for payments in connection with the unemployment insurance fund, and if he had that right yesterday I think I should have the same right in the same committee today.

The Chairman: Order. It is quite true that during the course of this debate various speakers on both sides of the house have somewhat strayed from the item under discussion. For the sake of good order and in order to respect the principle of relevance, the Chair must ask hon. members to please adhere strictly to the matter under discussion. The fact that at other times the Chair has possibly permitted various speakers to stray away from the item under discussion is no reason for the Chair to permit speakers who are debating this issue today to stray away from the principle of relevancy. Consequently it would be appreciated if all members tried to limit their remarks to relevant items in this debate; otherwise it will be necessary to repeatedly call to order various speakers. Therefore may I ask that as far as possible all speakers adhere to this item under discussion.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect allow me to say that, as can be seen in the 10th report of the industrial relations committee, we discussed there every financial structure which might in one way or the other affect the unemployment insurance fund. As the industrial relations committee went into the matter of the treasury bonds acquired by the commission at the time of the conversion loan in replacement of debentures, and since the industrial relations committee has now tabled its report, it seems to me we should be allowed to examine the whole financial structure which affects the unemployment insurance fund. I therefore submit that the minister is wrong when he contends that we are out of order in dealing in the regular way with matters which were discussed in committee. It has been the standard practice in the house to allow discussion of evidence brought before the committee. For that reason, I ask that the hon. member who has risen be permitted to pursue his remarks.

The Chairman: I listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). As a matter of fact, it is quite logical that matters which were dealt with during the meetings of that committee be discussed in this debate. However, the issue of bonds or debentures which took place yesterday certainly has not been discussed by that committee.

Now, I will ask hon. members to limit their remarks to the section now under study. I want to point out to hon. members that, under a quite specific rule of this house, continuous repetition is not permitted. Consequently, it is to my mind reasonable that hon. members should restrict their remarks to the subject now before the house and refrain from a continuous repetition which draws out the debate and makes it perhaps somewhat irksome for the committee chairman and for hon. members themselves.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we want to co-operate with you. We fully appreciate the heavy task which is yours. I am convinced that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) has no intention of speaking indefinitely on this matter. He is only referring to it incidentally. I mean yesterday's loan. He was just mentioning it in passing and I believe you will find that as the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) pointed out, there will be no difficulty in that respect.

The Chairman: I quite understand the point made by the hon. member for Essex East. I am convinced that the hon. member for Welland does not propose to carry the discussion into a field which might involve infringement of the standing orders. I merely wish to suggest to hon. members that they should limit their remarks to the section now before the house, and thus simplify the debate.

(Text):

Mr. McMillan: I was just inquiring about the high cost of the current loan. The interest is 8 per cent net—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, the hon. member is going right ahead to do the very thing you have ruled out of order.

An hon. Member: It is just in passing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He is not discussing any bond transaction of the unemployment insurance fund at all. He is going on to introduce into the debate some remarks which he evidently wishes to get off his chest with regard to a bond issue sold this week. As far as I am aware the unemployment commission has made no purchase whatever which has anything to do with that transaction.

Mr. McMillan: I am sorry the Minister of Finance is so touchy about the bond issue rate, and I won't refer to that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Stick to the truth, and stick to the point under discussion.

Mr. McMillan: I will say that yesterday the minister accused us of hindsight, and gave example after example, but we cannot answer him here today. That is not fair to members of the House of Commons.

What has happened to this unemployment insurance fund? We had a $10 million loss on the sales of bonds of that fund and there was a paper loss of between $60 million and $65 million on bonds held in that portfolio, had they been sold at today's prices. We know they could not be sold at today's prices, because if they were put on the market it would decrease the prices of those bonds. Then we have $80 million borrowed at 5 per cent interest, so that leaves something under $350 million in the fund.

I think the first thing the minister must do to help this fund and to help other funds is try to create confidence in the government's fiscal policy. I cannot refer to interest rates, but certainly the hon. gentleman's policy lately has not created any confidence in fiscal policy. And when I think of fiscal policy, if I dare mention interest rates, an effective interest rate of over 8 per cent—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are we to have order or not? Is the hon. member to go on defying the ruling you have made, Mr.

Chairman? He is back on the same thing. Surely this is not a debate on the wide range of fiscal policy such as we have had a number of times already this session. Surely this is a debate, properly, on the first clause in the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. Surely, if this kind of discussion is in order, everything can be discussed.

Mr. McMillan: I will avoid that phrase "interest rate" all I can. I am out of order in even mentioning it now, but the minister mentioned it himself many times yesterday. We have two very outstanding current examples. One I should not mention, and the other is what the minister is doing to the little man, the man who carries the dinner pail. The Minister of Finance is letting him pick up the tab for the losses and depletion in the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not a word of truth in that!

Mr. McMillan: What is the minister doing in another direction? We heard it announced today, but I cannot mention it or the hon. gentleman will stand up and say I am out of order and I will be ruled out of order. I cannot mention the words or the minister will stand up. But certainly he is helping the rich man to get 8.2 per cent on his money and that is all I want to say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance said yesterday that the losses suffered by the unemployment insurance fund had nothing to do with the present bill. I want to indicate to the Minister of Finance, in case he does not know it, that during the past five years the income derived by the fund from investment has been, on an average, about $25 million. It would be interesting to know why the actuary, who is an employee of the department over which the hon. gentleman has jurisdiction, did not take that source of revenue into account when he estimated the future requirements of the fund.

If the Minister of Finance would look at the statements which were produced before the committee by the actuary, Mr. Humphrys, a distinguished public servant, and particularly at statements 4 and 5 in a table which he presented to the committee, he will find that what I have said about this $25 million revenue is correct, and also that it was not taken into account by the actuary, as I have mentioned. It would be interesting to know why this was not done.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that there are only two possible explanations. Either the actuary forgot to take this important source of revenue into account—and if this is true the probable deficit of the fund has been overestimated and the probable increase in contributions is, in consequence, too great—or the actuary felt that the investment income would be negligible in the next few years. If that is the case, then the loss in revenue is due to the mismanagement of the fund last year and particularly, as the hon. member for Welland has emphasized, during the conversion loan so dear to the heart and to the political dedications of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Hellyer: And so expensive to the pocketbook.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and as my friend the hon. member for Trinity points out, so expensive to the pocketbooks of the Canadian people. The minister certainly owes the committee an explanation.

Yesterday in his verbal peregrinations the Minister of Finance stated that it was almost impossible for the investment committee at the time of the conversion loan to foresee what would happen to the fund. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that after a good night's sleep, which I trust he had, he has now come to the conclusion that his view in this particular was erroneous.

Did my hon. friend say something? Apparently not. Perhaps I misunderstood. I thought he grunted, and I wondered what that meant.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not such a good night's sleep.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I can understand that. The minister has a lot of problems on his mind. He carries them well, but this is one which apparently he is not carrying too well.

In the first place, from July to the end of October I think it is fair to say that anyone could see that we would experience heavy unemployment during the coming winter. We on this side of the chamber certainly indicated in the middle of last August, when we were considering the estimates of the Department of Labour, that that would be the case, and so during the period of the conversion loan it was quite clear that the fund would begin soon after these months to suffer very heavy drains indeed.

It was evident also that if a high degree of liquidity was not achieved—and the conversion loan was a God-given opportunity to achieve that goal—then the fund would have to sell a large amount of securities in order to meet its financial obligations. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that notwithstanding what he said about my ability to foresee the current trends in the market, it was not necessary to be an expert in order to foresee this situation. I also suggest that it was not necessary to be a great expert to anticipate the situation with respect to the bond market and to realize that if the fund had to sell large amounts of securities it would inevitably suffer heavy losses.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance was unduly critical of me because I said the investment committee should have foreseen during the July-October period that the values of government bonds were going to drop in the fall of 1958. Here again he said this was a situation that could not easily have been anticipated. I should like to indicate what the Minister of Finance said in his budget speech which will be found at page 2411 of Hansard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is this in order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is constantly interrupting with references to being in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. Is it correct in a subsequent debate in this committee to refer to remarks made in a previous debate in the same session, when that debate has been closed and the house has terminated that matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I said I wanted to co-operate. The Minister of Finance is quite correct in his point of order, and all I can do now is to remind my hon. friend that when he presented his budget he did speak about this matter and said, in effect, what I have already indicated.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And now you are going to go ahead and read it just the same.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I am not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are going to proceed and read it in breach of the rules of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I tell my hon. friend who talks about violations of the rules of this house that I have become an assiduous student of the columns of Hansard between the years 1945 and June of 1957, during which time my hon. friend in this house sat near this very seat I now occupy, gloria mente regnante and I do not know of an hon. member who more consistently violated the rules of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is the only one who had to be sent out of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, as my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

The Chairman: Order. I urge hon. gentlemen to return to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for saving the Minister of Finance from these denunciations which I wish I did not have to make but which I am almost compelled to make as a result of these undisciplined fulminations of the minister.

I cannot, of course, refer to what the hon. member said in his budget speech, but I would direct his attention to his words as they appear at page 2411 of Hansard. He will find them a confirmation of what I myself argued yesterday, even though I did not at the time make on the minister the impression I had hoped to make and which I suspect I have now succeeded in doing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are very suspicious.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Anyone reading the statement in the budget speech to which I have directed attention would observe that in mid-June of 1958 the bond market did break sharply. Moreover in August, as we all know, the condition of the United States bond market further deteriorated.

I do wish my hon. friend would not look at me in that way.

Mr. Fulton: Good heavens; we cannot even look at you now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Here we have the Minister of Justice. I should have thought he would have enough preoccupations on his mind these days working on some legislation that will shortly come before this house instead of sitting idly by making comments about a bill concerning which he has not the slightest knowledge.

Mr. Fulton: I was reading what the hon. member for Essex East said yesterday, and I must admit that is an idle occupation.

Mr. Ricard: When will the hon. member speak about the bill now before us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In these circumstances it was easy to anticipate what would happen in Canada when the Bank of Canada would cease to support conversion bonds which, as my hon. friend knows, were supported by the bank from the beginning of July, 1958 to the end of October, thereby permitting the sale of some $17 million worth of the commission's securities on September 15 for which the commission received full value, the same value it would have received if it had held those bonds until maturity. I suggest, therefore, that the investment committee could have anticipated that situation and should have sold its victory bonds in order to acquire short term securities and treasury bills instead of accepting long term conversion bonds.

This was ably pointed out by the hon. member for Welland, who increasingly amazes all of us with his financial erudition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Welland has won the respect of this house because of the increasing manifestations of his great competence and acumen in this field.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Have you been coaching him?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would be greatly honoured if I could say so. He has been coached by our expert spokesman on finance, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Together they present a formidable team.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is his responsibility then.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We in this small group, as a matter of fact, are developing a team of financial experts—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —which if my hon. friends opposite had done when they were in opposition would have served to prepare them for the great responsibilities that are theirs now. I am sure the Minister of Finance would not have embarked on some of the fantastic financial schemes that he has projected if he had had a greater training in finance when he was in opposition during the long bitter days of hard winter—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You know what they are now.

Mr. Hellyer: Too little and too late.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know why my hon. friend shows his resentment by sitting sideways in his seat.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am trying to avoid looking at you. You are so sensitive.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Usually he confronts me with full body and now he confronts me with half body. I assure him this is conduct that shows a discourtesy to one who is seriously interested in a very important discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: His lights are dimmed to avoid the glare.

Mr. Benidickson: He is giving you the cold shoulder.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): His lights are dimmed to avoid the glare. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Finance to realize that the bill before us is one that seeks to bring about a yield of $100 million in additional revenue, $80 million of which is going to be contributed by the workers of Canada, the little men, as the member for Welland said, and the employers of our country. Before imposing this serious continuing obligation on these two segments of our population the Minister of Finance ought to get his colleague the Minister of Labour and others to reconsider this matter, as was also pointed out yesterday by the hon. member for Timiskaming when he spoke.

The Minister of Finance has predicted a possible increase in the gross national product of 7 per cent. Since that prognostication or forecast was given, the Prime Minister said in a speech outside this house that he thought —I hope I do not overstate the observation of the Prime Minister—the results would indicate that instead of a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product it would be considerably higher. As a matter of fact, I have seen in some financial journals the suggestion that it could even be double the 7 per cent. I am sure we will all welcome that.

Well, let us assume that the bright economic outlook for 1959, given by the Minister of Finance, will materialize. I point out—and this is a serious observation which the Minister of Finance must now deal with squarely —that such a recovery would result in reduced expenditures and increased revenues for the unemployment insurance fund in 1959 and 1960. On that basis, and assuming that the level of contributions was to remain unchanged, the fund would not be in the perilous state that was referred to unanimously by the members of the advisory committee. I ask the Minister of Finance, assuming that this estimate that the gross national product will increase by 7 per cent or higher materializes, will there be a deficit or a surplus in the fund?

In the answer to that question, in the final analysis, is involved the kind of policy which should be adopted with regard to the methods for replenishing this fund. If this is to be the situation, if we are to have the bright economic outlook that the Minister of Finance forecasts, I suggest to him that he ought to take a second look before imposing for all time this additional contribution from the workers of our country amounting to from 25 per cent to 56 per cent. We do not go lightly about imposing further obligations on our people, particularly those who are in the working groups, the dependent groups, the farmers and the like, without taking into consideration all possible alternative methods of dealing with such situations.

It is a serious matter to add this additional burden on the employee groups of our country. I suggest this government has an opportunity now to reconsider its position and see whether or not it can take a new look at the situation and come forward with a proposition that would at least be consistent with the suggestion made by the advisory committee that the government contribution should be increased so that it will be at least half the total contribution of the workers and employees.

I submit these observations to the Minister of Finance. We have been light-hearted in some of our remarks only because we wanted to bring the Minister of Finance down from his pedestal of anger to a pedestal of phlegmatism, because we wanted him to understand fully how serious we are in the position we take and the serious reaction to this proposal that has come not only from labour groups but from employee groups all over this country. I ask the Minister of Finance to take a second look at this matter before imposing this burden on the workers of our country.

Mr. Starr: I am sure we are all touched by the continual reference by the hon. member for Essex East to his concern for the working people of this country. When one looks at the record that has been established by the hon. member for Essex East one begins to wonder whether there is a great deal of sincerity in what he says.

Let us take a look at what happened in 1950, when the hon. member for Essex East piloted an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act through the house to include seasonal workers. Prior to 1950 the weekly earnings had ranged from $5.40 to $7.49 in the lowest bracket, and from $7.50 to $9.59 in the second lowest bracket. In the first instance the employer paid 18 cents per week and in the second instance 24 cents per week. The worker, the employee for whom such a great deal of concern is exhibited by the hon. member for Essex East, contributed 12 cents in the first category and 15 cents in the second category.

To show his concern for the workers, this is what the hon. member did in 1950. He raised these two classes. He raised the contributions not of the employer, Mr. Chairman; the employer remained the same, at 18 cents, but what did he do with the workers? He raised the worker's contribution by 18 cents, making a total of 36 cents, or a total increase in the contribution by the working people of this country of 50 per cent. He left the employers alone. In the next two categories—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give us the pattern of change and the pattern of benefit; give the whole story.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Starr: If the hon. member will withhold his curiosity, I will do that. He knows the facts. Let us proceed. I will give the whole picture to show how deeply he is interested in the working people of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, I do not mind argument.

Mr. Ricard: It begins to hurt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When the hon. member challenges my interest and sincerity in regard to labour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —he challenges something he cannot prove. I ask him to withdraw that imputation and to go on with his argument as he wishes, because I have a complete answer.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Essex East has argued that to put any increase upon the working people is not the proper thing to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is not what the argument was at all.

Mr. Starr: My point is that his argument in this respect is not borne out by what he did in 1950, when he put practically the whole burden of the increase on the working people of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the fact.

Mr. Starr: I just gave the facts and you agreed with them. I pointed out that the increase on the people who earned the lowest salaries amounted to 50 per cent, and nothing additional was put on the employers. Let us take a look at the next two categories.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame on the member for Essex East!

Mr. Starr: Let us take the next two categories. In the category of people earning $9.60 to $11.99 a week the employer contributed 24 cents and the employee, the worker, contributed 18 cents. In the category of people earning $12 to $14.99 a week the employer contributed 24 cents and the employee 21 cents. What did the hon. member do? He raised the ceiling from $9 to $14.99. The employer was not touched; the employer still paid 24 cents. The people getting those low incomes had their contributions increased to 24 cents, an increase of 30 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Starr: There was his interest in the working people of this country. He saddled them with this increase.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame on the member for Essex East.

Mr. Starr: In the other categories, from $15.99 to $19.99, and so on, he did increase the rates in the case of employers and employees; but in the case of people who earned the least, from $5.40 to $11.99 a week, he raised the rates 50 per cent and 30 per cent for the workers and would not raise the contributions of the employers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame on the member for Essex East!

Mr. Starr: I cannot understand how the hon. member for Essex East can take on this mask of great interest in the working people after what he did to them in 1950; and, Mr. Chairman, that bill was rammed through the house. It is interesting to read Hansard of that time and see how the member for Essex East would not allow any straying away from the amendments under discussion but consistently interrupted, as he has interrupted during the whole debate in the industrial relations committee and in the house on these few simple amendments.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, many remarks have been made about the workings of the industrial relations committee, and I do not intend to add to them today. However, I should like to deal for a moment with some of the observations made in the comedy act put on by the hon. member for Essex East. The hon. member professes to have a great interest in labour. He stands up, advocates his interest and pounds his desk. I may say that he does a poor job of pounding his desk. I would hate to see him appear before any labour group if he cannot do any better in pounding his desk.

Why does he not act like a labour man if he wants to represent labour? He claims to be a champion of labour, but he finds it necessary in labour committee meetings to run out for what he calls ammunition when he exhausts his list of prepared questions. Any man acting on behalf of labour would not come to a committee with a list of questions prepared for him by somebody else.

He has referred to a hidden tax being imposed upon the people who pay into the unemployment insurance fund. I am very glad to find out that the former administration had the same attitude, and that when they made provision for additional payments they were imposing a hidden tax. That was their attitude at that time. It must have been, because that is what they profess today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about the benefits that were also given at the same time?

Mr. MacInnis: I think the hon. member for Essex East has been given sufficient time to explain his points of view without asking for my opinion on them. I do not think too much of them. All we have had so far is a filibustering of the bill with talk about the merits of bond conversion and the state of the fund. I think the committee is missing the whole point. The purpose of the bill is to benefit the unemployed people of the country, and I think that should be given the highest priority in the discussion.

The workers of this country, just the same as other categories of taxpayers, naturally have an aversion to accepting higher taxes or higher payments for anything, but from my own personal experience I am quite sure that the labouring people of the country are so united that they are happy to be in a position to help their fellow workers who are not fortunate enough to be employed. Not only do the miners and steelworkers in my constituency contribute to this fund, but each and every week there is some sort of pithead collection or collection at the office to help some unfortunate person who is out of work and not able to draw unemployment benefits or relief. These men are quite willing to throw in an additional half dollar or dollar every week to help those who find themselves in such circumstances.

Mr. Peters: What about the government increasing its contribution to the fund?

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member for Timiskaming has something to say by way of interjection. I recall that yesterday he took serious objection to any interjections while he was making a few remarks. I would ask for the same courtesy from him. The hon. member for Timiskaming also said there was no need to rush the bill through. The hon. member for Timiskaming was replaced on the standing committee for some reason or other, and with all due respect to him may I point out that the necessity for having the bill passed by June 12 in order that those receiving unemployment insurance would benefit was clearly indicated to the committee.

The hon. member for Essex East has said that the legislation could have been brought forward much earlier. I think the member will also recall that it was clearly indicated in the committee by the members of the unemployment insurance commission that there was much work to be done in this regard, that they had been working on the legislation and rushing it as fast as they could, and that the bill was introduced as soon as possible. The fact that the bill was not passed by the house before June 12 for the benefit of those who are unemployed was due to the activities in the standing committee.

As I have said, all that we had there was a filibuster. The hon. member for Essex East complained about not having an opportunity to interrogate certain witnesses. All you need do to check that statement is to refer to the reports of the proceedings of the committee, and it will be seen that the member for Essex East was on record numerous times, in fact three to one against anybody else serving on that committee. He passed up his opportunities to interrogate by continuing to make suggestions and statements, and in all the times he put himself on record he asked very few questions.

That was plainly indicated when Mr. Coyne of the Bank of Canada appeared before the committee. The hon. member made certain claims about Mr. Coyne's ability to carry out his responsibilities. He has said that the members of the unemployment insurance commission and the Minister of Labour failed to bring the bill forward in time for the unemployed to benefit after June 12. He has also referred to the advisory committee and the fact that there was no opportunity to question its members. As I have stated before, it would be very unfair to call the committee before the industrial relations committee when labour itself is not represented, on account of the recent resignation of three members of the committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about Mr. Maclean? Is he not a labour representative?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes; I will correct myself, and say labour was not fully represented because of the three recent retirements. I imagine they retired possibly to embarrass the government or the Minister of Labour, but it turns out that they have only embarrassed labour. As was pointed out in the industrial relations committee, labour will want to have representation on that committee, and these men have placed labour in a very precarious position. The Canadian Labour Congress will want representation on the committee, and it is most embarrassing to them that three of their members have resigned and will have to be replaced.

Reference has been made to Mr. Burt and the telegram he forwarded to the committee. Mr. Burt took exception to the bill in his telegram. He condemned it. Yet Mr. Burt was a member of a committee that advised the commission that certain portions of the bill were advantageous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the case.

Mr. Starr: That is the case. The report shows that.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacInnis: His telegram certainly condemns the bill. I have one more point before I resume my seat with respect to the hon. member for Essex East and his interest in labour. There is no doubt about this. It is reported here in Hansard. As the Minister of Labour has just pointed out in reference to the 1950 amendments—and it was clearly pointed out to the industrial relations committee by Mr. Andras—in 1950 they were not given any opportunity whatsoever to appear. There is no doubt about that. The hon. member for Essex East was present when Mr. Andras made that statement.

Mr. Starr: They were not even consulted.

Mr. MacInnis: And they were not even consulted.

Mr. Starr: And they complained about it.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member says he has a great interest in labour. However, it is reported in Hansard that he cannot quite recall whether in 1950 he was parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour or whether he was—

An hon. Member: He was doing a great many jobs then.

The Chairman: Order. The bill that is under discussion is one to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. I must ask the hon. member to please discuss unemployment insurance.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Time after time I have sat in this chamber on the other side when the present leader of the house namely the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, pointed out that the widest latitude was always allowed in the discussion on clause 1 of a bill in committee. The Minister of Finance has had wide latitude. The hon. member for Cape Breton South, who does not take up the time of the house very often, has something he wants to say which is closely related to the bill, and I think he should be allowed to say it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Beware the Greeks bearing gifts!

The Chairman: As I mentioned in my remarks when I took the chair, although certain latitude had been permitted in previous debates on matters which were quite irrelevant to the point under discussion, I was asking hon. members to observe the rule with regard to relevancy. For the sake of ensuring order of debate in this committee the rule of relevancy will be strictly enforced by the Chair. Unlimited latitude in the discussion of clause 1 of the bill will not be permitted by the Chair, although reasonable latitude will be allowed. I therefore consider that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not really a point of order. I cannot permit irrelevant remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, although I have my suspicions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just believe in being fair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Beware the Greeks bearing gifts!

Mr. MacInnis: I have not much more to say, Mr. Chairman, other than in reference to the 1950 amendments and the action of the hon. member for Essex East in not recalling—and it is reported right here in Hansard—whether he was parliamentary assistant or acting minister of labour. I should like to say that anybody acting on behalf of labour, and who has ever had the honour or the opportunity to represent labour in this house in either capacity, should be ashamed of the fact that he could not recall whether he was parliamentary assistant or acting minister of labour. I would say that any person in this country who has had that opportunity—and I do not suggest this, as was done previously; I say it outright—of representing labour and who professes to have an interest in labour but who could not recall these dates is just, as was indicated, not interested in labour whatsoever.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, there are one or two points that I think I ought to deal with right away. They were mentioned by the Minister of Labour and by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I am not going to spend any time showing whether or not I am sincere in my advocacy of labour and of social welfare measures. I am not going to spend any time on that matter.

Mr. Ricard: The facts prove it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I can say is that I have been in this house for 23 years and my record will show whether or not I have shown any interest in the social welfare problems of the people of this country. I do not think it is fair for any hon. member of this house to criticize Mr. Andras of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. George Burt, director of the united automobile workers, and Mr. Marchand, the secretary of Les Syndicats Catholiques. These three representatives of labour on the advisory committee of the unemployment insurance commission have given long and distinguished service to the government and to the people of Canada as members of that committee. Because they resigned from that committee in protest against the principle of this bill is no reason for referring to them as individuals who have not served the interests of labour.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. These gentlemen did not resign in protest against the principle of this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see.

Mr. Starr: These gentlemen resigned because of the appointment of Mr. MacArthur.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see.

An hon. Member: Wrong again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see whether these gentlemen are in support of this bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Another slippery retreat by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance is losing his patience or losing control of himself, and that is a bad thing for any minister of the crown to do. I would suggest that the usually phlegmatic minister persuade his ebullient colleague the Minister of Labour to contain himself also.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And sit here and listen to you clutter up the record with nonsense?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The advisory committee made up not only of these three members representing labour but as well Mr. Maclean, who, as I pointed out a moment ago continues to be a labour representative and is still on the advisory committee. He joined with the employer representatives and the neutral chairman in being unanimously opposed to the main objective of this bill, as represented in their observations in the report tabled by the Minister of Labour in this house pursuant to the statute, in which they unanimously—

Mr. Starr: I wonder if the hon. member will permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When I finish my sentence. As I was saying—in which report they unanimously asserted that nothing should be done until the government contribution was increased to at least half of the total proposed contribution of the workers.

Mr. Starr: What amendments were they opposed to? What amendments were opposed by the advisory committee?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't lose your temper.

Mr. Starr: I am not losing my temper. We want facts and information, not innuendos.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This display of lack of control, this continual bellowing by the minister for vengeance—

Mr. Starr: I am trying to follow in your footsteps in that regard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —is very disconcerting—

Mr. Starr: I know it is disconcerting to you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and not really in keeping with the position of a man who is a minister of the crown.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Or a former minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or, as the Minister of Finance very properly says, a former minister. That is the main objection to this bill that was taken by these people. If they wanted to register their objections they certainly had the right to do so, and because they resigned from the advisory committee—

Mr. Starr: They did not resign because of that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't get excited.

Mr. Starr: I am trying to keep the record straight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because they resigned, that fact does not make them less worthy and sincere representatives of the workers of this country and their organizations.

Mr. MacInnis: It certainly does.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has reminded me of something. A moment ago my hon. friend reminded me that the real reason for their resigning was not as I stated, but—and I thank the Minister of Labour for correcting me—was that they objected to the failure of the Minister of Labour to comply with the act in consulting labour with regard to labour representation on the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Starr: Labour are quite satisfied with their representation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that labour is satisfied. But the large labour organizations in this country represented by Mr. Jodoin, with over one million members, have taken issue with this government and have complained about the government failure to live up to the act because the minister did not properly consult labour.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Don't lose your temper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says these three men Mr. George Burt of Windsor, Mr. Marchand of Les Syndicats Catholiques and Mr. Andras of the Canadian Labour Congress are not worthy representatives of labour because they have protested against the failure of this government to appoint a representative of labour pursuant to the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Minister of Labour has not yet told us what progress he has been able to make with the labour organizations in the replacement of these gentlemen or does he intend to give them the opportunity to return. I do not even know whether they want to return. I would say this to my hon. friend. Mr. George Burt has not supported me politically for a long time, but I do know that if he were returned as a member of this committee, as well as Mr. Andras and Mr. Marchand, he and they would be very competent and worthy representatives of labour.

The Minister of Labour, and I do not blame him for this, sought to establish that what he had done was based upon a precedent of 1950 or thereabouts. As I indicated the other day when these amendments were introduced, I was acting on behalf of the minister of labour who was otherwise engaged. I was not the minister of labour, but I am not ashamed of those amendments any more than I am ashamed to belong to a party which introduced an effective Unemployment Insurance Act—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —any more than I am to belong to a party which is responsible for every single act of social welfare on the statute books of our country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —any more than I am to belong to a party which brought in family allowances—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —which brought in old age security—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —which brought in disability pensions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that brought in—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member knows what I was going to say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes; and you, Mr. Chairman, know perfectly well why I was referring to this record of great achievement. What the Minister of Labour, demonstrating an unusual lack of self-discipline not characteristic of the hon. gentleman, failed to point out was that unlike the present instance, the increased contributions then were accompanied by a change in the pattern of benefits.

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says no. That is his argument, which is of course a very—

Mr. Starr: It was inclusion of seasonal workers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that a benefit? Does my hon. friend think the former government was doing something worth while when it gave assistance to those workers in our country who had exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and who were without any means of livelihood? Is that not something by way of benefit? The labour organizations of this country did not complain about those amendments.

Mr. Starr: This government has done more in that respect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says this government has done more. All I can say is that the little record of achievement of this government in the field of social welfare is such that if I were the minister of labour I would never make reference to it.

Mr. Starr: When you consider the record over 22 years it is not much.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not mind these interruptions. They simply reveal a troubled conscience in this particular which is giving evidence of its disturbed state.

The real fact about this matter is this. Whether or not the argument of the hon. member is correct with regard to the past—and it is not—the point is, what about this present situation? I would ask this of the Minister of Labour, and also of the member for Cape Breton South, who was pretty severe with me a few moments ago but whose friendship I think I enjoy; now and then in the committee he came to my assistance notwithstanding his indictment a few moments ago. I would like to ask him does he not think that we on this side are not altogether unjustified in our condemnation of this bill?

We are not alone in that view; we have hon. gentlemen who sit immediately to the left of Mr. Chairman who joined very vigorously with us in this matter. But is it unfair to suggest that where there are going to be benefits of $20 million or $25 million at the most under this bill, and where there are going to be further impositions by way of additional contributions of between $75 million and $80 million on the workers and employers of this country, this is a very unfair and unjust measure to put before the house?

The total revenues to be derived as a result of these amendments, including the $16 million from the government of Canada, will be $100 million. The total benefits will not exceed a quarter of that amount. In the face of—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are saying crazy things.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance says "crazy things", but I can only say to him that when he makes that kind of observation he reveals what has been apparent since yesterday, and that is that he does not know anything about this bill at all. I say to the Minister of Finance, it was his bond conversion plan and the failure of this government to do something about unemployment which caused a drain on the unemployment insurance fund and forced this government into a situation where it had to give careful consideration to arriving at methods for replenishing the fund in order to have enough money on hand to pay maintenance grants for the unemployed of this country next fall and next year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is untrue in every particular.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because the Minister of Finance accepts responsibility in this particular situation by his current interventions, this government stands indicted by this bill, as it stands indicted by no other measure so effectively, in view of its complete disregard for the rights of labour, for the rights of the employers, and in view of the complete disregard of responsibility by the Minister of Finance in the presentation of his budget. This government stands indicted by every national organization which appeared before this committee, because by this measure the government, this anaemic government, settles on the workers of our country the responsibility which belongs to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention at this time to make long remarks on this first clause of Bill C-43, but since this bill has been introduced in committee a number of members on the government side, and almost everyone from the other side who have taken part in this debate, have accused us of filibustering the passing of this bill.

Mr. Grafftey: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: "Hear, hear". Those remarks just made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South are—

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I never made such remarks at all.

Mr. Robichaud: I refer to the words of the hon. member who accused us of filibustering the passing of this bill.

Mr. MacInnis: If the hon. member refers to the remark "hear, hear", I said I had not made such a remark.

Mr. Robichaud: I think the hon. member has already forgotten the remarks he made a few moments ago, and the same remarks were made on Tuesday by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe when he said the Liberals were preventing the passing of a bill which gave benefits to the unemployed of this country. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how a bill which will require the employers and employees in this country to participate to the extent of $75 million or $80 million a year, when the benefits will amount at the most to $20 million or $25 million, can be recognized as a bill which will benefit the employees of this country.

This bill has as its main purpose the replenishment of the fund of the unemployment insurance commission, a fund which has been depleted since this government took office. A few benefits are included, such as the extension from 36 to 52 weeks and the introduction of a new clause in which deductions from higher salaries are only a blind to cover up the main purpose of this bill. Instead of accusing us of filibustering, or preventing the passage of this bill, the hon. member for Cape Breton South might have served his own electors better by supporting our protests. I should not be surprised if he is aware of a telegram which has been sent to Ottawa. The Minister of Labour must have received one, and one was sent to the Leader of the Opposition, signed by the president of district 26 of the united mine workers of America.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the date of that telegram?

Mr. Robichaud: It is dated June 16, and it reads:

> About 200 men still without UIC benefits. Approximately 1300 more miners to be added to this for a period of at least one week after the 20 June. Request consideration be given either under the Unemployment Insurance Act or otherwise. Such an emergency necessitates immediate financial assistance.

I should like the Minister of Labour to tell us what is being done to help these mine workers.

Mr. Starr: They are going back to work next week.

Mr. Robichaud: They are going back to work, and when a certain number go back to work more will be out of work.

An hon. Member: You hope.

Mr. Starr: And you are holding up the bill which would give them benefits.

An hon. Member: Doom and gloom.

Mr. Robichaud: A release was recently made public showing the employment situation as of the month of May, 1959. The minister rejoices, as we all do, that there was a reduction of over 110,000 in the number of persons who were without jobs as of May. The same report says under the heading of registration at national employment offices by regions shows a figure of 585,489, and a note at the bottom of page 2 of this release reads as follows:

> Statistics of registrations at national employment offices are derived from a count of the applications on hand in every office at close of business on a specified date. The count includes registrations from persons known to have a job and applying for another one.

In other words, it is a fact that in this country today there are over 585,000 persons without jobs or seeking jobs. In my own constituency of Gloucester I challenge the minister to show that there are not at least 1,000 persons who are without jobs, who are not receiving unemployment insurance benefits and who are not registered for jobs. In other words, there is in this country today a very large number of persons seeking work who are not registered at unemployment insurance offices because they know they do not have sufficient contributions to make them eligible to receive benefits.

If the government was sincere and wanted to help the unemployed by amending the Unemployment Insurance Act in view of the lack of work which exists in this country today, the minimum requirement for unemployment insurance benefits, and particularly for seasonal benefits, should have been reduced from the present minimum of 15 weeks. There are in my constituency many workers who cannot obtain 15 weeks of employment during the summer months to qualify them to receive unemployment benefits during the winter months, and if the government had wanted to help these workers, or the working classes of this country, this minimum period of 15 weeks should have been reduced to 10 weeks, or even to 8 weeks.

Mr. Starr: Does not the hon. member realize that following the course he suggests would impose a further drain on the fund? Is he advocating that? If so, why is he not prepared to pass this bill which would allow contributions to be increased in order that it might be possible for the workers to receive the benefits?

Mr. Robichaud: During the Liberal administration—

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes. I will tell the minister that during the Liberal administration a 15 week minimum was logical, because anyone who wanted to obtain work could do so.

Mr. Starr: That does not answer the question. But does not the hon. member recall that this government changed the formula so that people could get extra benefits, and seasonal benefits, and that this government provided an extension of two additional months, and—something which the former government refused to allow—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Labour, without even seeking to ask a question, now tries to interrupt in a great speech.

Mr. Starr: That was not a point of order, anyway.

The Deputy Chairman: All a member can do is ask whether whoever has the floor will permit a question. Then he may ask the question, but only if he has consent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Gloucester yielded the floor to the minister.

Mr. Robichaud: The Minister of Labour has admitted that under the present administration conditions were so bad that changes had to be made in the insurance regulations. I wish to repeat that in my constituency a large number of people cannot obtain the minimum of 15 weeks of employment that is required in order to qualify for benefits. Therefore I cannot agree with those members on the government side who are accusing us of preventing the passage of a bill which would provide benefits to the workers of this country.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take part in the discussion of this bill, and I think that the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), certainly are not worth commenting upon, because, as usual the former minister of national health and welfare merely dealt with the matter of protection for the workers of this country.

However, this bill is meant to increase contributions made by employees and employers to the unemployment insurance fund, because the government wants to replenish this fund which is being rapidly depleted. If the fund is dwindling so fast, it is merely because there is so much unemployment in this country, and because more is being paid out in benefits than is being paid into the fund.

According to recent figures of the unemployment insurance commission, this bill would increase the contributions of both employees and employers from 25 to 56 per cent.

I do not wish to repeat here what has already been established during the debate, or refer to the disappointment felt over this bill throughout the country. We only have to refer to statements made by the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Congress of Labour and the Canadian Construction Association. Nor do I want to refer again to what has already been established about the present status of the fund, or to the fact that, if there is unemployment next fall and next winter, the commission would have to sell its securities and incur a loss of $72 million.

However, I noted that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has specifically commissioned the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) to defend the bill, and that is what I would like to touch upon.

Mr. Ricard: I was not commissioned by anyone. I said what I personally thought.

Mr. Caron: That is why it was so poorly said.

Mr. Racine: The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot insists on pointing out that the views he expressed were his own. Indeed they must have been; they surely were not those of labour.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to quote from an article by the parliamentary correspondent of Le Devoir which certainly cannot be described as a Liberal paper. It stated on Wednesday June 17, that out of 585,489 persons registered with the national employment service, 200,042 reside in the province of Quebec. This is hardly an enviable record. The article states:

> The Department of Labour has just issued its monthly figures on employment and unemployment. The figures for May show that we are gradually emerging from the recession, but that progress is slower than might be expected in many quarters. On the basis of unemployment figures since the beginning of the year, it can be said that they are about a month ahead of last year's but still way behind those of the full employment period of 1957.

And a little farther down, the article says:

> It is therefore obvious that even if the three per cent target is reached during the summer it will be threatened during the forthcoming fall and winter unless there is some unforeseen acceleration in economic activity. At the present rate of Canadian recovery, we can hardly hope to be back to normal until 1968 . . . even then, provided we are not adversely affected by some outside influence.

Speaking in this house, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, who obviously speaks for the province of Quebec in matters of labour, made the following introductory statement:

> Mr. Chairman, I have two reasons to take part in this debate. First, I should like to make some general remarks with regard to this legislation and, second, I should like to set the record straight about the statements made by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron).

Mr. Chairman, I think that under the circumstances, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot should certainly have indicated a third reason considering that he was speaking for the Quebec department of labour in the discussion on this bill, surely he should have mentioned the number of unemployed in our province. In my view, that would have been the most substantial part of his speech.

And the hon. member went on to say:

> Mr. Chairman, the negative attitude of the Liberal opposition is inadmissible, since it is directly contrary to labour interests. All the noise made by our friends has but one purpose: to distract public attention so that people might forget about our friend's indifference to labour.

Mr. Chairman, in my view, the Liberal opposition does not need to distract public attention. The people of the province of Quebec have enough sense to read the papers and to realize that out of the 585,489 persons registered with the national employment service, the province of Quebec has 200,042. I believe that the labouring people of the province of Quebec are more interested than anyone in all social legislation which may be introduced in this house to assist them; in my opinion, full employment would be the best assistance they could get, because it is a situation that we have not had in the province of Quebec since 1957. Apparently, this government would like to put the blame for unemployment on public organizations or upon people who have nothing to do with it. As I see it, that attitude has had a particular effect on the situation of the unemployment insurance fund.

Since the session started, we have noticed that in facing unemployment, the government has always found some way to put the blame for it upon people who had nothing at all to do with the problem.

Last year, the government and the Minister of Labour extended the period of seasonal benefits. That was surely no way to provide jobs for our workers, or to reduce unemployment.

However, there again the government called upon municipalities to assume a responsibility which rested upon the government itself. And when the winter works program went into effect, municipalities lost considerable sums of money in assuming this responsibility which properly belonged to the federal government. While government members claim that this legislation was most popular with labour, I say, like others have done, especially among members of the Liberal opposition, that this measure has been most unpopular, and that the depletion of the U.I.C. fund is a result of the high level of unemployment.

Again, workers and employers are being blamed for this new problem. That is why, like others who are concerned in the welfare of workers, I will vote against the adoption of this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, just before calling it one o'clock may I suggest to the Minister of Labour that he take the Minister of Finance out for lunch today and ensure that he has a very sweet dessert so the latter hon. gentleman may not return after lunch, and we will get along with this business much faster.

Mr. Spencer: What an outstanding contribution to parliamentary debate.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I see that the Minister of Labour was unsuccessful in keeping the Minister of Finance out this afternoon.

Since he is here I should like to say that we believe the unemployment insurance investment committee should not have converted the victory bonds to conversion bonds. It is true that this applies also to all the Canadian people. It applies to the workers and the employers of this country who were enticed into the conversion hoax. Therefore it should not be thought exceptionally odd that the members of the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission should have recommended the conversion of the bonds in this particular case, although it was a disadvantageous financial transaction. This appears to be quite easy to ascertain after the fact, but it may not have been so easy to ascertain before the fact. It may be true that the officials of the treasury department believed the propaganda they foisted on a trusting public. If they did, they are incompetent to make recommendations to the unemployment insurance investment board.

The members of this board had the opportunity to listen to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when he outlined what the advantages and disadvantages of the conversion bonds were going to be. The results should have been obvious by the time the members of that committee made their decision, but I do not think that is of too much importance. I do not think we can give too great consideration to the fact that interest may be made or not made on the investments of the unemployment insurance fund, because I do not think these amendments are concerned with what happens to the money the workers put into this particular fund. What these amendments are concerned with is the additional drain on the moneys that were available for unemployment assistance, and in this regard we must give some consideration to whether the investments have been advantageous. But there are other matters which are of great importance in this particular case.

It has not been indicated by the minister —and I do not think it can be—that the workers are going to get a fair return for the money they spend. I think all workers in Canada are well aware of the fact that unemployment insurance has been advantageous to labour in general, whether it be those who are unemployed or those who are employed. The unemployment insurance fund has been advantageous to all the Canadian people and certainly to all the workers who are insured under the fund. I think they are also aware of the fact that if they want to increase the coverage of the plan they are going to have to pay for it.

Since I have represented some of those workers I am quite happy to say that they will support an increase in contributions if they can be assured that they are going to be given dollar for dollar value for their investment. If we are to talk about only that section of the unemployment insurance fund which is on an actuarial basis, where an employee will get something for the investment of a certain amount of money, then this 30 per cent should be considered on that basis. But is that true of the amendments which we have before us now? We are continually saying that we have had an abnormal amount of unemployment in Canada in the last two or three years. We also fear that we are going to have that same abnormal amount of unemployment during the coming winter, and we hope in the coming years we shall have unemployment to a lesser degree.

An hon. Member: Are you forecasting?

Mr. Peters: Whose forecasts are we going to take? I am not prepared to accept the forecast of the Minister of Finance, because his forecasts have never been right. I look around the country. I can speak only for the area from which I come, and there has been very little change in the economic structure of that area which will provide work this winter. I think the situation will be no better than it was last year. If this is repeated in 265 ridings then the situation is not going to change very drastically. Therefore I think we must consider the fact that we are going to be faced with a large amount of unemployment. This, Mr. Chairman, is something that we cannot insure against, and we should not be asked to insure against it.

Let us go back to the last war. At that time the insurance companies were faced with a great problem. They had many young people insured for life coverage. They had insured them, and they could look at an actuarial chart and tell exactly how many of those young men were going to die. This calculation was based on figures and experience over a long period of time. Then the war came. This meant that a class of people who would normally live another 30 years or 40 years could die within months, and it became a problem of insurance that they could not face. In most cases a war clause was written into the policies which were issued at that time, which completely eliminated payments on death from causes due to war. In other words the war brought into effect a new class of risk that the insurance companies had not been prepared to insure against previously.

I think this is true of the unemployment insurance fund. By actuarial calculations we can find out exactly how much it is going to cost to pay unemployment insurance benefits in a normal year, in a period of five years or in any other period; but I do not think we can be expected to ask the people to finance the risk that they are going to go through a period of cyclical unemployment over which they have no control, and over which the insured has no control. That is what we are being asked to do. We are being asked to carry the load by increasing the premiums by 30 per cent to cover the unemployment that resulted from the recession which affected the whole country. I do not think this is an insurable risk; I do not think we should be asked to insure it.

I am sure the people of Canada have received benefit from the unemployment insurance fund. I think the social security measures which have been taken in this country have been completely responsible for the fact that we did not have a catastrophe in Canada in the last two years when we had a very serious unemployment problem. If it had not been for the social security measures—and unemployment insurance was one of them—the situation would have been much worse than it has been.

This I think warrants the Canadian taxpayer in taking from the general revenues the moneys that are required to be put in the fund to equal the amount that was paid out because of the recession. Certainly the actuaries of this fund should be able to calculate what would be reasonable and regular unemployment. I think they will find it is not 500,000 people or 600,000 people. The figure of 150,000 might possibly be the number of people who would be unemployed during certain periods of each year. This might be classed as regular seasonal unemployment. I think this figure could be calculated and the benefits financed from the fund. But everything in addition to what we could consider regular in a normal year would obviously have to be classed as recession-type unemployment, and provision should be made for the payment of benefits from another fund.

Is it not unreasonable that government supporters should have risen and said that the workers want these benefits? I am quite well aware that the workers want these benefits, but they only amount to something less than $25 million. Why should the workers be asked to pay $100 million when they are going to get only $25 million back? Let the minister stand up and say that the government will provide the additional $75 million out of the treasury. If he will do that then I am quite prepared to support a plan under which the workers will only pay $25 million for $25 million in benefits.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, that would amount to less than 10 per cent of an increase.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the hon. member mind telling us where he gets the figure indicating that the workers are being asked to contribute $100 million to the fund?

Mr. Peters: Well, the amount runs anywhere from $78 million to $97 million. There is $16 million over and above the $78 million which is going to come out of the treasury, but obviously a large part of that is also going to come from the workers of the country, so the amount is somewhere between $80 million and $100 million.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): You are including in that the employers' share?

Mr. Peters: Certainly I am including the employers' share. Anybody who was a member of the committee is quite well aware of the fact that the employers' share of the contributions is considered to be a factor in the wage structure. Certainly we were informed by every employers' organization that this was a fact, and I do not think any of the employers' organizations were very much in disagreement with this statement. It is a wage factor. If it were not being paid in one form the workers would be getting the advantage of it in another form. Therefore I suggest that the workers are being taxed for something and not being told they are being taxed for it.

We have no objection whatsoever to the worker paying for the benefits he is going to receive. One member mentioned this morning that he would like to see the period of contributions reduced from 15 weeks to 10 or 8 weeks. I agree that this should be done. I was surprised when the minister rose and said that this would cost money and would we support the 30 per cent increase if this were done. I suggest to the minister that we will support some of the 30 per cent increase to take care of a reduction in the number of weeks necessary to establish the benefit period. I do not know whether or not it would cost an extra 20 per cent. I am not familiar with what the cost would be, but I think we could quite easily add that amendment and still find that in the 30 per cent contribution the worker is being charged more than he is going to get out of it, even if that additional benefit were given to the worker.

I am suggesting that we are not opposed to the worker paying for what he gets. Under any insurance plan you only get what you pay for if you are lucky. In this case the worker is paying a lot more than he is going to receive. I suggest that is not fair or honest, and I am not in favour of that type of policy. Several organizations have also suggested that we should bring the civil service within the scope of the legislation, because there are 140,000 civil servants. I do not think it is very fair to bring in these 140,000 lost souls, because they have no chance of getting anything out of the plan. They are guaranteed their jobs as long as they continue to do the work for which they are hired. They are fairly well protected. If they were called upon to contribute to the plan they would just be another milk cow, because they would not get anything from the plan. I do not think that is fair or just, and we should not adopt that suggestion in order to increase the amount of money in the fund.

Let us say that contributions to the fund are increased by $100 million this year. If unemployment continues to be as bad as it has been for the last two years I suggest that the fund will be broke before another two years have passed. We have not got enough money and cannot pay enough money into the fund on this basis to carry the scheme. We cannot carry the unemployment we have had in the last two years no matter what we do about the premiums paid by the people covered by unemployment insurance.

If unemployment continues, and I certainly hope it does not, we are going to have to come back to parliament again in a short time and ask for supplementary grants to the fund from the treasury of Canada so these payments can be continued. When that happens I think everybody will agree that is the way it should be done. In the meantime I do not think there is any point in asking Canadian workers or Canadian employers, if you want to include them, to increase their contributions by 30 per cent to raise a certain sum of money when the workers have no chance of getting a fair percentage of it back from the fund.

For that reason I do not believe the government are being very fair to the workers when they ask them to make contributions beyond the amount they can get back from the fund. It is a little bit like going to a horse race, shall I say. Quite often you bet $2 and you lose your shirt, but at least you have a chance to get back that amount or more. You are not paying $2 for something that will only return you 60 cents or 70 cents.

There is another question that has not been answered, and it has to do with the action of the unemployment insurance commission itself. According to a letter that the hon. member for Timmins read into the record yesterday the commission issued a directive to a number of employers in Canada, and the directive must have gone out very early in the month of June.

I should like to ask the minister this question. When did the unemployment insurance commission decide it was inevitable that Bill C-43 would pass through the industrial relations committee and the House of Commons without any major change, and that it should go into effect on June 28? I do not think the officials of the unemployment insurance commission have the right to say that parliament cannot make any change in the legislation. I do not think they have the right to draw up these directives without first having seen what parliament is going to do with the bill now before us. What authority have they received, and from what source, to order the amendments into effect? This is what has happened in the directive, bulletin No. 20, which they sent out to employers.

Have the officials of the unemployment insurance commission already ordered the new issues of stamps with the amounts shown on them? If they have, how could they tell what was going to happen in parliament. Does this mean that the officials of some government departments look at the huge Conservative majority and say to themselves that the Conservative majority can steamroller through anything they want; that this is what we recommended to the minister, and we are sure that the minister will produce it?

If this is true, Mr. Chairman, I think it is probably as flagrant a disregard of parliament as we have seen. I believe these allegations should be answered and we should know these particular things. The fact that these bulletins went out is only an indication that they were already published. I am not so much concerned about whether or not they went out, but I am concerned with the attitude and mentality of officials who have been able to decide for themselves, in a dictatorial way, that this is what the act is going to say; this is what the interpretation is going to be; this is the way we are going to implement it. I do not believe that shows much regard for parliament. It makes a hollow mockery of the establishment of a committee and having these people come before it, especially if there is no intention whatever of allowing amendments.

Although the opposition is very small in numbers, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it can be assumed that there is no intelligence in that opposition. This is true not only of the opposition, but I think there was a considerable amount of intelligence amongst the representatives from both sides of the fence who sat on that industrial relations committee. It is quite possible that the people who were members of that committee could have found loopholes or modifications in the proposed recommendations contained in Bill No. C-43 which should have been considered.

If we do not agree that some good could result or some further information could be obtained from the investigation by this committee, then it seems to me it is a waste of the time of parliament to establish such a committee. I think we have been wasting our time. If this is an indication of the attitude of officials of departments toward the decisions of these committees, and it is reflected in every committee on which we sit, then I think some consideration must be given to it. I feel that the officials of this department must be asked how they were in a position to write this directive; to tell people what the stamps were going to cost; when it was going into effect; where it was going into effect, and all the other matters that were in bulletin 20.

It is a surprising thing, but we endeavoured to obtain copies of bulletin 20 and we were told it was unavailable. We have applied for a copy of the table of amounts, U.I.C. 465-4-59, and we have been told this also is unavailable at the distribution office. It seems to me odd that members of parliament cannot obtain a copy of this particular directive that has been floating around the country and which has been sent to nearly all the employers in certain districts. These are matters to which consideration will have to be given before we give our agreement to this bill. Some explanation must be given as to why the unemployment insurance commission has acted in the manner it has.

Then, too, consideration must be given to why the workers of Canada should be asked to pay, directly or indirectly, nearly $100 million when they will only receive benefits estimated by the unemployment insurance commission at between $20 million and $25 million. It seems extremely odd that the workers are being asked to spend a dollar and only get 25 cents in return. I do not believe this is a good investment. I do not see how many of the members opposite are going to be able to vote for a measure of this nature. I do not think it is going to be a satisfactory answer to tell them that the 75 cents is for administration costs. Unless some further consideration can be given to this and some further explanation, I do not believe the workers of Canada are going to welcome the measure. They are not going to be awaiting it with open arms, nor are they going to want it when they get it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to speak for one minute to support very warmly what has been said by the hon. member for Timiskaming. This is not by any means the first example we have seen of this government considering parliament as a rubber stamp. After the Easter recess there was a point raised by the Leader of the Opposition that the government, in the budget papers—I merely offer this by way of analogy—referred to a statute which had never been introduced, much less passed by this house, and gave a name to a statute that did not exist at all. In addition, they represented that payments had been made that had never been made, voted or even asked for by the government.

Now we have this action taken by the government, action taken under a measure that is controversial and that has not yet been passed by this parliament, just as though what parliament did mattered not at all. It seems to me, sir, this is an extraordinary reflection upon parliament. I can imagine that there would not have been just one minute or two minutes taken up when we were on the other side if this sort of thing had happened, but this sort of thing did not happen when Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister. It happens now because there is an extraordinary carelessness at the top in this government, in watching the proprieties, in considering parliament and the way parliament ought to be treated. This government simply takes it for granted that what happens here does not matter at all.

I think the hon. gentleman has made that very clear indeed. Every conceivable device short of closure itself is used by members of the treasury bench on every occasion on which a controversial measure comes before this house. This is another evidence of that steamroller mentality that we have had exhibited on so many occasions.

I should like also to join with the hon. member for Timiskaming in what he says about this special tax on two special classes of people. It is not insurance for their benefit at all; this is for the replenishment of this aspect of the fund which, as we have maintained from the outset of this debate, should be a charge upon the treasury and not upon two particular groups of citizens.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has managed, through his customary tactfulness, to extend the debate considerably. Now that he has left the house, perhaps the discussion will proceed a little more apace.

Mr. Chairman, some rather direct charges were levelled against us. In fact, the hon. members for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and Brome-Missisquoi (Messrs. Ricard and Grafftey) in their speeches have berated me personally. I shall not take them up on it, as the member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) has done a great job of answering them. However, I distinctly remember that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, in seeking to show that the Liberals and the C.C.F. members—in other words the opposition—were really not interested in the welfare of labour, told us in pathetic tones, almost with tears in his eyes, that he knows the labouring man and that the labouring man knows him.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member's remarks were aimed at the opposition, let me point out to him that he was barely out of the cradle when I organized a store employees' union and that, in 1936, I negotiated various collective bargaining agreements in the riding of Hull, at a time when the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot had everything to learn about industrial relations.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks so far were meant as a preface to the fact that several hon. representatives, including the hon. members for Brome-Missisquoi, St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and even the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), have sought to indicate that our purpose in rising in this debate was to block passage of this bill.

For my part, I maintain that the bill is so inadequate that it would be to the advantage of labour if it did not go through. And since those hon. gentlemen claim that our reason for taking the floor is to retard proceedings, let me remind them that we suggested to them, early in the session, that the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne be adjourned so that we might consider any legislation calculated to check unemployment in this country. I remind them that they unanimously refused to accept our suggestion.

Mr. Chairman, why did not the government accept at the very start of the session, the opposition's suggestion to take up right then a bill as important as the one now before the house?

Some hon. members claim that our purpose is to hinder passage of this bill. Yet, they do not agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said, as may be seen on page 4239 of the official record of June 2:

(Text):

I do not belong to that school, nor have I ever adhered to the suggestion that beneficial discussion shall not take place on every measure that comes before the house.

(Translation):

And further on, the Prime Minister said:

(Text):

There is no question of a target date—

(Translation):

And the Prime Minister went on to say:

(Text):

—as he suggested. I for one would not to the slightest degree concur in any suggestion that we determine upon a target date—

(Translation):

Those were, Mr. Chairman, the remarks made by the Prime Minister. And yet, the Minister of Labour has set a deadline for consideration of his bill. He put off introducing it to forestal a thorough discussion of it. Well, we availed ourselves of the rights granted members of the opposition to discuss the legislation, just as my friends opposite did in 1950 and at all sessions which have taken place since I have been a member.

In fact, since 1953, they have used the standing orders of the house to extend the debate as long as possible. The pipe-line debate lasted twenty-one days without the substance of the matter having been considered at all. It was all made up merely of points of order and questions of privilege.

Mr. Chairman, we intend to consider this bill fully, and if the ministers want to take part in the debate and indulge in personalities, we intend to return to the charge and reply on each occasion.

The hon. Minister of Labour said this morning that, in 1950, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who had, at the time, introduced the Unemployment Insurance Act had, by means of interruptions and points of order, prevented the opposition from discussing the bill.

Mr. Chairman, according to a report from the Canadian Congress of Labour, in 1950 Mr. Gordon Graydon, a Conservative member, used precisely the same line of argument we are using today; and yet the situation was not the same then, because there were about $600 million in the fund at the time, and the fund kept growing, whereas today it is in perilous condition. The situation is therefore different. Here is what Mr. Graydon said, as recorded on page 214 of Hansard for February 24, 1950:

(Text):

It seems to me we have reached the limit of absurdity when we ask the workers of this country to put up more money to solve the unemployment situation. That is the government's job, not the workers.

(Translation):

That, sir, is what we contend today. It is up to the government to make up for the deficit in the unemployment insurance fund. We are told that this bill will yield $78 million or more to replenish the fund.

If we consider that the figures supplied to us are based on a five year period during which there would be good and bad years, it cannot be taken for granted that the initial year, when the winter will be as in former years, will call for less withdrawals from the fund than were made last winter.

According to figures appearing in table no. 3—

(Text):

The excess of expenses over revenue for the year, $227,948,740—

(Translation):

That means that if the Minister of Labour has to face an unemployment situation similar to that which prevailed last winter, and if we consider that, according to statistics, there were 585,409 unemployed in Canada last May, we will have to draw enormous amounts on the unemployment insurance fund next winter, as we pointed out last year, when, unfortunately, this government did not want to listen to us. As a matter of fact, if we have to spend amounts larger than the intake of $248 million, it will mean that, considering the present condition of the fund, and if we have to levy further amounts to pay those benefits, there will be hardly anything left in the unemployment insurance fund. The government will then have to restore the balance of the unemployment insurance fund by depositing into it a certain amount taken from the consolidated revenue account. Why then does not the government decide today to replenish the unemployment insurance fund out of consolidated revenue, thus leaving the unemployment insurance contribution rate at the same level as before the introduction of the amendments now considered?

We then could have a committee consider the Unemployment Insurance Act and submit a well prepared and serious report which we might accept or reject on the strength of some specific argument.

The bill is based on contingencies, on possibilities that are pointed out to us. We are told that the bill was prepared on the basis of a five year average. Now, if we take the average figure for the last five years, we find that, as far as unemployment insurance is concerned, there were quite a few variations with regard to the amounts spent during that period. As a matter of fact, they amounted to $186 million in 1954, to $257 million in 1955 and to $250 million in 1956. In 1957, they reached $231 million; in 1958, $385 million and in 1959, $478,000,676. This means that, far from decreasing, they were steadily on the increase.

Then, as we do not know what next winter keeps in store for us, instead of submitting an imperfect bill, one that workers cannot accept because they are asked to make too large sacrifices for something which will benefit the whole Canadian people the government should, during the present session, submit a winter works program in order to lessen unemployment and relieve municipalities which have once more to contend with all the legislation passed by the government. Municipalities will have to shoulder the main burden of unemployment, while the government will wash its hands like Pilate did before Jesus.

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the government has no right to act in this way. Once more I urge it to stop and think before taking a course which the whole people of Canada, with the exception of Conservative members, are asking it not to take.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to speak very long on this matter today, but I would like to know if the minister could answer a couple of questions. Unfortunately I was away from the house yesterday when he explained what happened with regard to the letter I received that day. At page 4846 of Hansard the minister said that, unfortunately, inadvertently some of these bulletins were placed in the mail last week.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated this letter was dated June 12, and the writer states that the office where she is employed received bulletin No. 20 a week or more ago, which puts it back at least as far as June 5. She also states the bulletin was under date of June 1, 1959. Therefore it appears that it was more than a week ago that this bulletin No. 20 was placed in the mail, which does not exactly conform with what the minister said yesterday. I wonder if the hon. gentleman could explain it a little more fully.

Mr. Starr: I inquired into this immediately, and I read the words exactly as reported to me in this regard; that inadvertently a small number of these bulletins, because of a mistake by one of the civil servants working in the commission, were put into the mail bag. I must accept that. I feel we are all human, and if this civil servant made a mistake it is regrettable, but I am not going to try to punish him for it.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask a question on that point? Would the minister not agree that this information could not have been prepared and should not have been prepared before the committee reported? The committee did not report until June 9, and this directive went out some time during the first week of June. I suggest that it contained detailed information regarding the cost of stamps, the amount of benefits and so on for the use of employers, officials of the commission and others, information which could not have been provided and which should not have been prepared before consideration of this question had been completed by the committee.

I agree that we do not want to blame some official for letting this get into the mail bag, but the bulletin itself should never have been prepared because, really, the facts are not available yet and will not be available until this bill has received third reading. Nobody has the right to predict in advance what this house is going to decide. Would the minister not agree with me that this directive should not have been published at all?

Mr. Starr: This matter lies entirely within the purview of the unemployment insurance commission, and it was only after these preparations had been made that I was aware they had been completed. But this is a practice which has been followed in the past. The commission tells me that nothing different has been done from what has been done on former occasions. If any changes had been made then naturally whatever material had been prepared would have had to be corrected.

However, there is a great deal of information which must go out to every employer in this country, and in order to save time the commission did what it had done in the past. It made preparations and had all this material ready to go out. The commission had, of course, hoped that it would have been able to put into effect by July 1 whatever amendments were made by parliament. It became apparent, however, that this would not be possible, so they have set another date—September 28, I am informed—because of the delay which has been experienced in the passage of this legislation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because of the failure of the government to introduce this bill earlier.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I agree that it might be wise and expedient to prepare these things as far ahead as possible, but surely the minister and his officials must have realized that they were not dealing here with non-controversial legislation. That has been demonstrated not only by what has happened in this committee, but also by virtually every submission which was made in the standing committee and the views expressed by practically every organization from coast to coast.

The minister said that some copies of this bulletin had been sent out. Does this word "some" mean 50, or 100, or 3? In view of the fact that a certain number, at least, have been sent out would the minister be prepared to table one of these directives in the house so that hon. members might know what is contained in this document which has been prepared and dispatched to certain places in this country?

Mr. Benidickson: I know that every day we have a new edition of Hansard and I know, of course, that the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South were replied to very effectively by others, with the exception, possibly of his statement that the bill was brought forward at the earliest possible moment, a subject which has been repeatedly referred to in this debate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to avoid repetition, but on this particular point there has been no discussion today relative to the fact that on January 15 this government indicated, at a time of crisis, that they had amendments of consequence to make to the Unemployment Insurance Act. The hon. member for Cape Breton South chose to introduce this question again today, and I simply want to have in the same issue of Hansard a repetition—probably not desirable, but one which certainly is necessary—making it clear, as everybody knows, that this government put its chest forward and stated on January 15, through the mouth of the Governor General of this country, that it had plans for labour and that in particular it had plans for amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

No time was lost by the Leader of the Opposition, having regard to the crisis that existed in respect to unemployment in this country. He said on January 19, as reported at page 37 of Hansard—and I want everybody to note that although we go through thousands of pages, this suggestion was reported on page 37 on the second day of the session; there is no possibility of a suggestion of this kind being made on the first day because formalities and etiquette prohibit that being done—but on page 37 of Hansard for this session the Leader of the Opposition, as reported, suggested, having regard to the serious crisis which existed in this country with respect to unemployment, that the government proposals to deal with this serious problem should be debated without delay. A debate such as that on the speech from the throne might perhaps have been more important to the small opposition than to the government of the day. Notwithstanding this, the Leader of the Opposition went on to suggest that the debate might be deferred if the government had plans such as are now before us, with regard to this measure.

On January 21, as reported on page 147 of Hansard, my desk mate, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked whether, if the government was not willing to suspend the debate on the speech from the throne having regard to the unemployment emergency, it would at least indicate to the country what it had in mind with respect to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Hon. members who refer to page 147 of Hansard of that date will find that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate put his finger on the essence of the whole thing. The legislation just was not ready.

This question was repeated, and the government should have a red face about this matter. At page 353 of Hansard for January 26 hon. members will find that the same request was made to this government. It was stated that we as an opposition were prepared to forsake certain rights that are very important because of the general debate that is possible under the speech from the throne legislation. The government was asked if in the interests of the unemployed it had a proposition to put forward.

If I wanted to delay the committee, which I do not, I could read at some length a question put by the hon. member for Essex East as recorded at page 555 of Hansard, where he again challenged this government as to whether when it announced these fancy things in regard to unemployment it had the legislation ready. It did not have the legislation ready, and that was confessed by the Minister of Labour in the committee on industrial relations. He said that the unemployment insurance commission had a great many obligations to fulfil during the critical months of last winter.

I could understand that, but the thing I cannot understand is that a government would put forward, through the mouth of the Governor General, an indication that it had plans for comfort, for welfare and for the alleviation of difficulties, and then delay as it has done in the introduction of this bill. The worst part of all is that at a time when this subject required critical examination the government attempted to place on the opposition the onus, the responsibility and the blame for any delay in providing advantages. As a matter of fact, when speaking of advantages, it has been well pointed out that advantages represent perhaps only 8 or 10 per cent in relation to costs of the other financial elements that are included in this bill.

I said last evening that I was hoping the Minister of Finance would be with us in our further discussion of this legislation. I had every desire this morning to rise and ask the Minister of Finance about a few matters connected with this bill which are very closely related to the Minister of Finance and his department; I want to say too much so. May I say I did not do so because I felt that a new subject had been introduced into the committee. Relevant or not, it was introduced by the Minister of Labour in relation to the 1950 amendments. I felt it was desirable that the public and this committee should read in consecutive fashion the arguments that were related to that point once it had been admitted for debate, but I am continuing to show interest and concern and to entertain very grave doubts about two or three points which I feel have great relevance and import with regard to the legislation before us.

They relate to matters upon which the Minister of Finance unfortunately is not present to answer me. However, I see here the Minister of Justice. Surely no legislation is prepared for submission to this house without his approval. I also see here the Minister of Labour, who is of course continuing to pilot forward this bill.

I received no adequate answer either in the committee on industrial relations or in the debate on second reading of this bill to my question as to whether or not, having regard to section 86 of the bill, this government can defend its policy of deciding that bonds—as many hon. members of this party have suggested, bonds purchased under a rather dual responsibility on the part of the majority of the investment committee but none the less purchased, a decision upon which was taken on April 2 as evidenced by an order in council—should be held rather than liquidated.

As I said the other day, as events transpired with respect to the market, had the bonds been sold at that time instead of held perhaps a capital loss of $3,500,000 or $3,800,000 might have been avoided. I was fair and frank in saying that this was said from a position of hindsight. I do not in any way challenge the integrity of those people who reached that decision. I did say, however, and I want to repeat now, that I find it inconceivable that when one is dealing with a portfolio of $80 million of government bonds a decision should be taken representing something that was never done from 1941 forward. I find it inconceivable that this new cabinet would decide to do so without either what I regard as an adequate requisition under section 86 of the Unemployment Insurance Act or reference to two of the three members of the investment committee, the governor of the Bank of Canada and the deputy minister of finance.

I asked the Minister of Finance about that yesterday, and he said he felt sufficiently confident about his own judgment that with respect to this important decision he had not consulted in any way the governor of the Bank of Canada. I can draw only one conclusion, and I think this is something upon which the government must satisfy our worries by a further reply.

The budget was to come down on April 9. This decision was made by the cabinet on April 2. This indicated a further huge, massive deficit under the operations of this government. I suppose the government had some knowledge as to what effect this would have on the bond market of Canada. I want to repeat that 80 per cent of the funds of the unemployment insurance commission are non-public funds which are put up by private people.

I said the other night that more than 50 per cent of the capital losses related to the bonds that are pledged to the Minister of Finance in connection with this loan occurred within a matter of weeks after the second budget of the minister. We had nine months from the date of the issue of the conversion loan; but within a matter of six or seven weeks 50 per cent of the capital losses occurred with respect to the bonds pledged in connection with this new departure from long time practice. I say the significant thing is that that occurred after the second budget of the Minister of Finance.

I do not propose to pursue that further, but I do think this committee is entitled to know why, if the unemployment insurance commission was formally prepared to write a letter to their agents the Bank of Canada on March 25 and say that their cash requirements would be such and such, $57 million, I think, for the forthcoming month of April, the unemployment insurance commission changed its mind between March 25 and April 2, the date of the order in council. Everybody realizes that in between those few days there was paper work to be done and necessary delay. I want to know whether or not this was cabinet interference or cabinet judgment, or whether or not the unemployment insurance commission had, because of section 86 of the act, come to the conclusion in a formal way in a meeting as a commission that this step should be taken.

This morning I was not angered very much but I did have regret when I listened again to some remarks made by one of the newer members of the house. Everybody knows that I am pretty lenient with newer members of the house as they are with me; but I do wish to say that I was rather disappointed with some of the remarks made not only this morning but the other night by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi with respect to the proceedings of the committee. He said in the committee that some of us in the committee were rude; that we had had one of the most distinguished witnesses before this committee that could possibly come before any House of Commons committee. Mr. Chairman, somebody to my left has asked the question whether I was rude. If I was rude, Mr. Chairman, I want to say only this. It was the judgment of some of these new young Tories who should be aggressive with respect to parliamentary rights but were not so. It happens that I have had a long acquaintance not only with the witnesses but with the other members of the investment committee for whom I have said in this house I have a tremendous regard as to their ability and efficiency. This morning I corrected a statement which I had not seen in the committee proceedings. The word "incompatibility" should have appeared instead of "incompetency". I think any member of that committee will support me when I say that I did not use the word incompetency. The point I want to make is that I was surprised that a person who had had Liberal feelings in the past, as he said in this house, a former member of this party—

Mr. Grafftey: I will never live it down.

Mr. Benidickson: —would say that. We felt for a while, when he was near us and had the opportunity of getting a little fresh breeze from this particular section of the house, that he would not deteriorate as much as he has, as indicated by the words he used the other night. I find that that is typical of every Tory. They have this undue reverence for a banker, but when they get the banker of the banks then, Mr. Chairman, you cannot imagine how a young Tory, a Turk or otherwise, can really bow down and say that anybody who criticizes for a moment the views of those people is rude in the interrogation that he carries on. Anybody who has any regard for parliamentary rights, in a committee or otherwise, will support me when I say I am disappointed that some of the younger elements in this new government who hold these views certainly do not hold the parliamentary views held by the Minister of Finance when he was opposition critic. I think it is very tragic that this should develop, and that a member, such as the one I have described, would have such reverence for a banker that he would think a parliamentary committee was not justified in inquiring about some of his activities.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asked this question, and this is what I want to answer. He asked: "What information was withheld from the committee?" I have already dealt with the matter of the information that could have been available to this committee from the advisory committee on unemployment insurance and I do not want to repeat it. The odd thing I have found so far in the debate is that everybody excuses himself for not hearing the members of the advisory committee, and particularly the labour representatives of the advisory committee, by saying that they are no longer members of the committee. We know they felt obliged, through lack of confidence in the government that appointed them, to resign. The point is that what the industrial relations committee should have examined those people about was the decision not after they resigned but the decision, examination, information and knowledge that they had with respect to things before they resigned when they advised this government that it was undesirable to do what is proposed in this bill but rather to increase the government contribution to the scheme because in many elements it was a welfare scheme, it was a government type of disbursement that should not be levied upon the long time contributors to this scheme.

I simply want to put this question on the record of this house, particularly for the benefit of young members whom I would have thought had particular interest in parliamentary rights. I want to ask the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi whether he will look at section 20 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I want to ask him whether on reflection, whether he sits on the opposition side or the government side, he would consider what he said in the industrial relations committee about being rude to a witness even of this prominence is valid?

Mr. Grafftey: You were rude to all the witnesses, though.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the hon. member say I was rude to all the witnesses.

Mr. Grafftey: No, I withdraw that.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member is very fair to me. On the other hand, having regard to section 20 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which designates certain public officials as the investment committee under the act, will he say that this precludes him, should he at a future time be sitting in the opposition, and in a committee as a member of the opposition, from the right to examine in a committee set up by parliament a witness as to how many times the investment committee met in a fiscal year?

I never heard of anything more scandalous. I know of no case where a majority has utilized its strength to a greater degree to snuff off investigation of a committee in charge of a fund involving a paper value of $490 million, and everybody says now this is irrespective of the obligations of at least two of the members of the committee with relation to their other functions. For instance, we were not attempting to ask the governor of the Bank of Canada about his functions with relation to the Bank of Canada. We were asking him only about his obligations to parliament which asked, in fact demanded that he be one of the three members of the investment committee.

I am quite satisfied that on reflection some of the younger members of the house who served on the committee, and served very effectively, will wonder about the view they took that it was a rude and improper inquiry and that it was not desirable to ask an official, designated to be a member of the investment committee in a statute passed by parliament, for information as to how many times the committee had met in the course of a certain fiscal year. We were steamrollered with respect to that matter. There is no question about that. The investment committee was brought before the industrial relations committee as a result of a motion made by two supporters of the government. That does not mean that we in the other parties would not have wanted to do the same thing. But the point is that they moved the motion and having brought the governor of the bank there they then supported him in saying that it was not the committee's business as to how many times the investment committee, created by statute, had met in the course of a certain 12-month period. I have been here since 1945 and I have never heard anything that seemed to be more in derogation of parliamentary rights than the statement that "it is none of your business how many times we met in the last 12 months". This stand was supported by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and many others elected to the House of Commons only recently. I do not derogate in any way the value of their contribution but I want to emphasize again what would have been said if the present Minister of Finance had been the opposition critic and a statement was made by a government witness appointed by statute that "this is none of your business".

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us what revenue he expects will be derived from the change in clause 3?

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member be good enough to wait a few moments until the officials get here?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Having waited so long for the bill, I agree.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, the minister wishes to wait for his officials. We are always anxious to accommodate the minister.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Essex East asked what revenue the raising of the ceiling would bring into the fund. My answer, subject to correction if there is any to be made, is approximately $2 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): So that my estimate was correct.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I see that the word "remuneration" has been changed to "earnings" and in the French version the word "rémunération" has been changed to "rémunération à gains". Would the minister tell us what is the difference and why a change has been made from "remuneration" to "earnings" in English and from "rémunération" to "rémunération à gains" en français?

Mr. Starr: There are a number of clauses in the Unemployment Insurance Act where the word "earnings" is used and only in a few is the word "remuneration" or "remunerated" used. In order to make the act consistent by using one term it has been decided by the commission and its legal department to make this amendment so that in all cases the reference will be to "earnings".

Mr. Caron: I see in the dictionary that "earnings" means fruit of work, salaries, wages, and "remuneration" means reward, pay for services rendered. It is not quite the same. If you study the etymology of the words there is quite a difference and they might be used in both ways, a charge on the remuneration and on the wages.

Mr. Starr: I am told by the legal department that they can define "earnings" easier than "remuneration" under the act.

Mr. Caron: I did not quite hear.

Mr. Starr: They can define "earnings" much more readily and in a better way than they can define the word "remuneration".

Mr. Caron: The reason they have changed the wording from "remuneration" to "earnings" is that they have an easier task in defining it with relation to the act.

Mr. Starr: Yes.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, this is the vital clause of the whole bill. It has to do with the increased contributions which are out of all proportion to the increased benefits available under the act. I maintain that if the government wants to give the same increased benefits to the workers that they are proposing in the bill they can do so at a fraction of the cost of these proposed increased contributions. Under clause 6 working people who come under the Unemployment Insurance Act are set apart from working people who do not come under the act. I noticed this morning that the Minister of Finance revealed a high rate of interest in the bill and I think he has good reason to do so. In my opinion clause 6 is a clarion call to these select Canadians to come to the aid of the government.

The government is in trouble through its inept financing and is calling on the working people of Canada to help it out. The working people of Canada are the only ones being called upon at the present time. They, and they alone, are being called upon by the government to meet, in large part, the government's deficit. As citizens of Canada they will be called upon also, along with the other citizens of Canada, to assume the rest of the deficit.

I feel that this is unfair but it is something which the big majority in the house, no doubt, can carry through. However, I hope that they do not push it through the house because it is not to the advantage of the workingman. I believe there is something deeply wrong in the Department of Finance and the workingman is the sucker who is being called upon to meet these deficits. Many of the representations made in the committee were to the effect that the wording of the act was ambiguous and allowed various interpretations. I know many who said this, and I think labour also said it, although I am not sure of that. I said in the house that before the March election some people in my area who had been making contributions under the Unemployment Insurance Act, but who were elderly and had not been working for some considerable time, received letters telling them to come down and collect their unemployment insurance. I hope that the election had nothing to do with this practice, but I have repeated this statement in the house before and I know that it is true.

I do not begrudge people this money. I can say this, too, that at election time there was no criticism of the administration of the act. However, now I do hear criticism about certain ambiguities in the act. I would hope that the present government would not use these increased rates to build up a big fund for distribution, as a result of the ambiguities in this act, just before the next election.

Brief after brief from both labour and management suggested that the fund should cover only those with reasonably steady employment, those who did not face the same hazards as those in seasonal employment. Seasonal workers should be covered by a special category, a separate type of insurance. If they are covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act, then the government should make contributions from the consolidated revenue fund to cover the cost of their insurance.

By charging larger contributions to most workers, many times over the cost of supplying the actual benefits, the government is actually taxing them to take care of the deficit and to make up for the fiscal mistakes of the government. In so far as the fund itself is concerned, I maintain that the fund would be rapidly increasing now under the management of the former government. It should be rapidly increasing at this time, and I say that by reason of the fact that two or three days ago the Minister of Labour said that there were more people employed now than in any other May in history. He also gave an indication, although I do not believe he said so, that in June the number of unemployed would be definitely reduced. The Minister of Finance said that the gross national product would go up by 7 per cent and would exceed $34.5 million. The other day he said there would be less necessity for him to borrow money. I feel this is another indication that employment should be up.

The Prime Minister has intimated this outside of the house on different occasions. I see it is reported in the paper in front of me that the Canadian economy is on an upsurge. Why, then, do we have increases in the contribution at a time when there is the highest employment in our history; at a time when our Prime Minister and our responsible ministers are going around this country just exuding confidence? I know that they have great confidence in the situation because the Minister of Finance—I cannot say this very often—does go out and pay high interest rates. Why, then, make the small people of our country pay taxes that should properly be paid by all Canadians? The government should not be so callous. I have been in medical practice amongst workingmen all my life, and I know they want to pay their share but they do not want to pay more than their share. That is what the government is asking them to do under clause 6 of this bill.

I am making one last appeal to the minister for the workingman, for the man who carries the dinner pail. I honestly believe he should not be singled out to pay for the mistakes in fiscal policy this government has made. I do not believe that he alone should carry the load of seasonal unemployment. We should all give him a break and just give him his fair share to carry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in connection with clause 6, I should like to move:

That clause 6 be amended by deleting all the words after "act" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the words "is maintained".

The Chairman: An amendment has been moved by the hon. member for Welland, and in that connection I must refer the committee to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 169, citation 202, subitem 14, which reads:

An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

It is the opinion of the Chair that the present amendment deletes the clause of the bill in question and is therefore negative in its form. The same result could be obtained by voting against the clause. It is therefore the opinion of the Chair—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before Your Honour makes a ruling would you be prepared to hear argument?

The Chairman: I will finish my remarks, if you do not mind. It is therefore the opinion of the Chair that having regard to article 202, subparagraph (13), this amendment is out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you make a final and definite ruling, could I direct Your Honour's attention to paragraph 278 on page 227 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, the third subparagraph of which reads:

Reductions can be made in committee on the bill, but no grant can be increased except upon recommendation of the crown.

It seems to me that if this clause were defeated there would be a defect in the whole bill in that there would be no provision whatsoever and no schedule whatsoever. Therefore the only way in which we can, without destroying the whole purpose of the act, successfully accomplish what my hon. friend from Welland wants to accomplish is to amend the clause in such a fashion that the bill stands on its feet. It is true that perhaps in substance the same effect would be obtained if the clause were simply defeated, but there would be no clause 6 at all in the bill and there would be no schedule left in the bill. Therefore it seems to me that for that reason this was the only effective way by which the hon. member could get the sense of the committee.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I submit the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has misconstrued the effect of this clause and of the amendment. Clause 6, which we are now on, is the only clause which attempts to vary the schedule to section 37, and subsection (1) of section 37 is repealed and clause 6 substituted therefor. If clause 6 is deleted there is no change in the schedule, and therefore the amendment now before the committee would simply have the same effect as if clause 6 were itself defeated. Therefore the citation referred to by the Chairman is completely in point.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, you gave a while ago citation 202 (14). Subparagraph (13) says:

An amendment to alter the main question, by substituting a proposition with the opposite conclusion, is not an expanded negative and may be moved.

In this case it is just coming back to what it was before. It is just maintaining the Unemployment Insurance Act as it was. If we come to article 201, that says:

The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question. This may be effected by moving to omit all the words of the question after the first word, "That", and to substitute in their place other words of a different import. In that case the debate that follows is not restricted to the amendment—

So it seems to me quite clear that we do not have to accept the whole thing, but if we substitute something to replace that clause it should be accepted. It is up to the house to decide in that case whether they want a substitution or whether they want to leave the clause as it is.

The Chairman: I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Hull who has read paragraph 202 (13). I have read paragraph 202 (14), and I would now like to read 202 (12), which says:

An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

I shall read the amendment again, which is as follows:

That clause 6 be amended by deleting all the words after "act" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the words "is maintained".

What actually the hon. member for Welland wishes to do is to eliminate what is proposed in the present bill to maintain the present rates as they are. This in itself, in my opinion, is a negation of the complete purpose of this bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and as such cannot, in my view, be accepted. It is my opinion that in view of article 202 (14) which says:

An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

I must make my ruling according to the words I have just read, and with regret I must declare the amendment by the hon. member for Welland to be in my opinion out of order. Of course, if the hon. member for Hull wishes to convince me—

Mr. Caron: I may not be successful but I wish to try. Article 202 (12) says:

An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

It is not a direct negative because it comes back to the original rate of contribution; and it is not verbiage because there is very little in the amendment. The intention is to restore the original position, because we claim that there is no need to increase the contributions. To do that we had to present this kind of amendment and let the government find the way, and the only way is to have recourse to the clause of the bill. For those reasons it is not verbiage and it is not a direct negative. I do not accept the fact that it is a direct negative at all.

The Chairman: I will phrase it in another way. I believe the solution to this would be to vote against this clause as it stands, which would achieve the same purpose as the present amendment which is before us. Therefore I declare that the solution to this problem may be to ask the committee if they are ready for the question and submit it to a vote.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, before we vote on this I would like to say to the committee that any vote against this clause is, of course, a vote against the whole principle of unemployment insurance as we understand it in this country, and as we have understood it for a number of years.

Mr. Benidickson: Nonsense.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The schedule included in clause 6 proposes a 30 per cent increase in the contributions to the fund. I would like to refer to a statement of the actuary that was brought before the industrial relations committee.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I am afraid he is straying from the subject under discussion. The question is:—is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the question?

The Chairman: The question is the following: shall clause 6 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: I do not want to interfere with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who would have prior rights on the point I am raising. I take it, Mr. Chairman, you have said that the amendment is out of order and that therefore the debate is on the clause. If that is so, I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has priority over myself.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I thought I was in order in discussing clause 6 because I think this is one of the most important clauses in the bill. I believe that unemployment insurance could not succeed without it. I will refer now to this document and I do not know why other members of this committee who have taken part in this debate—and a number of them were members of the standing committee—have not referred to this particular document, because they were all given these figures.

This is the financial and statistical statement of the unemployment insurance commission dated March 31, 1959, and statement No. 6 is a statement of the actuary outlining why an increased contribution by 30 per cent was necessary. Here is what the statement says. The average yearly expenditure from the fund over the past five years has been $337 million, while the average yearly revenue for the past five years has been $259 million. The average yearly shortfall has amounted to $78 million. I do not know where some hon. members got their figure of $100 million and so on, but the figure I have given is the amount intended to be raised by these increases.

Mr. Benidickson: The extra is the government's contribution.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The average yearly revenue is $259 million, and if we add 30 per cent, which amounts to $78 million, this gives us a total of $337 million, which would balance the income and the outgoings.

Unless this is carried, it is quite evident that the fund could not continue to bear a loss of $78 million a year. If unemployment insurance is to continue to exist, this clause must necessarily be carried.

Mr. Benidickson: Referring to the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that the fund could not long continue on this basis,—he states that as the necessity for this legislation before us—I agree. But I want to say first of all in reply to another hon. member who was serving on our committee, the hon. member for Cape Breton South who indicated that he had received certain representations about this bill from mine workers, steelworkers and so on in which they seemed to be approving of this measure, that we are a national body here, and all I can do is say that I keep in close touch with some of these labour organizations, as does the hon. member for Essex East, and whether insincerity is charged or otherwise, we read assiduously anything of this nature which comes to our desks, as do all responsible members of parliament. Now in the last issue of the Canadian Congress of Labour news there appeared an excerpt to which I wish to draw the attention of the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I am afraid I cannot give the page number, because this is a blue sheet inserted into the monthly magazine. It says this:

> Persons covered by unemployment insurance are being burdened with costs which should be shared by the country as a whole, the Canadian Labour Congress said in a memorandum submitted to the commons industrial relations committee dealing with proposed changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act.
> The C.L.C. said that despite substantial increases in contribution rates there was for most groups—

And this is the essence of what we are debating.

> —no change of any substance proposed in benefits.

I think that is very important as we pursue this debate. The hon. member for Cape Breton South may have received these representations, but surely they come from bodies subsidiary to the Canadian Congress of Labour, and surely we must show respect, and not disrespect, for evidence which is presented on a national basis to a parliamentary committee which is examining a bill of this kind.

The essence, as I see it when we regard this clause, is whether, either in 1950 or in subsequent years, we as parliamentarians considered our amendments as being in the nature of improvements to an insurance principle; or whether we considered them as being in the nature of improvements to a welfare plan in the interest of the insurance fund; or whether, as I want to suggest to this committee at this time, we are asked to vote for a tax plan, contrary to a welfare plan or an insurance plan in connection with our amendments to this particular section.

In other words, there was from the time of the election of this government utilization of the millions of dollars which were in this fund for the purpose of courting the voter, and did the party opposite not court that electorate by the utilization of the fund available under this statute and the huge amount of money which was available here. In doing this they neglected to take care of the normal welfare relief, as one hon. member mentioned yesterday, and now they tax the labourers and the employers of this country so as to do a job which really belonged to the government in view of the economic situation which existed during the time since they took office. I do not think there has ever been a time in my experience when representations to a parliamentary committee from employers and employees contained such agreement that we had a bad bill, and yet the government has made no amendments whatsoever with respect to this bill—no compromise. I suggest the reason is this huge majority they have behind them; this feeling that might is right. I suggest to you that many members of this huge majority will be very embarrassed not only by management or employers but by employees perhaps not now but when the tax bills—and this in essence is a tax measure—come before them either three or six months hence.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South this morning referred to a certain element of labour and indicated that he felt confident that he was speaking for labour. I feel nobody can speak for labour. In my riding I would imagine that the largest element is comprised of people who work for wages. I have been endorsed from 1945 onward even in a tight Diefenbaker glamour election, although it was very tight indeed at that time. The wage earners, the people who carry the lunch pails and to whom a few cents here or there in terms of direct or indirect taxes represents an important consideration will wake up perhaps three months from now when they see that this clause involves an indirect tax, as was mentioned this morning by the hon. member for Welland.

Under this clause I believe we are obliged to review the rates and the statute that existed heretofore notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance said by reason of the fact that the position of the fund was perilous, not only because of the ordinary demands upon it but also because of the $72 million of market value depletion obvious to the officials of the Minister of Labour when he saw fit to bring before us a revision in the rates of contribution.

I want to assert again that from June 1957 up to the time of the introduction of this bill the government chose to give candy and syrup to the people of this country suggesting to them that it did not have to be paid for. Nowhere is it more evident than in the indirect type of taxation that is exacted by this bill. In 1957 the government imposed upon the unemployment insurance fund, a fund that was contributed to by the working people of this country, certain additional benefits. The government went through the ensuing election saying that this was straight candy not to be paid for. Today, however, we have the chickens coming home to roost.

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 47; nays, 23.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Separate from estate in bankruptcy, etc.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, clause 8 was deleted by a motion in committee but inadvertently the wording to renumber the subsequent clauses was left out. I would ask my colleague the Minister of Justice to move now to renumber the following clauses.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 9 be renumbered clause 8 and that the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this clause seeks to amend subsection 2 of section 45 of the act. I should like to know what the actuaries have been able to determine with respect to extra costs to the fund if the present 24-week period were reduced to a 20-week period, let us say? I am interested in knowing if any actuarial consideration has been given to the reduction of the 24-week period, what the new period would be and what extra cost would be involved.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this was not up for consideration as an amendment and consequently the actuaries did not endeavour to establish a cost figure. There has not been a computation at all by the actuaries concerning the reduction of the number of weeks of contribution in order to qualify for benefits.

Mr. Howard: I know for a fact a number of requests have been made by organizations and people who are adversely affected by subsection 2 and who are not able to claim or receive benefits because of the seasonal nature of their employment. Representations have been made to the department of late and even before this government took office. I personally requested that the 24-week period be reduced and suggested a period of 20 weeks merely as a basis of discussion. Has any research been done along this line or have the minister, his department and his officials ignored what is a legitimate request on behalf of people who are adversely affected by this subsection?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that a review was made some two years ago. Nothing has been done since. I think the hon. member refers to the fact that if a person has fewer than 24 weeks of contributions, then of course he is not eligible. But I want to point out to him that if it is over 15 he is eligible for seasonal benefits and he gets his benefits as of December 1 of that calendar year.

Mr. Howard: I am not talking about seasonal benefits.

Mr. Starr: He is eligible for seasonal benefits even if he is below 24 and over 15.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister indicate what were the results on an actuarial basis of the extra cost to the fund for this survey that he said was done a couple of years ago?

Mr. Starr: I am told by the officials that they have not the information here, but we shall be glad to give it to the hon. member for his study. We shall look it up and supply him with it.

Mr. Howard: That can be done at some future time; I am not too concerned about it at this time.

I should like to make a comment or two about the effect of subsection 2 of section 45. A few years ago when the alteration was made with respect to computing the contributions and benefits on a weekly basis instead of on a daily basis the period of time which was originally set was 30 weeks. We discovered, especially in so far as the loggers on the west coast were concerned—I was associated with the union at that particular time—and also in so far as other workingmen were concerned, that many of them found it nearly impossible to comply with the 30 week requirement and a request was made for a review and a reduction. At a subsequent session of parliament the 30-week period was reduced to 24, which did allow many more workmen to fit into the qualifications and thereby receive benefits.

If I may explain again to the minister, in so far as the logging industry on the west coast in concerned, it applied to the logging industry in the interior of the province and it applied in a degree to the construction industry in various parts of Canada. It also applied to other similar categories of workingmen who found that because of the weather particularly, they were unable to obtain sufficient working time during the year to accumulate 24 weeks contributions, and thereby were denied the right of benefits except, as the minister said, the right of seasonal benefits which may or may not correspond with that particular time of the year. Many of the employees find that they are out of work in the summer time, not in the winter time when the seasonal benefit scheme applies, but in the summer when in some instances the entire logging industry is shut down because of extremely high fire hazards in dry weather. We find that this 24 week period does work adversely on many workingmen in the country. It would certainly be desirable if the minister would undertake to give more study to this particular question than he has given to it in the past and review the work which was done two years ago, as he said. I presume that was in 1956, nearly four years ago, when the period was reduced from 30 to 24 weeks.

In any event, I think it is necessary to raise this particular question as it affects a particular group of workmen. I think it is necessary to raise it by way of debate and ask the minister to consider it. Not only that, but I think we should afford the committee an opportunity to debate this question in a formal way so that the minister may be guided by other opinions. I think we should afford the committee an opportunity to make a decision by vote as to whether or not this particular 24-week period should be reduced. Accordingly, I have an amendment along these lines which I should like to move. It reads:

> Subsection (2) of section 45 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "(2) If an insured person, within the period specified in paragraph (a) of subsection (1), had established a previous benefit period, then the subsequent benefit period is not established unless he proves that at least 20 of the contribution weeks referred to in the said paragraph (a) were > (a) in the period of 52 weeks immediately preceding the most recent Sunday before the day on which he makes the claim, or > (b) in the period since the commencement of the immediately preceding benefit period, whichever is the longer period."

This is word for word subsection (2) as it is at the present time, with the exception of substituting "20" for "24".

Mr. Starr: May I point out to you that section 45 (2) is not under discussion, nor does it appear in the amendments at all. It is only section 45 (3) that is being amended in the amendments before the committee.

The Chairman: I understand the hon. member is trying to fit this into the subclause we are discussing. It does not seem to be relevant at all to what we are discussing.

Mr. Howard: The minister is seeking to have section 45 (3) amended. This is the only place where one can suggest an amendment to another part of section 45, namely subsection 2. It is for that reason that I seek to move this in a formal way. There is no other way in which it can be done, other than to bring it forward in this way. I do not think we should have to wait until the minister decides whether or not he himself intends to propose an amendment to subsection 2, in which case

I might be allowed to follow in his footsteps and propose some other sort of amendment. It is for this reason that I move an amendment to subsection 2. The minister objected and the Minister of Justice shakes his head as to the acceptability of this amendment. Are we to understand that they are objecting to reducing the 24 weeks to 20 weeks merely by hiding behind some obscure point in the rules? If so, then we shall have to adopt some other means.

The Chairman: The amendment read by the hon. member for Skeena seeks to amend subsection 2 of section 45. It has nothing to do with what we are discussing at the present time. If it is accepted then subsection 2 of section 45 could be amended at the present time and we would have to accept every amendment that might be brought forward by any member to any other subsection. It is, therefore, with regret that I have to inform the hon. member for Skeena that his amendment is out of order. To substantiate my ruling I should like to refer the committee to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, citation 203 on page 171. Paragraph (1) of citation 203 reads:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

It is with regret that I must inform the committee that the Chair is refusing the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: May I make a comment and, if necessary, raise a point of order? I would point out with deference that the initial discussion entered into by the Minister of Labour and myself under clause 9 as renumbered dealt specifically with the amendment I have proposed and dealt with the actuarial consideration that was given to reducing that. The minister did not object to entering into the discussion and no point of order was raised that it was irrelevant and did not deal with the question. No opinion was expressed by you, Mr. Chairman, that our discussion was out of order. Therefore it would seem that the amendment followed the discussion precisely.

The Chairman: Order. It has been brought to the attention of the committee by myself and the deputy chairman that we insist on all members adhering to the rule of relevancy. It may be that sometimes it escapes the attention of the Chair that the member who is speaking may be out of order but whenever the Chair has observed that hon. members are not adhering to the rule of relevancy it has been brought to their attention. In the present instance the amendment proposed by the hon. member is out of order and must remain as such.

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Chairman: I must remind members once again that all clauses are being renumbered. In other words, clause 10 is actually numbered in the bill as clause 11.

Clauses 11 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 22—Coming into force.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, at this point, I merely want to point out how right I was in saying that, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) stayed away for the remainder of the afternoon, things would go very well in the house.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

A—Department—

149. Departmental administration including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada, $741,825.

(Translation):

Mr. Eudes: Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the estimates of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), would his department be kind enough to inform the house what progress is being made in implementing the recommendations of the Fauteux commission.

The parole board has now replaced the remission service.

It would be of general interest, I think, to make known the number of prisoners in this country for the various provinces, also how many of these prisoners' files have been studied by the new parole board and the result of that study.

The committee would also be interested to hear from the minister how this parole board operates.

I suppose that, as I do myself, several hon. members—

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will permit, it had been my expectation that I would have to deal with this subject on the second item, item No. 150. At that time I will have the officials of the new national parole board with me and if it is agreeable to the hon. member to wait until the next item we could deal with that subject then.

(Translation):

Mr. Eudes: I presume that, as I do, many hon. members get from their electors requests for assistance in securing parole for a prisoner. What is the procedure to be followed in such cases? What advice can we give to those electors who, in all confidence, solicit assistance?

In that connection, would the minister please explain, later on, the increase in estimates on item 150? That item, which for 1956-1957, amounted to $224,180, has now been raised to $344,531 for 1959-1960. And I hope he will be able to satisfy the committee that this increase furthers the purpose of the national parole board.

On April 22 last, as recorded on page 2928 of Hansard I asked the Minister of Justice the following question:

1. Have any representations been received by the government to appoint a woman member to the national parole board?

2. If so, from whom have any such representations been received and what action, if any, is contemplated?

The minister replied as follows:

Since this question involves the necessity of circularizing my colleagues, I would ask that it be made an order for return.

And the house decided accordingly, but the return has not yet been forthcoming.

Eight weeks have elapsed since then. I presume that, in the meantime, the Minister of Justice has circularized his colleagues and that he is now in a position to reply to my question.

Could the minister tell us how many women are now in prison, and inform us how the national parole board proceeds with their rehabilitation?

That rehabilitation matter is, in my opinion, extremely important. In recent years, especially after the investigations made by the Fauteux commission and the recommendations embodied in its report to the cabinet, the government, and society, have been taking a more humanitarian view of prisoners.

As a result of Freud's discoveries in the field of psychoanalysis and of the work carried out by his disciples in that same field and in the field of psychiatry, for some years now, lawyers and legislators have come to take a different view of men who at one time were simply described as criminals.

The view today is that the person condemned is perhaps not solely responsible for the crime he has committed. Society environment and family life, to an extent which is impossible to specify but which exists, have also shared in the commission of the crime.

Fortunately, today, a condemned man is no longer considered as a criminal. He remains a human being, whose rehabilitation is a duty upon society.

In Canada, in recent years, great progress has been made in this field.

However, among the convicted there are women. To help in their rehabilitation, I feel that a woman should be appointed to this national parole board.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with the hon. members who have commended the Minister of Justice for his bill to increase the number of superior court judges, particularly in the province of Quebec. This bill, when it comes into force, will help make the administration of justice more efficient.

It is my hope that the time lapse between the date when a case is registered for a hearing and the date of the investigation will be shortened.

A similar bill had in fact been suggested by the predecessors of the Minister of Justice, but for reasons known only to "Lady Politics", the bill never saw the light of day because of a lack of assent on the part of the Quebec government.

In closing, I should like to ask another question of the Minister of Justice, namely whether capital punishment has been abolished.

Over the weekend, another death sentence has been commuted to life imprisonment. I think I am not mistaken in stating that, since this government took office, 90 per cent of death sentences have been commuted by order in council.

I am not taking a stand either for or against the death penalty.

However, I find that section 206 of the Criminal Code has not been amended, and this section contains the following provision:

Every one who commits murder is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be sentenced to death.

A judge who sentences a person found guilty of murder by a jury has no alternative.

There is, of course, the royal prerogative of remission, whereby the governor general, as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen, can commute a sentence of death by hanging to a sentence of life imprisonment.

It is known that His Excellency the Governor General exercises this royal prerogative only on the advice of his counsellors, the cabinet in council.

In view of the number of commuted sentences, we have a right to ask whether the present government, without admitting it, has decided to abolish the death sentence.

However, it is parliament's responsibility to decide whether the death sentence should be maintained or abolished.

If the government favours abolition, it should have the courage to submit its opinion to the house.

It will be recalled that last April, Justice A. M. Manson, of Kamloops, stated in no uncertain terms, that by its actions, the cabinet was substituting itself for parliament, and that the executive was appropriating legislative power. Carrying this thought a little farther, it might be said that the judiciary no longer serves a useful purpose.

After all, it is permissible to believe, in practice, in the abolition of the death penalty, without the act having been amended.

May I point out to the minister that the government's policy in this matter is hardly in line with the solemn pledges made by some members of his party in the last elections, when they promised to restore the prestige and prerogatives of parliament, the alleged infringements of which still remain to be proved.

Every member of this committee will be pleased, Mr. Chairman, to hear the comments of the Minister of Justice on those matters.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have a specific matter to raise which concerns a question of justice having been denied to certain people in Canada. The particular item before us at the moment affords the only opportunity for this denial of justice and removal of rights to be raised in a formal way. I would say from the outset that the feelings which I am going to express and the action which I am going to propose should in no way be interpreted as casting any reflections whatsoever upon the present Minister of Justice or the operations of the department. It is merely that he happens to be the minister and is thereby charged with the responsibility, by statute, of making recommendations with respect to certain matters. His responsibility in so far as this question of the denial of justice to, and the abrogation of the rights of, people in a certain part of Canada is concerned is established by virtue of section 4 (d) of the Justice Act.

Therefore, because justice has been denied and delayed to certain people in Canada, because their freedoms have been removed in an arbitrary and despicable way, and because their fundamental rights have been interfered with, I feel it is necessary to afford this committee the opportunity to express its views, both by voice and by vote, on this particular matter. Accordingly, I would move:

That vote No. 149 be reduced to $1.

I do this, as I mentioned earlier, because justice has been denied, freedoms abrogated and fundamental rights removed by reason of the passage of Bill No. 2, trade union (emergency provisions) act, dated March 6, 1959, by the house of assembly of the province of Newfoundland, and by reason of the failure of the federal government to disallow this particular piece of legislation. This is being done as a matter of principle only and is not designed to interfere with the operations of the department.

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 49.

(Translation):

Mr. Meunier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw the attention of the minister to a fact that has happened recently.

The Minister of Justice visited Montreal this week, and addressed the better business bureau on the subject of restrictive trade practices. In an interview he gave at the end of his conference, he stated his views on a much discussed trade practice, that of the premiums given by dealers to their customers in exchange for trading stamps or coupons.

The minister said that trading stamps are a matter of provincial jurisdiction, because they have to do with property and civil rights. It is deplorable that the minister did not give a more definite explanation of his views on that problem, so that we could know exactly where the matter stands, because when a question such as this is put to a public man without notice, his answer can possibly be incomplete.

I take the liberty of disagreeing with him on that point, and to remind him that the matter of trading stamps comes under the Criminal Code, especially under sections 322(b) and 369.

Section 322(b) of the Criminal Code defines trading stamps as follows:

"trading stamps" includes any form of cash receipt, receipt, coupon, premium ticket or other device designed or intended to be given to the purchaser of goods by the vendor thereof or on his behalf, and to represent a discount on the price of the goods or a premium to the purchaser thereof—

Section 369 of the Criminal Code lists the penalties for persons who use trading stamps.

The section reads as follows:

(1) Every one who, by himself or his employee or agent, directly or indirectly issues, gives, sells or otherwise disposes of, or offers to issue, give, sell or otherwise dispose of trading stamps to a merchant or dealer in goods for use in his business is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Subsection (2) also deals with the offence committed by the merchant who issues trading stamps to his customers. I have read the annotated code of the learned Justice Lagarde. His book contains remarkable comments on that trade practice, and he has no hesitation in saying that the sale of trading stamps or premium stamps, as they are commonly called, constitutes an offence. He says about section 369 that everyone who issues trading stamps to a merchant to be used by the latter in his business commits an offence. And at subsection (2), he expresses the opinion that the merchant who issues trading stamps to his customers commits an offence.

I must point out to the minister that that matter of trading stamps is detrimental to trade in general, favourable to the big dealers and prejudicial to the small ones.

The Canadian Consumer Association, the Canadian Labour Congress and other organizations have clearly come out against the practice and have urged the government to stop it. The principal argument invoked, as I said earlier, was that the practice was favourable to big dealers, detrimental to small ones, and that the distribution of trading stamps is done at the expense of consumers. In fact, the dealer who buys his stamps for distribution to his customers has to pay for the stamps and for the goods he gives out as premiums, and naturally he has to mark up his goods accordingly. In the last resort, the consumer foots the bill and has that much less money to meet other expenses.

Thus, the sale of trading stamps becomes a restrictive trade practice because the small dealer cannot compete on the same basis as the big one. The big dealer, with a high volume of sales, does not have to mark up his goods as high as does the small dealer and, consequently, the small dealer is the victim of unfair competition.

I ask the minister to consider the remarks I have made, and if he is not convinced that the matter of trading stamps is not covered by the Criminal Code, he should amend the code in order to eliminate this evil of unfair competition, so that the small dealer will be freed from annoyances of that kind which are quite detrimental to him and which finally lead to the loss of all that he might have earned as a result of years of hard work.

(Text):

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I have a matter on the first item of the minister's estimates which I really hate to raise because I have to say things about the present Minister of Justice that I never expected I would have to say in this house. It is a question concerning the minister recommending to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation a list of the attorneys who would be acceptable to the government to act on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I am afraid that in this matter the government can be charged at least with party politics of almost the worst and most discriminatory kind.

It is obvious from the records that I have been supplied with that a certain lawyer or attorney, a Mr. Irving Freeman, of St. Catharines, Ontario, was placed on a list of attorneys who would be acceptable to the government of the day in May of 1957 to act on behalf of the government in cases involving Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I would like to read a portion of a letter sent by the office of the minister's predecessor to Mr. Freeman under date of May 22, 1957. It says in part:

In reply, I am pleased to confirm that on the recommendation of Mr. Cavers, you have been listed on May 13th, 1957, for your share of the legal work of the corporation at St. Catharines.

This, Mr. Chairman, indicates that the practice that the minister is now pursuing was also being pursued by his predecessor. I might add for purposes of identification that the individual concerned, Mr. Irving Freeman, served at one time, as I understand it, as an alderman on the St. Catharines city council at a time when the present member for Lincoln was mayor of the city.

Upon the assumption of office of the minister after the upset of the Liberal government apparently a new list of acceptable attorneys was made up and Mr. Freeman noted that he was no longer on the list of acceptable attorneys. Therefore he wrote and applied for his name to be placed on the list of attorneys acceptable to the minister's department for legal work in connection with whatever work Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation might have in that area. He applied as early as October 17, 1957, and I have in my hand a copy of the letter sent to Mr. Freeman by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation dated October 25, 1957, in which they say:

We have for reply yours of October 17.

