Dominion Organization is Asked to Raise an Endowment Fund of $50,000.

Annual Banquet of Historical Society Held—Delegates Chosen for General Conference.

Special to The Standard. Sackville, June 17.—Election of delegates to the general conference and the annual banquet of the Historical Society were features of today's session of the Methodist conference. Ecclesiastics are no exceptions when it comes to interest in elections and there was an air of suppressed excitement as the balloting went on. Reception of encouraging reports continued.

Rev. Geo. A. Ross, secretary-treasurer of the general conference, reported receipts by districts as follows: St. John, $151.85; Fredericton, $74.45; Woodstock, $60.70; Chatham, $80.70; Sackville, $118.10; St. Stephen, $41.73; Charlottetown, $92.12; Summerside, $67.45; Total amount, $667.19. Expense account seventy-five cents remitted to general treasurer, $60.44.

The election of one minister and one layman, as members of the general board of missions, resulted as follows: Rev. Geo. Steel and J. N. Harvey.

Rev. Chas. Fleming, secretary-treasurer of the association fund, reported the amount raised by districts as follows: St. John, $247.61; Fredericton, $165; Woodstock, $78.89; Chatham, $89.45; Sackville, $241.91; St. Stephen, $67; Charlottetown, $288.50; Summerside, $149; total raised, $1367.81. ## SIR THOS. IN NOVA SCOTIA

C. P. R. President Given Warm Welcome At Digby And Yarmouth—Interested in Harbor And The S.S. Facilities.

Digby, N. S., June 17.—The C. P. R. special having aboard Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and the other C. P. R. officials reached Digby at 4.30 o'clock this afternoon. Aboard the special were General Manager Giffkins, Mechanical Supt. Yould and Track Master Murphy of the D. A. R. During their brief stay here, Dr. Jones, mayor of Digby, had a chat with Sir Thomas. At Annapolis Clarence Jameson, M. P. for Digby, joined the party and during the twenty mile ride to Digby by conference with Sir Thomas on matters of importance. When asked by your correspondent Mr. Jameson said he had nothing to give out regarding the meeting between him and the C. P. R. president. Their talk had been of a most casual nature.

Reaches Yarmouth. Yarmouth, June 17.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy's special train arrived at 7 o'clock and departed nine. Sir Thomas regretted his inability to furnish your correspondent with anything in the shape of news on the present occasion. The Dominion Atlantic he said was not yet in the possession of his company and not until it was he had nothing to say. The train was run from the station to the steambank wharf, where Augustus Cann, president of the Board of Trade, and G. Peacock, Baker pointed out the harbor condition. Sir Thomas was very much interested in what was told him but had nothing to say in reply as he is very well informed as to Yarmouth's position for landing passengers for the United States.

ROOSEVELT'S RETURN GIVES RISE TO POLITICAL RUMORS

Dee-lighted

Kaiserin Auguste, by Marconi telegraph to Sagaponek, L. I., June 18.—At 12.50 this morning the steamer Kaiserin Auguste Victoria on which Theodore Roosevelt is a passenger, was about 115 miles from the Ambrose channel lightship.

Owing to the heavy fog the vessel was proceeding at reduced speed, but she will pass Fire Island about four o'clock and to be abreast the Sandy Hook lightship at 6 a. m.

New York, N. Y., June 17.—At a quarter after eight tomorrow morning Theodore Roosevelt will be delivered into the hands of his fellow countrymen, barring the accidents Roosevelt's good luck has always dodged. He has been absent for nearly fifteen months.

Once the first private citizen of the country is under an American flag there will begin the national welcome planned for him.

Whatever the weather, the programme will be followed as announced, but the weather bureau prophesies clear skies.

The downtown press today was swelled by thousands of out of town visitors. Governors, United States senators, members of President Taft's cabinet, members of congress, political clubs and a host of individual pilgrims are here from every part of the country, even so far distant as Alaska.

The subway and elevated roads and surface lines have made preparations to handle the enormous crowds tomorrow.

The Roosevelt reception committee gave out today the names of those who, as Mrs. Roosevelt's guests, will occupy a private box with her during the speech making at the battery.

Dee-lighted

He takes no stock in the stories of petty jealousies among the committeees and is serene in the knowledge that his country is to do him honor.

Roosevelt still feels loyal in his friendship for President Taft, according to the statements of his friends, but there is a slight rift in the lute and his friendship for the President is not so warm as when the President was Secretary of War.

In explanation of Roosevelt's attitude, it is said that there are many things which have happened since he left for Africa which have wounded him deeply.

Roosevelt's position, his friends say is that President Taft has done many things which ordinarily disrupt close friendships. But, nevertheless, Roosevelt has no idea of attacking Taft. He thinks that President Taft means to do right, but has allowed himself to be misled.

The Pinchot-Ballinger controversy is not among Roosevelt's grievances against the President. Knowing Pinchot is a man given to impulsive, Roosevelt believes Pinchot might have reformed from within rather than from without.

There are a few things about the political situation of which Mr. Roosevelt is not kept informed through daily wireless bulletins.

According to the captain's present plans, the ship is due to arrive at quarantine Friday night and make ready for an early start to the harbor Saturday morning.

So far as known no messages from President Taft or any member of the cabinet has so far been received by the former president, nor has any word come from the big Republican leaders to him.

This has created considerable comment among Colonel Roosevelt's friends on the steamship.

Joint Funeral Of Victims Of Montreal Disaster To Be Held Under Auspices Of Typographical Union.

Montreal, Que., June 17.—The men employed by the city to delve in the ruins of the Herald building were taken on tonight and tomorrow morning a contractor engaged by the Herald company will take up the search for the four bodies known to be still entombed in the wreckage. But little more can be done until some of the heavy machinery is moved and this requires facilities which the city does not possess.

Of the twenty-eight bodies taken out all have been identified and claimed with one exception, that of a man. As the bodies last taken out were not so badly defaced as those first removed it is expected that when the others are recovered it will be possible to establish the identity of this unfortunate by means of elimination.

The bodies claimed today were those of May Butler, Rene Tittelhojn and Clement Bormann, leaving the four missing and the body awaiting identification those of John Wade, Gustave Lippo, John Cunningham, John Cloutier and Reuben Morrison.

The funeral of ten of the victims who were members of Typographical Union 176, will take place tomorrow. It will be a joint funeral, ten hearses being in the line. The inquest will be resumed in the morning and an attempt will be made to close it up tomorrow evening.

SIR R. B. FINLAY CONCLUDES AN 8-DAY SPEECH

British Case In Newfoundland Fisheries Dispute Closed Before Hague Tribunal—Austrian Professor President.

The Hague, June 17.—Sir Robert B. Finlay, whose speech occupied eight entire days, concluded today the presentation of the British contentions in the Newfoundland fisheries case between the United States and Great Britain.

Prof. Heinrich Lamach, of Austria, president, as president of the arbitration tribunal.

In the course of his speech Sir Robert contended that Great Britain contended that the United States claim that American fishermen were not amenable to the British colonial fishery regulations on the same grounds that French fishermen were not amenable to them prior to the treaty of 1904 on the so-called French shore of Newfoundland.

GRAND TRUNK SEEKS OUTLET AT BOSTON

Belief General That Railway Does Not Aim Altogether At Providence In Seeking To Enter American Territory.

Boston, June 17.—Although no official announcement has been made by the company's railway, men here believe that the Grand Trunk Railway intends coming to Boston as well as to Providence. It would be absurd, they say, for the Grand Trunk to work its way into this territory with such effort only to connect with a second rate port like Providence. There is reason also to believe that the Canadian Pacific is following with great care every move by the Grand Trunk looking to getting into Boston and its action in taking over the Dominion Atlantic is regarded as an attempt to offset the advantages the G. T. R. would obtain by Boston connections.

It is the expectation that the C. P. R. shortly will improve the D. A. R. trackage and in addition will put on much larger and finer steamships which will run between Boston and Digby instead of between Boston and Yarmouth.

Mr. R. L. Borden Addresses Enthusiastic Gathering at Aylmer on Transcontinental.

Cost More Than $200,000,000, Five Times the Estimate Furnished to Parliament.

Special to The Standard. Aylmer, Ont., June 17.—This thriving centre of the riding of East Elgin, gave Mr. R. L. Borden and Mr. Doherty a magnificent greeting today. The whole town was on feet and the final stopping place of the Western Ontario tour was made the occasion of remarkable demonstration of affection for and loyalty to the Conservative leader. The chief feature of some days of the meeting was the reception given to Judge Doherty, who fairly shared the honors with Mr. Borden.

Mr. Doherty has proved himself during his first week of the tour to be possessed of remarkable ability in handling an audience, his Irish wit has taken hugely with the crowds and today maintained the reputation he has already won, of a man who can express sound views in a logical way, whose criticism is of the logical rather than of the muck rake order and who brings with him a message of loyalty and love from the province of Quebec. The hot wave which has followed the Borden party since Monday last continued and today was again enthusiastically remarked to the enjoyment of the crowd that before his onslaught upon the province the skies were chill and dull and the rain fell continually, but to and behind, as soon as the time came for the first meeting the clouds were swept away and the sunshine instead of rain showered the land.

Mr. Borden Effective.

But today's meeting was not only remarkable for the large attendance, there being 3,000 people gathered in Aylmer town park, but for the masterly manner in which Mr. Borden dealt with the gross incompetency of the Laurier government, his theme today was the lack of common business ability displayed in the Grand Trunk Pacific undertaking, but he prefaced this with a masterly general criticism of the policy of the administration and of the woeful lack of common every day efficiency exhibited by Laurier and company. His peroration was a striking one and was cheered to the echo.

Other speakers were Dr. Pyne, member of education in the provincial government and Mr. Crothers, M. P. for West Elgin, who made a rousing speech on the Sawdust wharf and the St. Peter's reserve scandals. The meeting ground was a blaze of bunting and mottoes amongst which were greetings to the party and to the leader. The next meeting is in Niagara on Monday. The first work has ended in a whirlwind of enthusiasm. In speaking of the government's record in connection with the Transcontinental Railway, Mr. Borden said in part:—

The project of constructing a National Transcontinental Railway was initiated by the government in the session of 1903 and amended against the interests of the country in 1904. The Conservative party has never receded from the position which it then took that the contract bound the country to supply nine-tenths of the financial assistance necessary for the construction of the road it would have been infinitely better to supply the other tenth and own the whole line including the profitable prairie section.

To what extent is the purpose of the undertaking being fulfilled and how far have the pledges of the government with respect to its cost been carried out. The statute providing for the construction of this railway declared that one of its main objects was to develop commerce through its Canadian ports. Certain clauses were inserted in the agreement which, according to the intention of the government would accomplish that purpose. Those clauses were binding only upon the Grand Trunk Pacific and did not in any way bind or concern the Grand Trunk Railway. But under the terms of the relevant statutes and accompanying agreements the entire capital stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, amounting to $25,000,000 has been vested in the Grand Trunk Company for the nominal consideration of $200,000.

Grand Trunk In Control.

THE GRAND TRUNK COMPANY, THEREFORE, ABSOLUTELY CONTROLS THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC COMPANY, DICTATES ITS POLICY AND GOVERNS ITS OPERATION ALTHOUGH THE GRAND TRUNK COMPANY ITSELF IS IN NO WAY BOUND BY ANY OBLIGATION TO CARRY TRAFFIC THROUGH CANADIAN PORTS. The Grand Trunk Company has enormous interests in Portland in the United States, and it is acquiring further great interests at Providence, Rhode Island. It will be cheaper for the Grand Trunk Company to carry traffic to Portland or Providence than to St. John or Halifax. Its business interest will impel it to take that course. The recent acquisition by the Grand Trunk Company of a line

TAWNEY

BY GOUVERNEUR MORRIS.

