More bread and Better bread —And the Reason for it

A STRONG FLOUR can only be made from strong wheat. Manitoba hard wheat is acknowledged the strongest in the world—and that is the kind used for Purity Flour.

But that's not all. Every grain of this wheat contains both high-grade and low-grade properties. In separating the high-grade parts from the low-grade the Western Canada Flour Mills put the hard wheat through a process so exacting that not a single low-grade part has the remotest chance of getting in with the high-grade.

All's Well.

Last night I walked among the lamps that glowed,
And lawns and lawns on the window blind, A morning shadow, and the picture seemed To call some scene to mind.

I looked again, a dark form to and fro I swept softly as in a dream, Best low, best low—still I did not know,
And then, at last, I guessed.

And through the night came all old memories Of things that were, and things that are, White memories like snowflakes and whirls.

All's well! I said, the numbers still at making The cradle of the world.
—W. H. O. GILFILLAN.

"They that Tarry by the Staff"

"I don't want to go in—I don't want to be in such a crowd of well-dressed folks!" Lillian hung back even at the door, but her father and mother led her along.

"Come on, Lillian, come on," Mrs.
Davis urged, taking her by the hand.
"We must go in at once, or we will not be able to get a seat."

The three of them—father, mother and daughter—pushed into the crowd and filed the doorway. The air was heavy with the perfume of roses, of honeysuckle and daisies, which banked the walls or hung in garlands of profusion from the ceiling. Lillian had never seen such a crowd of people.

The great chapel was already filled to overflowing, and still the people came, packing the aisles and banking the stairs that rose from the broad-arched doorways on either side. And such gowns and hats! The beauty and extravagance of them almost dazzled the eyes of the plain girl from the country, making her feel all the more alone and out of place.

"Let's go back," she implored, after they had stood for some time, wedged in by the crowd at the door.
"No, we will wait; maybe we can find a seat." Mrs. Davis craned her neck and looked over the sea of heads.
Truly, the prospects seemed hopeless.
The overworked usher pushed hurriedly to and fro, unable to seat one-half the throng that poured through the doors and still kept pouring.

"We may as well go back," Lillian decried, and she turned to go, when she saw a man in a dark suit, wedged in close by the crowd, who she could scarcely breathe. Lillian longed for the sweet, pure air of her mountain home. She had wanted to remain out there, for she had believed all along it would be like this. It was only after continued persuasion from her father and mother that she was induced to come. She wished now she had followed the desire of her own will and stayed at home. As a compromise, she might have remained and waited in the farm wagon down in the cool grove at the edge of the campus; even that would have been far better than this.

"But it is going to be Commencement Day, Lillian," her mother told her. "Chester is going to graduate from college." The mother's dim eyes had glowed proudly, though with little effect upon the dispirited girl.

"What is he?" the daughter returned. "He wouldn't know us if we should meet him there with all those fine folks. I don't think he half appreciates how we've worked and saved to keep him in—"

"There, there, that's enough!" her mother said, taking her by the shoulder and shaking her a little roughly. "I know Chester will be glad to have us there, and will be disappointed if we are not, he has said so time and again in his letters."

And so, here they were, crushed and jammed and unnoticed. Lillian was firmly convinced that she had been right. As the people kept pouring into the doors, they were buffeted now this way, now that, and shoved, little by little, farther toward the front and centre of the crowd. Lillian observed that certain ones of the fashionably-dressed folks around and behind them had no difficulty in catching the eyes and securing the services of the ushers. This absolutely convinced her that they were not wanted—that they were out of place.

By and by, when all three were almost stifled by the crush, Mr. Davis spoke on the first time since they entered. He continued with great difficulty to raise an elbow and get his fingers into his jacket pocket, bringing out a badly-crumbled slip of card-board. "Chester said we should hand this to an usher. I expect it might help us some."

The daughter said nothing, for she doubted whether even with this admission ticket, they would receive attention. Mrs. Davis became joyfully hopeful at once. "Bless me, Tom, what do you think of it better?"

"I don't know, but I'll see it's well at them, if you have to."

A very tall man, dressed in conventional black, and holding his silk hat carefully above the crush, looked down at the card, and the old farmer raised the yellow check aloft and signaled the usher.