In selecting legal agents we adhere to a list provided to us by the Department of Justice. Because our discretion is limited to this extent we regret that we cannot initiate action to have your name included on the list of agents who may undertake work for us from time to time.

I hope the minister will explain why his department submits a list to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of who or who might not be adequate attorneys to act on their behalf. I believe that an institution such as this—a well established crown corporation—ought to be given the right to determine who should or should not be doing its legal work in various places across the country. It is very obvious from the letter sent to Mr. Freeman on October 5, 1957 that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation cannot engage a lawyer anywhere in Canada unless such attorney's name is on the list submitted to the corporation by the minister. I fail, in the first instance, to see the need for this procedure in any respect. It is obvious that Mr. Freeman was unable to get his name placed on the list again after the assumption of office by the new minister, and I understand that there has been some correspondence since between Mr. Freeman and the hon. member for Lincoln, representing, I presume, his area. I should like to read into the record a letter which the hon. member for Lincoln has sent to Mr. Freeman. The date of this letter is December 16, 1957, and it says:

Your name has been referred to me for certain reasons of which I think you are aware.

I should like to underline every word of that first sentence. This hon. member said to Mr. Freeman, an applicant to be placed on the list as an attorney eligible to do business on behalf of a crown corporation:

Your name has been referred to me for certain reasons of which I think you are aware.

The letter goes on:

In our way of living one is often asked to approve of someone's abilities to fulfil certain obligations.

I have no quarrel with that.

You will recall that you undertook to certify against my abilities to assume certain obligations, which you did in a public way.

The only construction I can place on that is that obviously Mr. Freeman was active in the election campaign, and not active in the interests of the hon. member for Lincoln. However, the letter goes on:

Knowing your opinion of me, I am neither for you nor against you.

I should like to compliment the hon. member for Lincoln on that statement. I wish I could say that subsequent actions were able to bear this out.

If you have changed your mind about me, I could change my thoughts about you, also.

This is the crowning glory of it all, Mr. Chairman, since you will recall that this letter was written on December 16. It concludes:

Wishing you and your family the season's greetings.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the government which abolished patronage, is it?

Mr. Regier: I am very pleased to note that the hon. member for Lincoln holds no grievance against this attorney in St. Catharines because he was, obviously, a Liberal or a supporter of the C.C.F. I do not know what he is; I am taking this up as a matter of principle. However, he was assured that if he would only change his mind about the abilities of the hon. member for Lincoln that might have some effect, and he might be placed again in the good graces of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the roundabout way of receiving the nod from the Minister of Justice.

I have here another letter which worries me a little more in that it involves the integrity of the minister which I had always held to be beyond the shadow of a doubt. On August 30, 1958 the hon. member for Lincoln once again writes a letter to Mr. Freeman, and he opens it in this way.

I have been asked by the Department of Justice to write to you regarding Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation legal work in connection with direct central mortgage and housing loans in Lincoln county.

Now it was our understanding that parliamentary secretaries had not yet been appointed, and we completely fail to appreciate the procedure whereby an hon. member of this house who is not a member of the government but only a supporter of the government is able to write to a person in his constituency in this way, and I hope the minister intends to deal with this particular matter. I have always assumed that the minister was able to deal with his own responsibilities and that he was able to deal with his own correspondence and that other members of parliament at no time receive authority to write letters and say that they have been asked by a department of the government or by a minister to take up a certain question. That would introduce an entirely new principle into our process of government.

This individual, apparently a persistent man, carried out a considerable correspondence with the minister, the hon. member for Lincoln and the Prime Minister. He finally realized he was not going to get very far under the present arrangement or system, so he mentioned in one of his letters that he may have to appeal to public opinion by way of revealing what has taken place in the newspapers and to members of the opposition in the House of Commons. In this regard, having been advised of Mr. Freeman's intention, the minister writes a letter to Mr. Freeman under date of February 12, 1959. The last part of that letter reads as follows:

Mr. Fulton: Read the whole letter.

Mr. Regier: It is rather long. It is two pages long. Very well.

I acknowledge your further letter of January 29 in which you protest against not being retained to act for C.M.H.C.

You state that you intend to write to the newspapers and others about this matter in accord with the draft letter which you have sent me.

It is of course a matter entirely for you to decide as to what you write, or to whom, and therefore I make no comment upon your announced intention, except to let you know that the sending or withholding of such a letter will have not the slightest effect upon the situation.

My responsibility as Minister of Justice includes recommending from time to time the names of lawyers across Canada who are best able to perform the legal work that the government of Canada or certain of its agencies may require to have done. In carrying out this responsibility it is my duty to exercise my judgment as to the names of those who should be recommended, on the basis of the best assessment I can make of the situation.

At this point I should like to interrupt and ask the minister what was the basis of his assessment? Was it as indicated earlier in this correspondence that the attorney was unwilling to recommend the election of the hon. member for Lincoln, or had he any other basis of assessment? I continue:

This is a matter which is kept under constant review.

As far as I can find out there was only one occasion when a review took place and that was when the Liberals were defeated. The old list was abolished and a new list of Conservative attorneys was brought in. I continue:

In addition to general assessments on the basis of what appears in the standard law lists, any lawyer, including yourself, whose name is drawn to my attention, from any source, has his ability to perform the services in question carefully weighed and assessed in the light of the work requiring to be done. In the case of work for an agency such as C.M.H.C., or indeed any other work for the government, one of the additional factors to be borne in mind is of course the necessity to ensure that those recommended for the particular work can have no conflict of interest as between their other client or clients and the government or agency in question. My recommendations are made from time to time on the basis of these assessments and you are quite in error in your conclusion that there is any other basis.

I recognize that there will of course not always be unanimity of opinion as to the conclusions reached or the recommendations made, but this is true in all situations where judgment must be exercised. In this respect, the government of Canada is in no different position from private persons who may also from time to time have to choose between lawyers whose services are available.

May I interrupt again and say I am not in agreement with that claim of the minister because a huge corporation such as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is being paid for by all the taxpayers of Canada and therefore all lawyers regardless of their political affiliation, and all other factors being equal, ought to be entitled to their share in the work that this large corporation does. To return to the letter:

I am not aware that it has ever been established as a principle that a lawyer is entitled to complain because a client has chosen not to avail himself of that lawyer's services, but has preferred another. In any event, even if complaints are made, it is and must always remain the responsibility of the government, just as it is in the case of an individual, to decide whose services will be used. In this case the government acts on my advice.

The minister fully confirms his role in this situation by those words. I continue:

While I regret that my decision in your case is disappointing to you personally, nevertheless, it is the sort of decision that it is my responsibility to make and for which I am prepared to accept responsibility. Perhaps it may occur to you that the fact that you have on two occasions resorted to direct or implied threats to write to the papers and elsewhere—

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition is known as "elsewhere". I continue:

—in your efforts to influence my decision, can only reinforce my judgment on the question of whether you are a suitable person to be retained by the government of Canada.

In other words, the minister is here claiming that an attorney who insists on his rights as a Canadian citizen, who puts a little bit of confidence in the Prime Minister's oft-expressed intentions in regard to a bill of rights and who uses the means available to him of informing the people of Canada what is taking place, is no longer eligible for service to the government in the eyes of the minister once he has resorted to these things.

The letter goes on to state:

If therefore you do carry out your intention to send out letters in the form of the one you have sent me, I can only suggest that you should send, in each case, a copy of this letter also. In that way, those who receive your letter will have all the facts.

I might add that they would not have nearly all the facts. Some of the letters I placed on the record earlier should also be known to the public. However, the gentleman in question did not let the matter drop at that point but appealed to the Prime Minister in reply to which he received a letter from the executive assistant and private secretary to the Prime Minister, Mr. Guest, which caused me some added concern. The letter reads in part as follows:

Naturally, as a lawyer myself, it is embarrassing for me to see a colleague at the bar actively soliciting clientele in this manner,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, Conservative members in this house who are barristers may applaud. They may think there is merit in that sentence. I say it is a despicable sentence and an intolerable thing that a citizen of Canada should be denied his rights as a citizen, whether or not he is a lawyer, to ask frankly and in a polite way over a period of years that he be restored to a position that he held under a previous government. The correspondence reveals that he was placed on the roster by the previous government not because he was a Liberal but because he was able to persuade the former minister of the equity of his claim. That is how he got on the roster at that time and was able to do some work for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, Mr. Guest continues:

—but it may be that there is some special circumstance you do not disclose which excepts this situation from the usual ethical considerations governing practice.

Under ordinary circumstances, your letter would be forwarded to the Minister of Justice for his comments, but since you say that you have been finally informed by him that your name would not be recommended to the corporation as counsel, I presume there would be little purpose in such action on my part. If, however, you feel that this office or the Prime Minister could render you any ethical assistance in soliciting legal business, I would be very pleased to hear from you.

That is the crowning glory of all of this correspondence. Here is the Prime Minister's offer to assist this barrister to obtain a livelihood in an ethical fashion after the government of the day so unethically removed his name without cause. There is no indication of any complaint against the man in any of the correspondence. According to the correspondence he committed only one offence and that obviously was when he found himself unable to endorse the election to this house of the hon. member for Lincoln. That is something I thought we were getting away from in Canada. I am very disappointed to see a British Columbia member of the cabinet involved in this kind of deal. I hope he will take steps to rectify the situation. I know that no minister can be informed of everything that transpires in his office. I can only express the hope and the wish that all of this has taken place without the knowledge of the minister and without his agreement and consent, and that this has all been done by one or more officials in his department, and that he will take early action.

The last letter I wish to refer to is dated February 24 last. It is a letter to Mr. Freeman from the minister, in which the minister says:

I really do not think that there is anything that I can add to what I said in my letter of February 12 in which I outlined the basis of selection of lawyers to represent the government of Canada and its agencies generally, in so far as my responsibility is concerned. I refer you particularly to the fifth paragraph of my letter of February 12, and to the last sentence of that paragraph.

In this letter the minister merely reminds the lawyer in St. Catharines of what he had said on an earlier occasion, and particularly the last paragraph and the last sentence which is as follows:

If, therefore, you do carry out your intention to send out letters in the form of the one you have sent me, I can only suggest that you should send, in each—

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend is reading the wrong paragraph. The letter of February 24 reads:

I refer you particularly to the fifth paragraph of my letter of February 12, and to the last sentence of that paragraph.

The last sentence of that paragraph reads:

My recommendations are made from time to time on the basis of these assessments and you are quite in error in your conclusion that there is any other basis.

Mr. Regier: I wish to apologize to the minister. I have made some marks here and I was in the wrong paragraph. However, the minister again refers to his letter of February 12 and this letter in the main, Mr. Chairman, is a claim by the minister that he reviews these lists from time to time. I hope the minister can now disclose what is the basis of such review, whether or not political affiliations and history of crown attorneys are involved in this review, and how often he has made such a review since taking office.

As I indicated earlier, I hope the minister will agree that this situation ought to be remedied. I notice that my house leader had an order of the house passed on April 20 last, and at noon today a reply had not been received, the order of the house had not yet been complied with. I do not see why an order of this kind has not been complied with in seven weeks time. It seems to me it has become a growing habit of this house to supply members of parliament with information on the day after the estimates have passed this house, and I think it is very much to be regretted. For a number of years now we have had the annual reports of a number of crown corporations or of ministers in our mail boxes on the morning following the final passing of the estimates. The motion passed by this house on April 20 last read:

> For a copy of any letters, lists or other memoranda sent to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation by the Department of Justice since January 1, 1956, stating the names of legal agents that may be engaged by the corporation.

That, Mr. Chairman, involved a copy of only a few lists, if the minister has in fact reviewed the list from time to time. If the minister has never reviewed the list and only once submitted a list that would be acceptable to a Tory government, then there would have been only one list to file in order to comply with the order of the house. Our only assumption can be, unless there is a satisfactory explanation, that this thing has been delayed for seven weeks until after the estimates have been disposed of.

Mr. Fulton: I think I should deal with this matter immediately. I shall start with a reference to the return. Without hesitation I apologize to the hon. gentleman if the return has not been brought down. I thought it had, because it is a nil return. I say that on the basis that the communications with respect to the employment of legal counsel are not sent in the manner suggested. I do from time to time advise my colleagues, the ministers for various departments, in response to their requests for such advice, as to what lawyers might appropriately be retained by their departments as agents, or by the various agencies for which they are responsible. This advice is sometimes given orally; occasionally it is given in the form of memoranda and, of course, as such it is correspondence between ministers which is of a privileged nature. There is no correspondence of this sort between my department and C.M.H.C., in any event, and therefore there is nothing to bring down in response to the order of the house. I am sorry, indeed, if the hon. member feels aggrieved because he had not been informed of that earlier.

With respect to this situation generally, there are a number of facts here which have not emerged clearly from the account which has been given by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and which I think should be placed upon the record. In placing them upon the record I regret if anything I have to say may seem to reflect upon the lawyer who is the subject of this correspondence. However, I shall confine my remarks to a statement of facts and if the facts should seem to be any reflection, then I regret that I find it necessary because of the position in which he himself has placed me and the hon. gentleman from Burnaby-Coquitlam has placed me whereby an explanation is essential. I think the committee is entitled to an explanation.

Mr. Regier: I had his permission.

Mr. Fulton: I am not suggesting the hon. gentleman did not have his permission.

Mr. Regier: I did.

Mr. Fulton: It is perfectly true that Mr. Freeman has been attempting for something over a year and a half to obtain work as an agent for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I start with this premise, and here I take direct issue with what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said. It is not, as I conceive it, the right of any lawyer in Canada that he should have his services retained by the government or by a government department. On that basis, if the proposition were accepted, it would be necessary for us eventually to retain the services of every lawyer in Canada.

It is my responsibility as Minister of Justice, as I indicated in my letter which has been placed on the record, to advise the government of Canada and the various departments and agencies thereof—and those departments are, of course, advised by their ministers—as to who are the lawyers practising in Canada whose services might be properly retained on behalf of the government. I think I should at this point and in order that it might appear here in the context, read what I said to Mr. Freeman:

> My responsibility as Minister of Justice includes recommending from time to time the names of lawyers across Canada who are best able to perform the legal work that the government of Canada or certain of its agencies may require to have done. In carrying out this responsibility it is my duty to exercise my judgment as to the names of those who should be recommended on the basis of the best assessment I can make of the situation.

I doubt whether any member of this house would disagree with this statement. It is not possible to employ every lawyer in Canada. As I have said, no lawyer in Canada is in a position where he can come and say, "I have an absolute right to be retained by the government". Even if he did, we do not have enough work to retain them all. Therefore, it is necessary for the minister to make a selection as between the lawyers whose services are available.

As I have explained in the letter which has been read, in making an assessment of those lawyers whose services can be retained we assess the ability of the lawyer in question to perform the services in the light of the work to be done, and in the case of work for an agency such as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or indeed any other work for the government, one of the additional factors to be borne in mind is, of course, the necessity to ensure that those recommended for the particular work can have no conflict of interest as between their other clients or client and the government or agency in question.

It is significant, Mr. Chairman, that in the course of his efforts, which have continued, as I said, since December 10, 1957 at least, to assert a right to work for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Freeman has made it clear that one of the reasons he wanted to be retained was that he had clients who have loans from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has not been told that by the lawyer in question but that appears in one of the letters he wrote.

Mr. Regier: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: I would prefer to complete the statement of facts at this time. I want to emphasize to the committee that in a reply that Mr. Freeman received on January 6, 1959 from my executive assistant that matter was drawn to his attention. Perhaps I should read that letter in full. It is dated January 6, 1959 and is marked "private" but I assume that since the lawyer himself has raised the matter it is in order for me to disclose the full correspondence. The letter, as I say, is signed by my executive assistant. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Freeman:

My minister has instructed me to acknowledge receipt with thanks of your letter of December 11, 1958, in connection with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation work in the St. Catharines area. The matter of agents for the C.M.H.C. in St. Catharines has been thoroughly reviewed and we find that at present, considering the quantity of work involved, there are more than a sufficient number of lawyers who have already been instructed for the corporation's work. These matters are reviewed from time to time, however, and your interest in being of assistance to the corporation will be kept in mind when the review is taking place.

One other part of your letter that should perhaps be discussed is the fourth paragraph where you mention particularly C.M.H.C. work for a builder who is also a client of yours. The policy of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and indeed, of all government departments, is that no lawyer may act both for his client and the C.M.H.C. or the department at the same time. I am sure you will readily understand the reason for this rule when you consider the conflicts of interest that could arise. It would, therefore, not be possible to authorize your use on C.M.H.C. work involving your own clients in any event.

Thanking you for your continued interest,

Yours sincerely,

After that I received several further letters from Mr. Freeman, including a letter dated January 29, 1959 objecting to the decision and stating in part:

To begin with, I intend to send copies of the enclosed letter to the Prime Minister, the editors of the St. Catharines Standard, the Toronto Globe and Mail, the Toronto Daily Star, the Ottawa Evening Citizen and the Ottawa Journal. After I have done so, I then intend to contact Mr. Hazen Argue and perhaps one of the other opposition members to see if this matter can be raised on the floor of the House of Commons.

This was not the first direct or implied threat—I use the word "threat" but perhaps I should use the word "statement"—that the lawyer in question intended to take this matter to the press and to the floor of the House of Commons. I replied to him in full knowledge of that possibility. As I have said, and as I said to him, it is my responsibility to make assessments of those lawyers who are suitable and qualified to do work for the government and its departments and agencies, and that is a responsibility which I accept. I make my recommendations to my colleagues accordingly and I have not recommended the name of Mr. Irving Freeman.

As I indicated to Mr. Freeman, there are a number of factors that I take into account in making my assessment of the qualifications of lawyers to serve the government. In making such assessments and weighing qualifications, one of the factors that will and must weigh with me is the methods followed in cases such as this by such lawyers to have their services retained. I do not regard it as an indication of high qualification for a lawyer to importune the department and the minister to have his name placed upon a list. Particularly I do not regard it as evidence of high qualification with respect to legal ability for that lawyer, when he finds that his importunities are not acceded to, to say, "Very well, I am going to write to the papers and go to the leader of the C.C.F. and see that the matter is spread all over the record." I have no objection to the publicity but I suggest that I am entitled to take that attitude into account and the question of whether it is a proper professional attitude to take when I am weighing the qualifications of that lawyer to have his services retained by the government of Canada.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, so far as any question of influence is concerned, that the record shows clearly that Mr. Freeman first had his name placed on the list by the former Liberal member for this constituency in May of 1957 so it must have taken Mr. Freeman some considerable time to persuade the former government of his qualifications if he was placed on the list just one month before that government was defeated. My information is that his efforts in that direction were also continued for some considerable time.

Then again, with respect to the question of whether any member of parliament interested himself in the matter, because my hon. friend seems to suggest that it was wrong for the present hon. member for Lincoln to have an interest in the matter, the correspondence establishes clearly that Mr. Freeman requested the present member for Lincoln to do what he could to have Mr. Freeman's name placed on the list. Therefore I find it extraordinary that my hon. friend should suggest there is anything wrong in finding on the file correspondence between the present hon. member for Lincoln and Mr. Freeman.

I can only say, of course, with respect to the particular terminology of one of these letters that I can take no responsibility for the phrase, "I have been asked by the Department of Justice to write you about this particular matter." I have not had the opportunity to discuss with the hon. member for Lincoln exactly why he used those words but I fancy that what he intended to imply was, "I have discussed this matter with the Department of Justice and am writing you accordingly to advise you of the situation." I say that because, as the hon. member has said, we do not ask private members of parliament to write official letters on behalf of the department. I understand that the fact is that the hon. member for Lincoln properly reported the situation as he had learned it in the course of discussions with myself and my executive assistant.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is very much more to be said on that point except that I have no apologies to make for the decision I reached with regard to the question whether or not Mr. Freeman was a suitable person to recommend to my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, as a lawyer whose services should be retained by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As I have pointed out, it is my responsibility from time to time to make assessments as between lawyers and in making these assessments I am required to exercise judgment as to who is the most suitable and best qualified person or persons to use, and I recognize that in forming these judgments, as in every case where judgment is necessary to be formed, there will be those who disagree with the judgment. It does not surprise me to find that Mr. Freeman disagrees with my assessment of him but that is something which, while I may regret it, I cannot alter. I merely repeat that under all the circumstances I can see no reason why I should change my opinion or assessment and I have no intention, whether by virtue of the fact that the lawyer in question has written to my hon. friends opposite or for any other reason whatsoever, of changing that assessment.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I think it is very obvious that if Mr. Freeman needed this work he would not have followed the course he did. He would have continued to beg the hon. member for Lincoln and the minister to be placed on the list. I suggest that Mr. Freeman's whole object was to raise his voice in objection to having been removed from the list of those eligible without cause and that the correspondence reveals that he came to the conclusion, and obviously it was the only conclusion he could come to, that the reason for his dismissal was political and had nothing to do with the work he had been doing on behalf of the crown corporation. I am very pleased to have the minister tell us that the hon. member for Lincoln had no authority to write that he had been asked by the Department of Justice to write regarding this matter.

I should like the minister also to say whether or not the hon. member for Lincoln had authority to indicate on December 16, 1957 that if Mr. Freeman would change his mind about the hon. member for Lincoln things might be different, and there might be some hope he would be again placed on the list of those eligible. I should like to know whether or not the minister knows anything about this sentence in the letter of December 16 which I quoted earlier:

> If you have changed your mind about me, I could change my thoughts about you also.

I feel the minister should make it very clear that his decision concerning Mr. Freeman had nothing whatever to do with what Mr. Freeman's thinking might have been about the hon. member for Lincoln.

The minister supplied some information that seems to be at variance with the contents of this correspondence. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in a letter dated October 25, 1957, file No. 100-15-6, says that in selecting legal agents they adhere to a list provided to them by the Department of Justice. The minister informs us, in response to an order of this house, that no list is in existence. The minister is in effect, therefore, saying that the general counsel for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Wilson, is very much in error when he claims in his letter to Mr. Freeman that they adhere to a list provided by the Department of Justice. The minister even seems to indicate here and there throughout his argument that all he did was to telephone the Minister of Public Works once in a while, more or less indicating that occasionally a new barrister ought to be added to the list; that it was a matter of an afternoon conversation or a telephone call. I hope the minister is able to clear up this matter of exactly how this list is compiled and when it was last compiled.

There are indications from the corporation and from the minister's department, at least from the correspondence with the minister's department, that a new list was prepared when the minister took office. If such a new list was prepared, the expectation of the hon. member for Assiniboia should certainly have been dealt with, and we should not be faced with the answer that no list does, in fact, exist. The hon. member for Assiniboia asked for all letters, lists or other memoranda, dating back to January 1, 1956.

I should like to clear up another point. Mr. Freeman is not asking for the right to do legal work for the government of Canada or any of its crown corporations.

Mr. Fulton: He certainly is; he is demanding the right.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Freeman is in the same position as other attorneys in equal circumstances, he is asking for the right to be placed on the list of those eligible to do work for the government of Canada. This is an altogether different thing from demanding the right to do any work. Even though you may be on the list, your turn may never come as the minister well knows, and as I am sure is already indicated in the correspondence.

There was one further insinuation by the minister, not only in this committee but also in some of the correspondence, and that concerned a conflict of interest. Does the minister mean that none of the attorneys who are on the eligible list now never had a nodding acquaintance with anyone who has ever used the services of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? If that is so, his imagination must be rather vivid indeed. Mr. Freeman uses the case in point to back up his argument and to indicate to the minister that he knows something about the housing field and therefore is capable of dealing with matters of this kind at any time. Does Mr. Freeman really complain that he is unable to serve two masters at the same time? Like all lawyers, even he would know he could not be serving two masters at the same time.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal this evening with a case which was brought to my attention some months ago over which I spent a lot of time. I have listened to the representations not only of the person who considers himself the victim but a number of other quite responsible citizens from Montreal. I have promised these people to bring this matter to the attention of the minister in the committee on the first item of the minister's estimates.

I might say that in dealing with this question I have done a bit of reading, but one must realize that when an ordinary layman gets into the field of law he finds himself tangled up very easily. However, I make these representations tonight on the basis of our own law, the royal proclamation of October 7, 1763, the Quebec Act, the Constitutional Act, the Union Act and the British North America Act, and more particularly upon the recent expressions of concern with respect to the rights of the individual which have been exhibited in the parliament of Great Britain.

It is very pleasing to note that in the parliament of Great Britain, where they are concerned with serious international and national questions, they do find time to deal with the grievance of the humble subject. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I was so interested in this case that I want to place on record an extract from Newsweek of March 2, 1959, which is as follows:

The Lad in the Gallery

The House of Commons was hushed. In the distinguished strangers gallery, the 16-year old grocer's boy from the Scottish highlands sat tensely between his parents—sandy hair slicked back, elbows on knees, eyes wide. Below him on the floor, Britain's Prime Minister Harold Macmillan had risen from the front bench to his feet. "I will make a statement about John Waters."

For the watching boy, whose name had thus become the official business of parliament, it was a long-awaited moment. For the assembled M.P.'s and the public in many countries, it signified parliamentary democracy in its most majestic role—as guardian of the rights of the individual citizen.

John Waters' plea for justice went back fourteen months, to the night he was found bleeding and bruised in an alley near his home in the little northern Scottish town of Thurso. The boy claimed he had been beaten up by two local constables, after giving them "a bit of lip". His parents had appealed to the law officers of Scotland for an inquiry, and produced seventeen witnesses to support John's charge. But the lord advocate, backed by the secretary of state for Scotland, ruled that their own investigations did not justify further inquiry.

Winslow Boy?

The Waterses found a powerful defender, though, in the Conservative M.P. from their own district—

And all credit to him.

—Sir David Robertson. Impressed by the boy's references, which he said were "far better" than his own would have been at that age, Sir David pressed the matter relentlessly in parliament, and gradually gained the support of nearly 200 fellow members. The British press took up the case, comparing Waters to George Archer-Shee, the naval cadet whose exoneration in the courts 50 years ago on a charge of stealing had recently served as the basis for Terence Rattigan's play "The Winslow Boy".

Last week, Prime Minister Macmillan temporarily cast aside the great affairs of state—Cyprus, Germany, his own trip to Moscow—to tell the house that he had personally investigated the Waters affair, and decided, in view of the "grave public disquiet" that a high judicial tribunal should probe out the truth.

Cheers from both benches greeted his announcement. Parliament passed the government notice unanimously. A three-man tribunal, appointed by the government, will soon meet in Edinburgh to establish just what happened on the night of the alleged assault, and what the police did about it. Commons would then decide on the next step.

In all, Britain's parliament had spent 90 minutes discussing the private grievance of one red-cheeked errand boy who had gotten himself into trouble. But few M.P.'s regarded this as time ill spent. Macmillan spoke for most of them at the end when he said, quietly, "It is encouraging to feel that at a moment when our minds are filled with the great problems between nations and vast political issues ... we should turn to try to do justice to individuals."

It is on that account that the mother of parliaments retains the respect it does throughout the commonwealth and throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, in proceeding with my brief remarks, the statement I wish to read, which is a portion of a television program, contains some criticism of justice in this country and judges. I might say in that respect that members of parliament have the same rights as individuals to criticize the courts and to criticize justices. I want to quote briefly first of all an excerpt or two which have been brought to my attention to support my contention. We find that Lord Russell in the Queen versus Gray, 1902 Queen's Bench, page 35 at page 40, said:

Judges and courts are alike open to criticism, and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to common good, no court could or would treat that as contempt.

Mr. Justice Duff in the Alberta Bill case said:

It is illegal to interfere with the right of public discussion as to substantially interfere with the parliamentary institution of Canada.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Then I noticed quite recently in the March 16, 1959 issue of Newsweek the following opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Black of the United States supreme court:

Back in 1898, Mr. Justice Brewer stated in an address that many criticisms may be "devoid of good taste, but better all sorts of criticism than no criticism at all".

In 1941, Mr. Justice Black said in writing for the majority concerning a contempt case against the Los Angeles Times: "The assumption that respect for the judiciary can be won by shielding judges from published criticism wrongly appraises the character of American public opinion ... an enforced silence, however limited, solely in the name of preserving the dignity of the bench, would probably engender resentment, suspicion, and contempt, much more than it would enhance respect."

Dissenting in the same case, Mr. Justice Frankfurter nevertheless said: "Therefore judges must be kept mindful of their limitations and of their ultimate public responsibility by a vigorous stream of criticism expressed with candour however blunt."

The late Mr. Justice Jackson wrote in "The Supreme Court in the American System" that "criticism by the profession" is one of the important criteria in appraising a decision's "real weight in subsequent cases".

The court is a responsible, human institution. To elevate it above criticism would be to create a tyranny above the law and above the government of which it is a part.

Mr. Chairman, as I said in opening my remarks, I have had discussions with the person who considers himself victimized and as having suffered an injustice. I have had discussions with a number of responsible and quite well known citizens in Montreal with respect to this case. I have read masses of correspondence. I have a large file concerning this matter and I have gone through it very carefully, and you will readily understand, from the point of view of the layman, that it is very difficult to appreciate the finer points of the law. But after those discussions and conversations and reading extensively and listening to the representations of well known responsible people from Montreal, I have come to the conclusion that this gentleman suffers a measure of injustice, and at the request of the people concerned I am bringing it to the attention to the minister in the house.

To make it as brief as possible, I am simply going to read an extract from a television program that was given in connection with this case in Montreal. I might say that before doing that, after the television program was given, which was on, I think, November 3 of last year, the gentleman in question intended to give it over the C.B.C. and he submitted the text to a lawyer. I would now like to quote from the Gazette; I am not sure of the date, but I have a cutting here:

He said he submitted the text of his speech to his lawyers before the telecast and was assured it contained nothing libellous. All references to individuals had been removed.

Mr. Chartrand said C.B.C. lawyers would not say that the speech was libellous but they did say at the same time that it was "delicate".

He said he is not setting aside the possibility of suing the C.B.C. to obtain "freedom of speech".

At Ottawa, a C.B.C. spokesman said the corporation's own lawyers and those of the justice department had advised the C.B.C. that there was a possibility the courts might find Mr. Chartrand's statement defamatory and contemptuous. For that reason, the C.B.C. declined to broadcast the speech again.

It was in the first instance given over a television program on the C.B.C.'s network. I intend to quote only briefly from this speech given over the C.B.C. television service to indicate the nature of this complaint. To go into the details of all the correspondence and the amount of evidence which has been presented would have been impossible in the time one has on these occasions and, moreover, would be, I think, completely ineffective on my part. However, these are extracts from the television program, and I should explain that this is a translation; the telecast was given in French, and it has been translated, I may add by a gentleman who does not pretend to be a particularly efficient translator. It is headed "The Sommer case".

There is one particular case, that of Edward Sommer who was the only son and an heir of Abraham Sommer who died September 3, 1934. Mr. Sommer left an estate of about $2 million in property at depression era values (which means they are worth much more today) and $185,000 of insurance.

Edward Sommer has been in court for many years. At a certain time, he wanted to intervene in a case that concerned this inheritance. An important judge declared on June 30 that he had already rendered judgment on June 7. Mr. Sommer wrote the judge to ask him for the judgment and he never saw it.

In other words, the court rejected a request to intervene, saying that the matter was settled. But the case is not settled, there exists no judgment.

Mr. Sommer complained to the bar. He complained against certain lawyers. The bar did not have him summoned for a hearing, but rather the lawyer whom he had blamed summoned him before the bar.

He appeared in court once more, and the judges criticized him severely from the bench.

Finally, on September 27, he appeared in court for a case. The crown prosecutor challenged him and asked the judge to have him confined for mental illness. An individual was brought forth as witness who has not proved that he was a doctor certified by the college of physicians. He decided that he had already seen him (Sommer) for several minutes in court following proceedings, and that the Mr. Sommer in question suffered from schizophrenia.

All this without Mr. Sommer being able to speak. While this was going on in French at which time he, being English, was requesting that proceedings be conducted in English and that he be permitted to cross-examine the witness, the provincial police took him and brought him to the cells at Bordeaux.

After 12 days, he was seen by a social worker, who could not understand why he was there. After 20 days, the medical superintendent of Bordeaux came to see him and told him that he could not understand why he was there.

Then it was that some friends, who by chance found a conscientious lawyer at the court (there are some conscientious lawyers, and also conscientious judges) requested a writ of habeas corpus.

Here is what Judge Ouimet said in rendering his decision on the habeas corpus writ:

"There is no doubt in the mind of the undersigned that the regulations of article 451 were not observed in the present case, for the following reasons:

'There is no proof of a qualified medical practitioner before the judge:

The ruling of the judge is oral;

The petitioner was deprived of incontestable right to cross-examine according to the Criminal Code and the principles of natural justice.

In the opinion of the court, these substantial flaws are fatal and as a result the sending of the petitioner to prison for mental examination was invalid and of no effect.' "

Conclusion: Judge Ouimet maintained the writ of habeas corpus, declared the detention of Sommer and the deprivation of his liberty unjustified and illegal, and ordered that he be set free.

Mr. Chairman, I have quoted briefly from the telecast given on behalf of Mr. Sommer. The rest of the telecast continued in similar vein. I have quoted one extract dealing with what this gentleman claims to be a series of injustices which he has suffered at the hands of the courts of Quebec and at the hands of various gentlemen of the legal profession in Quebec. Once again, I wish to say that I have read the correspondence very carefully —a very slow and tedious task—and I have listened to the representations of responsible people who feel seriously concerned about the injustice which they say this gentleman has suffered. As I said before, I promised I would bring this matter to the attention of parliament and to the attention of this committee. I have done so, and I now urge the minister to give this matter his consideration and bring it to the attention of the attorney general of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to say at the outset how much I appreciate the manner in which the hon. member for Kootenay West has raised this matter. It is a subject which the hon. member and I have discussed briefly on former occasions and in connection with which, as he knows, I have already made some inquiries. But while I appreciate the reference which was made to the inquiry in the United Kingdom, the hon. member will in turn appreciate that although we are no less concerned here we do operate under a federal system as distinct from the unitary system in the United Kingdom. Therefore I can only tell the hon. gentleman that the responsibility for making inquiries into this matter on the basis of the allegations made rests, in the first instance, with the provincial authorities. In saying that I must also say at once that I do not, of course, intend to suggest that the allegations are well founded. That question could only be established on the basis of such an inquiry. I have already referred this matter to the provincial authorities by whom, I understand, it has been investigated. I should like to say to the hon. member just this: I will, of course, gladly bring to the attention of the attorney general of Quebec the further remarks that he has made on this subject with the request that they be carefully considered and the matter again carefully investigated.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter which has caused me considerable concern over many long years, and that relates to the minister's statement that we have a different system from that which prevails in the United Kingdom and that the result, in effect—and I do not want to misinterpret what the hon. gentleman said—is that this question must rest with the provincial authority.

I fail to see how we can even begin to think of a bill of rights for Canadians while we are content to have the administration of the rights of Canadians rest with the provincial authorities. I fail to see how we can even begin to advocate the introduction of a bill of rights for Canadians as Canadians and yet continue this old and outmoded idea that our rights as Canadians should be forever subject to interpretations which may be decided upon by ten different attorneys general in ten different Canadian provinces.

I feel that this is the position which has to be faced by the Canadian people. I say that either we have rights as Canadians or we do not have rights as Canadians, and if we do not have rights as Canadians we might as well be known as Newfoundlanders or Manitobans or British Columbians or anything else. I feel that the minister is leaning over backwards as have all other ministers in insisting on the prerogatives in the provincial attorneys general to enforce the rights of Canadians as Canadians.

I wish now to return to the debate that occurred in this chamber before the dinner hour. During the dinner recess I had occasion to read some correspondence and I am unable to reveal it because I have not permission to do so as I had with respect to other correspondence to which I referred. I have received correspondence from attorneys of the city of Ottawa who are complaining about there being a select list of well-known supporters of the Conservative party whose names are placed on a list for legal work for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or attorneys who may not be well-known as Conservatives but who are partners in legal firms who have been known to make a donation to the Conservative election fund and thus have been placed on the preferred list while Liberal and attorneys of other political faith have been removed from that list.

The minister indicated before the dinner hour that there is no such list. He made that statement despite a letter I read into the record earlier in the day in which it was said that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is bound to engage attorneys who are on a list supplied by the minister's department. The minister has not yet satisfied us as to whether or not there is a list and concerning who is responsible for that list. The minister indicated a certain measure of responsibility but at the same time contradicted himself when he said there was no list. The committee is entitled to receive an adequate explanation as to whether there is a list, when it was last revised, who was advised of the revision of the list and why that revised list was not disclosed to the House of Commons in response to an order of the house dated in April that any such lists be disclosed. The order was passed in April and it is now June. There was ample time to disclose the list.

I know I have heard a lot of appeals to professional dignity but may I say it is my conviction that within the ranks of the Tories there is no such thing as professional dignity. There is purely political patronage and professional dignity has to take a secondary role.

Mr. Ricard: Stop crying and shut up.

Mr. Regier: I regret that a minister from British Columbia would associate himself for one moment with a matter of this kind. I expected that he would denounce this practice but he did not. He simply sought to get out from under by casting slurs at one attorney in the province of Ontario who had the guts and initiative to defend his rights as a Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Regier: All this attorney was asking for was that he be placed on the eligible list and if he could not be placed on the eligible list all he asked was that he be informed as to why he was removed from the eligible list of attorneys who are able to act on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

An hon. Member: Go back to the garbage.

Mr. Spencer: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? I am quite interested in the subject matter that he has raised and I should like to ask him a question in order to clarify this subject. Inasmuch as he appears to be giving to the committee some advice which he thinks we should follow, I would like to ask him this question. If I as a lawyer were to publicly proclaim that the hon. member does not possess the attributes required to properly represent his constituency would he then think that I had the soundness of judgment that would warrant his recommending me as a lawyer to represent Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Pearson: Why, of course he would!

Mr. Regier: I am very glad the hon. member asked that question. I would say that many of the men in my riding who openly advocated that I be defeated at the last election are honourable men and are worthy of appointment by any government. I do not like to see a government in office that pursues the idea that anyone who participates in election campaigns ought to be denied his rights as a Canadian citizen. I will say to the hon. member that there are as many liars in the legal profession as there are in any other profession in Canada today, if not more.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Regier: No, I will not withdraw that statement. The hon. member who is asking me to do that is a farmer. I say there are more honest agriculturists in Canada than there are honest lawyers. There are a lot of lawyers in the C.C.F. movement. There are many lawyers who realize that the day is coming when human rights will take precedence over property rights.

The Chairman: Order. I must remind the hon. member that at the present time we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Justice. I do not believe that subject has anything to do with the fact that there are some liars in the legal profession. I must tell the hon. member that he is completely out of order in pursuing this irrelevant discussion.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that I will not pursue the question of the number of liars there may be in the lawyer profession.

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman; the non-practising ones.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a question with regard to the list referred to in the correspondence, which list the minister did not see fit to deny exists. I want to know how the list of acceptable attorneys is prepared and whether or not there was a complete revision of that list after the election of 1957 and how such a list might be made available to this committee?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, as I explained before the dinner hour, it is one of the responsibilities of the Minister of Justice and a responsibility which I take most seriously, to advise my colleagues as to the lawyers in various parts of Canada who may be considered qualified to represent the government of Canada either as agents of the Minister of Justice or on a individual basis to act for the agencies of the ministers concerned.

This is a matter which I take extremely seriously because I believe that the standards of legal representation and the conduct of counsel representing the government, whether as agents of the minister or as solicitors or counsel retained in individual cases, are matters of the greatest concern and importance to the public of Canada. I, therefore, take this part of my duties extremely seriously.

I explained to the hon. gentleman before dinner that with respect to the advice which I tender to my colleagues, I tender it to them as part of my duties and in a fashion which represents or forms part of that interdepartmental or interministerial discussion which is, of course, a matter privileged from being produced in the house. I believe there may have been one inaccuracy in what I said before dinner because I said that we did not supply directly to the department or agencies thereof lists of persons who may be retained. I have checked the matter since and I find that as a matter of departmental administration, where other departments, such as the Department of National Revenue particularly and one or two others, are in a position where they constantly or frequently need on short notice the services of solicitors or counsel where such counsel particularly are the agents of the Minister of Justice, there I do provide to my colleagues and through them to their departments what might be called standing lists of agents. I am at pains to ensure that the agents so nominated are proper and worthy representatives of the government of Canada and are proper persons to act as agents of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Benidickson: That includes the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Fulton: I shall refer to that matter of detail in a moment.

In regard to the other area in which I am called upon by my colleagues to advise them as to the names and qualifications of lawyers who may be retained in individual cases, I have explained this afternoon the basis upon which my assessment is made and the basis upon which I so advise my colleagues, and I have nothing to vary or retract in that connection. I shall, however, amplify what I said then by saying that I do take pains, in consultation with my advisers, to ensure that the character, qualifications and reputation of those whom I recommend are of the very highest order. As I explained this afternoon, such advice is given to the ministers of the other departments.

With respect to the point my hon. friend tries to make out of the fact that the general counsel or general solicitor of C.M.H.C. had written a letter saying that they confine their selection to the lists provided by the Department of Justice, there is some technical inaccuracy there with which I do not quarrel, my point being that I do not provide directly to C.M.H.C. as such any lists.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: My responsibility is to advise my colleague the Minister of Public Works and there is a close connection between my office and his office in that connection.

Mr. Benidickson: You advise the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. Fulton: Certainly, and as my hon. friend knows, it is the constitutional responsibility of the Minister of Justice to advise the other departments of government as to legal problems that might arise. I trust this is a complete explanation of the manner in which this advice is given.

Since this matter has been raised in connection with the position of a particular lawyer in a manner which I regret and in the manner in which my hon. friend has raised it again, it makes it incumbent upon me to state the facts as to the qualifications which I believe to be present with respect to any lawyer whom I shall recommend to my colleagues. I feel I have no option, in the light of the correspondence that was read this afternoon and in the light of what has just been said by my hon. friend, but to lay before the committee some of the ethical standards which are supposed to be followed by lawyers and which I look for in any lawyer before I will recommend him as a suitable representative or lawyer to be retained by this government or its agencies. The committee will remember that there was read into the record this afternoon by my hon. friend the letter from me to Mr. Freeman in which I pointed out that in my view a matter which I would take into consideration in assessing the qualifications of a solicitor was whether or not he made direct or implied threats as to what he would do if he was not given certain work.

My hon. friend will recall and the committee will also recall that there was placed on the record references to correspondence which established perfectly clearly that Mr. Freeman had been carrying on a campaign by which he attempted to assert his right to be retained by the government of Canada, his right to have business from the government of Canada. Let me read to the committee from the proceedings of the fifth annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, held in 1920, in the course of which they laid down certain canons of ethics. These, I believe, have been revised from time to time, but I am informed that in substance and in effect these canons of ethics are still those which the bar association has said should govern the conduct of members of the profession. I read from page 264, the duty of a solicitor or lawyer to himself, subparagraph (3):

> The publication or circulation of ordinary simple business cards is not per se improper but solicitation of business by circulars or advertisements or by personal communications or interviews not warranted by personal relations, is unprofessional. It is equally unprofessional to seek retainers through agents of any kind. Indirect advertisement for business by furnishing or inspiring newspaper comment concerning causes in which the lawyer has been or is connected, or concerning the manner of their conduct, the magnitude of the interests involved, the importance of the lawyer's position, and like self-laudations defy the traditions and lower the tone of the lawyer's high calling, should not be tolerated. The best advertisement for a lawyer is establishment of a well merited reputation for personal capacity and fidelity to trust.

I can only repeat what I said this afternoon, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Regier: Are you laying a charge?

Mr. Winch: Are you laying a charge?

Mr. Fulton: —that, on the basis of the correspondence which my hon. friend introduced into the record of this house and on the basis of my opinion as expressed in that correspondence at the time, formulated as it then was and still is, on the basis of what I regard to be the standard of ethics which should be followed by solicitors, I have no reason to change my opinion that the gentleman in question should not be placed upon the list for the receipt of government business.

Mr. Winch: Will you lay a charge against Freeman?

Mr. Fulton: I say that as the minister merely exercising his constitutional advisability to advise his colleagues as to who are proper lawyers for them to retain.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just insinuation and innuendo.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice enunciated or repeated the enunciation of the Canadian Bar Association in convention in 1920 as to the proper ethics for a barrister or solicitor. Has he since assuming office received from any member of the Canadian Bar Association, or on behalf of any member of the Canadian Bar Association, representations that seem to be in contravention of the ethics enunciated there? If so, has he in any respect given any work to any of these people as a result of representations of this kind?

Mr. Fulton: The answer to both parts of the question is no, with the possible exception of the case under discussion.

Mr. Regier: I cannot let the ministers statement go. He said that Mr. Freeman is carrying on a campaign. May I remind the minister that all of the correspondence reveals that Mr. Freeman, in a completely ethical manner, appealed to the government without success, I regret to say, for a period in excess of a year and a half to explain why he had been removed from the list of those eligible to act on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and all the answers he received over the whole 18 months indicated very clearly that the only reason he had been removed from the list was that he was not a Conservative and had not acted on behalf of the Tory party candidate.

Mr. Fulton: That is quite inaccurate. There were placed on the record this afternoon the reply directed to Mr. Freeman by my executive assistant and the reply of myself both of which explain that there are an adequate number of lawyers in St. Catharines to do the work available and, further, that since one of Mr. Freeman's revealed interests in being nominated as an agent of C.M.H.C. was that he had clients who had loans from C.M.H.C. we felt this was an incompatible position, and that was another reason for our refusal to place him on the list.

Mr. Regier: I think the dates of the correspondence will reveal that this was only an example used by Mr. Freeman to prove a point away on in the discussions and the minister is on very weak ground because he cannot claim and has not even attempted to claim that the lawyers who are on the list do not also have clients who have a nodding acquaintance with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think that the letters of the hon. member for Lincoln completely expose all the contentions of the minister in this regard. In other words, if you will change your mind about me I might change my mind about you and you might still get on the list.

I appeal to the minister to end this nonsense, to be as honest as a number of other members of the government have been and to announce here and now that in his department at least no pork barrel politics are going to be tolerated. I indicated earlier that it is not only this lawyer in southern Ontario who is involved. During the dinner hour I read reams of correspondence from lawyers in the city of Ottawa confirming what I said before six o'clock, that when the Tories took office they abolished the old list and established a new one consisting only of Conservatives.

The minister has not yet said why Mr. Freeman was removed from the list of eligible lawyers. I am not concerned with him being read out of the Ontario bar association. If the Ontario bar association wants to be that reactionary and silly that is entirely up to them. All I can say is that all the mutterings and beefings of the Tory backbenchers about unions will be completely exposed as a farce if the Ontario bar association shows itself to be the most reactionary of all unions in the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Freeman is appealing to the parliament of Canada on the basis of his right as a citizen of Canada to be placed on the eligible list. He is not asking for any business or any guarantee of remuneration. The minister may laugh and in the eyes of the Tories this may be a laughing matter. After all, they put on a great big circus show in the election financed by millions of dollars. This man is appealing on the basis of his right as a citizen to be placed on the eligible list. The minister is denying him that right and the minister has not yet put forward one single argument as to why this man was removed from the list of lawyers in the province of Ontario who are eligible to do this work. I should like to ask the minister to explain why this man was removed from the list. The minister now claims that the fact that Mr. Freeman has revealed this situation to the opposition obviously shows that he is ineligible. To my mind the fact that this man has revealed the situation to opposition members shows that he is concerned with a bill of rights for Canadians, and any bill of rights that the Prime Minister will introduce will be a farce if there is going to be a continuation of pork barrel politics.

Mr. Grafftey: Pompous indignation.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, we have had a rather lengthy discussion about Mr. Freeman's eligibility. If Mr. Freeman had no freedom of eligibility, surely we have freedom of speech here, and one can come to the conclusion that Mr. Freeman had freedom more or less so far as eligibility is concerned. To me it looks like it was a question of patronage. What the hon. member has just said goes to prove to the committee that before the election those who are now in power criticized the former government for patronage but now they are doing the same, if not worse as the previous government.

Mr. Ricard: So you were doing it then.

Mr. Denis: I rose just to ask one question of the Minister of Justice. I am very surprised not to see his assistant, the Solicitor General, who should be here because, although he has no ministry of his own, although he has no job to do because he was replaced by a kind of commission, still in the estimates of the Minister of Justice there is an item which concerns the Solicitor General. There is a statutory item of $17,000 but maybe the Solicitor General does not care and is not interested because we cannot lower the amount. I should like to know from the Minister of Justice if the Solicitor General is still in office and still has a job to do since the inauguration of the new commission. We do not see much of him, especially when his department is to be discussed.

I am told by many members of the government that they are checking the number of speeches made in the house but without checking anything we know that the Solicitor General is not so loquacious as the previous speaker who dealt with the Freeman matter. The Minister of Justice has invited us to ask questions or make observations before he makes a general statement, and we would like to know what is left to the Solicitor General as far as his job is concerned. Is he interested in this new unemployment insurance scheme extending the benefits he will get from 36 weeks to 52 weeks? We do not know.

The Chairman: Order—

Mr. Denis: I should like, Mr. Chairman, just in passing—

The Chairman: Order; I must remind the hon. member that we are at present discussing the estimates of the Department of Justice and it is out of order to discuss the actions of the Solicitor General or of any other member of the Department of Justice. At the moment, we must confine our remarks to matters that touch upon the administration of justice.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —surely, the salary of the Solicitor General, which is a statutory item, is shown under the heading of the Department of Justice in the blue book. Surely when my hon. friend is seeking to find out what functions, if any, the Solicitor General performs, he is seeking to find out how the Department of Justice is administered.

Mr. Denis: Exactly; that is the question I wanted to ask the Minister of Justice. However, I have had a bad example from him and from the other hon. member who has just taken his seat, in making lengthy statements. What are the functions of the Solicitor General, now that some of his duties have been removed from him?

Mr. Fulton: Now that the hon. member has come to his question and has refrained from making these rather light remarks about his colleague from Quebec, the Solicitor General, I can tell him that the functions of the Solicitor General still relate to advising His Excellency with respect to the prerogative of mercy, with respect to pardons and remissions which are under the royal prerogative, and advising on capital cases.

Mr. Denis: May I ask—

Mr. Fulton: The functions of the Solicitor General have not been altered that substantially from what they were under the previous administration, when his salary was not questioned.

Mr. Denis: Far from questioning the salary of the Solicitor General, I may say that the previous solicitor general had more to do than the present holder of that office. Most of his duties have been taken away from him since the commission has been established. He may do some other job in this department, but I am surprised that he is not here because, after all, he is working for the Department of Justice. If he is an adviser to the department, why is he not here? Perhaps he has something to do with the new definition of obscene literature or something, we do not know.

Mr. Fulton: No, the answer, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member well knows in spite of what he is saying is that the Minister of Justice is responsible for the administration of the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice is here to answer questions that may be asked with respect to the administration of his department. If my hon. friend will confine himself to asking questions instead of casting needless slurs, I shall be glad to answer his questions.

Mr. Pearson: The Solicitor General's functions obviously have not increased, which makes it perhaps more surprising that under this item we find, whereas the department was able to do with 117 employees last year, this year they find it necessary to have 133. Why has there been this increase in staff?

Mr. Fulton: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is that the number of personnel in the department has been increased. The comparison with last year is as follows: In the office of the Minister of Justice there are 10 persons as opposed to 11 last year; in the office of the Solicitor General, there are 7 as opposed to 7 last year; in the legal branch of the department, there are 116 as opposed to 103 last year. The increase, therefore, is mainly accounted for by the increased number of persons in the legal branch of the department.

Mr. Pearson: Page 216 of the blue book shows that there has been an addition during the last year of nine stenographers. Would the minister account for the necessity of having nine more stenographers?

Mr. Fulton: Mainly because of the increased volume of work.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister explain why it takes from March 25 to June 18 not to produce a return for which this house has asked with these nine extra stenographers to do it?

Mr. Fulton: I do not bother my departmental staff with that kind of thing for which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked; that is prepared in the minister's office and is ready for tabling now.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is the most preposterous statement that has been made by any member on the treasury benches since this government took office. What I referred to was an order of this house, of parliament itself, and this is the government that is upholding the rights of parliament. The answer is, I do not bother the department with what parliament desires; it is done in the spare time in the minister's office when they are not busy writing letters to Mr. Freeman, or whatever his name is. This is an absolutely outrageous attitude, and indicates quite clearly why parliament is not getting from this department what parliament has ordered.

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. member can show me any way in which he has suffered by the fact that the return is not yet brought down I shall be interested. I point out to you that I pay attention to the orders of the house, which is something different from when my hon. friend's government was in power. What my hon. friend asked for in the return which he—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not order it, parliament ordered it.

Mr. Fulton: —now mentions was the reproduction of a number of personal letters exchanged between private individuals and the Minister of Justice. My department is not overstaffed. Many of the officers of the department are working overtime. We have not too many stenographers. The hon. member was interested in getting his return in time for the discussion of my estimates, and he will have it in time for the discussion of my estimates. It has been prepared, in so far as I was able to see it could be done, without interference with the responsibilities of my department for the administration of justice in the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might point out that the minister is, of course, completely in error in saying that when I was a minister I did not comply with the orders of the house. He can examine the record any time he wishes and he will find that on very few occasions was there more careful compliance with these orders than during the period when Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister. The matter was reviewed by Mr. St. Laurent himself regularly, once a week, because of the great respect he did show for parliament.

I might say also that a motion was made by me to have a return from the Prime Minister as well as from the Minister of Justice, and although the Prime Minister's staff is a great deal smaller than the staff of the Minister of Justice the return was made by the Prime Minister over a month ago and we are still waiting for the return from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: The minister used to talk a great deal about elimination of waste and extravagance and the unnecessary number of civil servants, so will he explain to the committee, as he has not yet explained, why it is necessary to have nine extra stenographers to do the work done by a smaller number a couple of years ago?

Mr. Fulton: One of the reasons is that we have taken on, in order to bring our establishment to what has always been agreed to be what we should have, but what we have not yet reached, some seven extra legal officers. I do not expect that the Leader of the Opposition would expect legal officers to function without stenographers, and that is one reason why the extra stenographers were necessary. In addition, I am assured by my officers that there has been a substantial increase in the volume of work and correspondence coming into the department and we are anxious to keep abreast of the work in order that people may receive immediate replies to their correspondence so that their problems and requests may be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Pearson: Will the minister point out where on page 216, which I have before me, which is the details of departmental administration, the seven extra legal officers mentioned on that page appear under departmental administration?

Mr. Fulton: I think there may be an error of one in my figures. If my hon. friend looks at page 216 he will see that there are 17 senior advisory counsel as opposed to 16, 11 advisory counsel as opposed to 10, 3 advisory counsel grade 1 as opposed to 1. That accounts, I think, for an increase of four. I am told that one administrative officer grade 5 is a lawyer.

Mr. Pearson: He is an administrative officer.

Mr. Fulton: That makes an increase of five. Each one of those five requires a stenographer. I am told there are in addition two stenographers to take care of the extra work in two other sections; the extra work which, as I said, is accumulating and which is in part reflected by the addition of the five extra lawyers on the staff.

Mr. Pearson: On the same page there is a new appointment, an assistant private secretary. He appears in this list as private secretary to the Solicitor General. Is this assistant private secretary to the Solicitor General a new appointment?

Mr. Fulton: No; that is an assistant private secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: And that is a new appointment?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Benidickson: An extra item of expense.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, this gives me the opportunity to renew my annual plea to the Minister of Justice to set the wheels going to amend the Expropriation Act, or to study the Expropriation Act. As I have said before, the Expropriation Act in itself is an abrogation of civil rights and should be used sparingly. The Expropriation Act as it stands on our statute books now is very old. It was designed in the first place for strict government use in the days when it was first passed. For example, it was used for the expropriation of land for post offices, defence projects, etc. Over a number of years now the Expropriation Act has been used for various purposes for which it was not originally intended. That is why the provisions of the original Expropriation Act act unfairly toward the people whose property is expropriated. There are many cases of that. For example, I have brought this before the house many times, the case of land expropriated for parks or other purposes for the federal district commission.

I spoke to the Minister of Justice about this some time ago and he intimated to me that something was being done about the Expropriation Act. I might say, of course, that I am not alone; there is enough correspondence I am sure with the Minister of Justice. There are also articles in the bar reviews and judgments of the exchequer court and other courts, all of which complain of the growing use of the Expropriation Act and the restricted clauses which do not define properly the basis upon which a value should be placed of lands which are expropriated. Therefore, without saying very much, I know the Minister of Justice knows what I am talking about. He appreciates, having read the bar reviews and the articles and judgments I have referred to, that something should be done with regard to the Expropriation Act to re-define it according to better modern usage.

Mr. Fulton: I might tell the hon. member that we have been studying the Expropriation Act within the department and we have now got to the point where it has become necessary for us to circularize other departments concerned. We have written all the other departments concerned and are awaiting their replies. As soon as their replies are received we shall be able to move our own studies forward.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, on that question of the increase in staff in the office of the Solicitor General, I should like to refer the question to the Minister of Justice. I assure the minister that I am doing so not at all in the way of anti-friendship for the Solicitor General. On the contrary, the hon. Solicitor General is the only schoolmate I have in this house, and we were received at the bar in the same year and I have high regard for him. But I would like to know if possible the breakdown of the personnel working in this office of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Fulton: I will obtain that and give the hon. gentleman a detailed reply before the estimates are carried.

Mr. McIlraith: I would like to ask the Minister of Justice when he is dealing with the subject of expropriation if he would examine into the reason for the delays in his department in the handling of payments after settlement is made on land purchases through the national capital commission. I may tell him that there has been a considerable extension of the time required to make payment of those settlements after they leave the national capital commission and before they are received in the hands of his agents who actually deal with the closing out of the transactions. Would he look into that matter and seek to rectify it?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend would be prepared to give me details, either here or privately, I would be very glad indeed to look into any such case.

Mr. McIlraith: The sort of thing which happens is that after a cheque is issued by the national capital commission it usually takes two weeks from the time it leaves that office until it is received by the minister's agent who turns it over to the person to be paid. That delay is wholly abnormal because at that time the department have no fiduciary duties in connection with it. The duties of the department have ceased after the cheque is issued, the necessary certificates are issued and the other preparatory work is done. There has been an extension in the time taken after the Department of Justice is advised of a settlement and the agent of the department is instructed to clear up the transaction. In these two parts of the transaction there is a considerable delay, and it is working a real hardship on the persons concerned because, as the minister knows, where there is not possession the crown does not pay interest and in the few cases where it does pay interest the interest is at 5 per cent and the cost of borrowing money is much greater at this time to the person concerned. If a settlement has been reached, they are entitled to the money, and it is their money which is being unduly withheld when there is any improper delay.

Mr. Fulton: I should be very much concerned if there were any improper delay, and I hope that if the hon. gentleman knows of any cases of improper delay he will bring them to my attention. I understand he had some conversation with the officials of my department a year ago when he was requested to supply particulars of any cases he had in mind. However, I am advised that he has not so far given us particulars of any such delays.

Mr. McIlraith: I should be very glad to give particulars of these cases to the minister.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if the minister will now admit whether or not there is an official list of attorneys being supplied to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as a guide to whom they may or may not employ to do legal work.

Mr. Fulton: I think that question should be directed to my colleague the Minister of Public Works because, as I have explained twice already, such recommendations as I may make are made, as must always be the case, to the minister under whose authority an agency such as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation works.

Mr. Regier: I must say that in view of the admissions the minister has made during the past couple of hours his answer is not exactly adequate.

Mr. Fulton: It is the third time I have answered the same thing.

Mr. Regier: The minister has admitted that he makes recommendations. We are not sure to whom he makes these recommendations or why or on what ground he makes them. May I ask the minister why he makes recommendations if he knows nothing of a list of eligible attorneys in the possession of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? Why does he make any recommendations whatever?

Mr. Fulton: I make them because, as I understand it, it is my constitutional responsibility to do so.

Mr. Regier: In other words, I take it the minister admits that there is a list of eligible attorneys.

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. member is unable to understand the situation I do not think there is anything further that I can say. I have explained this three times already, and if the hon. gentleman cannot understand it I regret I am unable to contribute to the clarification of his mind.

Mr. Regier: I know the minister well enough to know that he will regret those words on reflection. I also know his sensivity when it comes to political considerations. The minister knows very well indeed, and has in effect admitted, that there is in existence a list of eligible attorneys. I am not going to blame the minister. In fact I feel sympathy for the minister, and most of the Canadian people have a good deal of sympathy for the hon. gentleman and cannot understand why he has been kept under wraps and not allowed to expose himself and all his potentialities. However, there is such a list in existence—

An hon. Member: You have said that before.

Mr. Regier: I know I have said it before. Some of the Conservatives need to be told a lot of things time and time again because they are so deaf that they will not hear. The minister admits that there is a list and that he makes recommendations to that list. I should like to ask the minister as to the basis upon which he makes his recommendations. He has spoken of such a basis, and the correspondence makes reference to such a basis. On what basis are members of the bar removed from the list and on what basis are others added to the list?

Mr. Fulton: I think perhaps I should refer to this question of the removal of lawyers from the list. It might interest hon. members to know that when I took office as Minister of Justice I inquired as to who were the solicitors who were considered by the department to be qualified professionally to perform services for the government of Canada, because I was taking over a new department and, as the hon. gentleman will appreciate, at very short notice. I was assured that there had been left in my department no lists of solicitors or lawyers. They must have been removed, and there was absolutely nothing to which I could look for guidance concerning qualified lawyers to work for the government of Canada. It was therefore necessary for me to start from the beginning to compile with my officers a list of qualified lawyers.

I can assure the hon. member that contrary to what he has suggested there have been a number of cases in which lawyers retained by the former government have continued to work for the present government. However, as I have said, I did consider it necessary to exercise my responsibility as to the advice I tender to my colleagues regarding whether a lawyer is qualified to work for a department or for an agency.

It does not follow, of course, that of those I have recommended certain persons must be used. That is the responsibility of my colleagues. After all, this is a government which believes in the doctrine of collective responsibility. I do not seek to question my colleagues as to how they administer their departments, and the details of questions such as the hon. member is pursuing must come, if they can be produced at all, from the ministers of the departments to whom I make my recommendations. As I said, these recommendations are matters of discussion between ministers or between ministers' offices and I do not consider it is any part of my responsibility to give details of the advice I have tendered to my colleagues. Indeed, as the hon. member well knows, it would be improper for me to do so.

Mr. Regier: Now I think the minister has been very plain and I should like to express my appreciation of his honesty in this regard. The minister is now saying, in effect, that he does not make any recommendations to any crown corporation as to what attorneys they may or may not engage. All he does is make recommendations to other members of the government, and I hope not too many of the backbenchers will regard themselves as members of the government as is the case so often over the airwaves of the nation. There are only a certain number of members of the government. The minister says he makes recommendations to his colleagues in the government. May I ask him how many departments of government he supplies with such recommendations concerning who should or should not be regarded as an agreeable attorney to act on behalf of the government?

Mr. Fulton: I think from time to time practically every department has occasion to request from the Department of Justice recommendations as to lawyers.

Mr. Regier: Has the minister at any time recommended to the Minister of Public Works that certain attorneys who were previously on the list of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation be removed from the list?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, as I explained to my hon. friend I am not free, of course, to disclose the advice I give to my colleagues and as I have also previously explained every list that was in force previously was removed and I did not find any list when I came in as Minister of Justice.

Mr. Regier: In other words, then, I can safely assume that the minister abolished all appointments of the former government and made a list of his own making sure they would all be Conservatives?

Mr. Fulton: Not at all, Mr. Chairman. I have already explained to my hon. friend that the former government removed its lists when it left office.

Mr. Pickersgill: How do you know that?

Mr. Fulton: That question does not require an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is insinuation and innuendo.

Mr. Grafftey: And what we hear from you is self righteous indignation.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I might deal with an entirely different subject matter from the one we have been discussing?

An hon. Member: That is good.

Mr. Howard: I wish to deal with the question of narcotic addiction, the problem of drug addicts and the effect they have on society and our penal institutions. The number of narcotic addicts in Canada is open to estimate but I am sure there are many hundreds the great preponderance of whom reside in or around the lower mainland portion of British Columbia.

Arising out of the need of a narcotic addict to secure money with which to purchase illegal drugs on the black market stems the problem of crime which expresses itself in the forms of breaking and entering, petty theft and shoplifting among others. It is not that drug addicts become mentally unstable and develop criminal tendencies but they require money to purchase drugs.

Related to the problem of drug addiction is the impact on our society. Young people become addicted to drugs and are milked and bled for every cent they have by those who get them addicted. Drug pushers also lead girls into drug addiction and persuade them to engage in prostitution to earn money to purchase drugs and the drug pushers profit from this. Young people are led into drug addiction in order that they will turn to theft and crime in order to obtain money to buy drugs. In addition to this there is the misery of the addict who may have to spend many years behind bars and the misery that comes to his family and children. All of this adds up to a pretty sad picture in our society.

Perhaps we should examine the approach that has been adopted in the past toward this entire problem by law enforcement officers, the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian government. The previous government attempted to establish laws relating to the possession and use of narcotics. For many years we in Canada have adopted an attitude similar to that adopted in the United States with respect to this question and have tended to impose jail sentences and fines upon narcotic addicts. Sentences have ranged from a few months in a provincial jail to several years in federal institutions.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would hon. members behind the curtains lower their voices because it is difficult to hear the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Ricard: And he is so much less interesting.

Mr. Howard: I was saying that the tendency has been to impose jail sentences on narcotic users. This has been our attitude in Canada for a number of years. Apparently it has failed to have a deterrent effect on people continuing to maintain themselves as drug addicts, many of whom continue after release from jail, some of whom on the very day of their release seek out a source of morphine or heroin in order to get back on the habit again. Proof of the failure of our past approach is found in the steadily increasing number of drug addicts, many of whom are drawn from among teenage groups of high school age. The time is ripe for a new approach to the problem of drug addiction.

One of the first things that could be done would be to eliminate the free enterpriser in his worst state; that is, to eliminate the profit question from drugs. If possession of drugs was not illegal black market drugs that sell at exorbitant prices could be abolished. There would be no need for addicts to commit crimes in order to get money to buy drugs. The tendency for drug pushers to get younger people hooked or addicted to drugs in order to lead them into a life of crime or prostitution so they could reap profits from this would not exist. We might be able to tackle the problem in a better way than we have in the past.

Shortly after coming into office the Minister of Justice made some public comments outlining his ideas concerning drug addiction and the need for approaching the problem from a fresh and humane viewpoint different from the approach that was used in the past. We commend the minister on expressing those views, those ideas and those hopes about having a different official and statutory policy in so far as drug addicts are concerned. I would certainly—I am sure many others would also—appreciate very much if at this stage the minister was able to give the committee an up to date account of the development of his ideas and his thoughts in so far as the establishment of drug clinics, hospitals or similar institutions for drug addicts are concerned, and also express, if he is able to do so, his thought as to when we might see the formal establishment of such institutions or the formal arrangement, whether it be in a statutory form or a regulatory one, which will be entered into in order to put this new approach or this different attitude into effect.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those fields in which I have to admit frankly I am not able to report as much progress as I should like to be able to and as I am sure the committee would like to hear. I recognize that every time my estimates have been up since I assumed responsibility for this department I have described in general terms some of the ideas which I hoped we would be able to put into practice in connection with the treatment of drug addicts in so far as those addicts have fallen foul of the criminal law.

I must say that while I realized this was a big problem, I find it is an even bigger one than perhaps I had taken account of at the time that I made this first statement. In saying this I do not mean to say for a moment that we are discouraged or are adopting the attitude that there is nothing we can do about it because I believe there is something we can do about it. I am simply trying to confess that I find the problems to be overcome, indeed the differences of opinion to be reconciled and the thinking and research to be done, are of a very considerable nature.

I can, however, state by way of perhaps some definite encouragement that the question of the treatment of narcotic addicts who have been sentenced under the criminal law is a subject which was assigned specifically to the correctional planning committee. It is one to which they have been giving some thought and which they have been discussing with the penal authorities and those responsible for reform measures in other countries which they have visited. They have, as a matter of fact, recommended to me that we in a way stop thinking about this, that we definitely take no steps until they have concluded their studies and have had time to sit down and bring in a specific recommendation as to how what you might call the philosophy in regard to treatment of drug addicts should be framed and then as to how the physical aspects of the program for their treatment and rehabilitation should be fitted in with the other parts of the new penal program on which it is their responsibility to make recommendations.

While I am anxious to make progress as rapidly as possible, I must say that I have been impressed with the reasoning, with the sense of the suggestions made by the correctional planning committee. Therefore, I do not expect that I shall be able to report any further specific progress until such time as I have had the report of that committee and had time to consider it in conjunction with the R.C.M. Police and the Department of National Health and Welfare, all of whom have views and responsibilities in this field of narcotics.

Mr. Howard: I certainly appreciate the comments of the minister. I know from listening to what he said before on this particular subject matter that this is as correct and as proper an approach as can be taken at the present time, rather than to go into something as a half way measure and then have to back up after going in an incorrect or a wrong direction. It is gratifying to know that the minister still says, and I am sure he will continue to say this because of his knowledge, that in positive treatment there is a solution and not to give up even though the problem looks almost insurmountable. It looks extremely difficult now and we should not say that we cannot cope with it, that there is no solution. To say that would be to admit defeat beforehand. I wonder whether in this regard the minister might give some indication as to when he expects the correctional planning committee will complete its studies and finalize its report, maybe not its complete report but just in so far as the question of narcotic treatment is concerned?

Mr. Fulton: The target has been set for the complete and final report of the committee at the end of this year. I expect to receive interim reports from them at the end of this month, they having completed their travels and studies abroad. Then they will be working on their reports. I expect to receive interim reports and the over-all final report just about at the end of this year, and I have no suggestion that the target date will have to be set back.

Mr. Howard: There is another problem with respect to narcotics that I should like to deal with and these are specific matters. The minister will recall that some time ago, during the early part of March or the latter part of April—I am not sure of the exact date—I posed a question to him with respect to a newspaper article arising out of a court case in Vancouver to the effect that a Mr. Jack Webster of radio station CKNW had been able to purchase a hypodermic needle kit, specially prepared and set up for use by addicts. This was not a fully complete hypodermic syringe, but just the bare necessities for a drug addict, a do-it-yourself kit, as it has been commonly referred to. In answer to my question the minister mentioned that he would undertake to have the question studied to see what could be done to prevent druggists or drug stores from selling this type of paraphernalia obviously prepared for sale to drug addicts and drug addicts only and not bought in any sense by people who may have to take hypodermic injections of insulin or cortisone or some other drugs for physical ailments.

Also, in so far as drugs are concerned, I hold in my hand a clipping from the Globe and Mail of April 16 which contains the heading, "Bogus Bill Ring Deals in Drugs". It refers to the seizure by the R.C.M. Police of about 1,200 counterfeit $10 bills from towns across Quebec. The thought expressed in the article was that these bills were being counterfeited and passed and that there was a connection between this counterfeiting ring and the sale and distribution of drugs. Can the minister indicate whether there has been any further investigation or has he anything further to report on this particular item?

My third point has to do with an incident which took place in the latter part of April, at which time a guard was apprehended in Kingston penitentiary on the charge of being in possession of narcotics, purportedly or presumably for sale to inmates who were narcotic addicts and who were in the penitentiary at Kingston. Is the minister able to recount at this stage what has happened in this particular case, both in so far as the guard is concerned, as to whether any of the inmates were discovered to have used narcotics around that period of time and whether any disciplinary action was taken against the inmates.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have to give the answer with respect to these three questions that I will be in a better position to answer them on a later item in the estimates. With regard to the first one, the sale of what I believe are called do-it-yourself kits by certain drug stores in Vancouver, I referred that matter to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I have had a report from them but I have not got it before me because that will be coming forward when the R.C.M.P. item is under consideration. I recall there was a report to the effect that the matter had been dealt with in some positive way but I am afraid I would only be guessing if I tried to recall what it was and I would rather not answer until we reach the police item.

The same answer applies to the question as to the connection between counterfeiters and drug pushers. That is a matter on which I would have to get information from the police.

With respect to the guard in the penitentiary who, as I recall it, was charged with trafficking, I am advised that he was prosecuted and has just been acquitted of the criminal charge on the ground that there was no criminal intent proven. It was not proven that he knew what he was receiving and what it was that he was supposed to be passing on. The matter of disciplinary action against him within the penitentiary itself has not been yet determined because the report of his acquittal has only just come in. I will be able to discuss the matter more fully when the penitentiaries item is before us.

Mr. Howard: I assume that inmates in the penitentiary may have received some of the narcotics that were being transmitted and I wondered whether any of the inmates had been discovered to be in possession of or to have used narcotics around that time and what disciplinary action, if any, has been taken so far as these inmates are concerned?

Mr. Fulton: That is a matter on which I asked for a report from the commissioner of penitentiaries. I am expecting that he will bring it with him when that item is reached in the estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, first I want to remind the minister of that classic statement made by the Minister of Finance in June of 1957 when he told the country how much he was going to save the taxpayers of Canada by eliminating waste and extravagance in all departments of government. In view of the fact that the minister's estimates this year for his department, to say nothing of the R.C.M.P., are increased by almost $3 million I think it would be interesting if the minister would tell us precisely what waste and extravagance has been eliminated by the Minister of Finance in the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I can say by way of a general reply that we have made every attempt in the department to keep our expenditures down to a minimum and particularly to avoid any increases but we have been faced with the necessity of dealing, as I have said, with a considerably increased volume of work. I have just sent out now, for instance, for the figure as to the increase in the number of pieces of mail received in the department since I took office compared with the years when my predecessor had the responsibility because I know that the comparison shows quite a startling and definite increase in the volume of correspondence and, of course, if you get more correspondence you have to have people to deal with it. Some of the increases, and I shall be glad to deal with the specific increases when we reach the items—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could save the minister time. He did not answer my question. In my question I did not ask the minister to justify the increases. I asked the minister to tell us specifically what items of waste and extravagance had been eliminated.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps if the hon. member would tell me what items of waste and extravagance there were under the former administration I would be able to answer his question. I can assure him every such item has been eliminated.

Mr. Pickersgill: And it did not take 20 minutes to do it in the minister's department either because there was none there. Anybody who knows the minister's predecessor and his record of thrift and care with respect to public moneys will know perfectly well that there was no waste and extravagance. I suspected that answer would be given.

Mr. Fulton: I do not know what the hon. member is working himself into such a heat about.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not at all heated. I just want the minister to hear. I want there to be no doubt that he does hear me. One of the many grounds as a result of which these gentlemen are now occupying the treasury benches is that they told the people of Canada they were going to eliminate half a billion dollars of waste and extravagance from the expenditures of the government of Canada. We know that they have increased these expenditures by a great deal more than half a billion dollars, and up to the present time, whenever I have been present since 1957 when the estimates of any department have been under consideration, I have asked this one question.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): One question?

Mr. Pickersgill: We have yet to have from any minister one single example of any waste and extravagance in any department, such as hon. gentlemen opposite were so fond of talking about, in the two years they have been in office. I simply wanted to underline that point again.

Mr. Fulton: You see, Mr. Chairman, we in the Department of Justice have not been a big building department so we did not build the printing bureau but if it had been under my administration I would have been able to indicate to the hon. gentleman the type of example of waste and extravagance that has been eliminated.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman does a good deal of building in his department. If I am not mistaken, he does do a good deal of building throughout the country. Would the hon. gentleman tell me of any extravagance in the building done by his department?

Mr. Fulton: My department does not do a great deal of building. I do not know what the hon. gentleman has in mind. There are some penitentiaries under construction and we will be able to discuss them under the penitentiaries item if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice that the minister is evading the question.

Mr. Fulton: The matter can be discussed at the proper time.

Mr. Roberge: In the details on page 216 there is an item for publication of departmental reports and other materials and there is an increase of $20,000 over last year. What is this for?

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, I did not hear.

Mr. Roberge: On page 216 there is an item for publication of departmental reports and other material and there is an increase of $20,000 over last year. What are these reports and other materials?

Mr. Fulton: This arises in the main from the desire to fulfil a recommendation of the Fauteux committee report that there be a program designed to inform the public with respect to certain features of the then existing penitentiary and reform system and with respect to certain of the programs which the committee recommended should be instituted. I would refer my hon. friend to page 13 of the Fauteux committee report where is contained their recommendation with regard to public information in connection with probation, and page 51 of the report which contains their recommendation with regard to a public information program with respect to parole. It is in implementation of these recommendations that there has been included an item of $20,000 for the purpose of a public information program.

Mr. Roberge: I have a further question. Is that campaign under way?

Mr. Fulton: The preliminary steps have been prepared, but the program has not been worked out in detail.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make one other comment under this particular item concerning a matter which has intrigued me for some time. I refer to the fact that there are two cabinet ministers in the same department both, I assume, on a par with each other in so far as seniority is concerned. If the minister is concerned with saving money, then action could be taken on this matter. My remarks have no connection whatever with the person who presently holds the post of Solicitor General.

In looking back over the years, in talking with one other gentleman who held that particular post and in talking with members of this house who have been here many more years than I have, I cannot help but come to the conclusion but that this is a completely superfluous cabinet position. In so far as the duties of that particular office holder are concerned, and so far as matters under his jurisdiction are concerned, they are practically nil. This means that the cabinet post of Solicitor General is an unnecessary one and a costly one, at least to the tune of $17,000 per year plus the payments to whatever executive assistants there may be in the Solicitor General's office. I would have no hesitation whatever in suggesting—as I say this has nothing whatever to do with the individual who now holds the office—that here would be a prime way to start cutting expenditures and saving some money by eliminating the post of Solicitor General.

The Minister of Justice could perform the functions of the Solicitor General. I am quite sure that the Minister of Justice does now participate in many of the recommendations made by the Solicitor General. I, for one, think this is a cabinet position that is on a par, in so far as value is concerned, with the cabinet ministers without portfolio, except that the payment is a little bit higher.

Mr. Maloney: Mr. Chairman, I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to make a few remarks in respect of some problems that I think might be of interest to the committee and to the minister. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and I think hon. members of all political parties in this house would like one of the members of the house to pay to the present Minister of Justice the tribute that he really, in the opinion of all members, deserves.

Mr. Peters: Let us remember Newfoundland; let us not be carried away.

Mr. Maloney: You stay back in Kirkland Lake. I know of no minister of justice who has made such an impact on his department in the history of this country. Never, under any of his predecessors, have reforms of such magnitude been undertaken, and he has brought to the department and to the whole correctional system in Canada a forward looking, up to date outlook which will in the near future have its effect in a reduction in the incidence of crime and in a general improvement of the whole correctional system.

I spoke in this house last August at a time when the minister's estimates were before the house, and on that occasion I had the temerity to advance for his consideration some four amendments, three to the Criminal Code and one to the Canada Evidence Act. As someone who feels the minister is deserving of the credit I have already given him, and as someone who realizes he cannot have everything he wants in this world, and certainly in this house, I was more than pleased to see that I got 25 per cent of what I requested on that occasion. The minister, in the amendments to the Criminal Code that are soon to be brought forward, has imported one which would direct that time served in custody pending the hearing of an appeal to a provincial appellate court should count on the sentence; that is a much needed reform. I commend the minister and the officials of his department for having taken this forward step to bring it about.

I wanted to say a word at this stage with regard to the matter of probation. It is my desire to express a point of view in this committee that the government should consider the possibility, the advisability and the practicability of intervening at the federal level in the probation field.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the leader of the house would advise us if there is any change in the program for tomorrow? Could he also give us an indication of the business for next week?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, we shall commence with third reading of the act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act; then take the estimates of the Department of Justice, followed by those of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Monday we shall commence with item No. 1 on today's order paper, an act to amend the Veterans Land Act, which has been to a committee; item No. 14, an act respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian forces; then, No. 13, second reading of a bill in respect of Canadian national financing; then, item No. 15, second reading of the act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act; item No. 12, second reading of the bill respecting certain public service pensions; item No. 9, an act respecting the superannuation of members of the R.C.M.P.; item No. 3, an act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; item No. 10, an act to amend the Criminal Code, and item No. 11, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

Then, we intend to follow with the items standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture, starting with the Seeds Act which I think has come over from the Senate. Then, we shall take the crop insurance measure and the farm credit measure.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it intended to proceed in that order throughout the week as long as legislation is carried on?

Mr. Green: That would be for Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister give any indication when the government intends to introduce legislation respecting the terms of union?

Mr. Green: The Minister of Finance says the answer is soon.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

FOREST ACCESS ROADS AND TRAILS PROGRAM

Question No. 402—Mr. Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche):

1. In what fiscal year was the assistance in establishing forest access roads and trails program initiated?
2. What provinces have entered into an agreement with the federal government in each fiscal year since the inception of the program up to March 31, 1959, and what is the amount paid to each of them in each year?
3. What provinces have not entered into such an agreement?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. 1957-58.

2. The provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland entered into agreements in 1957-58 for assistance in the construction of forest access roads and trails during the period January 2, 1958 to June 30, 1958. With the exception of Prince Edward Island, agreements were entered into with the same provinces in 1958-59 for assistance during the period November 1, 1958 to June 30, 1959. The amounts paid to each province in each fiscal year are shown in the following table:

Province	Fiscal Year		Total payments by provinces
	1957-58	1958-59
Newfoundland	2,872.11	56,201.95	59,074.06
Prince Edward Island	Nil	—	Nil
Nova Scotia	14,140.70	31,754.69	45,895.39
New Brunswick	29,832.88	21,761.59	51,594.47
Ontario	249,247.12	988,713.87	1,237,960.99
Manitoba	118,213.76	235,555.69	353,769.45
Saskatchewan	95,056.04	179,438.47	274,494.51
Alberta	23,642.19	133,295.86	156,938.05
British Columbia	77,362.95	441,242.86	518,605.81
Total payments by fiscal years	610,367.75	2,087,964.98	2,698,332.73

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 19, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN (ESSEX EAST)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JUNE 17

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I notice that during my absence while welcoming the Queen yesterday the hon. member for Essex East rose on a question of privilege and made certain allegations and statements. Your Honour was kind enough to suggest that in my absence, and because I was involved in the point of privilege, I should have an opportunity to comment on it, and recommended that the matter be left there.

Before I make any comment at all on the statements made yesterday by the hon. member for Essex East, may I read the pertinent portions of the remarks referred to by him which appear at page 4827 of Hansard of June 17, where I am reported as having said:

> Here we have but a piece of paper containing a motion—

I was referring to the motion in question that was before the house. I continue:

> —ingeniously contrived in order to sow suspicion. The hon. gentleman moving the motion will not take his stand behind the truth of the allegations and the alleged wrongdoing of the hon. member for Peel.

I emphasize those words "the alleged wrongdoing of the hon. member for Peel". I continue:

> I say this. I hope I shall never allow any hon. member to be struck in his honour and integrity by a motion such as this, a motion of suspicion fortified only by questions, with the mover holding the high and responsible position of Leader of the Opposition refusing to accept his personal responsibility to make a charge on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of wrongdoing by a judge.

What I said was, "The findings of the judge were alleged to be allegations of wrongdoing", and that was made very clear earlier in my remarks, which cannot be taken out of context.

From time to time this matter comes up, and I am not going to deal with the cases which have been before the house on previous occasions, which arise from the fact that changes are made in order to make good sense without changing the purport. The hon. gentleman says that what was said was:

> —with respect to the alleged findings of a judge in that direction.

Well, grammatically that does not make sense. "In that direction" refers, of course, to the alleged wrongdoing of the hon. member for Peel. May I say this. There has not been and was not any material change either in sense or in meaning. I want to make that most clear. The words "in that direction" are grammatically unclear. What I recall saying, but I am not going to argue it, is "in that connection". I stated then, and I now state, that the opposition endeavoured to distort the findings of the judge in order to allege wrongdoing on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pearson: Stick to the point.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the Prime Minister that in dealing with the alteration of Hansard it would not be proper to refer to the debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right, Mr. Speaker, but I have to make very clear the fact that there was no change in sense or in meaning, and I make that very clear now. I have no objection whatever, none whatever, although grammatically it is bad, to the restoration of any words suggested by the hon. member for Essex East. This question has been up on many occasions before. I remember prime minister St. Laurent on one occasion, in the course of a question asked relative to the Canadian forces not remaining in Berlin, saying in the house, "They were kicked out".

Mr. Pickersgill: Another diversion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the next day Hansard showed it as "They were left out". That was a change that is not in keeping with the traditions of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: The usual chivalry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have seen my hon. friends opposite day after day reading their blues and making alterations. I think it is well that this is brought up because I think the house might pretty well decide—I know I am going to make a very careful examination from now on of all the changes day by day as I see the rereading taking place in this house—that changes are not to be made. I think this is just another example of what I believe should become the rule of the house and adhered to by all, that there should be no changes whatever, grammatical or otherwise, in order to bring out the sense.

I simply state that there is no change whatsoever in meaning or in reference to the alleged findings of the judge, that is, alleged by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) as being evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the member for Peel (Mr. Pallett). Those alleged findings were non-existent, and I leave it there for Your Honour to determine.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in introducing his remarks the Prime Minister referred to the fact that I had raised this question of privilege when the Prime Minister was absent from the house, having gone to Newfoundland to welcome Her Majesty the Queen. I suspect that in making these introductory observations he wished to leave the implication that I had taken unfair advantage of him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pearson: Why did you mention it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister, of course, now knows perfectly well that a question of privilege must be raised at the earliest opportunity. I would have been remiss in my duty if I had not raised the question at once. Your Honour will recall that before the proceedings began I mentioned that I intended to raise this question as a matter of privilege; and when Your Honour quite properly, and I think fairly, suggested that, having raised the question, it should be allowed to rest until the Prime Minister's return I acceded at once.

The Prime Minister now wishes to correct the impression which I say he left with me that he was suggesting that in making these representations I had taken unfair advantage of his absence and I now accept his correction, if I understand him correctly that he does not wish to leave that impression.

The Prime Minister has said that there was no material change in sense or meaning. That may be the case if the argument is addressed to what the Prime Minister said, but what the Prime Minister fails to observe is the nature of the question of privilege. My question of privilege was that, having said as I did say and as is correctly reported at page 4829 of Hansard, namely:

> The Prime Minister referred to this same judgment as an alleged finding. No prime minister—

The Prime Minister intervened at that point and is reported as having said, "An alleged finding?" Then I went on to say:

> The Prime Minister's words are there to be scrutinized and observed by everyone. The Prime Minister said that. While this might be understandable in the mouth of a lay prime minister, it certainly is not proper for the Prime Minister, a distinguished advocate in the criminal courts of our country, to refer to a finding of a judge as an alleged finding. Whether we agree with the decisions of our courts or not, once those decisions are made then unless appealed they must not be referred to in the language used by the Prime Minister as "alleged findings".

So if the words which the Prime Minister said offer no material change in sense or meaning were allowed to constitute the record of the house they would certainly alter the meaning of what I said in the words I have just quoted as being reported correctly at page 4829 of Hansard.

Now, I suggested that my version of what the Prime Minister said was correct, and that the version of what the Prime Minister is reported on page 4827 as having said is incorrect and represents an alteration contrary to the practice and the usages of the house. In support of my contention that the reported words of the Prime Minister were not in conformity with what he actually said I produced yesterday the stenographic report of the Hansard reporter, which clearly indicates that the Prime Minister did not use words other than these in concluding his remarks, and I shall read the whole sentence:

> I hope I shall never allow any member to be struck in his honour and integrity on the basis of a motion such as this, suspicion fortified by questions, with a member of the house holding the high and responsible position—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am reminded by the Clerk that the document from which the hon. member is reading is not official Hansard and that it has not been the practice of the house to cite such a document. If the hon. member will note the tag which appears on the first copy made by the reporters, it is stated on it that this is not to be the official copy. I myself have no recollection of the practice of the house in this matter, but that is what the Clerk advises me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the question of practice, I would suggest that that is not the case. The Minister of Justice only the other day used this very same—

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker; certainly I had the document in front of me, but I was careful to make it clear I was not quoting from the document. I was not relying on it. In fact I did not quote from that document. I had it in front of me to make certain what I was saying reflected accurately what the Leader of the Opposition had said. The hon. member for Essex East is totally unjustified in trying to justify what he is doing on the basis of what I did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, may be certain that I do not very willingly resort to precedents he has established to justify my conduct and my actions, but in this case I think I must.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, you say this is the practice, but that is a matter of opinion. There is no rule on the matter, whether or not there is a practice. Under our rules there is nothing to preclude what I have done or what the Minister of Justice did.

Mr. Fulton: Why do you keep on asserting what is not correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What was that observation?

Mr. Fulton: Why does my hon. friend keep on asserting what is not correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice is now encouraging the usual avalanche of obstruction from this government that regards its majority as a way of delaying—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest we try to follow a straight line. We seem to be embarking on a number of cross currents and explanations. If the hon. member would complete his reference to the question of privilege which he raises, then I think the matter would be concluded.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I quite agree, Mr. Speaker.

I hope I shall never allow any member to be struck in his honour and integrity on the basis of a motion such as this, suspicion fortified by questions with a member of the house holding the high and responsible position of Leader of the Opposition refusing to accept his personal responsibility to make a charge—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):

—on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of a judge—

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: A point of order has been raised by the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can a point of order be raised on a question of privilege?

Mr. Green: Your Honour stated a few minutes ago that it was not the practice to read from these preliminary takes, as they are called, of statements made in the house, yet the hon. member for Essex East, ignoring that statement and ignoring the practice, is going right ahead and reading it as though nothing had been said. Now, as a matter of common sense, it would be very unfair if we permitted these preliminary takes to be read. They have not been checked by the editor of Hansard. They simply come from the reporter and are placed on the desk of the editor of Hansard to be corrected.

I know from personal experience that quite frequently there will be an obvious mistake. The reporter may be called in by the editor to check up and be sure that the transcript is right. These first takes frequently have errors in them, and it would be absolutely ridiculous to establish a practice in this house under which members could get up and quote these first drafts as the gospel truth, and go on to base arguments on them. If we are going to allow a practice of that kind, then there is no telling where we will end up. I suggest to Your Honour that Your Honour should find that these takes should not be quoted in the house.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to hear the hon. member for Essex East on the same point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour will recognize that it is a well established rule that when a question of privilege is being raised it is wholly improper to raise a point of order as the hon. gentleman has just done.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. members say "No, no". I ask them to look at the famous case of Mr. Gladstone and see whether that is not the situation.

Mr. Speaker: As the matter has now been raised as a point of order I feel that I cannot leave it at the observation which I made previously. No precedent has been cited to me on this point, as to the propriety of reading this unofficial first transcript of the reporter's notes. If the hon. member can cite any authority I should be glad to have it. It was on the advice of the Clerk of the house, who is experienced in these matters, that I called the hon. member's attention to the situation and said that it had not been the practice to do this. I did not stop him because I am not sure there is an established rule which prevents him from reading this document for the purpose of establishing that there was a change. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has raised the question, and I am at a loss to decide whether or not there is an established practice of the house which prevents the hon. member from proceeding.

However, I think it is not in issue that there was a change. As I understood the Prime Minister, from his explanation or his answer to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member, he felt that the changes he had made were in accordance with the practice of the house. The hon. member does not have to pursue the point in order to establish that changes were made.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, you asked what are the arguments in favour of this particular course. In reply one could ask what are the arguments against it, or what authorities are there. There are none. I referred to the precedent of the similar act of the Minister of Justice the other day, which I regard not as a powerful precedent coming from that particular quarter—

Mr. Fulton: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. Speaker: I understood the Minister of Justice to say—and it is a matter within his own knowledge and the hon. member must accept his statement—that he had not been quoting.

Mr. Fulton: I think I should read what appears in Hansard to establish the accuracy of what I said. It appears at page 4831:

> Here is what the Leader of the Opposition said about that statement as I took down his words this morning and made notes of them and if he believes I am misrepresenting them I shall be glad to be corrected. As I understood him this morning, he said that the Prime Minister's contention that a charge would be required, and the statement by myself that a charge must be embodied in the motion, and the Prime Minister's statement that there had to be an allegation of improper conduct whereby the member concerned had furthered his private interests, had no foundation whatsoever.

I was not quoting from a document, nor are there any quotation marks appearing in Hansard. I had before me a certain document which I paraphrased, and I made it clear that I was not quoting any document or representing it as being an official report of what was said. That procedure is entirely different from what the hon. member for Essex East did. When the hon. member for Essex East seeks to represent that I quoted from a document he is stating what he himself knows to be false.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask you to ask the Minister of Justice to withdraw those last remarks to the effect that I made a statement knowing it to be false. I will put my reputation against that of the Minister of Justice any time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister stated that the hon. member for Essex East made a statement knowing it to be false, I would certainly ask him to withdraw that charge.

Mr. Fulton: If you rule that the word "false" in that context is unparliamentary—

Mr. Speaker: May I make it clear that in my view to charge that an hon. member knowingly said something which was false is not in accordance with our practice.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Fulton: In that case, perhaps, in view of your ruling, I might say that the hon. member is stating what the record shows to be incorrect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is clear from what the minister said that he was using the Hansard preliminary sheets, as I am doing now, to establish the usage of certain words.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, hon. gentlemen say the opposite, and I propose to continue—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds, I feel that as the point has been raised I must ask the hon. member either to give me a chance to determine whether there is foundation for this point of order or to desist, and I give him the choice of deferring this matter until I have looked into the question or refraining from reading further from that particular document.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think the position Your Honour is taking is quite proper as to the course which is to be followed, and all I can say is that the Hansard sheets to which I made reference confirm my own understanding of what the Prime Minister said and, as a matter of fact, the implications of the Prime Minister himself clearly establish that the words which he originally used were those contained in the Hansard record which I used in support of the contention I made yesterday.

In this context I might remind the Prime Minister of what I did say yesterday. At page 4861 of Hansard for yesterday, a little more than half way down the first column, I said this:

> My question of privilege is that this change in the unrevised edition of Hansard alters the meaning of what I said. What the Prime Minister said was "a charge on the basis of his opinion and belief in respect to the alleged findings of a judge in that direction." These were the words I took down as being the words uttered in this house yesterday by the Prime Minister. I find that this is confirmed by some of my colleagues who likewise took down the Prime Minister's words. But lest there be any doubt in the matter, I have yesterday's Hansard blues which confirm what I myself took down and which read as follows:
> "A charge on the basis of his opinion and belief with respect to the alleged findings of a judge in that direction."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister sought to use this particular situation to indicate what he thought should be our practice in the future. Perhaps I should remind the Prime Minister of what he said in this house on April 17 of this year when the hon. member for Trinity had called his attention to an alteration of words in Hansard. The Prime Minister replied on that occasion:

I know the hon. gentleman is a model of accuracy, and for that reason I would like the opportunity to say this. The blue copy which was sent down by Hansard is exactly as it appears today in yesterday's Hansard. I do not make it a habit to change Hansard in order to alter what appears there, except in so far as changes are made by my staff in the ordinary run of things. Yesterday when the blue was brought to my attention it did not contain the word "inexcusably". However, I recall having said that, but I would not alter Hansard in order to change the meaning or purport of the context prepared by Hansard.

And then on June 8, in the official report of Hansard, the Prime Minister is reported as having said:

Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time I have corrected Hansard, but I think this should be corrected. It is at page 4363, following a discussion in which there was not that unanimity between members of the opposition that there is sometimes, and I said I would suggest that the two sides get together. Hansard reports it as "fit" together.

So on several occasions this session the Prime Minister has had the kind of running interference with which this particular situation again confronts him.

I think the Prime Minister, having suggested for our consideration what we should do in the future, would want me to repeat, and remind him in the house, of the words used by the then leader of the opposition, his former leader, Mr. Drew, who at page 1103 of Hansard for February 13, 1956 said:

I submit that there are well established rules in regard to the printing, in regard to the amendments, in regard to the nature of the corrections which go much farther than those that have been suggested. There are long established rules governing how corrections are to be made. Certain changes can be made by the member speaking.

Then the leader of the opposition of that day at page 1104 quoted a statement made by Mr. Speaker Black in an earlier session:

Instructions for any alterations in the official report of the debates should not be given without communicating them to the house in session, and for this reason, whenever I have deemed it advisable, to direct that certain statements be expunged, I have done so from the chair, thus giving a ruling which, under standing order 12, is subject to an appeal to the house.

These words of Mr. Drew and this whole situation will, I am sure, cause the Prime Minister to recognize the validity and usefulness of the words he used on April 12 when he said, "I do not make it a habit to change Hansard."

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the hon. gentleman for the references he has made. I can assure him and those associated with him that the most careful examination will be made of all changes such as I indicated that come within the purview of the rights of members, to the end that hon. gentlemen opposite should maintain the same traditions which they say apply here and with which I entirely agree, namely that changes must not change the purport and the meaning—and the change in question did not.

TRADE

TEXTILES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN EXPORTS FROM JAPAN

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that an announcement was made yesterday in Tokyo concerning the export to Canada of certain textile items. The government of Japan announced that, effective June 18, the issuance of new export licences would be suspended for a broad range of textile exports in the category of apparel. The announcement did not specify the term during which the suspension would remain in effect.

This action by the Japanese government is to be welcomed as an important additional step toward the development of a more orderly and effective system of export controls relating to trade in textiles between Japan and Canada.

As the house will realize, and as the Japanese government realizes, it is in the interests of both countries that trade should grow in an orderly fashion and that there should be no repetition of the conditions of 30 years ago, when a flood of cheap Japanese goods into Canadian markets did irreparable damage to Canadian producers and manufacturers with prolonged adverse results to our mutual trade relations.

The announcement by the Japanese government affects two broad categories of goods. One relates to spun rayon, cottons and mixtures of these and other synthetics, and includes such items as brassieres, underwear, dress and work shirts and skirts. The other relates to spun rayon, mixtures of spun rayon and rayon, and mixtures of which the main component is spun rayon. In this second group fall blouses and sport shirts of spun rayon; coats and slacks of spun rayon, including short pants, overalls including work clothes, car coats, raincoats and other dresses and coats, jackets and windbreakers, summer suit sets, play suits and beach sets, gowns and pyjamas; knitted underwear and outwear, including T-shirts, blouses, sport shirts, sweaters, slacks, gowns and pyjamas and other underwear and outwear.

Over the past year and particularly in recent months there has occurred an extraordinary increase in Japanese exports to Canada of a number of lines of textile products. The excessive inflow of such goods has created an extremely difficult situation for Canadian textile manufacturers. The flood of Japanese goods into this field has gone far beyond what might be considered as orderly participation in the Canadian market for textiles, and particularly wearing apparel. It has unquestionably damaged the position of our Canadian manufacturers of certain lines of finished textiles. There has developed as well a serious threat of injury to other sectors of the industry. Already the producers of primary textiles are feeling the inevitable consequences, and these are bound to become more severe.

I have received strong representations from Canadian manufacturers of textiles and textile products, including apparel, in this regard. Having carefully reviewed the circumstances the government of Canada came to the conclusion that the loss of business suffered by Canadian producers and manufacturers as a result of the competition from Japanese goods entering our markets had reached serious proportions, and that if the situation were allowed to continue unchecked even greater damage to their interests was possible.

Accordingly discussions were undertaken with the representatives of the Japanese government in Ottawa and Tokyo, in the course of which the views of the Canadian government were communicated to them. Within recent days I have held discussions with the Japanese ambassador which gave me the opportunity to state the Canadian position. This meeting was followed up by meetings between senior officials of the Canadian government and representatives of the Japanese government.

We were informed only last night of the decision of the Japanese government respecting the suspension of the issuance of new export licences. It is to be noted that the announcement does not affect export licences which are already outstanding. Therefore at this stage we do not know precisely the volume of goods which will be shipped under outstanding export licences.

The announcement will require more careful study before a detailed assessment of its full implications can be made. Nevertheless it would appear that the suspension of the issuance of new export licences in respect of these products would affect something more than a quarter of our total apparel imports from Japan, and would cover many items where the degree of penetration by Japanese competition in our markets has been substantial. Apart from the restraints given effect by yesterday's announcement, Japan has had in operation for some time voluntary export quotas on a variety of items of apparel made of cotton and cotton mixtures. If account is taken of these measures as well as yesterday's announcement, it would appear that licences are either suspended or under control for three-quarters of the textile apparel items now entering Canada from Japan.

The announcement by the Japanese government is, therefore, welcomed. However, the measures announced in Tokyo yesterday are to be regarded as of a temporary nature until such time as a longer term and more comprehensive solution can be worked out covering textiles in general. We shall, therefore, continue our conversations with the Japanese government with a view to the orderly development of Japanese-Canadian trade which both governments desire.

With permission of the house, Mr. Speaker, I will table copies of the items for which the issuing of new export licences has been suspended by the Japanese government.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed from the minister's statement that the Japanese government has undertaken certain additional voluntary controls on their exports to Canada as the result, I take it, of a request on the part of the Canadian government. It will also be realized that this request was made of a government which already, I believe, has a highly unfavourable balance of trade with Canada. In other words we export more to Japan than Japan exports to Canada. It is to be hoped, therefore, that action of this kind will not interfere with Canadian exports to Japan which are already of such very great importance to us.

I make that observation with the more emphasis because of the export figures which were published today for the month of May and the first five months of this year, which show that during the month of May our exports were down 10 per cent and that during the five months they were down 3 per cent. These figures also show that the greatest decrease in our exports is to those countries outside the commonwealth and the United States, where the exports for the five months have dropped from $396 million to $316 million, and that list of countries includes Japan.

It is therefore very important that nothing should be done which would interfere with our export trade to a country which already has an unfavourable balance of trade with this country.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the announcement just made by the Minister of Finance I might say first of all that this will be somewhat of a continuing problem as a result of the development of these, shall I say, new economies.

We welcome the understanding and the sense of responsibility shown by the government of Japan in meeting the Canadian problem and our representations in this way. We welcome it as evidence of co-operation emanating from a spirit of good will. We are quite certain that in that spirit an equitable solution to these problems will be found in days to come.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition indicated some concern about our exports. I believe I can assure the house that the action now taken by the Japanese government and announced yesterday will have no bearing whatever on Canada's exports to Japan. The position taken by the Japanese government is completely in accord with the views and policies of the Japanese government as declared at all levels, ministerial and official, in relation to the orderly development of trade with Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF MOTION OF LEADER OF OPPOSITION ON TODAY'S ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I must occupy a minute or two of the time of the house myself. It is my responsibility to rule upon a point of order which arose on Wednesday last and was then debated at length and with vigour. I wish to thank the several hon. members representative of all parties who gave the house the benefit of their views.

The question was whether or not the notice of motion relating to the conduct of the hon. member for Peel which had been given by the Leader of the Opposition properly raised a prima facie question of privilege for determination by the house through its standing committee on privileges and elections, to which the motion would refer the matter for examination and report.

The question is of considerable importance. If the notice of motion properly raises a question of the privileges of the house it is entitled under standing order 17 to be taken into consideration immediately, all other business being laid aside until the debate is concluded. On the other hand, if the motion is not to be regarded as one of privilege the motion would have to take its turn with other notices of motion by private members, which at this stage of the session would mean it would have very little prospect of being called even if in fact it is entitled at all to be placed on the order paper. The subject matter could be and in fact has been raised in the house and debated in other ways.

The factual basis for the motion as it appears in the notice itself and in the arguments put forth in the house is simple. It is that the president of the exchequer court, Mr. Justice Thorson, in his reasons for judgment, sessional paper No. 237, makes certain affirmations about the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett). These affirmations are summarized in items 1 to 8 in the notice of motion. Perhaps the house will permit me to dispense with reading these as all members have them.

It is noteworthy:

(1) That the judgment is a public document but is not a document required to be submitted to the House of Commons.

(2) It became a sessional paper by leave of the house when the Prime Minister tabled it in response to a request from a member of the opposition.

(3) The reasons for the judgment were given in cross-actions between Aileen M. Drew and Her Majesty the Queen, which arose from the expropriation of the property of Aileen M. Drew on February 12, 1954, for the Malton airport, the compensation to be paid her not having been agreed upon. She claimed the sum of $17,330, the amount of a valuation made by Mr. J. E. S. Clare, alleging an agreement between herself and Her Majesty acting through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) that Mr. Clare should appraise the property and both parties should be bound by his evaluation. There are said to be 10 other requests in which the circumstances are similar. The crown successfully denied the alleged agreement and asked the court to fix the compensation for the expropriated property. In the result, the judgment awards to Aileen M. Drew compensation of $11,200 and interest.

(4) The hon. member for Peel was the member of parliament for the constituency in which the properties are situated. As the judgment recites, he had been solicitor for Aileen M. Drew but "dissociated himself from this capacity" after the general election in June, 1957, which resulted in a change of the administration in Ottawa. He was a witness in the action but not a party or a solicitor, and the learned judge's references to him were made in the course of his summary of the evidence and not because such conduct was an issue in the case.

In view of these observations in the judgment and without any conclusion being drawn from them or any charges made by any hon. member against the hon. member for Peel, the house is asked to direct its committee on privileges and elections:

(1) To examine the actions and statements of the hon. member for Peel in connection with the evaluation and expropriation.

(2) To report generally on these matters.

(3) In particular, to consider and report whether the conduct of the hon. member was contrary to the usages of the house, derogatory to the dignity of the house and inconsistent with the standards which parliament is entitled to expect from its members.

The House of Commons has concerned itself with the conduct of a member outside of the house from time to time; for example, where a member used his public office for private gain, has compromised his independence by taking money, or has been found guilty of some scandalous crime. It is provided by law—the Senate and House of Commons Act, R.S.C. 147, s. 1—in the section dealing with the independence of parliament that no member shall hold any office of emolument under the crown nor enter into any contract with the government of Canada for which any public money of Canada is to be paid on pain of forfeiting his seat.

On the other hand, it is clear that many acts which might offend against the law or the moral sense of the community do not involve a member's capacity to serve the people who have chosen him as their representative nor are they contrary to the usage nor derogatory to the dignity of the House of Commons. Members of the House of Commons, like all other citizens, have the right to be regarded as innocent until they are found guilty, and like other citizens they must be charged before they are obliged to stand trial in the courts. Parliament is a court with respect to its own privileges and dignity and the privileges of its members. The question arises whether the house, in the exercise of its judicial functions with respect to the conduct of any of its members, should deprive such member of any of the safeguards and privileges which every man enjoys in any court of the land.