After two hours of the third degree the prisoner broke down and confessed, as follows: It wasn't the done it; it was father and doctor. Crops failed too often to suit father, and folks didn't fall often enough to suit Doctor. Doctor was a wise man. He ought to have had a city practice; would have had only he loved his liquor. Used to swear off, and keep sober for a week or so; then he'd drive out to our place, and put his horse and buggy in the barn, and him and father and me'd get full together and keep it up all night. Father's maitin Tawney used to have her milk and whisky, too; but it never put her to sleep. She'd sneak out of the house and have a look round, and maybe holler some at the moon, and then come back for another tittle. First off, Doctor would sit up and talk like a gentleman; and all the liquor did was to keep him going. He talked fine—quick and bright. It was worth a headache to listen to him. But when the stuff began to take hold of him—you could always tell it was workin' when he began to look merry—then him and father'd put their heads closer together, and they'd take up the neighbors, men and women, and tear their characters to pieces. And Doctor, of course, had plenty of hints given him in trust, and he'd cut with them till it seemed to me, listenin' and noddin', that nobody was good, and that them that was wickedest got furthest, and was most looked up to. About midnight—for once he was started Doctor poured the liquor into him faster and faster—you couldn't understand what he said. It was all words, comin' out swift and angry, and all mixed and sild into each other. And he'd push his hands through his hair till it stood up like a patch of oats. The next stage he couldn't talk at all, and split the liquor all over his clothes. And sometimes he'd have just enough sense left to fall down on a bed somewhere, and sometimes he'd pass away where he was, and not come to enough to go to bed till daylight. Doctor and me always sleep' it off, or most of it; but father always got up at six and fed the animals, Tawney treadin' on his heels, and then sat on the piazza in the sun, Tawney lying at his feet, till I was up and able to get breakfast. Once while Doctor and me was a sleep a tramp see father sittin' in his chair on the piazza, and thought he looked kind of helpless, and come into the yard and says, "How about that drink, old man?" Father lays his hand on Tawney's head to keep her quiet. The tramp he couldn't see Tawney because the piazza rail was solid boards, and he come a little closer and says, "Come now, you old corpse, don't keep me standin' in the heat. I want a drink bad," he says, "and you can lend me a few dollars to carry me along." Father don't say nothing. He just sits and looks off into the orchard—all dead apple trees—all the way from the house to the top of the hill; wonderin' why the scale killed all his fruit trees, and s'posed his brother's over in Wolverson. The tramp, he looks up the road and down, and, not seein' anyone, he lays one hand on the piazza rail, pulls out a knife, puts up one foot, and starts to come over. Then father, still lookin' in'to the dead orchard, says: "Take him, Tawney," and a minute later he gets up and looks down over the rail, and says: "Let him be." When it come up in court, the tramp said he'd only asked polite for leave to drink out of the well, and he showed how Tawney had tore his neck, and wept and carried on. But father told the straight story, and the judge believed him and sent the tramp to the workhouse. One night the doctor come drivin' down the road and said he had a scheme to oppose to father, and he said we mustn't have more than a drop till we'd talked it over, because it needed quite some fixin's. The first part of the scheme was for father to pour his life as heavy as he could. Then father was to die and be buried. Then he was to let him out of the grave, hide him, collect the insurance—that was my job—and divide—one half for father and a quarter each for Doctor and me. It didn't look good to me at first. The part I didn't like was goin' in the night, back on the hill where the family's all buried, and lettin' father put his grave. But I didn't make that my reason. I said we'd be fools to do it, and get caught sure. Father got mad at me, and begun to lash me with his tongue, and he got out of his chair and come over and shook his fist in my face. Tawney, she came with him, her hair bristling on her neck, and growled at me. "You ain't worth a tin pan," father said, "you fat chicken-necked sloth. For two cents I'll sic the dog on ye." Tawney, she growled and stuck her muzzle against my knee, and I give in. I was worse scared of a live Tawney than all the dead corpses in the county. She weren't friends with anyone but father. Doctor was scared of her, too, and no matter how drunk he'd get, he'd never sas father. The only thing father loved was money, and he'd no sooner heard the doctor's scheme than he was hot for it. He didn't mind the idea of being shut up in a grave any more than a rooster minds being shut up with a lot of hens. He wanted to take out the insurance, die and come to life, and collect, all before he went to bed. But the Doctor—he was talking bright and fast by now—said no, we must get slow. Father must get in have a lingering illness, and not die till the doctor had done all he could to save him. They laughed like a couple of lunatics, and I laughed some too. "How do I know they'll insure me," said father. "Maybe we'd better insure Jake, here. I tell you the liquor went clean out through his toes that night his father was only jokin'. He knew I hadn't the nerve to go through with that end of it." "They'll insure you fast enough," says the doctor. "A man that's as drunk as you are and don't show it's bound to be sound as a bell. If it weren't for that dog there I'd listen to your heart and lungs now." "Quiet, Tawney," says father, and opens his vest, and Doctor thumps him and listens, and laughs. "How old are you?" he asks. "I'm sixty-three," says father. "Well," says the Doctor, "you're younger than many a scamp twenty I prophesy," says he, "that you'll live

Vanderbilt Engaged to Dollar Princess

London, June 17.—The reported engagement of Alfred G. Vanderbilt and Miss Lily Elsie, the most popular of English musical comedy actresses, is taken seriously by the many who have noticed the former friend of Mrs. Rutz, who committed suicide last October, because she thought Vanderbilt no longer cared for her, dancing attendance upon the star of the "Dollar Princess." Miss Elsie made her debut in London in "A Chinese Honey-moon," and has since starred in several of the most successful London musical comedies. She is now the feature of the "Dollar Princess." "Can't tell," said Doctor. "I've a lyin'-in case, and I'm expecting to be sent for any time. Might keep me all day. But I'll do my best. What's that?" I listened a minute. "It's Tawney howlin'," I said. "Sounds like a lost soul," said Doctor, with a shiver. "She guesses we've done something to father," I said. "Well," said he, but he was white, "let her howl. It's what they call full honer howlin', you fool. I said, 'I can stand it myself, I'm off.' 'I don't know as I can stand it,' I said. Miss Thompson came, and the under taker to measure father for his coffin. I was going before morning, Jake. Or, and as soon as I could I carried her a plate of meat, and flung it to her over the top of the box stall. But she wouldn't look at the meat, and the faithful hound howlin' against the walls of the stall as high as she could jump. But it was no use. "If father wasn't comin' to life by and by," I said, "I'd get my gun and shoot him down with pomatum, and you'll be bound." She was frothing at the mouth, and biting at the planks, trying to eat her way out like a rat. And I didn't stay long talking to her. "I wish it was poisoned," and I went back to the house and hung about while they were attending to father. About noon Miss Thompson called to me, and she had a look at him. She'd dressed him in his navy blue suit, the one he was married in. He said she remembered as well as if it had been yesterday. And she'd smoothed his hair with her hands on his breast, with a prayer-book in 'em. She said as how at the last minute she'd step up to the coffin and get the prayer-book so it shouldn't be wanted. "You're father," she said, "considering his age. Ain't that smile heavenly. I didn't know if you'd want him to wear his brown morino socks—think you would, Jake. You needn't worry, Jake. I'll make it stay down somehow. There's ways and ways. A touch of pomatum on the eyeball will often hold. The cold—no, no, no. I don't suppose you've a drop of whiskey in the house? What with being called early, and burrin' all the way in the sun, I feel kind of spent. There now, just to cover the bottom of the glass, step into the hall. What I always say, it is, it don't look well to be seen takin' a dram in the same room with a corpse. Ain't that Tawney I hear howlin'?" "I do hope now your poor father's gone, you'll get rid of Tawney, too." Neighbors and folks from town dropped in during the day to have a talk at father, and about sundown Doctor showed up with a man from the insurance company, but they didn't stay with the corpse more than two minutes, and Doctor signed some papers, and the undertaker brought father was dead and dead, and a request for a burial permit; and he sent me to town to arrange with the minister to come next day at noon, and read the service at five o'clock. Address Doctor showed up in detail after another just as sad and careful as if father was really dead, and he took the insurance inspector into the kitchen and gave him a drink and chartered with him and made friends with him. But I was in an awful state. It was lucky though that it was me that acted nervous, because folks thought it was grief and right and natural. When I came back to town the minister's Doctor gave me something to steady my nerves and make me sleep. And he made me go to bed early, and took a lot of trouble, and laid out the clothes I was to wear to the funeral, and told me to eat a big breakfast and not be scared. All the time he

SAINT JOHN, SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 18, 1910.

PROGRESS ON THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

It was naturally to be expected that the Telegraph would be deeply pained to learn that the engineers working on the Grand Trunk Pacific do not share its confident prediction that trains will be running before next spring between Levis and Moncton. That the Standard should refuse to swallow without question the still more amazing statement of Mr. Hays, that this section of the road would be in operation next fall, is apparently an even greater source of annoyance. All such doubters of the Telegraph brands as "kickers," perhaps to retain the alliteration, and yet add a touch of that variety which is always charming, the Times in its turn roundly condemns them as "knockers."

It has so long been the habit of Mr. Pugsley's organs to indulge in flights of fancy in order to keep pace with the predictions of the Minister of Public Works, that it is little wonder they fail to understand why other and more independent journals prefer to conduct their reasoning on the more solid basis of cold facts.

After referring to Mr. Hays' statement that the trains of the Grand Trunk Pacific would be running through the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick next fall, the Telegraph remarks:

"These fearful tidings were contained in a despatch which The Standard received, and it was confronted with the necessity of printing them, but lest its readers might think that The Standard somehow endorsed these evidences of progress, or at least did not resent them, the Conservative Journal hastily got into telephone communication, or says it did, with certain nameless engineers employed on the new Transcontinental, and made them say that Mr. Hays was altogether too optimistic in his forecast. It is difficult to understand what purpose The Standard hopes to serve by resorting to such tactics."

In the first place The Standard sought for and obtained the statement from Mr. Hays through its Montreal correspondent in order to have something definite to place before the readers of this journal. It may be added, with all candor, that the Telegraph's announcement of the previous day had a Pugsleyian tone to it which aroused suspicion. Mr. Hays went one better than the Telegraph. The Standard was under no necessity of printing the statement of the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but it did print it, and, because the statement appeared too optimistic, inquiry as to the actual condition of the road through this province was made of engineers engaged on the work of construction, which is following the usual practice, we believe, among newspapers desiring to give their readers all sides to a question.

The engineers were not "made" to say anything, the Telegraph notwithstanding. They were asked a simple question, "whether the work through New Brunswick was sufficiently advanced to justify the belief that trains would be running through the province next fall." The engineers, who are "nameless" because they asked, for obvious reasons, not to be quoted, told The Standard emphatically that the road would not be in running order for trains for another twelve months at least. In confirmation of this view it was pointed out that, among other obstacles to an earlier completion, the superstructure of the bridge at Great Salmon River had not been commenced, and that it would take a year, at least, to erect the 7,000 tons of steel to be used in its construction.

The Standard published the statement of Mr. Hays and the statements of the engineers. They fail to agree, and this journal leans towards the belief that the engineers, who have no axes to grind, know best whereof they speak. The Telegraph finds it difficult to understand what purpose The Standard hopes to serve by resorting to such tactics. The Standard made an effort to arrive at the truth. That is why its course is so incomprehensible to the Telegraph.

NEW INDUSTRIES BY PRACTICAL METHODS.

Recently in these columns the suggestion put forward by the advertising committee of the Board of Trade for the appointment of a trade commissioner who would devote his energies to securing new industries and act as a publicity agent for St. John was referred to, and some of the advantages which would result from this policy were briefly outlined. The Board of Trade of Nelson, B. C., appears to have arrived at the same conclusion as the local board—that the time has arrived when funds for publicity work should no longer be contributed by the Board of Trade and by voluntary subscribers, and the city government is now being asked to supplement these funds by a contribution from the treasury.

