"KYRA,"

The Ward of the Earl of Vering.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Abduction Charge.

"She does not love me at all," whispered the inner voice. "I neither am husband, a brother, or a friend. And I—my God!—if I could only tear her out of my heart! But I can't—not yet, not yet. I must be jealous of Charlie, eye, and of that brainless boy St. Clare, for he loves her, or will directly, if Charlie does not take care. And what wonder? Men must love the most beautiful thing in their path; and whose beauty is like unto hers?"

He glanced around the room over his teacup at the many fair faces, and his heart replied with dismal satisfaction.

"No one—there is not one to match her; she is peerless! And Charlie—what is he doing—where is he? Why is he not with her, or she with him? What does it all mean? He has avoided her through the whole day. Yes, one would have thought that Lady Mary had been his choice, had they not been told, as I was. It cannot be that—that he is fickle, that he is so great a fool as to be taken by a newer face, and—tut tut!" he broke off, "I am getting as suspicious and fidgety as an old bachelor—perhaps I shall be."

Then he turned his eyes with a half-bitter smile to the woman beside him, so suddenly that he caught her gaze—deep, tender, solicitous—fixed on his face. Such a look discovered by yourself on the face of a beautiful woman whom you once loved better than all else on earth, such a gaze lavished on yourself is a dangerous thing for your peace of mind, if you are not quite certain of your heart, or a very delicious thing, if you are destitute of receiving it. Fate is often strangely perverse and directs such glances where they are not wanted, and from whence they want no return.

Lilian turned her eyes aside with a little quiver of the mouth.

Percy, with a slight awkwardness, asked for another cup of tea.

Then he thought, as he sipped it.

"And if this be true, that Charlie tells me, should I be acting wisely, to turn away from the gift the gods give, because of the desire for the gift which they withheld? I love Kyra; I cannot get her; she does not love me!"

Ah! how he winced, how the cup shook as he gave himself this thrust direct!

"Who are these persons?" he asked, with the old haughty composure.

Aching Back Gets Relief Quick!
One Rub with "Nerviline" Cures

Every Bit of Stiffness and Soreness Goes When "Nerviline" is Used.

Pain in back or side is awful hard to reach. Deep in the tissue is a congested or strained muscle. It is a long way for a liniment to get. Liniments you have used have not reached it and the pain bothers you, whether moving or lying down.

What a pity you haven't tried Nerviline! Penetrating, you ask? Yes, and powerful, too. Nerviline strikes in far deeper than any application you have ever used. You might pay a dollar, whom I once loved; who still may keep a tender spot in her heart for me; whom I may and could learn to love; who at least, and at last, would teach me to forget my lost Kyra!"

He turned his eyes again and scanned the fair face beside him.

"Beware, Lord Percy, beware! He approached the precipice still more closely, for he bent forward and touched her arm.

As he did so a tall figure stepped into the room, and cast a shadow, he looked up and was saved. It was Kyra, Kyra, and yet not Kyra, for she had passed into the old oak-room, a girl ignorant of her own heart; she entered the drawing-room a woman, burdened by her secret, blushing with her love, tortured by dread of its discovery; in one hour the bud had blossomed into the fair and beautiful flower.

There is a deep, subtle instinct between hearts that love; Percy, looking up, read the change, though he could not understand or comprehend it, and his own heart beat fast and strangely.

"Yes," he murmured. "My little wild prairie flower is a woman full of passion and the mysterious sensibilities of her sex; what has wrought the change?"

Kyra stood for a moment almost unnoticed, save by him; he looked around for Charlie, who did not move, who seemed lost to all the world, behind that screen; Lord St. Clare, with the ill luck for which he was proverbial, had made his exit from one door in search of Kyra as she had entered by another; Percy rose and went toward her.

"Where have you been? your tea will be quite cold; here is a chair."

His voice, always under control, was as usual, calm, kind, untruffed; but she—with her secret crying aloud in triumphant freedom within her heart, could not raise her eyes to his as she dropped into her chair beside him.

"Have you been looking at the swans?" he asked, as Lilian poured out a cup of tea, with a smile that covered the raging tempest at her heart; another minute and the game would have been hers! She knew it! for she saw it in his eyes. If the girl—the hated girl had but stopped away out of his sight for a minute longer!

"Yes—no!" said Kyra. "I have been in the shrubbery—"

"Ah!" said Percy, with a spasm of jealousy. "With St. Clare; I see he has flown?"

"No—quite alone!" said Kyra, lifting her eyes with an effort. "It was late, and—"

"Why did she hesitate and tremble. Yes, tremble, for as he handed her the tea, the dainty little cup, scarcely thicker than a butterfly's wing, slipped from her fingers.

"I am so sorry!" she said; "one of those pretty cups, too! and I have scalded you—"

"With cold tea!" he said, stooping to recover the fragments. "You've spoiled your own dress, and so are very properly punished; or did I drop it? Here, James, take this—"

And he looked up for a servant. As he did so the smile died away, and was displaced by a stern look of inquiry, for at the open window was the strange spectacle of three men, apparently endeavoring, half by force and half by argument, to obtain an entrance, which was obstinately denied by three or four of the servants.

All the guests were listening, speechless and motionless with surprise.

Percy rose and walked quietly across the room, and motioned the servants aside.

"Who are these persons?" he asked, with the old haughty composure.

Then Lilian Devigne took her cue, and rising, glided up to Percy's side.

"Lord Vering—we will go, all of us—"

Percy held up his hand. "On the contrary," he said, "I shall feel deeply grateful and honored if you will remain—at least until we have heard something more of this person's business."

There was a moment's hesitation; then they all sank into their seats again, Lilian going up to Kyra and taking her hand with a reassuring pressure.

"Now, sir," said Percy, addressing "before you proceed any further in

How You May Throw Away Your Glasses

The statement is made that thousands wear eyeglasses who do not really need them. If you are one of these unfortunate, then these glasses may be ruining your eyes. Instead of helping them, thousands who wear these "windows" may prove for themselves that they can dispense with glasses if they will use the following prescription discs as once: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto solution. Rub the eyes two to four times daily, and you are likely to be astonished at the results from the start. Many who have been told that they have astigmatism, eye-strain, catarrh, sore eyelids, inflammation, conjunctivitis and other eye disorders, report wonderful benefits from the use of this prescription. Get this prescription filled and use it; you may or nearly do or who wear glasses might never have required them if they had cared for their eyes in time. Save your eyes before it is too late! Do not become one of these victims of neglect. Eye-glasses are only like crutches and every few years they must be changed to fit the ever-increasing weakened condition, so better see if you can, like many others, get clear, healthy, strong magnetic eyes through the prescription here given. The Valma Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituents are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prepared in one of the very few preparations of the kind. It is kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

The Vering air!—as his friends called it.

Then his manner changed instantaneously, for as the men entered he recognized two of them: Mr. Jackson, the Yankee, and Count Hudspiel. The third was a sinister-looking man, with the unmistakable cut of a second-rate attorney.

These three, as if they had thoroughly rehearsed the situation, made a polite bow each, and took up their position with their backs to the door. Count Hudspiel was noticed, in his glance around the room, to carefully avoid the tea table; and Mr. Jackson was observed to fix his eyes, with a keen, triumphant stare, upon Kyra—Kyra with pale face and strained gaze.

Charlie, behind the screen, sat for a moment dumb-founded; then, with an ejaculation of indignation and wrath, sprang out and made to his cousin's side.

Percy, upright, yet perfectly at his ease, warned him aside with a gesture, and advanced himself to Mr. Jackson.

"Well, sir, what is your business here?"

So calm, so haughtily contemptuous was the tone, that the Yankee quailed, but for a moment only; he was too true a Yankee to give in at the first shot.

"Wal, Earl Vering," he said, nodding his head; "that's a straight question, anyhow. I and my friends—"

"One of whom I recognize as a card sharper, who was kicked out of the company of some gentlemen a few nights since," put in Percy with a quiet scorn.

Instantly, at their master's tone, the servants moved towards the count, but Percy stopped an attack.

"No," he said; "he may remain; but away from the ladies."

The butler, who had entered, motioned the count nearer to the window, as if he had some infectious disease; and then Percy, by a motion of his hand, intimated that Mr. Jackson might continue.

"I and my friends—one of whom, a gentleman of rank and position, you have wantonly insulted, are here, Earl Vering, to put in force a legal claim to a young person whom you abducted from the State of Chickamauga, in the United States of America—a claim which we have substantiated in a proper legal form, and which we are here to enforce—if need be—with all the physical and moral power of the law."

There was a buzz of excitement, surprise, incredulity, amid which the attorney drew from his pocket a roll of paper and parchment, and unfolded it with a significant air of importance and menace.

Then Lilian Devigne took her cue, and rising, glided up to Percy's side.

"Lord Vering—we will go, all of us—"

Percy held up his hand. "On the contrary," he said, "I shall feel deeply grateful and honored if you will remain—at least until we have heard something more of this person's business."

There was a moment's hesitation; then they all sank into their seats again, Lilian going up to Kyra and taking her hand with a reassuring pressure.

"Now, sir," said Percy, addressing "before you proceed any further in your farce—or drama, if you so please to call it—let me, in the presence of witness warn you that if by word or deed you render yourself amenable to punishment, the law shall deal you that punishment in full; I will have no mercy."

The Yankee's eyes glittered.

"You'll be asking some of that commodity for yourself, my lord," he said, with dry insolence. "Abduction is a criminal offence in America as well as in England, and I hold out the law to you; so thar!"

Percy smiled grimly. "Let us proceed," he said. "Having heard your preamble, I demand the name and description of the person I am charged with abducting, and your authority for laying claim to that person."