It has been strongly urged by some members that the house should not set in motion its power to try and to judge the conduct of a member unless such member is charged with a specific offence. It is urged further that not only must he be charged, but that he must be charged by a member of the House of Commons standing in his place.

In my view, simple justice requires that no hon. member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the house or a committee until he has been charged with an offence. Must this charge be made by another hon. member on his responsibility? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) raised this same issue in the question which he put to me in the following words, as reported in Hansard at page 4839:

> If this motion is ruled out of order, does it mean that no question of privilege can be raised in this house for submission to a committee which arises out of allegations, direct or implied, made against a member of this house outside the house by a judgment of a court or in some other way, unless a member associates himself with those allegations to the point where he has himself to lay a charge against another hon. member?

To say yes to this question would be to overlook precedents in which inquiries have been undertaken on the basis of charges implied from documents. Examples are the case of Jean Baptiste Daoust, reported in the Journals of the House of Commons for 1876 at pages 1456 to 1460 where a reference to the committee on privileges and elections was ordered after reading entries in the Journals for 1866. These entries contained court records relating to the conviction of a Mr. Daoust for forgery. Mr. Daoust, the member, admitted that he was the man in the case and the house referred the matter to the committee.

Another is the Schell case in 1903, as reported in Hansard at pages 4959 and 5416, where the charge of contracting with the crown was implied from the report of the Auditor General tabled in the house and the payment of a small sum of $5.50 was admitted by Mr. Schell.

On the authorities it appears to be open to an hon. member to confront the house with charges against another member implicit in documents in the possession of the house, but in my view the charge must be there.

In the case before us no hon. member has taken the responsibility of making a specific charge against the hon. member for Peel. At page 4829 of Hansard the hon. member for Essex East says of the Leader of the Opposition, in whose name the motion stands:

> He made no charges, that is true. That is his continuous answer to the Prime Minister who repeats, "Make charges". The Leader of the Opposition said, "We have no charges to make".

If there is a charge, then, which the hon. member for Peel should be called upon to meet it has to be implied from the reasons for judgment already referred to. Did the learned judge in commenting on the evidence say or imply that the member for Peel had been guilty of a criminal offence, perjury for example? Certainly not; and if he had it would have been his responsibility to bring the matter to the attention of the crown for prosecution. Did he intend or imply that the hon. member's conduct was an offence against the independence or dignity of the House of Commons, about which as a former member of that house he would be cognizant and alert? He does not say so. There is no direct charge of this kind in the judge's observations about the hon. member for Peel, nor has any member of this house taken the responsibility himself of saying that such a charge must be implied from such observations, or of saying what the charge is. Instead, the supporters of the motion say in effect, "Let the committee see if there is anything of this kind with which the member could be charged".

It is true that the judge is critical of the conduct of the hon. member for Peel for influencing the appraiser, Mr. Clare; but his criticism falls more on Mr. Clare, whose professional duty it was to make a fair appraisal, for allowing himself to be influenced. He makes observations, too, about the hon. member's negotiations with the Minister of Transport.

If these observations or "affirmations", as they are styled in the notice of motion, are taken as fact and the worst construction is put on them, it would appear that the hon. member for Peel on behalf of his constituents unsuccessfully attempted to get more generous compensation for them from public funds for the lands which the crown had expropriated than they were warranted in receiving.

This summary does not do justice either way, but the judge's observations are more fully set out in the motion for all to read. If the learned judge, who as I have said had experience of parliament, felt that the conduct of the hon. member for Peel was contrary to the usages and dignity of parliament, would he not have said so?

Two important facts which appear from the judgment are, first, that the hon. member did not stand to gain or profit for himself by anything he did. On the contrary, the learned judge observed that his interest was only political. Second, no public funds were improperly paid out. The amount to be paid was determined by due process of law, in fact by the judge himself, and that is what the judgment was about.

However, the absence of formulation of a charge by the judge or by any member of the house does not absolve me from the responsibility of considering whether the reasons for judgment on their face imply conduct on the part of the hon. member which was contrary to the independence and dignity of the House of Commons of which he is a member; conduct, in other words, which was a breach of its privileges. No close precedent was cited and I have been unable to find any. The privileges of the house are stated in general terms in May, sixteenth edition, pages 42 and 43, as follows:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each house collectively as a constituent part of the high court of parliament, and by members of each house individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law. The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers." They are enjoyed by individual members, because the house cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each house for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.
> When any of these rights and immunities, both of the members, individually, and of the assembly in its collective capacity, which are known by the general name of privileges, are disregarded or attacked by any individual or authority, the offence is called a breach of privilege, and is punishable under the law of parliament. Each house also claims the right to punish—

And so on. I think I need not read more because the nature of privilege is generally understood. Examples of the sort of conduct which amount to a breach of privilege or which disqualify a member are the taking of an office of profit, as I have said; entering into contracts with the government which involve a payment or advantage to the member, in both of which cases there are elements of personal gain; conviction of treason or other felonious crimes.

The hon. member's conduct was not of that order. It may have been immature, as one hon. member characterized it, but putting the worst construction on it I do not find that it was the sort of conduct which the house has punished in the past. If there is some doubt in the matter I am clear that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the unaccused.

I should feel happier if this decision could be made by the house, but there seems to be no means by which that can be done except by the usual process of appeal from the ruling which I am now making.

In finding that a question of the privileges of the house is not prima facie involved in this motion, I am making a procedural decision the effect of which will not prevent the further discussion by the house of the matters in issue. The effect is to refuse precedence to this discussion but not to prevent it. No barrier is raised to the presentation of this matter under different circumstances on another occasion. For example, the subject matter could be brought before the house as an amendment to the next motion to go into supply. I should add, too, that the debate on the point of order on Wednesday and the discussion of the same matter on the estimates of the Minister of Transport were broad, and that there would be little left to be said if the motion itself were to be debated this morning.

Therefore the notice of motion standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition will be removed from routine proceedings on the order paper and dealt with under paragraph 4 of standing order 15.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of what we on this side consider to be the unprecedented character of your ruling, and in view of the fact that if this motion had been moved by the member concerning whom the affirmations had been made it would have been accepted without question as a matter of privilege, we have no alternative on this side, with very great respect, but to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a decision of the Chair as follows:

"That the notice of motion standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition does not involve a prima facie case of a breach of the privileges of the House of Commons on the part of the hon. member for Peel, and that such notice is to be removed from routine proceedings on the order paper and dealt with under paragraph 4 of standing order 15.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would be willing to make special arrangements so that the motion standing in my name under paragraph 4 of standing order 15 could be discussed, in view of the fact that normally at this time of the session there would be no opportunity for such discussion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asks me to overrule a decision of the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I call to your attention the fact that there was no such decision of the house that deals with this matter. The motion is under another standing order, and my question is a perfectly proper one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My answer still stands.

Mr. Pearson: No discussion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. gentlemen appealed against the ruling of the Speaker, and the decision of the house is that this motion shall follow the order of business that was determined as a result of the ruling.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to make further reference to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. May I say this; that I always try to be most helpful—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I am now going to give him the opportunity to discuss this case if he desires to follow it through.

While it had been arranged—and it is always subject to change—that the supply motion should not come up on Monday, you have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that this matter could be reviewed in detail on a supply motion. I now give the Leader of the Opposition the offer that if he desires we will change the order of business on Monday in order to enable him and those associated with him to do what has been suggested might be possible, namely to bring this question up on a motion for supply.

Mr. Pearson: Once the Prime Minister refused to suspend the business of the house to discuss this question, I was about to ask the leader of the house if he would arrange the order of business so as to take a supply motion on Monday. I gather that the Prime Minister is agreeable to that course, and I welcome the opportunity which has been given to us.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO DELETE REFERENCE TO GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA, TO EXTEND APPLICATION OF ACT, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-22 (from the Senate) to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION

H. C. BANKS—REQUEST FOR DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the fact the seafarers' international union has been suspended from membership in the Canadian Labour Congress; and in view of the fact that the petition for Canadian citizenship of Harold Chamberlain Banks, the union's vice president, was rejected by the president of a citizenship court because the court considered him an undesirable character; and in view of Canadian public opinion and in the interests of the Canadian labour movement and the welfare of the Canadian people generally, would the government now consider the time appropriate to deport this undesirable alien?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hal Banks has Canadian domicile. There are no provisions or regulations under the present act by which deportation could be ordered.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the obvious sentiment of the members expressed on all sides of this house at the conclusion of my question, does the minister not think this parliament expects the government of Canada to speak up for Canada on this question?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, as the minister of this department I think it is my duty to observe the law.

[Later:]

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): I heartily concur, regarding this Banks case, with the hon. member for Kootenay East. It is time for the government to deport this man.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the hon. member is about to move a motion of privilege, I would remind him that he cannot make a speech at this time. If he wishes to ask a supplementary question he will be in order.

Mr. Henderson: Then I should like the minister of immigration to tell us why this man cannot be deported. He is just a gangster.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is not in the habit of repeating herself.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL-KINGSTON—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF PILOTAGE DUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the following question of the Minister of Transport:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, the Acting Minister of Transport. He might take this question as notice. In view of the dispute between pilots of the Montreal-Kingston district and the shipping federation, why has not the minister had the pilotage dues approved by the governor in council as required by the Canada Shipping Act? Will the minister see that they are approved without delay?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

Would the acting minister kindly answer that question; it is a most urgent one, particularly in view of the circumstances, of which he is no doubt aware? Moreover, would the acting minister inform the house of the latest developments in this connection?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this second question as notice. With regard to the first question, the Minister of Transport will reply personally.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the acting minister aware of the news report carried in the morning papers, particularly in the Gazette, to the effect that the only thing needed for a settlement of this matter is a written statement from the Minister of Transport or his deputy minister?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I have not read that particular item, but I feel that the house can have full confidence in the Minister of Transport.

If settlement of this matter merely requires putting something down in writing, as the hon. member for St. Denis has indicated, the Minister of Transport is certainly able to do so.

Mr. Denis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the acting minister not realize that unless this dispute is settled by 6 o'clock tonight, meetings will be held and there is a possibility that no settlement will be reached in time for the arrival of Her Majesty the Queen?

[Mr. Speaker.]

ATOMIC ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO CHOICE OF SITE FOR ATOMIC POWER STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the statement he made yesterday concerning the construction of a proposed atomic energy power plant. My question is related to one sentence in the statement referred to, the sentence on page 4862 of Hansard for June 18, which reads:

In addition to substantial support in the design of this CANDU station, Ontario hydro will provide a site, co-operate in its construction, and operate it as a unit in its power distribution system.

My question is, will the choosing of this site be left directly to the Ontario hydro, or will the federal government be consulted?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In answer to this question may I say that there will be consultations among all the parties concerned, Ontario hydro, the government of Ontario, the federal government, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and so on.

Mr. Robinson: A supplementary question. Since the federal government will be taking part in the choosing of a site, will the minister assure the house that the district known as the Bruce peninsula will be looked at, owing to the fact that it has the proper rock foundations which are necessary for such construction, and also an unlimited supply of clear blue water?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid the hon. member has completed his advertisement, but if every hon. member took the same privilege before orders of the day it would take some time.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED SOLVING OF MAIL ROBBERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I be permitted to direct a question to the Postmaster General. According to a report in the Montreal Gazette of June 16, a mail robbery has been solved, and the subtitle is "Gift to Girl Friend Results in Jail Term". May I inquire from the Postmaster General if the R.C.M.P. had been called to solve that robbery?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that the R.C.M.P. is associated with anyone's girl friend.

PIPE LINES

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—SUGGESTED PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement by Robert C. Berry, vice president and treasurer of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to the annual convention of the national federation of financial analysts societies to the effect that "looking farther ahead into 1961 it will be necessary for Trans-Canada to seriously consider acquiring the crown section of the pipe line late in that year", would the minister inform the house if the government has given any consideration to operating this section of the line under public ownership?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL VISIT

INQUIRY AS TO PRINTER OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE BROCHURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State, and I regret having failed to give him notice of it.

There has come to us a copy of the booklet entitled Royal Tour of Canada 1959, and I find that corrections were made on page 2 and that the name of the printer is not shown. Would it be possible to know who printed the English edition?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe, although I am not positive, that it was the queen's printer.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Could the hon. Secretary of State obtain this information and relay it to the house?

Mr. Courtemanche: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RACINE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "LE DEVOIR" OF JUNE 19

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. Yesterday, in the course of my speech, and as recorded on page 4878 of Hansard, I quoted from an article by the parliamentary correspondent of Le Devoir about Canada's economic activity, as follows:

At the present rate of Canadian recovery, we can hardly hope to be back to normal until 1968.

Supply—Justice

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was informed this morning—and I later ascertained from the original text of the parliamentary correspondent—that a typographical error had been made in the text, which should read as follows:

—until 1961—

Instead of:

—1968.

AIRPORTS

GANDER—INCREASE IN TOURIST LANDING FEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport, and ask him whether it is true that the landing fees for tourist aircraft at Gander have been increased. If this has been done in order to discourage congestion, would the department give consideration to removing that increase?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Minister of Transport): I will make inquiries and answer on Monday.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF REMUNERATION AND CONTRIBUTIONS, ETC.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

A—Department—

149. Departmental administration including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada, $741,825.

Mr. Maloney: Mr. Chairman, when the debate on this item was adjourned last night I had put forward the suggestion that the government might give some study to the possibility of intervening at the federal level in the probation field. Probation is something of which I have always urged a much wider and much more liberal use consistent, necessarily, with the establishment of adequate probation facilities in the various provinces.

The Fauteux committee members in their report stressed that in a modern correctional system there was no place for punishment which is based on nothing more than retribution. They urged too that an offender's rehabilitation should, wherever possible, be effected without placing upon him the stigma of imprisonment. The members of this committee expressed the view that adult probation was the area of correction in Canada where the most significant advance is required to be made. It is my firm belief that if we are to make our prisons centres of reformation, places in which law violators can be reclaimed as useful members of society, a very serious reduction in the prison population has to be brought about.

In Great Britain with its much larger population only 34,000 individuals were given prison terms in 1953. In the same year in Canada, with its much smaller population, 98,000 persons received prison terms. I have no doubt that more recent figures would show a contrast that would be equally startling.

In our penitentiaries in Canada today we have a population of about 6,000 inmates, and in our provincial prisons and institutions a population of approximately 11,000. Over 60 per cent of those sent to prison in Canada each year are sent for the purpose of serving terms of imprisonment for 90 days or less. According to our chief probation officer in the province of Ontario, Mr. Dan Coghlan, probation achieved success in not less than 70 per cent of the cases in our province, and that estimate is a deliberately conservative one. Imprisonment has failed because in 75 per cent of the cases of those admitted to federal penitentiaries and in 65 to 70 per cent of the cases of those admitted to provincial institutions these persons had been incarcerated before. Wherever probation has been experimented with very satisfactory results have been achieved.

In England not so long ago, under the direction of the celebrated Dr. Radzinowicz, the Cambridge department of criminal science conducted a survey of 4,000 adult offenders who had been released from probation a full three years. The group of 4,000 consisted of first, second and multiple offenders. The result was that in the over-all picture 71 per cent were still living as law-abiding citizens. Actually in the case of the first offenders the percentage was 88 per cent.

One of the main difficulties in Canada in the field of probation is the lack of uniformity in the establishment of probation facilities in the various provinces. This is largely due to a lack of funds on the part of some of the provinces, and I suppose it is partly due to a lack of interest, perhaps an apathy or indifference, on the part of the public.

I should like our government to give some thought to the possibility of easing the financial burden on the provinces either by direct grants or—and this might be the more orderly solution—by the assumption on a national basis of full responsibility in the field of probation, as the government has already done in the field of parole. So closely related are the two areas of probation and parole that it occurs to me the machinery of our national board of parole, which is now really just beginning to function, could be utilized in the event of the assumption by the federal authority of full responsibility in this field.

One hesitates to suggest to a government that is already required to spend so much money in the public interest that it should spend further sums, but in my opinion there would be a long term economy involved in the immediate expenditure of whatever sums are needed to make our probation system more uniform.

In Ontario, where the number released annually on probation has increased from about 2,500 in 1952 to about 7,000 in 1958, the figures are very startling. The total number under probation supervision in Ontario in 1958 was 12,599. Of this figure the number who were actually placed on probation during the year 1958 was 7,107. But it is the economic benefits that are collateral to this that I find so impressive.

The total amount of restitution collected from probationers following criminal convictions in Ontario in the year 1958 was $71,295. The total amount of support money collected for deserted wives and children from offenders who were released on probation—people who otherwise might have been the subject of welfare benefits—was $2,396,-525.64. Perhaps the most striking figure of all is represented by the total amount of earnings of adult probationers in Ontario in 1958. Their earnings were in the vicinity of $15 million.

In the light of these figures I think it worth while to contrast the cost of probation to the state and the cost of imprisonment.

The cost of probation per individual per year in Ontario is roughly estimated to be in the vicinity of $250. Some might give a lesser figure than that, but I am sure a lesser figure would fail to make allowance for some of the incidental expenditures that are involved in maintaining a proper probation system. It is roughly estimated, then, to be in the neighbourhood of $250. The cost of keeping an offender in prison, on the other hand, will range from between $1,500 to $2,500, depending upon the institution and upon other factors. If each of the 7,000 Ontario probationers in 1958 had gone to prison the cost to the taxpayer would have been several millions of dollars, and the other collateral financial benefits to which I referred would not have been realized at all.

The province of Ontario has taken the lead in this country in the field of probation, has made most remarkable advances and has expanded its system to a marked degree. The province of British Columbia ranks second in terms of progress in this field. In 1942 British Columbia had one adult probation officer and one office, which I believe was located in Vancouver. Today that province has a probation personnel of about 35 and branch offices that number about 17. The results in both British Columbia and Ontario have been satisfactory and gratifying. I therefore repeat what I said at the outset. With a view to bringing about the establishment of uniformity in the probation system I recommend that our government consider the possibility of some form of intervention in this field.

There is one other matter I wish to briefly mention that is not related to probation but deals with another point altogether. This is a matter which I suggest be considered in the future by way of amendment to the Criminal Code. The change I would suggest is a change in the present requirement of the law that juries in criminal cases must be unanimous before rendering a verdict of either guilty or not guilty. After a long experience in the field and following some particularly trying experiences in criminal cases that resulted in disagreements—or, as the layman knows them, in "hung" juries—and I think I speak the minds of a number of my colleagues at the bar—I suggest that the Criminal Code be amended to provide that a majority verdict should be permitted to bring about an acquittal, though I firmly believe that if this were done the present requirement of unanimity in respect to conviction or a verdict of guilty should be retained.

My reason for taking that position is this. Under our laws, as hon. members well know, guilt cannot be proved except by evidence that establishes it beyond reasonable doubt. It is my belief that if the majority of jurors, particularly a substantial majority, are in doubt we cannot help but believe a reasonable doubt exists. On the other hand, where one juror retains a doubt it is my opinion that guilt could not then be deemed to have been established beyond a reasonable doubt. Sir James Stephen, a great English authority in the field of criminal jurisprudence, advocated the change years ago that I today recommend.

By way of illustration I want to show you the hardship that the present law in respect to unanimity so often works. Some of the hon. members, especially those from the Toronto area, will have read in the last few weeks about the famous Aconic trial, a prosecution that began, I think, early last fall, a trial that lasted six weeks, which resulted in a disagreement in which the majority of the jurors wished to give a verdict of acquittal. On the retrial the same result occurred after a four-week trial, when the jurors were 11 to 1 in favour of an acquittal, and one juror succeeded in preventing a verdict of not guilty from being rendered. A case of that sort emphasizes the enormous cost to the taxpayer of a prosecution of that kind and, of course, the very considerable cost and expense to the accused.

I can recall so well a case just a few months ago in which I was involved, involving a young boy of 20 or 21 who came from an excellent home. He had a fine past record, no record of any previous criminal conviction. He was charged with a rather trivial theft. He came before a jury and the jury retired to consider their verdict. In this case the proceedings took place in a rural community where court room facilities are such that the jury room is not as sound proof as in some of the urban areas. The spectators in the court room could not help being able to hear what was going on in the confines of the jury room.

These jurors were, as they ultimately disclosed, 11 to 1 in favour of acquitting this young boy who put forward a perfectly credible, valid defence; but one juror took the position that he would sit there—and I still remember him saying it—as he had often done at board meetings he had attended—until three in the morning before he would give in. He went on to say that if this young boy were acquitted other city youth would come up to the country in the summer time and vandalize their cottages. They were totally irrelevant considerations and obviously were not entitled to any weight, particularly in view of the strong feeling among all the other jurors in favour of an acquittal.

In both the cases I have cited, the Aconic case and the case of the young boy in which I personnally was involved as counsel, the Attorney General of Ontario, on an application to him, did what he of course had the power to do, namely direct a stay of proceedings in both indictments. These are only two illustrations of how the requirement about unanimity works hardship, and hon. members could be given many more.

I thank hon. members for the attention they have given my remarks. I commend them to the minister and to the government for such consideration as they feel they deserve.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two replies that I think I should give before the item carries, since it is the first item of the main estimates of the department. I would like to refer immediately to what has been said by the hon. member for Parkdale, and to thank him for the constructive suggestions which, in keeping with his knowledge and experience in this whole field, we have come to expect from him.

With regard to the question of probation, I think the hon. member and the committee also will be glad to know that at the time of the conference with the provinces in October of last year, when we disclosed the implementation of the Fauteux report and other matters in connection therewith, there was some consideration given to this question of the relationship between the federal parole service and the provincial probation service. Following that conference and when we set up the correctional planning committee, it was one of the subjects which they were instructed to examine and to discuss with the provinces in detail, particularly the ways in which there might be more effective integration of the services provided by the two governments in these two fields.

The hon. member will, of course, appreciate that we cannot act unilaterally here because, if I appreciate the situation correctly, probation officers are in general, at any rate, officers of the court and as such they are provincial officers; but there is a close relationship between the functions of a probation officer and the functions of the parole officers, and close relationship between the needs and situations. Although they are not exactly parallel, there is some relationship between the needs and situations of those who are out on probation after being convicted and those who are out on parole after serving a portion of their sentences, and other areas in which we believe we can usefully co-operate with the provinces, such as in the stimulation of the facilities for training of these officers.

This will require a program of training parole officers. It may well be that the same program could be of use in the training of probation officers, so that this is a matter to which we are giving attention. But, of course, the actual steps we can take will depend upon the extent to which effective agreement may be reached with the provinces.

With regard to the other suggestion about unanimity in juries before there shall be a finding, there is a good deal to be considered in what the hon. member says; but on the other hand I would think there is also a good deal to be said for retaining the principle that a jury must be unanimous before it makes a finding of either guilty or not guilty. There is much to be said both ways. So far the arguments in favour of the retention of the present system seem to have outweighed those in favour of a change, but the observations of the hon. member will be closely studied.

There is some information I have here that I should perhaps just put on the record before one o'clock. On an earlier occasion, when the bill to amend the Judges Act was being discussed, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me in effect whether the time which elapsed between the death of the former chief justice and the appointment of the new chief justice of Newfoundland was a record in that respect. I undertook to get what information I could and give it to the hon. gentleman on my estimates. I find the record established clearly that in comparison with what has taken place on some other occasions, the appointment of the new chief justice of Newfoundland was actually made with some considerable dispatch.

Here are some records of the time lag between the demise in office of one chief justice of a province and the appointment of another. There was one year, five months and seven days in the case of J. B. M. Baxter, chief justice of New Brunswick, who died on December 27, 1946, and was succeeded by C. D. Richards on June 3, 1948. The next one; one year, three months, nine days; Alexander Morris, chief justice of Manitoba, was appointed lieutenant governor of Manitoba on December 2, 1872, succeeded by E. B. Wood, March 11, 1874; eight months, 12 days, Sir Matthew B. Beglie, chief justice of British Columbia, died June 11, 1894, succeeded by Theodore Davie, February 23, 1895.

Perhaps I should give the longer ones. Here is the next, and it has to do with chief justices of trial courts; four years, eight months, 18 days, J. H. Barry—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the chief justices of the provinces I was interested in.

Mr. Fulton: I have just given the chief justices of the provinces. I will give these others, too, if the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was only the chief justices of the provinces that I asked for. I do not mind having the others, too. It is interesting historically.

Mr. Fulton: I do not know whether the committee wishes to take the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite happy—I am sure the committee would—if the minister would put the cases on Hansard. They are interesting historically.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I had better read out the list of provincial chief justices. The next one is seven months, 14 days; Sir R. L. Weatherbe, chief justice of the supreme court of Nova Scotia, retired March 19, 1907, succeeded by C. J. Townshend, November 2, 1907; five months, 23 days, D. A. McDonald, chief justice of British Columbia, died April 10, 1944, succeeded by Gordon McGregor Sloan, October 3, 1944; five months, sixteen days, Theodore Davie, chief justice of British Columbia, died March 7, 1898, succeeded by A. J McColl, August 23, 1898.

With respect to the chief justices of the trial courts the periods have run as high as four years, eight months and eighteen days, and I have on record here one of five months and two days. There are four cases in between those two periods.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one other question I asked the minister about the Judges Act which he might answer now, and that was whether there was any provision for payment of the salary in case of the proclamation of the act of Newfoundland. If the minister has not the information now it can be given later. I do not want to hold up the item for that.

Mr. Fulton: I understand that a letter from the attorney general of Newfoundland has just been received this morning. We have not had time to study it, but it does refer to the situation and under those circumstances I would prefer not to reply until I have had a chance to look at the correspondence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister does not remember my question. Is there any provision in the existing law for the payment of the salary? If the minister would like to answer that on another item that will be all right.

Mr. Fulton: I can answer it right now. No, there is not.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

150. Parole Act administration, including $60,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies as may be approved by treasury board, $344,531.

Mr. Roberge: Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Hochelaga put some questions to the minister. I wonder if the minister is able to answer them now.

Mr. Fulton: As I recall the questions they were, first, whether or not a woman would be appointed to the parole board; second, how many women are in the prisons of Canada; and third, whether there is any differentiation in treatment between men and women in federal prisons?

With regard to the first question, I may say it is true we have had a number of representations to the effect that a woman should be appointed to the parole board. As my hon. friend is aware, the National Parole Act does authorize five members for the board. Up to the present time we have appointed four members to the board, leaving one vacancy.

It is not an easy problem to decide who should be appointed to the vacancy, if and when an appointment should become desirable. The recommendations of the Fauteux committee indicated that in their opinion there should be several groups represented on the board, and not all of those groups are presently represented.

Amongst those groups not represented I could mention the women of Canada, ex-members of police forces of Canada and members of the clergy. In our efforts to achieve a representative board we have left this vacancy. We have two things to decide; first, whether a fifth member should be appointed, and if so from what group that member should come. I am not saying at the moment we are contemplating the appointment of a fifth member, because we want to see how the board will operate and we want to assess the experience of the board; then on the basis of that experience assess the question of whether or not a fifth member should be appointed and from what group that member should come. We have not at the present time, therefore, reached any decision on that point.

With regard to the number of women prisoners in the federal prison system, I am told that at the moment there are 98 women prisoners. This figure represents about the average number of women prisoners who have been in our system over the past years; that is to say, the female population of federal prisons represents less than 2 per cent of the total population.

With respect to their treatment, there is no differentiation except that they are confined in separate institutions. The general program of training and reformation, pre-release programs, all those aspects of the penitentiary program are the same in their application to female prisoners as they are with respect to male prisoners.

Mr. Roberge: There is another matter that I believe the minister overlooked. At the very outset of the remarks made by the hon. member for Hochelaga he said—I am reading now from the English translation of what my hon. friend said in French, and this is at page 4 of the English translation of Hansard of yesterday—

> The parole board has now replaced the remission service.
> It would be of general interest, I think, to make known the number of prisoners in this country for the various provinces, also how many of these prisoners' files have been studied by the new parole board and the result of that study.

Then the hon. member went on to say:

> The committee would also be interested to hear from the minister how this parole board operates.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the question referred to by my hon. friend is one the answer to which must come from two sources, the penitentiary branch and the parole board. The question asks that we make known the number of prisoners in this country in the various provinces, and that is information I expect to obtain and supply to the committee when the penitentiary branch item is before the committee.

The other part of the question is, how many of these prisoners' files have been studied by the new parole board and the results of that study. I am told that something in the neighbourhood of 2,000 files have been studied, but the exact figure is not yet available. This figure will also be available at the time the penitentiary item is called.

Mr. Roberge: At the same time, would the minister advise the committee how many prisoners were pardoned and how many are on ticket of leave as a result of that study?

Mr. Fulton: I am told that the percentage is 32.6 per cent. In other words, of the files studied 32 per cent have been parolled. As the hon. member will recall I distinguish between parole and pardon. Pardon is a function of the executive. Of the files studied 32 per cent have been parolled since the parole board commenced its operation.

Mr. Roberge: I note that this item asks for $60,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies as may be approved by treasury board. At page 217 I note that last year the amount was $50,000 and that this year the amount asked for from parliament is $60,000. I have no quarrel with that increase because that would be for the benefit of the prisoners when they come out of the penitentiary or the prison, I suppose. What I should like to know is this, and I think it is a matter of public interest. It may be of assistance to the prisoners and their families to know what are the societies that are concerned.

Mr. Fulton: The list is quite lengthy. The Salvation Army national service—did my hon. friend ask for the amounts they received?

[Mr. Roberge.]

Mr. Roberge: No. I should just like to have the names of the agencies so the public may be made aware of these societies.

Mr. Fulton: Salvation Army national service; John Howard society of Newfoundland, John Howard society of Nova Scotia; John Howard society of New Brunswick; Catholic rehabilitation service, Montreal; centre de service social de Trois-Rivieres; John Howard society of Quebec; service de rehabilitation sociale inc. Quebec; service social de Beauce; service social de l'enfance Chicoutimi; service social de Gaspe; service social de Hull; service social de Joliette; service social de Levis; service social de Megantic (Thetford Mines); service social de Nicolet; service social de Rimouski; service social de St. Hyacinthe; service social de St. Jean d'Iberville; service social de St. Jerome; service social de Valleyfield; societe d'orientation et rehabilitation sociale de Montreal; societe de rehabilitation de Sherbrooke; Catholic adjustment bureau, Toronto; the Elizabeth Fry society of Ontario; the John Howard society of Ontario; Catholic welfare bureau, Winnipeg; John Howard and Elizabeth Fry society of Manitoba; Manitoba welfare association, Winnipeg; John Howard society of Saskatchewan; John Howard society of Alberta; John Howard society of British Columbia; John Howard society of Vancouver island.

These various organizations received grants under this item in the last fiscal year totalling $50,000 and this year will receive grants totalling $60,000.

Mr. Roberge: I said earlier that I did not want the amount received by each of them, but I could have the average amount received by each of them; or is that too complicated? I should be glad to be furnished with the information later on.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think it would be possible to give an average, because the awards by the branch are made on the basis of the case work done by the respective societies I have mentioned. It just would not be possible to give an average. I shall be glad to send over to the hon. gentleman, if he wishes it, a list showing the amounts paid in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Roberge: Later on, when the minister is through, he could furnish that information. He could do that later on, not necessarily on the estimates. Later on I will be interested in receiving that information.

Mr. Fulton: All right.

Mr. Roberge: There is a service sociale in my own constituency of Megantic. I should like to know whether this service sociale is able to participate in that vote and receive any award. I hope that as a result of this information they will make application, and I hope the application will be considered favourably.

Mr. Fulton: Last year that society received a grant of $150 and I am assured that provided the society has handled case work this year, they will get a grant commensurate with the number of cases they have handled and increased in proportion to the total increase for this year over last year.

Mr. Roberge: I want to apologize. Maybe I did not hear very well, but I did not think this service sociale was included in the list given by the minister.

Mr. Fulton: Yes. If I left it out, I am sorry. I have it on my list, service sociale de Megantic and Thetford Mines.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not sure that I understood what the minister said with respect to grants. Did the John Howard society receive grants in every province? I do not want my hon. friend to give the list over again. I think he said that on Vancouver island the John Howard society receives a grant. Is there any John Howard society for British Columbia as a whole?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, there is; it is included in the list. They have a separate John Howard society on Vancouver island, as they have in various other points in Canada. We made grants to the provincial organizations and to the local ones.

Item agreed to.

151. Administration, $218,599.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice some questions relating to judges' salaries and retiring allowances. I see it generally comes under items 151 to 155. I trust that the Chairman will permit me to discuss these items together, as they are so similar in nature. I should like to preface my questions with a few remarks.

Canada has always had and now has a judiciary of which we have been extremely proud. The principles of independence from outside influence and the security of office during good behaviour has been one of the things that have kept the judicial system in Canada in good standing. In order to maintain these high standards it is necessary to draw from the legal profession—

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order and I want your ruling on it. I wonder whether it is in order to discuss judges' salaries on a statutory item.

Mr. Aiken: I was not proposing to discuss a statutory item. I was discussing, as I thought, items 151, 152, 153, 154 and 155 which are administration items, under the increase of judges' salaries. I will admit that the salaries themselves are statutory. I was attempting to discuss the matter under the administration items, which are not statutory.

Mr. Drysdale: Is that all right?

The Deputy Chairman: I am sure the hon. member realizes that he cannot discuss statutory items.

Mr. Howard: If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to say a word on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Except on the administration item.

Mr. Howard: I recall getting into the same sort of discussion on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, when this same question was raised not on the administration item but on the statutory item in connection with a vote which related to substantially the same thing. I do not recall the date right now but it was during last session, when this same point of order was raised as to whether I could inquire with respect to a statutory item contained in the estimates while the particular vote number that was connected with it was under discussion. The ruling at that time was that it was quite in order to do so.

Mr. Aiken: I was saying that in order to maintain the high standard which the Canadian people have come to expect, we do have to choose from the legal profession of Canada those people who are best qualified to give good service to the country. There have been cases of barristers who have been known to refuse judicial appointments because of the monetary consideration involved. This applies both with regard to salaries and with regard to retirement allowances. It has not always been a case of paying these people what they are worth. In many cases judges must be drawn from members of the legal profession who are at the very peak of their careers. They have built up their practices to their highest extent, and incurred obligations and undertaken a standard of living which they naturally seek to maintain, and they should not be asked to lower their standards of living because of the acceptance of a judicial position.

Closely tied to this matter is the question of the judges' retiring allowances. I am told, for example, that the retiring allowance of a county court judge 37 years ago was $5,000. That was the allowance on his retirement after completing his service. And I understand that the allowance today is $5,333.33. I do not wish to discuss this question of salaries in any detail, but I do feel that proper consideration should be given to it. After all, our judicial officers must be people who are well qualified and well considered, and they must be chosen from the top bracket of the legal profession in Canada.

I want to ask the minister two questions, and perhaps he could answer them together. First, has any consideration been given to a revision of the salaries and retiring allowances paid to judges? Second, what is the last date on which a revision was made? This inquiry is a general one, in that I refer to the judicial system from the supreme court down to the county court, and I should be very pleased if the minister could give the committee some information along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. Fulton: The last date upon which there was a revision of judicial salaries and retiring allowances was 1955, in chapter 48 of the statutes of that year. This raised the level of the salaries of judges of all the courts in Canada. At that time, however, there was a provision written into the statute that the retiring allowances, which were set at two thirds of the salaries, would be paid in relation to the salaries in effect prior to the amendment, so that although the judges of all the courts in Canada received an increase in their salaries there was no increase in retirement allowances as a result of that bill.

This situation has given rise to a good deal of comment. I do not like to use extreme words in connection with the judiciary, but I think it is fair to say that the situation has been the subject of representations by members of the judiciary. That, I think, is quite proper. Members of the judiciary feel, they tell me, that if as the statutes have provided for many years they are entitled to retiring allowances at the rate of two-thirds of their salaries, they can see no reason why, when the salary had been raised, presumably in response to the general increase in the cost of living which affects judges as it affects everybody else, the retirement allowances should not be raised proportionately. They are unable to understand why, on the contrary, it should have been pegged at two-thirds of the salaries formerly in effect.

This question of salary and retirement allowance is one to which my department and I, personally, as minister, have been giving intensive consideration. We find that there are a number of anomalies, too far-reaching to be discussed in detail here, when we are after all dealing with salaries which are fixed by statute. But there are anomalies, and perhaps I could refer to some of them.

There is the question of whether or not judges should be allowed to accept remuneration for their services on various boards and commissions, because it is an undoubted fact that in some cases certain judges receive substantial emoluments by way of remuneration for serving on such boards and commissions, thus adding substantially to their salaries, whereas in other areas judges who are consistently busy with their judicial duties are not able to accept such appointments or do not have occasion to accept such appointments to boards or commissions, and who therefore have no such increments to their salaries.

This situation is one which gives me great concern, and I have instituted in the department and in co-operation with the attorneys general of a number of provinces a study designed to enable us to arrive at a definite conclusion as to what are the facts and figures, and I hope that in the light of this study I will in due course be able to recommend to my colleague a sensible and perhaps substantial revision of the whole basis of judicial salaries and retirement allowances.

However, until I have received reports on this study I am afraid I am not able to indicate to my hon. friend or, indeed, to the bench, which I know is concerned about this matter, whether we are going to do anything about judicial salaries and retirement allowances at this session. This is a subject which I think should be studied by the bar association as a whole and, indeed, by the bench of Canada. There are some quite startling figures which emerge from a comparison of the situation of the bench in this country and in other countries with respect to this subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister, in replying to that question, has anticipated some observations I was about to make. The hon. gentlemen will recall that earlier in the session I asked him whether he had been accurately reported as to the use of judges on boards—I think it was both boards and commissions including, of course, conciliation boards in the province of Ontario. Chief Justice McRuer had at one time taken a strong position that there should be a limitation placed upon their participation in the work of these boards.

I forget the precise words the minister used which formed the basis of my interrogation at that time, but generally—and it was not, I think, an improper observation—the hon. gentleman said he felt there should be some limitation, at any rate, upon their functioning on such boards and commissions. I am sure he did not have in mind the use of county court judges on police commissions, though it is a fact that county court judges do derive income—or at least they do in communities with which I am familiar—for such services. The minister has said he is now reviewing the question of the extent of the emoluments that are received by members of the judiciary from these various extrajudicial activities which are open to them in many provinces and, certainly, in large cities. But he did not expand—and indeed he was not asked to do so—on the question of their participation in a wide series of boards, commissions, administrative tribunals, administrative bodies and the like.

Recently a very competent judge in the province of Ontario was named by the government to head the civil service commission of Canada, and nothing I have to say is, of course, a reflection in any way on his competence for that particular assignment or in any way to be regarded as a criticism of that appointment—

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman will appreciate, of course, that that particular judge is resigning from the bench.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know he has resigned from the bench, but I did see somewhere in the press that he would be regarded as on leave. The minister shakes his head and indicates that that is incorrect.

Mr. Fulton: It is incorrect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think that is satisfactory. I am not saying there would not have been a precedent for that, but I think it is somewhat doubtful that a man should continue to be regarded as a judge and at the same time be afforded the opportunity of serving in a non-judicial capacity. However, the minister says this particular appointee is resigning from the bench and, for the term of his present appointment at any rate, will not be regarded as a judicial officer.

But I would appreciate it if the minister would say something, if he is in a position to do so, about his view as Minister of Justice with regard to the use of judges on these extrajudicial bodies. I know this is not a very easy decision to make, and I am not holding the minister to a precise answer. I know he is thinking about it. But when he does make his comment, or give final consideration to the matter, I know he will bear in mind that there are certain judges who have special qualifications for particular assignments, and many of those assignments cannot properly be discharged, I think, but for the participation of such individuals.

This only serves to illustrate, I suggest, that to every rule, unless it be a law, some exception should be provided. In any event, this is an important matter and one which interests lawyers generally. It interests the bar association and I am sure it interests the membership of this committee, and I should be grateful to the minister if he would comment on the subject I have mentioned.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to the position of the learned judge who, as has been announced by the Prime Minister, will become chairman of the civil service commission on July 1, I should like to make it perfectly clear that he is resigning, and I will expect to receive shortly from him a formal letter of his resignation from the bench. He will carry into his position as chairman of the civil service commission all the qualities and qualifications which led to his appointment to the high court of Ontario, but he will not be continuing in that capacity. There will be a vacancy, to which another judge will be appointed.

With respect to the difficult but important question of the extent to which judges should be permitted or, indeed, should be called upon to serve in capacities which are not strictly judicial while at the same time continuing as members of the bench, I should like to make some comment and yet, at the same time, make it clear that my comments are to some extent not conclusive; that they reflect only, at this point, the result of some study I have given to the matter. I would hope not to see in the press, or elsewhere tomorrow statements that the Minister of Justice had decided this or that, because I have not reached that stage as yet.

But I am concerned about this question, and it will come as no surprise to the hon. member for Essex East that this should be so, because the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet, as well as myself, when we were members of the opposition did express concern about what was regarded as the increasing and dangerous extent to which judges were being called upon to fill appointments to boards and commissions which took them into fields which were not strictly judicial and which, indeed, on occasion took them into fields where the results of their inquiries were bound to involve them, if not personally then as a result of their reports, in political controversy. We have felt, and we still feel, that this was a trend which was dangerous and one which should be halted, if not reversed.

Since assuming office as Minister of Justice I have, as I have already said, been engaged in a study concerning the extent to which judges are being called upon to serve in these various extrajudicial capacities, and I find that apart from what I might call the occasional appointment to a royal commission or something of that nature, which appointments are also of concern, there are a number of what are accepted as almost standard or routine appointments of judges—and this applies particularly at county and district court levels—as chairmen of boards and commissions. These boards and commissions may be standing bodies set up under provincial legislation, or extemporaneous boards of conciliation and arbitration.

The hon. gentleman has mentioned some of these bodies. He also mentioned police commissions. I think there is a very real question as to whether a county court judge should serve as chairman of a police commission. I raise that question on the basis that the county court judge is going to be called upon on a number of occasions to try cases in which the charge has been laid by members of the police force appointed by the commission of which he is chairman. I go no further than that at the present time, but I certainly think that raises a serious question.

Then there are other types of boards and commissions, and I have in mind particularly conciliation and arbitration boards in industrial disputes. I recognize fully that in some provinces particularly—and I do not pick out any one province—it has become a standard practice for judges, particularly from county or district courts, to be named as chairmen of these boards.

As I have said, I have evidence that there are some cases in which judges find almost their major occupation as chairmen of these boards, so they are in receipt of their full salaries as judges yet are in receipt of very considerable extra emoluments which they derive by way of their temporary appointments as chairmen of these boards; whereas, as I say, in other cases where perhaps the full time of the judge is involved in his judicial duties, the time or the occasion is not available for such appointments, and this creates a disparity between the incomes of judges of our courts.

There is another consideration to which I am giving study, and that is this. I recognize that in those provinces where such appointments to boards of arbitration or conciliation have become almost an accepted practice it would be a disruption of labour conciliation procedures to lay down a sudden edict or ukase that this practice should cease because, I am informed, there would be areas in which there would then suddenly be no available machinery for the settlement of industrial disputes. However strongly I may feel as Minister of Justice about the desirability or otherwise of judges serving in this capacity, I cannot ignore the fact that this is an accepted practice and that therefore I have to approach the problem steadily and on a sound common sense basis.

[Mr. Fulton.]

However, having sounded these notes of caution which I realize I must apply in my study of this problem I do say that I think it is extremely undesirable, and a contradiction in principle, that a judge who is appointed as a member of the judiciary on the basis that he is impartial as between litigants should be called upon to perform a function which is not one of adjudging as between parties but is a function of conciliation as between parties; and here I draw particularly a distinction between a board of arbitration and a board of conciliation. In a board of arbitration I think it may well be arguable that a judge is performing at least a semi-judicial function. He hears the argument advanced by both sides and he arbitrates as between them, but in a board of conciliation I think the situation is entirely different. In those boards where the function of the conciliator is to act as an intermediary between the parties I find it difficult to appreciate that there is there any semblance of the judicial function, and I therefore question very closely, and have been led to question by the course of my studies, whether it is desirable that judges should continue to act as chairmen of boards of conciliation.

Having said that, I come back to the point I made at the beginning. I recognize that if I or anybody else, or the government as a whole, is to do anything about the situation we first have to reach conclusions and then we have to approach the matter on a common sense and realistic basis and so adjust our program that our conclusions are not carried into effect in such a manner that they will disrupt the whole procedure set up for the settlement of labour disputes. It is in that spirit that we are approaching a study of the program. Perhaps I should not go any farther than that at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has the minister given consideration to this? While it resides with the federal authority to make most judicial appointments outside of the magistracy and some judges of a certain character and status in some provinces, under the constitution are the provinces not given authority in the matter of the constitution of the courts?

Mr. Fulton: Quite so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would this decision in the final analysis not really involve a decision to be made by the provincial rather than the federal authority?

Mr. Fulton: I think there is an area in which the decision when arrived at must be a joint decision. There is, I believe, constitutional authority bestowed upon the federal government to limit the occupations and the salaries of judges appointed by that authority. I also recognize that judges so appointed are officers or judges of the provincial courts.

I have in correspondence with at least one of the attorneys general indicated an approach to this matter which I think is worth following up. That we should try to reach agreement as to the type of function which, although a function which is not strictly judicial and not a part of his office as a member of the court as such, is none the less an appropriate function to call upon a judge to perform. We might reach agreement upon a basis something like this; that a quasi-judicial function, such as the function of arbitration, might be agreed to be desirable, but that those and other quasi-judicial functions which it is appropriate for judges to be called upon to perform should be recognized and defined by some provincial legislation. If the provincial legislature says that it becomes a function and a duty of a judge appointed to a provincial court to perform certain functions of the nature of a chairman of a board of arbitration, or such other function as the legislature of a province deliberately assigns to judges, then I think there would be no question, and I certainly would not be inclined to raise any question that, it is the right of the provincial legislature so to prescribe. What I would want to avoid is what we might call the assignment of temporary or casual functions to judges which are really not in any way of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature.

So the approach I have suggested in this correspondence is that we should study this in conjunction with the provinces and that we should agree upon the nature of the duties which judges may be called upon to perform, and that then those duties should be incorporated in a statute so there can be no question of the right of a province to call upon a judge to perform those functions which are authorized by the provincial legislature, and no possibility of the federal authority raising any question when a judge is called upon so to perform that function.

Mr. Crestohl: The minister has made a very sound statement on this principle which is certainly very vital, namely that of assigning functions to judges which are not strictly judicial. But we must recall the statement made by the hon. member who first raised this question. He felt that perhaps the stipends of judges were not what they should be. The minister then indicated that to some extent the stipend was augmented by the occasional opportunity which a judge has of presiding over a commission of some kind, for which he receives extra pay.

This would indicate that the basic pay of a judge requires some improvement. Therefore, whether he must seek it or whether it is gratefully accepted by him when he is named to head a commission and therefore augments his income, it is a serious matter to that judge. Whether he seeks the appointment or, as I have said, whether he is grateful for it, it becomes almost a necessity to him. Therefore I should like the minister to tell us whether there is some method, perhaps a rotating method or some system, by which the appointment of judges to head these commissions could be spread around.

I realize it is a difficult thing to do, because there are special qualifications for each particular appointment that a judge receives to sit as the head of a commission of some kind. Is there some special rotation system or some special consideration given when these appointments are made so there might be a wider spread amongst the judges who could look forward to their stipends being augmented?

I realize that this is a very difficult question to deal with. At the same time, I am sure the minister will realize that a situation exists under which some judges may never have an opportunity to augment their basic salary. I would like the minister to consider it. From his remarks I gather that the matter is receiving some very serious study by him. In order to eliminate some anxiety of some judges, or disappointments when they do not receive this extra income, perhaps the basic stipend should be such that they would not anxiously look forward to means of earning additional income.

Mr. Fulton: With the approach of the hon. member, particularly as he has just summarized it in his last statement, I entirely agree. I think it is an unfortunate matter if in fact judges are compelled to look to outside appointments, outside functions, outside duties, to supplement their incomes. I have already indicated that I think it is unfortunate, and in the study we are making I recognize that if we were eventually to arrive at a situation whereby such outside appointments would be discouraged or reduced to a minimum, then certainly in my view it would be necessary to make a substantial adjustment in the rates of judicial salaries as authorized and paid by the federal authority.

But you have here the question of the duties which the provinces feel they are entitled to call upon judges to perform and for which from time to time they pay them extra remuneration. I am not trying to magnify the size of my own job, but I simply say it is a very large task because there have crept into and almost been built into the judicial set-up in this country many of these practices which have become accepted, and it is not easy to change them. I am glad to be able to say that at the last annual convention of the Canadian Bar Association in Toronto a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Arthur Kelly—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He is the president.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry—at the urging of Mr. Arthur Kelly, then president, to study the whole question of the organization, function and remuneration of the judiciary. The committee is under the chairmanship of Mr. Arthur Pattillo. The committee is discussing this matter with the provinces and with myself and my department and I hope that from this study, in addition to the studies which we of the department are making, we shall eventually be able to emerge with a sensible program for revision of the Judges Act in all these respects, both with respect to the salaries and retirement allowances of judges and with respect to the circumstances under which judges may be called upon to accept extrajudicial functions.

Mr. Howard: I did not think, Mr. Chairman, that we were going to get at least partially into the field of labour-management negotiations and the relationships between unions and management, but inasmuch as the question has been raised I should like to express one or two thoughts with regard to a judge performing the function of chairman of either a conciliation board or an arbitration board.

May I say at the outset that generally speaking I agree with the comments of the Minister of Justice with respect to the functions of a judge in either of these positions. We feel generally that it is not too satisfactory for a judge to attempt to participate as a mediator at the conciliation stage of negotiations in an effort to get each side to give a little bit and reach some settlement.

But when a member of the judiciary or of the bar performs the function of chairman of an arbitration board, especially when that board is considering the question of interpreting a collective agreement, we find that we get much better and fairer decisions from a person with a legal or judicial background looking at the collective agreement and saying what the words in the agreement mean. We generally find also that it is not merely a question of looking at the words and saying what they mean but of tempering the opinion so far as the particular words are concerned with the experience the union and management have had over the years in developing the collective agreement and working out the particular phrases or words in the agreement.

I would suggest that in the discussions that are taking place the minister should exert his influence as much as he can to ensure that as far as possible judges stay out of the field of conciliation, where I do not think they serve any great purpose, and participate more in arbitration, especially so far as the interpretation of contracts is concerned.

Incidentally, in the interpretation of collective agreements union and management have found themselves in difficulty because the chairman of the arbitration board in some cases was not familiar with the law. The courts have set aside the decision of the board because the chairman made a bad decision in law, or did not allow the proceedings before the board to proceed as they normally would in a court, with each side having its day in court and able to engage in proper questioning and so on.

In an attempt to get away from having arbitration board decisions upset by courts of law because they are bad in law or for some other reason, I think we could allow judges to participate more in this field, especially with regard to interpreting contracts. We might thus be able to move toward the easing of labour-management difficulties and strife over these particular aspects of their relationships.

While I may refer to a labour court or a labour judge, I use these expressions only generally and do not want to be misinterpreted as meaning that every difficulty between union and management should end up in the hands of a judge. I certainly do not mean that, but generally speaking I do not think people would be averse to the appointment of additional judges whose function might be to deal with the question of collective agreements and to arbitrate on them.

If I may relate a case in point, I should like to refer to the late Chief Justice Gordon McGregor Sloan of the province of British Columbia. For many years Chief Justice Sloan's name actually appeared as arbitrator in the collective agreements between the international woodworkers of America on the west coast and the lumber operators. Some 30,000 to 35,000 employees and quite a number of companies were involved, and if the parties themselves could not resolve the interpretation of a collective agreement the matter ended up in the hands of Chief Justice Sloan who on the whole, I think, made decisions which were acceptable both to the union and management. In a particular instance they may not have been acceptable to one side or the other, but because he was schooled in the legal field and had spent so many years dealing with collective agreements between the lumber industry and the I.W.A. he had developed a fairly sensible and reasonably operable collective agreement through his role of interpreting it in certain instances.

I think we could move in the direction of appointing additional judges one of whose functions would be to assist in arbitration, because so far as the interpretation of collective agreements is concerned we might then be better off with respect to labour-management negotiations and relations.

Mr. Hanbidge: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the minister for very long. I have already discussed this matter with him but I wish to have it on the record so that a friend of mine may be able to see that I have mentioned it to the minister. It has to do with retirement allowances. The minister was good enough to mention that he has the matter under consideration, and I believe a committee appointed by the Canadian Bar Association also has it under consideration. I am not going to ask the minister to commit himself or to make any firm promise, but I certainly would appreciate it, and I know at least one retired judge who would also, if the minister would make any provision retroactive if he does increase the retirement allowance.

153. Administration of justice in the Northwest Territories, including the Northwest Territories territorial court, $107,440.

Mr. Hardie: I do not intend to hold up the committee and go into the arguments I put before the house at the time the amendments to the Northwest Territories Act were considered on February 19 of this year. Those arguments were supported on February 24 by the hon. member for Peace River, a distinguished member of the bar. I simply wish to ask the minister if he has under consideration amendments to the Northwest Territories Act which would do away with the present concurrent jurisdiction of other courts in Canada over the territorial court, and deal with other suggestions I made at that time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that in the course of the trip I made through the district of Mackenzie just after the Easter recess with my deputy minister we took occasion to discuss with Mr. Justice Sissons, and with members of the bar in Yellowknife, the problem to which my hon. friend has referred. My deputy went on to the Yukon to discuss this same problem with Mr. Justice Parker who, until recently, was also a member of the bar of the Northwest Territories. There are, it seems to us, certain changes that might well be considered and it would be our hope that the next time the Northwest Territories Act is opened up we shall be able to bring forward recommendations in connection with this problem.

Mr. Hardie: I wonder if the minister could tell me who appoints the crown prosecutor for the territorial court?

Mr. Fulton: The crown prosecutor is appointed by and acts as agent of the attorney general of Canada, who is also attorney general of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Hardie: Will this crown prosecutor prosecute cases under the territorial ordinances such as the liquor ordinance?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Hardie: Would the minister consider it normal that the crown prosecutor should also sit in the legislative body drafting legislation for the territory and still act as prosecutor in the territorial court?

Mr. Fulton: I believe that is a hypothetical question, because I do not believe there is any such situation at the moment.

Mr. Hardie: Just to refresh the minister's memory I may say that a few years ago the crown prosecutor in the Northwest Territories, who was appointed by the minister of justice at the time, ran for the council of the Northwest Territories and was elected. He then sat in the legislature of that territory passing on the liquor ordinances and also prosecuting cases under that ordinance.

In 1955, I think it was, an order in council was passed dealing with qualifications of candidates for the council. Section 5 of this order in council, subsection (1) (e) reads as follows:

> Every person holding the office of sheriff, registrar of land titles office, clerk of the peace or crown attorney during the time he is holding such office—

Shall not be eligible to sit as a member of the council. Then, in 1957, shortly after the present minister took office, an order in council was passed changing this provision, and doing exactly what the minister agrees would not be fair or right—

Mr. Fulton: I have not agreed at all.

Mr. Hardie: —that no man should sit in the legislature—

Mr. Fulton: No, wait a moment; the hon. member is putting words in my mouth. I said it was hypothetical because no such situation exists at this time.

Mr. Hardie: I shall continue. After the minister took office, or at least after his government took office, a further order in council was passed dated September 13, 1957 which amended the former order in council by eliminating the words "crown attorney". This was the only change that was made, the elimination of the crown attorney from those who were not eligible to sit in the territorial council.

I should like to ask the minister, is it normal for one who has the appointment as crown prosecutor to hold executive office in a political organization?

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, I did not hear the last part of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Hardie: Is it normal practice to appoint as crown prosecutors those who hold executive office in a political party or organization?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I had better deal with these questions one by one. Let us deal with the situation of the crown prosecutor in the Northwest Territories. At the instance of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Mackenzie River who has just finished speaking, an order in council was passed by the former government making it impossible for Mr. John Parker to act as crown prosecutor while he was a member of the territorial council. My hon. friend knows that very well because it was at his insistence, his urging, that the order in council was passed.

Mr. Hardie: The only fair thing to do.

Mr. Fulton: The result of that action was to deprive the crown of the best qualified crown prosecutor in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Pickersgill: He did not have to sit in the council.

Mr. Fulton: We found there was no person as well qualified as Mr. Parker to do this work. I want to refer to what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said. He said he did not need to sit in the council. Of course, he did not need to but the people of the territories wanted him to do so. I realize that my hon. friend, contrary to his usual disguise, does not really believe in the will of the people—

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is not going to put words in my mouth.

Mr. Fulton: He implies directly that—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister interrupted the hon. member for Mackenzie River because he said he would not let the hon. member put words in his mouth.

Mr. Fulton: I think I have the floor.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like the two hon. members to take their seats.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the Minister of Justice resumes his seat, I shall do the same.

[Mr. Hardie.]

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. members take their seats? I understand that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a point of order, am I right?

Mr. Pickersgill: A question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: May I hear it?

Mr. Pickersgill: The question of privilege is that the minister—I do not say wilfully or deliberately because that would be unparliamentary—was completely misrepresenting what I said. I said there was no need for this gentleman to continue to sit in the council, and I implied by saying that if he wanted to go on being crown prosecutor. I used to be a civil servant and when I wanted to be a member of parliament I ceased to be a civil servant.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I think this is a question of opinion.

Mr. Fulton: In any event, the fact is the people of the Northwest Territories wanted Mr. John Parker to sit in the council and elected him. As a result of the order in council passed by the previous administration shortly before they were dismissed from office by the people of Canada it was impossible for Mr. John Parker to continue to act as crown prosecutor.

As I say, when we took office we found that the office of crown prosecutor in the Northwest Territories required the services of the best qualified barrister that we could get and we, accordingly, rescinded the order in council. As a measure of our confidence in Mr. John Parker, I might point out to you and the hon. member for the area—

Mr. Hardie: Political confidence.

Mr. Fulton: —who has just spoken, that we have since appointed Mr. Parker a judge of the territorial court of the Yukon Territory where he is doing an outstanding and magnificent job with the general support of all the bar of the Yukon Territory. I believe, therefore, that disposes of the question raised by my hon. friend. There is at the present time no crown prosecutor in the Northwest Territories who is a member of the legislative council.

Mr. Hardie: I do not think that answers the question, in any event.

Mr. Fulton: By way of additional information, I may tell my hon. friend that it has been for many years the practice, and still is in many provinces of Canada, for the attorneys general, who are members of the government and elected members of the legislature, to go into court and prosecute cases in the courts of the provinces. Indeed, one of the attorneys general of one of our provinces took a case in the Supreme Court of Canada just recently in the interests of his province. It is the practice still in the United Kingdom for the attorney general of that country to go into court and prosecute cases in the courts of the United Kingdom. I feel, therefore, that the general conclusion my hon. friend is trying to draw is entirely unwarranted by the circumstances.

Mr. Hardie: I just wonder if I could ask if the attorney general acted as political agent of some political candidate or some political party?

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend, with his broad political experience, would probably be better able to answer that question than I am.

Item agreed to.

Combines Investigation Act—

156. Restrictive trade practices commission, $86,110.

Mr. Howard: I have a couple of questions with respect to this particular vote, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether it might be acceptable to the committee if we followed somewhat the same practice that we followed in the last session, in considering vote 156 and at the same time making some reference to the office of investigation and research under this branch set out in vote 157, because the two of them are interconnected to a degree.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee agreeable to that procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether, preceding any formal comments on the item, I might inquire of the minister at this time what he is able to report in so far as the report of the restrictive trade practices commission is concerned with regard to the sugar industry in western Canada. From the last inquiry I made about this matter I understood that the question had been referred to a lawyer—I forget his name; I believe it was Meighen of Brandon, Manitoba—with instructions to proceed to prosecute and that if he found in the course of preparing this case that the circumstances and the facts did not warrant prosecution, he was not to proceed. I wonder whether the minister could bring us up to date on what is going on in that particular case.

Mr. Fulton: Counsel appointed has been in consultation with the department over quite an extensive period. I am under some disadvantage here because I am not sure the companies concerned have been advised of the present position. Before announcing a decision which affects them I rather feel that I should ensure that they themselves know what the situation is. Would the hon. gentleman perhaps give me time enough to ascertain what is the position with respect to our having given advice to the companies concerned?

Mr. Howard: May I ask the minister whether he means to spend a few moments now trying to ascertain that matter or at some later date? I do not want to take up the time of the committee now if it is going to take a few moments time to find that out. But if it can be done and the house can be advised at a later date, perhaps on the orders of the day by question or something of that nature, that procedure would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Fulton: I am advised that I have already said in the house, either explicitly or impliedly, that prosecution has been authorized in this case. Since that time there have been consultations as to the form of indictment and that is being worked out and either has been laid or will be laid shortly.

Mr. Howard: I have just one or two comments beyond that. One has to do with what appears to be an exceptionally long period of time that elapses by the procedures set out under the Combines Investigation Act before proceeding to a final conclusion. In many cases some length of time appears to elapse in the initial investigation. I suppose this is quite correct, because in investigating such charges as the operation of a combine, price fixing arrangements and so on, certainly it is desirable to have all the information that can be obtained; and there is no objection to the length of time it takes to get that particular information and to complete the investigation.

The next step makes me wonder whether or not there is sufficient staff in the branch to deal with the question. I refer to the period of time which elapses after the completing of the investigation conducted by the office of the director of investigation and research, between the time that investigation ceases and the time the statement of evidence is submitted to the parties involved. I have in mind particularly one that was completed just recently, notably that involving the question of the sale of raw fish in British Columbia. I understand that the statement of evidence was mailed just within the last month to the parties concerned; yet the whole process of investigation started and apparently was completed some time ago. An inordinately long period of time appears to have elapsed between the conclusion of the investigation itself and the mailing or the completion of the statement of evidence to the parties concerned.

Following the report of the restrictive trade practices commission into any particular case, which normally does not take too long, and following upon receipt by the minister of the report, again an exceptionally long period appears to elapse between the filing of the report or the making public of it and the decision or action taken with regard to prosecution. This sugar case to which I refer is a case in point.

I have here the report of the restrictive trade practices commission dated January 7, 1957. That is the date of the transmission of the report from the restrictive trade practices commission to the then minister of justice. It is now over two years later. I can appreciate the fact that there were some political activities during two of the years intervening, namely two elections that may have upset things. Almost two and a half years have elapsed between the completion of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission in the sugar case and we have just about reached the stage, as I gather it, where prosecution will be entered into in court. That appears to be a period of over two and a half years, an exceptionally long period of time to consider the report itself and to consider whether or not there are sufficient grounds to prosecute. In the normal cases that we hear of, apart from the delays that take place once the case comes into court, which is another matter again, there appears to be quite a lapse of time, unnecessarily so, between when the investigations are completed by the director of investigation research and his staff and the time when the final decision is made as to whether to prosecute or not.

We had the same discussions during the last session on these same estimates about an additional two competitions that were being engaged in then for additional staff members. I should like to know whether those two positions have been filled and the competitions completed and whether the minister feels there is sufficient staff, in view of the long period of time that elapses in these cases, properly to cope with all the problems arising. We shall have some opportunity at a later stage in the house to discuss and debate the actual combines investigation legislation itself because there is an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act and to those applicable sections of the Criminal Code which will give us an opportunity to deal with the legislative angle of this matter.

However, there is one question which I think should be dealt with by the branch and one which may have been given some thought and consideration but certainly it has not been delved into to any extent, to my knowledge since 1945. I refer to the effect upon our Canadian economy and Canadian companies of the operation of so-called international cartels. Without referring to the record I believe that in 1945 under the instance of the then minister of labour there was an inquiry into the nature and effect of international cartels, so-called, and trade combinations in so far as Canada was concerned. The report goes extensively into a number of items and mentions that Canada like other countries was detrimentally affected by the operation of these so-called international cartels.

The report of 1945 gives examples of the participation of Canadian companies in certain types of cartels and the effect of cartels upon Canada and the prices Canadians are charged for goods and so on.

I wish to refer to some of the materials and commodities covered in this report to give the committee some appreciation of those products in respect of which Canadians were at the mercy of cartels in 1945. The report mentions, among other things, fertilizers including potash, nitrogen and phosphorus; tanning materials, quebraco flat glass, sulphur, dyestuffs, tools, magnesia refractories, titanium pigments, chemicals, soda ash, electric lamps, radio tubes and sets, matches, base metals including copper, lead, zinc, and nickel; steel, aluminum, acetic acid, radium and newsprint. The report points out that in one way or another Canada was at the mercy of corporations which operated outside of the boundaries of the nation with respect to these commodities.

I know, for instance, that the aluminum cartel has been in operation in the world for the past 50 years. The world was carved up into markets. Certain prices were charged and arrangements were made between certain companies under which they would not sell their commodities in markets that had been allocated to other companies. The same situation has obtained in respect of other products as well, some of which I have listed in the brief running account I just gave.

It would appear in view of Canada's present status in terms of industrial production that the time is long past due when we should undertake a study similar in nature to that conducted in 1945 in an effort to determine the effect upon our economy of these so-called international cartels. I should not care to go into detail concerning the work involved in the investigation or how it should be conducted but certainly the terms of reference of the 1945 report would serve as a basis for a further study.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Skeena has raised some questions which I think are important in themselves and certainly deserve an answer. I should like to make a brief statement as to the work of the combines branch generally.

The combines branch of the Department of Justice had a year, upon the whole, of increased activity in 1958-59. Since the work of the branch cannot, by its very nature, flow evenly, statistics tend sometimes not to be too revealing of the tempo of the branch from one year to another. However, the number of formal reports made and published during the year was five as compared with two the year before. The number of files opened on receipt of complaints was 126 compared with 77 the year before. Many of these complaints required little attention but the figures do have usefulness as a partial index for comparative purposes. These numbers do not include a large number of complaints relating to loss-leader selling, because the latter are hard to classify for statistical purposes. The number of investigations disposed of by preliminary reports during the year was ten compared with three the year before. The number of formal investigations of possible contraventions in progress at the end of the year was thirty-one compared with thirty at the end of the previous fiscal year. The number of investigation officers on the staff of the director of investigation and research at the end of the fiscal year was seventeen compared with sixteen the year before, and steps are now being taken to increase such staff substantially.

It is in the light of that review that I should like to refer to the specific questions asked by the hon. member for Skeena as to these delays that do take place between the time of the commencement of an investigation and the launching of a prosecution. My hon. friend referred particularly to the sugar case and to the fish inquiry. I do not for a moment attempt to deny that there is a substantial delay but I believe I am on sound ground in saying that it would be impossible to produce a system under which there would be no delay. We perhaps could shorten the delay and certainly we try constantly to keep it down to the minimum but in the light of the extremely complicated nature of these cases and indeed in the light of the exhaustive procedure of inquiry called for under the act itself, I do not think you could expect, at least in any important combines or merger case to get the matter brought before the courts without the lapse of a substantial period of time between the first inquiry and the actual opening of the case.

There has first of all to be an investigation by the director. In the course of that investigation, contrary to what I sometimes hear from business people, the director does his best to accommodate himself to the legitimate requirements of the company or companies concerned and if it is not convenient to them and can be shown to be genuinely inconvenient then he will at their request delay the inquiry until a time convenient to them.

Let us take the fish case where you had a number of parties involved including the union itself. In this case the convenience of the parties had to be considered in relation to the timing of the fishing season and indeed it was at the request of the parties, including the union, that on one occasion for a period of months the inquiry by the director was adjourned.

Let me illustrate this by reference to the sugar case. Here you had a tremendous number of exhibits that had to be looked at by the director and then the director had to make his report on the basis of the inquiry that he had made. There then had to be a hearing by the commission itself. The hearing by the commission necessarily takes a considerable time because of the amount of economic evidence which it is now the practice to take before the commission. My hon. friend will remember that there was an election intervening between the initial report of the commission and the assumption of office by this government. But in the meantime counsel had been instructed to prepare an opinion as to whether or not there was a prime facie case disclosed. He so reported.

It was at that stage that we took office. I was faced immediately with a request from the parties concerned to be given the opportunity to come down and make further representations. Under the circumstances I felt it was only proper that I should do so. Those representations had to be arranged for and the parties had to come from Vancouver and Winnipeg along with their counsel. Following the oral representations, at their request time was given for the submission of written representations and written arguments. All that had to be taken care of before, once again, I was in a position to feel that as the new minister, I had all the relevant facts and considerations before me upon the basis of which I could make a tentative conclusion.

My hon. friend will recall that instead of asking another counsel to give another opinion on the basis of these further representations I decided to save time by adopting a rather different formula. Instead of asking counsel merely for an opinion we referred the case to counsel for prosecution unless in the course of preparing the case he should come to the conclusion that prosecution was not warranted. By that form of instruction I believe we avoided a further delay that would otherwise have taken place.

Since that time counsel has, I assure my hon. friend, been as busy as a busy counsel can be in the preparation of this particular case. I also ask my hon. friend to realize that when you select counsel who are qualified to conduct a case of this kind you are naturally confined to counsel who are in the nature of things extremely busy men. They then have to accommodate their own affairs to the case that we ask them to undertake. We cannot expect them to drop everything else to take a particular case.

I recognize that there has been a substantial length of time intervening between the commencement of the inquiry—indeed the delivery of the report—and the preparation of the case and the bringing of it before the courts but I do not think in a case as complicated as this with as many issues involved, with the parties as widespread as they are, where the convenience of the parties themselves has also to be properly met, you could expect very much by way of lesser delay. But it is a matter with which we are concerned and indeed which we are constantly studying with a view to eliminating the delays to the extent that may be possible.

My hon. friend also asked me about the staff. At the present time we have on the establishment three vacancies. I find that the combines branch is in the same position here as the department generally, in a position which is peculiar, shall I say, to a professional department. We have to recruit lawyers and we find it very difficult to keep our establishment up to strength. As my hon. friend will appreciate there is constant pressure of competition from firms in private practice. At the moment we have three vacancies on the present establishment in the combines branch. It has been decided to make a submission for a further increase of two legal officers or investigating officers in the department and if certain of the amendments I now have in contemplation go through we will be asking for an additional three on top of that. If that should take place we will be expecting an increase in staff of eight investigating officers.

With respect to the matter of international cartels referred to toward the end of the remarks of my hon. friend, it may be of interest to hon. members to know that a senior lawyer in the combines branch, Mr. J. J. Quinlan, is presently in Geneva taking part in the work of a group of experts appointed under the general agreement on tariffs and trade to study the possibility of international control of cartels by GATT members. This is the third of such international studies. Whether or not anything may come of these studies, it is of course impossible yet to say, but the participation of Canada indicates the continuing interest of this government in the control of private restrictions upon trade both at home and abroad.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if a report of this study will be made public so that we may have it before us?

In response to the minister's remarks may I say that I fully appreciate that it takes some time to consider the evidence and exhibits and prepare a report. The minister will understand that I was not complaining about the length of time it took the director of investigation and research to conduct his studies. He will recall that I said as much time as is needed should be devoted to this in order to ensure the fullest possible investigation.

The minister mentioned the length of the hearings. I am of the opinion that the hearings are short ranging in duration between one or two days to a week. The commission in the sugar hearing sat only seven days to hear evidence. The commission in the zinc oxide case which has recently been made available sat only two days. The recent hearings in the ammunition case lasted only four days. The report of the rubber gloves and surgical supplies case released probably just a few days ago indicates that the commission sat only two days. It would appear that the commission does not require much time for its formal hearings during which it listens to representations and arguments and I can appreciate that a greater length of time would be required in the consideration of evidence and the preparation of reports.

I was concerned about the length of time that elapses between the commencement of the investigation and the time the case reaches the courts. I made reference to the sugar case. It has been under fire for 2½ years and it still has not reached the courts.

There is one other point I should like to take up with the minister. Apparently, in all of these cases private counsel are retained in the prosecutions. I wonder why this is so. Why should we retain private counsel to consider and deal with these things and proceed to prosecution in the courts? Why can we not have the Minister of Justice himself handle these cases? He has indicated this is what happens in the United Kingdom. He has also indicated that the attorney general of a province took part in a prosecution recently. Why can we not have the Minister of Justice, who is a member of the bar, conduct the prosecution of those cases in the court? Is there some specific reason why we must retain counsel outside of the government service to prosecute? Why can we not use the services of our very capable and excellent attorneys who are already in the department, not excluding the minister himself?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the hon. member and the committee that I appreciate his last generous reference. There is, however, some question as to the propriety of the Attorney General of Canada appearing on behalf of the crown before the courts, many of whose judges will have been appointed on his recommendation. Apart from that, however, it is the policy of the department, with which I must say I am in agreement, that rather than seek to maintain a large staff of officers who may be available to go into court at any time, it is the more efficient and more economical approach to rely upon counsel in private practice, whom we retain from time to time as the need arises. I am sure the committee will appreciate that if we were to employ and maintain in the department sufficient counsel so that we could at all times, as a department be in charge of the conduct of all of our litigation, we would have to maintain a staff of such numbers to take care of the peak load of litigation and at other times there would be a number of the departmental officers who would not be engaged at all because the volume of litigation does vary from time to time. Therefore, it has been the experience that we are better served and at less expense by employing outside counsel for cases such as these combines cases particularly, big and complicated involving lengthy examination of documents and exhibits.

With regard to the point made by the hon. member for Skeena that the actual hearings of the commission appear to occupy only a few days, I wonder whether I am not correct in assuming that the instances he has referred to are those occasions upon which the commission met to hear final argument? Certainly, that is my impression from hearing what he said. What happens before the time of a report by the director and the final report of the commission is that the commission holds a number of hearings at which it hears evidence, which may be held at various places and at various times. Then, there is a date set for the final hearing, at which all the parties may be represented to advance their final argument on the basis of the evidence that has so far been adduced. It is my impression, on the basis of what the hon. member said, that he was referring to those final hearings for the purpose of listening to the argument of counsel.

Mr. Howard: If I may clear up one point, that may well be, but I do not read that from the reproduction of the letter in the sugar case. The letter is dated January 7, 1957, and is addressed to the Hon. Stuart S. Garson, Q.C., and is signed by C. Rhodes Smith, chairman of the commission. It says:

> I have the honour to submit to you herewith the report of the restrictive trade practices commission dealing with the sugar industry in western Canada—

And so on. Then he says:

> Evidence and argument in regard to the statement of evidence were heard by the commission at Winnipeg, Manitoba, between August 20 and 27, 1956.

It may well be that they had meetings or hearings before this, but it does say "evidence and argument". I looked quickly through the other three reports I have and I found that they were in the same terminology.

Mr. Fulton: I am told that in this particular case there were no other hearings; but in the ordinary case there are long periods occupied by the taking of evidence from time to time at various places. In the sugar case it did go direct to final argument.

Mr. Howard: In the three other cases to which I referred the wording is precisely the same. Evidence and argument were heard on certain dates.

Mr. Fulton: I am told that sugar was an exception. In those other cases there were occasions when evidence was taken at times other than the final hearing.

Mr. Crestohl: I should like to refer to item 157. Since we now have before us a bill which seeks to amend the Combines Investigation Act, does the estimate of expenditures which is indicated here for the year 1959-60 contemplate or include the expenditures which may be involved when the bill passes, if it does?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if there are any additional expenses necessary they, of course, will have to be taken care of by way of final supplementaries because they are not reflected in those estimates or in the main supplementaries. I think I have already indicated in the committee that the only respect in which we anticipate the bill will involve increased expenditure, at least so far as our own staff is concerned, is with respect to the clause dealing with misleading advertisements in which case we do expect to have to employ a small number of additional officers to police that provision.

Mr. Crestohl: When the minister speaks of additional officers does he refer to the estimate of the additional solicitors he said he would require?

Mr. Fulton: No. In any event, we have three vacancies on the present establishment. We have come to the conclusion that we will, whether the amendments now before the house pass or not, require two additional officers. If the amendments do pass, we think we would require a maximum at the present time of three additional officers on top of that.

Mr. Crestohl: Can the minister tell us whether the vacancy on the commission has already been filled or when it is expected it will be filled?

Mr. Fulton: No, the vacancy has not been filled and has not been filled for the reason that I have been waiting, first of all, to complete my study of the act and make my recommendations to the house as to the amendments that should be made. I would expect that, shortly after the amendments go through, because they do involve the assumption by the commission of additional responsibilities by way of report, I will be making the appointment to the vacancy on the commission.

158. Bankruptcy Act administration, $52,620.

Mr. Aiken: There is one matter I should like to bring up on this item, Mr. Chairman. For several months now hon. members have been receiving voluminous letters concerning a certain bankruptcy matter in the city of Vancouver. They are being brought to our attention by one Samuel Morris, and a good many of those letters have been received. The author of the letters seems to feel that he has been badly mishandled and wronged in the courts of the country, and he goes so far as to allege fraud against certain individuals in connection with the bankruptcy. He names persons by name and he makes very strong allegations about them. What strikes me is that if there is no substance to his allegations he may be subject to very serious charges of criminal libel or something of that nature, but so far as I know up to this time no one has objected to the allegations he has made.

Mr. Crestohl: Has he brought charges?

Mr. Aiken: As far as I know he has not. Can the minister tell the house whether his department has taken any action in this matter or whether he intends to? The correspondence is very voluminous. It is difficult to sort out and really find out what the man is getting at without actually having the facts. It is for that reason that I bring it to the attention of the minister, to see if he has any comment to make and to see if there is anything that is worthy of the attention of the minister under this vote.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the details in front of me but my recollection is fairly clear that this was a case in which there was an allegation of fraud in connection with a bankruptcy prosecution. Our investigation of the nature of the allegation satified us that there was nothing here that we could see that brought the matter under federal jurisdiction. The indication was rather that the question of action to be taken by governmental authority was one for the decision of the provincial government. Accordingly we referred the matter to the attorney general of British Columbia and I received an answer from him which indicated that he was causing an inquiry to be made. Since the first reference I have received further correspondence both on behalf of Mr. Morris and from others who were interested in his case and in each instance I have referred the additional correspondence to the attorney general of British Columbia. My present information is that he is still investigating the matter to see whether any and, if so, what action should be taken at the provincial level.

Mr. Aiken: My recollection of the correspondence is that the law society of British Columbia was also mentioned and that the conduct of a solicitor was brought into question. I am wondering whether this has been brought to the attention of the law society of British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton: I would imagine that the attorney general of the province would refer any matter involving the disciplining of a solicitor in British Columbia to the treasurer of the law society for such appropriate action as would be indicated. In any event, that would be a matter to be dealt with by the disciplinary body of the British Columbia law society.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the increase in this vote reflect an increase in the number of bankruptcies? Without too much research, can the minister readily give us the statistics on bankcruptcies for the fiscal year?

Mr. Fulton: The increase in the vote is $1,487 made up of $687 on account of salaries, $500 on account of travelling expenses and $300 on account of office stationery, supplies and equipment for the Bankruptcy Act administration. With respect to the number of bankruptcies, my hon. friend asked for a comparison between the last fiscal year and the year before?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just for the last fiscal year. Are they up or down?

Mr. Fulton: I understand we go by the calendar year. There was a total of 3,218 bankruptcies reported to the branch in 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is an increase over the previous calendar year?

Mr. Fulton: It is actuallly a decrease from 3,486.

B—Penitentiaries—

159. Administration of the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries, including $75,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by the treasury board, $572,678.

Mr. Roberge: This item has to do with penitentiaries. On item 150 the minister said that he would take advantage of this item to answer the first question put by the hon. member for Hochelaga. I would not press that point but I should like to say this. The Fauteux report made a certain number of recommendations with regard to the general reform of penal institutions. I noted also that last October the attorneys general of the provinces met in Ottawa with the Minister of Justice to discuss at least one or possibly several aspects of these reforms. I should like the minister to bring the committee up to date as to how far advanced these reforms are, what has been done so far and what is contemplated to be done during the coming fiscal year?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Hochelaga last night and the expanded question just put to me by the hon. member for Megantic, I should first remind the committee, of course, that one of the main recommendations of the Fauteux committee has in fact been implemented completely by the establishment of a national parole board. A Parole Act was passed at the 1958 session of parliament and was proclaimed on February 15, 1959, and the national parole board, composed of a chairman and three members, took over the granting of parole as of that date.

The complete staff of the former remission service of the Department of Justice, with the exception of the former director and his secretary, was transferred to the staff of the parole board. The former remission service had six regional offices, at Moncton, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. It is proposed to add three new regional offices this year at Quebec, Prince Albert and Edmonton. In addition there are to be ten persons added to the staff of the field offices, six of whom will be for the new offices and four will be additions to the existing offices. There will be ten persons added to the staff at headquarters in Ottawa to take care of the increased work. These include one parole officer, one principal clerk and eight clerks and stenographers.

One of the reasons for these increases in staff, it will of course be obvious, is the opening of new regional offices and the extra work which will come from those offices. Another reason for the increase in the staff, and a very important reason which I am sure the committee will agree fully justifies the increase, lies in the fact that the parole board will automatically review all sentences of two years and over without any application from the inmate. This was a very important and fundamental recommendation of the committee and one which we have accepted fully. I have some preliminary figures on the numbers of files reviewed. From January 1 to May 31 this year there were a total of 596 paroles granted. Parole certificates were granted in 32.6 per cent of the applications received. In 1958 the percentage of favourable grants was 25.6 and in 1957 it was 30.4 as at this time of the year.

As the facilities of the institutions and in the field offices for obtaining reports are increased it is expected that more paroles will be granted and that the board should be able to obtain the various reports earlier than has been the case in the past. The board has taken steps to have the regional officers do more extensive briefing of the inmates in the various institutions with respect to parole.

With respect to the other particulars of the implementation of the Fauteux committee recommendations, I must refer the committee in general to the appointment of the correctional planning committee and the studies which that committee has undertaken. I placed on the record last year a summary of the terms of reference of the committee showing the specific subjects which were committed to the committee for investigation and report. The committee has in the interim visited a number of countries outside of Canada, including a visit to the director of the bureau of prisons at Washington, Mr. Bennett; visits to other specific institutions in the central and eastern part of the United States; and as well an inspection tour overseas to the United Kingdom where they inspected a number of penal institutions.

Then, individual members of the committee studied the penal systems in Scandinavia, France, Holland and Belgium. Following the trip to the United Kingdom and Europe the committee returned to Canada and in the interim has studied the situation in the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario. After they returned from overseas they went to western Canada where they attended the meeting of the Canadian congress of correction in Vancouver. Then the committee proceeded to California, where they made a detailed examination of the penal institutions in that state. Then individual members proceeded to various other institutions in the western United States.

They have now returned to Canada and have completed a study of the situation in British Columbia, Alberta and I believe are now in Saskatchewan. They will then proceed to Manitoba and return to Ottawa. This concludes their travels and their studies, both within and outside of Canada. From this time forward they will be preparing their report. I expect to receive a number of interim recommendations and the final report by the end of this year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Did the committee go to Lansing, and Jackson, Michigan?

Mr. Fulton: So far as we know they have not been to those points.

With respect to the actual changes in the institutions themselves, I may say they are closely related to the Fauteux committee report and the studies we have been making. The commissioner of penitentiaries and his staff have instituted a number of experimental changes. I refer particularly to the opening of a new institution—perhaps I should not call it a new institution—what we term satellite institutions at William Head, British Columbia, and Valleyfield, Quebec. It is true that, in part, the decision to open these institutions was dictated by the fact that our present institutions in British Columbia and at St. Vincent de Paul—indeed everywhere else in Canada with the possible exception of Manitoba—are seriously overcrowded. Nevertheless, we felt that we should combine the necessity for relieving the overcrowding with which we are faced with the opportunity to establish some institutions on an experimental basis.

Both William Head and Valleyfield are new types of penitentiaries altogether. They are both what we might call open institutions. The experiment is succeeding remarkably well. They are small institutions now, what you might call overflow institutions, and both accommodate about 100 prisoners. In addition, we have taken a decision to open a new institution in the maritimes in the Springhill area. I announced, I think last March, that a site had been selected in the general area of Springhill. My hon. friend from Cumberland has been pressing me to make an announcement of the details as to the site, and I am sure that he and members of the committee generally will be interested to know we are now in the process of acquiring options for property near Springhill. We expect that these negotiations will be completed shortly. I shall be able, then, to make an announcement of the exact location where the institution is to be established.

In addition, I should say that generally we have continued our staff training program within the penitentiaries branch. We have taken steps, with the approval of treasury board, for the establishment of an expanded program of inservice staff training at the various institutions across Canada.

I think that is a fairly general summary of the approaches we are making toward the implementation of the Fauteux committee report. We are consciously and deliberately avoiding stepping out too rapidly until we get the final report of the correctional planning committee. It would be, I feel, very unwise, and an unfortunate thing, if we committed ourselves to expansion or experimental programs in certain directions which might have to be modified when we receive this report. Then we would find we had committed the public to considerable expenditure to do what we had done and then, when we got the final report, we might have to undo it. The final decisions on the program must therefore await the committee's final recommendations and the government's decision on them.

Mr. Roberge: I wish to thank the minister for giving as complete a summary as possible. This was very interesting to us, and we do agree with him that this is a long range affair and that it takes time to implement the recommendations of the Fauteux report.

I believe the minister overlooked one part of the remarks I made. I made a reference to the conference that was held in October between the attorneys general of the provinces and the Minister of Justice. If I remember correctly there was a question of whether or not those Canadians who received sentences under one year would be committed to penitentiaries instead of common jail. Is there any further comment the minister might make on that?

Mr. Fulton: No, not at the present time, Mr. Chairman. The recommendation of the Fauteux committee was that all persons serving sentences of six months and over should be the responsibility of the federal penal system. We accepted that recommendation in principle but it was our view and still is our view, expressed to the attorneys general at the time, that if the federal penal system becomes one in which the emphasis is placed on reform, it would not be sensible for us to accept prisoners who have only been sentenced to terms of six months. When you get automatic remission, time off for good behaviour and so on at one end, and when you take into consideration the length of time that must be taken for the admission and classification process at the other end, it means that out of a sentence of even 12 months you would only have some 8 or 9 months to spend in effective training and rehabilitation. We therefore stated that in our view we should only accept prisoners sentenced to terms of 12 months or more.

In order to implement the provision we have said we would recommend in due course a program to be worked out to the effect that sentences under federal statutes of between six months and one year should be eliminated. If that is done, it means that those sentenced under federal statutes with respect to whom the magistrates or judges think that the requirement is one of exemplary punishment or anything of that nature —and when I say "exemplary" I mean in the sense of some retribution for their wrongdoing but not a long prison term—will be sentenced to terms of six months or less. With respect to those whom the magistrates or judges feel that the requirement is for training, reformation and rehabilitation, they will be sentenced to terms of one year or more and will be sent to federal training and reformation institutions. That is the theory behind the proposal.

Mr. Roberge: I have just one further question on that item. Did all the provinces agree so far?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, all provinces have agreed, although no province was prepared to take responsiiblity for that recommendation. I want to make that point clear. Several of them said they felt some reservations with regard to the proposal, but they raised no objection. They said, "If you as a federal department are prepared to go ahead and put it into effect we will not quarrel with it but we are not urging it nor are we accepting responsibility for the recommendation".

Mr. Coates: I was pleased to hear, in answer to the hon. member who preceded me, the statement of the minister with regard to the location of the federal penal institution in the Springhill area and to learn that options are now being obtained on property at or near Springhill.

First of all I should like to express to the minister not only my gratitude but that of the people of Springhill and of the people of Cumberland county for his announcement of March 5 in the house when he stated that Springhill or the Springhill area would be chosen as the site for the new federal penal institution for the Atlantic provinces. I should also like to express gratitude for the attention he has paid to the location of this specific institution. He not only had his officials in the area at a very early date but he himself did us the great honour of personally visiting the area and looking over the proposed sites. In that way he was able to appreciate the merit of each of the sites proposed by his officials and was able to take into consideration all of the facts surrounding the location of the institution in that area.

May I also thank him for his early decision to go forward with the work on this institution, at least in a preliminary manner, even though, as he has just stated, the correctional planning committee have not yet made their final report to him on their findings with regard to this matter. This shows the keen interest the minister has had in the people of Springhill, in the light of the unfortunate disaster which occurred there last October as well as the previous disasters that have struck this unfortunate town.

May I ask the minister whether it is possible at the present time for him to enlarge on the type of institution that will be located at or near Springhill or whether he is able at this time definitely to name the site. He might not be able to do this if his officials have not obtained options on the land. Could he also say when he expects work will go forward on the construction of the buildings necessary to assist in relieving the present overcrowding of Dorchester penitentiary.

May I also stress—and I do this most sincerely—the importance of his officials giving every possible consideration to the employment of as many as possible of the people in the Springhill area. A great deal has been said, both good and bad, about the type of people in Springhill. When I say "bad", what I mean is this. Many say, "Well, they are miners; they can't do anything else". I do not believe this for one instant. I firmly believe that any man who has been a miner can probably do any job, of any type, that could be placed before him. There is no harder type of work; and there are no more dedicated people than are the miners of this town. If they are given the opportunity I feel that they will prove, as they have proven on three different occasions, their strength and their ability to provide for Nova Scotia as a whole a very outstanding, worth-while, energetic and stable community in Springhill which before the minister's announcement of March 5, appeared to be on the verge of slowly becoming a ghost town.

The minister gave them the incentive to go forward. They have embarked upon many different projects to beautify their town and

I know that the further incentives that will now be given as a result of the minister's decision to undertake the establishment of the institution in the area, in the near future will add further to the forward look of the people of this area.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: May I just deal with the questions asked by my friend the hon. member for Cumberland. Perhaps it might be more convenient if my remarks appeared at this point. First of all I want to agree with everything he has said about the people of Springhill. I am able to confirm that on the basis of the visit I paid there, as he has himself reminded the committee. I found them to be a people determined not to let disaster overcome them but to take their own initiative in meeting and overcoming the situation with which they were confronted. My visit there also confirmed the interim report which I had obtained from the correctional planning committee that that area is in every way a suitable area within which to locate a new institution for the maritime provinces. I regret that I cannot be more specific at the moment as to the exact location because, as I have said, we are in process of acquiring options now. We have two officers down there at the moment. I expect that those negotiations will be completed within a week or ten days at the most. I shall then be glad to make the appropriate announcement.

With regard to the type of institution which it is intended to establish there, the final decision must await the over-all report of the correctional planning committee. However, the committee itself in its interim report not only recommended that this was a suitable area for a new institution in the maritimes which already the indications show is going to be necessary, but that it was also a suitable area in which to establish an overflow or satellite institution for Dorchester penitentiary. So the first function of this institution will be to take care of the removal from Dorchester of those persons who should be taken out of there because of the overcrowded situation of that institution.

The Springhill area is capable of development in one or both of two ways; first, as a prison farm type operation and, second, as an industrial vocational training operation. We are fortunate in having an area which can be developed in one or both of these manners. The ultimate choice will, of course, be a matter for the long term decision and it may be we will pursue both types of development. In any event, we will have acquired, when our present plans are completed, a site which first of all can take care of the overflow from Dorchester and which, secondly, is capable of being developed to meet the needs of, preferably, a minimum security type of institution development along the lines of farm training or industrial vocational training.

The first construction which will be carried on will, of course, be of a departmental nature, because until we establish our over-all plan we are not going to build permanent buildings. We shall, of course, keep the hon. member's request in mind that we should employ, both in the initial and final stages, as many as possible of the local population.

Mr. Howard: On this particular item I should like to begin by making a reference to the arrival and present visit of Her Majesty the Queen. Some hon. members may wonder what connection there is between that and the question of penitentiaries but I can assure you that there is a connection. There has been some comment recently by a young television artist, Joyce Davidson, about the indifference of Canadians in so far as the visit of Her Majesty is concerned. I say at the outset that I rather agree with Miss Davidson in this regard, but there is a group of people in Canada who look upon the visit of Her Majesty on this occasion, as they did on the last occasion, with a great deal of interest, and this group consists of the inmates of our penitentiaries, because when royalty visits Canada it is usual for the King, or the Queen, to exercise the royal prerogative of pardon and to grant remission of sentence to some of the inmates in the penitentiaries. I am sure that this is pleasing both to the inmates who are released earlier than they thought they would be and to the minister and his officials in the Department of Justice, because they will have to suffer less headaches on account of overcrowding and so on.

With respect to the operation of our penitentiaries and the changing attitude which has been developing in this and other countries for a number of years, I thought it might be interesting if we looked back just 100 years and noted the comments made by a warden of a particular penitentiary and compared them with our general attitude today. The Kingston penitentiary inmates publication "The K.P. Telescope" for March contains excerpts from what is called the warden's diary of March, 1859, and I should like to read a few of the things which were written in this diary 100 years ago by the warden of that day, because they certainly indicate his attitude and, I am sure, the attitude of many other people at that time toward prisoners in penal institutions. Here are some of the entries in that diary written 100 years ago, and they may lead us to reflect on how our attitude has changed since that time.

Convict Frederick Day was sentenced to three days in the dark cells for committing . . . a certain offence . . . in his cell. His hands will be manacled.

Then there is another entry:

Female convict Edith Knapper sentenced to three meals bread and water and one night without bed for having tobacco on her person.

And, further on:

Convicts Sauve and Herron . . . are constant troublemakers and I am immediately seeing that Sauve is chained in the cell.

References continue throughout this report in that year to inmates being chained, manacled, chained in their cells, being forced to sleep one or more nights without beds, being restricted to a diet of bread and water and so on. Punishments of this type were common throughout this period. I see here another instance of a man ordered to be chained "until he realizes that he cannot be insolent to the guards." And so, throughout this period, there are examples of this cruel, inhuman and disgusting attitude which was expressed and put into practice by officials of penal establishments in those years.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock I do now leave the chair for the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, under the provisions of section 3 of standing order No. 51.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH IN CANADA

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-27 to incorporate the Free Methodist Church in Canada.

He said: The effect of this bill is to merge the Free Methodist Church and the Holiness Movement Church in Canada.

Perhaps, as a matter of interest, hon. members would like to know, or have on record, some of the history of these two churches. The Free Methodist Church had its beginning in Canada in the early years of the 1870's when Bishop B. T. Roberts of the Free Methodist Church of North America accepted an invitation to conduct some services in the area of Agincourt, Ontario. From that beginning interest spread until churches were organized in various sections of Ontario, in western Canada and in some sections of Quebec. The outcome of this was the formation of four conferences in Canada. These conferences co-operated entirely within the general church with its headquarters in the United States, contributing to its funds for evangelism, missions, superannuation and other expenses of the church. This situation continued until 1923 at which time an agreement was reached between the general church and representatives of the Canadian conferences whereby the latter would retain their funds and be responsible for their own expenses.

In 1927, the Canadian act of incorporation was secured establishing the Free Methodist Church in Canada. Immediately following this a Canadian executive board of the Canadian church was formed.

It may be of interest to hon. members to know that the board of directors comprises Rev. J. A. Robb, president, for many years a pastor and superintendent of the east Ontario conference; Rev. C. W. Reynolds, vice president, also with several years of experience as pastor and superintendent in the east Ontario conference; Rev. R. L. Casement, secretary, having been a pastor for 28 years, a superintendent for 8 years and now completing 9 years as secretary of this board; Mr. L. A. Freeman, treasurer, a school teacher for many years who is now principal of a large school in Hamilton, Ontario.

About the beginning of the present century an organization founded by Bishop R. C. Horner and known as the Holiness Movement church obtained a charter in Canada. Several churches were built in central and eastern Ontario and a few in Quebec and the United States. Interest also spread to the prairie provinces and in due time an eastern and western conference came into being. A strong missionary emphasis developed until the work in foreign fields surpassed in members and churches that in the homeland. A conference was organized in Egypt with 70 churches and between 7,000 and 8,000 members. Work was also undertaken in China until it became necessary for the missionaries to leave.

Throughout the years that the Free Methodist and the Holiness Movement churches have operated in Canada very friendly relationships have existed between them. While there was never a written agreement there appears to have existed a mutual understanding that one would not infringe on the activities of the other.

During recent years there was a growing feeling on the part of the leaders and many laymen in the Holiness Movement church that due to the heavy missionary program, and realizing that the doctrines of the two churches compared so favourably, it would be the reasonable thing to do and it would strengthen the forces for greater progress if the Holiness Movement church could merge with the Free Methodist Church in Canada. These have been the motivating principles behind the activities of these two churches.

They now feel they can work in unity under this new arrangement and if this legislation is passed by this house the movement will be known as the Free Methodist Church in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): As there are a number of divorce bills standing for second reading, is it the pleasure of the house that these bills be taken in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill SD-340 for the relief of Timothy Allan Moran.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-341 for the relief of Antonio Choma. —Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-342 for the relief of Helen Ruby Riley Onions.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-343 for the relief of Simone Alberta Chretien Welsh.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-344 for the relief of Edward John Mendelsohn.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-345 for the relief of Marcus Gilmour. —Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-346 for the relief of Joyce Rosemary Hudson Plam.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-347 for the relief of Bernard Lawrence Boire.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-348 for the relief of Marie Madeleine Marielle Faust Morin.—Mr. McCleave.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESTRICTING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT TO CERTAIN OFFENCES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. McGee for the second reading of Bill No. C-18, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, when my remarks were interrupted on March 24 I at that time had had an opportunity to make a short statement approximately ten seconds in duration in which I stated to the house that like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) I, too, had witnessed a hanging several years ago but that unlike the hon. member I still believe that hanging should remain a part of our system of justice.

I did not think at that time there would be an opportunity to continue the debate. I am thankful it has arrived at last and that I will have an opportunity to speak about some of the remarks that were made by the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), and those made by others who preceded me in the debate on March 24.

The house will recall that the three hon. members who led off the debate on that occasion were in favour of the abolition of the death penalty. I was the sole speaker on that occasion who advocated its retention. The resumption of the debate this afternoon affords me an opportunity of presenting some of the arguments that were discussed on the previous occasion as seen through the eyes of an anti-abolitionist.

The hanging that I witnessed took place at Headingley jail outside of Winnipeg in 1948. As I said on March 24, it was an inhumane sight that I witnessed. A considerable amount of controversy raged on the subject and several hundred thousand residents of southern Manitoba and the Winnipeg area had signed petitions asking that the death penalty be commuted to life imprisonment. Notwithstanding the petitions or the fact that a good case perhaps might have been made for manslaughter on the basis of the facts of the case, the death penalty was carried out. Even assuming that the man was wrongfully hanged and that the case was one of manslaughter, I have not changed my opinion concerning the fact that we should retain hanging as a punishment within the framework of our legal system. In short, what I am suggesting to hon. members who previously took part in this debate including the hon. members for York-Scarborough and Vancouver East is that a personal aversion or prejudice to the actual event of hanging should not colour one's emotion in reaching a decision on this subject. Judgment should not have to depend on a personal prejudice. I hope never to witness another hanging but I daresay one could become just as ill as I felt on that occasion as a result of watching a surgical operation. I strongly submit that personal opinion or prejudice should not affect one's judgment and I shall develop this theme more fully as I deal with the arguments that were advanced by those who preceded me in this debate.

One of the usual attacks of the abolitionists camp is that those who have been hanged were not guilty. They can point to an impressive number of cases and argue on them saying that these individuals were wrongfully hanged and therefore hanging should be abolished. For example, almost any student of criminology is familiar with the famous Bywaters-Thompson case in England in the mid 1920's. This was a case which created a great deal of controversy at that time because Mrs. Thompson eventually went to the gallows and was hanged. The circumstances there were that Mrs. Thompson was older than her lover in that case and they struck up this illegal liaison. The young man in her life used to go to sea, and she would send him letters from time to time. To fan the flames of their passion she would inform him that she was busily engaged in trying to rid herself of her husband by putting powdered glass in his tea. This was not true. The murder itself occurred when Mrs. Thompson and her husband were walking along the street and the young lover ran up to the husband and stabbed him.

There was apparently nothing that Mrs. Thompson did at that time to make her an accessory. She did not pinion her husband's arms so that he was an immobile victim in front of the knife that took his life. In fact, it merely appeared that she was an innocent bystander, as it were, until it became known to the police that the murderer and the murdered man's wife did have this illicit liaison. That caused considerable controversy after she was hanged because people are wont to argue that she was made to pay a fearful penalty by the mere fact of achieving a romantic liaison which did end in her husband's death.

When I look at that case I do not find it particularly inviting in a debate such as this. Of course it may very well be that these chance remarks about putting ground glass in her husband's tea from time to time may well have made the young man think that after all she could not be the murderer of the husband entirely. "I must get in there and play a part myself." He might have been provoked. It was one more famous case that I think is almost always considered in debates on abolition. For myself, I have not thought it particularly helpful and I do not think it makes out any great point for the abolitionists.

The point that has been made by two of the speakers who preceded me in this particular debate is that the crown always has an advantage in murder trials and that the people who present the case before the courts are more able. They have all the resources and the police are rounding up witnesses and bringing them into court and it is very difficult for the defence to present its case properly. Again this goes to the argument, a strange argument, an argument that I find to be somewhat fallacious, that the people who were hanged were never guilty anyway. I think we should have more faith in our courts of justice and certainly anybody who knows court work knows that the greatest care is taken in the presentation of charges of murder against people; that the accused is given a great deal of protection, and undoubtedly is given even more protection than usually obtains in criminal cases. If there are dangers, though, that people have been wrongly convicted of murder I do not think the answer is to abolish hanging; rather I would suggest it is to see where the faults are and take appropriate action by amending the Criminal Code or in some other way providing even greater safeguards than exist at the present time.

The third line of approach on this theme, that those who are hanged are not guilty anyway, or the corollary to that particular point, was brought up by one of the members in the debate when he quoted the late Warden Laws of Sing Sing penitentiary to the effect that only the poor man or woman is hanged and the rich people are able to get away with it. There was an impressive statistic presented. The point that really bothers me is that out of 150 people taken to the execution chamber in Warden Laws' experience, 149 were men and the other person was a woman. But, in any event, all the 150 were poor. This point has given me some concern. I do not know whether it particularly goes to the proposition, though, that we should abolish hanging for that reason. It may be that more information is needed on what is the experience in Canada, for example, to see whether the rich are able to get away with murder and the poor are unable to get away with it. Perhaps these are statistics that would be very useful in helping to determine this rather interesting question.

A strong point made by the abolitionists, Mr. Speaker, is that hanging is based mainly on revenge. This argument, of course, suggests that our laws and our civilization are very much unaltered from the laws and civilizations of several thousands of years ago; that the eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth code as it prevailed then prevails with us today.

On this point of revenge one of the preceding speakers quoted Rabbi Feinberg of Toronto in a very moving passage in which he describes his own particular emotions when nazis who had sent thousands of Jews to the gas chambers during the war were eventually brought to justice. Rabbi Feinberg asked himself the question that naturally arises in a civilized man's mind when he finds himself thinking in terms of our basic passions of revenge. I draw that reference to the attention of the house again. I do not intend to read it but it is to be found at page 2199 of Hansard of that particular debate.

On this particular point of revenge, it is asked what happens, what do you do when you see your wife or child being raped or murdered by someone? I do not find this a particularly useful approach in coming to a particular decision as to whether to abolish hanging or not. It seems to me that it involves one in a personal and conjectural position, and that it uses the wrong approach to this whole problem. If there should be an approach at all it must be a dispassionate one; that you imagine somebody's wife or child being raped or murdered about 5,000 miles away and what particular remedy you think the law should exact on the rapist or the murderer.

On this particular point of revenge, it is suggested that there is revenge in the hanging of a man or woman for murder. I ask myself the question, who is obtaining the revenge? Is it the judge? There have been cases in the past of the hanging judge, men like Judge Jeffreys of 300 years ago. Even in modern times we hear of such and such a jurist having the mentality of a hanging judge, but I think we will all agree that most, if not all, of those on the bench go there with the proper qualifications. It is not revenge on their part that hangs a person for murder.

What about the jury? They come into court, 12 good men and women true, and are sworn to render a solemn verdict after hearing the evidence and to adjudicate on one fact only, whether the crown has made out beyond reasonable doubt and with moral certainty that the accused did in fact commit murder. Surely it cannot be revenge on their part if they so decide and the accused is hanged. It is not their task actually to determine whether an accused hangs at all. They simply decide whether the accused has or has not committed murder.

What about the role of the prosecutor? Is there revenge there? I suggest not. I suggest that a crown prosecutor's calling involves the presenting of the facts of the case that are in his possession, whether those facts are favourable to the crown and against the accused or whether they are not. This is a professional obligation on the part of the crown prosecutor and I am sure there are remarkably few, if any, who neglect that very basic duty. Surely there can be no revenge by them.

The defence lawyer is in a slightly different position but his relationship with his client must never override his professional duty to the court.

Finally, we come to the man at the end of the line, the hangman who actually carries out the hanging. Is there revenge on his part? Surely I can answer no again for the very obvious reason that he has been commissioned to do a particular duty. He carries out the will and determination of society and, indeed, the accused does not come into his hands at all for this final act until the due and awful processes of the law have been completely gone through. Where then is the revenge, the eye for an eye and the tooth for a tooth that the abolitionists speak about?

I suggest that if they make any attack at all on the ground of revenge they are directing that attack toward society. I suggest that if they reproach society thus, including themselves, they are in effect conceding that in thousands of years civilization has not really advanced at all, that we are no better off today in our attitude toward the law than the Babylonians were. In short, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that when they say that hanging is based essentially on revenge they are in effect saying that civilization cannot flower, that the minds of men are not capable of advancing from a primitive state of emotion, a primitive attitude toward murder and hanging, to something advanced and civilized.

There I have my main quarrel with them. I believe that in retaining hanging we do not do so because of revenge. We do so because our law has developed to the point that those responsible for the administration of law and society in general are saying that if a man does commit murder upon another man it is a decision of society that the murderer is not fit to live among mankind. I think it is a civilized approach. In making this decision to retain hanging as part of our system of punishment I do not think that people nowadays really regard it as a matter of revenge at all. Just as the eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth theory has pretty well vanished out of the warp and woof of law, so too I think that any notion of revenge has vanished as well.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the bill, the purpose of which is to substitute life imprisonment for the death penalty as the punishment for murder. This is a very controversial subject largely because our concepts of justice and the basis on which justice should be administered have changed throughout the years. In the old days referred to by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) when justice was based on the concept of retribution or revenge as embodied in the phrase, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth it was very simple and logical. But even that basis was capable of being distorted and we had situations only a few centuries ago when the death penalty was imposed for crimes such as stealing. We are reminded of that in the old saying that has come down to us and which we use frequently even today that one might as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb.