The usher came toward them at once, pushing his way through the pack, took the ticket from the farmer's hand, and after a quick glance, said:
"There are three seats reserved for you in the front row of the balcony. Please follow me."

The crowd parted, and just as it could make a narrow lane down which they hurried, vainly trying to keep up with the swift-footed guide.

"My, but ain't this grand!" declared the happy old mother, with a long, drawn sigh of relief, when they were seated.

"Up there they had an unbroken view of the immense concourse of people who filled both the lower floor and the gallery, and of the broad stage on which rows of empty chairs were arranged, and back of which roses and potted flowers were banked and heaped. It was all so lovely, so beautiful, that Lillian failed to regret for a time that she had come, and was just a little glad that she was here, a part, even though a small and unimportant part, of this great festival. She told herself that she was glad for the sake of her mother and father, if nothing else, for she noted, with a thrill of pleasure, the supreme happiness that glowed in their eyes as they drank in the beauty of the scene.

In a little while the orchestra, which had all but hidden by the palms, began to play, not an intricate, classical selection such as Lillian had expected, but an old, familiar air, which filled the great chapel with soul-stirring melody, and burst finally into the strains of "The National Anthem." The people rose to their feet, and while they stood, the graduating class led by the college president, the dean and the principal members of the faculty, all wearing black caps and gowns, filed in and were seated on the platform.

In the hushed silence that followed, Lillian eagerly scanned the rows of graduates, vainly trying to find her brother. At first glance she could not distinguish between the young men and the young women. Dressed in those robes and hats of somber black, there seemed little difference between the white faces.

But where was Chester? She asked herself. He would, of course, be seated, on the back row, in just as remote and obscure a place as could be found for him. But nowhere back there did she find a face that resembled his, nor was she any more successful in the middle rows. The old, spiritless, depressed feeling was coming upon her, when she heard her mother whisper gladly: "There he is!
That's him down in front—sitting by that white-haired man."

Lillian did not look for him there—away down in front on what she told herself was the fringe line. But when she found him there, she called her brother's indomitable spirit, his unflagging ambition to win, to lead, to be at the front. She had noticed that there were six chairs set behind the main class. Chester occupied one of these, just on the right of the white-haired president.

While she looked, the gray-haired man bent over and spoke to Chester.
She saw her brother lift his eyes toward the balcony, and she was sure he came to her face. He said something in return to the president, and then the latter lifted his eyes toward the balcony and smiled. Could it be that her brother and the college president were talking about them?
About herself, her mother and father, the plainest poorest people in all that great multitude?

Whatever her conclusions, the girl was conscious of a glowing thrill of happiness, and she was glad, more glad than ever, that she was there.
She was sorry now for the things she had said, and would have told her mother so, but the president had risen to speak.

Lillian remembered her program for the first time. It had been hastily crumpled into her hand by the usher as they were hurried to their seats.
She turned to it now, and her first glance brought a full measure of surprise. There in bold letters, the first service in distinguished places—great martyrs, great patriots, great statesmen, great philanthropists—but to the common workers; to the stokers down in the battleship's hold, to the engineer in the locomotive's cab, to the nurse on the field of battle, to those crippled and unable to work and strive, to the unwarded soldiers on garison duty, to the father and mothers, sisters and brothers, who remain at home to toil and save while a son is sent to college.

What a tribute her brother was paying his father and mother—yes, and his sister as well! She remembered now that her father had not bought a coat for four years, that he had struggled through the seasons without hired help, that her mother's hat had been worn for over three years, and her own plain, old-fashioned one had been made over and turned round time and again, in order to conform with the prevailing style.
She had fretted and scolded because of this during the long years, for it was done solely that Chester might go to college. But now she was glad of the sacrifice, infinitely glad; glad that was he, her brother, who stood up there moving this great throng to laughter and to tears, carrying them and swaying them through every emotion of the human heart. And his theme was a tribute to those that tarry by the staff!

When Chester bowed and turned to his seat, the great chapel shook with thundering applause. Bouquets of roses rained down upon him or were hurled from the crowd below. Well-dressed women waved their handkerchiefs, and fashionably-clad men shouted their approbation and praise.
Chester did not feel abashed.