In support of this movement the Daily News of Nelson points out that a city should be run like a well managed business. "For a business to be well managed," asks the News, "is it sufficient to avoid waste and extravagance, and to see that good value is got for all money paid out? Or is this merely the negative side? Is something more required, is there a positive side to good business management? Should there be some enterpriser, should something be done to increase the value of its assets and to augment its sources of revenue?"

"Most cities now employ commissioners to secure industries or to get settlers for the territory they serve. If by making an expenditure of that sort a city can add to its wealth, population and assessment, so as to obtain a more than equal increase in civic revenue, would it be good business or bad business to decline to make that expenditure?"

"What taxpayer is there who would not benefit by an increase in the trade of the city, in the opportunities it presents, in the market value of its real estate? Is it doubted that the bringing in of settlers with capital, to say nothing of the bringing in of industries, has the effect of causing such increases?"

"Experience is a good teacher. The cities which have engaged in such work continue to engage in it. They would hardly do so if their taxpayers found the experiment unprofitable. If the reverse had been the case there might be more reason for declining to do likewise.

"Publicity is hardly a full description of the work required. What is meant is the work of bringing in settlers and capital. Publicity comes in only as a part of that work and the kind of publicity wanted is not the random diffusion of information, a sort of sowing of bread upon the waters, but the specific bringing of definite information to the proper individuals.

"Some kinds of business in the city will benefit more directly and immediately than others; it is right that they should add to the funds supplied by the city. But all taxpayers will benefit directly or indirectly and it will pay them to do their part also."

Nelson is more particularly interested in obtaining settlers for the fruit lands of the Kootenays and in this respect differs from St. John. But that the citizens also have a keen appreciation of the advantage of practical methods to secure new industries is very evident.

EDUCATION.

In an interview with The Standard the other day, C. Winter Brown, speaking from a manufacturer's standpoint, made some criticisms of the public school system which deserve the consideration of the school authorities and public generally. No doubt Mr. Brown would be prepared to qualify his statement that the main reason why children arriving at the age of fourteen years, exhibit a tendency to rebel against the common school educational process may be found in the fact that the schools do not really teach. Certainly the school teachers do teach in a very real sense, and more especially in mathematical subjects.

At the same time Mr. Brown's contention contains a large measure of truth. Many of us whose school-days are not too far behind to be forgotten altogether, have a vivid and somewhat resentful impression that our chief activities were confined to the work of memorizing facts, very ineffectively synthesized, and, so far as we have been able to see, without any particular bearing upon the real problems of life. No doubt we have forgotten all the labor and patience the teachers expended upon us, but we still remember that the educational process was in many respects conducted on the phonographic principle—that we were obliged to stand up and, at the behest of the teacher, register many impressions acquired in our studies outside of the school.

And certainly it cannot be denied that the "cramping" process, as it is called, is a characteristic mode of public school instruction—a process, which, especially when it deals with dry facts isolated from all relation to economic or social ends, is coming to be recognized as a painful and hence an injurious process to those who are subjected to it, as well as ineffectual in reaching the end of instruction.

Of late years there has been a good deal of criticism of the public school system, directed mainly at the processes of instruction employed in the higher grades. With reason, it has been argued that the courses of instruction provided for children of fourteen years of age or older, begin to diverge very broadly from any positive relation to the vital functions of the masses of the people—that at this stage the courses of instruction are manifestly arranged more with a view to preparing young people for professional pursuits than to fit them for the common employments of life.

Like all other institutions, those of an educational character, still carry the handicap of traits and characteristics stamped upon them by the age in which they originated. Originally education was considered an accomplishment; the upper classes, whose position depended mainly on the control of the land and the political power, had no disposition to apply their educational acquirements to industrial or commercial purposes. In England, among certain classes, it is still the custom to look down upon the people engaged in useful employments.

But with the growth of democracy, the progress of industry and commerce, the transfer of political power to the people, establishing new social relations, and making necessary new social qualifications, educational facilities have been extended to the masses, and great results have been expected from our system of free schools. Unfortunately in Canada, the inertia inevitable in a sparse and scattered population, has made us slow to recognize the advantage of introducing into our public school system, aims and ideals more in accord with the modern spirit of progress than the traditional purposes of education.

No doubt we are beginning to realize the importance of the manual training system, and to make provision for its wider adoption, but we have not attempted to effect an adaptation of our public school system to the requirements of practical life on anything like the same scale or with the same thoroughness as Germany, or some other countries, which could be mentioned. In this country, indeed, the colleges have made greater efforts to provide education of a practical character than our public schools, and, although in these higher institutions instruction has been specialized on scientific rather than industrial lines, their work in training young men qualified to apply scientific knowledge to industrial processes, has exercised such a beneficial influence on industry that attention is being directed more and more to the possibilities of technical education of the secondary and elementary grades.

And there is another important consideration that might be invoked as an argument in favor of the extension and development of the manual training system, or some other form of technical education, in connection with the public schools. At the age when youth begins to find attendance at school especially irksome and years to run away and become a pirate or Indian fighter, it is undergoing an important physiological change—a change which involves an access of vitality that demands vent in more intelligent forms of activity than the instructive play actions of the child.

At this period, too, the instinct of workmanship demands a more intelligent mode of expression than that found in making mud pies, or dressing dolls, and to many boys and girls it becomes a positive hardship to be compelled to bend over their desks and books six hours or so a day. In the rural districts, this exuberance of energy is worked off, this instinct of workmanship finds more or less pleasurable gratification in doing the chores about the home, but in cities, where the chores are few, and playgrounds limited, the boys frequently work off their superfluity of spirits and energies in ways that bring them in contact with the police. And too often they emerge from such an experience in a rebellious mood against the conventions of society, and eager for vengeance.

Certainly it would be a great advantage from a social as well as an industrial point of view, if the public school authorities would hasten the development of an education system designed to afford pleasurable gratification for the instinct of workmanship as well as to provide an outlet for the exuberant energies of youth passing the stage of puberty.

The Times triumphantly points to the Grand Trunk Pacific having acquired a site for terminals in Courtenay Bay as something greatly to the credit of Mr. Pugsley. If we recollect rightly the property was bought from a brother-in-law of the Minister of Public Works, which was a most happy combination of circumstances, but this does not alter the fact that the Transcontinental was bound to secure an outlet at St. John, and that in Courtenay Bay was the only site available.

MOTHERS OF THE LAND.

For the mothers of the land,
 Who have been to us as are
 Beacon lights on every hand;
 When has shone no moon, or star;
 When grim peril stood before;
 Who has been the nation's stay;
 Who have proved its strength, and more,
 Lo! Its pride and gladness, yea,
 For the mothers of the land,
 God, we thank thee!

For the mothers of the land,
 Who, far more than gun, or sword,
 Lo! have been our bulwark and
 Made us strong in deed and word;
 In whom we have faith that, thus,
 Time shall fail us not—that we,
 While the mothers are with us,
 Safe from dangers all, shall be;
 For the mothers of the land—
 God, we thank thee!

For the mothers of a land
 Splendid in supremacy;
 Gracious mothers who command,
 Lo! the nation's destiny;
 Who, through love and sacrifice,
 Shape for us the dawning years;
 Guardians, yea, beyond all price,
 God, we thank thee through glad tears!
 God, we thank thee!
 —Geo. Newell Lovejoy.

ROOSEVELTISMS.

To say that the thrifless, the lazy, the vicious, the incapable ought to have the reward given to those who are farsighted, capable and upright, is to say what is not true and cannot be true.

Let us take into account the actual facts of life, and not be misled into any proposal for achieving the millenium, for re-creating the golden age, until we have subjected it to hardheaded examination.
 There is no greater need today than the need to keep ever in mind the cleavage between right and wrong, between good citizenship and bad citizenship, runs at right angles to and not parallel with the lines of leavage between class and class, between occupation and occupation.

GOOD STORIES

His path was uncertain, though a friend had him by the arm. He began a Spanish love-song, but in the midst of it lapsed into silence. Then he extended his free arm, raised a thoughtful forefinger, regarded it for a few moments with knitted brows, and then unburdened himself of this maxim:
 "Nar, never do today what you ought to have done yesterday."
 The brow relaxed, the arm fell,
 Again silence.

THEN IT HAPPENED

(Our Dally Discontinued Story.)
 At college Hazel Hackenschmidt used to be a little athlete. That was before she was 40, fat and married.
 When the car came to her street
 she signalled the conductor with a graceful gesture and gathered up her parcels to alight.
 "Don't get off de car backward," cautioned the courteous traction employe.
 "Can you kidding and let the kyah proceed," replied Hazel contemptu-sly ignoring his advice.

 "Don't overestimate your capacity especially when you are looking for trouble."
 "Jennie, you musn't play in the front yard on Sunday."
 "Yes, ma, but isn't it Sunday in the back yard, too?"

"My wife threatened if I didn't get her a new hat she'd go home to her mother."
 "Why didn't you let her?"
 "Her railroad fare would cost more than the hat."

Wife (reproachfully)—You forget how you once breathed your love in my ear and promised that my every wish should be gratified.
 Hub—"No I don't; but I wish now I'd followed the hygienic rule of keeping my mouth shut while breathing."

"Piker is certainly a stupid man."
 "How's that?"
 "Haven't you heard? He was accepted as a juror in a murder trial
 without any question."

A Modest Pair.
 I know a little country lass
 Who blushes very red
 When passing through the garden where
 Sweet William lies in bed
 Her brother is about the same,
 A very modest lad,
 He won't go near a pond for fear
 He'd see the Lilly pad.

WHEAT MARKET.

Chicago, June 17.—Belief that the spring wheat crop is facing the most serious conditions due to black rust clutched many speculators today. Light showers and promise of more did not greatly alter the conviction of the majority. Fine harvest weather in the winter wheat section received little notice and neither did the fact that Kansas and Nebraska are expected to produce more than was thought possible three months ago.
 The market closed 7-8 to 1-1 3/4 a 1-4 higher than last night's figures. Corn finished 3-8 to 1-2 up and oats 3-8 to 1-2 to 5-8. Last prices for provisions were so, higher to 10c lower.

 Washington, June 17.—Revolution in Nicaragua is spreading throughout the country. Word has reached the State Department that the revolution is manifesting itself in parts of the republic other than those controlled by Estrada. According to advice from Considerable manifestations of a gibbon, a British veteran of the Crimean war, who took part in the bat-

THREE WEEKS SIMPLE TREATMENT CURES DRUNKENNESS
 It is no longer necessary to take an expensive, prolonged or dangerous treatment for dipsomania, only to find after all that the old habit soon comes back.
 The Dr. John M. Mackay Treatment is moderate in cost, it has repeatedly cured in 21 days. It does not depress the heart or upset the stomach like other treatments, and requires no hypodermic or other dangerous application.
 In a few hours after beginning the treatment, strange as it may appear, the patient not only loses all taste for intoxicating liquors of any kind, but actually conceives for them a feeling of repulsion.
 In a few days the nervous system is fortified against the need of drugs or stimulants, the appetite for good plain food increases, and the bodily organs begin to function properly.
 At the close of the three weeks, the patient feels like a new man, full of ambition and self-respect. Nothing but wilful perversity will cause him to re-lapse, and the most ordinary moral restraint will keep him on the right track.
 If some friend or relative is afflicted, send at once for full particulars, rates
 and reports from officials, cured patients, etc.

When you buy Paint, get the real thing. It is extravagant and foolish to buy and pay for paint, and instead of paint, get a mixture containing cheap adulterants. Pure paint—the real thing—spreads easier, covers more surface (and covers it better) and wears longer than adulterated paint. Pure paint is far more economical to use. Pure paint gives the handsomest finish. Pure paint insures you against paint "troubles"—the cracking, the peeling, scaling, etc. that comes from the use of impurities. "English" Liquid Paint is pure paint—made from 70% pure white lead (Brandram's B.B. Genuine) 30% pure zinc white, pure linseed oil, pure turpentine and dryer. RAPID PROGRESS MADE IN THE COOMBS TRIAL

Crown Case Was Closed Last Night and Coombs' Fate May be in the Hands of the Jury by Noon -- Three Witnesses Examined at Yesterday's Session.

