As a result another $7-odd million worth of work, which could have gone to Canadians, went to this Japanese firm. This work will be paid for by Canadians. It will be paid for by the taxes of Madam Speaker, by my taxes and, more importantly, the taxes of millions of Canadians. I have nothing against the Japanese. They are a fine and industrious people, but had the project been in Japan, no Canadian would have been given an opportunity to bid on it, never mind supply it or supply it at a higher price. This is what is happening with our uncaring government. The government cares little about Canadians. It takes the taxes of Canadians and spends them in a prolific, wanton and cavalier manner.

As I was entering the chamber this evening, I heard the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) very completely covering the subject concerning the architect from Vancouver who, not on the choice of those who were put in the position of choosing the architect for the new Canadian embassy in Washington, but because he was a friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), was chosen for the job. I suppose I must say, "Thank God, at least he was not Japanese; at least he is a Canadian." Perhaps that is some consolation, but it gives an idea of the way in which the government treats Canadians with disregard.

I am sure a number of my colleagues wish to speak in this debate tonight. I have used up just about all my time, but before returning to my seat, I suggest to hon. members opposite that there are many, many more members who want to participate. After all, it is only 1.45 in the morning. We could continue through the remainder of the night until dawn tomorrow. A number of my colleagues and I sat through the night and saw the sun rise Wednesday morning; I suppose we could sit through until the sun rises on Friday morning. Perhaps in so doing we might get across a message to the unfeeling government that we are no longer prepared to be walked over, stomped on or to have our Canada, this Canada we love so much, trampled into the ground by a government which has lost all sense of care, of dignity and of reality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I participated this afternoon in a seminar on parliamentary reform, and one subject discussed at length was why this institution does not work in representing Canadians. It is a subject which can be discussed for hours, but if I needed an example I could not have provided a better one than that which occurred approximately 15 minutes ago. That is the kind of tragedy which sees members opposite assuming that the issue of an emergency debate on the economic future of our people is one with which you play parliamentary games.

Last night and again tonight the members opposite have shown that it does not matter if $50 billion of investment goes down the drain. It does not matter if an energy program destroys the economic future of an entire region. It does not matter if my province loses every day because of programs which led to the collapse of Alsands. It does not matter to members opposite if that causes lay-offs numbering in the thousands. I suppose if you sit here all the time under the bright lights where you do not feel an energy shortage, where you just cannot have any feeling for the problem in a place as insulated as this environment, you can and do lose a sense of what is happening on the streets. I think perhaps this has happened to a number of members opposite.

The collapse of these projects is important because they represented what the government said was a way out of the economic malaise confronting Canada. In good times we could afford the loss of a project, even one as big as this one, but in bad times we cannot afford the loss of any projects. What do you say to a young student who comes in to your office, having been laid off from a company which closed because it makes products related to oil development, and now has no work? This student spent the last six months educating himself to become a computer programmer in a school which has the greatest single track record for placing students in jobs after graduation. How do you respond when he says he was laid off because of the collapse of these energy projects? He went to the best school he could go to and he cannot find work after being on the streets for eight weeks. There is no work, even for those who have taken the time and trouble to help themselves and Canada. All this because we have a government which plays parliamentary games during what has been the longest emergency debate in this House.

Madam Speaker, I am advised by way of a note that there has been an agreement in this matter. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to contribute for even a few minutes.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions which will enable the Chair to consider the provisions of Standing Order 26(13) when I have concluded my remarks.

S.O. 26

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, since I do not have the book—

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): Order, please. Will the hon. member please state his point of order briefly?

Mr. Prud'homme: Exactly. The hon. member for Yukon stated that at the end of his remarks you may read Standing Order 26(13). Unfortunately I do not have my book here, and knowing how able the gentleman is—

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): That is not a point of order. I would appreciate it if the hon. member would resume his seat.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, on the point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): I do not recognize the hon. member on a point of order. I would appreciate it if he took his seat. If the hon. member wishes to consult the rule book, I am sure the Table would be pleased to accommodate him.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I am on a point of order!

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): If I recognize the hon. member on a point of order, I would be happy if he would state it briefly.

Mr. Prud'homme: I say again that the hon. member for Yukon is asking you to put to the House Standing Order 26(13) once he finishes his remarks. I do not have the book here, and if I go to the Table, he will already have started his speech. You understand what I am trying to say? The hon. member asked for unanimous consent a moment ago, and I want to know—

Mr. Kempling: You have it upside down, Marcel.

Mr. Prud'homme: I therefore agree that he can speak, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I think perhaps we are all getting a little bit weary, Madam Speaker.

As I started to say, the tragic truth is that no matter what motion comes before the House from this side, regardless of the terms in which it is couched, they all add up to one single sentiment expressing the deepest feelings of Canadians from coast to coast. That feeling can be summed up in the words: this government must go!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: That is what Canadians are saying from coast to coast, and that is a summation of every motion which will be forthcoming from this side of the House until that event, which Canadians from all walks of life are longing for, takes place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Canadians want the removal of the most incompetent, arrogant, isolated, and the most power-hungry government in modern history. The latest example is Alsands, a $15 billion project which would have provided some 50,000 jobs. The shelving of the Alaska highway gas pipeline deprives the economy of a further $40 billion.

I want to stop here for a moment because all but one of the NDP members sitting here today were not in this House when that measure wended its way through the committee and House process.

Mr. Rose: All of them.

Mr. Nielsen: No, all of them were not. The member who just interjected was here, but the others were not. The NDP position in committee and all stages in the House was one of ferocious opposition to that pipeline. I am going back not to the prebuild, but back to the very inception of the pipeline itself. They ferociously opposed that bill in all its stages, accusing the Liberal government of the day of a huge sell-out, likening it to the 1956 pipeline and accusing the government of selling out to the Texas barons and so on. So they cannot change their position now. They cannot say they were for the original pipeline concept, because they were not. Well, there was one, the executive assistant to the leader of the NDP at that time. He is now the leader of the Opposition in Yukon, Mr. Penikett. He is for the pipeline, always has been, a position diametrically opposed to his federal colleagues.

Mr. Rose: So are we, with guarantees.

Mr. Nielsen: The gentleman says he is for it now.

Mr. Rose: With guarantees.

Mr. Nielsen: But not when it was going through the committee and through the House. His party's position at the federal level is diametrically opposed to that of the NDP Leader in Yukon, who happens to be the national president of the hon. member's party. It seems to me you fellows should get your act together.

Last Tuesday the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), in an unwanted burst of frankness, used the word "collapsed" with respect to these projects. That was exactly the right word. It was not the project alone which collapsed, but confidence in the government, which in turn brought about a collapse of the project. It was not the decision of the private sector. The uncertain and erratic financial policy of the government brought about internationally and in Canada a climate of uneasiness in which investors were unwilling to continue. The bottom line was that trust and confidence in the government and its policies was found wanting, and it is the government which must bear the responsibility for those disastrous policies which have created that disastrous and deteriorating economic climate and for failing to produce alternative policies when their hopes in the megaprojects came tottering down.

While the major responsibility is that of the government, that does not detract from the nauseating and hypocritical performance put on this week by the NDP. From the beginning their attitude has brought opposition to Alsands on the grounds that it was a giveaway to private industry. I do not think there is anyone in this House who has not observed what we fliers call doing a 180 as the NDP tactics changed here last week. Purely coincidentally, of course, it followed immediately upon the results of the Saskatchewan election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: What about the Manitoba election?

Mr. Nielsen: It is interesting to note, Madam Speaker, that what was previously in their words a corporate giveaway has now become a matter of life and death to the Canadian economy simply because the leader of the NDP—who coincidentally happens to be the vice-chairman of the Socialist International—sees some political mileage to be gained. The NDP energy critic, the hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has fought these projects throughout his career, from the time he has been in this House until today. He even has a suit pending in court in the province of British Columbia to stop the pipeline from going ahead.

• (0200)

Mr. Blaikie: The prebuild.

An hon. Member: Shame on you!

Mr. Nielsen: Stop the prebuild. If you stop the prebuild, you stop the pipeline. And then he gets up and cries his crocodile tears about the poor pipeline not going ahead. What utter hypocrisy!

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us something new.

Mr. Nielsen: I have no complaint against his opposing the project, nor against any member of his party opposing those projects. But what we have a right to complain about, now that the projects have been wiped out because of the procrastination and ineptness of the government, is members of that party rising in this House and claiming that they were for the projects all along. They cannot do that and still retain any credibility whatsoever.

On November 26, at page 5109 of Hansard, the energy critic of the NDP, the member for Vancouver-Kingsway criticized the government for what he called "overbuilding pipelines". That may have been justified or it may not have been, but it is the height of hypocrisy, for those who charged two years ago that pipelines were being overbuilt, to now claim that those same pipelines are so vitally necessary.

We have sat here and listened for a week now to this 180-degree turn in the tactical direction of the NDP, and I think it is about time to expose some of this hypocrisy, and hopefully force the members over there to display some honesty in this House when looking at the history of these projects.

What did the member for Vancouver-Kingsway say in that debate on November 21, 1980? At page 4955 of the Hansard, he said this:

> We would get even more money by developing the tar sands under public ownership. The large multinational companies want a 15 to 20 per cent profit out of the tar sands, and the minister is prepared to allow them to receive that.

Mr. Blaikie: That is true.

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly. That is what he said. That is true. That is what he said. But he was not saying it with any approval; he was saying it because he opposed the government's actions at that time. As an alternative, the member for Vancouver-Kingsway suggested setting up energy alternative programs at the local level.

Well, perhaps now the minister, if he ever comes back, will be more receptive to that proposal. Nevertheless, the truth is, Madam Speaker, that the NDP has been against these projects from the start, and they cannot now have it both ways and act as though they were supporting them all along. To do so would be the height—the pure height—of socialist hypocrisy. Mind you, I must say that it is in keeping with socialist tactics.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Nielsen: I have no objection to the NDP attacking the government, Madam Speaker. That is what opposition parties are for. But at least let it be on grounds that are open and honest. Let the NDP not take credit or political gain out of the collapse of projects to which they have been opposed from the start.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Blaikie: You are sounding more like Marc Lalonde all the time.

Mr. Nielsen: They are the real tar babies in this whole scenario, and they expect to come out smelling like roses. But I can tell you—

Mr. Rose: I will. I cannot avoid it.

Mr. Nielsen: I can tell you, notwithstanding the name "Rose", that is not what they will come out smelling like. A rose by any other name is as sweet.

The member was asking me to get to our position. Our position is quite different. We maintained, on both the tar sands development and the pipeline development, that they were necessary in order to bring about self-sufficiency. And that is still our position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The abrupt deterioration of the situation with the announcement of the backing off of the oil companies means that self-sufficiency is a long way off and we are once again, because of the blundering of this action-prone government, entirely subject to the mercy of OPEC.

Our position now is that the government must go back and do everything it possibly can to bring these projects back onstream—and with respect to the pipeline, that is possible, given proper diplomatic discussions with the United States.

This government must seek the best engineering advice, and they must co-operate with the Government of Alberta and the private oil companies. They must work to bring about a situation where Alsands oil can come onstream within a few years at prices that are competitive in the world market. That was our policy, as outlined in the Crosbie budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: That is exactly what we have done, and by now both the Alsands and the Alaska gas pipeline projects, as well as Cold Lake and Judy Creek, would have been well down the road. That they are not so is because no one trusts the economic or fiscal logic of this government—

An hon. Member: Except the NDP.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, except the NDP, recently. That they are not is because no one trusts the economic or fiscal logic of this government—a government which is now so isolated from events that its economic policy is in ruins and tatters at its feet. They are reduced to something like the Chinese five-year plan for making iron ingots in the backyard.

The tragedy of this government is that it is destitute of ideas, devoid of principles, incapable of dealing with problems on their merits, or proposing solutions that will be acceptable to those involved. There will be no such thing as a co-operative atmosphere between the government and the private sector while these rascals are over there.

The seriousness of the Alsands cancellation to the economy cannot be overestimated. If investor confidence was at a low ebb, it has now dropped completely out of sight. This project would have given Canada access to over 100 billion barrels of oil—one third of the proven reserves of the Middle East. It would have brought self-sufficiency within our reach, and provided thousands upon thousands of jobs.

It was killed by the budget, killed by high interest rates, killed by the iniquitous nationalization policies of this government, supported by the NDP.

The architects of these tragedies, of these disasters, are the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Make no mistake—

An hon. Member: The three Canadian destroyers.

Mr. Nielsen: "The three Canadian destroyers." Make no mistake: it is a disaster of a magnitude from which Canada will not soon recover.

If there is to be a recovery, it cannot be achieved by a government that is so moribund it is not even aware that its time has run out. The cancellation of Alsands is all the more serious since the latest figures show a deliberate drop in OPEC production in the first quarter of this year. Saudi Arabia, OPEC's largest producer, has reduced production by 1.5 million barrels a day.

Alsands was to be the linchpin of economic recovery in this country. It still could be—but not under this government. Now that the linchpin has gone and the Alaska pipeline has been virtually shelved for the foreseeable future, where do we go? What happens to the great paper program put together by the Meach Lake mugs—the minister from the other place, the former minister of FIRA, who has had his powers removed, the travelling minister, salesman Sam from Cornwall? They put together a program to usher in a new heaven and a new earth. The pot of gold at the end of the rainbow turns out to be a crock—

An hon. Member: Don't say it.

Mr. Nielsen: It turns out to be a crock of broken promises, shades of broken promises from the last election, Madam Speaker.

I will not weary sensitive ears—ears already wearied by this lengthy debate—by recalling all of those promises, now broken. They would fill many crocks. The list is almost endless. But on the energy question there was one about cheap oil, and I want members to listen to this statement by the Prime Minister, as quoted in a Globe and Mail questionnaire during the last election campaign:

> As far as non-conventional oils are concerned—that's the tar sands, the frontier oils and the enhanced production wells—we would have an incentive pricing scheme which would make sure that it is profitable to private and public enterprise to look for and exploit that oil.

That is what he said. Well, that has not materialized, and they are not prepared to look for it and to exploit it. Somewhere along the line, the Prime Minister got sidetracked on other matters—

An hon. Member: Double track.

Mr. Nielsen: Double track. He forgot that promise, along with a lot of others. The Minister of Finance was one of the architects of this great economic program, one that never got off the runway. This was going to make up for all of the defects of the budget. People would be so lost in admiration of Phase I and Phase II of the megaprojects that they would forget the budget disaster. Now that Phase I has gone down the drain, what about Phase II? If Phase II was built on Phase I and if Phase I has evaporated, where does Phase II come in?

We are now entering the pie-in-the-sky phase of Liberal self-delusion.

The minister of employment is going around saying—in spite of the budget, in spite of Alsands, in spite of the postponement of the pipeline, in spite of Cold Lake, interest rates, and all of the rest of the Liberal house of horrors—that he is still in the business of creating jobs. How ridiculous! The only jobs that he or his moribund colleagues in the cabinet have created are the jobs they opened up for their friends in government—and there are plenty more of those. Here is the minister of unemployment—pardon the slip—under whose administration the rate of unemployment has gone up by 50 per cent, saying repeatedly in the House that he is creating jobs.

I challenge that minister to show us where his policies have created a single permanent long-term job that would not have existed in any case without the government's intervention.

An hon. Member: In the UIC offices.

Mr. Nielsen: While they have not created any jobs, they have been instrumental in wiping out virtually thousands of jobs, the loss of Alsands—50,000 jobs immediately, and more later; the postponement of the pipeline—the loss of an equal number, and more later. Both of these reversals are the direct result of the crisis of confidence in the government's economic policies, brought about by the flight of capital from this country. Surely even this government must realize that the National Energy Program has been the most destructive force in Canada's economic life. It has utterly destroyed investor confidence. It is the product of theorists removed from the realities of the marketplace. Its genesis was ideological and destructive—capacity unlimited.

We are going through a crisis of confidence that can only be solved by the removal of this government.

Some hon. Members: Election. Election.

Mr. Nielsen: That crisis was brought about by the mismanagement of the economy inherent in the budget and by the minister's evasive and surreptitious tinkering since that time. Several months after the budget the minister has still not called his budget resolutions for consideration and discussion by this House.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: That failure represents, Madam Speaker, a vote of non-confidence by the minister in his own budget.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Finance has been flying trial balloons, suggesting that he is dallying with the possibility of bringing in wage and price controls. This is, of course, an admission that the government has failed dismally to overcome inflation. In fact, the one consistent and unvarying policy of this government has been failure, and that is—

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Miss Nicholson): There is no unanimous consent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO STAFF FOR PERFORMANCE DURING EXTENDED EMERGENCY DEBATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which would cure an omission last night. The motion is seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I move:

That this House extends its most grateful thanks to all members of the House of Commons staff, officers at the Table, particularly the Hansard reporters, protective staff and all other staff who performed so unselfishly and willingly during the extended hours of the emergency debate which has been concluded.

Madam Speaker: I am sure they all feel that is their duty, but I am sure the House will want to show its appreciation by its applause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, seasonally adjusted, the number of unemployed in April was 1,135,000. Unadjusted, the number would be well over 1.25 million, an increase of 0.6 per cent from March. The new rate is 9.6 per cent, the highest since the depression. Employment in manufacturing reached its lowest level since 1978. There has been a decrease of 23,000. There were 17,000 fewer jobs in transportation, communications and utilities. The number of jobs in primary industries other than agriculture is down 16,000. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance take constructive and drastic measures to get Canadians back to work and to reverse the staggering upward trend in unemployment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR STAFF WHO WORKED DURING EXTENDED EMERGENCY DEBATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the House of Commons remained in session through the night of May 4, 1982, requiring many of the employees of the House to stay well beyond normal hours of work, whereas the House was in session until 2 a.m. today, May 7, and whereas on December 19, 1980, the House unanimously passed a motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to pay extra financial compensation to the House of Commons staff who remained on duty through the night of December 18, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That this House directs the House of Commons administration to pay extra compensation to all those employees of Parliament who worked through the night of May 4 and who worked extra hours yesterday and that the members express their appreciation to the staff of the House for their dedication.

Madam Speaker: I must tell hon. members that the pay structure of the House of Commons provides for that, but perhaps the House wants to vote that motion. Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MINISTER OF STATE (MINES)

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, while the performance of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) is still not quite as impressive as that of her boss, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who in one week destroyed $60 billion worth of new investment and 100,000 jobs, she has, however, run up quite a record with lay-offs in the mineral industry being at an all-time high and with three quarters of all mining companies losing money. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That the Minister of State for Mines emulate even more the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if she ever wants to win the Liberal-NDP prize for industrial destruction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

S.O. 43

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

COUNTY OF SIMCOE DESIGNATED 1982 FORESTRY CAPITAL OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, this week is National Forest Week. In recognition of the 60 years that Simcoe County has been diligently involved in good forestry management, the Canadian Forestry Association has designated the County of Simcoe as the forestry capital of Canada for 1982. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the House recognize the importance of ongoing forestry management and the excellent example set by the people and officials of Simcoe County in the area of good forestry planning and practice.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

SMOKING IN COMMITTEE ROOMS ON PARLIAMENT HILL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the recent report of the Surgeon General of the United States indicating that cigarette smoking is clearly identified as the chief preventable cause of death in our society, that non-smokers may suffer ill effects from smoke, and that non-smokers should "avoid being in smoke-filled rooms", I move, seconded by the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield):

That steps be taken by appropriate authorities to provide a clean air environment in the small committee rooms of Parliament Hill.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ROUMANIA—DENIAL OF VISA TO CANADIAN JOURNALIST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, this morning the Governor General departed for a State visit to Roumania with a delegation including Canadian journalists. One journalist, Mr. Tom Kennedy of the Calgary Sun, was originally scheduled to be part of that delegation, but was denied a visa by the Romanian authorities. Indeed, the Roumanian embassy has not returned his passport, thus preventing him from joining the Governor General in West Germany. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs protest to the Roumanian ambassador against this discriminatory treatment of a Canadian citizen and demand that they return Mr. Kennedy's passport forthwith, and further, that this House expresses its displeasure at the fact that the Roumanian government has, in essence, decided which journalists are fit to report on the Governor General's State visit to Roumania.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CALL FOR HALTING OF URANIUM SHIPMENTS TO ARGENTINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, since the Republic of Argentina still has not signed international nuclear non-proliferation treaties, and whereas it was revealed that the International Atomic Energy Agency warned the Canadian government as long ago as the mid-seventies that there exists no way to guarantee that countries like Argentina will live up to our bilateral nuclear safeguards, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That Canada immediately suspend any shipments of Canadian uranium to Argentina and cease work on the nearly completed Candu reactor in that country until such time as acceptable monitoring devices are developed to ensure that a Canadian reactor is not used to make an Argentinian nuclear bomb.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

CALL FOR EXPEDITED PASSAGE OF BILL C-43—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House notes with anger that Australia has beaten Canada as the first commonwealth country to have a freedom of information bill put through Parliament and that now the separatist government of Quebec appears more committed to openness in government than the federalists in Ottawa, and that this House urges the government to expedite consideration and completion of Bill C-43.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF FUNDS TO CONNE RIVER BAND IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the federal government has not even begun to meet its obligations to the Indians of Newfoundland by registering them and making programs available to them. Instead, it gives a grant to the province of Newfoundland which is meant to be used for the benefit of native people. Due to a stand-off between the two governments over administration costs and a refusal by the Newfoundland government to permit Indian participation in discussions about the fund, the Newfoundland government is withholding all funds from the Conne River Indian band. As a result, all band staff are being laid off as of today. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development honour his obligations and correct this deplorable situation by, first, finding ways to make money directly available to the Conne River Indians as he has promised and, second, immediately registering the Indian people of Newfoundland, as four different Ministers of Indian Affairs have promised.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister must have been shocked this morning by the stunning increase in the unemployment levels. They have increased a full 40 per cent since April last year. That demonstrates in very real human terms the need for changed policies on the part of the government. People losing their jobs today are being excommunicated from our economic system because very few other people are hiring.

Because so many of the causes for unemployment can be attributed directly to government policies, and since one of the government policies is the minister's budget, would the minister tell this House why he persists in refusing to withdraw that budget when that budget increased taxes and destroyed job-creating investment incentives? It is obvious that government policies are contributing to the very high level of unemployment today.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first, the hon. member has suggested that we are shocked at the unemployment figures. I must say that I am greatly disturbed at the new statistics that have been released today. I believe the statistics indicate how deep the recession has become. Last August, if the hon. member recalls, Canada had the lowest unemployment it had experienced in five years. Since August, because of the recession, we have had increasing unemployment.

The hon. member then goes on to say that the reason for all of this is the November budget and that the solution is the withdrawal of the budget.

Mr. Stevens: That would help.

Mr. MacEachen: That is, of course, an utterly simplistic approach to the nature of the economic problem that we are facing, not only in Canada but throughout the world, because as unemployment rates in Canada are accelerating they are, at the same time, accelerating in every developed country in the world.

Mr. Kempling: That is not true.

Mr. MacEachen: With the exception of Japan.

Mr. Andre: Germany and the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacEachen: This indicates a very deep-seated recession that is gripping not only Canada but every developed country. Therefore, if I thought that withdrawing the budget—and that is the suggestion of the hon. member—would solve the unemployment problem in Canada, West Germany, the United Kingdom and France, I would be the first person to do it, but I believe the hon. member has a very simplistic approach to the economic problems of the country.

Mr. Wilson: I am going to show to the minister, Madam Speaker, that there are three policy areas that can be changed. I am not saying that one is the sole cause of it, that is the minister's simplistic way of evading the answer. But he knows two studies were released just in the past week which show that the Canadian economy is still going straight down, whereas other economies in the world have turned. That is the fundamental difference between Canada and other countries.

I did have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I hope he will soon be in the House so that I can ask it.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

EFFECT ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I will address my second supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. He knows that many lives are being disrupted by the high level of unemployment today. One of the reasons—again, one of the reasons—is the record outflow of capital from this country. Part of that record outflow of capital is caused by his administration of the Foreign Investment Review Agency which is creating an obstruction to foreign capital coming into Canada. Why is the minister trying to continue to make the Foreign Investment Review Agency an obstruction to investment when that investment can create jobs which are badly needed in this country?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the premise of the hon. member's question is completely wrong. The agency does not create obstruction to investment which brings jobs to Canada. Its purpose is to achieve a good deal for the investor and the Canadian economy. I am surprised the hon. member is objecting to this when that type of activity is what we need to create jobs. He opposes that.

Mr. Wilson: The continued bluster of the minister does not fool anyone in the country. People know that capital is not coming into Canada and that capital would create jobs here.

ENERGY

PROVISION OF DRILLING INCENTIVES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the third area of government policy I wish to deal with is energy. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources' energy policy has resulted in rigs leaving the country, a sharp drop in investment activity by the oil industry, the cancellation of the Alsands project, Judy Creek and the Cold Lake project, and a reduction, in a broad way, in an industry which had been extremely healthy prior to his coming into office. Would the minister make some concessions in his policy to encourage drilling activity in the conventional areas of western Canada, and will he be changing the 25 per cent back-in to avoid Hibernia and other frontier projects experiencing the same fate which has just happened to Alsands?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have indicated before that the government is carefully monitoring the state of the oil and gas industry. We have taken note of the substantial reduction in royalties which the government of Alberta granted last month under the agreement of last September, and that the government was analysing the situation to determine whether any further steps were required.

We have made changes since last fall. Indeed, we have indicated a great deal of flexibility. Obviously, we have made some changes in the past and we will make some in the future to take into account the reality.

I want to draw to the attention of the hon. member, however, that drilling activity in 1982 in Alberta, in other western provinces and in the Canada lands will be up significantly compared to last year. Even last year, drilling for oil in Alberta was higher than it was in 1980, which was a record year. Therefore I draw to the attention of the hon. member that what we need is more oil, and activity does take place in that regard. Announcements have already been made of exploration worth several hundreds of millions of dollars in the Canada lands. I expect more will be announced very shortly, indeed.

Mr. Epp: Do you really believe that?

COMMUNICATIONS

PRIORITY SOUGHT FOR CANADIAN PAY-TV USERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. One of the reasons why we have unemployment in Canada is that the government cannot get its act together between the various departments. While the minister is trying to promote cultural industries, the Minister of Finance is removing incentives in his budget. While the minister and the CRTC are trying to promote pay television in Canada, Telesat, which is an agency half owned by the government, is actively selling satellite capacity to the Americans. We now have a situation under Telesat current planning where Canadian Pay-TV users would be forced to wait six to eight months for a second satellite in order to supply American contracts. What assurance does the minister propose to make to ensure that Canadian Pay-TV users will have priority on the Canadian satellite system over the Americans?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think I am on record as indicating my very strong support for having the Canadian Pay-TV system as soon as possible. As far as the Telesat question is concerned if there is indeed excess capacity it is in the best interests of Telesat and Canada that this excess capacity be sold to enable Telesat to earn revenues from that excess capacity.

Before a final decision is made as to who will have access to those satellite channels, there is a two-step process. First, there must be an indication by the CRTC that it is indeed satisfied that there are sufficient satellite channels available for Canadian purposes; second, that matter must be ratified by the cabinet which, of course, is most interested in seeing that a sufficient number of satellite channels are available for Canadian purposes.

USE OF ANIK C-3 SATELLITE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Communication, who did not give the assurance I sought that Canadian Pay-TV users would have priority access to the satellite system. I would like to refer him to the letter sent by Telesat to some of the Canadian Pay-TV licensees in which Telesat refers to firm, committed contracts to sell Anik-C services to American users.

As I mentioned to the minister in committee, I am particularly concerned about the fact that Anik C-3, which will be launched on the first commercial operation of the shuttle next November, was originally designed and tilted to bring service to northern Canada and parts of mid-Canada, but Telesat is currently planning to tilt the satellite south so that it will service American users, not Canadian users. Since the minister's own senior deputy, his assistant deputy minister, is a member and director of Telesat, how could he allow this state of affairs, and why does he not correct it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think that what is of prime interest to us is ensuring that Canadians have access to a wide range of TV programming no matter where they live in the country. I think the hon. member would agree with me that the CanCom satellite signals which have been made available to every part of the country, now bringing four additional television signals and very soon six to seven new radio signals, have meant a great deal of progress.

On the subject of my not answering the first part of the hon. member's question relating to Pay-TV entrepreneurs, who are not presently guaranteed access, I should like to say that Telesat would like to have formal guarantees from those Pay-TV companies that they will indeed pick up these signals. However, as I indicated, there is a two-step process to ensure that primary and preferential use is given to Canadian companies. The first step is via the CRTC, which has a mandate to examine the over-all requirements of Canadians, and the second step is a final decision by cabinet. So, these contracts between Telesat and U.S. entrepreneurs will not become definitive until this two-part process has been completed.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR

Mr. Nelsen A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This morning he will know that, by official figures, we have one and a quarter million unemployed people. At this time of year, springtime, when more jobs should be available than at other times of the year, when it should be a time of growth, it is a time of decay. Over the last month 75,000 jobs have been lost. When will the minister stop being a cheer leader of Reaganomics, have the courage to ask for Mr. Bouey's resignation, and take steps to reduce these interest rates which are causing inflation in the country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in my view the hon. member is quite correct in stating that recovery is unlikely to take place—

Mr. Riis: Here!

Mr. MacEachen: —until there is a reduction in interest rates. The obstacle to recovery at the moment, not only in Canada but also in other countries, is the very high interest rate structure which exists, mainly fuelled or powered by the monetary policy of the United States. I believe that until progress is made in reducing those interest rates, recovery will not take place. The first step, of course, is an easing in the monetary restraint in the United States where currently, despite a very weak economy, despite the fact that this morning statistics in the United States indicate an unemployment rate of 9.4 per cent, totalling 10.3 million people, despite a weak economy—

Mr. Stevens: Tell us about their inflation.

Mr. MacEachen: —despite its very high unemployment levels—

Mr. Stevens: Tell us about their inflation.

Mr. MacEachen: —real interest rates are at an historically high level. The key to world recovery at the present time, for the United States and for other countries, is a change in the monetary policy that is being pursued in the United States.

• (1130)

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, is the minister saying we can do nothing here in Canada, that it is impossible for us to take independent action, unlike a number of other western nations?

I want to remind the minister of this. He refers to the figures in the United States. By reading StatsCanada Information this morning we find that 754,000 Canadians have given up looking for work and do not appear in today's statistics of the officially unemployed. That boosts the figure virtually up to two million unemployed. On the boards across Canada there is only one job available for every 357 unemployed. What advice does the minister have for the nearly two million people who presently are seeking work? What advice does he have for them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member stated that other countries apart from the United States have responsibilities as well. I agree 100 per cent with the hon. member, and within our own possibilities we are doing everything possible to ease the burden of unemployment. But with the existence of the current monetary policy in the United States and the very high real interest rates, despite great slack in the economy, despite 10.3 million unemployed, there are limits to what other countries can do.

I believe that France is an example in this case. They attempted to ease their monetary policy, they attempted to ease their fiscal policy, but they had, in my opinion, to backtrack, with the result that the Minister of Finance in France, in the face of the monetary policy existing in the United States, had to raise short-term interest rates over 20 per cent, in order to protect the value of the French franc. So the hon. member is right in saying there are some things we can do. But the key solution at the present time does not rest with France or Canada. The key solution rests with the main economic partner we all have, and that is the United States of America.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENTRY OF YOUTH TO LABOUR MARKET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question to the minister asked what advice did he have for the jobless in this country, the two million people seeking work. He did not answer that question.

I want to add another group which has been overlooked today, that is, the hundreds of thousands of young people who, in the next number of weeks, are coming on the job market. They will be seeking employment challenges for the first time in their lives, coming from the universities and colleges and high schools across the country. They will not have to face the challenge of employment, they will have to face the challenge of unemployment. Their dreams and hopes are being dashed.

I would ask the minister very precisely what advice does he give these hundreds of thousands of young people who will be seeking meaningful work for the first time, who want to contribute to the economy of Canada, but who will be unable to do so because of the particular monetary policy and fiscal policy of the government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I disagree totally with the hon. member's diagnosis of the problem. He has failed to understand the source of our difficulties. He has failed to understand the way out of our difficulties. Every proposal that has been put forward by the New Democratic Party in this session of Parliament, if implemented, would make the problem worse for Canada and for the young people to whom he suggest that I give advice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the job of the Minister of Finance is to administer an economic policy.

Mr. Nielsen: When are you going to start?

Mr. MacEachen: And to explain that policy to the people of Canada as well as he can. My advice, if the hon. member wants me to give advice, and this will be the first and last time I will take him up on that kind of question, my advice to the young people of Canada would be to ignore the nostrums that are being proposed by the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Liberal times are tough times.

THE ARTS

APPLEBAUM-HÉBERT COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—OPPORTUNITY FOR RESPONDING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Last night, in a speech before the Canadian Conference of the Arts, he attempted to lay at rest the fears that some have, that the minister intends to be the architect of cultural policy and not the Applebaum-Hébert Commission. He suggested, Madam Speaker, that one should not be concerned about the fact that there are study groups already working in advance of the recommendations because there would be time at the end of the consultation and input provided one responded quickly.

Would the minister now tell the House and those who want to respond to Applebaum-Hébert, who want to believe in this process, how much time will be allowed after publication of the recommendations? What forum will be available for comment, will it be the parliamentary committee, will it be briefs to the minister, how long, and what method is open to those people who believe deeply that the Applebaum-Hébert process is essential? What forum will they have and how long will they have to make their presentations?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, in my speech last night I indicated that, from my point of view, the main role of government in general in the field of arts and culture was to try to establish a climate for creativity. That indeed is the proper role of government in that area, not one of trying to direct or to be involved in the creative arts themselves. I also indicated that we will be looking forward to the report which will be forthcoming shortly, within the next few months, from the Applebaum-Hébert committee. Out of this report, of course, will flow a number of actions on the part of the government. For instance, I think that the report in some cases will give rise to legislation. Obviously, there will be a good deal of time available for debate and to make representations in front of parliamentary committees.

Other matters, I suspect, will call upon the government for immediate action in certain areas. Actually, we have taken that immediate action in some areas of immediate concern, like the clarification of the National Gallery position.

What I did indicate to the group last night was that I was not interested in going from one review committee, that is, the Applebaum-Hébert committee, to another forum which would repeat the Applebaum-Hébert process. I encouraged all people interested in the arts in the country to be ready to respond to the report of the Applebaum-Hébert committee as soon as possible after that document is published. I expect that there will be a month or two available to them to respond.

DRAFTING OF BROADCASTING POLICY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, if they want to respond they would feel better about responding if they can believe that the decisions as to what the policy will be have not already been taken. Therefore, let me ask this supplementary, Madam Speaker.

With regard to that essential concept of our culture policy, which is the broadcasting policy, last night the minister said that the development of the broadcasting policy will wait on the publication of the Applebaum-Hébert report; and yet to the committee on his estimates, Madam Speaker, he indicated that a broadcasting policy was effectively already finished. Could the minister tell the House, and those who are worried about this issue, and who want to make submissions, which is true?

Will broadcasting policy wait on the Applebaum-Hebert process so that those who want to comment can, or is it a fact, as the minister already suggested in committee, that the policy is already drafted, already ready to go, and that the minister now is simply saying that we are waiting for the Applebaum-Hébert report simply for form's sake?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I have never suggested in any forum that all the T's are crossed and all the I's are dotted on the broadcasting policy. I indicated that the department has indeed set up a number of working groups in order to be able to respond to Applebaum-Hébert as quickly as possible. The whole question of copyright is one example. The whole question of copyright is, to my mind, an extremely important area. We are hoping we can indeed establish that kind of climate for creativity.

Broadcasting is another area of primary importance for this country because of its effect on the culture of Canadians and the perception by Canadians of themselves. We have done a good deal of work on that. Obviously I have given a great deal of thought to this over the past few months. However, I have also indicated that I do not want to come out with a definitive broadcasting policy until the Applebaum-Hébert committee has made its report. On the other hand—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

An hon. Member: The lights are out.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

TAX EXEMPTION SOUGHT FOR WEST COAST HELICOPTER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Revenue. Over a year ago, as the minister will be aware, the Coast Mountain Air Rescue Society of British Columbia, which is a volunteer group, at its own expense brought in a helicopter for rescue purposes. Since that time they have been trying to get the minister's department to find some way to give an exemption on the tax, or else to change the law so that an exemption can be given. I want to ask the minister whether he is prepared to change the law so an exemption can be given and so that this ridiculous situation does not continue any longer.

• (1140)

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows it is not within my responsibility to change the law. We have looked at that particular case. I have examined it a number of times and found we have gone as far as we can with regard to responding to the needs of that particular organization. I recognize that it does a valuable job, but I am afraid under the present circumstances we have gone as far as we can in responding to it.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, the answer the minister has given is the reason Canadians are so fed up with this government. The minister says he cannot change the law. Who in blazes can? His government has a majority.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, the minister can recommend to cabinet that the law be changed; does he have the guts to do that, or will he just go down in history as a timid and useless minister who did nothing until somebody else came along and pushed him?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, at one time the hon. member was part of a government which had every opportunity to change the law while it was in power. The hon. member did not take that opportunity in relation to this matter either.

I have corresponded and had communication with the society in question and with Members of Parliament, and we are trying to respond as well as we can to that particular circumstance, but we are bound by the laws which presently exist.

Mr. Fraser: You are not responding at all.

LOSS OF FISHING VESSEL OFF WEST COAST—REASONS FOR ABANDONING SEARCH

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question today is for the Minister of Transport, and it is also on the search and rescue theme. Some time ago a fishing vessel by the name of the Ramsay Isle disappeared off the west coast of British Columbia. On February 28 a search was mounted by the combined forces of the Coast Guard and the Department of National Defence. The search was eventually abandoned on about March 6. Eight weeks later four bodies were found in a lifeboat, and indications were those people may have died of starvation off the north end of Port Hardy. Is the minister able to cast any light on the situation as to why a search was abandoned when people were in fact still in the water in lifeboats?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I did indeed look into that case with the same question in mind, and the answer I got was that the search and rescue operation proceeded in the normal way. Six days were spent at it. Debris was found in the water. After a while, not finding any bodies or survivors, the operation ended, as these operations usually do, in due course. A few months later, two or three bodies were found in a raft a good number of miles—I cannot remember how many, but a surprisingly long distance away—from the place where the accident had taken place. This apparently surprised everybody. The coroner is having an inquest into the matter, and I presume we will learn more about what happened.

"MAYDAY" SIGNAL

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the situation which seems to be developing with respect to search and rescue facilities is incredible, when we consider cases like the Hudson Transport, the Ocean Ranger, and numerous others. An interesting part of search and rescue is the element of communications. The indication from officials of the minister's department is that there was no Mayday sent out in this case. Now other sources indicate that in fact there were two Mayday broadcasts from that vessel. Is it possible for the minister to indicate whether that is the fact, and why is there a discrepancy in terms of the information we have?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the Mayday aspect of this rescue operation, but I will find out and report.

VIA RAIL

DELAY IN LUMP-SUM PAYMENTS TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. As the minister knows, November 15, 1981 was the cut-off date for CN and CP employees to sign the special agreement for those affected by the VIA Rail reductions. Within this agreement it says that from November 15, when an employee reaches age 55, he is eligible for a lump-sum payment. Many employees are eligible for this payment. However, there have been delays in CN's and CP's paying out this money. In those cases where payment has been delayed no accrued interest has gone to the employees. CN and CP are saying they refuse to pay this interest because of government policy.

I wonder if the minister would explain to the House and, more particularly, to those employees who have been so adversely affected because of losing this money, what exactly is the rationale in CN's and CP's not paying this interest to their former workers.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will try. I thank my hon. friend for reminding the House of the fair way in which the government is treating employees affected by VIA cuts. He is aware that $30 million has been assigned to that purpose, and lump-sum payments are but one of the methods which are being used.

The way it goes is this: an employee receives his lump-sum payment from the railways: if there is a delay in establishing the amount to which he is entitled, it could be at that stage. The railways then make a claim to the Department of Transport, and the Department of Transport pays the sum claimed by the railways. My surveillance of the system has not been such that I know how many days it takes for my department to pay the railways after a claim has been made, but I will find out and, if it is abnormal, I will try to remedy the situation.

Mr. Blaikie: It is about three and a half months.

BANKRUPTCIES

POSITION OF PURCHASERS OF INSURANCE FROM COMPANIES PLACED IN RECEIVERSHIP

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am sure the minister knows that a number of general insurance companies operating in Canada have recently faced liquidation and gone into receivership. This has left those who were insured without protection. What steps is the minister going to take to ensure that those who purchase insurance will be protected and not exposed to large liability claims in the event their insurance companies should go into bankruptcy?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am very concerned about the situation created by the fact that some general insurance companies had difficulties during the last few months which led some of them to bankruptcy.

Because of that situation, I have asked the Superintendent of Insurance to review closely the present legislation and, taking into account the reasons for these bankruptcies and these financial difficulties, to make recommendations to me for amendments to the legislation. As the Superintendent told the standing committee last week, he is about to present such recommendations to me in order to ensure the best possible situation for this type of institution.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I am pleased the minister is concerned, but I am sure he is aware that there must be many Canadians who live under a false sense of security, because there is the potential of their insurance companies going bankrupt.

REQUEST THAT PURCHASERS BE TREATED AS PREFERRED CREDITORS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, when the minister is contemplating any changes in legislation or regulations, will he ensure that steps will be taken so that claimants will have first priority in relation to settlements in the event insurance companies are liquidated?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, as I have just said, I have not yet received the Superintendent's recommendations. Obviously I share the hon. member's concern. The basis of the legislation as it relates to insurance companies is to protect policy holders and to ensure the financial soundness of the institutions for that purpose. Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member as well as all members of the House that the Superintendent will be recommending some changes to the legislation in the light of that very objective.

TRADE

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL JOINT INITIATIVES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Trade. Is the minister planning any joint-trade initiatives with the provinces in a further effort to stimulate industry and help reduce unemployment?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, at present we are formulating plans for a federal-provincial conference of trade ministers scheduled, if I am not mistaken, for June 21. As you know, I am in constant communication with my provincial counterparts, and I think that this meeting will provide for constructive discussions on our joint pursuit of export opportunities around the world.

MINISTERIAL DIRECTIVE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, can the minister explain to the House why, on March 4, 1982, his department issued an instruction to our trade offices in the U.S. entitled "Provincial Ministerial Involvement in Trade Promotion Events", which reads:

> Minister Lumley has directed that under no circumstances should any provincial minister be invited to or directly informed about trade promotion events carried out at our posts without his prior approval. The minister attaches considerable importance to this directive—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am sure that if the hon. member contacted some of his colleagues who were ministers of the Crown, they would verify the fact that a responsible minister likes to be notified of any tentative federal promotions prior to a provincial minister, just in case the promotion did proceed or was not in the best interest of Canada as a whole as opposed to one particular province.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIR CANADA

IMPORTATION OF GERMAN WINE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can he tell the House why Air Canada is the largest Canadian importer of German wine?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I know my hon. friend is aware that ministers do not run Crown corporations.

Mr. Stevens: Who does?

Mr. Pepin: I thought Air Canada was using Canadian wines; I do, and I do not see why it should not. I will gently bring my view to the attention of the president of Air Canada.

Oral Questions

TRADE

SALE OF CANADIAN WINE ON FOREIGN AIRLINES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. People who travel abroad tell me it is very difficult to obtain Canadian wine on foreign airlines. Can the minister tell me why this is so?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have an excellent wine industry in British Columbia, Ontario and other parts of Canada. We are working actively to promote acceptance of Canadian wines, both in Canada and foreign markets. In conjunction with my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, I will be very happy to increase our efforts to have more Canadian wine served on all airlines flying in and out of Canada.

AIR TRANSPORT

FUEL COSTS OF CANADIAN CARRIERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, in his earlier answer the Minister of Finance mentioned that Japan was the only country which had a better rate of employment. Small wonder when the Minister of Transport keeps giving them jobs.

My question is to the Minister of Transport. Last May the federal government arbitrarily increased the price of fuel used by air carriers on international flights. The increase was reversed earlier this year when it was proven that the government, as usual, blew it by contravening bilateral agreements. The government is now once again insisting on penalizing Canadian carriers by increasing fuel costs in a manner which may also be illegal. Why does the government continue to penalize the air travel industry, Canadian carriers in particular, and when will it show some support for Canadian industry any Canadian industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the question is really so broad that I do not know where the emphasis is. If the hon. member is again emphasizing procurement abroad, as is his right, I compliment him on the fact that he has stayed on my back for a number of months on that subject. I mean that very sincerely, because it helps me to ensure every effort is made to procure in Canada.

The two instances he refers to, the purchase of two stacker-reclaimers and the purchase of pipe for the Port of Prince Rupert, are really an exception to the rule. The hon. Member has heard the chairman of the National Harbours Board, I understand, explaining at length in committee why the decisions were made. Again, the policy of this government is to procure in Canada wherever possible, and in the two instances referred to that attempt was made.

INCREASED COSTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, this time the emphasis was on why the government insists on increasing the cost of fuel, particularly to Canadian carriers, and asking them to pay falsely high prices when other carriers are getting off scotfree?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously it will take too long to enumerate the advantages that carriers have in Canada, but in this particular instance they can procure fuel in Canada at a lower price.

Mr. Ellis: No, they cannot.

Mr. Nielsen: It is the other way around.

Mr. Pepin: The reference is to the fact that because of international agreements foreign carriers coming into Canada were compensated for the money they had paid, and Canadian carriers were not. I regret that very much. I wish everyone had been compensated.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—REQUEST THAT IMPORT QUOTAS BE REINSTATED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and has to do with the dying Canadian footwear industry, the total demise of which the Canadian government is making every effort to bring about. In view of the fact that three of his colleagues, all from Quebec where most of that industry is located, are prepared to demonstrate along with the union on Parliament Hill on June 8, to force the government to bring back the quota system, and in view of the fact the minister refuses to listen to any advice from this side of the House as to rejuvenating that industry, will the minister reinstate those quotas so that the 6,200 workers out of 20,000 now on lay-off can go back to work and the 20,000 will not be laid off permanently?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the premise of my hon. friend's question, that we are trying to bring about the demise of the Canadian footwear industry, is completely incorrect. We are working to modernize and upgrade the industry, for which purpose we have created a special $17-million fund to be administered by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. We have continued the quota on imports of non-leather footwear and added to it with respect to canvas footwear, which was not the case before. We have received the views of the industry and members on our side of the House with respect to the way the industry is faring under current economic conditions. We are actively reviewing those representations at the cabinet level.

Mr. Nielsen: This is a recorded announcement.

Mr. Gray: The industry is of significance not only in Quebec, but also in Ontario, and I hope to be able to announce the results of the cabinet review before too long.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that in this respect he does not have a foot to stand on, because he refuses to reinstate the quota system. In view of the fact that unless it is reinstated there will not be enough time to modernize the industry before the Canadian market is flooded with temporarily cheaper imported footwear, will the minister reinstate the quota and when will he reannounce that reinstatement?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, our policy on the footwear industry was a matter of cabinet decision after a detailed study of the situation, on the basis of the anti-dumping tribunal report. The cabinet is currently reviewing the present state of the industry in the light of most recent information, and any decision will be that of cabinet and announced as soon as our review is completed.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources give a categorical assurance that the Petroleum Incentives Program does not violate any aspect of the Canadian Charter of Rights?

• (1200)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Department of Justice that drafted the regulations has examined these issues as is done with every bill to make sure that it does not conflict with the Charter of Rights. It came to the conclusion that that is not the case.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY ACT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce give us a categorical assurance that the Foreign Investment Review Agency Act does not violate any aspect of the Canadian Charter of Rights?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we are seeking the advice of the Department of Justice on this matter. Certainly as far as any information or advice that I have received so far is concerned, there is no conflict, but we are looking into the matter further.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF FEDERAL COURT ACT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Minister of Justice give us a categorical assurance that Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act does not violate any aspect of the Canadian Charter of Rights?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, we have a Charter of Rights and we are passing laws. Everyone knows that when we pass laws they have to be measured against the Charter of Rights. If the House does not agree about the meaning, then the courts will have to render a decision. But the Charter is there and we pass legislation. The Charter of Rights precedes the legislation. I am not here to give legal advice. The hon. member should know that the Charter of Rights is now part of the Constitution and is the number one law in Canada.

STUDY OF STATUTES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Justice tell us whether he has established a task force to see which of the laws of Canada are in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights? If he has established such a task force, will he give us a commitment now that all the results of that task force will be made public in the House of Commons?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have asked my department to look at all the laws of Canada to make sure that the laws that have been passed in this House of Commons reflect the Charter of Rights that we passed and entrenched in the Constitution. The work is not over yet. When it is over, I will act accordingly.

PETITION

MR. JELINEK—LEATHER SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and thirty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) on Thursday, May 6, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITION

MR. LAWRENCE—UNEMPLOYMENT IN AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I ask leave of the House to lay upon the Table a petition, prepared on their own initiative and on their own time and signed by some 900 citizens of Canada, who are plant employees of General Motors of Canada Limited at Oshawa, Ontario.

They are gravely concerned about the loss of employment in the automotive industry resulting from the importation of foreign manufactured vehicles, and they desperately request Parliament to rectify this either by an import quota on foreign vehicles or a Canadian content law.

This is especially pertinent today with the announcement that 1.25 million Canadians are out of work.

EDUCATIONAL LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,809—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Agriculture at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $458,856 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: Chapter 110 subchapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization.

2. It is 0.2 per cent.

3. (a) to (c) None.

4. Four per cent.

Question No. 2,811—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Communications for the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $23,697 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission as follows:

1. The basic guideline used to determine CRTC policy for education leave is the Personnel Management Manual, Chapter 110, subchapter 5, with some variations being covered in some collective agreements:

(a)(i)(ii)(iii) Education leave with pay, travel expenses and tuition are authorized under P.M.M. 110-5, section 11, 12; with the rationale being that, "payment of expenses for . . . " "Education of employees is to be proportional to the benefit the Department expects to derive from the expenditure of public funds."

(b) The rationale utilized by the CRTC for skills acquisition is to meet departmental needs. Employees may be encouraged to participate in education activities that will contribute to the improvement of their performance and organizational productivity.

2, 3 and 4. Nil.

Question No. 2,814—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $63,927 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. (a) and (b) Decisions concerning education leave are made by senior departmental managers and are based on Treasury Board policy: chapter 110 subchapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization.

2. Approximately 25 per cent of educational leave requests result from acquisition of new equipment; about 50 per cent from changing technology and new program requirements; and about 25 per cent from the need for professional growth.

3. (a) to (c). None.

4. Only one employee who has taken educational leave in the past three years has left the public service; one other has died.

Question No. 2,815—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the National Energy Board at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): National Energy Board reports as follows: 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: Chapter 110 subchapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization.

2, 3 and 4. Nil.

Question No. 2,820—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $454,946 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. (a): The guidelines used to determine which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted: (i) leave with pay; (ii) travel expenses; (iii) payment for tuition, are set out by Treasury Board and are quoted in the Personnel Management Manual, section 110-5.

The departmental norm has been to grant educational leave without pay but with allowances in lieu of half pay, except in the following cases: hydrographers who are covered by a special Treasury Board minute; employees completing a doctorate degree in specialization directly related to fisheries and/or oceans; and ships' officers for obtaining technical certification or professional upgrading.

Fisheries and Oceans have set up a departmental training and development committee composed of the deputy minister, assistant deputy ministers, director of personnel and manager of training and development to ensure that the purpose of the leave and financial assistance are in line with the department's needs, objectives and goals, and to approve educational leave requests for periods of three months or more. Educational leave requests for periods of less than three months are either approved by a regional training and development committee or by a regional director general. These requests would normally be related to technical certification or professional upgrading as in the case of ships personnel.

(b): The above type of screening also ensures that the skills and knowledge acquired through educational leave are to the benefit of the department and used on a permanent basis. It is important to note that the majority of employees granted educational leave belong to occupational groups of which the department is a prime user or unique employer in the public service (e.g. hydrographers, ships' officers).

2. Nil.

3. (a), (b) and (c): Nil.

4. Approximately 8 per cent of the employees (all ships' officers) granted leave in the past three years (1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81) have subsequently left the public service.

Question No. 2,824—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Justice at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $136,613 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): 1. Please refer to Treasury Board Policy, Personnel Management Manual, Chapter 110-5, "Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization".

2. Nil.

3. (a), (b), (c) Nil.

4. One employee out of ten granted leave left the public service in the past three years, therefore 10 per cent.

Question No. 2,831—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Public Works at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $65,230 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) (i) (ii) (iii) and (b). The Guidelines are Treasury Board Personnel Management Manual 110-5, sections 11-14; Education Leave Policy; Public Works Canada Departmental Directive 7/79.

2. Nil.

3. (a) Nil. (b) Nil. (c) 100 per cent.

4. Nil.

Question No. 2,837—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General for Correctional Services at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $191,186 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned: 1. The guidelines that were used are contained in the following two documents: "Developmental Leave Policy" for the Correctional Service of Canada and Treasury Board's Personnel Management Manual, chapter 110-5—conditions governing education, training and subsidization.

2, 3 and 4. Nil.

HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,845—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Communications at page 32.4, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) how does the department account for the 21 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $54,576 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) members of provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the answer to the above question is as follows: (a) The increase in hospitality expenses from 1978-79 to 1979-80 is due to increased national and international marketing efforts on several major technological projects as well as general price increases.

(b) The department did not enter into contracts over $2,000 for the purpose of extending hospitality.

(c) The department follows the hospitality policy as set out in chapter 360 of Treasury Board Canada's Administrative Policy Manual.

(d) The department accounting system was not designed to summarize the recipients of hospitality into the 12 mentioned categories.

Question No. 2,846—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the Atomic Energy Control Board at page 32.8, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) how does the department account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $532 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) There was a decrease of $1,328 in hospitality services from 1978-79 to 1979-80 rather than an increase in expenditure. The apparent discrepancy in reporting occurred when the task of preparing public accounts was transferred from the Department of Supply and Services at AECB and AECB categorized this item separately from other miscellaneous services.

(b) No contract was valued at more than $2,000.

(c) Yes, guidelines are used to determine when AECB will pay for hospitality. These guidelines are as follows:

(i) when discussions on official matters are held with persons who are not government employees. (In exceptional circumstances, this may include interviews with persons who are being considered for recruitment by the board);

(ii) on the occasion of visits by persons who are members of national or international organizations which are involved in activities related to those of the board;

(iii) when a service is rendered without remuneration by a person who is not a government employee;

(iv) on the occasion of a major or prestigious ceremony attended by foreign dignitaries or distinguished persons from the private sector; and

(v) on occasion, for employees who are participating in planning or technical meetings involving non-public servants to which hospitality is extended.

(d) (i) 83 per cent, (ii) 4 per cent, (iii) 0 per cent, (iv) 0 per cent, (v) 0 per cent, (vi) 0 per cent, (vii) 0 per cent, (viii) 0 per cent, (ix) 0 per cent, (x) 0 per cent, (xi) 0 per cent, (xii) 13 per cent.

Question No. 2,853—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the taxation program at page 32.24, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $7,815 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) Amount includes hospitality extended to special guests and the general public at the official ceremonies for new taxation centre; to the members of an advisory committee to the department on tax administration; to visiting officials from other tax administrations; to representatives of industry and business; and to participants at departmental conferences.

(c) Yes; Treasury Board directive on hospitality (ch. 360 Administrative Policy Manual).

(d) Departmental records are not maintained in a way that would make it possible to provide this information.

Question No. 2,859—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the correctional services program at page 32.35, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what is a list of each contract of a value of more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $51,677 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

(a) Hospitality cost over $2,000 was incurred at only one function in the fiscal year 1979/80, which was the American Correctional Association Canada Night reception in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, U.S.A. on August 22, 1979. Cost: $5,950.85.