The three of them arose and looked down on the platform, down where the plain boy from the country was acknowledging the ovation with a quiet bow. Then they sat down, their hearts filled with unstrained happiness. His garlands, his triumph, belonged also to them.

Just before the exercises closed, an usher pressed through the crowd into the balcony and handed Lillian a note. It was for her father. She passed it over, and he read it with a glow of happiness on his already radiant face. Mrs. Davis and Lillian read it in turn. It was from the president, inviting them to his home that afternoon, where a reception was to be tendered the graduates.

They went, though they approached the big house timidly and with fear in their hearts, fully aware of their old-fashioned appearance. But the president and his wife met them at the door, and they felt immediately at home.

"I have been more than anxious to meet you," the kind president said cordially to the father and mother, with a sparkle in his eyes. "I need not tell you that I am proud of your boy—proud by the way he has stood by the staff and proved faithful."

Then he turned to Lillian, and putting his hand upon her shoulder, and spoke in the same kindly tone: "You are Chester's sister? He has often spoken of you, of your being out there on the farm, working saving—oh, well, I need say no more, only that I know you are one of those who
"tarry by the staff."

The Uses of Bile in Digestion

Bile is quite as important as the gastric juices in the process of digestion.

Without bile human life is short; for bile hastens the passage of the food along the alimentary canal.

Bile prevents the fermentation of food in the intestines, which in turn causes gas, wind, flatulency.

Bile, in short, is Nature's cathartic and maintains a regular and healthful process of digestion and of elimination of waste matter by way of the bowels.

But to have a regular flow of bile the liver must be kept healthy and active and just here is where Dr. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills come in, for they are definite, specific and direct in their action on the liver.

It is only by setting the liver right that constipation can ever be cured. It is only by making the liver healthy that biliousness and bilious, sick headaches can be thoroughly overcome. It is only by making the liver active that the most difficult cases of indigestion and dyspepsia will ever vanish.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEPT. 17, 1909.

Political Picnics.

The highly advertised Liberal picnic which was held at Kentville on Friday of last week seems to have been everything but a picnic. In point of numbers it was one-half as large as the Temperance Alliance picnic held at Berwick a week previous, although the latter had no band of music or special trains and charged an admission fee to the grounds; and as for enthusiasm it seems to have been a veritable frost. In conversation with some of those who were present at the Kentville picnic—as well as with some of those enthusiastic Liberals who were not present—we have marked how much more the latter seemed to know of the meeting and the words of the speakers than did the former. This is but natural, because of the social reports that have appeared in the official party organs. If we are to take the reports of those who were present the speeches must have been disappointing. Premier Murray and federal Finance Minister Fielding went on record as pronouncing the present Liberal government as the ablest, most up-to-date and enterprising body of local legislators that ever governed any province in the Dominion. Their temperance enactments were enthused upon as the finest on earth. The Scott Act was proclaimed to be more stringent than ever Prohibition could be. These sentiments were wildly cheered. It is said, by the pro-temperance apostle of Wolfville, who was present upon the platform. It is to be regretted that some prominent Liberal politicians were not present. Upon the whole we must congratulate the Liberal party upon its organizer, Mr. Wall, of New Brunswick. Certainly the Conservatives and Independents are not "kicking" because of these mutual admiration picnics.

Maritime Union.

The Canadian Courier discusses Maritime Union as follows:—
"It is not for the other provinces to give advice in domestic matters to their fellow citizens by the sea, but the interest on the part of the larger provinces is but natural. That Prince Edward Island, with a population less than that of Winnipeg, should remain a separate province is an anomaly of the past which needs elimination. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia united would not make a province equal to what either Alberta or Saskatchewan will be in five years' time.
At present, these little provinces are complaining that their population is being attracted to the larger and more promising provinces. The complaint is justified. The only remedy, however, is in their own hands. Maritime union would not immediately cure all the troubles, but it would have a stimulating influence of incalculable value. There are difficulties in the way, but similar difficulties have been faced and overcome by several sets of people much less progressive than the people who have kept Eastern Canada an important part of this great Dominion."

Rosy-Cheeked Babies.