But as time went on scientific and industrial progress created a large middle class of people who were capable of exerting a formidable public opinion. As this public opinion became more humanized by religious influences and better informed by the interchange of ideas and by increased knowledge of human behaviour, a public moral conscience began to emerge. As this moral conscience has developed there has been a definite rejection of the old basis of revenge and retribution, as the hon. member who has just taken his seat went to some pains to point out.

The death penalty was rejected as a punishment for the crime of stealing and there has been continual progress in that direction. It has been abolished for one crime after another until today it is imposed only for the most culpable forms of murder. The question now before us is, should it be retained even for such crimes and, if so, on what grounds can it be justified? We have already rejected revenge and retribution as sufficient justification for this punishment.

People who support the retention of capital punishment have tended more and more to base the justification on its efficacy as a deterrent. This in itself, is controversial because as we evaluate the experience in countries where this penalty has been abolished and compare it with countries where it has been retained, we find there is no clear balance of evidence one way or the other. There are statistical surveys which tend to show that when social and economic conditions, as well as other conditions, are similar there is no difference at all even among the different strata of society between countries which retain the death penalty and those which have abolished it.

In the year 1956, this parliament set up a committee to go into this question. This committee recommended that the death penalty should be retained. They based their decision largely on the ground that crime patterns in Canada were, in many respects, different from those in European countries. It was their belief that in Canada, at least, the death penalty was a greater deterrent than any other form of punishment. I think we must give due weight to that decision which was arrived at only after a most thorough investigation and deliberation. If we accept the finding of this committee as a fact, and I see no reason why we should not, then we must still ask ourselves, should this ground of a deterrent be the overriding factor? In my opinion, it should not be.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the overriding factor in cases such as these should be simply, is it morally right or is it morally wrong. The death penalty is justified on the ground that human life is sacred and it is morally wrong for one individual to take the life of another. If it is morally wrong for an individual, how can it be morally right for the state? It can only be right for the state if our concept of the state is such that we regard it is an impersonal body, such as a corporation. In some textbooks a corporation is defined as something which has no body to be kicked and no soul to be damned. I point out that is the very concept which has been developed by the communist state and by other states which are based on materialistic considerations. I believe we must reject that concept of the state and accept the fact that the state must be morally bound the same as the individual, and that the state is no more or less than what the individuals who have been entrusted with its administration make it.

We know today a great deal about human behaviour and the effects on human behaviour of such factors as heredity, environment, etc. Some of these factors are the creation of the state and are the responsibility of the state. To the extent that these factors have contributed to the behaviour of the person on whom the penalty is to be imposed, then the state itself is not above blame. In insisting upon the imposition of the death penalty the state is like Pilate washing its hands and rejecting its responsibility. This point can be developed to some extent, but I realize other speakers want to participate in this debate.

Having mentioned what in my opinion should be the overriding consideration, I should like to mention the second factor which should be taken into consideration. I refer to the risk of hanging an innocent person. There can be no doubt that that risk exists; there can be no doubt that innocent persons have suffered the death penalty. I do not believe the state can shrug its shoulders at that fact and say, it is too bad but society did it because society has decided that this person is not fit to live amongst us. It is one thing to say an individual is not fit to live amongst us, but it is another thing to say he is not fit to live at all.

If we are to be consistent and build up the law of our country on a moral foundation, if we accept the moral basis of the sacredness of the individual, then I feel we must avoid the risk of taking the life of an innocent person. In my opinion these two considerations, the morality of the thing and the risk of taking an innocent life, outweigh the consideration of the death penalty as a deterrent. For that reason, I heartily support this bill.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part briefly in this welcome debate originated by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) I attest to no specialized knowledge. I am not a lawyer. What I have to say about the subject of capital punishment revolves around my feeling of the concept of the state. In a democracy which attests to any spiritual purpose it seems to me that the state should be subject to the same moral imperatives as is the individual. Both people and state should subscribe to and obey a higher law. What is the basic law of God on earth if it is not the absolute inviolate nature of human life? The root whence everything else of value grows in our society seems to me to be, in Albert Schweitzer's phrase, reverence for life. I cannot persuade myself that this reverence for life can be preserved by adding to what is usually a passionate and private killing, a deliberate public killing. I therefore feel that I must realize my personal share in the extraction of the death penalty. I believe that the hangman is ourselves.

Two basic arguments are generally advanced for the extraction of the death penalty. The first aim of punishment is argued to be that of expiation. It is clearly stated by a recent Archbishop of Canterbury, the late Dr. Temple. In a paper in which he considered the nature of penal treatment and entitled "The Ethics of Penal Action", he said:

> The community must exhibit an antagonism in its will against the will of the offending member. This is the first duty of the state towards the criminal himself. He needs, as we all need, sympathy: he needs, as a sick man needs, diagnosis of his disorder and appropriate remedial treatment: but above all he needs the reassertion of the moral law and of his own personal responsibility towards it—

Professor Gilbert Murray has summarized the same view in his preface to "An English Prison from Within", by S. Hobhouse wherein the professor writes:

> Other good men hold that, apart from all thought of the consequences, sin should bring suffering, and that, within certain limits, it is entirely satisfactory and correct that prisoners should be miserable, even if no good comes to any human being thereby.

At the international prison conference in 1925 Lord Haldane said:

> Punishment may become for the criminal his own act of expiation . . . The prisoner is submitting to his punishment as a reparation made to the fellow men against whom he has sinned in the crime he has committed.

McConnel puts it even more plainly in "Criminal Responsibility and Social Constraint" where he writes:

> The law of a state should be based upon the law of God and the punishments imposed by earthly courts can therefore have no higher or different aim than that of upholding the sanctity of the divine law, and of seeing to it that when this has been violated by crime and sin the violation shall be expiated by the suffering of the guilty.

[Mr. Morris.]

But it would seem difficult to continue to advocate the theory of expiation as being a justification for capital punishment if one considers the words of the distinguished Italian criminologist Professor Ferri, who wrote:

> The question of the moral guilt of a criminal lies within the domain of religion and of moral philosophy: it does not come within the province of the state, nor of the legal machinery of the state, because in order to judge the moral guilt of a human being we need to have the omniscience of God—

And that we do not have.

> It is the function of religion to judge moral guilt—

What can be said for the theory of retribution, if the theory of expiation fails? Westermarck, in his "Theory of the Moral Sentiments", writes:

> The immediate aim of punishment has always been to give immediate expression to the righteous indignation of the society that inflicts it . . . Whether its voice inspires fear or not, whether it wakes up a sleeping conscience or not, punishment at all events tells people in plain terms what, in the opinion of society, they ought not to do.

Sir James Stephen, a famous criminal lawyer of the late Victorian period, declared:

> It is highly desirable that criminals should be hated, that the punishment inflicted upon them should be so contrived as to give expression to that hatred, and to justify it.

Both expiation and retribution seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to fail on both tests which could be the only proofs of the validity of any general purpose of punishment. They fail because they are neither practicable nor are they applicable in all cases. It is certainly true that from time to time when some crime of peculiar atrocity against some defenceless or perhaps attractive victim is thrust upon public conscience, the community is moved by detestation of the act and by something akin to hatred of the offender. But this is profoundly unsatisfactory if it is advanced as being enough to justify either the expiation or retribution theories as having any general bearing on the purposes of punishment.

Capital punishment, far from being protective of society, seems to me to be punitive in its aim. It appears also to be purgative in effect and it is certainly primitive in form. Indeed it is one of the tests of an evolving Christian civilization that it advance from the theory of capital punishment. Capital punishment seems to be recidivist. The test of an advancing civilization in one sense lies in our attitude towards reverence for life. I do not think the state at any time has the right calculatedly to take a human life by means of capital punishment. I think it is primitive and punitive, and I think it is a peril to the moral fibre of a Christian democratic society. I would, therefore, vote for the bill.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to say a few words in support of this bill. I have never witnessed a hanging, and I have no desire to see one, but the arguments presented by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) on a previous occasion and by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) are unassailable when one considers all the aspects of capital punishment and the evolution of our civilization. In this light, consideration of the abolition of the death sentence appears to be reasonable and sensible.

True there are crimes committed by individuals which demand a vengeance to heaven and for which even a death sentence would not suffice, but I honestly believe that life imprisonment in such cases would be more dreadful than the sudden end of life. Be that as it may, the time has come for enlightened nations to consider seriously the abolition of this ancient method of maximum punishment. The "pros" and "cons" will wax warmly. Nevertheless, the time will surely come, if it has not come now, when capital punishment in peacetime will be a thing of the past.

I will not take too much time in going over the reasons why we should seriously consider approving this bill. This is not the first time that eloquent arguments have been presented in support of a change from the punishment of death to a sentence for life. Several hon. members of this house have on occasions made substantial contributions toward the object of this bill. I am merely supporting those valiant warriors whose unselfish interest in this matter should be clear to all concerned. Such an advance as they suggest would not be introducing a precedent for a civilized nation, because there are dozens of countries, including several of the states to the south of us, which abolished the death penalty long ago.

In the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on capital punishment made in June, 1956 capital punishment is stated to have no unique deterrent effect which would not be accomplished by imprisonment. It was claimed that a considerable proportion of murders are committed in circumstances of sudden passion and that such murders cannot be deterred by threat of the consequences. In contrast, those who carefully plan a murder or a crime such as robbery from which murder results, were alleged to make plans deliberately to avoid detection, and not to be influenced by the threat of the death penalty. Moreover, a study of the report would indicate that a good case can be made of the fact that it is morally wrong for the state, as well as for an individual, to take human life. The death penalty is certainly at variance not only with the principles of Christianity but also with the humanitarian and social development of this day and age. In short, it does not appear to be justified as a deterrent and is retained only as a means of revenge. Then, as has already been eloquently pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter), there is always the risk of executing an innocent person.

To those who say that the abolition of capital punishment would prejudice the safety and well-being of the public, I would point out that the experience of those countries which have not had capital punishment for many years is ample proof that such a fear is unfounded.

For all these reasons, may I say, in conclusion, that I am heartily in favour of this bill.

Mr. Stuart Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the case in favour of the abolition of capital punishment has been placed before us in arguments so eloquent and persuasive that it is impossible not to be drawn to them and to feel strongly that they are based on firm moral ground. I also think it is as well—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. It being six o'clock this house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house again in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Penitentiaries—

159. Administration of the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries, including $75,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by the treasury board, $572,678.

It being six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, when the debate was interrupted at five o'clock I was reading excerpts from a warden's diary written in 1859 describing atrocities wreaked on prisoners including manacling, chaining, handcuffing and sentencing to a diet of bread and water for three days without their being given a bed for so small an offence as being in possession of tobacco.

Over the years the attitude on the part of the administrative and custodial staff of penitentiaries has been altered to a degree but the attitude has not altered sufficiently to permit us to be proud of our penal institutions and some of the things that take place in them. Atrocities still exist. Some penalties and disciplinary measures that are imposed on inmates are not in keeping with good taste and human dignity and certainly are not conducive to reformation. I believe this is because for a number of years the theory behind penal institutions was that they were based on vengeance. They were operated on the basis of the revenge of society against an individual who committed an illegal act. Unless we can alter this philosophy and adopt a more positive approach involving vocational training, guidance, and psychiatric treatment we will continue to meet little success in the reformation of individuals who have run foul of the law.

We cannot achieve much success in following a system of treatment designed to rehabilitate inmates with the present overcrowding that exists in most penal institutions with the possible exception of Stony Mountain in Manitoba as the Minister of Justice said earlier.

I have some statistical information based on a question I posed to the minister some time ago and which I was fortunate enough to have answered today. Of course the information will not appear in Hansard for the benefit of other hon. members until Hansard for today is printed. I wish to refer to that information at this time. As at December 1, 1958, our total inmate population in penitentiaries was 6,064. The total number of cells available for inmates was 5,171. This leaves a balance of 890 inmates who have not individual cells available to them.

The construction of satellite institutions as the minister described them may assist in this problem and the visit of Her Majesty will assist in lessening the prison population and those who leave the institutions will be even more happy about her coming.

In order to cope with the problem of overcrowding it has been necessary to establish in most penitentiaries dormitories or sleeping facilities where the inmate is not confined in his cell but shares accommodation with other inmates. I am not decrying the fact that this situation exists because in many circumstances I think it is a better arrangement than confining an inmate in a cell. I understand that there are 1,171 inmates in dormitories. Because of overcrowding it has been necessary to convert to sleeping accommodation a space in penitentiaries that was formerly used for other purposes including recreation, corridors or carpentry shops. This space is converted into temporary dormitories so that the inmates will have some place to sleep. I understood that this has been done at the following penitentiaries: Dorchester, St. Vincent de Paul, Kingston, Prince Albert, British Columbia and Collins Bay.

When an inmate is sentenced to hard labour it no longer means breaking rocks with a hammer and a ball and chain around his leg. It merely means that the inmate must perform some kind of work at the discretion of the officials. This would embrace carpentry, fixing mail bags for the post office department, working in a blacksmith shop or a machine shop or doing farm work.

When it is necessary to convert space that served other purposes into sleeping accommodation it adds to the leisure time of inmates through the loss of recreational facilities, carpentry shop or other things. This problem is aggravated as prison populations increase. We all know that idle hands lend themselves to mischievousness. Most inmates already harbour certain feelings of antipathy but when deprived of constructive outlets through the conversion of useful space to sleeping accommodation it will lead to an increased hostility and the inmates may become involved in infractions of prison rules that will lead to their being brought before the warden's court. They may lose some of their good time or they may be sentenced to time in the black hole, or in the hole, as it is known. I refer to solitary confinement. If the misdemeanour is bad enough an inmate may be sentenced to being paddled across the rear by one of the custodial staff. This is not conducive to reformation and in no way assists inmates to become useful members of society upon their release.

While the minister is attempting to implement the recommendations of the Fauteux commission and is awaiting the final report of the correctional planning commission these problems are becoming increasingly aggravated. The longer we delay in adopting a constructive approach the more difficult of solution will the problem become.

I wish to refer to an experiment commenced in 1957 in the state of California about which I learned when I wrote to the director of the department of correction of the state of California. I received in reply information regarding a process known as sleep therapy. This may appear to be a science fiction approach that does not work too well. The process generally is that the inmate not only reads aloud as well as silently from a prepared text but his reading is recorded on a tape recorder and played to the inmate while he is asleep. I have some information on the subject which I should be pleased to show to the minister if he does not already have it. This material was prepared under the direction of Mr. John Locke, public defender of Tulare county, California; Mr. Edgar D. Price, deputy public defender; Mr. Robert C. Lally a former recreational therapist at Porterville and Camarillo state hospital; and Reverend Glenn Peters, minister of the Ivanhoe Presbyterian church.

They helped to develop this particular system of sleep therapy and assisted in an attempt at reformation of people who are in some of their penal institutions in California. The material points out that it has worked to a pretty good degree in so far as inmates who have an alcohol problem are concerned. The result of these experiments indicates that this sort of sleep therapy treatment could also work where a person has a problem or has a desire to escape from reality by being addicted to other things such as narcotics. The prime experiment has been made on people who were drinking quite a bit and were either alcoholics or on the verge of becoming alcoholics.

The survey made of the individuals who had taken this sleep therapy treatment—and I may say that it is completely voluntary; no one is forced to participate in it in the slightest degree; it is completely voluntary on the part of the inmate—which was made in March indicated that 52 per cent of the inmates who took the treatment showed substantial benefit. The latest survey of inmates who were serving sentences of over three months, or an average of 116.3 days, indicated that 72 per cent showed a substantial benefit. This is something which I think might be given serious consideration by the department. As Mr. Locke and Mr. McGee, the director of corrections, say in their letter, extreme caution must be used in instituting such a program, and there must be a great deal of care and planning in the preparation of it; otherwise the inmates will rebel against it and it will not be of any help.

I think this is something that could be discussed, adopted and thought about. If it works to the degree that this information indicates it does in one part of the nation in so far as alcoholics are concerned, then there is every reason to believe that it will work in another part of the country at least in so far as alcoholics are concerned. If it is designed around the psychological imbalance which drives people to become addicted to something or other in order to escape reality, then there is reason to hope that it will work to a limited degree in so far as narcotics are concerned. Also, it will substantially lessen the effect of alcohol and narcotic addiction upon society and upon our crime rate.

When I mention the question of overcrowding I hope I may be permitted to wander far afield and make reference to an item which I drew to the attention of the house a few weeks ago with respect to the Penitentiary Act. I point out to the minister that although we have dormitories, some of them permanent and some temporary, in corridors, other places and so on—these dormitories have been in existence for some time—I submit to the minister that they are absolutely and completely illegal in so far as the Penitentiary Act is concerned. I am not suggesting that an inmate who is released from the penitentiary is going to take the minister to court because he was housed and had to sleep in a dormitory when the law says that he shall sleep in a cell by himself at night, but I suggest there is room for an improvement in the Penitentiary Act in this particular regard.

I am not a person who has had any experience or grounding in legal matters, but I have discussed this with a couple of lawyers and they are of the opinion that if an inmate was injured in one way or another while sleeping in a dormitory he would have recourse against the crown for damages because he was not properly protected, the law was not strictly followed in providing him with and keeping him in, as the law says, a cell by himself at night. I do not want to see the minister dragged into court and ordered to pay damages to some inmate, but the lawyers with whom I have discussed this have looked into the act, and that is the information they give me. So far such a thing has not happened. We want to prevent the minister from going to jail, but we also want to legalize and regularize that which has been going on for some period of time.

I also ask another question of the minister with respect to penitentiaries as it relates to members of parliament having visited various penitentiaries. We are the ones who enact laws which apply to the operation of our penitentiaries; we are the ones who consider the estimates, as we are considering them now, and attempting to determine whether the approach and the policy used by the minister and his departmental officials are the correct ones or not. Therefore, I made some inquiries as to how many members of parliament had been sufficiently interested in the past to visit some of our federal penal institutions. The answer which I received was to a degree disappointing because, as I said, we are the ones who will be legislating and the ones who are considering the estimates and the policy and the attitude of the department and its officials in so far as penology or penal matters are concerned. Since January 1, 1955, only 10 of the present members of parliament sitting here have undertaken to visit any of the penal institutions under our jurisdiction. This is a bit of a disgrace.

I know we do not all have the opportunity to visit every type of institution or to participate in or study every possible question which comes to the attention or comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government. None the less, I think many more of us should take the opportunity of at least visiting the penitentiaries and talking with the wardens, the custodial staff and the inmates themselves about the problems and the difficulties that confront them, and learning their ideas so that when we do come to legislate, when we do come to consider the estimates of the department, the policy and the attitude of the departmental officials, we shall be in a much sounder and better position to do so because we would have had at least made a cursory examination of some of the institutions, even though it may be a slight discussion with the officials and the individuals themselves.

In closing I should like to pose some specific questions to the minister. I understand there are far too few psychiatrists and psychologists attached to the penitentiaries but in so far as decisions of psychiatrists and psychologists are concerned has the warden of a particular penitentiary the authority to override a recommendation of a psychiatrist or psychologist? I should also like to know who is allowed to visit an inmate and with what regularity, once a month or how often? How many letters is an inmate allowed to write each month and how many is he allowed to receive? To whom may he write and from whom may he receive letters? With respect to incoming letters, especially those from relatives, if they are censored what happens to them? Are the letters kept and does the inmate get them upon his release or are they returned to the sender? Is the inmate told that somebody has written to him but he cannot have the letter because it has been censored? What about the letters which inmates write? When they are censored or deletions are made are they returned to the inmate and is he informed that there is something wrong with it and that he should rephrase it?

I should like the minister to give consideration to this suggestion which has to do with the question of remission and the loss of time off for good behaviour. I believe it would be the decent thing to do if we were to give wardens the authority to return to the inmate any time taken way from him because of misdemeanours. It may be that the inmate, especially if it is the first time he has been in a penitentiary, may not be too familiar with the rules. He may have a rebellious attitude, may infract some of the rules and regulations and thereby end up in the warden's court and lose five or ten days of his time off for good behaviour but during the rest of his period in the penitentiary he is a model prisoner. I think some compensation should be given for the fact that he conducts himself within the rules during the balance of his term and perhaps the ten days he lost originally might be returned to him toward the end of his sentence by way of compensation for good behaviour.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think I should probably start with the specific questions asked by the hon. member. First, he asked me with regard to the decisions of psychiatrists and whether the warden has the authority to override those decisions. Of course, in so far as the decision of the psychiatrist may be a decision or recommendation as to the medical, physical or mental condition of an inmate, the warden has in that sense no authority to override it because he cannot, if the psychiatrist finds a man to be ill, say that he is not ill. But the warden is the chief executive officer of the penitentiary and the warden has and must have final authority to determine what will be done with respect to an inmate. Therefore the warden has, of course, authority in the strict technical sense to reject or to refuse to act upon a recommendation, whether it be from a psychiatrist or from any other person, with respect to an inmate in the prison of which the warden is the chief executive officer. But I can assure the hon. member that if there were a case where a responsible prison official such as a psychiatrist made a specific recommendation which the warden felt he could not or should not carry out there would very speedily be a reference to the commissioner and the matter would be resolved at the headquarters level.

With respect to the question as to who is allowed to visit penitentiaries. Any immediate relatives are allowed to visit, without restriction or the necessity of obtaining any special clearance, within the visiting hours laid down. With respect to general visitors, those who are not related to the inmate, the regulation provides that they have to get the permission of the commissioner before they can go into the institution. What I have just said does not apply, of course, to persons such as social workers, members of the John Howard society and so on who have a general clearance in advance for the purpose of visiting penitentiaries. Persons other than relatives and accredited social workers, newspaper reporters, indeed members of parliament and so on who want to visit these institutions, require to obtain clearance from the commissioner. I am wrong there. Members of parliament have the right under the act without the necessity of clearance from the commissioner.

Mr. Howard: I was going to say that when I was first elected I wrote and asked for permission and the minister wrote and told me I did not need it.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend's memory is better than mine. With respect to the number of letters that an inmate may write and receive, he is allowed to write four letters a month and special letters if the occasion warrants it. There is no restriction upon the number of letters he may receive from immediate relatives who are set out in the categories defined in the regulations. With regard to a letter which an inmate has written and which is not allowed to be sent out under the regulations, it is returned to the inmate and he is told the reason why the letter cannot be dispatched. If it is a matter that can be dealt with by re-writing he may rewrite the letter and send it out.

With regard to incoming letters which are not allowed to be delivered to the inmate because they contain something which under the regulations makes the letter inadmissible, such letters are sent back to the person writing them with an explanation of why, under the regulations, they are not allowed to be delivered to the inmate.

With respect to the general comments of the hon. member for Skeena, I have made no secret of the fact that we do have this overcrowding situation in our institutions across Canada. We are moving to meet the situation. I would point out that under the estimates this year the construction vote is up $1,682,000 over last year and there is a further $572,000 in the supplementaries for construction, making a total increase of some $2 million odd over last year.

The Joyceville institution, some eleven miles from Kingston, is expected to be completed and ready for occupation this fall. It will go a very long way toward relieving the overcrowding situation at Kingston and also at Collins Bay.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is there a second Collins Bay as well as Kingston penitentiary?

Mr. Fulton: There is just Kingston, Collins Bay and the women's prison at Kingston.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But the new place, Joyceville, is only for Kingston, is it not, only for the penitentiary?

Mr. Fulton: It will relieve it to this extent, that Joyceville will be what is described as a medium security institution. It will be able to take inmates from Kingston and by relieving the overcrowding at Kingston of prisoners of that type, will also relieve the pressure on Collins Bay.

Last year we commenced the construction of a new institution similar to Joyceville near St. Vincent de Paul. Contracts have been let for a little over $3 million, and the construction of this new institution we hope will be completed by the summer of 1960.

Then, as the hon. member himself has pointed out, there is a program of dormitory construction and the construction of temporary accommodation at other institutions, notably Prince Albert. In addition there are the satellite institutions at William Head and Valleyfield and there is the new institution to be commenced at Springhill. In this way, we are moving to take care of the immediate problem of overcrowding. When we get the complete report of the correctional planning committee, then of course we will be able to work out a complete program for the construction of new institutions elsewhere in Canada which will fit into the over-all penitentiary program.

One of the main problems, of course, is the location and design of a new institution in western Canada, and that is something upon which I am awaiting specific recommendations from the committee. My hon. friend did point out that under the Penitentiaries Act each inmate is entitled to a cell. I am concerned about that situation. All I can say, however, is that I am told that long before overcrowding became as acute as it is now, and as it has been for the last two or three years, inmates were confined two to a cell and dormitories were designed and authorized under the penitentiaries program. There are situations in which dormitories are more suitable than this single cell principle. I might say that dormitories are desired by the majority of inmates who do not like the feeling of being locked into a narrow cell at night.

I cannot tell my friend why the act has not been amended previously to take care of this situation. I only ask him to show some forbearance and not to lay charges because we expect, after we get the recommendations of the committee, we will have some very substantial revisions of the Penitentiaries Act to make. This is one of the matters which will certainly be taken care of at that time.

Mr. Howard: May I ask the minister another question because I do not believe he quite understood my point. I am not complaining about the use of dormitories, I am just suggesing it is illegal. I inquired about visiting. How often and with what regularity can an inmate receive visitors?

Mr. Fulton: An inmate is allowed one visit per month and up to three visitors at one time.

Mr. Howard: Another question which I posed is, if a letter is written to an inmate which cannot be forwarded to him because of its contents, it is returned then to the sender, and is the inmate advised that a certain person wrote to him but he could not receive the letter?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I am informed that the inmate is advised that the letter has been sent back to the sender.

Mr. Howard: May I make one or two comments about that? First, in so far as the letter being returned to the writer is concerned and the inmate being advised that he had received the letter, I may say that the last time I had the opportunity of visiting Kingston penitentiary I spoke to two inmates who claimed that this was not so. They said they had had relatives write to them and they discovered this quite some time after the letter had been written. The letter had been censored or had not been forwarded by whoever is responsible for not allowing letters to come in. The letter had been returned to the sender but the inmate had not been advised.

Something of that nature is quite upsetting to an inmate, especially if the letter happens to be from his wife or his parents or some very close relative. It is upsetting if the inmate does not hear from a relative for a month or something of that nature. I think some more strict application of this notification to the inmate that the letter has not been given to him because of its contents should be followed out.

I should like to inquire incidentally with respect to who the censors are, if that is what they are called, of this correspondence between inmates and persons outside. What qualifications do they have? Is there any guidance given to them? Is that their sole duty, the handling of mail in and out, or do they have something else to do?

In so far as visits are concerned, especially from relatives, I think it is rather unfortunate that this is confined to one a month. That may be sufficient in many cases. I am sure there are inmates who have no visitors or, perhaps, over a period of a year may have one or two visits because their families live some distance from the penitentiary. However, in other cases, I am sure this is not so. If an inmate, for the sake of argument had his home and his family in Kingston and was sentenced to Kingston penitentiary, I am sure you could expect the relatives would want to visit him. He would normally want to see them more than once a month. I think this provision should be relaxed.

In so far as the four letters a month are concerned, I hardly think that is sufficient. This may be because of my personal attitude toward writing, but I hardly think four letters would be sufficient in all cases. Inmates should not have to make a special plea to the warden to write a special letter. I believe you could extend the four letters a month to something greatly in excess of that. If a prisoner has a wife or has parents, for instance, it means he can write to them alternately, so that he would write to his wife twice a month and to his parents twice a month. If he has children, then the condition worsens. I think four letters a month for an inmate is far too strict a provision. There are many inmates who would not take advantage of the privilege of writing four letters a month, but for those inmates who would like to write more often I am sure it would be most helpful if we could expand the provision and allow the inmate to write more than four letters a month if he so desires. In so far as Joyceville is concerned, I understood the minister to say that this was to be a medium security prison.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Howard: I understand also that it is closer to a maximum security prison, from the standpoint of the construction of it, from the walls around it and so on. I have not seen it in its present state but when I was able to visit Joyceville previously it was purely a sort of hut arrangement with temporary dormitory cells and so on and was a medium security type of institution. But by people who have visited it since then—and this is only what someone else has told me; I do not know from my own knowledge from looking at it—I have been told that it more closely approximates the penitentiary at Kingston itself rather than something less secure or less strict than that. Perhaps the minister could indicate, in so far as Joyceville is concerned, whether the entire prison—the approaches from the cell blocks or the dormitories into the workshops and so on—is all enclosed in one building and whether the courtyard is enclosed on all sides by walls and/or buildings and whether there are gun turrets, if that is what you call them, and whether there are guards in the turrets with guns or whether in that regard there is much difference between, say Kingston penitentiary and Joyceville. If there is not, and if the person who spoke to me about this matter is correct, then it would appear to me to be a misnomer to call Joyceville a medium security prison. It appears to be not anywhere near

it. If we have been spending $3½ million or $4 million as the minister said on a medium security prison and this is what it is, then it is a complete waste of money and we have nothing more than a reproduction of Kingston penitentiary itself, only modernly constructed and of recent date.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to the letters of inmates of Kingston penitentiary to which my hon. friend refers, I have checked further and I am advised that although the act authorizes the warden to retain, destroy or otherwise deal with an inadmissible letter as he may see fit, the practice is to return the letter to the sender with an explanation why it is inadmissible and so to inform the intended recipient. My advisers inform me that this is the practice and if there has been any departure from that practice we should be glad to be supplied with the names and particulars in so far as the hon. member has them available so that we may investigate.

Mr. Howard: This is only what has been told to me by inmates with whom I have spoken. They may not have told me the full facts.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to the official who is authorized to examine the mail, he is known as a censor clerk and his sole duty consists of supervising the arrangements for visits, supervising visits and censoring the mail, incoming and outgoing. If there is any case in which there is any doubt as to whether a letter is properly sent out or properly to be delivered to an inmate, the clerk of course can refer the matter to the warden.

With respect to the problem of the number of visits that an inmate is allowed to receive, I think the hon. member has probably stated correctly that consideration should be given to relaxing that restriction of one visit a month. However, I am informed that the governing factor in this situation is the accommodation available. When you take an institution such as St. Vincent de Paul, which I regret to say now has something over 1,300 inmates and is close to Montreal from which the majority of the inmates come, I think my hon. friend will see that if we were to admit much more than one visitor per month we would be simply unable to provide accommodation for visitors and inmates to carry on these visits. But we have been working, I am informed, on the improvement of the accommodation available for the holding of visits. As we proceed with our construction program generally and relieve the overcrowding situation, with the special attention that is being paid to rooms available for visiting, we hope then to be able to take another look at this limitation of one per month.

With regard to Joyceville I think it may be correctly described as a medium security institution and not just another Kingston penitentiary as has been suggested. With respect to the building itself, it is true that all normal activities will be carried on within the ordinary walls of the building. But there is no prison wall around Joyceville. I want to emphasize the fact that there is no provision for gun turrets and that no guards will be stationed with guns at any point in Joyceville as in the big old fashioned type of institution. Furthermore, the construction program calls for the installation of exercise ground or grounds outside the prison wall and not enclosed by a wall. The Joyceville compound will not in itself be enclosed by a prison wall as is the case with the old fashioned types of institutions which are described as maximum security. There will merely be a fence. There will also be a farm attached to Joyceville which will similarly be surrounded by a fence and not by a wall. There will be many occasions on which inmates will be outside the walls and not separated by anything other than ordinary fences from the outside. It is not a minimum security institution by any means but it is a very considerable improvement on Kingston.

Mr. Howard: I have one other thought on this matter, if I may be allowed to express it. Will the institution at Springhill be a maximum security institution or a minimum security institution?

Mr. Fulton: That institution will certainly be starting as a minimum security institution and I hope we can keep it as a minimum security institution.

Mr. Howard: What about the proposed penitentiary in western Canada or is that too far in the future to determine what degree of security will surround that one?

Mr. Fulton: About as far as I can go in that matter is to say that we do not think it will be anything more than a medium security institution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about the satellite institution at William Head? Is that the old type? I do not know whether or not I am correct in calling it a satellite institution. Is that the old immigration building?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is correct. It is the old quarantine station owned and operated formerly by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That means that the government of British Columbia has not accepted the proposal that was made some time ago about the use of that building.

Mr. Fulton: All I know is that the British Columbia government has not taken it over. I was not aware of the details of the offer to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Winch: If an inmate breaks the rules of the institution he is subject to discipline and that is done by the warden. There are many methods of discipline such as taking away good behaviour time, taking away of privileges such as that of writing, tobacco, radio and all sorts of things. There is also the power to send a prisoner into solitary confinement. It is about that matter that I would like to have a few words to say. On April 14 I asked the minister a question as follows:

> Are there any federal penitentiaries where dissociation cells (solitary) are of such a nature that in addition to the barred door, there is an additional steel door cutting out all sight and voice to the inmate.

The minister, in answering that question, said this:

> Yes, Dorchester, Kingston and Manitoba penitentiaries.

In other words, there are three penitentiaries in Canada which, in addition to the steel rod doors, there is also a solid metal door. I have visited some of these solitary cells and I want to say that I think they are an absolute disgrace. It is absolute torture to put a man into these small-sized closets with no window through which he can see out—not only a floor, a ceiling and three blank walls, but a steel door in front of him by means of which he is shut off during the whole of the time he is in solitary—and he may be three weeks or even months for 23½ hours a day. He can see nobody, hear nobody and talk to nobody. I admit there are occasions when solitary confinement may be required, but I say it is medieval torture to keep a man cooped up the way men are kept in these prisons. Moreover, if a man is in the least prone to claustrophobia it does not take much imagination to visualize what could happen to his sanity. I sincerely hope the minister is going to have a change made and have these solid metal doors removed, or at least left open.

Mr. Fulton: There are, I am happy to say, several inaccuracies in what the hon. gentleman has said. I am sure the inaccuracies are only inadvertent. Visits and correspondence are not automatically forfeit when an inmate is sentenced to solitary confinement.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Winch: I did not say they were automatically forfeit; I said they could be taken away.

Mr. Fulton: But they can be forfeited only, I understand, because of abuse of the visiting or mail privileges, and this would be a rare case.

With respect to the question of the solid door, I think it should be emphasized, first of all, that there are only three institutions where there are these solid doors. But it is not customary for these doors to be closed.

Mr. Winch: Every time I have been there they have been closed.

Mr. Fulton: That might be due to one of two factors. Either there was nobody in solitary confinement at the time, in which case it would not matter or, possibly, the hon. member was on the wrong side of the door. But I am informed that it is not customary for these doors to be closed and that they are only closed temporarily in the event that a prisoner is creating a disturbance, in which case it is desirable to close the door to prevent the disturbance from upsetting the rest of the institution. As soon as the disturbance has ceased, the door is opened, and in the ordinary course of events the only door which is kept closed is the barred steel door, not the solid door. I do not deny that there may be occasions when this door is closed, but the occasions are those I have described.

Mr. Herridge: I have been in this house for 14 years and I realize that there are many improvements to be made in our penal system and in our penal institutions. I have got this information from people who are very interested in penal institutions, and in their opinion there has been a great improvement since the present commissioner took office.

Strangely enough, I have a relative who is one of the senior penal psychologists of Great Britain, Dr. Trevor Gibbons, who had an opportunity to meet the commissioner when he was attending a meeting in New York in connection with the United States penal institutions, and he told me he was very impressed with the plans which the commissioner had in mind, and with his whole approach to the operation of penal institutions in this country. I am of the opinion that many of the faults that have to be corrected are caused by the lack of sufficient space, the lack of suitable institutions and, in the past, the lack of funds, and we certainly hope that these will be provided in the future.

I have reason to ask the minister a question or two and while I know that under provocation he can become acidulous, he is at heart a kind hearted man. A gentleman who is very interested in this question of the rehabilitation of prisoners has written to me expressing concern about the possibility that the present government may cut out all sentences between the length of six months and one year, and he has asked me to inquire what is intended in this respect; what would be the line of demarcation between the sentences of men and women sent to prison and those sent to jail.

Mr. Fulton: This was discussed briefly this afternoon. Before I enter upon that subject, however, perhaps I should express my appreciation of the remarks which the hon. member has made with respect to the commissioner, to whose services I should like to pay my tribute. I should remind the committee that we amended the Penitentiary Act last year to permit of the extension of the term of the present commissioner. At this time, particularly when we are embarking upon this extensive program of reform and modernization, we consider it essential that we should retain his services as long as we are able to have the benefit of the experience of this highly qualified and dedicated officer.

With respect to the question of the difference between the six months and one year terms, I will just be brief, because, as I say, we discussed this this afternoon. The hon. member will recollect that the federal government agreed to assume responsibility for all persons sentenced to terms of more than six months. This was agreed to in principle, and the provinces agreed to it in principle at the conference which was held last October. It is, however, our view that as we are increasingly placing the emphasis in our institutions upon reform and rehabilitation programs it would not be sensible to commit to these institutions prisoners who are given sentences of only six months, or seven or eight months. The reason is that when one takes into account the automatic remission of sentence and parole considerations which are applicable to reduce the length of a sentence at one end, and when one takes into account the length of time consumed by the classification and admission process at the other end, it works out that of a sentence of even 12 months to only about nine months are actually served in the institution, and that of these nine months as much as six weeks may be taken up by the classification and admission procedures. This means there would be only some seven and a half months available for the man to undergo rehabilitation and reform training, and it is not possible to do a great deal of good, in most cases, in that period.

It was therefore our view that at least the federal statutes should be amended so that no sentences might be imposed between six months and one year, and magistrates and judges would be asked to consider in their sentencing practices that if only a short sentence is required by way of what one might call a mild retributive punishment a sentence of six months or less would probably be adequate, coupled with, or as an alternative to, a fine, but if that what a man needs is a reform and training program leading to his rehabilitation a sentence of less than 12 months would scarcely permit such a program to be started before the man was due for release, and that therefore it is not sensible to send a man to a federal institution for a period of less than 12 months. That is the thought behind it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the minister if I caused him to repeat something he said this afternoon but I was called out and I promised this gentleman to raise the point. I want to read from this letter:

> I asked one official if the above proposal was made to suit the crime or the criminal. He replied neither; it is to suit administration!

Mr. Fulton: Far from it.

Mr. Herridge: I continue:

> You can imagine the effect of a year's sentence on an inmate under this scheme. He would always be hostile. Because he would believe that he should be doing six months instead of a year. Though he would only do a year in prison the inmate would return to the community as bitter as many men doing a much longer sentence.
> From the point of view of those of us who are doing correctional work this type of sentence simply does not make sense. We are able to do a lot for the men who are doing short sentences and at present our correctional program in the gaol at Prince Albert is second to none in Canada. This is not blowing our own horn, but a simple fact. But the services we are now giving to men doing up to two years will be lost under the new act. These services include group work, education, individual counselling, forestry camp projects, agricultural training, rural repair shop training, psychiatric aid, carpentry training, recreational programs, et cetera, et cetera. All of these things have been developed from scratch during the past few years.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I can assure my hon. friend that the writer of that letter is under a very definite misapprehension as to how the act will be amended if this proposal is put into effect because these services will not be lost to men who are serving two years or more but will be available to all those who are sentenced to serve twelve months or more because all these people will go into federal institutions and therefore a training program will be available.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with what the hon. member for Kootenay West said about the present commissioner. In view of what was said last night by the hon. member for Parkdale with which at this moment I am not going to quarrel, I think it should not be forgotten that we have had a good commissioner over these years and that the progress that has been made over these years is because of what was done by the late Ernest Lapointe, before the last war—and which was unhappily interrupted by the war—which was continued by Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Garson, something which I think we are all glad the present minister is also continuing.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask one or two succinct questions on what might be termed the economic aspects of capital punishment. Perhaps it might be more convenient to the minister if I were to state my questions—

Mr. Fulton: I do not think capital punishment has anything to do with the item under consideration, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Drysdale: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, we are discussing item 159. When the hon. member for Skeena spoke he seemed to drift considerably with the tides and wind into what I took to be item 160, and the questions I have are relevant to 160. There has been a considerable amount of discussion about penitentiaries and the operation of penitentiaries, et cetera.

Mr. Fulton: But, Mr. Chairman, executions are not carried out in penitentiaries. I do not think this vote has anything to do with capital punishment at all.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the questions and then you could rule as to whether or not they are relevant?

Mr. Fulton: Not if they relate to capital punishment, I submit Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has sought to intervene is a new member of this house and we all know him as a devoted member. I think he at least ought to be allowed to state his questions so that you may rule on them without his being suppressed by the minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, I feel I am really on the wrong track if I am being assisted by the hon. member for Essex East, but in spite of that assistance I would like to put my questions and then have you rule as to whether or not they are relevant to this item.

I wanted first of all to get some factual information on the average cost of a hanging and as to whether that is a purely federal or provincial matter?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am unable to answer the question because as I say capital punishment is not carried out in federal penitentiaries. I am neither able to answer the question nor is it relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. Drysdale: As a supplementary question, Mr. Minister, may I ask if any consideration is being given—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I suggest to you—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I believe that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has been answered by the Minister of Justice who says this matter does not come under his jurisdiction and, as it does not, therefore it is not relevant to the item before us.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to see that the minister is not a hangman. Under this item I should like to pursue what I dealt with in my earlier remarks under item 150. Item 159 covers grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies. The amount this year is $75,000 compared with $60,000 last year. My question is this. Are these the same societies previously mentioned by the minister under item 150?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, we are proposing to pay this year $75,000 to recognized prisoners' aid societies. The amount this year last year. There is an increase under this item of $15,000 and an increase under the departmental item which we discussed earlier of $10,000 representing a total increase of $25,000. The organizations to which these grants are paid under the penitentiaries vote are as follows: The John Howard Society of British Columbia, the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island, the John Howard Society of Alberta, the John Howard Society of Saskatchewan, the John Howard Society and Elizabeth Fry Society of Manitoba, the John Howard Society of Ontario, La Société d'Orientation et de Réhabilitation de Montréal, Le Service de Réadaptation Sociale de Québec, the Catholic Rehabilitation Service of Montreal, the John Howard Society of New Brunswick, the John Howard Society of Nova Scotia, the John Howard Society of St. John's, Newfoundland, the Salvation Army Prison Aid Service, the Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston and the John Howard Society of Quebec.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly not going to ask the minister for his views on capital punishment but there is one question I should like to ask. It is my understanding that the government of Saskatchewan has informed the minister that in the future it will not permit capital punishment to be exercised in provincial institutions there. If that is correct, what is the decision of the minister concerning the use of penitentiaries as such? Is Saskatchewan to be a province where you can feel pretty safe concerning the commutation of sentences?

Mr. Fulton: I am really unable to answer that question because the case has not arisen and, as I suggested already, the question of capital punishment has no relevancy to the item on penitentiaries we are now discussing.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, when the minister answered my earlier remarks I failed to hear him deal with one question I asked. At the present time prisoners are allowed to write four letters a month to relatives. Would the minister give consideration to permitting them to write more?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I certainly could undertake to review that question. We would have to see what the implications might be with respect to staff. I can assure my hon. friend that we have a number of staff problems at the moment and I say that without trying to minimize the human relationship of the problem he has referred to. All I can undertake to do is to have a look at it without at this time being able to make a firm commitment about what we could do.

Mr. Howard: I do not think this point arose in discussion between the minister and myself but it is my understanding that the length of visits of family or friends to inmates is restricted to one hour.

Mr. Fulton: That is the maximum period that may be allowed.

Mr. Howard: What are the total number of hours a day during which visiting is permitted?

Mr. Fulton: Well, the time during which the prison is open in general is from 9.00 a.m. to 4.00 p.m.

Mr. Howard: That would be—

Mr. Fulton: Seven hours.

Mr. Howard: Seven hours a day, six days a week?

Mr. Fulton: Five days a week.

Mr. Howard: Thirty-five hours a week; therefore, he could have a maximum of 35 visits a week?

Mr. Fulton: That would depend entirely on the size of the visiting rooms. The visiting rooms, as I am sure my hon. friend knows from his own visits and inspections of the penitentiaries, accommodate—the visiting rooms, I am told, accommodate from 10 to 20 visits simultaneously, each room being partitioned.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I should have used the words "if only one person visited in a particular area". On a very rough guess, if there is a minimum of 10 visits a day, then you could allow 350 visits a week and I am sure that not all inmates undertake to have visits once a month. I am sure that many of them may have only one or two visits a year, depending on how far away the person's family is from the site of the penitentiary. But it would appear that the argument for not relaxing the number of visits per month has not too much of a base, if this is the case. For instance, I take the case of Kingston itself. Unless you had the visiting area full of its maximum number of inmates for every hour if all of the visits were allowed, then you would have a problem of not being able to relax or extend the visits. I am sure that is not the case. For instance, in Kingston there are many times when the visiting room is not full. I am sure there may be times when no one is visiting any of the inmates at all. The minister nods his head. I take that to mean that what I am saying is substantially correct.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but our difficulty is that we have to take account of the peak period. For instance, most visitors come in the afternoon between two and four. If we could insist humanely that visits be spread equally over all the day, then we could probably physically accommodate more than one visit a month; but we cannot compel or regiment the times at which relatives wish to visit an inmate. We therefore have to take account of the fact that there will be great peak periods. Unless we restrict the number of visits, you will find that some inmates cannot receive even as many as one visit a month because of the fact that visitors tend to come at peak times.

Mr. Howard: But you do restrict and regiment the number of times they can come during the month, and the hours of the day during which they can come and the length of time during which the visitor can remain on the premises? You restrict and regiment the facilities which exist in so far as the visit is concerned. I understand there must be certain restrictions and certain requirements with respect to the visitors because of the fear that some weapon may be passed to the inmate. We do know there is a very close watch kept on the physical contact between the inmate and his wife, or vice versa.

Mr. Fulton: We do not write to a proposed visitor or prospective visitor and say you may come only between, let us say, nine and ten in the morning on such and such a day. We do endeavour so far as possible to allow the visits to take place when the visitors wish to come. They will be in touch with the institution and with the inmates and will do their best to arrange a time which is convenient to them, and we try to accommodate them at that time. We find that in order to accommodate visitors we have to take account of the fact that there are peak periods. We have not yet been able to devise a system of more than one visit a month, but when our accommodation problem is lessened we shall be able to have another look at that.

Mr. Howard: I was not suggesting that you write to the prospective visitor and say, "You have to be here at two o'clock" or anything of that nature, but you do restrict the period of time within the day during which a visit can take place, and that is between nine and four o'clock. That is the restriction I was talking about. What I was leading up to was this. Even though your peak periods may be in the afternoon and your slack periods may be in the morning, I think you could make some arrangement and allow this even if it is on a special basis. There will be special problems with respect to visiting facilities, and the inmate overcrowding problem is such that you are not able to say: "We will allow two visits a month". You could not cope with that. I am sure you could, even under those crowded conditions, make special arrangements in particular cases between the inmate and his relative so that the relative who wanted to come to visit could do so. You could then arrange a satisfactory time which might be in the morning in so far as the extra visit is concerned. I am quite sure that could be done without too much difficulty, and you would not then, as you say, be entering into the field of regimenting visitors and say that they have to come at a certain hour. You could work it out in a mutually satisfactory way so far as a visit beyond the normal one visit per month is concerned. I hope that some arrangement along these lines can be made for inmates who desire to have or are able to have more than one visitor per month.

I would also suggest and also think that the number of letters that an inmate is permitted to write to relatives may be extended to people who may be close friends but are not relatives. That could be given consideration also. The question of more relaxed circumstances as between the relationship of the visitor and the person he is visiting could be looked into and some arrangements made along that line similar to that which exists in the institution at Chino, California, where there is a very relaxed, informal, almost picnic arrangement between the inmate and his wife and children who come to visit him. I am quite sure if we could move into the direction of relaxing the rigidity of restrictions and the rules that apply to physical contact between the inmate and the person who came to visit him, along with additional letters, you might assist somewhat in hastening the rehabilitating and reforming process of the inmate and make him feel perhaps a little more accepted and less fit and less upset by his incarceration and all the things that surround him. I hope the minister will be able to move in this direction as quickly as possible and allow more letters and more relaxed conditions in so far as visits are concerned. So far as is humanely possible, he should relax the limit of one visit per month for one hour.

Mr. Fulton: Yes; I realize to some extent that we perhaps have been talking at cross purposes, because I have been discussing the rule of general application. Because of the accommodation problems and the physical condition of the majority of the buildings which we have, I am bound to think of institutions such as Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul. My hon. friend says he hopes we will move in this direction. I should like him to go and look at the William Head and Valleyfield institutions. These are new institutions. If he does that he will see that exactly what he has been talking is being followed in these institutions. The conditions and atmosphere there are much more relaxed, with minimum security and the men have relatively much more freedom to move about as they will. These, as I point out, are experimental stations. This is the type of new institution toward which we want to move and which it is our intention to bring about. In what I have been saying previously I have been thinking of the present circumstances under which we have to operate in the majority of our institutions.

Mr. Drysdale: I regret intruding into this conversation. I wonder whether I can ask the minister what is the average cost to maintain a prisoner for one year in federal penal institutions?

Mr. Fulton: The average cost for everything—I am having some arithmetic done—including salaries of staff was $5.66 a day. I am having some arithmetic done to arrive at the annual figure.

Mr. Drysdale: While the minister is working on his arithmetic—

Mr. Fulton: It appears to be $2,064.42 according to the latest figure we have.

Mr. Drysdale: When there is commutation of a sentence of hanging and it is changed to life imprisonment, what would the average period of time be in years before the prisoner would be paroled?

Mr. Fulton: My answer has to be that there is no average period. It would depend entirely on each case and the reports that were made by the prison authorities, and from now on it will depend on the decision made by the national parole board based on their review of the case.

Mr. Drysdale: Could the minister perhaps indicate the range, for example, the smallest number of years and the maximum number of years? I am trying to get a rough indication. I do not want to try to pin the minister down but simply to get a rough idea.

Mr. Fulton: I regret that the penitentiaries branch does not have these statistics. The remission service or the new parole board, which items have been passed, would have had these figures.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to ask one more question. I went at the matter backwards and I seem to be having more success this way. With respect to the penitentiaries already in existence, is any consideration being given to establishing a central execution chamber using either gas or electricity?

Mr. Fulton: I have already explained and am sorry to have to repeat that it is not part of the authority or responsibility of the federal penitentiaries system to carry out executions and I am unable to answer that question.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has already ruled on that matter.

Mr. Regnier: I should like to ask the minister if any consideration has ever been given to trying to make prisoners self-supporting?

Mr. Fulton: To what?

Mr. Regnier: To make prisoners self-supporting so they can earn their keep in the same way as those who live outside prison walls.

Mr. Fulton: Prisoners who work in the prisons are paid a daily amount for their work but I will not pretend for a moment that it actually enables them to be self-supporting. I might point out to the committee that one of the reforms made this year which the penitentiaries branch has been quite anxious to see brought about is incorporated in the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which were given third reading today whereby an inmate who was entitled to unemployment insurance benefits at the time of his commital to penitentiary no longer automatically forfeits those benefits by virtue of time spent in prison. Therefore, in a number of cases, and we hope an increasingly large number, a discharged inmate will be entitled to receive unemployment insurance benefits until such time as he becomes re-established in employment. We feel that will be a forward step in assisting released or paroled inmates to re-establish themselves in civil life.

Mr. Weichel: I should like to ask the minister how many penitentiaries there are under his jurisdiction?

Mr. Fulton: We are just trying to figure out the ones under construction. Those now in operation number nine and two satellites. There are two under construction.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister tell me how many prisoners are now in penitentiaries whose capital sentences have been commuted in the last two years?

Mr. Fulton: If the question had been raised under the remission service item I could have given the answer straight away but we do not have it here in that form for the last two years. It will be necessary to find out how many cases have been commuted in the last two years and then I could answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one question I should like to ask. Did the figure which the minister gave for board and lodging include clothing and depreciation and overhead so far as the buildings are concerned?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed it includes all clothing but no depreciation.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does include the salaries of the staff?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Howard: I should like to express one thought with respect to the general import of the question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I hope he was not trying to place a dollar value on human lives in the question he asked.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, surely this is outrageously out of order. If the hon. member was not allowed to ask his question it is an outrage for some other hon. member to be allowed to get up and make comments on the question he was not allowed to ask.

Mr. Howard: My friend is probably just becoming impatient for one of the following items to be reached.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just like to see a little justice around here.

Mr. Howard: My friend, coming from the province he does and talking about justice—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howard: I hope the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond was not trying to establish that we should place a dollar value on human lives and determine whether it is cheaper—

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member is making reference to capital punishment.

Mr. Howard: No, I am not making reference to capital punishment.

Mr. Fulton: The earlier observation was with reference to capital punishment and I submit that the discussion is out of order.

Mr. Howard: One question asked related to the cost of keeping an inmate in a penitentiary and how long he might stay there if his sentence had been commuted to life imprisonment. I assume the follow-up is to connect that with what might have happened to the person who is an inmate. I regret that this question was not raised under another item so that we could have cleared it up completely. Perhaps it is a case of misunderstanding on my part but it did raise that question in my mind. I am not trying to say that is what the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond meant or implied or said but it did raise that question in my mind. I regret that the hon. member is not here now to clear up that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure he did not mean that.

Item agreed to.

160. Operation and maintenance of penitentiaries, including supplies and services relating thereto; administration, operation, repair and upkeep of buildings, works and equipment; maintenance, discharge and transfer of inmates; compensation to discharged inmates permanently disabled while in penitentiaries, $12,705,059.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister what the reason is for the very marked reduction as shown in the details in the cost of operation and maintenance in the province of Newfoundland. Is it that there are so many fewer prisoners?

Mr. Fulton: I am happy to be able to advise my hon. friend that the number of prisoners maintained in Newfoundland has gone down from over 40 to 29.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is done with female prisoners in Newfoundland? Are there any?

Mr. Fulton: There are none at the present time under our jurisdiction with sentences of two years or more, and I do not know whether there are any under provincial responsibility.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Pickersgill: In the rather unusual circumstances in which there would be a female prisoner sentenced to two years or more, what would happen? I think that is largely a hypothetical question.

Mr. Fulton: I understand that there are some accommodations under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities in Newfoundland for female prisoners and under the arrangement we have with the government of Newfoundland female prisoners would stay in Newfoundland and be looked after by the provincial authorities to whom we would pay compensation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say what these arrangements are and where that place is because at one stage I had something to do with some negotiations with respect to getting a building for women prisoners? At that time, on the rare occasion when a woman was sentenced in Newfoundland, they had no place in which to confine her and they just let her go. The provincial authorities were trying to find some place for women prisoners. I was genuinely interested in finding out whether anything had happened.

Mr. Fulton: I have not had any indications from or discussions with the Newfoundland authorities on that question. I do not recall that the attorney general raised it when we had our conference last October. We had a very general discussion regarding the arrangements in effect between us, but it was my understanding that Newfoundland was quite satisfied with the present arrangements. I am informed that they have some arrangement in the prison at St. John's for accommodating women prisoners. I am not aware that they are not satisfied, and I have had no complaints.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are no federal women prisoners in Newfoundland at all, then?

Mr. Fulton: None at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are all of those male prisoners who were sentenced to over two years kept in the penitentiary in Newfoundland?

Mr. Fulton: I understand they are either in the prison at St. John's or the camp at Salmonier.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say what amount is paid to the province for the custody of each of these prisoners?

Mr. Fulton: It is $5.60 per day; that is the price at which other prisoners are maintained. I understand it is six cents below the price paid—

Mr. Pickersgill: Six cents below?

Mr. Fulton: It is six cents below the price paid elsewhere.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing is paid for rent because the minister has just told us—

Mr. Fulton: That is just the cost.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, these people are being kept by the province of Newfoundland rent free.

Mr. Fulton: I don't know what my hon. friend means by rent free. It includes all the cost of what would otherwise be described as board, lodging, clothing, staff salaries, and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister did not understand the purport of my earlier question. I asked him if that item that was mentioned included any allowance for overhead or building depreciation, and he said no. Now, he has just told us it costs $5.60—

Mr. Fulton: That is heat and so on; that would be a rent factor.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not talking about heat and light; I do not regard them as rent. It costs $5.66 a day per head, and actually Newfoundland is only paid $5.60. The $5.66 includes no amount for accommodation and, as I said, therefore it would appear that these prisoners are being kept by the government of Newfoundland rent free.

Mr. Fulton: This rate has been revised from time to time, and this is the arrangement which has been in effect for many years. I am sorry it has taken my hon. friend this long to find out about it. I am surprised that he should only become exercised about it after there has been a change of government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not in the least exercised about it.

Mr. Fulton: You seem to be quite concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: I imagine before the inflation, for which the hon. gentleman's colleague is responsible, that cost on the mainland was probably about $5.25 per day in which circumstance the $5.60 would probably have included some little allowance for rental.

There was one other point about which I wanted to ask the minister. Is there a long term agreement with the government of Newfoundland or what is the nature of the agreement?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed it is a written agreement, approved by order in council here and in Newfoundland, and it has effect until some other arrangement is agreed upon by the two governments.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the government any thought of bringing this arrangement to an end and looking after prisoners in the way in which they are looked after in all the other provinces?

Mr. Fulton: We will be looking into that when we get the over-all report from the correctional planning committee, with recommendations for a long term building program for federal penal institutions in Canada. There is no thought of a revision at the present time, and we are not being pressed in that direction at all by the government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Creaghan: I have a couple of questions for the minister on this item. In recent months I have noticed quite a lot of advertisements for instructors for the penal staff, particularly at the Dorchester institution. I wonder if the minister could indicate to the committee if this staff will, in any way, be associated with training new men for the proposed institution at Springhill and, secondly, if the commissioner and the minister will give the senior employees at Dorchester, those who have given long years of service to his department, at least a fair opportunity of getting some of the senior positions in the new institution?

Another point I should like to mention concerns housing for those presently employed at Dorchester.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could answer these two questions asked so far, because the answer to both questions is yes.

Mr. Creaghan: That more or less takes the questions out of my mind, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for his interest in the matter. I hope that if he comes to Dorchester in the immediate future he will not only inspect the institution but will also take an interest in the housing accommodation, which I must admit is no credit to his department.

Mr. Roberge: I note that according to pages 227 and 228 in the blue book there is an increase of 150 in the number of personnel under this item. Is the committee to understand that the reason for that increase is the same as that which the minister gave when we started discussing the first item of penitentiaries?

Mr. Fulton: This item results very largely from the necessity of providing staff for Joyceville, which, as I stated, will be coming into operation this fall, as well as the necessity for providing staff for the increased prison population at other institutions. Then, there are certain specialists whom we are recruiting in so far as we are able to find persons with the proper qualifications.

Item agreed to.

161. Construction, improvements and equipment, $6,058,571.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister could tell us precisely what buildings are being constructed at the present time? There is a list on page 230, but it is not very illuminating.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the list of the actual number of buildings under construction is very extensive. I would be prepared to provide it if my hon. friend wishes it, but I wonder if he does not wish to know at what points major construction is taking place?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the first question I should ask the minister is, does the department pay for these small buildings that are constructed to house the small detachments of police in many parts of the country?

Mr. Fulton: I think my hon. friend would have to wait for that information until we reach the Royal Canadian Mounted Police item. This relates only to penitentiary construction.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite interested in knowing how many buildings have been started since the minister became minister, if he could list those—that is major projects, and where they are?

Mr. Fulton: At St. Vincent de Paul we are building a new institution which, as I said, is very much along the lines of the one still under construction at Joyceville, and also at St. Vincent de Paul there is a major dormitory building which will be able to accommodate 104 inmates. At Valleyfield we have taken over and are in the process of renovating and altering an army camp there as a satellite institution for St. Vincent de Paul. At William Head, there was the takeover, remodelling and alteration of the old quarantine buildings formerly occupied or owned or at least administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare. In addition to that, there is a sizeable dormitory building within the present area of the Prince Albert penitentiary accommodating some sixty inmates. Then there was the conversion of a building at Stony Mountain to provide dormitory accommodation for some fifty inmates, as I recall it. There was the complete new kitchen building in the existing institution at Kingston penitentiary; a large dairy barn at Collins Bay; a new piggery building for the farm at Dorchester, $20,000; a new shop building at Manitoba penitentiary, eventually $60,000, $20,000 in this year's estimates; a warehouse building in British Columbia, total cost about $30,000, $15,000 in this year's estimates. That is the type of building. There are three of what I might call major new institutions or satellite institutions. St. Vincent de Paul, William Head, Valleyfield, and Springhill definitely will be available this year by way of new or satellite institutions. There are other buildings of the type I have detailed which are by way of addition or alteration to existing institutions.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Pickersgill: There are a few questions I should like to ask about some of these matters. Perhaps the minister would like to answer them as we go along.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend is asking a question he might follow the usual custom of rising in his place.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be glad to do so. I am so accustomed to being in these numerous committees in other parts of the building where we do not have to stand up—in fact, if we do so, we never get a chance to speak—that I failed to do so in this instance. At St. Vincent de Paul there is a complete new institution. Can the minister tell me what the department's estimate was of the cost of these buildings, what the successful tender was and whether there was a single tender for the whole institution?

Mr. Fulton: The departmental estimate of the total cost is, I am advised, approximately $5 million. There was provided in last year's estimates $800,000 and there is provided in this year's main estimates $3,340,000. It is not feasible to build institutions of this type under one general contract or to have all phases of construction proceeding at the same time. Therefore there are a number of individual contracts let, in some cases for individual sections of the building and in other cases for the installation of the general heating plant after the building is erected and also for equipment and so on to operate the machine shops and so on. Hence, there will be a series of individual contracts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister give the committee a list of these contracts and the dates on which they were awarded?

Mr. Fulton: I shall be glad to have a list compiled and to furnish it before the conclusion of the discussion of my estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to have some information with respect to the dormitory at St. Vincent de Paul. The Valleyfield business, of course, is just reconstruction and I should be quite satisfied if we could have the departmental estimate of the total amount of the contracts and the same for William Head and for Prince Albert. In every case I should like to know whether there was just one contract or whether there were several contracts and what the reason was in each case.

Mr. Fulton: Of course, a fair proportion of this building is being done by our own inmate labour.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, the minister can indicate that fact also. We have been told in another place by experts in the field of public works—and this is, of course, as Your Honour will readily appreciate, the reason why I am asking these questions—that under proper procedures, with proper building methods, the complete plan is prepared and one contract is called from one contractor for the whole of the institution and that any other way of doing things is wasteful, extravagant and wrong. We had a good deal of testimony to that effect in another place in another session of parliament. It is therefore only natural that we should be interested in finding out whether these principles that were enunciated to us are being followed by the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: Of course, my hon. friend will remember that on both sides of the house there was pressure—and it was proper pressure—to institute immediate programs of work. It was our objective, which we realized in accordance, to let contracts for the construction of these buildings just as soon as plans for any particular section could be prepared and brought to the position where a contract could be let. If my hon. friend is suggesting that we should have delayed—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to do my own suggesting.

Mr. Fulton: I think I have the floor now because the hon. member gave it to me.

Mr. Pickersgill: All right.

Mr. Fulton: If there is any suggestion that we should have delayed in the awarding of contracts and the providing of employment until the plans for the building of the whole thing were prepared I wish my hon. friend would say so. I think he will agree that would be inconsistent with the position formerly taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no intention of saying anything about that matter until I have the information so that I can formulate some view as to whether or not there is any prima facie case. There were arguments made, of course, in another place, in other circumstances, about another building of precisely the same character, and for precisely the same reasons that the hon. gentleman has given now. I should think that if they were valid in one case they would be valid in the other. But their validity can be determined only by an examination of the facts and not by theory. That was, of course, the view that I took in another place. I am not making any suggestions or any insinuations. I am seeking information.

I think it would be desirable to have the same information about this conversion project at Stony Mountain which sounds as though it would be quite a large one; for the kitchen at Kingston; and for the dairy barn at Collin's Bay. I do not know about the piggery. Piggeries have an important place in the history of confederation, it is true. Perhaps it would be as well to have the information for the piggery also and for the warehouse in British Columbia. What I am seeking to point out is that here we are voting a considerable sum of money to let, as we are told, a number of contracts as soon as the plans can be drawn up in order to provide employment as quickly as possible. It is our duty here in the committee of supply to get all the information we can in order to make sure that the taxpayers' money is being spent to the best possible advantage. If we could have about all those projects information of the kind that I suggest, I think it would be very helpful to the committee.

Mr. Fulton: I cannot give the exact dates when these contracts were let, but I think this is up to March 28 of this year. Administrative building No. 1, estimated cost, $250,000; contract let for $213,000, actual cost below estimate of some $37,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was there one contract for that whole building?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. Hospital and chapel building No. 2 and accommodation building No. 3, let on a single contract; estimated cost $1,950,000, contract let for $1,574,000, or a saving as compared with the estimate of nearly $400,000.

Stores building No. 9 together with maintenance shop building No. 10, let as a single contract; estimated cost $230,000, contract let for $226,770.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister give the dates of these contracts?

Mr. Fulton: No. I am sorry, but I have not got the dates here. I am informed that this is up to about March 28 of this year. These contracts were let since November 24, 1958, the ones I have just mentioned. Automotive building No. 11, estimated cost $140,000; contract let for $158,844; power plant, building No. 12, steam generator plant and radial brick chimney; these were originally estimated to be let in one contract for $600,000, but we have let two contracts, the power plant building No. 12 for $225,420 and the steam generator plant and radial brick chimney for $268,194.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say why two contracts were let in this case?

Mr. Fulton: Because the building can go ahead much more quickly than the boiler plant can. The total of contracts let to date on this table is $2,666,228 and there have been six separate contracts let.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall this item carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. This is just the first of the many building projects about which the minister intends to give us information.

Mr. Aiken: Since we are obviously trying to fill in time until it is ten o'clock—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order. I asked the minister a question which really has something to do with the estimate, unlike many of the questions which have been raised by hon. members, and now we are told that we are just trying to put in time. We are trying to get information.

Mr. Aiken: I am sorry if I gathered the impression I did. However, I wonder if I might make my comments at this point. In view of the substantial building project that has been undertaken by the department—work amounting to $6 million—I want to add my words to those of the hon. member for Parkdale the other day when he urged the government to give consideration to the improvement of the probation and parole service. A great deal of probation work could be undertaken for the $6 million which is mentioned here. Even the increase in this year's vote of $1,500,000 could provide a probation service for 5,000 people. It has been shown in other systems outside Canada that a great many of the people who are actually in institutions do not need to be there and that if the proper investigations were made in the first instance a good many people would not be confined in public places. I would also ask the department to set up a parole—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We are on vote No. 161 which pertains to construction, improvement and equipment and it would appear that the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Aiken: I am attempting to show that instead of spending a lot of money on large building projects we could more usefully spend money on probation and parole services, and I urge that upon the minister at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister could give us a little of this information this evening, because we do not wish to waste time; we are all anxious to see the session over.

Mr. Fulton: I have provided the information for which the hon. gentleman asked with regard to St. Vincent de Paul, though I have not been able to discover what use he is able to make of that information. I have indicated I am prepared to get the other information which he wants, but the hon. member will appreciate that there is a good deal of detailed information of this kind. If he had asked earlier I might have been able to produce it, but in these circumstances it will be necessary for me to ask my officials to compile the information, and I will be glad to table it or to hand it to the hon. gentleman at any time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that I am somewhat astonished that the minister should have even raised any question—

Mr. Fulton: I raised no question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister seems to forget the position he is in. He is responsible to this house. He is asking for large sums of public money to spend. He is a suppliant before the House of Commons, and it is precisely none of his business why we want this information. That is our business, and we are answerable to our constituents and not to the Minister of Justice as long as we continue to have a free parliament; though some of us, at times, in the light of some of the answers given from the treasury benches begin to have some doubts about that.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is plain nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Carleton is an expert in nonsense, plain and varnished.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have been observing the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Fulton: I wish you would just give me a moment, Mr. Chairman. I well understand the reason for the hon. gentleman's outburst, but it is totally unjustified. I have not refused to obtain any information. I said I would be delighted to get the information although neither I nor any other member—perhaps I should not say "any other member"—knows what he wants it for. I realize that if the hon. member wants it I have to produce it, and I have undertaken to do so. There is no reason for the hon. member's outburst, because I have not declined to produce this information. But we get a little tired of these lectures from hon.

gentlemen opposite who forget that it was they who, over the years, showed such a disregard for parliament.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the leader of the house would be so kind as to indicate what the revised list will be for next week?

Mr. Green: We shall commence with a supply motion on Monday and then take the business I outlined last night. When we come to take estimates we shall commence with those of the Department of Justice and then take those of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister any idea at this stage when we would start with the estimates. Would there be estimates on Thursday or would we go on with legislation on Thursday? The house is not sitting on Friday and it would be convenient to know.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say at the moment. It would depend on what progress we make with the legislation.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES STATISTICS

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Sixteenth and seventeenth reports of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills —Mr. McCleave.

FISHERIES

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON NEW BRUNSWICK STORM DISASTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians have been shocked to learn of the disaster which occurred over the week end along the east coast of New Brunswick in the Miramichi area, when a sudden and violent storm struck with ferocious intensity. While it is impossible to know exactly how many fishermen were at sea that night over the long coastline, reports indicate that probably 40 or 50 boats were involved carrying some 80 to 100 men. When the storm struck the R.C.A.F. search and rescue unit was immediately ordered into action and it is continuing to co-ordinate the search by boats and planes available from the R.C.A.F., the R.C.M.P. and the Department of Fisheries in that area.

The latest reports show that 13 bodies have been recovered, and it is feared that the death toll may well exceed 30. The search and rescue work will continue until all hope must be abandoned.

I know I speak for all members of the house when I ask them to join me in extending the deepest sympathy to all those who have been bereaved and have suffered loss in this terrible tragedy of the sea.

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise to join the Prime Minister and all other members of the house in expressing the deepest and most heartfelt sympathy to the fishermen and their families of my constituency in the loss of many loved ones. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, it was a very great tragedy, one that has struck to the very core of the small fishing areas of Miramichi bay. At the same time I should like to pay tribute, as I know the house would, to the deeds of heroism performed by the fishermen who survived. May I also pay tribute to the search and rescue people who are playing a valiant role in trying to locate bodies, and also any fishermen who may still be alive. I express this sympathy and appreciation on behalf of the constituents whom I represent. Practically all the fishing gear and boats that have been lost were the property of fishermen of my constituency.

I should like to read a telegram I received this morning. It is addressed to me at the House of Commons and reads as follows:

> Disaster Saturday at Escuminac must be treated as urgent. Immediate action for assistance for families of victims and to assist those fishermen who survived but lost all equipment is urgently required.

The telegram is signed by Mr. Graham Crocker, a man well qualified to assess the situation and who has been closely connected with the salmon fishermen throughout the years. On that note I should like to appeal to the Prime Minister and the cabinet to render every assistance possible as quickly as they can to relieve the suffering these people are undergoing. I suggest to the Prime Minister that possibly something could be done under the Canadian disaster relief fund to bring some relief to these stricken fishermen.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we wish to join with the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi in expressing our great sympathy to the loved ones of those who have been lost, and to support the request of the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi that everything be done that can be done to assist these unfortunate Canadian citizens.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi naturally has a very strong appeal. I think it might be well if the minister representing New Brunswick had a word to say.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to the sentiments that have been expressed here this afternoon with regard to the very tragic loss which has been suffered by the fishermen of the province of New Brunswick. I know the area that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi represents quite well. This is one of the greatest tragedies that has occurred to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces in many years. Unfortunately there is nothing we can do to bring back to life those very brave men who had been obtaining a livelihood for themselves and families from the sea for many years.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi has expressed the hope that something will be done in a material way to help restore the equipment and gear lost by these courageous men and their families. I feel that on behalf of the government, following what the Prime Minister has just stated, that everything possible will be done to see that help is given these needy families in the way of restoring equipment and gear. I feel that I am expressing not only the feeling of the people of Miramichi and Northumberland, but also the hopes and wishes of the people of the province of New Brunswick.

UNITED NATIONS

WORLD REFUGEE YEAR—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that the United Nations general assembly decided at its 13th session last autumn to establish a world refugee year. Canada was one of the 59 countries which voted in support of this resolution, which urged countries to co-operate in promoting world refugee year as a practical means for securing assistance for refugees throughout the world.

I am sure all hon. members will welcome, as does the government, the opening of world refugee year which will begin in Canada on Sunday, June 28. About 40 countries will be participating in the program of world refugee year.

Throughout the world, in the United Kingdom, the United States, France, New Zealand and elsewhere, national voluntary committees for world refugee year have been established, and a Canadian committee for world refugee year has also been formed with headquarters in Toronto. This committee, composed of distinguished individuals and representatives of interested organizations, I understand, has as its objective the raising of funds from the public for refugee causes. On behalf of the government I should like to take this opportunity to wish the committee every success in its humanitarian endeavour.

The Canadian government has participated regularly in all the United Nations relief programs, and recently it has increased some of its contributions in the hope of hastening solutions where they are possible. There is the program of the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, who has under his mandate 135,000 refugees in Europe who are still not settled 14 years after the close of world war II. Over 25,000 of these refugees are living in camps in conditions which render still more urgent their need for social and spiritual rehabilitation. As you know, this government has increased this year's contribution to the high commissioner to the level of $290,000 to facilitate closing these camps.

Today there are almost a million refugees in the Middle East and almost another million are crowded into the tiny area of Hong Kong. However difficult it may be to foresee an early solution to these problems, it is necessary that these refugees be fed and housed and, above all, that their hopes be kept alive. As far as possible, these refugees must be helped to become self-sufficient, if only so they may be self-respecting.

As you know, the United Nations relief and works agency has been established for Palestine refugees in the Near East. In addition to our regular cash contribution of $500,000 annually this government has, in response to urgent appeals from the agency, contributed a total of $3 million worth of Canadian wheat flour to this agency in the last two years. I would also remind members of the 8,000 European refugees in China, whose pilgrimage to a new home began after the Russian revolution of 1917. New homes abroad have already been promised to many of these refugees, and only the necessary funds are needed to complete their tragic odyssey around the world. This house will soon be asked to approve a contribution of $60,000 to this program.

All in all, this government has contributed $1,650,000 in cash to United Nations refugee programs over the last two years, and a further $3 million worth of food. In addition, large quantities of dried skim milk have been made available free of charge for distribution abroad by voluntary relief agencies. Finally, I need hardly refer again to the hundreds of thousands of refugees who have been accepted by Canada as new citizens.

The Canadian government has given continuous attention to refugee problems. It is, therefore, particularly happy to welcome world refugee year as a means whereby every Canadian can be encouraged to play his part in helping these unfortunate people. We must accept the opening of this year as a challenge; a challenge to the government, to voluntary agencies and to the general public.

The government is now considering the special contributions which it will make to the program of world refugee year. We are giving particular attention to the possibility of a scheme whereby a limited number of tubercular cases might be admitted to Canada, together with their dependants, and given treatment in Canadian institutions. Assisting these tubercular cases to be cured and to re-establish themselves would be a valuable contribution to the solution of that most difficult and most tragic of all refugee problems, the residual or so-called hard-core cases of handicapped persons. Such a scheme will, of course, call for close consultation with the provinces, which are responsible for the institutions which would receive the cases.

We shall also take advantage of the summer recess to examine what further financial contributions might be made to the refugee effort. Members of this house can likewise play a useful role. I am sure they will join with me now in welcoming the inauguration of world refugee year. In particular we welcome the formation of the Canadian committee for world refugee year as a spontaneous public response to this important challenge.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all members of the house welcome the general statement which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just made. As he has observed, Canada should support the action taken at the United Nations to mark this year as world refugee year, thereby calling the attention of its members and of the peoples of the world generally to this hard-core problem of refugees. It will be remembered that at the end of the war Canada took a very active part and a highly important initiative in the formation of the international refugee organization, so that from the beginning it could be said that this country has demonstrated its interest in a problem that touches humanity and all nations.

In marking this refugee year I think it also desirable that we should determine to liquidate this problem for all time. The minister has noted that a national voluntary committee has been set up with headquarters in the city of Toronto. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will not take it amiss if I say that it may be necessary, as indeed he himself in the concluding part of his observations has indicated, to do more than set up a national voluntary committee. That committee will likely require the active support of the government of Canada. As he has suggested, one of the ways by which this could effectively be done would be to permit the entry into Canada of some of these stateless and homeless people who have been the victims of the policies of certain governments in alienating them from their homes and confronting them with the misery which has been theirs now for such a long time.

The minister also mentioned the Palestine refugees, some 1 million in number, whose welfare has been provided for again by the United Nations through the United Nations works and relief agency, operating as it does in Jordan and in the Gaza strip, to mention two chief areas of their work, an organization which Canada has supported with great devotion and with a sense of responsibility. It is significant that the work of UNWRA comes to the end of its formal assignment in 1960. While the minister did not indicate it, I am sure the government of Canada will give consideration to the prolongation of this work if that agency is regarded at the time as the most effective instrument for dealing with this additional serious problem.

The minister indicated that one of the gestures and one of the constructive proposals to which the government is giving consideration in co-operation with the provinces, who have the primary responsibility in this matter, is allowing the entry of tubercular refugees. In view of the fact that the government of Canada does contribute very large sums of money by way of assistance in tuberculosis control the interest of the government in this matter is understandable. I think it would also be important to recognize that apart altogether from the admission of individuals suffering from tuberculosis, consideration might be given in the name of humanity itself to the admission of some of these refugees who do not have this particular disability. In that connection I am sure the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will give consideration to the fact that many of these people for many reasons could not qualify for admittance on the usual grounds now prescribed in the existing regulations and orders in council.

The government has said it will give consideration to helping financially to try to resolve this hard-core group of refugees. That, I think, is a consideration. More particularly it is a consideration which will be followed by an act that I am sure will meet with ready response on the part of the Canadian people, recognizing that in this way the people and the government of Canada are making their contributions to a problem that in the final analysis can only be resolved by collective effort.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, having had a long time interest in and concern for the refugee problem, the members of this group listened with great interest to the minister's statement, particularly to that sentence when he said, "This presents a challenge to the government of Canada and to the people of Canada." We in this group hope the government gives a good lead to the people of Canada by accepting the challenge in full and by admitting not only some of these people who suffer from tuberculosis, but by permitting some of the aged and some who suffer from other diseases to come to this country and enjoy the advantages of life here.

The proclamation of world refugee year is in our opinion a most commendable step, as it will help to direct public attention throughout the world to the tragic plight of many millions of refugees in Europe and in Asia, refugees who have been living in camps since the end of the war, many of them sick, handicapped or aged, largely forgotten by the more fortunate people of the world. In our opinion, Mr. Speaker, this world proclamation will provide the basis for a renewal of hope in the hearts of these long suffering victims of war and they have been long suffering. They have suffered years of destitution and despair while we have enjoyed abundance, hope, health and happiness.

This common effort on the part of the government and people of Canada demonstrates our common humanity. It is an effort which should restore flagging spirits and rebuild weakened bodies and broken lives. This contribution by the government of Canada and by the people of Canada, if they meet their full responsibilities, should be considerable from our horn of plenty.

POLYMER CORPORATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, and in view of the interest shown by hon. members on both sides of the house, I am pleased to be able to announce that the dispute at the Polymer plant in Sarnia has now been settled.

Officials of the Department of Labour have informed me that the commissioner of inquiry, Mr. Eric Taylor, met with both parties until an early hour this morning, when all substantial matters in dispute were mutually resolved.

SEEDS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING TESTING, INSPECTION AND SALE

Hon. George C. Nowlan (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-24 (from the Senate), respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Herridge.]

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING TRANSFER OF OFFENDERS, ETC.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-26 (from the Senate), to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—STATEMENT RESPECTING ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has any statement to make to the house on what we all hope is the temporary break-up of the foreign ministers' conference at Geneva.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members will have seen from the press that the foreign ministers' conference in Geneva has been adjourned until July 13. I point out that it has not broken up, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested. Since the proceedings have been fully reported in the press I shall not review the six weeks' conference in detail.

In my opinion, in assessing the position today the interval should not be regarded as a period of crisis but as an opportunity for re-examination of the position. As the foreign ministers of France, the United Kingdom and the United States pointed out in the statement they issued at the conclusion of the conference, this interval will give the Soviet government the opportunity of considering the western proposals further, and will give the western governments the opportunity to consider the position, particularly in relation to Mr. Khrushchev's Moscow speech of June 19. That pronouncement of the Soviet leader was not encouraging. He reiterated his demand for a peace treaty with the two parts of Germany, a procedure which would further hinder reunification, and he also proposed a time limit on efforts to achieve an agreed solution of the Berlin problem. In so doing he again stated that the Soviet union would sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, with implied termination of western occupation rights, if agreement had not been reached on the Berlin problem at the end of that time.

At the time of recess the Soviet government had before it the offer of the western powers to make certain modifications in the Berlin situation to meet the concerns expressed by the Soviet union. These included limitations on the strength and armament of the armed forces stationed there and the suggestion that reductions could be made; the formation of a four-power commission to settle disputes on rights of access; the possibility that without prejudice to existing responsibilities, procedures relating to access could be carried out by German personnel; and finally, measures to avoid in both parts of Berlin activities which might be disturbing to the other side.

The Canadian government commends the willingness the western powers have thus shown to accept adjustments in the existing arrangements while at the same time making clear their determination not to abandon western rights or forsake the people of West Berlin. Hon. members will have noticed in the press last week reports of the speech which the right hon. Prime Minister made in Princeton, in which he reiterated the view of the Canadian government that in this thermonuclear age differences between east and west must be resolved by negotiation. It has been with satisfaction that the Canadian government has watched the patient and determined efforts of the three western powers at Geneva to find some acceptable basis for continuing the negotiations, and it is gratifying that an early and fixed date has been selected for resumption of the foreign ministers' conference.

Whether on the resumption of the conference it will be found that there is a suitable foundation for a continuation of the negotiations will depend largely on the attitude of the Soviet union. As to the possibility of the heads of government meeting taking place, it is too soon to say whether it is likely that such a meeting will be held. The negotiations so far have served to demonstrate to the Soviet union that the western powers are serious, determined and united on the question of Berlin, but it is the view of this government that the search must be continued for a framework within which a settlement can be reached. We should not be turned aside from this search or deflected from our purpose and policy by provocative statements from the other side. It is possible that an intensive re-examination by the western powers of what the Soviet representative said during the conference, both in private sessions as well as in the plenary meetings, will reveal certain points that could be usefully pursued.

The Canadian government is therefore prepared during the period of recess to participate in the examination of what has taken place in Geneva which will be carried out within the NATO council. In so doing the Canadian position will be based on the principles enunciated by the right hon. Prime Minister in the house on April 7, 1959, when he stated that no agreement could be acceptable to the west which placed in jeopardy the security of Berlin, the freedom of its citizens, or which might have the effect of foreclosing the prospect of reunification of Germany.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL—STATEMENT ON LOCK DAMAGE CAUSING TIE-UP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which I have sent to him. Would the minister comment on the most recent tie-up of boat traffic in the Welland canal and the extent of damage to the canal lock causing the tie-up? Also, would he express an opinion as to when we might expect that both upbound and downbound traffic will be resumed?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of his intention to ask this question. At about ten o'clock Saturday evening it was found that at lock 4 the lower west sill of the east lock was split and twisted, the assumption is, due to water pressure. The lock became inoperable. New timber and new concrete are being placed as rapidly as possible. It is expected that the work will be completed by nine o'clock tonight, but in order to give time for the setting of the new concrete, upbound traffic only will be run for the next 24 hours.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has any consideration been given and has any progress been made in connection with the new facilities for the improved movement of ships through the Welland canal, which were mentioned during the consideration of the minister's estimates?

Mr. Hees: Yes. Those facilities are receiving very active consideration, but as the hon. member for Laurier well knows it will be impossible to put in those additional facilities until the end of this present shipping season.

ROYAL VISIT

STATEMENT AS TO PRINTER OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE BROCHURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, the hon. members for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) and for Hull (Mr. Caron) inquired as to who printed the program of the royal visit. We have been informed by the secretary of the program committee for the royal visit that both the English and the French versions of that program were printed by the queen's printer. Unfortunately, the queen's printer imprint was inadvertently omitted in the English version.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—PROPOSED UNOFFICIAL STUDY BY U.S.-CANADIAN COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in order to satisfy my abounding curiosity. My question is based on a newspaper item in this morning's Gazette to the effect that the national planning association of the United States and the private planning association of Canada announced yesterday that a 60-member committee selected from the two associations is to study the division of power and flood control benefits and "principles which should govern the selection and timing of projects". The aim of the study is stated to be to indicate the nature of the benefits which can be derived from co-operative development of the Columbia river basin.

Can the minister give the house any information with respect to the status, purpose and personnel of this organization?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question this morning. I was able to discover that the private planning association of Canada and the national planning association of the United States formed a Canadian-American committee without official status about two years ago. Their purposes were to study various aspects of Canadian-United States relations. This group consists of approximately 60 members with equal representation from the two nations, and includes a broadly diversified group of leaders in business, labour, agriculture, education and so on. This is undoubtedly the 60-member group to which the newspaper dispatch refers. I looked up one of my own documents and I find that this same group have published a pamphlet entitled, "Wheat Surpluses and Their Impact on Canada-United States Relations". On pages 51 and 52 a complete list of their members is given. If the hon. member has not a copy I will lend him my personal copy.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. Has this group made any representations to the government of Canada on any subject they have studied?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I add to that answer that there have been no representations made to the Department of External Affairs.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE AND WEATHER FORECASTS FOR FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions which I should like to address to the Minister of Transport, which he can take as notice and give a complete answer tomorrow. What specific meteorological service is provided to fishermen warning them of approaching storms? Was a specific warning given with regard to the sudden storm which hit the Northumberland strait area on Friday evening last and resulted in one of the worst disasters in the history of Canadian fisheries?

In asking these questions, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the importance of improving, if possible, the weather forecasts made available to fishermen. In his answer tomorrow will the minister comment on the 5 p.m. forecast known as "The Fishermen's Broadcast", which to my own observation is a little late in the day to benefit what we call the inshore fishermen.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will take these questions as notice and give an answer tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

ICEBREAKER "ALEXANDER HENRY"—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION AND CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to supply any information regarding the location and control of the icebreaker Alexander Henry, particularly as it affects the Georgian bay area?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The marine agency supply vessel and icebreaker Alexander Henry has been constructed for use in the upper great lakes, and will be based in the Parry Sound marine agency.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL-KINGSTON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPROVAL OF PILOTAGE DUES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): On Thursday last the hon. member for St. Denis referred to the question of pilotage dues in the Montreal-Kingston pilotage district and asked why the pilotage dues had not been approved by the governor in council. I may say that I have signed an amendment to the by-laws of this pilotage district, and it was submitted to the governor in council and passed this morning.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport referred to the pilotage fees in the St. Lawrence-Kingston areas. Do the same fees apply to the Welland canal and the Detroit river areas?

Mr. Hees: No; these are separate areas.

AIRPORTS

GANDER—STATEMENT ON TOURIST LANDING FEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): On Friday last the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) asked whether landing fees for tourist aircraft at Gander had been increased. I am advised that there has been no recent increase in landing fees for tourist or any aircraft. The last increase was on July 1, 1957, when landing fees were increased and a new category entitled "trans-border landing fees" was introduced.

AGRICULTURE

PORK—REPORTED SALE TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has he any statement to make to the house concerning the reported sale of surplus canned pork by the Canadian government to Czechoslovakia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been negotiating with several European countries for some time in an effort to dispose of some of the surplus pork which the stabilization board has held, and particularly from the point of view of attempting to get back into the European market, as far as pork and other agricultural products are concerned. Last week arrangements were made to sell about 2,200,000 pounds of pork to Czechoslovakia. This is to some extent in the nature of what you might call a trial shipment and we hope that as a result—we are quite sure the pork will be found satisfactory—we shall be able to sell in constantly increasing quantities pork and other agricultural products in the European market.

Mr. McIlraith: A supplementary question. In view of the lateness of the session and the inability to put written questions on the order paper concerning such sales, would the minister advise the house when these sales go through, as to the quantities and the prices.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it has ever been customary for the stabilization board or me, as minister in charge of that branch of the Department of Agriculture, to advise the house of every sale we make, because we are making sales daily, and it would just take up a great deal of the time of the house without any good purpose being served.

FINANCE

INDUSTRIAL BANK—REPORTED REFUSAL TO GRANT HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

(Page 4993)

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance a question. I am informed that the directors of the industrial bank in Montreal are refusing to grant any leave to their employees on the occasion of Saint-Jean-Baptiste day, which is a legal holiday in the province of Quebec. Would the minister check if that information is accurate and, if so, give relevant instructions and inform the house?

(Text):

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the industrial development bank is a subsidiary of the Bank of Canada, and while it is responsible to parliament, it is not responsible to the government or to the Department of Finance. I can only make inquiries and obtain for the hon. gentleman the information which I am sure any hon. member could obtain.

ATOMIC ENERGY

CLARIFICATION OF REMARK IN DEBATE ON JUNE 19

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: May I make an explanation about the supplementary question of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Robinson) on Friday last about the possibility of locating the proposed atomic energy board plant in the Bruce peninsula. What I said may have been misinterpreted. I did not intend to imply that the hon. member did not have a serious interest in this matter, nor that there was any impropriety in pursuing the interests of his constituency. My concern was only with procedure.

POSTAL SERVICE

MONTREAL—REPORTED DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General a question?

I am informed that a letter postmarked New York June 10 did not reach the addressee in Montreal until June 15, five days later. The addressee was Mr. N. H. Hartogson, 4521a Hutchison, Montreal. Would the minister inquire into the cause of this delay, or does he feel that this five day delay constitutes improved postal service which can be credited to his administration?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not know the details concerning each of the 10 million letters which are delivered daily by the postal service, but I shall look into the matter and give the hon. member the particulars.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Were there not also 10 million letters being delivered daily when the hon. minister was in the opposition and was critical of the Postmaster General of the day?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there were, but I never asked the house any question calling for such particulars.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

MALTON LAND EXPROPRIATION—CONDUCT OF MEMBER FOR PEEL

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the house will not be surprised when I inform you, sir, that we are proposing today an amendment to the motion to go into supply in order to deal with a subject matter which we attempted to put before the house earlier as a motion which we thought affected the privileges of the house.

On Friday last, Mr. Speaker, you stated, in the decision you gave at that time, that no barrier was being raised to the presentation of this matter on another occasion under different circumstances from those which governed the motion before you at that time. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you suggested that the subject matter could be brought before the house on the next motion to go into supply. Normally this is not the kind of subject matter that should take up one of the six supply motions to which we are permitted to move amendments; but in these special circumstances, though we might have wished to put forward another and more general subject for discussion, we feel that we must deal with this particular matter. If the motion before you last Friday, which you decided could not be treated as one affecting privilege and should go on the order paper in the normal way, could have been dealt with in that form then it would not have been necessary to deal with it on a supply day. The Prime Minister did not find it possible to arrange for a discussion of the motion in that form, but he had second thoughts and suggested that the business of the house might be rearranged in order to deal with this matter on a supply motion today.

The notice of motion which I placed on the order paper earlier embodied certain affirmations contained in a judgment of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada. It concluded with a request that a committee be established, or the committee on privileges and elections be used, to examine certain actions of the hon. member of this house mentioned in that judgment and that this committee, having looked into the question, should report whether the conduct mentioned in these findings was in accordance with the dignity of parliament.

That notice of motion, Mr. Speaker, accurately reflected in its terms certain affirmations contained in the judgment. No member on the government side has alleged that the notice of motion which we put on the order paper had in the slightest particular departed from the statements made and the conclusions drawn in this judicial document. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, in your statement last Friday you recommended the notice of motion to the house as a fair and equitable summary of this judicial document, and I believe that is a good indication of the fair manner in which we have proceeded in our efforts to discuss this matter.

The conclusions in your ruling last Friday, Mr. Speaker, confirm our own view that we were on solid ground in arguing that the conduct of a member could be investigated on the basis of statements made about that conduct without the necessity of a member of this house preferring a specific charge, and that as a ground for presenting such a motion there was no need of charges specifically made, as argued by spokesmen on the government side. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer the house to a question which I addressed to you last Wednesday as to whether a question of privilege could be raised on allegations direct or implied in a judgment of a court in some other way.

The answer to my question, of course, was in the affirmative. Any other answer to that question, in your words, Mr. Speaker, to quote from your decision of last Friday at page 4930 of Hansard, would be "to overlook precedents in which inquiries have been undertaken on the basis of charges implied from documents". That surely must dispose of the arguments advanced by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice on this matter. Later it is stated in your decision, Mr. Speaker, and I quote again from page 4930, lines 29 to 33:

> On the authorities it appears to be open to an hon. member to confront the house with charges against another member implicit in documents in the possession of the house, but in my view the charge must be there.

In other words, according to your decision, they must be implicit in the document. I am sure that conclusion is correct, but I still believe that this particular part of the procedural problem has been finally resolved, because no argument adduced from any source in this house has disposed of the precedents established in the Foster and Garland cases in the Canadian House of Commons and the Boothby case in the British house when charges were neither specifically made nor documents referred to.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, you placed on record in the house a sentence which seems to me to be of very great importance. It had to do with your attempt to formulate from the affirmations in the motion a possible charge which in your mind it was your duty to try to find, whether in fact such a charge, direct or implied, did exist. Your sentence on that point was as follows, and I quote from page 4931 of Hansard, lines 16 to 25:

> If these observations or "affirmations", as they are styled in the notice of motion, are taken as fact—

In other words if they are taken as fact; and the government insists, as I will point out later, that we must take them as facts if we are going to produce this kind of motion. You went on, Mr. Speaker:

> —and the worst construction is put on them, it would appear that the hon. member for Peel on behalf of his constituents unsuccessfully attempted to get more generous compensation for them from public funds for the lands which the crown had expropriated than they were warranted in receiving.

That formulation, Mr. Speaker, drawn from the affirmations in the notice of motion—and I am certainly not complaining about it or questioning it in any way—goes further than any statement made by any hon. member on this side of the house.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question at this stage? Should the hon. member not read the next sentence, "This summary does not do justice either way"?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think that has any bearing at all on what I have said. Earlier in your remarks, Mr. Speaker, you stated that no close precedent was cited and that you were unable to find any. Based on the construction that such conduct as was referred to in the judgment of the court which was mentioned in the notice of motion had not in the past been punished and that no close precedent was cited, you thereby ruled that a question of the privilege of the house was not prima facie involved. That is the ruling of the Chair and it has been confirmed by a decision of the house. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, all members are bound to accept it even though they may not be convinced that it is warranted by precedents of by the evidence. A decision has been made, and the house is bound by it.

I suggest that a decision of far-reaching importance was made in the ruling given last Friday. It seems to me to involve the answers to this question: Can a member, without any breach of the privileges of parliament, seek for his constituents funds from the public treasury which in the circumstances they are not warranted in having? When we raised that as a question, Mr. Speaker, for discussion on the estimates of the Department of Transport, the Minister of Transport merely replied by indulging in, if he will permit to call it such, a political tirade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is the kind of question which could be more profitably discussed in the committee on privileges and elections. If it is to be discussed on a supply motion, if the debate on this matter is now to take a new turn, that is of course the result of the refusal of the government to permit that particular committee to inquire into the matter in a way which would ensure that all the facts were known as they concern the two members of parliament involved, the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Peel, and to examine into this matter so the right conclusions might be drawn from the facts discovered. Such a committee would not have been packed against the government and could have checked on certain statements and assertions included in a court finding, not an alleged finding, which certainly appeared to have reflected on members of parliament, some of which statements have been contradicted outside the court.

The Prime Minister dismisses this as of little significance unless on his own responsibility a member of parliament is willing to accept all these statements and assertions as true, which would mean that he would presumably have to accept the statements contradicting them outside the court as untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a pretty thin argument.

Mr. Pearson: It may be a thin argument to the Prime Minister, but it is a pretty impressive argument to anybody who approaches this matter in an objective manner.

Witnesses, such as the Minister of Transport, who did not appear before the court could have been called before such a committee. I submit parliament would not be acting as a court in such an inquiry, and I submit also there would have been no trial. There would have been an attempt, with witnesses called, to check certain statements made under oath in a court which reflected on the propriety, so we thought, of the conduct of a member of this house.

If one says that no member should have to submit to investigation or inquiry by the House of Commons or a committee of the house of statements into his conduct in a matter of public business until he has been charged with an offence, then I say that is disproven by many precedents. Furthermore, in this case the investigation would have been into statements made about a member in a court under oath, statements made in the evidence which the judge reported in his findings, some of which were denied or contradicted later outside the court. Is that not something which should be inquired into? I hope to produce enough evidence, Mr. Speaker, to convince members that the answer to that question must be yes.

Yet it has been said that unless in these findings there is an explicit charge with which a member is willing to identify himself by repeating it in this house, there can be no such parliamentary inquiry. The fact that this argument is wrong and without any logical foundation is shown by the statement that if the member concerned or the Minister of Transport had moved a motion of inquiry into these assertions, it would have been accepted by the government without any argument. However, this procedure of inquiry by the committee on privileges and elections we thought was fair to everyone concerned. This procedure has, up to the present, been rejected by the Prime Minister, who has justified his rejection by accusing those of us who are proposing it of McCarthyism. This merely shows the weakness of the case, as all smokescreen diversions do, whether by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Transport.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, it becomes necessary not to see whether the privileges of parliament are involved, because you have decided they are not, but to look into the conduct of the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Peel and the government in the handling of this whole question of the Malton expropriations. The evidence we have in that matter is in the findings of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada; in statements made by those concerned or some of those concerned outside of the house, and in the words of the Minister of Transport inside the house. We have had no word as yet from the hon. member for Peel inside the house, but some remarks have been made by him outside, at least as reported in the press. Surely, Mr. Speaker, today he will have something to say about this matter, even at this late date.

I must emphasize that the observations and statements about which I am talking, the statements that to us seem to reflect on somebody's conduct, are not made by me. They are made in the findings of a court judgment which I found it my duty to repeat as bearing on this problem. The Prime Minister, I repeat, takes the position that there can be no inquiry into these findings by a committee of this house concerned with parliamentary privileges unless a member takes the responsibility for accepting all those findings of the court as true, and therefore something on which a charge could and must be laid by a member of parliament. He argues that one must also accept responsibility for the comments on these statements made by others, including the member for Peel himself and the Minister of Transport, which contradict certain of these statements in the findings of the court.

Then he says that parliament should not investigate them, whether or not they appear to reflect on a member. Whatever statement is made outside the house, in a court of law or in some other place, which reflects on the conduct of a member—that has nothing to do with the privileges of the house unless you accept it as true and lay charges based on it. That is the government's position, and it is a very strange position indeed. I could think of some adjectives used by the Minister of Justice the other day which might be appropriate in describing it, but I will not do that. However, I will say this; that I consider the position a travesty of respect for parliamentary rights and privileges. Perhaps it is an effective method of avoiding any inquiry by the men who talk about McCarthyism because we will not condemn a person before such an inquiry is made to find out the facts.

The Prime Minister laughs; he finds this amusing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find such arguments or lack of arguments amusing.

Mr. McIlraith: After the arguments you advanced last week?

Mr. Pearson: What are these statements in a finding of a court which reflect on a member and which should be examined in fairness to the member himself and corrected if they are wrong or misleading? If that is not done —and the government has certainly not made it possible yet—they remain on the record of the court and indeed, in view of the discussion we have had in this house, on the record of parliament.

Does the member concerned wish that to happen? Does the Prime Minister wish that to happen, namely that the court record go unchallenged and unexamined? Does the Minister of Transport, who is so directly concerned with all this, wish that to happen? No doubt he will be taking part in this debate. Perhaps I might be permitted to address a few questions to him. May I ask him first this question. Why did he not appear in order to clear these matters up when these statements were made before the court?

Mr Hees: May I answer that question right now. The answer is that I was never summoned or asked to appear.

Mr. Pearson: Naturally; I expected that would be the minister's reply.

Mr. Hees: It is true.

Mr. Pearson: The minister knew that the business of his department was being considered by this court. The minister must have known of some of the statements that were being made in this case. He is the Minister of Transport. This was a case which concerned his department. In view of the statements that were made, which were confusing, which were contradictory, and which affected him directly, did the minister not think—notwithstanding the fact that he had not been subpoenaed—it might have been a good thing to go to court and clear this matter up?

Mr. Hees: I have answered every one of those questions in this house posed by you.

Mr. Pearson: The minister will have a chance. The minister said he had answered all the questions.

Mr. Hees: I have answered the questions you put to me.

Mr. Pearson: Let us see. What are these statements, these allegations, some of which remain unchallenged in the court findings and are now on the records of parliament? The minister will be glad to follow this because he will no doubt want to deal with some of them. All my statements are based on the document.

In the first place, it was stated under oath that the member for Peel sought to bind the treasury in advance to accept an increased valuation of certain properties which were being expropriated and which had already been valued, according to the minister, on approximately six other occasions by departmental and other valuators, and which were the outstanding claims after 180 others had been settled.

The member for Peel himself stated under oath that the department had in fact accepted his proposal for such an additional valuation by an appraiser to be recommended by him, which valuation would be binding on the owners and on the crown. There was considerable evidence on this point, which I now propose to put on the record.

The minister had written the member for Peel on July 19, 1957 that his department had thought the appraisals "fair and reasonable"—those were the words he used—after six earlier valuations. These are the appraisals of the eleven outstanding parcels of property in these Malton expropriations. He had thought that the appraisals, after six earlier valuations, were fair and reasonable. He stated that the Department of Veterans Affairs, which was concerned in these cases since some of the owners were veterans, concurred in that view. He pointed out that there was a test case, the Hatton case, before the exchequer court which would provide a basis for any further settlement, he thought. He has added that it would be well, in his opinion, to wait for this to be settled first; otherwise—and I quote from his communication——the department could be accused of being wasteful of the taxpayers' money by giving in to unreasonable demands.

In his letter of July 19 the minister went on to say this:

I would not like to commit myself at this stage to arbitration in the sense of appointing an independent appraiser acceptable to both the veterans and ourselves.

But he added—and I quote from his letter:

I would certainly be prepared to consider this possibility further if the veterans were prepared to agree by contract in advance that the report of such an independent appraiser was final and binding on them.

That is from the minister's letter. So the member for Peel, relying on this willingness to consider the matter further, began to act as he thought—and no doubt quite sincerely thought—in the interests of his constituents. On July 24, 1959 he wrote the minister that the owners, and I quote from that letter——have agreed to the matter being arbitrated by a single arbitrator to be agreed upon between yourself and themselves.

If words mean anything, they mean that the owners had agreed to an arbitrator whose decision would be binding on both parties. There is no doubt on that score, as I shall now try to point out from further communications. The member in this letter added that he would submit the name of such an arbitrator for the minister's consideration. The name recommended and accepted by the minister was Mr. Earl Clare.

The member for Peel then had a meeting with the owners some time in August, according to the evidence. Again from the evidence, on page 4, he told the owners of a talk with the minister and of the plan he had proposed to the minister for an independent valuator who—and I quote the words of the finding—"would be a reputable and reliable real estate man". The member asked the owners, according to the findings, to accept this proposal for an arbitrator whose decision would be binding—and again I quote from the finding—"on both the owners and the department". When the owners agreed, the member for Peel wrote to the assistant deputy minister of transport on August 27—and this appears on page 4 of the finding—confirmed that the owners would accept an arbitration by a new valuator—and I quote again—"whose finding shall be binding on both parties". There is no misunderstanding there. That language is perfectly clear. There is no room for misunderstanding as to what that language could possibly mean other than there should be an arbitration binding on both sides.

Mr. Hees: Would the hon. member mind my asking him a question?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: No.

Mr. Hees: Who wrote that last letter?

Mr. Pearson: The member wrote it to the minister.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member for Peel wrote it?

Mr. Pearson: That is right.

Mr. Hees: But so far, there is no agreement of any kind under which the department agreed to be bound in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Pearson: I shall come to that matter in due course. On August 29 the assistant deputy minister of transport wrote to the member for Peel that after discussion with the officials of treasury board and the Department of Justice, I think it was, he felt that arbitration of the kind suggested in the member's letter was impracticable; that it was contrary to the intention of the Expropriation Act for the government to be bound in advance in the manner suggested by the member for Peel; that it would establish a precedent which could have—and I quote—"extremely serious and dangerous consequences for the future"; and that the court was better qualified than an arbitrator to come to a sound decision.

Then occurred a meeting between the minister and the member in the Hunter building on September 19. Mr. Booth, the assistant deputy minister of transport, was present for the first part of the meeting but was not present for the last part of it. On page 5 of the findings it is reported that the member for Peel again—and I quote from the findings on page 5——suggested that an independent appraiser should be appointed and that both the crown and the owners should be bound by his valuations.

On this occasion the assistant deputy minister pointed out that, as recommendations were subject to the approval of treasury board, the minister could not be bound in advance by any new valuation. I am glad to put that on record. The assistant deputy minister also stated that the department was satisfied with the valuations that had been made and that they were valid. There was further discussion between the minister and member after the assistant deputy minister left, and there is no record of any kind of that discussion, as far as I know, in the finding of the court or anywhere else. But after that discussion on October 1, 1957 the minister wrote to the member for Peel, and I quote from his letter of October 1:

My understanding of your proposal—

That is the proposal of the member.

—was that if new proposals were made by a valuator acceptable to you the owners in question would agree to be bound by his valuation.

That is the owners in question. That surely does not make any sense unless the arrangements bound the government as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: It is quite simple to show that, and it is even easier to show that that was the impression in the hon. member's mind. I have lots of evidence to prove that.

The hon. member had every right to assume that the obligation was on both sides. How otherwise could he have got the owners to accept such an obligation? What could they possibly have gained by signing such a one sided agreement? I cannot believe that the hon. member after his talk with the minister would have put it forward to them in such one sided terms. There is evidence taken under oath to show that the understanding of the hon. member was perfectly clear on this matter, that there was no doubt in his mind as to what had happened. Let me quote from this letter of October 1. In it the minister asked for:

—the written undertakings of the owners to be bound by Mr. Clare's valuations. When these valuations are received I will proceed along the lines indicated to you—

That is, to the member. I continue:

—in our discussion.

Mr. Speaker, what were the lines under which they were to proceed and which were mentioned by the hon. member in the letter of October 1?