(b) Hospitality claims are settled in accordance with the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual, chapter 360.

(c) Information is not readily available.

Question No. 2,860—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the departmental program at page 32.34, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what is a list of each contract of a value of more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $26,783 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) Hotel Nova Scotian ("Canadian Congress on the Prevention of Crime" conference), $3,481.51. Justice Canada ("Ministers Responsible for Criminal Justice" conference)—shared 50 per cent with Justice Canada, $3,047.53.

(b) Yes—Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual (chapter 360).

Question No. 2,866—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the trade and industrial program at page 32.16, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality, including posts abroad (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $2,265,855 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories (d) what percentage of the $2,265,855 was used for hospitality (i) outside (ii) inside Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

(a) Individual payments made of a value more than $2,000 which related to single events were as follows: Caracas Hilton,

Caracas, Venezuela, $2,305.30, Plaza Club, Houston, Texas, $2,644.24, Hotel Intercontinental, Paris, France, $2,988.11, André Canonica Restaurant, Geneva, Switzerland, $6,036.72, DM Restaurant Corp, New York, N.Y., $8,234.35, Buenos Aires Sheraton Hotel, Buenos Aires, Argentina, $4,036.32, Red Carpet Catering Service Inc., Portland, Oregon, $3,059.54, the Engineering Society of Detroit, Detroit, Michigan, $2,219.21, Laval University, Quebec, P.Q., $2,449.05, Hotel Beau Rivage, Geneva, Switzerland, $4,025.28, Interhotel Am Ring, Leipzig, German Democratic Republic, $2,103.37, Winnipeg Convention Centre, Winnipeg, Man. $3,303.25, Parliamentary Restaurant, Ottawa, Ont., $4,182.42, L'auberge de la Chaudière, Hull, P.Q., $5,026.95, Le Cercle Universitaire, Ottawa, Ont., $2,045.94, The Toronto Hilton, Toronto, Ontario, $14,845.24.

(b) Treasury Board Hospitality Directive March 1, 1977. Treasury Board Circular No. 1977-3. Foreign Service Hospitality Directive TB No. 694890 dated February 12, 1970. Heads of Posts Directive TB No. 692275 dated October 2, 1969.

(c) This information is not readily available from our accounting records.

(d) (i) Eighty-six per cent. This percentage reflects only the costs incurred under the Foreign Service Hospitality Directive by the various posts abroad.

(ii) Fourteen per cent. This percentage reflects all other hospitality expenditures authorized by headquarters. Our accounting records do not readily allow a breakdown of hospitality costs incurred inside or outside Canada, except as described in (d) (i).

Question No. 2,876—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Justice under the Administration of Federal Judicial Affairs Program for the Canadian Judicial Council at page 32.18, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) how does the department explain the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (d) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (e) of the $8,064 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): (a) Aside from inflationary factors, the increase in hospitality was due to a change in reporting requirements. Previously hospitality was included in standard object 12, miscellaneous services.

(b) Type of Hospitality	(c) Amount Paid for each Service
(i) Coffee (Appeal Court Seminar)	$ 53
(ii) Lunch (Appellate Court Seminar)	$ 417
(iii) Dinner (Superior Court Seminar) Coffee Lunch	$2,013
(iv) Reception (County Court Seminar)	$2,968
(v) Dinner and reception (New Federally Judges Seminar)	$2,613
Total	$8,064

No contracts were signed for any of the hospitality services.

(d) Treasury Board hospitality guidelines are followed and minister's approval given for hospitality over $1,000.

(e) No such statistics are available.

PHOTO SERVICES

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development under the Northern Affairs Program at page 32.16, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photo service except motion pictures (a) how does the department explain the 738 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The increase in expenditure for the Northern Affairs Program is mainly due to the realignment of the chart of accounts in 1979-80. Some items which were coded separately under their own classification are now grouped with photo services except motion pictures.

(b) The services involved are purchase of photos including aerial and satellite photos, purchase and rental of film, micro filming services, development and reproduction of film, photographer's services.

(c) The recipients involved are Foto Blohm Associates $3,488; Campbell Reproduction $9,641; Canadian Government Photo Centre $26,325; Energy Mines and Resources $18,074; Film Service Alberta $2,828; Pat Morrow $3,000; National Film Board $4,070; Public Archives $11,752; Terra Surveys $13,305. The balance is miscellaneous items all under $2,000.

PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,878—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Justice for the Commission for Federal Judicial Affairs at page 32.17 of Volume II of the Public Accounts of Canada 1979-80, with particular reference to miscellaneous services (a) how does the commission explain the 23 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): (a) With particular reference to miscellaneous services, there was no increase for this item over that for 1978-79.

(b) and (c) (i) To provide this information would require an inordinate amount of time and manpower.

(c) (ii) Miscellaneous Services—Contracts over $2,000: Federal Court of Canada—court attendants O. Brochu $2,802, J. Cavers $2,028, J. Cocker $2,773, L. Charron $2,340, R. Lauzon $2,109, A. Parker $2,340, J. Renaud $2,430.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES OF CANADA

Question No. 2,904—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the correctional services program at page 32.35, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other services—contracted personnel services (a) how does the department explain the 138 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

(a) The 138 per cent increase in expenditure for the item other services—contracted personnel services over fiscal year 1978/79 as recorded in Volume II of the 1979/80 Public Accounts of Canada is explained by the following factors:

(1) The CSC reduced its person-years in fiscal year 1979/80 by 255 over fiscal year 1978/79. Pending decisions on which services were to be reduced or eliminated, temporary help agencies were used when positions became vacant.

(2) On June 8, 1979, a temporary restraint program and staffing moratorium was announced by the government. The general objective of the staffing moratorium according to Treasury Board guidelines was: "Departments and agencies cease staffing actions for the time being, and attempt to cover off the duties of any vacant positions by internal secondments or rearrangements of duties, or other temporary measures, such as the use of acting pay or contracting with temporary help agencies."

(3) There were a number of organizational changes. At national headquarters the Offenders Program Branch was formed in October, 1978. There were numerous staffing processes for secretarial positions necessitating the usage of temporary help agencies. Furthermore the Offenders Program Branch was completing the Case Management Manual. (This provides for the co-ordinated management and administration of the inmate's sentence from the commencement date of his sentence to the date of expiry of the sentence imposed by the court.)

The executive secretary's branch was also newly created in 1979/80 and required a relatively high number of staffing actions thus calling for the use of temporary help agencies.

(4) In the Pacific region the employee turnover for 1979/80 averaged 16 per cent, pending the relocation of the regional headquarters offices in Vancouver to Abbotsford, approximately 12 employees sought and secured employment elsewhere. The region also faced an increase in administrative work because of the closure of British Columbia Penitentiary on May 10, 1980. The prairie region also experienced an increase in turnover rates of support staff particularly in the province of Alberta.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,905—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the correctional services program at page 32.36, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

(a) There are no increases in expenditures. The apparent increase over the previous year is due to a change in the layout in the public accounts reporting system through directive from the Receiver General of Canada. The items, as described in CSC's answer to parts (b) and (c), were listed under separate categories of their own in the 1978/79 Public Accounts of Canada. They have been consolidated under the new category "Other Types of Services" in the 1979/80 report.

(b) and (c): See list below.

For comparative purposes we have included the names and the amount of money paid for each type of service for fiscal years 1978/79 and 1979/80. These are as follows:

	1978/79	1979/80
Tuition—Educational Leave Program—78/79 figures may be found in Public Accounts of Canada report page 32.111 under Educational Services—Tuition Educational Leave Program	$ 7,031	$ 7,011
Health Care—Gynaecology and Obstetrics. There were no expenditures under this category in 78/79.	—	$ 4,070
Legal Services—CSC Employees—78/79 figures may be found in Public Accounts of Canada report page 32.113 under Legal Services—Employees	$44,395	$ 6,213
Veterinary Services—78/79 figures may be found in Public Accounts of Canada report page 32.113 under the category—Veterinary Services	$ 2,396	$ 2,764
Membership Fees—78/79 figures may be found in Public Accounts of Canada report page 32.114 under the category—Membership Fees	$18,857	$22,492
	$72,679	$42,550

In 1979/80 payments over $2,000 were made to the following: Cassel Brock in trust—$5,219.78 (legal services), St. Lawrence Veterinary—$2,237.50.

Question No. 2,906—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the Professional and Special Services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the departmental program at page 32.34, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other services (a) how does the department explain the 73 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

(a) The bulk of the increase was for: (i) summer and year round employment programs (youth) co-ordination; (ii) agreements with the provinces and municipalities for the temporary secondment of personnel.

(c) (i) $160,216

Question No. 2,917—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the taxation program at page 32.24, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photo service (a) what was the name of each type of service (b) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) Developing, enlarging and reducing photos for real estate appraisals. (b) $17,859; Canadian Government Photo Centre, $3,143.19; Polaroid (Toronto), $2,216.10.

TRAINING AND EDUCATIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,920—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources under the Atomic Energy Control Board at page 32.8, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training and educational services (a) how does the Department account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows:

(a) There was a decrease of $23,883 in training and educational services from 1978-79 to 1979-80 rather than an increase in expenditure. This decrease is not apparent when examining the public accounts for the same reason given in part (a) of question No. 2,846.

(b) The decrease is attributable to a special management training course in public relations conducted by TSAR Inc. at Lac Ste. Marie, Quebec in 1978-79.

(c) No contract was valued at more than $2,000.

Question No. 2,921—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources under the Energy Program at page 32.7, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training and educational services (a) how does the department account for the 14.4 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

(a) Expenditures for training and educational services in the energy program were $95,974.00 for 1978-79 and $102,798.00 for 1979-80. Therefore, there was an increase of only 7 per cent.

(b) These services include: the provision of instruction and facilities for the training of public servants by various public and private institutions; teachers and instructors' fees; reimbursement of tuition to employees for authorized training.

(c)	Harvard University tuition	$ 3,375.60

PHOTOGRAPHY SERVICES, EXCLUDING MOTION PICTURES

Question No. 2,927—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 32.15, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photography services except motion pictures (a) how does the department explain the 270 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The increase in expenditures for Indian and Inuit affairs is mainly due to amounts expended on photo displays and exhibits on tour; for example the Indian pavilion at Man and His World and Tradition & Change exhibits;

(b) The services involved are the purchase of photos, graphic art services, photographer services, development and reproduction of film;

(c) The recipients involved are Canadian Government Photo Centre, $38,058; Energy Mines and Resources, $4,200; and Via le Monde Canada Inc., $6,976. The balance is for miscellaneous items under $2,000.

Question No. 2,931—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the correctional services program at page 32.34, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to educational services (a) how does the Department explain the 83 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (d) what services did the Scott Paper Company, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia provide?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned, the increase of 83 per cent for the category educational services—outside staff training resources over fiscal years 1978/79 is actually an increase of 4.72 per cent and is explained by the following:

(i) Because of misinterpretation in line objects, certain payments in 1979/80 were coded in error under educational services—outside staff training resources as opposed to educational services—inmate and parolee training.

These were: Provincial Government—Finance, Halifax, N.S. $156,150; Scott Paper Company, New Glasgow, N.S. $69,073; Prince Albert Council on Alcohol & Drug Abuse $19,000; Saskatchewan Technical Institute $5,842.

(ii) The public accounts indicate an expenditure of $71,133 for Memramcook College in 1979/80 when in fact $28,188 of that amount was for the lease of the facility used for staff training and should not have been coded under outside staff training resources;

(iii) A contract with North American Guard Dog Ltd., Coquitlam, B.C., for $9,913 was coded incorrectly in 1979/80 against outside staff training resources. It should have been coded under staff training contracts as it was in the fiscal year 1978/79.

Therefore the actual expenditures for educational services—outside staff training resources, for the fiscal year 1979/80, is $222,818.

It must also be noted that in fiscal year 1978/79 payments to the Department of Education, Halifax for $20,608 and $48,966 for Scott Paper Co., Nova Scotia should have been attributed to inmate and parolee training as opposed to outside staff training resources, the actual expenditures for fiscal year 1978/79 being $212,769. Therefore the increase between fiscal years 1978/79 and 1979/80 for educational services is 4.72 per cent as opposed to 83 per cent. Steps have been taken to ensure that misinterpretation of line objects does not recur.

(b) The increase entailed services with the University of Winnipeg and St. Lawrence College in Kingston. The University of Winnipeg provided the following courses: two courses on "Inter-Personal Communications" were conducted November 6-8, 1979, and January 8-10, 1980; two courses on "Financial Management in the Correctional Service of Canada" were conducted; and one course on "Interviewing and Counselling Skills" for employees of Stony Mountain was conducted.

Whereas St. Lawrence College provided the following: two courses in business skills; twenty-five weeks of french language skill courses; six weeks of report writing; four telephone answering courses; and six weeks of oral communications training.

(c) List of payments over $2,000 made in 1979/80 for educational services—outside staff training resources:

College Ahuntsic—Montreal, Quebec	$ 2,400
Communicon Inc.—Montreal, Quebec	21,200

(d) Scott Paper Co. provides instructional and training services for inmates in Shulie Lake Institution in the vocation of forest harvesting, machine operation and related trades and studies.

Question No. 2,940—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General under the correctional services program at page 32.35, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other services—contracted inmate maintenance (a) how does the department account for the 82 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned: (a) The apparent increase of 82 per cent in payments to the provinces from 1978/79 to 1979/80 is caused by retroactive payments in both years resulting from billings not having been previously submitted by the province or retroactive rate adjustments.

The following are totals of payments made during 1978/79, 1979/80 and 1980/81 for services provided in 1978/79 and 1979/80:

The actual increase in total payments is thus 17 per cent. Changes from one year to the next are the result of increases in per diem rates and changes in the number of days paid.

(b) Payments to the provinces listed in the public accounts as "inmate maintenance contracted" are not made under a contract but are paid in accordance with two federal-provincial agreements, one for transfer of custody of federal and provincial inmates and the other for maintenance of parolees held in provincial institutions on suspension of parole.

In each case the Government of Canada agrees to reimburse the province for each day the federal inmate or parolee is confined in a provincial institution at a rate based on the operating cost of that institution. Payments for 1978/79 and 1979/80 to each province are listed in part (a) above.

UNINSURED LOSSES OF EQUIPMENT

Question No. 2,970—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in footnote No. 9 at page 13.4, Volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the equipment lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the transit?

3. How does the department account for the balance in the amount of $661,895?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Between 5 p.m. November 2, 1978, and 7 a.m. November 3, 1978, at the construction site for the Puntledge River Hatchery, a break-in occurred. The trailer owned by Cana Construction and four-shed type buildings were entered by prying the locks off and breaking the door windows. The transit, owned by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, as well as power tools and miscellaneous items belonging to Cana Construction were stolen. (a) Unknown; (b) No; (c) No; (d) No; (e) Yes. As Cana Construction was providing office space for the department, they were responsible for security at the site. They did change all of the locks and board up the windows with plywood to stop further entry. Cana did not feel it warranted hiring a full-time watchman due to the cost and time involved.

2. The transit was used for surveying sites and checking construction contracts.

3. (i) Grounding of M.V. Keta. On March 19, 1980 at 1645 hours, the fisheries research vessel, M.V. Keta, ran aground inside the entrance to Nitinat Lake. Ship division personnel had to fly to the site. The vessel was subsequently towed to the New Westminster repair depot for docking and hull inspection plus inspection of machinery and electrical systems.

Towing charges	$17,550.00
Air fare to site	277.60
Wire rope used in towing by Coast Guard	456.00
Electrical Repairs	444.00
	$18,727.60
(ii) Loss of equipment as a result of a fire at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia	257,683.00
(iii) Equipment lost at sea—e.g. samplers, pingers, nets, acoustic releases, current meters	385,484.40

Question No. 2,972—Mr. Clarke

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of National Revenue in footnote number 11 at page 13.4, Volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the furniture lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the furniture?

3. How does the department account for the balance in the amount of $9,081?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Due to the lack of storage space, some old unserviceable surplus office furniture stored on the warehouse loading docks at the bridge and tunnel in Windsor, Ontario awaiting pick-up by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation disappeared. (a) Unknown; (b) No; (c) No; (d) No; (e) Yes, an investigation was carried out, and tighter reporting controls, and ensurance of availability of secure storage space was implemented.

2. See reply to part 1 above.

3. The following is an accounting for the balance in the amount of $9,081: $2,761, loss of unserviceable furniture at Sarnia, Ontario in circumstances similar to the loss wich occurred at Windsor, Ontario; $2,237, loss of unserviceable drafting stools of negligible salvage value, awaiting pickup by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, inadvertently destroyed when picked up by garbage disposal company; $4,083, a physical inventory check, taken at time of move of Customs and Excise College from temporary accommodation in Ottawa to permanent college facility at Rigaud, Quebec, revealed furniture shortages to this value.

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the National Museums of Canada at page 32.33, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photo services—motion pictures (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): (a) In the fiscal year 1979-80 one film was co-produced by the National Gallery of Canada with the National Film Board entitled "A Québécois Rediscovered—Joseph Légaré—1795-1855". The total cost of co-producing this film was $45,115. (b) The film was aimed at a variety of audiences interested in Canadian art. (c) There is no cost recovery expected in so far as the National Museums of Canada is concerned as the co-production of this film is an extension of the National Gallery's regular public programming activities.

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 2,984—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans at page 32.12, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the name of each type of service (b) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (c) at what audience were the motion pictures aimed (d) what was the total cost and title of each motion picture completed in the fiscal year 1979-80 (e) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the motion pictures?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans):

(a) The types of services purchased were: (i) film processing and developing; (ii) purchase of satellite imagery; (iii) vertical serial photography; (iv) production and distribution of feature films; (v) production and distribution of filmstrips or film clips.

(b) (i) film processing and developing—$240,544.97

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise once again to ask the parliamentary secretary why the government is refusing to answer question No. 2,042 which was asked in this House on on January 29, 1981. It simply asks for the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour of 1980-81. What is the total cost to the taxpayers of Canada of that tour?

We have repeatedly requested this information and the minister repeatedly says that he will look into it. Every time I ask where the answer is we hear that he is looking into it. I feel that if we do not get a satisfactory answer today this question should be dealt with as a matter of privilege in this House.

Mr. Smith: I am pleased that the hon. member has drawn this to my attention. I will be delighted to look into the preparation of this answer on his behalf.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That this House, caring for the 1,200,000 Canadians now unemployed and the millions more worried about their jobs, recognizes that the National Energy Program and the budgets of October, 1980, and November, 1981, are largely responsible for this massive unemployment, and demands the resignations of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance, and the introduction of a new energy policy and a new budget to create jobs, lower interest rates and restore hope and confidence to Canadians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as we commence this debate on this important motion which is a part of our supply procedure and part of the traditional way that Parliament has of holding the government accountable, I note that there is not a single minister present in the House. Not one minister.

• (1210)

Mr. Mazankowski: Just like last night.

Mr. Wright: Not even the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) is here.

Mr. McGrath: One would expect that there would be at least one or two ministers who would have some responsibility in the area of economic affairs. But nobody is here. I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) entering the chamber now.

Mr. Nielsen: He is the minister of unemployment, the great job creator.

Mr. McGrath: At least now we have one minister here. Whether or not he will get the message remains to be seen. You know, Mr. Speaker, that is really consistent with the attitude of this government. We all listened a few days ago to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who spoke in this House giving us the Liberal philosophy of government. I will paraphrase what he said: "The challenge of government is to rise above events." Another way of putting that is: "We do not have time to pay any attention to what is going on around us." The Liberals have other things to do. I would remind the government and I would remind the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he were here, that the people of Canada want a government that is attentive to events and to what is going on around them and one that will do something about the situation.

Today we meet in a Parliament that is nasty and angry. Certainly I have not experienced anything like this Parliament in my 22 years in this House. I notice you are nodding your head as well, Mr. Speaker. There is a mood of nastiness and a mood of anger in this place. That is as it should be because that is a reflection of the mood of anger that is out there in the country. The country is frenzied; the country is angry, and well it should be.

We listened today to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) replying to questions in response to the disastrous unemployment figures released today. He said to blame the problem on everything but his own budget and disastrous policies. This situation today is unprecedented since the great depression. Today in this country one in ten people are officially out of work. Today in this country the percentage of unemployed is in double digits. We have a rate of inflation that is hovering around 12 per cent, almost twice as much as the rate of inflation in the United States. We have an energy policy that is shattered, which will mean increased energy costs for this country. I will exacerbate the already serious inflationary situation. It will mean increased gasoline prices. It will mean increased home heating oil prices. These increases come from a government that committed itself two years ago to keeping energy prices down.

Mr. Nielsen: Below 14 cents.

Mr. McGrath: A commitment was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to keep the excise tax on gasoline below 14 cents. Now we have increases in gasoline amounting to 75 cents. Most of that amount is directly attributable to increases in taxes by this government. The cost of home heating oil has gone up by 50 cents a gallon.

Mr. Nielsen: We did not even tax that.

Mr. McGrath: What do hon. members think of this statement?

> Your high interest rate policy would slow down the economy: it will mean the loss of thousands of jobs; it will mean increases in the cost of living. It will probably bring the housing and construction industry to a halt, with thousands of jobs being lost in those sectors.
> It will put housing beyond the reach of most middle and lower-income Canadians. It will hurt small business, which depends on bank borrowing to operate. It will hurt farmers, who have the same dependency on bank borrowing and will add, therefore, to the cost of food.

How profound! I wish I had said that. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) uttered those words on October 30, 1979 when he was finance critic and was speaking before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That is the same Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who made a commitment that if interest rates rose he would resign. He is still sitting in his place and uttering the empty rhetoric to which we have grown accustomed day after day after day.

The situation is desperate, Mr. Speaker. Directly as a consequence of the last two budgets of the Minister of Finance probably the biggest tragedy in this country today, in my opinion, is the plight of the young people of Canada who have no jobs and nowhere to turn.

Today we have a 9.6 per cent unemployment rate which translates itself into one in ten people out of work. Between April and July of this year we will have 650,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 looking for jobs. Many of them are students who face the prospect in September of higher tuition fees as a result of the scrapping of the established programs financing fund. They face higher tuition fees and no jobs, which means, of course, that many of them will not be able to go back to school. Many of them will continue to be on our unemployment rolls well into the winter. That is a tragedy of mammoth proportions, Mr. Speaker.

Why can we not do something for these young people? The bad news today is only one of a series that we have had in the last seven days. A couple of days ago the Conference Board of Canada released its findings and its forecast. It reported the following:

The decline in economic activity, which began mid-way through 1981 and is forecast to continue well into this year, represents the most severe setback suffered by Canada's economy since the early 1950s.

In other words, the situation is going to get worse. Can you imagine the situation getting worse? Today we have had an increase representing a 40 per cent rise in unemployment over this time last year.

If that were not enough, just a couple of days ago the housing start figures came out. What did we find there? We found a 40 per cent decline in housing starts over this time last year. That situation will get worse. The seasonally adjusted rate arising from these figures amounts to 142,000 starts. Yet CMHC indicates that from 1981 to 1986 we will need to maintain annual housing starts of 210,000 a year. That was providing the activity for the previous five years was at average norms, but it was well below average norms. Therefore, we will need more than 210,000 housing starts a year for the next five years just to catch up.

I cite these figures because you can directly relate the housing crisis to the problems facing young people. Not only do they not have jobs but if they get married they will have no place to live. What a tragedy for this country.

I mention housing because hon. members know, and the government should know, that it is probably the most labour intensive industry in the country. But no doubt we will hear the government say: "We have just made provision by way of the budget to provide interest free loans of up to $7,500 to build 30,000 rental units in the country." That is not enough. That is not my opinion, it is the opinion of the industry. They urgently need loans over $10,000 in metropolitan Toronto right now and they also need that much in metropolitan Vancouver. The 30,000 can be taken up in the two largest metropolitan areas of the country right now.

We also know that as a result of a decrease in supply and a concomitant increase in demand there will be further increases in the price of housing. The situation is going to get worse. It will get worse before it gets better. Yet the Minister of Finance stands behind that disastrous budget which he brought down in the House last fall.

Let us consider the consumer price index which is the measurement of the cost of living in this country. At this very moment in 1982, the cost of living in this country stands at 11.6 per cent. In the United States the consumer price index stands at 6.8 per cent, which is a substantial decline. How do you measure that performance in the United States against ours? When you talk about the consumer price index, you are talking about bread and butter, food for the table, a roof over your head.

Home heating oil is another commodity which Canadians basically need just to live. When measuring these basic necessities we must compare them to their performance in the United States. Not only is it fair to measure the government's performance against the performance of the United States, but we can also compare it to the performance of the previous government which we hear so much about these days.

Let us consider home heating oil. Under our budget, the annual tax on home heating oil would represent 19 cents a gallon, or $155 a year average. The annual tax on gasoline was equal to 39 cents a gallon, or $228 a year. We provided for an energy tax credit to protect home owners, fishermen and low-income earners. The total tax before that credit was $483. The total after the tax credit was $263.

Let us compare that to the budget of the Minister of Finance. Under his budget, the average annual tax on heating oil is $441 per year as opposed to $155 a year. The average annual tax on gasoline is $349 a year as opposed to $228 a year. The total tax before the energy tax credit is $790 per year. However, since there is no energy tax credit the total increase stays at $790 a year as opposed to $263 a year. Is there any wonder why the rate of inflation in Canada should be at the double digit rate and hovering around 12 per cent? These increases come from a government which campaigned on keeping price increases on gas and oil down. What total, complete and utter misrepresentation.

Where is the minister of energy? He was absent for most of the emergency debate and we obviously will not have the honour of his company today. The Minister of Finance is not in the House, nor is the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). There is one minister present in the House who presumably will be replying on behalf of the government. We see by the economic forecast that the unemployment situation will get worse. As a result of the third piece of bad news which hit our country a week ago today, we now know that the energy situation will get considerably worse because of the government's energy policy. That energy policy, like the government's economic and fiscal policies, is in shatters. There is nothing left of them.

The government's energy policy was based entirely on the so-called megaprojects. Let us examine the collapse of the Alsands project, which God knows has been examined enough in the House during the past 35 hours of emergency debate—save for one unexpected interruption. The collapse of the Alsands project will mean the loss of 35,000 directly related jobs. Since these figures have to be added to the job loss represented in today's unemployment figures, it means, of course, that the unemployment statistics will be worse next month. The collapse of Alsands means a loss in direct investment of $13 billion. It means an addition of close to $12 billion in crude oil imports from the offshore. The spin-off effects from now until the end of the century would have amounted to over $400 billion.

I stated those figures for the record because we must relate what they mean to the average Canadian. To the average person in this country they mean further increases in the cost of gasoline at the pump. Paradoxically, this occurs at a time when world prices are decreasing. It will mean further increases in the cost of home heating oil—with no shelter of an energy tax credit—at a time when home heating oil prices in other parts of the world, including the United States, are going down. This will be the effect on the average Canadian.

Of course, these costs will filter all the way through the economy. Ultimately, it will mean higher food prices, added transportation costs and added production costs. If that is added to the number of farm bankruptcies and the decline in our capacity to produce food, the result is an economic tragedy in this country of unprecedented proportions. We have seen nothing like it since the great depression. Indeed, there are areas of the country where the world recession is not relevant because those areas are, in fact, in a full scale depression.

There are one and a quarter million people officially unemployed in this country. What is not included in the number, however, is hidden unemployment or what I call the "hopeless unemployed." These are people who live in areas like Cape Breton and Newfoundland who have no prospects for employment in certain areas of that province and region. They are the hidden unemployed. If they are added to the official unemployment figures of today there are over one and a half million people in Canada looking for work but who have no job prospects.

As I have already indicated, the real tragedy is the dilemma faced by the our young people. Their prospects are very depressing. Students have no hope for summer employment and even if they are able to continue their education they face the prospect in September of increased tuition fees as a result of the budget of the Minister of Finance.

Young people who wish to get married must face the likelihood, in most major centres of the country, of zero vacancy rates. They will not even have an apartment to move into and will have to double up with their parents. Young couples who look to the future to achieve the traditional dream of Canadians to own a small part of Canada face the prospect of never owning a home in this country. The chance to own a home for the average Canadian is practically nil right now. What a mess, Mr. Speaker. To paraphrase an old election slogan, "Grit times are hard times".

• (1230)

Mr. McGrath: It is about time the people of Canada had some say in this matter, because if they were given the opportunity of having some say, my prediction is that the last vestige of dishonest Liberalism, the last Liberal government extant in this country today, would be wiped off the map of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The great Liberal Party of this country would be on the verge of extinction and would have to look to the game laws of this country for protection, to quote the late Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker.

They have three options open to them, as I see it.

Mr. Nielsen: Go now, next week, or later.

Mr. McGrath: They have three options open to them, if they were to be honest—

Mr. Epp: Or tonight, or tomorrow.

Mr. McGrath: —with this House and with the people of Canada. First of all, the Minister of Finance could—

An hon. Member: Quit, resign and leave.

Mr. McGrath: —be honest with himself and admit that the budget was in shatters, was a disaster, and bring in a new budget. I suspect—indeed, we are told—that that will not happen, thus eliminating that option. But I throw it out again as a serious suggestion because we are all anxious to get this economy of ours back on the rails. That is the role of Parliament.

I have a second suggestion, and I throw this one out sincerely. It has been repeated time and again during the last 24 to 48 hours, during the 35 hours of emergency debate. The second suggestion would be for the Minister of Finance to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Go, go!

Mr. McGrath: His resignation should be joined by that of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because if both hon. gentlemen were true to the traditions of the British parliamentary practice, one with a failed budget and one with a failed energy policy, they would have no other choice but to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It should have happened long ago!

Mr. Fretz: Resign!

Mr. McGrath: The third option facing the government would be for all of its members to go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is probably the best option, and I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) nodding. At least he should learn to count beyond 20 before he says another word in this House. But I throw that suggestion out as a serious option because the people of this country have shown, in poll after poll, that they have lost confidence in this government. They have no confidence in the leadership of the Prime Minister. All one has to do is to go to western Canada, to Saskatchewan or anywhere in this country, and one will find that the people have no confidence in the policies, these dishonest policies, I am sad to say, of the Minister of Finance.

One would expect the minister to have some social conscience, given his Saint Francis Xavier University background in the Coady tradition. Of course, the people have also lost confidence as a result of the disastrous, collapsed policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given all of that, the people of Canada have no confidence in the energy policies, in the monetary and fiscal policies or in the leadership of the Prime Minister and they have said so in poll after poll.

If I can paraphrase one other historic figure, "In the name of God, go" and give the people of Canada a chance to react to what they have done. They cannot continue as a government—to paraphrase the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—to rise above events, because if they do, events will pass them by and they will be, as a party, forgotten in the process!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: The "minister of unemployment"!

Mr. Axworthy: —I think we are all aware that this debate is being conducted at a very serious time in the fortunes of this country. There is no doubt that all of us on both sides of this House are deeply sorrowed by the grief which has been caused to those who are jobless. There is no doubt people on both sides of this House are searching in their minds and in their hearts to find some answers to those problems. The hon. member who just spoke has shown a tinge of self-righteousness in his attempt to portray that he is the only one who can speak for the people of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let the people speak for themselves.

Mr. Axworthy: He showed a certain degree of pomposity when he said that he will represent their points of view.

Mr. Nielsen: You are the expert on pomposity.

Mr. Axworthy: There are many people on this side of the House who also feel very deeply about what has happened in the country. They set forth their ideas and points of view, but they do so in a different manner. I ask hon. members of the House to stop and reflect for a moment on what we have just heard. Did we hear one constructive idea?

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes—resignation of the government.

Mr. Axworthy: Did we hear one proposal which would add one person to the job market?

An hon. Member: Absolutely none!

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, yes—resign!

Mr. Axworthy: Did we hear any suggestions with any positive direction or thrust? Oh, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, resign!

Mr. Fretz: A new budget!

Mr. Axworthy: All we hear from the apostles of doom and gloom on the other side are policies of negativism. Oh, do they like trouble. They wallow in the pool of chaos. They stir the pot and they know that Canadians are mad and fighting. One reason is because the cause is clearly there. There is a group of people in this House who have a vested interest in doing nothing but churning up a sense of pessimism and fear, rather than looking at what is possible and considering the kind of direction and policy which Canadians as a whole should be following. They have nothing to offer, nothing to say; no solutions, no proposals.

An hon. Member: You are not listening!

Mr. Axworthy: Nothing they say is constructive. All they say is why does this minister or that minister not resign? That is not what the people of Canada are asking for.

Mr. Dinsdale: Oh yes, they are!

Mr. Axworthy: They are asking for answers which can be put into effect. That is the difference between the two sides of the House. That is the reason we are always over here and they are always over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Over the years, the people of Canada have ultimately seen that they can have confidence in the Liberal Party of Canada, which is prepared to look for answers—

Mr. Dinsdale: But you have blown it this time.

Mr. Axworthy: —tough as they may be, and does not simply churn the pot of trouble in order to conjure up frightened fantasies.

Mr. Dinsdale: Nonsense!

Mr. Axworthy: That is the difference between us. That is why the people of Canada expect far more than they are receiving from hon. members in the opposition. I frankly think the people are getting tired of this constant tirade, the bell ringings and the debates being held. All right, that is fair enough, that is what Parliament is for; but when do we hear from the opposition what it would do instead?

We hear of a budget which is three and a half years old. As Tories always do, they dwell in the past to find their answers. But when Canadians ask them where they stand, what do they get? They get a cacophony of different answers. Hon. members opposite make the Tower of Babel look like the Mormon Tabernacle choir. One hon. member says spend more money while another says spend less money. One says restrain while another says don't restrain. We do not know where they stand on anything. The reason is because they do not know either. They have never known. They do not have a policy or a program. They have nothing to offer this House.

An hon. Member: Hot air.

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) had the audacity to berate this government for the initiatives we were taking. But when we ask where the hon.

member and his leader stand on the issues, what do we hear? We do not hear one word or a single proposition.

An hon. Member: They do not know.

Mr. Axworthy: We are engaging in the debate here because we want to find answers and because we do care. Because the hon. member has obviously ignored the kind of initiatives we are taking, I would like to show him how we care. Through the programs of my own department alone, and it is not the only one, we are presently servicing close to half a million Canadians through programs involving an expenditure of over $1.6 billion. We are servicing over 100,000 Canadians in direct job creation. Concerning new programs we signed our eleven hundredth work-sharing agreement affecting over 50,000 workers in this country.

Rather than having the enlisted co-operation of hon. members opposite to work with industries and workers in their communities to develop those kinds of programs, we get nothing but the apostles of negativism coming back. There is an answer that is of great effect and that in fact is being used in the hon. member's own province. But he walks oblivious to the reality; he is simply going to his witches' brew, trying to conjure up his particular potion of pessimism. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is necessary any more.

We have put in place a number of programs to try to help the unemployed. Just recently we added some major restrictions on foreign workers coming in, to make sure that Canadians have first chance. We have introduced new programs under the unemployment insurance program, Section 38, which are providing opportunities to join, in co-operation with the provinces, in developing new job initiatives in forestry, mining and tourism. These proposals are coming from his own provincial government, but the hon. member is totally ignorant of and oblivious to it. Because they are not prepared to get down to work and share in it. There are job programs in fisheries in his own province that will provide hundreds of jobs for fishermen who are out of work. Again the hon. member is oblivious to and ignorant of that fact and reality. Mr. Speaker, we are not saying that that will solve the whole problem. Time and time again in this House we have said that it is a problem affecting every country in the world. And that is not passing the buck; it is trying to describe how we must be careful and deliberate in the policies that we put together, along with other countries, to try to find some way out of these very difficult times.

Instead, we have a resolution in front of us that says that all will be well if one minister would resign and if we throw the budget out and all the rest of it. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) resigned, would that help the unemployment rate in the United States which is now 9.4, or would it bring down interest rates set by the Federal Reserve Board? Will they say: "Oh well, the Canadian government has taken an initial major step, because the Tory opposition told them to do so, so we will bring our interest rates down"? What foolishness, Mr. Speaker! What nonsense, what silliness, we are receiving from the members of the opposition.

If we have to discuss our economic problems in real terms, then let us discuss them. Let us not have this infantile child's play that we hear continually from the members of the opposition, that somehow if only the Minister of Finance would resign, if we would throw out his budget, all would be right in the world. All of a sudden, Mr. Speaker, the sun would shine.

In the United Kingdom there is an unemployment rate of 12 per cent. There is a government there which the member opposite has extolled time and time again, saying that the Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher, is the epitome of economic widsom. They have an unemployment rate of 12 per cent, yet hon. members opposite say it somehow would solve all our problems here and abroad if our Minister of Finance would resign.

When is the opposition going to be serious, Mr. Speaker? When are they going to treat these problems with the kind of serious thought they deserve and quit playing their game of sandbox politics? It is about time this Parliament got down to a serious discussion of unemployment, because it is a serious issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: It is time they faced up to the kind of policy that we have put forward and which we are prepared to change and alter if we receive any kind of reasonable suggestion from members opposite.

An hon. Member: We never do, we never do.

Mr. Axworthy: What have we got so far, Mr. Speaker? Nothing of a serious or rational or intelligent nature. All we see is that banging of the shoe on the table and that wild rhetoric. The hon. member for St. John's East should read some economic papers and forget some of the rhetorical outbursts of evangelism. That is not what these times require.

Let us put forward the kind of strategy that we are dealing with; let us have a serious debate. Let us erase the kind of childishness we have been receiving from the first speaker and get down to serious debate. Let us talk about the real issues. Let us talk about the trinity of evil called inflation, interest rates and unemployment. They are interconnected and interdependent; they all affect one another.

We have said time and time again that if this country is to stabilize its economy, if it is to bring about the stimulus of growth, we must deal with the issue of inflation. We cannot deal with one problem in isolation from another. We must come to grips with the fact that as long as we have a high inflation rate we cannot bring our interest rates down, and if we cannot bring our interest rates down we cannot allow the private sector to stimulate the economy. That was the whole thrust of the Minister of Finance's budget. It was to provide fiscal and monetary restraint in this country, to try to get that inflation under control, on a decreasing scale, so that we can bring interest rates down.

We are as deeply concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the impact of high interest rates as anyone in this country, perhaps more, because we deal with it every day, not under the sort of poppycock opposition pressure that we hear three times a week—and then they go off and do the same sort of dance somewhere else. We are deeply concerned about the position. We have a strategy in place to try to bring the inflation rate down. Contrary to the NDP, we have not adopted the so-called Reaganomics to do it, because we have one thing that is different; we have maintained the full range of social programs, of unemployment insurance, to ensure that there is proper support and cushioning for those who are affected by these policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: The member opposite from St. John's East tried to reach out and paint as black a picture as he possibly can, saying we are down in the depths of the great depression. He forgets that the great depression did not have a thing called the Unemployment Insurance Act, which provides up to $210 a week for people who are unemployed. It has provided the best, most effective and most reliable income support of any country in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: He totally ignores that. The Unemployment Insurance Act is doing what it was designed to do—provide a basic foundation for workers who are unemployed until the economy turns. It is a credit to this country that we have been able to maintain that system and use it effectively.

Not only are we providing income support, but we are also using the unemployment system in a developmental way to provide opportunities for workers who are unemployed to get new training during that period of time, to go back to work in forest management projects, something which is desperately needed in order to improve the productivity of our forest industry. So this government has tried to bring in not just a basic income support, but tried to use it in a creative way.

An hon. Member: It is sheer misery!

Mr. Axworthy: Ah, now we are hearing the classic shout, that there is sheer misery. I have an interesting proposition to make to the NDP members. Let them ask their own membership, their own workers, if they would like to follow the NDP proposal, which is to let people really become unemployed and not make any money and not go back to work. I do not believe in that kind of idea. I believe that Canadians want to work, that they want to be given the opportunity, that they want to be given the chance to work and to make more income. The NDP do not believe in that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn: Would the minister entertain one short question?

Mr. Axworthy: I would prefer to hear the question after a short while.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, seeing the member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) rise to his feet, I would only point out to him, when he is looking for answers, that his own community is a major beneficiary of a new program of this government called the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program. It has provided major industrial incentives for new industries to come into his community. It has provided additional subsidies for workers, new training, new mobility. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have in my office a letter from the mayor of Brantford thanking me and this government for bringing in the ILAP program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We need that kind of moral support at this time, rather than what we hear from the opposition that there is no strategy, that nothing has been done. I suggest to the member for St. John's East that he go and talk to the member for Brant and find out what has been done in his community to provide that alternative for workers in his constituency. Mr. Speaker, we have those programs in place.

We have also brought into place under the budget, Mr. Speaker, an economic development strategy which appears as a direction to develop the economy now and in the future and to provide jobs. We have heard time and time again about the failure of the megaprojects. Mr. Speaker, yes, the pipeline is postponed and the Alsands project is stopped. Did that really have something to do with the National Energy Program, or was it the international oil economy? If the hon. member for St. John's East used any logic at all, he would realize that the United States did not stop all its oil-shale projects because of the Canadian National Energy Program. The Americans stopped them for the same reason the major multinationals stopped Alsands. The reason was they could not get the price for oil they thought was necessary to develop the projects. That is why many alternative energy projects are being stopped around the world.

However, at the same time there are all kinds of other projects going on. We have the northeast coal project providing jobs for over 5,000 people and the expenditure of $1 billion. How did that project get started? It was started through an investment by this government. The Trans Quebec and Maritime Pipeline project employs close to 11,000 people at an expenditure of $800 million. Why are 11,000 people going to work? They are going to work because of an investment by this government.

In the major projects task force report there are 440 megaprojects which were measured by business, labour and government as being prospective during the next two decades. There have been two failures. All of a sudden hon. members opposite say the megaprojects are no more. There are tens of dozens of projects continuing.

Let me talk about the role the opposition plays in job creation in this country. Let me talk about the position taken by the Conservative Party and the NDP on perhaps the single most critical investment in Canada in terms of its future growth, the modernization of our transportation system. It was quite clear that the growth in western Canada in terms of new export markets for potash, grain, sulphur and coal could not go ahead unless we had a new railway system. We had reached full capacity. The railways said they were not prepared to invest the tens of billions of dollars necessary to bring that project about when they were losing $600 million a year because they were not getting anywhere near a fair price for their service. It was quite clear that that project was the key which would unlock a number of new projects in processing, manufacturing and refining in western Canada and also create jobs in connection with new locomotives in London, steel rails in Sydney and railways cars in Montreal. These have an effect right across Canada. However, someone had to take a tough decision to bring the parties to the table and get them negotiating and showing good faith so that a $13 billion investment could be made to create tens of thousands of jobs across Canada. What was the position of the opposition? What has been the position of the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, those great prophets of "What can we do?" They are totally against it.

Mr. Kristiansen: Who pays the bill?

Mr. Axworthy: Since we are talking about who is for this and who is against it and about who is interested in creating growth and jobs in the country, I ask hon. members opposite to declare in this debate today their commitment to supporting the policy put forward by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), to supporting those negotiations and to ending the kind of foolish nonsense the allies of the NDP—the NFU and the Manitoba farm and labour federations—get into because they oppose progress, development and growth. They are living in the past. We ask hon. members to renounce that today and agree this is an important investment in the future of Canada which will create jobs for tens of thousands of Canadians.

Let Parliament today in a unified form—both sides of the House—support a policy which will provide major expansion across Canada. Do hon. members opposite have the courage to do that? Does the hon. member for St. John's East? Is he prepared to get his caucus to support a major megaproject so that we can bring that kind of growth on? The hon. member pleaded. He wanted something to happen. The Minister of Transport has put something on the table, but the biggest obstacle to that is the kind of political opposition we get from the Tories and the NDP, who are simply paying off their old debts by living in the past. We want to know when they are prepared to get behind major expansion projects and major growth projects. We want to know when they are prepared to begin co-operating during these difficult times and start creating jobs in this country, rather than simply coming forward on a platform of pessimism.

The hon. member for St. John's East says the Liberals are dishonest. I suggest there may be some reason not to trust his comments as well. There may be some reason to suggest there was a tinge of hypocrisy in the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East, because if he really believed in what he said, rather than standing here berating us he would be working in his own caucus to get agreement and co-operation from his colleagues for something which will provide tens of thousands of jobs in the next year. There will not just be direct jobs in construction and manufacturing; there will also be an opportunity to open up a whole new export market. The hon. member for St. John's East wants a response. That is fair. Should he resign if he is not prepared to co-operate? Should we ask for his resignation because he is dishonest and hypocritical in not being prepared to take the kind of initiative on behalf of the people of Canada that is necessary?

In addition to that, in terms of an economic development strategy we have also put forward a number of initiatives in the area of science and technology in manufacturing. There has been a 20 per cent increase in funding for the National Science and Energy Research Councils for new manufacturing development. Seventy million dollars is going into new centres for microelectronics to aid and assist that fast-growing industry. Millions of dollars are going into the Telidon project, which is providing jobs in the high tech area. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is working on an agri-food strategy, which will provide major support for research in agricultural processing and development. A major study is going on in the fisheries industry to provide for realignment and rationalization with respect to production.

In talking about the economy, let us talk about the statistics which came out yesterday. The hon. member for St. John's East was very anxious to pick and cull from the newspapers all the bad news he could find. Why did he not refer to the good news, which is that we have made the biggest sale of wheat to China in the history of Canada? It was announced yesterday that we have the largest trade surplus ever recorded in this country. That trade surplus is because of a major increase in the export of finished goods. Thirteen billion dollars in the first three months of 1982 is not a bad record. It is exports that will get this country into a better economic position, as long as we can take care of the other problems and as long as we can stay competitive economically and internationally. That means we have to be talking about wages, prices and investment. We have to get the inflation rate down if we are going to maintain our economic advantage.

My contention is that we have a strategy. It was put forward in the budget, both in terms of fiscal and monetary instruments. We have a strategy which relates to a major retraining of Canadians. Hon. members want to talk about productivity and future progress. We increased the training budget of this government by 15 per cent, to over a billion dollars. This will provide training for close to 275,000 Canadians. Hon. members talk about yong people. The best opportunity for a young person is to get the skills he or she will need for the jobs of the future. That is what this government is investing in, with absolutely no help from hon. members opposite.

I will put another proposition to the hon. member for St. John's East, who is so anxious to get things going. Let him go back to his caucus and ask if they will agree to a one-day debate on our national training policy so that we can get it through and get the job of training hundreds of thousands of Canadians done. The problem is that the opposition holds up measures like the new national training program which we have not been able to bring forward. If the hon. member wants to be constructive and helpful, let him go to his caucus and ask them to give us the opportunity to bring that training bill forward. Then we will help 250,000 young people. We will help them get work and get the skills they need.

That is what we want in this difficult time. We do not want the wall of conflict which has been thrown up. What we need is willingness to co-operate, to develop constructive solutions and to come forward with ideas. We are prepared to listen to hon. members opposite because we do not pretend we have all the answers. However, at the same time we do not think we are faced with the panorama of destruction we hear about constantly. We hear no solutions and no constructive ideas or alternatives.

It is time for Members of Parliament on both sides to work together with the private sector to come up with solutions. Then the people of Canada would not be angry. They would be able to believe again not just in government but in the entire Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.00 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to lead off for my party this afternoon in the debate on the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Before I begin I should like to say that even though I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member in whose name the motion appears, as I sat listening for 30 minutes this morning trying to find a Conservative alternative in his speech regarding an energy strategy or an employment strategy or an industrial strategy, I was disappointed.

I am afraid this is the story of the Conservatives in opposition these days. They want to bash the government, as we do, and they want to be extremely critical. Unfortunately, however, they are critical in a negative way day after day. They do not offer any positive, alternative proposal. That is the major problem with that party. We are not getting a positive response from the Conservatives. I strongly suspect the reason for this is that their leader and their spokesperson on finance have agreed that high interest rates are the only way to bring down inflation. And that is the government's policy. The critic of the Progressive Conservative Party on finance has stated openly outside this House that he agrees with supply side monetarist Reaganomics. In that way they have preempted themselves from any positive alternatives to any Liberal program or non-program at this time.

I was also shocked when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) intervened before lunchtime and said at the beginning of his speech, and I wrote his words down, "We are all saddened by the grief that is caused to those who are jobless."

I honestly do not understand how the minister who is chiefly responsible for employment, and indeed unemployment in this country, can be so callous in his opening remarks on such serious matters as employment, an industrial strategy and an energy strategy.

In the past few days we have seen the almost total collapse of the major economic thrust of the government, that is, the resource-based capital intensive megaprojects. They have not all gone but certainly the cornerstone has gone. We anticipate that many other megaprojects are not only in jeopardy but may fail as well.

The main reason for this is high interest rates and lower world prices for oil caused by a world glut which the government should have seen and addressed well over a year ago. There is no excuse for putting all the economic eggs in one basket which all of a sudden has a huge hole in it. This has only added to the misery of the 1.2 million Canadians, 9.6 per cent of the work force, who today find themselves jobless. It is a very sad state of affairs.

What makes it tragic is that this recession is a planned recession. It has not come about as a result of normal market forces. The marketplace has not caused this recession. It has come about, first of all, because government has deliberately planned and executed a policy of high interest rates, cuts in public services, cuts for wealthy corporations and wealthy individuals, which in turn have led to massive lay-offs, plant shutdowns and demands for wage rollbacks.

I think it is absolutely unforgivable that government policy today should pit one worker against another; they are bidding each other down to get the lowest paying job in order to keep their heads above water. That is what their fathers had to do during the great depression of the 1930s. Today in many communities across the country we find workers bidding against each other and losing many of the benefits of collective agreements arrived at through negotiation in the sixties and seventies, only to end up competing with each other in a job that pays them less at the end of every week.

As far as I am concerned, that is totally inexcusable. Canada and this government is on a crusade against inflation where jobs are mere cannon fodder. Workers' economic security is the number one casualty. Workers are blamed for inflation—the worker's belt must be tightened, the Prime Minister (Mr.

Trudeau) has said. In the last five and a half years the wages of workers have fallen behind and today the average worker is $39.19 per week behind where he was in 1976. Yet the Prime Minister says public sector employees, and by implication private sector employees, must tighten their belts for his errors and the errors of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). That is the way it has always been with the Liberals, and it is absolutely despicable as far as I am concerned.

Wages do not cause industrial lay-offs. Just two weeks ago about 4,000 chief executive officers across Canada were polled, and 75 per cent of them said it was not labour unit costs which were causing lay-offs or shutdowns, it was high interest rates and the cost of borrowing money. So it is a planned recession, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to present our option; unlike the Conservatives, we have one. We are not saying it is perfect or will put Canadians back to work in a few days, but at least we have given it thought for several months, analysed it, and we think in the long term it will work. But, like all long-term policies, we have to begin yesterday.

We just cannot afford to drift any further into economic chaos and social distress. The NDP economic strategy is based on a number of key elements, including a historic commitment to Canadianization of our economy through the use of all the tools at our disposal—public enterprise, joint public-private ventures, co-operative ownership and private ownership. Second, the widening of public ownership in the resource sectors; and third, a commitment to require multinational corporations in Canada to provide jobs here which match the level of their access to our markets.

The first two elements are well-known and need no specific elaboration here. The third requires some expansion because it has received attention in recent discussions of our new employment option.

The insistence that multinationals not have free access to our market is of crucial importance in a period of deep recession. This is especially true in the hard-hit manufacturing sector where 308,000 jobs have been lost in the last six months. The weakness of employment in the manufacturing sector is far more severe than it has to be in relation to the size of our market. In 1981 our trade and manufacturing deficit reached a record $21 billion. That deficit cost us 200,000 production jobs and tens of thousands more in the service sector. Even though Statistics Canada has, to date, failed to produce figures on exactly how much of the manufacturing deficit has been caused by multinationals, other studies tell us it is a very high proportion. Foreign-owned corporations account for 57 per cent of Canadian manufacturing. Those firms are concerned first and foremost with their global balance sheets, not with their contribution to Canadian economic wellbeing. Such firms have a marked tendency to import technology, production machinery, parts and components from their head offices. Especially since the recent GATT agreement has lowered tariff protection to very low levels, multinational manufacturing firms have had a tendency to shift their production out of Canada to plants in their country of origin.

Without fully understanding it we are now involved in a life or death war of non-tariff barriers to protect our manufacturing employment. Our competitors in the United States, Japan and western Europe are using government policies to maximize their domestic employment. Alone among the major industrialized nations of the world Canada has failed to take serious steps to do this. It is disgusting, embarrassing, and it is Liberal policy. The result is de-industrialization. That does not refer to the temporary loss of jobs in manufacturing as a result of recession; it refers to the shifting of jobs out of Canada by multinationals to their country of origin while the multinational retains or even increases its market share in Canada. De-industrialization reduces our industries to warehouse-assembly operations. It threatens our very survival as an individual and independent industrial nation. Let me cite the results of two of the studies which confirm this analysis.

A study of U.S. multinational corporations produced by the U.S. Senate in February, 1973, detailed the behaviour of U.S. firms abroad. The study examined the trends in employment and manufacturing in U.S.-owned multinational corporations in seven countries: Canada, the United Kingdom, Belgium-Luxembourg, France, West Germany, Mexico and Brazil. Between 1966 and 1970 U.S. multinationals increased their share of manufacturing employment in those seven countries by an average of 25 per cent. The only country in which there was a decrease in the proportion of manufacturing workers employed by U.S. multinationals was Canada. This decrease was not an indication of lessening U.S. control of our economy; it occurred at the same time as they increased their share of manufactured goods sold in the Canadian market.

Evaluating the evidence, Mr. Speaker, the Senate study concluded that U.S. multinationals had a marked negative impact on Canadian manufacturing employment between 1966 and 1970, the reverse of the pattern in every other country. U.S. firms, while increasing their dominance of the market, were cutting back their relative share of employment. This can best be explained by the growing tendency of U.S. firms to import parts and components manufactured by their U.S. operations into Canadian branch plants for final assembly and sale.

The fact that U.S. manufacturing firms displace jobs in the long run was acknowledged in the study, which concluded that a key role of U.S. multinationals has been to foster the sale of parts and components manufactured in the U.S. to branch plants abroad. We are reaping the whirlwind of that U.S. policy which has resulted in massive lay-offs in many foreign-owned or U.S. branch plants across Canada.

The study estimated, Mr. Speaker, that this role far outweighed the importance of imports to the U.S. from foreign operations of U.S. multinationals. The net gain to the U.S. was placed at 500,000 jobs. Although the study did not break down this job figure in terms of the countries negatively affected, Canada most certainly topped the list. This is so because Canada is the site of about 25 per cent of all direct U.S. investment abroad. It is further evidenced in light of this study's conclusion that Canada was the only country in which relative employment in U.S. multinational manufacturing firms was dropping.

The second study examined the behaviour of U.S. and Canadian-owned firms in manufacturing in Ontario for the period 1966 to 1972. It concluded that over that period U.S. establishments created only one-third as many new jobs as Canadian-owned firms relative to their size. It was again clear that the reason for the difference in performance was not a shift in market control to Canadian firms; rather it was the tendency of American firms to pass on the bulk of their increased activity in Canada to their American plants. The phenomenal growth in our trade deficit in manufactured products from $2.5 billion to $21 billion in just over a decade is the result.

Our long-term answer to this problem must be to Canadianize the manufacturing sector. In the middle range, however, we must recognize that multinationals will play a key role in our manufacturing for years to come. At a time when the bottom has fallen out of our manufacturing economy it would be economic nonsense to advocate a sudden shift from foreign to Canadian ownership of manufacturing.