Nothing in the world is such a comfort and joy as a healthy, rosy-cheeked, happy baby. But the price of Baby's health is constant vigilance on the part of the mother. The filth of babyhood come suddenly and the wise mother will always be in a position to treat them at once. No other medicine can take the place of Baby's Own Tablets in relieving and curing the filth of babyhood and childhood, and there is no other medicine as safe. Mrs. Wm. Viggers, Perretton, Ont., says:—"My baby was troubled with his stomach and was very cross while getting his teeth, and did not sleep well at night. I gave him Baby's Own Tablets with the best of results. He is now one of the best natured babies one could wish." Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

French Forests.

(From Nature.)
From her state forests France derives an annual income of approximately $2,000,000 or $75 an acre. Approximately 6,000,000 acres are managed by the State, the annual cost of management being 95 cents an acre. The great achievement of France in forestry has been the establishment of protective forests where much destruction has been caused by floods. Towards the close of the eighteenth century about 2,500,000 acres comprised in the department of the lands were little more than shifting sand dunes and disease-breeding marshes. This section is now one of the richest, most productive and healthful in France. This change has been brought about by the intelligent cultivation of pine forests. Immense forests now cover the country, the sand dunes and marshes have long since disappeared and the wood, charcoal, turpentine, and kindred industries have brought prosperity to the department, which was formerly the most barren and malarious in France. The climate is now mild and balmy, the great change being wrought by the forests.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Odds and Ends.

The writer of last week, who bears himself 'Pertinent,' together with the editor of the Toronto Globe and other sociologists and pessimists, would have us believe that because the Rev. J. A. Macdonald saw lots of poverty and vice in the lower strata of the greatest city to-day on the earth, that therefore Great Britain was in decline and would soon be a thing of the past. That Free Trade, war, and disease had nothing to do with present conditions, and that drunkenness and bad liquor laws was the real secret.

It must be remembered that when the population of Britain, in the good old days, when she was mistress of the seas and conqueror of Napoleon, ran from 3,000,000 to 10,000,000, she kept down the percentage of her paupers and unemployed by hanging many thousands of vagabonds, knaves and peupers, guilty of very trivial offences. Every year kind Providence also came to the aid of Britain in those days, and permitted disease and starvation to carry off every year many thousands of her young and aged. These disciples of the editor of the Globe would be horrified were Britain to fall back into the old methods which seem to have characterized her in the days of her robust virility, alertness and progressive greatness, when she seemed to neglect the poor.

Is it because Britain has become more humane and considerate of the people's needs and comforts that she is now so heavily burdened with pauperism? Some say yes, and do not hesitate to assert that the submerged tenth has been submerged and kept under by pauperism and indiscriminate charity, which has made the poor less manly and independent than formerly.

Whether such is the case or not we cannot say, but increase in population and insufficient outlet and opening for the superabundance of labor is, in the writer's opinion, the principal factor in producing present conditions. Poverty may affect the individual and yet not the nation. Poverty may arise from a diminution of resources, a dissipation of capital, a famine, but more than in all the others combined, in the loss of foreign and colonial trade—in spending of the national wealth unproductively, such as in municipal works that only improve the appearance of the locality and make them healthier to live in.

During the last decade Britain has loaned over $250,000,000 to establish industries in other countries. Why does she do it? Was it because she is degenerate and decadent? Not at all. She was trying to make the best of a bad bargain or business. Canada adopted a national policy, Russia, Japan and other countries did likewise, and Britain has had to furnish the money to enable these countries to carry out their national policies. These national policies have not impoverished Britain as a nation, but it has brought some, and is bringing many more, individual Britains to pauperism.

The nation gets back its loan and interest, in some way, but the individual whose labor was formerly used to furnish the foreigner with his wants, is now required to supply only a part of these wants. The individual Britain must then remain unemployed a part of his time, emigrate to a busier sphere or stay at home and eventually to a pauper. If economic and industrial conditions were such that the demand for labor was continuous in every country and varying only with the increase of the population there, one of the most important remedies for pauperism would have been at hand. We are not blind to the powerful influence of drunkenness and vice as producers of poverty, but if men and women had regular and steady employment, they would not so often be the victims of these evils.

Britain must prevent the foreigner from taking the place of her sons and daughters in her shops, factories, and manufacturing. She must get a gain on and change her trade policy, invest some of her surplus millions in promoting a national policy at home, where she will be able to lessen her pauper population, and maintain the standard characteristics of the British race.