The case of the King vs. Harry Leslie Coombs was commenced before Judge Forbes and a jury in the County Court yesterday morning at ten o'clock. When the court arose last evening at five o'clock the crown had concluded their case and the defence had just commenced theirs. The features of yesterday's proceedings were the absence of tilts between opposing counsel, usually one of the characteristics of criminal and civil trials in St. John, and the rapidity with which the case is proceeding notwithstanding the strong technical objections taken by the counsel for the defence. In less than four hours the jury were sworn and the crown had concluded its case. Three witnesses for the prosecution testified but the most important witness was Alexander Warrell, one of the investigating committee members, called by the directors to probe the affairs of the St. John office. It is probable that the case will go to the jury at noon, however, if it does not, his honor has announced that he will sit until it is finished and an afternoon session is not improbable. Judge Forbes presided and Attorney General Hazen appeared for the crown. D. Mullin, K.C., appeared for the accused.

When the court opened at ten o'clock His Honor requested the Sheriff to take charge of the accused, his bail having expired, as the grand jury had indicted him. Mr. Mullin asked to have the bail renewed. His Honor was of the opinion that the accused would provide the bail he increased. Eleven out of the twenty-one members of the petit jury answered to the roll call. The Sheriff phoned the delinquents. Mr. Mullin—With regard to the first count upon which the jury returned a true bill, ask the honor order the crown to furnish particulars. Mr. Mullin acted from a section of the code and quoted an authority in support of his argument. The Attorney General said that the particulars were sufficiently set out in the depositions. His Honor agreed with the learned Attorney General. Commenting on the absence of the jurors, His Honor observed that the Attorney General will have to introduce legislation for drastic punishment to the delinquents. Mr. Hazen said that St. John was the only county which contained disobedient jurors. He intimated that legislation would be introduced to meet cases such as this. The Attorney General moved for trial. On the indictment being read Coombs in a strong, clear voice, pleaded not guilty. After some difficulty the following were empanelled to try the accused: Francis Walker, Ernest C. Wilson, Thomas McMaster, Norman L. McGloan, James Wilson, Michael J. McGrath, Arthur J. Nagle, Walter H. Bell, Norman Hornbrook, James W. Morrison, Fred R. Patterson and Charles T. Nevins.

The Attorney General briefly outlined the case for the prosecution. After reading the indictments he referred to the absence of Richard Daniel Isaacs, and said that the Crown has been unable to find out his present whereabouts. Mr. Warrell Sworn. Alexander Warrell, a promoter, and the committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the company when the directors became suspicious that things were not straight in the St. John office, was the first witness. Mr. Mullin contended that there was no evidence of the company being incorporated. Mr. Hazen offered in evidence the letters of incorporation. Mr. Mullin raised a number of strong technical objections. His Honor allowed the letters to be put in evidence. Mr. Hazen said he was present at a meeting of the directors of the company on April 14, 1910, at St. John, at which meeting witness represented the stockholders. Mr. Warrell was appointed on committee to investigate the affairs of the company. The minute book of the company was allowed in evidence subject to objection. The crown produced a cheque book containing a number of statements, news of which were read in court. One was dated October, 1909 and related to a transaction between one B. R. Madden, of Boston, and Isaacs, the sum involved being $4,000. The cheque corresponding to the stub was produced and showed that it was given to Isaacs and not to Madden. Another cheque dated November last for $1,750 paid to Madden for asbestos lots. The check was produced and was signed by Coombs. It was in his favor and Madden's name was not written on it. The cash book was referred to and witness read transactions involving $4,000 and $1,750 paid to B. R. Madden for "railway equipment," not for "asbestos lots." Witness said these entries were in the hand-writing of the accused. The Disappearing Locomotive. A receipt found in the office dated October, 1909, purported to be signed by B. R. Madden, Old South Building, Boston, for a locomotive, $5,500 and 15 cars at $2,400. Witness said that on April last he went to Sherbrooke and to the mine and could find no locomotive or the cars, or learn of any having been there. There was about a mile and a quarter of track laid. Witness then went to Boston and did not find B. R. Madden. The janitor of the Old South Building and the rent collector and mail distributor said there was no such man as Madden there. Witness saw the chief inspector of police and could not learn anything of a Mr. Madden. The bank book was put in evidence and four thousand dollars was charged against the Asbestos Company on October 27th, and on November 20th, $1,750 charged against the company.

R. D. Isaacs was called managing director, Coombs took part in the directors' meeting and voted and worked in the office. To Mr. Mullin witness said that at the company's inception he sold the par value of five dollars. He obtained this share on April 15th, at a meeting of the company when he was appointed one of the investigating committee. Witness was then subjected to a cross-examination as to what took place at the meeting held on Wednesday. Adjournment was made until half past two. Afternoon Session. The court was kept waiting some time owing to the absence of Juror Charles T. Nevins. At 3.45, fifteen minutes after the hour set for resuming the case, Mr. Nevins was announced. His Honor—"You will have to do better than this, Mr. Nevins." Juror Nevins—"Well, my own business needs some attention." Mr. Mullin—"Understand that you cannot do two things at once. When you are required here you must not allow your business to interfere." The cross-examination of Alexander Warrell was continued by Mr. Mullin. Counsel for the defence cross-examined the witness as to the proceedings of the recent meetings held by the directors. His Honor ruled that such evidence was irrelevant. Mr. Mullin—"Was not criminal action threatened against the present treasury stock, which they allotted to themselves?" Witness—"I do not know." Mr. Mullin—"What remuneration did you receive or expect to receive for acting in the capacity of one of the investigating committee?" Witness—"I had no understanding whatever." Mr. Mullin—"Did not Mr. Coderre promise you a block of stock?" Witness—"No." Mr. Mullin—"Did you take legal advice before commencing proceedings against Coombs?" Witness—"Yes." Mr. Mullin—"Who did you see?" Witness—"E. P. Raymond." Mr. Mullin—"Isn't it a fact that Coderre was the most active man in laying information against Coombs?" Witness—"We were all active." Mr. Mullin—"If the Quebec contingent was not very active, but this was objected to and the objection was sustained. Re-examined by the attorney general, witness said he did not know where Isaacs was, he had not seen him since his arrest. This concluded Mr. Warrell's evidence. The Auditor Testifies. Paul Blanchet, of Rothesay, an auditor, was the next witness. Witness said he was retained by L. P. D. Tilley to audit the books of the company. He gave evidence that in speaking to Coombs concerning two cheques amounting to $5750, one for $400 and the other for $1750, the defendant had told him that Isaacs had given the money to Madden. The voucher for these cheques only showed $5700. Coombs promised to explain to witness why the balance of the $50 Coombs did not know but would tell him later on, Coombs never gave the explanation. Witness said salary was drawn weekly, he did not know who had charge of the books, but thought Healy had. Cross-examined by Mr. Mullin witness said Coombs paid him for his services with a company cheque. Miss Edith Cummings gave her next witness. Witness was employed with the Asbestos Co. up to the last of April. Witness said that Isaacs, Healey and Coombs had charge of the office but that Coombs gave her most of the work. It was customary when Healey and Isaacs went out of town for them to leave blank checks for use in the business. These checks would have to be endorsed by Coombs. Witness identified the writing in the body of two checks as that of Coombs. The witness also had recollection of having seen it, but she had no knowledge of a man called B. R. Madden having been in the office on business while she was there. She remembered writing one letter for Banks to Madden. She heard that it came back. Witness identified the writing in the cash book as that of Coombs. Cross-examined by Mr. Mullin witness said that Isaacs was the boss of the office as he was vice-president and general manager. The court took recess for a few minutes pending the arrival of A. P. Hazen, manager of the Bank of B. N. A. After waiting sometime and Mr. Hazen not appearing, the attorney general said the case for the Crown was closed. Mr. Mullin Outlines Defence. Mr. Mullin asked the right of calling Mr. Hazen which was granted. Mr. Mullin contended that the crown had not made out a case on the first and second counts. They had not proved conspiracy as alleged and he therefore moved that these counts be withdrawn from the jury. Referring to the last two counts charging the accused with making false entries in the books of the company, the counsel for the defence said that the indictment charged Coombs with falsifying the books between October 26 and November 1st. There was absolutely no evidence that entries were made between those dates. The attorney general contented that proof of the conduct of the defendant was sufficient. The parties need not come together. Mr. Hazen contended that there also was sufficient evidence to warrant the case being sent to the jury. His Honor ruled accordingly. Mr. Mullin outlined the case of the defence to the jury.

AGREES WITH PLAN OF MONCTON CLUB

Canadian Club Endorses Idea of Wider Celebration of Dominion Day and Names Committee for Next Year.

At a meeting of the Canadian Club yesterday afternoon Frank Casey, R. J. Walsh and James B. Daly were elected to membership and several others were proposed. A communication from the Canadian Club of Moncton relating to a wider observance of Dominion Day was received, and while the club decided that it was too late to make any arrangements this year the secretary was instructed to write a letter of congratulation to the Moncton Club and endorse their idea. Rev. G. A. Kuhring and Dr. R. F. Quigley were appointed a committee to consider the possibility of a celebration for next year. A committee was also appointed to solicit caterers for the club as the King's Daughters who look after the catering at present have given the work up. No speakers will be brought here by the club during July but there are several who will come later, among them being the Bishop of London and Henri Bourassa. Not date has yet been set for their visit.

Will Wage Bloodless War.

Today the stalwart defenders of the City of the Loyalists, will engage in a bloodless war upon each other, and the town will be in a state of military turmoil. The direct cause of the disturbance will be the holding of a "field" or "tactical" day by the 62nd regiment. The men will line up at the barracks at 2.30 in the afternoon. Three companies of the Fusiliers under command of Major Perley will be despatched to defend the city against the attack of a division commanded by Major Frost. The attack will endeavor by strategy to find a weak spot in the line surrounding the city, and effect an entrance. Although nothing definite can be learned of the course mapped out by the defence the proceedings will doubtless prove interesting. In opening he scored the tactics of the Quebec stockholders, which he termed the "Quebec contingent." Continuing he said that this contingent got hold of convenient tools appropriately called the "investigating committee," and these men did their dirty work. The "Quebec Gang." Mr. Mullin said the defence would prove by resolutions that Isaacs' exploits were backed by the Quebec contingent. "We will show that Isaacs was authorized by this gang to purchase Asbestos lots. "We will show that in the ordinary course of business this money was paid to Isaacs. The counsel for the defence sarcastically referred to the action of the Quebec men in receiving Isaacs to their bosoms after that man had been committed for trial on a serious charge in Quebec. In conclusion Mr. Mullin termed this a vindictive prosecution of the accused because he had the courage to oppose the gang's move to transfer the head office of the company to Quebec. Mr. Mullin put in evidence the minutes of several meetings. At 10 o'clock adjournment was made until 9.30 o'clock this morning.

HATS THERE WERE BUT NONE TO FIT

And That is Why Well Known Man About Town Came from Carleton Bald Headed in the Rain. A well known man about town, paid a visit to Carleton one rainy and windy night recently, and as he was proceeding homeward bound, towards the ferry, his hat blew away and disappeared in a vacant lot. Possibly he had been sitting into a West Side poker game; at any rate when he felt his pockets for money to purchase a covering for his head, he found that he only had his ferry fare. So when a well known politician who resides in Carleton was running to catch the ferryboat about 10 o'clock that evening, he observed a fat man with a florid face, tacking around Chubb's corner, with his bald head gleaming in the rain. Stopping in amazement, the West Side politician exclaimed: "What—the dickens is the matter, old man? Why are you going around bareheaded in the rain?" "Hub, there's enough the matter," growled the heavy waisted and hatless man. "My hat blew away in Carleton, and though I tried in every store in the bloming town, to get a new one—what do you think—I couldn't find hat or cap big enough for me. If you ask me, it's a poor kind of heads you have over in that town of yours."