If, then, the multinationals will be with us for some time to come, we have to get tough with them. We cannot allow them to dominate our market without paying for it by providing us with our fair share of jobs. In the NDP's new employment option, we have argued that Canada must insist that foreign manufacturing firms in the transportation equipment and machinery sectors, both massively foreign owned, must produce in Canada as much in value as Canadians consume of their products. They can do this by producing for both our domestic market and our export market, and by purchasing parts and components from Canadian suppliers. But they can no longer cause a huge trade deficit and cost Canadians tens of thousands of jobs as they are presently doing.

There are three possible situations with respect to manufacturing and multinationals in Canada. First, a situation in which foreign firms dominate the market and supply it from production facilities in their countries of origin. This is the situation in the Third World. It is characterized by massive trade deficits and high unemployment. Second, a situation in which foreign firms are required to produce as much in value in the host country as citizens in that country consume of their products. Third, a situation in which industry is owned and controlled by the citizens of the country in which it is located.

Clearly situation three is preferable to situations one and two. This option must be the long-term goal. In the present circumstances, however, Canada is located—and this is a shameful situation—somewhere between situation one and situation two for 60 per cent of our manufacturing, and we are sliding in the wrong direction.

While advocating growth in the share of our market that is satisfied through domestically-owned firms, we must also hold the multinationals to the provision of our fair share of jobs for the proportion of the market which they enjoy. I would like to say that in our judgment this is a workable option and alternative. In this debate today we have put forward a positive alternative to the government. I hope that some day the Conservatives will put their brains together and also come up with some kind of positive alternative.

Mr. McKenzie: At least we have some brains.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this debate on the motion put forward by my colleague and good friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). His motion is a very timely one. It brings attention to the unemployment situation in this country, the massive lay-offs and the high interest rate problems. The unemployment statistics shattered everyone when we received news of them upon waking up this morning, having left the House at around 2.30 a.m.

I hope my friend, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), will stay in the House to hear what I have to say because I, too, have some proposals to put before the House to help the conditions Canada is facing today.

I would like to thank the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) for his courtesy in allowing me to speak out of turn because I have another commitment.

Before I get into the positive end of things, I want to take a look at what is happening in Canada today and speak about the problems as I see them. Two of the major problems we have can be summed up very simply. Canada has a Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who are stubborn and have an unbending attitude toward the business community and the energy industry.

Let me put an example before the House. The Minister of Finance likes to say that he has been discussing his budget with the business community and that the business community is in favour of what he is doing. However, let me read from an article in the latest edition of Maclean's magazine dated May 10, 1982:

> To add to the Liberals' dilemma, the November budget is still sending shock waves through an edgy business community. Although MacEachen crisscrossed the nation last month to hold private talks with business leaders, participants report that he still refused to admit that his tax change proposals are riddled with major flaws. Businessmen were forced to devote the major portion of most meetings to arguments about the budget. MacEachen, in turn, reacted to the criticism with obstinate fury, apparently convinced that businessmen are deliberately plotting against him.

I met with representatives of the business community as recently as yesterday at noon. They reported that they are not supporting the actions of the Minister of Finance. I see the minister's parliamentary secretary shaking his head, negatively as usual. The business leaders reported that the Minister of Finance is not doing the right thing. They have made concrete proposals to the government, but instead of accepting them, co-operating and sitting down with Canada's business leaders, the minister is fighting them. He is fighting the labour movement as well. In effect he is saying: "I am right; I am not going to co-operate with you". That is what is happening.

Business leaders in Canada are depressed. They are trying to make things work. They are trying to provide jobs. They are trying to create wealth for the people of Canada. But every time they turn around, they are slapped in the face by the Minister of Finance.

There are some startling statistics before us which this government cannot deny. For instance, 12 out of every 100 small businesses went bankrupt in the last four months. That is a terrible situation. Sixty-two per cent of businesses surveyed who are members of the Chamber of Commerce are putting their venture capital outside the country because they do not trust this government. They do not know what next will be changed. They cannot plan from one month to the next, let alone from one year to the next. These are the problems causing this massive unemployment that we see today. It is the uncertainty that people see and because of that the business community just cannot invest.

Next we have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What a classic! He has great political power in Quebec. No one gets a nomination and no one can run for the Liberal Party unless he says so. Once I knew about that, I understood why all the members from the province of Quebec who sit in the back rows sit there and bow to him every time he comes into the House. They do not dare stand up and speak against him. I am surprised the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) does not stand up and blast the minister of energy.

Mr. McDermid: Think about the number of jobs that have been lost at Stelco as a result of the minister's bumbling in the energy field in Canada. The hon. member for Hamilton West should be up on his feet condemning the minister because jobs have been lost in Hamilton as a result of what the minister of energy has been doing.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What about SYSCO?

Mr. McDermid: On television the other night we saw the minister of energy visiting Texas. He was striding along the streets of Houston looking at the tall buildings. He had meetings with oilmen. Do you know what he said to them, Mr. Speaker? He was saying "Come up to Canada and invest. We want your money. We want you to invest your money in the energy field in Canada." But do you know what he says in the House to Canadians watching him on national television? He says "We are going to Canadianize the industry". I say to the minister that he cannot have it both ways. This is a typical double standard.

Mr. Fisher: Give us an alternative.

Mr. McDermid: Just hang in there and I will.

I come next to a speech given by William P. Wilder to the Harvard Business School Canadian Conference. His topic was politics, oil and economics in the early 1980s. In part his address reads:

> The incredible fact is that Canada has faithfully promised the other members of the International Energy Agency that it will put its energy house in order and move to reduce its demand for imported crude oil.

Mr. Cullen: We have done that—7 per cent.

Mr. McDermid: You have done that? But the numbers are increasing, Mr. Speaker. The numbers of imported barrels will continue to increase. I see the former minister of employment and immigration across the way. He is over there saying, "Thank goodness the Prime Minister booted me out of cabinet; I would not want to be in that hot seat now."

• (1430)

Mr. Cullen: He did not boot me out; he did not take me in.

Mr. McDermid: I made a statement the other day in committee that I wish he were back in that particular portfolio.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the hon. member would not intentionally, or in any other way, mislead the House. I was not booted out of cabinet; I was not asked back in.

Mr. McDermid: That is a point well taken. I thank the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) for drawing that to my attention.

We could talk about the negatives for a very long period of time. I do not think there is any question that the ragtag bunch who are running the country has given us enough ammunition that an individual member could speak for hours in the House on the damage they have done to Canada. But let us talk about some positive things. The very first thing we would do if we were in government would be to withdraw the budget of the Minister of Finance. That would be the very first and the most positive thing which could be done in the country.

Mr. Fisher: What perks did you lose?

Mr. McDermid: I did not lose any. I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) what perks I lost. I did not lose any perks; I did not have any perks to lose. The parliamentary secretary should know better; I have absolutely no perks at all which the budget affects.

If we were in government there would be at least four major changes in economic direction. First, we would reward the risk-takers and encourage investment. That would be the minimum first step, because awarding risk-taking and encouraging investment is the only way to create permanent jobs in Canada. Most of the tax incentives in the system should remain, because if they go the investors go. We have seen it happen. The statistics show the outpouring of capital from the country and jobs are lost to Canadians; we have seen that as well. I am not saying that there is not abuse in the system because there is abuse in any system. That must be eliminated. But incentive must remain as a central part of the Canadian tax system and it is not provided in the budget.

Second, we would help the worst victims of high interest rates. The government took the Small Business Development Bond, which was for farmers and small businessmen, and gutted and destroyed it. They said, "If you are going bankrupt, if you are in financial difficulties, or if you are going down the tube, we will lend you money." They do not bother to help the productive small businessman who is hanging in there, creating jobs and trying to get ahead. He cannot obtain any help at all.

Our mortgage property tax credit would have been helping people to the tune of $125 per month right now, which would have effectively reduced interest rates by about 3.5 per cent to 4 per cent. Our energy tax credit program would have been helping those people who are not making much more than the average family income overcome the high energy costs which exist. Such programs are possible if the national government cares about keeping alive Canadians who want to work and build a stake in Canada.

Third, we would apply restraint with the same vigour we did when we were in government. Heaven knows this must happen; it just has to happen. We cannot have three cabinet ministers flying in formation to Winnipeg in their jets. We cannot have a courier bringing a newspaper from Quebec to the tune of $40 when we can walk down to the Chateau Laurier to pick it up. These kinds of abuse must stop.

I could give example after example. Advocacy advertising must stop. They should quit blowing their own horn. I do not mind them informing Canadians of their programs, not at all, but they should quit blowing their own horn with fancy billboards which do not say a thing. They do not contain any information; they do not inform the public whatsoever.

We would give highest priority to getting on with energy projects which guarantee self-sufficiency. I worry when I see the government and the private sector, because the Minister of Finance does not give any kind of encouragement to the business community, backing off these projects. We have an oil glut; everyone talks about the great glut and the fact that we can obtain cheaper oil and everything else. With the way things are in the Middle East, and with the way the government before us made a commitment to the major trading partners that it would develop our resources and let those who did not have them use resources available elsewhere—and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made that commitment in 1978 to the world; of course he has been known to break commitments now and then—I am fearful when we do not develop what we have in the country. One day we could be right back in the same position we were in in 1975, that is, buying imported oil while ours is sitting here. When we do that, we fool the people in the gallery and young people who need jobs when they finish school. We are fooling them if we say that we will go to Saudi Arabia, Venezuela and Mexico to purchase oil because it is cheap. This creates jobs only in those countries, and that is what is being done today.

Also our party would ensure that the automobile industry, both assemblers and autoparts manufacturers, becomes healthy again. We must encourage those who wish to sell in Canada to have Canadian content in those projects, and we must encourage investment in the automobile industry. I am sure the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton would not object to a Toyota or Honda plant in Sarnia. I would not object to one in Brampton as long as it provided Canadians jobs and improved Canadian productivity.

Another thing which should happen is that tax system changes should be announced and public input should be allowed before the changes are implemented. This must happen in the country, and we are committed to doing it. If we were in government, a commitment on economic initiatives would be made with business for a set period of time so that uncertainties will not exist as they do today. The Minister of Finance changes the rules of the game almost monthly. How in heaven's name can business operate without knowing what is coming down the road? The country was built by people who took risks. It was helped to grow by national governments which encouraged individuals that to build was the way to make the nation grow. We must return to that system, and the sooner the better.

Our party is committed to a national recovery program. We are not only committed, we will do it, and we challenge the government to listen to the people of Canada calling for an election. They want one and they want one desperately. I challenge the government to give it to them and allow Canadians to make up their minds who they want to govern them.

The present government does not have a mandate to do what it is doing. I have never heard a Liberal opponent stand on a platform and say, "I will raise the price of gas 80 cents per gallon." I refer to the advertisement of the Minister of Finance which appeared in the January 23, 1980 edition of The Scotia Sun. It was during the election campaign and read:

> Because Allan J. MacEachen and the Liberal Party spoke up for you, gas prices came down in December. Vote Liberal and the price will stay down.

That is what the ad said. The Minister of Finance did not even have enough nerve to put in a picture of a Petro-Canada station; he had a picture of a Texaco station. The ad says, "Vote Liberal and the price will stay down". How does he expect the Canadian people to believe him when he campaigned in that manner? After he said that to these people they were alarmed and did not want to be faced with an 18-cent increase. They said they would vote for the Minister of Finance because he would keep the price down. That is nonsense.

I will close with this thought, Mr. Speaker. Ottawa today is governing against the traditions of Canada and against the nature of Canada, the interests of Canada and the wishes of Canada. My colleagues are committed to work and build this country and allow the private sector to create permanent jobs so young people will have a future in Canada. I want to tell you right now Mr. Speaker, that all we need is a chance.

It is time for this government to step aside because of its dismal failure over the last two years. This government has broken all of its election promises with the exception of one. That exception is the $35 a month extra it gave to the old age pensioners. That is the only promise it has kept since the last campaign.

It is time the Prime Minister went to see the Governor General across the road from 24 Sussex to say; "Your Honour, I have been here for 14 years, my crew is tired and they are burnt out. The Minister of Transport"—who I see sitting over there—"is tired and wants a rest. I would like you to dissolve Parliament and give the people of Canada an opportunity to elect a government that will set us back on the track of economic and social recovery in this world."

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I found the remarks of the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) rather interesting. Unlike his colleagues, he at least made some suggestions as to how the situation might be improved.

I think the debate during the last couple of weeks has been very negative. Very few positive suggestions have been made. I will try not to be negative when commenting on his suggestions because some were very good. However, one element to his proposals is missing and without it we will have the same basic situation in Canada as exists in the United States. In other words, his recipe sounds very much like Reaganomics.

The hon. member began by accusing the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of not listening to the business community. He suggested that if he listened to the business community he would find out what he should do. What I find confusing about that suggestion is that the Minister of Finance has listened to the business community. It has told him for the last two years that high interest rates are the prescription for eliminating inflation. That is what the business community and the Chamber of Commerce said to the minister last June. They said, "We must have high interest rates to defeat inflation."

I suggest that the hon. member was not listening to the business community during the last two weeks when the president of the Bank of Montreal, Mr. Mulholland, said that high interest rates are ruining the economy and we must get down to a 12 per cent interest rate. These are the concerns which the business community is talking about and this is what the cabinet and the Minister of Finance are beginning to examine.

Another suggestion was that the budget should be removed as a first step. I admit that the budget does create some problems for the business community, but I have talked to many businessmen during the last six months and they have told me that if it were not for high interest rates the budget would not concern them. They said that the key problem is the cost of money in Canada.

The Minister of Finance is in a very difficult position when he listens to the business community and other groups who say the only way to solve inflation, which they believe to be the number one problem, is to reduce the supply of money, which would increase interest rates, slow down the economy and result in a deflationary effect. This may very well be happening to some extent. In fact, the chairman of the Canadian Bankers' Association, for instance, is saying today that inflation rates are probably only 8 per cent rather than 10½ per cent because we are using the wrong index. In any event, the point I want to make is that the suggestion by the hon. member that the budget is the key issue I do not believe is correct.

In the United States, President Reagan has talked about risk-takers. He has cut taxes in the United States to encourage risk-takers. But the United States is in a real recession and it is bringing the rest of the world down with it. The hon. member discussed relief to those who need it most. The American tax system has been revised many times in the last year in order to give relief to certain areas, but it has still not solved the problem.

The hon. member talked about cutting government spending. There are methods for cutting government spending, but not to any substantial degree. President Reagan has done this but what has happened to the American economy? High interest rates are making it almost impossible for the American economy to move ahead. We are in the same position since the Canadian economy is so dependent on the American economy.

I suggest to the hon. member that if the Tory party does not understand the principle that this is a basic problem which must be faced, then they have no business suggesting that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should ask the Governor General to call an election. They have no alternative to offer. They have exactly the same to offer as Mr. Reagan proposed for the United States. We see what effect that has had on the world economy.

I would like to discuss in a more analytical way how our country can proceed. It is time we examined our situation seriously. First, I think we must understand some of the problems that are inherent in a high interest rate policy. One detrimental effect of high interest rates is that they are indiscriminate. I think we learn to live with inflation to some extent—although we should not take it for granted—and have come to accept and deal with perhaps a 1 per cent per month increase in inflation. We wither receive more pay or we cut back somewhat on our expenses.

As I said, one of the difficulties with inflation is that it does not creep up at 1 per cent or 2 per cent for everyone. For some people inflation increases by 40 per cent or 50 per cent per month while others are not affected for another five years, depending on their financial situation. This situation relates to the business community, the public as well as home owners. It is what I refer to as the indiscriminate effect.

Another aspect of high interest rates is that they tend to be very inflationary. Governor Bouey may deny that by saying that interest rates are only marginally inflationary. While it is difficult to produce figures to prove him wrong, I can produce one set of figures which would give me some reason to believe that he may very well be wrong. If one takes the base year 1975 and compares it to 1981, it cost Canadians something in the order of $12 billion more than it would have if the currency had remained at the same value as it was in 1975. Our currency having been devalued by approximately 19 per cent, it cost Canadians $12 billion more last year for imports. Also, the difference in interest rates in 1981 as compared to 1975 has cost Canadians $23 billion, which is almost double. In other words, the inflationary effect has been double the effect of the devaluation in the currency. This is a very serious inflationary effect.

Another adverse effect concerns the slowing down of the economy which creates future supply problems. For example, apartment buildings are not being built at a sufficient rate and when interest rates come down we will have some added inflationary effects. Farmers, for instance, who have difficulty maintaining their stock and selling them off at this particular point will cause extreme inflationary effects later on. I have to weigh these problems against the effects of high interest rates.

There is no question but that high inflation is a very serious problem. The argument is not whether we should go after high inflation, but how we should go after it. The government is faced with two possibilities. I think the minister is very seriously looking at these possibilities, as is the government as a whole. The first one deals with the impact which can be made when the Prime Minister goes to the summit along with the Minister of Finance and so on. There can be an impact because it does seem that in this interconnected world, particularly in a country which is as close to the United States as we are, it is very important that our economic policies and American economic policies be roughly on course, since we import perhaps a quarter of everything we use in this country and we export to the same extent and perhaps more than that. So there is a relationship which must be held. Therefore, what happens to the American economy is tremendously important to what is happening to the Canadian economy.

In my own community of Thunder Bay, where we ship 85 per cent or 90 per cent of all of the pulp and paper from our mills to the United States, what the Canadian government does is not really that terribly important. It is what the American economy does that makes Thunder Bay a prosperous community or an unprosperous community. We are not a prosperous community at this particular time simply because the American economy is in a very serious state of affairs.

Let us look at the American economy for a minute because I want to keep referring to our interest rates and American interest rates. The American economy is in a fairly good position in terms of inflation. I do not quite know its present rate, but it looks as though it might have been anywhere around 3 per cent in the last quarter. It may be lower than that. There are some seasonal considerations, but I think we can refer to a 3 per cent or 4 per cent inflation rate.

We have been told by economists from all over that there is a very close relationship between the inflation rate and the interest rate, that the two are parallel. Basically speaking, the bank prime rate tends to be one, two or three percentage points above the inflation rate over a long period of time. I do not deny this. I have done some work myself and I am sure that is the situation. However, in the United States there is a situation in which the bank prime rate is 16.5 per cent to 17 per cent with an inflation rate of 3 per cent to 4 per cent. So, one is referring to a real interest rate—that is, the prime minus the inflation rate—of 12 per cent. That is four times the norm, the historic norm being 3 per cent.

One can look back to the early fifties and the pattern was there, anywhere from zero per cent to 3 per cent. All of a sudden, the rate is 12 per cent, an increase of four times. In Canada it is probably only about 6 per cent because I would say our inflation rate is 10 per cent or 11 per cent. However, I think an argument can be made that it is only about 8 per cent at this particular point. Therefore, the real rate of interest is six or seven points above, or about double what it should be, historically speaking. If our interest rates are at 8 per cent, then they are nearly triple what they should be.

Therefore, we have this problem and we are beginning to wonder why, if inflation rates start coming down, the interest rates do not come down. The answer must be found in some kind of an analysis of this situation, and there are a number of factors to be considered. One of the major factors in the United States is that the American government will have a deficit of $120 billion, $130 billion or $140 billion. Now, one could say that is no larger, on a ten-to-one ratio, than our deficit, and that is true. It is not any larger on a ten-to-one ratio than our deficit, but it has about double the impact on the United States that it has on Canada simply because the U.S. savings rate is about half the Canadian savings rate. So as a percentage of savings, a $120 billion, a $130 billion or a $140 billion deficit has double the impact it would have on Canada, where we have double the savings. So it is very important to understand that. That deficit will be caused mainly by cutting taxes and introducing the kind of tax incentives to which the hon. members across the aisle are referring, and also by tremendous increases in defence spending. This is one major factor.

Another factor which we as Canadians should be looking at very carefully is the very large demand on the capital market by corporations, many of them large corporations, which are having a great deal of financial difficulty because of the slowness of the economy. They have had to put some real stress on capital markets in order to survive. The amount of borrowing is very large. This is borrowing which would not have occurred if interest rates were lower and the economy were moving faster. These are two very major factors which relate to the capital markets in the United States and in Canada. I do not think that we as Canadians can possibly move in a very substantial way unless we take the factors which are affecting the American economy into consideration.

I mentioned earlier that we had to deal with two points: one, we must go to the summit and present a very united front against Reaganomics, along with the other six countries. There is a lot of support coming from many elements in the United States, including large segments of the Republican party which feel exactly the same way as we do about this problem. So pressure has been brought to bear on the United States government to get interest rates down and to implement some of the proposals, including cutting the budget, removing some of the defence costs and so on, so that the budget deficit can be brought considerably lower than $100 billion. That is a very important step.

I am sure that our government will take that step but, failing to receive the kind of reaction we want from the American government, then I think we as a government must start winging it alone very soon, this summer or early in the fall. I do not advocate this as a good direction but one which may be necessary if we are to achieve some kind of growth and stimulus in our economy and remove some of the very serious problems that the present economic situation is causing.

I suggest the government take a look at one piece of literature which has come out in the last week, an article in the Financial Times of April 15. The Financial Times commissioned Data Resources, Informetrica Ltd. and the Conference Board of Canada, all three, to see what could happen if the Canadian dollar were allowed to fall to 75 cents. The results from all three were quite remarkable. Roughly speaking, what these three sources have told us is that, in one form or another, we can expect bank prime rates to drop four or five percentage points. We can expect 100,000 new jobs to be created. We can expect some added inflation, perhaps 2 per cent or 3 per cent. This would occur over a fairly short period of time, particularly if this step were taken quickly rather than slowly. These are some of the things that these very informed sources have considered.

I have asked the government to allow, and I know the Minister of Finance is taking a very close look at the possibility of allowing, the dollar to sink to the level of 75 cents U.S., with the idea that we could end up with a 12 per cent interest rate. If hon. members do not believe me, I would ask them to go back and take a good look at this article, because it was a well done study by three reliable economic groups, with good economic models, and they have come up with results which are pretty well parallel. They took different approaches but this is basically what they found.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Does the minister agree with that?

Mr. McRae: The minister and everyone has seen it and we are very carefully considering it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh!

Mr. McRae: I think it is time that everyone in the House started to look at it instead of doing things based on the way Reagan is doing things.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Does he agree with you on the Cruise missile?

• (1500)

Mr. McRae: I would close by saying that a sound policy for this government, which has not been suggested by the opposite side, is to work very hard at the summit to get the American government to do something seriously about the real interest rate which is 12 per cent in the United States, to move in this direction and give some relief for the rest of the world, first of all. And, second, we should take a look at an independent course if that does not work.

If we do not get the response that we and other countries and all kinds of American economists and businessmen and Republicans and Democrats have suggested—if we do not get that response, then we ourselves have to move independently, and I suggest we take a really good look and lower the dollar to about 75 cents, letting it float at this level, increasing the money supply to some extent. I would hope the effect of that would be to lower interest rates as these three studies seem to indicate, to get the rate down to about the 12 per cent level. That would be a tremendous stimulus to the economy and do far more for us than anything which has been suggested from the other side.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to take part in this debate on an opposition motion this afternoon. I think the motion reflects the incoherent and inconsistent stance of the Conservative Opposition in the House and the Progressive Conservative Party in general. At the beginning of this week, they requested an emergency debate on the abandonment of the Alsands project. It took them four days to realize that it was an urgent matter. The decision on the Alsands project was announced last Friday, and it was not until Tuesday that they decided to present a request in the House for an emergency debate. And after they asked for this urgent and important debate, they showed once more that they do not know how to count, because they managed to get themselves into a situation where they did not have a quorum in the House Wednesday evening. The next day the government had to present a motion to allow continuation of a debate which the Progressive Conservatives had stopped through their absence.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) should be allowed to mislead the House. Votes and Proceedings clearly shows that there were 21 members present in the House when the quorum was called.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The minister shouldn't question it; it is on the record.

Mr. McGrath: Those who cannot count sit on that side of the House, specifically the Parliamentary Secretary to the government House leader (Mr. Smith).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Here we go again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is in effect, as I understand it, disputing the count of those hon. members who were present the other evening when the quorum was called. I know that there is some sensitivity on the subject. Before we hear other hon. members, I will, from the position of the Chair, simply indicate that the number of signatures in the book is not necessarily related to the number of individual members who were in the House at the time. I was here, and I think the hon. member would be wise indeed to accept the decision of the occupant of the Chair at that time. Otherwise, it is going to be extremely difficult to do business.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear! Get on with your speech.

An hon. Member: What about Votes and Proceedings?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I hear an hon. member asking about the Votes and Proceedings. I indicate to the hon. member that I was present at the time. I know the number of members who were in the House and it was less than 20, and there was not a quorum. I now recognize the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, in the statement he made just now, the hon. Progressive Conservative member has shown once again the inconsistence and incoherence of the Progressive Conservatives. I was saying that they showed they did not know how to count when they failed to make sure there were enough members in the House to have a quorum during the emergency debate. Today, the House is considering an opposition motion requesting the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and clearly this is a question that should be important to the Progressive Conservative Party. However, it is strange, Mr. Speaker, that this Opposition motion is so important that the Progressive Conservatives are not even asking for a vote.

They want the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to resign, but they do not want to get into a situation where they would have to vote on the question. They are prepared to have a debate today on this bit of wishful thinking, but they are not prepared to ask the House to vote on the question. Earlier this week I said that the cow that moos the most gives the least milk. Well, I just heard one mooing on the opposite side, and it probably is one of the best specimens of this kind of animal we know so well.

If we look at our economic and energy policies, it is easy to understand why the Progressive Conservative party is not asking for a vote on this motion today. The reason is quite simple: they have no alternative solutions, either for energy or for economic problem. Should my hon. colleagues opposite be reluctant to take my word for it, and before my hon. colleague for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) loses his temper, claiming I have no proof, I would refer him to an article published this week on May 4 in La Presse, in which the Leader of the Opposition had given an interview. The article was signed by Alain Dubuc and a partial quote from page 3 reads as follows:

> In an interview he gave yesterday to a group of reporters from La Presse, the Leader of the Opposition, Joe Clark, made the most astounding and disarming statement ever made by an opposition leader, when he acknowledged that his party had found no alternative to the Bank of Canada's economic policy.

And here we have a quote from what was said by the Leader of the Opposition.

> We have looked for alternatives to the government's policies, but we have found none, he acknowledged.

Another quote.

> Today, I have no better solution.

That is the Progressive Conservative record on economic policy and on energy policy. We know, Mr. Speaker, and it is even worse, because we know what they did and what they tried to do when they were in power for a few months. This week, we listened for hours to their complaints, their criticisms, their insults and their interruptions during the debate; but solutions? Not a sign. The other side is capable only of creating obstruction and criticizing, but it can never come up with positive and constructive proposals. Conversely, I should like to point out that in the energy sector, this government has implemented some very important measures during the past two years it has been in power.

With respect to energy security, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention that despite the abandonment of the Alsands project, Canada today is in a far more comfortable situation as far as energy security is concerned than it was when the present government came to power in 1980. I wish to emphasize that on the Alsands project we had the best possible cooperation from the government of Alberta, and both governments made a joint offer to the private sector companies involved which even the companies had to admit was very generous. However, for reasons of their own, the companies decided they could not take a chance on such a large-scale project at this time. Incidentally, during the same week, in the United States where there is no program similar to the Canadian one, during that same week, Exxon, the biggest multinational in the world, abandoned a project in which the company had already invested $1 billion, and also at the same time, the promoters of the Alaska pipeline project decided to postpone the project for two years. Throughout our negotiations, the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada have said that there was a limit to the demands that could be made on Canadian consumers and taxpayers for the purpose of operating or building a project. If we exceeded those limits, we would be acting irresponsibly in spending the Canadian taxpayers' money. In fact, both the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada have acted responsibly in this regard, and once again, the long-drawn-out complaints of the official opposition are no substitute for the responsible policies required in these circumstances.

I said we would succeed, and that our energy security, particularly as far as oil is concerned, is in better shape today than it was when the Progressive Conservatives were defeated, thank God and thank the voters in February 1980. When the Leader of the Official Opposition attended the summit meeting in Tokyo as Prime Minister, he promised to maintain crude oil imports at 600,000 barrels per day or less. Actually, we are going to do a lot better. In 1981, we imported only 509,000 barrels of oil per day, which is well under the maximum set by the Leader of the Official Opposition at the time. In 1985, we shall be importing less than 300,000 barrels per day. How are we going to do this? Well, by increasing production of Canadian oil. It is interesting to note that this year, for the first time in almost a decade, the Canadian Petroleum Association was able to announce an increase in Canada's oil reserves over the previous years. Before, every year, Canada's oil reserves had been diminishing. This year, for the first time, our reserves have increased, according to the figures of the Canadian Petroleum Association.

Other ways of achieving energy security, in addition to increasing reserves and production, are to reduce oil consumption through conservation and replacement of oil by other forms of energy. In fact, our off-oil program implemented not quite a year ago to encourage Canadians to substitute other forms of energy for oil, especially for home-heating, has already produced remarkable results. This is in addition to our insulation program. Our off-oil program provides grants of $800 per household to change heating systems. Our home insulation program is paying up to $500 per household. And what are the results of all this? Well, in 1981, consumption of crude oil in Canada dropped by 7 per cent. Consumption of heating oil has dropped by 17 per cent and that of heavy fuel oil by 13 per cent over the same period.

These results are facts, and between 1980 and the end of 1982, oil consumption in Canada is expected to drop by almost 15 per cent. These figures are authentic and well-known, and they demonstrate the success of our policy to reduce oil consumption while at the same time increasing reserves for the future. In fact, a few weeks ago we announced an extension of the home insulation program, so that now, all homes built before 1971 will be eligible for the insulation program and thus for the $500 grant provided by law. This will add more than one million homes to the list of those eligible for these grants, and, directly or indirectly, we will create about 20,000 jobs this year, if consumers are willing to make use of the program and benefit from energy savings. That is, consumers who are willing to make use of the program, as more than a million have already done during the last two years, will save on their energy bills or at least these bills will increase very little, even if the price of energy continues to rise substantially over the next four or five years. Conservation is still the best way to ensure self-sufficiency for Canada in coming years.

And if the members opposite doubt the effectiveness of our policy in this regard, I would ask them to refer to a report of the International Energy Agency, which includes all the industrialized countries except France. This agency stated the following:

> Until now, only a few countries have developed specific policies to promote oil replacement. With its oil replacement program launched in October 1980, Canada is the only OECD country to have set up a full and comprehensive conversion policy aimed at all the sectors which use oil products, by setting oil consumption reduction objectives and providing financial assistance.

This statement was made by the International Energy Agency. As I have already stated, we also have some good news concerning supplies. The reserves forecast by the Canadian Petroleum Association in 1981 have increased, practically for the first time in ten years. The news is extremely encouraging with regard to the potential production offshore, in the Beaufort Sea and in the Arctic. Of course, our critics opposite will not want to recognize this reality. As I mentioned earlier, they are simply obsessed by the idea that the government should give even more money to the companies and that the National Energy Program is supposedly stifling these companies. Mr. Speaker, I would like to look at what has happened to a number of companies, for instance the major multinationals and their Canadian subsidiaries, in 1980 and 1981. In seven out of eight cases, the Canadian subsidiaries had higher earnings in 1980 and 1981 than the foreign-owned multinational parent company.

In 1980, for instance, the first four on the list were as follows: Texaco—I am speaking about the parent company—had an increase of 27 per cent while its Canadian subsidiary had an increase of 41 per cent. Gulf had an increase of 6 per cent while its Canadian subsidiary had an increase of 33 per cent. Royal Dutch Shell showed an international decrease of 27 per cent while its Canadian subsidiary showed an increase of 37 per cent. Exxon had an increase of 31 per cent while the Canadian subsidiary, Imperial Oil, had an increase of 38 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the minister would identify the source of his figures respecting increases in Canadian profits. I think he will find that the profits do not come from the producing end. Those profits are down distinctly. That is what we are concerned about. Profits on the retail side are up significantly, and that is because of the huge amounts of taxes the government is taking.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will reduce from my time all the irrelevant points of order we have heard during my speech. If the House so wishes, I would be very happy to answer questions later. I will have no problem answering any question the hon. member wants to raise.

With respect to the point raised by the hon. member, I point out to him that whether the money comes from upstream or downstream, if a company has more profits it has more money to do whatever it wants to do. That is the point we are discussing.

I will continue, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives do not like to hear those figures because they are so used to go to bed with multinational and big oil companies that they are totally blind to reality and that every time an attempt is made to put the facts straight, they take it personal.

This is what happened in 1981. Texaco International increased its revenues by 7 per cent; its Canadian subsidiary by nearly 9 per cent; exactly 8.9 per cent. Gulf showed a profit loss of 17 per cent; its Canadian subsidiary indicated a profit loss of 11.8 per cent. Royal Dutch had a loss in its international operations of under 70 per cent, its Canadian subsidiary registered a loss of less than 15 per cent. The only international company, in 1981, according to the list I have mentioned, where the parent company did better than its Canadian subsidiary, is EXXON which showed an increase of more than 11 percent, and Imperial with a loss of less than 10 per cent. However, I would remind you that the year before the situation was reversed and the Canadian subsidiary had done better than the parent company. Of course, the Conservative opposition is not interested in hearing those figures but perhaps they might like to recognize at least that a large number of Canadian companies have tremendous investment projects in Canada this year. I should simply like to mention Canterra, a Canadian company which expects to spend $500 million in 1982 in exploration alone, and Gulf which over the next five years expects to invest $7 billion in Canada and Petro-Canada which has set aside a budget of $450 million for exploration and development alone in western Canada. These data are known to everyone except, it seems, to the opposition.

And, to assist them, I can already indicate that next week we will be in a position to announce new developments involving multinational companies and Canadian companies which, over the next years, will announce huge investments in the field of research and additional oil resources in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I only have a few minutes left, I will conclude simply by suggesting that over that period we succeeded in increasing Canadian oil ownership to a significant degree. Foreign ownership over the last 18 months declined from 72 per cent to 65.4 per cent, or more than 6 per cent, with an increase in Canadian ownership of more than 6 per cent. Foreign control in that area declined from 77 per cent to 67 per cent, a 10 per cent decrease in favour of Canadians. Such measures were successful and will continue to be so over the coming years.

The last aspect is the matter of price. We implemented a pricing system that is fair to the consumer and that any way will be lower over that period than that provided for by the Progressive Conservatives in their famous budget. Some say that currently we pay more for gas in Canada than in the United States. It is important to remember, in the first place that as far as home-heating oil is concerned, it sells much cheaper here than in the United States, up to 7 cents less per litre. As far as natural gas is concerned, our costs are tremendously lower than in the United States. As for gas, this varies from province to province. In Alberta, the price of a litre of gas is less than in Chicago, but in Montreal it is more expensive than in New York. The reason is quite simple, there is no provincial tax in Alberta, while Quebec levies up to 13 cents per litre, the highest in Canada. So there is no mystery there. The barrel of oil coming to a refinery in Canada currently costs only 71 per cent of the oil price, or to practical purposes 71 per cent of the American price. When the price of a gallon or litre of gas sold at the pump is higher than in United States, the answer is in the provincial tax that each provincial government decides to levy. Again, for proof one has only to take the province levying no provincial tax, where the litre of gas is cheaper than in United States. These are facts that my Conservative colleagues will not recognize, because as I said, rather than listen, analyse, read and study, they would rather moo in this House and elsewhere, like the cow I was referring to.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible to hear the minister defend an energy policy which is a disaster and is destroying the economic fibre of our country. He boasts about it.

At this critical juncture in the political and economic life of the country I am proud that it is this party's action that has afforded Canadians the opportunity today to learn more fully about the criminal ineptitude of the government.

Not only have Canadians been sent reeling by record interest rates, rampant inflation, and the highest unemployment since the 1930s—the latest figures that I have seen for the Niagara Peninsula show 15.6 per cent unemployment—but now they have to suffer the death of the one bright hope that we had in the country, the Alsands project. Energy megaprojects have been touted to guarantee energy self-sufficiency, to provide employment for up to 100,000 Canadians, and to stimulate the economies not only of the producing provinces but of the manufacturing and industrial sectors of central Canada.

The Liberal government pointed with pride to the megaprojects as an engine that would pull Canada from its economic doldrums. The government's political skin is at risk as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) tries to twist and turn the truth, and as the Minister of Finance

(Mr. MacEachen) clouds the issue with his customary obfuscation in an attempt to muddy the waters and throw the blame for the collapse of the Alsands project elsewhere.

The Liberals have built their economic policies on sand, and that sand has turned into quicksand. Now those policies have been exposed for the sham and illusion they are. What a shame that is—it is a shameful sham! The Grits really needed some cheery news to save their cookies but this was not to be. It is all their own fault. Their inflexible attitude, their intransigence, their misbegotten and woebegone, ill conceived National Energy Program, that the minister spoke of in the House today, is to blame for the mess. In fact one journalist called it a "megamess". That is the mess in which they now find themselves. Liberal members of the House know that. Unfortunately, Canada suffers as a result of Liberal misjudgment, Liberal mismanagement, and Liberal mistakes.

Liberal mismanagement of the economy has resulted in corporate profits being 44 per cent lower in the fourth quarter of 1981 than in the fourth quarter of 1982. I suppose I should be careful when mentioning profit because members of the NDP do not like the word. But I will mention the word profit; it is what is needed in the economy as an incentive to get things going again.

Manufacturing is at 75 per cent capacity, the lowest level capacity utilization in 20 years. The primary metals industry is operating at 65 per cent of capacity. The transportation equipment industry is operating at 54 per cent capacity. The wood industry upon which the province of British Columbia is so dependent is operating at 57 per cent. This underutilization has led to a net loss of 127,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector of the economy, since August. Many of those jobs have been lost in my own province of Ontario, many of them in my own riding and the Niagara Peninsula. In March of this year a record 1.2 million Canadians were without work. In the same month the inflation rate was 11.6 per cent.

The outrage with which the budget was greeted, Mr. Speaker, led the Minister of Finance to retreat in some areas, and temper his policies in others, but the over-all thrust of the government remains the same: massive restructuring of tax laws without consultation with the private sector and, apparently, without thought for the consequences. The outrage continues. This budget is distinguished only by the fact that it has drawn together so many diverse groups. They are now united in opposition to the government's draconian measures. Yet, in spite of the anger and resentment directed against the government, the minister is stubborn in his determination to make no further changes. Even Walter Gordon, renowned for his facility in the preparation of budgets, has said:

> No government, no Minister of Finance, should be reluctant to consider and revise proposals if public discussion shows it to be desirable.

Interest rates are in the stratosphere. The U.S. sends men to the moon; we send interest rates into the stratosphere, this from a government which promised to "manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down . . . because the economy would be administered in a sounder way". They have yet to prove that.

These worries are compounded, Mr. Speaker, by the collapse of the $13.5 billion Alsands project which could have delivered 137,000 barrels a day of Canadian oil, bringing us much closer to self-sufficiency and oil security. It would have reduced unemployment, increased manufacturing, and meant an input of $450 billion into our economy. Yet Alsands died and the question is: why? Why? That is the question which Canadians need to be asking and are asking today. That is the question hon. members opposite need to be asking. The answer is simple. The National Energy Program is the culprit and its perpetrators, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, have yet another disaster on their consciences. I am of course, giving them the benefit of the doubt by assuming they have consciences.

The NEP was a revenue grab. It thrust the government into private enterprise where it has no business being. It discriminates against foreign petroleum rights, it breaks all the ground rules and sets new ones without the benefit of consultation. The result of this massive interference in the marketplace was industry mistrust of the federal government typified in a statement by John Stoik, president of Gulf Canada, who said:

> Over the years the government has so strained its credibility with retroactive rule changes that those of us in the industry must ask ourselves, how can we undertake to make huge investments in long-term megaprojects when we have good reason to fear that the government will come along again and pull the rug on us?

The NEP has so restricted cash flow that oil and gas companies are simply unable to make large-scale equity investments. Under the present circumstances of inflation and high interest rates it is utterly impossible for oil and gas companies to go to the market for debt capital.

The NEP is destroying our energy potential. It will mean the loss of billions of dollars which are simply drifting across the border into the U.S., the northern part of South America, and the Middle East. It will literally cost us hundreds of thousands of jobs. The two tar sands plants will not continue development because the minister was not able to negotiate a pricing arrangement on oil. This means a loss to Ontario of $108 billion over the 25-year life of just one tar sands plant. One plant! Hon. members will bear in mind that we require nine plants if we are to reach energy self-sufficiency.

To start development on one plant would mean an infusion of $800 million into the economy of Ontario through the iron and steel industry, but this government said no. Such a development would create $370 million in the metal fabrication and machinery industries of Ontario. Many of my constituents work in the city of Welland. Pipe is manufactured there, and these projects would have been a great stimulus to that industry. Once again the government has denied my province, that city, and other areas this opportunity. This development would create an additional $325 million in sales for the transportation equipment industry. This development would mean $750 million for Ontario in trades and services.

The most effective way for Alsands to have remained a viable component of the Canadian economy would have been to allow, indeed restore, a system in which private industry could earn adequate profits and generate its own risk capital. Without the NEP and a more flexible and helpful attitude on the part of the federal government, Alsands would now be well under way. In fact, under a Tory government it would have been well under way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, the tragedy is that no matter how great a death blow the collapse of the Alsands project is, the NEP has claimed other victims, thereby compounding its effect. Cold Lake is dead; the Esso Resources Judy Creek recovery project has been cancelled; Syncrude expansion plans have been terminated. There were three occasions when the Liberal government fumbled and lost the good will of the consortium. In March, 1980, the government declared the world price for oil would no longer be paid for oil sands production. The industry interpretation of this announcement was that the government was not interested in oil sands.

In October, 1980, the inception of the NEP again caused industry to believe the government was not serious. The energy pricing agreement of September, 1981, did little to allay those fears. What are the results of the demise of the Alsands project, aside from those already mentioned? For one thing the Canadian dollar fell by half a cent. The loss in investment will mean that the gross national expenditure will be lower by 1.8 per cent. Employment in 1990 will be lower by 153,000 Canadians. At the same time the current account deficit will have deteriorated by $9.7 billion. Furthermore, Canadian self-sufficiency in energy is doomed. The death of the megaprojects means there will be a total loss of 350,000 barrels of oil a day, oil which could have been produced in Canada.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that not only the maritimes will have to continue to rely on imported oil; by 1990, Toronto will be in the same position. The upshot of this is that the federal government is subsidizing the importation of a very large volume of foreign crude oil while an equivalent volume is available but is not being produced in western Canada. Instead that oil has been shut-in. The government has been importing foreign crude on an increasing scale for some time, and the volume involved is inevitably going to grow rather than decline.

There is a heavy cost in public funds through the subsidies being paid on the foreign oil. This heavy cost would disappear if the foreign oil were replaced by domestic supplies that are available. There is an economic cost in addition. Large amounts of money are leaving the country, where they can have no further effect on the Canadian economy, while that same money, if it were spent on western oil, would naturally recirculate and produce economic activity, activity that we so desperately need.

The lesson to be learned from state intervention in the oil industry is simple we think. Not even someone as self confident as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is able to foresee all of the complexities of an industry and the shifting market forces that affect it. The elaborate control mechanisms of the National Energy Program are, of necessity, rigid. The process of adaptation to unforeseen circumstances is slow and creaking. The larger question behind all of this revolves around the real purpose of the Prime Minister's championing of the National Energy Program. We all remember his interview in which he discussed his efforts to change the course of the ship of state. This is a part of it:

> One has to be in the wheelhouse to see what shifts are taking place. I know that we have spun the wheel and I know that the rudder is beginning to press against the waves and the sea. But perhaps the observer, who is on the deck and smoking his pipe, or drinking his tea, sees the horizon much in the same direction and doesn't realize it, but perhaps he will find himself disembarking at a different island than the one he thought he was sailing for.

What do these musings mean when seen in the context of the National Energy Program and the havoc it has wrought on the oil and gas industry and on megaprojects, such as Alsands and Cold Lake? Speculation is one thing, but the facts speak for themselves. After the NEP was introduced in October, 1980, and up to January, 1982, a total of 272 drilling rigs left Canada. The replacement value of these rigs is $1.1 billion. The other damage caused by the NEP I have already discussed—yes, and the NDP as well. Surely these negative results were readily foreseeable.

Why then was the NEP forced on an unwilling industry and on reluctant provinces? Does the Prime Minister have some darker, ulterior motive than the one so simple, so-called Canadianization. And if so, what is that purpose? Could it be that he desires total state intervention in the oil and gas business? If that be the case, where do his ambitions end, and down what rocky road is he leading Canada?

Speaking about entrepreneurship, Professor Raymond Kao of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, said:

> Entrepreneurs are not ones who like to face reality. They create reality. Since they create reality, they want to create it at an early age—high school age. We should be encouraging them even then.

Entrepreneurship is being destroyed by a government that is foisting socialism and the other policies it has upon our nation. This government is taking away the entrepreneurial attitude and spirit that have built this country, that have caused our young people to go out and invest, that have caused our older people to go out and invest and build businesses. In a country like Canada where the population is small and the land is vast, government has an important role to play. No one denies that, but massive unthinking government intervention has eroded Canadians' confidence and it will be a long, slow, tortuous job to rekindle that confidence. Quite frankly, I cannot see the present government even making an attempt. What we have to get back and what we need to get back is that essential trust and good will which the present government has frittered away.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the speech of the hon. member for Erie (Mr.

Fretz). Last year at about exactly this time he was with me on the "Metres for Millions" march. We made it half way. The "Metres for Millions" march is on tomorrow, and I would encourage all hon. members to be out walking through my riding of Ottawa Centre, through Nepean-Carleton, and through Ottawa-Vanier.

I was very interested in the speech which my friend from Erie made. It was a pretty reasonable speech. The hon. member did put forward some suggestions. The basic thrust was at the end of his speech. He stressed the importance of the confidence factor in this country, the importance of investor confidence and the importance of worker confidence. I do not want to get into the partisan issues that are normally thrown around in this House, but yesterday was an example of a situation where hon. members threw mud back and forth at each other in this House, so I hope there can be some positive suggestions and dialogue in this debate today.

I hope in our debates in the future that we can build on a spirit of trying to do something constructive in this House as opposed to what, unfortunately, has characterized many of the debates in the last few months. It does not do any of us any good. It certainly does no good for the people of the country.

In this debate we should be trying to examine as carefully as possible the exact nature of the economic situation which faces us. We should be trying to look for positive solutions to help Canada position herself more effectively to participate in the recovery that is going to come in the world economy. Then we would be in a better position to move ahead with growth, job creation and wealth creation, when that happens here. I for one am confident that if we are not at the bottom of the recession we are very near to it. I believe that we are about to see the break in the inflation rate that we have all been waiting for, and that we are about to see the beginnings of job creation rather than job destruction. I think we have come very close to the bottom of this terrible situation that we have been facing these past many months.

All of us in this House of Commons have decried the situation. We have all wished that we did not have to go through it. We have all wished that the world market for our minerals, timber, oil, automobiles and other products had not fallen apart the way it did. All of us agree that if the Alsands project could have gone ahead it would have been a great thing for Canada. But I want to say one thing about Alsands. I think there is a myopia taking place in this House that does not necessarily have to be the case.

The investment dollars that were going to be put into the Alsands plant have not evaporated. They have not disappeared. Shell, Gulf, and the other private sector companies in the consortium did not take that money and burn it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It has been taxed away.

Mr. Evans: That money has not gone. There was to be $14 billion of investment. What happened? The private sector companies looked at the economics and concluded that the economics did not make sense. Therefore, they decided not to invest that money. The money is still there, the borrowing potential is still there, and the investment funds are still there. These companies and the government will be able to employ those funds in other areas of the economy. If Alsands is not built, certainly other projects will be built which would not have otherwise had access to capital. The money did not evaporate; it is not as though it were burned. The potential is still there and the projects are still there. Canada still has the potential it had yesterday. It has not gone away. That investment will take place, perhaps in other sectors, but it will take place.

I should like to look at the situation as I see it, and to put forward my assessment of what we should do to position ourselves properly to take advantage of the growth and development of job creation, wealth creation, and rising standards of living which we have every right to expect in Canada. We must come to grips with issues revolving around three major sets of alternatives.

First, we should look at the question of what is the proper balance for government between distribution and creation. Those are the alternatives. We can focus all our attention on the redistribution of wealth, or we can refocus our attention more toward the creation of wealth, which gives us more to redistribute at a later date. The second factor is the balance between savings and consumption. We should rebalance some of our priority away from current consumption expenditures and toward savings and investment. After all, this will be the engine by which we generate economic growth and rising standards of living in the future. The third and most important factor I want to discuss today is the attitude or the confidence factor, which is the balance between the preservation of the status quo and the orientation toward the future.

It is natural during times of economic decline, recession, high inflation and high unemployment, for people, countries, parliaments, and especially politicians, to begin to look inward, to focus their attention upon how they can protect what they now have and to forget about the kinds of activities which they must undertake if they are to realize the potential of the future. The time is now for us to begin to turn our attention away from the preservation and protection of the status quo toward the generation and creation of the great future which Canada can have. But it will require a shifting of priorities in the country and that we all sacrifice a bit on consumption to put a bit more toward savings which will generate investment. Also it will require that we think more in terms of the creation of wealth as opposed to the distribution of wealth. These are terribly important concepts. Canada is at the spot where decisions such as these must be made.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You cannot distribute what you do not create.

Mr. Evans: I hear the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). That is precisely the message I am trying to put across to the opposition today. We must refocus our attention—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But you are not.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member complains that we are not doing it. I try to remove myself, whenever I can, from the partisan haranguing in the House. I try not to fight about what they are saying, and I prefer if they do not fight about what I am saying. That is not the point of Parliament. We are in Parliament together. We are expected by the people of the country to work together in Parliament, and we had better start working together.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You had better start listening.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member is suggesting that I should listen to him. Perhaps he will listen to me. I will listen to him if he listens to me. As a government we sit here day after day, listening to members of the opposition saying that we must create wealth before we can distribute it. But in the same breath they say, "Oh, by the way, we want quotas on footwear and on automotive products." They indicate that they want this for this industry and that for that industry; that they want protection for this and that group. I think the hon. member and I agree that governments basically distribute. Apart from Crown corporations which have creative functions, such as Petro-Canada and Canadair, governments are basically redistributive mechanisms. They do not create anything, they distribute.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Good. We have you on the record on that.

Mr. Evans: We agree on that. The opposition benches continually harangue day after day by telling the government, on the one hand, that we need less government expenditures and more room for the private sector—and I agree with that—and on the other hand by saying that we must protect various groups and give more money here and there. We cannot do that. We cannot do both things at the same time. If we agree—and I think we do—that governments are basically a redistributive mechanism, then if governments do not create wealth and the money that is distributed, it must come from somewhere. From where does it come? It comes from taxpayers, or from people in some other way. We obtain the money we spend by generating higher levels of inflation, by generating higher interest rates because we must borrow the money in capital markets, or by taxing it. This is done in the government sector.

Other activities which are undertaken by government are equally as redistributive. Hon. members opposite keep demanding these kinds of policies. They are saying that we should have protection, quotas and tariffs. Hon. members opposite are the party of protectionism. It is not this party, but that party. Protectionism is just as much a form of tax on Canadians as a direct tax levy by government. If I put a tariff on an item and force consumers to pay a higher price than otherwise, is it not a redistribution? Certainly it is. Therefore I say all the actions of governments—whether they are Conservative ones in Manitoba, now NDP, NDP ones in Saskatchewan, now Conservative, or whatever—involve redistribution.

All of us in the House have not paid enough attention to the following questions: from whom are we distributing, and to whom are we distributing? Wealth is not destroyed or created; it is just redistributed. We must look at these questions extremely carefully. If we are to have investment, growth, higher productivity and lower inflation in the country, we must undertake some very positive redistributive policies of a certain nature and in a certain direction. It would be very useful and helpful to government if the opposition would indicate consistently which direction it would like to see that redistribution take. As I said, oftentimes the opposition is inconsistent. First it says that the wealth should be distributed this way; then it says it should be redistributed another way. This is not helpful at all.

Opposition members ask why I do not listen to what they are saying. It is because they say one thing on one day and another thing another day. One does not make long-term economic policy on the basis of daily shifts of view.

Mr. Bosley: Thank you, Kenneth Galbraith.

Mr. Evans: I am afraid my hon. friend has the wrong economist. Hon. members opposite are having some fun with me; I am glad to see the Acting Speaker, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, is now in a position where he cannot.

• (1600)

I have to bring to the attention of the hon. members opposite a very lucid point which was raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. (Mr. Clark). In a recent interview with La Presse in Montreal, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said, with candour and honesty, "I do not know what the answer is either. We do not have an alternative solution to what the government is doing." That is precisely what he said and it is in the press and on the record. He was being honest. He said, "We do not have an alternative economic policy to the government's policy."

Mr. Bosley: That is not what he said.

Mr. Evans: The article is in my briefcase in case the hon. member wants me to pull it out. It went on the record the other day when I quoted it on a Standing Order 43.

Mr. Keeper: Pull it out.

Mr. Kilgour: Tell us about the budget.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is back.

Mr. Wright: Tell us about the budget.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) is here also. Tweedledee and Tweedledum are both here and that is good.

Let me give some thoughts on specific policies which I think must be examined very carefully and on which we must move forward. We must implement these policies if we are to put ourselves in a position for the economic recovery which is coming. There is no doubt that we have to bring down the rate of inflation and I do not think there is any disagreement that without a reduction in inflation we will have great difficulty in participating in investment for the future. High inflation tends to shorten your time and you do not make long-term investment decisions in that environment.

I believe we must also be concerned about restraining the growth in the cost of production in our society. As well, we must be concerned about the rise in wages and prices in our economy. Apart from the inflationary price increases, the rise in the cost structure in our society is terribly perplexing at the moment. It could put us in non-competitive situation with the rest of the world.

I think it is clear—and the budget attempted to move in this direction—that we have to reduce the budget deficit of the government and bring down the exposure of the government in the capital markets in order to leave more room for the private sector at more reasonable rates of interest than we face now. I also think that we have to find policies which will stimulate savings and thereby stimulate investment in our economy and increase productivity as well. We have to alter the reward structure and put policies in place which will create those favourable conditions.

I think the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) was absolutely correct when he said in his speech that we have to restore investor and worker confidence. That is essential. Those are five suggestions.

We must examine our policies and the mix of federal and provincial policies to consider whether we have policies in place which act as a disincentive to productive activity by individuals or corporations.

Finally, I put forward the call that we should be looking, at this point in time, at the whole question of the impact of our tax system on economic activity and individual behaviour. I think it is time for another commission to review the performance of the tax system. Our tax system is serving many purposes at the present time. At one time it was a revenue-raising device. It then became a wealth redistribution device and subsequently it became an economic activity-generating device. Right now, the tax system is being used to perform so many functions that it is not clear what or how well it is doing. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the kind of simplification measures which were put forward in the budget were a step in the direction of clarifying the tax system and lowering tax rates.

Mr. Kilgour: What are you going to do about this budget?

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is at it again, Mr. Speaker. The howling monkey from Edmonton-Strathcona.

I believe that these are important steps which all members should be working at achieving as a Parliament. I think they are in the best interests of the Canadian people. These steps will put the system in a position to develop and grow at its optimal and not lag behind the rest of the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)): Before recognizing the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright), I believe there have been some conversations between House leaders and that the President of the Privy Council wishes to make a statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION RESPECTING WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-93

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend but I will not be too long. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) should be here momentarily, I understand.