Britain has done much for Canada and for Canadians. For this we should be grateful, and take a broad view of her conditions. We should then see more than the drunkenness, squalor, and vice that reigns in Old England's capital. We would see her giants of commerce, civilization, and benevolence. Her magnificent proportions of munificence in her humanitarian efforts to minimize the effects of the evils inherited from a long past. The millions that Britain has loaned to place other countries on their feet, should be recalled and labor provided for the millions unemployed at home to-day.

Prominent among the September weddings was one that took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wood, of Woodville, this county, on Tuesday last when their second daughter, Ola Fay, was married to Mr. Charles Henry Porter, of Wolfville. The hospitable Wood home had been made even more attractive than usual with tasteful and extensive decorations of autumn foliage, evergreen, golden glow and the brilliant berries of the Rowan and Mountain Ash.

The conspicuous feature was a large floral arch under which the bridal party stood during the ceremony. Though the hour was early—7.30 a. m.—the rooms were filled with friends and relatives. Through an aisle formed by six girl friends of the bride holding a ribbon banner, the bridal party moved to their places under the arch where the ceremony was performed by Rev. Edmund D. Webber, of Woodville, assisted by Rev. A. N. Whitman, of Billtown. The groom was supported by Rev. M. F. McCutcheon. The bridesmaid was Miss Apia Wood, sister of the bride; the flower girl was Miss Mildred Wood, cousin of the bride; and the ribbon girls, Misses Emma Porter, Flora Eagles, Kate Clarke, Lillian Shaw, Hattie Newcombe and Anna Bennett. Mr. Fred Bennett and Mr. Blake Clarke acted as ushers. Mandelsohn a wedding march was played by Miss Cora Rockwell. The costumes were much admired and demand some notice. The bride's gown was of cream chiffon tulle with trimmings of embroidered chifon satin and pearl. With the conventional veil and orange blossoms, and her bouquet of cream roses and maiden hair fern she made a very charming picture. The bridesmaid wore cream silk trimmed with lace and applique, and carried carnations and maiden hair fern. After the wedding breakfast the bride party, showered by rice, congratulations and good wishes, left by automobile for Berwick, where they took the morning express for Digby en route for St. John, Fredericton and other points in the St. John valley. The presents were very numerous and included silver, cut glass, china, cutlery and handsome cheques from the bride's father and from the groom to the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Porter are both exceedingly popular and are held in high esteem by a large circle of acquaintances. They will reside on Highland Ave., Wolfville, after their return from their wedding trip.

Truro, Sept. 15.—Last evening a quiet wedding took place at the home of Rev. Henry Bool, when his daughter, Annie Alice, was united in marriage to Ralph Kempton Strong, B. A. (Acadia), M. A. (Harvard) formerly of Kentville, at present with the Standard Chemical Co., Montreal. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, and immediately afterwards the couple left for their future home in Montreal.

Mr. and Mrs. Strong, are both well known in Wolfville and have many warm friends here, who will join THE ACADIAN in wishing them every success and happiness.

Premier Ward, of New Zealand, in returning to his home, visited Canada and spoke on several occasions. Speaking before the Canadian Club at Ottawa, he referred to a part of the work done by the government of New Zealand. Respecting certain social conditions he said:—"If we have not abolished poverty, we can say at least that we have

Public School Notes.

THE CAPT. PRATT PRIZES.—Through the generosity and public spirit of Captain Kodman Pratt, three prizes were offered last year to the pupils of the public school. The ten dollars offered to the member of grade xi who took highest mark at the July examinations was awarded to Miss Ada Johnson to whom it was presented by Principal Ford last Thursday in the presence of the High School students.

A prize of ten dollars offered to the pupil of grade vi who stood at the head of the class for the greatest number of weeks during the year was awarded to Jean Pratt and Frances Baltzman, each receiving five dollars. The third prize was a gold medal which was won daily during the year by the pupil who succeeded in standing at the head of the class for the day. The medal was won by the pupil at the head as long as that position was maintained. When another pupil gained the position the medal was passed to that one. At the end of the year the medal became the permanent possession of the pupil who won it for the longest time during the year. It was awarded to Ruth Elderkin.