MARATHON RACE AS FEATURE OF SHOW

Proposal Made at Meeting of Exhibition Association Last Night—Space of Some Exhibitors to be Reduced. A special meeting of the executive of the Exhibition Association was held last evening, at which it was proposed that arrangements should be made to hold a Marathon race and other athletic games under the auspices of the association, during the week of the big fair. The matter was referred to President Skinner and Manager Good to report on later. Owing to the superabundance of exhibits, the executive decided that the space allotments to many parties would have to be reduced in order to provide extra accommodation. "The problem of accommodating all the exhibitors is going to be as difficult of solution as squaring the circle," said Manager Good, "but we hope to manage it."

MILITIA IS WEAPON OF GOVERNOR

Judge Denies Injunction to Attorney General Webb to Stop First Fight, but Troops Will be Used.

San Francisco, June 17.—Superior Judge Van Nostrand late today declined to grant a temporary injunction against the Langford-Kaufman fight tomorrow afternoon, refusing the petition of Attorney General Webb. The matter of stopping the fight is now one for the governor.

The governor's weapon is the magic word "militia," and his threat to pour a body of State militia into the arena and arrest promoters and principals if Governor Gillett were defied, was the principal thing that brought about a decision to shift the Jeffries-Johnson fight to Reno, Nev. ...

Fighters Ready to Move. Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries are ready to move to Nevada within a day's notice. ...

"I'll see you in Reno," said Jeff. "This was the first real intimation that had been given up hope of fighting in California." ...

"I'm ready to go to Reno tonight," said Jack. "We are simply waiting for the word. If the fight is declared off in time I will be in Reno by Sunday." ...

The published interviews with Mayor McCarthy sent out from Chicago, that he was running San Francisco and taking no orders from Governor Gillett, were like shaking a red rag in a vicious bull's face. Governor Gillett is more determined than ever, it is said, and today is said to have sent Attorney General Webb a strong telegram, giving positive orders to stop the fight, even though he had convinced that the Kaufman-Langford and the Jeffries-Johnson bouts are to be violations of the law and felonies. ...

Laws Explicit. "As everyone knows," he said, "the laws of Nevada are explicit and in that state there is nothing to prevent a dozen fights a day taking place as long as a regular permit is secured for each contest." ...

This is the first picture to reach this city of the Paeky McFarland-Freddy Welsh fight in London. The picture shows McFarland stopping Welsh with a left smash. It will be remembered that the English newspapermen protested over the draw decision which Referee Tom Scott rendered, the papers claiming McFarland won the battle by a big margin. The men fought before the National Sporting Club of London. McFarland had endeavored to get another match with Welsh, but the latter has declined to meet the scrapper from the stock yards in Chicago.

Sir George Martin Presides at the Wonderful Organ Which is Beloved by all Londoners--- Details of the System in Vogue and Training of Choir Boys.

By ISABEL BROOKE-ALDER

London, known as a city of violent contrasts, probably holds no more striking example of this remarkable attribute than is presented to the wayfarer when he steps from the busy street, full of clattering traffic and jostling pedestrians, into the vast space and restful quiet of the great Cathedral.

The door swings to behind him, and in an instant so faint becomes his consciousness of the continuance outside of the grim hurly-burly, that he may well fancy himself the only citizen alive, so solitary does he feel, yet so intensely aware of his identity as the contact of his heels with the stone floor awakens haunting echoes in the infinite length of the aisles and the mysterious distances of the arches. Involuntarily his thoughts trace backward through the years the record of the intimate association that has ever existed between St. Paul's and the people.

But our visionary is at this point brought happily back to the realities of now-days by the arresting tones of the Cathedral's great organ filling the empty space with melody.

As the service proceeds he notes with satisfaction the important place held in it by music, and the general hope-inspiring brightness of its character.

Sir George Martin presides at the organ, and the listeners know that the keys are touched by a veritable master-hand.

What it means in unremitting work, in constant attention to detail, and in far-reaching forethought, to be the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, only those can at adequately understand who themselves live and have their being within the particular sphere of Sir George's indomitable industry.

It would, however, be to form a misapprehension of the stranger were to imagine Sir George Martin a sort of human volcano, all fire and aggressive activity, for in spite of the strenuous style in which he performs his duties, almost overwhelming mountains of work, he has the calmest possible manner and he speaks in a quiet unassuming tone, even to the voice. He might be some leisurely musician in holiday mood but recently arrived from the unruffled quiet of a remote country parish. Perhaps it is just this ingratiating serenity and his unlimited good-nature that make him the victim of countless calls upon his already fully-occupied time, for certain it is that all sorts and conditions of men and women turn to him for advice and help, on even the most inappropriate subjects.

Peaceful Home.
 He is fortunate in having a quiet home, for he lives in Amen Court, a veritable oasis of peace within a stone's throw of the wilderness of tumultuous streets covering on the wooden gates that shut it off from flowers bloom in the garden where the staid, stands a little assembly of fine old brick houses, occupied by the Bishop of Stepney, Canon Scott-Holland, Canon Newbold, and several other colleagues of Sir George Martin.

Thirty-two years have passed since the beginning of his connection with St. Paul's, so if he can be caught with sufficient leisure to talk, the busy musician can provide a very interesting life-story.

It runs somewhat in this way and with exceeding smoothness, for Sir George, like all musicians, speaks in a well modulated voice, and with extraordinary distinctness of diction.

"More than thirty years since I quit- tained Bonnie Scotland for the Cock-ayne! It seems ever such a long time, but all the same there has not been half time spent in any one of the years. However, it is always good to have plenty to do in any vocation is it not? I left Dalkeith, where I had been private organist to the Duke of Buccleugh, holding meanwhile the organistship of a church in Edinburgh in order to accept the proffered position of Master of the Choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral. Later on I became sub-organist; and in 1838 was elected to succeed Sir John Stainer as chief organist. That appointment inaugurated the beginning of a perpetual feast of work which, to such an amount uninterrupted enjoyment. Once I tried to stuff the days fuller than their proper limits would allow—when the Royal College of Music was in its infancy, and I wished, by doing some of the teaching, to help to find the success which it has since gained. But I had to give it up, for Kensington is so far from Ludgate Hill when one is in a hurry it soon becomes evident that my own particular students and colleagues in choir of St. Paul's, really afforded me all I could properly accomplish in the way of instruction. Perhaps you do not realize what a fine field of action one has here on which to dispense of superfluous energy. Let me make known to you some of its boundaries. Every day there are two musical services; every week there is a practice for the full force of the choir—eighteen men and thirty- one boys (who live at the school half- way). Then there are two other choirs demanding attention—the Sunday evening choir, which numbers about eighty men, and the special service choir, about three hundred strong. So you see there is enough going on to keep me and my assistants fairly well occupied!"

Boy's Routine.
 About to give a brief description of a typical week-day at St. Paul's, Sir George Martin says, "It begins at 8 o'clock with service in the crypt required by the statutes of the building—and at the same time there is a celebration in the north chapel. At 10 comes choral morning prayer in the choir; at 11.5, short service in the choir; and it ends with a short service in the evening. This week, for instance, has given us five." And then, after a pause, as if to secure an opportunity to mentally review the long catalogue, he adds, "entirely," "It is wonderful to be associated with the grand edifice, to feel that one is, even in a humble measure, assisting in its usefulness! I don't believe outsiders can know what St. Paul's means to most of us who live, as we were, within the precincts. We love the noble old place more with every passing year. It is, moreover, a great joy to us to see how much our affection for it is shared by our fellow-citizens of all sorts and conditions of men and women, whose homes are near, or whose employment brings them to the neighborhood. Many of them come regularly to the midday service, taking the time out of their luncheon hour; and their numbers swell very perceptibly in Lent, when there are preachers as Canon Body, Canon Knox-Little, etc. Then the whole space under the dome is requisitioned, and even the aisles are filled with those who cannot find seats—leading city merchants, their clerks, shop-assistants, and the many other less distinguished members of the community I am at liberty to observe the congregation at these Lenten services, for the organ is not then used, and I much enjoy the fine effect of the season, sung unaccompanied by so vast an assembly, chiefly composed of men."

Speaking later on of the effect of music on mankind, the preferences and so on, he says, "For my own part, I like to hear as much music as possible, so I go to all the great productions. It is necessary, too, apart from the mere consideration of enjoyment, for one must keep oneself in touch with modern orchestration. The organ has nowadays become so comprehensive in its functions that it can render many orchestral effects with astonishing faithfulness. It therefore behooves a conscientious organist to acquaint himself thoroughly with instrumentation in order to do justice to various composers' intentions. I never cease to congratulate myself, as a member of the concert-going public, on the enormous advance that has been made of late years in orchestral playing in London. In this connection I consider Henry Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall orchestra, a veritable national benefactor!"

Favored Composers.
 "And as to St. Paul's; what music do you find most suitable?"
 "Anything good—that is to say, something that has some great definite purpose, some fine message to deliver to the mind. The music of the great masters is especially suitable. Bach, Brahms, Gounod, Purcell, Boyce, Greene, Wesley, Goss, Stainer, and many of the living British composers."

"Of course! Do you know that Handel, surely?"
 "Of course! Do you know that Handel, surely?"

Handel played at our organ, and Mendelssohn too; and that Gounod, who was about as good an authority as could be quoted, is said to have remarked that our choir was 'the best in Europe' every fortnight."

The minuteness of the details into which Sir George Martin is willing to enter, in regard to the means by which the grand musical effects heard in the Cathedral are obtained, shows how truly his heart is in his work. One learns, amongst other previously-ignored items, that the head of the choir is the Precursor, Canon Scott-Holland, but that his duties are mainly taken place by the Succesor, the Rev. S. J. Childs-Clarke. These consist of carrying out the directions of the Dean and Chapter, and selecting the music and submitting a final list to the organist every fortnight, previous to having it printed and provided as programme for practice in the choir-school.

The choir boys live in Dean's Court, quite near the Cathedral, and their education especially built for their reception, architecturally perfect, even to the addition of a playground on the level of all the neighboring buildings, the liveliest games of hockey, etc., take place, the safety of flying balls being insured by wire netting. On the weekly half-holiday the flat roof is exchanged for a playing-field, reserved for the boys' use in one of the suburbs.

In return for their services in the cathedral the choristers receive a thoroughly good education, and they have the chance of winning various scholarships provided by certain of the City companies. These grants, placed at the disposal of the Dean and Chapter to enable deserving boys to after leaving St. Paul's are eagerly sought.

Reward of Candidates.
 Candidates for admission to St. Paul's Choir and School must be between eight and ten years, and besides having a good voice and correct ear for music, must be able to pass a preliminary examination in general knowledge—such as reading, writing, simple arithmetic, and rudimentary Latin; not a very severe test, considering that the reward means board and education for at least five years. The full number of boys is forty, about thirty-six being in constant practice as choristers and the rest on trial.

The practices are superintended by Mr. Macpherson, the assistant-organist, himself an old choir boy, now become a distinguished musician and composer. Sir George Martin re- placing him at the weekly general confer-

GIFFORD PINCHOT AND THE THREE NATURAL RESOURCES WHICH NEED CONSERVATION

You've heard a great deal about "conservation of national resources" in the past three or four years. "Conservation" has been talked of in the newspapers, has figured largely in magazine articles; indeed, has been the theme of important sections of that you don't know now, and read a heap about it—but do you really know what conservation means? If you don't, read the following article and you will know. If you do, read it anyway. You may learn a vast amount of things, chiefly composed of men."

Gifford Pinchot is America's foremost authority on conservation. As chief forester of U. S. under President Roosevelt he has achieved great things. Now he has written a book entitled "What Conservation Means." Through the courtesy of Doubleday Page & Co., who will publish this book in September, and who hold the copyright, The Standard is enabled to present a digest of the work.