However, I can guarantee that what I will be reading is the agreement that we just made in my office. I had consultations with the House leaders on both sides of the House and if unanimous consent is sought by you, it seems the following motion will be granted. It is technical, but essentially it is dividing a bill into two parts and limits the debate on the two bills.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin):

That the order of the day for consideration of Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be discharged and the said bill be withdrawn;

That the government introduce as soon as possible two bills, one of which shall be based upon the notices of Ways and Means concurred in on February 9, 1982 and one of which shall be based upon Part I of the said Bill C-93;

That debate at the second reading stage of the bills to be introduced shall be limited to one sitting day each and, at the end of the time allotted to government business on each of the said days, all of the questions necessary for the disposal of the said stage of the bill under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment;

That the bill based upon the said notices of Ways and Means, after being read a second time, shall be referred to a committee of the whole, which shall consider the said bill for not more than one sitting day and, at the end of time allotted to government business on that day, all of the questions necessary for the disposal of the committee stage of that bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment;

That the bill based upon Part I of Bill C-93 shall, after being read a second time, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which shall hold no more than three meetings to consider that bill, and, at the end of the third such meeting, all questions necessary for the disposal of the committee stage of that bill shall be put, forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment;

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, debate at the report stage and the third reading stage of the said bills shall be considered on one day for each bill and, at the end of the time allotted for government business on each of the said days, all of the questions necessary for the disposal of each of the aforementioned stages of each of the said bills shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, if I could do so without discourtesy and insult to the French language, I would read it in that language but the English was impeccable and we consent.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, essentially I and my party concur with the House order. We agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the motion put forward by the hon. President of the Privy Council and approved by the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seize this opportunity to designate next Friday as an allotted day. Therefore, next week there will be two allotted days, Tuesday and Friday.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McGrath:

That this House, caring for the 1,200,000 Canadians now unemployed and the millions more worried about their jobs, recognizes that the National Energy Program and the budgets of October, 1980, and November, 1981, are largely responsible for this massive unemployment, and demands the resignations of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance and the introduction of a new energy policy and a new budget to create jobs, lower interest rates and restore hope and confidence to Canadians.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, before I get into the discussion, I would like to say I was rather interested in what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) had to say, because if I correctly understand him, he has split Bill C-93, which is what we have been requesting for some time. This bill is very similar to the energy bill which caused the problem and the ringing of the bells some weeks back.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is marvellous how lessons are learned.

Mr. Wright: I am very pleased at what the President of the Privy Council has done. He showed good sense for a change and we hope that will continue into the future.

The topic today is the motion presented by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The topic basically deals with unemployment, the budget, interest rates, energy and the confidence of this government. I shall go into all those topics as I go along.

The economy of Canada is in a tough way. These are hard times for the people of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Liberal times are hard times.

Mr. Wright: They are rapidly being known as Grit times. Hard times will be known for years afterward as Grit times. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) stood in this House and said he had a strategy. He is a leading spokesman for the government today. Where is his strategy? It is not in the budget and it is not in the energy policy. It is certainly not in the housing policy and it is certainly not in the employment policy.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was not in his speech, either.

Mr. Wright: This government has no policy except to make it difficult for all Canadians. This is a time of high inflation, high interest rates and high unemployment. The people of Canada will remember for many years the way in which the government did them in.

An hon. Member: Strategy tragedy.

Mr. Wright: This government, instead of having an over-all strategy, intends only to band-aid this economy back to health, providing little help, not much; but every once in a while it will help in a very small way. If we think back to 1974, the government said it had inflation under control. In 1976 it changed monetary policies, and inflation has become worse ever since. In 1974 it said we would reach energy self-sufficiency by 1980, but we obviously have not reached energy self-sufficiency and many people say we will not have it by 1990.

In 1974 the government told us there would be no wage and price controls. The Liberals were elected under that promise and we had wage and price controls one year hence. This government does not live up to its promises.

If we look at the expenditures of the government at the present time, we find that the government spends 25 per cent more than it takes in. That is why we have inflation in Canada; there is no other reason. We find the government spends 20 cents out of every dollar on servicing the national debt. That is why we have inflation, not for any other reason. It is not because of interest rates in the United States or because of anything else the Canadian people are doing. It is because of government policies.

These are hard times. We should consider the unemployment figures in Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration stood in the House and said things are not that bad in many areas, but as we look across Canada we can see the unemployment. Ontario has an unemployment rate of 10.5 per cent in the manufacturing industry, compared to 6.4 per cent a year ago. It is getting worse all the time. If we look at the fishing industry on the east and west coast, we find that in Atlantic Canada the unemployment rate is 14 per cent compared to 11.8 per cent last year, and in B.C. the unemployment rate is 17.8 per cent compared to 10.5 per cent last year. This is all due to this government's policies, there is no other reason. If we look at the forestry industry, we find 46.7 per cent unemployment in Atlantic Canada. Standing in this House within the last week, I said that the unemployment rate in forestry in Atlantic Canada was approximately 50 per cent and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) said that was not so. I am now presenting statistics.

In B.C. the unemployment rate in the forestry industry is 30.6 per cent compared to 29 per cent one year ago. In Quebec the unemployment rate in mining today is 28.7 per cent compared 12.6 per cent. That is another point which, of course, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre denied.

The unemployment rate across Canada in various segments of the economy is a disaster. We look at the unemployment figures across Canada for all industries and find that it is 9 per cent and rising. There are 1.2 million unemployed people. It is said that there are an additional 300,000 or 400,000 people who are not even registered; they cannot find jobs and have given up. That is the type of government we have. That is the type of planning we get from this government. That is the government's strategy.

Where is the housing policy in Canada? What kind of housing policy do we have? We have a Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) who stands in this House and says, "We have a solution: Bill C-89 will be the solution for the housing problems of Canada." That measure was introduced in the budget on November 12, but we still have not seen any solution to the housing problems.

Let us look at some of those problems. At the present time, the adjusted annual rate of starts is 142,000 units in Canada. If we break that down, we find that urban housing starts in April of this year, compared to last year, were down 40 per cent. Single detached dwelling starts were down 61 per cent and multi-unit starts were down 19 per cent. Where is the housing policy which was promised us? It is not doing any good. Statistics Canada indicates we need starts of 200,000 units each year. What does CMHC say we will have? There will be 146,000 units built this year. That is the estimate. So 54,000 more units should be built, representing almost 100,000 jobs.

The Minister of Public Works stands in this House and says he will help create employment. He will increase employment in the housing industry. He is not doing anything. Why is he not doing anything? If we look at the estimates we find, for example, that foreign aid has gone up by 19 per cent this year to over $1 billion, at a time when people are losing their homes, when people cannot renew their mortgages, when rents are going up. Why are we increasing foreign aid at this time? Why are we spending $70 million a year on advertising so Canadians will know what the government wants to do? Why is that money not put into housing, which will have a direct effect on employment? No, the government does not want to do those things because, in reality, it does not have a strategy or a plan. If does not really want to help. By having this grand design of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—whatever it is—he will help someone, but he does not provide the help where it is needed at the right time. Those statistics show that the budget strategy of this government is non-existent.

If we look at the recent Conference Board report we find that the statistics get even worse. We should look specifically at Ontario, the province which is suffering more this year. The Conference Board of Canada states that Ontario has been given one of its worst economic report cards in a decade. This is the board which warned last week that Canadians can expect no relief from the recession until at least next year. It has added an even more sombre footnote in that it says in its report that in the last year the economy has changed so much that it will represent the most severe setback in decades. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stands in this House and says that is not true. Mr. Speaker, the Conference Board goes on to say that the decline in the economy is not only steep but widespread. That is another point that the Minister of Finance denies in this House.

The conference board goes on to say that while the 1980 decline in Ontario production was due to the automotive industry, in 1981, it was more widespread and affected all segments of the Ontario economy. This is the type of thing the government presents to us and tells us how well they are doing. These certainly are hard times and they will get worse as long as we have this government in power.

If we look back at that budget presented on November 12, 1981, we find the Minister of Finance saying that tax incentives offered to Canadians are now tax loopholes. Obviously they left some tax incentives but the average Canadian has to ask himself or herself: "When is the government going to strike against me; when is it going to take away my tax incentives?"

The question of imputed rent has been brought to the attention of the government. The government attempted to back off from that. Why do they attempt to back off? The reason is that 50 per cent of the people in Canada own their own homes. What would happen if only 25 per cent of the people owned their own homes? Then they would not have to worry about imputed rent; that would be the time to bring it in. We are bringing to the attention of the Canadian public what the government was getting ready for, what they were planning. They have already brought the housing industry to a halt. We are not building enough homes for the people who need them and they will have to switch to rentals. If we gradually switch enough people to a position where the minority own their own homes and the majority rent, then the imputed rent becomes a feasible prospect for the federal government. That is when they intend to bring it in.

Mr. Fisher: Surely you are not serious. You don't believe that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, he believes it.

Mr. Wright: The budget was a disaster. The economic strategy of this government is a disaster. If one can believe Maclean's magazine and some of the things said in it about this government, some of the cabinet ministers do not believe this budget will help the economy.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Wright: So why are they not prepared to stand up? It is very easy, if one looks at what happened here a couple of months ago. A number of Liberal members stood up in the House and said we should not have to cut back VIA Rail.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's right.

Mr. Wright: They stood in the House and implored the minister not to cut back VIA Rail—and that evening they voted for it. They voted for the cutbacks. That is why you will not see the cabinet ministers voting against the budget or speaking out against the budget, because they do not dare. And why do they not dare? Mr. Speaker, it is because $1 billion per year is spent by this government on political favours, on Liberal Party workers. I said that three times in this House, Mr. Speaker, over the last six months and it has not been refuted yet. No one can refute it.

Inflation in Canada is running at 11.6 per cent, unemployment at 9 per cent. The Conference Board said last week that business executives are slashing inventory, because of cripplingly high interest rates. They go on to report on the Chamber of Commerce that 62 per cent of the chamber's members' venture capital is being invested outside Canada. Why? Because they do not have confidence in Canada; they cannot make a decent return in Canada and they cannot get any support from this government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Wright: This government is anti-investment. It is a socialistic government and its policies have been going on for 10 years. It became very clear, when I went to Saskatchewan during the election, that the socialistic policies of this government were not accepted by the people of Saskatchewan. That is why they turfed out the NDP and that is why at the next election they will turf out the Liberals.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is the divine right of the people.

Mr. Wright: I hear comments from both sides of the House, Mr. Speaker, from the Liberals and the NDP. They have an unholy alliance where the NDP will support the Liberals as long as the Liberals are promoting socialistic policies. But the NDP is the party that put them back in power. The NDP is the party that supports them. The NDP is the party that is for state ownership.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a common-law marriage.

Mr. Wright: The NDP is the party that tears down, that levels, that makes everybody equal. It is the termite party of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wright: If we look further at the budget, Mr. Speaker, we find a very interesting point. In the budget, the minister of Finance mentioned what he called a typical life insurance policy in Canada, and he used his figures to justify taxing life insurance policies, accrued income every three years. Suddenly we find out that his figures are wrong. He will not admit it publicly, but they are wrong. He admits privately to the life insurance industry that he was using the wrong figures, but you will not hear him say it publicly. It is an actual fact that the figures he used to calculate the gains on life insurance were based on a wrong policy. He used a non-participating policy. He said he was using figures from the average, typical life insurance policy across Canada. We discovered, and he admits it, that he was using a non-participating policy which only 5 per cent of the people actually buy in Canada. Some 95 per cent of the policies are participating policies. His figures are all wrong but he is not prepared to admit that publicly.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): A non-participatory democracy.

Mr. Wright: We must ask the question, Mr. Speaker, what else is wrong with that budget? What else is wrong with the economic strategy of this government? I thought, Mr. Speaker, that I may have just coined a new phrase, a new word.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The word termites is okay.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, looking at the budget we find the government has abandoned the Small Business Development Bond. The banks are not lending money to small business any more under the auspices of the small business development bond. It does not exist. Why would a bank lend money to a business that is failing? That is the only type of business they can lend money to now. Why would they lend any money to it? It is quite obvious that they cannot and they will not, but the Minister of Finance will not admit it in the House. More and more small businesses are going bankrupt each day. They tell me they are spending 20 per cent of their time filling out government forms. They say that the most serious problems facing them in small business are lack of finance, inflation, shortage of skilled help, government regulation and taxation. This government will not rest until all the small business people of the country go bankrupt.

It was very unusual to find the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House today. I have to ask the question, why was he here today when he was in the House talking about the same subject yesterday? It is because he is backtracking on his policies. He was down in Houston telling the American oil industry to come up to Canada to invest. Suddenly he has changed his mind. He knows there is not self-sufficiency in Canada and is therefore trying to bring capital back into Canada. It will not come back. Investors would have to be crazy to come back here. The minister has been discouraging them. That is a major problem.

I see my time is drawing nigh, so I will conclude right now. This government has no direction. The economy is on hold until the next budget in October or November. It is on hold because the government will not backtrack. It is afraid to backtrack because that would harm the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. These are hard times. They are Grit times. Hard times will stay with us until the next election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the speeches of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright). I would like to comment on one small portion of his speech just to set the record straight. He referred to who supports whom. This is always interesting because words are rather empty. I know it is quite easy to say where relationships exist and so forth, but the bottom line is voting patterns. The bottom line is who votes with whom. The record shows that over the last number of months the Progressive Conservative Party have voted with the Liberals 29 times. That is all right. As opposition parties we have to vote with the government sometimes when we feel legislation is appropriate, and against the government at other times. However, I want to emphasize the point that the Progressive Conservatives voted with the Liberals 29 times. How many times did the NDP vote with the Liberals? It was not 29 times but just 14 times. I am not a mathematician, but that tells me that the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals vote together twice as often as the NDP votes with the Liberal Party.

I just put that on the record for clarification. I know the hon. member for Calgary North did not intend to confuse the public, but the record is 29 versus 14. That is enough of that.

I want to thank the Progressive Conservative Party for this opportunity to rise this afternoon and discuss what have been some very critical issues in this country. Those issues are unemployment, the national energy policy, inflation and high interest rates. It is interesting to note that whenever a day is set aside to discuss the most critical issues facing Canadians, the day is never set aside by hon. members opposite. Such debates are never initiated by government members. They are the culprits. It is interesting that the opposition parties take the initiative to initiate debates on isssues which are really important to Canadians.

This morning we received the latest unemployment statistics. I am certain there were many Canadians who were thoroughly disgusted with the response which followed later on in the day. We must all agree that ours is the most prosperous nation in the entire world. Out of 167 sovereign nations, there is no question that Canada is the most prosperous of them all, yet today 1,987,000 Canadians are out of work.

What makes that even worse is that this is the time of year when people generally feel hopeful and optimistic. It is springtime when jobs and opportunities are created. This is the growth period of the year, biologically and chemically, but not in 1982. Over the last month not only were no more jobs created and no more job opportunities opened up, but we also lost 75,000 jobs over the last 31 days. For every 371 people unemployed in Canada there is one job on the board at the employment office.

This is the time when growth should be occurring, but growth is not occurring. There is decay in this country. Opportunities are minimal. What makes that even worse is the recognition that hundreds of thousands of young people cannot find work. These are young Canadians graduating from high schools across the country in large and small communities and in rural areas. Tens of thousands of college graduates have skills they have trained for months and, in some cases, years to acquire. University graduates with three to seven years of education behind them are now entering the job market for the first time to meet the challenges of employment opportunities. For most of those people the challenges will not be the challenges of new employment but the challenges of unemployment. Over the next couple of months we will see the dreams, hopes and aspirations of young Canadians dashed, and that is sad. That is why this morning people were disgusted when they viewed the activities of the government. At this time of crisis there is inaction, and the government is not able to come up with new, refreshing and innovative ideas.

What do the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) say? They say there will be more of the same. They say we have to wait and that we cannot do anything. Other countries are doing something. Other countries are taking action independent from action taken in the United States.

There is no question that the relationship between Canada and the United States is very strong indeed and that what happens in the United States will have profound influences on what happens in Canada, but there are independent actions which could be taken. We could be assisting in municipal infrastructure development. We could stimulate the construction and housing industry of Canada. That would instantly put tens of thousands of people back to work.

Of course, we could take a number of other major steps. We could have an industrial strategy which would make sense for the 1980s and would not be dependent totally upon megaprojects, especially megaprojects in the energy field such as those we have seen collapse in the last little while.

What the Progressive Conservative leader said in Montreal the other day was interesting. He was asked for his alternative policy to the present high interest monetary policy. He said he had no alternative. In fact, I think it is well known that the Progressive Conservative Party is looking south of the line and hoping Mr. Reagan is successful with his monetary policy. His policy is the trickle-down policy: give a dollar to the rich, and perhaps a penny or two will eventually trickle down to the regular folks in society. The price Americans are paying today is ten million unemployed. However, I think it was a very honest and respectable gesture when the leader of the Progressive Conservatives said he did not at this point have a policy to offer as an alternative and that he would indeed support Governor Bouey and his monetary policy. I give the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) credit for being honest.

Mr. Kilgour: That is not what he said.

Mr. Riis: I have listened with interest to the speeches of the last number of days. Countless Tories have risen and told of how discouraged they are regarding the role of government in the economy. They say the real problem is government intervention in the economy and the role government plays in the economy. What do the Progressive Conservatives think about hospitals, schools, universities, colleges, roads, airports, medicare and pensions? They are against government intervention. They say we should let free enterprise do everything. I say that is a simplistic approach, but I am not criticizing the Tories; I do not think they mean what they say.

I give them credit, in spite of some of the verbiage and rhetoric we have heard here over the last few days, because I suspect my Tory colleagues would in fact support the Farm Credit Corporation and government intervention in support of agriculture. I know my Progressive Conservative colleagues would support the prairie farm rehabilitation program. I know they would support the land commission act of British Columbia and the farm income insurance program of British Columbia. Why do the Tories say what they say? Why do they react so negatively to the idea that there is some role for the government to play in society?

I remember my history. I remember the government that introduced the CNR. I remember the government that introduced the CBC. I know what government took over Pacific Western Airlines in the west. They were all Progressive Conservative governments. Why, then, have the Tories reacted so negatively to the role government played in society and in the economy? I suspect it is because of the demonstration of government involvement by the Liberal government and the fact that it has made such an abysmal effort at involving itself in the economy. That intervention is really another form of political expediency.

The hon. member for Calgary North said that $1 billion is spent by the Liberal Party on pork-barreling and patronage. I do not know if that figure is correct but I would not be surprised.

I have read books that criticized the DREE program because it has provided so much money to support economic activities in areas of the country where there has been no hope of recovery or of economic development following in any realistic way. Why is the money spent in a hopeless area in a hopeless way? If one were cynical one would say it is spent because it buys electoral support, but I would not want to accuse the government of that.

Government support has failed in so many ways. I identify the Candu system and the millions of dollars that have gone into the program but have not brought about any significant return and never will. Yet we see the same program being shored up today. We know the record in Consolidated Computer. There was support for Chrysler Corporation which everyone in this room knew, if they were honest, was a dying corporation. It needed to make dramatic changes but did not respond so the government rushed in with support for an ailing industry. Of course, the support was a guarantee given to an ailing corporation and that is why government intervention has such a bad name.

I do not think anyone is against the idea of supporting ports, railways, airports, medicare and the like. I think of Mr. Lougheed's involvement with Pacific Western Airlines for the benefit of western Canadians. That was probably a good move. I think of the Tory support of Canadian National. That was probably a good move. In Saskatchewan there was support for the potash industry, the telecommunications industry and Saskoil. These were positive moves.

Mr. Kilgour: What is the point of your speech?

Mr. Riis: The point of my speech, for the hon. member who wails at me, is to indicate that there is a role for government in the economy, as is demonstrated by the premier of the province from which he hails.

One of the areas of the world that has often been held up during these difficult economic times as providing the necessary leadership to enable it to carry on with economic growth while others cannot is Japan. There are a variety of aspects of the Canadian economy that one could applaud but I want to focus on total job security for the workers. The Japanese worker has lifetime employment with his employer. This is not the case in Canada where there are nearly two million people unemployed and there is the threat of unemployment for so many more. What does that situation do to create confidence and hope in the future for Canadian workers and investors?

The fundamental problem of our economy is structural. This is the area where the Conservative Party policy puzzles me. I don't think there is anyone who would suggest it is a good idea to have major economic decisions about our future made in foreign countries. Why do we not have more research and development in this country, Mr. Speaker? That is because it is a branch plant economy. Why are more important decisions regarding our domestic future not made in this country? It is because of the branch plant economy. Why is a vigorous effort not made to open up new trading opportunities? That, too, is because we have a branch plant economy.

Statistics Canada estimates that in 1974 the mining and manufacturing industries accounted for 42 per cent of employment and 49 per cent of production. Since then their share of production has been rising constantly but their share of employment has dropped. Of course, it drops in the branch plants. Do the lay-offs that occur in this country occur in the branch plants first or in the parent company? They occur in the branch plant.

This is where my colleagues to my right puzzle me because every day they are asking that FIRA be opened up to make foreign intervention easier, to make it easier for foreign companies to come here as sort of saviours. We have seen what that has done to us in the past and we see what it will do in the future. They want to open up the flood gates and let the foreign entrepreneurs come in. I say that is wrong and it is part of the problem we have today.

I realize that my colleague across the aisle would like to wrap up this opposition day debate and I shall finish early in that case.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which will be brief. This morning members of local 1064 of the United Steelworkers of America ratified their contract with the Sydney Steel Corporation, thus theoretically putting back to work or saving the employment of some 2,400 Canadians. About an hour later the management of SYSCO advised the Nova Scotia government that the lay-offs would be total in terms of production effective Monday morning, meaning that 1,500 or 1,700 of those men will not go to work. Talks have been going on today.

I wanted to express to the chamber that by Monday or Tuesday both the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will be in a position to respond favourably to the early extention of a rail order from Canadian National for some 88,000 tonnes of steel. I wish the chamber would join the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport and the government of Nova Scotia in bringing that about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) that I shall make sure that his comments are brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I think all of us are concerned about this situation and he has offered a practical solution. I am not in a position to say whether such an alternative could be brought about but I shall see that the minister hears the hon. member's comments.

It seems to me that the news we have had today about unemployment is tragic indeed. As a relatively new Member of Parliament I am convinced that any issue involving unemployment is one of the most difficult that any member faces.

We constantly hear from people asking us whether there is some magic spot where the Minister of Finance or the cabinet would draw a line and say: "That is enough unemployment; we will not tolerate it any more and we are going to change our policies". I would have to answer that by saying for most of us, certainly on this side, that the first unemployed person is one too many. I know, whether it be in our constituency offices or through an announcement like the one we just heard from the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, that it is a horrible feeling for all of us when we cannot respond with immediate help for a man's family and home. But the real issue, the real answer to that concern, comes when we ask ourselves if we can find a genuine and permanent way for our country to grow. The answer is yes, simply because we have the tools to work with. We have the resources, the people, the money and the ideas.

We should not lose sight of the fact that this country has every reason to be optimistic and stop worrying, as one of my constituents did today, over whether we will ever recover. That kind of doom and gloom becomes a self-defeating psychology. We have to remember that with the right foundation we can begin our recovery and make it a permanent one. We need to let our markets, our business and our labour force regain their strength. We have to make sure we have a bigger pie, a more productive economy, so that we can take bigger rewards from it. That is the simple message the world and our own circumstances are giving us today.

Let me give just one example. I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has taken the right course by asking for ways to change the Crow rate. By doing this he has attacked an age-old sickness in our railroads and he is making them stronger, more productive, and more likely to produce jobs and rewards for Canadians in the future.

Mr. Kilgour: And more bankruptcies.

Mr. Fisher: We are going to see, as many people from the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona's own province told me a week ago, that decision produce jobs not only for grain farmers and the related industries, but also for people involved with iron ore, coal, potash and all the other resources which have to be shipped from the west to Canadian and foreign markets.

Mr. Kilgour: What about the grain markets?

Mr. Fisher: When we talk about rebuilding our economy we have to address those kinds of tough questions. Just as it is terrible to address the problems of unemployment, so too we must address the problems of structural weakness in our system.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) keeps challenging us to do that on one very good issue, that of foreign ownership. I personally welcome the pressure he puts on in that direction, but he also has to recognize there are other structural weaknesses in our economy. That is the kind of thing we are trying to attack. I do believe we will be ready when our foreign customers are ready as well.

We have heard this afternoon about the terrible unemployment and the slowdown in the B.C. lumber industry. Well, when the American economy rebuilds, that industry will be in a position to respond. But it will do us no good to try and stimulate that industry before the American housing industry is ready to take those products.

Mr. Kilgour: Why? Explain that one, Doug.

Mr. Fisher: Because they have no customers for those products.

Mr. Kilgour: In Canada?

Mr. Fisher: Instead we need to look at how we can soften the short-term tragedies which occur because of unemployment in the industry. The ministers have been trying to do that through specific targeted programs.

We cannot try to press an industry to grow before foreign customers are ready to accept its products. In my riding, for example, McDonnell Douglas builds passenger aircraft. We have a marvellous facility and we have seen tragic slowdowns in employment there. In the last two years there has been a reduction in employment from 5,500 to about 2,500 in that one plant. We could solve that problem right away if we placed orders for 20 or 30 DC-10s; but what would we do with them? Equally so, what would we do in many of these other industries where there is some heavy reliance on a weaker external market? Instead we have to take the resources we would use in that fashion and aim them more intelligently to help industry rebuild and guarantee that in the short term the unemployed worker is given full support.

Mr. Keeper: Stimulate the Canadian economy.

Mr. Fisher: That is why we have stressed inflation as a major problem. It saps our economy's strength and productivity. It pushes up prices and pushes down our ability to compete. It eats up the savings we would otherwise use for investment and makes us uncompetitive. We must improve our position if we expect to keep up with our foreign competitors.

Mr. Kilgour: Your policies are worsening inflation.

Mr. Fisher: We cannot abandon vulnerable people or ignore the information we received today from SYSCO or the information we receive from our ridings. That is why we have a series of specific targeted programs, like ILAP in my own riding. The Canadian Admiral Corporation folded, but with the help of ILAP there has been a restoration of over half the jobs immediately, with the promise that several hundred more will be brought back in. In the meantime, the same workers have been given an opportunity for retraining under that program. The UIC moved right in and opened up an office right at the plant to help the workers get their benefits right away. That is how government can respond in a humane and productive fashion.

We see the same thing with the program just announced for Control Data, which is being given a $17 million federal grant to help develop a microcomputer line and software program. Why? Because we are trying to attack the $1.5 billion deficit in computers in our balance of trade. That is targeted program which picks a specific problem and tries to solve it in the short run.

That kind of thinking is reflected in the housing program which the minister responsible for CMHC has developed with his social housing program. Twenty-five thousand units will be built this year.

Mr. McGrath: Five thousand less than last year.

Mr. Fisher: There are 30,000 more units being built under the Canada rental supply program. There is $169 million being spent under the residential rehabilitation assistance program. The Canada home renovation plan is worth another $30 million.

Mr. Kilgour: Why are housing starts down?

Mr. Fisher: We cannot build 200,000 units across the country, but we can stimulate through a targeted program to get as many of those units started as the private sector can afford. That, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of help we can develop in order to attack the short-run problems while the long-term structural problems are sorting themselves out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I call it five o'clock it has been brought to my attention that comments made by the Chair earlier with respect to a point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) may have been out of order in that they constituted an opinion. Just so that members will understand, the hon. member for St. John's East rose on a point of order in reference to the quorum call the other evening. I refused to recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) for the simple reason that sometimes it does appear to be the duty of the Chair to assist the House in avoiding friction. So it would hardly be consistent if in fact by my intervention I were to add to the friction.

I want to indicate that were it indeed a statement of opinion by the Chair, it was completely inadvertent, and I apologize particularly to the hon. member for St. John's East and to members generally. Obviously it was not my intention to fuel any fires but rather to try and calm them down or put them out.

It being 5 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion have expired. Therefore, the House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILY OF LATE GILLES VILLENEUVE

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

On Saturday, May 8, the world was stunned at the report of the death of our fellow citizen, Gilles Villeneuve, the brilliant Formula One driver, who was killed in a fatal accident under the tragic circumstances we all know. Canadians idolized Gilles Villeneuve and eagerly followed his daring feats around the world. He always did his utmost in every race, and we applauded his every success. Gilles Villeneuve was a symbol of our native courage, and this showed in his spirit and his determination and desire to win. He was an inspiration and an example to all young people because of his sense of discipline and his passion for excellence.

It is a heavy loss for the people of the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, and especially for his friends in Berthierville, where he was born and where he grew up. In Gilles Villeneuve, Canada has lost one of its foremost representatives, and one of whom all Canadians were proud.

On behalf of all Canadians and the people of the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, Gilles Villeneuve's uncle, and the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House extend its most sincere condolences to Mrs. Johanne Villeneuve and her children, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Séville Villeneuve and all their family and to all the people in Berthierville in their cruel loss following the death of Gilles Villeneuve.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the text of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

MEDIA CLUB OF OTTAWA PANEL DISCUSSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Liberal government is not only boycotting a panel discussion being sponsored by the Media Club of Ottawa on freedom of information, a subject Liberals would prefer to discuss in secret, but because of the embarrassment their boycott might cause the host minister, the Hon. Judy Erola, the location of the panel is being moved from Parliament Hill to Carleton University. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the host minister for the Media Club of Ottawa's panel discussion on freedom of information counter the embarrassment caused her by her Liberal colleagues in boycotting the session by doing all she can to embarrass them into making freedom of information a priority matter for discussion in Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROPOSAL TO REDUCE NUMBER OF BALLISTIC MISSILES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the positive proposal made by President Reagan for a two-phased reduction of ballistic missiles, specifically the mutual reduction of long-range missile warheads to quantities at least one third below the current levels and the creation of an equal ceiling on all other levels of strategic nuclear forces, including limits on ballistic missile throw-weight, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House commend President Reagan for his innovative initiative and urge President Brezhnev to accept the offer in the same spirit of good will in which it was made in order to facilitate confidence building measures necessary for the equitable achievement of the ultimate goal of mutual, balanced, and verifiable reduction of nuclear weapons to the lowest possible levels at the earliest possible moment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CALL FOR SUPPORT BY PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, testimony before the miscellaneous estimates committee indicates the Prime Minister has short arms and deep pockets when it comes to paying for personal expenses. I note that he is now joyriding and freeloading at the expense of our navy, at least that small portion of our obsolete navy which is not in dry dock. I wonder if the right honourable gentleman's inspection tour was really because of his concern for our Armed Forces or was it simply a political gesture, a political photo opportunity, a feint to take attention away from our economic woes. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

• (1410)

That a statement of unequivocal personal commitment and support for our undermanned, under equipped and over extended Armed Forces be made by the Prime Minister as he has a duty and an obligation to assure those Canadian men and women in uniform that they are not second-class citizens serving with second-rate equipment and ships.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE

CUTBACKS IN FUNDS TO PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Massive cutbacks in the number of beds available, and staff lay-offs in hospitals in British Columbia, have occurred. This means longer waiting lists for important surgery and poorer quality health care in many other respects as well. The federal government is partly to blame for giving anti-medicare types like Bennett a pretext to do this with the cutbacks it has effected in established programs financing. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House regrets the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare refused to see the needless danger her government was creating for medicare through the EPF cutbacks, and instructs her to put the so-called revenue guarantee money back into the federal funding for health so that those provinces which care about medicare will have the money to improve health care in their provinces, and so that those who don't care about medicare, the Governments of B.C. and Ontario, won't have an excuse for their atrocities against the health of Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Recent reports from Statistics Canada show that the number of murders committed during the course of another crime, such as armed robbery, has increased dramatically since 1976. Recent polls and surveys have shown repeatedly that it is the wish of as many as 82 per cent of Canadians that Parliament should vote again on the issue of capital punishment. Since capital punishment was abolished in 1976, 23 police officers have been murdered while carrying out their duties. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House refer the issue of capital punishment for first degree murder to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs before yet another policeman is killed in the line of duty by a criminal who need not fear our hamstrung criminal justice system.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

CALL FOR PROGRAM TO INCREASE STARTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Given that Canada needs approximately 210,000 new housing units each year, and that CMHC says there will be only 146,000 units built this year, which represents a shortfall of about 64,000 units and given that the seasonally adjusted number of unemployed Canadians is over 1.2 million, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government effect a program that will erase the housing deficit, thereby putting 120,000 Canadians back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my motion arises out of reports that the Prime Minister may name former Conservative and Liberal Member of Parliament "Jumping Jack Horner" as the next chairman of the CNR. In view of the fact that the CRN is an important instrument of national transportation policy, and in the name of parliamentary democracy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House direct the government to refer its nominee to head the CNR to the Standing Committee on Transport, and that the Standing Committee on Transport be given the power to accept or reject the nomination of the Government of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON NAVAL CAPABILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Prime Minister took his three sons for a short holiday jaunt this past weekend and, at the end of his pleasure cruise, described what is left of our once proud navy as "super". In light of the fact that under the Prime Minister's reign one of the many disasters to have befallen this nation is the drastic decimation in size and effectiveness of the Canadian military, and in light of the fact that his maritime venture provided visible evidence that he is "at sea", something we have always known as we have watched his repeated failures to pilot the ship of state, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That the Prime Minister clarify his terse comment, and tell this House if "super", referred to the fact that the decline of our navy has taken place as he planned, or if "super" referred to his relief over the fact that the discipline of the officers and men of the navy prevented them from throwing him overboard, as surely they must have been strongly tempted to do.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Late Gilles Villeneuve

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILY OF LATE GILLES VILLENEUVE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we were all shocked to learn on Saturday about the death of the Canadian Gilles Villeneuve in a terrible and unfortunate accident which occurred during his last lap around the Zolder circuit in Belgium. The Berthierville pilot had astounded the whole world by his ability, his spirit and his determination in an exclusive and increasingly dangerous profession. Even though quite young, Gilles Villeneuve had already won many Grand Prix and he had quickly won not only the admiration, but also the affection of all those who saw him in action in international races. He inspired and nurtured an exceptional pride among his fellow citizens. Canada and the rest of the world have lost a great champion.

[English]

Our auto racing star was only 32 years old. Numerous press reports claim that many of his own competitors would recognize that he was the best racer in the world. As a Canadian, I like and I am proud to believe them. But, over all, Gilles Villeneuve was a fighter, and his success was well-earned. Cherished by crowds everywhere in the world, he always remained a plain, simple man. Gilles Villeneuve was certainly one of the most likeable international athletes, and we are all shocked by his sudden death.

I want to express on behalf of the Canadian government our sincere condolences to his wife, his two children and his entire family.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to express my colleagues' and my own sadness at the tragic and premature death of a great Canadian and a great champion, Gilles Villeneuve. It has often been said that Gilles was a determined and aggressive competitor, and he proved it once again at the time of his accident when he was trying to improve his starting position for the race.

Gilles Villeneuve was a young man from Berthierville who focused the attention of the whole world on Canada. He gained the unconditional admiration of all Canadians at the time of his first major victory when he became the first Canadian to win the Canadian Grand Prix in Montreal four years ago. He then had a series of international wins in South Africa, Long Beach, Watkins Glen, Monaco and Spain. But in spite of his success and his fame, he was essentially a humble person, a family man, whose dream remained to return to his native Quebec. Today, le petit grand homme de Berthierville will be returning.

To all his family, his wife Johanne, his children Jacques and Mélanie, his parents Séville and Georgette, his brother Jacques, we want to express our most sincere condolences. All Canadians share the feeling of having lost one of their own and want to tell his family that they will remember Gilles as a man of indomitable courage and as a hero whom they loved and admired greatly.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I would like to join all of those who expressed their sadness following the tragic death of Gilles Villeneuve on Saturday in Belgium. I extend my sympathy to the family of Gilles Villeneuve. Canadians are mourning the passing of an exceptional individual, who died too young while pursuing too dangerous a profession. His courage and audacity were legendary.

• (1420)

[English]

I first saw Gilles Villeneuve race in my hometown of Gimli, Manitoba, in a Formula Atlantic race on a very rainy day in June, 1975. While the other drivers struggled with visibility problems, Villeneuve put on a facemask he had used as a snowmobile racer, which did not fog up and ran away with the race. It was this kind of ingenuity and skill that carried him to the top in motor racing, first in Formula Atlantic and subsequently on the Grand Prix circuit.

Gilles Villeneuve will be very sadly missed, not only by those of us who are sports car racing fans, but by all Canadians whom he represented so well as an ambassador in the international world of motor sport. We all extend our most heartfelt sympathy to his family at this very unhappy time.

Madam Speaker: On behalf of the House of Commons, I too extend my sympathy to the family of Gilles Villeneuve to whom I will convey hon. members' expression of sympathy.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF MISSILES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In the Israeli-Arab war of 1967 and the Yom Kippur war of 1973, the rise in predominance of missiles was noted by astute defence ministries in many countries. Unfortunately the Canadian government seems not to have noticed how smart the smart weapons have been getting, either then or since then. Can the minister assure the House that similar events in the South Atlantic have not gone similarly unnoticed?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I take due note of the question of the hon. member for Victoria. I have just returned from the Defence Planning Committee NATO meetings in Brussels and I can assure the hon. member that this question has been discussed among NATO countries. Obviously, there is no question, that with regard to what he calls smart weaponry, today we have to be smarter and the anti-missile missile system is one of the most important defences, which we have learned from the recent fight in the South Atlantic.

ANTI-MISSILE CAPABILITY OF SURFACE FLEET

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell the House how many of the ships now in our surface fleet have an anti-missile defensive capability such as that provided by the Sea Wolf or Sea Dart anti-missile missiles?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, obviously our frigates are not equipped at the moment with the anti-missile missile system. Even other countries have frigates which are not equipped with such a weapon. However, I can assure the hon. member that this question will receive very important consideration in the specifications for the six new frigates which are on the drawing board at the moment. Clearly we realize, as well as he does—being a veteran of the last war as well as myself—that the more prepared we are to defend against any kind of weapon, the greater chance we will have to have a better deterrent and a greater chance for victory regardless of the circumstances.

Mr. McKinnon: The minister neglected to inform the House that several other countries do have anti-missile missiles on their frigates.

TYPE OF VESSELS TO BE ACQUIRED

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I notice in the capital program projections which had been prepared in 1980 that they showed funding for three consecutive frigate programs. Has the minister considered purchasing any other type of vessel other than a patrol frigate for the ships that are to follow the current six-frigate program?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a comment to the hon. member. Since we were re-elected about two years ago we have made decisions on these issues. We have decided to implement a program for six new frigates. We have considered all possible alternatives, of buying, renting, or even borrowing ships from other countries. All of these alternatives have been rejected for a number of good reasons. We decided the best way to proceed would be to promote the new frigate program and try to accelerate it. I might say that if hon. members opposite had made a decision on this during the nine months they were in power, perhaps we would still be six months ahead of schedule.

DESIGN REQUIREMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The issue is whether or not he intends to carry on with a similar program to the one which is already in place and proceeding. Or is he prepared to examine seriously the requirement of the Canadian navy to have a vessel capable of carrying the type of missile systems talked about by the hon. member for Victoria?

• (1425)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, concerning the issue of the Canadian navy, I take objection to some of the remarks of the hon. member in suggesting that we have a navy which cannot fulfil its commitment. If one reads the statement made by Admiral Trane from NATO when he was here, one finds that he said that we have one of the most efficient navies as far as fulfilment of our NATO commitment is concerned our anti-submarine commitment, is concerned. It was not someone who did not know what he was talking about. He was someone who knows all the issues concerning anti-submarine warfare. He said we are capable of doing it and we are efficient. Besides all of that, even though perhaps some of the ships of the Canadian navy are old, we must not consider only the ships. One must consider the efficiency, capability, and devotion of the people working on those ships, and that certainly counts for a lot.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS NOT COVERED BY LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. There are about 120,000 Canadian families in this country who are victims of UFFI at this point in time, having accepted the government's advice and financial incentive to introduce this objectionable substance into their homes. Considering that the victims of a government policy ought to be compensated by the government for its own errors, I would like to ask the minister, in accepting this principle, whether he will tell us what he will be doing through the bill which will be before the House today for the more than 80 per cent of the victims who will not be compensated in any way for this disaster.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am rather surprised that it took the hon. member so long to discover that there is a problem for home owners who insulated their homes with UFFI. I suppose his curiosity was finally aroused when he met some 300 demonstrators last week in Toronto. For quite some time now, the government has shown its willingness to help UFFI victims by giving them advice, by paying for free tests in their homes and by advising them on measures to be taken to correct and reduce gas levels in their homes. As for people living in homes where gas levels are below the standard set by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and who are benefiting from the effects of proper insulation through savings on heating costs, I think everyone, starting with the hon. member, should stop dramatizing and depoliticize the issue, because it is clear that the resulting adverse publicity for insulation products, and especially this particular one, has made the market for homes insulated with UFFI practically disappear. The value of these homes has been reduced by adverse publicity, and it is only by concentrating on corrective measures that we shall be able to restore these homes to their original value.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: The minister took a long time to say almost nothing.

COST OF REMOVAL OF FOAM INSULATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I point out to the minister that several members of this party and of the Conservative Party have been raising the issue with regard to UFFI for weeks, while the Government of Canada has done virtually nothing for the victims.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, I want to ask the minister whether he will admit to the House that the average person will have to pay up to $20,000 to restore his or her home to a livable condition, if lucky, and that the ceiling for assistance which the government bill is providing amounts to $5,000. Second, will the minister admit that the total sum allocated in this bill, if used by the victims which have been created by the government, is adequate to pay only one fifth of the total number of families affected? It is inadequate compensation to the families who will get anything, and only one fifth of the families will be compensated. It is a totally unjust response by the responsible government. Will the minister admit that, and then answer the question: why does he not provide some assistance for the other 80 per cent?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the conclusions of the hon. member, for a number of reasons. First of all, government compensation has never been offered in the case of hazardous products banned under the Hazardous Products Act. Second, in the past, when a person wanted to make a complaint, it was always directed to the manufacturer. This is the first time in the history of hazardous products that people are accusing the government instead of the real culprit if there is one, who would be the manufacturer. Third, the Canadian government's tax-free grant of $5,000 is being offered on humanitarian grounds, which has nothing to do with legal responsibility. It is a generous offer that is unequalled in any other country. The product in question has been on the market for many years, in 30 or so countries throughout the world. Canada was the first country to ban the product, and the Canadian government was the first government to offer direct compensation to UFFI victims, something that has not been done anywhere else.

• (1430)

[English]

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE BE CONVENED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the question at issue is not legality. It is something that the Liberal government perhaps does not understand. It is a question of political morality. That is what is involved. To my knowledge, no other government except this one actually offered its citizens $500, and encouraged them to take this substance and put it in their homes. Surely that creates a political responsibility for compensating these victims. Is the minister telling this House that the government is not going to do anything more? In relation to that, I have a positive suggestion.

Why does the minister not take the matter to the provincial governments, which are involved in licensing and so on, and have a meeting with his ministerial colleagues? He could say that the federal government will put up 75 per cent of the cost, with the provinces putting up 25 per cent of the cost, so that these innocent victims can be fully compensated. Surely that is their due.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member finally said something sensible, namely, that on humanitarian grounds, not only our government but other levels of government as well should do their part. I have been repeating exactly the same thing for months. Perhaps UFFI victims may consider that the $5,000 offered by our government is not adequate, but at least it is there on the table. I am very pleased that the hon. member agrees with me that other levels of government, and especially provincial authorities, should also do their part and at least match the federal offer. I am happy to see that the hon. member supports my views, and I hope he will tell his provincial party colleagues who constitute the government in one of the provinces to support my views, in order to persuade all provincial authorities to make a direct offer to UFFI victims and also make provision for tax-free grants of up to $5,000.

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence unanimously supported the report on the Armed Forces reserves which called for increases in personnel and updated equipment. The minister stated, "Most of the recommendations are realistic and some are already in the process of being implemented." Will the minister explain how the recommendations will be implemented when the Armed Forces reserves are being subjected to a 10 per cent cut in training funds, not including the inflation factor?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would be surprised if the figure mentioned by the hon. member, a 10 per cent cut in the reserves, is correct. On the contrary, the reserve budget this year has been increased, if I am not mistaken, by about 15 per cent. In addition, we are trying to integrate more and more of our reserves with our regular operations so that it will be much more interesting for those in the reserves. It is more useful for the reserves to train with the regular forces. Therefore, I would say that we are attaching more and more importance to the recommendations of the committee. We have said the recommendation was realistic, and that it would be something that I, as Minister of National Defence, would like to implement as quickly as possible. However, we have to take the economic situation into consideration. With a 19.2 per cent increase in the budget this year, we are trying to give priority to re-equipping the Armed Forces to address some of the earlier questions directed to me regarding the army, navy, and air force. With this increase in the defence budget, we are trying to give a fair share to the reserves.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RESERVES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I hope the minister's answer is not hypocritical, because the subcommittee and the minister have consistently been stating and recommending the importance of the reserves and their overall place in Canadian defence strategy. The information I have from many C.Os. in the reserves is that they have been orally advised of cuts. Which policy is the minister pursuing? Is he pursuing the recommendation of the committee that reserves should be increased to whatever size is necessary to respond to the mobilization requirements, or is he saying that their training funds will be cut, which will obviously decrease the number of men and women in the reserves? Which is it—increase or cuts?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means by his allegation, because in the last two years that I have been Minister of National Defence the reserves have been increased in many areas. Equipment has been supplied to the reserves, equipment they have not had for the past ten years. Everything possible is being done to give encouragement and incentive to the reserves to be part of the regular forces. The last Rendezvous '81 exercise involved many hundreds of reservists working with the regular forces. We have tried to do the same with exercises in Europe. I do not think the reserves can say they are not receiving their fair share of the budget.

STATUS OF WOMEN

VOTING RIGHTS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL SPOUSES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council. Under our election laws, the spouse of a member of the Armed Forces serving overseas, for instance in West Germany, can only vote in the riding which her husband designates as his previous place of residence, even though she may never have lived there in her life. In other words, for voting purposes she is only regarded as an extension of her husband. Is the minister taking steps to correct this anachronism by proposing legislation that would allow the wives of military personnel and of public servants serving overseas to designate the constituencies in which they will vote based on their own past residence in Canada?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, as we know, the Chief Electoral Officer will be tabling his report at the beginning of the next session. This report will be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as is usual. Following that study and report by the committee, the government usually brings in amendments to the electoral law. I hope the matter raised by the hon. member will be taken into consideration. It is a possibility that this matter, as well as others, will be reflected in some further amendments. At this stage I would, first, prefer to see the report of the Chief Electoral Officer and, second, the report from the appropriate standing committee. Then we will come forward with proper legislation.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I am wondering if the minister is aware of the issue I have raised. If so, is he also aware of the very real concern, indeed I can go further and say the anger that is felt by the spouses of military personnel serving overseas in that they really do not have full freedom to exercise their franchise as long as the present legislation exists? Is the minister doing everything in his power to bring pressure on the government not to wait until some future date down the road but to get this legislation changed so that the spouses of military personnel overseas will have the right to vote on their own residency and not that of their husbands?

• (1440)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member is raised with me practically every time I visit Lahr. I always bring the issue back here, and discussions about what we can do to treat these spouses as fairly as possible are currently ongoing. As the President of the Privy Council has just said, this matter is under serious consideration, and we will take the steps which are necessary.

INDUSTRY

NON-APPLICATION OF ILAP PROGRAM TO CAMBRIDGE, ONT.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Within the last few months he has visited Cambridge, and I know he is aware of the crippling unemployment in my community. Last month $350 million was given in ILAP assistance, $175 million for industrial projects in the Kitchener-Waterloo area. Why was Cambridge not designated under ILAP for industrial projects, having in mind the tremendous unemployment in that community?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the funding to which my hon. friend refers is for the total ILAP and covers all the communities designated or which could be designated. The boundaries in question are set in light of the criteria which have been publicly announced, and take into account the level of unemployment in a particular area linked with a downturn of a major industry or industries. However, we are certainly keeping the situation in a number of communities under review. The decision with respect to Kitchener and other communities related to the application of these criteria.

REASONS FOR NOT DESIGNATING CAMBRIDGE FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that in the past there has been no community which had it better in terms of employment than Cambridge, but now 17.5 per cent of the people of Cambridge are unemployed. I will ask the minister again why ILAP assistance in terms of industrial projects was not extended to my community, which certainly needs such assistance as much as Kitchener-Waterloo.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat that the review of the situations of a number of communities in light of the criteria did not indicate the result my hon. friend is calling for, but we are certainly keeping the situation under active review, and Cambridge's present situation will be very much taken into account.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Japanese auto and truck invasion of this country continues virtually unchallenged—certainly by anyone at the government level—does the minister intend to resist this invasion in some effective way, or is the unconditional surrender to continue?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I reject totally the premise of my hon. friend's question. To my knowledge the restraint level discussed with the Japanese a year ago has been met by them for the period April 1, 1981, to April 1, 1982.

We have indicated our position to the Japanese, which is that we need not only further restraint but also a level which takes into account the current situation in the industry and that a simple continuance of the present level is not acceptable to us. We are vigorously pursuing our discussions with the Japanese. There have been talks in Japan between our officials and those of Japan in the past week, and my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, will be continuing his discussions with his Japanese counterpart in Paris this coming week.

REQUEST THAT LEVEL OF IMPORTS BE REDUCED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is he not aware of the fact that tens of thousands of people in Canada are out of work, either at the manufacturing level, the parts manufacturing level, or in dealerships from coast to coast; that their associations attribute much of their problem to the heavy importation especially of Japanese autos; and that they are asking that something be done? They are not asking that the old quota be left in place but for a lower quota or some restriction to guarantee that the Japanese do not take over the 37 per cent of our market which it is now anticipated they will take over. If the Americans can get it, why can the minister not go and get a similar arrangement with the Japanese?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have indicated to the Japanese that a simple continuance of last year's restraint level is not acceptable to us, and we are carrying on vigorous discussions with the Japanese to bring about an improvement in the situation with respect to the Canadian market. My hon. friend has, in effect, admitted that the problem of our industry is not due solely to the pressure of Japanese imports. The fact is that 70 per cent to 80 per cent of our production goes to the American market. There is a very serious recession there which many people feel is brought about by policies of the Reagan administration, policies my hon. friend would like to see applied in our economy, which is something Canadians are not ready to accept.

INDUSTRY

PURCHASE OF RAILS FROM SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last week as workers ratified their new contract, Sydney Steel Corporation announced it would be closing its doors until at least mid-August because it did not have any new orders. As the minister knows, this throws 1,300 people out of work in an area where almost one in five workers cannot find a job.

The minister stated that CN had cut back its purchasing of SYSCO rails because their quality was not up to par. Considering that the only flaw in SYSCO rails was a small cracking and flaking problem which was corrected a year ago, will the minister immediately direct CN, which holds the key to SYSCO's survival, to resume its regular buying of rails from Sydney Steel?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is a rather complex situation, but I have never said that CN had stopped purchasing rails from SYSCO. As a matter of fact, CN has a program to purchase 88,000 tonnes in 1983. But the purchasing program for 1982 has come to an end, and the purchasing program for 1983 has not yet started; hence the idea that if someone wanted to pay for the storage or the pre-production of rails, activities could be resumed now. This is being considered now. The president of CN met with the Premier of Nova Scotia Friday and suggested that. So, CN is quite willing to accommodate. As I said, this is being considered. The question then is, is it better to take a summer lay-off and come back at a later date and produce the quantities needed by CN, or is it better to anticipate production and store it? This is being considered now with the greatest of good intention on the part of CN.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I hope the minister realizes that if Sydney Steel has to wait for two more years, it may not be in operation by that time. That is what is so bad.

CONSTRUCTION OF COKE OVENS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The joint federal-provincial study done in advance of the current business plan determined that the installation of new coke ovens would mean that Cape Breton coal could economically be converted into coke for export. Since the market for coke is expected to improve substantially next year, will the government, in co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia, begin to speed up the construction of such ovens so that two key industries in Cape Breton would be ready to take advantage of the upturn in the coke market, and laid off workers at SYSCO could have jobs now building those coke ovens?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the agreement announced last June involved the contribution by the federal government of some 80 per cent of the $90 million required for the modernization of SYSCO, and the agreement represented the consensus between the federal and provincial governments and SYSCO management on the most effective course of action to modernize SYSCO facilities. SYSCO is a provincial Crown corporation and is responsible for its management and direction, but in spite of that I will be happy to examine the possibility and the practicality of moving ahead on the coke aspect of the plan, and I will be happy to provide further information as soon as I complete that work.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT WHITE PAPER ON SALES TAX BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. I wonder if he could advise the House whether it is the intention of the government to refer the white paper on the federal sales tax change to the wholesale level, produced by the Minister of Finance, to a special parliamentary committee so that people interested in this issue could give evidence publicly to Parliament about the effect of the tax change on the consumer price index and on the level of income likely to be generated by the tax change?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not have such a reference in mind but I will consider the request made by the hon. member and talk about it to the Minister of Finance.

LEVEL OF TAX PAID BY CONSUMERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Minister of State (Finance) in the absence of the Minister of Finance. How could the government, in preparing that white paper, possibly contemplate that the level of tax paid by consumers would be reduced, in view of the fact that the tax charged to major retailers is increased to 9.2 per cent and that consumers buy a great number of those items from major retailers, so that clearly the tax paid by consumers will be vastly increased? Could the minister advise the House where the concept of a reduced tax impact comes in light of those facts?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in the previous question, the hon. member made a suggestion to the President of the Privy Council, to the effect that the paper which has been published about changing the excise tax from the manufacturer's to the wholesale level be considered by a standing committee. The hon. member knows quite well that the legislation in its final form will be dealt with by that committee. We will then have every opportunity for a comprehensive study of the effects and the why and the how of such a change and of the procedure which is to be followed to reduce it for example from 9 per cent to 8 per cent without further impact on government revenues.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—COMPENSATION FOR HOME OWNERS NOT COVERED BY LEGISLATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for housing which is related to the question put by the hon. member for Oshawa. We now know what the government's response is to compensation for the health victims of urea formaldehyde foam insultation. That only covers part of it. The minister knows that this whole problem arises out of CMHC granting a licence for urea formaldehyde to be used for insulation under the CHIP program.

Has CMHC, or the minister, or the government considered any further compensation for the 80 per cent of people who will not qualify for compensation under the bill today who find their homes being depreciated in value, who find they cannot sell their homes, and who find they are having difficulty getting conventional mortgages on their homes? What is the minister's response to the plight of those people?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member ought to know that in Canada there is no legislation governing the manufacture of goods. The only government-approved products on the market are drugs. All other goods are marketed freely. We live in a free-enterprise society, and the manufacturer markets his products at his own risk.

The hon. member seems to want to make the government shoulder a responsibility it never had, and does not have now, for this product. It is true that the government accepted a certain number of products for insulation purposes, but it has never recommended a specific product to any home owner, whatever the Leader of the Opposition may say. There was a list of acceptable products, and it was up to each individual to select a product from the list in order to participate in the home insulation program, and I think it is important that the hon. member should understand this distinction.

[English]

ROLE OF CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister responsible for housing. Did Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation approve or grant a permit for urea formaldehyde foam to be used under the government's CHIP program? If the answer is in the affirmative, does this not place an obligation on the government and on Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to assist in some way those who do not qualify for compensation and who are now stuck with homes that they cannot sell or on which they cannot get mortgages?

Mr. Nielsen: NRC told you not to use it.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am surprised the hon. member is repeating questions that were already asked several months ago and all of which we answered in committee. The hon. member should take an interest in the work of parliamentary committees. If he is so concerned about UFFI victims, he should have been present when these issues were being discussed in committee. He was not, and his claims that we did not answer those questions are absurd.