Mr. Hees: Would the hon. member like an answer to that question right now?

Mr. Pearson: I have it from the documents.

Mr. Hees: Do you want an answer? You have asked a question and I am prepared to answer it right now. If you do not want the answer—and I do not think you do—I will not, of course, give it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to that question not from the intervention of the minister but from the documents in this matter—

Mr. Hees: You do not want me to answer.

Mr. Pearson: I say there was a sharp conflict of evidence here. A couple of weeks ago the Prime Minister of course could not find any conflicts or contradictions in the evidence at all. I maintain that this is a sharp conflict of evidence. The findings of the court are very clear as to what the hon. member said in the court under oath. I will read what is found at page 7 of the findings of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada:

When Mr. Pallett was asked what lines had been indicated to him in the discussion, his answer was—

I quote from his answer taken from the findings:

—"whatever valuations were made by the independent valuator would be accepted by the Department of Transport".

What has the minister got to say about that?

Mr. Hees: Do you want me to answer that?

Mr. Pearson: I asked you a question and I will give you an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. Hees: I shall be very glad to do so. The agreement between the hon. member for Peel and myself, as I outlined to him in my office, was that we would be perfectly willing to appoint an independent valuator, Mr. Clare, and that when his valuations were received they would be submitted to the treasury board staff for examination. That was the agreement.

Mr. Pearson: That is the minister's answer, so I will read again what the hon. member for Peel said under oath before the court:

—whatever valuations were made by the independent valuator would be accepted by the Department of Transport.

Let us examine what the assistant deputy minister said about this when he was questioned on it. I quote again from the evidence. Mr. Booth said:

The minister did not say that.

The findings then add this:

Mr. Pallett said that he had convinced the minister and that he left the meeting with the understanding that the valuation made by Mr. Clare—would bind both the department and the owners and that it was his responsibility to get the owners' signatures on documents agreeing to his valuation.

Those words are found at page 7 of the findings. Mr. Booth intervened to try to correct the impression of the hon. member for Peel that he had a proposal accepted by the minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read the next portion. It is all part of the same thing.

Mr. Pearson: I have some more to read from page 7.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just read this to conclude that paragraph.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I will be very glad to read it:

There was thus a sharp difference between the evidence of Mr. Booth and of Mr. Pallett—

I am reading from page 7 of the findings. I continue:

> Mr. Pallett said that he had convinced the minister and that he left the meeting with the understanding that the valuation to be made by Mr. Clare, if he was found to be qualified—

I left that out because it did not seem to me to be pertinent. I continue:

> —would bind both the department and the owners and that it was his responsibility to get the owners' signatures on documents agreeing to his valuation. But Mr. Booth was clear that the minister was most anxious to settle the matter and do everything possible short of binding the crown in advance of the proposed valuation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, short of binding the crown.

Mr. Hees: Carry on.

Mr. Pearson: Of course that is the position the assistant deputy minister took. He said his minister was not bound by the valuation. But the hon. member for Peel, a member of this house, said he left the meeting with the understanding that it would bind both the government and the owners and that it was his responsibility to get the owners' signatures. If there was this misunderstanding between the hon. member for Peel and Mr. Booth on this matter—and there obviously was—why did the minister not clear up the misunderstanding and put the hon. member for Peel right?

On the basis of the documents I have read it seems to me that the position taken by the hon. member for Peel was perfectly reasonable. Why else would the hon. member try to secure the signatures? Why should he have been put in such a false position by the minister if the situation were otherwise? Why should he be asked to get signatures of the owners on the ground that they would accept the valuations of the independent appraiser if the government was not going to be bound by the valuations?

Mr. Hees: Do you want an answer to that?

Mr. Pearson: Why would the minister ask these people through the hon. member for Peel, to accept a one sided valuation of that kind? I suggest that the hon. member had no intention of asking that at all, and that he was completely honest and sincere when he said that he believed these valuations would bind both the government and the owners. That is what he said before the court.

Mr. Hees: Would you like an answer to that question? I am prepared to answer that question if you wish. I do not believe you want any answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is just trying to destroy the argument of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: I have already answered the questions the minister speaks of from the documents before me. The minister will have lots of opportunity to make reference to this. He can speak in this debate.

Mr. Hees: I asked you a question. You seem to be genuinely asking for information. Do you want an answer to your question? Do you wish me to reply to your question?

Mr. Pearson: I have the answer.

Mr. Hees: No, you have not. You do not want the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister will know that the hon. member who has the floor wants an answer when he sits down and gives the minister an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Pearson: This is very interesting, in view of the minister's intervention. On October 3 the hon. member for Peel wrote the minister saying that he would send along the signed forms of the owners in the form of an agreement between the owners and the government. What kind of agreement would that have been which bound only the owners and had no binding effect whatever on the government? The minister replied on October 7, and I quote from his letter on that occasion:

> I have been advised that barring unforeseen difficulties we shall be able to complete the formalities within this time limit and under the circumstances I agree to proceeding in the manner you have arranged.

There was a suggested time limit of two months. The minister on October 7 said he would agree to proceeding in the manner arranged by the hon. member for Peel. We know what the hon. member for Peel thought he was doing, because he said under oath in court what he thought he was doing. There was nothing in that letter of October 3, after these talks, to warn the hon. member that the valuation was not binding on the government but was binding only on the owners. There was nothing in that letter of October 7 to clear up any misunderstanding which obviously was in the hon. member's mind or he obviously would not have made the statements he did before the court.

The following is also an answer to the minister's interruption. On page 8 of the findings we find the following:

> It was Mr. Pallett's opinion that what was meant was that the valuation would be acceptable to both parties.

That was three times in these findings that the hon. member's views of this matter had been set down in black and white as implying an arrangement, a proposal, an agreement —whatever you want to call it—which was binding both on the government and on the owners.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member read again that paragraph, the next words on page 8?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to as the Prime Minister seems very curious. I should have read the whole document, Mr. Speaker. I am now reading from the evidence itself:

> On October 7, 1957, the minister wrote to Mr. Pallett acknowledging receipt of his letter of October 3, 1957, and referring to Mr. Booth's telephone conversation with Mr. Pallett commenting on the shortness of the two months' limit and concluding as follows:
> "I have been advised that barring unforeseen difficulties we shall be able to complete the formalities within this time limit, and under the circumstances I agree to proceeding in the manner you have arranged."
> There was controversy over the meaning of the last portion of this letter, "I agree to proceeding in the manner you have arranged." It was Mr. Pallett's opinion that what was meant was that Mr. Clare would do the valuation and that it would be acceptable to both parties. But Mr. Booth, who had prepared the letter for the Minister's signature, said the phrase "formalities" meant simply the formalities in the case of agreed settlement including submissions to the treasury board.

For the benefit of the Prime Minister I might say I was coming to that in my statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend always seems to be coming to it but never does.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister obviously wants it to be on the record twice and I will be glad to oblige. The Prime Minister is very anxious to show that a civil servant is really the determining influence in this matter and that the civil servant was instructing the member.

It is clear—and this is a very important part of the evidence—that Mr. Pallett knew the need for approval of the treasury board when he stated that the minister said that he would have to take the responsibility. He would take the responsibility of dealing with the treasury board. If as the assistant deputy minister argued—and the Prime Minister is so anxious to get the assistant deputy minister's argument on the record—"formalities" meant simply the formalities in the case of agreed settlements including submissions to the treasury board, why did the minister not make this clear to the member and later to the court? Why allow what he admits was a misunderstanding to persist? According to the hon. member for Peel the minister stated that he would take the responsibility in connection with the approval of treasury board. Is that an accurate statement? Are we to accept that statement as such, that the minister would take the responsibility of dealing with treasury board with regard to these evaluations? There is some evidence to support that interpretation, Mr. Speaker; but why did not the minister—and I ask him again even though he was not subpoenaed—appear in the court and clear this whole matter up? Why leave the matter there in the way it was left in the hon. member's mind? There is no doubt what the hon. member thought was going on. Surely it is not a very fair way for the minister to treat the hon. member, to leave him under what he admits now to have been a very serious misapprehension, a misapprehension so clear that he the minister, refers to it in this house.

Mr. Speaker, let us just see what the minister had to say about this in parliament. On June 9, as reported on pages 4457 and 4458 of Hansard, he dealt with this matter in reply to some questions from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). He said first of all that he would not comment on the findings of the court. I would ask the minister, and he can reply to this question when he gets up to speak, why would he not comment on the findings? Again on page 4530 he said it would be inappropriate for him to discuss the judgment and he would not do so. On page 4591 he merely accepts the decision of the court with regard to the payment to be made, and that is all. The minister would not comment on the findings of the court, but presumably he expects us to accept as true and accurate those findings; otherwise we would not have been asked to base a specific charge on them. The minister would not comment, but he said that we were to accept them all as true and accurate if we are going to base a charge and to request a committee to inquire into it.

Mr. Hees: When did I say that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pearson: The position of the government, goodness knows, is surely clear enough on this matter. The position of the government is that there can be no inquiry into this matter on a question of privilege unless some member on this side of the house takes the responsibility of identifying himself with all these findings and specific charges, and therefore assumes that they are accurate and true. Nothing could be much clearer than that from the position taken by the government.

Let us look at the treasury board aspect of the matter for a few moments. The minister also stated, as reported on page 4411 of Hansard for June 8:

> I assured the hon. member that the appraisals made by Mr. Clare would be presented to treasury board for their examination.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pearson: The minister need not get up; I will go on and say what he said later about this because I want to be perfectly fair to the minister and quote everything he said, including his correction of that statement. Later on, on June 10, as reported on page 4529 of Hansard, he said:

I assured the hon. member that the result of this further valuation would be studied with the greatest care by the officials of the treasury board in order to ensure that it got the fullest possible consideration.

When this contradiction between the board, which is a cabinet committee and deals only with recommendations from a minister, and officials of the board who are civil servants and have no such power of recommendation, was pointed out, the minister said that he meant the treasury board staff only, and that he made no recommendation to the board itself and was under no obligation to do so.

Mr. Hees: That is right.

Mr. Pearson: That is the minister's position. Well, was that the understanding in the mind of the hon. member for Peel when he secured the signatures to the agreement? Was that the understanding when he made this reference to the fact that the minister would take responsibility for dealing with treasury board?

Now let me ask a specific question, because it deals with this matter and appears in Hansard on page 4529. This a question I asked the minister:

Was there agreement that both parties would be bound by the Clare appraisal—

This was an appraisal which would have required a recommendation to the treasury board by the minister and acceptance of it by the board. When I asked the minister that question his reply was short and to the point: it was a categorical "No." Yet was the hon. member for Peel clear about that when he was going through this long and hard effort to get signatures from the owners, and when he told them that the minister would be responsible for treasury board, and when he told the minister two or three times that an agreement had been reached which would be binding on both sides?

Does the minister not think it would have been a wise thing for him to have cleared up this matter with the hon. member for Peel at that time? Perhaps the minister will now comment on that categorical statement, that categorical negative, and tell us whether there was no such agreement, no such undertaking, and no such understanding between himself and the member, or no proposal which would have required acceptance of the Clare valuations by the government or treasury board. He owes that to the hon. member concerned, and indeed the hon. member concerned owes it to himself. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that statement was made in entire good faith, but he the member for Peel, owed it to himself to correct that statement, if it is wrong, made to the court under oath. I asked the minister on his estimates on June 11—and I am quoting from page 4583 of Hansard—how he reconciled his statement that there was no proposal for agreement or no clear understanding about compulsory arbitration with the hon. member's statement that there was. To that the minister replied:

I have no doubt that the hon. member had an idea that there was an agreement—

When did the minister decide that this idea had been removed from the hon. member's mind? When did he decide that this idea was in the hon. member's mind? After all the discussions, these talks, these letters, these communications, after all this correspondence to clear this matter up, then the minister came before the house last week and said, "I have no doubt that the hon. member had the idea that there was an agreement". So at the very best, Mr. Speaker, after all these talks, letters and correspondence between the two there was, on the basis of the minister's own statement, this complete confusion and misunderstanding on such an important matter. Perhaps both the minister and the member during the debate will explain how this confusion and misunderstanding—and I am putting it on that level at the present time—arose.

Now, let me deal with another matter in which there are contradictions and conflicting statements, even if the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) does not know of any such contradictions and conflicts in this matter. Page 16 of the findings has this to say about Mr. Clare, and this is the statement of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada:

I do not believe that he was a free and independent valuator.

This is the statement of the judge. What has the hon. member and what has the minister to say about this statement? Nothing, according to the Prime Minister, until you lay a charge against the member, which makes it possible for that kind of statement to be looked into. In other words, let that statement go unchallenged until you lay a charge. But why did the judge make that statement? He had reason for doing it and he gives it in his findings, which can be found at the bottom of page 16 and the top of page 17. This is from the findings of the court:

He admitted—

"He" being the independent valuator, Mr. Clare.

—that Mr. Pallett, who had recommended his appointment, said that he wanted a good price and, on his cross-examination, after long hesitation, he admitted that Mr. Pallet had instructed him to put as generous a valuation as possible on the properties and he told Mr. A. A. Speer, the Department of Transport's district land agent, that it was difficult for him to carry out his instructions.

The word used is not "suggested" or "proposed". The word used by this witness under oath is that he was instructed. I ask the minister, did he authorize or did he know of any such instructions? I ask him also, does he believe that there were such? Outside the court, Mr. Speaker, the member contradicted the statement which was made under oath by a witness in the court. According to the Canadian Press, in a dispatch published on June 5, he contradicted it and perhaps I had better read it. It is a press report. If the member feels it is not accurate he will no doubt deny it. The press dispatch reads:

Mr. Pallett denied today that he had instructed the appraiser to place a generous evaluation on the properties; the only instructions given him were "to straighten this mess out".

It seems to me it is only fair to the hon. member to put that on the record. If that statement is accurate, then the witness under oath, a free and independent valuator, wrongly stated that the hon. member had instructed him to do certain things which indeed the hon. member had no right to do, and which the hon. member has since denied in the press. Should that matter not be cleared up, Mr. Speaker, and was not this House of Commons the place to have it cleared up? No, said the Prime Minister, unless you accept this statement of Mr. Clare as true and accurate and base a charge on it. We do not accept it as true and accurate until the hon. member has had a chance to give his side of the case.

Then, I suggest, we are trying to be fair in this matter and give him a chance because if the statement is wrong—he said outside the court it is wrong—then he has been grossly injured inside the court by a statement of this kind.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is one other question that perhaps the minister will deal with when he talks. Why did a free and independent evaluator, which we were told Mr. Clare was, who was working for the department in this matter and appointed by the minister, send his report to the hon. member, not to the department which had employed him, which would be the normal practice, and why then did the hon. member send it direct to the minister's office and not through the usual channels? Did the minister know of that procedure? Did he sanction it?

Let me emphasize as I conclude that none of these statements, which surely does reflect on somebody, including the members of the House of Commons, whether they are true or false; none of these statements which appear to reflect on the conduct of a member of the house is ours. They are in the findings of the court. We thought, Mr. Speaker, that these findings should have been examined by a committee of this house and that the Prime Minister would have been the first member of this house to insist that statements of this kind made in the findings of a court about one of his own members should have been looked into. Is the Prime Minister happy to leave these statements on the record unanswered? Will he still refuse what has been done so often in the past, namely to set up a committee to inquire into them in fairness to the member himself, or else submit them to the appropriate committee which is already in existence?

If the Prime Minister and the government do refuse this kind of inquiry and investigation, in the light of the evidence which I have put on the record, who then, Mr. Speaker, is being cowardly?

Perhaps I can quote from an editorial which has appeared on this matter. There are a number of editorials, but perhaps I can quote from an editorial in a paper which is a strong supporter of the government and therefore not likely to be unfair to the government in this matter. I am talking about the Calgary Herald and I am reading from its editorial of June 18. This editorial refers to the evidence given to the court and it says this:

This was evidence given in a court trial and duly released in the judgment of that court. It does not prove that Mr. Pallett has done anything illegal, but it certainly suggests a situation which is not desirable. Surely the taxpayers are entitled to expect that appraisals of land which is to be bought with their tax money should be appraisals completely free from any political influence. When a situation is uncovered which unquestionably suggests that some pressure, however innocent or mild, was placed on an appraiser who was apparently a political appointment, then parliament and the public have every right to expect that a full explanation will be given. It is not enough to say that the Prime Minister has investigated the matter and is satisfied. The Herald opposes government by caucus in Edmonton or in Ottawa, and regardless of party.

Lester Pearson, as Leader of the Opposition is quite justified in asking for an investigation. The government's suggestion that he lay a charge, which means in effect that if Mr. Pallett is exonerated of any crime then Mr. Pearson will have to resign, is totally ridiculous.

Hon. Davie Fulton, Minister of Justice, has jeered, sneered and challenged the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I question the propriety of reading an editorial which reflects on what goes on in this house. If it is expressing an opinion on a public issue, well and good; but when it gets to the point of criticizing the actions of the members in the house, I think it is quite out of order.

Mr. Pearson: Very well, Mr. Speaker. There are some others which substantiate the position we have taken and criticize the government in this matter. They represent, of course, a segment of public opinion which I think perhaps should be put on the record; but I think I have made a case from the evidence which is available to us, namely the findings of a court which quotes the statement of a member outside the house and the statement of a minister inside the house. It has been ruled by you, Mr. Speaker, that this matter cannot be considered by the committee on privileges and elections. It seems to us that that would have been a useful committee to have consider it but there are other ways in which it can be done. I think it has been abundantly shown now that if only in common justice to those concerned we should have these statements and these findings investigated and examined by this House of Commons in some form so that we can remove those contradictions and those conflicts and thereby find out what the truth is.

Surely that is fairness and justice to those who are mentioned in the evidence itself. I think any inquiry of this kind should examine into the discussions and negotiations between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) in connection with the valuation of these properties. Concerning them, I repeat, the hon. member for Peel swore before the exchequer court to the effect that the Minister of Transport had accepted a proposal made by him that the Department of Transport be bound by the result of an independent appraisal of such properties and concerning which the minister stated to the House of Commons that no agreement had been made between the hon. member and himself that the department would be so bound. That is one matter which surely should be looked into.

Another matter which surely should be inquired into is the circumstances surrounding the appointment of Mr. Clare as an independent valuator, any influences under which he conducted his appraisal and the transmittal and final disposition of his report. Surely the government, having decided that this matter could not be examined by the committee on privileges and elections, is prepared now to have it examined in some other way. I will give the government the benefit of the doubt with respect to their refusal to have the matter examined by the committee on privileges and elections. I will make the assumption that the reason they would not do so was that that particular committee, by its very nature and by its terms of reference, deals with privileges and it might look as if a member of the house was, if you like, being accused and charged before this committee. It cannot be done that way now but there are other ways in which it can be done. There are other ways in which this matter can be examined and the statements made inquired into as they should be. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"in view of the reasons for judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson in a case concerning the expropriation by the crown of property at Malton, Ontario, and contained in sessional paper 237, a select committee be appointed immediately to investigate and report on all matters connected with this expropriation."

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, once again today, as on several occasions recently, hon. gentlemen opposite have called into question the propriety of my actions in the matter of the land expropriations at Malton airport. However, on this occasion at last it has been done in such a form as to make it possible for me to speak on the subject. I cannot tell you, Mr. Speaker, how much I welcome this opportunity. Hon. members can imagine how I have felt in the last few days while debate raged in this house, while insinuations were made, while suspicions were voiced and unspecified conduct on my part was alleged, and all this time I was unable to speak on my own behalf.

Some members may ask why I did not rise before now on a question of privilege and ask that the matter be investigated by a committee of the house. This is a question that deserves to be dealt with and I propose to deal with it now. In the first place, what we are dealing with goes far beyond this one case. It concerns the rights and privileges of all members of parliament now and in the future. For as Your Honour has said, precedents are of great importance in the House of Commons. Actions taken now in this matter may well have their effect on future matters that may arise in the house.

It seemed to me, rightly or wrongly, that if I rose and asked that this affair be referred to a committee I would be admitting that what I did might constitute a breach of the privileges of the house, and that I was not and am not, prepared to do. It seemed to me also that I might be creating a precedent whereby actions of this sort—and I will speak in a minute or two about what sort of action it was—could in future be called into question in the house. This again I was not prepared to do because I feel that to do so would seriously impair the freedom of members now and in the future to represent their constituents and constituencies in the way I believe they should.

There has been since the beginning of parliaments debates on exactly what are the duties and responsibilities of a member of parliament in representing his constituency. Probably the most famous statement on this subject was that of Edmund Burke, who once, incidentally, was the member for the pocket borough of Malton, in his speech to the electors of Bristol. Many people think that the burden of that speech was that a member once elected should pay no attention to his electors but do and say only what he feels to be right. That is what Burke did say concerning matters of opinion, judgment and conscience. But let me quote what he said in that speech concerning representing his constituents:

> Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasure, his satisfaction, to theirs; and above all, ever and in all cases to prefer their interest to his own.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the responsibility of a member of parliament in looking after the interests of his constituents has increased since the days of Burke. The ordinary citizen today who finds himself in conflict with government is at a great disadvantage. He is up against a large and impersonal organization with infinite resources. No matter how important the question is to the citizen, he finds that to government agencies it is just one of thousands of routine problems. An expropriation is to government authority a matter to be kept within the estimates of the department; to the citizen it may mean a difference in his standard of living for years to come. To whom can the citizen turn in this predicament if not to his member of parliament?

Now that the proper time has come for me to speak, Mr. Speaker, I feel that some of the factual background from which the present argument arises would be of some assistance to the house. On February 12, 1954 an expropriation was filed on behalf of the Department of Transport affecting 164 separate parcels of land in the neighbourhood of Malton airport in my riding. The largest number of these parcels of land were owned by small holders, many of them holding land under the Veterans Land Act. I refer to remarks I made in the House of Commons on July 22, 1955, in which I said:

> In answer to a question of mine on May 4 I was advised that, of the 164 parcels of land affected, only 32 transactions had been completed. That is over the year, from the time that the owners of these lands were deprived of their ownership. No compensation had been paid to them some 15 months later. As recently as June 30 I wrote to the minister requesting additional information as to how many of these transactions had been completed. Although I had a letter in reply saying that the information would be obtained, up to this time I have not received that information.
> I suggest this is a serious problem, because many of these are individual home owners who have been deprived of the ownership of their homes, without compensation, and they are therefore deprived of the opportunity to relocate. They are deprived of the benefit of the increase in value of their homes, if the economy of the country is expanding, as we are told by hon. members who support the government.

That is what I said in 1955 in referring to the action of the Liberal government of the day. My interest in obtaining what I considered to be justice for these constituents was therefore a matter of public record for over four years next month.

In 1955 I was approached by Mr. and Mrs. Victor Drew, who were employees of the A. V. Roe plant, to act on behalf of Mrs. Drew arising out of notice that she had received that she would be required to go to the exchequer court. About the same time a number of others, all of whom were part of the original 164 expropriated and principally all veterans holding land under the Veterans Land Act, asked me to intercede on their behalf. I should also add that one for whom I acted found the offer of settlement negotiated satisfactory and accepted it.

After June 10, 1957 I advised those for whom I was acting as solicitor that I could no longer do so because I was a member of the political party which had formed the government. I inform the house at this time that at no time was a fee ever requested, offered or paid to me for any services rendered by me in the matter before the house.

Needless to say there was at the time, under the previous Liberal administration, considerable bitterness in the area about the way that the small landowners, mostly veterans, had been treated. It was now 2½ years after the date of expropriation. They had not been paid and the only recourse normally open to them, the exchequer court, was impractical by reason of a backlog of cases. These people felt they could not wait any longer.

As a practical way of obtaining speedy justice I made the suggestion to the Department of Transport that a new valuation be made by a qualified and competent person who had not previously been connected with this matter. After considerable discussion with the Department of Transport this proposal was accepted. It was my understanding, and the understanding of those home owners who agreed to be bound by the valuation, that this valuation would be acceptable to all concerned. Obviously there was a misunderstanding which arose in the following way. I believe the minister told me that the evaluations would be submitted to treasury board for consideration. The minister is equally sure that the assurances that he gave me were that the evaluations would be submitted to the treasury board staff, who were said to have great experience in examining real estate valuations put before them by various departments. This is the course that was followed by the Department of Transport. There was obviously a simple misunderstanding between the minister and myself regarding the terms "treasury board" and "treasury board staff". Valuations were submitted by the new valuator but they were not accepted by the Department of Transport.

The particular parcel of land involved in the proceedings before the exchequer court was a parcel of land containing a 5-room frame house on 4.36 acres of land. In the original pleadings in the exchequer court the Department of Transport claimed the property for $9,200 and my constituent valued her property at $20,597. The new evaluation placed it at $17,330.50. The present judgment is in the amount of $11,200, which was identical with the final offer made by the Department of Transport. It will be seen, then, that the representations made to the department on behalf of my constituent had the effect of increasing the original expropriation from $9,200 to $11,200, the figure approved by the court. This was an increase of $2,000, but $6,130.50 below the new valuation and $9,397 below the valuation originally placed upon the property by my constituent. I think it should be made clear at this point that differences of this sort between various evaluations particularly in expropriation proceedings, are not unusual.

Any home owner who has worked over a period of years to improve his property naturally thinks in terms of intangible valuations of location, sentiment and environment. They are not taken into account by a professional valuator. I say this is the common experience and that the differences in the figures I am quoting are not therefore unusual. Naturally I find myself in sympathy with the home owner and with all the others, many of whom were, like myself, veterans and residents of the general area. In the circumstances I had no hesitation, nor did I, nor do I consider it improper to have assisted their cause against the professional evaluations of the government. It was for this reason that I suggested the appointment of a new evaluator, because I felt certain that this would result in a more realistic evaluation and some degree of compromise between the low figure of $9,200 and the high figure of $20,597. Subsequent events proved this assumption to be correct.

It has been said that I gave instructions to the new evaluator that I instructed him to be as generous as possible. I appreciate the fact that the use of the word "instruct" is unfortunate because the plain fact of the matter is that I was in no position to instruct Clare or anyone else. I had known Clare and had in fact recommended him for the position because he was a well known real estate agent in the area and was regarded as highly experienced in valuing property there. His qualifications were checked by officials of the Department of Transport. I most certainly did make representations to Clare that feeling was high in the district, that home owners were not being fairly treated, and that the reason for this was the general feeling that the prices offered by the department were out of all reason. I said that his was a public relations as well as a valuation problem, a viewpoint that is so widely recognized that the negotiators of land values in some large corporations are called public relations officers.

I never at any time instructed the valuator to place a generous valuation and to that I pledged my oath. My idea of a proper valuation was, and still is, one which would take into account the harsh fact of expropriation, the heavy costs of moving and relocating, the long wait and the uncertainties of the four year period and those other human factors which are so often ignored in cases of this sort. I suggest that any hon. member of this house would not quarrel with that conclusion. All the steps which were taken by me in making these representations on behalf of my constituents were taken while sitting as a private member, without fee or other charge, and before my appointment as chief government whip.

There is a responsibility on members, a responsibility which we in Peel county acknowledge. It has been well stated by one whose reputation and experience we all respect, a former prime minister of Ontario, a former provincial member for my own county of Peel, the late Colonel the Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, who said:

> Political patronage has never appealed to me. I mean that I never felt I was representing just the Conservatives in Peel and that I should do things only for them. A man represents a riding and in that riding are all kinds of people with different sorts of political views. They have a right to look to me for help.

I offer that as my text on this occasion because it represents a principle of public service in and out of this house to which I give my full adherence. I shall continue in the future, as in the past, to work for and, if need be, to fight for the best interests of all the people of the great constituency of Peel as part of this wonderful country of ours.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with more interest, I think, to what has been said just now in the house by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) than we have to anything that has yet been said on this subject by any member on either side of the house. I must say that I should like to congratulate the hon. member on the tone of what he said. He showed respect for the house, for the traditions of the house and a proper sense of his own position which I think impressed us all—I know it impressed me.

However, I do not believe the hon. member has removed all the doubts that are in our minds. I propose to try, if I may be allowed, to consider the matter in the same tone, in the same temper as did the hon. gentleman. I want, first of all, to deal with the first point the hon. gentleman made. He said he thanks the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) for at last bringing this matter up in a fashion which has permitted him to speak in this house. It is with that statement that I must take issue at once.

It is open to any hon. member at any time that he feels there has been any reflection upon his reputation or upon his name as a member of the house to rise in the house at the first opportunity and make an explanation about it. That has been done countless times. It was done only last week by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) when a reflection was made upon him. As a matter of fact, it was something very close to a charge that was not withdrawn, and the hon. member who made it did not resign, I might add; but I do not want to get diverted into that matter. However, the hon. member for Laurier rose in his place at once and made an explanation. There was no hesitation about that. It seems to me that the only proper course for the hon. member for Peel to have taken—I said this in the house some days ago in reply to some of observations made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), I think on the estimates of the Minister of Transport, and I repeat it—as soon as the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson was made public was to come and give to us an explanation of these statements.

These statements were not invented by my leader or by any member of the opposition. As my leader pointed out today, we have been most scrupulous not to repeat anything about this case except what was in the judgment or what was said by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) in the house, or what was alleged to have been said by the hon. member for Peel outside the house. The only reflections or insinuations have been those that have been made by one or two hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and the Prime Minister. If the hon. member for Peel on the first day after the judgment was made public, had made the statement that he made to us today, while I do not say this matter would have been ended—there are certain features of it that I do not think can be ended even by his statement—I think the approach to the matter or the attitude of the house in respect of this matter would necessarily have been different. I intend to attempt to point out the respects in which I think we can now be said to be satisfied or, perhaps, I should speak only for myself; in fact, I have no right to speak for anyone but myself in this house. I should, perhaps, indicate the respects in which I feel satisfied and the respects in which I do not feel satisfied with the statement which the hon. gentleman has made.

I agree with him completely that a member of parliament has a duty to his constituents. I agree with him completely that a member should put the interests of his constituents before his own. I agree with him that no member can be too assiduous in the pursuit of the rightful claims of his constituents before the government. About those things I would hope no hon. member would quarrel. Despite claims that were made in the heat of debate the other day by the Minister of Transport, I do not think that many hon. members on either side of the house would claim that most of us do not take that attitude with respect to our constituents. I do not think the hon. member for Peel, who was very modest in his statement, was claiming to be unique in this regard.

I do not blame the hon. member for Peel for his impatience with the previous government for the long time it was taking in making these settlements. I do not mind saying that even hon. members who were members of the government were sometimes very impatient at the length of time that was taken in settling these expropriation cases. On the other hand, some of us who have had some experience with these expropriations—and my friend the hon. member for Laurier and I have had a good deal of it—know that very often there are two sides to the case and that in many cases where, on the surface, it appears to be a very easy and simple matter to settle, nevertheless when all the facts are known it is very far from easy or simple. Nevertheless, I quite agree that the hon. gentleman, as a member of parliament, had every reason to promote what he believed to be the honest interests of his constituents in getting a settlement, particularly when their homes were in question, as they were. I have no quarrel with the hon. gentleman, when he was a private member of parliament in the opposition for acting as solicitor for these people. I think that was a perfectly proper thing to do. I do not think there is anything wrong with it. If there had been anything wrong with it I think the law society would have dealt with it. There is certainly nothing that I can see that conflicts with his position as a member of the House of Commons.

I think that the hon. member showed considerable scruple in dissociating himself from this case at the time of the change of government when he became a private member supporting the government. I am not a lawyer but I do not think, unless he is a member of the government, that an hon. member supporting the government is precluded, any more than is an hon. member opposing the government, from acting against the crown. It does not seem to me that if one is not a member of the government this question arises at all; but I am not going to waste any time on that aspect. At any rate, the hon. gentleman, in a fashion which he considered to be proper and which certainly none of us would criticize, ceased to be a solicitor for the person in question. Again, with that procedure I have no criticism whatsoever, indeed, if anything, the reverse is the case.

Then we come to the next stage in the matter. I certainly do not blame the hon. member for going to the minister, who he no doubt felt would be more sympathetic to his representations than the previous minister, and asking him to try to speed this thing up. Obviously any hon. gentleman supporting this government would feel that they would do better than the former government and they would expect more results from the government. But when we reach that point I cannot any longer go along completely with the hon. gentleman. We are told this, and I am not going to attempt to quote from the documents unless I am asked to do so because the quotations have all been put in the record already this afternoon by my leader. I want merely to refer to them and I shall try to refer to them in summary form as accurately as possible. If I make any errors I shall be happy to be corrected.

The hon. member for Peel was told, according to the record, by the assistant deputy minister and by the minister himself, before Mr. Clare was appointed to appraise this property—and that is shown in the judgement—that an arbitrator could not be appointed under the Expropriation Act. I do not think there is any quarrel about that. What function then was Mr. Clare to perform. Notwithstanding this opinion of the assistant deputy minister of transport, concurred in by Mr. McNeill of the treasury board staff, and the deputy minister of justice, the minister saw fit to appoint an independent appraiser. What was the appraiser supposed to do? The minister had been told that it would be contrary to the law to do what was originally suggested by the hon. member for Peel.

There was this meeting in the minister's office about which the minister told us something the other day on his estimates and about which the hon. member for Peel told us something today. There was a misunderstanding. Obviously there must have been a misunderstanding. But why was that misunderstanding allowed to continue and on the basis of that misunderstanding, why was this woman who had this property, believing there was a situation existing which did not exist, allowed to be put to the expense of taking the case into the exchequer court? Why, when this misunderstanding was discovered, was this lady not told that there had been a misunderstanding, and that this whole business did not represent any agreement at all? Why did the hon. member not tell her that he had been mistaken about what the minister had told him and that the minister had never agreed to send this valuation to treasury board with his recommendation?

What does the hon. gentleman have to say about the statement in the judgment, a statement repeated more than once, when he said under oath that he understood that these valuations would be accepted by the government? That has not been explained. I want to be absolutely and scrupulously fair in this matter. I will put that question again. What does the hon. member for Peel say about that?

The hon. member for Peel, under oath, said he believed that the crown as well as the owners were bound by these valuations, and it was on the basis of the hon. member's statement that the suppliant took her action and put herself to the expense she did. When did the hon. member discover that there was not such an understanding. Did this occur before he appeared in court or after? There is no evidence in the findings of the judge that the hon. member had in fact discovered his mistake. I have not got the whole transcript of evidence and have only the findings of the judge but if the hon. member discovered this misunderstanding before the action was taken or before the case came to trial I would assume that, in the evidence he gave at the trial, he would have dealt with that point and, according to the record, he did not deal with it in the trial, and therefore presumably the hon. member for Peel never discovered this misunderstanding.

That raises another very big question. At this point I do want to quote from the findings. At page 10 the judge says:

> There was, of course, the conflicting evidence of what took place in the minister's office on September 19, 1957, Mr. Pallett asserting that the minister had accepted his proposal that there should be a valuation by an appraiser approved by the department and acceptable to the owners and that both the owners and the minister acting for Her Majesty should be bound by such valuations and Mr. Booth stating that the minister had not agreed to be bound in advance by such a valuation.

That is what the judge says was stated in the court by the two principal witnesses. That is absolutely conflicting evidence. Are we to believe that when the minister declined or failed—and perhaps I should not use a verb at all—when the minister at any rate did not send this valuation forward to the treasury board then it is difficult for anyone to believe that the hon. member for Peel was not advised. It is difficult to believe that, at that stage, the hon. member would not have gone to the minister and asked why the valuation had not been sent to the treasury board.

It is very difficult to believe that, having been told what the reason was, the hon. member would not have gone to this lady and said, "This is the reason why this was not done." But no such evidence was given in the court. The hon. member gave the evidence that he believed this valuation was going to be accepted and he has not told us when he became disabused of this belief. That, it seems to me, is the nub of the whole matter.

Here we have a situation involving two hon. members of this house. The Minister of Transport has said one thing here in the house on his responsibility as a minister of the crown, and the hon. member for Peel has stated the precise opposite under oath in one of the high courts of the country. This has to do with something of real importance. This concerns the disbursement of money out of the treasury of the country. That is what is at issue, and it is not a trivial matter at all. I am not certain of the amount involved but I am told that the amount in all of these cases would probably be about $50,000. I must say that personally I do not regard $50,000 as a trivial sum at any time, and although some hon. members of this house may view an amount of this nature in a different light, it is not the amount that is important but rather the principle that is involved.

This was a question of the protection of the treasury on the one hand, against the interests of a group of constituents on the other. It seems to me that the House of Commons, which has the duty of protecting the taxpayers' money above all its other duties, is entitled to have a conflict of this kind resolved in no uncertain fashion.

There is another problem that was not resolved because of the persistent refusal on the part of the Minister of Transport for the most trivial of reasons to discuss the findings of the court. The minister kept saying, "No one would expect me to discuss the judgment of the court." Of course, I am not a lawyer and neither is the minister, but Your Honour is and the Prime Minister is, and even the Prime Minister could not stomach this argument—if I may put it that way—of the Minister of Transport because at one stage—and I have the Hansard reference here—the Prime Minister suggested that the judgment was still sub judice and for that reason the minister should not discuss it. Actually, of course, the references to the hon. member for Peel and to the minister were not and could not be sub judice.

All that was sub judice, if indeed anything was,—and the hon. member for Laurier argued that nothing was—was the judgment, the amount of the award. Certainly the minister had a perfect right to controvert the statements which were made in that finding by the judge if they required to be controverted. I suggest he did not have just a right to do so, but he had a duty to do so, and he failed in that duty to this house. In my submission he failed to account adequately for his stewardship of his department by failing to answer those questions.

I also submit that the minister has never told us why he appointed this so-called independent appraiser and what he envisaged this man could do. Hon. members will recall that he had been advised by the advisers whose advice he seems to have taken throughout the whole case—his assistant deputy minister, Mr. MacNeill, of the treasury board and in one instance reference was made to the deputy minister of justice—that there could not be an arbitration under the Expropriation Act. The vast bulk of these cases having been settled on a certain basis, it is difficult to see what the minister could conceivably have thought this appraiser could accomplish except to make the same valuations as had been made five or six times before.

I am told that appraisers do not work for free. I have not looked up the record to see precisely what this gentleman was paid but he certainly was paid some of the taxpayers' money and that, to us, obviously was wasted. It was wasted because these appraisals were of no value. Not only was it wasted but it had the effect of resulting in litigation of a character which may have cost the taxpayers even more.

But what I ask myself is, what did the minister think he was accomplishing by appointing this appraiser? What did he think this appraiser was going to do? Did the minister for one minute think that if these appraisals were higher than the other appraisals on which the department had already settled he could recommend that the department and the treasury board should accept and pay larger sums to these owners on a voluntary basis than had been paid to other people in similar circumstances? Did the minister really think that the government of Canada could treat citizens in that fashion? I suggest that it is almost preposterous to suggest such a thing. That these people could have gone into the courts and taken their chances and perhaps have got more than other people who settled voluntarily is one thing, but that the government of its own motion should make fish of one and fowl of another is surely a preposterous idea. It seems to me the house is entitled to know what was the purpose of appointing this appraiser, what it was expected to accomplish and what would be accomplished.

Now I come to the other question of whether or not the appraiser was instructed. On that of course, I do not intend to quarrel with the hon. member for Peel. The hon. member for Peel has said that the witness who gave evidence in the court gave evidence which was not true. The hon. member is a member of this house and he said that on his responsibility as a member of this house, and I accept it without question at all. But that does raise another question. The hon. member for Peel—and this has been admitted by him and by the Minister of Transport, and it is not a matter in dispute at all—took the responsibility of recommending this appraiser and the minister took the responsibility of appointing him. The minister says an investigation was conducted into this man's qualifications, and we have, of course, some recent evidence on this subject which I am not going to labour at all. However, I have a cutting here from the Regina Leader-Post of June 18, 1959, which quotes the executive director of the appraisal institute of Canada as follows:

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

—in Regina Thursday the land appraiser involved in the House of Commons hassle over land in the Toronto area is not a qualified appraiser.

Director W. N. Mulock said the Toronto appraiser J. E. S. Clare "is not a qualified member of the appraisal institute, nor has he ever belonged to the institute."

I am not going to make any more of that except to bring it before the house as another bit of uncontradicted evidence that the committee we are asking to have set up should resolve.

The other point I want to make, which seems to me to be perhaps the only other point I can usefully make, is this. The hon. member for Peel while he was a private member, as he himself has said, undertook to further what he conceived to be the legitimate interests of a group of his constituents. In doing so, because there was what he and the minister both called a misunderstanding between him and the minister, he led those constituents to believe—he did not deny this; in fact he admitted it quite openly—that he had on their behalf reached an agreement with the minister that the government as well as the owners would be bound by this appraisal. In other words, far from helping these constituents he in fact, if I may use a popular expression, led them down the garden path. I do not for a minute suggest that he intended to but that is what happened. These people, or at least one of them, were put—did the minister wish to ask a question?

Mr. Fulton: What about the extra $2,000 by which the award was increased? It is not a negligible amount.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not forgotten about that at all. It seems to me that if the exchequer court was going to allow an extra $1,000—

Mr. Fulton: Two thousand.

Mr. Pickersgill: —$2,000; if these people were not satisfied to accept the same kind of settlement which had been arrived at with the other people, the exchequer court would probably have allowed that much in any event. But there were two actions here, I do not imagine that in the courts two actions come as cheap as one. It may be that there could have been a settlement without any action, and that was indicated before action was taken, as is shown in the judgment. The department felt that this $11,200 was open for acceptance before action was taken, and indeed it was the offer on which the learned judge based his judgment. Therefore, if this litigant had known for sure and been given an unqualified assurance of what the minister is telling us now, namely that there was a misunderstanding between the hon. member and the minister, it seems highly improbable that any such action would have been taken, because this action was taken, as hon. members know, by a leading counsel in the city of Toronto, an eminent member of the bar who I have personal reason to know has been not unsuccessful in actions against the crown. It is very unlikely that a conscientious and able counsel would have advised his client to enter into an action if he had been advised in advance by the hon. member for Peel that there had been a misunderstanding and that no such agreement existed.

It seems to me that that comes right back to what I have said from the start is the nub of this case, that this litigant was allowed to go into court believing, and having every reason to believe, because she had been so assured by the hon. member for Peel—and we have no evidence that she was ever told the contrary—that an agreement had been made between the minister and the hon. member for Peel of the character that the hon. member for Peel said under oath existed. He said he believed it existed. Then we are told that it was a misunderstanding, and parliament has to be satisfied with that. I just do not think that when we are dealing with public money and the good faith of a minister of the crown that is good enough.

It seems to me that whether or not this matter be a question of privilege—and while we submit to Your Honour's ruling, it is very hard sometimes to submit—there can be no question of the impropriety in the first place of appointing an appraiser to perform no function that we have been told about that could be useful; to spend public money on this appraisal that could not possibly have the effect that those agreed in advance to be bound by it believed it would have.

There is also the contradiction between the statement of a minister of the crown, a member of this house, and another member of this house who today occupies the high and honourable position of chief government whip. I therefore submit, that the government—and the Prime Minister owes it to the house—should bring this matter before a committee and have it cleared up.

Before I resume my seat, if I have any more time, I should like to remind hon. members that in the year 1953, not long before I became a member of this house, another case arose in which the name of an hon. member sitting on the government side of the house was brought into question, not in the house at all, not in a judgment of a court, but by some articles in a Toronto newspaper. What happened in that case?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You had better give the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister says I had better give the facts. I have given all the facts that I intend to give about that case. If the Prime Minister wants to supplement the facts he is perfectly welcome to do so because there were no other facts that I know about. There were insinuations in the article in the newspaper, and I am not going to repeat those insinuations at all. There were insinuations affecting the conduct of a member in his relations with someone who had a contract with the government, but not affecting his relations with the government; affecting his relations with a contractor who had one or several contracts with the government.

What happened in that case? The hon. member in question came into the house of his own motion. I searched Hansard quite diligently and I have not found any reference made by any other hon. member to that hon. member's connection with the matter until he came into the house, or indeed afterwards, so far as that goes. He came into the house of his own motion made a statement very similar to the statement made today by the hon. member for Peel, in which he stated on his honour that he had no kind of improper connections whatsoever that affected him as a member and he put his seat in jeopardy. That is what happened in that case.

I do not say for a minute that the hon. member for Peel should have put his seat in jeopardy; I am not making any such suggestion. But I am saying that what he should have done at the very beginning of this matter—and I come back to this again—is to have come into this house at once and explained to hon. members in the frank way he did today precisely what had happened. He did not need to ask for an investigation. There is no compulsion on him to do that. My hon. friend from Laurier did not ask for an investigation the other day. He simply got up and stated the facts, and that was the end of the matter.

There was another occasion, of course, in that parliament before I became a member of parliament—the Prime Minister will remember it very well—when the leader of the opposition made insinuations and charges and more about a very distinguished member of the government, and that member of the government on two different occasions took immediate advantage of the first possible opportunity to reply to those insinuations. There is nothing new about it. What is new about this is that the hon. member for Peel did nothing about it for all this long period of time. Why, it is hard to understand. It is very hard to understand why now. What is even harder to understand, what is even more difficult to reconcile with the proprieties, is that the Minister of Transport, having read in a judgment of a high court that a member of this house, the chief whip of his own party, had said under oath that he had made an agreement of a certain character with the minister, should not have undertaken action on his own and at once to explain what the real facts were. The minister still has not told us when he told the hon. member for Peel about this misunderstanding, nor when he told the other persons involved about the situation. There are still many unanswered questions about this matter and it is to resolve those questions which still affect the word given by a member under oath in a court, and the word given on his responsibility as a minister by a minister of the crown here in this house, that we believe this motion should pass.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, the reason that prompted me to take part in this debate is more than anything else—and I wish to emphasize this fact —the extraordinary and, as a matter of fact, the very revealing attitude that the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) adopted in dealing with this matter ever since it has been brought into the house. Indeed, it is because of the attitude of the Prime Minister that the house and parliament are forced to make an investigation into a matter which should have been brought before a special committee which might have studied this question far more fully than can be done in this House of Commons.

I consider as unparliamentary, irresponsible and unwise the fact that the Prime Minister did not of his own free will institute an investigation into this matter and offer some clarification of statements which are to be found in a judgment of the exchequer court in the Drew case. I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely contempt of parliament for the Prime Minister to refuse to institute a formal inquiry into the statements of the exchequer court which raises doubt not only as to the propriety of the role played by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) but which in fact imply that there may be some doubt as to how far the government, and particularly the Department of Transport, was committed and involved in negotiations or arrangements with persons concerned which, according to the judgment, were considered to be irregular.

I also submit that it was in a narrow and unjustifiable spirit that the Prime Minister attempted to place the opposition in the role of prosecutor and tried to force the opposition to make charges against the hon. member for Peel and to let us understand that if we were not willing to make those charges then we should desist completely from trying to obtain some information or some clarification of this most dubious matter.

The opposition has, of course, cited many precedents where such inquiries as were asked for by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) were made without formal charges being laid, and yet the Prime Minister refuses to have an inquiry made on statements which throw confusion and doubt, not only on the hon. member for Peel but on the activities of parliament, in that it places members of parliament in an unfavourable light. As regretful as this fact may be, I am quite sure that no one in this house will deny that there is unfortunately a large number of people in Canada who feel that politics and politicians are not necessarily synonymous with objectivity and with honesty.

Leaving the records of the court in this particular case as they stand without some explanation will not to my mind help to dissipate the erroneous but nevertheless harmful opinion that many people have of politicians. I submit that no government and no party have the right to allow doubts reflected on the activities of a member of parliament in a transaction which involves the government, and contained in an official document as public as a court judgment, to remain on the records without taking every possible and conceivable means of clarifying all the doubts once and for all, and that not only in the interests of the hon. member for Peel but in the interests and to preserve the prestige and the dignity of parliament and parliamentarians.

I am rather surprised that the Prime Minister and the other members of the government have approached this matter from a rather narrow point of view and that they have so soon forgotten the wonderful speeches they made on how necessary it was to preserve the dignity and the rights of parliament. It appears to me that the true obligation and the true prestige of this house lie not so much in prosecuting or condemning an hon. member as in not allowing anything at all to impair the dignity and the prestige of parliament and that we should do all we can to safeguard and, indeed, to enhance and increase the confidence and the faith of Canadians in parliament and in parliamentarians.

I feel that the Prime Minister's attitude and decision with respect to this matter have all along been contrary to the best interests of parliament and, indeed, contrary to the best interests of the hon. member for Peel. From the moment the Leader of the Opposition questioned the Prime Minister on these important matters concerning the judgment of the court the house has witnessed the full scope of the Prime Minister's parliamentary tactics, but we have not obtained one solitary piece of information concerning the point at issue. In answer to the Leader of the Opposition's first questions on the matter the Prime Minister replied with what I considered to be one of the finest examples of the Prime Minister's doubletalk in which, of course, he said nothing and meant much less.

Mr. Churchill: What are you quoting from?

Mr. Cardin: Then the Prime Minister tried soft soap—

Mr. Churchill: Would you permit a question, please? You spoke about the Prime Minister's doubletalk. Will you give the exact reference?

Mr. Chevrier: Are you asking a question or making a statement?

Mr. Cardin: If the minister will look at Hansard—

Mr. Churchill: I am asking for the page reference in Hansard.

Mr. Cardin: I am not quoting anything, but if the minister is interested he will be able, if he can read doubletalk—

Mr. Churchill: You are not quoting anything. You are making a ridiculous statement.

Mr. Cardin: Then, Mr. Speaker, when the doubletalk did not work the Prime Minister tried the soft soap method along with the cunning smile we know so well and the sly references. But even that did not work so he tried the old method of trying to divert the attention of the house from the main topic by attacking the opposition and by also introducing a procedural harangue. Finally, the Prime Minister resorted to the more natural characteristic of his government, that of utilizing an appalling amount of arrogance smothered in sanctimony. Incredible as it may seem, the government in the space of two short years has achieved a degree of domineering arrogance that the Liberals could not possibly have acquired in 100 years.

Mr. Ricard: I think the hon. member does not understand the words he is saying.

Mr. Chevrier: He understands much better than you do.

Mr. Cardin: Not only has the house not yet received any information or any clarification with respect to a transaction which from the judgment of the court itself one could consider as irregular but it is still the intention of the Prime Minister not to give members of the house any information on this important and dubious question now before us.

Mr. Churchill: That is not true.

Mr. Cardin: The result is that a comparatively simple problem, which could have been cleared up long ago by an adequate statement from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) or even the hon. member for Peel, has turned into something much more important and much more serious—

Mr. Walker: A witch hunt.

Mr. Cardin: —than the statement of the court with which we are now concerned. The question now is, what does parliament do with a government having an overwhelming majority which absolutely refuses to have a proper inquiry made into statements of a court of justice which imply irregularity on the part of a government member in a transaction in which the government is involved and which cries out for explanation and clarification? There is only one thing that can be done about this matter and I am sure that Canadians will not miss the opportunity of doing so at the next federal election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grills: That is what you are working for, eh?

Mr. Cardin: We are asking that justice be done.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Gimli airport.

Mr. Cardin: In spite of the statement made by the hon. member for Peel, for whom I have the greatest respect and, indeed, the greatest of friendship, I would feel that the reasons that he gave for not participating sooner in this debate were a little weak. I believe I am on far firmer ground when I say that, and I am far closer to the truth if I say that I think the hon. member for Peel received instructions not to take part in the debate prior to this time and to forgo the opportunity to speak on his own behalf.

An hon. Member: Strictly supposition on your part.

Mr. Cardin: Perhaps, but the supposition I am making now is certainly as strong as the statement the hon. member made a while ago. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it seems strange to me that the hon. member would not take the opportunity of answering the doubts which, as other hon. members on this side of the house have stated, arise not from the Liberal opposition but from statements in a court of justice which I feel sure the hon. member owed it to himself and to the house to clarify.

Mr. Churchill: What doubts?

Mr. Cardin: Indeed, if the house is now faced with a motion of non-confidence it is because the opposition felt that the hon. member for Peel should have the opportunity of answering and clarifying these charges.

Mr. Churchill: What charges?

Mr. Cardin: The insinuations that are contained—

Mr. Harkness: The insinuations you made.

Mr. Cardin: —in the court judgment.

Mr. Churchill: What insinuations?

Mr. Harkness: The insinuations you people over there are making.

Mr. Ricard: "Insinuation" is right.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not what the Speaker decided. You had better read the judgment.

Mr. Harkness: He used the right word when he said "insinuations".

Mr. Pickersgill: Who, the Speaker?

Mr. Cardin: I also feel that action on the part of the government aimed at clarifying the situation was called for, not only by the ordinary elementary rules of decency and justice toward an hon. member of the house but by our unanimous dedication to preserve the dignity of parliament and the rights and privileges of its members.

What value can we now place on the many pages of Hansard which the Prime Minister has filled with resounding verbiage as to the necessity of preserving the prestige and rights of parliament, in the face of his decision not to allow an inquiry which would achieve that aim, and the absence of which is detrimental to the dignity of parliament?

Did the Prime Minister really believe that the judgment of the exchequer court, which we now have before us, was the type of document which would add prestige and dignity to parliament? Did the Prime Minister think that he was adding to the rights and privileges of hon. members in this house when by his decision and his attitude he effectively denied the right of a member of parliament to answer on his own behalf, to give his side of the story about the matter mentioned in the court judgment? After all, he was a witness in the case. There is no doubt that the Prime Minister has retreated, and not gracefully at that, from his responsibilities to the house and to parliament in connection with this whole matter ever since it has been brought before the house.

I must say I was quite surprised indeed to read an article in the Saturday Gazette by Mr. Blakely, the headline of which read, "Prime Minister Opens Way for Pallett Debate". One could possibly get the impression from that headline that the Prime Minister was quite anxious to have this particular debate in which we might be able to clarify so many questions which are now so unclear. To anyone who has been following what has been going on in this house in connection with this subject, nothing could be further from the truth. I would have thought that a headline which would have been more in keeping with the facts would have read something like this: "Prime Minister Shamed by Liberals into Opening Way for Pallett Debate". Even this, Mr. Speaker, would not be quite true because the Prime Minister did not open the way to the debating of this question. The way was already open to members of the opposition by the rules and regulations of this house to which Your Honour himself referred before the Prime Minister spoke on this matter. It was only after second thoughts, after realizing the opposition did have an opportunity of debating this question, that the Prime Minister thought he could be magnanimous about it and let the opposition debate the question, to which they had every right according to the rules.

"Prime Minister Opens Way for Pallett Debate". I only wish, Mr. Speaker, I could be so favourably understood and so well interpreted in statements by members of the press gallery as was the Prime Minister in this very difficult situation. There is no doubt but that Mr. Blakely must certainly have been working under a very serious handicap in order to be able to arrive at that particular conclusion. Of course we in the opposition are not so unrealistic as to expect to be interpreted by members of the press gallery on the basis of the very small print that may or may not exist; we of the opposition would be very happy indeed, and very content if they would just write down what we say. With all respect for Mr. Blakely's opinion, I am still convinced that the Prime Minister did not open the way to the Pallett debate.

As a matter of fact, there has been a marked reluctance on the part of the Prime Minister in connection with this matter, not in order to accuse or condemn or punish the hon. member for Peel but to take the necessary steps to clarify this matter by allowing the hon. member to speak on his own behalf to dispel, if possible, any doubt that might have been created by the judgment. Indeed, this procedure would have let the people of Canada know that parliament does have the power to investigate and to stop practices that are not in the interests of parliament or the people. It is this reluctance, and the not too subtle use of the procedural technique by the Prime Minister to thwart the opposition in its attempt to clarify this matter which might easily lead us to believe that the government has something more serious to hide than what is contained in the court judgment.

Nor does it require much imagination to suspect that the hon. member for Peel might well be the victim of irregularities which stem far more from the partisan policies and practices of this government than they do from the hon. member himself. Has not the Prime Minister in his decision not to clarify this matter chosen to jeopardize, not only the dignity of parliament and the rights of parliamentarians but the reputation and career of one of his best members in order to save the face of the Conservative party?

Mr. Churchill: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Cardin: No matter how much hon. gentlemen opposite may protest, these questions are at the root of the problem that faces the house today. If the Prime Minister continues to refuse to clarify this matter, the answers to these questions will be in the affirmative. We will be justified in claiming that just as the government placed the interests of the Conservative party ahead of the economic stability of this country, as is exemplified by the huge deficit this year, so too they do not hesitate now to place the prestige of their political party before the prestige and dignity of parliament, before the rights and privileges of parliamentarians and even, Mr. Speaker, before the elementary principle of justice and decency toward a fellow Canadian, a colleague in this house, the hon. member for Peel, a living victim to the Conservative sacred cow.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the Minister of Transport going to enter this debate?

Mr. Hees: I think, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peel has cleaned up all the questions that remained to be answered. I do not believe there is anything else to be said.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment to the motion to go into supply now before the house. It was moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in these terms:

> In view of the reasons for judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson in a case concerning the expropriation by the crown of property at Malton, Ontario, and contained in sessional paper 237, a select committee be appointed immediately to investigate and report on all matters connected with this expropriation.

Since the Leader of the Opposition has made his very excellent speech outlining in a fair manner all the aspects of this case as set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) has risen to make a statement. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) has said, it is unfortunate that the hon. member did not take advantage of the right which he had heretofore to make that statement. While he said that he was unable to speak and felt that he was in a difficult position because of an earlier debate, still we all know in this house that the hon. member could have risen and could have made a statement on a question of privilege or even in the earlier debate. However, he made a statement today and in so far as I am concerned as a member of this house I accept the statement which the hon. member has made. I do not think any member in the house, if he understands his rights, privileges and obligations—and I am sure all of us do—would for one moment not wish to accept the word of an hon. member who rises in his place and says, "Here are the facts as I see them".

None the less, Mr. Speaker, in view of the motion which is before us it is still open to hon. members on this side of the house to place before you and the house, in speaking to this amendment, some of the difficulties which still lie in the way. I propose to do that and I hope that in the course of the intervention which I shall make I shall say nothing which will in the slightest degree be unjust or unfair to the hon. member. However, I want at once to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker and to the house, the entirely different attitude taken by the other side of the house in this debate from that taken in the earlier debate. I want to point out that at least in this debate we were listened to with attention and with care and were followed in the interventions which we attempted to make. That was not the situation on the earlier occasion.

On the earlier occasion we were attacked for lacking courage, being guilty of McCarthyism, being guilty of making innuendos and insinuations and the like. What has been the reason for the change in the attitude of hon. members opposite? Is it because of statements contained in the press? Is it because the government has begun to realize that there was something in the attitude of the opposition which asked for an explanation of the contradictions which existed? Be that as it may, I note with a great deal of satisfaction the change in the attitude in this debate compared with that in the earlier debate.

I say that the object of this amendment is to revive a matter which we tried unsuccessfully to bring before the house on a matter of privilege. We tried unsuccessfully to do it in a motion which was placed on the order paper by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and on which you, Mr. Speaker, ruled in a fairly lengthy judgment. I have no fault to find with that judgment. Indeed, I submit to the ruling of the Chair which is also, because of the appeal to the house, the decision of the house. But none the less I am quite at liberty to state that in the earlier debate we were prevented from bringing certain matters to the attention of the house for various reasons.

It seems to me that a supply motion is neither the time nor the place to discuss a matter of this kind. In my opinion a supply motion is the time to deal with matters concerning the non-confidence which the opposition has in the government. To my mind a matter of this kind should be discussed on another occasion and that is by way of investigation. I want to say here that this occasion provides me with an opportunity to make some comments in connection with the rights of the opposition in this house concerning the use of supply days. On more than one occasion it has been indicated in this house by the government that we should use supply days for certain debates.

Mr. Churchill: It is your choice, not ours.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a minute. The opposition is entitled to six supply days. They are set aside in the standing orders in order to permit the opposition, on motions to go into supply, to move amendments of non-confidence against the government. Surely, Mr. Speaker, what the opposition does on these motions, what subjects it chooses to debate, are prerogatives of the opposition, not of the government, and should be protected. There has been in this house when we move the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance an increasing practice to suggest "Oh, the matter is not important enough; we will give you the opportunity of discussing it on a supply motion on Monday". On two occasions when, from this side, we moved the adjournment of the house in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) rose—and I believe also the leader of the house—to say that this was a matter which need not be debated now but which should be debated on a supply motion, and immediately he said "I make that opportunity available". As Your Honour knows full well, the rule sets out clearly what are the reasons for the adjournment of the house on a matter of urgent public importance. The fact that there is going to be a supply motion is not one of those reasons. I therefore deprecate the attitude which is being adopted by the government and on the other side of the house in attempting to curtail the rights of discussion of the opposition by saying to them from time to time, "Oh, you are going to have a supply motion on Monday; raise the matter on that occasion". That procedure I say is an infringement upon the rights of the opposition and places an unfair limitation upon our freedom of action in moving supply amendments.

I should like now to pass on to another consideration in this matter. Why do we find ourselves today discussing this matter? Why do we find ourselves in effect discussing a matter of privilege on a want of confidence motion?

An hon. Member: That is the $64 question.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says: "That is the $64 question". If there had been an explanation of the contradictions found in the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson it would not have been necessary to raise the matter as one of privilege at all. But owing to the fact that there was no explanation of those contradictions the opposition now finds itself in its present position. Then one of the reasons why we find ourselves in this position is as a result of the refusal of the government to allow the matter to go to a committee for investigation, as sought by the motion of the Leader of the Opposition. It is because of that fact that we find ourselves moving an amendment to the motion to go into supply. But there are other reasons. Another one is the fact that the government took the position that the matter had to be dealt with by way of a charge, a contention which has now been clearly proven to be totally unfounded. If ever there was a straw-man put up by the government it was when it was stated, both by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) that a substantive charge must be laid by an hon. member of this house before a matter of this nature could be referred to a committee for investigation. You, sir, I believe clearly disposed of this fetish when in your judgment to be found at page 4930 of Hansard of June 19, 1959 you stated:

> On the authorities it appears to be open to an hon. member to confront the house with charges against another member implicit in documents in the possession of the house, but in my view the charge must be there.

Mr. Fulton: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: The point we are making is that in the judgment there are by implication statements and formulations in the effect and in the nature of a charge. In fact, there are several precedents which Your Honour referred to and which I will not go into again, namely the Schell and the Daoust cases. But there is also the Boothby case which is quite clear in its implication, where no charge was made and where Mr. Churchill himself said that no charge was made.

There is also the case in our own parliament, namely the Foster case, also known as the Garland case, to which I would like to refer in greater detail, not because a general mention has not been made of it already but because I feel that this is a clear precedent on the question of whether or not a charge should or should not be laid. A motion was made by Mr. A. K. Maclean on March 12, 1915—

Mr. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but it appears to me that he is now debating the point which Your Honour decided upon on Friday of last week.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) speak to that point?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that point of order is well taken. I say that in the course of this motion and this amendment I have the right to discuss the whole case and the judgment and thereby the reasons why a charge should not be made but a formulation be charged by way of implication such as set out in this case. Otherwise, if I am not authorized to do this, then surely I am not authorized either to put on the record the Boothby case which was discussed on an earlier occasion and certain aspects of which I wish to place on the record having regard to what has already been said in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: The decision which I made on the point of order was simply to the effect that it was merely a procedural decision and that that motion could not proceed as involving a prima facie question of privilege of the house. If the hon. member wants to refer to those precedents in connection with an amendment before the house I see no reason why he should not do so, but if he is debating the matters which were necessarily involved in my decision I would consider that he would be repeating and would be out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I just say to Your Honour that my intention is not to challenge in anyway the judgment. On the contrary, I am supporting the judgment by anything which I have said already, as Your Honour has probably noticed.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I have not made myself clear on this. The motion is that a select committee should be appointed. If the hon. member wishes to use the precedents of the appointment of committees I see no reason why he should not do so.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Your Honour. What I wanted to do was to cite a motion which was made by Mr. A. K. Maclean on March 12, 1915 as reported at page 946 of Hansard as follows:

> That sessional papers numbered 122 of the present session of parliament, and all other papers in relation thereto, being copies of correspondence between the Auditor General and the Department of Militia and other departments of government, laid upon the table of the house, in respect to expenditures under the War Expropriations Act, be referred to the committee on public accounts, with power to investigate the matters therein referred to, and to report thereon from time to time.

That is to a large extent the wording of the amendment which is now before Your Honour. If I may proceed I would go on to say that it was recognized during the course of that case that that investigation would imply an inquiry into the conduct of hon. members as indicated in the statement of Mr. Garland uttered in his defence which is to be found at page 947 of Hansard of March 12, 1915. Here I quote again from that Hansard:

> First of all, since I have become a member of parliament, I have not been in any way whatever interested in contracts with the dominion government, and have never been and am not now, directly or indirectly, by understanding, secret or otherwise, or in any other way whatever, interested in the dealings which Mr. Powell had with the militia department, or with any department.

Sir Robert Borden speaking on the motion realized clearly the same implications of the motion when he said:

> I am also the more inclined to accede to the motion of the hon. member for Halifax for the reason that a member of this house, the hon. member for Carleton, Ontario (Mr. Garland), came to me some time ago and asked that matters in this correspondence that have been commented upon especially in the press of this country as touching his own position in the house should be fully investigated at the earliest possible moment. When the hon. member for Halifax intimated across the floor of the house some time ago that he desired to make a motion for the purpose of referring this correspondence to the committee on public accounts, with the view to investigating the matter referred to therein, the hon member for Carleton at once came to me and asked that, so far as he was concerned, no objection should be made to that motion, and that the fullest opportunity of investigation should be afforded in the public accounts committee.

It would have seemed to me that had the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) or even the hon. member for Peel made a motion or suggested that the document which is Mr. Justice Thorson's judgment No. 122, be referred to the committee, that would have disposed of the matter and that certainly would have been in conformity with the precedent with which I was dealing.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned at six o'clock I was discussing the so-called Foster case, and I had put on record certain of the statements made by Sir Robert Borden. I think I can summarize the whole thing very quickly, and I am sure Your Honour will not be displeased at my decision so to do, by simply stating that in his summation of the report in connection with Foster, Sir Robert Borden at no point said that Mr. Foster had acted for his private gain or had been guilty of moral wrongdoing. Then Sir Robert went on to say:

> I am not concerned about Mr. Garland; I am concerned about Mr. Foster. He is not shown to have profited in any way by the transaction. He is a very young man, altogether inexperienced in business. What he tried to do was to try to get more money for the horses of his constituents.

The parallel I want to draw here is that what the hon. member for Peel tried to do was to get more money for the land of his constituents than the president of the exchequer court thought it was worth. So that there is a parallel to be drawn between these two cases. In the case of Mr. Foster, the so-called Foster-Garland case, there was no hesitation on the part of Sir Robert Borden in suggesting that the matter be sent to a committee notwithstanding that it was found therein that there was no moral wrongdoing in the case. I thought I should bring that to your attention.

The hon. member for Peel put on record what had been said by Mr. Burke in connection with the duties and responsibilities of a member of parliament, and I would like to put on the record also what one finds concerning that matter in Beauchesne's third edition, citation 20, page 11, which reads as follows:

> Every member as soon as he is chosen becomes a representative of the whole body of the Commons, without any distinction of the place from whence he is sent to parliament. . . . that every member is equally a representative of the whole has been the constant notion and language of parliament. Every member, though chosen by one particular district, when elected and returned, serves for the whole realm.

So in view of this citation, in view of the statement of the hon. member for Peel, and in view of the refusal of the Minister of Transport to make a statement, which I am sure the house would welcome, in order to clear up some of the contradictions, I should like to ask the Prime Minister who is now in his seat these questions. Does a member who unsuccessfully attempts to get funds from the public treasury for his constituents, which they do not deserve, serve in the public interest? Has parliament now decided that a member can with propriety and without any breach of the privileges of parliament go out and seek for his constituents funds from the public treasury which in the circumstances they are not warranted in having? Does a member who seeks to bind the crown by the imposition of valuations which were not in accordance with the actual and true market value of the land serve in the public interest? Has parliament now decided that a member can with propriety and without any breach of the privileges of parliament seek unduly to increase the actual or fair market value of land? Does a member who himself obtains from the valuator the valuations themselves contrary to the practice of the Department of Transport and then turns them over to the minister's executive assistant serve in the public interest? Has parliament now decided that a member can with propriety and without any breach of the privileges of the house act in this manner? Those, it seems to me, without in any way prejudging in any way what has been said by anyone who has taken part in the debate, are some of the questions which in the light of what has taken place in this and the other debate demand clarification on the part of the government.

Now may I turn to another matter which is also germane to the issue and it is this. It is amazing to me that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) has seen fit not to take part in this discussion. Here is a motion of non-confidence. It is a motion of non-confidence in the government affecting the Department of Transport, affecting the officers of the Department of Transport, affecting a member of parliament in so far as his relations are concerned with the Department of Transport, and the minister has seen fit not to say anything. He chooses to say nothing in this debate. He says that he cannot be expected to discuss the judgment. The judgment is not in appeal; the judgment is not sub judice. There are many of us who have discussed the judgment: the Leader of the Opposition at great length; the member for Bonavista-Twillingate; the member for Essex East (Mr. Martin); the member himself who is concerned made certain statements in connection with it; the Prime Minister; and also, I believe, the Minister of Justice. All of them saw fit to discuss the judgment, and still the Minister of Transport whose department is most vitally interested and certainly closely concerned has seen fit not to rise and take part in this discussion.

Why did the minister appoint the valuator Clare who turned out to be anything but an independent valuator? I think the minister owes it to this house to explain some of the contradictions that are to be found in the judgment. The hon. member for Peel in his explanation earlier in the day said there was a simple misunderstanding between himself and the minister. It seems to me that it is incumbent upon the minister to rise and clear up this misunderstanding. When did the minister tell the hon. member for Peel that he was mistaken? He said that he did not go to court because he was not subpoenaed. Everybody knows that that is no reason for not going to court. One has not necessarily to be subpoenaed in order to go to court. There were a number of contradictions affecting the minister, affecting a member of parliament and affecting officers of the Department of Transport, and still the minister saw fit not to clear up those contradictions. He might well have done so by going voluntarily to court.

Mr. McPhillips: I wonder if the hon. members would permit a question. He says it is not necessary to be subpoenaed. Would the hon. member suggest that a person could take the witness box by force?

Mr. Chevrier: I have not suggested that, and the hon. member has no reason for asking that kind of question because it is not prompted by the statement which I have made. The point that is being made is that the reason given for the minister not going to court was that he was not subpoenaed. Many people go to court without being subpoenaed; many people come forward and give evidence to clear up certain misunderstandings. In this case it seemed to us that there were a number of misunderstandings and contradictions arising out of the judgment and the order of the court which should have been cleared up. It seems to me that the public would have thought better of the minister if he had cleared up those misunderstandings. Does the minister realize that in effect this case was against him? Does he realize—

Mr. Fulton: What case are you talking about, the case you are making tonight?

Mr. Chevrier: I am talking about the suppliant's case, which in effect was a case against the crown in so far as the Department of Transport was concerned, and in that respect since the minister's department was called into question and is at issue, it would seem that he should have cleared up many of the misunderstandings that had taken place. Therefore, I say it is inexcusable, and it is difficult for me to understand why in a matter of this kind the Minister of Transport has not seen fit to take part in this debate. For this and other reasons, and also because of the precedents in the Foster case and the Boothby case which have been discussed already, it seems to me that there is a clear-cut case for the reference of this matter to a committee for investigation. Because of that, I am glad to support the motion made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the official opposition asked that a special committee of this house be set up to set the record straight on what can only be described as an extraordinary affair, an affair which involves the rights of individuals against the state as well as the handling of public funds. The evidence is contradictory and should be reconciled. It seems, Mr. Speaker, that some individuals agreed to accept for their homes a new and binding evaluation. They believed that when they agreed to be bound the government likewise was agreeing that it too would be similarly bound under this proposed method of settlement. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) told the court under oath that he had a commitment from the Minister of Transport. He told the Canadian Press the same thing after the trial. In addition, he had staked his reputation on his acceptance of the minister's commitment. It must have been so, because no one otherwise would have turned over to another party documents binding the party on whose behalf he was making representations. He must have had in his own mind a clear understanding that the commitment was in fact to be honoured.

The hon. member for Peel has stated categorically that he had a commitment from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees). The Minister of Transport has stated equally categorically that there was no such commitment. Here is an obvious clash of testimony. As the evidence unfolds, it becomes increasingly certain that the Minister of Transport should rise in his place in this house and clear the record for the sake of the hon. member for Peel.

The other day he indicated in this house his considerable concern for the little people who were involved in this transaction. He indicated that he was in fact the champion of their rights. I have additional testimony from one of these little people which I should like to read for the benefit of the house. It reads:

Dominion of Canada, Province of Ontario, county of York } In the matter of the expropriated area at Malton

To wit:

I, Gilbert George White, of the township of Toronto, in the county of Peel,

Do solemnly declare:

1. That my wife and I, prior to its expropriation by the dominion government, were the owners of part of lot 5, concession 7, county of Peel;

2. During the month of October, 1957, on the suggestion of Mr. John Pallett, we entered into an agreement purporting to be with Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada, a copy of which is hereto annexed and marked as exhibit "A" to this declaration;

3. The matter not having been satisfactorily settled, I telephoned the Hon. George Hees, Minister of Transport, at his Dunvegan avenue home in the city of Toronto, from a telephone booth in the Cloverdale shopping centre, Dundas street and No. 27 highway, township of Etobicoke.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this the original the hon. member is reading from?

Mr. Hellyer: This is a true copy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The original declaration?

Mr. Robichaud: Don't be so particular, dictator.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Robichaud: Sit down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a point of order. This purports to be a statutory declaration. The original must be produced and no alleged copy should be put on the records of the house, or what purports to be a copy.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not a copy.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Trinity would indicate what he is reading from—

Mr. Hellyer: This is an affidavit duly signed by Mr. Gilbert G. White before a commissioner of oaths for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that the original?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Hellyer: I continue:

4. My wife and Mrs. Aileen Drew, the owner of adjoining property, were present at the time.

5. I asked Mr. Hees what had happened to our signed agreements. He said he had signed the agreements and passed them on to the treasury board, and we would have our money in a week or two;

6. Approximately one month later, our compensation not having been received, I again telephoned Mr. Hees at his Toronto home. I asked him if the agreement had been turned down and he said yes. I told him I understood that it was an agreement we had signed with the government. He replied there was nothing he could do about it;

7. Further, that on or about September 15, 1958, I attended a meeting in the office of Mr. C. S. Booth, assistant deputy minister of transport, Ottawa, and that Mr. Pallett, Mr. Speers, land agent of the department in Toronto, were present. We discussed the agreement and the evaluation of our property, and I had a copy of the agreement and Mr. Booth had a copy of the agreement present.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the "Canada Evidence Act."

Declared before me in the township of Toronto, in the county of Peel, this 20th day of June, A.D., 1959.

Signed by Mr. Gilbert G. White

The oath was taken by Mr. A. B. Whitelaw commissioner, etc.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Robichaud: Sit down.

Mr. Fulton: I am merely asking the hon. member for Trinity whether he is prepared at once to make available the original of the document he is reading from?

Mr. Speaker: In this instance I think the hon. member for Trinity is reading a signed, statutory declaration. Is that correct?

Mr. Hellyer: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask whether the hon. member is prepared to table the document?

Mr. Hellyer: I am certainly prepared to table it with the consent of the house.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): And the covering letter.

Mr. Hellyer: Surely, Mr. Speaker, this alone is sufficient to justify a full and comprehensive examination by a committee as proposed by the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to table the statutory declaration which he has read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Robichaud: Come on, transport, get up and speak now.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, dealing first of all with what the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has just said, I have this to say. I have no recollection of any conversation regarding the Malton valuations with a Mr. White. The conversation he describes did not take place between me and anyone else at any time. It would have been impossible for me to make the statements attributed to me by Mr. White for the following reasons: First, there never was any agreement that the valuations made by Mr. Clare would be accepted by the department and therefore it would have been impossible for me to refer to any agreements. Second, I signed no valuations for submission to treasury board and no other documents, purposed by Mr. White to be agreements, for submission to the treasury board. Third, there never was any intention or indication of intention to have these valuations submitted to treasury board for consideration before they had been examined by the treasury board staff. This staff has had great experience in examining real estate values.

Had the treasury board staff been able to show that the new valuations were correct I would have submitted them to treasury board in place of the valuations previously submitted by the department. This, however, did not happen. Fourth, it is impossible for any minister of the crown to give assurance that payments will be made until those payments have first been authorized by treasury board. If Mr. White really believes the statement he has made it seems strange indeed that he did not arrange to be called as a witness before the exchequer court when the Drew case was being heard as I believe he has been closely associated with this case for some time.

Mr. Hellyer: Maybe he was not subpoenaed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as I said in the house, in my dealings with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) on the question of these valuations it was clear to me that he felt strongly that the previous valuations of these properties were too low and therefore were unfair to his constituents. I am convinced that his interest in this whole matter was to make sure that a fair valuation was placed on these properties. That, I feel, is the duty of every member of parliament in serving those he represents.

I agreed completely with the hon. member for Peel in believing that the misunderstanding regarding acceptance of the Clare valuations by the department may have arisen in the following way. I assured the hon. member for Peel that Mr. Clare's valuations would be submitted to the treasury board staff for examination. He may have understood, and he has said that he did, that the submission was to be to the treasury board itself in which case valuations would have gone forward over my signature indicating acceptance of them by the department. As he has indicated this afternoon, this misunderstanding occurred very naturally over the terms "treasury board" and "treasury board staff".

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) asked me three questions this afternoon which he did not give me a chance to answer and I am very glad to answer them now.

Mr. Pearson: You have a chance now.

Mr. Hees: First of all, I was asked why an independent evaluator was named. The hon. member for Peel came to me shortly after we formed the government in June of 1957. He told me that for several years he had been working on behalf of a group of people in the Malton district who felt that the valuations which had been put on their properties by the Department of Transport were too low and therefore were unfair; that he had brought this matter to the attention of the former government and had got nowhere at all with them and that he felt very strongly about the matter. He asked me to help him to find out whether or not these valuations were fair, and he believed very strongly that they were not. So, because this government is interested in helping the little people, the small people, the people who are normally pushed around by bureaucrats and who were pushed around by the former autocratic government which had been in power a great length of time and obviously cared nothing for the welfare of little people—

Mr. Pickersgill: How about Mr. White?

Mr. Hees: —and because this government believes it should go to every practical and possible length to make sure that the little people of this country—

Mr. Pickersgill: That the little people are fooled.

Mr. Hees: —receive a square deal and do not get pushed around, for that reason I agreed to the appointment of an independent valuator.

Mr. Pickersgill: Knowing you would not take his valuation.

Mr. Denis: A Tory organizer.

Mr. Hees: I did so to find out if there was anything he could bring to light which would indicate clearly that the previous valuations had been too low and were unfair, and I agreed that I would submit these valuations for scrutiny by an independent group experienced in examining real estate valuations because they examine a great many during a year submitted to them by all departments, that independent group being the treasury board staff.

The independent valuator, Mr. Clare, was appointed after the department satisfied itself that his qualifications were satisfactory and I enunciated those qualifications in the House of Commons when I was speaking on my estimates a week ago last Thursday. When Mr. Clare turned in his valuations for these properties they were submitted to the treasury board staff for examination and the result of that examination was that they believed that the valuations were too high, were not correct and could not be supported, and for that reason they were not submitted by me to treasury board for their approval. The matter then went to the exchequer court, which is the correct procedure when there is a dispute that cannot be settled in this way.

Mr. Pickersgill: That should have been done in the first place.

Mr. Hees: That deals with the first question, why was an independent evaluator appointed. Second, the Leader of the Opposition asked me why we attempted to bind the property owners only. The answer is that six valuations had been made by evaluators working for the Department of Transport and none of those evaluations had been accepted by the small group of home owners in question, even though a very large number of home owners in the area had accepted those evaluations. The department wanted to make sure that if the study by the treasury board staff indicated that these evaluations were correct, the evaluations submitted by Mr. Clare were correct and should be submitted to the treasury board for approval, and if the treasury board passed these evaluations, then this long drawn out matter could be virtually concluded.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition asked why we did not attempt to bind both the government and the property owners. The answer is obvious. It is impossible to bind the government in a matter of this kind, and he knows it quite well. But in an attempt to bring an end to this matter which had been started by the government of which the Leader of the Opposition was a member and which had dragged out for some years, and since there had been five or six evaluations previously which had not been accepted, it was thought this was the best way to bring the matter to a culmination.

Then, third, he has asked me, why did I not correct the misunderstanding in the mind of the hon. member for Peel? The answer is that I believed that he understood the basis upon which we were working while these evaluations were made, and of course when the evaluations were turned down by treasury board staff, then the whole matter was well known. I believe that concludes the questions which the Leader of the Opposition and others have asked me, including the hon. member for Trinity. I assume that disposes of the matter they have tried to raise.

In conclusion, I simply want to say this.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Does he want to make any comment on the questions which I asked him?

Mr. Hees: What were they?

Mr. Pickersgill: The most important question was, why he did not inform these people, the little people, before they went to the court that there had been a misunderstanding? Why did he allow them to go into the court? Why did he let the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) take this case into court with this misunderstanding?

Mr. Hees: In answer to the hon. member's question, the people knew quite well that these evaluations had been reviewed by the treasury board staff and had not been accepted.

Mr. Pickersgill: When were they advised?

Mr. Hees: I have no idea, but it was well known before this matter went to the court, otherwise the matter would never have gone to the court. The hon. member knows that quite well. I should like to ask him why he thinks the matter was taken to court if there had been an agreement between the department and the property owners?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will answer that right away. The answer is right in the judgment itself, if the minister had ever taken the trouble to read it. The matter was taken to court because the suppliant argued that there was an agreement and that was what the suppliant took to the court. If the minister took the trouble to read the document he would know.

Mr. Hees: The answer to that silly statement is that there was never the slightest evidence to these people, except through a misunderstanding between myself and the hon. member for Peel, that there had been any agreement whatever.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pearson: The minister forgot one of my questions. I asked him this, were the statements of the judge on page 7 of the judgment accurate, namely:

> It is clear, of course, that Mr. Pallett knew the need for approval of the treasury board, but he stated that the minister said that he would take the responsibility.

Mr. Hees: The responsibility I took was to submit these evaluations to the treasury board staff, and the hon. member knows that quite well. This has been made very clear indeed.

Now, in conclusion, I simply want to say this. The hon. member for Peel acted in every way as a good member of parliament should act. He felt these evaluations were too low. He felt the people in his riding were not getting a square deal, and he did everything possible to see that they got a square deal; no more and no less, and that is the duty of every good member of parliament. As I have stated earlier, that is something that the members of the party of which the Leader of the Opposition is a member find it very difficult to understand.

Then, the department of which I have the honour to be in charge, the Department of Transport, in every degree acted correctly in this matter from start to finish, and the Leader of the Opposition and every member knows it quite well.

Mr. Pearson: The department did, that is right.

Mr. Hees: My whole purpose in having a further evaluation made was to see if, in the past, there was anything to indicate the valuators had erred or done an injustice to the small people of Canada, the people in the hon. member for Peel's riding, the people who needed to have somebody stand up and fight their battles for them, something the Leader of the Opposition does not seem to understand. It was in that vein I tried in every way to find out if an injustice had been done. The advice I received from the experts indicated that it had not been done and therefore I did not recommend these evaluations to treasury board. I believe that, Mr. Speaker, sums up this whole question.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one other question.

Mr. Hees: Just a minute; sit down, I have the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I asked—

Mr. Hees: Sit down, I said.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am asking the minister a question. He said he would answer any questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member who has the floor does not yield, the member cannot ask a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to ask the minister a question, but if he is afraid to listen to it—

Mr. Hees: Go on; let us have it.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question is this. Did the hon. member for Peel know before he testified in court that there was a misunderstanding because the judge said that Mr. Pallett asserted that the minister had accepted the proposal. The judge said that Mr. Pallett asserted this under oath. I am asking the minister, did the hon. member for Peel know of this misunderstanding before he went into court?

Mr. Hees: That, Mr. Speaker, is obviously something that even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should know he must ask from the hon. member for Peel and not from me. He is asking me did somebody else know something, and obviously he should ask the person to whom he is referring.

I say that the reason this whole thing has been brought up is because the opposition cannot understand a first class member of parliament like the hon. member for Peel doing what any honest, hard-working, conscientious member of parliament would do, doing what every Conservative member of parliament does, and doing what members of the party of the Leader of the Opposition do not do. If they had done so, they might have been over on this side still. One of the reasons they are sitting over there is that in 22 years they forgot there were people like the small people, the little people, the ordinary people of Canada. That is why you are going to stay exactly where you are a long time until you move a little further down the aisle, until you move to Mr. Speaker's immediate left; and when you start your speeches, you will start off by saying, "Mr. Speaker, we in this group". Some day you and your party will remember that there are little people—ordinary people, the finest people in the world, the average citizen of Canada—to stand up for and fight for and that they should not be ignored as they were by the government of which you had the privilege to be members. On that day you may have some chance of coming back over here; but I would say that would not be for a generation or so.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the question, may I say that I interpret the motion as a declaratory one rather than one that would in itself constitute a committee. There is here a procedural problem in that rule 41 requires that 48 hours' notice be given for the setting up of a committee. I therefore read the motion as though it read "a select committee should be appointed immediately to investigate". The question is on the amendment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

LEGISLATION

The Senate—

The Speaker of the Senate—

174. Allowance in lieu of residence, $3,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

A—Department—

238. Departmental administration, $1,601,785.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

294. Departmental administration, including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $1,915,483.

Progress reported.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FURTHER ASSISTANCE FOR HOME CONSTRUCTION, TO FARMERS AND FISHERMEN, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee on Bill C-50, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, in the resolution introducing Bill No. C-50 presented to the house I gave a detailed outline of the nature and purposes of the proposed amendments to the Veterans' Land Act, and I do not think it is necessary at this stage to make a lengthy statement in regard to these same explanations. We are about to consider the bill clause by clause and I will be glad to comment on each one if necessary and answer any questions which hon. members may ask.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the bill was referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs and it gave it its usual careful and conscientious attention. In its report to the house the committee made certain recommendations, two of which were of a specific nature and involve amendments to this bill. These amendments are related to section 36 of the act, and section 76 as it appears in clause 20 of the bill. I am pleased to inform you, Mr. Chairman, that the government has given favourable consideration to these recommendations and my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will move the necessary amendments accordingly.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, we do not want, of course, to anticipate another resolution on the order paper. On the other hand the Minister of Veterans Affairs will recall that when his estimates were before the committee on veterans affairs it became evident that we have here under his administration an exceptional group that were experienced in appraising, particularly agricultural land. I wonder if the minister would indicate whether or not this force is likely to be utilized in connection with any extension of agricultural loans in other fields?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, this hardly comes under the first clause of this bill, and I assume the hon. member is speaking in general on the bill. The appraisers and supervisors to which he has called attention, of course, will still be continued under the Veterans' Land Act. The other bill to which he refers has not been before the house, and I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I could give the information which is contained in the bill of the Minister of Agriculture until such time as that bill is before the house.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I can well understand the reticence of the minister, but on the other hand it became very clear, not when we were in committee on this bill but when we were in the veterans affairs committee on the estimates of the minister that $5,480,000 odd is required to administer the Veterans' Land Act, and it was clear that this was in the nature of a subsidy. The actual effective rate, I think, for veterans loans was 3½ per cent. I am not going to refer to the current interest rate that is prevailing even on a short term basis, but everybody in this house is aware of it and it is much beyond the 3½ per cent effective rate for Veterans' Land Act loans.

There was evidence when the minister's estimates were before us, as I recall it, that the gross value of loans outstanding was, shall I say, $100 million. The minister will verify that figure for me. But in any event it was said by the officials that the amount of applications were not as important in the current year as they had been in past years and were likely to be less important in quantity in future years. It was also said that this fairly skilled staff of appraisers could not be reduced in proportion to the smaller amount of applications and the smaller amount of loans that would come forward henceforth under the Veterans' Land Act legislation.

It appeared to me at the time that I was a member of this committee that this highly trained body of appraisers should be utilized. In fact the director of the Veterans' Land Act said there was nowhere in Canada the equivalent either in quantity in talent or in ability, that is now available intact under the administration of the Veterans' Land Act for appraising and for advising on and supervising loans which might be made to agricultural borrowers. Surely the minister, knowing that this load of responsibility is going down not only in quantum dollar value of borrowings but in the number of applications, and since he knows that his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, is introducing a new element for farm borrowing, can tell us whether they got together to decide whether or not the state can save money by the utilization of this trained personnel for supervised loans to farmers.

The resolution in the name of the Minister of Agriculture indicates that for the first time some supervised loans might be developed. Is there going to be economy; is there going to be some kind of co-ordination, because I am satisfied that the same number of civil servants—and they are very capable —that we now have in the Department of Veterans Affairs supervising Veterans' Land Act loans of about $90 million to $100 million could take on an additional $100 million without any increase in over-all civil service staff. I wonder whether the minister has given this some thought?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is asking me to state what will be in the bill which will be brought down by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Benidickson: No; I am asking whether there has been some co-ordination, some discussion with your colleague about this?

Mr. Brooks: I will go this far and say that, since I realize the good judgment of the Minister of Agriculture and his department, I am quite satisfied that he and his department will use this splendid body of trained men. I agree entirely with my hon. friend that there is no body of men in Canada who understand better the situation as far as the supervision of agricultural work is concerned, whether it be the Veterans' Land Act or any other act, than these same supervisors who are part of the staff of the Veterans' Land Act. I might say that in discussion with the Minister of Agriculture and also in discussion with the Minister of Finance on the loans act, I understand it is their intention—and I think it is hardly fair to ask me to state what is in the bills which are to come down later—to utilize this splendid body of men for the supervision, not only of the Veterans' Land Act but also the loans act under the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Finance. Farther than that, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I should be asked to go.

Mr. Benidickson: I appreciate that. I think every member of the committee realizes that the load of loans in dollar volume do not justify the present staff under the Veterans' Land Act administration. I was satisfied as one member of that committee that the volume of agricultural loans could be supervised and handled and appraised by the same staff that is already in the civil service. When we listen to the proposals in the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture, I hope we will learn that some coordination has developed.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion we had on second reading and the very thorough discussion of this bill and the consideration that was given it by the committee on veterans affairs, I do not think there is any necessity to speak on the first clause. I think I shall deal with the suggestions we have to make when we reach the various clauses in question. However, I do want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the committee, after examining the administration officials of the Veterans' Land Act and other witnesses, were more than ever impressed with the excellent work being done by this administration and particularly with the, shall I say, supervised credit aspects of the administration which, in the opinion of the committee as a whole, regardless of party membership, sets a model for other agriculture credit legislation. Not only did the committee report unanimously, but so did also the representatives of the Canadian Legion. I just want to quote briefly from their submission to the committee as presented by Mr. D. M. Thompson, director of the service bureau, in respect of this bill. In this brief I read:

> The Canadian Legion welcomes this opportunity to appear before the committee concerning Bill C-50.
> We would, first of all, like to commend the introduction of this bill. We believe that the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act have been invaluable to those veterans established under this legislation, but this bill will make it even more valuable and will encourage many more to participate. We also want to express our appreciation to the director, and his staff for the excellent work that they have done down through the years to ensure that the full spirit of the Veterans' Land Act legislation has been met. They deserve a great deal of credit for the success of veteran farmers.

I might say that when this portion of the brief was read it was received with applause from all members of the committee.

The Legion did make a few suggestions with respect to amendments to this bill. They suggested that clause 15, which sets a ceiling of $10,000 on loans, should perhaps be increased to $10,500 to provide what they termed a slight cushion for increases which would probably occur between now and the next amending of the act. The committee discussed this matter and realized the Legion's intention in this respect, but did not see fit at the time to recommend this increase in the amount in clause 15.

Then, with respect to clause 20, they made further representations to increase the amount from $20,000 to $25,000. The committee discussed this recommendation quite thoroughly and with sympathy and I think it is fair to say that generally they came to the conclusion that, in view of the amount being raised to $25,000, they would be making a good step in that direction and possibly the experience of the years ahead would give us further ground for asking for the increase the Legion asked for in this section.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say at this time except in conclusion to say that, like other members of the committee—and I think this was generally expressed in the committee—we all hope that the new agricultural credit legislation to be introduced by the government will be patterned to quite an extent on the Veterans' Land Act legislation and that it will make provision for supervised credit. I want to say frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is the opinion of this group that with respect to the supervision of agricultural credit for other than farmer veterans we could not do better than utilize the trained personnel of the Veterans' Land Act administration.

Mr. Forgie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks regarding this legislation. In the first place, may I say that since I came to the House of Commons I have never seen a more efficient brief presented to a committee than that presented by the director of the Veterans' Land Act administration. I am disappointed that the legislation regarding extended mortgage credit to farmers has not been introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. If that legislation had been brought down before continuing consideration of this legislation I think we would have been in a position to discuss the matter much more intelligently than we are at the present time because we are in the dark as to what the legislation to be brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture really contains. For that reason I am more or less at a loss because I would have liked to be able to discuss this legislation on the basis of knowledge of what the other contains. As the director stated in his very excellent brief:

> By far the most important amendment proposed in this bill is the one providing for a very substantial increase in the part III loans available to veterans certified to be qualified as full-time farmers, and who are now, or who may be in the future, settled under part I of the act.

The definition of a family farm unit given by the director was accepted by the committee. He said that a family farm unit is an organized assembly of farm lands, farm buildings, livestock and equipment which can be managed and operated by the owner and his family and which, under his management, will produce enough net income to pay three-quarters of its cost with interest amortized over a period of 30 years, pay the cost of good maintenance, and leave enough to supply the farmer and his immediate family with a typical Canadian standard of living. The members of the committee agreed that the original loan ceiling of $6,000 to a full-time veteran farmer was entirely inadequate, and I do not think any member of the committee would disagree with that statement. Many of us were prepared to raise the ceiling to $25,000 but the amount agreed upon ultimately was $20,000 which I believe will be sufficient in the majority of cases. I expect that the new legislation to be brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture will have a ceiling of $20,000 as well.

The experience of the government with the Soldier Settlement Act was a very unhappy one, as we all know, and probably that is why we made haste slowly in the development of a satisfactory ceiling under the Veterans' Land Act. The Veterans' Land Act is terminable legislation. The Canadian farm loan board is self-sustaining and has been since its inception.

Mr. Benidickson: It even pays income tax.

Mr. Forgie: The Veterans' Land Act is definitely subsidized legislation but the statement of the Canadian farm loan board showed a profit of $210,000 last year, I believe.

Mr. Benidickson: And it pays income tax on its profit.

Mr. Forgie: Right. I have no quarrel, of course, with the subsidization feature of the Veterans' Land Act. The act was passed with that in view and I do not think anybody will quarrel with that situation. Nevertheless it differs from the Canadian Farm Loan Act which is about to be repealed.

If you will look at item 466 in the estimates, Mr. Chairman, you will see that the cost of administration of the Veterans' Land Act, Soldier Settlement Act and British family settlement is $5,125,331. The Canadian farm loan board, on the other hand, has paid its way to date. It represents sound Liberal administration in this regard. The 1958 statement shows a net profit of $210,000, with money borrowed from the government at 4⅛ to 4⅜ per cent. It will be interesting to see whether or not the new legislation to be introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, which will provide for a system of long term mortgage credits to farmers, will not become subsidized legislation as well.

I am not suggesting that the Veterans' Land Act should be self-sustaining. That was not the intention of parliament when the act was passed. But I am drawing the attention of members of the house to this difference between the Veterans' Land Act and the Canadian Farm Loan Act which is about to be repealed. I doubt very much if at the prevailing rates of interest the new legislation to be brought down by the Minister of Agriculture will be self-sustaining. I think it will be a subsidized piece of legislation.

As I said, I emphasize the point that the Veterans' Land Act is terminable legislation. Its operations will come to an end within a measurable time. The new farm legislation will probably remain in force for some years. According to the director of the Veterans' Land Act, since 1957 approximately 277 members of the Veterans' Land Act staff have passed examinations and qualified as appraisers. The Veterans' Land Act administration has on its staff just about half the accredited appraisers of Canada. Certificates of qualification are given by the Canadian institute of appraisers before whom these appraisers appeared to take their examinations.

The director further stated, as found on page 288 of the proceedings of the committee, that during the past year, in addition to their own appraisal work, these Veterans' Land Act appraisers have done appraisals for seven other departments of the government, including 348 for the succession duties branch.

The professional training these appraisers have taken has been of tremendous value and is vital to the success of any farm credit scheme. Men dealing with farm credit must, according to the director, possess special qualifications. They must, for instance, be able to judge whether the loan requested will make possible the assembly of a farm unit which will afford the farmer and his family a good living and at the same time maintain and pay for itself. We have the word of the director that such credit men are very hard to come by.

Out of 76,000 veterans settled under part I of the act, that is, full-time farmers, only 182 have had to be put off their properties for one reason or another. Although collections amount to over $20 million a year, under $12,000 remains due and owing over three years. This is a remarkable achievement. Full-time farmers under the Veterans' Land Act are being well served. As I said, loans under the act are showing a steady decline as is to be expected and before too long the Veterans' Land Act appraisers and supervisers will be compelled to seek other employment unless jobs are found for them. It has been shown that the important people in the Veterans' Land Act organization are the people on the ground, that is, the appraisers, supervisers and credit men.

The director stated that his men are well trained and experienced in assisting farmers to prepare plans for the organization and operation of their units. He pointed out that much of their time is spent on this and in going with the farmer to visit successful and well organized operations. In the final analysis, the director said, the plan must be the farmer's own and completely acceptable to him because he is the man who has to make it work.

If these highly trained officials were not available the administration of the Veterans' Land Act would be seriously handicapped. So, Mr. Chairman, the administration now has a staff of highly trained men who can not only handle the additional work brought about by the extra farm credit set forth in the amendment of the Veterans' Land Act but can, I believe, take over the appraisal and field work required in the administration of the new legislation about to be enacted and also in connection with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The director of the Veterans' Land Act administration assured the committee that he not only had a highly qualified administrative staff but a very capable group of appraisers and credit advisers. He further stated, and this is significant, that without this efficient organization he would not be prepared to recommend the type of credit legislation introduced by this amendment which raises the permissible amount of the loan for a full-time farmer to $20,000. In speaking at Edmonton last year the Minister of Veterans Affairs said:

> Undoubtedly a good deal of the credit for this fine record belongs to the Veterans' Land Act field supervisors who have become experts in advising the settlers on how to use their resources to the best advantage in order to neutralize, to some extent at least, any unfavourable prices for farm products. The Veterans Land Act officials are presently engaged in a survey to determine what is needed to improve the incomes of our full-time farmers. So far they have analysed reports on the farm business of over 3,000 settlers and have found that the key to the problem for most of them is more capital. The survey is continuing, and we are studying the possibility of making more supervised capital available to these farmers.

I believe that is the statement the minister made. The survey has now been completed on 5,000 farms and a report made to the minister. The present amendments, I am quite satisfied, stem from the reports on these 5,000 farms.

As we know, it is the intention of the administration to repeal the Canadian Farm Loan Act and introduce other legislation. The Canadian farm loan board is short of qualified appraisers and credit advisers such as those possessed by the Veterans' Land Act administration. It was pointed out by the chairman of the Canadian farm loan board that 25 per cent of the loans they have made have been for consolidation of debts, and it may be that there has been a significant increase in loans for this purpose. Many farmers, apart from veteran farmers, really cannot make a go of it because their acreage is too small, the amount of livestock inadequate to operate economically, or they lack farm machinery.

The amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act in 1958 did not result in any improvement in conditions prior to the amendments, other than to provide additional funds which will be increased when the Minister of Agriculture introduces his long awaited farm policy and presents legislation necessary to carry into effect the proposed measure for long term mortgage credit. The opinion expressed by the two largest agricultural organizations in Canada is to the effect that, with its present administrative set-up, the Canadian farm loan board cannot base its lending decisions on the intimate knowledge of farming conditions and appraisal of the personal capacities of the borrower which are necessary to a flexible and helpful lending policy. These organizations recommend the setting up of regional advisory committees which could work with the loan board officials. Mortgage and insurance companies can find more lucrative and less risky loans than farm loans, and so the government must find a practical source of credit for our farmers, especially long term credit with reasonable interest rates. At the present time the ceiling for loans under the Canadian Farm Loan Act is $15,000. As we all know, it is expected and I am quite sure it will happen when the new legislation is introduced that this ceiling will be increased to $20,000 to conform to the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. gentleman confused between the Veterans' Land Act and the Canadian farm loan board? They are two entirely different matters. The question we have before us is the amendments to the Veterans' Land Act and the hon. member is discussing the Canadian farm loan board which may or may not come up later.

Mr. Forgie: I quite appreciate that, but what I am leading up to is that legislation will be introduced which will eventually lead to the repeal of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, the introduction of farm improvement loans as well as these amendments to the Veterans' Land Act. It is a question of economy of operation, and that is the point to which I was coming, if the hon. member will let me do so.

As I was saying, mortgage and insurance companies can find more lucrative and less risky loans than farm loans, so the government must find a practical source of credit for our farmers, especially long term credit with reasonable interest rates. At the present time the ceiling for loans under the Canadian Farm Loan Act is $15,000. This ceiling will be undoubtedly increased to $20,000 to conform to the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act. There is no central body responsible for coordination of the farm credit service. This is a deficiency that could be remedied by the creation of a farm bank, and that is the policy we on this side of the house will enunciate when the legislation is introduced by the Minister of Agriculture.

I think that is about all I have to say at the present time except that, as my colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has stated, we all hope that these experienced men with the Veterans' Land Act administration will be afforded the opportunity to continue in their useful service which they have been performing for the past four years.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, in his opening remarks the minister referred to two amendments which resulted, I think, from an examination of sections 36 and 76 of the act. I believe these two amendments were recommended by the committee. However, there was a discussion of another possible amendment in the committee which revolved around the position of those veterans who have been considered as already established under this act.

These veterans fall into two classes, those who have received their title and those who have continued to leave their title with the Department of Veterans Affairs. It appears that those who have left their titles with the department, although they are established, are eligible to receive further loans under this act, while those who have accepted their titles are not. A considerable amount of time was given over to the discussion of this point in the committee. Some members felt that when a veteran was established, he was established once and for all and there was no further obligation or commitment to do anything else for him. There were some members who contended that it would be introducing a new principle to establish a veteran twice if he were to receive loans under this act.

There were others, and I was included amongst this second group, who felt that although a veteran had been established it would be the wish of parliament and I am sure of the department that he should remain established. We are all aware of the changing conditions which are taking place so rapidly that a person's income can be affected overnight. If a veteran needed more money to enlarge his operation or to get more modern equipment in order to remain an economic unit we felt he should be entitled to receive it under this act. Since those who had elected to leave their titles with the department appeared to be eligible for this we saw no reason why those who had accepted their titles should be excluded.

There was no definite decision on this matter in the committee, but it was something we hoped the minister and his colleagues would consider favourably in the case of veterans who might need additional assistance, even though they might have been considered to be established. In my opinion it is unfortunate, as other members have pointed out, that this legislation is being dealt with before the new legislation or the new amendments to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Board Act are brought in by the Minister of Agriculture. We do not know what terms will be available to farmers under that piece of legislation. We are all anxious that under this legislation the veteran should at least be treated as generously as the non-veteran under the Canadian Farm Loan Board Act. In the case of the veteran who has already been established, we feel that he would like to remain under the Veterans' Land Act, and we hope that the treatment he will receive under this legislation will at least be the same as that which he would receive under the Canadian Farm Loan Board Act.

There was just one question I should like to ask before I sit down, Mr. Chairman and it is not one to which I think we obtained a definite, clear cut answer in committee.

The question is this. How much actual mortgage debt is outstanding now under this act? How much in loans is still outstanding under the present act?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I do not believe I could give the exact amount. I will give the answer on my estimates. As far as the loans are concerned and as far as payments are concerned, I might say that I think there is less than one per cent owing by the veterans to the department. As far as their loans are concerned, they are almost 100 per cent complete. The other information I will have for the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo on the estimate.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Monteith (Perth) moved:

That Bill No. C-50, an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act, be amended as follows:
(a) by adding thereto, immediately after clause 9 thereof, the following clause:
"10. (1) Subsections (1) and (2) of section 36 of the said act are repealed.
(2) Subsections (4) and (5) of section 36 of the said act are repealed".

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Monteith (Perth) moved:

That Bill No. C-50, an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act be amended by renumbering clauses 10 to 20 thereof as clauses 11 to 21 respectively.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall new clause 10 carry?

Clause 10 (new) agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 20 inclusive (old clauses 10 to 19 inclusive) agreed to.

On new clause 21 (old clause 20):

The Deputy Chairman: There is an amendment with respect to section 76 under part III with regard to farm improvement assistance.

Mr. Monteith (Perth) moved:

That Bill No. C-50, an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act be amended by striking out lines 4 to 8 on page 12 thereof and substituting therefor the following:
"76. Notwithstanding anything in this part, no loan shall be made under this part
(a) except with the approval of the minister, to a veteran who is in default under a part I contract, or
(b) to a veteran who is indebted in respect of any loan made pursuant to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act."

Amendment agreed to.

[Mr. Carter.]

The Deputy Chairman: There is another amendment adding a clause to the bill.

Mr. Monteith (Perth) moved:

That Bill No. C-50, an act to amend the Veterans Land Act be amended by adding thereto the following clause:
22. The schedule to the said act is repealed.

DEFENCE SERVICES PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO REVISE AND CONSOLIDATE CERTAIN PROVISIONS

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-62 respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian forces.

Mr. Roberge: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I made a complete statement when this bill was in the resolution stage. All I can say now is to repeat the statement I made then, namely that the bill is to simplify the administration of the act and to bring the pension scheme for the armed forces in line with the Public Service Superannuation Act and the act we introduced to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. I think it will appeal to all members of the house in that it provides superannuation benefits for the dependents of service men other than officers and it also removes the provision that previously made it possible for extremely young service men to receive a pension.

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, at the resolution stage my colleague the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) expressed the opinion of the opposition with regard to this proposed bill. We do not have anything more to add at this time but we shall have some questions to put to the minister when we reach the committee stage.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Before the minister closes the debate, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. We all know that at one time in his distinguished career he was a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Does he know whether or not the provisions in this bill with respect to retiring allowances are similar to what will be provided for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Pearkes: Almost identical.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the minister got copies of the bill for distribution?