"The name is Kyra, an Indian girl, daughter of Tahitari, and the granddaughter of a Modoc chief named Black Hawk; aged, at the time of her abduction by you, thirteen; being a citizen of the United States, and under the protection of the American Republic, from whom you forcibly and illegally abducted and stole her," commenced the Yankee.

Pausing suddenly for want of breath he turned toward the attorney, who produced his parchment and read the charge, the description of Kyra, and the account of the scene at the inn in the backwoods, and lastly, a series of warrants and authorities for her recapture, issued by the American and English officials. It was overwhelming, breath-absorbing, and as complete as a wedding ring.

Delicate Young Girls, Pale, Tired Women

There is no beauty in pallor, but proof of plenty of weakness. Exertion makes your heart flutter, your back and limbs ache, and you sadly need something to put some ginger into your system. Try Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they make you feel alive, make you want to do things. They renew and purify the blood—then come strong nerves, rosy cheeks, laughing eyes, robust good health. You'll be helped in a hundred ways by Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are an old family remedy of great renown. Thousands use no other medicine and never have a day's sickness of any kind. Get a 25c. box to-day. Sold by all dealers.

Your Boys and Girls.

A child who has a tendency toward round shoulders should sleep entirely without pillows. Children who have never used pillows from infancy up, have almost invariably beautifully shaped backs. There are certain exercises also which make the youthful back stronger and straight. Canoeing is excellent for the slender girl whose shoulders droop forward. Basket ball and tennis are also helpful. Ball playing, or ball tossing is one of the best exercises for the back. Running is perhaps the very best. The child who runs a great deal is usually tall in adult age.

Have the round-shouldered girl run around the dining room table fifty times, twice a day, and if she thrusts a short stick through her elbows, back of her waistline so much the better.

Unceasing vigilance must be the part of the mother whose little daughter shows tendency toward round shoulders. The "stand-up-straight" slogan must be often heard in the home, no matter whether it annoys the small offender or not. She cannot be depended upon herself—no child could—to correct her physical defect by force of personal will-power, so the work must be undertaken for her by someone to whom her welfare is very important indeed.

Put a little vinegar in the pan of water in which you rinse your greens and the insects will drop off amazingly.

For a picnic it is a good idea to pack each edible in a different box—boiled eggs in one, cake in another, etc.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

Every Bit of Stiffness and Soreness Goes When "Nerviline" is Used.

Pain in back or side is awful hard to reach. Deep in the tissue is a congested or strained muscle. It is a long way for a liniment to get. Liniments you have used have not reached it and the pain bothers you, whether moving or lying down.

What a pity you haven't tried Nerviline! Penetrating, you ask? Yes, and powerful, too. Nerviline strikes in far deeper than any application you have ever used. You might pay a dollar, ten dollars, a hundred, for that matter, but you could not equal Nerviline, either in strength, quickness of action, or permanency of relief.

If you think this too much to say for Nerviline, try it, and be convinced.

If you receive from Nerviline even a little less relief from pain than this advertisement induces you to expect, you can get your money back.

The only pain remedy in the world sold under a guarantee is Nerviline—surely it is safe to try it.

Nerviline is sold by druggists everywhere. 25 cents or 50 cents a bottle.

"I am told on good authority a few days before the end we came upon him so swiftly and silently. Lord Kitchener said that he revised his estimate of the duration of the war," writes "A.G." in the Daily News. "He had calculated it would last three years. He thought that estimate excessive. He looked for an earlier close, but the enormous impetus of events in the past few days gives force to prediction. There is on all sides feeling of the imminence of things."

An article at the beginning of the year I said that the history of the year had been the history of misadventures—the failure of Germany and the failure of the Allies to win the A year ago we were in the darkest hour of the struggle."

"The Germans were estimated that stupendous movement in Russia for which they had prepared after the collapse of their campaign in the West. The armies of the Grand Duke were sent back from the Carpathians to heart of Russia before an invasion of shell to which they could make reply, and day by day and week week we awaited what seemed inevitable and final catastrophe in Eastern ally. The great enterprise of the Dardanelles had ended in disaster and disappointment. The Allies Venetians had created no hope in us in the Balkans and the clouds dark and menacing over Europe."

"On the Western front the Allies sives at Soechez and Neuve Chapelle had failed disastrously, and with the feeling of impotence and the strength of the German submarine and the Zeppelin raids."

THERE IS ON ALL SIDES THE FEELING OF THE IMMINENCE OF FINAL THINGS.

"I am told on good authority that a few days before the end which came upon him so swiftly and silently, Lord Kitchener said that he had revised his estimate of the duration of the war," writes "A.G.G." in the Daily News. "He had calculated that it would last three years. He now thought that estimate excessive and looked for an earlier close. And the enormous impetus of events during the past few days gives force to the prediction. There is on all sides, the feeling of the imminence of final things.

A Year Ago.

"It will help us to understand the position to-day if we look at it in the light of the position a year ago. In an article at the beginning of this year I said that the history of the war had been the history of two failures—the failure of Germany in 1914 and the failure of the Allies in 1915. A year ago we were in the midst of the second failure. It was for us the darkest hour of the struggle.

"The Germans were engaged in that stupendous movement against Russia for which they had prepared after the collapse of their original plan of campaign in the West. The armies of the Grand Duke were falling back from the Carpathians to the heart of Russia before an avalanche of shells to which they could make no reply, and day by day and week by week we awaited what seemed like an inevitable and final catastrophe to our Eastern ally. The great enterprise in the Dardanelles had ended in disaster and disappointment. The fall of Venizelos had created new perils for us in the Balkans and the clouds hung dark and menacing over South-Eastern Europe.

"On the Western front the offensives at Souchez and Neuve Chapelle had failed disastrously, and left us with the feeling of impotence before the strength of the German defences. Submarine frightfulness was at its height and the Zeppelin raids were creating a sense of unknown possibilities. At home, we were in the trough of internal disillusion and conflict. The Government had fallen, the air was thick with recriminations and alarms, we were realizing that this was a war of big guns, and that the Germans had got the guns and the Allies had not.

To-day.

"That was the position a year ago. It was the hour of Germany's high water mark in the war. Let us contrast that position with the salient facts of to-day. Not one of those immense potentialities which seemed in the grasp of the enemy has been realized. The Russian armies were not enveloped, the great drive through the Balkans that was to open the path to Egypt and India has ended in failure, the submarine has lost its terrors, and we have almost forgotten the Zeppelin.

"In the West the armies of Britain have grown to undreamed-of dimensions. In the East the Russian armies equipped at last, have emerged from the Caucasus into the plains of Mesopotamia and are crashing through the Austrian lines in Volhynia. The Allies need no longer fear the challenge of the big guns and every day the mountain of munitions grows with overwhelming menace. And all the time the pressure of British sea power envelops Germany with the sense of doom.

Fighting to Escape Defeat.

"It is in the light of these things that we can read the meaning of the swift march of events to-day. What is the keynote of these events? It is the urgency of Germany to get a decision before the hour for bargaining on equal terms has gone by forever.

"The Kaiser is no longer fighting for victory; he is fighting to escape defeat. He is fighting for an instant settlement that will save his dynasty from the ruin that threatens it.

"This is the secret of that astonishing struggle before Verdun, which goes on after the original hope that inspired it has long been dead. It was to have been a blow, swift, final, shattering that would smash the centre of the Allied line and end the war in the West. Whatever happens to Verdun now—and it is not unlikely that the French, having exacted their price, will decide ultimately to yield up the shell of the town—the blow has failed.

"Why, then, does the sacrifice continue? Many explanations are offered, but the only one that explains is that the Kaiser has decided by the sheer destruction of the manhood of France to drive that nation out of the battle line. He must break one of the Allies and with it the Alliance or he is lost. But he does not understand France if he believes that any sacrifices will ever bring her to her knees.

Not to be Repeated.

"The same feverish anxiety to force a finish, to burst through some door of his prison before it is too late, in the reason for the adventure in the North Sea. It was apparent after the failure at Verdun that the only offensive stroke of capital value left to Germany was one at the British Navy—for the Austrian attack on Italy belongs to the secondary scale of things. The stroke had been kept in reserve. In the Kaiser's scheme of the war it was never more than a remote contingency, for the victory was to be won on land, and it was on land that the British Navy was to be dealt with. Among the many illusions of Germany there has never been any illusion about the supremacy of British sea power, and it was only in the last ditch, as it were, that a challenge to that power was contemplated. It has been made, and in the opinion of those best able to judge it is not likely to be made again—certainly not soon enough to influence the present phase of the war.

Panic Speech.

"And if the events of the war themselves indicate this feverish urgency, no less so do the political symptoms of Germany. What can be more significant than the concealment of the losses in the battle of Jutland, the audacious denial, the public rejoicings, the frantic 'Hoch, hoch, hoch' speech of the Kaiser, the truth creeping out bit by bit with shamefaced explanations about 'military reasons'?

"All this suggests a disquietude, a nervous tension, a fear of consequences that is eloquent of much. Not less eloquent are the rather pitiable appeals of Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg to the Allies to 'look at the map.' He apologizes to his people for us. He cannot understand our obstinate refusal to 'look at the map.' He raves and fumes at our failure to see that we are beaten. This is not the manner of those who know that they have the victory in their hands. It is the manner of panic concealing itself behind a mask of bluff.

Storm Rising in Germany.

"Nor is there any mystery as to the causes of this feverish anger. The storm is rising in Germany itself. The Chancellor's reply to the pamphlet literature is an evidence of the gravity of this secret circulation of anti-war literature not only among the people but also in the trenches. Meanwhile, from both sides the Government is being openly assailed, by the Conservatives for the failure of their foreign policy and by critics like Harden for their general ineptitude, for the absurdity of describing Sir Edward Grey as 'a firebrand' and of denying his desire for peace, for suggesting that the war was forced on Germany, a view which, as Harden says, 'has found belief almost nowhere in the world,' and for the childishness of Bethmann-Hollweg's plea to 'look at the war map.'