Madam Speaker, I can say that the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation never approved this product. The Corporation accepted about 100 insulation products for the purposes of the program, but it never gave any guarantees for any of them. On the contrary, it required manufacturers to ensure that the product was made to special standards, to provide better insulating protection. A standard for this product was developed at the specific request of representatives of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The hon. member must remember that the standards set by the Canadian General Standards Board are not compulsory but voluntary, and that it is up to the companies to observe these standards.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

LOSS OF "RAMSEY ISLE" FISHING VESSEL—REPORTED ABSENCE OF COASTGUARD VESSELS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and refers to the capability of the coast guard on B.C.'s coast. Confidence in Canada's search and rescue capability on the B.C. coast is seriously low following the loss of four lives from the Ramsey Isle fishing vessel. The Nuu-chahnulth tribal council's fishermen's association has gone as far as saying that the coast guard search and rescue capability is totally inadequate.

Considering that the coast guard's primary responsibility is for search and rescue, and that the Department of National Defence is the co-ordinating body for the Victoria Rescue Co-ordinating Centre, could the minister explain why there were no coast guard vessels or Department of National Defence vessels taking part in searching for the Ramsey Isle? Only two patrol vessels from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and one research vessel from that department, were involved in that very serious search.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I wish I knew all the details of that unfortunate accident, but I really do not know if the ships that participated in the rescue operation belonged to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or the Department of Transport. I apologize for not knowing that in detail.

Be that as it may, I do not think it matters very much in the sense that, for rescue operations, it is a joint effort of the Department of National Defence which has the major responsibility, my department, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and others. I do not think my hon. friend should pay too much attention to the origin of the entity taking part in the rescue operation. I do not think it matters one bit.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE HELD

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I think it matters vey much in this case because the search was not successful. There are a lot of questions about why it was not successful. Fishermen and others in British Columbia, including recreational boaters, would like to know the answer.

I wonder if the minister would consider following up on the coroner's inquiry into the deaths of the four fishermen on the Ramsey Isle? Would he consider having a public inquiry into the sinking and the efforts made by the various government departments? Rather than considering that the search and rescue capability should be a second or third priority of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, would the minister consider upgrading the coast guard facilities and equipment on the British Columbia coast so that it is the first priority of the coast guard? That is the co-ordinating body that calls in the equipment and manpower. This action is necessary to make sure that we do not have similar loss of lives in British Columbia as the result of the unco-ordinated activities of the government.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is far from generally accepted. My hon. friend seems to have a poor opinion of the coast guard or the rescue operation jointly carried on by the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport.

An hon. Member: A poor opinion of you.

Mr. Pepin: I thank you very much for that compliment. I return it with great generosity.

The hon. member's view is not public opinion, far from it. My friend is asking for an inquiry on the subject of the Ramsey Isle. I will look into it and see if it is justified. On the subject of the upgrading of coast guard equipment, the government is allocating more and more money to search and rescue. We have just approved, in cabinet committee, the program for this coming year where a number of ships, four, if I remember, are assigned to the west coast. I will be pleased to write to my hon. friend and demonstrate the progress being made on the west coast.

Accidents will happen. Obviously there is no way in the world that ships can be stationed at so many tens of miles from each other on a coast line 18,000 miles long.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last night on the CBC program "The Nation's Business", the minister, for the first time since October, 1980, had some good news for Canada on energy policy, which was that the National Energy Program would be changed. What changes does the minister have in mind and when might we expect an announcement?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am extremely pleased to see that I have such a good listener in my friend, the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I am sure he learned a lot of things during the four minutes that the statement lasted.

Mr. Nielsen: Somebody has to watch you.

Mr. Lalonde: I want to tell him that indeed we have made several changes since the publication of the National Energy Program last year. Changes were contained in the agreements with the provinces, and were made subsequently with regard to projects that were eligible for the new oil reference price. There were several announcements in the last six months in that regard. As the situation evolves and conditions dictate, further changes will be made.

I have indicated this government is committed to energy security for Canadians, greater ownership and control by Canadians, and a fair deal for consumers. These are our objectives from which we will not budge. As far as making sure the program is adapted to circumstances is concerned, we have made changes in the past and we will continue to make some in the future.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, if the minister is interested in making changes which will really help, he will scrap the whole program and that will go further toward accomplishing those goals.

IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Can the minister at least tell the House whether he will be changing the ridiculous import compensation program which results in taxes collected from Canadian consumers being used to subsidize imported oil to the point where Canadian production is shut in, thereby costing Canadians jobs and a lot of unnecessary expenditure by Canadian consumers? Will he at least change that part of the NEP?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member does not endorse the objectives of the National Energy Program, which enjoys the support of most Canadians. It is always the same story with the Tories: they are living in bygone days and are completely out of pace with current events.

Concerning the specific change which the hon. member has proposed, I should like to remind him that the purpose of the import compensation program which has been in operation since 1974, is to ensure that Canadian consumers do not have to pay more for imported than for domestic oil. It is a consumer protection program which is of paramount importance, especially to Eastern Canada, the Atlantic provinces and Quebec as well.

I should like to remind the hon. member also that wells in Western Canada have been shut-in for many years because of cyclical factors, to which they must adapt. In late April, I announced steps to support the industry in Western Canada and ensure the highest level of productivity from the oil fields in that area. We are already receiving indications of progress in this regard and I am sure that within the next few months there will be a considerable reduction of the shut-in wells in Western Canada.

LOSS OF THE "RAMSEY ISLE"—USE OF DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT HELICOPTERS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to the Minister of Transport. I doubt whether he will be able to tell me today, but I would ask him to take it as notice and provide a written answer. There are a number of Department of Transport helicopters based in Victoria, B.C. In view of the number of days the search continued, did those helicopters take part, or were they off on other duties when life was at stake?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think I should add to the remarks made by the Minister of Transport on the Ramsey Isle question and other side search and rescue incidents. As far as the Ramsey Isle is concerned, I can assure the hon. member we have on record 100 hours of air search and 124 hours of ship search. As you remember, this was in the area where the annual herring roe fishery was taking place and all facilities with the capability of search and rescue in the area were advised to be on the lookout for the Ramsey Isle.

Also, I can assure the hon. member that the search and rescue budget has been approved by cabinet with quite a good percentage improvement in it, both for capital equipment and operational items. I can assure the hon. member that co-ordination between my department and the Department of Transport is very close, and when things like this happen it is a priority with our departments to see that we save as many lives as possible.

THE LATE HONOURABLE SENATOR HARRY HAYS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have just been told that the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), who was to rise at this point to pay tribute to Senator Harry Hays, whose funeral will be held today, as you know, will not be here to perform that duty. So I rise to fill in for him, because, among other reasons, I sat in Cabinet with Mr. Hays during the years 1965-66.

As everyone knows, Senator Hays had quite a remarkable career both as a politician and a businessman. As a politician, he was mayor of Calgary for three or four years before being elected to this House where he sat from 1963 to 1966, if I remember correctly, as member for Calgary South and minister of agriculture. In 1966, he was elevated to the Senate.

In business as in politics, Senator Hays—

[English]

He showed great qualities of originality, of boldness, of inventiveness, as a cattleman in particular. He will remain a legendary figure in the development of that industry in Canada.

Besides these qualities which he had in great abundance, he had a lovely sense of humour. Just on the spur of the moment I can remember two of his interesting remarks. One day in this House, he coined the phrase, which is probably in Colombo today, "Statistics are for losers." On another occasion he said, "The greatest form of culture is agriculture."

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: This good humour was part of his trademark. For all the many services that he rendered to his country, we want to praise him today. As we all know, the most recent service he rendered was that of being co-chairman of the House of Commons and Senate Special Joint Committee on the Constitution with the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal). I am sure the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve regrets not being here today to pay homage to the late Senator Hays.

To the senator's family, to the people of Calgary and to the people of Alberta in particular, we express our deep regrets.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I very much appreciate the action of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in giving the House of Commons the opportunity to pay homage to the memory of the late Harry Hays. I do so in several capacities—as an Albertan, as Leader of the Opposition and as someone who had the honour of being a friend of the Hays family and the senator for at least the last 20 years. In fact, for a period of time he was a constituent of mine. One of his services, which we can perhaps attribute to his sense of humour, was that he always voted in the city of Calgary rather than at his ranch in my constituency. That was certainly something I appreciated.

He was, as the Minister of Transport said, a man not only of great good humour but also highly innovative. He was a man of boldness and of broad vision. That boldness and broad vision showed through in the many activities in which he not only engaged but excelled. Those of us in Alberta knew him as a rancher. He was not an ordinary rancher, but one of the few in the history of our country who actually developed a new beef breed, the Hays converter, which was developed on his ranch west of High River.

He was a very successful mayor of the city of Calgary at an important time in the life of the city. He was an aggressive and successful businessman. He was respected on all sides of this House of Commons and he served vigorously in the Senate. Throughout his life he was a highly innovative man, a man who was prepared to break new ground and who had the courage to follow the paths that he opened.

Certainly on behalf of myself and my colleagues here I want to express our appreciation to his wife Muriel, to his son Dan and to his grandchildren for the service that he gave to his province, to his country and to his industry. He is a man who stood tall in a region where standing tall is admired. He stood tall and cast a shadow, I believe, that was admired right across the country. We will all miss him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on behalf of my party to express condolences to members of Senator Hays' family. His family has long been linked with agriculture in this country, especially with dairying, with auctioneering and with the livestock business. As was pointed out by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), Senator Hays was one of the few people in the history of our country to have actually succeeded in developing a new breed of livestock. He was active in both the east and the west. He developed his farm in the Calgary area. He watched the city of Calgary grow. He was part of that development as mayor and became physically part of the city, I suppose, because his home farm was largely taken over by that city.

He served as Minister of Agriculture. He moved to the Senate where he pursued the very important question of how farmers could achieve adequate returns from marketing livestock. He was very active as chairman of the Senate committee on agriculture. He was also actively involved as co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

Senator Hays was a powerful, hard-working and sincere man. He will be missed by members of this House, by members of the Senate and in farm circles right across the country.

Madam Speaker: In the name of the House of Commons I have already sent condolences to Mrs Hays and to the family of Senator Hays. I will, of course, see to it that the messages delivered in this House are sent to the family.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RETIREMENT ALLOWANCE INDEXATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-654, to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (Members of Parliament).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, you will know that retired Members of Parliament are currently entitled to unlimited indexing of their pensions after the age of 60, whether it is 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 30 per cent, depending upon the inflation rate. This bill would simply place a limit of 8 per cent per year on this indexing for members between the ages of 60 and 65 based upon the premise that it would encourage this party or any government to reduce the rate of inflation throughout Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

TRAINING OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 2,900—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State under the Education Support Program at page 32.32, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training of public servants (a) how does the department explain the 3,961 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): (a) The training of public servants—$61,615 as reported in the public accounts 79-80 should have been printed as "Consultant and Research Services". The training of public servants amounting to $9,722 was included in "Other Type of Services" and represents an increase of 541 per cent over 1978-79—$1,517.

The Canada Student Loans Program was transferred in December, 1977. Due to the transfer from the Department of Finance to this department during the fiscal year, the formulation of a training plan for the program was not finalized. Therefore costs were minimal. Costs incurred during 1979-80 represent normal training costs. The transfer of the program increased the person-years of the Education Support Program from 20 in 1978-79 to 74 in 1979-80, i.e. an increase of 270 per cent.

(b)(i) Public Service Commission training courses; (ii) reimbursement of tuition fees to employees; (iii) other course payments (books, etc.)

(c)(i) $8,190. (no contracts over $2,000), (ii) $1,266, (iii) $266.

RCMP—DATA PROCESSING SERVICES

Question No. 2,907—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at page 32.36, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to data processing services (a) how does the department explain the 2,924 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) The explanation for the increase in expenditures for data processing services, reported for 1979-80 over that reported for 1978-79, resides in the fact that prior to 1979-80 data processing services expenditures reported in public accounts only reflected costs charged to our line object 0476—data processing services. However, in 1979-80 at the direction of Government of Canada accounting, the reporting of these expenditures was expanded to cover other types of services related to data processing, thereby increasing reported expenditures over that reported in previous years.

(b) The following types of services are now (1979-80 and future years) reported in Public Accounts: (i) Data processing services, (ii) computer system design services, (iii) computer programming services, (iv) other external EDP equipment services, (v) computer software purchase and maintenance.

(c) Expenditures related to each service identified in (b) are as follows:

(i)	Data Processing Services

ARTWORK FOR DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Question No. 2,929—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the customs and excise program at page 32.23, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to artwork (a) how does the department explain the 187 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) Increase in costs is due to more projects being added on to departmental information plan.

(b) Film production, transfer and duplication services, research and writing services, graphic services, purchasing of broadcasting rights and professional narration services.

(c) National Film Board of Canada (four contracts totalling)	$55,876.55
John Doherty and Company Ltd.	4,579.00
Holman Production Services Ltd.	3,417.00
Séguin Graphics Ltd.	4,300.00

OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES—DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Question No. 2,930—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the customs and excise program at page 32.23, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department account for the 1,025 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) There is no basis for comparison between the two fiscal years under "Other types of Services" as the reporting criteria from the Receiver General Directives on Public Accounts Instructions was raised from $2,000 and over in 1978-79 to $25,000 and over in 1979-80. Thus, services which did not meet the 1979-80 reporting criteria were grouped into one category called "Other types of Services".

(b) Boarding, training, veterinarian and other services relating to the dog detector Program; armoured car services; health services; hospitality; inspection services—departmental uniform program; mailing services; photographic services; security services; shredding services; towing services; translating services.

(c) Chemical Abstracts Service	$ 2,596.00
Mr. Terrance Kehoe	22,676.58

DPW—CONTRACT BUS SERVICES

Question No. 2,933—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the accommodation program—operations and maintenance at page 32.28, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to contract bus services (a) how does the department account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) for what reason does the department require these services?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Accommodation Operating—Vote 10: Standard Object 04; Contract Business Services:

Expenditures 1978-79	Ø
Increase	$26,628

(a) and (c) The title for the service in question should read contract business services and is an account classification within the coding block to cover contracts awarded for miscellaneous types of services not specifically covered under other account classifications. Of the three payments listed below, two are improperly coded to the contract business services category. Babbco Office Services should have been coded to temporary help services and Friendly Landscaping to landscaping services. The payment to Sheppard Associates covered miscellaneous office services which could not be coded to a specific category other than contract business services.

(b) Payments of $2,000 and over to individuals included the following:

Babbco Office Services—Toronto, Ont. $6,344;
Bruce D. Sheppard Associates—London, Ont $9,000;
Reg & Paul Friendly Landscaping—Toronto, Ontario $4,425.

SHUTTLE BUS SERVICE—DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Question No. 2,936—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the taxation program at page 32.24, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to shuttle bus service (a) how does the department account for the 20 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is the list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (d) for what reason does the department require these services?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) Revenue Canada, taxation submitted a requisition to the Department of Supply and Services requesting contract coverage for shuttle bus service for fiscal years 1978-79 and 1979-80. In both instances, the lowest tender, submitted by Andy's Transfer, Ottawa was accepted.

(b) Shuttle bus service is required for the transportation of departmental personnel and small parcels between head office buildings located in the downtown core and the taxation data centre located at Confederation Heights.

(c) There is one contract only for the total amount.

(d) This service is necessary in the interest of economy, thus precluding the frequent and more expensive use of taxi service.

HONORARIA—DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Question No. 2,941—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce at page 32.16, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to honoraria (a) how does the Department account for the 117 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each honorarium of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: (a) the 117 per cent increase in expenditure in 1979-80 occurred as a result of the inclusion in this category of the per diem fees paid to the members of the Enterprise Development Board.

(b) Honoraria paid of a value more than $2,000 are as follows:

Norman Covey, Istanbul, Turkey	$3,000 Cdn. Honorary Consul
Hans Knobloch, Montevideo, Uruguay	$3,000 Cdn. Honorary Consul
Farid Toubla, Kartoum, Sudan	$2,500 U.S. Honorary Consul
W. Greenwood, Halifax, Nova Scotia	$2,800 Cdn. Enterprise Development Board
L. P. Nolet, Brome, Quebec	$5,200 Cdn. Enterprise Development Board
A.E. Palliser, Calgary, Alberta	$2,800 Cdn. Enterprise Development Board
F. Sellers, Winnipeg, Manitoba	$2,200 Cdn. Enterprise Development Board
W. L. Wardrup, East Selkirk, Manitoba	$2,400 Cdn. Enterprise Development Board

TRAINING AND EDUCATION SERVICES

Question No. 2,947—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans at page 32.12, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training and education services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): (a) The various services purchased were: safety courses, first aid training—St. John's Ambulance, PSC training courses, university fees, technical institute fees, vocational school fees, language courses, teachers and instructors on contract—instructional, post doctorate fellowships, expenses related to training—e.g. travel, course materials, etc.

(b) Contracts valued more than $2,000 were:

RCMP—Canadian fisheries enforcement course	$ 89,792
Canadian Hydrographic Association	2,590
Dartmouth Academy—French training	6,352
Nova Scotia—Department of Fisheries	4,002

DESIGN AND DISPLAY SERVICES

Question No. 2,951—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Revenue under the Customs and Excise Program at page 32.23, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to design and display services (a) what services does this entail (b) for what reason does the department require these services?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): (a) Services entailed are for the design, fabrication and supply of kiosks and publication racks; for the refurbishing of existing exhibit material, and for the production and installation of signs for a permanent exposition.

(b) These services are required for the implementation and upkeep of the departmental information program, through a permanent exposition, and through a regional travelling exhibit program.

Question No. 2,968—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in footnote No. 4 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the equipment lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What other equipment was included in this amount?

3. What use does the department make of this equipment?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. The equipment which was lost during 1979-80 consisted of items used by more than 400 officers who perform authorized surveys of an engineering or a research nature at remote locations in Quebec, Ontario, all the western provinces and the territories. All the items were inside departmental vehicles with the exception of the battery charger which was located in a maintenance room at the time of its disappearance. In one instance, the item, a radio receiver was installed in a vehicle which was stolen. The vehicle was recovered but the radio had been removed.

(a) In all cases, the local police investigations did not identify any culprit and there was no evidence of negligence on the part of any departmental employee.

(b) and (c) No.

(d) The equipment was replaced from existing departmental assets.

(e) The department has detailed procedures for the safeguarding of government materiel and employees who have custody of materiel are reminded each year that these procedures must be adhered to. Failure by a departmental employee to take all reasonable steps to protect the materiel in his custody can lead to disciplinary action. However, as no evidence of negligence was found, no new measures were introduced, the present one being sufficiently comprehensive.

2. Discard in the field ($79,293.48). This category includes the value of field equipment which was disposed of locally. This applies to equipment which is worn out through fair wear and tear or which is damaged beyond economical repair. In each case, the officer responsible for the equipment must prepare and submit a Report of Discard. Any irregularity is the subject of an investigation.

Losses in the field ($53,783.24). This category includes the value of field equipment which is accidentally destroyed or lost as a result of fire or theft. All losses are the subject of separate reports which identify the circumstances surrounding the loss. Losses of firearms and/or losses due to theft are reported to the local police for further investigation. When it is demonstrated that there is negligence on the part of any departmental employee, recovery action from the employee is initiated.

Recoverable losses ($3,689.50 of which $1,963.20 was recovered). This category includes the value of equipment lost or damaged in transit. In such cases, the department claims the value from transportation agencies. Carriers, however, do not accept full liability in some cases.

Minor discrepancies ($755.06). This category includes the value of equipment which needs to be written off as a result of clerical errors in recording transactions.

3. The equipment is used by more than 400 officers who perform authorized surveys of an engineering or a research nature. The department provides, from a central depot, the necessary supplies and equipment. There are approximately $4,000 different articles. The total value of that inventory exceeds $8 million.

SOLAR DOMESTIC HOT WATER HEATING

Question No. 3,277—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,754 which stated in part that "public tenders would be called" with regard to the installation of packaged solar domestic hot water heating in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville, were public tenders called and (a) if so, on what date, in what news media and on what date did advertisements appear (b) if not, how does the government explain this contradiction with the answer to question No. 2,754?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Public Works Canada strictly adheres to the policy of calling public or invited tenders, where appropriate, according to chapter 310, appendix F of the Treasury Board of Canada Administrative Policy Manual "Government Contracts Regulations".

(a) and (b) See reply to parliamentary question No. 3,279 answered this day.

SOLAR HOT WATER HEATING

Question No. 3,279—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were invited tenders called for the installation of solar hot water heating of a domestic nature for washrooms in the federal buildings at Brockville, Gananoque and Prescott in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) on what date were the tenders called (b) for what reason were they invited instead of publicly advertised (c) who provided the invitation list and were any political considerations involved?

2. What is the entire cost of the three installations and what is the breakdown for each installation?

3. Was a contract let for the solar hot water heating on October 30 or thereabouts and, if so, what is a list of all those who tendered and the amount of each bid, including that of the successful bidder?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. (a) The tenders were invited on October 16, 1981, and closed on October 30, 1981.

(b) Tenders were invited (instead of publicly advertised) in line with Public Works Canada policy, as the estimated costs were less than $30,000. Tenders may be invited up to $30,000.

(c) A list of local contractors from all three areas were obtained from the Property Manager. No political considerations were involved.

2. The lowest bid for the three installations was $24,995. No breakdown is available for individual installation as the contractor submitted his bid on the total cost of the combined contract.

3. A contract was awarded on November 19, 1981, and the project will be completed by end April, 1982. A list of all those who tendered and the amount of each bid is shown below.

Toshack Brothers (Prescott) Ltd.	Prescott, Ont.	$29,750

ACCOMMODATION FOR LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 3,618—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the past five years, to date, did the Department of Public Works prepare accommodation for the Library of Parliament and, if so, in which buildings?

2. How many square feet of usable space were provided in each building and what amount was spent by the department to provide each facility?

3. Were all the costs recoverable and, if not, what amount was absorbed by the department?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. In the past five years PWC prepared accommodation for the Library of Parliament in the Victoria Building and the Wellington Building (formerly the Old Metropolitan Life Building). It should be noted that temporary space was provided in December, 1981 to the Library of Parliament in the Confederation Building while their existing space on the first floor of that building is currently being modified.

2. Public Works Canada prepared the following space:

(i) Building	Date	Usable Sq. Metres	Location	Actual Fit-Up Cost
Victoria	Sept. 79	627.4 m^2	1st floor	$ 9,000	PWC
				10,500	LP
	Nov. 79	83.3 m^2	2nd floor	4,789	LP
	Apr. 80	567.2 m^2	5th floor	10,780	LP
	Oct. 81	162.4 m^2	Room 700	900	LP
			Total	$35,969

In addition, 19.4 m^2 storage space was provided in the basement in June 1981 with no fit-up cost involved.

(ii) Wellington	May 78	511 m²	Mezzanine	$ 6,650	PWC

The preparation of this space was part of the major renovation project to accommodate the House of Commons and the portion attributable to the Parliamentary Library cannot be identified precisely.

(iii) Confederation	December 81	30.2 m²	Rms 861 & 863	nil
	December 81	55.7 m²	Basement	nil

The above space was vacant and this temporary move was made by House of Commons staff with no fit-up cost involved and no expense to Public Works Canada while the existing Library space on the first floor is currently being modified.

3. No. $9,000 was absorbed by Public Works Canada. The estimated $6,650 for fit-up of the mezzanine in the Wellington building for the Library of Parliament was part of the major renovation project and was funded by Public Works Canada. The modifications now in progress to 145 m² of Library of Parliament space on the first floor of the Confederation Building are estimated to cost $55,000 and will be recoverable from the House of Commons.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF GRANGE REPORT

Question No. 4,110—Mr. Mazankowski:

Did the Department of Transport accept the Grange Report's recommendation requiring publication of reports of inspectors called to railway accident scenes together with the results of research investigations and, if so, in the past two years (a) on what dates and at what locations were inspectors called to accidents (b) on what dates were the respective reports published and on what dates will those still outstanding be presented (c) how many times did "hot-box" detectors discover overheated axle bearings or wheels and at what locations and on what dates did these occurrences take place?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: (a) and (b) Section 226 (of Railway Act) inquiry reports, of officers called to railway accidents, have been and are available. See list of dates and locations of such accidents for the year 1980, 1981 and 1982 to date. Also shown on the list are the dates the reports were either published or expected to be available.

In addition to the section 226 inquiries, CTC officers attended the scenes of several hundred other accidents in each year and submitted the customary accident information report, with conclusions and, if necessary, recommendations. These reports are available to anyone upon request.

(c) This information is not readily available. Regulations are not yet in place requiring the railways to report these incidents to the CTC. The railways however do keep records at their Divisional Offices of the read-outs from the "hot-box" detectors located on their track. These detectors identify overheated journals and dragging equipment but are not designed to detect overheated wheels. However, "add-ons" are being applied to existing detectors and to new detectors to detect hot wheels.

TRANSITION TEAM

Question No. 4,182—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

What is the size and budget of the transition team, as outlined on pages 7 and 8 of "1982-83 estimates, part III, secretariat expenditure plan, Solicitor General of Canada," which was set up to prepare recommendations for the establishment of a civilian security intelligence service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Treasury Board has approved 15 person-years and a budget of $991,000 for the transition team. This approval is for a nine-month period ending December 31, 1982.

EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 4,216—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General for the correctional services at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1980-81 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. (a) and (b) The guidelines that were used are contained in the following two documents: "Developmental Leave Policy" for the Correctional Service of Canada and Treasury Board's personnel management manual, chapter 110-5; Conditions governing educatin, training and subsidization.

2. (a), (b) and (c) Nil.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 2,884 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 2,884 shall be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DPW—CARETAKING SERVICES

Question No. 2,884—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the accommodation program—operations and maintenance at page 32.28, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to caretaking services (a) how does the department explain the 376 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO SHORTEN PERIOD REQUIRED TO HOLD ELECTIONS

The House resumed from Friday, April 30, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would like to continue the remarks I initiated on third reading of Bill C-58 when I was so unceremoniously cut off by the clock after a minute or two.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) stated on that day that Bill C-58, which we are discussing, is almost identical to Bill C-21 which was tabled by the Progressive Conservative government on November 5, 1979. With the compromise worked out in committee which would see the election period run for 50 days as opposed to 47 days, as Bill C-58 originally intended, the President of the Privy Council is quite correct. However, he failed to mention on April 30 that the shortening of the election period is merely an isolated amendment to the Canada Elections Act and that when we introduced Bill C-21 it was within the wider spectrum of parliamentary reform, which I might add hon. members opposite have sadly neglected.

The bankruptcy of the party governing the country has been made especially evident by the events of this session. There has been considerable discussion and controversy in past weeks on the subject of omnibus bills. We witnessed some two months ago the reckless attempt of government to roll many different bills into one piece of legislation. The people of Canada know what happened to the government on that one.

Today we are witnessing a further example of government incompetence. It has before the House Bill C-58 to amend the Canada Elections Act, with specific reference to the length of the election period. The government is focusing the attention of the House on one isolated provision of the Canada Elections Act, when in fact the utilization of an omnibus bill to amend other just as important provisions of the Canada Elections Act would be highly desirable.

I am referring specifically to the statutory reports of the Chief Electoral Officer and his recommendation concerning required amendments to the Canada Elections Act. The recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer have been sorely neglected by the present government. Why did the government not incorporate into Bill C-58 other recommendations which should be receiving the attention of the House today? Why are we not debating other amendments? Also we should be looking at the deletion of the present provision in the act concerning the posting of preliminary lists of electors. In my South Shore riding in Nova Scotia, the practice of posting in a public place a preliminary list of electors is causing great concern, especially to those people living alone who risk the consequence of public disclosures of their name, sex, occupation, marital status and address.

In addition, today in the House I say that we should be looking at recommendations concerning third party advertising in an election campaign, the sale of alcoholic beverages on election day, the identification of printers and publishers on printed campaign advertisements, and a host of other recommendations too numerous to mention.

If the President of the Privy Council would like the detail of those amendments to the Canada Elections Act which we should be debating in concert with shortening the election period, I refer him to the 1974, 1979 and 1980 statutory reports of the Chief Electoral Officer which he apparently received but chose to ignore totally. The spirit within which we introduced Bill C-21 encompassed the reform of this institution which, in my 25 years as a sitting member, I can honestly say is desperately needed.

In 1979 we intended to introduce reform in keeping with the basic principles of parliamentary government but would have also seen the House become a more agressive representative body of the Canadian people. I do not believe that the House by itself should govern. However, I strongly assert that it should be able to check and balance those who do. If the House of Commons exists to represent the people of Canada and to legitimize the rule of the executive, it must receive the necessary tools to pursue that type of mandate.

I think it is imperative to note that although we have all heard the rhetoric of hon. members opposite, we have not yet seen any proposals for parliamentary reform come forward. Specifically, since 1980 we have not seen proposals which would govern the length of sessions, proposals which would fix the date for recesses, proposals which would hold ministers accountable for their actions in previous portfolios if those ministers were the only ones who could address the issues in question, or proposals which would more adequately allow time for private members' bills and motions. Most seriously, we have not seen proposals which would bring before the House debate on the current system of redistribution.

The Chief Statistician has released the 1981 census figures to the Chief Electoral Officer and the clock has started on the redistribution process. According to the calculations completed by the Chief Electoral Officer, the total number of seats in the House of Commons will increase from 282 to 310. These new seats will take effect in any federal election after October, 1984. The province of Ontario is to receive ten new seats; Quebec, four new seats; Manitoba, one new seat; British Columbia, five seats; Alberta, six seats; Newfoundland, one seat; and my native province of Nova Scotia will also receive one seat under the system.

Under the current system of redistribution, the government is quite content to let the House distend, inflate, and be bloated into what I call an unmanageable monstrosity. This is what will happen here. The origin of the redistribution system, the amalgam method, bears some investigation and comment.

The Representation Act, 1974, fathered by none other than the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), came into force following the redistribution of 1971. This act was a temporary stop-gap measure which would among other things secure the seat of the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, if it did nothing else. A specific provision of the Representation Act, 1974, recognizing its temporary status, required the House subsequently to review the formula for setting the number of new seats and for distributing them among the provinces.

In 1979 the Progressive Conservative government intended to follow up this review. A detailed discussion paper had been prepared to deal with the question of restraining the number of federal representatives. However, following 1980, the present government has not yet had the courage to continue with that particular investigation. I say that with some sadness. Instead, we are left with a representative scheme which I submit will cost Canadian taxpayers an untold number of dollars and will make a mockery of this institution. Not surprisingly, the government intends to solve the problems associated with a burgeoning House of Commons through negligence. But I should like to tell the House today exactly what hon. members opposite are ignoring and to outline the potential for catastrophe if the representative scheme is allowed to run roughshod over the House and the country.

In less than 20 years the Canadian electorate can expect the House to expand to the ludicrous number of 375 members. In 1979 it was estimated that every member in the House incurs a cost to taxpayers of $140,000 in personal and staff salaries. My calculations indicate that these 93 new members in 2001 will result in a taxpayer expenditure based conservatively upon 1979 estimates of a minimum of over $13 million. This is for new members only. If we add that $13 million to the cost of the existing 282 members, it will be a figure of $53 million, all to be borne by the taxpayers of the country.

We must ask ourselves whether indeed there is a need for any more new members. That is the real question. Quite frankly, I concur with the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who is in his seat. He stated that the membership of the House should be frozen at its present 282 total. Canada is already one of the most overgoverned countries in the world.

I think it should be pointed out to those who claim that we should increase our membership because countries like Britain have a larger House than we do that Canada is governed under a federal system. Not only do our taxpayers financially support federal representatives; provincial legislatures also exist and those provincial members must be paid out of the public purse as well.

Perhaps it bears repeating to hon. members opposite that Canada has hit an economic decline. If they are not aware of that, I will repeat that Canada has hit an economic decline. To my memory, it is the worst that this country has seen in the past 40 years.

I say to the House that we do not need more members. What we do need, however, is more members who are willing to work harder. We who sit in this chamber are the elected representatives of the people. We have their trust and I submit that we should be here to set an example so that when hard times hit we are not insulated from the economic woes that are facing this country.

In the years that I have been in Ottawa I have come to believe that this is probably the most insulated city in Canada and I would go so far as to say it is the most insulated city in the entire world. Wherever you turn here, everything seems to be subsidized. For example, the National Arts Centre was built at a cost exceeding $50 million and apparently could not keep its door open without a federal subsidy. It received $10 million in 1980 and I note in this year's estimates that it will receive a subsidy of $15.797 million, almost $16 million just to see the show when there are people in this nation who will not even see the building. This subsidy is mainly for the benefit of the comfortable, insulated bureaucrats who live here in Ottawa.

The CBC is an example of another comfortable group. In 1980 the CBC was subsidized to the approximate amount of $579 million. When I look in the estimates books for this year I see a subsidy of $737.396 million. That is over $14 million a week. When I first came to Ottawa I remember speaking out about the CBC subsidy, which at that time was $52 million a year. I bitterly complained that $1 million a week was too much. It has now risen to $14 million a week in that brief period of time.

Where will it all end? When I quote figures such as those I must ask what the government is doing to set an example which would indicate that it is willing to face up to economic realities. Although this principle of calling for restraint by every Canadian is a noble one, it is a one-way street for those sitting on the government side of the House. It is a one-way street for cabinet who can, without flinching, earmark and approve the purchase of Petrofina at a cost estimated at between $365 million and $486 million more than was necessary to purchase it. But what did the government purchase? It acquired a chain of gas stations in eastern Canada. Did this make one more gallon of gasoline available to Canadians? I submit that we did not even get an ounce. Canadians will be paying dearly for at least the next 20 years for the blunder which was made by this government on that one transaction.

When my constituents write to me to ask, "Where is the money going? Why am I being taxed into bankruptcy?", I want them to know at least some of the reasons by illustrating them in my speech today.

This government has a perverted sense of equity which, I might add, is in keeping with its shoddy record of economic management. It is willing to spend over $250 million this year on self-serving advertising and publications in order to shore up its own image, while at the same time letting small businessmen and the home owners of this country go broke.

More dangerous still, I submit, is the destruction of moral values, the breakdown of the home and the sense of frustration, hopelessness and despair faced by 1¼ million Canadians who are presently unemployed. This government is obviously ready recklessly to allow this House to expand in numbers which will curtail the ability of this House to be an effective voice of the people and will at the same time incur a greater cost to Canadian taxpayers.

I repeat again that we are here not only to represent our electors but to set an example for those we represent as the elected representatives of this country. We must all realize that there is a burden to be carried and if it means that we and our successors must represent a larger constituency, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, so be it. Not one of us should refuse to carry a heavier workload. We should be making a contribution to lessen the expenditures made to this government by the taxpayers.

This government forgets that it is not spending its own money, because it has none. I wish that the executive members of the government would remember that the government has no money and it is spending the taxpayers' money which is given to it in trust and in the hope that it will spend it wisely.

There are young, middle-aged and senior Canadians who are hurting today because of mismanagement by the present administration. If the burden imposed on them by this government can be lessened by not increasing the number of members in the House, I submit that that should be done. It can only be done by the executive and other members on that side of the House who support this government. It can only be done if they agree that this bill should be withdrawn.

Through the withdrawal of this bill, the government would indicate that it is not speaking pure rhetoric when it addresses the House or calls for restraint. It would indicate that it is at least making one move in good faith. It would be a gesture which would save millions of taxpayers' dollars and in the long run prevent further difficulties for members who represent the Canadian people. Members would have an adequate opportunity to represent their electors in the House.

The removal of this bill would be a good decision. Already members on the opposition side of the House have difficulty in making the needs of our people known in the chamber. Today, for example, one just has to see how many opposition members were recognized in the question period. I am not condemning anyone because the Speaker does her best, but if the size of the House is increased as proposed by this bill, there will be even less opportunity to present the views, needs and aspirations of the people we represent. It will be more difficult to speak in the chamber. It is for those reasons, and for many others I could give if time permitted, that this bill should be withdrawn.

Members on the other side of the House should be prepared to work harder and for a larger constituency. We on this side are prepared to follow that course. The sooner hon. members opposite come to their senses and take some responsibility of the state of the House of Commons and the state of this country, the better it will be for all Canadians.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate at the third reading stage of Bill C-58. Before I commence, I would like to make one or two comments on the remarks just made by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse).

While I do appreciate his concern that the membership of this chamber will get bigger and bigger according to some ancient formula that was agreed to many years ago, indeed generations ago, I would also like to remind the hon. member that we have somewhat of a dilemma on our hands. If we do not expand the number of members in this House, it therefore means that our constituencies will get larger and larger. I have nothing against larger constituencies personally; I have a very small constituency geographically, although in terms of population I have one of the larger ones in the country.

Does the hon. member for South Shore fully appreciate what this could conceivably lead to? It could lead to a situation, not one which obtains in the United Kingdom but which obtains south of our own border in the United States, where the average electoral district at the House of Representatives level comprises about a quarter of a million voters. Consequently, congressmen to whom I have spoken constantly lament the fact that they can never get to know their constituents. They each represent anywhere from a quarter of a million to half a million people at the House level in the United States. That is the average.

Apart from the fact that it costs maybe half a million dollars or a million dollars to get re-elected through their electoral system, they then must make their presence felt in their electoral districts through a whole army of assistants who are financed by the taxpayers. The minimum number of assistants in the constituency or electoral district of one congressman in the United States is 14. I believe most of us have only one. Some of us may have two part-time or three part-time assistants, depending on the nature of our ridings. Does the hon. member for South Shore suggest that by keeping the numbers down in this chamber, some day we will have 10, 12 or 15 assistants in the constituency in order to help us with our work there? I see that he is shaking his head in the negative. I did not think that was what he meant.

Also, congressmen in the U.S. each have at least a minimum of eight assistants in their Washington offices. I am quite sure we do not want to reach that level here. However, I started out by saying that it was a dilemma. It is a dilemma because I personally do not want to see this chamber getting any bigger than it is. In fact, I like the British House. I like Westminster where there is a very small chamber, debate is kept at a very intimate level, and only those members who are directly involved in a debate sit in the chamber at that time. The debates at Westminster are very informal. They are very exciting at times. It is not a huge chamber; it is an intimate area in which to debate. It was that great Tory, Winston Churchill, who argued, after the bombing of the House of Commons in London in World War II, that we should not build a new, bigger one, but rather we should build a new one which was in fact smaller than the previous one in order to retain that intimacy. I do not think distribution or redistribution is even considered in this bill and I do not know why we have gone off on this tangent. However, I thought I would very briefly respond to the hon. member for South Shore.

There are four basic compromises or agreements in Bill C-58. Therefore, I doubt very much whether we will protract this debate much longer this afternoon. First, it makes the minimum period of time for an election 50 days. We have been accustomed to minimum election periods of 60, 62 or 65 days which, in modern times, is far too long. With the electronic media that we have at our disposal today, with jet planes which can jet leaders from one end of the country to the other in a matter of four or five hours, it is nonsense to say that a minimum election period must be 60 days.

The original draft of the bill stated that we would have a minimum period of 47 days. Some of us felt that that was far too short, so the steering committee and the committee itself arrived at a compromise whereby elections would be a minimum of 50 days.

Another aspect of Bill C-58 which is worthy of note is that nomination day will now be uniform and it will be "E" day minus 28, or 28 days before election day. This gave the committee some concern. We heard representations from a few hon. members who represent very large geographic areas of the country. Their ridings are very large and they have what I think they call mobile nomination meetings, or travelling shows, as I believe someone referred to them. There is some legitimate concern in very large areas of the country, very large ridings, where a series of nomination meetings are held and there may be three or four days between each meeting.

However, the committee did agree that 28 days should be long enough because what we should keep in mind is that what we are discussing here is not a limit of 28 days. That is the minimum period. Any constituency organization of any party worth its salt will get its incumbent member renominated well before 28 days prior to an election, and those which do not have incumbent members are not worth their salt unless they, too, hold nomination meetings well in advance of the election call. Consequently, there is no law prohibiting a political party from nominating a candidate months in advance or, indeed, even years in advance of an election. I see no problem there unless the incumbent member should decide at the last moment not to run again in one of those very large geographic electoral districts, or the incumbent member or the nominated candidate in that campaign takes seriously ill and cannot run and must withdraw at the last moment or, most sadly of all, if the candidate or the incumbent member should die, which would mean that a nomination meeting would have to be immediately organized. That is one consideration which still bothers me and I know it bothers some other hon. members as well. Nonetheless, the committee has agreed to let the 28 day minimum period go by.

Another good aspect of Bill C-58 is that it extends the voting period at the electoral officer's office from two weeks to three weeks for those who will be away on election day, excluding, of course, those days on which an advance poll will be held. Therefore, it gives the voters an extra week in which to vote at the returning officer's office. We are in agreement with that aspect.

A fourth aspect of Bill C-58 is that it extends the enumeration period from four days to seven days, and I think that is certainly a positive move. It also allows for at least one enumeration day to be on a weekend, preferably, I think, the Saturday of the two days, or it could be Sunday, I am not quite sure. In the past, we have found that in big urban areas, even in certain sections of a riding like mine, particularly where there are many apartment buildings, couples work during the week and this provision will allow the enumerators to get around and see them on a Saturday morning, or even on a Saturday evening.

While I am referring to enumerations, I must say that I am still concerned at the sloppiness of enumeration in this country. I am not pointing my finger at any one person or office with regard to sloppiness. I mentioned it in committee. I am not satisfied that all the people who are eligible to vote get on the voters' list; I think we all know they do not. I am not satisfied that all those who are not allowed to be on the voters' list are, indeed, excluded from the voters' list. I do not know how to toughen up enumeration. I certainly do not want to see enumerators going into homes and demanding I.D.s, citizenship papers, proof of age and so on. That smacks too much of authoritarianism. Certainly, though, we will have to take a new look at enumeration to ensure that those who are eligible to vote are on the list and that those who are not eligible to vote are not on the list.

There are many other reforms much more important than Bill C-58 which should be brought on stream and put on the Order Paper just as soon as it is humanly possible. With all due respect, we have wasted two years in election reform which, I think, was a major issue in the 1980 election. It was certainly mentioned from one end of the country to the other. In two years all we have really come up with is Bill C-58. We have not touched upon redistribution. We have not touched upon enumeration. We have not touched upon mobile balloting for those who are physically incapable or find it physically difficult to get to the polls, yet the report of the special committee on the disabled brought that in as one of their foremost recommendations.

I know the parliamentary secretary has undertaken to ensure that such legislation will be forthcoming, but time is beginning to run out. If it will require the same kind of time frame to bring in these other reforms, redistribution and mobile balloting for the physically infirm as well as better enumeration laws and the whole question of time, with four and half different time zones in this country, how much longer will it take to bring in these much needed and more important reforms than the four mentioned in Bill C-58?

We must impress upon the government that after the Chief Electoral Officer's report comes in on the eve of the next session, which I presume will be early next fall, that draft legislation should be put before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for our consideration so that these electoral reforms will be in place well in advance of the next election, which I anticipate will probably be two years from this spring, although a lot of Liberal backbenchers would prefer the spring of 1985 for obvious reasons that have nothing to do with election reform.

Mr. McKinnon: You mean 1995.

Mr. Blackburn: That would probably help them more, but it would not help the country.

There is an important point I would encourage the parliamentary secretary to bring to the attention of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in drafting new legislation, and that is the whole question of polls during election campaigns. We had a debate in this House, in which I took part, on a private member's bill with respect to polls during election campaigns. I am opposed to them and think they should be done away with. People should be able to think for themselves during election campaigns. Polls are destructive and negative. They give supporters of all parties either a false sense of security or false direction on how to plan their election campaign.

These are some of the reforms I would like to see brought on stream by the government as quickly as possible. I mentioned the four main parts of Bill C-58. I sincerely hope that passing this bill today will indicate to the government the willingness of those on this side, and they will ensure that these other reforms are brought in as soon as the Chief Electoral Officer's report is given to the government early this fall.

With those remarks, I look forward to more creative work in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we can update our election laws and bring some of them at least into the 1980s.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is again a privilege to have the opportunity to bring to this House of Commons some of the thoughts I gathered over the several months preceding the redistribution process that we are now undertaking. I am disappointed that the government did not take this period of time to bring in the type of election reform mentioned by the two previous speakers. The government is really missing the boat by not doing something like that during this period. Both the spokesman for the government and the Chief Electoral Officer stated that they did not think the next election would be fought on the redistributed boundaries. This is why we are going through this exercise.

Surely we learned our lesson in the 1972-74 period and prior to the 1974 election. Suspension law was brought in and that election was fought on old boundaries. We are going to go through the same thing again in 1984, yet we are still putting people in the field. Orders have gone out, the law has to be abided by, the Chief Electoral Officer's hands are tied and he cannot do anything about it. This is not only a useless exercise, but costly.

If the government had wanted to be responsible on this issue, it would have taken this period of time that apparently will be available and brought in some of these measures which are fundamental to the House of Commons. We do not need to make this House larger; I am sure there are ways and means of making it more effective. Increasing the membership in this House will not accomplish that.

I have always maintained that Canadians are the most overgoverned people in the world. We in Canada have over a thousand elected or appointed officials to govern 25 million people. The best example I can give is the United Kingdom which has 635 members for 57 million people.

I was pleased with the very good discussion we had in committee on my private member's bill, C-223. The witnesses who appeared before that committee represented a fairly broad spectrum of our society. We were told that unless we exercise some control in the immediate future, the whole thing will explode and there will be too many chiefs for the number of people we have. We have to look at this.

The current formula for reapportioning seats in the House of Commons is basically unrealistic. It does not take a great mathematician to figure out what the size of the House will be in 10, 20, 30, 40 or 50 years when every ten years the size of the House goes up by 10 per cent or more. This cumulative effect will be disastrous down the road. Now is the time to do something about it.

Canada is overgoverned compared with other countries in the world. We have at least three levels of government in every city, town, village and crossroads hamlet in this country. In some jurisdictions where there is a metro or regional form of government, there are four levels of government. In Ottawa there are five with the National Capital Commission, it being the non-elected fifth tier of government.

In most European states there is a pure federal or unity form of government. There are no levels in between the municipalities and the central government. If you look, Mr. Speaker, at the statistics in Europe—France, Britain, Germany and others—you will see there are far fewer lawmakers, far fewer legislators and far fewer politicians representing far more constituents, far more voters.

Increasing the size of the membership of the House of Commons will do little or nothing to bring about the reform of government which is so desperately needed in this country. It will serve only to dilute the powers and functions of members of Parliament. For years this country functioned with fewer than 250 Members of Parliament. The size was increased to 264 and then expanded to 282.

The present formula, a 1974 amendment to the British North America Act, has so far shown us that it is a cumbersome and unworkable piece of arithmetic. We know how long it takes to put the reapportionment in place. We know that as soon as it is in place, it is obsolete and redundant.

Redistribution is supposed to follow every ten-year census, but by the time the draftsmen and the bureaucrats have the new boundaries and numbers in place, they are outdated and do not have any built-in checks for areas of rapid growth. Certainly this is what is happening in my province. Under the present system, at any given time we are entitled to anywhere from three to five members more than we have, but we are willing to change that. As soon as a province experiencing a high growth rate has its seats reapportioned, it is almost immediately underrepresented and must wait another ten years before any alterations can take place. The 1981 census figures have only recently been available to the Chief Electoral Officer and, by law, he has to set the machinery in motion to redistribute electoral boundaries across Canada. On the basis of the experience of the 1970s, we can rest assured that the new boundaries will not be in place for the next federal election. They will be in place for the federal election we will have at the end of this decade; by that time they will again be outdated, and a year or two later the same process will begin anew.

Surely there is an argument for retaining the House of Commons at its present size or for making it smaller. Common sense requires that. Economy demands it. Running Parliament is not a run-of-the-mill operation. It is an extensive business, and we have an obligation to set an example for the rest of the country.

My colleague, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), mentioned that if we followed the route the United States has taken, there would be more people working in our constituency offices. I do not think that is really necessary. If there was less government interference in private business and in our private lives, we would not have so many problems and it would not take so much time and so many people to make the system work.

Ours is an expensive business, and we have an obligation to set an example and run a lean, thrifty operation. Increasing the size of the membership of the House will place demands on the public purse. I fear that increasing the size of this House would reduce the role of the individual Member of Parliament to that of a mere cypher to be around only at voting time in the House. More and more power would be concentrated in the cabinet and in the office of the Prime Minister. There is too much power there now, and there are no checks on that power. That does not augur well for the common good.

The House of Commons is the highest court in the land. Its members should be close to the decision-making process and close to the framing of the laws which direct our society. In every instance members should be elected to this House directly by their peers. We do not need proportional representation. We need a representative body which mirrors our society, our culture and our Canadian way of life. If reform is needed, it is needed in the manner in which we function. If reform is needed, it is needed in the areas of rules and committees and in the frugal use of the time of the House. There are ways by which we could accomplish this, and it would be for the betterment of our society if we did.

Let me return to the matter of the Senate. The Senate is a prime candidate and ripe for reform. Senator Duff Roblin made an excellent speech on this very important topic in that chamber not too long ago. I wish the government would move in the direction suggested in our advice. It is the responsibility of the government to reform the Senate. That would make Parliament more relevant, more effective and more responsive. If changes to the Senate were made, I am sure that would free up Members of Parliament to accomplish much more.

We must realize that the Canadian people expect us to make major adjustments. Canadians do not want an increase in the membership of the House of Commons. Canadians want an elected Senate. They do not want political parties appointing people to the other place. They do not want provinces appointing the membership of the other place. They want a responsive membership in the Senate, and they want senators elected so that they, too, must return to the people and be responsible.

If we do not make some of these changes, I really do not know what will happen to our country. I know there is a great deal of unrest in my province. That unrest is the result of a government which will not accept its responsibility. It will not allow other people to change the system, but it will do nothing itself. It has a dog-in-the-manger attitude, and that is not acceptable to those of us in the House who are in opposition or to the Canadian people.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the subject of electoral reform is not one which causes grown men to cry or women to swoon. However, how we handle an election in a parliamentary democracy is extremely important, and what takes place and the procedures utilized in an election make all the difference in the way democracy operates.

I have no objections to this bill. It comes to us from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. That committee of this House is one of the few which operates on an all-party basis. All its members have the same interest in making the system better. It is a pity there are not more committees working on that basis.

With respect to this bill, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections reached a consensus on two important figures. It was agreed that the length of election campaigns should be revised from the initially-intended 47 days up to 50 days and that the length of the enumeration period be increased from four days to seven days. I will be asked many questions about why 50 days and not 30 days or 20 days? I think the answer lies in the fact that there is a rural point of view and an urban point of view. For those of us coming from defined urban areas a much shorter election period would be quite satisfactory.

We can get around our ridings and meet the people by various means of communication. Because of this a much shorter election campaign would be appropriate, as is the case in many provinces. However, one riding in the middle of British Columbia is 500 miles long. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) must attend a minimum of five nomination meetings in five different centres, all of them hundreds of miles apart. That makes a difference. The best compromise, and the one I think all parties agreed on, was that rather than 47 days, 50 days made a great deal of sense and seemed to be a reasonable compromise satisfactory to both the urban point of view and to the rural point of view.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce stated recently that the current 60-day campaign was established prior to the development of modern transportation and electronic communications. At the last annual meeting of the chamber delegates agreed that a two-month interruption of public business for an election campaign was unnecessarily long and that shorter campaigns would benefit Canadians by concentrating debate, providing a better public focus on issues and policies, reducing the cost of a campaign and minimizing interruptions of the nation's business. As a result of this bill, 50 days will be a shorter period and, hopefully, will meet some of the demands and concerns of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

The duration of election campaigns varies from country to country. The institution of permanent voters' lists in Australia and the U.K. has made it possible for much shorter election campaigns. The Chief Electoral Officer of Canada has investigated the suggestion of a permanent voters' list for Canada. We do not have one, and I doubt very much whether, all things considered, we should. The estimated cost of a permanent voters' list for Canada is some $30 million per year. On a cost basis it seems that is one aspect of electoral reform which should not be undertaken in this country.

The enumeration period and the difficulties of enumeration are probably the chief problems encountered at the beginning of any election campaign. This is one reason we fought hard and that finally the committee again came to total agreement that the enumeration period should be lengthened slightly to ensure better enumeration, particularly when the weekend is available. As Bill C-58 now reads, it will guarantee a period of 11 days between the calling of an election and the beginning of an enumeration; five days for the candidates to select their enumerators and five and a half days for the returning officer to train them. The Chief Elector Officer is in favour of this as, I think, will be most members of the House who have studied the issue.

There will be questions about the Provincial election periods in the different provinces. It is 21 days in Newfoundland; 26 days in P.E.I.; 36 days in New Brunswick; 32 days in Quebec; 37 days in Ontario; 35 days in Manitoba; 28 days in Saskatchewan; 29 days in Alberta and 38 days in British Columbia.

I point out to those who wish to compare the federal position with that of the provinces that a federal riding normally encompasses an area which may include as many as five provincial ridings and constituencies. On that basis alone a federal campaign must take somewhat longer than a provincial campaign.

It is not what is in this bill that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, it is what is not in the bill. It is the fact that the government has overlooked so many things that should have been part of the legislation. I doubt if the debate would have gone as long today had the government brought in the reforms that should be in the bill. Other hon. members have spoken about these things, such as the number of representatives in the House and some thoughts about parliamentary reform and other recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer over the years about which nothing has been done. That is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to turn now to the question of new boundaries because the machinery for that is now in place. The Chief Electoral Officer says that he will not change the boundaries, will not add the 29 seats, and cannot have that work done prior to October, 1984. If the work cannot be done prior to 1984, that means it is extremely likely that the next federal election campaign will be fought on the same boundaries as exist today. If that happens it means considerable injustice in many ridings of the country. I will give a few examples, Mr. Speaker. Richmond-South Delta will have 55 per cent more population than other ridings; Surrey-White Rock-North Delta will have 65 per cent more than other ridings; Calgary East will have 88 per cent more than other ridings; and Pembina in Manitoba will have 67 per cent above quotient. There are several ridings in Ontario that are in an even worse situation.

If the representation order does not come into force before the next federal election, members from oversized constituencies will be overburdened for years to come. The present position is punitive and discriminatory so far as these members and their constituents are concerned.

Another matter was raised today in question period by the hon. member for Kingston and the Island (Miss MacDonald). The wives of servicemen are required to vote where the husband is registered. The problem with that is that that provision is not contained in the Canada Elections Act. Certainly those wives who are Canadian citizens should have the right to choose where they wish to vote and under what circumstances.

Many other recommendations were made by the Chief Electoral Officer which could have been included in the bill, such as deletion of the present provisions concerning the posting of preliminary lists of electors; more flexibility in setting the maximum member of electors per polling station; promoting or opposing the election of a party or candidate through media interviews; and partisan activity on polling days.

There have been representations from every tourist organization in the country about the sale of alcoholic beverages on polling day. This is an outdated provision still contained in the Canada Elections Act. It is costing us hundreds of thousands of dollars in a federal election period and is damaging the tourist industry. Surely a simple matter like that could have been corrected in this bill.

Another problem is third party advertising. The government does not know yet what it will do about that. The identification of printers and publishers on printed advertisements is another problem, as is the change in the names of electoral districts. There should be clarification of the discretionary powers of the Chief Electoral Officer as contained in subsection 13(8) of the Canada Elections Act.

I did not invent these things, Mr. Speaker; they are contained in reports of the Chief Electoral Officer made to Parliament in the past and no action has been taken on them. This makes his job much more difficult. In this case the government is not guilty of excess; it is guilty of not doing anything. The Chief Electoral Officer has made a good many recommendations that should have been looked after.

Another matter that should have been addressed in the bill is that of vacancies. There are three seats in the House of Commons which are vacant. After 60 days of a seat being declared vacant surely a date could be set for a byelection. The law as it stands is totally unfair to the people of three ridings who have no representation in this House. The government does not have to announce the date of a byelection prior to September and then it can be announced for any time up to and including February, 1985 or until this Parliament ends.