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, the bill has been distributed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could tell us why the title was changed from the Defence Services Pension Act to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. Also, does the minister not consider that it is going to be very confusing for this act to refer in many places to the Defence Services Pension Act which will no longer exist?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, the old title which was the Defence Services Pension Act was not legally and technically correct because the forces—the army, navy and air force—according to the National Defence Act are referred to as the forces, the armed forces. That was the reason for changing it. This brings it into line with the Civil Service Superannuation Act and will hereafter be referred to as the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. I do not think there will be any confusion arising out of the title.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I can see that the Minister of Justice is now in his seat. I regret that I have not in front of me the notes I should have here. However, my information is that in the matter of leave at the end of service the bill before us is not likely to contain provisions similar to those contained in the bill to be piloted by the Minister of Justice with respect to retiring members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Are the two ministers acquainted with this difference?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am of course not able to answer for the Minister of National Defence, but as I understand it the provisions of the two bills are going to be the same in general principle. There are some modifications that have to be made in the bill with respect to the superannuation of the R.C.M.P. but not in the particular my hon. friend mentions.

Mr. Benidickson: The bill of the Minister of Justice will come up later and we will discuss it then. I am quite satisfied with that.

Mr. Pearkes: There are some slight differences. In the armed forces we have women's divisions and there are no women employed in the R.C.M.P.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the minister may we take this clause by subclauses?

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, certainly.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we discuss clause 2, subclause (1)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On subclause 1—Contributor.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, would the minister indicate if there is a difference between this bill and the old act with respect to the definition of "contributor"?

Mr. Pearkes: No, it is similar to the definition in the former act.

Mr. Roberge: In section 49 (c) of the former act I notice a medical certificate was required from three medical officers. That provision does not appear in this definition. Is there a reason for that?

Mr. Pearkes: I believe that will be provided for under the regulations.

Subclause agreed to.

On subclause (2)—Meaning of "child".

Mr. Roberge: With respect to subclause (2), would the minister explain the inclusion of illegitimate children?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, illegitimate children will now be included as being pensionable.

Mr. Roberge: May I know the reason for that?

Mr. Pearkes: It appeared to the government that it was sensible to provide for illegitimate children where a soldier, sailor or airman has been taking care of an illegitimate child who has been recognized and who was born of a woman who is his common law wife.

Mr. Benidickson: Has the government any estimate as to the annual cost in this connection?

Mr. Pearkes: In so far as illegitimate children are concerned I am glad to say there is not a large number of them.

Subclause agreed to.

On subclause 3—References to R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister tell us if the Minister of Justice wrote this new definition?

Mr. Pearkes: No, it was written within our own department.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Persons required to contribute.

The Deputy Chairman: Would hon. members like clause 4 broken up?

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I see that it is almost ten o'clock, and as I may have a number of questions, may I now call it ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the acting house leader what the business is for tomorrow and the days that follow?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue consideration in committee of Bill No. C-62 which we have just been discussing followed by the second reading of Bill No. C-61, an act to authorize the provision of money to meet certain capital expenditures of the C.N.R.; then take second reading of Bill No. C-63, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act; then take second reading of Bill No. C-60, an act respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions; then take item No. 10 on today's order paper, the second reading of Bill No. C-57, an act respecting the superannuation of members of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Fulton: Items Nos. 10 and 3 will be reversed; No. 3 will come before No. 10.

Mr. Brooks: That is correct. Arrangements have been made for item No. 3 to be taken before item No. 10. Item No. 3 on today's order paper relates to committee consideration of Bill No. C-34, an act respecting the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Chevrier: What shall we do on Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr. Brooks: If we get through with all these bills tomorrow, on Wednesday we will go on with—

Mr. Fulton: Criminal Code?

Mr. Brooks: —the estimates of the Department of Justice to be followed by those of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Benidickson: Just a moment. Is that right? The Minister of Justice said we would take the Criminal Code amendment. Which is correct?

Mr. Fulton: The acting house leader is announcing the business.

Mr. Chevrier: One would not think so from your interruptions.

Mr. Hellyer: You are trying to give him the business.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

IMMIGRATION—PROTESTS AGAINST RECENT AMENDMENTS

Question No. 317—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Prime Minister received representations protesting against the most recent order in council limiting immigration in Canada?
2. If so, what reply has been made to these representations by the Prime Minister?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister):

1. Yes. Three communications were received.

2. The representations were carefully noted and they were sent to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

COLOMBO PLAN—VISUAL AIDS FOR INDIA

Question No. 452—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Did the Indian government request a Canadian expert to produce visual aids needed for Colombo plan projects to assist in the development of Indian villages?
2. If so, when was this request made of the Canadian government?
3. Has the request been met? If so, when?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. The government of India requested Canada to provide the services of a technical expert in film making to advise the reserve bank of India on the production of co-operative training films to be produced in India and distributed through the various co-operative training centres in the country. The services of the expert were requested in conjunction with another request for film raw stock with which to make the training films.

2. This request was made by the Indian government at the end of August 1958, and received in Ottawa in mid-September 1958.

3. Some film equipment will be provided when the present negotiations with the Indian government on these matters are completed. Names and qualifications of experts are now under consideration for the production of the films on co-operatives and the training of native staff in their use.

Questions

EAST PETPESWICK, N.S.—DREDGING

Question No. 455—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Was dredging authorized for East Petpeswick, Nova Scotia, during the past 12 months?
2. If authorized and completed, was the work performed found satisfactory by the department and by the fishermen who operate boats making use of this port?
3. Was the work performed under contract or by government equipment and crew?
4. If by government equipment, how many days work by the dredge and crew were required to complete this work?
5. Was there any lost time when the dredge was inoperative during the period of operations? If so, how many days?
6. What were the following costs (a) total costs; (b) wages; (c) towing; (d) operation of dredge; (e) charges against lost time; (f) costs of feeding and housing crew?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Yes, in so far as the department is aware.

3. By government equipment and crew.

4. 41 calendar days.

5. (a) Yes; (b) 26 days. (11 days—Saturdays, Sundays and statutory holidays, 10 days due to bad weather and 5 days for miscellaneous causes.)

6. (a) Estimated cost, $5,230; (b) wages $3,230; (c) towing, $100; (d) operation of dredge, $735, (not including wages and subsistence); (e) charge against lost time, $725, (not including wages, subsistence and fuel); (f) cost of feeding crew, $440, (accommodation supplied on dredge).

HEALTH INSURANCE—NEW BRUNSWICK PARTICIPATION

Question No. 464—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has an agreement been signed between the federal government and the government of the province of New Brunswick, in connection with the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?
2. If not, what is the cause for the delay?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

An agreement under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act has not as yet been signed with the province of New Brunswick. However, discussions preparatory to signing an agreement are proceeding and it is anticipated that an agreement will be signed in the very near future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 23, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—ALLEGED INCOMPLETENESS OF RETURN

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to an order of the house passed on May 18, and I read from page 447 of Votes and Proceedings for that day:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and any person, organization or government, since January 1, 1958, relative to the purchase of land or any other matter relating to the proposed Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment at Queen Charlotte city.

Sessional paper No. 70-CE contains the correspondence, documents and other material as set out in that particular motion. However, I have reason to believe, sir, there is a letter or document that was sent by the Minister of Justice which is not contained within the file of correspondence made available pursuant to this order of the house.

In this regard I would refer to the Prince Rupert Daily News of Thursday, April 23, 1959, which was within the period covered by the order of the house. In an article on the front page there is an announcement by Mr. A. D. Vance, who is a building supply firm operator and also was Conservative candidate during the last election in the constituency of Skeena, indicating that he had received a communication from the Minister of Justice to the effect that this particular land had been purchased, the price of the land, when construction would begin and so on.

My question of privilege, sir, is that either the Minister of Justice has not put this particular letter or piece of correspondence in the sessional paper or Mr. Vance, who made the announcement in Prince Rupert, is giving to the Minister of Justice some credit which is not due him, that is for writing a particular letter relating to this Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment at Queen Charlotte city.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge all the correspondence which either the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or myself or anyone in the department wrote on this matter has been produced. There may be, in one of my own files, another letter, and I shall have the file searched at once to find out. If there is, and it is properly produceable, I shall be glad to produce it. If it should have been produced and has not yet been produced I can assure the house it is only by inadvertence. I shall check the records at once to make sure that nothing that should be produced has been left out.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REFERENCE TO POSSIBLE INCOMPLETE RETURN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I communicated with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate respecting this matter a couple of days ago. On March 25, in response to his motion, it was ordered that there be laid before the house a copy of all communications received by the Prime Minister since March 10, 1959 protesting the refusal of the government to reinforce the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland. I brought down all the documents that I was advised were on the file. Following another return made by the Minister of Justice, a letter turned up in that file which apparently was a copy of one that had been sent to me. Immediately I noticed that, I asked the staff to make a search, and apparently it was misplaced. There may be others in the same position, and when I have them I will table them. I just wanted the hon. gentleman to know that this is just one of those cases of filing under two files and then something being misplaced.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if the Prime Minister would permit a question. I thank him for the explanation he has made public. There has already been a supplementary return made by the Prime Minister, and is this still further correspondence?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not say that. All I have is the information I have given.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED POLITICAL INFLUENCE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the charge that clandestine political influence has been brought to bear on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation management resulting in the resignation of 12 employees of the corporation, including the supervisor of talks and public affairs, the assistant supervisor of talks and public affairs, C.B.C. radio, and the supervising producer of public affairs, C.B.C. television.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I submit it is clear that this motion is out of order—

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order may I say this. You have not yet put the motion, and perhaps you would follow the normal course of giving the person who moves it a chance to explain it.

Mr. Speaker: I have scarcely had time to read the motion which the Leader of the Opposition asks leave to move, but from what he said about it I wonder whether the matter is one which is under the administrative responsibility of the government. I would like to have the Leader of the Opposition address himself to that point. I shall certainly hear the Minister of Justice also. The reason I say that is this. I take it that the motion relates to employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is a corporation established by parliament. But as I have heard its relations to the government explained in the house, its responsibility may be directly to parliament. That is the point that strikes me immediately, and on which I should be glad to hear the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you are quite right, of course. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a public corporation, but it is responsible to parliament and it reports to parliament through a minister of the crown. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, surely this house is permitted to inquire into matters concerning this corporation, particularly if they affect members of parliament or members of the government. The important part of this motion, it seems to me, is that a charge has been made by those senior officials of the C.B.C. to the effect that, as the motion reads, "clandestine political influence has been brought to bear on the corporation management". It is as a result of that influence, in the view of these officials, that they have been unable to carry on their duties in the way in which they would wish to carry them on. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, surely the fact of resignations of this kind alleged to be brought about by clandestine political influence, will have an unfortunate effect on the integrity and the independence of the C.B.C.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to read the statement issued—because it has a bearing on the importance and the urgency of this matter—by the supervisor of talks and public affairs, the assistant supervisor of talks and public affairs and the supervising producer of public affairs, which explains why they felt it necessary to resign, which resignations have been followed by those of other senior officials and I understand the number is increasing. This statement which explains why this course had to be taken is as follows. It was issued, I think, on June 23 and it is signed by the supervisor of talks and public affairs, the assistant supervisor of talks and public affairs and the supervising producer of public affairs, Mr. F. W. Peers, Mr. D. H. Gillis, and Mr. B. Trotter, and reads as follows:

> On June 15 C.B.C. management took a decision to cancel the series "Preview Commentary" effective today, June 23. The supervisor of talks and public affairs, Frank Peers, was given no valid reason for this action. The controller of broadcasting, Charles Jennings, handed him a written explanation that the press gallery correspondents who contributed to "Preview Commentary" did not have time to put things in perspective in commenting on the events of the previous day.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, presumably they have time to comment on these things before they send them to their newspapers. The statement goes on:

> Since this reason was manifestly absurd applying to professional journalists covering the national capital, Mr. Peers started a series of inquiries which led only to the conclusion that clandestine political influence had been brought to bear on C.B.C. management.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the whole statement but that is the part which I think is relevant to this particular motion. Surely this is a charge which has a bearing on the independence and integrity of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That is something which must be very much in all our minds these days, and it is something which we have a duty in this house to protect. If, Mr. Speaker, this publicly owned and operated corporation is to be subjected to this kind of influence as charged, then not only will it prejudice its existence but it will at the very least put it in an unfavourable position with regard to private broadcasting. The importance of this matter and its seriousness should certainly be apparent to the members of the government, because they took such a strong stand when they were in opposition on the independence and integrity of this corporation and its immunity from any form of influence on the part of the government.

I would now like to quote the words of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) as reported on page 2827 of Hansard for March 29, 1957, and these will be my final words, Mr. Speaker, to justify not only the importance of this matter but the urgency of discussing it at this time to remove these impressions. The Minister of Finance said:

If the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is to function in a manner free of government interference, then there must not be attempts on the part of the Prime Minister or other members of the government to influence the programming activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and above all opinion broadcasts on public issues.

This resignation statement, Mr. Speaker, alleges that there has been that kind of clandestine political influence, and I suggest it is a matter of importance and urgency and should be discussed immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Leader of the Opposition takes his seat, if debate were permitted on the motion would it directly call into account the administration of the government, or is it a matter for parliament as a whole?

Mr. Pearson: It will call into question the relationship of members of parliament, and particularly members of the government, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation because of this allegation. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that only by an immediate and reassuring statement from the government in such a discussion as this can the deterioration in the morale of the C.B.C. as a result of resignations of this kind be halted.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) would prefer to leave his remarks until I have heard the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). He has the floor if he wishes to speak now.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is because I think it is so easily demonstrated that this motion does not comply with the rules that I would appreciate the opportunity to be heard now. There are a number of grounds upon which this motion fails, and I would like to deal with them one by one on the basis of the facts.

First of all I would like to refer to May's fifteenth edition, page 352, which says that the matter raised by the motion must be definite. Your Honour will find that there is a citation there, citation (c), which says that in particular such a motion must not be offered when the facts are in dispute or before they are available. I refer here particularly to the facts being in dispute. My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition has in the wording of this motion itself made it clear that this is a matter of opinion—opinion, I might say, held only by members of the opposition. He says it is a matter of urgent public importance, namely a charge that clandestine political influence has been brought to bear on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

That is not a fact, Mr. Speaker; this is a matter which is, as I say, based on a charge. The facts in the matter are not established, and therefore the motion does not deal with a definite matter. And to illustrate my point that this is a matter of opinion and dispute only, and indeed to show how unfounded is the charge and how inappropriate would be a discussion of this kind, I should like to refer to a statement dealing with this matter which was made by Mr. Bushnell, general manager and acting president of the C.B.C., which refutes completely the statements the Leader of the Opposition has read into the record. Mr. Bushnell gave the following statement to the press today.

Some two weeks ago the corporation decided to replace the "Preview Commentary" from Ottawa, which followed the eight o'clock C.B.C. news, with a "Special Parliamentary Report" prepared by the C.B.C. news service. It was felt that this would improve the corporation's service of reporting the proceedings of the previous day in parliament.

This has been followed by resignations of several members of the corporation's "Talks and Public Affairs" national office in Toronto, on the grounds that the substitution of the opinion broadcast "Preview Commentary" by the factual C.B.C. news report implied political interference with the C.B.C.'s broadcasting of controversial affairs. The corporation does not accept this implication.

The C.B.C. has the fullest confidence in its talks and public affairs department which over the years has contributed some of the C.B.C.'s most distinguished and responsible broadcasting.

Thus, in so far as the facts are ascertainable, the statement by the responsible manager and acting president completely refutes the charge which has been so baselessly brought in this house by the Leader of the Opposition.

Another ground is that the matter raised in the motion must be urgent, and in this connection there are citations both in Beauchesne and May, but May deals with this situation very succinctly. I would refer Your Honour to the fifteenth edition at page 352, where it is stated that the motion has been refused where the matter could be raised on the estimates, that is, when an ordinary parliamentary opportunity will occur shortly or in a reasonable time.

I should point out that the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue, who is the minister who answers for the C.B.C., have not yet, I am informed, come before the committee of supply, so there will be ample opportunity to raise this matter and to raise it in the fullest and most satisfactory form in committee of supply when all members may take part in the discussion. On that ground

I think it is obvious, in accord with previous rulings, that the motion fails because the question of urgency of debate does not arise.

Another reason why I submit the motion must fail is one to which you yourself referred, Your Honour, namely that this does not involve the administrative responsibility of the government. May I point out that May, in his fifteenth edition at page 355, gives an example of a somewhat similar motion in the United Kingdom having been ruled out of order on the ground that it related to the conduct of the affairs of a statutory authority. The C.B.C. is set up as a statutory authority. It is a corporation created by parliament. The act which governs it has been carefully drawn to make it clear that the C.B.C. operates as an independent corporation. It does not operate under the direction of the government. It reports to parliament, and is responsible to parliament directly only with respect to its financial requirements. As a statutory authority carefully set apart from the possibility of direct interference by the government, it cannot be said to be under the administrative authority of the government and subject to discussion in these circumstances, under this rule.

May I refer Your Honour to sections 22, 26 and 27 of the Broadcasting Act enacted in 1958. Section 22(1) reads:

> There shall be a corporation to be known as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say what he is reading from?

Mr. Fulton: Yes; the statutes of 1958, the Broadcasting Act.

> 22. (1) There shall be a corporation to be known as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation consisting of a president, a vice-president and nine other directors to be appointed by the governor in council.

Then the other subsections of this section outline the organization of the corporation. Then section 26 (1) provides:

> The corporation may on its own behalf employ such officers and employees as it considers necessary for the conduct of its business, at such remuneration and upon such other terms and conditions as it deems fit, but the officers and employees so employed are not officers or servants of Her Majesty.

Then in section 27 it is made clear that the corporation itself is an agent of Her Majesty with all the powers, rights and liabilities usually attached to such crown agencies.

The whole tenor of the statute, and particularly these sections, Mr. Speaker, make it abundantly clear that the corporation is not under the day to day administration of the government. May I in this connection refer Your Honour to a case in the United Kingdom House of Commons, reported in the British Hansard for 1912, volume 41, column 816. This was a case in which a member moved, or sought leave to move, the adjournment of the house to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the failure of the board of trade through its representatives to bring pressure to bear on the port authority to carry out its obligations under the port of London act.

In this case the member was seeking to move the adjournment with respect to a matter arising in connection with the port of London authority. The port of London authority was the authority which administered the port of London, and it was a statutory authority in exactly the same way as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is, set up independently of the government although it had to report through the board of trade which, as hon. members know, is the equivalent of the Department of Trade and Commerce in this country. Mr. Speaker immediately ruled as follows:

> I regret that I am not able to accept the motion of the hon. member. The port of London is an authority set up by parliament and quite independent of the board of trade. I have looked through the act which set up the authority, and I can only find some three sections which introduce the board of trade at all as a controlling authority.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that as I recall the Broadcasting Act there is no place at which the Minister of National Revenue or any other minister is introduced as a controlling authority. The Speaker of the British house continued:

> Those sections deal with audits if required, with the question of increases of duties, and with complaints about warehousing. As far as I can ascertain, those are the only sections in the bill which give the board of trade any power whatever, or any control over the port authority. That being so, it is clear that the board of trade have no such control as the hon. gentleman would wish to imply in his motion.

From the terms of the Broadcasting Act in Canada, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that neither the Minister of National Revenue nor any other minister of the government had any such control as the Leader of the Opposition seeks to imply in his motion, control over the C.B.C., in a way which would bring it within the rules of parliament as to the content of such motions to adjourn the house.

On these grounds, Mr. Speaker—and there are a number of others which I know will occur to Your Honour, which I therefore think I need not mention today, but particularly on the ground that this is not a definite matter but a matter of opinion, this motion is not in order. The opinion of the Leader of the Opposition is one, I submit, which can clearly be proven to be groundless, but that is a matter, of course, of debate—on these grounds, it is not in order to introduce charges, to raise matters of this kind which really involve charges against the government based on opinion, on a motion seeking to debate a definite matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have often heard the Minister of Justice in the past when he appeared to be on much stronger ground than he is this afternoon. As a matter of fact I think his argument is particularly weak. He says this is not a definite matter. I do not know whether you have to have some physical object which can be weighed before you have a definite matter. This is a definite charge that has been made in writing by no less a person than the leader of the official opposition in this house, and I think it is very much a definite matter, since it charges that clandestine political influence has been brought to bear on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

To make it something that is most definite one need only to keep in mind the continuing reports of further resignations from the C.B.C. I understand that now there have been in excess of 20 resignations. When people are resigning in very large numbers apparently in protest of the definite matter that has been set forth in this motion, is this not a definite matter? In my submission, Mr. Speaker, this is something that is a very definite matter, which has been well set out in the motion.

It has been said by the Minister of Justice that this is not urgent; that it can be debated when the estimates of the department are before the house. That, of course, is true, but there is no assurance as to how soon those estimates will be before the house for debate. They may be the last estimates in the dying days of the session. In the meantime, how many more resignations may there be from the C.B.C.? I think it is urgent that this be discussed so the matter may be aired fully and so that a further deterioration of the C.B.C. itself may not take place, if such an assurance is in fact given.

I think the whole question of interference by the government in the administration of the C.B.C. is not only a definite and urgent matter but it is something of very great concern to the people of this country, in that it suggests that there has been political interference with freedom of discussion through the C.B.C. I suggest that it is such an important and far-reaching matter that it deserves immediate debate.

The Minister of Justice brought forward many citations to endeavour to prove that the C.B.C. is beyond the administrative jurisdiction of the government. The point of this motion, I suggest, is that, while everyone agrees that this is what the law says, nevertheless even with that situation as it is set forth there is the charge of political interference. It is a very grave and a very serious charge that has been presented, namely that in spite of the safeguards in the laws of this country there has been political interference. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in this whole question is the matter of freedom of discussion, freedom of the C.B.C., apart from government and cabinet interference. For all these reasons urgency of debate is essential.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say a word or two, not that it is necessary—

Mr. Speaker: Before the minister begins, since he is the responsible minister, I take it that he is addressing himself to the question of standing order 26, and whether a debate should be allowed on the issue?

Mr. Nowlan: It is not necessary to supplement the argument which was advanced by the Minister of Justice, which I am sure is sound and valid and which I should hope would commend itself to your judgment when you make your ruling, Your Honour.

The Minister of Justice referred to the fact that the estimates of the corporation have not yet been before the committee. That is true. There may be some merit in the suggestion that those estimates could possibly be deferred for some little while, but I would point out that the committee on broadcasting, which is charged particularly with the investigation of this corporation, is meeting today in Toronto, where the directors of the corporation are meeting, and will resume sittings here on either Monday or Tuesday of next week. I would also point out that one of the responsibilities of that committee, of course, is to investigate fully all affairs of the C.B.C. I think that is one answer to the question of urgency of debate, and supplements the information with respect to estimates.

I certainly appreciate the information I have received this afternoon. It has been said by one member that there have been 12 resignations and by another that there have been 15, and if two or three more members get up we may have 30 or 40. As far as the management is concerned, and I am speaking now of the manager with whom I talked just before coming into the house, the figures on resignations are in no way similar to those which have been detailed to the house.

I want to point out that this charge is based on what the Leader of the Opposition says is a statement from the corporation. I suggest that statements from the corporation come from the management of the corporation, and a statement by the management of the corporation was read by the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I be allowed to say a word in answer to what the minister has said, particularly having regard to the statement that the estimates might well be discussed in the near future. That is a point that repeatedly comes up when a motion is made to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance. Earlier we were told that the reason a matter was not urgent was that it could be discussed on a supply motion, and this time we are told it is not urgent because the estimates will come up in due course. These, sir, are not the criteria on which the matter should be disposed of, because the rule in Beauchesne makes it quite clear upon what formalities the motion should be based.

My hon. friend also made reference to the committee on broadcasting. We all know that if this matter is to be disposed of by the committee on broadcasting it cannot be done on Monday, for the simple reason that these people would have to receive notice and it would probably be a week before they could come down here, so that again falls to the ground.

But the main point made by the Minister of Justice was that this was not a definite matter. What could be more definite, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Assiniboia, than the resignation of a number of top officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? On that basis alone, which indicates that there is interference not only there but elsewhere in connection with the corporation, I submit this is a matter which should be debated at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The urgent matter which is proposed is that clandestine political influence has been brought to bear on the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Fulton: That is the charge.

Mr. Speaker: The charge is that that has been done. It has been urged that it is not a definite matter. In my view there are definite facts. There is the fact of resignations and the statement made by those who have resigned, which seems to me to be fairly definite. It is a matter of urgent public importance, of course, because it involves the independence of the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Therefore I am prepared to go that far with the Leader of the Opposition who asks for leave to discuss this matter.

The question of urgency is not, I think, conclusive. There will be an opportunity to discuss these matters on the estimates, but this matter has arisen suddenly and if it complies with the rule on other grounds I think I would be prepared to accept the request for leave to discuss it as a matter of urgent public importance.

My difficulty lies in the question of whether it really involves the administration of the government. It involves the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Apparently the conduct of the management has been such that certain members have resigned. The charge is that there has been clandestine political interference. I can only go on what is before me, and it is not a charge that the administration has been guilty of clandestine interference with the management. In fact, the management as it has been established under the Broadcasting Act, is an independent management.

I am impressed with the reference the Minister of Justice made to a decision with respect to the port of London authority and I ask the house whether, if this motion is debated, its effect would be that the administration should interfere with the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Otherwise the motion is futile. There is no point in the house debating this as an administrative responsibility unless the purpose is to ask the administration to interfere with the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which, as I understand it, they have at all times resisted doing.

In the absence of a charge that the administration has been interfering with the management, which it seems to me would raise a matter for debate, I cannot accept the application for leave as it stands.

"PREVIEW COMMENTARY"—INQUIRY AS TO DISCONTINUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue if he has in any manner whatsoever had discussions with or made representations to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation regarding a program entitled "Preview Commentary", and can he tell the house why it has been decided to discontinue this program?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the decision was one of management. I knew nothing about it until this morning, when I heard on the radio that this decision had been made. That was the first intimation I had of it, and I also heard of the resignations.

As most hon. members know, the directors are meeting in Toronto. That was arranged weeks ago, and the directors have come from all parts of Canada to inspect the facilities of the C.B.C. and to talk with the senior officers of the corporation in Toronto during the last two days. I immediately tried to get in touch with Mr. Bushnell. I did not reach him until around 11.30 because he was at meetings. He then dictated to me the statement which my colleague the Minister of Justice has put on the record. That is my knowledge of this matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister if he will be good enough to answer my first question. Has the minister in any manner whatsoever had discussions with or made representations to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation regarding the program entitled "Preview Commentary".

Mr. Nowlan: I have had discussions from time to time with the manager and Mr. Ouimet before his illness about various C.B.C. programs, as to costs and so on and so forth. I do not remember discussing this particular program. If I did I expressed my appreciation of it, because it is a program for which I have had a very high appreciation. I have made no representations to the C.B.C., directly or indirectly, at any time or at any place, with respect to any program of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in our further prospecting to secure the facts I wish to ask the Minister of National Revenue another question somewhat related to the one asked by the former minister of national health and welfare, now the farmer expert for Essex East.

In view of reports that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is planning to cancel its morning radio preview commentary; in view of reports that the C.B.C. has been under pressure from Progressive Conservative senators and backbench M.P.'s; and in view of the reported resignation of a number of news commentators, can the minister do anything to enlighten the house as to the drama being played behind the curtain of official silence while the orchestra of public opinion continues to play that old tune, "Tell Me One thing but Tell Me True"?

Mr. Nowlan: Whatever merit there may be in the question of the hon. member, we always appreciate the poetic atmosphere and the language in which it is expressed. There has been no drama played behind the scenes of which I have knowledge, and I am sure if there were I would have knowledge of it. There is a reference in the hon. member's question to backbench members, whoever they may be, and some senators. I would appreciate elucidation and the identity of these people, if the hon. member has any information which he can give me.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT STAFF BE GIVEN HOLIDAY ON JUNE 26

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct a question to the minister of public affairs who, I understand, has some control over the internal affairs of the house as well as external affairs—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: The Minister of Public Works—in view of the fact that the house will recess on Friday in order to allow hon. members to witness the opening of the seaway by Her Majesty the Queen, in order to demonstrate the truly democratic nature of our government will the minister consider granting the staff of the House of Commons the same privilege, namely a holiday with pay?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this question does not come under the minister of internal affairs or whatever the hon. member called me. This comes under Your Honour.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—STATEMENT ON METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE AND WEATHER FORECASTS FOR FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gloucester inquired as to what specific meteorological service is provided to warn fishermen of approaching storms, and also asked if warning was given of the sudden storm over the Northumberland strait area last Friday.

I am advised by my officials that marine forecasts giving advice on present weather conditions and forecasts for the next 24 hours are issued three times a day for Canadian coastal waters and most of the larger inland lakes. Whenever observed weather conditions indicate that a special marine weather warning of gales, icing and the like should be issued, such warnings are issued and distributed as soon as possible. These warnings are distributed mainly by radio.

Specific warnings were issued by the Halifax and Gander forecast offices during Friday evening, but the fishing vessels, because of the salmon run, had put out much earlier than usual and the warnings were not issued until 8.45 p.m. at Halifax and 9 p.m. at Gander. This timing was due to difficulties in interpretation of changes in blocked weather systems in northwestern and western Canada, where a change in relatively stationary conditions over previous days was developing, and was also due to scarcity of information as to weather reports from ships in the eastern area.

The storm moved in rapidly from the southeast, and the strength of the winds reported over the maritimes was a great deal higher than any previously observed and reported winds emerging from the gradually changing weather conditions mentioned. The afternoon forecast carried at 5 p.m. did not anticipate the severity of the winds experienced, since local storms resulting from this type of situation can move very suddenly.

A full report is being prepared to cover the weather situation as it was, and a detailed research study is being undertaken so that weather offices will be in a better position to anticipate such unusual and rapid weather developments.

NATIONAL REVENUE

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFERS OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Have there been any recent transfers of customs officers from the Dorval port of entry to the Montreal port of entry, and if so is the Department of National Revenue contemplating any further transfers in the coming months? If so, will the minister inform the house the reasons such transfers are made?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member was good enough to call my office this morning with respect to this matter, and I was therefore able to get detailed information from my deputy minister.

As the hon. member knows, the ports of Dorval and Montreal are relatively close. We have large staffs at both ports. The port of Dorval deals with the airport, and the officers there are doing more specialized work than the general work which falls upon the officers at the port of Montreal. On the 1st day of April six employees were transferred from Dorval to Montreal and six were transferred from Montreal over to Dorval, an exchange of employment so they could benefit from the different experiences. It is contemplated that on July 1 a further five will be transferred from one port to the other, a reciprocal arrangement, and another five will be transferred on October 1 of this year. The selection of those transferred is made by a board composed of the collectors at Montreal and Dorval, the district inspector and the district personnel officer, taking into consideration particularly the location at which the officers reside, it being felt that employees at Montreal would bring to Dorval the added benefit of their experience at a large port.

It has been the practice to advise the officers selected for such exchange verbally by the collectors at their respective ports rather than in writing. It is felt that rather than jeopardize an officer's opportunity for promotion this exchange will be of benefit as it is proposed to open the field of competition for promotion to both ports.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO PILOT FOR ROYAL YACHT "BRITANNIA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if the Minister of Transport would comment on a statement in the Globe and Mail attributed to Captain Norman S. Johnson, a member of the board of examiners for pilots on the seaway, that Captain Leighton Crawford has been appointed pilot for the royal yacht Britannia as a reward for heading a strikebreaking group last year against the great lakes pilots' association.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): As I think the hon. member would be well aware, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no substance whatever in that statement. The pilot who will be guiding Her Majesty's yacht Britannia has been appointed to that position because of his competence and for no other reason.

Mr. Argue: If that is the case and the pilot is being appointed for competency, why then was this position not given to the pilot who received the highest marks in the ship pilots' rating guide?

Mr. Hees: Because my departmental officials have judged that this pilot is most deserving of the appointment.

Mr. Argue: Does the department not recognize the pilots' rating guide, and if so why was the best qualified pilot not given this very important position?

Mr. Hees: I have said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that my departmental officials consider the man who has been appointed the most competent to take the Queen's yacht through.

Mr. Argue: Because he was a strikebreaker.

Mr. Hees: No, because he is a competent pilot.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEW WATERFORD, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a telegram from the united mine workers of New Waterford, Nova Scotia, requesting that the town of New Waterford be declared a depressed area owing to the loss of unemployment insurance benefits, and requesting financial aid from the federal government? Can the acting minister advise the house what action is to be taken?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): With the hon. member's permission I shall take this question as notice.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received a telegram from the secretary of the Cape Breton district command of the Canadian Legion asking immediate action to assist 2,000 miners in need of help? If so, what action is the minister going to take in support of the representations of this important area organization?

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have not received any such telegram as yet.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question in the same field, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Prime Minister can say whether the government has come to any conclusions following the consideration he said was being given to the request of William H. Marsh, president of district 26, united mine workers of Glace Bay, that additional unemployment insurance should be provided to workers in that area? The Prime Minister may recall that I brought a telegram to his attention some days ago, and he said consideration would be given to this request.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into the question further.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTH BAY—PUBLIC TENDERS FOR BOMARC MISSILE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Defence Production, but in his absence perhaps the acting minister can take it as notice. Will public tenders be called for the rock excavation and underground construction to be done at the Bomarc missile base at North Bay? If not, why not?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take that question as notice.

FINANCE

REFERENCE TO YIELD ON ONTARIO HYDRO BOND ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has noticed that the recent bond issue of the Ontario hydro commission indicates that the investors of Canada have more confidence in that commission than they have in the government of Canada, in that the yield on Ontario hydro offerings is lower than the yield on offerings on the part of the minister. If so, what measures is the minister or the government contemplating to restore the confidence of the investors of Canada in offerings of the Canadian government on the money market?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has purported in a question to ask for confirmation of what he puts forward as a statement of fact. I reject what he puts forward as a statement of fact, because it is not fact. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario hydroelectric commission last Friday put out an issue of, I think, $50 million—a very much smaller issue than any the federal government has recently been putting out—in two maturities, one of 10 years and the other of 20 years, with a 5.75 per cent coupon and it was put on the market at par.

Mr. Regier: Might I ask the minister this question. Does he realize that the yield on the offerings of the Ontario hydro commission is 5.6 per cent, and that the yield on his own offerings on behalf of the government of Canada is in excess of that figure?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is embarking on an argumentative series of questions which I think are inappropriate for the orders of the day.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I say this. You allowed the minister to deny my assertion, and I feel that I am within my rights as a member of this house in asking the minister whether he is aware of the fact that the yield on Ontario hydro bonds is lower than that on his own offerings.

Mr. Speaker: The purpose of questions is to obtain information. The hon. member is giving information which is of general knowledge, if it is correct. If he is asking the Minister of Finance to outline the financial program of the government it seems to me that is something which is quite inappropriate for the orders of the day.

Mr. Regier: In that case, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether the government is contemplating any action which would restore the confidence of the investors of Canada in his offerings.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the government is doing things every day to strengthen the confidence of the people of Canada, who have money to invest, in the credit of this country. I wish the hon. gentleman and some others opposite would follow that example instead of doing all they can to destroy confidence in the country's credit.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMBINES ACT AMENDMENT—INQUIRY AS TO REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell the house whether he plans to send Bill No. C-59, to amend the Combines Investigation Act, to one of the standing committees of the house for study and the hearing of representations which may be made concerning this extremely important piece of legislation?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that question should properly be directed to the house leader. All I can say is that I have not discussed that matter.

Mr. Crestohl: I have a supplementary question. Would the minister consider the question I have just asked him, and will he discuss it with the house leader?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED THEFT

On the orders of the day:

(Page 5044)

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question arising out of an item published in yesterday's La Presse. Is the minister aware of the theft of $5,000 allegedly committed in the toll office located at the entrance of Jacques Cartier bridge? If so, could he tell this house whether any change had taken place with regard to the personnel entrusted with toll collections at Jacques Cartier bridge, in view of the fact that there are generally two employees responsible for the collection of tolls? And would the minister then be kind enough to acquaint the house with the result of his investigation?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I consider this question as a notice? I shall answer it tomorrow.

COAL

REPORTED REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION AND INCREASE IN IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister comment on a release issued yesterday by the bureau of statistics to the effect that Canadian coal output slumped 32 per cent during the month of May, while landed imports in the same month were 21 per cent higher than last year and this while thousands of coal miners are out of work in Nova Scotia coal mines?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to read over the hon. member's question in Hansard and check the bureau of statistics report to which he refers and give him an answer later.

TRADE

REPORTED INCREASE IN IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question arising out of the bureau of statistics report issued today which indicates that for the period January-March, 1959 imports from the United States have gone up $31 million in comparison with the same period last year, while imports from the United Kingdom have gone down $8 million. My question is this. Is this situation the result of the trade diversion policy of the present government?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the interest of the Leader of the Opposition in this question. I think it is an indication of the increasing trade that is going on between Canada and other countries. He might also have referred to the export figures which indicate that our export picture is also very favourable.

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say what progress is being made toward the signing of a Canadian-Soviet trade agreement? Would he comment on the statement attributed to a former Russian trade minister that the new agreement will not include a guarantee by Russia to buy a specific quantity of wheat?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have had recurring questions on this same subject. I have given answers just about every third day with regard to these negotiations. It was only two days ago that I was asked this question, and I reported that they were proceeding favourably. The second part of the hon. member's question concerns a statement which I have not seen.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether he agrees with the announcement made by Ivan G. Kabanov, a former Soviet trade minister, that a trade agreement with Canada is about to be signed and that it will not include any specific quantity of wheat.

Mr. Churchill: I have not seen the comment to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether or not a trade agreement with the Soviet union is about to be signed?

Mr. Churchill: I reported the other day, Mr. Speaker, that negotiations were going favourably and that we expected to sign a trade agreement with Russia in the near future.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARCTIC ISLANDS—APPROVAL OF NEW OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister tell the house whether or not the cabinet has approved the new oil and gas regulations for the Arctic islands, which he recommended to his colleagues a month ago? If not, can he tell us how long it usually takes to get four of his colleagues together to sign an order in council?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. The answer to the last part of the question is the same as that which I gave on a previous occasion, when I told the hon. member that he had been here long enough to know something about how a government operates.

Mr. Hardie: Not this kind of a government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not that kind of a member.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture a second time, after a long interval since the last question, whether he is now in a position to say whether the government has arrived at a policy with regard to the request of the Ontario wheat producers for a deficiency payment on Ontario wheat?

Mr. Argue: And western wheat at the same time.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the phrasing of the hon. member's question is not very good. It is not a matter of arriving at a policy; we have a policy which we announced well over a year ago with regard to these matters. It was contained in the stabilization act. Under that act we set a support price for wheat which is in effect at the present time. That was set to take effect at the beginning of the crop year, which is August 1. A support price for the crop year beginning this August 1 will be announced a reasonable period in advance of that date.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister set out the government's policy with regard to deficiency payments on western wheat? May I take it the government has no policy?

Mr. Benidickson: No answer, no policy.

DEFENCE SERVICES PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO REVISE AND CONSOLIDATE CERTAIN PROVISIONS

The house resumed, from Monday, June 22, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-62 respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian forces.—Mr. Pearkes—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 4—Persons required to contribute.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, clause 4 to my mind is one of the important clauses of the bill. As was said by the minister at the resolution stage, the entire purpose of the bill is to bring the Defence Services Pension Act under a new name in conformity with the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This clause is very similar to, if not the same as, the section in the Public Service Superannuation Act and the new R.C.M.P. act which will be introduced shortly.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, if the noise will go down a bit perhaps we can get somewhere.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder if hon. members would lower their voices so the Chair may hear the speaker who has the floor.

Mr. Roberge: I would like to ask the minister a question on this clause before we go any further. Are there any members of the Canadian forces who now receive less than $1500 as pay and allowances?

Mr. Pearkes: I am informed there are none.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, where these elections are possible for prior service and they require lump sum payments to be made, what are the provisions under which those payments may be made?

Mr. Pearkes: They may either be made as a lump sum payment or monthly or annual payments.

Mr. Hellyer: What is the maximum period of time over which they may be distributed?

Mr. Pearkes: Life.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Amount to be paid.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, this clause has to do with elective pensionable service, the amount required to be paid. If I understand the purpose of this clause it is to permit those members who want to elect to become contributors under this bill to pay their arrears. Under the former act there was no provision for pensions or any benefits for those who had under three years' service. Now I see there is. Is it possible that those who are not contributors under the former act may become contributors under this act by paying their arrears?

Mr. Pearkes: If the serviceman was under parts I to IV, he may elect to come under the new act now.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 10—Benefits payable on retirement.

Mr. Roberge: This clause might be a little long to explain. In subclause 1 a contributor who, having reached retirement age, ceases to be a member of the forces for any reason other than disability or misconduct is entitled to a benefit. That benefit is determined by the following subparagraphs. I have no quarrel with subparagraph (a). I have no quarrel with subparagraph (b), but I want to read it anyway:

> If he has served in the forces for more than three years but less than ten years, he is entitled to > (i) a return of contributions, or > (ii) a cash termination allowance, whichever is the greater; and
> (c) if he has served in the forces for ten or more years, he is entitled to an annuity.

Subclause 2 deals with a member of the forces who is compulsorily retired because he has become disabled, and the benefits to which he is entitled are the same as in subclause 1. What I have some quarrel with is subclause 3, which reads as follows:

> A contributor who, not having reached retirement age, is compulsorily retired from the forces to promote economy or efficiency is entitled to a benefit determined as follows:
> (a) if he has served in the forces for three years or less, he is entitled to a return of contributions;

Then (b) deals with service of more than three years but less than ten years, and the benefit is a return of contributions or a cash termination allowance, whichever is the greater. I have some quarrel with subparagraph (c) of subclause 3. This reads as follows:

> (c) if he has served in the forces for ten or more years but less than twenty years, he is entitled—

And subparagraph (i) deals with those members of the forces who served in world war II. Then:

> (ii) in the case of any other contributor, to an annuity, reduced, until such time as the contributor reaches sixty-five years of age but not thereafter, as follows:

Then (A) and (B) give the reduction of the benefit.

> (d) if he has served in the forces for 20 or more years, he is entitled to an annuity.

I have read all this to make the following point. If a member of the force is retired because he has reached the retirement age he is entitled to some definite benefit as enumerated in subsection 1. If he retires because he is disabled he is entitled to the same benefit and he has an option—I am speaking now of those members of the forces who have served for less than 10 years or for 10 or more years. Under subsection 3 these members of the forces are put on retirement because the forces do not need them for one reason or another, either because there is a reduction in the numbers in the force, or to promote efficiency or economy, as is set out in line 5 on page 12.

It seems to me that those members who are retired through no fault of their own are penalized, because they have lost options and lost benefits, compared with those who retire because they are disabled or because they have reached the retirement age. There are other sections later in the act which deal with misconduct, those who are tried by court martial and so on. Would the minister think of this and give us an idea why there is such a difference?

Mr. Pearkes: The reason is that an actuarial balance is required, and in these cases the men have not served their full length of time. They have been retired for various reasons; maybe there is no further employment for them in their particular class of work. There are a variety of reasons, and it is to deal with situations of this kind that these minor modifications to the pension plan are introduced.

Mr. Roberge: I will take for example the case of a man who has served for 10 or more years. Under subsection 2, subparagraph (b) this man is retired because he is disabled, and he is entitled, I understand, to full annuity which may vary depending on the number of years he has served. I take next a man under subsection 3 who has served for 10 or more years. He retires. I will not say he is thrown out; he retires, say, to promote efficiency and economy, and this man is not entitled to the same benefit, so he is penalized through no fault of his own. He is not disabled, and he has not reached the retirement age, but still he is retired under compulsion and receives less benefit than the other man who has reached the retirement age or is disabled.

Mr. Pearkes: A man who has reached the full retirement age or a man who has become disabled in the service would naturally have his earning power in civil life reduced. But a man who is discharged before he reaches the full age of retirement, and is not disabled on his discharge, has his full earning power when he goes into civil life.

Mr. Roberge: I want to pursue this point a little further. I take the case of a man who has 15 years' service. That man would be around 35 years of age, or 33. He is retired from the force, today or tomorrow. What kind of work is he going to do in these days of unemployment, or now that he has reached a certain age when employers normally may not want him because he is too old or because he has no experience in trade or business? He is out on the sidewalk. I really do think this man is penalized because he is retired from the force through no fault of his own.

Mr. Pearkes: Of course the longer a man has served, the greater would be his benefits on leaving the service. We should also bear in mind that these men would very frequently be specialized tradesmen who would have received a training in the army which would enable them to secure employment in civilian life.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could tell us why, when a person is entitled only to a lump sum repayment, there is no interest paid to him in addition to the capital amount?

Mr. Pearkes: The hon. member is speaking of a man who is entitled to a return of contributions only. Well, it has never been the policy of the government either in this or in the previous pension scheme to add any interest to his contributions.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it the same under the Public Service Superannuation Act?

Mr. Pearkes: Exactly the same.

Mr. Hellyer: Has the minister given any thought to the possibility of vesting? Under private pension plans and pension plans initiated between unions and employers there are provisions whereby a person who retires in advance of the retirement age is entitled, after he has served a certain number of years, to the return not only of his own contributions but also of a certain proportion of the contributions of the employer, in some cases all those contributions. This is known as vesting. Has the minister considered giving part of the employer's contribution to the person who retires involuntarily before the retirement age?

Mr. Pearkes: No. I am informed that while this was considered, the present plan requires the retention of the government's contribution in the general superannuation fund.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it necessary to retain these contributions in order to keep the plan actuarially sound?

Mr. Pearkes: That is correct.

Mr. Hellyer: A great deal has been said recently about the possibility of portable pensions, pensions which may be taken from one place of employment to another. This enables many people in middle age who find it so difficult to obtain work to secure employment, because they are able to bring with them part of the pension which they have already earned. It cannot then be said that their employment in a new place would be to the detriment of the plan in effect there. When the present pension plan was prepared, did the government or the department consider it in the light of setting up a universal plan of portable pensions?

Mr. Pearkes: The principle has been partially adopted inasmuch as the act enables the transfer of personnel, with their pension benefits, from the public service and the mounted police into the armed services. A broader application of this plan has been considered, but it has not been adopted in any of the government pension plans.

Mr. Hellyer: Partial application as between different branches of the public service, but it does not extend to employment outside of the public service.

Mr. Pearkes: That is correct.

Mr. Denis: Is the minister in a position to tell the committee how many contributors who have not reached the retirement age have been compulsorily retired to promote economy or efficiency? It might be interesting to know the numbers, for instance, in the last five years or so, so that we may know what amount of money is involved in this suggestion of the hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Pearkes: Yes; I have some figures here. The number of retirements with between 10 and 20 years service, regular force, to promote economy and efficiency, has been 22, having had continuous service since world war II, and three who have not had continuous service since world war II. That makes a total of 25. There was not a large sum of money involved.

Mr. Denis: In how many years?

Mr. Pearkes: That is in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Denis: In the last fiscal year?

Mr. Pearkes: In the last fiscal year; 25 last year.

Mr. Roberge: There is something I fail to understand. Maybe the minister can enlighten me on this. In lines 4 and 5 on page 12 of the bill—it is easier to refer to it in this way—we find these words, "to promote economy or efficiency". In lines 29 and 30 of the same page of the bill reference is made to a contributor whose retirement is due to a reduction in the total number of members of the forces. Is there any real difference in these two expressions?

Mr. Pearkes: Yes. One deals with what might occur in the case of a reduction in one type of service; the other deals with a general reduction. You might find, for instance, that it was desirable to reduce the number of artillery men while at the same time keeping the full total of the number in the army; or, in a smaller case, the numbers in the postal service might be reduced; whereas the total number of the army might not be.

Mr. Denis: Is it not a fact that while you are reducing the total number of the forces you are at the same time talking about promoting economy? Maybe the first description does not include the second expression, but surely the second one includes the first one?

Mr. Pearkes: If there is a reduction in the number of personnel, that is a reduction purely to promote economy. There is no question as to the efficiency of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Denis: Yes, but in that paragraph they mention the two expressions, to promote economy or efficiency. The two expressions are in the first paragraph.

Mr. Pearkes: Which makes the point clear that there is—

Mr. Denis: It is not clear.

Mr. Pearkes: This section is to promote economy.

Mr. Roberge: I would like to go farther with my point. Clause 10 of the bill is related to sections 10 and 11 of the Public Service Superannuation Act, which is chapter 47, 1-2 Elizabeth II. I have read section 11, which deals with public servants who are contributors for five or more years. I fail to see in that section, when one is retired with more than five years service to promote economy or efficiency in the public service, that he is penalized as, it seems to me, the members of the forces are under subclause 3 of clause 10. Frankly, I should like the minister to consider it at a later date. This bill will go on to the other place. It might be a good place for the government to look into the matter. I should like the minister to consider deleting subparagraphs (c) and (d) of subclause 3 and substituting therefor a new subparagraph (c) which could read as follows: "If he has served in the forces for 10 or more years he is entitled to an annuity". It may be that some members of the forces would feel that they are discriminated against on account of subparagraph (c) as it now stands. With the kind of amendment I have suggested all members referred to in subclauses 1, 2 and 3 will be treated alike and the amount of annuity that they will receive will depend only on the years of service they have put in with the forces. It will not cost too much.

Mr. Pearkes: This was given very careful consideration. In the Public Service Superannuation Act there is what is called the deferred annuity; that is, a man who is retired at an earlier age, for some reason or another, does not receive any pension until he reaches the age of 60. As far as the armed forces are concerned, he may get a termination allowance. Now, that is an immediate payment. The reason the armed forces did not wish to adopt the same system as the public service was the feeling that a great many men who have been in the armed forces have lived a life in barracks and have not learned a trade which will enable them to get established immediately on going into civilian life. By getting an immediate payment they are enabled to carry over during the period when they are searching for employment, or it gives them a certain amount of money to establish themselves in some private business. It was for this reason that the armed forces preferred to have this type of immediate payment rather than having a pension deferred until they reached the age of 60.

I think if the hon. member will consider conditions as they exist in the services in peacetime he will agree that this is probably the better system for these men who have to go out and who have not any particular trade or profession in which they may go.

Mr. Roberge: I just want to add a word. The minister has spoken about cash termination allowances. I agree entirely with him on that point; but under subclause 3 the cash termination allowance applies only to those members who have served more than three years and less than 10 years; it does not apply to those members who have served more than 10 years and less than 20 years.

Mr. Pearkes: Those who go out with 10 to 20 years service get an immediate reduced pension, and I think exactly the same argument applies to them. They have been up to 20 years in the service. They need money in order to help them to get established and to tide them over rather than wait until they have reached a more advanced age when they would receive their full pension.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Benefits payable on death.

Mr. Hellyer: What difference from the previous act is there in the payments under clause 11?

Mr. Pearkes: Previously the maximum amount of money which was available to the widow and the children was limited to 75 per cent of the pension payable to the serviceman. Now that has been increased to 90 per cent to conform with the percentage which has been authorized in the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Lump sum payments.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister tell us if the definitions in 12 (4) have been changed from the previous act and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. Pearkes: There is no change from the previous act.

Mr. Hellyer: In clause 12 (5) there are these words:

> —that the widow of the contributor had, for a number of years immediately prior to his death, been living apart from him under circumstances that would have disentitled her to an order for separate maintenance under the laws of the province in which the contributor was ordinarily resident—

And so on. Is this consistent with the earlier revision of one of the other defence acts where entitlement was based on the laws of a single province, the laws of the province of Ontario, I believe? If I remember correctly, the minister explained at that time that they were trying to make uniform regulations which would apply not only across the country but also to persons residing overseas. Is this a reversion or is this the only way it can be applicable? Perhaps the minister could enlighten us.

Mr. Pearkes: I think the hon. member is referring to the rules of evidence as described in the National Defence Act amendments introduced earlier this session. I do not think they apply here at all.

Mr. Roberge: Is clause 12 in line with the Public Service Superannuation Act?

Mr. Pearkes: It is identical.

Mr. Hellyer: In a case where the serviceman was resident overseas at the time of his death, if such a case could occur, would it then be applied on the basis of the province in which he was ordinarily resident in Canada?

Mr. Pearkes: Would what be applied?

Mr. Hellyer: The definition under clause 12 (5).

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, I take it that it would be where he was ordinarily resident.

Mr. Hellyer: The province in which he was ordinarily resident.

Mr. Pearkes: Yes.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Marriage after 60 years of age.

Mr. Roberge: With respect to subclause 7, am I right in assuming that this does exclude the widower of a female member of the force?

Mr. Pearkes: The widower receives no benefit.

Mr. Roberge: Even if he is sick or disabled.

Mr. Pearkes: That is correct.

Mr. Denis: That is not fair to the male.

Mr. Pearkes: They have many other advantages, you know.

Mr. Hellyer: Do we not believe in equality of the sexes?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—Election.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, I have an important amendment which the Minister without Portfolio will move.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I move:

That Bill C-62, an act respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian forces, be amended

(a) by striking out lines 29 and 30 on page 24 thereof and substituting therefor the following: "in the forces or any period of service described in section 5, that, under the public service"; and

(b) by striking out lines 16 to 25 on page 26 thereof and substituting therefor the following: "person described in subsection (1), and the person so electing shall be subject to the provisions of subsection (1) in all respects as though he had not become entitled to an annuity or annual allowance under that act but had elected under subsection (1) to pay for the whole of that service."

Mr. Pearkes: In explanation I would point out that the purpose of clause 19 of the bill is to permit a civil servant or a member of the R.C.M.P. who becomes a member of the regular forces, and thus a contributor under the proposed Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, to transfer to this latter act all of his public or R.C.M.P. service and prior military service which he was entitled to count under the Public Service Superannuation Act or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act as applicable. Under the present wording of clause 19 (1) and 19 (5) only public or R.C.M.P. service may be transferred. The proposed amendment to the clause will permit the transfer not only of the foregoing services but also of prior military service that he may have been entitled to count while employed as a civil servant or as a member of the R.C.M.P., thus bringing together all pensionable service which may be counted under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. The clause, of course, provides that if a contributor elects to transfer such service to the proposed new act he ceases to be entitled to any benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act or the proposed Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act as the case may be.

On clause 22—Recovery of debit balance in pay account of former member.

Mr. Roberge: Does this differ in any way from the former act or the Public Service Superannuation Act?

Mr. Pearkes: It is the same as in the former act, but there is no equivalent clause in the R.C.M.P. or the public service act. However, it is exactly the same as in the previous act.

Clauses 23 to 31, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 32—Meaning of "child".

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister is going to make available, after the passage of this bill, a number of expert advisers who are familiar with its many ramifications and complications so that ordinary mortals will be able to turn to someone to find out just what their entitlements are?

Mr. Pearkes: There are, of course, in all the different commands personnel in the services who are specialists in the pension act and regulations and able to act as counsellors to the various persons before they are discharged from the service. After they have been discharged, if they require any information, of course there are counsellors in the Department of Veterans Affairs and the judge advocate general's branch is always available to give any extra advice.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister make one or two of these experts available to members of the opposition before this act comes up for revision next time?

Mr. Pearkes: I hope third reading will be given today, so there will hardly be time to do that.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-61, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the motion carry? Carried.

Mr. Hellyer: Just a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I thought, Mr. Speaker, you were a bit precipitate in saying "Adopté". I have not many remarks to make, but this bill comes before us annually. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and some other members of the house had some remarks to make on June 15 as reported on page 4719 of Hansard, and the following pages. I do not want to repeat those remarks. I did feel the minister neglected to reply to one or two points that were raised. I am thinking of the $7 million plus item with respect to the depreciation of locomotives, upon which he made no comment at that stage of the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, I did.

Mr. Benidickson: I was thinking, in addition, that nothing has been said by the government when we have this opportunity about the Canadian National pension hikes that might be made, particularly because of the public interest there might be when we have, as we had prior to this item, discussion of pensions for other categories of public employees. The Canadian National, of course, is a crown company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, and according to my examination, this bill, with certain understandable departures, is in exactly the same form as in previous years. The departures, of course, relate to the matter of warrants which refer to T.C.A. and there is some slight change in the wording with respect to the auditors because new auditors were appointed last year.

Apart from that, does the minister agree with me that, except for the figures, we have a bill in exactly the same form as is customarily presented?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, entirely, Mr. Chairman. The form of the legislation for this purpose was changed in the year 1952, and the form of the bill has become largely standardized since. The clause dealing with the appointment of auditors was added to this bill several years ago and that practice has been followed too. There are, therefore, no departures in the form of this bill from what has now become a standard form of bill.

Mr. Benidickson: In order to avoid repetition, I simply want to put on the Hansard record for the information of outside readers the fact that information relating to this item is available in the minutes of the committee on railways, air lines and shipping for Wednesday and Thursday, May 6 and 7, 1959, when the president of the Canadian National, Mr. Gordon, was examined. His evidence, with respect to the capital budget, is available on the pages of the committee record starting at page 215. I see no point in repeating any of the information that was obtained by members at that time, other than to point out that on page 223, members might be interested in knowing that this very heavy annual capital expenditure seems to be perhaps on the decline in that the programs for dieselization, road mechanization and road improvement, as well as some other items, are coming to completion. Mr. Gordon said that the figure for this year is $75 million lower than the figure for last year. As I said at the resolution stage, I think we are all impressed with the magnitude of the items of capital expenditure that are asked for by this road and in turn the extra expense that is required to finance this capital debt on a steady annual basis.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATIONS, PROVIDE FOR MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the proposed amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Furthermore, I intend to direct certain questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when the house is in committee.

On June 15 last, while the house was considering the resolution to amend the act, we were glad to hear the minister commend that bill.

After explaining why the act had been adopted, the minister quoted figures which fully vindicate the advantages contemplated by that legislation. In fact, as recorded on page 4736 of Hansard, he stated:

> Loans under the act during 1958 totalled 70,278 in number, and $90,539,743 in amount borrowed. This represents an increase in lending of approximately $20 million over the amount lent during each of the preceeding three years.

The minister also told the house that the increase was much more substantial for the first three months of 1959, when loans had increased from $10,436,991 to $14,707,086, that is an increase of 40 per cent. He stated further that there was every reason to believe that in 1959 those loans would reach an unprecedented volume.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take too much of the house's time in analysing the report made by the minister and saying all the good I think about the proposed legislation. Besides, it has already been commended by the minister himself when he said, as recorded on page 4736 of Hansard:

> The figures give some indication of the credit service which has been rendered to Canadian agriculture through this legislation. The credit has been available and utilized in all provinces.

We, in the province of Quebec, are happy to be able to enjoy the benefits of an act passed in 1934 under a Liberal government, of which the Hon. James Ilsley, then minister of finance, and the Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner, then minister of agriculture, were members.

It is to the latter, especially, that we owe all the agricultural legislation which gave our farmers the prosperity they have known during the post-war years. I am convinced that the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) agrees with me.

If our farmers have increased their loans, can it be due to an improvement in farming conditions? No, Mr. Speaker, because they have run into debt to the tune of $40 million in 1957 and 1958, and of over $14 million in the first three months of 1959.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), saw fit to announce, on various occasions, that the increase of agricultural production was 8 per cent higher than the year before. However, he did not say by what amount farmers went into debt during the same period.

Apart from having incurred debts to the amount of $54 million under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, farmers have also increased their liability to the extent of $61 million under the Canadian Farm Loan Act. During the last three years, loans granted by the board were $8.2 million for 1955-56, $13.2 million in 1956-57, $19.3 million in 1957-58, and $29 million for the year 1958-59.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in giving those figures was to show the house that the farmers' position is not as rosy as the Ministers of Agriculture and Finance have indicated. Farmers are getting deeper into debt from year to year, so much so that many of them will be bankrupt within the next few years, if their position does not improve.

Mr. Speaker, I realize I am not allowed to dwell on this subject or to discuss the farmer's position. However, I reserve the right to revert to this matter when the proposed amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act come up for debate.

I just wanted to say that we have a long way to go to restore to farmers the confidence they had before the Conservative government took over.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are supporting this bill. If I had to reproach the Minister of Finance with anything about it, it would be his failure to introduce this legislation sooner, considering that the fiscal year ended on March 31 last. We are now at the end of June, banks have continued making loans and we are asked to pass legislation that expired on March 31 of this year. If it is decided to change that legislation next year, I hope the Minister of Finance will submit amendments early in the session.

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Farm.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bill, and following up the remarks of the last speaker when he pointed out, as I understand it, that the three-year maximum allowance expired at the end of March, I see nothing in this bill which is the equivalent of an amendment which I believe was made three years ago under similar circumstances which made clear that any lending done from April 1 to the royal assent to the bill would have approval.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, that is clause 3 of the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, in paragraph (ff) of subsection 1, the following definition is given with regard to the word "farming" ...

(Text):

(ff) "farming" includes livestock raising, dairying, bee keeping, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil;

Could the minister tell us if a sugar producer is included in this paragraph?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The only change being made in the definition of farming in the present bill is to include bee keeping within the scope of the definition of "farming". Hitherto bee keeping when pursued as a separate avocation has not been included within the definition of farming. The purpose of this amendment is to include it from this point forward.

Mr. Boulanger: Can a sugar producer receive a loan under this clause?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It would depend on whether he did nothing but raise sugar. If he is growing sugar beets that is obviously farming; but if he is producing sugar by some other means, such as maple sugar, it depends on whether he is pursuing farming, and this is an adjunct or side line, as it is in most cases.

Mr. Benidickson: Could the minister give us some information about the lending which has taken place from the time of expiry of the last authority to the present time? Has it gone on without any change in pace or pattern? The minister did give some assurance to the banks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. The chartered banks agreed to continue lending without interruption on the assurance I gave them that we would be introducing this bill at the present session.

Mr. Benidickson: Has the minister found any reluctance on the part of the banks to carry on in the same magnitude their lending as a result of the 5 per cent interest rate? Do the figures indicate that lending is continuing notwithstanding this rate, which is somewhat low having regard to the tighter money market which exists at the present time?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes; there has been no diminution in the volume of lending, I am informed. I just hope this bill passes before someone suggests that there should be some increase in the interest rate.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTINUATION OF INCREASED PENSIONS FOR SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS, ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL AND MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-60 respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the minister made no remarks when we were debating the previous bill with respect to capital funds for the Canadian National Railways. Surely now when we have before us a bill with respect to a general increase in pensions for retired civil servants it might be appropriate for the minister to say something about approaches that may have been made to him by either the Minister of Transport, speaking for the C.N.R., or the Prime Minister who, in days gone by, was a strong advocate for increasing the pensions of retired C.N.R. employees. They are not included in this bill, and I wondered, as I asked previously, whether or not other members of the ministry have approached the Minister of Finance in this connection, because this would require attention on the part of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member has said, there is no provision in this bill which affects the pensions payable to retired employees of the Canadian National Railways or Canadian government railways. This bill applies broadly to three categories: former civil servants, former members of the armed forces, and former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

So far as the other subject is concerned, questions were asked on a previous occasion.

I think on June 15, on another measure, and in that regard I gave the committee the information that I had at that time.

On clause 13—Amounts payable out of C.R.F.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, would you mind explaining exactly what the formula "Carry-Adopte-Carried" means? Is not only one word necessary in those words of approval of Your Honour?

The Chairman: It is the tradition to translate the two expressions of this word in both English and in French. In French it is "Adopte" and in English it is "Carried".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course, but Your Honour says "Carry-Adopte-Carried". Why the second "carried".

Mr. Harkness: It means, "Is it carried? Yes."

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not a criticism; I just wanted information.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING ORGANIZATION AND DISCIPLINE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-34, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 41—Notice of Appeal.

Mr. Roberge: When we reached clause 41 the last time this order was called I had the honour to move an amendment which was not carried. That was an honour, too. But the Minister of Justice agreed when the hon. member for Cartier spoke of 96 hours, and after that there was some private discussion with regard to this clause 41, so I wonder if the minister has something to add on this clause. Possibly he may himself have an amendment to move or to have moved.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The discussion on the last occasion related to the possibility that a member might be prejudiced because of the short time within which he must file his notice of appeal, as provided in this proposed clause. I pointed out that I did not think there would actually be much hardship because the member would in every case be at a divisional or subdivisional headquarters. It was not as if he would be returned to some distant detachment where the mails are slow and where this provision might cause some hardship. However, I did agree that I would be prepared to consider an extension of the time, because I do not think it would do any harm and it might save some hardship, although I cannot actually visualize cases in which that would be necessary. I am therefore prepared to ask one of my colleagues to move:

That clause 41 be amended by striking out the comma after the word "requests" in line 7 on page 13 and inserting the words "within forty-eight hours after the passing of sentence," and also by deleting the words "forty-eight hours" in line 8 and substituting therefor the words "four days".

The effect of this change would be to give a convicted member 48 hours after the passing of sentence in which to decide whether he wants to appeal, and then if he makes a decision to appeal within that 48 hours he has a further 96 hours to proceed with the written notice of appeal so that in effect he will have six days within which to perfect the actual notice.

Mr. Harkness: I so move.

Mr. Roberge: Of course, this amendment is welcome on this side of the house and, as I said earlier, I will have the honour to support it, but I would like to ask the minister this. The request would have to be made within 48 hours after the passing of sentence; there would be a lapse of time during which the transcript is being made, and then he would have four days to decide whether he would appeal or not. Is the minister prepared to say that all this time the member will be stationed at headquarters?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, he would be kept at the place where he is tried.

Mr. Roberge: Something in the regulations would provide that?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say how pleased we are that the Minister of Justice has responded to the eloquent plea of the hon. member for Megantic for an amendment to this clause and to the very logical and wise arguments put forward by members of this group because of their basic humane sentiments.

Mr. Crestohl: It occurs to me that the delay occupied by the making of the transcript may shorten the effective time allowed to the convicted member who is considering an appeal, and this is bound to be the case unless the minister would undertake to introduce some provision which would ensure the transcription of the evidence at once. The minister certainly sees the point I am trying to make. There may be delay in transcribing the evidence and if he must lodge his appeal within a certain time he may be prejudiced if there should be an unfortunate delay, for some reason or another, that the evidence is not being promptly transcribed.

Mr. Fulton: We would be prepared to look at that in the regulations and see that a reasonable time is prescribed there.

Mr. Crestohl: Could we have some provision by which the time at which the appeal should be made would be after the evidence has been transcribed, say from the time of the transcription of the evidence rather than from the moment of the conviction?

Mr. Fulton: That is the case now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house would consider giving unanimous consent to carry on with the business of the house which was just suspended?

Mr. Winch: No.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15 (3).

There being a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54 they be considered in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-23, respecting the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert.—Mr. Henderson.

ROGER MYRE

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-302, for the relief of Roger Myre.—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Broome: Would the chairman of the private bills committee care to comment on this group of divorce bills?

Mr. Pickersgill: Heaven forbid!

Mr. McCleave: I shall be glad to make a very brief comment. First considering the nature of the interjection of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I perhaps have some information which will be of interest to him and to the bona fide residents of the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether he will explain what he means by "bona fide"?

An hon. Member: Everyone except the hon. member.

Mr. McCleave: It would not be up to me, Mr. Chairman, to dare to lecture a student in the law as to what is a bona fide resident of the province of Newfoundland, but it does involve questions of domicile, permanent intention to stay in a certain place, come what political winds that may.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I believe I have a question of privilege. No one could have any firmer intention of staying where he now is as long as his constituents want him than the member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. McCleave: I am sure that will be very reassuring to certain constituents of the hon. member, but we have seemed to drift from the main point. The information that I was going to outline before the committee this afternoon is that this particular group of 38 divorce bills contains the first case involving a Newfoundland divorce this session, and as far as I know from the cases that are yet to be processed in the other place and here this will be the only case and, if so, this would give Newfoundland the very great distinction of having the lowest divorce rate in all of Canada.

The hon. member for Vancouver South has asked for some brief comment, I gather, on the nature of the evidence in the 38 cases which are before us this afternoon. I can point out that only 11 of the 38 fit the so-called hotel or motel category, and this is somewhat below the average that one would find in any particular batch of cases.

The other point I would mention is that 15 of the 38 petitioners whose petitions are before the committee this afternoon are husbands and this is a very high percentage. Normally one finds that in 95 per cent of all these divorces it is the woman who is seeking relief, but here this afternoon we find that 15 of the 38 petitioners are husbands.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Just on this matter of 15 husbands seeking divorces, has any check been made to see if the dower rights, or the rights normally accruing to the woman through this action, have been protected?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the advantage of legal advisers here this afternoon, but a woman who commits adultery does, I believe, lose her dower rights. That is true of most provinces in Canada. I am not sure about the position in the province of Quebec. I think I can reassure the hon. member who has raised this particular question that the women who are sued for divorce in all the cases are in this position. I go very quickly through them and I see that in all cases but two these women have found another breadwinner to keep them alive.

The Deputy Chairman: The matter the hon. member is discussing is not under the jurisdiction of the House of Commons. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Of those 15 cases were any contested by the wives?

Mr. McCleave: Of the 15 cases where the husbands sued the wives there was one case which was contested before the committee of the other place. The wife and her witnesses were heard and the divorce was recommended by that committee.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in this particular contested case were there financial arrangements made either in the committee or in some other place?

Mr. McCleave: The answer is that the woman involved had engaged in some business enterprise, I think in her present business; I am not sure but I believe that to be the case. In any event, she was a businesswoman. There were certain financial dealings between the husband and the wife before the action was brought.

Mr. Peters: Was there a satisfactory settlement between the parties, or was this part of the reason for the particular case being contested?

Mr. McCleave: I believe they were not settled to the satisfaction of the wife, Mr. Chairman, because if there were any business brains in that particular duo they belonged to the wife herself. The husband had committed an offence in bankrupty and as a result had spent a certain amount of time in prison.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND ABSENTEE VOTING PROVISIONS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howard for the second reading of Bill No. C-16, to amend the Canada Elections Act (absentee voting).

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered for the first time at this session, for the first time since the government changed two years ago, I believe, and possibly for the first time in the history of parliament, on March 10 of this year. If I may trespass very briefly on the time of the house, perhaps it would be useful, before getting into general observations on the principle of the bill, to point out exactly what the bill attempts to do.

As the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), the sponsor of the bill, pointed out on March 10, this particular amendment to the Canada Elections Act should not be confused with another amendment standing in his name dealing with advance polls. The absentee voting provided for in this particular measure is not the advance voting provided for in the other measure standing in the hon. member's name. The provisions of this bill would enable one to vote somewhere else on the normal election day. Advance polls, of course, are held before the general election day.

The hon. member had a precedent in proposing this particular measure for our consideration in the practice carried out in two western provinces, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. To a limited extent the right of absentee voting exists in the province of Ontario but I understand it pertains only to mariners who may be absent from their particular riding on election day. The bill provides two different forms of ballot to take advantage of absentee voting. One is an ordinary ballot for people who may find themselves in the riding on election day but remote from the poll where they would normally be expected to vote. I presume this would apply in the case of very large ridings such as we have in the northern and northwestern part of the country and I can see that it might also be of value in a riding such as I represent which stretches approximately 120 miles along the coast of Nova Scotia and where one might be in Ecum Secum and entitled to vote at Hubbards at the other end. That is one of the ballots proposed in the measure introduced by the hon. member.

The second is a special blank ballot which is for use outside the constituency under the formula set forth in the bill. There may be some confusion with respect to ballot form 36A which is printed as part of the schedule to the bill in that there are two blank spaces on that ballot. As all hon. members know, there are two ridings in Canada which are dual-member constituencies. I have the honour to represent one, the constituency of Halifax, where one is entitled to vote for two members on election day. The other is the riding of Queens in Prince Edward Island.

The blank ballot that is proposed for the absentee voter could of course give rise to problems in single member ridings where, unless there is a great deal of public education on the matter, the absentee voter might think he had hit a bonanza and was entitled to vote for two members instead of one, absence making the heart grow fonder, so to speak, of all politicians. It is not a danger to be fond of all politicians but it is a danger to lose your vote by voting for too many politicians. However, my observation is perhaps of the picayune variety and any danger could be cured when the bill reaches committee by deciding that the ballot should have a single blank space for single member constituencies and a double blank space for double member constituencies.

The formula offered to us by the hon. member for Skeena in presenting the measure is that absentee voting should be confined to those people who are in a province adjacent to the one in which they are resident. This would be of great advantage to the people of the maritimes. Each one of our three provinces is adjacent to the others. Elsewhere in Canada, a person from Ontario would have a chance to vote in Quebec or Manitoba but that is all. A New Brunswick man who was absent from the province on election day could vote in Quebec, Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia. He would have three chances, as it were, three places where he could vote instead of two. I will say something about the adjacent province formula a little later.

One other proposal made in the bill before us this afternoon is that nomination day take place 28 days in advance of polling day. It is usually 14 days except in certain areas which are most isolated. I must confess that I do not follow the reasoning of the hon. member in making this proposal.

We all grant that the right to vote is one of the most important rights that citizens in a democracy enjoy and at first blush it would seem very important that we do all we can to see that the vote is as heavy as possible. In proposing this measure the hon. member for Skeena will certainly ensure that there will be at least a few thousand votes added in every riding, votes of people who for some reason or another are unable to be at home on election day. I am sure most members would agree that if the case were as simple as that it would be a very good thing for us to have a system of absentee voting in Canada.

Other approaches toward solving the problem of the absentee voter commend themselves. For example, a voter may be away on business and I thought one approach would be to declare election day a holiday, as it is for certain people, or declare it a bank holiday so that the ordinary business of the country would cease and everybody would be free to go to the polls. The danger of that approach is that if you declare a holiday everybody will immediately go forth to their pleasures, and instead of building up the vote you would probably simply build up the necessity for some system of absentee voting.

Another approach, and again this is not the method used by the hon. member, would be to set forth some list of exemptions of those who would be entitled to use the absentee vote. He has done this in a certain respect, in that a person has to show some cause for being unable to be at his poll on election day and therefore asking to use another poll or, if outside the province, a blank ballot.

These are three approaches, and the one he has chosen is to use the adjacent province formula, mixed in with some show of cause as to why the voter is absent from the place he would be normally expected to vote. My problem, Mr. Speaker, is that I could not make up my mind when the measure was debated on March 10 as to what approach I should take to this problem. When I rose to speak at that time the whip of the Liberal party said I had one minute, so there was not much time to make up my mind. It is a far cry from March 10, but I am still unable to make up my mind whether or not this is really a good measure. The problem I face, Mr. Speaker, is that I am not sure whether or not this is a cheapening of the democratic process.

The right to vote has been a hard fought one; blood has been spilled and heads have been knocked in. People have gone to their graves to ensure that there shall be a democratic process in Canada and in other countries. Now, we are taking this hard fought right to vote, one of our most precious rights, and we are, in effect, debasing it somewhat in making it as available as all the attractive groceries that line the shelves of a supermarket. We are saying to a person that it is possible to feel free to roam at election time because upon showing good cause he will be able to vote. I am sure that the "good cause" would be construed in a generous rather than a narrow sense. I am sure there would be hundreds of people who would take advantage of the opportunity. I feel that this approach to voting does tend to cheapen the value of a particular vote.

However, that is not going to be my main consideration in announcing my decision in due course toward this bill. I should like to hear arguments on the point I have just presented. Perhaps those who follow me in the debate would be good enough to help clear up the doubts that are in my mind about it. There was one point made by one of the previous speakers, and I think the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) raised it by way of a question rather than by any speech of his own. He asked whether there was not a danger that the election results might be rather inconclusive on election night because there would still be these absentee votes to be counted. This happens in any close race now because the armed services' vote is not brought into the final tally until some days or weeks later. I suggest to the hon. member for York-Scarborough, who raised the question, that it is really answered by comparing the absentee vote to the armed services vote in that respect.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, it is time to make up my mind as to whether or not I am in favour of this measure. I think perhaps I am not, but I would give it support here if I could be convinced that this method of making voting easier is not a means of debasing the sacred right of the ballot.

(Translation):

Mr. Vincent Brassard (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in the past, though I am not terribly old, I have had to sacrifice a trip and to postpone important business to wait for polling time in my constituency, because I made it a point to fulfil what I consider as an important duty for any responsible citizen who has regard for our democratic way of life.

I know that a great many people have been doing the same, and I also know that a great many citizens will not bother to vote if it interferes with some immediate pleasure or task.

We find that, under certain circumstances, candidates are elected by an active minority, while large numbers of voters do not bother to vote. This is, of course, a lack of responsibility on the part of people who feel free to criticize those who take on the task of managing the country's business. Indeed, I understand that in some countries, it has been necessary to make voting compulsory, and to force citizens to meet their obligation.

Mr. Speaker, I know I would be out of order in wandering off too far into the field of compulsory voting, but perhaps you will allow me to point out that it is a shame to see so many people show so little consideration for a right that was gained at the cost of untold sacrifices, and often, indeed, through revolt and bloodshed.

Even in Canada, we had to fight tooth and nail to gain the right to vote and to enjoy responsible government, and I think it is because of the carefree life we are used to, and the freedom we enjoy, that people today hardly bother about casting their vote.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to support Bill C-16, as introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I think if this amendment to the Elections Act were passed, fewer people would find an excuse for failing to vote.

In the last election, for instance, I know of scores of people who apologized in advance for being unable to vote because they were planning a trip. Others, travelling salesmen, were unable to take advantage of advance polls, because the rules governing such polls are so strict that very very few people can qualify. I do not have the figures here, but in a constituency such as my own, where there are over 33,000 people on the voting list, less than 15 per cent were able to use the advance poll.

Mr. Speaker, I am even wondering whether the hon. member has gone far enough in proposing to open up the polls only to people travelling in adjacent provinces. Personally, I think every Canadian citizen should be entitled to vote anywhere in Canada. Indeed I would even suggest that those who travel abroad should have an opportunity to vote by calling at the closest Canadian consular office.

An example of this method has been given by the French republic which, in its last referendum, succeeded in getting its citizens in foreign lands to vote, and indeed in getting the vote from French citizens who have since then become citizens of other countries.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I favour the principle of any measure aimed at promoting the exercise of the right to vote, and the normal functioning of democracy; it gives me pleasure, therefore, to lend my support to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in the debate on Bill C-16.

I fully agree with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Brassard) in his statement that the right to vote is a privilege and a duty that every citizen should exercise on polling day. However, I feel that it is a privilege that people normally ignore.

In fact, in the recent Ontario elections, only 64 per cent of registered voters cast their vote.

In the last general elections, over 83 per cent of the voters in my constituency cast their votes. I think this is practically a record.

Across the river, in the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre, 80 per cent of the voters cast their votes, while the turnout in Bonavista-Twillingate was only 75 per cent.

In my opinion, this bill is somewhat too complicated. In my view, the right to vote should not be exercised outside the province itself, because so few voters exercise that privilege. In my opinion, it would be quite difficult to conduct an election in that way.

The advance polls now provided are little used. For instance, in St. Boniface, 78 voters out of a total of 35,000, exercised their right to vote on the appointed days. In Winnipeg South Centre, only 66 voters out of 53,443, voted at the advance polls.

Besides, when you study those figures you find that voters at advance polls generally vote the same way as the majority of voters in the constituency. For instance, in Winnipeg South, where the Conservative majority was considerable, 45 voters favoured the Conservative party, 14 the Liberal party and 7 the C.C.F. party.

Now, in St. Boniface, out of 78 who voted at advance polls, 34 supported the Conservative party, 26 voted C.C.F. and 17 voted Liberal.

I said just now that the procedure proposed in this bill would be too complicated because people are not even interested in voting, even if, in many cases, their polling station is only a few hundred yards away.

To exercise his right of vote, under this bill, the elector will have first to apply for a ballot paper from the returning officer's office of his electoral district. Then, he would have to get a witness to identify him in the poll where he would vote. In addition, he would have to sign an affidavit, and the person who would accompany him would also have to take the oath. I believe that few people would willingly submit to all those requirements.

However, if some easier procedure could be devised, perhaps I might support the bill.

Besides, it would be necessary, under the bill, that the nomination be held 28 days before election day; under the Canada Elections Act as it now stands, the delay is only 14 days. I believe the suggested system would make elections almost impossible.

Then, too, it would be difficult to get the results on the election day and I believe this practice could lead to certain abuses and allow certain people to vote who are not entitled to do so. Even under the system we now have, fraudulent practices often creep in at election time.

Personally, I believe that we should favour the advance polling system within the ridings themselves, for the benefit of travellers who have to be away from their homes on voting day. I believe that in this way we could give practically all the electors the right to vote in their own constituency, provided they have proper identification, even if their name were not on the voters' list. But, I think it would be a little exaggerated to give the right to vote in another province thus allowing a person from Manitoba to vote here in Ottawa, or in Saskatchewan and so on. When electors show that they appreciate the privilege of voting by turning out in a proportion of 90 per cent, for instance, perhaps we might then endeavour to find a system to facilitate the exercise of the right to vote.

(Text):

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I think most hon. members realize full well that we are dealing with a most important subject. I feel that all hon. members have the idea that one thing of which we in Canada can be proud is our electoral system. I believe this idea receives the support of most hon. members.

For my part as a member of this house I know that whether I won or lost an election I have always been extremely happy about the way in which the electoral officers have run affairs in my district. Hence, not unlike most hon. members, anything that we do with regard to electoral laws, I look upon as being an extremely important matter. Consequently the first thing I ask myself in relation to a bill of this nature is this: How practical is it in an administrative sense? Actually I think that is one thing that is basically in the minds of all of us this afternoon: Can a law of this type, if it is passed by this House of Commons, be administered in a practical way?

Frankly, I may say that is the question that I have been asking myself ever since I realized that I would have the opportunity of speaking on this subject. I appreciate the fact that most of the clauses of this bill have received a great deal of study. I congratulate hon. members opposite on the preparation they have put into this bill. From the very nature of the draftsmanship of the bill it is obvious that it has received a great deal of consideration and study. At the same time, even after reading it I again return to the fact that I question the possibility of administering it. I know that we want, in a democracy like Canada, to make it possible for as many people to vote as possible, and I will have something later to say about the remarks, with which I fully agree, made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) about the fact that voting does involve certain sacrifices.

Against that consideration I think we should in this modern day and age of communications realize that by and large it is desirable to have as many people as possible voting. Like most hon. members of this house, Mr. Speaker, I only have my own particular constituency to go by when discussing a bill of this nature. I know that the population of my own area, Brome-Missisquoi, is a little over 40,000, and there are approximately 22,000 on the electoral list. I have always said to myself that it seems a relatively small number of people on a list considering the total population, in view of the fact that I know full well that the enumerators in my particular area, undoubtedly, like most areas, do a very thorough job. In my area the generation of young people is considerable; in other words, I have an area where families are very large. Even so I suspect that the list of voters could be a little larger under certain conditions. Whether or not certain people decide not to go to the trouble of voting, or even decide not to let their names get onto an electoral list because they are going to travel on election day, is a question I cannot answer. I would like to ask members opposite if they have any statistics for this particular dilemma in which I find myself, because it is a question I cannot decide on.

I know, that in my own area many people phoned our organizers, as they must have phoned the organizers of members opposite, and asked them how they might vote in an advance poll because on election day they would be travelling. Although in the last election many, many provisions were made for voting at advance polls, I personally was surprised—and whether or not it was because the law is basically complicated I do not know—at the number of people who actually availed themselves of the privilege of voting at an advance poll. No doubt a person has to be most sincere in his desire to want to exercise his democratic franchise, and go to the trouble of asking questions and usually travelling a little further than he would normally do, on advance poll day. Many people kept coming up to me before election day and asked these questions, and I still feel that there is no doubt a bill of this nature could, as the hon. member for Halifax said, get more people on the list voting on election day.

I was more than interested in the remarks which he made about the double constituencies in the province of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and I certainly hesitate to feel that a bill of this nature should prejudice the ridings which he mentioned. Undoubtedly no such thing was in the minds of members opposite. I am not suggesting that for a moment, but I would like to reiterate the problem which the hon. member brought up in relation to the double constituencies. I point this out only to make sure that this very knotty problem was in the minds of members opposite when they took the trouble to draft this particular piece of legislation.

In reading over this bill I am sure I have asked myself, generally speaking, some questions that most hon. members have asked themselves. For example, should we make it too easy for a citizen to vote? Should we not, in the truest sense of the word, make some sort of sacrifice on voting day? The thought came to my mind that many people would simply say, "Well, we can take a holiday; we can go and travel in any part of the country and still have our right to vote." Frankly, I do not think this bill intends to permit that sort of thing, and for that reason the legislation which is being contemplated at the present moment should actually consider a means test. In other words, the advance poll rules and regulations should specify those people who are going to be allowed to use the privileges of this type of vote. Thus I think it is very important that this particular legislation which we are considering contemplates the fact that only certain people in certain forms of activity can avail themselves of the particular privileges which are contemplated in this legislation. I think it is most important that this be considered, and once more I reiterate the fact that I do not think this legislation should, or even does, visualize the possibility of Mr. X or Mr. Y going on a long pleasure trip on election day and exercising his vote in that way.

Mr. Speaker, the points which I have brought up do indicate in no small way that there might be, as I said at the opening of my remarks, certain administrative difficulties in administering an act of this sort. As I said, most hon. members are well aware of the efficiency of the marvellous electoral system in this country, and I have the feeling that this is one thing which might certainly have been advanced by the chief electoral officer had it seemed practicable.

The hon. member for Halifax mentioned what he called the general neighbouring province rule in this bill, and I not know whether or not it is a little discriminatory. I do not see why, for instance, we cannot visualize the possibility of a travelling salesman from Nova Scotia finding himself in British Columbia on election day. No doubt if he is really travelling on business as a travelling salesman and just has to be in British Columbia, as a voting resident of the province of Nova Scotia I personally see no reason why he should be excluded from voting under this particular type of legislation. It seems to me that he is one of those cases which this legislation should help, and that is why I ask whether or not the general neighbouring province rule which was enunciated by members opposite should be considered.

These certainly are considerations which I felt were pertinent and which I felt should be brought up at the present time as we consider most important measures in relation to an electoral system which I for one, in conjunction with our parliamentary system of government, feel is perhaps second to none in the western world.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the bill that is before us this afternoon attempts to deal with the problem that arises from the increasing mobility of our people in our type of civilization. Many of the occupations and activities of our people take place outside their constituencies and the places in which they reside most of the year. This is an extension of the principle which has been adopted to permit members of the armed forces to vote while they are away from home. It would permit groups such as construction workers and others who cannot get back home in order to vote in their home constituencies; it would benefit those who cannot benefit at present under the advance poll regulations, in that they will not be in their constituency at the time the advance poll is open, to vote on polling day in the location where they may be, although the bill does limit this opportunity to voting in their own provinces or in adjacent provinces; for example, someone living in Ontario could vote if he were in Quebec or Manitoba.

I think this expresses the good intention of making it possible for the maximum number of qualified voters to vote wherever they may be in order to enable them to exercise that franchise which is so important and sacred to them. I think it is a laudable object but I may, as an aside, say it would be more encouraging or more invigorating to our democracy if we could encourage those who are in their constituencies and who do not take the trouble to exercise the franchise, to do so. However, the fact that we have these people in our constituencies who do not wish to exercise their franchise is in no way an argument against enlarging the opportunities for those who do wish to vote.

I understand that the adoption of this principle would require the adoption of a permanent voters' list, because under the present system where enumerators go out at a time specified in the act after the writs of election have been issued, only those who are contacted or put on the list by the enumerators, can vote at a particular election. Hence it would be more than probable that those who would be out of the riding on construction work, or engaged in commerce, would be apt to be missed under our present system. A voters' list of the permanent type would overcome the difficulty in our present system where so many people are left off the list and have to be put on afterwards. It seems that under the present system those who are roomers or who live in apartments are the ones who are most often left off, and it has even been found that landlords who have roomers do not encourage those living in their houses to be put on the voters list and have sometimes purposely not given their names to the enumerators, for reasons which are connected with taxation. The provision of a permanent list, as would be required by a bill such as this, would overcome these difficulties.

However, there would be some objections to a permanent list, and one of these would be the cost of maintaining such a list. It would have to be revised periodically and even then, although it might be completed close to a date, say in February, if an election were to come in January there would have to be an opportunity for making additions. I think also that difficulties would arise in areas such as Toronto where there is a constant change in the population. These changes would result in people being on the permanent list yet having moved to another place, and one would have to be careful to ensure that abuses would not arise because of the fact that people might be on two or three lists.

However, these are details which would have to be taken care of if this system were adopted, and I think that any reasonable method could be adopted if we were sincere in trying to put it into effect.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private and public bills having expired, the house will revert to the consideration of the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING ORGANIZATION AND DISCIPLINE

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-34, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Rea in the chair.

It being six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 41—Notice of appeal.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose we were discussing an amendment to clause 41. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at five o'clock I had asked the minister a question concerning allowing sufficient time to deal with the procedure of appeal after the transcription had been made. I see that clause 41 makes ample provision for that, but I should like to draw to the minister's attention the fact that while the clause is very anxious for the accused to be diligent in making his appeal there is nothing in the clause which speaks of the diligence with which the appeal should be processed. Since, in answer to a question of the hon. member for Megantic, the minister stated that the prisoner is kept in custody if he makes a statement about his desire to go to appeal, I think it would be appropriate for provision to be made that such an appeal should be proceeded with diligently. There is nothing in the legislation which provides for that. It is quite possible that after an accused has given his notice of appeal, the appeal may just drag, things may intervene and the prisoner will be kept in custody all the time. In our language before the courts we say "kept in custody without bail". I do not think that is the intention of the minister or of the legislation. I therefore want to move the following amendment to clause 41, which is seconded by the hon. member for Megantic:

That clause 41, of Bill C-34 be further amended by adding at the end of the said clause the following words:

"and such appeal shall be proceeded with diligently within eight days from the service of such notice of appeal."

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We have an amendment that will have to be disposed of first.

Mr. Crestohl: I beg your pardon. I will reserve mine until after the first amendment is disposed of.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the first amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Crestohl: Without repeating what I said Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the minister the following amendment to clause 41, namely that it be further amended by adding at the end of the said clause the following words:

"and such appeal shall be proceeded with diligently within eight days from the service of such notice of appeal."

The reason I make it eight days is that the notice of appeal has to be given very expeditiously, and in the meantime the prisoner is kept in custody without bail. Therefore, it would only be fair to make some provision to deal with the appeal expeditiously. However, if the minister should find that eight days would not give sufficient time—I am not familiar with the procedure in processing these things in the department—perhaps he would suggest a further delay, but the delay should be fixed within which the appeal should be heard.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the intent and the object of the hon. gentleman. I do not like to keep on suggesting that these things must all be left to the discretion of the officers administering the force, though I think such matters generally can be. However, I should be reluctant to accept the eight-day limitation because the appeal has to be forwarded to Ottawa, has to be processed here and then whatever proceedings are to be held must be arranged for at the place where the trial was held. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would consent to leaving a certain discretion with the commissioner, but making it clear that the appeal must be dealt with quickly. That might be accomplished by changing the proposed amendment to read, "and such appeal should be proceeded with, with all due dispatch"? If that would be acceptable I would be very glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. Crestohl: I am prepared to go along in my thinking with the minister's suggestion and have confidence in the commissioner that such an appeal will be dealt with as speedily as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: With the unanimous consent of the committee, the hon. member for Cartier would like to change his amendment to read as follows:

That clause 41, of Bill C-34 be further amended by adding at the end of the said clause the following words:

"and such appeal shall be proceeded with, with all due dispatch."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 42 agreed to.

On clause 43—Board of review.

Mr. Crestohl: On this clause, I wonder whether the minister finds that the word "and" in the second line is necessary? It seems to me to be a bit superfluous. It says:

There shall be a board of review appointed by the minister and consisting of a deputy commissioner—

And so on. I do not see the purpose of the word "and" there.

Mr. Fulton: I would be quite content if my hon. friend wishes to move to delete the word.

Mr. Crestohl: Yes, I will move that the word "and" in the second line of clause 43 be deleted. The motion is seconded by the hon. member for St. Denis.

Mr. Fulton: I will just write it out if my hon. friends do not mind.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Cartier moves:

That subclause (1) of clause 43 be amended by deleting the word "and" in line 17 on page 13 of the bill.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 43 as amended carry?

Mr. Crestohl: We were dealing with clause 43 (1). There is a second subclause which I would like to say a word on. Are we dealing with subclause 2, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Crestohl: Subclause 2 speaks of appeals by persons convicted of a major service offence. Is there any explanation why this right to have the case dealt with is given only to those convicted of a major service offence and not to those convicted of a minor service offence?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Crestohl: If the minister will excuse me, I will complete my question. Does that mean that a person convicted of a minor service offence has no right of appeal?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. I think this was explained when we were discussing the bill on second reading at which time I pointed out that there are now created two categories of offences, major offences and minor offences. Major offences now are only those offences against the provisions of the act as set out in clause 25. These are serious offences. Minor offences are minor disciplinary offences against the standing orders, rules or regulations of the force and they carry with them a difference as to the maximum penalty that may be imposed. With respect to the major offences, it is provided that they shall all be reviewed by a board of review. With respect to minor offences, it is provided that they are automatically reviewed by the commissioner.

Mr. Roberge: Under clause 43, subclause 2, I see that the board of review shall examine the record and shall make its recommendation to the commissioner. Does that mean that the offender who is appealing from the verdict and sentence will not be heard by the board of review?

Mr. Fulton: There is no right of personal hearing. It is impossible due to distance and a variety of other factors, but the board of review itself reviews all records, the transcript and the whole proceedings.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 44—Powers of commissioner on appeal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I may be wrong in my interpretation and I would be grateful for any enlightenment the minister can give. Under subclause 2 of the preceding clause it is clear that any appeal that is taken must be before this board of review, and at first glance I thought that clause 44 must mean that any of the powers given to the commissioner in the clause would be pursuant to a recommendation made by the board of review. I am wondering, however, whether that is the case. In the case of the quashing of a conviction, under this clause would the conviction be quashed by the commissioner only in cases where there was such a recommendation?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. There may be cases in which the commissioner quashes a conviction irrespective of the recommendation of the board.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was that I thought. The minister may have a very good explanation but as provision is made for appeal in respect of major offences one would think that this power given to the commissioner was a pretty wide power, and likewise with respect to dismissing an appeal.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out to my hon. friend that he will perhaps observe that the powers of the commissioner do not extend to increasing the sentence or the severity of the sentence or the punishment imposed in any way. The powers of the commissioner relate to quashing a conviction, which is what we might call the exercise of clemency, or dismissing an appeal, which leaves the matter in status quo, or reducing the sentence or the amount ordered to be paid, which again is a reduction, or ordering a new trial, so that all the powers of the commissioner here are in the direction of reducing the severity of the sentence. He has no power to increase the sentence of the court or the recommendation of the board.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In other words, the powers given the commissioner are all seemingly directed in favour of the accused.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Except possibly in the case of (b). An appeal may have been lodged by the officer against whom the complaint is registered. His appeal, however, may be dismissed by the commissioner without any reference to the board.

Mr. Fulton: That would be impossible. If it were a major service offence it would have to go to the board of review but the commissioner, as I have pointed out, also has the power and the responsibility of reviewing all convictions for minor offences and this power is intended to be exercised with respect to that type of offence.

Mr. Crestohl: May I ask the minister, who is certainly an able jurist, whether he can explain what the procedure will be where a prisoner has lodged an appeal and has discovered new evidence which he would like to bring before the court, so to speak. New evidence has turned up which he would like to bring before those sitting in appeal as it might assist him in winning an acquittal. Since no procedure is provided whereby evidence will be heard or argument can be made, but rather the procedure is limited only to a review of the record by the board, how can an accused obtain relief in the event of something in his favour turning up which was not known at the hearing?

Mr. Fulton: In that case there would be a submission made by the accused or convicted member in the course of his appeal and if new evidence were disclosed the normal procedure would be to order a new trial. May I refer to what I said a moment ago in reply to the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): About minor offences.

Mr. Fulton: Yes. I think I may have created the wrong impression. The power of the commissioner under clause 44 would extend to dismissing an appeal against a conviction for a major offence but the commissioner could not bypass the board. He could not order the appeal dismissed before the board of review had examined it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But notwithstanding—

Mr. Fulton: Notwithstanding the recommendation of the board of review it is true that he could still dismiss the appeal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And the minister feels that is desirable power to give the commissioner? I realize that the officers here are not exactly in the same position that they would be in in civilian life. This is a police force and it may be desirable that the commissioner be given this power but, while I do not press the point, it does seem to me that where an appeal is given all of the advantages of the institution of an appeal ought to be afforded. It would appear that the accused may appeal to the board of review but notwithstanding the recommendation of the board the commissioner for some reason may dismiss the appeal. It is true that in (a) and (c) and (d), as the minister pointed out a moment ago, all the powers given to the commissioner there are directed in favour of the officer against whom the complaint is registered but in (b) that is not necessarily the case. Perhaps the minister might strengthen what he has already said by indicating why it is thought to be desirable that this particular power should be left in the hands of the commissioner.

Mr. Fulton: To do that I think I have to go back to what I said on the last occasion, that these provisions all represent an enlargement of the rights of an accused and convicted member. Previously the only review made of his case was in the case where he was sentenced to a fine or imprisonment. In that event there was a review. Now we have provided that he has the right of appeal in every case, and in the case of a conviction for a major offence it is referred to a board of review. There is here, therefore, nothing new in retaining in the commissioner's hands the power to dismiss an appeal, but he would be extremely unlikely to dismiss an appeal in the face of a direct recommendation by a board of review.

I do point out, however, dealing with the question directly, that there may be cases of breach of discipline of such a nature that it is conceivable that, notwithstanding the recommendation of the board of review, the commissioner might feel that he still has to dismiss the appeal, or the sentence may be a reduction in rank and the commissioner might feel that in the interests of discipline of the force as a whole he must insist upon the sentence being carried out.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 45—Fine fund.

Mr. Roberge: Clause 45 deals with the disposition of pecuniary penalties imposed under subsections 1 and 2 of section 36, which deals with punishment. The clause goes on to say that these penalties shall form a fund to be managed by the commissioner, with the approval of the minister, to be used for the payment of rewards for good conduct or meritorious service.

Clause 23 of this bill provides that all fines and the proceeds of all forfeitures and seizures shall be paid to the minister, and by subclause 3 the money is paid to the benefit trust fund. Am I right in assuming that the moneys, the penalties, turned over to the minister under clause 45 are going to go into that same benefit trust fund?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, this fund is quite separate and apart from the benefit trust fund. My hon. friend will observe, if he looks at clause 23, that it relates to fines, forfeitures and so on which are part of the sentence of an ordinary court. Those go into the benefit trust fund. Clause 45 refers to pecuniary penalties imposed under subsections 1 and 2 of section 36 which relates to fines imposed as a result of convictions against members of the service for service offences. They are two quite different types of funds and the moneys go into two separate funds. The fine fund referred to in clause 45 is much smaller than the benefit trust fund.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, it might be of benefit to read the entire clause 23, if I may, which reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding any other act, all fines and the proceeds of all forfeitures and seizures and all portions of any fine and of any forfeiture or seizure that may be awarded or adjudged to any member of the force in connection with the performance of his duties—

I would think that automatically relates to clause 45 or section 36; there is no other place.

Mr. Fulton: No, because I think my hon. friend has missed out the significant words, "that may be awarded or adjudged to any member of the force". In other words, a fine or the proceeds of a forfeiture or seizure may be awarded or adjudged to a member of the force in connection with the performance of his duties in the course of successfully pursuing and prosecuting a case. There are still some circumstances under which that might happen, and then the fine or forfeiture is paid into the benefit trust fund.

When we come to section 36 which is read in conjunction with clause 45 it is clear that those are fines or penalties imposed on a member of the force in pursuance of a conviction for a service offence.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 46—Deserters.

Mr. Crestohl: This bill speaks of offenders throughout as "every member" or "the member". I take it from this that the procedure set up here for punishment is restricted to members of the force. Now, we come to clause 46 in which the language is changed and the bill now speaks of "every person", for example, who has deserted from the force. I take it that the jurisdiction over the members of the force is set out in this bill, and I take it too that beyond the authority given in this bill the commissioner and the other officials have not criminal jurisdiction over persons other than those who are members of the force.

In the next clauses, beginning with clause 46, we are speaking only of offences committed by persons who are not members of the force. Perhaps the minister could explain where the commissioner gets jurisdiction in criminal matters over people who are not members of the force.

Mr. Fulton: The reason for the use of the word "person" in this and succeeding clauses rather than the word "member" results from the fact that these are persons who are not members of the force. My hon. friend should know that if a member deserts he is automatically struck off strength, and desertion is a major offence, defined under clause 25 of the bill, and we will still wish to deal with the deserter from the force. However, he is no longer a member of the force and therefore he has to be described as a person who has deserted.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 47 agreed to.

On clause 48—Bribes, etc.

Mr. Fulton: I have an amendment to offer to clause 48. There is an error in the drafting. If the members of the committee will read carefully they will, I am sure, appreciate that in subclause 2, line 22, the word "received" should be "given". Here we are dealing with the person who is giving a bribe to a member of the force and the offence intended by this clause is the giving or offering of the bribe to a member. I would, therefore, ask one of my colleagues if they would be kind enough to move:

> That subclause 2 of clause 48 be amended by striking out the word "received" in line 22 on page 14 and substituting the word "given" therefor.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I so move.

Mr. Chevrier: Where are the copies of this bill, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: There are some coming up from downstairs.

Mr. Crestohl: This clause makes a little clearer the condition which I suggested to the minister might exist because here we are describing people who are not members of the force. This measure proposes to give criminal jurisdiction over people who are not members of the force. Clause 48 to me is very clear on that point. I wonder whether the minister can say whether the commissioner or the other officers would have the authority to impose penalties which are punishable on summary conviction or would these people be prosecuted by virtue of the provisions of the Criminal Code? If so, under what section of the Criminal Code would they be prosecuted and what would be the penalty imposed? I think the minister should clear up this conflict, as I see it, of jurisdiction in criminal matters as between the courts of the land and the commissioner and officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Fulton: There is no conflict here at all. No jurisdiction is given to the commissioner or the minister or any other person especially under this clause. Clause 48 specifically provides that persons who are guilty of the offences enumerated in subclauses (a), (b) and (c) are guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. This refers, of course, to the ordinary summary conviction proceedings in the criminal courts of Canada. As I am sure my hon. friend is aware, if he stops to think about the matter, there is in the Criminal Code a section which provides that in the absence of the provision of any specific penalty anyone convicted of an offence against a statute on summary conviction is liable to a fine of, I think it is, $500. However, in this case, clause 51 provides a specific penalty. It provides as follows:

> 51. Every person who is convicted of an offence under this part is liable to a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for six months or to both.

As I recall it, that is the same provision as is found in the summary conviction part of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think the minister is quite correct in that matter, if I may say so with all due respect to the hon. member for Cartier. This is legislation under the guise of criminal law passed by the legislative body in our country that has the power to pass legislation dealing with what is a criminal offence. But the question that I was suggesting to the hon. member for Cartier in private is this: What do we mean by "every person", for instance, in clause 46 where we find the words "every person who has deserted from the force"? The minister said that the kind of person that was envisaged there was not necessarily an officer or a member of the force.

Mr. Fulton: No. I said he would no longer be a member of the force.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): After seven days.

Mr. Fulton: After seven days. The hon. member for Cartier asked the question: why do you not use the terminology which you used previously, namely "a member of the force". I explained that a person who has deserted from the force is after seven days no longer a member of the force and we therefore have used the word "person".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But in clause 48 we find the following:

> 48(1) Every person who
> (a) gives or offers or promises to give to any member of the force any bribe, pecuniary or otherwise—

That person may well be a member of the force.

Mr. Fulton: But "person" in this case would include "member of the force", although it is not restricted to a member of the force. This is ordinary Criminal Code terminology.

Mr. Crestohl: The minister will appreciate the fact that as to a deserter who has been absent for two days and who offers a bribe to someone to remedy his situation, he has not yet been a deserter for seven days and therefore is still properly a member of the force.

Mr. Fulton: But he would also be included in the word "person".

Amendment (Mr. Hamilton, Notre Dame de Grace) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 49 to 51 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 52—Limit on prosecution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Clause 52 reads as follows:

> No proceedings in respect of an offence under this part shall be instituted more than two years after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose.

Was that provision in the other bill or was it already the law? Was not the time different?

Mr. Fulton: No. The time for instituting proceedings was unlimited.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 53—Member of force deemed a servant of the crown.

Mr. Peters: What is the situation, for instance, in the case of a member of the force driving an automobile and where an accident arises out of that fact?

Mr. Fulton: As I say, section 60 of the Exchequer Court Act determines the rights of members of the public against servants of the crown in such circumstances.

This clause merely makes it clear that members of the force are in the same position. They have no preferred position but they are in no worse position than are other servants of the crown in respect of determining liability in any action or other proceedings against Her Majesty arising out of the act of such crown servants.

Mr. Peters: What I am wondering is this. Is there any protection for them in view of their duty? I can remember the case that concerned the R.C.A.F. where an ambulance driver in the course of his duties driving the ambulance with a patient had an accident and the crown refused to have anything to do with the matter. It cost his father $50 thousand or $60 thousand before all the litigation was ended because the crown did not assume any responsibility, even though he was acting in performance of his duties at the time.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure that was some time ago. I am not aware of all the details but I am sure my hon. friend will be aware of the fact that the rights of ordinary citizens suing the crown for the torts of its servants were considerably enlarged by a number of amendments made to the Exchequer Court Act a few years ago. There is protection again to the member of the force or crown servants in that the provisions of sections 60 and 18 of the Exchequer Court Act, I believe, say that the servant acting in the course of his duties shall not be held to be personally liable but that the crown will pay damages. We have, of course, an overriding right in the department—we have at least with respect to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—to make a specific finding that the member should contribute to or reimburse the crown in whole or in part for the cost to which the crown has been put if in the opinion of the deputy attorney general of Canada he was himself guilty of negligence. That takes a specific finding by the deputy attorney general.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or was acting not in the course of duty.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this clause change the common law?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Fulton: At common law the crown could not be sued.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fulton: We have already changed the common law by statute to provide that the crown can be sued and that the crown is liable for the torts of its servants. This clause does not change that situation and carries into effect, so far as members of the force are concerned, the changes already made by statute with respect to servants of the crown.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I understand the importance of this clause, but supposing in an action against Her Majesty it was decided by the court that the act complained of, let us say a tortious act, was not committed in the course of duty. This clause as presently drawn would still not affect the position of a member of the force who "shall be deemed to have been at such time a servant of the crown".