"The 'back door' to Berlin is yielding. It is the Central Confederation which is in peril while that of the Allies is more secure, more confident and better administered than at any period since the war began. I was asked the other day whether there had ever been a war so mismanaged as this had been by us. I answered that, seen as a whole, seen with reference to the overwhelming difficulties that had to be overcome between Allies so diverse, so separated, so lacking in common interests, and common forms of government, and common strategy, I doubted whether any war in history had been so well managed.—Public Opinion.

Killed in Action.

The Rev. W. E. R. Cracknell, Curate of St. Thomas's Church, received a letter yesterday from his father in England informing him of the death of his brother, Private Walter J. Cracknell, of the 3rd Battalion of the famous Coldstream Guards, who was killed in action "Somewhere in France," on June 18th. The young soldier met his death while attached to a fatigue party digging a communication trench. Enclosed in the letter was an account of his heroic death by the Rev. A. S. Crawley, Chaplain of the 1st Guards Brigade, who speaks of him as a good soldier and friend. The remains were tenderly laid to rest in a cemetery close to the firing line, reserved for the burial of the British dead. Private Cracknell was all through the battles of LeMons and the Aisne, being severely wounded in the latter engagement. After a quick recovery he was back in the trenches in February, 1915, and passing through several minor engagements he received the fatal blow on the date mentioned. To the sorrowing relatives in the Old Country and to his brother, Rev. Cracknell, general sympathy is expressed in which the Telegram joins.

The Supreme Sacrifice

His Excellency the Governor received a message from London a few days ago, informing him of the death of his nephew Lieut. Robert W. I. Davidson, of the Devonshire Regiment, and brother of Miss Davidson, of Government House. Lieut. Davidson was killed in action on July 1st at Gommecourt, France, not far from where "Durs" were fighting. Previous to the war the deceased hero was commercially interested in the Malay States but at the outbreak of hostilities he returned to England and joined the colors. To their Excellencies, Miss Davidson and the relatives in the mother land, deep sympathy is expressed.

Open shelves in the kitchen are much of a nuisance because it is impossible to keep them free from dust. The length of time that a range will last depends on the care it gets. With proper care it should last fifteen years. A meal at which only wooden plates and paper hampkins are used is often a real comfort to the summer housekeeper.

SATURDAY, July 15.

Our Aeroplanes.

A pleasing echo reaches us of the splendid response that the Colony made last year to the appeal throughout the Empire for funds to supply aircraft for our Army and Navy. We have received from the Secretary of the Overseas Club an artistic booklet entitled "The Imperial Aircraft Follia." It is dedicated to Queen Alexandra, and the frontispiece is a fine photograph of Her Majesty speaking to some of her pilots before they winged their way across to France. The preface reminds its readers that the movement set on foot by the Overseas Club is still on. The object aimed at is a flotilla of one hundred machines, of which sixty-nine have already been obtained through the Club proper, though many more have come from the Colonies through other channels.

To the most general reader the references to Newfoundland are conspicuous, and deservedly so. The preface states that "the thanks of the General Committee are due to the various Patriotic Societies, and in particular to the Patriotic Association of Newfoundland, which led the way." The sixty-nine aeroplanes are enumerated singly, and numbers 8, 9, 22 and 23 are from Newfoundland, and number 10 from the Field. Brothers making five in all. Four of them are of the most expensive type, costing $2,250 each—a 100 h.p. Gnome, Vickers Gun Biplane, complete with run. In this particular list there is, as far as we can see, no other colony or British possession which can compare with this record, though the booklet gives also a list of seventeen machines (twelve reconnaissance and five fighters) from Malaya, forming a separate Malayan Air Squadron.

The following passage will be of interest: "A special feature of the Overseas scheme has been that the aeroplanes presented is definitely associated with the district from which the gift comes. Sir David Henderson, commanding the Royal Flying Corps, has arranged that, although the airplane originally presented by any district may be lost or irretrievably damaged, yet a unit in the Royal Flying Corps will continue to bear the title of the original machine, so that all those who have presented such a machine may have the satisfaction of possessing a permanent link with our Air Service." Thus we know that five aeroplanes, bearing the name Newfoundland, are doing invaluable work at the front, and likely as not over the British lines near the Somme.

Straws That Show the Wind

Every little detached fragment that the messages from the front contain should be noted at a time like this, for not only do they help to make clear the exact military position and the exact aim of the Allies, but they also give more than one hint of a great change that is at present apparent. This is especially true of the West front. The cessation of the German offensive at Verdun (after the confident statement by all their papers that it would not be affected by the Somme operations); the apparent marking-time of the French before Peronne; the sustained British attack and their continued advances, small in area but vastly important in effect; and the intense Belgian bombardment in the extreme West—all these mean a great deal. We can fancy the spirit of Napoleon brooding over the disaster of the field of his own France, beyond Peronne, northward to Cambrai, we can see in imagination another Austriac, with vaster proportions and even mightier consequences than the battle that humbled the might of three armies before one man's genius.

At the beginning of the week the British scored a great success in the capture of Contalmaison, a point of most tactical importance. It lies directly between Albert, their starting point, and Bapaume, their immediate goal. They have gone further by taking Basentin and Longueval. This is what the French have been waiting for. It has straightened the line, and so strengthened it. The French themselves, from the height of La Maisonette, look right into Peronne and command it with their guns. We may look now for another thrust by them eastward from Hardecourt and Curlu where a substantial advance would seal the fate of Peronne.

Mention of these little places shows the necessity, of course, of a map for an intelligent understanding of the campaign. But the map must itself be understood, and can only be read aright by an expert military mind. At the first glance the area over which the advance has been made may seem disappointing, though even this is far greater than the Germans covered in six months before Verdun. It is not areas, however, that matter, but points. All the places mentioned in the despatches are pivots of more or less importance, the loss of which compels the Germans to fall back along lines of greater or smaller length. Thus, the capture of Peronne or of Bapaume would cause a considerable retirement and redistribution of the enemy's forces. The Germans have not successive lines of trenches all the way to the Rhine. We are at present engaged in the heroic task of demolishing defences that have been building for nearly two years. Beyond them are other defences, but weaker ones; beyond these again, the open country, to reach which is to reach victory. If the Germans have definitely abandoned the assault on Verdun, they have admitted defeat; it will need time alone to bring it about. The unconcern of the German papers is a little self-conscious. If the threat of a Belgian offensive (which would be admirably timed) materialises, their confidence will be more manifestly shaken. They have argued from experience of our past offensives to the conclusion that this one is finished, definitely checked. The truth is, it has only just begun. The fifteenth day sees it prosecuted with increasing vigour and marked by further advances. The message just in contains the opinion of the Louren Telegraph that the position of the German army is very critical. This is because her mechanical resources, the supposedly impregnable defences of earth and timber and concrete, are falling her; her human resources were inadequate long ago. She has been bled white. The end is in sight, and may be nearer than we think.

Incandescent Gas Lighting.

The remarkable economy of the incandescent gas lamp is by no means either its chief or even an important claim for popularity. It meets better than any other source of artificial light the requirements of ideal light. In the color of the light produced it is far superior to any other illuminant in general and universal demand. The investigations of acknowledged authorities indicate that for the approximation of artificial daylight the gas mantle has at least one and one-half times the value of the carbon-filament electric lamp. This quality is highly desirable, indeed absolutely essential where the approximation of daylight color values is important. For lighting shops, displaying haberdashery, silting, gowns, millinery, etc., the incandescent gas lamp is not even remotely approached by any other incandescent lamp.

Of all the manifold advantages of gas light, perhaps the most important is its favourable effect upon the eyes. The development of the incandescent electric lamp with its intense brilliant and glaring filament has been accompanied by hitherto unheard-of prevalence of eye troubles and diseases which are forcing themselves upon the attention of the medical fraternity. This is resulting in a greater appreciation of the soft mellow quality of gas light and is rapidly enlarging in field of use.—July 13, eod

New Purchase Arrives

The s.s. Wren, Capt. Norman, reached port at 3 p.m. yesterday after a run of 44 hours from Port aux Basques. Thick fog was experienced all down the southwest coast which prevented the ship from making better time. The Wren is a small steamer of about 140 tons gross and 44 net and was built at Hull in 1896. When in good running order she can clip off from 10 to 11 knots per hour. Her former owners were the Atlantic Fish Co., from whom she was recently purchased by Mr. Geo. Neal. She is now undergoing some slight alterations and will be fitted for passenger accommodation and conveyance of mail, a suitable room for the latter purpose being erected on her main deck below the bridge. The ship has been chartered by the Royal Nfld. Co. and will replace the Petrel on the Trinity Bay mail service. We understand the Petrel will be taken over by the Government and used for patrol duty.

Collegians Win Easily Over St. Bon's.

The Collegians put it all over St. Bon's in last evening's football match. The teams were: Collegians—Babbitt, goal; Barnes, Heath, backs; Drover, Squires, Ellis, halves; Quick, Bertram, Kendrick, Macklin, Jolliffe, forwards. St. Bon's—Knight, goal; Power, Thistle, backs; M. Power, Callahan, Froobair, halves; Buckingham, St. John, Devine, Pack, Conran, forwards. Mr. Burke acted as referee. All through the game was one-sided, the Collegians having honors in their favor. During the first period, Jolliffe, Macklin and Barnes scored and in the second period Quick and Drover scored, the latter twice. The St. Bon's only scored once, through Devine. The game ended, Collegians, 6 goals; St. Bon's, 1.

MIDSHIPMAN ESMONDE.

(Ennischorry Paper.)