I should point out that the riding of Timiskaming has not had a sitting member since January 22, Broadview-Greenwood has not had a member since March 2 and Leeds-Grenville since the middle of March. It is now the middle of May, Mr. Speaker. When are these constituencies going to be represented in the House of Commons? Why is the government afraid to look after that problem?

I am in favour of the bill as it stands, Mr. Speaker. It represents a compromise among the parties and will operate in the best interests of Canada. In my view, its main defect is that it addresses one small problem, rather than the hundreds of problems that exist.

I think we should let this bill go through, Mr. Speaker, but we should plead with the government to bring in the other reforms that are necessary as soon as possible. I am ready to vote, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak on this bill today but I should like to take about three minutes to clarify points raised by hon. members opposite.

I am pleased that we appear to be at the end of the debate on the bill. Had we enforced the rule of relevancy, however, I think the debate would have been much shorter today. Most of the discussion that has gone on did not have anything to do with the bill but, being on who never likes to cut off debate, I thought it would be good to air the concerns that some hon. members have when the broader subject of elections is raised.

This bill does not deal with redistribution, Mr. Speaker. Some hon. members are concerned about redistribution, and in response to that the government agreed to refer the matter of redistribution to the standing committee. As a result there have been a number of meetings on that subject, expert witnesses have been called and the issue has been aired.

This bill does not deal with redistribution, however; it deals with a shorter election period, reducing it from 60 days to 50 days. This is accomplished mainly by eliminating the need for the preliminary lists that are posted.

It also lengthens the enumeration period from four days to seven days so as to provide for a more thorough enumeration. All parties gave somewhat in the negotiations on this bill and I understand all parties have agreed to it. It is an improvement and moves in the right direction and I am delighted that it appears it will receive third reading today.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE INSULATION ACT

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-109, to provide for payments to persons in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor to propose that the House approve this bill, which will enable us to provide for payments to owners of homes insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. First of all, I should like to make it clear that notwithstanding the lack of comprehension of UFFI victims for our government assistance program and the lack of confidence in the government expressed, from time to time, by certain victims, and despite the accusations and insults addressed by some home owners to the government and to me in particular, the Canadian government is determined to find a solution to the problems besetting the owners of UFFI homes.

Personally, I do not harbour any resentment or bitterness with respect to those people who twice came to demonstrate in front of my constituency office. I think that their exasperation and their demands are the natural result of the suffering, anxiety and uncertainty they are experiencing. I want to make it clear to these people that I shall discharge fully my ministerial responsibilities—namely, to find a solution to this problem,—with all the necessary energy and conviction, and that we, as a government, must find a solution to their problems. I wish they would understand that my task would be much easier if I now had all the answers to their questions. It is easy for men and women in the public eye to take part in public rallies and tell UFFI victims what they want to hear. It is much harder to find a solution to their problems.

I am looking for a scientific answer, because I believe it is important to give UFFI victims sound advice. It would be easier, of course, to provide temporary solutions to the problem, instead of concentrating on the scientific approach to find out what can be done to reduce gas levels produced by UFFI. I cannot say that I am very happy about my lack of popularity, but I am prepared to put up with it, because I feel it is my duty to find a real solution to the UFFI problem. I also see it as my duty not to waste public funds, and that is why distinctions must be made and why there are profound differences of opinion about what the Government of Canada wants to do now to help UFFI victims and what the victims themselves would like to see done. The first distinction and issue on which there is a basic difference of opinion relates to removal of the product. Our assistance program is based on a series of measures aimed at reducing formaldehyde gas levels in homes. Our program clearly does not stress removal of UFFI.

And why not? It is because, to date, experts at the National Research Council of Canada have not told us that removal of UFFI should be a priority. On the contrary, all the scientific information available to us shows that UFFI removal in homes should be seen as a last resort, and that before contemplating this costly operation, there are many other approaches that should be tried by home owners. This is therefore a first and very basic difference of opinion. We feel that the tax-free grant of up to $5,000 is an adequate response to the needs of most people who will have to do work on their homes. On the other hand, UFFI victims who believe that the product must be removed right away, will feel that $5,000 is certainly not enough. This difference of opinion will continue as long as the scientific experts working for the National Research Council of Canada have not reached a conclusion. In fact, from the research that has been done, it seems that home owners who did remove the product from the walls of their homes were unable to treat satisfactorily the framework and woodwork, and there is a possibility that these parts of the house are still being affected by the gas and that as a result, only part of the problem has been solved. We must therefore wait for the findings of the experts before we decide whether or not the product should be removed from the walls of homes insulated with UFFI.

The other basic subject of disagreement concerns the health hazard represented by this product. We know that the officials of the department of National Health and Welfare have set a standard of 0.1 parts per million, and all the opinions we have obtained suggest that if the formaldehyde contents in a house is lower than this level of 0.1, there should not normally be any health hazard. Some owners with parents, children, or, in some case, adult relatives who have been affected by the product do not accept the standard of 0.1 and consider the product dangerous at an even lower level. Needless to say, this standard is the subject of many discussions and major contradictions. I must admit that I am not a scientist or a physician and that therefore, regarding the implementation of this government program, I must rely not on the very legitimate impulses and reactions of the victims of this product, but rather on the opinion of experts and physicians; as long as the scientific and medical aspects of this issue have not been settled, we shall find it difficult to understand and interpret the program of the Canadian government.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that I want to make clear. The government of Canada should not be blamed for this matter. I know that, later on in this debate, members opposite will attempt to throw the blame on the government or the officials acting on its behalf. That is simply partisan politics and I do not believe that it is to the advantage of those affected by this problem. I think that we must recognize one thing, namely that the government has attempted to develop a whole series of measures to provide generous assistance to those affected by this product. Bill C-109 now under consideration is in keeping with the initiatives taken by the government of Canada to help home owners now facing certain problems. The action we are taking will affect many areas, and I would like to summarize briefly what we have done already and what we want to do with the co-operation of the victims themselves.

We have three major objectives. First, to give back confidence in the value of homes insulated with urea formaldehyde foam; second, to reassure the public about the health hazard; and third, to provide immediate assistance and as soon as possible to those who have health or housing problems because of this product. One of the first initiatives taken by the government was to create a co-ordination and information centre on urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The centre served as focussing point for the government assistance program by providing advice and information to the thousands of homeowners concerned.

As I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, I can say that some 21,050 people are already registered with this center and have filled out the necessary forms to take advantage of the assistance program we are making available. The results obtained from our testing programs through an extensive sampling of Canadian homes as well as scientific data have served as a basis for the legislation we are introducing today. I remind the House that Canada is the first country in the world ever to ban urea formaldehyde foam insulation. We are therefore pioneers in this area of science and engineering. The centre has pooled the resources of various federal departments and agencies as well as of many private organizations. I should like to emphasize that several governments are inquiring of Canada as to the means of coping with this problem in their respective countries, because this product has been in use for about ten years in some thirty countries. I should like to return now to the three main objectives I mentioned earlier. First, to restore confidence in the value of homes insulated with UFFI. And as recently as this afternoon, during the oral question period, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) put the following question to me, and I quote:

• (1630)

[English]

Has the government considered any further compensation for the 80 per cent of people who will not qualify for compensation under the bill today who find their homes being depreciated in value, who find they cannot sell their homes and who find they are having difficulty getting conventional mortgages on their homes?

[Translation]

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the sensationalism which has surrounded this issue is directly responsible for the depreciated value of those properties. If 80 per cent of home owners, and those are the figures provided by the member for St. John's East, have no health problem or any difficulty with that product and consequently are not eligible for our program, it means that the fear which is being instilled by some people about that product is grossly exaggerated and unjustified. Our polls clearly indicate—

[English]

Mr. Skelly: What does the U.S. government say?

Mr. Ouellet: I will get to that in a few minutes if the hon. member will allow me to speak and finish my remarks. Some of you are responsible for the prices being lowered on these homes because of your irresponsibility—

Mr. Skelly: You are irresponsible. That is the reason.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, those who want to interrupt me show their irresponsibility because unfortunately, we have greatly overrated the importance of the problem. It is serious for those who are living in a house where the level of formaldehyde is too high. It is serious for those who are physically affected by the product, but it is not a serious problem for those who are not affected by the product and in whose house the formaldehyde level is acceptable. Consequently the value of those properties should not decrease. It is only because the matter received bad publicity that the problem was blown out of proportion, with 80 per cent of home owners having suffered a loss of value and needing our help and our program to restore their property's fair value. What we intend to do is provide free tests in order to scientifically and adequately measure the level of formaldehyde, take appropriate steps to bring it to an acceptable level and, above all, issue a certificate that they have safe homes that are fit for occupancy. It is to the extent that we can carry out that program that we will restore the value such properly insulated homes, whose occupants are not affected by the product, should always have retained, but as far as the other homes are concerned, we intend to reduce significantly the level of formaldehyde when it is felt to be too high.

• (1640)

We take the time needed to put the program in place. Some might say our progress is too slow. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we are progressing slowly. We do so because we do not want to take the risk of putting the victims in a difficult situation. It is our view that we should not only give those home owners free expert advice, but also provide a list of qualified contractors that are duly approved to do the necessary work. We are convinced that a major part of the problem stems from the fact that the work was improperly done originally by unqualified contractors who did poor insulation job and are directly responsible to a large extent for the problem those owners of foam-insulated homes are facing today.

Now, if we want to help those homeowners adequately, it is important that we protect them and ensure that qualified contractors do the work on their homes. It is worthwhile, in my opinion, taking a few weeks, as we are now doing, to qualify those contractors in order that they do not take advantage of the victims of foam-insulated homes.

It is my view that over and above that problem confronting the Canadian men and women who have foam-insulated homes is the whole question of the Canadian public's attitude to the problem and our obligation to reassure the public as far as health hazards are concerned. That is why we have spent thousands of dollars on exhaustive research and development to find new and better corrective measures, so that through long and short-term medical research we may be better equipped against that type of threat that can strike at any moment. I feel that the money we have offered to the various independent associations of UFFI homes in order to help them group together and get, not only from the Canadian government but also from their provincial and municipal governments, concerned attention, direct help and, above all, generous understanding is money well spent. The money we granted those independent home owners' associations will bear fruit, I trust, and will enable us, in co-operation with the representatives of the various victims organizations, to do even better in the interest of the harmed parties, the home owners. Finally, in closing, I should like to mention this: some would have us believe that much has been done in this regard in the United States, like the hon. member who has just interrupted me asking about what is being done in the United States. Let me tell you about it.

[English]

The Massachusetts repurchase program, the so-called buy-back plan, has been highlighted as being important and generous and as the thing we should do in Canada. I want to note that the cost of the buy-back plan was to be borne exclusively by industry, not by government, and that the manufacturers or the installers were held responsible for remedial actions. Indeed, the federal government of Canada considered this policy or option before formulating the types of assistance programs we gave to Canadians. We did not follow the American experience because we knew that the American program was not very generous and was certainly not one which would quickly pay dividends for home owners. Instead we retained our program which gave free testing, technical advice and financial assistance of up to $5,000 to home owners in Canada in an attempt to remedy their problems.

On January 29, 1982, the superior court of Massachusetts set aside the ban and the buy-back regulations as a result of a challenge by the industry. Therefore, home owners in Massachusetts today are faced with no assistance. Just recently consumer protection agencies voted four to one to ban UFFI nationally in the United States. This is not yet in effect but it is expected that it will be in effect some time this summer. Those who compare what we have done in Canada with what was done in the United States should keep in mind that we have been much faster and much more generous in Canada in trying to help the victims of UFFI.

Another aspect of this question is that some people try to pretend that the federal government has some responsibility because the product was accepted under CHIP. Let me say that in 1977 the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation accepted this product, along with close to 100 other types of insulation, as an eligible building material under the Canadian Home Insulation Program. This acceptance was based on a standard developed under the auspices of the Canadian General Standards Board. Such voluntary standards are written through the medium of standards committees and the consensus process. The committees are representative of relevant interests including producers, consumers and other users such as retailers, governments and educational institutions, as well as technical, professional and trade societies and research and testing organizations. In other words, there are many other people involved in the standards boards.

The acceptance of this product under the Canadian Home Insulation Program was conditional upon the observance of rigid standards in its installation. Unfortunately, it is evident now that some contractors did not respect these established standards and the Canadian General Standards Board had no legal power to enforce them. This is known by the opposition as well as by us.

While politicians on the other side conduct petty politics over this question, they are not rendering any service to the home owners who have problems today. Prior to November, 1979, only two complaints had been registered with this department concerning this product. By September of the following year, approximately 100 complaints had been received. Although only a handful of these were substantiated, Health and Welfare Canada set up an independent committee of experts to inquire into the potential health effects which could arise from the use of this product. This committee recommended in its interim report of December, 1980, that the use of UFFI be discontinued. The product was then banned under the Hazardous Products Act.

That is the sequence of events that led the government to ban the use of that product and act as no other government has done in any other country. Obviously, the government wants to help the victims of that product. It has done something concrete about it. First, it banned the product to stem the evil. Second, it pleaded the homeowners' case before the board of review that was set up under the Hazardous Products Act, which act allows the industry to appeal the decision of the government. In other words, the government submitted the case of the victims before the board of review. The legal advisers of my department are the ones who pleaded the case for keeping the ban on the use of that product in Canada before the board of review in the interest of the victims. My departmental officials are the ones who developed the assistance program; our government is the only one in Canada to pay a certain amount of money to the victims of this product to the extent of $5,000 that is not taxable. Those are the facts. I wish the other provinces, especially Ontario and the province of Quebec, where a considerable number of home owners suffered from the use of that product, had shown comparable generosity towards the victims and offered each home owner $5,000, the amount we are willing to offer them. I feel it behoves other levels of government to quit talking and start doing something concrete like offering specific amounts of money with a view to helping the victims make the necessary repairs to their homes. I can solemnly promise in this House, Mr. Speaker, that my department and our government will continue to work towards helping the victims of UFFI.

We are anxious to become acquainted with the findings of the review board over which we have no authority and which is acting as a quasi-judicial body. We hope, however, to receive its report shortly and that it will confirm that this product is dangerous and must continue to be considered as such; once this matter is settled once and for all, we can take the second step which, in my opinion, is very important. I have already indicated publicly on a number of occasions that if the federal government is ready to do its share, the provincial governments as well as the private sector should likewise be ready to do their part. As soon as I am satisfied, on the basis of the review board findings, that the product is deemed dangerous once and for all, something I expect and hope, I promise to make further representations and step up my efforts to convince the provincial governments and the private sector, especially the manufacturing industry, to do their part and help UFFI victims.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—The economy—(a) Cabinet meeting at Meach Lake, P.Q. (b) Situation in Canada vis-à-vis United States (c) Government position; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Corporate Affairs (a) Investigation on Consolidated Computers Inc. (b) Role of Royal Canadian Mounted Police; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—External Affairs—(a) Reported Canada-France agreement on Saint-Pierre and Miquelon Islands (b) Request that agreement be made public.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE INSULATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-109, to provide for payments to persons in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to lead off this debate for our side, not only on behalf of the official opposition but on behalf of 80,000 to 100,000 families across Canada. I intend to speak out on behalf of some 250,000 to 300,000 Canadians who have suffered, are now suffering and who will continue to suffer from the effects of urea formaldehyde foam insulation unless this government acts.

I ask you to picture, Mr. Speaker, anywhere from 80,000 to 100,000 heads of households sitting in this chamber. Since it is impossible to visualize that many people jamming into this House of Commons facility, picture an overflow crowd at Olympic Stadium in Montreal and the Canadian National Exhibition Stadium in Toronto combined. I am absolutely certain that the vast majority, if not all, of the home owners whose homes are contaminated with UFFI would say to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who just finished introducing second reading of Bill C-109, in one loud voice from those two stadium precisely what I am about to tell him—that this bill is a pathetic joke. It is an insult to those seeking responsible government action to assist them in their plight. It is a pitifully small band-aid measure which cannot begin to cover either the health damage or economic hurt which has been caused by this government.

Make no mistake, this Liberal government has created a monster that will not go away, a monster which will not respond to the pop-gun approach by the federal government in this bill.

Based on the government's urging, Canadians acted to insulate their homes using a government approved substance, one of several forms of insulation—as the minister correctly pointed out, but one which the government itself manufactured—urea formaldehyde foam insulation. There is absolutely no question that home owners or tenants, nor I daresay this government, would not have recommended and used this product knowing what we now know about its actual and potentially disastrous effects on people's health. I will deal with this government's undeniable responsibility in this UFFI crisis in a few moments.

I would like first to serve notice on the minister and the government that we on this side of the House would like to see reasonably speedy passage of the bill through second reading so that it can move on to the appropriate standing committee. I say that we would like to be reasonable in expediting this bill, although I know there are several of my colleagues in the official opposition, as I am sure there are a number of hon. members on the government side of the House, who are receiving strenuous representations from their constituents and who will want to enter this debate. We do, however, have a major concern about this legislation, quite apart from its glaring inadequacies in terms of compensation for home owners. Even as it stands, it is merely a skeleton of a bill. It contains only nine classes and everything in the bill depends on regulations to be made by order in council. These regulations are the heart and soul of the bill. They will set out who will be eligible for remedial grants, what criteria will apply and what compensation will be available to those unfortunate Canadians who qualify.

Surely the minister does not expect us to give him a blank cheque for some $55 million when it comes to the health, safety and financial security of a quarter of a million or more Canadians. Therefore, we on this side want to see the government's proposed regulations before we consider passing this bill; otherwise, we are being asked to approve legislation which we and Canadian home owners with UFFI will not see. Unless we have the regulations before us, we will not be able to examine them before the committee and individuals and groups of home owners will justifiably remain skeptical about the government's commitments to a truly effective and equitable compensation program.

Knowing the type of regulations which have recently come into being by order in cabinet, the minister should not be too surprised by our skepticism and concern. I urge the minister to let the committee examine the draft regulations that he has in mind. Indeed, we may even wish to include some of those regulations in the legislation.

There is a precedent for this situation. During the Clark administration in 1979, when we were in second reading stage of Bill C-25, the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, our government broke with precedent in order to table draft regulations. The minister's co-operation in this connection concerning this bill's regulations would be most helpful. We have some questions to ask and recommendations to make concerning this bill, but I will deal with them later in my remarks. Let me come to the area of responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the federal government itself was the cause of the problem for Canadian home owners, that the federal government itself promoted UFFI and later banned it as dangerous. It was the federal government that warned Canadian consumers about the physical symptoms related to UFFI. It was the federal government that established the nationwide review board which will confirm its conclusions on UFFI, and the federal government therefore has the immediate and full responsibility of getting the Canadian home owners out of trouble. If this means a public statement, if this means another blow to the building industry, if this means another expenditure to protect the health of this nation, very well.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) cannot blame the media, the provinces, the manufacturers and the installers, nor can he blame the official opposition. He can only blame the ignorance of his department and his government, as well as the carelessness and the conflicts of interest which have brought about one of the worst tragedies in Canadian history.

[English]

The UFFI mess is a classic case of one arm or several arms of government not knowing what the other arms are doing. There is abundant historical evidence to prove this, although the government has thus far declined to answer some of our questions to confirm the facts. Mr. Cliff Shirtliffe, a research officer with the National Research Council, appeared before the hazardous products board of review. The minister says he is impatient to receive the report of that board of review. I can tell hon. members that there are a good many thousands of Canadians and many of us on the opposition side who are equally impatient to see those results.

At that board of review hearing on August 14, 1981, Mr. Shirtliffe said that he recalled a meeting in 1974 with CMHC and industry representatives to explain whether or not the reported cases of allergic reaction to the foam could be true. Assurance was given by the industry people that they themselves were not affected. However, as far back as 1974 there was a request to the Department of National Health and Welfare to review the toxicity of the foam. Mr. Shirtliffe also stated at the time that the problem concerning the gas released from the foam is that little is known about the effects of long-term exposure to low levels of the toxic chemical. He noted, back then, that the federal committee investigating insulation materials was particularly concerned over the potential dangers of long-term exposure of children and older people to the gas.

Then in August, 1978 Dr. Richard Viau, who was then acting head of the chemical and fire safety program of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and who is now, I understand, its director, warned in an interview with Jim Travers of Southam News that "people should think quite carefully before installing this product in their homes". He went on to say, "Formaldehyde is a very irritating chemical and exposure can lead to headaches, allergies and a whole gamut of other problems". He also acknowledged that complaints of irritation and nausea had been received by government officials and that the government was aware of earlier studies done in Europe, Scandinavia and the United States describing problems with urea-formaldehyde foam insulation. But even as his own senior official was issuing this warning, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was sending out thank you notices to home owners with UFFI. I have in my hand a faded copy of one of them, and it reads:

> On behalf of the Government of Canada, I wish to express my appreciation for your participation in the conserving of energy through the Canadian Home Insulation Program.

It was signed by the minister's own hand, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Only after several states had banned the use of the material, long after most of the 80,000 to 100,000 home owners took the government's advice and installed UFFI, did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) begin to get concerned. There was then a series of news releases. I will just read the gist or the opening paragraphs of each of these releases. On September 19, 1980, the first time we heard of government concern, the government stated:

> "Increasing reports of health problems that have been linked to the use of urea formaldehyde foam insultation are of serious concern to my department", National Health and Welfare Minister Monique Bégin stated today—
> A primary concern with UFFI is the release of formaldehyde gas into living areas, both during installation and for several years afterward.

That was the government's warning in September of 1980. Then, in December, 1980 another news release stated:

> Steps to institute a temporary ban on the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation were announced today by Health and Welfare Minister Monique Bégin and Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister André Ouellet . . .The government's decision to act at this time flows from the committee's expressed "serious concerns regarding the health hazards posed by the presence of formaldehyde in homes insulated with UFFI".

That was the expert advisory committee which the government had set up to look into problems relating to UFFI. If I may correct a statement which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made earlier during his remarks, the expert advisory committee said it was not prepared to recommend any level of formaldehyde as being safe. Therefore, I am wondering whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is now rejecting the basic advice which prompted the ban on the product.

The committee also stated that each individual will react differently to formaldehyde under different climactic conditions and under different methods of installation. The expert advisory committee stated that the level of 0.1 parts per million is not a definite level of danger; it is simply an arbitrary one picked out of the air. That level was used based on the law of averages in terms of the way it affected Canadians.

Finally, on April 23, 1981 the Minister of National Health and Welfare recommended that the ban on the use of the product, urea formaldehyde foam, be continued because of chronic exposure to formaldehyde from leakage of gas into the living space of homes over long periods of time.

We are discussing the product itself here, the urea formaldehyde foam insulation, which is unstable. That is what the expert advisory committee was talking about and that is what the board of review is investigating now, the safety or otherwise of the product.

If there was any incorrect installation or if there were any faulty licences distributed to manufacturers, that is a matter for the courts to decide. It is something on which the provinces could be pursued. The main thing we are looking at now is the foam itself which is causing Canadians headaches and heartaches. It is the product I am concerned about here.

That is a little of the painful chronology which makes us realize how deeply the federal government became involved in this UFFI crisis as far back as 1974. Here we are in the second week of May, 1982 and we are actually getting a chance to debate second reading of a program the minister first announced on December 23, 1981. It was fully four and a half months before the government could get some legislation before the House and four and a half years after the government started to utter warnings to itself about the instability of this foam product.

Then the government delivers this mouse of a piece of legislation which is somehow supposed to redress the grievances of several hundred thousand Canadians who became unwitting victims of this government's blundering into one of the most monumental gaffs in Canadian history.

What has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs been telling Canadians in the meantime? What encouragement does this umbrella ministerial spokesman for some five or six different government departments offer UFFI home owners? I do not know if the minister remembers a headline from Rock Forest in Quebec.

[Translation]

"Go and see a doctor if you are ill." The minister then added: "People should not wait for the government to act. If they have problems with their installation because it does not work as expected, they should sue the contractor or the manufacturer. If they have health problems, they should see a doctor."

[English]

In effect, the minister tells them not to wait for the government to act if they are worried about the foam, that they should take it out themselves. A few minutes ago the minister told the House that the evidence he has from the National Research Council is that it would make the problem worse if they took it out, or to take it out only as a last resort. Small wonder Canadians are very confused and angered by this urea formaldehyde foam crisis.

In answer to questions my colleagues and I put to the minister in the House of Commons, and again just a few moments ago, the minister has been quick to blame everybody else in sight for this disaster. He blames the provinces, the contractors and the installers.

[Translation]

The government also has the impression that there has been an excessive amount of bad publicity and very often too little action concerning the UFFI and that we, of the Official Opposition, should help to appease the fears of the building industry about this crisis.

[English]

The fact remains that people are hurting. They know who is to blame. They were counting on government legislation to help them out of a mess that the government created. What did they get? They got Bill C-109, a remedial measure blanketed in a lot of comforting verbiage which does not come to grips with the real problem UFFI victims face. Stated simply, it is how they can make their homes safe and saleable, and is the government going to help them? This corrective measure, as the minister calls it, is too little and, for many Canadians with foam in their homes, already much too late.

That is not just my view as the official opposition critic for consumer and corporate affairs. I would hate to be politically partisan all the time on this issue, so I will call on an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen of Monday, April 12, 1982, entitled "Government offer not adequate". The Citizen is not exactly known for its hostility toward this Liberal administration, to put it mildly. I draw the minister's attention to the last three paragraphs of this government's most sympathetic newspaper:

> The federal government will only offer up to $5,000 in grants for home owners suffering from foam fumes. And that maximum grant falls far short of the cost of removing the foam. Rather it will only cover cosmetic repairs to seal fumes from the foam inside the walls.
> Prospective home purchasers don't care whether the foam is sealed or unsealed.
> As Murray Coolican, Ottawa spokesman for home owners with foam, points out, the federal government's compensation plan is "too little, too late". Ouellet is duty-bound to provide compensation to deal with the problem his government helped create.

To lend some balance to this criticism that I have of the government's treatment of UFFI home owners, I will quote very briefly from three colleagues on the government side of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) has been receiving his share of flak from southern and western Ontario on this foam issue. I know because I recently attended a meeting in London of 350 home owners who brought their legitimate concerns in a very forceful manner to that hon. member and myself. The hon. member for London West at the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs said it for all of us when he told the minister:

> The thing that concerns me, though, and I am sure it concerns all of us, Mr. Minister, is this fear of the unknown. Many people today are experiencing health problems; there is no doubt about that. Whether they have evidence from their doctors or not, they do know that something is wrong, obviously because of some conditions in the atmosphere of their home. Other people are concerned about the value or the devaluation of their homes because of this—again fear of the unknown.
> I would urge you to urge your officials to try if at all possible to arrive at an answer as quickly as possible.

We now go to Toronto and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead). He had this to say in a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

> – I do believe that a good case can be made for the fact that the government unwittingly enticed home owners to take advantage of the CHIP program and the home owners were relying on the government's implied assurances that the substance was not dangerous to their health—

The letter adds:

> Every step should be taken to immediately accept replacing foam insulation in homes at the government's expense.

It should be pointed out that the hon. member for Scarborough West is chairman of the Ontario federal Liberal caucus. He said he is a Trudeau government supporter, but that he has to protect his constituents. While he is the first Liberal backbencher to speak out, he said "I won't be alone".

Completing our roster of members who have had the guts to speak out publicly on behalf of their constituents in this issue, I turn to the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) who spoke in an adjournment debate on May 3, a few days ago. Referring to the Gaspé, he said:

> The owners followed the directions given by the Government of Canada to save energy and applied for a grant to insulate their homes. Most owners who used area formaldehyde foam insulation are now facing a health problem and must find another place to live in and this is not easy in an area such as ours.
> Mr. Speaker, even if the Government of Canada provided a $5,000 grant to remove that foam from the walls of a house whose owner is unemployed or is on welfare, where will this owner find the additional $10,000 to have the work performed? Even people who have permanent jobs but whose property was mortgaged to have that insulation put in can no longer afford to borrow at 20 per cent to have the foam removed from their walls and ceilings.

The hon. member for Gaspé told the House last week:

> —I intend to participate in the debate on second reading of this bill in order to defend the interests of the people I represent here in this House, the victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation, and especially those who are in a precarious financial situation.

I am looking forward to hearing the intervention of the hon. member for Gaspé.

When The Citizen or anyone else, including hon. members on the government side, mentions the word "compensation", total or otherwise, those of us who are on the front lines of the UFFI battle are constantly pursued about the dollar value of such a program. My answer is yes, the cost of restoring victims' homes to being safe and saleable places will be expensive, and yes, it could amount to hundreds of millions of dollars; but I can never recall a bottom line where the health of this nation is concerned. I will say more about financing later, but this $110 million remedial program has now been scaled down by half for actual disbursement to homes with the foam. The other $65 million presumably has been used for testing, publicity, dosimeters—

Mr. Ouellet: No.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Some of it has certainly been used for the delightful little pamphlet I have in my hand entitled "What you should know about UFFI" which the government has been circulating telling people that the stuff looks life shaving cream when it is first blown into their walls. I would appreciate a breakdown from the minister, at his convenience, as to where the other $65 million has been spent in terms of this program.

Mr. Ouellet: The next fiscal year. You should read the bill correctly, at least.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The $55 million remaining is as useless to UFFI victims as the June 30, 1983, deadline to qualify for the grants.

There is no way to paper over this issue. Home owners know it, real estate agents know it, provincial governments know it and, having talked with hundreds of UFFI victims across Canada during the past 18 months, believe me, I know how desperate many thousands of innocent victims of the foam crisis are for federal government assistance. They know how woefully inadequate this remedial bill is. They are looking to government for much more meaningful compensation for their shattered lifestyles.

I am particularly saddened and, indeed, sickened by letters and reports which flow into my office every week from UFFI victims all across Canada. One newspaper just yesterday carried a story of a couple in Downsview, Ontario, who watched their $135,000 home of 15 years being bulldozed because of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. With their home, this couple which had emigrated from Italy also watched their lifetime of hard work and cherished memories being demolished. Now they are starting over. They are building a new home and plunging into debt once again. Understandably, they are bitter and disappointed at an Ottawa government which had urged the country to save energy with insulation but which will not take its responsibility now. In a statement, which could be mirrored 100,000 times, the Downsview couple said:

> They pushed us to put in the insulation, and now they want to wash their hands of it.

Worse, these people cannot be eligible for any financial help. They tore down their house. Now they do not qualify for aid, according to a spokesman for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I find that an unconscionable abdication of this government's responsibilities, and I will have a recommendation to make in this regard in a few moments.

Let me put on the record the views of some Canadian home owners plagued with UFFI. Their own words speak volumes about the issue now confronting this Parliament. My office here on Parliament Hill has been in continuous touch with HUFFI— Home owners with Urea Formaldehyde Foam Insulation—group leaders across Canada who represent thousands of home owners with UFFI. The Minister talks about some of us who raise this issue as being deliberately politically partisan. I do not know or care what the politics of UFFI home owners are, but we are in constant touch with them, and they continue to bring to us the real stories of the home owners they represent. The minister talks about people like John Owen from Vancouver; Dr. Penny Tilby from Vancouver; Fred Palen from North Calgary; Stan Wilson from Regina; Glenn Markowski and Lloyd Maynard from Winnipeg; Ace Willsie, Pam Snow, Jim Inch and Margaret Vagalaid from Kitchener-Waterloo; Ms. Pat Clarke from Scarborough; Dr. Frank Spitzer from Toronto; Ed Smee from Hamilton; Lee Kennedy from London; Bob Ord from Welland; Rick Patten, Murray Coolican and Mrs. Pat Strickland from Ottawa; Len Cocolicchio and Mr. Larry Gee from Montreal; Madam Nicole Lamer and Yves Nantel from Ste. Therese, Quebec; Carl Wentzell from Riverview, New Brunswick; Mr. Mark Poirier from Halifax, Nova Scotia; and Danny Williams from St. John's, Newfoundland. Almost on a daily basis these people keep us informed on the progress and plights of many thousands of home owners.

Incidentally, I want at this time to pay a special tribute to my researcher, Mr. Sean Berrigan, who has become Parliament's unoffical ombudsman for countless UFFI organizations which have been springing up across Canada. Many of my colleagues in this House are aware of Mr. Berrigan's untiring dedication to the plight of UFFI home owners, whether individuals or vast organizations, across Canada. I just want to take this opportunity to thank him for his painstaking research for me and my colleagues in our collective attempt to gain justice for so many Canadians who have been so aggrieved.

I have a letter here to the aforementioned Mr. Larry Gee in Pointe Claire from A. E. LePage, a real estate firm, and this letter says it all:

> It is certainly unfortunate that although all of these indications suggest a market value of $42,000, I feel that because of the type of insulation (i.e. urea formaldehyde foam) in your home it would be virtually impossible to market.
> Since the insulation in your home appears to be impossible to remove without virtually removing the building, I would have to consider the building to be worthless. In fact it is a liability, as someone would have to spend money to effect its removal.
> The land value in the area indicates that your lot because of its location should sell for $15,000; however the cost of removal of the building may have to be deducted from this amount.

That is the kind of financial situation Mr. Gee has ended up in as a result of this crisis.

I have here an open letter to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) from Felice and Frank Spitzer of Toronto. Mr. Spitzer is head of the Ontario HUFFI Association.

> Naturally the most serious repercussion of this whole issue is that of health. In our particular instance, my husband has been severely affected with a sinus problem. He was operated on just one and one-half years ago and is unfortunately no better. Naturally he suffers and as a consequence the normal routines of family life are somewhat hindered. It even goes so far as with tiny matters such as the fact that we cannot talk to him in the mornings while he has to rinse his mouth out for long periods at a time so that nobody can have any conversation with him until we actually sit down to breakfast.

The litany of health problems goes on and on.

I have here a letter to my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), from Donna, Wayne, Sue and Terry Gravelle of Waterloo:

> Several days ago my husband went to see Dr. Wyse for pulmonary and allergy tests. He has been attending doctors for quite some time as he has had sore eyes, running ears and severe breathing problems. Dr. Wyse has stated he feels positive that his problems are caused by the UFFI in our home. He feels we should move out of the house because of Wayne's problems and the problems the rest of the family are experiencing. He has also stated he is willing to testify that he feels the foam is causing these problems.
> Is there anything that can be done! WE ARE DESPERATE!

That is signed by Mrs. Donna Gravelle.

I have received a letter from a Mr. Peter Lake of Edmonton, Alberta who says:

> My problem is as follows. I am faced with having to sell my house within the next 16 to 24 months for a work-related move. Since I have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in my walls, the marketability of my house is nil, and I am faced with the prospect of losing all of my equity and possibly being left with a mortgage to pay off as well. This would leave me with no chance to purchase another home in my new location as I would have no downpayment and, since I have already used my RHOSP eligibility, no easy way to save.

> The Government has suggested a number of ways of making UFFI houses habitable with sealing and chemical absorbers, but clearly, the only way to make a house marketable is to remove the foam.
> The Government has mentioned the possibility of (but has not yet promised) aid of up to $5,000 towards making UFFI homes safe, but I have received estimates of $15,000 to $20,000 to remove the foam. My house has stucco outside and plaster inside.

That letter raises a point that I think should be cleared up. Many Canadians are under the impression that if they qualify for a grant, if the level of urea formaldehyde warrants a grant, they will get the whole $5,000. While that is not nearly enough to remove the material from their homes, most people seem to think that they are eligible for that amount. I think that the minister and the government should make it clear to home owners who are applying for grants that they can get up to $5,000 but that they could receive a much smaller amount.

In the few minutes remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I want to raise some questions and offer some recommendations to the government. Perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) can deal with these questions later in the debate or when he appears before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs later in the week.

These are the questions that I should like to have answered. What about residents of buildings other than single family homes? Urea formaldehyde foam has been used as an insulation material in a number of apartment buildings, offices and commercial complexes. Is the government satisfied that it has a full list of such buildings and is it satisfied that it can accurately test levels of gas in the various segments of such buildings where people work and live? Then there is the question of who is responsible for testing. Is that up to the person dwelling in a building or working in a building, or does the government accept the responsibility for seeking out and testing dwellings that are not owner occupied but which have been insulated with UFFI? If not, how can workers in office buildings or residents of apartment buildings find out whether they should have their place of work or residence tested? Who would pay the cost of such tests?

Then comes the matter of retroactivity to which I referred earler in the case of the couple from Downsview. Is compensation available to people who had UFFI removed from their homes because they or their families had fears of or had experienced a health problem? If so, how far does retroactivity extend—to the temporary ban, to the permanent ban or to the introduction of this bill, either last December or just a few days ago at the end of April? Do such people also have unlimited rights to sue in the courts? These questions are asked at virtually every home owner's meeting.

In terms of minimizing the financial risk of court action, does the government plan any special measures that would make it easier for victims of UFFI to launch suits in the court with a minimum of financial risk? What about health problems which emerge later? If the health problems emerge as a result of exposure to UFFI four, five or ten years ahead, will a legal obligation to pay compensation still be recognized by the Government of Canada?

There are a number of very critical questions that must be answered in connection with this bill but, I repeat, we must see the draft regulations before we know what course the government is going to pursue in implementing the bill, because that is where the guts of the legislation really lies.

Above all, we feel that more money must be made available to this program until the government gets beyond remedial aid to UFFI home owners and lives up to its responsibility for meaningful compensation. The $55 million is woefully inadequate when you consider the number of Canadians who are sick as a result of the mistake of the government. I would recommend that the bill and the remedial program be made retroactive. All Canadians who removed the foam or spent money trying to rectify the problem should be eligible from the date of the government's temporary ban on December 18, 1980. Any removal or structural corrections prior to that time would, presumably, be a matter for the courts to decide.

I would certainly recommend that amendments to be made to the bill to extend the life of the program or make provision for it to have long-term effects. The present expiry date is meaningless to those who are not experiencing problems now but in whose homes trouble may show up in the years ahead.

Let me conclude with my own personal thoughts on this UFFI crisis. Many describe it as a catastrophe. It started in 1980 and the early part of 1981 as a sleeper issue. Some people in government began to wake up to the realization that we might have a real problem on our hands, and some home owners began to experience a variety of problems directly attributable to urea formaldehyde foam. Many home owners suddenly began to wonder what the growing controversy might do to the saleability of their homes. Government departments have been accumulating frightening evidence in the meantime, and there have been mounting fears from UFFI home owners about the effect on their health and on the sale of their property. An awakened and aroused public has escalated this issue into a national catastrophe.

We are faced with a problem without precedent. As elected representatives, we must do something about it. The people do not care which level of government is to blame. That is where the issue transcends partisan politics as far as the victims are concerned. A lot of Canadians are being hurt, whether because of their health or because of the value of their real estate or other economic reasons, and they are looking to government, any government, for help.

I want to close as I started, by suggesting that if you put all the heads of UFFI households in Canada in our two largest stadia there would be about 250,000 or 300,000 people there or roughly the population of Hamilton or Ottawa. They would all say what I have been saying this afternoon, that this UFFI mess is a disaster of the first order. Had all those Canadians been concentrated in one city would the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipal governments, not considered this mistake a true national disaster? Would all governments not have made this matter a top priority and quickly agreed on emergency measures on behalf of their afflicted taxpayers? It happens that these people are not all concentrated in one city but are spread from one end of the country to the other.

I do not minimize the responsibility of the prime offender in this UFFI mess, namely the federal government, but the provinces and the municipalities have a responsibility in terms of property taxes and re-assessment in light of this crisis. In short, governments must act at once, led by the federal government, to provide much more meaningful compensation than is set out in the bill.

It used to be said that the Canadian dream was to own one's home. For many thousands of Canadians that dream has turned into a nightmare. I think that this government and this Parliament must act at once to restore that Canadian dream for those home owners who have been afflicted with UFFI.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) referred in his speech to an article in the newspaper La Tribune of Sherbrooke in which Gilles Fisette badly misquoted me. I believe that it is important to clarify this statement. I have never told this reporter that I believed that the victims should go and see the doctor. The manner in which my comments were quoted obviously misrepresented my suggestion which was aimed at helping people rather than at laughing at them. I want to clarify this point and put this statement on record to make what occurred quite clear.

• (1740)

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have waited long for this opportunity and it is with great anticipation that I take part in this debate. I would like to go back for a moment to comment on some of the minister's remarks, particularly his comment that he did not want to get involved in petty politics in considering this basic issue of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I suggest to the minister that it is through the political process that a decision is made about the allocation of scarce and valuable resources. What that minister and that government have said continuously since the advent of this issue is that they are not willing to allocate adequate resources to meet the needs of a large number of home owners which arise from this very serious problem. The previous speaker tried to give some indication of the magnitude of the problem. Obviously, to some degree, it fell on deaf ears. On the other hand, perhaps if each one of those members were prepared to spend $1 in the minister's constituency, he would not only be driven away from his office as minister but would be driven away from this House altogether, which might be fair and just in view of the kind of program he has been supporting here today.

This issue has really two basic characteristics. One is that it is a national disaster. We are talking about homes being damaged and health jeopardized. It is an incredible situation in that if the problem were not scattered across the country, governments at all levels would leap to assist with substantial funds to rectify it. The other characteristic is the dishonesty of the program put forward. In presenting this thesis of dishonesty, I am suggesting that the following method is being used. Some time before 1977 a board was set up to approve this insulation material for use in homes. If the material was approved, a description was given of how the material was to be used. At the end of April, 1977, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) wrote to one of the industrial organizations involved and told them they would not be pressured into putting a substandard product such as urea formaldehyde foam into the homes of people. He was concerned about health problems and about it being a poor insulator, and he indicated there was no way the government was going to be pressured into supporting this material. Two months later that decision was completely reversed. The decision came not only from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in a telex to the companies involved, but misgivings were also expressed by CMHC and NRC officials. The only enthusiasts for this material were the manufacturers, and they sat on that board. No greater conflict of interest can be seen. That in my opinion was dishonest.

There is another aspect to it. When that decision came about, the Canadian Development Corporation acquired a share in a company which owned or controlled one of the manufacturers. The thesis that works now, is that there was political pressure to change that decision, especially on government officials on the board, and to gain approval for this product. So a company which was earning very little revenue and was close to bankruptcy, went on to become extremely profitable as a result of this change of decision. Then, just before the ban, it was sold to another outfit, unsuspecting that the ban was coming into place and which, I assume lost its shirt on the deal.

The first thing we would like the minister to do is to hold a public inquiry to inquire into, under oath, the relationship between the CDC, Innocan, Rapco and Lorcon with a view to determining what the connections were between those organizations and the government officials in the approval of this product for use in Canadian homes. That is the first thing which must be done to lift this web of dishonesty which falls over the approval of that product. Second, I would like to point out that the program itself was put forward by the minister in very loud and vigorous terms in this House in an attempt to defend what the government has done and to curse the opposition for its petty political manoeuvring. The minister did nothing to alleviate the fears and concerns of people with that material in their homes. In fact, I suggest the government created a program designed to break the back of the political strength of the home owner's movement.

About two years after the approval, Mr. Speaker, the government of Saskatchewan asked the federal government to please ban the product. It fell on deaf ears again. The federal government was not interested in banning that product, in spite of the fact that Saskatchewan at that time was helping home owners with health problems by becoming involved in a relocation program. This is the second thing that we in the NDP would like to see the government do if it has any honesty. It should develop a relocation program so that those people with extremely high gas concentrations, who are suffering from health problems in their homes, can be relocated. Those who do not have the funds can be given a federal government grant to move out now before they and their children and other members of their family succumb to the health problems associated with that product.

These are two suggestions. A public inquiry would cost next to nothing but it might lift the web of dishonesty which appears to have fallen over this whole issue. The second suggestion is for a relocation program such as the one Saskatchewan became involved in long before the ban was ever announced. I notice the minister is off in some other area thinking of something else, but certainly those are two valuable suggestions.

Next we have the development of this program. The ban was eventually announced in December of 1980 after a great deal of persistence. But then no action was taken. There was a delay of a year before the government developed its program. Certainly a testing program was started and it took up a lot of time. Then the minister developed his answer to the Canadian problem: a $110 million program for home owners. But he announced it on December 23, a good time to avoid the political consequences of a tremendous inadequate program, the day before Christmas Eve. It was beautiful. A $5,000 grant, and a testing program, which, I assume, was based on the dosimeter approach to determine whether or not you had

0.1 parts per million in your home or had a health problem. Then you could qualify for a grant of up to $5,000. But there was a great delay. Groups began to form and, they believed that with some pressure they could get the government to realize and understand what their problem was. Then, lo and behold, an answer from the government.

It is interesting that when the minister announced the program he said that the next honourable thing to do would be for the provinces to become involved. They should get in and help, because the federal government was the only one doing anything. Really that was not true. Other governments were doing things. They were asking the federal government to ban the product before thousands more homes were filled with it. They were testing, and they were relocating. Not only that, they were asking the federal government to become involved in some of these activities. In no way did the federal government do that. But the minister could do something at this late stage. For example, when the minister put the program in place he wrote a letter to the provinces asking them whether they would like to participate in a program to help these home owners. One of the provinces indicated it would be interested and wrote for more details. However, the provinces read about the federal program in the newspaper. That is the kind of consultation in which the minister is prepared to engage. In the last week, I have visited five provinces and I have spoken to home owners, officials and consumer and corporate affairs ministers. They tell me they are prepared to help. But what kind of consultation do they get from this minister and this government? They get none. The reason is that it is basically a political manoeuvre on this government's part.

Third, we ask the minister to leave this House now and to call a federal-provincial conference of ministers responsible for the problem. I am certain that with any effort and some willingness to acknowledge at least some responsibility for the problem before us today, the minister would get the co-operation of provincial governments. Even some co-operation is better than what he is getting today. Provinces are indicating they are prepared to help. If the minister would call a federal-provincial conference I am certain that he would get those people here today. I urge him to do that. I urge him to develop consultation and a meaningful program, not an ad hoc, off-the-cuff program like the one he has developed and presented to us in this House. I hope the minister will have a little more respect for his provincial colleagues who are faced with the problem.

I have outlined three suggestions: the public inquiry, the relocation program and the federal-provincial conference. The minister will not walk away empty-handed. Throughout all of this time, there has never been proper consultation. Most of the officials and the ministers in the provinces would acknowledge that immediately.

It is interesting to look back on this matter. The minister announced the federal government had set up the Canadian General Standards Board, which was a program to show how to utilize the material. There must have been tremendous misgivings about this product. It appeared, until the end of April, that there was no way it would receive approval because of reactions form NRC and from CMHC and even from what the minister wrote in the telex. But when the reversal came in the two-month period, it really appeared as though political pressure came into play in the decision. But when the decision came, it was not a simple one. Great concern was expressed about the product. As a condition of approval, the manufacturers were told to notify a customer directly the product was used of the terms and methods by which it should be used. There was also great concern about setting standards for installers in the field. Everyone knows that if you are in downtown Courtenay on Vancouver Island installing this material you do not have very much control over it. As a result, instead of following the directions laid down by the standards board, the manufacturers never sent out the required information to home owners, which was a condition of approval to use the product. When they failed to do that, approval was rescinded. But from what we can gather, one of the CMHC officials was under such tremendous political pressure to reinstate approval that two days later approval was given and the individual eventually resigned. That is a very serious situation. But there was no control on the installers in the field. Instead of using the material as recommended in exterior walls of wood frame houses, the installers poured it into masonry houses, into ceilings, into floors, and below ground level. In fact, they did everything conceivably wrong in the installation of UFFI. The chain of events is as follows. Officials representing the government on the standards board knew the material was hazardous. In some way they were coerced to recommend and approve the product, contrary to their best knowledge of what the dangers were. In laying down the conditions under which the material was to be used, they expressed serious concerns about being able to control them. Eventually we wound up with a dilemma.

Clearly, the government is responsible for that. It failed to act in the best interests of the consumer. It failed to provide adequate supervision. It failed to respond effectively to the problem we have before us today.

My colleague who spoke before me mentioned the serious concerns expressed by people. The minister said only a few complaints had been received in 1979 and only 100 were received the following year.

Let me recount an incident, which has been repeated hundreds of times. Urea formaldehyde foam insulation was installed in a family's home. The wife worked during the day and was home in the evening. She began to experience a very serious allergic reaction. The doctor could find no source and suggested that she was suffering from nerves. He advised her to quit work and spend more time at home. She did this, and her condition became worse. There was no medical tie to the problem because the people did not know what was in the home. The insulation had been installed by a company. Adequate information had not been given to the family. Eventually this family read in the newspaper that UFFI could cause certain health problems. They confirmed they had UFFI installed in their home. They attempted to get information about it. They decided to have the UFFI removed, and their health problems cleared up immediately.

I sat down with a man at a kitchen table last Thursday. He is head of the UFFI home owners group. His wife and children had terrible reactions to his product. He told me that he could not wait for the government to decide what it would do and that he had had to get the stuff out of his house. He told me his house was covered with stucco. He rented a concrete saw, stripped the stucco from the outside of his home and before the foam was removed the concentration of gas had sufficiently dropped in the home so that the family's health began to improve. He had difficulty gathering the funds to perform this operation. However, he is now in the process of putting his house back together again. But this individual has some serious questions because the minister has said that removing the deleterious substance from his home, which resulted in his family's health improving, disqualifies him from receiving any compensation. If the minister were to do a fair and honest thing, he would make an announcement that those people who have removed the foam from their homes, whether before December 23, 1981, or after that date, will qualify for whatever grants are available. I would urge the minister to make that statement here today. People cannot sacrifice their families to the uncertainties surrounding this material.

I have put only two examples on the record, but there are many, many more. In the cities of Winnipeg and Vancouver, people are pulling the stuff out of their homes. These people are asking why someone who pulled this insulation material out of his home before December 23 should qualify for the grant when they cannot? I would urge the minister to make a statement tonight that those people who are removing this insulation now can be considered for grants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please! It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.00 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was discussing some suggestions which the government might follow. I should like to return to that train of thought by referring to some of the problems we see in this legislation and in the over-all program of the government. The first one was generally a severe criticism of the consultation in which the minister was involved with provincial governments when in fact there was no consultation whatsoever. In fact, some provincial governments were willing to provide assistance. We suggested that the minister should call immediately for a federal-provincial conference of ministers responsible for the urea formaldehyde problem and attempt to develop a coherent and co-ordinated program so that we could end the rather off the cuff or off-the-wall approach to the problem to date. I should like to elaborate on some other important features.

Earlier the minister indicated that there was not really a serious health problem with urea formaldehyde foam, when in fact there is very good evidence that it is a serious health problem. In some cases, family physicians have conducted various tests on their patients. Their patients, who suffered symptoms from being in UFFI homes, and those symptoms clear up when they moved from the home and then the symptoms reoccur when they went back to the house. The government of Saskatchewan was attempting to relocate people. Therefore, the second suggestion was to provide relocation assistance immediately to those people who were suffering severe reactions to the foam in their homes. It has been 14 months or 15 months since the ban was announced. Pensioners and lower income individuals in particular who cannot afford to relocate are still living in those homes. We urge the minister to improve the bill and to develop a relocation program quickly so that relocation assistance could quickly be provided when a physician decides that a home is unsafe for a family.

We also dealt with the serious concern of individuals with the entire approval system. The minister went into great detail to explain how the Canadian General Standards Board approached the process for the approval of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. However, in reality, if the documents pertaining to exchanges between ministers and other individuals were publicized, they would show that the National Research Council and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources were extremely skeptical and seriously concerned about approving this material. This was not the case of the industry officials who were very eager to have the product approved. Suddenly we saw, after some changes within the Canadian Development Corporation and acquisitions that they made, that there was a rapid move toward approval of UFFI. Since that process has not been reviewed, the government should organize a public inquiry into that very question. There is an extremely good reason for conducting this inquiry. First, it would prove very helpful in any lawsuits which may develop and it would save home owners tens of thousands of dollars, if not hundreds of thousands, in investigative research. Therefore, those facts should be published in order to provide the public with information which they have a right to know. As I say, a public inquiry into that facet of the process is extremely important.

We advocate a public inquiry into the relationship between the Canadian Development Corporation and its subsidiaries as well as into the approval process of the Canadian General Standards Board.

The next area I would like to discuss is the question of research which has been conducted into this product. If there is any justification—which there is not—for the existence of this problem of failure to act quickly it would be that there is really no solid foundation of information on urea formaldehyde and its potential effects on homes and people and what could possibly be done to alleviate the situation.

It is interesting to note that I asked a question in the House on April 20, concerning the research project. It appeared that there were problems with the safe level of concentration of gas and the level which the government would accept as a criteria for assistance. There was no clear understanding of what type of gases were developing in the UFFI or what the actual allergic agents were. Rather than answering the question, the minister stated:

I am surprised at the hon. member's question, because just before the Easter adjournment I sent all members of the House an information document which included a list of research projects started by the National Research Council of Canada and the Department of National Health and Welfare. I should be happy to send the hon. member some more copies.

Unfortunately, when we went back to review the document which the minister delivered, there were some very sketchy details about some projects. I telephoned his office, and one of his aides said that the minister made a mistake when he said that a list of research projects had been distributed before Easter. His department was currently making a list of projects initiated by the National Research Council and the Department of National Health and Welfare which would be ready "tomorrow", which was April 22, 1982. Therefore, on May 7, after a great deal of pressure was applied, the National Research Council finished and delivered a list of the research projects which seemed to have been undertaken. There must be more than appear on this list, but it does describe in some detail projects which had been undertaken by the National Research Council.

They seem to be widely varying projects but only one deals with the health question. The report from Bruce M. Small and Associates appears to be the only project dealing with the health question. He prepared a handbook on the sensitization effects of UFFI, and he was to investigate the research that had been done on chemical susceptibility UFFI. Basically, this has been the only information we have received on the adequacy of the research program. There appear to be 23 contracts but very little information on the medical effects. After having completed his study, Mr. Small seemed very concerned about the question of immunity. In his analysis of the research he believes that what appears to happen is that exposure to urea formaldehyde gas tends to break down a person's immunity system and therefore makes individuals more susceptible to disease. Whether or not that condition has been substantiated still requires addition research. Certainly the symptoms people experience from the presence of UFFI in their homes, the stated concerns of government and other public health officials as well as statements of those concerns in research literature would certainly be sufficient indications that we have, a serious health problem, contrary to what the minister says.

There is another study which was done by Professor Albert Nantel. He is a professor who is involved in toxicology at the Laval University. Professor Nantel made a presentation to the Lamoreux Commission on urea formaldehyde foam. I will read a short portion of what he had to say:

What I found was at first sight surprising and, at second sight, frightening. Whether it is formaldehyde itself or any other contaminant released in the ambiant air of these houses insulated with urea-formaldehyde, I had to come to the conclusion that something does produce a severe depression in the natural defence mechanism of their organism.

Again, he is talking about the body's immunity system. He also raised serious concerns about the fact that in some of the homes which he studied, with even less UFFI than 0.1 parts per million, symptoms were displayed at concentrations well below that figure.

It was pointed out that the standard of 0.1 parts per million was arrived at in a very arbitrary way from industrial standards in Europe and then transferred to domestic standards in Canada. This fact deserves more attention. Since normal, healthy individuals only spend up to eight hours a day in the working environment, it is difficult to see how the government could implement its entire program in Canada based on this standard of 0.1 parts per million in an industrial environment. We now have a standard of 0.1 parts per million in a domestic environment where there are elderly people, people with allergies, young children and families who are in the home for much longer periods than those workers in Europe. In many cases, women and children would get maximum exposure and children and elderly people in particular would be extremely vulnerable. Instead of the minister's developing a program based on a maximum of 0.1 parts of urea formaldehyde per million as the starting point of health problems, he should be seriously considering a program that would simply remove UFFI from homes which have it.

Professor Nantel goes on to say that 0.1 parts per million is not a good standard because there are many health defects which occur at lower levels than that. He suggests that the level be lowered and that UFFI should be considered to be a very serious health hazard. Apparently, Dr. Nantel is concerned about extending his research into this subject, and there is a very limited amount of medical research material coming forward. The government should be seriously looking forward at providing additional funding to Nantel and other individuals to examining these serious health hazards.