Mr. Fulton: I believe my hon. friend is now asking me to comment on matters about which I have not my advisers or the books before me; but my understanding is that the crown can always defend an action on the ground that its servant was not acting in the course of his employment. I think that defence is open to the crown as well as to any civilian, and it does not change that position.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think my hon. friend is right on that, that the crown can take such a course. But notwithstanding that, the officer in question shall continue to be a servant of the crown as this clause is presently drawn?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then I ask is that a desirable thing?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I think so. The fact that he was not acting in the course of his employment does not change the fact that he was a servant of the crown. There are cases at law where, for example, A is the servant of B and A acts in a manner in which he is not called upon to act in the nature of his employment, and that does not change the fact that he is still the servant of B. Perhaps I should also point out that the wording here is exactly the same as the wording of an amendment to the act passed in 1957.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, can the minister explain this situation: An officer is constantly under orders, whether he is at a particular moment performing special duties or whether he is on his way home, for example, in his car or going elsewhere not in the course of his service. He is at that time also under command, under orders. Would he then be considered to be in the performance of his duties if he commits a tort during that period?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. I think the law is quite clear. As I said a moment ago, if A is the servant of B, A may be called upon to do certain things in the course of his employment. If he does things which he is not called upon to do in the course of his employment but which lie quite outside the scope of his employment, his employer is not liable. But the fact that he acts in a manner in which he is not called upon to act by his employment does not alter the other fact that he is the servant of B. The same with an officer of the force. He is subject to discipline and liable to orders at all times. But if, as is the ordinary case, he is called upon to keep office hours and he keeps such office hours from nine to five, and then in the course of an ordinary day, after five o'clock leaves the office to drive home—he may of course be called on the radio at any time and ordered to go somewhere else—but if in the course of driving home he has an accident involving another vehicle or a civilian pedestrian, he is still an officer of the force; but clearly the act which he committed of driving into somebody else was not committed in the course of his duties as a servant of the crown.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this clause apply only in regard to motor accidents?

Mr. Fulton: Oh no; to all actions carried out by members of the force.

Mr. Chevrier: To all acts of tort, or does it apply to contracts as well?

Mr. Fulton: I would think it would apply to actions on contract as well.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To any actions.

Mr. Fulton: To any action, yes. The clause says:

> For the purpose of determining liability in any action or other proceeding by or against Her Majesty, a person who was at any time a member of the force shall be deemed to have been at such time a servant of the crown.

Mr. Crestohl: I would like to explore the minister's illustration a little further. If a person leaves his duties in his office, for example, as the minister explains, and then drives home and in the course of driving home has an accident, the minister says that under those circumstances there would be no responsibility against him personally. That officer is under command—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I do not think I said that. I think as far as I went was that I said the action committed or engaged in by the person at that time would clearly not be in the course of his duties as a servant of the crown. I did not go on to discuss the question of liability.

Mr. Crestohl: That is correct; I appreciate the correction. But while he is not in the performance of his duty and commits another offence, he is nevertheless under his contract and under command still answerable and is liable to be punished by his seniors. Now, there is a conflict. Either you carry full responsibility for his actions or not. You cannot just carry partial responsibility in one case and full responsibility in another.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if the officer committed a service offence, such as breach of discipline or any other offence against the regulations or act while actually not on duty during office hours, he would of course be liable to be punished; but I do not see that that alters the situation we are discussing in the context of clause 53. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say this in case I have been guilty of unintentionally misleading the committee. I was asked whether this clause changes the common law. I believe not this clause but possibly clause 43 (a), to which I have referred already which was enacted in 1957, did change it because, as I understand it, at common law a member of the R.C.M. Police is not a servant of the crown. The new section added in 1957 makes it clear that he shall be deemed to be so for the purposes set out in the section.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister able to say what effect, if any, it has on the civil code of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think it would have any effect on the civil code in the province of Quebec because this provision is only put in here for the purpose of making applicable thereto sections 60 and 18 of the Exchequer Court Act, which is the only act by virtue of which a civilian can sue the crown.

Mr. Crestohl: I do not seem to be able to reconcile the fact that he is a servant of the crown and under its command during the entire term of his duty, yet he is not responsible for acts which he commits during the hours when he is not actually on duty. He is subject to command 24 hours a day right through the entire period and he must follow orders during that entire period. When a person is subject to the orders of his employer, the employer is responsible for any tort which he commits.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid my hon. friend is mistaken in the law there. Surely the situation is capable of being stated on a common sense basis. Certainly a member of the force, officer, n.c.o. or constable, is subject to call 24 hours a day. But if the orders he has received make it clear that his ordinary duties extend from nine in the morning until five in the afternoon, then that does not mean to say that he is on duty from five in the afternoon until nine the next morning unless he is specifically ordered to be on duty. He may be called out on duty, but in the absence of such a call any conduct, any action which he carries on during that period after five o'clock in the afternoon and before nine o'clock in the following morning are clearly and distinctly not actions in the course of his employment.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister not consider that some clarification might well be made of this clause? I am particularly concerned about some of the things which have happened involving members of the armed forces under similar provisions, particularly where there have been automobile accidents and where the question of whether or not the man was on duty has arisen. It has been argued—and successfully, in some cases, where there may have been improper conduct on the part of the man or officer concerned—that he was no longer protected, and yet he was still doing the duties he was supposed to be doing. As we all know, the act was designed originally to cover conditions which, in many cases, no longer exist. If an officer on patrol were to have a serious accident even though a court were to find him partly responsible, I think the fact that he was on duty and that he was doing the job because of his orders should place some responsibility on the part of the crown. Officers involved in a situation like this should not be thrown to the wolves as has sometimes been the case, and be obliged to fight their own cases without assistance.

Mr. Fulton: I have endeavoured to explain already—and I am sorry if I have not made it clear—that if a member of the force is involved in an accident in he course of carrying out his duties the crown stands behind him and there is no question of calling upon a member of the force to pay damages as an individual. The damages must be recovered in an action against the crown; the other party to the accident will sue the crown and by virtue of the provision of the Exchequer Court Act may recover damages against the crown. The crown pays the damages. The only situation in which there would be any penalty imposed upon the member of the force would be not by way of telling him that he must pay the damages but by virtue only of an express finding by the deputy attorney general that the member of the force was personally negligent and that his negligence contributed to the accident to such a degree that the crown should look to him for the recovery of the damages which it has paid to the other party. Such situations are few and far between. I should say also that the terms, to the best of my recollection, of the order in council or regulation under which such findings of the deputy attorney general are made, require the finding that the negligence of the member of the force was not of a minor character. It is only when the negligence is of a major nature that there would be any attempt made to recover from the member the damages for which the crown has been liable, and then only a proportion of those damages.

Mr. Peters: We agree with the explanation that the minister has given, but what I am suggesting is that the explanation is not necessarily going to be the law.

Mr. Fulton: I tell the hon. member that it is the law at the present time.

Mr. Peters: It does not say that. I do not think legal counsel could find that in this particular clause. What I am suggesting is that this protection should be written into this measure and that it be much better defined so that we do not have to refer to a lot of other precedents, regulations or orders in council, whatever they happen to be.

Mr. Fulton: The law of the land is that the master is liable for the torts of his servants. The crown is now in the same position as an ordinary civilian in this respect, and the master cannot recover from the servant in respect of damages caused by the servant in the course of his employment unless the servant is negligent, and the policy of the government is that even in such a case we do not attempt to recover from the servant unless the negligence amounts to gross negligence, and then only a part of the damages for which the crown has been held liable.

Mr. Crestohl: There is a basic difference in the relationship between the ordinary employer and his employee and the relationship between the government and an officer of the R.C.M.P. I think it is wrong to assume that the relationship is the same.

Mr. Fulton: This section which we are now discussing makes the situation the same; it makes the relationship between the ordinary master and his servant and the relationship between the crown and a member of the force exactly the same in so far as liability for torts is concerned.

Mr. Crestohl: That is just what we are discussing. We do not think this is a fair clause. The relationship between master and servant is different because ordinarily an employee would have working hours from, say, eight to five—

Mr. Fulton: So has the member of the force.

Mr. Crestohl: But after working hours an ordinary employee has no master to give him orders. He is not subject to be given any commands. He cannot suddenly be called out and told to go on a mission. On the other hand a member of the force can be ordered to do something at any time of the day or night, and he must obey that command.

Mr. Fulton: Precisely.

Mr. Crestohl: The private employee does not have to obey any such command and he is not subject to discipline if he does not obey a command given to him after hours. That is precisely the difference as I see it, and that is what we are trying to discuss. An officer of the force is subject to be ordered to go out and do things 24 hours a day and therefore the relationship between master and servant is altogether different from what it is in private industry.

Mr. Fulton: The crown is liable for the torts of the servant if the servant is carrying out the orders of the crown but, as I have explained, in the ordinary course of events the members of the force are not on duty between—I do not know precisely what the hours are, but I use office hours as an example—five in the afternoon and nine in the morning. They are not on duty unless specifically called. If a man is called outside those hours the crown is liable for his torts, but if he is not on duty and pursuing his own private pleasures or pursuits, then his relationship with the ordinary civilian is exactly the same as that of any other member of society, and so it should be. I can see no reason on earth why the crown should be held liable or be placed in a position where it is liable for the tortious acts of a member of the force committed without any relationship to his employment whatever.

Suppose a member were on his annual leave. He is still subject, it is true, to be called back on duty and if he received a telegram that he must report back to duty at once is my hon. friend suggesting—if his argument were carried to its logical conclusion he would be suggesting—that if that member of the force while on annual leave, holidaying on a lake, drives a motor boat negligently and recklessly and injures somebody, that the crown should be held liable? Of course not. The situation is exactly the same if the member is off duty between the hours of five in the afternoon and nine in the morning.

Mr. Crestohl: I ask one question. Is the officer subject to orders from his employer during the 24 hours of the day?

Mr. Fulton: Not unless he received a specific call. If the orders and regulations lay it down that in his detachment the office hours are from nine to five and that he is off duty in other hours, then, unless he receives a specific call or order, he is off duty.

Mr. Crestohl: But if he gets a call he is under obligation to obey it?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. And if he gets a call and in the course of discharging that call he is involved in an accident the crown is liable because he is on duty.

Mr. Peters: I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, in speaking of these matters that while in the legal profession it is reasonable, I presume, to use the term "master and servant" I particularly and I think most Canadian people do not appreciate that particular term as being what we have in mind. I do not think it is something that we in Canada have in mind. Some hon. members may use it. The 65 members who are members of the legal profession may agree with it but I would suggest that the Canadian people and the House of Commons should not be hearing the employer and employee relationship referred to as master and servant.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend must want to rewrite every law textbook that has ever been written because the law on that subject has been called from time immemorial the law of master and servant.

Mr. Peters: We would certainly like to see it changed in this particular clause.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 54 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall go back to clause 11.

On clause 11—Civilian staff.

Mr. Pickersgill: On clause 11, Mr. Chairman, I raised a question with the minister the other day about the status of persons who are employed in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not in the category of casual employees but on a regular basis, but who are not now civil servants. The future persons so employed are to be civil servants. But the point I raised was what was to be the status of those persons now employed and how were they to be integrated into the civil service, and were they in future to have all the rights of civil servants? I suppose the minister has an answer to that.

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that this group who are not members of the force at the present time but are known as employed civilians and are not now civil servants will be given an option to elect whether they will be civilian employees or civil servants. Then, of course, if they elect to become civil servants they will have all the advantages of the Civil Service Act. With regard to their present pension rights, they will be taken care of under the related bill dealing with the superannuation of members of the force.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the status of their employment? Of course, the persons who are employed on a casual basis at prevailing rates are regulated by the general law, but these persons are not. These persons, I take it, are employed at a salary under some kind of statutory authority.

Mr. Fulton: They can continue to be employed on that basis or they may elect to become civil servants.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point is, what is the basis? Where in the act is that basis defined?

Mr. Fulton: In the present act it is stated that:

> The governor in council may authorize the commissioner to employ in emergencies such persons as may be necessary to perform the duties of scouts, artisans, cooks, stenographers, tailors, engineers, agents, interpreters, guides or for any other purpose or for general duty for such periods as may be required and at such rates of pay as are authorized by the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the present law but that law is being repealed, as I understand it.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: If those people are to have a status they must have a status under some law that has not been repealed.

Mr. Fulton: Will they not be the ones who are covered in clause 11 (1), which reads:

> Subject to subsection (2), such civilian officials, clerks and employees as are necessary for carrying out the functions and duties of the force shall be appointed or employed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Those persons who are employed at the present time as employed civilians are employed under the provisions of the clause I just read from the present bill. I will not say they have not a status but it will be noted that they are employed for such purposes as may be required and at such rates of pay as are authorized by the minister, so they have in a sense no protected status.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the minister appreciates my point. I know that until this bill passes and he proclaims it these people can continue to be employed under the old status, but when it is proclaimed and that status disappears there will be no authority that I have been able to find anywhere that provides for the continued employment of these people in any way except the civil service.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think my hon. friend has read clause 11 (2), because this clause provides that:

> The commissioner may employ such number of temporary civilian employees at such remuneration and upon such other terms and conditions as are prescribed by the treasury board, and may at any time dismiss or discharge any such employee.

But when we have the new act in force all the present employed civilians will become either civil servants under 11 (1) or continue as civilian employees under 11 (2).

Mr. Pickersgill: Temporary employees; in other words, they are all temporary employees at the present time.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, all those who are not civil servants and members of the force are temporary employees.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said that those persons who are employed regularly the year round would be given the option of remaining under the status they have now or of becoming civil servants. Will they be expected, before becoming civil servants, to pass any special test; or, in view of their long service, will they simply be integrated into the civil service?

Mr. Fulton: They would, of course, have to pass the ordinary civil service requirements before they would be entitled to be integrated into the civil service under 11 (1); and if they could not pass those requirements, then they would continue to be employed as civilian employees under 11 (2).

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, although those persons may be performing the service satisfactorily and they may have reached relatively an advanced age where they would not have much aptitude for examinations, they will never be anything except temporary civil servants, unless they can pass the tests that a new entry to the service would have to pass.

Mr. Fulton: No, they will not be some nondescript, grey shadowy group. If my hon. friend will look at clause 7 (2) he will see that those persons contemplated under 11 (2) will fit into the situation there described, namely:

> The ranks and grades of members other than officers, and the maximum numbers of persons to be appointed to each rank and grade shall be as prescribed by the treasury board.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, but they will still be temporary.

Mr. Fulton: They will be or may be what is described as civilian members of the force.

Mr. Pickersgill: But they cannot be brought under the superannuation act. It would appear so. Can they?

Mr. Fulton: I understand that is provided for in the other bill, yes, and we shall look for that when we go through it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister has satisfied all my questions.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—Municipal bylaws.

Mr. Roberge: Clause 19 is of a general character and clause 20 is more specific. I would suggest to the committee that we should deal with clause 20 and then revert to clause 19, if that is agreeable.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we deal with clause 20 first?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are we on clause 19?

Mr. Pickersgill: No; it is suggested that we deal with clause 20 first.

On clause 20—Arrangements with provincial and municipal governments.

Mr. Roberge: I will not read clause 20 in full but in line 8 there is a reference to "the laws in force therein", and "therein" means the municipality or the province. I should like to ask the minister if that includes by-laws.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to contracts for municipal policing, it is a standard clause in every contract that the members of the force will not be responsible for carrying out the provisions of any certain municipal by-laws, and that is by virtue of the provisions of clause 19 which reads as follows:

> Unless authorized by the governor in council, members shall not be charged with any duties under or in connection with any municipal by-laws.

Therefore contracts with municipal authorities have to spell out specifically what municipal by-laws members may be responsible for enforcing, if any.

Mr. Roberge: Do the different agreements with provinces and municipalities include by-laws?

Mr. Fulton: I have here, for instance, a standard clause from one of the municipal contracts which provides that the unit shall perform such duties and render such services and no others as are ordinarily performed by police constables in aiding the administration of justice, and specifically the unit will not be called upon to engage in the issuing of licences, collection of licence fees or inspection regarding licences, in the collection of taxes or costs other than fines and costs, the impounding of cats, dogs and/or other animals, carrying out of inspections in respect of by-laws relating to health, sanitation or fire. We specifically provide that the members will not be responsible for that type of duty.

Mr. Roberge: But if it does happen that a municipality has the right to enact a by-law with respect to speed—ordinarily that is a provincial matter but sometimes a municipality has the power—would the mounted police acting as the municipal force be allowed to lay a charge because the speed by-law had been broken?

Mr. Fulton: That would be the type of by-law for which we would accept responsibility and that would be covered by the words of the contract.

Mr. Roberge: I think it is nine provinces that have agreements—

Mr. Fulton: Eight.

Mr. Roberge: Eight provinces. Are the agreements the same or is there a difference and, if so, what is the difference?

Mr. Fulton: The provisions of the contract are in the main similar with the exception of Saskatchewan and Alberta where, as my hon. friend will appreciate, the history of the contracts between the force and the provinces run back appreciably farther than it does in respect to any of the other provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be inclined to suggest, if it were not for certain circumstances that will be in the minds of all members, that there should be substituted for this clause a wholly new clause making a standard contract with the provinces part of the law laid down by parliament. The reason, of course, why I make the suggestion that this is desirable will be obvious to every hon. member. I do not intend to enter into those reasons unless I am asked to do so. There is, however, as hon. members are well aware, a case before the courts involving the interpretation of one of these contracts and I realize that it would be ridiculous to ask parliament at this time, while that action is before the courts, to lay down standard terms under which agreements could be made so that everyone would know what the law really was and would know that it had been made by parilament. But I do think this is desirable and I do not think anyone in parliament should be satisfied unless it is done at the earliest opportunity.

For that reason, sir, I intend to propose an amendment that a third subclause be added to this clause to the effect that the power given to the minister under this clause shall not extend beyond December 31, 1960. I am not moving the amendment yet. I want to explain why I have picked that particular date. In all human probability, however slow the courts may be, this action should surely be concluded by that date, but if the minister thinks that is improbable and would prefer to have a somewhat later date that would still be within the reasonable life of this parliament I would naturally be quite prepared to consider that such date be substituted. But it does seem to me that at the first opportunity when parliament can debate freely the question involved in clause 20, which we cannot do now, legislation should be brought before parliament and parliament itself should determine the conditions upon which this very unusual and extraordinary power is at the present time given not to the governor in council but to the minister with the approval of the governor in council.

This is a very great power indeed to be given to a minister, the power to provide by contract the police force of another jurisdiction which under our constitution is a sovereign jurisdiction and to make a force for which this parliament pays, for which the taxpayers of Canada pay, available to another jurisdiction and under the exclusive control, because that is what sovereignty means, of that other jurisdiction for provincial purposes. It does seem to me that this is something which grew up over a period of time mainly under the initiative of Liberal governments, I admit, and I have no apology to make for that, and about which until recently no one perhaps thought there would ever be any serious question. But a question having arisen it seems to me that in a matter of relationships that are fundamental to confederation itself parliament, not a minister even with the approval of the governor in council, should lay down the fundamental conditions—

Mr. Clancy: Oh, stop wasting time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member, who favours us so frequently with his intellectual efforts like to take my place and speak for a while? I am quite willing to sit down.

Mr. Clancy: My intellectual efforts, really, I have to sit here and listen—

Mr. Pearson: You do not have to sit here, you can leave.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman having exercised himself, perhaps I can now continue in what I believe is still a free parliament. I suggest that in order to meet this particular situation in which we find ourselves at the present time, when it would not be proper to debate the merits of these contracts or the issues involved in them—I am the first to recognize that—parliament should not give power to the minister beyond a reasonable period that may be necessary for the resolution of this question in the courts and that we should incorporate this limitation, a limitation of a character with which the minister will be very familiar because it is precisely the kind of limitation that he urged upon the previous government with respect to other legislation.

I therefore move:

That to clause 20, subclause 3, there shall be added as follows: The power given to the minister in this section shall not extend beyond December 31, 1960.

Mr. Fulton: I have to make it clear that I could not accept the amendment. I should like to give my reasons, but before doing so I should like to correct another of the historical inaccuracies of the member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The hon. gentleman said that contracts with the provinces for the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, I think he said were started by—I do not know whether those were his exact words, but the impression he left is that they were created, in the main, by Liberal governments.

My hon. friend is, as usual, quite inaccurate. The great majority of the contracts were started between 1932 and 1935 under the commissionership of Sir James MacBrien, who was appointed by the late R. B. Bennett. I have not made an historical check, but I think I am right in saying that, with respect to every province with which we now have a contract, except British Columbia, Newfoundland and Saskatchewan, the first, contracts were made under the commissionership of Sir James MacBrien between the years 1932 and 1935.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question on that point?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was not the first contract made with Saskatchewan?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it not made before Sir James MacBrien was commissioner?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend had been listening instead of being so concerned with what he said he would have noted that I specifically pointed out Saskatchewan was one of the exceptions. I said, with respect to every province with which we now have contracts, except British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland, the contracts were first made under the commissionership of Sir James MacBrien.

This government and I, Mr. Chairman, attach a great deal of importance to these contracts, not only as a matter of historical interest but in connection with all aspects of this matter. We believe that these contracts are in the interests of Canada as well as contributing to the efficient policing of the provinces. I am, therefore, concerned that I do not do anything which will make it difficult to continue these contracts in force. I point out to my hon. friend that conditions do vary from time to time and that it is necessary to negotiate contracts with provinces. The provision has been, and I assume still will be, that contracts are negotiated on the basis of five years and therefore I am unwilling to tie my hands now, in advance of negotiations, or limit the powers to negotiate contracts with provinces or do anything which would, in effect, present the provinces with a fait accompli, with a deadline, by accepting an amendment such as that offered by my hon. friend.

It is a well known fact that we have called for negotiations with the provinces with respect to the contracts. I expect those negotiations to proceed as soon as may be convenient. I certainly would not be prepared at this time to write a deadline into the statute by which the power of the minister or the governor in council to make contracts with the provinces would be limited. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I have to reject the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 70.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the minister has declined to accept the amendment I have proposed, I am going to suggest to the minister—I am not going to move another amendment—that the government should propose an amendment to this clause. The amendment should be to the effect that the terms of any arrangement entered into with the government of a province or municipality should be laid before parliament at the earliest possible opportunity.

The act calls these things arrangements, and they are made by the minister. They are not orders in council that would normally be tabled under the Regulations Act. They are, however, matters of the utmost importance in our whole federal system, and it does seem to me that, unless I might be mistaken and there might be some adequate statutory provision for these contracts being tabled, if there is no provision there should be in clause 20 a subclause making specific provision for the laying of these contracts before parliament at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Fulton: I am under the impression that these contracts, certainly the provincial contracts, are laid on the table at the present time as soon as they are made. They are, of course, 5-year contracts which are automatically extended from year to year unless one year's notice is given of cancellation. It is my impression that each one of these has been laid on the table when it was first made. I could not speak with anything like definite recollection with regard to the contracts for policing municipalities.

I would, however, make this suggestion. I believe the objective of the hon. member is reasonable and acceptable, but I would not care at the present time to write a specific requirement such as he suggests into the bill because there is something in the back of my mind which tells me that there is a provision under which they are tabled. However, I will do this: I shall be glad, first of all, to undertake that every such contract that is made in the interim will be laid upon the table of the house. When I say "interim" I am referring to this: If I find that there is no requirement under which they must now be tabled, I will be prepared, at the first convenient time, to introduce an amendment containing such a requirement because I think it is a reasonable proposal. I will, in the meantime, table any such contracts that may be made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to attempt to construe the statute. It would be quite beyond my capacity to do that. However, as I read this clause, it does not appear to me that one of these arrangements would be a regulation within the terms of the Regulations Act. I know of no other statute of a general character that makes it obligatory—and I am speaking again from my research and recollection of the period when I had a certain responsibility in this field—that requires the tabling of documents in parliament. It seems to me that in every case, except such documents as those required under the Regulations Act, documents are required to be tabled only if there is a specific provision in a specific statute. There does not appear to be such a provision in this one. However, if the minister still thinks that there is some general provision I would be willing to accept the suggestion he has made. However, may I say this. Even though it were slightly redundant, I would be much happier—and it does seem to me that it would take the minister's advisers only a minute or two to do it—if they were to put such a simple provision as this one in the statute.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could dispose of the matter in this way, if my hon. friend thinks it is a reasonable suggestion. On reflection, I think he is right. There is no regulation that these contracts be tabled. I think it has been the custom, and it is a custom that I now undertake to continue until such time as there will be statutory provision written into the act. I would not care to draft in a moment such a provision at this time. I would be prepared to give this undertaking, if my hon. friend will accept my commitment. When the bill is in the other place we will arrange that some hon. gentleman over there will introduce an amendment to the effect of the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say that I think the minister has been most reasonable about this matter and that I do not intend to persist further.

Mr. Herridge: Before this clause passes I cannot refrain from observing that the most reasonable attitude of the minister in this respect and the unusually self-effacing modesty of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate have made a contribution to the welfare of Canada in this legislation.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill as amended carry?

Mr. Crestohl: I should like to ask the minister if there is in this bill any clause to deal with the matter of restoring the pension to the former commissioner or whether there is in the act any provision by which that could be made possible.

Mr. Fulton: There is nothing in this act. All the pension provisions will now be found in the bill which will be before the house in a few moments after this one is passed. If my hon. friend wishes to do so, perhaps he would raise the subject at that time. I think that would be the proper time to do it.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO REVISE AND CONSOLIDATE CERTAIN PENSION PROVISIONS, ETC.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-57 respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, after the election of March 31, 1958 Reverend Dan McIvor said to me, "Whatever you do in Ottawa, I want you to put on the order paper a resolution for legislation to increase pensions of civil servants and R.C.M.P. who were retired when salaries were low, so as to bring such pensions more in line with those of the present". I therefore did so. However, unfortunately, this resolution will not be reached before the end of the session for 1959.

[Mr. Fulton.]

I am sure those hon. members who knew Reverend Dan McIvor will agree with me when I say that there is no greater humanitarian that I know of in Canada than the reverend gentleman who represented the constituency of Fort William for 23 consecutive years. He always championed the cause of the helpless, the sick and the poor. I am glad to report that he celebrated his 86th birthday a couple of months ago in good health and although retired he still shows a keen interest in the doings of the House of Commons.

It should not, therefore, surprise anyone if I am particularly happy to participate in the debate on this bill which was so close to the heart of my predecessor. It is truly my purpose to do all I can on behalf of those whom this bill is designed to benefit. I commend those responsible for its introduction at this session, even though the long wait for it has been an added burden to those concerned.

This bill will authorize the minister to appoint a Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension board. I think this is a step in the right direction.

In speaking in support of the bill I could do no better justice than to quote from what was said by my distinguished predecessor when he first introduced the measure in March of 1957. I am quoting from page 1844 of Hansard of 1957. He said:

> This resolution is very simple. It deals with men and women who gave long service in the armed forces, in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and in the civil service at a time when wages were low. Conditions of service then were not what they are today. There was no 40-hour week; people had to work ten hours a day. One section of the civil service, the postmen, were on duty six days a week, and when snow was on the streets and the streets were not cleared they often worked more than ten hours a day, though they never received any overtime pay.

More than two years later conditions are far worse in so far as the value of the present dollar is concerned. No one can deny the fact that the cost of living has risen to the point where the majority of our superannuated civil servants—and I include many others—are now caught in a vicious cost-price squeeze forcing many of them to recourse to welfare agencies. It is quite evident that inflation has inflicted more hardships on retired pensioners than on business or industry. High cost of living and inflation are like Siamese twins, inseparable, and no amount of talk to the contrary can make one believe that we are not now going through a period of destructive inflation, exacting the highest price from those least able to withstand the onslaught.

In support of what I am saying now I have only to quote the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) as reported on page 1855 of Hansard of March 4, 1957. He said:

> We are all conscious of rising living costs and the inflation which faces us at the present time. We know that some attempts have been made by the government to check this inflation. After having given it the original impetus by the tremendous spending of the various government departments, they are frantically trying to adjust the brakes in order to stop the runaway car to which they gave the original push. However, inflation is here, and something has got to be done for these senior retired civil servants.
> If the government is not able to check inflation, then it seems to me only fair and just that the government must find some other means of helping those who are really the underprivileged class of the nation. I could read a number of letters I have received from Vancouver island during this session pointing out the plight of these people, but I shall not take up the time of the house by doing so. I merely repeat that these elderly men and women who have served this country in numerous capacities in the past are now in desperate straits. It is only by increasing their pension at the present time that some measure of relief can be brought to them, until such time as the government is able to check this inflationary trend.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if these were the conditions existing two years ago, ably reported by the present Minister of National Defence at that time, conditions now are such that the problem has become one of urgency. His reference to the inflation apparent at the time is of double import now. His statement was to the effect that the then government was not able to check inflation; but we can all agree that it made a good try and that had they been returned to power I believe conditions would be different today.

A well known professor of economics at Queen's University, appearing before a Senate committee recently, made the observation that the whole purpose of inflation is to "gyp the saver". In other words, stealing from those dependent on set incomes or pensions. Three years ago the danger of inflation made its appearance and promptly the government of the day took measures to restrain it. The opposition at that time accused the government of adopting a tight money policy and with remarkable success made the majority of the people believe that it was so and won the approaching elections.

Now, because of a heavy federal deficit which did not exist then, we face large scale unemployment plus inflation. I suggest in all seriousness that in order to safeguard the incomes of our pensioners and the stability of our dollar the government should undertake a study of the trend of inflation in Canada and put into effect ways and means to stop inflationary trends which are now beginning to affect the saving habits of our people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I realize that the hon. member may refer to inflationary trends and that sort of thing, but I do not think that he should go into a speech on economics as far as this bill is concerned, and I am sure he will restrain himself.

Mr. Chevrier: It is economics in connection with this bill.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, I will try to refrain from mentioning the word you object to. However, I was saying that the most satisfactory way to project the value of pensions is to prevent inflation, which so far this government has blamed the former government of not being able to do, and which is incapable or unwilling to adopt measures that would work toward the solution of the problem. Pensions or superannuation should be brought under constant review and increased to the point where a retirement after a lifetime of service means a peaceful rest from labour and worry.

The Clark report which was tabled in the house a few months ago, which is a study of the United States and Canadian old age pension systems, should receive more serious consideration than it has received thus far. The report includes the suggestion that the contributions to the universal old age pension fund be made up with 2 per cent from income tax, 2 per cent from corporation tax and 2 per cent from sales taxes. As this would not quite meet the total required to pay the present $55 per month, perhaps a higher contribution would not only meet the requirement but would have the effect of keeping inflation under a better control. The monthly pension increase from $46 to the present $55 made by the present government has already been nullified by the increased prices of food and commodities—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I regret interrupting the hon. gentleman, but may I point out to him that this bill is a bill for the purpose of amending the pension provisions of the R.C.M.P., not specifically for increasing them but for altering their basis. I do suggest to him that a discussion of recent increases in the old age pensions and the extent to which they may have been offset by inflation is really not related to the principle of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I was listening to what the hon. member was saying and hoping that he was just referring to the old age pensions, but he went on to speak on the subject of old age pensions and I am sure he will once again restrain himself and get back to the particular bill we are now discussing.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, I find it rather heartening that this bill has been brought up for discussion, and I trust that the government will in its wisdom consider the plight of the pensioners of the R.C.M.P. who are now living on a pension which is totally inadequate to meet present living conditions.

In speaking on the resolution introduced in this house by the Rev. Dan McIvor, which I have already mentioned, in March of 1957, the present leader of the house made the following statement, as found on page 1845 of Hansard. It is just a brief statement and I would wish to read it:

> I am sure the Minister of Finance will not contradict the assertion that civil service salaries were extremely low until recently. I have here an example of a collector of customs, who retired in 1937. At that time he was getting a salary of $2,600 a year. The man occupying his position today is getting $5,000 a year. Yet the man who retired in 1937 of course draws superannuation based only on the salary he was getting at that time. The cost of living has increased. It is increasing now every month. These worthy Canadians are caught in the squeeze.

Conditions have worsened for those living on superannuation since the time when the present Minister of External Affairs and acting minister of public works made that just observation. There are others who should receive consideration, not the least of whom are the widows and unmarried women. This category—and when I say this, I am repeating what I said on another occasion—should be considered for a pension at 60 years of age. The reasons are obvious. Everyone knows that a single woman of 60 cannot very easily obtain employment, and unless she has independent means she is left to the mercy of charity or cast on the relief roll of the municipality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I just cannot seem to figure out what a woman of 60 has got to do with this bill, and I must ask the hon. member to stick to the principle of Bill No. C-57.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point of order, I think the minister told us in connection with a previous bill that there were some temporary employees of the force, including women, who would be covered by this superannuation bill, so I suggest that on the basis of the information given by the minister my hon. friend from Fort William might very well be in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I gathered that the hon. member was not referring to temporary employees.

Mr. Badanai: I do not intend to go into detail with regard to these pensions provisions. It should not be necessary to call the government's attention to such a humanitarian consideration. The realization of the plight of the lowest income group of our nation should not have to wait until people are on the edge of despair before applying wise leadership and the adoption of fiscal policies designed to give every Canadian an opportunity for a decent standard of living.

[Mr. Badanai.]

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words concerning the principle of this bill? With my colleagues in the official opposition, I have examined the bill quite thoroughly, and we have found it to be along the same lines as the Public Service Superannuation Act and the act we have been discussing this afternoon, namely the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

On the whole, I may say that we have no quarrel with the principle of the bill; we merely intend to ask a few questions of the minister when the bill reaches the committee stage.

Let me say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) that he is fortunate to have had his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) introduce his bill before this one.

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Herridge: I suggest that in view of the excellent progress being made, and it being one minute before ten, we might call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Was the suggestion made that the committee might continue with unanimous consent?

Mr. Fulton: I understood so, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee agreeable to that?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I heard some "noes". Therefore, it being ten o'clock—

Mr. Fulton: Are you sure you heard a "no"?

The Deputy Chairman: I will put the question again. Will the committee give unanimous consent to sit a little longer on this bill?

It being ten o'clock I do rise, report progress—

Some hon. Members: We are all agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I will try again. Will the committee give unanimous consent to sit longer on this bill?

Mr. Herridge: No.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Would the leader of the house tell us what we shall be doing tomorrow and the next day? Friday, as the hon. gentleman knows, the house adjourns. And could we be told, also, what business the house intends to take on Monday?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we will take the estimates of the Department of Justice and then those of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I cannot, as yet, give the business for Monday.

Mr. Chevrier: Are we going to continue with this bill? The house seems to be in a very good mood.

Mr. Green: No, I think we will take the estimates.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

IMPORTS OF SMALL CARS—WINDSOR COUNCIL RESOLUTION

Question No. 266—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received a resolution from the Windsor city council alleging the dangers of further imports of small cars being manufactured in the United States, and urging that the content of cars produced in Canada continues to decline?
2. If so, will the government initiate a study of the automobile industry for the purpose of mitigating consequential unemployment.

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister):

1. Yes. A resolution passed at a meeting of the Windsor city council on March 9 was sent to the Prime Minister on March 13, 1959.

2. On May 18, 1959 the Prime Minister gave information to the house concerning his meetings with the presidents of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, the Chrysler Company of Canada and the General Motors Corporation. The meetings were held to discuss the manufacture of small cars in Canada. In his statement Mr. Diefenbaker said that any announcement that may be made from time to time respecting this matter will have to be made by the companies.

LOCKAGE TIMES, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 404—Mr. Argue:

1. Is the actual lockage time on each of the locks constructed by the St. Lawrence seaway authority, the same as the design lockage time?
2. If not, what is the variation at each lock?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. No.

2. St. Lambert, Cote Ste. Catherine and Beauharnois locks filling and emptying time:

The time required to fill or empty a lock is governed by two basic factors: (1) the volume of water to be let in or out. This is directly proportional to the height of lift, and differs at the various locks; (2) the average rate of flow of the water into or out of the lock. This is controlled by the extent to which the taintor valves are opened.

Inherent to the filling characteristics of a lock is the development of a longitudinai surge, accompanied by transverse currents, which act upon a ship to different degrees, dependent upon the size and shape of the ship's hull, and dependent upon the rate of filling. Seaway locks and their hydraulic systems have been designed to reduce these forces to within practicable limits.

Also inherent to the operating characteristics of a lock is the over-filling and over-emptying which is directly proportional to the rate of filling or emptying, and which results in a reverse head acting on the upper or the lower gates, tending to open them. To avoid undue stresses in the operating mechanism, the normal procedure of opening the gate is commenced by the lock operator at about the same time as the reverse head commences to act. This procedure has been adopted at the American locks and at the Welland canal locks.

Prior to the opening of the seaway to shipping on April 25, all lock facilities, including the mitre gates, taintor valves and their operating mechanisms were subjected to mechanical, electrical and hydraulic tests to make certain that they would withstand the maximum loads for which they were designed. The test loads for the operating mechanism were appreciably greater than the actual operating loads to which they will be subjected. Tests were conducted by fully qualified engineers under the direct supervision of the structural engineer, the assistant hydraulic engineer and/or electrical-mechanical engineer. Although during the course of the tests some defects were observed, they were of a minor nature and all were remedied without difficulty.

Naturally, it was not possible to conduct complete operating tests with ships in the locks, nor was it possible to fully train the operators until after the opening of the seaway to shipping. It was decided, therefore, that until this could be completed, the rate of filling and emptying should be restricted, so that the surges in the locks and the reverse heads on gates would be of insignificant magnitudes. This was done, by limiting the opening of taintor valves to about one-half of their maximum, which, with prevailing water levels, resulted in the following operating times for filling and emptying, as compared with design times:

Lock	Design time	Operating time
St. Lambert	6 minutes	7 minutes
Cote Ste. Catherine	7 minutes	12 minutes
Upper Beauharnois	8 minutes	14 minutes
Lower Beauharnois	8 minutes	14 minutes

Recently a more complete series of tests was conducted under the direct supervision of the senior assistant hydraulic engineer and the electrical-mechanical engineer. These tests were made with various sizes and types of ships in the locks. They clearly demonstrated the practicability of ultimately setting the taintor valve controls and limit switches to fill and empty the locks at even less than the design times. This is apparent from the following test results:

Lock	Design time	Minimum test time to fill	to empty
St Lambert	6 minutes	3½ min.	4¼ min.
Cote Ste. Catherine	7 minutes	6¼ min.	6 min.
Upper Beauharnois	8 minutes	7 min.	6 min.
Lower Beauharnois	8 minutes	6¼ min.	6 min.

It is desirable that more extensive tests be made, and that the lock operators be given additional training before making any change in the present operating procedure.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, N.S.—FEDERAL PAYMENTS

Question No. 420—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1957, has any money been (a) paid; (b) allocated, towards the cost of the agricultural college buildings in the province of Nova Scotia? If so, how much?

Questions

2. Since January 1, 1957, has any money been (a) paid; (b) allocated to (i) municipalities; (ii) school boards, in the province of Nova Scotia for maintenance and repair work? If so, how much in each case?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. (a), (b), No.
2. (a), (b), (i) (ii) No.

CAPE TORMENTINE-BORDEN FERRY SERVICE—BOAT REPAIRS

Question No. 437—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any of the boats in ferry service between Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, and Borden, Prince Edward Island, been repaired at any time during the last five years?
2. If so, what was the cost of repairs to each boat in this service, during each year since 1954, and what was the nature of such repairs?
3. Between what dates was each boat out of service in each year since 1954 while repairs were being made?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. M.V. Abegweit

Year	Cost of repairs	Nature of repairs
1954	$ 59,645	Annual refit—routine hull and engine room repairs carried out as required by C.S.I. service.
1955	$ 72,816	Do
1956	$ 47,716	Do
1957	$ 65,552	Do
1958	$ 55,789	Do
S.S. Prince Edward Island
1954	$ 51,471	Do
1955	$ 82,967	Annual refit—additional accommodation added and renewal of worn deck and shell plating.
1956	$41,051	Annual refit—routine hull and engine room repairs.
1957	$339,033	Major overhaul due to age of vessel.
1958	$ 12,349	Emergency drydocking due to seizure of port tail end shaft.
S.S. Scotia II
1956-57	$328,722	Under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, this vessel was overhauled and refitted for the Prince Edward Island ferry service in 1956 and was delivered at Borden, P.E.I., on October 6, 1956.
1957-58	$ 17,935

3. M.V. Abegweit: April 11 to May 9, 1954; April 12 to May 18, 1955; April 22 to May 19, 1956; April 20 to May 17, 1957; April 10 to May 12, 1958.

S.S. Prince Edward Island: May 26 to June 15, 1954; May 26 to June 14, 1955; May 22 to June 20, 1956; November 21, 1956 to April 19, 1957; August 8 to August 18, 1958.

Questions

S.S. Scotia II: This vessel is used on relief service as required and has not been out of service on account of drydocking since delivered on October 6, 1956. It is due to drydock in 1959.

DORVAL—HEATING FACILITIES, AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDING

Question No. 453—Mr. Macnaughton:

1. Have plans and specifications been prepared and finalized for the heating of the new terminal building at Dorval airport?
2. If so, when were tenders called for the new heating outlay and to whom, and at what date was the contract awarded?
3. What is the amount of the said contract?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Design of a new central heating plant and distribution system for the new terminal building and various other buildings at the Dorval airport is being carried out by consulting engineers.

2 and 3. Tenders for boilers and ancillary equipment closed on May 1, 1959, and are now being evaluated by the consulting engineers. It is expected that tenders will be called for the distribution system within the next month, and for the remainder of the plant and building within three months.

D.B.S. REPORT—LISTING OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 462—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Does the government's report of the industry and merchandising division of the dominion bureau of statistics list the Atlantic provinces separately or as a group?
2. If listed as a group will the government give consideration to listing the provinces separately?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. The industry and merchandising division of the dominion bureau of statistics publishes a number of reports which provide data for each of the Atlantic provinces separately. In some reports issued by the dominion bureau of statistics data must be consolidated and statistics published for the Atlantic provinces as a group.

2. Where resources are available and where the data published by the dominion bureau of statistics does not disclose the operations of an individual plant or company, every effort is made to show statistics for each of the Atlantic provinces separately. In some instances, the limitations of source data do not permit the refinement and publication of figures for the Atlantic provinces separately. For instance, in the case of retail trade, until recently, the estimates of sales for intercensal periods were provided for the Atlantic provinces as a whole. However, steps have been taken to enlarge the monthly and annual surveys by the addition of 4,000 stores, which will permit the preparation of estimates for all Atlantic provinces separately.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of standing committee on privileges and elections—Mr. Macquarrie.

Second and third reports of standing committee on public accounts—Mr. Macnaughton.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CELEBRATION OF FEAST OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, today our French-speaking fellow Canadians are celebrating St. John the Baptist day, in honour of their patron saint. I am sure that all hon. members of this house will join me in tendering them our best wishes.

Today's celebrations, and those which have taken place these last few days, recall to our fellow Canadians of French origin their past and the glorious events of their history. We associate ourselves wholeheartedly in those celebrations.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself and my party with the words just spoken by the Prime Minister.

This year, we are observing the second centenary of the association of the two main racial groups in our country, an association which has marked the real start of the Canadian nation, as we know it today. On this occasion, it is only fair that we who speak a different language and have different traditions render a special tribute to our French-speaking fellow-citizens in recognizing their vital contribution to our country's progress, to the flowering of a strong and free nation united in diversity.

This year the day is especially eventful in that the Queen of Canada is present in Canada on the occasion of the celebration of French Canadians' patron saint's day.

(Text):

May I also remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that St. John's day is being celebrated in another part of Canada as a very special day. I refer to Newfoundland, which has its own proud traditions, its own ancient heritage, which it protects and cherishes in the Canadian family.

(Translation):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I confess to some difficulty in expressing myself in the beautiful French language.

(Text):

Since I did not have the benefit of any prior announcement or prior consultation, I shall have to ask the indulgence of the house to proceed in Canada's other official language. On behalf of the C.C.F. group, I would say we wish to associate ourselves with the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in paying our tribute to French Canadians at this time in their celebration of this very important occasion.

STARRED QUESTIONS

JUNE 15 GOVERNMENT BOND PROSPECTUS

Question No. 102—Mr. Benidickson:

What are the advantages for the treasury in the design of the June 15 prospectus respecting two very short term government of Canada bond issues wherein "issued prices" are at a discount of 2 per cent and 3 7/10 per cent rather than at par, although the prospectus states the short term bonds at the issue price are to yield 5.50 per cent and 5.68 per cent respectively to maturity?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when bonds such as these are being issued for any short term, it is considered very much to the advantage both of the issuing authority and the market that they be made to coincide with outstanding issues rather than create more issues outstanding for a short period. The market is familiar with the issues that are outstanding, and it is considered advisable in these cases simply to enlarge the outstanding issues rather than create new ones.

CHARTERED BANKS CREDIT PLANS

Question No. 103—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Did the bank of Montreal or the bank of Nova Scotia seek the advice of the Minister of Finance or the inspector-general of banks or other finance department officers about the legality or propriety of their plans, having regard to section 91 of the

Starred Questions

Bank Act before recently announcing respectively these banks' "consumers consolidated credit plan" and the "Scotia plan cheque—credit" plan?

2. If so, what advice was provided to these banks by the Minister of Finance or other officials acting under his jurisdiction?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so far as the minister is concerned there was no consultation on this subject whatever. So far as the inspector general of banks is concerned, I may say that he informs me that the banks have consulted with him from time to time on the procedure for personal loan plans, and that in all cases he has instructed them that they should obtain the advice of counsel as to the legality of any plans they propose to operate. In each case the bank has been advised by counsel, before putting its plan into operation, that the plan is not a violation of the Bank Act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—APPOINTMENT OF MISSION HEADS

Question No. 105—Mr. Cardin:

1. How many heads of missions have been appointed since June, 1957, and to what countries?

2. In how many posts abroad is Canada not now represented by a head of mission?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is 37 in the following countries. Unless hon. members wish these countries read off, I could simply put the list in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Green: The answer to the second question is eight.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the list of countries be printed without being read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 106—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. On what date did the Department of Public Works approve construction of a new federal building at North Sydney, Nova Scotia?

2. On what date were plans commenced for this building?

3. On what date were plans and specifications for this building completed?

4. On what date were funds included in the estimates for this building?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answers to these questions are as follows:

1. October 1, 1957.
2. January 6, 1958.
3. June 26, 1958.
4. April 1, 1958.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MARINE INDUSTRIES LTD.—FEDERAL CONTRACTS

Question No. 104—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did Marine Industries Limited receive any contracts from the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport and the St. Lawrence seaway authority between 1951 and 1957, inclusive?

2. If so, what was the total value of such contracts, when were they let, and for what particular purposes?

PRINTING BUREAU CONTRACTS, QUEBEC

Question No. 109—Mr. Caron:

1. Were any contracts over $5,000 for printing awarded by the printing bureau in the province of Quebec from January 1, 1958 to June 1, 1958?

2. If so, how many, to what firms and in what amounts?

3. Were any such contracts under $5,000 awarded in the province of Quebec during the above period?

4. If so, how many, to what firms and in what amounts?

5. Were any contracts over $5,000 for printing awarded by the printing bureau in the province of Quebec from June 1, 1958 to date?

6. If so, how many, to what firms and in what amounts?

7. Were any such contracts under $5,000 awarded in the province of Quebec during the period June 1, 1958 to date?

8. If so, how many, to what firms and in what amounts?

ATLAS OF CANADA

Question No. 110—Mr. Caron:

1. By whom is the Atlas of Canada published and who prepares the information contained therein?

2. Who offers it for sale to the public, when was it first offered for sale, were notices sent out to this effect, and on what date?

3. Was a further notice sent out announcing a delay in the date of readiness of the atlas? If so, what was the reason for the delay?

4. Were binders required for the atlas?

5. Were tenders advertised or sought for the supply of such binders? If so, on what date, and in what amounts?

6. What were the names of the firm or firms tendering and the amount of each tender?
7. To whom was the contract awarded?
8. Was a second call for tenders sent out? If so, for how many binders?
9. What was the name of the firm or firms tendering and what was the amount of each tender?
10. To what firm was the contract awarded and at what price?
11. Were further binders required? If so, were tenders received and at what price?
12. Were representations made on behalf of the last mentioned firm? If so, by whom?
13. How long will it be before such binders are ready?
14. From the time the first order was given out until the last one is fulfilled, what is the reason for delay?

INTERSERVICE EQUIVALENTS BOARD

Question No. 388—Mr. Herridge:

1. (a) Who are the executive staff of the interservice equivalents board? (b) What are their positions and what is the salary of each?
2. What are the academic and technical qualifications of each member of the executive staff of the interservice equivalents board?
3. What are the terms of reference of the executive secretary of the interservice equivalents board, and by whom were they prepared?
4. (a) Is the position of executive secretary of the interservice equivalents board a civil service appointment? (b) when was the present secretary of the board appointed to this position? (c) was the competition for this appointment filled originally by an "open" competition?

PARKING PROPERTY—C.N.R. OR GOVERNMENT LEASES OR RENTALS

Question No. 459—Mr. McGregor:

1. Has the Canadian National Railways or any of its subsidiaries, or any government department, leased or rented any property in Canada or the United States to any company, corporation, association, person or persons for automobile parking purposes since January 1, 1946?
2. If so, (a) what is the location and size of each property? (b) who are the officers of the companies, corporations and/or associations concerned, and what position is held by each? (c) what is the date of each lease and/or agreement, period covered by each and terms of same? (d) what is the amount of rent or percentage of revenue charged in each case, and on what basis were such figures agreed upon?
3. In each case of property being rented or leased for parking purposes, were tenders called?
4. If so, (a) on what dates; (b) in which papers were they advertised? (c) what tenders or bids were received; from whom, and what were the respective figures?
5. What is the name of the official signing such leases or agreements on behalf of (a) the lessor; (b) the lessee?

INTERSERVICE EQUIVALENTS BOARD

Question No. 466—Mr. Herridge:

1. When the interservice equivalents board was first formed were terms of reference drafted? If so, by whom, and are certified copies available for inspection?
2. Were terms of reference re-written at a later date? If so, by whom, at what date, by whom were they approved, and are certified copies available for inspection?
3. How does the position of executive secretary of the interservice equivalents board compare, from a responsibility point of view, with the chief architect for the construction division of the army (D.N.D.), or R.C.A.F. (D.N.D.)?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

COMBINES INQUIRY, RAW FISH, B.C.

Motion No. 126—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of the statement of evidence by Mr. T. D. MacDonald, director of investigation and research of the combines investigation branch in the matter of an inquiry into the production, purchase and sale of raw fish in British Columbia.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the whole tenor and provisions of the Combines Investigation Act make it clear that it was the intention of parliament that proceedings and inquiries under the act should be conducted in private unless otherwise specifically ordered, until such time as a fully balanced report is available on the basis of a hearing of all parties by the commission, at which time the parties can advance their arguments and answers to the director's statement. In view of this intention of parliament I am unable to accept the motion for the production of one of the statements at this stage.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that part of the statement of evidence has already been reproduced in a particular publication, and in fairness to the parties concerned I want all of them made public.

Mr. Speaker: This is not a debatable motion. However, if the minister wishes to reply he may.

Mr. Fulton: It is true that one of the parties published a portion of a statement. If they wish to publish the whole of it, it is within their power to do so. There are three parties concerned, and there are three other statements of evidence. It would be, I consider, contrary to the intention of parliament to produce one of the statements or all of the statements at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have put the motion. Those in favour of the motion No. 126 please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion negatived on division.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON ALLEGED POLITICAL INFLUENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell the house what steps the government are taking to remove the present threat to the effective existence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and the representatives of his party have taken a strong stand, as have the members of this party, against any government interference with the C.B.C. I think that constitutes a complete answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Has the Prime Minister read the protests from the federation of agriculture and certain religious groups concerning interference in the full and open editorial comment of the C.B.C., and what does he intend to do about it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the same answer applies in this case that applied to the question of the Leader of the Opposition.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: I have a question I had hoped to address to the Minister of National Revenue, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Were discussions held in the past ten days in Toronto or Ottawa between management of the C.B.C. and persons who have since resigned from their posts in the corporation? If so, who was present at these discussions for C.B.C. management and for the talks and public affairs personnel? How many such meetings were held, and on what dates?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister comment on a statement made by a group of top C.B.C. officials who have resigned stating, that by removing "Preview Commentary" from the air under political pressure the management of the C.B.C. with the concurrence of the board of directors has bartered away the integrity of national broadcasting in Canada?

Mr. Macdonnell: I will take that question as notice, also.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this matter can the Prime Minister tell us whether or not Mr. Allister Grossart of the Progressive Conservative party organization registered complaints with the C.B.C. regarding political commentaries of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In so far as the C.B.C. is concerned, it has its board of directors who govern it and determine its course. Any question of this kind should be directed to the proper source of information.

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue or his representative. In view of the minister's statement yesterday to the effect that 12 resignations in the C.B.C. were a highly exaggerated number, as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, will the minister comment on the fact that there are now 32 such resignations, as announced in the morning press and over the radio.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister without Portfolio who is acting for the Minister of National Revenue—and I take it this is a question he would want to consider tomorrow—whether he can tell us if the decision to cancel "Preview Commentary" was taken by the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation without prior consultation with the talks and public affairs department. If so, was this procedure not abnormal, in view of the regular procedure followed in such matters? Is the minister now in a position to say whether or not it is true that a further group of 10 officials propose to resign before the end of this day?

Mr. Macdonnell: I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Solicitor General, or whomever is acting for him, a question. Has the minister made, either directly or indirectly, any representations to the C.B.C. with regard to French language radio and television programs?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this question as notice and reply to it tomorrow.

(Text):

FISHERIES

FRASER RIVER—REFERENCE TO U.B.C. MAGAZINE ARTICLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries; I have sent him notice. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to an article in the summer 1959 edition of the University of British Columbia's Alumni Chronicle by a Mr. Val Gwyther which erroneously and misleadingly states that it is possible to develop the Fraser river for hydro-electric purposes while at the same time saving the fish runs on that river? If so, will the minister undertake to approach the publishers of this periodical in an effort to have a more accurate account published in their next issue?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I might say that I feel the question falls outside my field of responsibility.

However, I would like to say that I have seen the article referred to, and I find it is very similar to an article which appeared in another periodical by the same author some time ago. This other periodical, which is the official publication of a professional organization in British Columbia, subsequently in the interest of expressing both sides of the question published a second article with a divergent point of view. I would presume that in the interest of objectivity the U.B.C. Alumni Chronicle will follow a similar course. They are, of course, as far as I am concerned, perfectly free to publish whatever they see fit.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. Do I understand the minister to indicate that it is outside his jurisdiction and responsibility to attempt to get the true picture, as far as fish are concerned, across to the public?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is seeking to engage the minister in argument. The minister did state that he regarded this as not being a matter of his administrative responsibility, and I view the question in the same light although I allowed it to be answered.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER, MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED THEFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) inquired about the theft of $3,000 and 2,000 toll tokens at the Jacques Cartier bridge. I am glad to be able to supply the following particulars.

I am informed by the national harbours board that, at the time of the theft—established by the police as being between 11.55 p.m. Saturday, and 12.25 a.m. Sunday—there were, as usual, two collectors on duty. The theft took place in the toll office, which is about 20 feet from the collection boxes, and the thieves gained entrance by breaking into the coal chute.

The superintendent on duty at the toll office had, as usual, locked the door of the office at about 11.50 p.m., and was making his round toward the south side of the bridge for the purpose of checking the tolls of the collectors who were to be relieved from duty at midnight. The money and tokens represented collections since 4 p.m. Saturday. The matter is being investigated.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a further question of the minister. In view of the statement he has just made, do the officials of his department intend to take steps in order to avoid the recurrence of similar thefts in the future?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): In view of suggestions that there has been some hitch in the settlement of the dispute involving the Polymer Corporation, I wonder if the Minister of Labour has any report he could make to the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The report I have this morning is to the effect that terms of settlement have been arrived at. These have now been ratified and an agreement has been signed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—INQUIRY AS TO DIRECT LOANS TO BUILDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does the government, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, intend to make direct loans to builders as it did last year? If so, when can the house building industry expect the government to announce its intentions in this regard?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. This is a subject on which government policy will have to be announced in due course. I may add that I did have a very helpful discussion with the executive officers of the national home builders' association earlier in the week on this particular subject.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTH BAY—STATEMENT ON PUBLIC TENDERS FOR BOMARC MISSILE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to reply to a question which the hon. member for Nipissing asked yesterday and which I took as notice as Acting Minister of Defence Production. The answer is that public tenders are not called for construction of defence installations where the work is of a classified nature.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wonder if I could direct a supplementary question to the minister or to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the report that certain contracting firms, including one United States firm, are today viewing the site at the invitation of this government, will the minister responsible reconsider this matter and give capable northern Ontario companies an opportunity to tender?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, this question has been considered at length by the president of defence construction. No United States company is going to tender on this contract. Any company which is competent to do this classified and very strict work—it is something very special—has been asked and will be asked to tender.

Mr. Garland: Will northern Ontario firms be given an opportunity to tender on this work?

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. O'Hurley: Some northern Ontario firms which can do the work have been asked.

[Later:]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Defence Production. It is in connection with the work being done on the Bomarc missile base at North Bay. Will the minister give us some assurance that local labour will be given the first opportunity for employment on this project?

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, in this contract, as in all others under defence production, local labour has first preference.

MEETINGS WITH UNITED STATES AIRPLANE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister had any meetings in Ottawa in the last ten days with United States airplane manufacturers on the subject of an aircraft for the Royal Canadian Air Force?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): A number of manufacturers have been to see me regarding the construction of aircraft, yes.

Mr. Fisher: Can the minister state briefly what manufacturers?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pearkes: I simply say that a number of representatives of manufacturing firms have been to see me.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF CREDIT LEGISLATION TO AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to a request from Mr. A. P. Gleave, president of the Saskatchewan farmers' union, that legislation to provide a system of long term credit for farmers should be referred to the agriculture committee for study so that, in Mr. Gleave's words, the house will not rush through legislation which might in the long run prove unsatisfactory?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had a request from Mr. Gleave that this legislation should be sent to the agriculture committee for study, and I replied that in view of the fact the session was rapidly drawing to a close, I did not know whether there would be time to do that but that no firm decision had been taken on the matter.

Mr. Argue: Has the minister given any further consideration to this question? Does he not agree with Mr. Gleave that, since it is long term legislation, it is absolutely essential that farm organizations should be given the right to express their views?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, practically all farm organizations in this country have already expressed their views with respect to farm credit legislation. We have had views from the interprovincial farm union, the federation of agriculture and various other agricultural organizations.

Mr. Argue: Does the proposed legislation conform to the views of the farm organizations?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will find that out when the resolution is adopted and the bill is given first reading.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, my view is that it does not.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

USE OF CANADIAN PILOTS BY U.S. NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a request, or does he know if a request has gone forward to the St. Lawrence-Kingston-Ottawa pilots' association, from the United States navy for the use of Canadian pilots to take the United States navy's warships through the St. Lawrence seaway?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, I am not aware of such a request. I would not think it improbable that such a request would be received.

IMMIGRATION

LATVIAN FISHERMEN—CONSIDERATION OF REQUEST TO ENTER CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if the hon. lady will give sympathetic consideration to the request of the two Latvian fishermen who are now in Newfoundland and who have asked to be allowed to take refuge in Canada?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this whole matter is under consideration at the moment. I am not sure that the hon. member is right when he says they have asked for refuge in the strict meaning of that expression, but I can assure the house that the whole matter is receiving sympathetic attention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the government still follow the policy of the previous administration of deporting no one behind the iron curtain?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty broad question which has many ramifications, and I do not think I should answer it in a few words.

FINANCE

COMPARISON OF YIELDS FROM FEDERAL AND MUNICIPAL SECURITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he aware that investors in the medium and higher income groups realize a greater net return on recent Canadian bond issues than they do from the securities of most townships and hamlets of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I could not hear all the hon. gentleman's question. If he will repeat it, I will endeavour to answer it.

Mr. McMillan: I want to know if the minister is aware that investors in the medium and higher income groups realize a greater net return on recent Canadian bond issues than they do from the securities of most townships and hamlets of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a fact. The hon. member is comparing different things entirely. You see, Mr. Speaker, before there can be any fair basis of comparison you have to have like things, and like things in the market mean securities comparable in maturity, comparable in rate and comparable in the amount of the issue.

Mr. McMillan: Does the minister deny the reports of Canadian banks and trust companies with respect to this matter?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that the hon. member is following a proper course in introducing questions of that kind. They are not matters that can be answered simply, and the minister is being asked to give opinions on matters that are well known or can be easily ascertained from public information. The hon. member really is not asking for information.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect, may I suggest that it goes beyond that. The hon. member is making assertions in regard to what these opinions are, and I do not agree that he is correctly stating the weight of opinion in that respect.

Mr. Chevrier: Surely he has a right to ask a question. Are you going to determine the conduct of the house?

TRADE

WASHINGTON MEETING ON EXPORT OF SURPLUS FARM PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether there was a meeting in Washington last week of representatives of governments to discuss the export of surplus agricultural products? If so, can the minister report on the results of that meeting?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): A meeting did take place in Washington attended by officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and others. I would be very pleased to give a report later with regard to the outcome of that meeting.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEW WATERFORD, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I ask the Minister of Labour if he is now in a position to answer the question I directed yesterday to the Acting Minister of Labour with reference to a telegram from the united mine workers of New Waterford, Nova Scotia, requesting that the town of New Waterford be declared a depressed area?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have asked my officials to obtain full information on the situation from officers of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, and I am now informed by officials of the company that full production will begin on June 29 in all the mines of the area and is expected to continue to the end of the year at least.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. He is reported in a newspaper as having said at the toastmasters' club last night that one of the needs in today's world is people with something worth while to say and the ability to say it convincingly. Is the Postmaster General in a position to tell the house if he has found that out in his own government?

(Translation):

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker, I have reached that conclusion on listening to remarks by my hon. friend from St. Denis (Mr. Denis).

(Text):

NATIONAL PARKS

CAPE BONAVISTA, NFLD.—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether, on this 462nd anniversary of the discovery of Canada by John Cabot, he is in a position to announce the establishment of a national historic park at cape Bonavista?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will be glad to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am certainly not in a position to make any announcement.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the 56th anniversary of his birth if he is now in a position to make a statement of government policy on the matter of evacuation and shelter with respect to civil defence.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On my anniversary, one day removed from that of the hon. member for Essex East, I should like to say that this matter is receiving every consideration.

COAL

REPORTED REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION AND INCREASE IN IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday regarding the decrease in the output of Canadian coal and the increase in imports.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has drawn attention to the expression of opinion that he smuggled into his question yesterday which should more properly—

Mr. Robichaud: Not smuggled; it was a straightforward question.

Mr. Churchill: If the hon. member wants an answer to his question he had better keep quiet and not interrupt. He smuggled this expression of opinion into a question which should more properly have been addressed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Robichaud: He was away.

Mr. Churchill: I have checked the release issued by the dominion bureau of statistics, and I might say that the hon. member might well have given me notice of this question. I find that as far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned we have taken note of the imports of coal. Questions with regard to the production of coal are more properly addressed to the other department.

Mr. Robichaud: No answer.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATIONS, PROVIDE FOR MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

161. Construction, improvements and equipment, $6,058,571.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for not being here earlier during the consideration of this item of the minister's estimates. I realize that the amount is substantial. It has to do with the expenditure of a little over $6 million. The minister may have given the details, but I wonder if he would draw to the attention of the committee what are the main items in this estimate?

Mr. Fulton: That was done, I think, on the last occasion, but perhaps I could summarize briefly what I did point out to the committee then. The main construction under way at the present time is the completion of a new institution at Joyceville, which we expect to be ready for occupancy this fall; there is also the construction of a new institution at St. Vincent de Paul, which we hope to have ready for occupancy in the year 1960. In addition to those, we are constructing, remodelling or altering to make more suitable for our purposes the satellite institutions at Valleyfield and William Head, British Columbia; also a number of additions and enlargements to other institutions, such as a new dormitory building at Saskatchewan and a new dormitory building at the existing institution of St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for giving this information. May I just ask one or two questions in connection with the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. Is this an extension of the present institution or is it a new building?

Mr. Fulton: This is a new institution but on the same reserve. It is not going to be part of the same old building but it is a new institution, very much along the lines of the Joyceville institution, and it is limited to the St. Vincent de Paul reserve.

Mr. Chevrier: What exactly will the department be doing at Valleyfield? Will it be an institution like St. Vincent de Paul? Will it be operated under the direction of the penitentiary at St. Vincent de Paul?

Mr. Fulton: The Valleyfield site is on loan from the Department of National Defence. It is a satellite institution of St. Vincent de Paul at present, and has been opened for the purpose of relieving the very serious overcrowding at St. Vincent de Paul. When we get the new institution on the St. Vincent de Paul reserve completed I hope that will take care of the overcrowding at that place for some time, but in the meantime there is a serious accommodation problem.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the institution at Valleyfield on de Salaberry island, or part of the plant which was originally called the nitro plant?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed the site is on the mainland.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the escape of three or four prisoners from William Head, a satellite institution where security arrangements are not the same as in the primary institutions, I should like to ask whether or not this situation over the week end has caused the minister to reconsider security arrangements at William Head and these satellite institutions generally.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that problem is going to be looked at as soon as the reports are complete. We have not yet complete reports of the circumstances of the escape. Tentatively, at the moment we do not believe the whole idea is in any sense prejudiced because of these escapes, but we certainly recognize that we have to have under constant revision these current provisions which we put into effect in this new and rather experimental type of project.

Mr. Chevrier: May I, just for clarification, ask another question. The minister said that the satellite institution at Valleyfield was on the mainland. My understanding is that with the construction of the canal, Valleyfield itself is an island. What I am trying to inquire is, where is the satellite going to be constructed on the premises of national defence? The premises of national defence with which I am familiar in that area are the nitro plant.

Mr. Fulton: What has been made available to us is part of the Valleyfield camp, on the outskirts of the city of Valleyfield.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say whether it is part of the old nitro plant that was used during the war?

Mr. Fulton: No, I do not believe it is any part of the nitro plant. My recollection of the pictures and maps I saw showed it was part of the hutted camp which was built and occupied by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked the minister a number of questions and the minister gave a list in reply which appears on page 4980 of Hansard, showing the construction projects of some magnitude that had been instituted since he became minister. I asked him to give certain details about each of those. I could perhaps recall them to the minister's mind.

Mr. Fulton: I have the answers here.

Mr. Pickersgill: The first one was the department's estimate. The second was the actual amount of the contract or contracts that had been let. The third was whether there was more than one contract. The fourth one was if there was more than one contract, why?

Mr. Fulton: As I explained in the earlier discussion on June 19, some of these projects are being carried out with inmate labour; therefore there is no question of a contract for them. I have now a complete answer as requested by the hon. member with respect to some of them, particularly the new institution in Quebec. It is a repetition of information I gave the last day this matter was under discussion, but in order that the answer may be complete I should perhaps repeat it.

With regard to Quebec, for the administration building the estimated cost was $250,000. The contract was let for $213,000, on October 22, 1958. The contractor was A. N. Bail Co. Ltd. of Montreal, Quebec. Automotive building; estimate $140,000; contract let for $158,844 on December 1, 1958 to L. Gordon Tarlton Ltd., Montreal, Quebec. Hospital and chapels building and accommodation building; estimate, $1,950,000; contract let for $1,574,000 on December 2, 1958, to A. N. Bail Ltd., Montreal, P.Q. Stores building and maintenance shop building; estimate $230,000; contract for $266,770 let on December 2, 1958 to A. N. Bail Co. Ltd., Montreal, Quebec. Steam generator plant, which as I explained was in the estimate included with two other buildings at a total cost of $600,000, has been let now; this one building, on a contract for $268,194 on December 2, 1958 to Blainville Welding & Supplies Inc., St. Therese, Quebec. Power plant building, which was another part of that building included in the total estimate of $600,000; the contract therefor has now been let at $225,420 on December 5, 1958 to Doug. Bremner Construction Ltd., Montreal, P.Q. Two shop buildings—it is really a laundry building and shop building—estimate $230,000; contract for $242,300 let on December 9, 1958 to Bee Construction Ltd., of Montreal, P.Q. Water service supply line; a contract for one part of that line has been let. All lines were estimated at $300,000. This particular contract is for $34,900, let on January 12, 1959 to McNamara (Que.) Ltd., Montreal, Quebec. Kitchen building and psychiatric building—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that one building?

Mr. Fulton: There are two buildings. The kitchen building was estimated at $225,000 and the psychiatric building at $200,000 for a total of $425,000. These two contracts have been let as one contract for a total of $419,985 on February 16, 1959 to Tetrault & Freres Ltee, of Verdun, P.Q. Radial brick chimney, which was also included in the total $600,000 estimate referred to above; contract has now been let for $15,399 on May 11, 1959 to Custodis Canadian Chimney Co. Ltd., Toronto, Ontario. Total contracts therefore for the new institution at Quebec—

Mr. Pickersgill: This is St. Vincent de Paul, is it?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. Contracts for the new institution at Quebec have been let to a total of $3,378,812.

Mr. Pickersgill: As compared with the estimate of what?

Mr. Fulton: Not all contracts have been let. Total estimated cost for this institution was $4,790,000. There remain to be let contracts for some of the services. The exercise hall, school and laboratory building was estimated at $400,000. As I said, many of the service lines and the hardware and lighting fixtures and miscellaneous items were to be installed after the building was completed. They are estimated at $150,000. It would therefore appear the contracts which are estimated to cost some $550,000 plus the balance of the service lines, which was $300,000—that would be a total of $850,000—remain to be let. We therefore appear to be well within the total estimates on the basis of contracts let so far.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there any contract for air conditioning.

Mr. Fulton: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: That deals only with one institution.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend will permit me to do so, I will continue with the list. The next set of information I have is major buildings under construction during 1958-1959 in existing permanent institutions. At Dorchester penitentiary piggery building F-55 was authorized on September 30, 1958 for a total of $50,000 for material purchases. Labour is being done by inmates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then evidently the minister made an error the other evening, because he gave the figure at $20,000. Was that an estimate?

Mr. Fulton: The first figure I gave was the amount printed in this year's estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then it is going to take more than one year to build this piggery, is it?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. It is a big undertaking. Dorchester has a large farm, and one of the main activities on that farm is the breeding of pigs. As I pointed out, the labour is to be done by the inmates, which in itself provides an occupation for them. It is expected that the construction will not be completed this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say what the estimated total cost of the piggery is?

Mr. Fulton: It is $50,000 for materials.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said $50,000?

Mr. Fulton: For materials, yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are the inmates paid anything for their labour?

Mr. Fulton: As I explained the last time, the matter has been under discussion. They are paid a daily rate which varies according to grade on a per diem basis. As I explained, no attempt is made to equate it to the ordinary wage scale outside.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no collective bargaining, then?

Mr. Fulton: I think my hon. friend knows the answer to that question, but if he wishes me to put it on the record I will. The answer is no. Then, still at Dorchester, there is an exercise hall school and library building B-8, authorized May 29, 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was not authorized by the minister?

Mr. Fulton: No, but the construction has commenced since this government took office, and that is the question I was asked. That was authorized to a total of $105,000 for material purchases; labour is being performed by the inmates. The contract for supply and erection of structural steel was covered by an acceptance of a tender of Steel Structure and Services Limited of Montreal in the amount of $14,314. Then at St. Vincent de Paul, in addition to the new institution which is being built on the reserve we are adding a new dormitory to the present institution and making an extension to the industrial building. With respect to the industrial building, the extension was authorized on May 9, 1958 to a total of $74,800 for material purchases, labour being performed by the inmates. The dormitory building was authorized on November 22, 1958 to accommodate 104 inmates. A total of $55,225 was authorized for the purchase and erection of the steel framework, the foundations and interior finishing are being done by the inmates. The contract for the steel building was let to Crosby Engineering Limited of Montreal in the amount of $32,675.

At Kingston a new kitchen building, C-25, was authorized on April 29, 1957 to a total of $100,000. The contract for the supply and erection of structural steel was let to Leeds Bridge and Iron Works, Gananoque, Ontario; in the amount of $25,598. The balance of the authorization will be for the purchase of materials to be installed by the inmates.

At Collin's Bay a new dairy barn building was authorized on May 13, 1957 to a total of $96,653, which is to cover the purchase of materials, labour being performed by the inmates. I should point out that the amount paid the inmates is a daily amount irrespective of the particular work they are doing, and it comes out of the operations and maintenance vote, so that none of this comparatively small amount for day pay is included in the figures I have given here.

Another building at Collin's Bay is a new vocational shop building authorized May 14, 1958 to a total of $12,200, which is again to cover material purchases, the labour being performed by the inmates.

At the Manitoba penitentiary a new shop building was authorized February 25, 1958 in the amount of $67,000 to cover material purchases, labour being performed by the inmates. A new exercise yard was authorized July 30, 1958 in the amount of $25,000 to cover material purchases, labour performed by the inmates. New dormitory accommodation was constructed in an existing building, authorized on September 25, 1958 to a total of $14,111 to cover material purchases, labour being performed by the inmates.

At Saskatchewan penitentiary, Prince Albert, a new automotive training repair and storage building was authorized on September 30, 1958 in an amount estimated of $90,000, to cover material purchases, labour being performed by the inmates. Reconstruction and reroofing of the west wing shops building was authorized on April 21, 1958 at an estimated cost of $18,500 to cover material purchases. A new industrial warehouse building was authorized July 21, 1958 to a total of $24,200 to cover material purchases. A new dormitory building was authorized November 28, 1958 to a total of $23,500 to cover material purchases. At British Columbia penitentiary a new warehouse building was authorized November 22, 1957 to a total of $30,000, estimated to cover material purchases.

Then a general note. Since the expenditures for construction being carried out by inmates reflects material costs only with no provision for labour, overhead, equipment, shop prefabrication, etc., a comparative estimate of the actual value of the construction projects would be approximately 100 per cent higher.

The total of the major projects I have referred to above is $786,189, which if you add the 100 per cent comes to a total approximate actual value of $1,572,378.

Now the satellite institutions. At William Head, British Columbia, minor reconstruction and renovation work is being carried out by inmates. Expenditure for this purpose to March 31, 1959 is $6,600, approximately. At Valleyfield, Quebec, minor reconstruction and renovation work is being carried out by inmates. Expenditure for this purpose to March 31, 1959 has been approximately $4,725.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the minister for the information he has given us. There are two questions I would like to ask, and I will ask them both at the same time so the minister can answer them both at the same time. My first question is this. In the case of contracts let as opposed to work being done by the inmates, were tenders called in every case? I will preface my second question by a very brief statement. The minister will recall that when he sat over here his colleague, then and still the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, who was appointed Minister of Public Works, used to argue very eloquently and I thought rather persuasively that public works of the government should be done by the Department of Public Works. Two years have elapsed since the hon. gentleman became Minister of Public Works, and so far as I know there has been no increase in the functions of the Department of Public Works.

I would ask the minister if he has had any discussions with the Minister of Public Works or any of his officials in this regard. Obviously the projects carried on by prison inmates would, I can well understand, have to remain in the penitentiaries branch, but does not the minister think it is advisable in the case of these large contracts, where the work is going to be done entirely by contractors, to have competent and experienced staff of the Department of Public Works dealing with these matters?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, to answer the first question, the answer is yes; competitive tenders were called in every case. In one case it is interesting to note that, for the purpose of comparison, we asked for tenders on a combined power plant building and steam generating plant at St. Vincent de Paul and also for tenders separately on each of the buildings, and we found that accepting the separate contracts realized a saving of $24,872.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister communicate that information to the Minister of Public Works and he can let his officials know about that.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to the other question, it is a fact that in the penitentiaries branch, we have our own engineering and architectural staff and they supervise the building and the letting of contracts by the penitentiaries branch. I think the very reason my hon. friend has mentioned with respect to those projects done by inmate labour gives the answer why it is desirable to continue in the penitentiaries branch our own engineering and architectural services. We have special problems which arise because these are penitentiaries, and extra building has to be done within the institutions, in addition to which we have very special problems in connection with the maintenance and repair of our institutions which necessitate keeping our own engineering and architectural branch.

For that reason it was not considered feasible or desirable or economic to have this building done by public works, but I may tell the hon. gentleman now as a matter of general information that when I was Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and I realized that there was a very substantial building program being undertaken in connection with Indian schools, it was my feeling that it would be a mistake for us to duplicate or attempt to duplicate the organization of the Department of Public Works. I discussed this with the officials and they were of the same view, and we instituted discussions with the Department of Public Works with a view to that department undertaking a closer management of our building operations.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Justice is completely mistaken. If he will look at the files of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration he will find that shortly after I became minister, Mr. Winters and I instituted a study as a result of which these buildings were transferred to the full limit that the Department of Public Works was willing to undertake in each successive year. The suggestion was made by Mr. Winters, but I was in full accord with his view that as rapidly as possible we should dismantle the whole construction branch of Indian affairs except for those minor repairs and minor projects which obviously it would be a waste of time for the staff of the Department of Public Works to deal with because they could so often be done by Indian superintendents. So the accolade which the hon. gentleman gave himself is totally undeserved. If he made any change at all he was simply carrying on the policy which was going on just as fast as public works could digest it, two years before.

Mr. Fulton: Then not much progress had been made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The answer the minister gave is certainly not satisfactory. When hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the house they complained about the division of responsibility and the confusion of responsibility for the construction of public buildings entrusted to so many departments of government. I well remember this question being raised on my own estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, though I cannot recall whether or not the Minister of Justice participated in that debate. Fortunately I was in the position of being able to say that with regard to construction in that department, the departmental program was being carried out by the Department of Public Works.

That was the occasion of a strong and spirited debate entered into by some hon. members who urged the centralization under one department, the Department of Public Works, of responsibility for the whole of the government's building program. But the minister in answer to the indictment levelled at him this morning by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate did not provide an adequate explanation. What justification can there be for the Department of Justice carrying on a complete duplication of the activities of the Department of Public Works with regard to its properties?

I can well understand that in view of the desirability of having prisoners carry on certain work as part of their training, as well as serving other purposes connected with the status of prisoners, some occupation, possibly connected with building, might be found for them; but surely prisoners are not called upon to build penitentiaries. I can understand prisoners lodged, say at Kingston, constructing benches and cupboards or pigsties, but to assign to the prison population projects such as constructing big additions to such institutions as St. Vincent de Paul is, of course, perfectly ridiculous. The minister has not answered the charge made by his own colleagues on another occasion and in another capacity and from another place in this house, and if those arguments were valid two years ago they are no less valid, surely, in the judgment of hon. gentlemen opposite today.

The Department of Public Works should increasingly be entrusted with the responsibility of looking after the construction requirements of all departments of the government just as, for instance, the Department of National Health and Welfare is now being increasingly assigned health responsibilities of all departments. The minister ought surely to give us a more satisfactory reason for the policy of decentralization practised by the Department of Justice as well as by other departments of the government. The minister is, I think, a member of treasury board—

Mr. Fulton: You are quite wrong, as usual.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman says I am quite wrong. I had hoped he would have had the opportunity of acquiring that additional experience in the conduct of the government of Canada. I hope before he ceases to be a minister he will be appointed to treasury board because he would find it a useful experience, an experience which if he had profited by it would not have allowed him to make the rather weak defence he did make a few moments ago in answer to the penetrating observations of my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

The minister should, I submit, give us an explanation, in addition to the reasons he has already given, as to why the Department of Justice should continue to duplicate, with all the additional expense involved, the work of another department in the construction of these major institutions and similar projects. The answer given a few moments ago by the Minister of Justice, considered in the light of the indictments which were made against the former administration by his colleagues, is one which requires further explanation, and I hope it will be an adequate explanation.

Mr. Fulton: I will be glad to give an extended reply. I did not think it would be necessary for me to give a very extended answer in justification of this program which, incidentally, has been in effect for 75 years. I did not think it would be necessary for me to give an extended reply to an hon. gentleman who was a member of the government which itself carried on the same program for 22 years; but if the hon. member for Essex East sat all the years he did in the former administration without realizing what are the advantages of carrying on in this manner, and the justification for doing so, I will be glad to rehearse them to him.

I have already indicated some of the reasons, but I did it shortly. Now I will expand on what I said before. It is recognized, and should be recognized by anyone who approaches this question from a common sense point of view, that the problem of maintaining and repairing the very considerable investment in buildings which the taxpayers of Canada have with respect to penitentiaries poses special difficulties, because here we are dealing with a branch which is responsible for the custody and maintenance and discipline and training of inmates of penitentiaries. This is not the kind of problem with which the Department of Public Works deals. It is therefore considered—and, I think, on the soundest basis of common sense—that it is necessary for us to maintain in the penitentiaries branch a constructional, architectural and engineering service if for no other reason than for the purpose of supervising the maintenance and repair work which is carried out in the great majority of cases by inmate labour, and which does not lend itself to the type of construction under contract which is widely used by the Department of Public Works.

Since, therefore, it is necessary for this branch to maintain an architectural and engineering service, with the considerable staff necessary to supervise this work in the ten institutions in Canada from coast to coast —ten major institutions—it is a matter of common sense and economy that they should at the same time take responsibility for new construction.

The hon. member for Essex East is very short in his recollection and quite inaccurate in his summary of the nature of the construction that is undertaken. It is the normal case that the maximum of construction is done by inmate labour. This, of course, poses a special problem. It is the type of construction and type of problem that the Department of Public Works is not accustomed to handling.

It is true that in the new institutions at St. Vincent de Paul and Joyceville the majority of the work is being done by outside contractors. The reason for that is that there was a very great element of urgency in getting those buildings completed, and we would not pretend that doing it by inmate labour, or doing the majority of the work by inmate labour, is as fast as calling in an outside contractor; but much more work would have been done by inmate labour even in the construction of those new institutions were it not for the urgency of providing the new accommodation.

Nevertheless there is a substantial element of prison population being employed, and my hon. friend is quite wrong when he says there is no inmate labour employed on the new construction. There is. We have had inmates working in Joyceville almost from the time the walls were completed because a great deal of the interior finishing and installation is being done by the inmates and we have had a substantial inmate population there almost from the time that construction was commenced. The same thing, of course—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a question on the point?

Mr. Fulton: May I just finish, and I shall be glad to answer the question after. Incidentally, I am told that with respect to the construction of the very large penitentiaries, for instance Prince Albert, the major part, if not the whole of it, was done by penitentiary labour, so that the type of construction and the problems that have to be met in cases of penitentiary construction, whether of new buildings or of repairs and renovations to existing institutions, are of a nature that require immediate supervision and immediate control within the penitentiary branch itself. The only way to accomplish that is to maintain our own engineering and architectural service, which has been the pattern followed for 75 years.

There is, I think, absolutely nothing inconsistent in the pattern still being followed and what was said by certain members who now form the government when they were sitting opposite. The point that was made then, as I recall it, was that there was room for better co-ordination and centralization of the building activities with the purview of the Department of Public Works. But I do not recall that it was ever said that there should never be any other separate organization. If my hon. friend were able to find words that went that far I should be surprised. Therefore the fact that we continue to maintain in one case, on the basis of common sense and economy, a separate engineering and architectural branch does not, as I see it, destroy any general case that was made out on a former occasion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister intend it to be taken from his statement that contractors are themselves using prison labour on contracts, because that was the inference one would draw? That is the reason I rose to ask the question at that point.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate it. If I did create that impression I appreciate the opportunity to correct it. No; what I meant was that where a contractor has a contract for a building, as soon as he reaches a certain stage, the walls are up and the roof is on, we then move inmates in to do other work within the building which is not part of the contract.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can understand that, but it does seem to me that it completely invalidates the minister's argument in so far as large structures being built by contract are concerned. The problem is precisely the same as it is in Indian affairs. You have a problem of small buildings, new buildings that are built largely by the Indians under the Indian superintendent, and you have the problems of maintenance, and so on, which it would be ridiculous to ask the Department of Public Works to do.

Then you have mainly schools. It is true that you have a program for building residential schools that was carried on for a good many years by the Indian affairs branch which, I agreed with Mr. Winters, was a mistake, and as fast as public works could build them—this was at a time of full employment and that, of course, lessened the possibility of doing it as quickly as it could be done now—these big projects were taken over.

When he was on this side of the house I think the Minister of Public Works said that everything should be done by public works. I think, given time, we can easily substantiate that; but we would not maintain anything so foolish. We would say that the minister has a complete argument as far as these small structures, such as piggeries and things of that sort, are concerned, but when you come to letting a huge contract for $1 million or $2 million it does seem ridiculous that the government should have two sets of architects and engineers in two different departments. Actually, we now have more than that.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make one or two comments. With respect to the problem that has been raised in so far as the maintenance of a staff of architects and designers is concerned, I have no particular thoughts on the matter. Although it would seem that while the building of penitentiaries necessitates a certain type of architecture, a certain type of structure which is different from a public building or a wharf, or things of that nature, yet it would appear that there is a duplication and an unnecessary cost because of that duplication by reason of having this organization within the Department of Justice for the building of penitentiaries and other structures connected with them. If a saving could be made it should be transferred to the Department of Public Works. Whether this is so I cannot say.

I would like to make a few comments on the question of inmates working on the building of penal institutions and on their maintenance and repair. I hope I got the wrong impression from the comments of the hon. member for Essex East when he made reference to inmates building benches and building piggeries and things of that nature, and that inmate labour should be confined to this sort of thing. If I am incorrect I will stand corrected, but I do not think it should be left at that and that inmates in penitentiaries should be confined to doing the menial tasks or the minor little jobs of work that might be necessary in maintaining the penitentiaries themselves, or doing such things as sewing together mail bags for the Post Office Department or lesser jobs of that nature.

I think more and more effort should be concentrated on ensuring that inmates have every possible opportunity in the construction of major buildings, minor buildings, new construction and everything else in the penal institution; that inmate labour should be given every opportunity to participate in the construction of those buildings if for no other reason than that it would give the inmates an opportunity to become familiar with construction processes as they develop from time to time so that when they are released they may fit more easily into our economy and be able to perform some useful function in society by working in the construction industry or in some other trade which they may learn while they are in the institution. Certainly work of that nature would be of great assistance in the rehabilitation and reformation processes that are necesary to ensure to the greatest possible extent that inmates, when they are released, have less chance of going back to the penitentiary than they have had in years gone by.

I support the idea completely. We should do as much as is humanly possible to ensure that inmates in penal institutions are employed in building new penitentiaries and all the other work connected with them. I would go beyond the thought of confining that sort of work to within the penitentiary itself. This might not be feasible in some cases because of security reasons in the case of life sentences of the individuals concerned, and so on, but there is a great field in penal institutions for inmates to be employed on public projects outside of the penitentiary itself, or outside of these penal institutions. In some of the institutions under provincial jurisdiction in British Columbia inmates are used in forestry work and in things of that nature, all of which is beneficial. They are performing the work while in the penitentiary, and the inmate is being assisted to fit into society more easily after he is released.

I hope the hon. member for Essex East was not trying to leave the impression that penitentiary inmates should be confined to doing menial work in their cells or to building benches and doing little repair jobs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course not. What I was seeking to emphasize was not so much who did the actual job but who should be responsible for the project, whether it should be public works or whether it should be the Department of Justice. The extent of participation by prisoners is a matter that would obviously have to be determined in the context, but the main consideration was whether or not there should be in so far as possible, a decentralization. Can the minister tell the committee how many architects the Department of Justice has?

Mr. Fulton: We have four architects.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to the minister that he should look into this particular division. I do not quarrel with the department having architects or an architect. I would not want to specify what the number should be, but I am going to suggest to the minister that this does look like an unusually large number of officials. It may seem that in suggesting that I agree in principle with the department having an architect I am contradicting the position I took earlier with regard to greater centralization.

Mr. Fulton: May I make a correction. There are five architects, one architect grade 4, three architects grade 2 and one architect grade 1.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just saying that I may have seemed to contradict myself in agreeing to this department having an architectural division or a division of architects when I had taken the position that there should be a greater centralization of these functions in the Department of Public Works. The minister mentioned that there were 10 penal institutions. When my hon. friend compares that with the number of institutions under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare, for instance, he will see that the latter has many more buildings to be concerned with, large hospitals, Indian hospitals and other kinds of institutions, which I should think would run to well over 35 in number. That department has one architect, or perhaps two now.

The requirements in the case of an architect with respect to the building of a hospital are certainly much more complicated than in the building of an institution whose architectural design is not as important as its functional purposes. I suggest to the minister, in view of the charges of unnecessary expenditure which he and others made while sitting on this side, in view of the fact that they said they were going to economize, that the minister, though he is not a member of treasury board, could right in his own department even at this late date, having been in office now for 18 months—

Mr. Pickersgill: Two years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two years—seize this opportunity, in view of the suggestions made with the best of intentions by those of us on this side, to effect the economies which were widely proclaimed from one end of Canada to the other and which undoubtedly made a considerable impression on many people in this country. In the two years the hon. gentlemen have been in office we have had no example whatsoever of any major cut in expenditure.

It may be that the Minister of Justice could give his colleagues an example to follow. He has given them an example in other particulars. I suggest to him that this is another opportunity for him to strengthen the very great position he occupies in the present government. If he could establish himself as an economizer, as a ruthless administrator who none the less took into account the ends of justice, who knows but that one day, and perhaps soon, he might be minister of finance instead of being Minister of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister will recall the views of his colleagues and himself on the desirability of centralizing these activities in the Department of Public Works wherever possible. I recall the present Minister of Public Works insisting that the responsibility as to construction even with respect to our embassies and offices in foreign countries should be in the hands of the Department of Public Works.

I have before me the details with respect to this item as found on page 226, from which the minister no doubt has quoted. In contrast to the situation which the hon. member for Essex East mentioned as existing in the department of National Health and Welfare, it shows that there is a chief, architectural and engineering division, and that there are also four engineers and five architects.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the use of inmate labour, will the minister tell us what safeguards are taken to see that there is no undue exploitation of such labour? Is there some system by which compensation is provided to the prisoners for various types of labour? Do they get a certain amount of time off for the work they perform, or are they paid? Is there a difference drawn between the more competent and specialized type of labour and ordinary labour? For example, there may be bricklayers, plasterers or painters who are qualified in a specialized way, or possibly even an architect who is an inmate. When such people are used are they compensated on an equal basis with all other workers, or is there additional compensation available for those who are more specialized and who create an economy for the government through the very fact that they are specialists and are more highly skilled? What system exists to extend such recognition in keeping with various levels of skill?

Mr. Fulton: There are three grades. I do not know that I can give every consideration that is taken into account in setting the grades, but generally speaking they are based on the attitude of the inmate, his industry and application to the work he asks to do, his attitude toward the staff, his attitude toward rehabilitation and so on, plus the factor of his aptitude at the particular trade.

This whole subject is one of those which fall within the scope of those referred to the correctional planning committee, who are to bring forward recommendations as to the type of rehabilitational training program or changes, modifications and advances that might be made particularly in the new types of institutions.

Mr. Woolliams: Just before this item carries I should like to direct one or two questions to the minister. I understand there has been a committee examining various sites in western Canada with a view to penitentiary construction. I might preface these remarks by saying that Alberta is the only province in the west that does not have a penitentiary.

I am interested also in the fact that in the Drumheller area two coal mines have been abandoned and the Department of Labour has declared the area a surplus labour area. There are about 300 or 400 men out of work in this area. I am interested in determining how many sites were visited by the committee, and whether or not we might have the report of that committee.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, but I do not have the correctional planning committee record before me. I cannot speak from the document as to exactly how many sites were visited, but I know they have inspected personally a number of sites, and I am quite sure that one member of the committee at least visited Drumheller. The committee will be returning here at the end of the month and I expect to receive, not later than the end of the year at the latest, their final report which will include recommendations as to where new institutions should be situated.

Mr. McFarlane: Before we pass this item I should like to add my recommendation to those already made for proposed construction of penitentiaries in western Canada. At the moment I am not very interested in the type of construction, but I am interested in the location. We have already established a precedent in the establishment and construction of a penitentiary at Springhill. I should like to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that the city of Fernie in my area is in a similar situation. There is no industry now in the area to take up the slack and bring back the economy of this East Kootenay area.

There are other aspects of the matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. We have a very desirable community. It is well established, with good homes for the personnel which would result in considerable saving because there would be no necessity for constructing homes such as there would be if the penitentiary were located elsewhere. In addition, the city of Fernie is centrally located in that part of western Canada. At the present time the penitentiary in New Westminster is encroaching on the business and industrial area. If a penitentiary were established at Fernie there would be plenty of room and the penitentiary would not encroach on the civic area.

I have already dealt with the situation in so far as transportation is concerned. This has ceased to be a problem. In addition, we have the support of all the organizations in the province of British Columbia which have recommended the establishment of a penitentiary in the Fernie area. In this connection I should like to refer to Hansard of last year and to the remarks made by the hon. member for New Westminster, as reported at page 3203:

> It is not often that a city wants to move an institution which has a payroll and a purchasing power such as that of the British Columbia penitentiary; but as far as the city of New Westminster is concerned, it will be very glad to get rid of it because it is situated in the centre of the city.
> I predict that within 20 years it will be situated in the centre of the greater Vancouver area. We in the city of New Westminster feel that the penitentiary is located on a spot that is unsuitable for that purpose. It is situated in the centre of a growing district, one of the most populous districts in the province of British Columbia. I would ask the minister for assurance that within the next five or ten years the penitentiary will be moved.

He also supports the contention that the penitentiary should be moved to the Fernie area. I notice that a certain amount of money is again being expended on the penitentiary at New Westminster. Perhaps if the minister is giving consideration to making the move, this expenditure should be reconsidered. I would respectfully ask the minister if he would give this matter serious consideration.

Mr. Fulton: I can assure the hon. member and other hon. members who are interested in the question of construction and location of new institutions in western Canada that this is one of the things that will be given most careful consideration. I am well aware of the situation around Fernie, and I am well aware also of the concern of the hon. member who has just spoken that the needs and suitability of that area should be given every proper consideration. I assure him that they will be.

When we get the committee's report we shall be able to come to some final conclusion. As I have assured my hon. friend and others who have written me on behalf of Fernie on previous occasions, the suitability of that location will be most carefully investigated. Then with respect to the fact we are spending money at New Westminster, notwithstanding the fact that a move from New Westminster might be indicated, I can only say we are not spending a great deal of money on the British Columbia penitentiary. The only new construction is a new warehouse building at a total cost of $30,000. In general, of course, it is necessary for us to maintain a proper institution at that point as long as we have it there and until we finally come to move it.

Mr. Roberge: I should like to ask a further question of the minister with regard to the construction work done by inmates. If I properly understood the question put by the hon. member for Cartier, he wanted to know if time off was awarded to prisoners for work done on construction. The minister, in his answer, did not elucidate that point.

I know that standard regulations call for inmates receiving one day off per week for good behaviour, but that is not automatic and depends upon the warden. Is there any automatic time off for work done on construction or maintenance by prisoners?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, the awarding of time off is not made specifically with reference to the work done by an inmate in any type of labour that has been described. The work he does and his attitude to that work would be part of the general consideration upon which time off was awarded. However, work on construction projects is not singled out for special award of time off, because not all inmates are employed on that type of work. Whatever work they do, and their attitude toward the performance of that work, are factors taken into account in assessing whether or not a prisoner qualifies for time off.

Mr. Roberge: Then there is only one regulation for automatic time off?

Mr. Fulton: It is general, and I would say it is a maximum of six days a month for the first year of confinement and ten days for all subsequent years. As I said, whether or not an inmate is entitled to the maximum depends upon a number of factors including his attitude and his performance on whatever work may be assigned to him.

Mr. Crestohl: May I ask for a little further clarification in connection with this construction. A day put in on construction by an architect or by a specialist inmate creates an economy for the government of say $20, and a day put in by an ordinary labourer inmate creates an economy for the government of say $5. One man creates an economy of saving to the country of $20 and the other one of $5. Is there any yardstick for measuring the recognition which each man should receive? Is there any priority or recognition given to one over the other?

Mr. Fulton: I do not believe so, and I do not believe there should be. This would mean that different classes of inmates would be entitled to earn greater remission than others. If I understand my hon. friend's suggestion correctly, it would mean that if an architect had run afoul of the law and were serving a sentence, then the time off he got should be measured by his professional skill; whereas a day labourer, for example, who is also an inmate should have his entitlement to time off measured on a somewhat lower scale. I do not think that procedure would be at all equitable, and I hope we shall never see such a system in operation in the penitentiaries.

Mr. Crestohl: I agree with the minister.

Mr. Roberge: Can the minister advise the committee as to the number of hours of work put in by an inmate in one day?

Mr. Fulton: The maximum is eight hours. The maximum work period that can be performed is eight hours, and that can be done only at a smaller institution like Valleyfield and William Head where there is no big administration problem. Inmates cannot be out working unless staff is there to supervise, and the staff works on an eight hour day. In a small institution work can commence almost immediately the staff move out on the job, but in the larger institutions the actual hours during which inmates can work are reduced in accordance with the size of the staff and the administrative problem of getting things going.

Item agreed to.

528. Construction, improvements and equipment—further amount required, $572,436.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say why such a large supplementary item was required?

Mr. Fulton: The total asked for is $572,436, of which the main components are $119,710 for the new institution in the province of Quebec—

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not asking the minister for any details. I was just wondering why such a large amount was required. I was wondering whether there had been rather poor estimating when the additional amount asked for is over half a million dollars.

Mr. Fulton: No. We expect to start with the work on the new institution in the Springhill area of Nova Scotia, and there is an amount of $200,000 provided for the acquisition of the necessary land.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was not contemplated at the time of the main estimates?

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am satisfied with that answer.

Item agreed to.

162. To increase by $400 a year the allowance payable to Mrs. Alice Joynson, pursuant to Chapter 11 of the statutes of 1914, and to increase by $300 a year the allowance payable to Mrs. Jean Laird Farrell, pursuant to Chapter 76 of the statutes of 1927; such increases to be effective from the 1st day of April, 1959, $700.

Mr. Roberge: This is the last item of the estimates of the Department of Justice. The question I wish to ask does not relate at all to this item. However, I want to refer to page 4914 of Hansard of June 18, where the minister is reported to have said that he would give the committee a breakdown of the persons working in the office of the Solicitor General before his estimates were completed. That is to be found in the second column on page 4914.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think my officials prepared for me a breakdown of the staff in the office of the Solicitor General. I had it with me, but I do not think it was called for and I did not hand it in while the administration item was before us. I could get it and table it the first thing this afternoon.

Mr. Roberge: We shall be satisfied if we have it tabled when we come to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Fulton: I will hand it in at the opening of this afternoon's sitting.

The Chairman: Shall vote 162 carry?

Mr. Roberge: With that restriction.

Mr. Peters: Has that to do with this matter of pensions?

Mr. Fulton: No. I was asked on an earlier occasion for a breakdown showing the persons working in the office of the Solicitor General. I undertook to produce it. My officials prepared it for me, but I do not think it was referred to again and I neglected to hand it in. I have just said that I will hand it in at the opening of the sitting this afternoon.

Mr. Peters: On this matter of pensions I have a question or two. Have these pensions been evaluated or raised to a reasonable level? There has been an increase, but is this level sufficient? Does it bring them in line with other pensions?

Mr. Fulton: I am told that they come in line with the provisions made by the workmen's compensation boards in the various provinces for those who have been injured or who have lost their lives under similar circumstances.

Mr. Peters: Does what the minister has said relate to the compensation rate now or in the past? One of these pensions goes away back to 1914. Is the compensation rate based on earnings at that time or on the cost of living at the present time? It seems to me that the pensions are extremely low and are insufficient to maintain anybody under present conditions.

Mr. Fulton: I think there are only three pensions under this item.

Mr. Peters: Two.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps my hon. friend is talking about the statutory item, which technically is not before the committee.

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Fulton: I can say that I am informed that, in the discussions with treasury board, treasury board say they are prepared to authorize only the level comparable to that being paid by provinces. From time to time there are adjustments, depending on the adjustments that may be made in the level of provincial compensation.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Headquarters administration and national police services—

362. Operation and maintenance, $6,270,114.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I intend to discuss one aspect and one aspect only of the administration of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and that is the matter of the refusal of the minister or of the government —and I intend to say something about which it was in the course of my remarks—to reinforce the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland when the attorney general of that province requested this government to do so on March 11 last. I realize that anyone speaking on this subject under the rules of the committee is under certain disabilities, and I am going to make every effort to be strictly relevant to the rules. I recognize, as I said in another context last night, that the question of the meaning of this contract and the contractual obligations thereunder are before the courts. While I have my own opinion as to what that means, I recognize it would not be proper to debate that question in this place when it is being concurrently considered in another place and is therefore sub judice. I also intend to avoid any discussion of the situation in Newfoundland that made the attorney general of the province in his wisdom ask for these reinforcements, because it seems to me it would be wholly improper for us in this chamber under our federal system of government, to be debating matters which are within provincial jurisdiction. I certainly do not intend in this opening statement of mine, to enter into that at all, and I hope that other hon. members intend to follow the rules of this house in the same way.

In order to give the background of what I want to say I would like to ask members of the committee to cast their minds back to March 11 last when something not quite unprecedented but I think very unusual in the experience of most of us in this house happened. I have been in Ottawa a rather close observer of parliament since the year 1937 and the session of 1938, and it has almost invariably been the rule for the minister of justice, no matter who occupied that office, when questions were asked about the administration of justice within a province to point out that that matter was a purely provincial one and to give no further answer. I think that what the Minister of Justice did on March 11 at 2.30 in the afternoon was right. Here was a situation that did, not directly but indirectly, affect the members of this house, and the minister gave what I regard as a wholly admirable, just and fair statement of the situation with respect to the mounted police as it was up until that time. It was a statement every word of which I agree with, a statement which I consider wholly admirable and proper, and I want to emphasize that very strongly.

I will not read the whole statement into the record, but I would like to emphasize one or two points which the minister made with regard to this matter. At page 1825 of Hansard for March 11 he said:

> The fact that there is a strike, however, does not relieve the police of their responsibilities in this field—

The minister had just referred to law enforcement in the preceding paragraph; and if the minister feels I am not reading enough, I am sure he will tell me.

> —but on the contrary imposes upon them extra duties of taking precautions—

And I emphasize the words "extra duties".

> —to see that the tension and bad feelings engendered are not in fact allowed to result in general lawlessness and violence. They must—

And I emphasize that word too.

> —protect the public—and this includes those involved in the dispute—against the possibility of excesses arising out of the tense situation.
> In addition, under strike conditions there arises the further obligation of enforcing section 366 of the Criminal Code, which deals specifically with picketing and makes it unlawful for anyone engaged in picketing to use violence or threats of violence to any person, or intimidation, or to indulge in disorders. In particular, section 366 makes it unlawful to block or obstruct the highways.

The following paragraph I would also like to read:

It will thus be seen that under strike conditions the police are bound to be called upon from time to time—

Bound to be called upon from time to time.

—to perform special duties such, for instance, as to make sure roads are kept open for traffic. Under normal conditions the necessity for such action does not arise, but under strike conditions it is a specific duty they have to perform.

Then on the following page, page 1826, in the first column, the second paragraph—the minister had given some account of what happened, which I do not think is necessary for me to enter—the minister said:

As I have stated, the actions of the police in this very difficult situation have been entirely preventive.

I emphasize again "entirely preventive". This is the minister in charge of the force speaking. Perhaps I should say the minister responsible for the force.

Their actions have been limited to enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Code against assault, damage to property, acts of violence, obstruction of roads and other similar provisions.

Furthermore, the position of the police as I have described it has been outlined by responsible police officers to the union officials concerned, by whom it has been accepted. In addition the police have been at pains, in all cases where picket lines have been established or where men have gathered on the roads, to explain to them the limits imposed upon their activities by the Criminal Code.

This is the minister giving his account of the way in which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conducted themselves in central Newfoundland, and as I said before I think the minister gave an entirely accurate statement of what happened.

Then he said a little further on:

Since there have been a number of accusations made against the police which have arisen in the main out of three major incidents, I should give here a factual account of what actually took place on those occasions, because the facts demonstrate most clearly that the police have only acted when the provisions of the Criminal Code have been violated.

The only other paragraph I want to read is the concluding paragraph of the minister's statement in which he said:

I am satisfied from my investigation that there is no foundation for any suggestion that the police have permitted themselves to be used as strike-breakers. I am also satisfied that they have acted strictly within the limits of their duties in connection with the enforcement of the criminal law as these duties are multiplied under the circumstances of a strike. Indeed, it is apparent that the approximately 150 police involved have done a thoroughly creditable job in their efforts to preserve the peace over a long period under most trying and difficult circumstances.

The house met at 2.30 in the afternoon. The minister's statement was made as the first item of business, so it must have been made not later than 2.40. At the time the statement was made—and the minister may interrupt me at any time if he thinks I am misstating any of the facts—according to the information we have, arrangements had already been made to have reinforcements flown into the maritime provinces for dispatch to Newfoundland if they proved to be required. And some time in the course of that afternoon—certainly some time before 6.00 p.m.—the attorney general acting in his capacity as the officer responsible for the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order in the province, and acting under the arrangement with the federal government, asked for those reinforcements through the usual and appropriate channels. Whether the minister knew of the arrangements which had been made and whether he knew what arrangements had been made by the commissioner before he made this statement, I do not recall. The minister can speak for himself about that.

But there is every reason to believe that when the minister made that statement he must have been aware, or, at least, he should have been aware, of the fact that every possible physical provision had been made for the reinforcement of the force in central Newfoundland and that no doubt had been expressed to anyone that these reinforcements would be sent if requested. I emphasize that point because of what happened afterwards. We know that before that evening was over—and I am speaking here from recollection—it was announced on the ten o'clock news that the reinforcements were not being sent. I should not say it was announced; it was stated in the news. I do not know the exact sequence of events because I have no responsibility for doing anything but listen and try to find out what the facts were.