Among the ships destroyed with their crews was the powerful man-of-war the 'Invincible', and the loss of it's ship brings sorrow to the home of Sir Thomas and Lady Esmonde, whose second son, John, was Lieut. Midshipman on board. All Wexford folk will sympathize heartily with Sir Thomas and Lady Esmonde in this sorrow which has befallen them in the loss of their brave son who bore an heroic name. He was an amiable and manly boy—he had only completed his seventeenth year—who played a brave part at the battle of the Falkland Islands where he received his baptism of fire. 'The Freeman', referring to the sad occurrence observes that "he was a youth of very rare promise. Our readers will remember that after the battle off the Falkland Islands, in which he took part, we published from his pen a graphic account of the fight. It was a wonderful performance for one so young, and showed not merely astonishing skill in writing but the possession of the best qualities as a sailor. His untimely death on the threshold of what might be expected to be a great career will be a bitter grief to his father, who will have the deep sympathy of his countrymen." There will be profound and universal sympathy with the parents, brother and sisters of Lieut. Esmonde in the premature death that has overtaken him. There will be profound sorrow also with the parents of many brave boys and young men from this county who have lost their lives in this great naval battle for it is certain that there are many of our sailors among the crews of the ships that have been destroyed.

[Sir Thomas Esmonde has been several times to Newfoundland, being a great traveller, and a host of friends here will sympathize with him and Lady Esmonde in their heavy loss.—Ed.]

TO-DAY'S Messages.

10.00 A.M.

SIGNIFICANT.

PARIS, To-day. The bombardment along the Belgian front has reached a point of the greatest intensity, according to an official statement issued by the French War Office last night.

FRANZ JOSEPH VERY ILL.

ZURICH, To-day. Members of the Austrian Imperial family have been summoned to Schoenbrunn, owing to the illness of Emperor Franz Joseph, according to news despatches from Innsbruck. Several specialists are attending the Emperor. News of the war is being withheld from him.

REDMOND AND LANSDOWNE.

LONDON, To-day. John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, to-day again took up the charge against Marquis Lansdowne in another statement which demands prompt production of the new Irish Bill in order to settle the disputed points between himself and Lord Lansdowne. The Irish leader says with regard to the declaration that Lord Lansdowne in his speech shows a policy of naked coercion in Ireland, "I am loath to believe that it represents the deliberate decision of the Cabinet, but I repeat that such a policy can meet with nothing but repudiation, condemnation and opposition on the part of the Irish party."

ANOTHER STEAMER SUNK.

LONDON, To-day. A report from Lloyds says the British steamer Silverton has been sunk. The latest maritime records report the Silverton, a vessel of 2,582 tons, leaving the River Tyne in England, on June 11 for an unnamed destination. The Silverton was built in West Hartlepool in 1891 and owned in Leth.

RUSSIANS HOLD BACK TEUTONS.

PETROGRAD, To-day. The Teutonic offensive near Stobychwa, northeast of Kovell, in an attempt to drive the Russians from the left bank of the Stokod River, has failed, according to a statement given out last night by the War Office. The intensity of the fighting on the west Stokod River lessened.

SPLENDID BRITISH SUCCESSES.

LONDON, To-day. Appropriately on the day of the French national fête, when every Londoner wore in his buttonhole a tricolor ribbon in honor of his Ally, came the stirring news of the successful British attack on the German second line which opened before dawn, and carried a number of new positions. An Associated Press correspondent at the front describes the attack as surprising that of July 1st as a great spectacle and thrilling display of artillery power, characteristic of the fighting throughout the battle of the Somme.

The Germans appeared to be unable to bring up sufficient reserves, to make successful counter-attacks. The second point which is emphasized by observers on the Allied side is that in fighting at close quarters the Germans surrendered freely. Despatches from Sir Douglas Haig and from Press correspondents show that the fighting has again been of the heaviest character. At one point the Germans by numerous counter attacks succeeded in driving the British out of Bazentia Le Pett. They were immediately driven out again by a British infantry attack and the village remained firmly in British possession. The day's fighting resulted in a steady increase in the British gains, leaving them in possession of the enemy's second position from Bazentia Le Pett to Longueval, both inclusive, and the whole of Trones Wood. The number of prisoners now taken includes two Colonels and other superior officers. According to Press correspondents the fighting is continuing hotly. Late yesterday bitter fighting was proceeding in the afternoon in the Woods beyond Longueval and on the high points of a ridge occupied by the British during the day. The British suffered comparatively small losses in the day's fighting. The positions gained yesterday leave the Germans seriously threatened at Posieres on the main road from Albert to Bapaume, while possession of the territory around Longueval brings the British advance into line with the French at Hardcourt. Further heavy British casualty lists issued yesterday give the names of 104 officers killed and 311 wounded and 1,750 men killed and wounded. The centre of interest in the Russian front continues to be the Caucasus, where the Russians are maintaining their successes against the Turks. Fighting on the Stokhod has relaxed into trench warfare but west of the Stripa there have been turbulent Austrian counter-attacks. The Russians have taken another 3,200 prisoners.

A SENSIBLE MOVE.

LONDON, To-day. The British Foreign Office has addressed a Note to neutral Governments to-day explaining the reasons which prompt the abandonment of the Declaration of London. The Declaration was abrogated by an Order in Council published on July 8. A similar decree was issued in Paris on the same day. The present British Note explains that the Allies adopted the Declaration of London at the beginning of the war because in their anxiety to conform to International Law they believed the Declaration provided a suitable digest of principles as a compendium of working rules. These rules, says the Note, did not necessarily possess the force of law, but seemed in their main line to present a settlement of the rights of belligerents based on the experience of previous naval wars; but as the struggle proceeded it developed beyond all previous conceptions, owing to the manifold scientific improvements of warfare, and produced conditions altogether different from previous naval wars. It then became clear that the attempt made in time of peace by the Declaration of London to determine principles of law and their application failed to produce a satisfactory result. The Allied Governments were forced to recognize the situation thus created and therefore declare that they must confine themselves simply to applying historic and admitted rules of the law of nations.

MOVEMENTS THAT HAVE MEANINGS.

LONDON, To-day. The British success is marked by the straightening of their line in conformity with the French, who had hitherto advanced at much greater speed than their Allies. Unofficial statements say that the Germans second line was much less strongly fortified than their first defences. On the French position in the Somme front there has been no action of importance. Bombardment of the German positions on the Belgian front has reached the greatest intensity. This announcement receives additional significance, as for more than a week the Belgians have carried on a persistent and destructive bombardment directed against the German fortifications. These announcements were similar to those made by the British preceding the opening of their great offensive and may now possibly indicate another big forward movement at the extreme western end of the battle line. Another point of significance in to-day's official war reports is that the only action reported on the Verdun front was assaults made by the French. These assaults were noted in the German official statement which made no claims to any German offensive actions.

FEEDING NORTHERN FRANCE.

LONDON, To-day. The Foreign Office issued the following statement in regard to feeding the populations of the territories which have been occupied by Germany. In the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of July 5, the German Government publishes what purports to be an answer to the British Foreign Office statement concerning the victualling of Poland. The article says it is a conscious falsehood to say that in Northern France only a small part of the harvest was left over for the French inhabitants. It says that the American Relief Committee knows to the contrary. In view of this assertion the Government must answer the question whether it is or is not true that the allowance made available by themselves for the French inhabitants last harvest was 100 grammes of flour per capita daily, and whether this did not mean that only 90,000 tons of grain produced was reserved for these inhabitants over the whole year, whereas the normal amount produced by these provinces is about 700,000 tons. It may be doubted whether Germany will care to answer this question, but whether it does or not we take note of this German statement, and expect that the coming harvest will really be reserved wholly for the French population in accordance with the German professions.

12.30 P. M.

LONDON EXULTANT.

LONDON, To-day. The new British advance on the Western front provides the theme for exultant comment in the morning papers. The situation of the German army is very critical, declares the "Telegraph." The Daily News says: "The comparative ease with which the second line has been forced lends countenance to the belief that they were not as strong as the first lines undoubtedly were. It may be that the worst and heaviest task was achieved with the carrying of the first lines, which the Germans are said to have held to be impregnable."

BELGIAN OFFENSIVE POSSIBLE.

LONDON, To-day. On the French portion of the Somme front no action of importance was recorded, but in the French official statement for Friday it was announced that the bombardment of the German positions on the Belgian front had reached a point of the greatest intensity. This announcement received editorial significance, as for more than a week the Belgians have reported persistent and destructive bombardment directed against the German fortifications. These announcements were similar to those made by the British preceding the opening of their great offensive and may now possibly indicate another big forward movement at the extreme western end of the battle line.

2.00 P. M.

BRITISH ATTACK WAS SURPRISE.

LONDON, To-day. On the British front in France at the end of a long day's unbroken struggle, the indications are that the British were holding their gains of the morning when along a front of about four miles they attacked the German second line and captured several important positions. An unexpectedly large number of wounded came into the clearing stations during the morning hours; many were borne by German prisoners, who acted as litter bearers. These prisoners said that no attack had been expected and that the assault before daylight came as a complete surprise.

STILL FIGHTING AT VERDUN.

PARIS, To-day. A violent artillery duel continues in the French sector, the War Office announced to-day. A German attack on a trench northeast of Avocourt rebound was repulsed, and German attempts to undertake attacks in the Appremont forest were checked by curtain fire.

GERMAN SUBS.

LONDON, To-day. For the first time since summer German submarines have appeared in a land sea, according to a Stockholm despatch.

BRITISH DRIVE CONTINUES.

LONDON, To-day. The British offensive was resumed to-day. The War Office announced that at one point the Germans were forced back to their third line positions; more than 2,000 prisoners were taken.

Train Notes.