Another aspect, as we look through the list of research documents is the question of dealing with the building structure itself. The minister proposes to go around and measure concentrations in homes. When the dosimeter indicates a reading greater than 0.1 parts per million, he will then order a comprehensive test. Should the concentration be borne out, he will look at applications for remedial action, but the question remains as to what happens to homes which do not have levels 0.1 ppm or greater. As I understand it, he will either go through a remedial program in the high concentration homes and give people certificates saying their homes are certified safe for all time, or else, I presume, he will give those homes which measure less than 0.1 parts per million some type of safety certificate to tell the occupants that it is safe forever. However, in reality the testing program is very scanty and poor.

First of all, there is a real question concerning how people are handling dosimeters in the field. There is a question of the timing during this period of the year, delaying the testing program, from winter to late spring. When the windows and doors in homes are open, we do not know how the readings in the springtime will compare with those in the wintertime. When the temperatures in homes are up and there is a certain internal humidity and the gas concentrations will change. The timing of those readings is extremely important. The building structure itself, the trapping of moisture and the growth of fungus in the walls must be considered. Fungus might give off spores which penetrate the walls, making it possible for allergic reactions to be set off, reactions which could cause problems.

As well, at certain times of the year some areas in the house reach higher temperatures than other parts of the house. During the wet period in the winter, moisture might be trapped, beginning the rapid decomposition of what would appear to be stable insulation. We must consider the trapping of moisture, the breaking down of formaldehyde and the rotting of the wooden structure, which could weaken the structural integrity of the home. We must consider the question of corrosion in wires, nails and metals which, again, could not only weaken the structural integrity of the home but could also cause dangerous electrical problems. Then again, we must also consider the question of the release of gas other than formaldehyde. In short, there is a tremendous need for research into this area. There is a good possibility that the very real kind of testing program which has been developed, will probably catch only 10 per cent or maybe 20 per cent of the homes and will miss the problems in other homes which the minister claims are safe, and this is a serious concern.

Therefore, with the development of the government's program, I assume we will see strengthening of research. I do not think these are simply token programs. I think we will see a systematic development of research into these areas and the government will be prepared vigorously to pursue this research, especially into the question of the removal of the insulation from homes. As well, there will be work toward establishing the relation of health problems to exposure to urea formaldehyde gas and the possibility of the existence of other gases in that insulation which might be released and cause problems. It has been suggested that phosgene and several other fairly serious compounds are released. So in terms of the funding program and the development of a better approach, we would suggest to the minister that this research program is not adequate and that much stronger emphasis should be placed on health.

Quite a number of provincial home owner associations are considering bringing in people like Albert Nantel and other experts in the field to hold seminars with local physicians. These family physicians are very reluctant to relate the symptoms of their patients to formaldehyde gas. There is a very serious problem in getting enough expert information to physicians. Some home owner groups are attempting to do this. This is certainly the type of role the government should be undertaking through the Department of National Health and Welfare to ensure that physicians have adequate information with which to deal with this problem. We have requested this of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) long before the ban was announced. So the research question is extremely important.

It is also rather interesting to note the government's position in the material that it has published to date. I wish to quote briefly from a document entitled "Building Practice No. 23" by R. P. Bowen, Shirtliffe and Chown. The preamble states:

> This document has been prepared to meet the demand by consumers and contractors for guidance in solving problems related to urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The need to provide immediate information has not allowed for intensive research or extensive field trials of the remedial measures presented.

I think the salient point there is that most of the information coming forward is still pretty sketchy.

The second question regards the term "formaldehyde gas". As used in this document, it refers to the mixture of gases released by UFFI. Formaldehyde gas is usually predominant. Since the composition of gases may vary from product to product, the gas is difficult to characterize and might be called UFFI gas, so that we really do not know the product with which we are dealing or to which we are exposing people in homes, people such as the elderly, children and people with other problems. This is the entire document which people seem to be using as their guide for rehabilitating their homes. It goes through removal procedures, sealing and other procedures which will generally make their homes safe from the minister's certification standpoint. Let me simply read the National Research Council's position concerning what it recommends homeowners to do.

> The National Research Council of Canada or any person acting on its behalf assumes no liability arising from the use of information contained in this document nor warrants that such use will be free from privately owned rights.

That statement is almost a disclaimer of responsibility for recommended procedures. There is a very clear need for a better base of information from which home owners can work. There is a definite need for clear information as to the need for removing that material from the home and making the home secure, as well as information regarding its effect on health. We need to know what is involved in this gas and its effects on human beings. I would urge that the minister very quickly move forward to resolve this problem.

It is interesting that the minister spent a great deal of time criticizing the American position on this matter. He takes great pride in saying that we were the first to ban it, but the government never should have approved it in the beginning. Once the government became aware of the problem, it allowed thousands of homes to be filled with the material. It finally put on a temporary ban and then a permanent ban. Then, when asked to set up a compensation program, to inform physicians of the problems, and to take an active role in informing home owners, it opted for a more passive, and inadequate program. The minister takes great delight in saying that we were the first, and that no one else was involved but us.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Massachusetts.

Mr. Skelly: And Connecticut, and many other areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Skelly: Just to bring my comments very quickly to a close, Mr. Speaker, I would draw attention to two last points. One of the findings which seems to be coming out of the research is that urea formaldehyde is an unstable compound. If we deal with only 10 per cent of the homes and if the minister is prepared to pay roughly $1,000 on an average to seal off that gas and reduce its concentration in homes, he should be paying out about $8 million from the program, if that guess is anywhere near correct.

The problem is that urea formaldehyde in safe homes will continue to degrade, break down and release formaldehyde gas. After the cutoff date of June, 1983 when this program is no longer continued, we will have a situation where other homes have a gas buildup and there will be health reactions. We have to look toward a program that covers all homes. The only way to be certain that we have covered all homes is for the government to guarantee that it will remove, without cost to the home owner, that material from the home. Basically, it was a federal government error.

The second point is the legal situation. Very early on the minister said it was not the fault of the government. If homes owners wanted to go after somebody to find fault, they should sue the manufacturers, suppliers or installers of this material. In every province in Canada there were attempts to explore legal action which the minister suggested they pursue. In fact, the minister was going to make an amendment to the Crown Liabilities Act in this bill so that accepting a grant would not bar a civil action. I wonder if the minister knew in the beginning that legal action was an impossibility. Those who have looked closely at the possibility see that civil action will cost tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of dollars in extremely complex law cases. There are statute of limitation problems and the difficulty of financing those legal actions. This makes it virtually impossible for victims to sue. The minister must have known this when he suggested civil action.

As an alternative, we suggest that the provincial and federal governments fund cases that groups might bring on behalf of a number of individuals. There is opportunity in British Columbia to sue under the trade practices act. Many individuals would like to launch a civil action against the manufacturer, and many would like to sue the federal government on the basis of the way this material was approved and the federal responsibility for setting proper standards and inspection procedures with regard to the installation of this material. The minister knew in advance that it was virtually impossible to launch civil action without help from the government.

In summary, we want a federal-provincial conference on the UFFI issue. This bill is hopelessly inadequate. There is the possibility of good, solid consultation and the development of a co-operative national program to deal with this national disaster.

There should be a relocation program for those who have health problems because of the high concentration of gas in their homes. They should be relocated. That should be done by the federal government without bickering as to who will eventually pay the bill. Their health is at stake.

There is the question of what the minister should do today. Fair play would dictate that he should clarify the situation as to whether home owners who remove the foam after they have documented it, and kept the proper reasons, can receive the same treatment as those who remove the foam from their homes before December 23. That is only fair.

There should be comprehensive research funding for an individual like Nantel and others who have to provide a proper information base. This bill is hopelessly inadequate. There should be a public inquiry into the relationship and approval procedure between RAPCO, CDC and Innocan and the approval process to shed light on the serious questions being asked. That would provide assistance by cutting some of the costs of discovery in legal actions that will develop from this issue.

Finally, the bottom line in this question is that the federal government made a very serious mistake. It approved a substance which many of its officials knew was inherently unstable and dangerous. It is basically a federal responsibility, not that of anyone else. It is not the responsibility of the provincial government, the opposition, the home owners, or people standing in front of the minister's constituency office with placards and gas masks, not the responsibility of anyone but this government. It made the mistake, therefore, it owes the people compensation. The compensation should be for removal of the foam from their homes at no cost to the home owner.

This can be structured in such a way that there are priorities for removal, such as the elderly, those with health problems, those with children in the home, or any others in jeopardy. Second, people can be compensated through a variety of mechanisms. The minister should have the courage to bring forward proper amendments before the bill goes to committee so that members of the House and Canadians can look at those amendments. Those who have to move because of job changes or other reasons and face an enormous equity loss in their homes should be given priority to remove the foam and renovate the home. It should come out of buildings where there are school children, elderly people or others who are vulnerable. Beyond that, people could be given the minister's certificate that they can have the insulation removed from their homes at their convenience. This could be funded by a variety of mechanisms. The only way to wind up with a home in a safe, habitable home with every manner confidence whatsoever is to remove the foam and rehabilitate the home. That is clearly the answer.

I have one parting shot before terminating. It would be interesting to hear what the Conservative Party members would advocate it and when they ever come to power. Every party in this House should put, no pun intended, their chips on the table. The government indicated it is not prepared to go further with compensation. This is the extent of the allocation of scarce and valuable resources that they are prepared to make in this situation. I suggest to my colleagues on my right that it is time they put their program on the table. So that owners will know where they really stand on the issue.

[Translation]

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, it is almost a duty to speak to Bill C-109, now being considered at second reading and intended to provide for payments to owners of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam. Considering all that has been said on the subject before, what was said today and what will probably be said tomorrow, I feel we should realize what formaldehyde gas is and the effects it may have on humans, as well as the straightforward and concrete action taken by the government since it became aware of the problems besetting people living in homes insulated with this product.

Mr. Speaker, formaldehyde gas is acrid and colourless, and exists in small quantities in the air we breathe outside. It emanates from a variety of sources including incinerators, engine exhausts and smog. Normally, air contains from 0.005 to 0.05 parts per million of this gas, although levels may be higher under unfavourable conditions. Formaldehyde gas may escape from urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The amount will depend on several factors, including the ambient temperature, humidity, the competence of the installer and the formula used in preparing the foam. In our homes, formaldehyde gas may come from sources other than home insulation. For instance, smokers are exposed to higher levels of the gas, since cigarette smoke contains 40 parts per million. Particle board and plywood, gas stoves and space heaters and also fumes of cooking oil may also raise levels of formaldehyde gas in the home. There are a variety of symptoms associated with exposure to formaldehyde gas, and they depend, of course, on the levels to which a person is exposed. If levels are low, there are no negative consequences. However, some people may be more sensitive than others to the presence of formaldehyde gas. Health and Welfare Canada has suggested a level of 0.1 parts per million as an acceptable standard for the quality of air inside the home.

The standard was established according to a safety principle, to protect the elderly, the young, those who are ill as a result of other causes, and the general public. Most people should not have any symptoms at this or lesser levels. Many people exposed to levels of up to 0.25 parts per million, that is, two and a half times the accepted level of concentration are not even aware of it. However, people who are particularly sensitive react to the presence of formaldehyde and feel a slight irritation of the eyes, nose and throat. When exposed to levels exceeding 1.00 parts per million, that is, at least ten times the accepted level of concentration for ambient air in the home, most people feel obvious discomfort and a number of symptoms may appear, such as irritation of the eyes, nose, throat and respiratory passages, dryness in the mouth, headaches, nose bleeds and insomnia. It was also found that certain people develop allergies when exposed to formaldehyde solutions and also that formaldehyde gas, even at low levels, could aggravate asthma attacks.

Although formaldehyde has been used since the last century, until now there has been very little research on its long term effects. A year and a half ago, it was discovered that formaldehyde caused a rare form of cancer in the nasal passages of rats and mice. However, the same type of cancer has not been observed in humans, not even in workers exposed to fairly high levels of formaldehyde gas. Nevertheless, a number of research projects are now underway, including complete epidemiological research programs, for the purpose of finding out whether there is a high cancer mortality rate among certain groups, for instance, undertakers and workers in the chemical industry. These groups are exposed to fairly high levels of formaldehyde gas. Any substance that causes cancer in laboratory animals should be considered dangerous to man, unless it is clearly established that the human body is able to break down or make a different use of this substance. This is a basic principle where health protection is concerned, and it is generally recognized, for instance, in the legislation on food and drugs. At the present time, researchers are trying to establish why formaldehyde causes cancer in certain animals.

If we assume that the risk of cancer is the same for men as for rats and mice, we can presume that the maximum additional risk of cancer in the air containing some .05 part per million of formaldehyde gas is equivalent to that incurred by smoking a cigarette per week, the risk incurred at a level of .1 parts per million of formaldehyde gas being less than a third of a cigarette smoked daily, Mr. Speaker.

Let us see now what happens under working conditions. In that environment, to establish the maximum concentrated level of formaldehyde which could be considered as being consistent with the security standards for homes, the Department of National Health and Welfare has examined the medical files of individuals usually exposed to formaldehyde gas at work. The actual threshold in an industrial environment is two parts per million for healthy adults working 48 hours weekly. Medical files kept for long periods show no sign or symptom of asthma resulting from formaldehyde exposure. A study of medical books and articles does not show any such case either. However, the Department of National Health and Welfare does not exclude the possibility that asthma sufferers, following formaldehyde exposure, could become more prone to other allergies.

Let us deal now with the conditions in our homes. In an average home, one can find babies, youngsters, sick persons or old people and since many could be living there 24 hours a day, the acceptable standard in an industrial environment, that is two parts per million, is deemed to be unacceptable for residents. Several health specialists suggest the application of a 10 factor and adaptations that take into consideration the likelihood of increased exposure in those houses.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has decided to provide an additional security margin by setting a standard twenty times lower than that used in the industry. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian standard is similar to that in other countries. For example, the governments of Norway, the Federal Republic of Germany, of Australia as well as the American Association for Industrial Health have set at .1 part per million the maximum allowable level of formaldehyde in the air inside a house insulated with urea formaldehyde foam.

What is urea formaldehyde foam? It is an isolating substance which is a compound made up of urea formaldehyde resin, an acid used as a hardening agent—usually phosphoric acid—and a gas—most of the time, compressed air. The substance is prepared on the premises where it is to be used. It is injected through hoses into the walls of a building where it hardens. It becomes therefore solid isolation. Before it is injected into the walls, the freshly made foam is some 75 per cent water, and during the hardening process, once it has been injected, formaldehyde is given off. Mr. Speaker, urea formaldehyde was used for the first time as an isolating substance in the early sixties. It has been used increasingly ever since throughout the world. Today, it is used mostly in Germany, Britain, Sweden, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, France and South Africa. It is also available in the United States, except in Massachusetts and Connecticut where it is banned. Canada and Israel were the only two countries to take it off the market.

Late in 1977, following a request made by the CMHC, the Canadian General Standards Board set up interim standards for the insulating foam. This Board makes decisions based on consensus. The Board is made up of 10 representatives from the industry, 9 from the Federal Government, 4 from British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, the four provinces which have agreed on standards for urea formaldehyde foam insulation. It is the industry's duty to meet these standards. Following the Canadian General Standards Board's decision, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation accepted with the utmost reserve the use of this insulating substance which was added to the list of authorized substances under the Canadian Home Insulation Program, but only after the CMHC had brought this product to the attention of the Board and emphasized the precautions which were to be taken during the home insulating process. The Corporation even imposed the following conditions:

Installation specialists had to be trained. Second, a brochure explaining the installation process had to be given to the consumers before work started in their home. It behove Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide adequate information to consumers about the material used to insulate their home. Third, the product was not to be used to insulate ceilings, floors or basements. It could only be used in hollow spaces between the walls of wood-frame houses. It could only be used in walls where the foam could dry rapidly. It could only be installed when the outside temperature was within the prescribed limits. The manufacturers had to form an association. Mr. Speaker, these are the precautions taken by a government agency following representations or comments showing concern over the use of the foam. Unfortunately, the product was installed in homes with brick walls, aluminium siding or other types of siding which prevent the gazeous components of the product to escape outside the building. The people inside the building are then seriously exposed to the hazards of urea formaldehyde, which is the main cause of the problems or the illnesses which I described earlier, namely eye, nose and throat, and sometimes skin irritations. After reading the first international reports warning of the health hazards related to urea formaldehyde foam insulation, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada (Miss Bégin) established a committee of experts on UFFI to prevent any risk from this product, and soon afterwards, the government banned the sale of the product under the Hazardous Products Act. In its final report published in April 1981, the committee came to the following conclusion:

> The ban should not be lifted as long as the industry is not able to demonstrate to the appropriate government agencies that is has developed a stable and definitive product.

Early in June 1981, the cabinet announced that it had asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to implement a government action program and direct and co-ordinate the activities of all federal departments in this regard. On June 15, 1981, the Information and Co-ordination Centre was created as an integral part of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to inform the public, administer the inspection of a national sampling of homes and provide federal-provincial co-ordination. In fact, consumer protection standards are set by the provinces. They must ensure compliance with these standards and several provinces have their own insulation program. On June 10, 1980, the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs sent a telex to his provincial counterparts informing them of the federal initiatives concerning foam insulation and asking them to appoint a representative to co-ordinate activities with the Canadian government. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be said that the government of Canada has never even warned the provincial governments about the problem which could be related to this insulating foam. During the federal-provincial conference held in September 1981, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs asked the provincial governments to accept their own responsibilities. On that occasion, he reminded them about his request over a year before at the federal-provincial conference in Saskatoon, in June 1980, and which I have just mentioned.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a statement made at that time by the Canadian minister. He said:

> A product of concern to us is urea formaldehyde foam. There have been enough consumer complaints concerning formaldehyde vapours to be concerned about short-term and long-term effects on health from exposure to the product. The problem stems partly from faulty application at the foaming stage. In order to assess consumer hazards from formaldehyde exposure, the National Research Council is setting up a program to measure formaldehyde concentration in a number of residences that were insulated with the product. The Canadian Department of National Health and Welfare also established an advisory council made up of health experts outside the government that have been instructed to evaluate potential toxic effects of the inhalation of the product at the concentration level found in actual homes.

The minister went on to say:

> Over and above health considerations, faulty application of the product can have significant economic consequences for consumers. Because of the fragmentation of that industry, consumers have a hard time recouping the costs of faulty installation. Indeed, we find in that industry resin manufacturers, specialized firms that mix the product and others that distribute it, and also installers. The latter often are small contractors unable to assume the costs of redoing a faulty installation, which costs can range from $15,000 to $35,000.
> We find that the product as such and the installation work are two important factors in the safety problem deriving from cellulosic insulators and urea formaldehyde based insulators. Regulations concerning the contents of the product are already in place in the case of cellulosic insulators, and it may become necessary to ban or regulate urea formaldehyde insulation, depending on the results of current studies.

The minister concluded:

> In any event, it seems essential that provinces take steps, at the installer training and certification levels, to ensure their qualifications and reduce safety and health hazards to consumers that could derive from the toxic and fireproof properties of such products. I would therefore ask you to convey the message and the contents of the discussion we are going to have to your colleagues in charge of those matters in each province.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, the state of the matter has always been of prime concern to the government, and particularly the minister in charge. Later on, a whole series of tests was developed to assess what I would call our homes' health condition. That check started on August 24, 1981. Of course, priority was given to homes whose owners reported health problems or uncomfortable levels of formaldehyde vapour. We inspected 2,400 homes and on October 31, the operation was completed and reports were tabled. For the benefit of all, I would like to say a few words of the Hazardous Products Act. Under that act, a manufacturer can appeal a government ban on a product and request that a board of review be established. In February 1981, the Energlobe company in Philipsburg, Quebec, requested that urea formaldehyde foam installation be referred to such a board. Under the act, the government had to proceed, and did so. The board is chaired by Mr. Jacques Lamoureux, from the Montreal law firm of Lamoureux et Rousseau. The other board members are Mr. Benjamin Lu, professor of chemical engineering at the University of Ottawa, and Dr. Robert Sutherland, a Toronto physician and industrial health consultant. A final decision on the product cannot be reached until such time as that board has given its verdict. In the meantime, the product is kept off the market. As soon as the report has been received, the government will of course make it public. So, without even waiting for the results of the report, the government has gone ahead and proposed an assistance program for those people whose homes have been insulated with urea formaldehyde foam.

I believe some of my colleagues will give you the details of the assistance programs the government is offering Canadians. I should also like to point out that, while the government was offering citizens whatever help they need to improve their situation, it was also calling for some involvement on the part of the provinces. Despite repeated requests, the provinces still refuse to give any direct assistance to the owners of houses insulated with urea formaldehyde foam. In fact, the provinces that had been offering testing facilities have now discontinued that service. All the provinces have been approached and invited to co-operate in a program aimed at training and registering insulating contractors. Three western provinces only have replied, two of them in the affirmative, and the third, in the negative. The New Brunswick government has offered a $40,000 subsidy to the UFFI Homeowners Association. The Quebec government is also implementing a temporary program in four points: medical tests, level of UFFI concentration in walls, a very limited aid to relocation and corrective measures assessment. Therefore, the almost complete indifference of provincial governments is evident. Being responsible for the quality of products, it is their duty as well as that of the federal government to protect Canadians. And once again, to say that the government of Canada has not since the beginning been concerned with the health of the people and adequate means to help them, is just not true.

I repeat that the government has assumed its responsibility with courage and that by banning the use of this foam it has given Canadians increased protection. Even without any legal obligation the government has set up a program to assist home owners. This program's objective is to reduce UFFI emanations to a bearable level, at which those home owners can safely live again in their houses. Mr. Speaker, I think that the program brought forward along with the bill now under consideration is very important and very urgent. A number of citizens are waiting for the government's help and in my opinion, it is in the interest of every hon. member to see that the delays which are already extremely long are reduced to a minimum in order to meet, as soon as possible and in the most efficient way, the needs expressed by the people who are experiencing serious problems.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are debating here this evening, Bill C-109, an act to provide for payments to persons in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, is a very important one. It actually should have been introduced months ago as we have had a lot of information, going back to 1960, as to the effects of urea foam. There are home owners all across Canada, as well as apartment dwellers and office workers and people in schools, who are going to welcome some type of action and compensation from the government so they can have some peace of mind. The minister should have detailed the amount of compensation more clearly in this legislation, as many people have already spent thousands of dollars in removing the insulation. I was at a public meeting two weeks ago in Winnipeg on this problem. A representative of the NDP government attended. He did not come forward with any sound information as to how Manitoba was going to help these home owners, and he received a very rough time from the gathering that evening. So if the provinces are going to become involved in providing compensation, I hope they come forward with some concrete plans in the near future.

The hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) stated earlier that if the Conservatives formed the next government he was worried about whether they will live up to any commitments made. I can assure him that the Conservative government will live up to all of the commitments in this or any other bill with regard to full compensation for the home owner and anyone else who has problems with this insulation. I would like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), who has shown real leadership in the House and done exhaustive research in regard to this problem. He has probably done more than anyone to get the minister to move on this problem.

Home owners in Manitoba with this insulation, Mr. Speaker, have been patiently waiting for satisfactory compensation from the Liberal government. The president of the Manitoba UFFI Association, Glenn Markowski, is to be commended for the yeoman service he has undertaken to assist all Manitoba UFFI home owners. But he cannot accomplish anything on his own. That association has been hoping the minister would recognize the seriousness of the problem and the many hardships that home owners are being made to endure. It is becoming apparent that the Liberal government does not have the concern for the health and wellbeing of Canadians, which it has stated so many times it has, because it has taken so long to bring this bill forward. Why do people have to see their families suffer medical problems which have become so serious that people are having to wear gas masks to enter their homes? This actions was taken on the advice of a federal government employee, but it did not ease their problem or get rid of it; it only disguised it. Still encountering health problems is a Montreal couple who moved from their hard earned home to an apartment as a temporary arrangement. The same couple is in the process of moving back. Their hard-earned money is tied up in their home, but they are not moving back to live in this house; they are having to move into their garage. Another couple has had to move into a mobile home parked in the driveway of their uninhabitable home.

Now, Mr. Speaker, acute and chronic health effects can and are happening. Individuals, as I am sure you are aware, vary in their reaction to formaldehyde gas exposure. Respiratory problems, eye, nasal and throat irritations will occur at different levels of exposure in different individuals. If a normal, healthy individual reacts to these gases, have you the evidence to allow you to set standards for the general population, which includes young children, the elderly, the infirm and pregnant women?

On April 20, in the House of Commons, the minister responsible brushed off all calls for the federal government to do more to help the victims of formaldehyde gas. Is this minister still insisting there is no real problem here? I believe that the government is attempting to divert public attention from the serious implications contained in the committee's final report of April 23, 1981. This report notes that UFFI is an unstable material of variable composition, which can break down and release formaldehyde gas. Formaldehyde is an irritant to the eyes, skin and breathing passages, and exposure to it can produce allergic responses in sensitive individuals. It has also been shown to produce cancer in laboratory animals.

On February 10 of this year the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) replied to a question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), that:

> —the Canadian government does not admit any legal responsibility in this matter.

On humanitarian grounds only the government decided to take action and assist on the basis of the government's responsibility for national health. How can the minister stand in the House and calmly say the government does not admit legal responsibility after approving UFFI in 1969, after tests had clearly shown it was a health hazard? Even as early as 1960 West Germany had proof it was a health hazard. The Liberal government approved UFFI in 1969 and withdrew its approval in 1970. The government approved this same material for a government funded grant program in the face of opposition from government agencies and departments in August, 1977. As an individual and an elected Member of Parliament, I would like to know how it is that a product which lost government acceptance previously due to instability was accepted for a nationwide home insulation plan, and why, after it was accepted, sponsored grants were given to encourage Canadians to use this insulation. How can the government now say calmly that it is not its responsibility?

It really is not necessary to conduct studies and reports on the health hazards of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Between 1960 and 1981, 13 studies were completed on this same subject. These studies proved UFFI hazardous. A number of these studies were conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I will take a couple of minutes to document some of the studies that have already been conducted. First, was West Germany in 1960. In 1974 the Department of National Health and Welfare requested to review the material. In 1978, the head of chemicals and fuels safety in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated that exposure could lead to medical problems. In 1978, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources stated that a federal committee investigating found there was potential damage to children and old people from long-term exposure. In 1978, the United States called for a stop of all UFFI sales, and pressed manufacturers to have health warnings on foam insulation contracts. In 1979, lab tests showed a link between UFFI and cancer rats at low emission rates. In 1979, there was a complete ban on UFFI in the United States after eight months of study. There was no response from the Department of National Health and Welfare at that time. In 1980, a report of the Department of National Health and Welfare was submitted and the minister announced a temporary ban on UFFI. In 1981, the Department of National Health and Welfare continued its ban on UFFI. Again, in 1981, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) appointed a review board and the United States confirmed that low doses of UFFI caused cancer in rats. Also in 1981 the National Research Council warned home owners of dangers. We have had many studies, Mr. Speaker. Now is the time for action, not more studies.

It is now a proven fact, which does not have to be proven again, that UFFI is hazardous to health. We need remedial action now. Is the government spending enough money on remedial action? The answer is no. Is the government spending more money on more studies to prove facts that have been proved so many times by so many reports and studies? The answer is yes.

Here is the current status report from the Department of National Health and Welfare on projects that are in operation or are under active consideration and the money that will be spent to prove a well-known proven fact, namely, that urea formaldehyde foam insulation is a health hazard. I say these reports and studies are a complete waste of money. We already know the results of UFFI in our Canadian homes. This is another example of the total disregard the Liberal government has for federal spending. I say this money should have been put toward a better use, such as assisting home owners' associations deal with these problems. Better still, this money should have been used to assist home owners to get rid totally of this hazardous product from their homes.

As part of the grants contribution program in support of consumer groups, such as the Manitoba Home Owners' Association, which is administered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, home owners' associations are to receive financial assistance. This financial assistance is supposed to provide assistance and service such as inquiries into the nature and extent of the problems caused by UFFI in their area. To do this, people have to travel in and around the Winnipeg area. Names, addresses and telephone numbers of each home owner have to be collected and given to the government UFFI centre. Questionnaires are to be circulated by the association to each and every home owner. Telephoning, telex and advertising have to be undertaken. Halls and offices for meetings have to be rented to keep home owners informed. Photocopying has to be done and postage has to be paid so that members can receive the most up to date information by mail. These are just a few of the duties to be undertaken by home owner associations such as the one in Manitoba.

The government is proud of the fact that it is funding home owner's groups. It is funding these groups with the hope that it will cut down on work having to be done by government offices. For this service, which would cost the government millions to do it itself, what is paid in the form of a grant to the Manitoba Home Owners' Association? The Manitoba Home Owners' Association received a grant of $7,000. This $7,000 is expected to compensate for the time, travel, equipment, office work and every other detail required to assist approximately 2,000 Manitoba home owners receive assistance from the federal government. This is to correct an error that the federal government is responsible for instigating, but it is now saying "The Canadian government does not admit any legal responsibility in this matter." This $7,000 to Manitoba home owners works out to $3.50 per home. What does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs expect Manitoba home owners to accomplish with this grant of $7,000 which breaks down to the grand total of $3.50 per home? What is the minister's rationale behind the granting of this paltry sum? The Manitoba home owners requested $20,000, and this by far was not unreasonable to look after the interests of 2,000 home owners. But they received just $7,000.

What is the solution? Is the answer that home owners just lost out if they happen not to be living in the minister's own province of Quebec which received a grant of $40,000? Maybe Manitobans would be better off if they all moved to Ontario, which received a grant of $39,000. This figure is for the province of Ontario. It does not account for the fact that Ottawa received a grant of $30,000. These two figures add up to a total of $69,000 in grants for the province of Ontario.

Will the minister explain loud enough for all 80,000 concerned home owners with UFFI in their homes what they have to do to receive a fair share of the money allotted to home owners' associations? Maybe the minister would like to explain what he could accomplish with the grand total of $3.50 per home when all Canadians know how this government procrastinates. How long will it be before this issue is settled? What would the minister be able to accomplish on this size of grant?

On February 10, 1982, my colleague the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), the Conservative Party spokesman on the subject of UFFI, asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he would reconsider a much more meaningful compensation to owners of those many homes that are absolutely worthless. The minister replied that he was receiving positive responses to the very important and significant contributions by the Canadian government toward helping the victims of this product. Are all the minister's responses coming from the province of Quebec?

Let me just take a moment to review these "significant contributions by the Canadian government." The first one I have just discussed, that is, the significant contribution of $3.50 per home for the province of Manitoba to keep informed about what that province is supposed to be doing to receive assistance and, at the same time, to keep itself informed of the significant contributions by the Canadian government as the government announces them.

The second one occurred in December, 1981. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced that CMHC had been consulting with the real estate and mortgage and property insurance community whose activities had affected the owners of UFFI homes, in order to ensure that lending institutions continue to finance and renew mortgages on homes containing UFFI.

This also is one of the "significant contributions by the Canadian government". If CMHC had been successful in its dealings with these companies, which it was not, to whom would the home owners be able to sell? Who would want to own one of these health hazardous homes? Large mortgage insurers and lenders such as the Toronto Dominion Bank, the Nova Scotia bank and Canada Trust have now announced they will not handle mortgages on these homes. Where is the government's significant contribution in this area? The third but by far the biggest "significant" contribution by the Canadian government was when it announced that it will provide home owners with up to $5,000 tax free for necessary remedial action. The maximum payment to be made is $5,000. It is supposed to compensate home owners for problems arising from the insulation of their dwelling places with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I do not have any idea how the government could have come up with this ridiculous figure—$5,000 will go nowhere toward correcting this very serious problem.

A family in Winnipeg has spent $8,000 to date to correct its problem, and a family in Verdun has received an estimate of $20,000 to remove the insulation from its home. In the meantime, this family is living in its garage after having tried to live in its hard-earned home while wearing gas masks. Some home owners have reported spending as high as $30,000 to have this insulation removed. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth gave an example earlier today of a $135,000 home in the Toronto area which had to be demolished because there was no way in which the problem could be corrected. Will the minister provide $135,000 to that family? I hope he comes up with some answers. This money has to be spent either because the house is unsaleable otherwise or because adverse health effects make it essential. The "significant" contribution by the Canadian government of $5,000 toward a possible cost of between $10,000 and $30,000 to remove the foam is one of the contributions to which the minister says he is receiving a positive response. The government's contribution is a woefully inadequate drop in the bucket and an approach that comes too late. My party feels that the government should give fuller compensation both medically and financially to home owners.

Governments around the world have been conducting research since 1960. The government is responsible; it approved this insulation for use in Canadian homes and apartment buildings. The government encouraged home owners to insulate with this material by offering them a government-approved CHIP grant to insulate their homes with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Now the government is claiming no responsibility or very little responsibility.

I say that the government is responsible. I say that all these studies, reports, investigations and tests which the government is conducting are useless. I say that the government is responsible for this hazard to health and the hazardous financial situation in which approximately 80,000 Canadian home owners find themselves. I can do no less than insist at this time that the government accept full responsibility for once in its life and make fuller compensation to these long-suffering Canadian home owners who put their trust in the government and are now being told that they have to sit and suffer. They have lost, and it is up to the House to see that they are fully and properly compensated for the problems with which they have had to live over the past 14 or 15 months. It has been an absolute disgrace and a burden upon these 80,000 Canadians.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, there are times when one is asked to respond, either as an individual or as part of an organization, or even as a country, to a crisis which can take place in a very short period of time. We are facing one at the present time with regard to the Falkland Islands crisis. If anyone had asked a couple of months ago what we would be discussing in our homes and in news reports from the capitals of the world, very few people would have suggested that the Falkland Islands would have dominated the newscasts.

There are other crises which are also being discussed, one of them right across Canada. It has been discussed for some time now, but in fact two or three years ago UFFI was simply not known. Nobody would have recognized what was urea formaldehyde foam insulation or the acronym which we have now come to accept as a household word, UFFI. It is not a very nice household word, either.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It is a dirty four-letter word.

Miss MacDonald: Yes, as my colleague says, it is a dirty four-letter word, one which we would much rather never have heard in our whole legacy of the English language. But now it is there as an acronym and as something which has become very familiar to Canadians across the country. It is there as part of another program for which we use a similar acronym, CHIP, the Canadian Home Insulation Program. UFFI and CHIP go together. Of course the minister does not think that they go together, but they are linked together in the bill. There is no way that they can be separated, regardless of what the minister has said.

We are examining Bill C-109 tonight which concerns restitution to persons encouraged by the government to use

UFFI in their homes. It is interesting to note that the legislation in Bill C-109 was promised last December and that on May 10 the government finally introduced the bill for second reading. The government could not begin to grasp the urgency which so many people feel about this issue. What we have before us is a bill which unfortunately is too little and too late for home owners who accepted the fact that the federal government knew what it was doing when it recommended that urea formaldehyde foam insulation was acceptable and government-approved insulation for use through the government's Canadian home insulation program. They knew that the government had recommended it and approved it.

On the other hand, the government had been warned as far back as March 18, 1977 and again on May 18, 1977 by Dr. Ian Efford, director of the energy conservation branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, that UFFI should not receive governmental approval. We must ask why he did that five or six years ago.

He gave that warning to the government because of his concern of possible structural damage to buildings in which that kind of insulation would be installed. Nevertheless, regardless of his warnings, the insulation was approved by CMHC for use in the Canadian Home Insulation Program in September 1977. Even after that some government officials continued to investigate the properties of UFFI because they were suspicious that its use could result in structural damage to homes or, worse still, that it could result in health problems for human beings in the homes in which is was being used. Given the possible implications of the use of UFFI, of which the government now pleads ignorance, the government, the minister and CMHC put it forward as one of the insulation alternatives for the Canadian Home Insulation Program.

The federal government brought CHIP into being and suggested alternatives or various types of insulation which could be used for insulation purposes. It did not go out and demand that everyone should have to use UFFI. That is not the way the government went about it. It merely suggested it as an alternative. It encouraged it by listing it with government programs. It placed the weight of the government's credibility behind it.

Now the government has the unquestioned moral, and perhaps even legal responsibility to accept the consequences of its decision to make UFFI one of the government's approved alternatives for the CHIP insulation program.

Is the minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) about to assume his responsibility for the actions he took? Not on your life. On February 10, 1982, in response to a question by my hon. colleague, the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had the audacity to say this, in reply to one of the many questions about UFFI posed by members on this side:

> We have always maintained that the Canadian government does not admit any legal responsibility in this matter.

He went on to say in his answer:

> —we have decided, on humanitarian grounds, to take action and assist them on the basis of our responsibility for national health.

Humanitarian grounds my eye. The minister and the government are shirking their responsibility. They will blame anyone. They will blame the provincial governments, the home insulators and they will blame the very home owners themselves who are the victims of this use of UFFI. They will blame anyone for the government's disastrous mistake of judgment and, I might add, its carelessness in this issue.

What do we have before us as a result of this continuing tragedy of errors—not comedy of errors but tragedy or errors? What we have before us is a bill which allows $55 million for partial compensation to a very minimal number of Canadians. It is a very minimal number of those estimated 100,000 Canadians who own homes which have been insulated with urea formaldehyde insulation foam.

Bill C-109, which is the one under consideration tonight, allows home owners who qualify to receive up to $5,000 in tax free grants to help compensate for the problems caused by UFFI. That compensation is a mere drop in the bucket for what home owners really require. In order for a home owner who finds himself in this disastrous mess to receive a grant, he first must fit into one of two categories. He must first have his home tested to determine whether the home contains more than 0.1 parts of formaldehyde per million parts of air. This is regarded as the maximum safe level, according to the Department of Health and Welfare. The other alternative is that he just have a doctor's certificate to prove that any health problems he or his family are suffering from are related to urea formaldehyde foam insulation.

The number of UFFI home owners who qualify under these two qualifications will indeed be minimal compared to the 100,000 UFFI victims who all deserve compensation for the federal government's blunder. They all deserve to be considered. This bill will only allow the consideration of a very few who find they can fit into those narrow categories.

Another problem one sees when examining this bill is that the regulations by which the above mentioned criteria for qualification are determined are not even included in the bill. Before passage of this bill it is incumbent upon the government and imperative that we see the regulations by which eligibility and the level of payments are to be determined. The minister has had precedent in the House for having regulations presented beforehand when a bill is in passage. At least he should take that minimum step to help the people who will apply under the regulations of this bill.

I ask the minister: what are the necessary criteria by which a physician is expected to prove that health problems are related to UFFI? How is the doctor going to determine that? As an example, I will give the minister the instance of a man in my riding who recently developed throat cancer. He has now had UFFI in his home for two years. This gentleman also smokes. How can a doctor be sure that the cancer can be attributed to either his smoking, to UFFI or to a combination of the two? What are the criteria by which that doctor is to determine the origin of the cancer that this man has developed since UFFI could very well play a major part in it?

It is also very important to see the regulations so we know the exact process by which a UFFI home owner can receive a compensation grant under Bill C-109. I mention the fact that it has taken six months to bring this bill before the House since the minister first mentioned it. However, if you look at the bill, you can easily see that the whole process of application, inspection, testing and analysis, all of which are involved, will be a very slow process, particularly if the government receives many more applications than it had first anticipated.

It is expected that the first compensation to any UFFI home owner who is seeking a grant will not be made until at least September. This is due to the long process which I have just described. The first payment will be made probably in the early fall, yet when looking at this bill, we see that the funding for it is to terminate in December of this year. Here we have the first payments not being made until the early fall while the money incorporated in the bill runs out in December of 1982.

What does the government intend to do if there is a greater number of UFFI victims who qualify for compensation? Are there any provisions for extending the level of compensation and the time limits so people who have applied will be able to qualify for this very limited payment? Otherwise, will we have to go through the whole legislative process again, such as we are doing now, to compensate additional victims of UFFI who did not have an opportunity to apply for compensation within that very limited and restricted time-frame which the government has placed under the provisions of this bill?

In fact, the bill applies only to a very limited number of UFFI victims in the near future. It only applies to those who realize now that they are victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. What about those people who discover they are victims of UFFI and develop health problems in five, ten or fifteen years from now? What provisions is the government making for them? It is very likely that many people will not know immediately that they have health problems because of this insulation. It may not become apparent for some years. Will the government have a legal obligation to pay compensation to these home owners in the future? The minister has not even made mention of these people.

The bill does far too little for far too few UFFI victims. The $5,000 grant will not even remove insulation in homes with serious health hazards. It will not pay for removing that insulation. It will only pay for government inspection and testing, and then, as an attempt to forget the problem, it will pay for the painting and sealing of walls, building double walls and increasing the ventilation as if to somehow paper or plaster over the problem. And then it will walk away from the whole problem to forget it ever existed. Unfortunately, that is not the case.

My colleague asks, "Who will buy these homes?" What about all those other home owners whose homes are filled with urea formaldehyde foam insulation but who do not suffer any health problems at the present time, nor do they have a level of 0.1 per cent in their homes? What about all of the others who, apart from those two criteria, are UFFI users? Those people simply do not qualify for any compensation under Bill C-109. However, the problem will not go away for them. If a person such as this still has UFFI in his home, thanks to the government's approval of UFFI as an appropriate insulation for his home, he will find that the goverment has completely reneged on its responsibilites to persons such as he and to the thousands of other home owners in this same category.

In my constituency of Kingston and the Islands, there are some 2,000 UFFI victims, 2,000 households where urea formaldehyde foam insulation has been installed. However, they banded together to form a chapter of the UFFI Homeowners Association. They have taken part in rallies and have invited the minister to come. They have made pleas to—

Mr. Blenkarn: He would not come, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: As my colleague, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said, the minister simply would not turn up at these rallies. He never turns up at these rallies. He would rather ignore the whole situation and forget his whole role and his responsibility for shafting these unsuspecting home owners.

Mr. Blenkarn: Leave them out to dry.

Miss MacDonald: Many of the Kingston home owners, those 2,000 people whom I have mentioned, will not be eligible for compensation under this bill. They are in very serious difficulty. The market value of their homes has significantly dropped. It has significantly dropped because of the fact that they have UFFI in their homes. The real estate agents will not even list their homes for sale.

I want to quote from some of the many letters I have received. I am sure that all my colleagues have received letters like this from people who are suffering because of the program the government foisted on them. Perhaps it is their pleas in their letters which will touch the hearts of those in the government, if such hearts exist. I am not sure, considering that hard-hearted group over there, whether anything will touch them, but at least it might touch their pocketbooks and they might do something to provide some relief for those people. For example, consider a letter from a woman who wrote to me not long ago concerning this problem. She stated:

Dear Miss MacDonald,

We bought our first home, a one and a half storey, wood frame house, in November of 1980 and had urea formaldehyde foam insulation installed in December of 1980 under the Canadian Home Improvement Program grant. We had been very happy with the added comfort in our homes, both in summer and winter, and we suffer no health problems. Our son was born in 1981, and he suffers no ill effects either.

However, UFFI does present one serious problem for us—public opinion has made our home unsaleable and has drastically reduced the value of it. All the work we did and all the money that we saved for our home has now been for nothing. My husband, a biomedical electronics technician, had worked in Alberta for five years and accepted a maintenance mechanic job with a friend in Kingston in order to return to Ontario where we were married. There was the understanding that he would return to biomedical electronics. However, we have now lost our mobility and no jobs are available in his field in Kingston.

The situation is very depressing to us. We have to set aside too many of the dreams and the plans that we had for our lives.

We feel that since CHIP supported us in having UFFI installed, we should now be receiving support from them. We need the UFFI removed from our home and our home made saleable to the public, so we can go on with living our lives.

That is one type of letter that I received. Another one came from a gentleman who said:

I am writing to ask you to urge the government to take immediate action to alleviate the intolerable suffering and mental anxiety being experienced by those home owners burdened with urea formaldehyde insulation. For a society that has accepted, and indeed has been conditioned to rely on government regulation of consumer products and services, an immoral situation arises when those agencies shirk the responsibility of their actions and ignore the people affected by them. It is incongruous that these agencies encouraged and assisted these home owners to use this material in the first place.

What now exists is a scenario in which

(a) hundreds are suffering from the symptoms associated with formaldehyde gas.

(b) others, while not exhibiting physical symptoms, are haunted by the thoughts of being surrounded by a suspected carcinogen.

(c) many thousands whose properties are treated as lepers, their homes an albatross about their neck, their savings, their dreams effectively wiped out.

No one in this situation was looking for a bargain—it was a premium-priced product. Some may even have been motivated by a sense of good citizenship.

From the evidence now available in the scientific literature it is obvious that further testing is unnecessary. I strongly urge that the government divert the millions already committed for testing to a program of restitution for all who are saddled with this unhappy mess. Once effected, some may even want to reaffirm their belief in good citizenship.

Another letter states:

Sir,

This letter is to inform you that the assistance program for UFFI victims, as announced by the federal goverment, is completely unacceptable to me, as I'm sure it must be to all similarly victimized home owners. I must reiterate that my previous claims of government fault in allowing the continued use of UFFI, after NRC warnings to the contrary, are still valid.

This then, necessitates the only honourable solution to this national disaster, complete compensation for the removal of UFFI from all such homes, irrespective of levels of gas—a criterion which has, after all, been proven unrealistic!

I have already informed the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs by telegram of my disgust with, and rejection of, the proposed program. To you . . . and to all ministers to whom this letter is addressed—

This one was addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with a copy to me, and he states:

—I demand that you give the UFFI disaster the full attention it warrants and that the government cease the stalling tactics it has seen fit to practice since early last year when the dangers of this product were finally brought to the attention of the people of this country.

We victims have suffered enough from the complete disregard of human dignity that the federal government has seen fit to adhere to in this matter! I am sure that a similar circumstance arising in a third world country would have received the instant and full attention of the Canadian government—

In closing, may I say that I remain confident that right will prevail and that you in government will recognize your responsibilities—

I have a final letter, although I could go on with a number of them, which states:

In the summer of 1979, along with many thousands of other home owners, I succumbed to the pleas of the government and insulated the walls of my older home with urea formaldehyde. The contractor did a very satisfactory job. The home uses less fuel, the Queen's University Occupational Health Resources Centre has tested the inside of the house for formaldehyde gas and found no sign. However, I find that if I want to sell it or rent it, it has very little market value. Even the lending institutions don't want to put a mortgage on it. My wife and I have not experienced any ill health that might be attributed to the presence of gas, but it seems that the only course open to us, if we want to dispose of this home in the future, is to have the insulation removed.

I now have a quotation of $4,700 from a reliable contractor and would consider it only fair ball if the government, which considered its CHIP contribution in 1979 as a taxable benefit, would now allow the cost of removal as a tax deductible expense. It seems that we cannot expect any direct compensation in our circumstances. That creep Ouellet—

Those are not my words, but words I am reading.

That creep Ouellet is keeping a very low profile these days and I don't suppose you would get very far with this idea, but would appreciate if you would put forward the suggestion for consideration.

These are some of the many letters coming to people like me, members of Parliament, and, I would say, to those on both sides of the House, even if I do not hear complaints being raised by those in the Liberal back benches. However, I imagine there would be many such letters.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) would entertain a question at this point.

Miss MacDonald: When I am through speaking, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to entertain a question from the parliamentary secretary.

These letters show that there are many homes throughout Canada that have lost their value. Therefore, many of the home owners have applied to tax assessors for tax reassessment of their homes. This is going on in every municipality across the country.

All of the UFFI home owners in Kingston have appealed for a reassessment. In light of the recent precedent set in Sault Ste. Marie in which 36 home owners won a 50 per cent reduction in their home tax assessment, the Kingston home owner appeal looks very probably and possible of acceptance.

Is the federal government willing to sit back and watch homes and properties be devalued? It will reflect very considerably on municipal tax revenues. That is the real cause of concern. In the case of Ontario municipalities, it can mean a possible loss of $5 million to $6 million a year. That is what is estimated as a loss in tax revenues in municipalities because of the devaluation of the homes and subsequent tax reassessment.

This issue has been raised persistently in the House. It has been raised over and over again by members of the opposition. The minister has persistently ignored the problem. Can the government not understand that it has a moral duty to the home owners where UFFI has been installed? When it approved the use of UFFI as part of the CHIP program, the responsibility for the CHIP program, the responsibility for the CHIP program and all of its consequences rested squarely on the shoulders of the government. That cannot be ignored.

The cost of complete removal of the foam has been estimated at anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000 per home. Thus, the implications for borrowing money to remove the foam are clear. With existing high interest rates, borrowing money to remove UFFI is something that is beyond the consideration of home owners in Canada today.

One letter I received was from a man who was so desperate—and he was describing the situation to another person—that when he considered the situation in which he found himself, "his voice was shaky". Near tears, he told me that his family, particularly his children aged three and one, had been suffering from severe health problems caused by the foam. His wife was working, so with two incomes the family was able to move into an apartment. The health problems stopped immediately. However, his wife will soon lose her job. He will not be able to maintain the house and apartment. He cannot get rid of the house and will not able to afford the apartment in which they live because of health reasons.

What is this man and his family to do? Where do they turn? The least the government could do for all UFFI home owners is to permit them to claim the cost of UFFI as a tax deductible expense.

My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) has raised this option in question period as an extremely valid and acceptable direction for the minister to take in addressing the problems facing UFFI home owners. The recommendation, like all other questions on the issue of UFFI, was ignored by the minister, and any responsibility for the UFFI mess on the part of the federal government was categorically denied over and over again.

I plead the urgency of the issue, as do UFFI home owners everywhere. Last Saturday 500 members of HUFFI, a group which has banded together to try to do something about this, from across Ontario rallied in Toronto to state their concerns. These home owners are exasperated, confused and desperate. They want something done. They want to be able to remove the insulation now, while the weather is good. That is the reason for their urgency. They do not want to put up with another winter during which UFFI can do more and more damage.

Imagine living in a home, day by day knowing that the fumes or gases from the insulation in the walls is taking its toll on your health and the health of your family. What would you do in a situation like that? Wouldn't you complain? That is all these people are doing. All this concern, both for one's health and one's financial situation, were caused by a major error in judgment on the part of the federal government.

Bill C-109 is simply not acceptable if it is to be the federal government's only response to this serious and widespread UFFI crisis that exists all across Canada.

The president of HUFFI, Frank Spitzer, described the bill as "a mild bandage to help with the fact that you've got a major wound that needs surgery". The issue is not simply one of home owners in trouble needing support from the government. It is a moral issue which the government has the moral responsibility to address. It is as straightforward as that.

A federal agency, CMHC, accepted and approved UFFI as one of a number of alternative insulations which could be installed in a home owner's house under the CHIP program. The government approved it. If the approval had never been made, none of the thousands of UFFI home owners who took advantage of the CHIP program and consequently do not find themselves in this difficult situation would be in such a bind. If the government had not taken that step in the first place, these people would be free of the problems they are now locked into. They simply would have used one of the other forms of insulation and would be leading a much less troublesome and a much healthier existence.

The reality is that the government did approve UFFI. Therefore, the government cannot ignore its responsibility to compensate, not just a token number of UFFI home owners as Bill C-109 does, but rather all home owners who took the government at its word and believed in the credibility of the program that it was putting forward. For them and for many other Canadians, that credibility has now been shattered.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address my question to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair could recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Frith), but it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't see the clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If it is by way of unanimous consent, the hon. member will be permitted to ask a question.

• (2200)

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, some of the studies of the Department of National Health and Welfare cited by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) involve the years 1960 and 1964—I am going by memory—through 1976 and 1978. I believe one of the years mentioned was 1979. Presumably those studies were also made available to the hon. member's government when it was in power in 1979. The hon. member's government evidently was made aware of the problems; she did cite those studies. Would the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands explain what programs her party placed before the House to deal with the same problems?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a question as to whether programs were put forward during the time we were in government. There were many programs put forward to improve the lot of home owners across the country. I only wish the hon. member had understood, when he was voting against the government's budget in December of 1979, that there would have been improvement for hundreds of thousands of home owners across the country if he and his colleagues had accepted the home owner's tax credit and mortgage deductibility program, which would have done more to help home owners in this country right across the board than anything he and his government have dreamed of.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE ECONOMY—CABINET MEETING AT MEACH LAKE, P.Q.—(B) SITUATION IN CANADA VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES—(C) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about the Meach lake conference, where members of the cabinet met together and enjoyed themselves for a weekend and came out with absolutely nothing to solve the economic problems of the country. A day after the cabinet meeting the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) was caught by a reporter in the province of Quebec, and he said:

> We are fearful that if there is a recovery in the United States we would not be able to join the band wagon.

It appears to be the view of the government that we will not be able to get out of the depression the minister and his colleagues have caused.

The three questions I asked on April 27 were about the Meach Lake conference, where it became clear to the government that it is totally out of touch with the realities of the country. The members of the cabinet came out of that conference, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) said, "We are going to carry on in the same way". The minister responsible for lotteries said, "We are going to carry on in the same way", and the next day the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism said, "There is no way we can get out of this. Even if the United States recovers, we are down the poop-chute anyway."

I want to comment tonight on that very problem because the truth of the matter, as Mr. Mulholland of the Bank of Montreal has said, is that this government has developed an attitude of pessimism. It has developed the attitude that there will be a lack of growth. It has developed an attitude of anti-investment, anti-entrepreneurialism and anti-growth. In this country there is a negative outlook, to the extent that a survey undertaken by the Toronto Star showed that 60 per cent of businessmen surveyed felt that profits would be down, 75 per cent of businessmen interviewed said that this is not a time to invest and 55 per cent of businessmen interviewed said that the Canadian dollar would depreciate in value.

Because of the attitude of this government shown in its budget and national energy policy, because of its attitude toward foreign investment and, indeed, because of its attitude toward Canadian investment the government has engendered in the community a fear that no matter what happens, even if there is recovery in the United States, we will not have recovery here.

I was in the United States at the Easter weekend. There seems to be optimism there respecting growth and the future. There seems to be feeling that there will be a better tomorrow and that now is the time to make deals. When a recovery occurs in the United States, as it surely will—there is now a zero rate of inflation—money will flee from Canada to the United States to take advantage of the real opportunities which will be there. We will wind up not being able to take advantage of opportunities and still in the doldrums with more and more people out of work, without hope and without opportunity. That is what we have been left with—that is the legacy of a government that really does not care.

That government went to Meach Lake and enjoyed the sunshine of early spring in the Gatineau hills. What it did there we do not know. It may have had some economic discussions, but the minister would not say that. It came away from Meach Lake with nothing at all to offer. That is what it gives the people of Canada; no hope, no future, no possibilities. The ministry has to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wondering about the capacity of the Canadian economy to respond to any recovery in the United States. There is no doubt in my mind that a recovery in the United States will have a favourable impact on the Canadian economy. At the moment, the weakness in U.S. demand is, not surprisingly, restricting our export opportunities. But when growth in the U.S. resumes within the next few months, export growth will contribute to the recovery in Canada. To the extent that the U.S. recovery will be accompanied by lower interest rates, this will mean lower interest rates in Canada as well; this will provide stimulus to our interest-sensitive sectors.

What is uncertain, and this might be what the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was trying to say, is the ability of Canada to get the most out of any U.S. recovery that would take place. As my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) keeps pointing out, there is a danger that Canadians will price themselves out of world markets unless a sustained effort is made to reduce inflation.

The United States has made remarkable progress against inflation lately but we in Canada have made much less progress. In March, the year-over-year increase in the U.S. consumer price index was 6.7 per cent, whereas the corresponding rate in Canada was 11.6 per cent. It is important that the government stick to its non-accommodating fiscal and monetary policies, thereby reducing inflation and preserving our competitiveness in external markets.