But we do know from what has subsequently been brought before us in this house and told us by the minister that some time before the end of that day the attorney general communicated with the minister about what had happened and, not receiving satisfaction from the minister, he then communicated with the premier of the province who in turn communicated with the Prime Minister in a telegram which I have asked the Prime Minister more than once to put on the record. I regret to say that this has never been done until now. The telegram dated March 11, 1959 is addressed to the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker and reads:

> The Attorney General of Newfoundland informs me that the Minister of Justice of Canada has cancelled temporarily the dispatch of 50 additional officers of the R.C.M.P. for duty in the present emergency in central Newfoundland. Newfoundland has a solemn contract with your government couched in terms identical with the contracts signed by Canada with seven other provinces. Under this solemn contract Canada upon request of the provincial attorney general covenants to provide additional R.C.M.P. officers to deal with emergency conditions such as presently exist in central Newfoundland. The R.C.M.P. in Newfoundland informed our attorney general that at least 50 additional men were needed at once and the commissioner in Ottawa was so informed. He agreed to supply the men and so informed us. An aircraft was chartered by the R.C.M.P. to bring the men to Newfoundland to arrive at 9.30 tonight. This disposes of the question of the availability of the men. We are astonished to learn that their departure has been stopped for a cabinet meeting in Ottawa notwithstanding the fact that the contract gives the Canadian attorney general the right to refuse additional men in an emergency only if they are not available. The commissioner has already made them available so that this is no reason. I now ask you to supply us with the additional R.C.M.P. men to enable us to maintain law and order in this emergency according to the contract that exists between us. If you cannot or will not do so will you undertake to have the government of Canada take over the task of maintaining law and order in central Newfoundland. If you will not give us the police to do it as the contract requires you to do then will you take on the responsibility yourselves of maintaining law and order in this emergency.

We were also informed that no immediate reply was sent by the Prime Minister to that message. I say that in my experience the fact that no reply was sent to that message was an almost unprecedented act by a Prime Minister of Canada, and I am not going to waste my time or the time of the committee by characterizing the way that I and practically everyone in Newfoundland felt about it. But I may say the Prime Minister's predecessor would not have treated the premier of any province in the way the premier of Newfoundland was treated in this particular situation by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had experience for over 20 years as a close associate of two prime ministers, one of whom had a very bitter controversy, as everyone knows, with one of the provincial premiers, and never once in that time did Mr. Mackenzie King fail in ordinary courtesy to that premier.

An hon. Member: Not a five cent piece.

Some hon. Members: Not another nickel.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt hon. members but I must remind the committee that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor. There are far too many speakers at the present moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say that the following morning the newspapers contained the story that these police reinforcements had not been sent to Newfoundland. One of my friends, commenting to me about this situation where there was an emergency, where action was required and where action was not taken and where we were told that the government had not been able to make up its mind, said: this is not like a government; this is like a school girl who cannot make up her mind whether or not to accept a date.

On March 12 I asked the Minister of Justice several questions in the house as reported on page 1864 of Hansard, and I want to remind the committee of those questions. I asked the hon. gentleman:

> I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Justice if, as reported in the press, he stopped the transfer to Newfoundland of additional members of the R.C.M.P. requested by the attorney general of the province under section 13 of the intergovernmental agreement; and if so, on what grounds?

And the answer was:

> Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is that the authority of the attorney general of Canada is required before any reinforcements are sent to any province, and the authority has not yet been given.

I do not want to read all this. I would just as soon merely read the minister's answers. The minister's answer to my second question was:

> The matter is still under consideration,—

People's lives were in danger, and the matter was still under consideration. The minister went on:

> —and I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman's question at this time.

I then asked whether the men had been assembled, and the Speaker suggested I was seeking to engage in a debate. I raised a point of order and was permitted to ask a further question to which I got from the minister a reply. The courteous reply I got from the minister was:

> The Minister of Justice requires no lecture from the hon. gentleman as to solemn obligations. The matter is under consideration, as I have already stated.

I then asked the minister whether he had received any communication from the attorney general of the province and he said:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have, and I was in communication with him last night.

Then I asked the Prime Minister whether he had received a communication from the premier and the reply I received from the Prime Minister I think ought to go on the record. The Prime Minister's reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, the close relationship between the government of Newfoundland and the hon. gentleman would no doubt provide an answer to his question.

It seems to me that that, too, is a sample of a the kind of arrogant attitude that we get from this government at all times when serious matters are under consideration, and I leave it to speak for itself. But what went on? From Wednesday until the following Monday this crisis went on and this government could not make up its mind; I say "this government", I say this minister could not make up his mind because it was the minister who had the duty to make up his mind. I say that it should not have taken the minister five days before he had the fortitude to come to grips with that matter.

Mr. Pearson: The courage.

Mr. Pickersgill: The fortitude to come to grips with it, and I have no admiration and I do not think the country has for this shrinking violet approach. I think the public were not impressed by the minister fiddling about with this matter and mincing up to it and then backing away from it in a most extraordinary manner.

Mr. Fraser: We had a Liberal government for 22 years and they were mincing and fiddling.

Mr. Pickersgill: And his failure to do what, his lack of fortitude to do what as a member of the government accepting his responsibility he should have done.

Mr. Morton: What page are you reading from now?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am reading, as the hon. member no doubt knows, from the Minister of Justice's remarks.

Mr. Fulton: In another debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: In another debate, and if the Minister of Justice objects to my reading from another debate I will desist. I said we had an extraordinary spectacle the other day of this minister who took five days, when men's lives were in danger, to decide whether he should or should not act, talking about someone else's courage and that was some spectacle, sir.

Mr. Morton: The record speaks for itself.

Mr. Pickersgill: I come now to what happened when after five days—

Mr. Walker: Five days?

Mr. Pickersgill: I observe the hon. member for Rosedale is now intervening in the debate. When I have concluded what I have to say I hope the hon. member for Rosedale will get up and make a defence, if he can make a defence, of the indefensible conduct of the minister. I do not think he will.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is your opinion.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my opinion, yes, and we shall soon see. And now, sir, what happened on March 16 when, finally, after five days, this government at last had reached a conclusion about this matter?

Some hon. Members: Five days.

Mr. Pickersgill: What did we have after five days. We had a very extraordinary situation arise. We had the Prime Minister come in here and make a statement about a matter that was not the responsibility of the government but was the exclusive responsibility, under an agreement, of one minister.

We dealt with the legislation only yesterday that gives to the minister this power, and I raised some questions at that time about giving that power to the minister but the power was in the minister, the obligation was on the minister, and yet what did we have? We had the Prime Minister come in here and make this statement. I read from page 1959 of Hansard of March 16. The Prime Minister began:

> I think the house would wish to know that late last week I received two telegrams from the premier of Newfoundland, the first regarding a request that 50 additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police constables be sent to that province, and the second requesting the setting up of a judicial inquiry into the troubles that have occurred there.
> While this government has no intention of infringing on matters under provincial jurisdiction, I feel impelled to say that the premier of Newfoundland has greatly aggravated the present situation in that province by intervening in a labour dispute in a way which apparently goes beyond the usual role of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not imagine that any member from the province of Quebec has said, "Hear, hear". In all the experience I have ever had this is the most flagrant intervention by any Prime Minister of Canada in the provincial affairs of any province. The Prime Minister continued:

> The result, as might have been anticipated, has been a violent reaction on the part of the workers concerned.

I do not know how the Prime Minister knew that, and I am not going to discuss that point, but here is what the Prime Minister said next, and this point I do want to underline and emphasize:

> Under the circumstances we have concluded that it would be provocative and likely to cause further outbreaks of violence to authorize the sending of further members of the R.C.M.P. at this time.

"We have concluded", not "I have concluded". This is not the Minister of Justice speaking, this is the Prime Minister usurping the functions of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, nonsense; absolute nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will deal with the nonsense.

Mr. Fulton: So will I, I am going to deal with your nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: No doubt the minister is, and if we deal with it each in our turn it will be better.

Mr. Fulton: Don't make such silly statements.

Mr. Pickersgill: "Under the circumstances we have concluded that it would be provocative". No one knows better than you, sir, a distinguished lawyer in the province of Quebec who is familiar with the constitution, that it is the exclusive responsibility of the provincial authorities to administer justice in the provinces.

Mr. Pearson: It used to be.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or it used to be, as my leader has pointed out. But here we have, because of an arrangement, an arrangement on which the province up to five days before had every reason to believe it could rely, the Prime Minister, without any knowledge of the facts, as his previous statement shows, arrogating to himself and to his colleagues the functions of an attorney general of a province. That is what happened, because there can be no question that in the province of Quebec where they have provincial police it would not be possible for the minister to do this; but because the provincial authorities in a smaller and poorer province had made an arrangement which the minister last night said he believed to be a good one, for that reason it is deprived of its rights, deprived of the necessary instrument on which it had every right to rely in order to carry out those rights. That is what the Prime Minister's statement means and it is all that it can mean.

Then he went on to reinforce that with another sentence. I do not intend to read the whole statement unless I am asked to do so, but he went on to make this extraordinary observation, no doubt out of his vast knowledge of what was going on in Newfoundland:

> I would think that the danger of disorder and violence would be very much reduced if all those concerned would agree to a cooling off period of say two weeks.

Here was a situation where a man had been killed. Here was a situation where the whole population of an area was tense and where, if ever, there should be more than adequate police in order to make sure that the situation did not deteriorate. But what do we have from the Prime Minister? No police but just this appeal for a cooling off.

Mr. Fraser: And they did.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman thinks that what happened afterward was the result of anything said by the Prime Minister I am afraid I would find it difficult to agree with him.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure you would, knowing you.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to come now to what the Minister of Justice had to say in justification. The Minister of Justice contradicted the Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice, I think, took the proper legal view. I must say, speaking personally, that I would have more respect for the legal opinion of the Minister of Justice than I would for the legal opinion of the Prime Minister, but that is a matter of personal preference and I think here the Minister of Justice was right and the Prime Minister was wrong. I want to refer to what the Minister of Justice said, dealing precisely with this point, as found at page 1960 of Hansard for March 16. He gave various reasons but I want to read first this sentence found about a quarter of the way down the second column:

> It is also clear that the ultimate responsibility for the decision rests on the Attorney General of Canada.

In my view that is right. As hon. gentlemen know, I have had some experience in government myself. I was charged with the administration of certain acts of parliament that imposed certain duties upon the minister, and those duties were imposed by parliament upon the minister, not upon the government. Where they were imposed upon the minister the view that was always taken by the prime minister under whom I served was that the minister himself must take that responsibility. That did not preclude his seeking advice from his colleagues—

Mr. Fulton: Exactly.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but I cannot imagine any circumstances in which a duty was imposed upon a minister when Mr. St. Laurent would ever have come into the house and used words such as the Prime Minister used.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am very sorry to have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, well, we are in committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate the committee giving me the opportunity to complete my remarks in a single sequence. I was just saying that I cannot imagine any circumstances in which, when a clear duty was imposed by parliament upon a minister, Mr. St. Laurent would have come into the house and made the statement which the Prime Minister made, "Under the circumstances we have concluded." I say that the forms of our institutions are just as important to preserve as the substance, and even if it were the fact, and I am not sure it was, that the Prime Minister did impose upon the Minister of Justice the statement should not have been put in that form.

Let us see what reasons the Minister of Justice gave for taking the position he took on March 16 in relation to what he said as to the situation on March 11, the day on which the request was made. Here is what the minister said, as found at page 1960 of Hansard:

> Following the clash that took place on the highway outside the town of Badger on Tuesday evening, March 10, the situation apparently deteriorated further and Superintendent Parsons advised the commissioner that in view of the movement of 100 further strikers into the area, he felt that the call for reinforcements should be renewed.
> On receipt of this information from the commissioner on Wednesday morning, I approved—

I find I have to amend something about which I spoke from recollection earlier. When the minister made the statement on Wednesday afternoon, March 11, he had already approved—> —his taking the steps necessary to gather the men in the maritimes who had been alerted, and to have air transportation arranged. I told him, however, that while these steps were to be taken as a precaution I was not giving authority for the plane to take off from Moncton, and that this was not to take place until I had an opportunity to consider the situation further and to consult with my colleagues with regard to it.

That is the situation, and that consultation, as I have said several times before, took five days.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend should read the next sentence which disposes entirely of the inaccurate statement he has just made and proves that what he said was incorrect.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very glad to do so. I told the minister at the beginning that I would be very glad to read any additional part and I will be very glad to do so. The minister does not need to be provocative about it. I will be glad to do it any time he asks.

> The commissioner thereupon informed me—

Mr. Fulton: No, the next sentence, which shows that it did not take five days but that a decision was taken that afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg the minister's pardon. I certainly was not deliberately trying to omit it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: If any hon. gentleman wishes to make the suggestion that I was he can make it.

> These consultations were held on Wednesday afternoon, and it was decided that a state of readiness should be maintained but that reinforcements should not be dispatched at that time.

That was no decision. That was postponement of a decision, a postponement that endured, as I have already said, for five days. I want to come now to the minister's reasons for refusing ultimately, five days later, to send these reinforcements. Here is what he said as found on page 1961:

> I do not accept, and the government of Canada cannot accept, that an issue of this importance—whether reinforcements should be sent under the circumstances such as existed here—can be decided on the basis of a mere mathematical calculation as to whether men are physically available.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, so far I have refrained from interrupting the hon. member on a point of order, the point of order having to do with the sub judice rule, because the hon. gentleman has been reciting the facts and giving his opinion about them which he is entitled to do and to which I am entitled to reply, and to which I shall, but I think the hon. gentleman is now coming inescapably to the issue that is before the courts, the issue of whether it was right or wrong to refuse to send these reinforcements.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whether there was a contractual right.

Mr. Fulton: Discussion of that issue inescapably involves discussion of the issue that is before the courts. If the hon. gentleman is going to discuss the reasons which I gave at the time I shall have to defend them and we will inevitably drift into an improper debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: When I reached the reference to "mere mathematical calculation" I realized at that point that what the minister is saying is quite right, but I think we must be very clear about what is before the court and that is whether or not the contract was broken. I am not going to attempt to argue that at all. The minister is perfectly right that we should not debate that in the house. I was inadvertently embarking on that and I apologize to the minister for doing so. But there is another point, that even had there not been a contract it seems to me that there was an obligation, and again I am not going to discuss the nature of that obligation. However, the minister did make one comment which I do not think could be at issue in the case, although I will refrain from discussing it if the minister thinks it is.

I should like to quote the last two full paragraphs in the next column. This has to do with the situation there but it does not seem to me that this is at issue in this context, although it is at issue in another argument I did want to pursue. My argument is as to whether or not there was an invasion of provincial rights. I quote:

> As I appreciate the situation, therefore, the request made by the government of Newfoundland for Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements takes on the character not of a request to assist in the normal function and duty of the province in maintaining law and order, but of a request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province.

Now about that, I should like to contrast that with what the minister said on March 11, as recorded on page 1826 of Hansard for that date:

> As I have stated, the actions of the police in this very difficult situation have been entirely preventive. Their actions have been limited to enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Code against assault, damage to property, acts of violence, obstruction of roads and other similar provisions.

Now if that was true at 2.40 in the afternoon concerning what the mounted police were doing, what happened to change what they were being called upon to do, according to the minister, on March 16? What happened between three o'clock in the afternoon and six to change the whole obligation in this matter? This is what it is difficult for any objective observer to understand. Then, returning to the minister's statement on March 16, we find this:

> We have also had to bear in mind the possibility that under these circumstances to send additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police into Newfoundland, instead of ensuring that the situation is kept under control, might act only as provocation to further incidents of violence and defiance, so there is no certainty that the sending of them would not do more to inflame the situation than to control it.

Now I say that that statement by the Minister of Justice of this country is an arrogation to himself of the functions of another person, serving in another government, who had the responsibility to the electorate for this situation. It was the inescapable responsibility under our constitution of the attorney general of Newfoundland to maintain law and order in the province. It was not the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to arrogate that function to himself. Indeed, I think it was very bad taste—perhaps I would not go farther than that—for him to express any view about it. If he had merely expressed a view about it, that would have been one thing, but to take action to prevent the duly constituted authority who is responsible under our constitution to the legislature and through the legislature to the people—to say, my knowledge is so much greater; I am so superior, and I know so much more that I am going to substitute myself for those who were elected by the people of the province to perform this function—it seems to me is the greatest act of centralization that we have ever seen attempted by a federal government in the whole history of Canada.

That is my submission. I am not going to argue as to whether or not the contract obligated the government. I say that the decision taken by the government not to act, to refrain from providing these reinforcements, was an intrusion into the constitutional concerns of the provincial authorities and that it should be censured for this.

Mr. Stinson: Tell us about this phony loggers' union.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman, who intervenes only rarely in our debates, is suggesting that I should deal with something that it would be quite out of order to discuss on the estimates of the Minister of Justice. I do not intend to break the rules of the house, even if the hon. member wishes to do so. I am going to continue to discuss the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the minister's administration of them. I am going to discuss only that matter and nothing else.

I maintain that whatever the contractual obligation may have been there was grave violence done to the constitution by the action taken by the minister. I say there was something even worse, there was a very grave affront to the unity of the country. In order to illustrate that point I should like to read, and to make my own—with this I intend to conclude—the observations made about this incident on March 18 in the News of St. John's. I should like to say, in referring to this editorial, that I am referring to an editorial in a newspaper that consistently supported hon. gentlemen opposite and has not supported us until very recently. The editorial is entitled, "The Inadequacies of Mr. Diefenbaker". It was provoked by and relates to this situation and I feel it accurately reflects the views of most of the hon. gentleman's former friends in the province of Newfoundland. This is what it says:

> Because of a feeling that John Diefenbaker was a towering figure in Canadian politics, we protested vigorously a few years ago the efforts of the Liberals to gerrymander him out of his seat in the House of Commons.
>
> In 1956, we said here that he was the obvious choice to succeed George Drew as leader of the Conservative party.
> In 1957 and 1958, we expressed the hope that he would lead the Conservatives to victory in Canada. We are not alone today in thinking that John Diefenbaker has failed to fulfil his earlier promise.
>
> That thought has been growing in dimensions and expression during the past year. Yet nothing could more clearly reveal the inadequacies of Mr. Diefenbaker than his extraordinary contradiction of orders given by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in response to the request for reinforcements for central Newfoundland.
> The consequence was revealed on Monday when a great career police officer, a man respected far beyond the borders of Canada for wisdom, ability and integrity, was compelled by the unaccountable intervention of the Prime Minister to resign his command.

Then there is a paragraph referring to the commissioner which is not strictly relevant. Although I should like to read it, I shall not do so out of consideration for the committee. The editorial continues:

> In this intervention, Mr. Diefenbaker and his Minister of Justice did more than question the judgment and authority of Commissioner Nicholson. With complete disregard for the consequences, they denied necessary reinforcements for the tired men of the R.C.M.P. and Newfoundland constabulary in central Newfoundland, exposed them to danger, and compelled the provincial government to undermine the security of St. John's in order to send more provincial police to Grand Falls.
> This was done without a proper inquiry into the situation in Newfoundland.

I think that is as far as I should read because the rest of it deals with questions that are not directly relevant. I want to end up my remarks by saying that it seems to me that the minister was grossly derelict in his duty and deserving of the censure of parliament for presuming to intervene in a matter that was entirely within provincial jurisdiction. Having waited until the last moment, having allowed the authorities in the province to have every reason to believe they could rely upon these reinforcements, whatever the contractual situation may have been, it was a very grave affront indeed to all the people of the province to take the action that was taken in this matter. I may say in concluding what I said on the budget, that I do not believe the people of this country will ever forget that this government in this crisis put themselves on the side of the lawbreaker rather than on the side of law and order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, a good deal of what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said, he has said with more heat than with light. I shall not attempt to answer him in kind. I shall just recite the facts because the facts give the answer to my hon. friend's exuberance as well as to all the baseless charges that he has laid. The facts, as a matter of fact, are so well known that I am surprised that the hon. gentleman would have thought that he could create in the minds of this committee—and no doubt he thought that if he could create it here, he could create it in the minds of others outside in the country—the impression that the facts are other than they are and the impression that there was something to be characterized by the words that he used such as "unwarranted invasions of provincial rights", "deserving of the censure of the house" and so on in what he says that we have done. Let us look at the facts. I think it will be more effective if I analyse the facts calmly than if I attempt to generate the same amount of heat as that generated by the hon. gentleman.

First of all, he suggests that there is something inconsistent and something somehow shameful in the fact that on Wednesday, March 11, I made a statement in which I praised the conduct of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in maintaining law and order on the one hand whereas, on March 16, I explained my reasons for refusing to send additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the province of Newfoundland. There is nothing inconsistent between those two positions. Certainly the responsibility of the men who were in Newfoundland under contract was to remain there and carry out the lawful orders that they received. That they did to the best of their ability under, as I have said on numerous occasions, extremely difficult circumstances. I had and still have nothing but admiration for the way in which they discharged those obligations. But the sending of reinforcements is a very different situation or a very different thing altogether. It is a very different thing to say that men there under a contract with responsibilities must remain there and carry out that contract and discharge those responsibilities to the best of their ability, as they did—that is very different from the position raised when we received a request to send fifty extra reinforcements in to take care of a situation which had been created, as the Prime Minister said, in large part by the extraordinary actions of the premier of that province.

It was with respect to the new situation which would be created by the sending in of fifty further reinforcements that I was called upon to exercise my judgment and to make my decision, and I did it. I was not called upon to exercise any judgment or to make any decision with regard to the men who were already there and I scrupulously refrained from doing so. That is the difference in the situation and that disposes of the suggestion of my hon. friend that I was somehow inconsistent in refusing to send in reinforcements whereas I had previously praised the way in which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police there had conducted themselves. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I think I should point out this fact, although I want to be careful now, as I have been throughout, not to interfere or to suggest interference with provincial responsibility. I should point out that the fact is that there were no further outbreaks of violence after March 10; and notwithstanding our refusal to send Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements there have been no further outbreaks of violence but in fact relative calm has returned to Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: No, not at this point, if my hon. friend does not mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister's statement is not correct.

Mr. Fulton: This is particularly important in the light of the fact that the suggestion has been made on some occasions and was repeated in the editorial which my hon. friend last read that we should have sent these reinforcements because they were necessary to preserve the lives and the safety of the police already there.

I want to make this matter clear—and I have not answered this point before—that in the discussion with the former commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as to the advisability and the necessity of sending reinforcements, I questioned him most carefully as to whether, in his view, these reinforcements were necessary to protect the lives and safety of the men already there and whether he would say to me that without these reinforcements he feared that the lives and safety of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland would be placed in danger. He was candid and straightforward about it and he said, that he did not put the question of reinforcements on that basis. He put it on the basis that the superintendent there had asked for reinforcements and in his view, he said, because of the uncertainty of being able to retain control of the situation, under those circumstances and under all the circumstances—including the fact that in his view the contract was clear—such reinforcements should be sent. I make that remark because I think it is important in the context that has been suggested in the editorial read by my hon. friend. I take it that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate adopted this editorial as his own and adopted the views expressed there as his own. Otherwise he would not have read it.

I want to point out also what the Prime Minister said on March 16, as reported at page 1959 of Hansard:

> We feel that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has performed its duty with fairness and efficiency. The situation in Newfoundland will be kept constantly under review and if the mounted police, in the proper discharge of their duties are subject to or encounter intimidation or threats by lawbreakers reconsideration will be given immediately to this decision.

That is the decision not to send reinforcements. The fact of the matter is, that as events proved the mounted police then in Newfoundland, with the assistance of the extra men sent in from the Newfoundland constabulary, were able not only to maintain the situation but to restore law and order and, as I have said, relative calm now exists in that province.

I now want to deal for a moment with the five day issue. My hon. friend attempted to make a point that here we were with conditions of grave import, a request for reinforcements and that we shilly-shallied around for five days while we were trying to make up our minds what to do. Also coupled with that suggestion he made the extraordinary and unfounded suggestion that the Prime Minister had arrogated to himself a responsibility which was not his and had over-ridden what was the proper constitutional position.

Mr. Chairman, the request for reinforcements on this occasion was received on the early morning of March 11. Early that morning the commissioner informed me that the renewed request had been received. It is important to remember that this was a renewed request. It was not the first time a request for reinforcements had been made and had not been met. It was a renewed request. The commissioner informed me of this request in the early morning and also informed me, as I have stated to the house in my statement appearing at pages 1959 to 1962 of Hansard, of the steps that he had taken to gather men in the maritime provinces and to have air transportation available to transport them to Newfoundland. Here is what I said about it at the time:

> On receipt of this information from the commissioner on Wednesday morning, I approved his taking the steps necessary to gather the men in the maritimes who had been alerted, and to have air transportation arranged.

This, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, is but a prudent step to take because we knew that there was a tense situation in Newfoundland, and it was to have reinforcements standing by. But it was my view immediately—and this was subsequently confirmed—that it was not incumbent upon us and it would not be wise immediately to send reinforcements. I therefore told the commissioner this, as I then in my statement pointed out in my statement:

I told him, however, that while these steps were to be taken as a precaution I was not giving authority for the plane to take off from Moncton, and that this was not to take place until I had an opportunity to consider the situation further and to consult with my colleagues with regard to it.

I would like to pause there to say that I think this discussion we are now having, as well as what I said on former occasions, should it seems to me lay at rest inferences which have been raised from time to time, and raised again in the editorial read by my hon. friend, that the Prime Minister intervened and countermanded an order of the commissioner. The decision not to send the plane was a decision of mine, and the suggestion put forward that it was made by someone else is a fabrication and utter nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why did the Prime Minister say "we"?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend will contain himself I will give him the answer. I said:

—this was not to take place—

That is the departure of the reinforcements.

—until I had an opportunity to consider the situation further and to consult with my colleagues with regard to it.

Does my hon. friend suggest it was a breach of constitutional propriety for me to consult with my colleagues on an issue of this importance? Does he—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister asks me a question and I will answer it. I said the exact contrary. I said that the minister had a perfect right to consult his colleagues, and I think he has a perfect right to consult anyone else, as any minister has to consult anyone in whom he can repose confidence. But what I said was that it was the minister's decision and not the cabinet's decision, and therefore it was quite wrong for the Prime Minister to say "we".

Mr. Fulton: I think the seriousness of the hon. gentleman's criticism is showing now to be that he quarrels with the Prime Minister's use of an adjective—

Mr. Pickersgill: Pronoun.

Mr. Fulton: Pronoun—in a matter which had been before the cabinet on which the Minister of Justice had sought the collective opinion of his colleagues, as he was entitled to do, and as in a matter of this importance he was bound to do. I sought the opportunity of discussing it with my colleagues and then came to a decision which I went on to point out later was clearly my decision. There is no question of that. Then because the Prime Minister said that "we" have concluded, after a discussion of that nature in cabinet, my hon. friend is trying to make something of the use of the word "we". Mr. Chairman, what a farce! What an indication of the weight of the case that the hon. gentleman tries to make because there is the use of a word which reflects the fact that there was mutual consultation. My hon. friend says the Prime Minister has subverted the constitution. What a farce, Mr. Chairman, and I cannot characterize it in any other way.

In the statement to which I am referring I went on to say:

These consultations were held on Wednesday afternoon, and it was decided that a state of readiness should be maintained but that reinforcements should not be dispatched at that time.

I want to skip from here for a moment to the—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister say, if that decision was reached on that day, why parliament was not told the following day when I asked the question?

Mr. Fulton: You were told.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was told the matter was still under consideration, and it went on in that way for five days.

Mr. Fulton: A statement was made on March 16, and I have just read it.

These consultations were held on Wednesday afternoon, and it was decided that a state of readiness should be maintained but that reinforcements should not be dispatched at that time.

There is no inconsistency between that and what the house was told on March 12. In a later passage of the statement to which I am referring, of March 16, in discussing the decision not to send reinforcements I said:

Afer weighing all these factors, and discussing them with my colleagues, I have come to the conclusion that the arguments against sending more men at this time outweigh the arguments in favour—

It is perfectly clear from that that the decision was mine and that I accepted responsibility for it. At another point in the statement which the hon. gentleman has already read I said that it was clear that before the government of Canada is required to dispatch reinforcements as requested the Attorney General of Canada must form the opinion that having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force it is possible to send reinforcements. I said it is also clear that the ultimate responsibility for the decision rests on the Attorney General of Canada. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that anything could make it clearer than that, and it could not be clearer except to those who refuse to understand that the decision was that of the Minister of Justice arrived at after consultation with his colleagues.

As to this five-day mirage which the hon. gentleman is attempting to raise, he will recall, and certainly the committee will recall, and I recall it very vividly, exactly what took place, which I think completely disposes of any suggestion of dithering or uncertainty on the part of the government. In my statement of March 16 I stated that the decision not to send reinforcements at that time was reached on the Wednesday afternoon and was immediately communicated to the then commissioner by me. At page 1960 of Hansard I went on to say:

> The commissioner thereupon informed me that he could not agree with the decision—

There was no thought in the then commissioner's mind that there was any uncertainty in the mind of the government, because he informed me that he could not agree with the decision.

> —in view of his understanding of the effect of the contract, and that he would have to resign.

My hon. friend will appreciate, I think, Mr. Chairman, that this was an extremely serious and unwelcome piece of news, and I would have thought that if there was any suggestion of dithering or uncertainty on the part of myself—and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate used some rather interesting adjectives with regard to myself—

Mr. Pickersgill: I only used the minister's own.

Mr. Fulton: Entirely. He used adjectives which I had applied under quite different circumstances. What I am saying, Mr. Chairman, is that it is clear that there was no dithering, no uncertainty, no refusal to take responsibility for the situation, but quite the opposite; that in circumstances of great difficulty and faced with the resignation of a commissioner for whom I had a great personal admiration, as well as up to that time official confidence, I was able to maintain the decision and did in fact maintain the decision notwithstanding that it was fraught with these very serious consequences which I think I need not elaborate. That decision of the commissioner was communicated to me immediately. There was no five-day wait. The only reason the decision to resign was not announced in the house until March 16 was because it was my hope that on the basis of further discussion, as I indicated clearly in the statement I made at the time, and suggestions to the commissioner that he might reconsider the position and would withdraw his resignation. However, he finally indicated to me that he was unprepared to do so, and as soon as it became obvious that his decision was final the situation was announced to the House of Commons without further delay. This, I think, completely disposes of the fabrication or mirage which the hon. gentleman has tried to raise that there was a five-day period during which the government could not make up its mind.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I think that really disposes of any substance there may have been in the criticisms advanced by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman might have conducted himself differently, I do not know. He might have felt that faced with a matter as grave and unfortunate as the resignation of a commissioner he should accept it at once and not make any effort to have the commissioner reconsider it. I do not believe that is the proper way to act. I felt it was proper to make every effort to see if on proper grounds the decision might be reconsidered. I felt it was in the interests of the country as well as the officer whose services we are discussing that those efforts should be made. If that is to be taken as an accusation of indecision or improper conduct, I cannot change my hon. friend's mind, but that is the reason why there was a period of five days between the government's decision made then and the time of its announcement to the house.

So far as the accusation of interference with provincial sovereignty is concerned, it is, I think, too far-fetched to require a reply in detail. I will dispose of this merely by further reference to the fact that with respect to the R.C.M. Police who were there under contract there was not the slightest effort to interfere with the orders given to them or the manner in which they discharged their responsibility. It was not until a request was made involving a decision and a responsibility by this government that we accepted that responsibility and made that decision and it is to me inconceivable that it should be suggested by any hon. member, particularly by an hon. member who has had past experience of government administration, that the exercise by this government of the responsibility it was bound to take with respect to whether it should take action at this level—

Mr. Pickersgill: A point of order. I was scrupulous to refrain from discussing this question of the contractual obligation, and I think the minister should do the same.

Mr. Fulton: I am not dealing with the question of contractual obligation. I am dealing with the accusation made by the hon. member that in refusing to send reinforcements, and giving our reasons for not doing so, we were infringing provincial sovereignty, and it is, as I say, inconceivable to me that any hon. gentleman who has had previous experience in government should suggest that a government, in taking a decision it is bound to take in the exercise of its responsibility, is guilty of invading the sovereignty of another government. Yet that is the charge which the hon. gentleman has made.

We gave our reasons on an earlier occasion for the refusal to send reinforcements. I do not think that any argument which the hon. gentleman has advanced here today contains anything which would cause a reasonable person to change the view to which we then came. It is, however, a fact that in discussing the basic reasons why we reached that decision both the hon. gentleman and I must have regard to the fact that this involves an issue which is now before the court—an issue, I would point out, which was placed before the court by the premier of Newfoundland and not by us—the question of whether our interpretation of the contract was right or not. Since I cannot discuss further the reasons why I came to our decision without discussing the contract, I do not think I should go any further at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are one or two comments I should like to make on what the minister said. The hon. gentleman stated—and I asked him then if he would permit a question, but he declined—that the fact was that there were no further disorders after March 10. That statement is incorrect. On the day that the body of this unfortunate policeman was taken to the train there was, as the minister knows, a very unfortunate incident in which the lives of certain people were, in fact, in danger and in which certain property was destroyed or at least seriously damaged. So that statement of the minister's is not correct and it is only by good fortune which, I am sure, the minister would not claim to have had the prescience to have foreseen, that that incident was not very much more serious than it was. Not only that, it is a fact that, because of the minister's refusal to send these reinforcements, the city of St. John's was practically denuded of its police. I suggest that if this had happened in Ontario and if the government of Ontario, because of the action of the minister, had had to denude the city of Toronto of police in order to deal with a situation in northern Ontario a different view of this matter would be taken by some of the hon. members from Toronto. That sufficiently disposes of the minister's point that reinforcements were not needed.

The minister said that this was not the first request for reinforcements, but that it was a renewal of a request. I have never heard of this before. It is something entirely new, and I think perhaps that later on the minister might document that—

Mr. Fulton: I can do that right now. I thought the hon. gentleman would have read the material on this matter, but I find he has not. I placed the full facts on record in Hansard on March 16—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, since I have the floor, the minister would be good enough to let me go on. There is no evidence on the record that I have been able to discover, but the minister, in his own time, can correct me if he wishes. There is no evidence that I can discover of any previous request having been made by the attorney general of Newfoundland for actual reinforcements in addition to any that might have been sent. If the minister can show me that I am wrong, I shall be glad to admit that I am mistaken after I have completed what I want to say now.

But the minister said this matter was all decided on March 11. When I asked him on March 12—but I will read the question:

> Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the language of section 13 which says that Canada shall, at the request of the attorney general of the province addressed to the commissioner increase the strength of the division as requested if, in the opinion of the attorney general of Canada, having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force such increase is possible, would the minister say whether it is because the members of the force were not available that this request was not complied with.

To which the minister replied:

> The matter is still under consideration, and I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman's question at this time.

Now the minister tells us it was decided the day before. But it seems that parliament was not entitled to be told. We were told that this matter was still under consideration. We were told nothing until Monday, although parliament sat the following day and questions were raised, and if this is not obvious evidence of dithering I do not understand the meaning of the word, and I ask if it was not in the minister's own phrase, fiddling about with the matter; mincing up to it and then backing away from it. That is what happened, and that is the impression the public had. The minister says the reason for this dithering was that he was trying to persuade the commissioner to withdraw his resignation. The minister did not need to have had this resignation. If the minister had done his plain duty there would have been no resignation for the commissioner.

Now the minister said something about the decision of the government. There was no decision for the government to make in this matter. There was a decision for the Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Which he made.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the minister said just now, if he will look at his Hansard—he referred to a decision of the government.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think so.

Mr. Pickersgill: The record will show it. I hope he leaves it there so that it does show it.

Mr. Fulton: I have made it perfectly clear that the decision was mine.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister will find, when he reads the record, that he frequently referred to a decision of the government.

Mr. Fulton: I have said, and I repeat, that the decision was mine and that I accept the responsibility for it and have never, in spite of the urgings of the hon. gentleman, tried to avoid that responsibility. With regard to this suggestion that there has never been a request for reinforcements earlier than the Badger incident, the hon. gentleman has shown that he is so blinded by the heat of his own passion as not to have appreciated what the record shows, because this has been on the record since March 16, that there were two occasions when I received a request for reinforcements. If the hon. gentleman can contain his passion and read the record accurately as it appears at page 1959, he will see that I said on March 16—it is too bad the hon. gentleman has not attempted to establish all the facts, because this apparently comes as news to him. I said the following:

> The facts leading up to this resignation can be summarized as follows. On Sunday, March 8, I received a wire from the attorney general of Newfoundland asking for 50 additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements and citing the terms of the contract.
> As a result of these consultations, however, it was agreed that the situation might be kept under control by the sending of some 25 members of the Newfoundland constabulary from the city of St. John's into the strike area. This was done, and a further 20 Royal Canadian Mounted Police from other points in the divisional area were also brought into the strike area and, on this basis, it was reported that control of the situation might be maintained. However, arrangements were made by the commissioner, with my approval, to alert the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the other maritime provinces so that if the situation should require it and authority should be forthcoming, reinforcements could be sent in from the outside with a minimum of delay. This information was accordingly conveyed by the commissioner to Superintendent Parsons and by him to the attorney general of Newfoundland.
> Following the clash—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister does not need to read any more.

Mr. Fulton: I continue:

> —that took place on the highway outside the town of Badger on Tuesday evening, March 10, the situation apparently deteriorated further and Superintendent Parsons advised the commissioner that in view of the movement of 100 further strikers into the area he felt that the call for reinforcements should be renewed.

I received further communication accordingly requesting me to authorize the sending of 50 further R.C.M. Police. I put that on the record, Mr. Chairman, to make it clear that this was not the first occasion on which we had been asked to send reinforcements, and that our earlier consultations had also had the effect of making it clear to the province of Newfoundland that we were, to say the least, most reluctant to authorize the sending of reinforcements to this area, notwithstanding the fact we realized that the men there must be left free to carry out their responsibilities under the contract.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, this is the most extraordinary casuistry that I have ever listened to in my life. This was all the same request.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was so palpably the same request, and what is more the attorney general was obviously satisfied with the interim arrangements that were made. It seems to me that all it does is to reinforce and reinforce very strongly my argument in the matter. In the first place the government of Newfoundland, right up until the minister's statement on March 11 of this year, had every reason to believe that if an emergency arose these men would be available, and the fact that it went back to as early as the minister has pointed out in the record, and that the men were assembled. What were they assembled for? Were they assembled for the purpose of being sent once disorders were all over and there was complete peace there? Or were they assembled to be sent in case a greater emergency arose? It seems to me that if ever anyone made his case weaker the minister has done it by his own intervention.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, as my colleague from Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out, in the course of discharging their duties in connection with the unfortunate labour troubles in Newfoundland last March, serious accusations were made against the R.C.M. Police which called into question their integrity. It is regrettable that to date no positive action has been taken to clear their good name. On the contrary, the action of the minister himself in his failure to send reinforcements when requested, the words he used as he voiced the appraisal of the situation in Newfoundland, and the action of this government in refusing to set up a complete inquiry into this matter have tended rather to lend credence to these matters.

When the premier of Newfoundland asked for an inquiry he cited the protection of the good name of the R.C.M.P. as one of his reasons. For the benefit of hon. members I should like to place that telegram on record. It is dated March 13, 1959, and addressed to the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, Prime Minister of Canada. I quote:

> In the interests of the peace, order and good government of Canada and to protect the good name of the R.C.M.P. the government of Newfoundland invites the government of Canada to set up at once a public inquiry under a superior court judge from outside Newfoundland to investigate the acts of lawlessness and violence which have taken place in central Newfoundland since the strike of the loggers began on December 31, for the purpose of ascertaining the facts and assessing the responsibility. The government of Newfoundland would extend every facility and assistance to such a commission in its inquiry.
> J. R. Smallwood

Hon. members will recall that in this very house questions were asked and statements were made which implied that the R.C.M.P. in Newfoundland were being used for other than their normal duties. In addition, articles appeared in newspapers all across Canada which carried the same implications. On March 16 the minister himself made a long statement in the house in which he reported the regrettable resignation of Commissioner Nicholson and in the course of that statement he used the following words in appraising the situation. I am quoting now from page 1961 of Hansard. This is what the minister said:

> As I appreciate the situation, therefore, the request made by the government of Newfoundland for Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements takes on the character not of a request to assist in the normal function and duty of the province in maintaining law and order, but of a request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province.

The minister was not speaking off the cuff when he spoke those words; he was reading a carefully prepared statement and we must assume that he had given weight to every word that he was uttering. The question must arise in anyone's mind that if the request was not a request to assist in the normal function and duties of the province in maintaining law and order, what else could it be?

Mr. Fulton: Just what I said it was.

Mr. Pickersgill: You said it was not.

Mr. Fulton: It was just what I said it was in the words that have been read.

Mr. Carter: All right.

Mr. Pickersgill: March 11 or March 16.

Mr. Fulton: March 16 was the only occasion on which we discussed the request from Newfoundland. If my friend will read the record he will see that.

Mr. Carter: If the minister wants to stand by the explanation in the last part of the statement in which he said:

> A request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province.

The minister is a lawyer, and when he spoke those words, surely he must have known what he was talking about. He must have seen the legislation, which was the only way in which the union to which he referred could be extinguished. If the minister did see the legislation he must know as a lawyer that its purpose was not to extinguish the union. In fact, it could not extinguish the union. All the legislation did was to free the company from being compelled to bargain with one union only. The effect of the previous certification was that the A.N.D. Company could bargain with the I.W.A. and nobody else, and all that the legislation did was to decertify the I.W.A. so that the company was free to bargain with any other union it wished. The legislation did not extinguish the union and the proof of that is that the I.W.A. is still in Newfoundland, still carrying on its functions, still maintaining its members and still giving out reports from time to time.

So the purpose could not have been to extinguish the union, and if it was not to extinguish the union what else could it be? Surely these words must raise a further question as to what the R.C.M.P. were doing in Newfoundland at that time. If the reinforcements were going to engage in something which was outside of the maintenance of law and order, surely the implication was that that was being done by the forces already on duty there. In another part of the statement on page 1960 of Hansard the minister went on to say:

> Following the clash that took place on the highway outside the town of Badger on Tuesday evening, March 10, the situation apparently deteriorated further and Superintendent Parsons advised the commissioner that in view of the movement of 100 further strikers into the area, he felt that the call for reinforcements should be renewed.

The minister's refusal to send these reinforcements certainly must have indicated a lack of confidence in the judgment of the officer commanding the Newfoundland detachment who was on the spot and knew exactly what the situation was. That too is a further reflection on the R.C.M.P. But to come back to the earlier statement of the minister that it was not a request to assist in the normal function and duty of the province in maintaining order, that in itself must mean that the minister considers that the necessity to maintain law and order should not be the controlling factor in his decision but the cause of the situation, the character of the request, and therefore he set himself up as the judge of the situation and came to the conclusion that whatever was happening in Newfoundland was the fault of the provincial government in trying to extinguish a union and, that being the case, it did not matter whether or not law and order were in need of being upheld. There was no obligation to uphold law and order or to protect life and property if the situation was caused by something which did not meet with the approval of the Minister of Justice.

On March 19 my colleague, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, asked the minister a question, and I quote now from page 2050 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask the minister whether in view of his professed concern for the integrity of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it is his intention to take action against those persons who have made defamatory and libellous statements about the conduct of the police in Newfoundland.

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I shall always of course be concerned about anyone who has made defamatory and libellous statements against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but the hon. gentleman has not identified the statements to which he refers and I doubt if it would be proper for him to do so on the orders of the day.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate then said:

I should be pleased to furnish the hon. gentleman with the press reports, Mr. Speaker.

Following that exchange in the house my colleague addressed a letter to the Minister of Justice dated March 24, 1959, as follows:

Dear Mr. Fulton:

You will recall that on Thursday last (March 19) I asked you in the House of Commons whether in view of your professed concern for the integrity of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it was your intention to take action against those persons who had made defamatory and libellous statements about the conduct of the police in Newfoundland and that you replied "I shall always of course be concerned about anyone who has made defamatory and libellous statements against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but the hon. gentleman has not identified the statements to which he refers and I doubt if it would be proper for him to do so on the orders of the day."

I then indicated that I would furnish you with press reports containing the kind of allegations which I had in mind. Out of the many reports which have appeared in various newspapers, I cite only two, both from the Toronto Star.

The Toronto Star of March 11, 1959, contained an item which reads as follows:

"Clash Provoked by Police I.W.A. Head Says
Special to the Star

Grand Falls, Nfld., March 11—

H. Landon Ladd, president of the striking I.W.A. loggers, has called for a full inquiry by a federally appointed royal commission into yesterday's clash between striking loggers and the R.C.M.P. at Badger.

Calling the incident 'the worst demonstration of police brutality in Canadian history,' he said he based this opinion on interviews he had with dozens of people at the scene, including many who were impartial.

'They all tell exactly the same story,' he said. 'The police went at perfectly peaceful strikers with their clubs swinging.'

The incident was 'a disgraceful affair,' he said, but it clarified a statement made during the week end by attorney general Curtis.

At that time, when all was peaceful on the picket lines at Badger and elsewhere, from out of the blue came a statement from the attorney general passionately pleading with the pickets not to become involved in disorder and violence.

This came at a time when there was no disorder or violence.

This was followed yesterday by the arrival of a trainload of the Newfoundland constabulary, together with large reinforcements of R.C.M.P. These forces were imported into a peaceful central Newfoundland.

He said police in groups of four patrolled 'the peaceful town' of Badger throughout the day.

'They displayed their clubs in an obviously provocative manner in a demonstration of police power,' he went on.

What followed, later in the day, must be laid squarely with the R.C.M.P. and the Newfoundland constabulary, or those under whose orders they were acting.

Eyewitness accounts are in agreement. The men had been on the road. The police ordered them off and they moved to each side. The police then marched between them in two lines, turned and bore down on the men with their clubs swinging in a brutal fashion.

Mr. Ladd said the true story of the incident would shock the people of Newfoundland and the rest of Canada.

'Our union demands that not a stone be left unturned to establish the facts,' he went on.

Nothing less than a royal commission conducting a full inquiry and appointed by the federal government will assure the public of the facts to which they are entitled.

It is most regrettable that a number of persons suffered injuries, but the burden of this must rest with those who provoked the horrible display."

The Toronto Star of March 12, 1959, contained an item which reads as follows:

"Charges R.C.M.P. Cloak for Firm to Rush Scabs

Leaders of the two striking Newfoundland logger locals claimed today that R.C.M.P. constables were 'trying to incite a riot' when they charged a group of strikers in Badger Tuesday.

George Stoodley, Grand Falls, and Lawrence Ball, Deer Lake, Nfld., arrived in Toronto to start a countrywide tour to gain support for the striking I.W.A. international woodworkers of America.

Mr. Stoodley charged that the R.C.M.P. action was a cloak for Anglo-Newfoundland Development's failure to get loggers into bush camps."

It would appear to me that these statements are completely at variance with the detailed account you gave of the same incident in the House of Commons on March 11, and with the Prime Minister's statement on March 16 that the government felt that the R.C.M.P. "has performed its duty with fairness and efficiency"; and that to ignore them would not be compatible with the "essential responsibility" to maintain the "full integrity" of the force.

Yours sincerely,

J. W. Pickersgill.

The minister's reply to this letter is dated March 25, 1959 and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Pickersgill,

I acknowledge with thanks receipt of your letter of March 24 in which you reproduce two reports appearing in the Toronto Star concerning the conduct of the R.C.M. Police in Newfoundland, and refer to our exchange in the house in this connection on March 19.

I have already, as you yourself point out, dealt with the incident which the Star purports to describe. My report to the house on March 11 set out the true facts then in my possesion. In concluding that statement, I pointed out that: " . . . it is apparent that the . . . police . . . have done a thoroughly creditable job . . . under most trying and difficult circumstances."

You yourself also referred to the Prime Minister's statement on March 16 in which he said that the R.C.M. Police "has performed its duty with fairness and efficiency".

These official statements, outlining the facts and the government's position, one made at the same time as and the other within five days of, the newspaper reports in question had appeared, seem to me to be both a complete defence of the conduct of the police and a refutation of the allegations contained in the newspaper reports.

It is also my view that the allegations have been dealt with the proper forum, namely by government statement to parliament in the House of Commons, and I cannot therefore accept your suggestion that we are ignoring our responsibility to maintain the full integrity of the force.

Yours sincerely,

E. D. Fulton

The minister's reply can be summed up, Mr. Chairman, as saying the Prime Minister and I have both said these statements are not true and, therefore, they are not true. But where is the evidence to support this statement? In view of the fact that not only the premier of Newfoundland but also the Canadian Labour Congress called for an investigation, and in view of the minister's own words, which I repeated earlier, that the character of the duties of the reinforcements would be other than to maintain law and order—

Mr. Fulton: I said that was the character of the request.

Mr. Carter: Well, if the character of the request was such that they were going to do something besides their normal duties of maintaining law and order, then of course the minister himself lends support to the charges made in these newspapers. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, some more positive action should be taken in this matter to establish and uphold the good name of the R.C.M. Police and I hope the minister, when he replies, will tell us what steps he proposes to take.

Mr. Peters: I should like to endorse what appears to be a suggestion made by the last speaker when he requested that this matter of the conduct of the R.C.M.P. be investigated by a commission. I feel it is only fair that the minister who is responsible for this department should instigate this type of inquiry. There have been two versions of this story, and the two versions have not been anywhere near the same. I certainly endorse the wish of the previous speaker that this investigation take place.

I should like also to congratulate the minister upon the action taken by the government in regard to this particular situation. I should like to congratulate him upon the fact that the government was unwilling to again put the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the position in which they were in 1919 when they engaged in some of the most brutal and nefarious police work that has been done in Canada, and probably in North America. Then again, during the depression, on numerous occasions the Royal Canadian Mounted Police abused citizens in this country in the course of what was called the protection of property. I have pictures here that indicate that not all members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have become "Canada's finest", such as we see standing out in front of the House of Commons.

Over the years this police force has established a remarkable reputation for criminal investigation and for humanity in the work that they have done. I see again not that type of policeman, not the type of policeman that I know as a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but strikebreakers, people who are used by organizations for this so-called protection of property, the protection of a way of life. It appears to me that this was the situation in Newfoundland. I should like to read a small article that appeared in the Toronto Star, written by Ray Timson, staff correspondent, on March 11, 1959, and which is entitled "Eyewitness". There is a subheading "It Was Dark Hour for Canada's Finest", and then the article goes on:

Marching three abreast and carrying nightsticks, a column of 66 policemen waded into a throng of striking loggers last night, clubbed two of them unconscious, flattened dozens more while wives and children screamed for them to stop.

I watched the attack on mainly defenceless men for about an hour.

Alfred Forward, 26, was clubbed over the head and beaten about the arms and chest and left unconscious between two parked cars. He was picked up by other loggers and carried to a house and revived.

At another point a logger standing in a backyard bordering the road watched the police escorting handcuffed, dazed loggers away. He shouted: "You sure have guts, haven't you?"

An officer pointed to him and yelled: "Get that man, get him now." The logger turned and fled and about 25 mounties and policemen cleared the yard fence like jackrabbits and chased him down toward a row of houses. He was beaten to the ground and arrested. One mountie bounded into Mrs. Frances Piercy and knocked her down.

"He never even looked back to see if I was all right", she said.

Her husband is Ernest Piercy, a picket and employee of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company for 30 years.

The 66 police in the column came swinging down the road and marched past the massed strikers. It appeared the marchpast was to decide the strength of the assembly.

The incident occurred in the neighbourhood of 6 p.m.

Mr. Lambert: Is the hon. member accepting these statements as facts?

Mr. Peters: Yes, I am accepting these statements as facts because I have been in picket lines on many occasions. I know about the actions of the police in this type of affair. I have seen them in the past and I have received many of the results of some of these actions. I am quite willing to accept it. On the other hand, nobody has denied it.

Mr. Fulton: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman on a question of privilege, but my whole statement in this house on March 11 was a denial of the Star's newspaper story and the general impression it sought to create.

Mr. Peters: I do not accept that as evidence because of the fact that the minister is accepting what certain people say. I will go on to see who are these people he has that are representing him and what they may represent. I have here a particular picture with three mounted police or three Newfoundland police in it and one man lying on the ground and the others all standing around like a bunch of wolves in anticipation. It may not be brutality but it looks like an unfair fight. I do not think the poor guy on the ground is going to get the best of it. Another picture show's Canada's Royal Canadian Mounted Police marching along swinging clubs that appear to me to be about two and a half feet long. This does not appear to be the type of thing that produces peace on a picket line. It is brought to my attention that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have only riding crops. I have on the order paper a question that has been there for months, asking the minister for the specifications of these night sticks. I understand they are made out of steel tubing. They weigh something like two and a half pounds, according to my information. If the minister says this is not right, let him produce one. I should like to see one and I should like him to answer the question that I have on the order paper if he thinks this is not correct. It appears to me that this is what these clubs are.

I think there are other things that we should consider in the province of Newfoundland. It is my information that when this province decided to join the rest of Canada they brought along part of their police force. I understand that this police force comprised what they called the Newfoundland rangers and that this group was headed up by a man who is now a member of the mounted police and who is an inspector of that police force in this particular area. It is also my information that this man was trained in India in the days of the colonial empire; that he was trained in the handling of men under colonial conditions in India; that he came to Newfoundland to head up this particular police force and ran it in a manner that we would not consider to be in keeping with the traditions of the R.C.M.P., from what I know it to be in Ontario. A number of these gentlemen who were brought into the R.C.M.P. I understand were given little or no training in the methods of operation of the R.C.M.P. Those are the people who are giving direction to some of the young people who are enlisting in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and are going in to serve and do duty in that province. Mr. Chairman, I shall be greatly surprised if some of these young R.C.M.P. have not resigned because of the brutality that has been practised in the strikes that have taken place in that province.

It has been said by the Minister of Justice that these police are by contract under the authority of the attorney general of Newfoundland. I ask you, Mr. Chairman whether it is fair and reasonable to put them under a man who the Parliamentary Guide points out is the Hon. Leslie Roy Curtis. This man is not a disinterested party in seeing that justice is obtained in this particular case. As everyone knows, there are two big companies in the labour dispute in Newfoundland. One of them is Bowaters; the other is Anglo-American Pulp and Paper Company.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on question of privilege. This matter has been raised previously in the house. Mr. Curtis, as attorney general formerly served on the board of Bowaters because the province had an interest in the company. He no longer serves on the board and has not been on the board since they paid off their obligations and he has no connection whatsoever with the company. That has been stated before. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman is saying what he is saying in good faith, but it does not happen to be true.

Mr. Regier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am sure that you will agree that the hon. member who has the floor is listing the record of the attorney general for the province of Newfoundland who is in charge of the law enforcement officers in Newfoundland, according to the words of our own minister in this house. The hon. member has the right to place on the record whatever he deems appropriate to place there, regardless of any added information which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may have.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member whether that is the current number?

Mr. Peters: It is the one I obtained from the table. I did not know that the attorney general had resigned from this position. I did not know that the province of Newfoundland owned part of this particular company.

Mr. Pickersgill: They had a loan.

Mr. Peters: They may own both of them for all I know. But even if this is true, I still maintain that he has some ulterior interest or has had and that he cannot be an impartial judge of whether the interests of law enforcement, as far as the mounted police are concerned, is best served in this particular way.

The minister may know whether this Inspector Argent is fully trained and is considered to be competent by the standards or requirements that are necessary now under the training that is given to the R.C.M.P. I understand that his training certainly does not do anything for promoting harmony in the tense situation that prevailed in the province of Newfoundland. If he was trained as most of the R.C.M.P., that I know of have been trained, he does not show it. They are very diplomatic. They do not make the mistakes that this gentleman has been credited with making. I refer only to the situation that happened when a large number of people or strikers were jailed and when their wives were trying to take them food. This particular inspector would not allow them to take in the food. It was only at the insistence of the president of district 2 of the union that this food was allowed to come in and a riot was prevented. The women were going to riot. I do not think the R.C.M.P. in that province, including those people who were brought in from the rangers, would have been ready to put up a defence, if you call it that, against the women who were trying to supply their husbands with food which they understood was badly needed.

I therefore think that some of the responsibility rests on the minister to have an investigation into this situation. I am in complete agreement with the minister that he has the right to make these decisions without the commissioner resigning or the commissioner having the right to say, "Either you do it this way or I will resign". I think the minister took the only position that could be taken in that case. I think that was another matter altogether. But I think an obligation is owed to the name of the R.C.M.P. to clear up some of these statements; and the clearing up of them is not going to come from having the superintendent in that province tell the minister what the situation is or from having the inspector tell the superintendent so the superintendent can tell the minister what the situation is. An investigation is necessary.

Some correction must be made in the arrangements that we make with the province so that we do not get into this kind of a fuss where our national police force is being used to break strikes and to act as strike-breakers and to act as rowdies to promote violence itself. The fact that there has been very little violence since the police were not assured that they were going to get reinforcements in order to put on a show; and because they did not get those reinforcements there has been very little trouble because, I would suggest, the mounted police are not so cocky. There are not 66 of them marching along clubbing everything they see in the way, knocking down women and doing the other things that are alleged in this particular statement. The only way in which that I and, I think the rest of Canada, can be sure that this is not done is for an investigation to take place.

Mr. Chairman, I think if this were only an isolated case, if I could say it is confined only to the province of Newfoundland then I am not to pleased with the way justice operates in that particular province. I disagree with the former speaker who said that in his opinion the law is that the union was only decertified, not that it could not operate there any more; that the company involved would now be able to deal with a number of unions. The certification did not say that. The certification said that the number of people in the bargaining unit for that company had decided by vote that they were going to be given that jurisdiction, and they were given that jurisdiction. It does not mean that four or five unions—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member is now embarking on something which has nothing whatever to do with the minister's estimates. I was very careful to refrain, as I indicated at the beginning, as other members have also refrained up until now, from dealing with anything but the police. I will not object to the hon. member continuing along this line; that is for the minister to decide. But if the committee wants a debate on the laws of Newfoundland there will be a debate on the laws of Newfoundland, and I hope those who wish to controvert other hon. gentlemen will be given the same privilege as hon. gentlemen are given who indulge in this totally irrelevant debate which has nothing whatever to do with the business of this house or the business of this parliament. It has solely to do with provincial jurisdiction in a province where the people have a vote and where they can settle these things.

The Chairman: Order. I must tell the committee that I was not listening too carefully to the remarks of the hon. member, and I can therefore hardly base a judgment on the point of order. However, I must tell the hon. member that he must in the present debate, and all other debates for that matter, be strictly relevant to the item under discussion. At present we are discussing the administration of the police services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. All members who try to stray away from the limitations of the present debate will be out of order and will be so adjudged by the Chair.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the only reason I referred to this was because it was commented upon by the previous speaker. I thought what he said was wrong and I thought I should have the opportunity of saying why. If that is not your wish I will abide by your ruling.

This situation, as far as the police in the province of Newfoundland is concerned, might have been considered to be an isolated case. I have a high respect for the R.C.M.P. for the simple reason that I come from the province of Ontario where the R.C.M.P. only do jobs which are of a national nature. They do not get involved in traffic violations, strikes and things of that nature. However, I consider the conduct of the R.C.M.P. to be an insult to a national police body in this country in the action they took in Newfoundland. As I say, this might have been an isolated case except it happened in the province of Ontario very shortly afterwards.

I would like to read a small section of an article, because I am concerned with this brutality. I have always known that police who were poorly trained, poorly instructed and poorly paid probably tended to be the type of people who believed in pretty strong arm methods and did not use their heads too much. But the R.C.M. Police have been well trained and have established a record which gives them a great deal of intelligence and initiative and authority, which they have abused. In the province of Ontario, as in Newfoundland, this reputation does not appear to be recognized any longer. Senator James Gladstone went to the Six Nations reserve shortly after trouble occurred on that reservation, and he wrote an article under his name which was reproduced in the Native Voice, the official organ of the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia, which was also published in the Toronto Star. He describes what he found when he visited the Six Nations reserve at Brantford and speaks of meeting some of the people. He says:

> The group grew. Friends arrived—Harry Burning and his wife, and Lawrence Nanticoke, his forehead still taped, his fingers bruised from last Friday's early morning fracas with the R.C.M.P. Mrs. Hill's daughter, 18-year-old Alice, had a black eye from the same source. Her two sisters showed me deep scratches on their arms.

Then he goes on to tell of some of the problems involved in that discussion which I am sure are irrelevant here at this particular time. He goes on to say:

> At that meeting the federal government had an opportunity to reconcile the two factions' differences. The R.C.M.P.'s visit would have been unnecessary.
>
> How much provocation the Indians gave the R.C.M.P. I cannot say. But I saw the scars received from the police by four women and two men. They were beaten.
>
> Lawrence Nanticoke told me that he was knocked to the floor nine times. After the raid, I was told, the houses of three Indians were invaded by R.C.M.P. officers who had no warrant for such an invasion.
>
> It will take a long time—longer than it takes black eyes and wrenched fingers to mend—for the Indians' bitterness toward the R.C.M.P. to subside.
>
> Their hostility toward the elected council and the R.C.M.P. is now focused on the federal government.

Then the rest of the article refers mainly to Indian affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I have also seen pictures published in the papers in connection with this fracas on the Six Nations Indian reserve. They showed police in uniform with a grim and vicious look on their faces, three or four of them holding one person and beating that person, according to the interpretation of the photograph. This appears to me to warrant an investigation. Something is wrong. It may have been wrong for a long time and the reputation of the R.C.M.P. may have carried them. If this type of brutality is going to be the rule of the day of the R.C.M.P., then we will be back to the days when they were beating people on the streets in the city of Winnipeg and the days when they beat hobos who were trying to find a place to lay down their heads in the days of the depression. This is not what the Canadian mounted police deserve. I think the situation demands an investigation by the minister with regard to the brutality which appears to be taking place. Our national police force should take no part in beating women, beating men who are down, taking their places in picket lines, taking their places as strikebreakers, escorting people through picket lines. These are not the duties of this force, and I am sure it would be to the advantage of all Canadians that this matter be cleared up and the good name of the R.C.M.P. restored to them.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, if I do not follow the last speaker in his allegations of brutality against the R.C.M.P., I hope this will not be interpreted as an indication that I agree in any way with what he has just said. The police, of course, cannot defend themselves in a discussion of this kind but no doubt the minister, who is their spokesman in this house will deal with the criticisms of brutality which have been made.

I wish to say a few words about the matter we were discussing previously, the contract with the attorney general of Newfoundland and the way in which that contract was carried out in connection with the events of last January, February and March. Perhaps I might not have found it necessary to intervene in this discussion had it not been for some of the statements which were made by the minister, with some of which I propose to deal. Before doing so I should like to put on record the views of the minister in regard to the role and the duty of the R.C.M.P. in carrying out their obligations under a contract with a province; the views of the minister at least before the Prime Minister decided not to send the reinforcements to Newfoundland which were requested in March.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I realize, of course, that I cannot dictate what the hon. gentleman is going to say, but I am sure he is too good a parliamentarian to continue to state that which is demonstrably in error. I have stated that the responsibility for the decision was mine and I have never sought to avoid it, and I can only leave it to the hon. gentleman to decide for himself if he is going to continue to say something which is not correct.

Mr. Pearson: The minister says the responsibility is his, and that he took that decision on his own responsibility. I made the statement I did with regard to this matter because of the statement made to the House of Commons by the Prime Minister on March 16 as reported on page 1959 of Hansard when, speaking before the Minister of Justice intervened in the debate and speaking first for the government, the right hon. gentleman said this:

> Under the circumstances we have concluded that it would be provocative and likely to cause further outbreaks of violence to authorize the sending of further members of the R.C.M.P. at this time.

Mr. Fulton: Does that mean the Prime Minister made the decision personally?

Mr. Pearson: It means that the Prime Minister, speaking first, announced the decision in the terms that he used, from which we are entitled to assume that he took primary responsibility for the announcement of this decision and therefore primary responsibility as the leader of the government for making the decision. Otherwise, why would not the Minister of Justice have been permitted to get up in the house and announce, before the Prime Minister spoke, that he had taken a decision, and the terms in which he took it?

Mr. Fulton: Did you ever try to take the floor ahead of your prime minister?

Mr. Pearson: Whenever I had any statutory obligation to make a decision I was always permitted by the prime minister of that day—in fact, I was instructed by the prime minister of that day—to get up and announce the decision in the House of Commons, and the prime minister did not intervene in a matter which was my responsibility.

Mr. Fulton: But the Prime Minister had an announcement to make the same day in connection with the same dispute and I would be much surprised if the hon. gentleman, in that situation, would have insisted on taking the floor ahead of his prime minister.

Mr. Pearson: The announcement which the Prime Minister made on March 16 before the Minister of Justice spoke was the announcement I have mentioned, that a decision had been taken not to send reinforcements.

Mr. Fulton: It related also to a royal commission and several other matters.

Mr. Pearson: That was mentioned subsequently as another subject. Anyway, the Prime Minister said: "We have concluded... not to send reinforcements."

When this matter came before the house the Minister of Justice emphasized—and the emphasis is worth repeating—that the R.C.M.P. under contracts of this kind were concerned with law enforcement only, and he assured the house that they would not in any event be used to break strikes—that was the expression which was used on one occasion. At page 909, he said:

> The R.C.M.P., in matters of this kind, are acting entirely as a provincial force in accord with the contract with the province to enforce specific provincial laws or to enforce law and order generally within the province. In their activities in this connection they come under the direction of and are responsible to the provincial attorney general from whom alone detailed reports on matters of this kind should be expected.

So I ask the minister before he came, after consultation with the government, to a decision in regard to the refusal to meet this request, and in the light of this statement which he made in the house on February 11, whether he consulted with the attorney general of Newfoundland? Did he take the initiative in getting into touch with the attorney general of Newfoundland and did he obtain from him the kind of detailed report with regard to this request for reinforcements which he said in his statement in the house on February 11 should come from, and could only come from, the attorney general of the province? That is one of the questions I have to ask, and perhaps the minister would reply to it later. Further, during those days when he was deciding what he should do, and when he was consulting with the government, what was the nature, if any, of his consultations with the attorney general of Newfoundland with regard to the request made by the commissioner of police for reinforcements, a request which was certainly supported and most strongly supported by the attorney general of Newfoundland. And then, on the same day, February 11, again on page 909 of Hansard, the minister was asked a question by a member of the C.C.F. party. This questions reads as follows:

Would the minister say whether the R.C.M.P. acting under this type of contract are permitted to do things which the R.C.M.P. would not normally be permitted to do?

To which the minister replied:

The answer, of course, is no; and there is no evidence to support the suggestion implicit in the question asked by the hon. member.

And yet in this statement in the House of Commons on March 16 which was issued as a press release on that day he said that the request made for police reinforcements—and I am quoting—takes on the character of "a request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province".

If this means anything at all it means that when the Attorney General of Canada is deciding whether he is to carry out the obligation of a contract made with the province for the supply of police to maintain law and order a criterion on which the decision is to be based is the policy of the provincial government. In other words, if the policy of the provincial government is such that it has labour or other implications which do not please the federal government or which do not please the Minister of Justice—if he is worried in some way about the policy of the provincial government—that will decide, or that can decide, whether he will discharge the obligation inherent in the contract, however the contract may be interpreted. As my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out, that surely, has a bearing on the responsibility of the provincial government for the maintenance of law and order. It is the responsibility of the provincial government to maintain law and order and to administer the law of the province. The contract has been made with the federal government for supplying police to help in the discharge of that obligation. The terms of that contract seem to be clear.

But the minister's position has been that if the request for additional help is made necessary because of certain policies adopted by the provincial government we then reserve the right not to send the reinforcements. As my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out, however, there was no mention of a situation of that kind bearing on such a refusal when the minister spoke on March 11. Now he gives quite a contrary impression.

There is one other question I should like to raise. The minister said this afternoon—and I copied his words down; I hope they are accurate, I think they are; I am sure the paraphrase will be accurate—that he asked the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in connection with this request for additional reinforcements whether these reinforcements were necessary for the safety or the security of the police. I believe he said the commissioner replied that that was not the consideration at issue; that he was asking for those reinforcements for the maintenance of law and order in the discharge of their duty in Newfoundland as a police force. This is, it seems to me, an astounding position for the minister to take; that if the commissioner—surely this is a humiliating position in which to put the commissioner—had said, "Yes, we need those reinforcements for the safety and security of the police"; if he had said that, would the minister have sent the reinforcements. That is the only possible inference one can draw from the minister's statement this afternoon. If the commissioner had said, "Yes, we need extra police for the security and safety of the R.C.M.P." he would have got them. What a position in which to put the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. In any event, as we know, the commissioner was unable to accept the attitude, the policy and the decision of the government and he found it necessary to resign, a resignation which is regretted, I am sure, by every member of this house.

I would like to put on the record a relevant paragraph or two from the commissioner's letter which appeared in the minister's speech and in the minister's press release. The commissioner himself, who was surely in a position to judge from the information he had received as to the necessity and the wisdom of the request which he was making for the reinforcements, said:

> There is no doubt in my mind as to the need and I am certain that the number of men asked for can be provided without projudice to "other responsibilities and duties".
> I realize that other issues are before you which arise from this strike but I feel most strongly that the matter of law enforcement should be isolated and dealt with on its own merits. This is the attitude the force has taken throughout. It has not concerned itself with the issues back of the strike but has merely tried to maintain law and order in the area.

This was the position taken by the commissioner which the minister was unable to accept and as a consequence the commissioner found it necessary to resign. In this statement to the house the minister also had this to say:

> We must also consider the over-all responsibilities of the force, and our responsibility for the force, in a much wider context.
> The primary duty of the force is to maintain law and order wherever the force operates throughout Canada. It is therefore an essential responsibility of the force to maintain its full integrity and its ability to discharge that duty on a national basis.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot for one minute believe that the commissioner would have made the request for reinforcements if he thought for one minute that that request, if made, would have prejudiced the full integrity of the force or its ability to discharge its duty on a national basis. In his statement the minister went on to say:

> In my view I cannot overlook, in assessing the responsibilities of the force, the necessity to ensure that it is not cast in a role which in effect might disable it from discharging its responsibilities.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I will have to raise here the same point I raised earlier with respect to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, namely that the attorney general of Newfoundland, by referring to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of whose interpretation of these contracts is correct, has placed it beyond discussion in the House of Commons at the present time under the sub judice rule. In what the hon. member is now reading he is discussing the reasons I gave at the time for my decision. As I say, there are differences of opinion as to whether that decision is right or wrong. But if the Leader of the Opposition is to discuss my reasons I would have to defend them and we would get right into the question of who is right in his interpretation of the contract. I suggest therefore that this part of the discussion by the Leader of the Opposition is out of order.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I will not continue to discuss this matter, although it does not seem to me to have a bearing on the contract at all. I was staying away from the interpretation of the contract. I will just say this; I do not believe for one moment that the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. would have made a request for reinforcements in respect of this situation if it would have interfered in any way, shape or form with the responsibility of the R.C.M.P. in the discharge of its duties as a police force in Newfoundland or in any other part of Canada. Perhaps we can let the matter stand there.

Then the minister went on to say:

> In the current situation, however, the activities of the Newfoundland government take on the character of an intervention in a dispute actually in progress, on the side of one of the parties and against the union which up to that time had been chosen as the bargaining agent by the workers and certified as such under the terms of the appropriate provincial legislation. This is an abnormal role for a government,—

Mr. Chairman, I am not entering into the question of whether this is an abnormal role for a government or not; I am not entering into the question of the dispute which brought about all this trouble. This is not what we are discussing; but the minister uses this question, he uses this mistaken—as he thinks it was—policy of the Newfoundland government, a political matter, as an argument for not meeting the request for police reinforcements. In other words, the minister as the Attorney General of Canada, is the judge of Newfoundland's policy in this matter in so far as it relates to the discharge of its obligations in a contract with the government of Newfoundland and, so far as I know, in coming to this conclusion which was based on an assessment of provincial policy. Also in coming to this conclusion, so far as I know, he had no discussion, no consultations of any kind with the Newfoundland provincial government or with the attorney general of Newfoundland. If I am wrong in this conclusion he will no doubt correct me. But I will ask him again; before he made up his mind, before he used this argument of provincial policy, did he discuss this policy with the attorney general of Newfoundland who had the primary responsibility for the administration of justice in Newfoundland? It seems to me that the conclusion to be drawn from the minister's attitude in this matter is that in regard to an obligation of this kind we, the federal government, the Attorney General of Canada, will discharge our obligations in the matter in the light of our assessment of the policy followed by the provincial government. If that is not an interference with provincial rights I do not know what could be.

Perhaps in conclusion I can put on the record a statement made over the air on March 22 by Mr. Michael Barkway, a commentator. He had this to say about the decision of the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and perhaps these words should be put on Hansard. I, of course, take full responsibility for them.

He said:

> A rare gleam of glory illuminated Canadian affairs at the beginning of this week. The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police resigned because, as he said, he could "neither understand nor agree with" the government's refusal to send reinforcements to his hard-pressed men in Newfoundland, when the contract between Ottawa and the Newfoundland government seemed to him to leave no choice.

He went on to say:

> It doesn't really matter whether you think commissioner Nicholson was right or wrong.

Incidentally, I happen to think he was right in this matter.

> We are loaded to the gunwales with people who are so determined to be right that they will resort to almost any kind of expediency to avoid being proved wrong. We are desperately short of men who are ready to suffer for what they believe to be right and to take the risk of being proved wrong later.
>
> I happen to think commissioner Nicholson was right—right not to be willing to let down his men on the spot; right to believe that the federal contract with Newfoundland meant what it said; right to suggest that you can't refuse reinforcement to one province without destroying confidence in all the other provinces; right, surely, when he wrote to Mr. Fulton that, whatever other strike issues the minister had to consider, "the matter of law enforcement must be dealt with on its own merits."
>
> Law enforcement, as Mr. Nicholson said, is the only concern of the police. He has always insisted that it's not for the police to interpret the law or to choose between good and bad laws. He was as simple and modest about the functions of the police as he was about himself.
> So I find it a little laughable when justice minister Fulton undertakes to maintain the "full integrity" of the police by deciding on his own authority and with no stated evidence that reinforcements were not needed to maintain law and order but to act as strike-breakers.

It is our contention, Mr. Chairman, and I am making no reference to the contract at all, that the minister acted wrongly in regard to this matter; that the minister acted wrongly in not consulting with the government of Newfoundland, the attorney general of Newfoundland, before he made the decision; that the minister acted wrongly in not telling the house at once when the decision was made, and that if this kind of attitude is taken toward an arrangement between one province and the federal government it is an unwarranted interference in provincial rights and it strikes right at the basis of our federal system.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there have been some comments made by two or three speakers since I last had anything to say to which I think I should reply. What the Leader of the Opposition has just said reduces this situation in a sense, I think, to its proper perspective. We had here a difference of opinion between the commissioner in charge of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under a minister and the minister who had over-all responsibility for the force. That is true. It was an unfortunate situation. The commissioner felt himself unable to accept the view of the minister as to the proper interpretation of the contract and since he was absolutely unable to accept it he felt called upon to resign. That, incidentally, was a decision which, as I indicated to the commissioner at the time, I felt was wrong. I felt there was no necessity for him to resign but it was a decision which I respected and that is still the case.

The fact of the matter is that the responsibility for the decision is mine as Attorney General of Canada, and I have to accept that responsibility and I have accepted it. I recognize that there are differences of opinion with respect to whether or not I was right in the decision I have made but I was called upon to make a decision, I made it, and I have no apologies for having made it. I believe it was right. I thought it was right at the time and I still think it was right because, Mr. Chairman, what is my responsibility? I am the minister responsible for the force. I should like to refer the committee to a section of the statute under which the force operates. We are in the course of putting through a new bill now but the effect of the provision will be exactly the same. I refer the committee to section 4 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act which reads as follows:

> Such member of the Queen's privy council for Canada as the governor in council from time to time directs, has the control and management of the force—

These words are pretty far-reaching.

> —and of all matters connected therewith.

As the minister designated by the Queen's privy council for Canada I cannot escape responsibility for the control and management of the force and, as I stated to the house on March 16 in giving my reasons for my decision, it was my view, which I still hold, that in deciding upon whether or not I should follow any course with respect to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police I had to keep in mind the question of whether or not this would affect the full integrity and ability of the force to function as a law enforcement body everywhere it may be called upon to operate in Canada.

Having taken into consideration the factors then present in the unfortunate circumstances in which the call for reinforcements was made, I came to the conclusion that to accept that call for reinforcements would prejudice the integrity of and regard for the police as a law enforcement body and would prejudice their ability to discharge their obligations everywhere in Canada, and that it would therefore not be proper for me to accept the call and follow the course of sending reinforcements. I took that decision in view of my concept of my over-all responsibility for the force. As I have said, there may be differences of opinion about this matter but I have no apologies to make for it to Michael Barkway, the Leader of the Opposition or anybody else. Indeed, I think if I had sought to avoid that responsibility on the grounds that I might be prejudiced or that there might be an embarrassing discussion in the house or, indeed, even on the ground that the commissioner might resign, then I should have been worthy of any contempt that anyone might care to put upon me.

So, as I have said, I think that the Leader of the Opposition in what he said has reduced the matter to its real perspective. Here was a case where the commissioner had one view about what should be done and the minister in charge had another. The Leader of the Opposition referred to my words in the statement on March 16 where I said:

> It is therefore an essential responsibility of the force to retain its full integrity and its ability to discharge that duty on a national basis.

That is the duty of law enforcement. The Leader of the Opposition said that he was sure that the commissioner would not have made the request to send reinforcements if he had felt that it would interfere with the full integrity of the force. Of course he would not. I am as certain as the Leader of the Opposition is that he would not have made that request if he had thought it would interfere with the full ability of the force to discharge its responsibilities everywhere. I formed the judgment that I did and that was a judgment I had to form. I cannot do anything but repeat that that was my judgment, that was my decision, and under the circumstances I felt that I was therefore bound to refuse the request.

As to the reasons why I came to that conclusion, they have already been placed on Hansard as found on page 1961. I have already drawn a distinction which to me is obvious and I am sorry if Mr. Barkway cannot see it. To me it is an obvious distinction between police who are in a province in a certain situation and under contract, as they were in Newfoundland—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I will have to raise a point of order at this time. Both my leader and I have desisted at once when the minister suggested that we were entrenching upon what is before the courts. It was precisely on this point that the minister first raised a point of order with me, and I think he is now doing the same thing.

Mr. Fulton: What I was going to read has already been read into the record by my hon. friend or the Leader of the Opposition, but I want to read it into the record in the context of what I have to say. Perhaps my hon. friend would listen to the passages and if he protests again I will be glad to consider the objection. What I was saying was that I have already drawn a distinction between the obligation of the men who are there in Newfoundland to carry out the orders of the attorney general on the one hand and the situation when a province under these circumstances requests reinforcements. I said on March 16, and part of this has been put on Hansard before, most recently by the Leader of the Opposition:

> In the current situation the activities of the government of Newfoundland appear to have gone beyond the usual role of a government. That role in this context is first to provide the machinery for promotion of industrial peace and development and for the settlement of industrial disputes, and second to preserve and enforce law and order in the course of any dispute that may arise.
> In the current situation, however, the activities of the Newfoundland government take on the character of an intervention in a dispute actually in progress, on the side of one of the parties and against the union which up to that time had been chosen as the bargaining agent by the workers and certified as such under the terms of the appropriate provincial legislation.
> This is an abnormal role for a government, and certainly has the elements of an attempt to extinguish from the province a trade union national in character and hitherto chosen by the workers in that industry, in that province, as their bargaining agent.
> As I appreciate the situation, therefore, the request made by the government of Newfoundland for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements takes on the character—

The request takes on the character, not the conduct of the men already there in the province, but the request for reinforcements takes on the character—

> —not of a request to assist in the normal function and duty of the province in maintaining law and order, but of a request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province.

For these reasons, as I said, because in my view it is my duty to look at the overall responsibility of the force and for maintaining its full integrity and its ability to discharge its duties on a national basis, which depends in a large part upon its acceptability for that role, I felt that to accept the request would prejudice that national role and it would not be proper for me, as minister, to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: That happens to be the precise passage, at least part of it, to which the minister took exception to me reading, but under the circumstances perhaps the minister would not mind me asking him this one simple question about it. Does the minister feel that if a situation arose in any province where, in his opinion, the reputation of the force may be affected, and if there is an arrangement with that province, he has an obligation to leave there the men that are there but not to send additional men in order to enable them to carry out their police functions efficiently; is that what he is saying?

Mr. Fulton: I regret to say that I am unable to answer hypothetical questions. This is a hypothetical question. The passage my hon. friend started to read is not the one I have read. I have refrained from reading it on purpose. It is the passage in which I went further into the details as to how this clause should be interpreted, and I am not in a position to discuss that because the government of Newfoundland has placed the matter before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I should say one or two words with regard to the allegations made by the hon. member—

Mr. Pearson: Before the minister gets on to that, would he deal with the two questions which I asked him and which I do not think are hypothetical. He has just said the basis of his decision was the fact the government of Newfoundland had gone beyond the usual role of government. I asked him if that was his view of the role of the government of Newfoundland in this matter, had he taken up this question with the government of Newfoundland through the attorney general and discussed it with him before he discussed it with his colleagues or, indeed, after he discussed it with his colleagues and before he made his decision? This was one of the questions: Had there been consultation with the attorney general of Newfoundland over the role of the government of Newfoundland before this decision was made?

The other question was with regard to the implication that if the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. had said the reinforcements were required for the safety of the police, the reinforcements would have been sent. The commissioner said he could not make any such statement as that, and he was not going to accept that they were required for the safety of the police. He stated that this consideration did not enter into it and, therefore, because that consideration did not enter into it the reinforcements were never sent. Would the minister deal with those two matters?

Mr. Fulton: With regard to the first matter, there was some consultation with the attorney general of Newfoundland on an earlier occasion concerning the role that the government was adopting in the labour dispute.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say when that consultation was?

Mr. Fulton: I cannot tell my hon. friend. It was a telephone conversation which would probably be within a week of the Badger incident. I think it was made pretty clear on both sides, although it was a personal conversation and I do not want to go into details, that there were the gravest reservations as to the course being followed by the other. I do not say it was related specifically to police reinforcements, but it was related to the situation generally.

Then the other question was with relation to whether the reinforcements were necessary to protect the lives and safety of the men already there. I did not say, and I do not believe I left the impression but if I did leave the impression I want to clear it up right away, that this matter was discussed as being the sole determining factor. But I, in assessing the request for reinforcements, wanted to be certain as to what the position was with respect to every factor that might be relevant in making a decision. It was only in that sense that the question was asked. I have only mentioned the question because it was referred to specifically in editorials read by my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate. I have hitherto ignored the inference raised that, by reason of refusing the reinforcements, I was placing the lives and safety of the police already there in jeopardy. It was only for the purpose of clearing up any doubts on that score that I made reference to the discussion with the commissioner.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister would permit me I should like to ask him a question to clear up this business about consultation with the attorney general of Newfoundland. He told me on March 12 he had had a conversation with the attorney general of Newfoundland the evening before. I should like to ask the minister if that conversation—I refer to Hansard of March 12, page 1864, which reads as follows:

> Could I ask the minister if he has received any communication from the attorney general of the province?
> Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have, and I was in communication with him last night.

This was the crucial date, March 11, and could the minister tell us whether he initiated the conversation with the attorney general of Newfoundland, whether he gave him any intimation before he reached his decision not to permit the reinforcements to go or whether the conversation was initiated by the attorney general of Newfoundland after the decision?

Mr. Fulton: Yes; there were two conversations. The one I referred to a moment ago was an earlier conversation not related specifically to sending R.C.M.P. reinforcements because my recollection is that the request had not yet been made at the time of that conversation. The second conversation referred to in the answer given on March 12, and just read by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, was a conversation initiated by the attorney general of Newfoundland with regard to the request for reinforcements.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, the minister thinks there had been no previous discussion about sending reinforcements; that is what the minister is stating?

Mr. Fulton: No, that is not quite what I said. It is not quite accurate. I referred also to my statement in which a telegram of March 8 asking for reinforcements was received, and resolved at that time by making other arrangements.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am talking about conversations; my understanding is there was no conversation about the police until the conversation to which the minister referred on March 12?

Mr. Fulton: No conversation about the police; I think that would be correct. They may have been referred to in passing in the conversation a week earlier, but that conversation certainly did not deal specifically with the request for reinforcements.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, this decision of this government to deprive the government of a province, the duly constituted and democratically elected government of a province with what they considered necessary for the maintenance of law and order, that decision was taken without any intimation being given by the minister, without any consultation with the government; it was a completely unilateral decision?

Mr. Fulton: As I pointed out and as the answers make clear on March 11, reinforcements would not be dispatched at that time. It was after that news became available that the attorney general of Newfoundland called me and told me he could not understand why they could not be sent at once. I explained to him the considerations we had in mind, briefly, and the matter was left there. The decision not to send them was announced on March 16 in the course of discussion in the house.

I was going to deal for a moment with the statement made by the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland and the suggestion that there should be some kind of commission of inquiry to look into this matter. I have indicated to those who have inquired of me about this matter previously that if at any time, as a result of my inquiries and studies of the matter, I came to the conclusion that there was something requiring an outside investigation, I would immediately order one. But so far I have not yet, as a result of those studies, had any occasion to think that there is any substance in fact to the sort of newspaper report that appeared in the press and from which my hon. friend read. That being my position, I do not think it would be in the least appropriate for me—in fact, I think it would be absolutely inappropriate—to order a commission or any other form of formal inquiry into the allegations which appear to be so baseless as those to which my hon. friend has referred.

I indicated in the house on March 11 and I believe in one or two other statements that I had made full inquiries as to the part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the occasion of every incident that was referred to and that, as I said in that full statement on March 11, where tempers are running high and the feeling is tense, as it always unfortunately is in a situation of that kind where large scale industrial disputes are involved, then the very nature of the responsibility of the police, which is to enforce those provisions of the Criminal Code which say that picketing shall be peaceful and that roads shall not be obstructed, this responsibility unfortunately is bound to bring the police on occasion into conflict with those engaged in the industrial dispute whose tempers, as I say, are running high. But that is a responsibility which the police cannot and should not seek to evade.

Unfortunately on occasion, because tempers are running high, violence breaks out. If violence is used, then force must be used to resist violence. Then what do we find? We find that the police are accused of brutality. This to my mind is a complete distortion of what the situation is.

Although on reflection I think my hon. friend will realize that he made some fairly extreme statements, I am quite sure that he would not on reflection for a moment really suggest that merely because the feelings are intense the police should leave the scene. That would be a complete denial of their duty. If they are to carry out their duty, then unfortunately it does on occasion bring them in conflict with those who are carried away by the violence of their own feelings, understandable though it may be. In this case I can understand the reason for the intense feeling. But that does not alter the fact that the police still must discharge their duty, unpleasant and uncomfortable though it may be.

With respect to the Brantford situation, here again we have somewhat the same picture. There was extremely bad or bitter feelings between the hereditary Indians or those Indians who believe in the hereditary system and those who believe in the system of the elected council, and their supporters. In the course of this dispute the supporters of the hereditary chiefs took over the council house which contained a safe, valuable documents and other articles which were regarded as being of particular and peculiar value to the tribe concerned and to the organization concerned. This was done I believe three or four days before formal steps were taken to clear the building. In other words, you had a forcible taking of possession of property contrary to the law and you had demands made upon the elected chiefs to go in and open the safe and give up custody of these documents and threats that if these demands were not met, the safe would be carried off bodily, or in other words a theft would be committed. Thus you had, as I say, a violation of the law represented by the forcible taking of possession. But because we were dealing with Indians, because feelings were so intense, and it was desired not to aggravate them, with my concurrence the police were instructed not to take immediate action which ordinarily they should have taken, by force if necessary, to restore the property to its rightful owners. In other words, the police adapted their conduct and their operations to accommodate the view that by a show of restraint and patience it might be possible to bring the two sides together. This was continued for some days until, as I am informed, the indications became quite clear that further attempts would be made to take the law into their own hands by some of these people to an extent which simply could not be ignored. So it was decided that the necessary steps had to be taken—after some days again—to bring to an end this defiance of the law represented by the forcible taking and retaining of possession of the council house; and the police were instructed to go in.

There were some 140 indians physically present in the building determined to resist attempts of the police to have them vacate it. The police did not go in there determined to push them out forcibly or to push them around. They went in there issuing a lawful order to these people to vacate the building. They made it clear that if the building was not vacated, then, if necessary, such force as was necessary to be used would have to be used. Their order was defied. They did not make a sudden rush and go in with clubs swinging, knocking people on the head. My information is that they spent some time in asking them to leave peaceably. When they did not leave peaceably, then some of them at any rate joined arms and proceeded to move down the hall shouldering the Indians ahead of them. It is perfectly true—and it cannot be denied—that violence broke out. In other words, the police in the discharge of their duty were resisted by force and it is a fact that when lawful authority is resisted by force, then lawful authority is obliged to use such force as may be necessary to overcome that force.

But surely we should be realistic human beings and not lose our sense of proportion and suggest that because the police are resisted in the performance of their duty they have to go away and leave the lawbreakers in possession of the premises. Unfortunately a certain amount of force was necessary in order to carry out this eviction. But I have absolutely no evidence—in fact, all the evidence I have is to the contrary—that unnecessary force was used. Of course the police had expressions of discomfort on their faces. Does my hon. friend really imagine that they like having to eject people by force, particularly when some of those people happen to be women? Does my hon. friend not also realize that there are some people who recognize the fact that you can make more fuss out of it if you have a woman present than if you have not a woman present? I just ask that we keep a sense of proportion and recognize the fact that the job of law enforcement is not always a pleasant and glamorous one, that occasionally it has its unglamorous and unpleasant side but that really society is much better protected because there are honest and conscientious policemen who are prepared to discharge these unpleasant and unglamorous tasks as well as to take whatever credit and whatever pleasure they may occasionally get out of the glamour of it.

That is the tradition and the record of this force. That is why people respect it so highly, because it does not shirk unpleasant duties. The people of Canada know that they can rely on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to carry out the unpleasant with the pleasant, not expecting any reward, not expecting any flattery or congratulations. However, I think they are entitled to ask that the people of Canada, particularly the members of this house, maintain a sense of proportion as to how a constable should go about discharging his duties.

Mr. Peters: The minister spoke about a sense of proportion. At six o'clock in the evening, the supper hour, 66 policemen marched into a number of strikers standing along the road where no workers would be going to work, where no strike breakers would be trying to pass through the picket line, either going or coming. It was at the supper hour, at least an hour after the shift would be over. Would he consider it to be all right for 66 policemen to march through that group of men or would he consider it to be provocation?

I would suggest to the minister it hinges pretty well on whether he is being honest with the members from Newfoundland who have a different opinion from mine. If he says he does not think it is provocation, then what he should have sent to Newfoundland is 3,000 or 4,000 more policemen to intimidate the strikers. If he does, 66 are too many to be enforcing law when there is no question of any violence, except perhaps violence against themselves. You cannot have it both ways. Either you believe that 66 policemen would be too many and would be provoking and looking for trouble rather than preventing it, or if it is not, maybe we should have a lot more policemen down there to intimidate the I.W.A. off the island.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I assume my hon. friend is speaking of the Badger incident; I think he is from what he said. If he is, the information he has and my information are poles apart, because my information, which has been checked, is that it was not a case of 66 policemen moving in in the absence of provocation to a peaceful group who were isolated from any scenes of disorder. What actually took place was that on two previous occasions shortly before in that very area there had been blocking of roads and damage to property, to a vehicle which attempted to pass that way. Then tempers had been consistently mounting, and as a climax a large group of persons gathered at a road intersection, a Y, a busy road and the very road upon which it was expected there would be further movements of vehicles that night. So that the background sketched by my hon. friend is very far removed from the factual background. The police went in as a body, it is true, as sensible policemen would. Their first attempt, I am informed, and I accept it absolutely because this is the proper method to pursue, was to persuade the men to disperse peacefully. Unfortunately the men refused to accept that request, and later to comply with that order, and violence broke out. But the background the hon. gentleman has sketched is, I fear, very inaccurate.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, most of the trouble under discussion which occurred last winter was in my district, and I would like to participate briefly in this debate regarding the refusal of R.C.M.P. reinforcements. I think first I should say that I have no intention whatsoever of discussing the contractual relationship of the R.C.M.P. and the government of Newfoundland. That matter is in the courts, and apart from that it has no bearing on the aspect of the matter which I wish to discuss.

There has been so much distortion, distortion such as evidenced in the newspaper article read by the hon. member for Timiskaming, and so much speculation and prejudicial statements made regarding what happened in Newfoundland that I think something in the nature of a narrative of the circumstances surrounding the request for R.C.M.P. support and the refusal of it should be given. Also I think I should say that regardless of what criticisms may have been made, everything which I know and have heard points to the fact that the R.C.M.P. was a completely impartial and courageous body. Certainly it was known that there was serious trouble in Newfoundland, that there was rioting, that men partly clothed had been thrown out of woods camp during freezing weather. Many people felt they were being intimidated; there was a general feeling of uneasiness with the threat of rioting continuously in the air. Also there were many neutral people who felt that their very lives and properties were endangered even as their peace was. Therefore I think perhaps I can do no better than to let these people speak for themselves.

Recently in this house there were tabled communications to the Prime Minister from those who opposed the decision of the government in not sending reinforcements to the R.C.M.P. in Newfoundland, and I would like to read two of the letters and two of the telegrams, because I think they tell the story completely from the standpoint of those who were actually in the area and affected by the circumstances at the time. The first letter is from Mr. George Hicks of Grand Falls, who is a very fine man, a very highly respected citizen, and I might add a staunch Conservative. He writes the Prime Minister as follows:

Dear Prime Minister,

I have just returned from the funeral of the late Constable Moss, victim of an assault by one of a crowd unlawfully assembled at Badger on Tuesday night. At the time he was engaged with many other R.C.M.P. and police in attempting to disperse this mob.

The funeral was attended by about two hundred and fifty ex-service men, as this young man was a veteran of the Korean war and had been in the police force only six months. It is indeed very sad, and the whole country is deeply shocked. He leaves his mother and stepfather to mourn. His mother has been quite ill for some time, and what effect this will have on her can only be imagined.

You will recall that it was my privilege and honour to introduce you to the people of Grand Falls less than a year ago. We were all so delighted to have you here, and still more so when, shortly after, you became the Prime Minister of all Canada. There was serenity here then. Today, however, we have been caught up in what has been described a civil war, brother against brother, father against son.

All this strife in a community that has known only peace and happiness for more than fifty years is indeed a shock. I dare to say that no one feels this more keenly than I do myself, for I came here as a young school teacher in 1906, taught seven years, spent five of the best years of my life overseas in the first war, came back and worked for the A.N.D. Company for nearly forty years. I have lived in retirement since 1953. I saw these mills built, the town expand, the temples of religion rear their noble fronts and the halls of learning spring up. I have seen this town grow from the wilderness to its present beauty and strength. But, above all, I have seen the close relationship between management and labour.

To see this undermined is sad enough, but to see the happenings distorted in the Canadian newspapers is equally as bad. One would think that the first duty of a newspaper is to ascertain the facts. This seems to have been overlooked.

I would not attempt to say how the I.W.A. came into Newfoundland, but apparently they did get a foothold here, and through various processes reached a point where they were able to talk business with the company. This was previously done by the Newfoundland Lumbermen's Association through the woods labour board.

Negotiations began between the company and the I.W.A., but after some months came to an impasse. Then a strike was called. Since then, various incidents such as destruction of property and assaults on the men working in the camps led up to the deplorable incident already referred to.

We all feel here that the stand taken by the government, and supported by the opposition, was courageous and necessary. It was considered an emergency; they closed their ranks and took action, as any country would do in a similar situation where the public interest was in peril.

There may be some doubt in the minds of mainland Canadians that there is a rift in public opinion here over this matter, but I should like to assure you from every indication to hand that this is not the case. Politics has not entered into the question. It is, as stated, an emergency; the public safety has been threatened and the people throughout the province seem to be as one in support of the action taken by the government and the opposition after their appraisal of the situation.

As indicated—

[Mr. Granger.]

The Deputy Chairman: I am wondering how the hon. member is going to make this relevant to this particular item. I was hoping he would do so, and that is why I gave him a little leeway.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may say a word about that, this is a return made by the Prime Minister to a motion asking for letters that protested the action of the government with respect to the R.C.M.P., and if the Prime Minister considered that this was a relevant item in making that return it is surely relevant to a discussion of the R.C.M.P.

The Deputy Chairman: We are discussing the administration of the R.C.M.P. and, as I say, I should like to know how this is related to it.

Mr. Fulton: I was also asked to make a similar return. A number of letters discussing the situation generally were of considerable length, and contained, perhaps only one paragraph about the failure to send R.C.M.P. reinforcements, but I felt bound to produce such letters. I would certainly take the position that the discussion of a letter of this sort would not be relevant to a debate on this administrative item.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member will pick out the parts of the letter which are related to this item.

Mr. Granger: I should be happy to do that, but in fairness to the man who wrote this letter I did not want to read anything out of context. He goes on:

As indicated in my telegram to you, the exservice men in this area have unanimously volunteered their services to protect life and limb, should that be necessary, but this does not in any way excuse the federal government from withholding adequate police protection, as indicated by their reluctance to send forward the detachment requested by the provincial government. We all feel this to be quite wrong, and would seem to indicate that pressure has been brought to bear by sources unfriendly to this country.

And here I conclude my quotation from Mr. Hicks:

The R.C.M.P. and local police did a fine job here, and they deserve great credit for their forbearance in a most difficult situation.

That letter is signed "Yours faithfully, George Hicks". Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavour to follow your ruling in reading from this letter by Mrs. Yolande Johnston. She writes:

Newfoundland is a peaceful country and the people of Newfoundland are well known for their friendliness and exceptional hospitality . . . The situation in Grand Falls as it has been and still exists is much too complicated for a mere housewife to try to explain, but that statements made by the R.C.M.P. should ever be doubted and questioned is almost unbelievable. Nevertheless when a request was made for additional help it was refused. Never have the government of Newfoundland with its people and churches stood together as they do now, yet people from the outside know nothing of the true facts because instead of accepting the views of decent people they choose to believe a bunch of liars.

And now I should like to read a telegram sent to the Prime Minister by the Rev. Allan Old, minister of St. Andrews Presbyterian church at St. John's:

Highly commend police department here. Consider reinforcements urgently necessary to protect neutral life and property in central Newfoundland.

And, finally, the following from the president of the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland, Pastor Eugene Vaters:

I must register my sense of shock and horror and depressed feelings for the future over the hesitancy and the final refusal of the federal government to send to Newfoundland the police force as thought necessary by the Newfoundland house of assembly and requested by the attorney general. This is most disturbing as it shows to us that the upholding of law and order and good government in Newfoundland is contingent upon the vagaries of interested pressure groups and party politics converging at Ottawa. To many of us the tradition for prompt and efficient upholding of law and order and good government we have ever associated with Canada lies before us, besmirked. This is the more to be lamented in the face of forces known and declared to be evil and noxious highly organized and spreading which threaten by means legal and illegal to engulf Canada from end to end and the rest of what is left of freedom integrity and good will in the world, as well.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think I need read more. These statements are representative of the feelings of the people of Newfoundland. I should say they might be considered mild compared with the strong and definite feelings of most Newfoundlanders.

The R.C.M.P. remains today a proud and courageous body with an enviable reputation for loyalty and devotion to duty. I am sorry that the same cannot be said of the government which failed to come to their aid, and to ours, in the hour of need.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself within the limits of this debate and not enter into wide fields of discussion which are more capably handled by the Minister of Justice. But I can speak with some authority, I think, on the feelings of the rank and file of the R.C.M.P. because I had the extreme honour of serving in that body off and on for some 23 years. It is a great honour to stand here and be able to speak on their behalf because as hon. members know they must at all times be divorced from politics.

Speaking on behalf of the rank and file of the mounted police, I believe there is a problem here which no hon. member during this debate, no writer in the press and apparently nobody in Canada has taken into account, and that is: what are the duties of an ordinary member of the R.C.M.P.? Apparently when civil war is threatened we are expected to put it down. We are expected to put it down not by force but by prestige. I think this is a heavy onus, and I do not see how we can blame this government or, perhaps, any government for the vague position in which the ordinary uniformed member finds himself. Is he expected to maintain law and order under all circumstances? I just want to give the committee three simple situations and ask them, and I hope the citizens of our great country, to decide fairly and squarely what attitude they take to them.

If a uniformed member finds a sailor coming ashore drunk and attacking a woman on the street, his duty is plain—he arrests that person and brings him before the proper civil authority. However, if a mounted policeman travelling on his motorcycle along the rocky coast of, say, Cape Breton sees a submarine and foreign troops being disgorged on the shore, he does not rush with bare bosom upon the spear; he goes to the military, using his commonsense as a good member of the R.C.M.P. should. In between those two examples there is the situation which has been described in excerpts from papers and letters read to this committee, a situation of threatened civil war. If the horrors outlined in Newfoundland were such that, in fact, 1,500 irate strikers armed with clubs were ready to batter the mounted police into the ground, that is not a job for mounted policemen, singly or in large groups, and I, for one, as a member who stood and did my duty for 23 years, never envisaged myself as voluntarily undertaking such an obligation. It is true that in an emergency we do this sort of thing but it is not part of our contract with the government. It is not the sort of thing which we think our officers can order us to do. We do it as a duty to our country in an emergency, and where those emergencies can be handled by constituted authority they should be so handled.

I do not want to go any further into the interpretation of contracts. I want hon. members to think this thing over and to decide whether or not there have been emotions dragged into this thing which have no real weight or significance. I think this argument about the role of the mounted police has been used in a political sense perhaps on both sides. But this should be clarified. When you talk about broken contracts between a province and a government, that is one thing. But how about a contract that is made with an individual. How far does my duty go? Have I the right to refuse. When you straighten out the contract between the province and the dominion, perhaps there should be something written into the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act so that a man knows whether he is a policeman or a soldier.

I joined the mounted police in June, 1935, and before I was even in uniform I was armed, stood by and was called out to wield a club against people who were ready to march on Ottawa to present their views. I am not going into that. I was not trained; I was not a soldier. I signed a contract to serve king and country as a policeman. To people who drag in emotions and say that it is my duty at all times to maintain law and order I say that is not so. You are asking me to do something which you yourselves are not called on to do and I am entitled as an ordinary uniformed member of the force to know where my duties start and where they stop.

Mr. Hardie: You are also entitled to get out of the force if you do not like it.

Mr. Bigg: I am speaking because I have served in the force. I know what the onus is when you are called upon to use violence against your fellow citizens. In view of the difference of opinion expressed not only in the press and in the country but in this very chamber, I do not think that the duties of a policeman are very clearly understood. I merely suggest to you that we consider this. Apparently this is of great national importance, and we should settle the matter whether or not the members of the R.C.M.P. cannot have their formal duties outlined and when it comes to going beyond the call of duty I suggest that might be left to their conscience.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make a few remarks with respect to the discussions that have gone on this afternoon, and particularly with regard to parts of it. I listened with a great deal of interest to the almost impassioned remarks of the Minister of Justice with respect to the maintenance of law and order and the general respect that we must have for the law enforcement officers and for law itself. There is no doubt that that is quite true. We all agree, I am sure, that the law enforcement officers, whether they be R.C.M. Police or whether they be attached to some other part of our police forces such as municipal or provincial forces, are a necessity and do carry out extremely useful functions, generally speaking, in enforcing law and order. But some sort of general impassioned appeal such as we heard a moment ago should not be allowed to overcloud what I think are occasional errors and mistakes in so far as the enforcement of law and order is concerned and in so far as the activities of the R.C.M. Police are concerned, because this is the force we are discussing at the present time.

Unfortunately I had to attend a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs this afternoon and did not have the opportunity to hear my friend from Timiskaming make reference to an article and a comment of Senator Gladstone with respect to the Six Nations confederacy and the problem that arose down there. I understand that my friend and colleague from Timiskaming read sections of the comments of Senator Gladstone in so far as the activities of the R.C.M. Police are concerned on that particular reserve. This is one instance where I feel a grave error was made by the R.C.M. Police in their activities. The minister did not deal in detail with the comments made by the senator, but I hope he was not trying to disagree with what Senator Gladstone had to say with respect to the activities of the R.C.M. Police. Therefore I would like the minister to go further into that and say whether he would agree or disagree with the comments of the senator with respect to the activities of the R.C.M. Police on the Six Nations reserve with particular reference to people being knocked down as he said nine times: with reference to what the senator said about the houses of three Indians being invaded by the R.C.M. Police, and that sort of thing, in order to assess the impact and the effect of the activities of the R.C.M. Police on the relationship between the Six Nations elected council and the Six Nations confederacy, and the relationship that these groups of people have with the government of Canada and how it has been aggravated and upset by the activities of the R.C.M. Police.

When we get to the question of the enforcement of law we oft times find that in the very enforcement of that law people become upset; they lose their respect for the R.C.M. Police or the law enforcement officer, not because of the enforcement of the law but because the law is a bit foolish in the first place. I have specific reference to the liquor act and the liquor regulations as they apply to native Indians. This is another case in point.

Perhaps we might call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported, and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume the business for tomorrow will be as indicated by the house leader last night. First, a continuation of these estimates and then trade and commerce estimates.

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is a notice on Votes and Proceedings today which will provide for extension of the hours of sitting next week. That will be taken first; then the estimates of justice and then those of trade and commerce. On Monday we intend to start with item 2 on today's order paper, house in committee on the bill concerning superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; then item No. 9, second reading of a bill to amend the Criminal Code; item 10, second reading of a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act; item number 13, second reading of a bill to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act; item number 12, second reading of a bill respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds; then item number 15, resolution concerning crop insurance; then item number 17, a resolution concerning farm credit; and item number 18, a resolution concerning maritime coal production assistance.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that sequence going to be followed on Tuesday, as well?

Mr. Green: I am not quite sure whether we shall finish all of that on Monday. If we do not we shall have to go on with it on Tuesday.

Mr. Pickersgill: In that order?

Mr. Green: Probably.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is very cautious.

At six o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put pursuant to standing order.