Thursday's express reached Port aux Basques at 1.10 a.m. to-day. The incoming express is due at 3.30 p.m. to-day. The Trensey train reached the city at 9.30 a.m. to-day. The local from Carbonear arrived in the city on time to-day.

A VISITOR FROM THE TRENCHES.—On Sunday morning next, the Rev. J. McCartney Wilson, of New Glasgow, will deliver an address at the Kirk. Mr. Wilson has, we understand, been some time in France with the Canadian troops, and no doubt a very large number will be present on Sunday morning to hear him.

PLAGIARISED AND OTHERWISE.

THE HAS-BEEN.

Reveries of a Baseball Veteran. A has-been? Yes, I guess I am. No good for further use, so then, Why try to seek that which is past And always have to say at last: "I've done my best but 'e'en my best is far 'too poor to win." The crowds that cheer, the crowds that hiss. The same old crowd assembled here—I've felt their hiss, I've heard their cheer, Brought by a catch or miss. Each player there is in his same old place. Each one, too, to me, an old familiar face. All except one, the middle sack, you see— A year ago that place was held by me. I've but to close my eyes and once again I see the players' bench; tense, anxious men Upon the side lines watching every play. Striving as generals strive to win their day. I see our pitcher, when the game is close. Turn with a smile to each man at his post; And in return receive a smile or call; "We're all behind you, Ed, old seed, play ball." I see a certain play: a man on third. "A hit will tie the score!" is every word—a crack, the ball speeds down my way. "Good catch" they cheer and shout. "You're THERE to-day." But now, all that for me is passed and gone; No more I share their fellowship, their song. And in my reveries I count the cost And think of just the games I won, not lost. Some missed me when I did not come again; And others scarcely knew that I had been. Now if they ever think of me at all It is the HITS and not who hits the ball. We were pleased to see Dr. Harry Smith on the diamond again on Wednesday afternoon. The "Doc" has a watchful eye on the bases, and it is exceedingly difficult to get away with anything.

IN MEMORIAM.—George Dick, another of our baseballers, has made the supreme sacrifice in Flanders' Fields. George was the first treasurer of the Shamrocks when they were inaugurated in 1915, and played centre-field with his nose. He was a keen athlete, and though baseball was new to him he quickly picked up the salient points of the game and became quite an adept at it. When the War broke out and the Regiment was formed, he was one of the FOURTEEN Shamrocks out of their FIFTEEN players who exchanged their ball bats for khaki. To his sorrowing friends and Club we extend our sincerest sympathy.

This week's going to be Baseball Week. Through the kindness of Secretary St. John of the Footballers they have generously given TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY nights of this week to the Baseball League to permit them to play the preliminary games for Mt. Cashel. The regular League fixture will be played on Wednesday afternoon for the "English Bed Fund." The schedule for this week will therefore be:— Tuesday, 6.30—St. George's Field, B. I. S.—Wanderers. Proceeds to be for Mount Cashel. Wednesday, 8 p.m.—St. George's Field, Red Lions—B. I. S. Proceeds for English Bed Fund. Wednesday, 6.30 p.m.—St. George's Field, Cubs and Red Lions. Proceeds for Mount Cashel.

The winners of the two Mount Cashel games will be played off at the Garden Party for the silver cup presented by Mr. H. D. Reid. Here is a sample of the enthusiasm which pervades the Cubs' camp:— A champion's sparring partner Lands a wallop on the jaw And sets the champion on his spine The fight fans say "Haw, Haw, He is the cheese—the Camembert—The worst I ever saw."

A ball team wallowed hopelessly By every team they've met, The Cubs, he shows no bitterness Nor symptom of regret. "Tis early," he calmly answers you, "We haven't started yet."

Tuesday night's game for the Mt. Cashel Cup between the B. I. S. and Wanderers will probably witness the last appearance (for a short time we hope) of Sgt. McHenry and Pte. W. Callahan. "Mac" was the star of the Grand Falls' nine when they came to town on three occasions to wrest the Inter-war Trophy from us, and in his one and only game in the St. John's League played a remarkable game with the Irish against the Cubs. We are sure "Billy" Callahan needs no eulogy; fans, players, and umpires all know him full well as the hardest and scrappiest little player ever in our League, the second to none when guarding the keystone. With the Shamrocks since their inception, he went with the Irish when his team withdrew from the League. Pte. Collins of the Red Lions is also going Overseas. Billy, broke into baseball this year and showed every promise. Now, fans, we've got to help the orphanage by the Thins games on Tuesday and Wednesday nights are going to be fast and classy, and will consist of only 5 innings each. The admission will be five cents to be devoted towards the Orphanage funds. On Wednesday at 3 o'clock it will be the duty of each and every fan to witness the games between the Red Lions and B. I. S. as the entire proceeds will be devoted towards the English Bed Fund. The admission will be 10 cents, and in view of the worthiness of the object we feel sure there is no need of an apology for having increased the price. The last game realised over seventy dollars. Can we repeat this?

Next Week's Concerts.

An opportunity is being afforded, as will be seen by advertisement elsewhere, of witnessing some of the work of pupils from the Halifax School for the Blind. Two entertainments are being provided at which will be demonstrated the musical and literary attainments of the pupils, which it is hoped to increase the interest of our people for the fifty old boys and girls in the colony deprived of the blessing of sight, and include as many by them as possible in the institutional tuition. His Excellency the Governor, who has always taken a very keen interest in the School, but is prevented by a previous engagement from presiding on Monday, will take the chair on Tuesday evening.

Thirty-Five Beds Already.

July 15, 1916. The local centre of the St. John Ambulance Association was to-day informed by cable that Gifford Hospital has allotted twenty Newfoundland beds and St. John Hospital, East-coast, fifteen beds, to be maintained for the ensuing twelve months from the local fund which is now being so generously subscribed. The wards will be named "Newfoundland" and the beds called after the donors, or as directed by them. Further beds are now being arranged for and it seems probable, considering the handsome support the appeal has received, that the number of the Newfoundland beds will yet be largely increased. The concluding words of the cable are: "Grateful thanks to Newfoundland."

LOADING FOR IRELAND.—The schr. Burnett C. is loading fish at Burgeo for Ireland.

CAPT. O'BRIEN WIRES.—We understand a cable was received last evening from Capt. Gus. O'Brien, stating that he was then in Paris and attached to a Company of our Regiment.

BANKER STRAYAWAYS.—Two French fishermen who strayed away from the banker Eglantine were landed at St. Lawrence yesterday somewhat exhausted, having strayed from their vessel on the St. Pierre Bank on Wednesday last.

BIG HAULS MADE.—Some big hauls of codfish were taken in traps at Bailline and Torbay yesterday. At both places there are good voyages ashore already, but a remarkable circumstance is that the fishermen at Flat Rock, the intervening centre, are doing practically nothing and the outlook of the voyage promises to be a total failure.

Those Selfish, Unselfish Men.

RUTH CAMERON.

Sometimes I think men are the most exasperating, selfish creatures in the world. They make such a fuss about their meals, they scold so when the morning paper doesn't come or at any of the small mishaps that are an inevitable part of the warp and woof of daily life, and that wouldn't matter much if people only wouldn't fuss about them.

And then I wonder how they can be so unselfish.

And then again I am touched by the infinite patience and the unselfishness of this strange race of creatures.

Once upon a time when I was in New York I called upon a friend who lived in Brooklyn.

I was myself staying at the other end of the city and the trip took me one hour and three-quarters, much of which was spent in a hot, ill-ventilated, crowded subway.

It was a terrible trip, and I couldn't help commenting upon it to my hostess.

He spends three hours and a half a day in discomfort.

"How would you like to take it every day?" she asked. "One of my neighbours does that. His business was moved out to the Bronx just after they took the apartment. His wife isn't strong and they had just gotten acquainted and she didn't want to move again right away, so he has to go back and forth every day, and in the rush hour, too, when he has to stand most of the way."

Think of it! An hour and three-quarters twice a day—three hours and a half spent going to and from his work, and spent in uncomfortable and unhealthy surroundings!

All so that his wife shouldn't have to move!

That's what I call a heroic sacrifice—the kind of heroism that endures the torture of a million pin pricks of daily discomfort.

No Woman Should Accept Such A Sacrifice.

No woman should accept such a sacrifice.

Accessibility to her husband's business ought to be the first factor considered in choosing a home. No woman would deliberately top off two or three years of her husband's life so that she might be more accessible to her friends. Yet that is just what many women do in forcing their husbands to spend an extra hour a day in transit.

There are not many cases so bad as the one I have quoted (though I know of another where the father for years traveled two hours and a half each way), but there are many cases in which the convenience of the worker has not been made a prime factor in the choice of a home.

Soper & Moore,

"Lord, he Whom Thou Lovest is Sick"

Mrs. James Clarke, of Whitbourne, who has three sons in the ranks, sends us the following letter, written to her son, Selby Clarke, while he was in an English hospital:—

My Dear Friend,—

How earnestly we all hoped last Christmas that before another winter should come this terrible war, which we know is a righteous war, would be over, but God who knew beforehand the day when war would be declared, knows now when the peace we so long and pray for will be given to us. Yes, and He knew too the very hour when you would be stricken down by the enemy or by sickness, and all the weary days you spent, weak and suffering, in hospital. So this Christmas finds you just where your Heavenly Father knew you would be—you who for King and Country went forth so bravely, so willingly to fight or to fall, and I am sure that there is a gladness in your heart this morning (no matter how you may be suffering) because you have done what England not only expected, but knew that every man would do—HIS DUTY. And so I wish you a very happy Christmas. Perhaps it won't be quite so merry as some you may remember, but after all merriment, as a rule, doesn't last so very long, but happiness may be ours all day, and every day, in hospitals as well as home! If you come to think of it, I suppose there is nothing in life that brings us quite so much happiness as love! It's such a wonderful joy to know that we are loved. You know what I mean don't you? The joy of possessing the strong, undying love of your mother, the sweet unchanging love of your wife and the wonderful winsome love of your little one. But you know there is a love more wonderful than all these put together, a love that is strong and sweet and satisfying and unchanging, and oftentimes this is the love that a man finds out last of all. "The love of Christ which passeth knowledge." Have you ever noticed in the Gospel story how a man was once described by his sister in a message to the Lord Jesus? Look at the words which head my letter—"Lord, he whom Thou lovest is sick." "Loved" yet "sick." And do you know that these words exactly describe you this morning? Loved—sick; yes. And perhaps sick because loved!