What Pinchot says about conservation may be accepted as embodying all the ideas of Theo. Roosevelt in regard to conservation.

By GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Permanent homes, for ourselves, our children and our nation is the great problem.

The conservation of national resources is the only permanent basis of national success.

We have come into possession of nearly 4,000,000 square miles of the richest portion of the earth.

We shall reach a population of a thousand million people, and this country will support them, if only we can bring ourselves to handle our resources as not to lay an embargo on the prosperous growth of the future.

What shall we do with our land and its wealth?

Coal.
 Our supplies of anthracite coal will last but fifty years, and of bituminous coal but a little over 100 years. Only 5 per cent. of the 150,000,000 tons annually burned by the railways is used in traction; the rest is lost. In electric lighting only one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the coal is converted into light.

Gas and Oil.
 Many oil and gas wells have already failed, yet cases are known in which vast amounts of oil are systematically buried in order to be rid of it.

Iron.
 In the iron mines, as in the coal mines, only the high grades have been taken from the mines, leaving the least valuable beds to be exploited at increased cost or not at all.

Land.
 Forest denudation in it is estimated by Prof. Shaller, has permitted the destruction of 3000 square miles of Pennsylvania soil; the destruction is proceeding at the rate of 100 square miles a year. The Mississippi river alone transports yearly twice since the destruction of 3000 square miles of Pennsylvania soil; the destruction is proceeding at the rate of 100 square miles a year. The cathedral organ has borne its share in the joys and sorrows of Londoners for many a long year, ever since some date between 1624 and 1700, when it was built by one Bernhard Schmidt, a German, as celebratory of an organ-maker as was Stralder of the instrument. His work was confined to the inside, and considering the high value of money in those days, the 2000 pounds which he there by earned seems liberal payment.

The case was supplied by a joiner of 2339 15s. 10d., and the carving of the case by Grining Gibbons of 2610 18s. 2d. The instrument has been entirely reconstructed since then, but all the "Father Schmidt" pipes, being still perfect, were retained.

First Used in 1871.
 The renovated organ was first used at the Public Thanksgiving for the recovery of the late King from severe illness in 1871. It is a veritable triumphant demonstration of scientific knowledge for Mr. Willis, who carried out the work, is an account of shortness of time allowed for his scheme to be executed, there was not a possibility of testing it beforehand. However, when the great moment came, then, but all the "Father Schmidt" pipes, being still perfect, were retained.

of the development of the country which belongs to the people.

A good way to begin to regulate corporations would be to stop them from regulating us. The people have only just begun to take up the fight of the many for the equal opportunities to which they are entitled.

Now that the fight is passing into an acute stage, it is easily seen that the special interests have used the period of public indifference to manoeuvre themselves into a position of exceeding strength. The constitutional position of property in the United States is stronger than in any other nation; the influence of the corporations in our lawmaking bodies is excessive, defeating the will of the people steadily and with ease.

Fortunately the special interests, with a blindness which naturally follows from their wholly commercialized point of view, have failed to see the essential fact in this great contest: that the people have not only the right but the duty to control the natural resources. The absorption of these resources by the special interests is a moral wrong.

Conservation stands nearer to the desires, aspirations and purposes of the average man than any other policy now before the American people. The danger to conservation is that the privileges of the few may come to obstruct the rights of the many. Congress must decide whether the great coal fields still in public ownership shall remain so; it must decide whether the immensely valuable rights to the use of water power shall be given away to special interests in perpetuity and without compensation.

The granting of water power forever must stop.

Our descendants must be left free to meet their own necessities.

The present movement will leave either the man or the dollar in control. The decision will be made by the young men, and it is not far ahead our whole future is at stake in the education of our young men in politics and public spirit.

The time is coming when it will not be respectable not to be interested in politics.

amount of material to be excavated from the Panama Canal.

Overgrazing has reduced the value of public lands by one-half. These public lands should be cared for and held for homesteaders by the government.

Great areas of public lands have passed into the hands, not of the homemaker, but of large individual owners whose object is making profit.

Lumber.
 There are from 1400 billion to 2000 billion feet of standing timber. At the present rate of consumption the supply will last not more than 33 years. We must necessarily begin to suffer from the scarcity of timber long before our supplies are completely exhausted.

When the forests fall the daily life of the average citizen will feel the pinch on every side.

Water.
 The conservation of the inland waterways constitutes perhaps the greatest single task which now confronts the nation.

President Roosevelt's administration was not understood what St. Paul meant when he said: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

Equality is the object of our laws and institutions. To follow blindly the letter of the law is nearly as dangerous as to disregard the law altogether.

Rigid construction of the law works for the benefit of the men who control the law; it works to the disadvantage of the men who have no voice in lawmaking at hand. Law requires to be construed.

Strict construction favors the great interests as against the people. Wise execution means that the law ought to be applied.

Equality of opportunity, a square deal for every man, the protection of citizens against the great concentrations of capital, the intelligent use of laws and institutions for the public good and the conservation of national resources, not for the trusts, but for the people—these are the real issues and problems.

The plain-American citizen is the man to work for. If we succeed there will exist upon this continent a sane, strong people, in a land owned by the many, not the few. If we fail the great interests will control the country more and more, and the rights of the people will fade into the privileges of concentration.

The water power trust is in rapid process of formation. Now is the time to fight it.

The three simple principles of conservation are: To develop resources, to preserve resources, to develop resources for the benefit of the many, not for the profit of the few.

We should see that property rights should be granted only on condition that the people shall have a fair share in the benefit which comes from other side of the channel, and supplied a system of compressed air, to be conveyed there in tubes from the organist's gallery under the floor of the cathedral. It is easy to imagine with what anxiety the clever scientist awaited the moment of trial, in doubt lest by some misadventure the divided pipes should not "speak" simultaneously when the keys were touched a hundred stops. From his seat at the instrument Sir George Martin cannot see the choir, but should the necessity arise to give instructions during a service, he can avail himself of speaking tubes.

The organist of St. Paul's, like several of our other great musicians, is much interested in souvenirs of former people and his art; so the quiet garden in mid-city is enriched with sundry precious relics. There is the silver watch which Beethoven carried, the manuscript of one of his sonatas, and a musical "sketch-book" full of little ideas for future serious treatment, a pocket-book containing various pencilled scribbles, and notes on his daily expenditure, generally added incorrectly, as for instance three seven-tenths, which are made to amount to only twenty-one! Of more intimate interest still is a letter from the composer to his brother begging for the return of a pair of boots before a certain date; their retention later through- out, causing distressing inconvenience.

Washington, June 17.—Early on the morning of April 18, 1906, the basic rock on which the whole Pacific coastal plane from Ft. Delgado to San Juan, in a distance of about 270 miles, suddenly and without warning slid from five to ten feet, and at the same time raised up from a foot to 18 inches, as though hoisted on the shoulders of some mighty subterranean behemoth.

Simultaneously a great rock of foundation rock on the inland side of the fracture fell into the space left by the coastal rock, sliding five to ten feet in the opposite horizontal direction and dropping from a foot to 18 inches.

So that after the cataclysm there was a change in horizontal distance of from 10 to 21 feet and a total vertical displacement of from two to three feet.

The grindings of these two rocks upon each other—and the trillions of tons pressure, the friction and sulphurous fumes on the line of contact—were sensed on the surface only by a shuddering thunder, but the destruction wrought by that instant of movement was terrific.

The area of greatest movement, and hence destruction, was a belt of land 70 miles wide along the 470-mile faulting line, but heavy tremors were felt as far south as Los Angeles, and as far north as Coos bay, Oregon.

The city of San Francisco was close to the line of movement. When their foundations lurched forward the feet in the twinkling of an eye, giant skyscrapers shook off their stone cloaks, crashing them to the pavement, and exposed their gaunt, twisted skeletons against the whitening sea.

Nothing rigid on the belt of destruction could withstand the shock. Heavy masonry walls crumbled as though struck by a Titan's mace. Some low wooden buildings had "give" enough to survive, but the twisting of the earth, but, for the most part, all of "Pisco's" costliest monuments of civilization fell into ruins.

Rivers changed their courses, farm and ranch acreage was added to or taken from. Ponds appeared in strange places. Springs dried up and new ones broke ground. Little streams disappeared altogether.

The whole California survey was made worthless.

Water mains were twisted apart and fire completed the desolation of the country. The people, unable to communicate with the interior, believed the world had been destroyed. And there was great loss of life.

That was the California earthquake—the greatest America ever knew. It was the cause of starting a system of study of earthquakes. That study has progressed so far in four years that it is now believed all loss of life in future earthquakes can be avoided and that destruction of property can be greatly reduced.

In other words, it is proposed to predict earthquakes, almost as accurately as the weather is now predicted. Warned in time, the people can leave a greatly reduced area of study of buildings materials and forms for the inhabitants of danger places may dwell in houses that will be able to stand up against the heaviest earth shocks.

A bill is now before Congress appropriating $20,000 for starting the United States earthquake bureau. The exact name given it will be the "Seismological laboratory."

If the money is voted, as seems likely, the bureau will take her place with European countries in a worldwide system of earth-quake predictions. It is only by having daily observations from points all around the world that the system can become efficient.

The United States earthquake bureau will have its scattered stations like those of the weather bureau, for the taking of daily observations. It may be that the weather bureau branch stations will be used by the new bureau, which will be a branch of the Smithsonian Institution, the geological survey and the coast survey are expected to co-operate, the outlying army posts will conduct branch earthquake bureaus, and the navy will report shocks felt at sea.

Here is the theory of earthquake prediction. Everyone knows the theory of tides, how they are caused by the attraction of the moon and sun. The water of the sea follows this attraction in a great wave known as the tide.

Now it is known that the tide does not stop at the shore. The land is too rigid to heave up into a wave, but is strong enough to be measured by delicate instruments. It is certain at any rate, that there is a definite pressure wave in the land, following the attraction of moon and sun.

The delicacy of earthquake instruments is a marvel to the layman. The seismograph at Harvard College is located in the center of a stable, special concrete building. The instrument is imbedded in a block of concrete eight feet thick which sets firmly on the solid rock.

It is inconceivable that any ordinary how could jar this block. Yet, when an instrument of average weight sets upon it, the instrument instantly records the actual bending of the eight-foot block in the man's weight.

But the instrument will do even more wonderful things. The man may take off his shoes and walk away from the instrument ten feet and then return. The instrument records his paper taps.

The instrument is moved by a curve drawn on his movements by a curve drawn on a rotating drum.

Now as long as the tidal variations are constant and without remarkable features it is believed there will be no earthquakes. But suppose some station or group of stations begins to report variations. Suppose the tide apparently ceases, and that it is believed will denote a tension setting in and approaching the point where the underground rocks will give way and cause an earthquake.

On the other hand, violent land tides will denote a weakening of the foundations under the earth's crust and will mark a danger district.

As soon as the tidal measurements for a district become abnormal, a special study will be made of the land surface there.

After the California earthquake it was discovered that there had been a slow movement of the surface land before the earthquake, and that the movement had probably been going on for 100 years. The line of rock breakage—or fault—in California was clearly defined by a rupture of the surface crust extending almost without a break along the whole 170 miles of fault. This rupture or fissure occurs in every great earthquake. When telegraphic reports tell of the earth " yawning " it means that the rift is forming above the fault in the foundation rock.

To measure any further movements of California ground the state earthquake investigating commission has set up along the San Andreas rift certain concrete piers, or monuments. Each monument is based on the rock and extends about three feet above the surface. On the top of each is inset a plate bearing the inscription:

S. E. I. C.

Beside the plate is set in an instrument known in surveying as an alidatum. The whole is covered with an iron cap.

side of the rift. Thus by measuring one pair upon the other the scientists can detect the slightest horizontal or vertical movements.