It is hoped that other citizens will be interested enough to offer more announcements of this kind. The principal will be pleased to hear from them.

Opening of Public Schools.

Monday, August 30th, was the day for the regular opening of the public schools.

Every teacher is required to notify the Inspector of the date she opened her school. All the schools from which such notices have not been received are supposed to be without teachers, and it will be in order for any teacher who wants a school to make application for one of the vacancies.

A large number of our best teachers have left us and gone to teach in the Canadian North West, and we find at this date a great scarcity of teachers. To provide teachers for the vacant schools it becomes necessary to issue some provisional or temporary Licenses to those who have a Grade Pass, an M. P. G. Rank, and are at least sixteen years of age, providing trustees sign the following certificate.

APPLICATION FOR PROVISIONAL LICENSE BY THE TRUSTEES. To the Hon. Inspector of Schools, We the Trustees of Section No. 1, District of Kings County, do hereby certify that although we have made reasonable effort to employ a regular teacher of permanent class, one could not be obtained, and we believe Miss [Name] appears to have the legal qualifications specified in Regulation 119, would be acceptable to the School Section for the year, we therefore request you to recommend her to the Council of Public Instruction for a provisional License for this Section so that we may have a school for the year.

In some instances the M. P. G. qualifications may be waived providing the candidate has a grade x or xi certificate. Grade x candidates, may obtain Permissives on their promising to attend the Provincial Normal Colleges, during the second half of the year. Grade xi candidates on their promising to attend the Provincial Normal College, the following year.

In all cases it is understood that the regularly licensed teachers have the preference, and Permits will not be granted unless it become absolutely necessary to do so in order to secure a teacher for the school.

The following are the vacant schools, Kings and Hants counties: KINGS COUNTY. Lake George, Chertouk, Fair View, East Black Rock, Chipman Brook, West Hall's Harbor, Northville, Coldbrook, Lake Mills, Blue Mountain, Sheffield Mills, (primary), Baxter's Harbor Mt., Baxter's Harbor, Woodside, Davison Str., Greenfield, Pine Woods, Woodlawn, North River, Pleasant View, Lake Paul, White Waters, Garland, Dalhousie Road, West Brooklyns.

HANTS COUNTY. WEST HANTS.—Cognac, In, Green Hill, Ardoise, Five Mile River, Mt. Summerville, Mills, West Branch, Palomouth. EAST HANTS.—East Unalake, West Indian Road, Lt. Nine Mile River, Kennew, North Salem, Northfield, Five Mile River, Hillsdale, Greenfield, Unalake Mines.

WOLFVILLE, - N. S.

Pertinent and Impertinent.

A gentleman, who was in Kentville on Saturday last, pronounced the streets as almost unpassable for mud. It is a great mistake to cart marsh mud out to the streets of a capital town.

From a careful census of this meeting-house going community, we have learned that 80 per cent. of those who attend on the Sabbath, go purely to read the paper, have to say and read to per cent. go to worship, 5 per cent. go to see the fashions, 4 per cent. go from their instinct, and 1 per cent. go to hear some human gramophone sing.

We, in Wolfville, are rejoicing over our beautiful streets during this season. A wise, dominating, clever mayor, and his up-to-date, live road committee, can do much for the comfort of, even an already beautiful town. One of two matters in the town still need correcting, and we propose seeing that these corrections are amply attended to in February, 1910.

We are continually hearing that this and the other benevolent and charitable society of ladies, are meeting from week to week. Even the church services are being extended. In the purpose of publishing to the world that such and such society really exists. Not a day passes but we see duty, unwashed, half clothed, barefooted, unattended little youngsters upon our streets. Public playgrounds, public baths, or any system that will improve the little tots and small children of our town, will receive our individual support, both in ducts and words. Until then we have absolutely no confidence in these publicly announced gatherings of discursive, talkative ladies.

Invest 25 cents in a box of David's Menthol Salve ("The D. & L.") and be prepared for a hundred ailments, which may not be dangerous but are very annoying and painful, like neuralgia, earache, sprains, burns, bruises, insect stings, cuts, piles, etc. It is a household remedy and so useful for some trouble, it should be kept in the family medicine chest.