"I thank God more for the two months spent in hospital than for all the rest of my life," said a man to a friend who was visiting him on his return home after a long and serious illness.

"Why, how's that?" said the friend.

"Because upon my hospital bed I first met the Lord Jesus, and know that He loved me and wanted me for His service. I was always so busy with other things that I never listened to His voice, but lying there, still and ill I did hear Him calling me, and I did answer Him, and I did come to Him and 'twas well worth all the time up there and all the sickness to find what I have found—Saviour and Salvation." You see it was because Jesus loved that man that He laid him low in sickness, just to tell him in the stillness of His love. And I'm just wondering if that is why you are spending this Christmas in hospital—because the Christ of Christmas has a message for you that you would not hear in the noise and bustle of ordinary life, the message of that love which led to death. This love is about One of whom we are told that He was wounded. I want you to have a good think about these three words this morning, as you lie wounded by bullet, sword or shell. He was wounded. Yes, and by soldiers too! Then, He quite understands and know how you feel, for he had a human body sensitive to pain, to thirst, to weariness, and He when He was wounded had no one near to soothe or help. He hung there, in the noonday glare of an Eastern sky, surrounded by a mocking hostile crowd, given over into wicked hands, forsaken by His Father and by His followers! And why? "He was wounded for our transgressions." You have been wounded because of your loyalty to your king and your love to your country. He was wounded because of His loyalty to His Father and His love to you! For sin has not only ruined us, but it has wronged God. And so the Lord Jesus Christ, upon the Cross of Calvary, offered Himself as a substitute for the sinner and as a sacrifice to God for the sin. And when the life blood flowed from His wounds, He whispered to himself, "It's alright now for the bairns?"

And so I think there came into the heart of the dying Saviour a great wonderful joy as He realized that by His death He had secured for you and for me a release from the death that our sin deserved, and in its stead the Gift of Eternal Life. That was the meaning of His dying cry, "It is finished," for He knew that He had "obtained eternal redemption for us."

O perfect life of love! all, all is finished now!

And of His thorn-crowned head, and on His sinless soul

Our sins in all their guilt were laid, that He might make us whole;

In Perfect love He dies—for me He dies for me!

Oh, all-atoning sacrifice, I cling by faith to Thee.

And so this morning remember that although you are sick you are loved, loved by Him who for your sin was wounded, that by His wounds you might be healed.

with His dying breath, "It is finished." Have you ever thought what those words mean? We are all looking forward to glorious results from this war; but they will be results that have been bought by blood. It is the thought of victory that inspires our sailors and soldiers in the day of battle. And you know we are told about the Lord Jesus that He endured the Cross because of the joy that was set before Him. And I always think when He uttered those words, "It is finished," He saw what His death had meant for a sinful world. Everything was done to make it possible for God to forgive sin and to save the sinner. My transgression, my sin, punished, atoned for by His wounds. He suffered for sin. . . . that He might bring us to God." Some time ago a man at work on some building alterations in London was fearfully injured by the falling of a wall upon him. As soon as possible he was released from the mass of masonry and taken away to the nearest hospital. Doctors and nurses did all that skillful, tender hands could do to lessen agony, but that was all. The injuries were too severe and the life in its very prime was ebbing away. But strange to say the man was conscious, and as the light of the doctors was leaving his bedside, with a few final instructions to the nurse, the man mottled to him to come back, and bending over the patient once more he said, "Well, my man, what is it?"

"Doctor can you pull me through?"

"We will do our best but you are badly hurt." "Oh, Doctor, do ye keep me alive a bit; just for three weeks, will ye? I don't mind after that but I must live three weeks." "We shall do all we can my man," said the doctor, as he turned away and whispered to the nurse, "Three weeks? Why, hardly three days—three hours more likely."

And after the doctor had gone, and the nurse sat alone with the man, he repeated the question again, "can ye keep me alive three weeks?" "Why do you especially want to live for three weeks?" she asked. And fitfully and faintly came the words: "Because—because there's a tidy bit of pension due in three weeks; and if only I can last till then it will be better for the missus and the bairns."

"Oh, do ye keep me alive till then?"

"And," said the nurse, as she told the story to a friend, "by sheer force of will and the strength of love the man did live three weeks—in fearful pain, so patiently, willingly borne—that it might be better for the missus and the bairns." And at the end of three weeks the pension papers were brought to the hospital and filled in by the doctor, and when all the necessary details were finished the man looked up with such a wonderful restful look on his face as he stretched out his hands to grasp the papers upon which so much depended: "You're sure it's all right, doctor? She'll get the money?" "Yes, my man, it's all safe for her now." "And then," said the nurse, "with a sort of farewell look he shut his eyes, and laying his hands with their precious contents over the heart that would not cease to beat until love had won, he passed away without a word, without a struggle."

Three weeks of agony, bravely, patiently borne—three weeks' hard fight with death—and why? Just to secure the pension that would "make things better for the missus and the bairns."

Can't you almost overhead that dying man (as he breathed his last

to himself, "It's alright now for the bairns?"

And so I think there came into the heart of the dying Saviour a great wonderful joy as He realized that by His death He had secured for you and for me a release from the death that our sin deserved, and in its stead the Gift of Eternal Life. That was the meaning of His dying cry, "It is finished," for He knew that He had "obtained eternal redemption for us."

"Do you think it is necessary for a man to leave his hat off when he stands talking to a woman on a cold day? Also, is it necessary for him to take his hat off when bowing to a woman, or all right to simply touch his hat without lifting it?" asked Ella.

"A man should always remove his hat when he stops to talk to a woman on the street, but on a cold day it would be considerate to ask him to put it on and there would be no impropriety in his doing so. If he wishes to be polite, it is absolutely necessary for a man to take his hat off when bowing to a woman; it is not sufficient to touch the hat," answered her aunt.

THE THOU

PICNICS.

Last year I deprecated the custom of having their usual picnics, the anxious and nervous through which we are not I still maintain my point of respect for our dead and we all hold. But knowing that dead, and feeling that they are just beyond the horizon, maybe very near to us, that one of them would have had to restrain the movement of a child? Can we it pleases them to see them in the faces of the dead? Would they not be glad of their natural and innocent you, it does not seem to minds of those who object to picnics, what a vast difference is between these picnics and whole host of other festive amusements. No one has condemned the waste of money incurred in attending the driving motor cars for going to Bowring Park, a giant following of fresh air in other ways, but the children, the day of enjoyment, many a child must be staying home, must be contented in their Fences enable the children the blessing of fresh air, many of them a "feed" that is tonically varied. The other ments I have mentioned are pursued in a selfish desire for pleasure.

The Dead call to us not to carry on all good work one child is strengthened in the open, the picnic is worth while. Let us separate our pleasure from other

THE THOUGHTS OF THEOBALD.

PICNICS.

Last year I deprecated the fact that some Sunday Schools were not having their usual picnics. Despite the anxious and mournful time through which we are now passing I still maintain my point of view. Respect for our dead and wounded we all hold. But knowing our gallant dead, and feeling as I do, that they are just beyond the border and maybe very near to us, can we think that one of them would hold up his hand to restrain the natural enjoyment of a child? Can we think that it pleases them to see disappointment in the faces of the children? Would they not be glad to share in their natural and innocent joy? Mind you, it does not seem to enter the minds of those who object to these picnics, what a vast difference there is between these picnics and the whole host of other festivities and amusements. No one has spoken and condemned the waste of money incurred in attending the Nickels, in driving motor cars for pleasure, in riding to Bowring Park, in extravagant following of freak fashions, and in other ways, but the treat for the children, the day of enjoyment for many a child must be stopped! We must be consistent in this thing. The Picnics enable the children to enjoy the blessing of fresh air, and give many of them a "feed" that is exceptionally varied. The other amusements I have mentioned are generally pursued in a selfish desire for excitement.

The Dead call to us not to weep, but to carry on all good works. If but one child is strengthened by his day in the open, the picnic has been worth while. Let us separate healthful pleasure from other forms of pleasure or otherwise condemn all—baseball, tennis, football as well. Surely if a child will look back in sadness to think that he made merry at this time, will not a tennis player or a baseball player be in the more condemnation as he is of age now and fully realises the situation?

It is beyond question that a child has a right to health and happiness. Many possess them naturally. Sorrow comes soon, all too soon. Let us not cloud their sunshine. Let their pleasures be restricted last of all.

A simple child,
That lightly draws its breath,
And feels its life in every limb,
What should it know of death?
—Wordsworth.

HEAVY TUNICS.

It would seem an unnecessary burden to compel the volunteers to wear tunics during this hot weather. Looking at them returning from a march is enough to make one warm. They must be simply roasting. A simple, free and easy shirt would make them much more comfortable during drill, etc., and then their regimental coat would make them feel fresh and smart for their dress parades and hours of leave. In these days it is the man behind the uniform who counts, and not the uniform, and he ought to receive every consideration, even at the expense of regulations, many of which are of the "red tape" variety.

THE CITY.