The new bureau will establish these monuments along all earthquake rifts and danger lines in the United States. They will be used in connection with ground tidal observations.

The monuments in regions which the seismographs predict suspected territory should give data for accurate predictions of the approach of earthquakes, and thus all lives can be saved by the people vacating the region until the earthquake is over.

The bureau will also take up the study of earthquake-resisting buildings.

Universities of the country, the International Seismological Association, and the American Philosophical association are all bringing pressure to bear upon congress on behalf of the bureau of the national bureau of seismology. The bill was introduced after a conference between Dr. Chas. D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and Dr. Harry Fielding Reid of Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, one of the world's authorities on earthquakes.

Dr. Walcott is an enthusiast upon the subject of an earthquake bureau. Upon him will fall the task of organizing it.

Six new elements have been discovered, announced the other day at the congress of German Chemists, by the Viennese doctor Auer von Welsbach. The news came by letter from the inventor himself while the professor was reading his paper on "Rare Earths."

It was to the effect that Dr. von Welsbach had succeeded in separating terbium and thulium, previously believed to be elements, into two constituents each, and dysprosium and gadolinium, two other rare elementary substances, into three each. The number of elementary rare earths has thus been increased from sixteen to twenty-two.

It may be recalled that last year Dr. von Welsbach simultaneously with the French scientist Urbain discovered that ytterbium, for thirty years believed to be an element, was divisible into two other rare elementary substances. Since 1870 the Viennese scientist has added ten elements to those known to science, a record for any single inventor and an achievement on which the Congress sent him a telegram of congratulation.

ENGLISH PHYSICIANS ON TUBERCULOSIS

The people of Britain, especially town workers, can do a great deal toward stamping out tuberculosis by copying the Jewish prescriptions with regard to food, says Dr. Allison, a prominent English physician and an authority on food values. In a lecture during a service, he gave instructions to Dr. Allison set up the example of the Hebrews, a race which is, he said, practically immune from consumption.

The Jewish people, he maintained, through centuries of oppression has prospered because it was the best fed race on earth. Jewish mothers were greatly to be commended for bringing up their children on fatty foods.

Prof. R. A. Sampson does not agree with Dr. Allison on this point. In the Fortnightly Review he makes this plea for a fruitarian diet:

"Perfect fruit alone can meet the demands of the human system, perfect fruit alone can stimulate the intellect, perfect fruit alone can calm the passions, perfect fruit alone can control the feverish activity of the arterial pulsations, which otherwise, engendered by the consumption of inflammatory foods and drinks, wear out the human machine long before its natural time."

NAT GOODWIN WONDERS WHY

Comedy Idol Cannot Understand why Four Beautiful Women were Willing to Marry Him--- There is Talk Now of Another Divorce and Wife No. 5.

NAT GOODWIN AND HIS FOURTH WIFE EDNA GOODWIN

First Chorus Girl—What's the best way to achieve a career, please? Second Chorus Girl—Well, there are two roads to success for a chorus girl. The first is the long, tiresome road of hard work; the second is to marry Nat Goodwin.

It was a chilly day in Reno. A slimy, silken, shimmering gown draped down right in the main street of the little frontier town. Along the slippery thoroughfare an observing resident might have seen the muffled figure of our hero, his usually gloved right hand tucked into the breast of his Sunday raincoat, as he strode the street with a commanding stride.

He thought he was prancing on the boards. "Hist," said he, as he loomed into the sight of a stunning beauty. "Hist—then hist some more. I always was a good hister. But no—" as he cast a parting glance at the retreating figure of the beautiful maid. "—no. And no some more. Never again! NEVER AGAIN!"

It was Nat Goodwin, miser, actor, the billion-dollar comedy idol. He had just left the divorce court, where that institution, in the record-breaking time of 11 minutes, has ground once upon its axle and released him from his third wife. Once more our "Nat" was free, and once more he vowed to remain free. At Maxine Elliott-McDermott-Goodwin was also free.

The scene shifts. The sun beats down upon the dusty highways of Boston. Once more, our own Nat leads to the altar his fourth blushing bride, none other than Edna Goodwin, whose name had been associated with his on the billboards.

A NEW BOOK.

Out in Manitoba Nellie L. McClung is writing her second book, to be called "The Second Chance." It is a continuation of the story of Danny in "Sowing Seeds in Danny." Miss McClung's first book. The author has recently given a number of recitals in Western Canada, choosing chapters from both "Sowing Seeds in Danny" and her new book to be published later, in which she interprets the shadow and the sunshine, the pathos and the humor of the Manitoba characters.

WILLIAM TELL'S STORY TOLD IN PATRIOTIC PASSION PLAY

VILLAGERS IN ROLES OF TELL AND HIS SON

These people believe in William Tell as they do in their Bible. Merely suggest that Tell is an unsubstantial social correspondence. Aldorf, Switzerland, June 17.—Aldorf is now in the midst of preparation for the annual "Tell-Aufzug," or Tell festival, which is to be held in the Canton Uri what the Swiss call the Oberammergau upper Bavaria. Rehearsals are in progress, the costumes are busy stage carpenters and scenic artists are getting the big frame "Tell-dians," ready for the event of the production of Schiller's "William Tell" by the mountain folk Tell's own home canton. "Tell-Aufzugen" have been in Aldorf, intermittently, since the idea was first broached in 1856, and for scores of years effort the musical societies of the canton had it in mind. Not until the production of the Kissling statue of Tell in 1886, however, was the plan realized. Then the Kissling plan was given in impressive fashion to early fourteenth century styles as a theater was built, and the CAESAR, THE LATE KING'S DOG.

Splendid Charger Which Bore King Edward will Never be Mounted Again.

London, June 17.—The magnificent charger which followed the late King Edward in the funeral procession through London performed his last work on that day and has now been sent to the paddock at Sandringham to end his days in ease. The horse is one of the two that carried King Edward's weight. It was no easy task to find a suitable horse for him. There was an amusing incident at Alderhot some years ago when by some omission the King's charger had not been sent down for him and he was mounted on a horse belonging to a member of the headquarters staff. The animal was not accustomed to such a burden and stood still and declined to move so long as the King pet, is being cared for by the Queen Mother, Alexandra. There was some thought at first that he would have to be killed, as after his master's death he refused to eat for several days. Queen Alexandra opposed this plan, and the attentions of a veterinary surgeon have restored the little terrier to health. Caesar now stays in the apartments of the Queen Mother and has made friends with a Russian wolfhound that is her constant attendant. Both dogs will go to Sandringham before long.

MANY CHANGES IN BRITISH NAVY SINCE KING GEORGE WAS ON DUTY

Nearly all the Vessels in Which he Served Have Gone to the Scrapheap and More Substantial Vessels Have Taken Their Places—Only Two Left Out of Ten.

London, June 17.—It is significant of the march of progress in all that relates to the material of the Navy, that of the ten men-of-war in which King George had served at sea only two remain on the service list of the fleet today. These are Torpedo-boat No. 79, his first independent command, and the cruiser Crescent, the last vessel to fly his naval pennant. All the rest have passed into the hands of the ship breakers except the Melampus, which is now on the subsidiary list.

The ten ships referred to moreover do not include the famous old "Britannia," though which King George and his brother entered the naval service, and which for forty-six years carried out the duties of cadets' training ship at Dartmouth. This historic vessel has not yet been disposed of, and still remains at her former anchorage.

A less merciful fate befell the corvette "Bacchante" in which the young prince made their first sea cruises in the years 1875-1882. This vessel was sold out of the service, and broken up in 1898. Before being taken to pieces, her purchasers, the Ship-breaking Company of London, wrote to King George and asked him whether he would like to have a souvenir of the "Bacchante," and this offer he readily accepted. A model of the ship's stern was therefore made out of her own timbers, showing about fifty feet of the original hull, from the name on the stern to the mizzenmast, including that part in which the royal sailors had their quarters on board. The dock fittings in this interesting model were silvered, and the whole was inclosed in a mahogany frame and glass bearing suitable inscription.

The King's next ship, the last in which he served as a midshipman, was the "Canada," to which he was appointed on June 1, 1883. In view of her name the "Canada" was appropriately delegated for service on the North American Station, and in her the future ruler of the British Empire visited the Dominion, and also opened in the name of Queen Victoria the Industrial Exhibition at Jamaica. The "Canada" had more than ten years' useful service before, when King George left her in 1884 as an acting sub-lieutenant, for she was not sold out of the Navy until 1897.

Before he again went afloat, the King had gained his promotion to the rank of lieutenant after his studies at Greenwich and at the gunnery school at Whale Island. It is of interest to note that the present Lord Fisher, then captain, was in command at the last named establishment during His Majesty's time there, and also that his coach was Vice-Admiral Sir Percy Scott, then first lieutenant.

January, 1886 the King was appointed to the "Thunderer," in the present command, commanded by the present Admiral Sir Henry F. Stephenson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. In the same year, the royal lieutenant went on with Captain Stephenson to the "Dreadnought," another battleship in the Mediterranean, and two years afterwards he joined the "Alexandria," the flagship, H. R. H. the late Duke of Edinburgh being then Commander-in-Chief.

By an odd coincidence, which seems to have quite escaped attention, all these armoured ships, famous in their day, were knocked down to the highest bidder within nine months of each other. The "Dreadnought" was first to go, fetched the best selling price, £2,800,000, on July 14, 1908; the "Alexandria," was sold in the following October for £2,175,000; and the "Thunderer" in July last for the sum of £19,500. Together, therefore, they realized over £64,000, or only about six per cent of the sum they originally cost the nation. Their names have all been revived. "Alexandria" for the new turbine yacht of the royal family, in which the late King made his last sea trip, on his return from Biarritz; "Dreadnought" for the new battleship, the first of the "all big gun" type; and "Thunderer" for the new vessel under construction by the Thames Ironworks Company.

After these vessels, King George next served in the "Northumberland" flag-ship in the Channel, which has been absent now from the Navy List for some years, and from her he was transferred to his first independent command, that of Torpedo-boat No. 79, for the naval manoeuvres and review in 1889. This vessel, strange to say, is still in service, though over twenty-one years old, and at present is one of the units of the Sheerness Chatham torpedo-boat flotilla, in commission with a nucleus crew. Of all His Majesty's naval service, that most striking to the imagination spent in the brief, but profitable period he spent in the "Thunderer," and his brilliant little sketches are in existence depicting episodes of the 1889 manoeuvres in which the boat figured. It was largely owing to the good seamanship and skill with which he handled his torpedo-boat that obtained for the King in the following year the command of the gunboat "Thrush" on the North American Station.

There are at present in the navy a number of old battleships which are practically useless for war purposes. It is proposed that some of these vessels shall be converted into floating forts.

All the heavy guns, and if necessary, also the machinery would be removed. The ship would then be equipped with a large number of 4.7 inch and 4 inch quick firing guns. It is estimated that some of the vessels could easily mount from sixty to eighty of these weapons.

It is pointed out that a ship armed with eighty four inch guns, having forty on each broadside, would be able to keep up a fire from each gun of ten rounds a minute. Even if the attacking craft could not be seen, it is doubtful if one boat in twenty could live through such a rain of shot long enough to enable it to do any damage. As the floating forts would be equipped with powerful searchlights there would be little chance of approaching boats being unobserved.

MRS. VAN RENSSELAER

Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, the author of "The History of the City of New York," is the only woman admitted to the honorary degree of doctor of letters at Columbia University this year. Dr. Butler in welcoming her said: "Marjane Griswold Van Rensselaer, to whom it has been given to trace the story of the early history of our city, and to interpret with charm and in many ways the great monuments of architecture and of art, I am proud to admit you to the degree of doctor of letters in this university." Last year Columbia admitted a woman to an honorary degree for the first time in twenty-three years. The recipient was Mary Whitton Calkins, to whom the degree of doctor of philosophy was given. A new and considerably enlarged edition of Miss Calkins' "First Book in Psychology" has just been published.