I presume that the Municipal Council has given permission to the Furness Withy Co. to erect the fence in front of their premises, but I doubt very much if the plan of the erection was considered, or that it has been inspected since its completion. This fence runs along Water Street and its height varies greatly, and wanders up and down at the sweet will of the ground. No attempt has been made towards uniformity.

Now I should think that permission should only have been given when the Council knew exactly what erection was to be made, and where in this case it was quite possible to build the fence at the same level, it should have been imperative that the fence should be so built. When the sidewalk is graded properly the fence will present an extraordinary appearance. Of course the grading should have been done first.

It also seems to me questionable whether a wooden fence is desirable. Apart from fire risk, it seems a pity that this open space should be closed as it is. An iron fence would be just as effective, and still not give an appearance of shutting out the sight of the harbour. Our desire is to make the city as nice looking as possible. I do not think that the fence I mention brings us one step towards this goal.

Manly Words From A Nild. Soldier.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—If you will kindly publish these few lines for the benefit of mothers and fathers who have soldier sons fighting in this great war, I would be very much obliged.

No doubt you have heard, as I did, before I became a soldier, about the hardships of a soldier's life, but you cannot believe all you hear concerning soldiers' life in camp. I am a soldier and I am proud of it, and when I go home I will be glad to shake any man's hand that's a soldier.

Speaking from experience, I think I know I am a better man than ever civilian life could make me. Some people have the idea that when a man becomes a soldier his chances of living a good life are very slim. But that's all a mistake. I say that if there is any good in a man soldiering will bring it to the surface. A man hasn't any chance to lead anything but a decent life, I say. I know quite a few of Nild. chaps and I am glad to say they are all good men and good soldiers. They certainly made a name for themselves when they came face to face with the Huns. The Germans call us the White Indians, and we all go by that name over here. Ever since I came across the water I've been treated fine; plenty to eat and drink, plenty of clothes to wear, lots of good exercise and all kinds of sport, from football to leap-frog, and concerts every night in camp, and all free of charge.

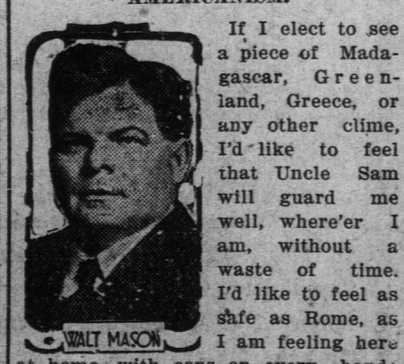

I must speak a good word for the ladies of this country for they deserve more praise than I can bestow upon them. They are never tired of working one way or another to give pleasure to us soldiers. I doubt if our country women could do any more for us than these ladies of England.

Now mothers, if there is any doubt in your mind as to your sons' mode of living, dismiss it right away; you can tell how your son is spending his time; he is spending it good and to some purpose. If he could live a good decent life home, you may be sure he will do so in the army, so don't worry; the army is turning out first class men every day, and I know our boys will all make good. I am sure they will. I wish we had more of the boys over here with us.

"CHILDREN take better care of their teeth than when we were young," remarked a grandfather as he saw the little ones of the family brushing their teeth.

"That is true," said the grandmother, "and children don't have the trouble with teeth we used to have. Their teeth will be firm and white when they are older, because they visit the dentist twice-a-year and use a good dentifrice every night and morning."

Perfect cleanliness of the teeth is essential to good health as well as to good looks. A delightful way to insure absolute cleanliness is the twice-a-day use of Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream, the dentifrice with the delicious flavor.

War News.

Messages Received Previous to 9 A.M.

OFFICIAL.
LONDON, July 14. The Governor, Newfoundland: At dawn we attacked the enemy's second system of defence and broke into hostile positions on a front of 4 miles. Fierce fighting has continued all the day. We are now in possession of the enemy's second positions from Bazentin le Petit to Longueval, inclusive, and the whole of the Trones Wood. Two counter-attacks were completely crushed. Later the enemy succeeded in recapturing Bazentin le Petit, but our infantry immediately drove them out, and now occupy the whole village. Many prisoners have fallen into our hands.

BONAR LAW.

BAZENTIN LE PETIT CAPTURED.

LONDON, July 14. Router's correspondent on the British front, telegraphs that the British forces have captured Bazentin le Petit and most of the village of Ovillers. A subsequent despatch from Router's correspondent says: "Later reports tend to confirm the first accounts of the success of the British attack this morning. The German second line was carried with small loss. The correspondent says the Germans surrendered freely. He reports that one regimental commander, his staff, three artillery officers, and men, were brought into one camp by nine o'clock this morning. In addition to the village already reported captured, the correspondent says, Bazentin le Petit has been taken by storm. Fighting is also proceeding against Ovillers, and virtually the entire village is in the hands of the British. Several German counter attacks against the positions just won, were repulsed by the British, who are now consolidating their gains. British troops are in high spirits over their successes."

IN TRONES WOOD.

NEW YORK, July 14. A News Agency despatch from Paris, published to-day, says: Fighting in the Trones Wood is believed to have been marked by heavy slaughter. Driven out of Mametz Wood and other small wooded regions in the vicinity of Contalmaison, the Germans clung to their positions in Trones Wood. Through the central part of the wood the Germans had dug elephant traps. The British advancing to the attack in last Saturday's fighting were suddenly precipitated through the foliage into deep pits. Both sides resorted to surprise attacks. There is heavy fighting for the possession of the forest."

COUNTER ATTACKS REPULSED.

LONDON, July 14. Fierce counter-attacks made by the Germans in the effort to reconquer some of the ground captured by the British in to-day's drive, were completely crushed by British forces, according to an official to-night.

INTERNED CIVILIANS.

LONDON, July 14. Proposals made in the recent British note to Germany regarding relief for interned civilians, were given to-day by Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of War Trade. The substance follows: All persons above the age of 50 are to be repatriated by their respective countries. All persons between the ages of 45 and 50, who are unfit for military service, are also to be sent home. All of the remainder in Germany and Britain are to be interned in equal number in neutral countries. Sufficient time has not yet yet elapsed for a reply to be received from the German Government.

FURIOUS COUNTER ATTACK.

PETROGRAD, July 14. A furious counter attack was launched by the Austrian and German forces yesterday, against the Russians, west of the Stripa, the War Office announcement says. In this region the Russians took 3,200 prisoners captured two guns and 19 machine guns.

FINANCIAL CONFERENCE HELD.

LONDON, July 14. The financial conference between representatives of Britain, France, Russia and Italy, was held this morning at the Treasury Office.

RIOT REPORT AMONG GREEK SOLDIERS.

NEW YORK, July 14. A cable from Paris to a News Agency here says that despatches from Salonika report serious rioting at Kavala, where 500 Greek soldiers stormed a train, on which they had been refused transportation. The railroad is controlled by the Anglo-French army. Pickets fired upon the Greek soldiers and drove them off.

CONSTANTINE'S SUMMER PALACE BURNED.

PARIS, July 14. A wireless despatch from Athens to-day describes the destruction of the summer palace of King Constantine, and the burning of the forest of Tatol, in which the palace stood. The King, says the despatch, escaped in an automobile from a dangerous position, where he was directing the foresters endeavoring to extinguish the fire, which had started in the woods. The motor in which the King approached the burning district was surrounded by flames. He darted on foot through the danger zone, reached another automobile and got away safely. Many persons were caught by the flames and perished. Among them were several army officers. The forest, which was the largest in Greece, was entirely burned over. The total loss from the flames exceeds 40,000,000 francs.

DIFFICULT UNDERTAKING.

WASHINGTON, July 14. The tragic stories of attacks by sharks upon bathers along the New Jersey coast, were discussed at to-day's meetings of the cabinet. Later Secretary McAdoo announced that the coast guard would be ordered to do what it could toward clearing the coast of these dangerous fish, and preventing further loss of life.

U. S. COLLIER SUNK.

CHARLESTON, S.C., July 14. Capt. Hunt, of the tug Vigilant, reported late to-day that the United States naval collier Hector, bound from Charleston for Santo Domingo, with fifty marines aboard, sank nine miles southeast of Charleston lightship. The fate of the crew and marines is unknown.

THE POPE AND PEACE.

NEW YORK, July 14. A News Agency despatch from Rome to-day says that Pope Benedict it is reported in church circles here, is preparing the issue of a second appeal for peace on the occasion of the second anniversary of the beginning of the war, now only two weeks away. Issuance of the appeal depends upon the success of the Allies in their present offensive. If the Anglo-French forces, for example, have made a wide breach in the German lines, steadily pushing back the enemy as the anniversary draws near, His Holiness will regard the time as inopportune and will have little or nothing to say regarding peace.

Newfoundlander Invents Shells For Trench Warfare.

Mr. Levi Chafe received a letter a few days ago from his nephew, Corp. Fred Chafe, A. Co., 49th Battalion, C. E. F., now in France, who was among the first to enlist and joined the above regiment in Calgary, Alta. After more than a year in the trenches he came safely through several tough engagements. In his letter he speaks of his brother, Private Alan Chafe, of the 31st Battalion, another Western unit, and says: "Alan has invented a new shell for trench warfare. Description or dimension of course could not be given, the Army authorities having the matter in hand." Should the patent be accepted the young soldier and his native Newfoundland will have every reason to be proud. Private Chafe was severely wounded in a previous action and lost the sight of his left eye.

Good Salvage Work.

ST. PIERRE, Mig., Yesterday. The steamer Arachne, stranded at Langley on the 19th June, was refloated and temporarily repaired at St. Pierre, and sailed for Quebec to dock on the 11th inst., conveyed by the steamer Amphitrite. The salvage of two-thirds of the Arachne's valuable cargo of wheat was due to the excellent work of the salvors, the ship being in a dangerous and exposed position. The barque Denmark, stranded on Langley on the 11th inst., was refloated at last night's tide. The Norwegian barque Inger, stranded on Langley, the same date, it is considered can be refloated with prompt action. An offer to refloat has been made to the captain. The barque Rezhnild, stranded on the same coast on the same date, is considered to be a total wreck.

Officer's Dinner.

The officers of the Second Newfoundland Regiment held an informal dinner at the Prince's Rink Barracks on Thursday night. Col. Sir D. E. Davidson, Sir Joseph Outerbridge, Sir F. R. Bowring, Hon. J. R. Bennett, F. J. Morris, K.C. and Capt. A. Abraham were the invited guests. Lieut. N. A. Outerbridge presided and was assisted by the other members of the Mess Committee:—Lieuts. G. C. Harvey and J. C. Murphy. His Excellency the Governor reviewed the work of the 1st Newfoundland Regiment now in France and was proud of the part they had played.

Major Montgomerie and other officers and guests spoke highly of our boys.

Congratulations to Dr. Paine

We extend heartfelt congratulations to Dr. H. G. Clarence Paine, third son of Mrs. and the late Rev. Geo. Paine, of this city, who graduated at McGill University, Montreal, on Monday last, in medicine with honors. Mr. Paine spent four years at the University and in May of last year proceeded to France as one of the McGill Base Hospital Unit. After a short time spent "somewhere in France," all fifty-year men were recalled and ordered to return to the University to complete their course of studies. Dr. Paine is expected by Monday's express on a visit to his mother to whom we also extend our felicitations.

Message From one of "Ours."

Mr. Elijah Bishop, of Mundy's Pond Road, yesterday received a wire from his son Alec, who is in the Ambulance Corps of the 1st Nfd. Regiment. The message was dated from London and stated that the sender was well. Private Bishop was among the first to enlist, and went through the Dardanelles campaign and also the recent fighting in France. This message added to others received, seems to show that most, if not all, of those who took part in the fighting, have been given furlough for a time.

Anniversary Mass.

To-morrow the anniversary Mass of Requiem will be said at Mount Carmel Cemetery. Rev. Dr. Kitchin, P. P., St. Joseph's, will be the celebrant and will also preach a sermon fitting to the occasion. The attendance will undoubtedly be exceptionally large, should the weather prove propitious. During the past twelve months the surroundings of "God's Acre" have been greatly improved and beautified and a new residence completed for the Sexton.

care for the brave boys who so readily offered their services to the Empire.

Consequently a representative meeting was called at Boston on the evening of December 4th, 1915, and was attended by parties from the various cities surrounding Boston.

After considerable discussion it was unanimously voted:
 "That the Newfoundland Patriotic Association of Boston and vicinity is hereby established, to be administered by a President, Secretary and Treasurer, and an Executive Committee composed of four members and any additional members whom they may desire to appoint.

"The object of the Association is to raise funds to be transmitted to the Newfoundland Patriotic Association at St. John's for the purpose of furnishing Red Cross and Hospital Supplies to the soldiers and sailors of Newfoundland serving with the colors."

The meeting was organized by the selection of Selby Hawkins, President; Moses Fox, Secretary and Denis Walsh, Treasurer. Executive Committee—John Bennett, Chairman; H. A. Rendell, Robert Davis and George Tapp.

Full authority was given to the Executive Committee to appoint sub-committees, and also to issue subscription books, stating the object for which the Fund was created and appealing for financial support. The great war embracing so many nationalities and each endeavoring to do their utmost in raising funds to help their own, it was voted to keep our appeal as closely confined to Newfoundlanders as consistently possible.

Subscription books were issued and put in the hands of members of the Association, and the sum of $197.70 was collected on the same from those whose names appear in the list below.

On the evening of April 27th a lecture, under auspices of the Association, was given in Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple, Boston, by the Rev. Alan Hudson, D.D., himself a Newfoundland, (who gave his services gratuitously), the proceeds of which amounted to $287.07.

The esteemed and talented lecturer, has since passed on to his eternal reward. While we regret his early and sudden demise, we feel that Newfoundland will rejoice to know that his heart remained loyal to the land of his birth and that one of his last public acts was an endeavor to help her in her hour of need.

From the beginning of our operations a large amount of volunteer work has been given by various members of our Com. No person connected with the Fund has received any compensation for his services and no unnecessary expense has been incurred. The object of the Committee has been to promote the fund in the most effective manner with the least expense. The Executive Committee have held a great number of meetings, besides conducting public meetings in Chelsea and Lynn.

While the amount which we have raised is not large, we consider that it has been creditable to our friends, and we confidently hope that in the coming fall we will not appeal in vain to our friends for a renewal of their gifts to our fund in such a manner as their circumstances may permit.

The following officers have been elected for the ensuing year: John Bennett, President; Moses Fox, Secretary; George Tapp, Asst. Secretary; Denis Walsh, Treasurer. Executive Committee: H. A. Rendell, Chairman; Robert Davis, George Suter and Edward J. Walker.

The following financial statement is herewith appended, ending June 26, 1916.

Something About the Big Drive of the Allies.

For weeks, if not for months, past it has been known that there would be "something doing" on the western front this summer. It was generally expected that this would be the "big drive," that the British were ready to apply their whole strength to the task of pushing the Germans out of Flanders and France. We cannot be sure even yet whether this is the greatest, or the final offensive which will be undertaken by the British this year, whether it is designed to actually drive the Germans out of their present positions or whether it is a feint, the real offensive to take place at some other point along the line, or whether it is a mere diversion to help Petain at Verdun. So the speculation that was begun a couple of months ago is not yet at an end. We only know at this time that the move has succeeded, so far as it has gone, whatever is its object.

All Depends on Leaders.

Writing from Bar-le-Duc on June 22, Herbert Corey, a correspondent of the Washington Star, was permitted by the censor to give some interesting details of the preparations that had been made for the British attack. It was his opinion that a great offensive was intended, and that the object really was to end the war by the most terrific assault in the history of the war; and it was also his opinion that success depended upon British leadership. He quoted a French officer who had inspected the whole front as saying: "The British preparation has been perfection itself. The men are right, and there are enough of them; the roads are right, and there are enough; the guns are right and the shells are right, and there is enough of both. The success of the move this year will depend entirely on the manner in which they are led. If we do not go through this year we will go through next year."

Wonderful Railway System.

Mr. Corey has been all over the British front, and what has impressed him most is the wonderful work that has been done in railway construction behind the British lines. There are no fewer than 3,000 miles of railroad have been built, a fair share being standard gauge for full-size trains and the remainder Decauville. Heretofore one tremendous advantage possessed by Germany has been in her railroad system, what she built in her own country before the war and what she seized or constructed in enemy territory now in her possession. Not only was she able to shuttle troops between Poland and Flanders by means of this system, or between Ypres and Verdun, but in the course of a battle she was able to clean up her front, that is, to retrieve her wounded and take back her prisoners and also to send forward fresh troops as fast as they were needed. Before a battle began she was able to place immense stores of ammunition and other supplies where she would need them, so that the lines would not be cluttered up with stores after the battle had begun, but could be exclusively used for troops.

Enormous Supplies of Guns.

The allies, on the other hand, have not yet been able to meet Germany on even ground so far as railroad transport is concerned. More than once victory has been denied them because they did not have the rails or the rolling stock to get reserves into the trenches fast enough—in other words, by being unable to follow up initial success and consolidate the ground won. Behind the British lines however, there are more railroads than behind the German lines, and as fast as British infantry advances a mile engineers lay a mile of track. These roads have already been of vital importance in bringing to the front, or at convenient spots back of the front, innumerable quantities of guns. Mr. Corey quotes a British officer, who says that the ground back of the front fairly "crawls" with batteries of big guns that have never been used. They are hidden behind haystacks. They are buried in the ground. Thousands of tons of ammunition and all kinds of supplies have also been buried, to be produced only when the great offensive has been launched.

Size of the British Army.

The British field telephone system is said to be better than the French Government-owned system. Concrete poles and proper insulation have been installed. In fact, so admirable is the system that it will be presented to France at the end of the war. Regarding the manufacture of shells, Mr. Corey says he was recently in a shell factory, and it was not the largest in France, in which 16,000 people were employed. As for the army, there are ready to go into the British trenches 1,200,000 men. This does not include the soldiers of the supply corps, the relay corps, the bridge-building corps and others amounting to probably another 500,000 men, usually included in estimates of an army's strength. As to the quality of the soldiers, Mr. Corey did not speak, but the actions of the last few days, in which the Highlanders, the Ulstermen and the Lancashire clerks distinguished themselves relieves all possible anxiety on this score. It is now "up to" the generals.

Dust and Flies.

This is the time of the year when the dirty dust from the streets, and flies are in the air and watching their chance to alight on your bread and bring dirt and disease to your children. Guard against them by buying Lynch's Beauty Cake, white, and brown, wrapped and sealed by machinery in a dust and germ proof wrapper; it is the only bread in Newfoundland that is made, wrapped and sealed by machinery. Ask your grocer for it. Did you get any of Lynch's Beauty Cake, yes? Oh, what a beauty cake! the best in the land. Ask your grocer for it. June 22, 16.

AT THE CRESCENT.

The winsome Lillian Walker with Antonio Moreno appears at the Crescent Picture Palace to-day in "A Model Wife," a special feature produced in two reels by the Vitagraph Company. "The Urchin" is an appealing drama by the Lubin Company, featuring Brooks McCluskey. "The Selig Tribune," a real newspaper, the world's greatest news film. To-day's issue contains some interesting and instructive items. "The Smoking" is a very laughable comedy, featuring Billie Reeves, the celebrated English music hall comedian. On Monday a four-reel Biograph "Divorcions," the wittiest of all Sardon's brilliant comedies.