British Government Adopts New Device for Their Cars and They Have Been Returned to the Tower.

London, June 17.—Owing to the amazing ingenuity, daring, and mechanical skill of the highest classes of criminals nowadays the British government has considered it necessary to adopt an altogether new scheme for the safety and protection of the crown jewels of England, which since the addition thereto of the superb stones known as the Cullinan diamonds has enormously increased in value. Some three months ago they were removed from the Wakefield Tower of the Tower of London, where they are ordinarily on exhibition, and placed in a hidden electric alarm case, all information concerning their removal, however being refused. Their transfer was effected for the purpose of making certain structural changes in the Wakefield Tower, of a nature to render wellnigh impossible any repetition of the wonderful feat of Colonel Thomas Blood, who in the reign of Charles II. very nearly succeeded in his efforts to carry off the regalia from the Wakefield Tower. It may be remembered that King Charles was American by the name, daring that instead of consigning him to the scaffold he pardoned him and bestowed on him an annuity of £3,000 a year.

IN "EDUCATION OF UNCLE PAUL" BLACKWOOD WRITES BOOK OF YEAR

Heir of The Book is an Englishman who Returns to Former Home after 20 Years Spent in America and has Life Touched by Intercourse with Children.

Quite the most unusual book of the year is Mr. Algernon Blackwood's "The Education of Uncle Paul." Boldly the story is quickly told; Paul Rivers, for twenty years "wood cruiser" for a large lumber company in America, on coming into a fortune inherited from an aunt, returns to England and his widowed sister's family. The children take possession of him and their comradeship teaches him to express the imagination and spirituality long dormant within him.

Such an outline is powerless to suggest the charm of the book. The intercourse of children, animals and uncle is compounded of humor, affection, the subtlest of observation and the most convincing of fantasy. The introduction of "Uncle Paul" to the indoor animals is vastly entertaining. "Now we'll introduce you—graciously announced Toby, stooping down and lifting with immense effort the grey Persian that had been sleeping on the window-sill. . . . It was evidently accustomed to being dealt with in a sleepily, blinking kind of way, and its head fell backwards as though it suddenly desired to examine the ceiling. None of its real attention, of course, was given to the actual proceeding. It merely suffered the absurd affair—absent-mindedly and without consciousness. Its whiskers moved gently. . . . Of all creatures in the world, cats have the truest dignity. They absolutely refuse to be laughed at. No cat would ever betray its real self."

Engaging, as are the other features of the book, nothing in it is so utterly captivating as "Nixie" and her "very wonder-deed adventures." Nixie leads her uncle "into marvelous experiences together they see the wind and gusts of the reader trends the mysterious ways with them. Suddenly they swept up into the sky—sound color and all—silence once more descended upon the forest. The winds were off and about their business of the day. The woods were empty. And the sun was at the very edge of the world. . . . "Watch the tops of the trees now," said Nixie, still trembling from the strange wonder of the scene. "The Little Winds will wake the moment the sun touches them—the little winds in the tops of the trees." As she spoke, the sun came up and his rays touched the pointed crests above them with gold; and Paul noticed that there were thousands of tiny, slender ribbons streaming out like elastic threads from the tips of all the pines, and that these had only just begun to move. As at a word, command they trooped out to meet the sunshine, undulating like weaved colored serpents, and uttering their weird and gentle music at the same quality of its exquisite execution.

CHILDREN'S CORNER CHILDREN OF THE KAISER HARRY AND THE WIND

The Fourth of July will, some day, be as big and noisy a day in Germany as it is in the United States. If this little fellow, who was photographed pushing a wheelbarrow, keeps alive and healthy. . . . He is William Frederick, eldest son of the crown prince of Germany, and he was born July 4, 1906. Even if his grandfather is emperor of Germany, little William Frederick seems to think that it would be a lot more fun to be a bricklayer than ruler of the German nation. He has a brother named Louis Ferdinand, who was born in the fall of 1907, but Louis, as yet, is too small for the rough and tumble play that this little future emperor relishes.

PRINCE WILLIAM FREDERICK

When Harry's father came home to dinner the other day, he found a little fellow on the front steps with his head buried in his arms. "What's the matter, old chap?" he called out cheerily. "Somebody been playing a mean trick on you?" "Yes," sobbed Harry, and "Well, I wouldn't sit down and cry about it," said father. "Stand up for your rights. Didn't I show you that new stroke in wrestling?" "I can't wrestle with this fellow," answered Harry. "Why not?" asked father. "Is he too big?" "Because—because it's the wind." "Whew! the wind," laughed father. "Well that is bad. And what did the wind do?" "I had two papers of home work all done," explained Harry, "and when I was going to school this morning the wind blew them away and the teacher is going to keep me after school and make me do it over." "Well, well, cheer up," said father. "I know how we can get the best of that old wind. Come with me." Harry dried his tears and went out to the workshop with father, and before they went in to dinner, they had made just the nicest kite you ever saw. Harry played with his kite till dark, and the wind blew such a nice fresh breeze for him that he entirely forgot to give it for the trick it had played on him in the morning. When he's emperor the Germans will celebrate his birthday on the same day that Americans are celebrating the birthday of their country.

Happenings of the Week

With the return of sunny skies and real summer weather, "all the world and his wife" are living out of doors as much as possible. Those who are fortunate enough to own motors may be seen fairly trying hither and thither to country haunts, others are content with the more quiet jog of "old Doc's" parties at the beach and country side holding impromptu picnics, while many who cannot often avail themselves of these privileges, enjoy the lonely evenings with the humble doozer party and chatting with passing friends. This nature satisfies the gulf inclined, the golf links and tennis courts are well patronized, while some even make use of their weekends for the more enjoyable one or two tables of bridge. Parents and children are much interested in the closing of the schools, the former greatly enjoying the careful training and work of both teachers and pupils, who are eagerly looking forward to well-earned vacations.

At the tennis courts on Wednesday a goodly number attended. The tea table, which looked very dainty, was in charge of Mrs. William MacLaren and Miss Kimball. Amongst those present were Mrs. Inches, Mrs. Murray and Miss Murray (St. Stephen, N. B.), Mrs. Percy Thomson, the Misses Nora MacLachlan, Edith Magee, Mr. John Lee, Annie and Lou Girvan, Vivian Barnes, Jeannette Bridges, Walker (Florida), Sadette Baird, Raimie, Clara Schofield, Messrs. Skinner, Harding, Merrick, Pugsley, Merritt, Peters, Vassie, Wilmour, etc.

The closing of the Girls' School at "Netherwood," Rothesay, was attended by a large number of parents and friends from the city. The drill on the grounds under Miss Givens' direction, deserves special mention. Rev. A. W. Daniel, who presented the prizes, spoke of the year's work as being very satisfactory. Dr. Walker of St. John, gave a very instructive address. The following graduates were present: Misses Nora Kalkit, Gwen McDonald, Mayant Walker and Mrs. A. ## Parisienne Up-to-Date

This saucy little French girl is clad in the very latest style. Her broad hat of white chip is faced with black satin and crowned with a fluffy, feathery aigret—and she's wise enough to know just how well this background sets off her pretty hair and face.

Her gown of soft silk has the fashionable low cut neck, the smart little flat satin rose on the left front of her bodice, the popular close fitting crushed tulle, the always becoming chemise and cuff of dainty white muslin, and the very ugly tight skirt, in which it is almost impossible to walk gracefully. Nevertheless, she must have all the latest touches—this saucy little French girl—she includes the ugly tight and narrow skirt.

June Brides in Other Countries

THE BULGARIAN BRIDE'S WONDERFUL ARRAY.

In Bulgaria the wedding day is the big event of every peasant's life. Birth and death may be important, but not so much so as the day when young Bulgaria leads his Amazon bride to the altar of the little Greek church.

Months, and years, in fact, before then, preparations for the event are being made. While yet a little girl the Bulgarian woman starts collecting the brilliantly colored cloth for her bridal costume. And it is truly a wonderful affair. The stuffy starched white headdress takes the place of a bridal veil. The dress itself is velvet, bright red, blue or some other striking color, embroidered in as many colored silks as there are hues in the rainbow. It is short, reaching but to the knees, where it gives way to pantafoles, white, starched and liberally embroidered.

The groom wears white, reversing the American order of things, resembling not a little a member of a street cleaning crew. Both wear crowns, typical of the fact that they, for the day, are king and queen of the whole peasant village.

And Mrs. Simeon Jones, Miss Lou McMillan, and Mr. Heber Vroom came up from St. John on Monday and are spending the week at "Squirrel Cot." Mrs. G. S. Kinnear was in Montreal for some weeks, visiting Mrs. Kerr and Mrs. Forth.

"BILL" HARKINS HAD LUCK CHARM ALONG

Popular Theatrical Man Returns After Tour of West Indies—Chaperoned Pretty Girls and Still Smiles.

Brown as a berry, wearing a smile of contentment, and every outward appearance of prosperity, W. S. Harkins arrived yesterday after completing a tour of the West Indies and playing in South America with the Harkins Opera Company.

Mr. Harkins' company consisted of 33 people including 17 young and pretty girls outside of the principals. Yet the arduous task of chaperoning this aggregation of beauty and voice through the West Indies and South America does not seem to have added any grey hairs or lines of care to the genial manager. In fact, Mr. Harkins says he had the trip of his life.

The goddess of fortune seems to have perched on the banners of the Harkins Company during their trip and Mr. Harkins has been dubbed "Lucky Bill" by his associates. Luck he certainly had in bunches, for, although he was stacked up against a line of obstacles that would give any other manager an attack of nerves, he was always able to dodge them and as a consequence his smile is still intact.

In the first place he narrowly escaped being in Trinidad with yellow fever as a travelling companion, but fortunately his engagement terminated the day the fever was discovered and his business did not suffer. Again he dodged the plague at Trinidad as his engagement was just over.

When the death of King Edward startled the Empire and incidentally administered a severe setback to the theatrical business in all colonies, the Harkins Company was in Dutch Guiana where the King's death had no effect on amusement ventures and again "Lucky Bill" proved his right to the title.

Mr. Harkins speaks in the highest terms of the people of the West Indies. On his trip he established a record as the first American company to visit Cuba or Mexico. He is so well pleased with his experience that he said last night that he was seriously considering abandoning the dramatic line in favor of musical comedy and comic opera.

Mr. and Mrs. Harkins will remain in the city for several days before returning to New York.

HAD BABY SLAYER MALE ACCOMPLICE?

The case, however, will not be abandoned, and every effort will be continued in an endeavor to trace the crime. That the child was strangled and later thrown from the track on the rocks below while the tide was out early in the morning, before the discovery, is the general belief.

When first seen by the woman who made the discovery the body of the infant was lying on a rock almost twenty-five feet from the wharf. This tends to show that the child must have been thrown from the track by a person of some strength, and it is the belief that a woman could not have thrown the body which weighed nine pounds half that distance. This lends strength to the supposition that the body was thrown on the rocks by a man.

It is admitted that one tide would have been sufficient to carry the body away, which adds to the contention that the child was thrown or placed in the position in which it was found early in the morning just after the tide had gone out.

Assuming that the body was thrown from the track at low tide on last Saturday, it is deemed impossible that the person who committed the deed would run the risk of carrying the child any distance, especially in broad daylight. The facts of the case seem to indicate that the body of the infant was not carried any great distance, but must necessarily have come from the south end vicinity.

The Tug Leader.

An effort will be made this morning at low tide to raise the tug boat Leader, which sank on Thursday night while tied on the East side of Long wharf. It is thought that but little difficulty will be experienced in bringing her to the surface. The cause of the Leader sinking has not been ascertained, but it is thought that the stop cock may have worked loose. At the time of the sinking the only person on board was George Burns, the cook. The vessel was seen to be sinking by men on the other tugs and they shouted to Burns, who had barely time to get ashore.