Let me now turn to the hon. member's mention of an overpriced Canadian dollar. Does he realize that a lower value for the Canadian dollar means higher import costs for Canadian producers and higher import prices for Canadian consumers? This would result in significant upward pressures on our inflation rate. Of course a lower Canadian dollar would tend to improve our competitive position and encourage our exports. But the gain in our competitive position produced by the depreciation would be eroded quickly owing to the renewed impetus given to inflation by higher import prices.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—INVESTIGATION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INC. (B) ROLE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, over a month ago, on March 29, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) about the collapse of Consolidated Computers Inc. which cost Canadian taxpayers well over $100 million. A report from Treasury Board, the so-called Anderson report, on this debacle characterized its findings with words such as conflict of interest, incompetence and cover-up. I hoped that the minister would reassure me at that time that the commercial crime section of the RCMP was well on its way to an investigation of the whole scenario. Instead, the minister merely indicated "that a reference was made to the Department of Justice under the section of the relevant statute requiring the minister to see that the administration of the public sector is in accordance with the law".

The time has come once more, after all these weeks, vigorously to bring to the attention of the House and the government that enough time has elapsed so that the Canadian people should be informed precisely what happened to the government investigation, who was responsible for this debacle and who benefited from this vast amount of money that has obviously been squandered and frittered away.

Personally, Sir, I have reason to believe that more than just incompetence and bureaucratic duplicity are involved here. I am convinced what we have here is an example of rotten pork-barrel politics, and it is time for a full accounting. We know, thanks to the Anderson report from the Treasury Board, that the company had little or nothing in the way of meaningful controls, so much so that the respected accounting firm of Thorne Riddell, after discussions with Miss Dale Robinette of the firm of McCarthy and McCarthy, a respected Toronto law firm, would not accept the responsibility of making decisions on which leases would be purchased from Consolidated Computer. Instead, they preferred only, in the words of the Anderson report, to be administrators of the leased companies for which, incidentally, they received over $100,000 a year.

The Anderson report cites many examples of poor management and potential conflicts of interest. The chief executive officer of CCI, John McDonald Brown, the man touted so highly by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) in his letter of June 3, 1980, to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is noted as having retained his membership on the Enterprise Development Board while he was chairman and chief executive officer of this wretched company, CCI. While the company completed its disintegration under Mr. Brown's leadership, he submitted a formal application on his own behalf and that of some associates to purchase some shares in the company. The Anderson report goes on to point out that he was simultaneously a member of the Enterprise Development Board which controlled the shares being offered for sale, the chairman and president of the company whose shares were up for sale, and an applicant to purchase the shares. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce touted Mr. Brown as a saviour of this company. Well, if he was a saviour, I would hate to see what he would have done had he intended to do any harm, since about $30 million went down the drain under his stewardship in a very short time.

For this Mr. Brown was paid quite well with a contract for $110,000 per year, payable quarterly in advance, and other perks. H. J. Melanson, executive vice-president, was plugged in firmly, too, at $500 a week overtime, effective July 1, 1981, to supplement his annual salary of $49,000. And so the story goes.

Surely the minister will soon call for a proper inquiry under the Inquiries Act to look in a comprehensive way at the sorry affair. But one might well ask tonight: who is this John McDonald Brown? What were his real qualifications? Who are his associates? Did Mr. Brown became a computer expert because of his association with Mr. Gordon Hughes? It is interesting to note that Gordon Hughes is a close friend and confidante of the then premier of Nova Scotia, and he has numerous corporate interests in the province. He is also a director of the CRTC, a close friend of Senator Irvine Barrow, and a director of the CTC. Or did Mr. Brown pick up his expertise from Mr. Green? Here we have a situation where it might not be a tale of patronage in black and white, Mr. Speaker, but it may be one of Brown and Green. Mr. Green is a prominent barrister in the law firm of Kitz, Matheson, Green and MacIsaac in Nova Scotia, commonly known as "Kitz, Matheson, Green and patronage" by people who study the political scene. He is a prominent Liberal, a former executive legislative counsel to the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) when he was premier of Nova Scotia, a former campaign manager and adviser, as well as former co-chairman of the leadership campaign of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) for the Liberal Party in 1968, and federal campaign chairman for the Liberals in the federal elections of 1968 and 1972. Or did Mr. McDonald Brown get this expertise by virtue of work done by himself and his associates towards the electoral success of the Minister of Finance? In any case, Sir, Brown, Green and Hughes, and others I could name, are all close business and political associates, all prominent Liberals and have all participated in one way or another in numerous soft loans and other advantageous deals in Nova Scotia. The question is now, have they moved on to the national scene, perhaps through the ill-fated Consolidated Computers Incorporated?

What I would like the Minister of Justice to do is to forget for once that he is a Liberal cabinet minister and to encourage the commercial crime section of the RCMP to use their full scope and resources to investigate all the ramifications involved in this cabal of Liberals which has cost taxpayers over $100 million, some of whom appear in the province of Nova Scotia by virtue of the very soft loan guarantees passed by the then minister of development, now the Liberal leader, Sandy Cameron, under the stewardship of the Secretary of State for a couple or more companies I could name which have cost the Nova Scotia taxpayers millions of dollars. So we have the same old recurring example of what Mr. Diefenbaker would say was the same old bunch, with the same old noses in the same old trough.

It may seem irrelevant, Mr. Speaker, to a casual observer what the dealings are between CCI and Command Services Atlantic Limited, and of course Command Services in Mississauga—which are joined by a common director, incidentally. But that is only if you are not on the inside. One must really ask where the cash flow for Command Services Atlantic originated to justify a $250,000 loan from the Royal Bank of Canada. Is there any CCI money involved there? The answer is beyond a simple Member of Parliament such as myself. It will require the resources of a judicial inquiry by the RCMP. But the amounts are too large and the face is too familiar to let this go and be swept under the rug. Justice and political expediency and accountability demand that something more be done by the government to look into this sorry mess.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has indicated, he asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) on March 29 about information regarding an investigation of Consolidated Computer. The Department of Justice has been requested by the Treasury Board to review the report entitled "Report Concerning Involvement of Government of Canada in Affairs of CCI" from the standpoint of its legal implications. The hon. member wanted to know if it was a departmental inquiry under the Inquiries Act.

This examination, he should know, is being conducted, pursuant to Section 4 of the Department of Justice Act which makes it mandatory for the minister to, "see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law" and not under the Inquiries Act, as suggested.

The task which the Department of Justice has before it is large and complex. The report and the background material will require a detailed study. It is difficult to assess the length of time such a detailed study would take. However, the urgency of the matter is appreciated. I may add, however, that if a need for further investigation is indicated this will be done.

Adjournment Debate

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPORTED CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT ON SAINT PIERRE AND MIQUELON ISLANDS. (B) REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) a question about the dispute between Canada and France over the problem of the boundaries between those two countries surrounding Saint Pierre and Miquelon. The minister showed an amazing lack of knowledge about this very serious matter, serious because it affects a huge area of the continental shelf and the possible gas, oil and other minerals under that continental shelf, and because it affects fishing areas jointly claimed by both countries.

In responding to my question, the minister said he was not aware of an agreement which the government had signed in 1972. As a matter of fact, it was signed on May 26, 1972, in Paris. This agreement was signed by the representative for Canada, Mr. Alan Beasley, head of the Canadian delegation, and by the head of the French delegation. The document was headed "relevé de conclusions". Under the terms of that document, this government blundered tremendously.

This is the reason, in my view, why ten years later we still have no answer or settlement of the boundary dispute between these two countries. The matter has not gone to arbitration because the Canadian government botched so badly ten years ago when that document was originally signed by the ambassador on behalf of the Canadian government. What did that agreement do? What it did was to give France, through Saint Pierre and Miquelon, rights and special privileges in an area of 22,000 square miles of the continental shelf off the south coast of Newfoundland. On about half of that area Canada was to be required to give oil companies designated by France exclusive rights and on the other half the Canadian government was to recommend that its permitees in that area would have to form joint ventures—Mobil and Gulf were involved—that would have to give French companies substantial rights. In the case of both of these areas the government of France would be able to remove oil and gas found through Saint Pierre. In return, France was to renounce formal legal claims to the area and would get sovereignty over a 12-mile territorial limit around Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Saint Pierre and Miquelon are two very small islands. Saint Pierre is ten square miles and Miquelon is 83 square miles. Miquelon has a population of 500. The total population for both islands is 5,800. Those islands are only 15 miles off the mouth of Fortune Bay in Newfoundland.

Canada owns an island called Little Green Island only three miles away from Saint Pierre and Miquelon. It can hardly be serious that anyone should think France would have a claim for 22,000 square miles or do anything like that under international law.

The minister also went ahead on April 27 to say that negotiations had not been going on for 11 years on these issues but that they had only commenced in 1976. This was the same minister who had just met with the French prime minister several days earlier to discuss this issue. How could he properly represent Canada when he apparently did not know that these negotiations started not in 1976 but in 1966?

I have here an answer which was made by the French minister of foreign affairs in the National Assembly of France on October 29, 1975 when he said:

> Negotiations were begun in 1966 between France and Canada with the view of delimiting the continental shelf of the two states in the area of the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Then he went on to describe how the French were claiming that the "principle of equidistance" applied and that Canada invoked the principle of "special circumstances" to reduce the French claim. Then he went on to say:

> —at a meeting held in Paris on 26 May 1972 the heads of the delegations signed a "relevé de conclusions"—

He was referring to an agreement to deal with this matter. Also he said:

> Despite France's repeated requests, the Canadian government has never approved this document . . . On his visit to Paris in autumn 1974, Mr. Trudeau told the Prime Minister that he would make efforts to bring about the settlement of the matter.

Of course he was referring to the French prime minister. This is a matter where negotiations, according to the minister, did not start until 1976. The minister, in his answer to me, said that he was unaware that an agreement was ever signed.

The agreement has been embarrassing the Canadian government ever since. It was a blunder. It was stopped. The Canadian government was stopped from ratifying it by the government of Newfoundland and Labrador. The new Conservative administration which had been elected in January 1972 had started inquiring as to what was happening with reference to this boundary dispute. When that government started inquiring, the Canadian government realized that it had made a blunder and never ratified the agreement signed by its ambassador. It has been an embarrassment to Canada ever since.

Back in March 1971 the then Canadian secretary of state for external affairs said that the Canadian argument was that special circumstances justified another boundary. Then he went on to indicate that if a settlement satisfactory to Canada could not be reached on the basis of negotiation, the government would be prepared to refer the matter for arbitration. It was 11 years ago that the then secretary of state for external affairs said that if a settlement satisfactory to us could not be reached on the negotiation, the government would refer it to arbitration. There have been 11 years of known negotiations, and the time has long since gone for this to be referred to arbitration. The only possible reason there might be for not referring the issue to arbitration is the damage done by this administration by having this agreement signed in May 1972.

This is an important matter. About a month ago French authorities in Saint Pierre and Miquelon made a request of Paris to send out a gun boat because the Canadian government was inspecting certain French fishing trawlers. Canadian fishing trawlers had been stopped by France. On November 24, 1981, officials from the French vessel Tenace boarded two Canadian fishing vessels and searched them in the disputed area. What is Canada to do if France sends out a gun boat? We all know that our navy is not in shape to even defend us from a gun boat. If we were in the position of Argentina and we were to occupy these islands, we would have to row across the 13 miles from the mouth of Fortune Bay over to Saint Pierre and Miquelon. I just cite this example to show that it is a very serious matter over which there can be trouble in the future if it is not settled.

How can the government protect our interests if the government does not even have a Secretary of State for External Affairs who knows the most rudimentary points about the history of the situation, who appears to be unconcerned, who is not negotiating now to have the matter settled, who is not prepared to refer this to arbitration, and when we have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who exhibits utter indifference? He met with Mr. Mitterrand several times in the last 12 months. He met with the Prime Minister of France in the last 12 months. Yet nothing continues to happen with reference to this situation.

I also point out that in a case which went to the International Court of Justice and arbitration in 1979 between the U.K. and France concerning the delimitation of the continental shelf, the International Court of Justice accepted the agreement of May 26, 1972, which I mentioned earlier, as an agreement between Canada and France on the continental shelf. That will show you the damage that has been done to us by that agreement.

Therefore, when will this matter be pressed to a solution? Will the government publish this agreement? Will the government give us the details of what the French are claiming, and will this matter go to arbitration this year and not be allowed to be delayed another 11 years?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in 1972 Canada and France signed a fisheries agreement which included a provision delimiting the territorial sea and fishing zone between Saint Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland, that is the area landward of the French islands. In that same year a "relevé de conclusions", or a summary of conclusions, was signed at the level of officials dealing with the continental shelf seaward of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. This latter document specifically stated that the agreed conclusions would be submitted to the two governments for approval. Thus the relevé was not an agreement or even an agreement ad referendum since, had it been approved by governments, another document constituting a formal agreement would have had to be drafted. Indeed, the relevé itself expressly foresaw the need for a bilateral agreement of the delimitation of the continental shelf in the event neither government ever approved the relevé.

In late 1977 it came to our attention that the relevé had been referred to in the pleadings and in the decision of the Ad Hoc Court of Arbitration in the Anglo-French Channel islands case. In a diplomatic note to France, Canada noted the Arbitration Court's reference to the relevé as an agreement, and indicated that in the absence of the requisite governmental approval the document clearly did not constitute any such agreement. In response, the French acknowledged that the relevé, "may not be considered as an agreement, even of a provisional nature" as it never had been approved by either side.

Following Canadian and French extension of jurisdiction of 200 miles in 1977, Canada and France undertook to proceed with negotiations on the delimitation of the area seaward of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. Several rounds of negotiations have taken place since then. This matter was most recently raised by both Prime Minister Mauroy and Foreign Minister Cheysson during their April visit to Ottawa, and the two sides agreed on the need actively to pursue efforts to delineate this disputed maritime boundary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2:00 p.m. tomorrow afternoon.

At 10:27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED REINTRODUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST DEDUCTIBILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, it is widely recognized that the construction industry in Canada is in a serious decline, largely because of the budget and the high cost of mortgage money. HUDAC told us this morning, for example, that 30,000 housing units already started at budget time have since had to be abandoned. In order to turn this disastrous prospect around and get the construction industry, to begin with, moving upwards, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House urge the government to reintroduce the mortgage interest deductibility feature of the budget introduced by the Clark government in December, 1979.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC WORKS

AWARDING OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to take strong exception to reports that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has again short-circuited the merit system by engaging his friend, Arthur Erickson, as architect for the proposed new Canadian Embassy in Washington. Mr. Erickson was vaulted by the Prime Minister over the four finalists recommended by the selection committee. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this represents pork-barrel politics of the worst kind and makes a complete mockery of the tender and competition process, and that the decision be returned to cabinet for honest review and the ed177;-1 eventual appointment of one of the four candidates recommended by the selection committee.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES FOR COMPETING FIRMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the alleged architectural contest for the design of the new Washington embassy was fraudulent and deceitful in that Arthur Erickson was guaranteed the job over two years ago, and this action by the government calls into question the entire bid system for public works, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House directs the government to reimburse all architectural firms that submitted proposals to the committee set up by the government for their expenses, including some 71 firms which were alleged to have spent $8,000 to $10,000 each on the general presentation, and 11 semi-finalists who spent as much as $60,000 in their semi-final presentation, and that the Prime Minister apologize to the Canadian people for his dishonesty and deceit and resign in accordance with parliamentary precedent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISARMAMENT

LETTERS PUBLISHED IN TORONTO NEWSPAPER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Recently over 1,200 readers of the Toronto Star in many parts of Canada wrote to that paper supporting nuclear disarmament. The Star, as it promised, offered the letters to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), who expressed interest in reading them but said he could not receive them outside this House. Therefore I move:

That this House encourage the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs to read the letters sent to the Star and in so doing consider how widely the Canadian public is dissatisfied with the government's failure to take a stand against the arms race.

For that purpose I offer the letters to the minister. My motion is seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF JOB-CREATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Mines (Mrs. Erola) announced on the weekend a $2.3 million dollar job-creation program for her riding of Nickel Belt and workers at Inco in Sudbury. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this same minister immediately advise this House how unemployed people get on this preferential list if they do not reside in the cabinet minister's riding, or like architect Erickson are a personal friend of the Prime Minister. Perhaps the Minister of Mines would make this $300 per week program available to unemployed Cape Breton steel workers until the CNR gives them some more rail orders, to the auto workers of Oshawa, the lumber workers of British Columbia, and to the steel workers of Hamilton.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED CUT IN INDEMNITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, as the only independent Member of Parliament I am in the unique position of being able to move motions with the unanimous and unqualified support of my caucus. Having said that, I have concluded, Madam Speaker, that MPs should lead the nation in the fight against inflation and unemployment. Therefore I move:

That all Members of Parliament voluntarily accept a 10 per cent cut in their basic indemnity during the remaining duration of the 32nd Parliament and that the $1.5 million arising from this salary cut be used to create 1,000 student summer jobs per year.

Madam Speaker, I am certain that each and every member of this House will be pleased to second and support this initiative.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: There was no seconder to that motion.

PUBLICATION OF "CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY HANDBOOK"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), and I know that the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) is in concurrence with us:

That this House express its congratulations to John Bejermi, an employee of the House of Commons, who has authored a new and unique book entitled "Canadian Parliamentary Handbook", published by Borealis Press Limited of the City of Nepean, and request that the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services forthwith consider the proposition that the administration supply to each member of the House of Commons a copy of the said book.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF STATE BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. While the federal government evades action by conducting studies and holding conferences, hundreds of thousands of Canadian women are struggling to survive on low wages, without adequate training programs, decent day care, or equal pay for work of equal value. Many have been laid off and thousands more face permanent unemployment due to technological change. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the federal government and the minister responsible for the status of women set a positive example for the provinces by establishing adequate pension plans for women, providing start up funds for universal day care, implementing mandatory affirmative action, and expanding pre-employment and high tech training programs for women, with allowances to cover child care.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION OF GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES IN OTTAWA AND PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that Quebec and Ottawa motorists are being ripped off by the oil industry by up to 15 cents per gallon, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House instruct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to investigate the imposition of a 3 cents to 4 cents a litre increase by the oil companies in Quebec and in the City of Ottawa above the increases in the provincial sales tax in the province of Quebec, and that, if these charges are proved to be true, the minister order an immediate rollback of these excessive increases in the price of gas and oil.

NAVAL CAPABILITY AND PLANNING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because of the urgency of the current state of the development of our fleet replacement program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Minister of National Defence take the earliest opportunity on motions to defend statements by the Prime Minister that all is "first class" with Canada's navy; to indicate clearly the government's planning for our naval fleet, including its armament systems, mix of roles and the means of achieving the taskings to be given the fleet; and, in addition, in such a statement explain why it is the government will not produce a white paper on defence policy, the present policy having been produced on information almost as old as our aging naval fleet.

UNEMPLOYMENT—QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Before I ask my question, Madam Speaker, I am sure the Chair and the House would want me to extend on behalf of the House our condolences to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), whose father passed away last night.

• (1415)

My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He is aware from the figures published last Friday that unemployment in the country now stands at the highest level since the depression. Yesterday the Minister of Finance said in Paris that unemployment is unlikely to rise further and that there was a new urgency for efforts to promote what he called sustainable recovery. What new policies is the Prime Minister or his government bringing forward in order that we have the recovery about which the Minister of Finance spoke in Paris, without throwing more hundreds and hundreds of people out of work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, certainly I want to associate myself and my party with the condolences expressed by the hon. member to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and to say that that sad event is felt by all of us.

In so far as the reference to the minister in Paris is concerned, I am in the process of looking at his speech notes. As I understand it, he was in that forum at the IMF urging measures which would lead to a worldwide recovery and would permit the Canadian economy to recover along with the economies of other major countries. He was pointing out the seriousness of unemployment rates in our country and in all other countries represented in the IMF, and urging particularly that high interest rates prevailing in the United States be addressed so that we all have greater incentive facilities.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. I am sure that he will know that the unemployment level in the construction industry now stands at 20 per cent, that is, in the order of 150,000 construction workers out of work. It is the worst situation in which the construction industry has found itself in two decades. Also the minister will know that the Canadian construction industry has repeatedly asked the federal government either to withdraw or seriously reduce the federal tax on construction materials. The construction industry regards that as fundamental to stimulating its economy and the economy as a whole. Does the minister support its request and, if so, what will he do with it? If not, why not?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in anticipation of the challenge to the industry and the strength of the demand for units in the country this year, particularly multiple units, the government decided, rather than adopt the step just mentioned by the hon. member for Rosedale, to include funds in the budget of last November which would be of direct and massive assistance to getting multiple construction of units. This is why, for example, $350 million was designated to start the construction of 15,000 units of rental accommodations across Canada and why, for example, just a few weeks ago, that 15,000 units were accelerated with a commitment to start the construction of 30,000 rental units in the country this year, depending upon the ability and the response of the industry to take up those funds. We think that that $350 million, compared with the small benefit of the other tax incentive which is being talked about, is much more significant and much more useful.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Canadian construction industry takes that as an answer saying no, that the government will not take off the federal sales tax on construction materials. I suggest that the minister may want to meet with those people again to see whether he can find some way to assist them. They regard that as fundamental to the recovery of the construction industry.

SMALL BUSINESS

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SMALL BUSINESS FAILURES—REQUEST FOR SHORT-TERM FUNDING

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my third supplementary is to the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism. I am sure the minister is aware that small and medium-sized businesses have suffered very badly during the current recession. Indeed, the figure now stands at 3,651 bankruptcies in the first four months of this year alone.

The small business organizations have repeatedly asked the minister if he would establish emergency short-term loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act. Does the minister intend to act on their request, or will he continue to refuse to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that small businesses are suffering as a result of the present state of the economy. However, the hon. member will recall that as far as the Small Businesses Loans Act is concerned, in 1981, 19,600 small Canadian businesses received guaranteed loans from the federal government under this legislation, an increase of 31 per cent over the previous year. I think we are making a serious effort to promote the use of programs available to small businesses, and according to the response from this sector, it is clear that utilization of these programs has increased.

INDUSTRY

QUALITY OF RAILS PRODUCED BY SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He knows that unemployment is rampant in Cape Breton and that thousands of workers in that area of the province of Nova Scotia are dependant upon Sydney Steel Corporation and its success. Therefore I would ask the minister about his statements, which have been widely reported, questioning the quality of the rails being produced at Sydney Steel Corporation, which are rigidly inspected. The company has enjoyed a national and international reputation for quality rails. What evidence does the minister have to back up or justify his counterproductive statements? Can he produce any tangible evidence of current bad quality and, more important, can he say when any of these alleged deficiencies were brought to the attention of SYSCO management, and has he bothered to check? As well, what about the deleterious effect on the company, its work force, and its future prospects?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is something which is well known by the people at SYSCO. The proof of it is simply the fact that CN has been forced, because of these circumstances, to reduce the level of rail purchases from the SYSCO plant.

The management of SYSCO has asked for another meeting with the CN management on that subject. This will take place. CN accepts the current proposal that an independent assessor be appointed in order to determine the degree of technical difficulty encountered by SYSCO in the production of some types of rail.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I want to take issue in a most respectful and vigorous way with what the minister has said. I would question the basis of his information.

IMPORTATION OF RAILS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister again about the rails which are imported by Canadian National from other countries. Can the minister explain why Sydney Steel Corporation was never given an opportunity to tender on these rails or be informed of any specifications which made them unique, if in fact they are so, so that it also would have an opportunity to manufacture them and further the company's future?

Would he not agree that it would be more appropriate for him to concentrate on arranging more CN rail orders instead of making these counter-productive statements which can only keep the work force in Cape Breton from achieving not only orders for the CN, but for other customers as well? The reputation of SYSCO has been badly damaged by the minister, and I think he should verify his facts, because any problems which existed with Sydney Steel rails were in 1980 and most of the rails involved were re-inspected and accepted by CN. In any event, the rails are now the best that have ever been produced there, and they are nothing to be ashamed of in any way, shape or form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend insists on talking and thinking the way he does, it is okay with me. He can go on. Unfortunately, however, the facts are different.

Mr. MacKay: You do not know the facts.

Mr. Pepin: In 1980-81, CN was purchasing 151,000 tons of rail from SYSCO. In 1982 it was brought down to 97,000 tons, while 11 per cent of CN's needs in 1981-82 were purchased abroad. This, again, is something it does when it has to, when the two Canadian plants, SYSCO and Algoma, cannot provide CN with the quantity or quality it needs. CN has to operate a railway. It has to be certain that the track it buys will stand the wear and tear of everyday operation. It has to do that in the interest of safety. Please bear this in mind. In 1982-83, CN will purchase 88,000 tons of rail, none from outside the country. Again, CN only purchases rail outside Canada when it cannot avoid it. That is all.

QUERY RESPECTING JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in Paris, the Minister of Finance suddenly discovered—abroad—that unemployment was a problem here at home. If the Minister of Finance is at long last saying that unemployment is the number one priority here in Canada or ought to be, with more than a million Canadians unemployed and a record level of unemployment since the great Depression, does the Prime Minister have a single new job-creating program to announce to the people of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not want the hon. member to be misled as to what the minister said in Paris. He did say what he always says, that he is disturbed, and increasingly so, by the high level of unemployment, but not that it was a problem which could be solved without solving the inflationary problem. I refer the hon. member to the minister's speech.

In so far as single new programs are concerned, let me just announce—reannounce a few of the recent ones—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —on direct job creation and training initiatives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: On March 25 there was an announcement of expanded use of job-creation provisions of UI funds to support summer forestry and fisheries stock improvement projects, amounting to funding of $220 million over the next two years.

A couple of days earlier we had announced increased funding for construction of rental housing and renovation of existing houses, totalling $130 million, a matter which was just referred to in an earlier answer given by the minister responsible for housing. On March 11 there was a boost in training and job-creation programs by $208 million. There were other announcements in April, with a designation of several special areas in eastern Ontario and Quebec which are dependant on the textile, clothing and footwear industries. On March 23 the CHIP eligibility date moved forward from 1961 to 1971 in Newfoundland, in Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. I could go on.

As I have answered the hon. member before, every month, and often every week, we are announcing new job-creation programs. The hon. member has to be constantly reminded of these, because he always forgets the one that was announced yesterday and is wondering what will be announced tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, unlike the Prime Minister, we do pay attention to what his ministers have to say. For example, we know that the grand rental program he just announced—

Some hon. Members: Reannounced!

Mr. Broadbent: —reannounced, to use his own term, will not meet the nation's needs. That program will scarcely meet the rental needs of Vancouver alone, let alone the rest of the cities in Canada. I take it, from his answer, that he has nothing new to announce.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF STIMULATIVE PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would also refer the Prime Minister to the statement made by the United States Secretary of the Treasury at the same meeting in Paris. He said that the United States' high interest rate policy will not change. If independent action is not taken, this will have devastating implications for many economies around the world, as the Prime Minister knows.

Considering that François Mitterrand brought in special programs for home owners, for small businessmen, and also for other sectors of the French economy, and considering that Chancellor Schmidt of the Germany added between $3 billion and $4 billion to provide additional stimulus some two months ago to the German economy, does the Prime Minister now have anything new, of this magnitude, to offer the people of Canada, or will he just reannounce the same old stuff?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot comment on the announcement by a United States official. I would merely say that if he is quoted or interpreted as inaccurately as the hon. member interpreted the speech of the Minister of Finance, then I would want to look at the speech before commenting on the quote.

I find it strange that the hon. member refers to actions which President Mitterrand and Chancellor Schmidt took several months ago and claims them to be great new announcements, whereas ours, which were made just a few weeks ago, he describes as old hat. It seems there is a double standard there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I appeal to the hon. member. Why is he claiming as a recent announcement measures taken several months ago by these two heads of governments, whereas ours were announced in the past few weeks and, incrementally, they are as significant as anything done over there.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the matter is very simple. It is twofold. First, the action they took was some time ago, which means they recognized unemployment as a serious issue well ahead of this government. Second, the impact of their programs in terms of their economies is all out of proportion to what this government has announced. They are not trying to nickel-and-dime their countries to death and pretend they are doing something; they are doing something.

REQUEST THAT BYELECTIONS BE HELD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My final question to the Prime Minister is as follows. There are three constituencies in Canada, namely, Timiskaming, Broadview-Greenwood, and Leeds-Grenville which are not represented in the House of Commons, one since as long ago as Christmas when it lost its member, and two since then. Will the Prime Minister at least give to the people in these constituencies their democratic right to have members in the House of Commons? Let the people in these areas decide what they think of the government's economic performance by announcing byelections.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the first step in ascertaining what the people think would be to convey to them clear facts and thoughts, which the hon. member is failing to do. He refers to the impact of others' programs. If he is talking of the impact of President Mitterrand's program, it has been to send interest rates up to 20 per cent, as the Minister of Finance told him the other day. The impact of Chancellor Schmidt's program has certainly not been to prevent an increase in unemployment, which has increased substantially since he introduced those measures, as well as seeing a devaluation of the mark. I put it to the hon. member that if he is going to go to the electorate with such false representations—

Mr. Broadbent: Call the byelections.

Mr. Trudeau: The point I am making is that the hon. member cannot understand the facts in this House. How can we rely on him to convey them to the people?

PUBLIC WORKS

AWARDING OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It has to do with his friend, Mr. Arthur Erickson. We are advised today by The Globe and Mail that Mr. Erickson knew two years ago, in 1980, that he was going to be chosen as the Canadian government architect for the Washington embassy. We are told he was offered the embassy in China and the one in Saudi Arabia by the Prime Minister, but decided to wait for Washington. We are told that he phoned Mr. Guy Desbarats, the assistant deputy minister of public works, when the committee was announced and, was told by Mr. Desbarats that the appointment of the committee was just a formality, the job was his. We are told by Mr. Erickson's assistant, Mr. Charles Gurd—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Crosbie: I do.

Madam Speaker: Will he please put it now.

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, before the selection committee was appointed in 1981, the job was promised to Mr. Erickson. Will the Prime Minister reverse this award to Mr. Erickson and award this commission to the recommended firm, Zeidler Roberts of Toronto? Will he disallow any further extension of the Erickson patronage principle in the public service? Finally, will he resign his position, having failed to be truthful and scrupulous in his conduct, having participated in a series of fraudulent misrepresentations to the people of Canada? Will he do that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, many of the allegations made by the hon. member seem to have been drawn from a report in this morning's newspaper. If I read it correctly, the allegation is that Mr. Erickson was promised this job two and a half years ago, not two years ago as the hon. member says. Of course, two and a half years ago the Clark government was in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot, of course, contradict Mr. Erickson on that. I just know that he was one of a group of 11 semifinalists, if I can use that expression to satisfy the hon. member. I took the view that the recommendations would be of people qualified to build an embassy. I never believe that the government has to take number one on the list. This is a view that I explained in the House before. I think the government should be helped by the professionals as to who would be qualified to build the embassy, but I do not believe the government has to take number one on the list. If that were the case, the government would lose all discretion, and I do not think that is a proper course. The government should be given a choice, and we exercised that choice.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, these allegations are from Arthur Erickson and his associate architect, Charles Gurd. They have not been repudiated or refuted by the Prime Minister. He has not said they are false. I ask the Prime Minister this. On May 2 when you were at St. Francis Xavier University, you gave the graduates this advice. You spoke of the need for a new code of international morality. When is the Prime Minister going to apply this new code of morality and these new ethics to his own conduct in this shameful, tawdry affair? The allegations are from your friend that you appointed—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —a committee after you promised him this job—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —and then engaged in a fraudulent course of conduct. What is the Prime Minister's answer?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Will the Prime Minister answer that question?

Madam Speaker: Order. On two counts I have to call the hon. member to order. Members are not supposed to refer to other members either by name or as "you", but should address the Chair. On that count I must call the hon. member to order. On the other count, I must call him to order on a question that is not a question. It is obvious to anyone in this House that that was a speech. I urge the hon. member to ask questions, which he is entitled to do, but they must be questions.

Mr. Crosbie: Will the Prime Minister appoint a judicial inquiry in view of these allegations to tell the public—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: This is not amusing, gentlemen—a judicial inquiry to investigate and give the facts of this situation to the people of Canada? Also, will he resign if it is found that he did promise the job to his friend and then set up this fraudulent course of conduct with a selection committee that was doomed in advance? Will he do that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not see the need for a judicial inquiry. I am prepared to give all the facts here and answer all the questions—

Mr. Crosbie: Do it.

Mr. Trudeau: —if they are asked in a sequence in which I can order them, and if I can get the attention of the House. With regard to the alleged statements of Mr. Erickson and Mr. Gurd, I am informed that both of them are now saying they have been misquoted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, this draws laughs, but if they are saying that, I imagine they would say the same thing to a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Crosbie: Let's see. They are under oath then and so are you.

Mr. Trudeau: This is what I mean, Madam Speaker. We listened to the hon. member's questions. I attempt to answer them seriously and I keep getting this bellowing from across the aisle from the hon. member. If he is interested in morality, I indicated that I did not feel the government had to choose the one at the top of the list. If I read the same newspaper, apparently Mr. Zeidler finds this, that he was at the top of the list and therefore thinks that he should have had it. I imagine that is the point of view of the hon. member for St. John's West. That is not my point of view, Madam Speaker.

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see any reason why the Government of Canada should not have a say in the kind of embassy which is going to be built in a prestigious location as is the case in Washington.

Since I have been in government all kinds of embassies have been built abroad. I have never had a say, nor do I remember the government ever having had a say, in the choice of those embassies or those architects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am prepared to see that changed. I do not have to tell it to a judicial commission. Indeed, I think the government should be able to choose the architect. I would admit, Madam Speaker, that in the case of very important embassies like this one, the government should be guided in the choice, by having a small number of qualified architects recommended by the architects' institute. I do not believe that we have to choose the top one off the list.

An hon. Member: What about the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand the other side not liking that system, Madam Speaker. I can see, too, that if the hon.

member were in charge of choosing a design, I too would be very frightened. That is why I think that there should be a small list of people who are qualified to build. But within that list I see no reason at all why the government would have to take that name which is recommended by the Royal Institute of Architects—which is another form of patronage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT COMPETING FIRMS BE REIMBURSED FOR EXPENSES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, methinks the Prime Minister doth protest too much, and too long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, there is a lot of interruptions from the Liberal Party. If I may use a spoonerism, the Liberal Party is a bunch of shining wits. May I ask the Prime Minister this? The indictment comes from the Prime Minister's own lips. He indicates that Mr. Erickson was not the first choice, indeed he was not in the first four choices; and Mr. Ritchie, the chairman of this selection panel, has said with regard to Mr. Erickson that he was unlikely to do as good a job as the four finalists in this case. If they put on a charade of having a selection committee, and if in fact the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that this is the wrong way of proceeding, and that they are going to revise the method respecting these architectural candidates, I want to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that over one and one-quarter million dollars has been spent by the 71 architectural firms which were involved in this process, whether he will not, under the circumstances, indicate whether they will be reimbursed for the very substantial amount of money they have put out—under false pretenses by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member gets that figure, but whatever the figure was, it was obviously spent by a lot of people who knew that only one would be chosen, therefore, that there was going to be money lost, to use the hon. member's phrase, by all but the winner. Now he says that there was a group of four recommended by the board. That is true, Madam Speaker, but I understand from the member for St. John's West that somehow we would have had to choose the one at the top of the list.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Trudeau: Am I being told now that it would have been okay if we had chosen one of the four rather than one of the 11? I would like to know what the opposition is taking as its morality in this particular case. Do members opposite think the government has any choice at all, or was it necessary to choose among four, or among 11?

The point I am taking, Madam Speaker, is that these boards can be useful to narrow down the list, in order that people who are capable of building and who have the reputation of building good buildings, will be chosen; but I do not think, I repeat, I do not think that the government should automatically choose one which has had the first place. And I do not think that is the point of view of the member for St. John's West either, but he keeps saying it.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the point I want to make for the Prime Minister is that the Prime Minister is in effect saying to the selection panel that they are a bunch of incompetents and that, no matter what they suggest to the government, they are not going to be given attention. They did narrow down the number of architects to the last four.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I repeat "shining wits", and maybe they will pick that up a little later on. I want to ask the Prime Minister this. In the interest of the integrity of the office, why is it that the Prime Minister, when there are obviously differing statements with respect to what actually transpired—and the Prime Minister is so obviously embarrassed about this matter—he has been caught with his pants down on this issue—refuses to accept the legitimate proposition of having an independent investigation into this matter? Why? Does he think he is above the law? Does he think that the Charter of Rights does not apply to him?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can remind the member of the hundreds of times that the opposition has called for commissions of inquiry. The facts are not being hidden by me. I am admitting I did not choose the first. I am giving the reasons why. There may be a political difference here.

I feel that amongst the top ones chosen by the committee there were several people who could have built the building. I think that within those choices it would have been even nicer if we could have said to four, five or six of them, "Let us see some designs, let us see some mock-ups of the building, let us choose." I have seen a lot of our embassies now, Madam Speaker. As I say, I have been Prime Minister and travelling abroad for some years. I think it amazing that until now not a single project, to my recollection, has ever come to the Government of Canada for even a look at these prestigious buildings, and that it is some people out there who make the choice.

An hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: At least as far as this government is concerned, I think we have a sense of taste which perhaps would not exist on the other side—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and that we are able to make some choice in this case, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Prime Minister, but that answer was rather long.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REPORTS CONCERNING DOMINION STORES LTD.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week there were reports that Loblaws Ltd. was trying to buy shares in Dominion Stores Ltd. This came only a few days after reports that Steinbergs and Dominion were trying to get together. Since gobbling up Dominion may be good for the supermarket companies but certainly is not good for the consumers, the farmers, or the smaller independent Canadian food processors, can the minister tell this House whether his ministry has investigated these attempts to buy into Dominion and, if so, what are the conclusions of himself and his department regarding this further concentration of ownership and control in the retail food market?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as you know, it is not appropriate to deny or to confirm that an inquiry is being held. I can give the hon. member the assurance that his remarks will be brought to the attention of the Director of Investigation and Research.

[English]

CONSOLIDATION OF PURCHASING POWER

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister will remember that the Leach inquiry in Ontario heard a great deal of testimony some time ago from farmers and smaller food processors about chain store buying techniques, like demanding volume rebates, co-operative advertising allowances, and a whole lot of other ways that the supermarkets have of reducing their procurement costs. While at first glance this may appear to be an advantage to the consumer, does the minister agree that over time this sort of growing, privately-controlled power in the hands of the supermarkets will eventually bring higher prices to consumers? If he does agree, what do he and his department intend to do about it?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, indeed I share the concern of the hon. member. This is one of the reasons why we hope in the next session of Parliament to introduce appropriate amendments to the combines legislation.

MEETING OF MINISTERS IN OTTAWA—INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO PROMOTE ECONOMIC EQUALITY OF WOMEN

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montréal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women. The ministers responsible for the status of women in the provincial and territorial governments have been meeting in Ottawa for the last two days. Madam Speaker, I should like to know whether the ministers have reached any conclusions, and whether the minister can inform the House of these conclusions and any measures the ministers intend to take to implement the Charter of Rights and improve the economic status of women in Canada.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to explain what happened during the past day and a half in Ottawa. This was a rather historic event, the first meeting ever of the ministers responsible for the status of women. We were delighted to come to conclusions that I think will improve the status of women in Canada on a very general basis. We agreed that the machinery of government must be improved both at the federal and provincial levels. There must be a greater understanding of those problems which face women in the work force today. Daycare, maternity benefits, sexual harassment, all came under intense discussion.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB RETRAINING FOR WOMEN HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Regardless of the Prime Minister's approach to the unemployment situation, nevertheless the situation with regard to 1.5 million unemployed Canadians is really tragic. One of the groups that is suffering most from unemployment is women who are heads of single-parent families. The number of people in this group without jobs has doubled in the last year from 25,000 to 51,000.

In view of the fact that these women, on their own, have to provide for their children, maintain their homes, and put food on the table, is any special emphasis being given to job retraining for these women who are probably the most vulnerable group in our society?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I certainly agree with the hon. member that this particular group in our society is the one that faces by far the most serious difficulty in the workplace. I can report to the House that one of the major emphases of the new national training plan we have put forward will provide special incentive grants to employers to take women into non-traditional training programs and provide them with the opportunity to gain training in a wider range of occupations than has previously been the case.

We also have a special direct employment program, Canada Community Services Projects, which particularly hires women who are single parents to work in a wide variety of community-based services. I believe the enrolment is about 70 per cent women in that direct employment program. We are targeting our efforts to meeting the problem, and we would certainly appreciate any support that the hon. member could give to those efforts.

CANADA MANPOWER DECISIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. I should like him to consider the case of a single parent who is a 42-year old female sales clerk, with two children at home, who was given two weeks termination notice. She applied through Canada Manpower for retraining in word processing. She was told she would need a typing speed of 50 words per minute to qualify. She did not have that, so she applied for retraining in typing. Then she was told at Canada Manpower that that would not do, because typing leads to a dead end occupation for women and therefore she would not be allowed to retrain in typing. Then she was told, "Besides that, you are listed as a sales clerk."

How long are women like this going to be given the runaround by the department, and when is the department going to consider seriously the fact that such women are desperately in need of retraining?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to receive specific information on that case from the hon. member. I would be prepared to look into it. I would point out that, in order to deal with the problems she raises concerning the need for special counselling, we have opened eight special women's employment centres across Canada in the past year. They are designed specifically to look at the problems of women coming into the work force who need training or need to change occupations.

I would be very glad if the hon. member would give me a report on this case which I would refer to one of the special women's employment centres that we have established to deal with that kind of problem.

PUBLIC WORKS

ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the embassy project. I have the impression that the Prime Minister gave a very poor defense of his point of view in a matter that is extremely important, considering his position. The Prime Minister mentioned 11 finalists, who today have become "semi-finalists". The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that the committee recommended four firms, and I believe he has a duty to the public to give his real reasons for not selecting one of the four recommended firms or finalists and for selecting a firm that ranked lower on the list.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking me to repeat what I said earlier. It is my view that the government had to make a selection from a group of architects who were recognized as being eminently capable of building an embassy of this size. Whether there were 11 in the group or four, I suppose it hardly matters, unless the hon. member is trying to claim that the government has to select the first one on the list. That is what I asked his colleagues, and I did not get an answer. Is the government bound by the selection made by a group of government officials and architects, in which no politician had a say. Is this selection to be imposed on us or should the government act responsibly and exercise its discretion in selecting the architect? It so happens that in exercising that discretion, we selected one of the 11 finalists or semi-finalists, and it so happens that our choice fell on an internationally acclaimed architect, whose reputation is well established in Canada and beyond our borders. Personally, I cannot accept the principle that in selecting an embassy of this size, the government is bound by the decision of a group of officials or architects and that the government itself has nothing to say in the matter. If that is the hon. member's theory, he probably made this discovery since he became a member of the opposition, because it was certainly not his position before.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I can assure you that not my theory but the Right Hon. Prime Minister has changed during the last thirty years, since the time when he attacked the Union Nationale in Quebec on contracts. The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that his government asked for a special committee to do an evaluation of this prestigious project. The opposition never requested that the first person on the list should be selected, but the Prime Minister is sticking to this story although he knows perfectly well, and that is where he is misrepresenting the facts, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but I must ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, since the Prime Minister received four recommendations and was not bound to select the first person recommended, why did the Prime Minister refuse to consider representations made by a competent committee? Does he want to give us the impression that the government is more competent than the task force he himself formed to help the government and the country to carry out this prestigious project? That is what Canadians would like to know.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is saying now that we were not bound to select the first one on the list. Madam Speaker, I may refer the hon. member to his colleague from St. John's West, who earlier seemed to indicate the exact opposite, when he spoke in support of the press report, and, more specifically, named Mr. Zeidler, who said that he was the first one on the list and that he should have—

Mr. La Salle: There were four recommendations and you ignored them!

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, but I cannot seem to make the hon. member agree with his colleague. He should first get things straightened out with him and tell us whether according to their side, we are bound to select the first candidate or whether we have some latitude to select among those who qualified. If the hon. member, unlike the member for St. John's West, is saying that we do have some latitude, I would ask him now why this latitude should extend to four rather than to 11 people, because none of the 11 and none of the four submitted a real project or even a mock-up or sketches, and that the point was to select a competent person. I suggest that there were probably several competent architects among the 11, but I do not think that anyone in this House or in the country will deny that Mr. Erickson is competent. The hon. member said that he happens to be one of my friends. I would like to tell the hon. member that if Mr. Erickson is a great architect, it is not because he is my friend. Perhaps the reverse is true.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NAMIBIA—SELECTION OF ELECTORAL SYSTEM

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know that Pretoria and Washington seem to be combining to hold up as long as they possibly can, if not forever, the independence of Namibia, which the minister himself said last November he hoped to see come about this year in accordance with the UN resolution. Can the minister explain why Canada, as a member of the contact group, is not protesting in the most strenuous way possible the manner in which various electoral systems are being proposed? First of all there is the suggestion that there be one person with two votes, and of course SWAPO turned that down; and they are now proposing there be one person with one vote but each vote be counted twice. As the minister knows, all these devices are contrary to what we should be pressing for in the contact group. I ask the minister are we pressing for or is there any hope of having a genuinely democratic system in Namibia of one person, one vote?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there are a great many valid electoral systems in the democratic world. In each case it is important that the system be devised with the needs of the people in mind. Namibia is a country in which there are a great many different groups, none of which, I understand, comprises as much as half the population. Therefore it is important to get an electoral system which gives some weight to all of the various groups in that country. That is what the contact group has been trying to facilitate with its various proposals. It is not open to me to discuss those proposals in this formula, but we have been trying to facilitate the process. This is not a process which involves bad faith on anyone's part, as some have alleged, or some kind of blindness to the needs of the situation. Indeed, it is an attempt to meet the needs of the situation exactly.

POSITION TAKEN BY SOUTH AFRICA AND UNITED STATES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like the minister to note specifically that one person, one vote, under a system of proportional representation, which is what many in the area have proposed, or something comparable to Zimbabwe, is what would be the most fair in this circumstance. I agree with him there are a great variety, and I believe a proportional representation system would be the most appropriate. Would the minister not agree to that, and also agree that the hopes he had, when I questioned him last November in committee, of Namibia achieving independence in 1982 are now being once again totally stalled by South Africa, and possibly even by Washington as well?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member that some measure of proportional representation may well be needed in that situation. I would tell her that the timetable we had last fall has proved to be overly optimistic in light of events. But I can certainly deny that the kind of difficulties which have arisen have arisen because of any specific attitude on the part of South Africa, and of course not on the part of the United States which has been working with other members of the contact group to try to facilitate the process.

POST OFFICE—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,829—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Post Office Department at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $36,430 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am informed by Canada Post Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (b) The guidelines contained in the Canada Post Personnel Manual, Chapter 9-1 which are in accordance with Treasury Board policy as expressed in the Personnel Management Manual, Chapter 110-5.

2. None.

3. (a) and (b) None. (c) Employees are usually granted educational leave not because of a change in their capabilities but rather to increase their capabilities so that they become more valuable employees for the organization.

4. Of the five employees recorded on page 13.6, Volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, 20 per cent left the public service.

POST OFFICE—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,870—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Post Office Department at page 32.25, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what was the name of each type of service (b) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts of a value more than $2,000, to whom was it paid (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $70,786 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am informed by Canada Post Corporation as follows:

(a) Meals and receptions only.

(b) The amount paid was $70,786 as recorded in the Public Accounts of Canada and no contracts were issued for $2,000 or more.

(c) The guidelines set out in Treasury Board Administration Policy Manual, Chapter 360.

(d)(i) 42 per cent (ii) 20 per cent (iv) 18 per cent (vi) (vii) (ix) 20 per cent (iii) (v) (viii) (x) (xi) (xii) Nil.

POST OFFICE—TRAINING SERVICES

Question No. 2,937—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Post Office Department at page 32.25, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training services (a) how does the department explain the 24 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (d) what services did George Brown College in Toronto provide?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am informed by Canada Post Corporation as follows:

(a) The 1978-79 reported amount of $591,072 included only individual payments in excess of $2,000. The 1978-79 amount of $802,495 includes all payments including those under $2,000 and as a result a comparison is misleading. If in 1978-79 the under $2,000 payments are included the compared amount would be $802,495 and 1979-80 would in fact show a decrease of 8.2 per cent.

(b) The training program services include the costs related to University, College, Public Service Commission and correspondence courses as well as technical training.

(c) Not available for 1979-80. We were required to list only individual payments $25,000 and over.

(d) The George Brown College in Toronto gives technical training for postal employees. This training provided the prerequisite skills and knowledge to maintain postal equipment and to undertake further specialized training to maintain complex equipment systems in the mechanized postal plants.

SALARY OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

1. Did the Governor of the Bank of Canada recently state that "if all workers demand pay increases of 10 to 12 per cent annually, inflation will never be licked" and, if so, at what location and under what circumstances?

2. Did the Governor recently accept an approximately 10 per cent salary increase and, if so, how does the government and the Governor reconcile this statement with the sizeable increase received by the Governor?

3. What is the salary of the Governor now and what was it before the raise?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The Bank of Canada has no record of a statement in these terms by the Governor. What the Governor said in his speech to the Board of Trade of Montreal on December 1, 1981 was the following: "The more readily we Canadians accept the fact that more moderate increases in total spending imply more moderate increases in money incomes and prices for everyone, the better will be the trend of employment, output, and real income in Canada in the months ahead."

2. The Governor of the Bank of Canada received a salary increase effective April 1, 1981. The salary of the Governor had been frozen for six years from January 30, 1973 to January 1, 1979. From 1973 to date, the salary of the Governor has increased 39 per cent; during the same period, average wages in the entire economy have increased about 130 per cent.

3. For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

FORMATION OF UNION AT HARBOURFRONT

Question No. 3,554—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. With reference to Harbourfront, is it the government's policy to resist any effort by employees to form a union in order to bargain collectively with Harbourfront?

2. Did the directors of Harbourfront vigorously oppose the efforts by theatrical stage employees to join the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees Local 58 and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. There is an application now being heard by the province of Ontario Labour Relations Board for certification of a small group of employees at Harbourfront. The board is the suitable body to hear this matter and it is therefore not appropriate for the federal government to comment. I am satisfied, however, that Harbourfront management, as the local organization responsible for the site, is carrying out its responsibilities in a proper manner.

MR. GERALD BOUEY

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Gerald Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, as of February 2, 1982 and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Gerald Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada.

MR. EDGAR BENSON

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Edgar Benson, Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, as of February 2, 1982 and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Edgar Benson, Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, is paid as a DM3, the range for which is $84,300 to $99,200. Since Mr. Benson's appointment in September of 1972, the DM3 range has been adjusted as follows:

April 1, 1973	—	10 per cent
April 1, 1974	—	9.1 per cent
April 1, 1975	—	10 per cent
April 1976	—	3.6 per cent *
April 1, 1977	—	3.5 per cent
April 1, 1978	—	3.4 per cent

* No increase provided to individuals

April 1, 1979 — 6.7 per cent
April 1, 1980 — 9.5 per cent
April 1, 1981 — 9.2 per cent
Nov. 1, 1981 — 6.0 per cent **

 No automatic increase provided to individuals

Individuals within the DM3 classification may receive adjustments either greater than or less than the movement of the range structures based on assessed performance. Where position in the range stucture or level of salary increase reflect performance judgments, individual salaries and salary increases are not released.

MR. FRANK ROBERTS

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Frank Roberts, Chairman of VIA Rail, as of February 2, 1982, and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Frank Roberts, Chairman of VIA Rail.

MR. WILLIAM HOPPER

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Bill Hopper, Chairman of Petro-Canada, as of February 2, 1982, and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Bill Hopper, Chairman of Petro-Canada.

HON. MITCHELL SHARP

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Mitchell Sharp, Commissioner of the Northern Pipeline Agency, as of February 2, 1982, and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Mitchell Sharp, Commissioner of the Northern Pipeline Agency.

MR. AL JOHNSON

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Al Johnson, President of the CBC, as of February 2, 1982, and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Al Johnson, President of the CBC.

MR. CLAUDE TAYLOR

What is the salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Claude Taylor, President of Air Canada, as of February 2, 1982, and what are the percentage increases he received since taking office?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Claude Taylor, President of Air Canada.

MR. MICHAEL WARREN

Question No. 3,712—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the exact salary to the nearest dollar paid to Mr. Michael Warren, head of the Canada Post Corporation, at the time of his appointment effective September 1, 1981?

2. What is the exact salary to the nearest dollar received by Mr. Warren as a result of an increase approved by cabinet last week?

3. What were all the reasons justifying such a large raise in salary when Mr. Warren has only been in office for a relatively short period of time and was one of the reasons that Canadian postal rates for first-class mail were recently raised to provide for funds in order to increase Mr. Warren's salary?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1 and 2. For those positions to which a salary range is not attached and where the determination of salary increases includes considerations of assessed performance, as a matter of privacy the government does not release individual salaries or the percentage increase in salary applicable to individuals. These circumstances apply in the case of Mr. Michael Warren, President of the Canada Post Corporation.

3. It was agreed with Mr. Warren, when he accepted the position of the Canada Post Corporation on April 2, 1981, that his salary would be included in the 1981 annual pay review for Crown corporations, which was concluded on January 27, 1982. The salary of the President of the Canada Post Corporation is not a factor in the establishment of Canadian postal rates.

DND CONTRACTS

Question No. 4,096—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place a $5,000 contract with Carleton University for a "study of the cohesiveness of the Warsaw Treaty Organization—Phase II" under contract serial No. 05SU-0141105 (2SU81-00400) and, if so (a) for what reason could the study not be done within the department (b) on what date will it be completed (c) how many parts or phases are there to the study and what is the total expected cost (d) will the study, in whole or in part, be made available to (i) Members of Parliament (ii) the Department of External Affairs?

2. Did the department place a $148,000 contract with W.R. Davis Engineering Limited for "study of the motion of a cable towed flexible cylinder" under contract serial No. 07SC-3210154 (8SC81-00248) and, if so (a) for what purpose is a towed flexible cylinder used (b) what is the unit cost of a cylinder?

3. Did the department place a $276,860 contract with Air Canada for aircraft passenger seats under file No. HE.2721361-HE80 (2HE81-02038) and, if so (a) for which and for how many aircraft are the seats being purchased (b) how many seats are being purchased?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Supply and Services as follows:

1. Yes. The study is carried out under the sponsorship of Carleton University and jointly funded by several organizations including DND.

(a) While DND provides project co-ordination, it does not have the linguistic capability nor the human and financial resources to carry out the project on its own.

(b) Fall of 1983.

(c) Four phases with several parts to each phase. The total expected cost up to and including Phase III is estimated at $153,889. The cost of Phase IV, which will be the final report, has still to be determined.

(d) The study will be available to Members of Parliament and to all interested government departments; it will also be distributed throughout NATO.

2. Yes, the said contract was issued by DSS on behalf of DND to W.R. Davis Engineering Ltd.

(a) The work under the contract is for the development, validation and implementation of a computer program to simulate the motions of a long, flexible, neutrally buoyant cylinder towed by a long, heavy cable. The "flexible cylinder" could be any long, flexible object, cylindrical in shape, that could be towed behind a ship. This could be a fish net or an antenna array used in detection systems.

(b) The project is a computer exercise only and no "cylinder", as such, will be used or purchased.

3. Yes, the said contract was issued by DSS on behalf of DND to Air Canada.

(a) The seats are being purchased for the five DND CC137 (Boeing 707) aircraft.

(b) A total of 215 used refurbished seats are on order.

ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Question No. 4,163—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Has the government made reference to an economic strategy based on megaprojects and, if so (a) which projects (b) what are the projections for the next 20 years (c) where will they be located (d) under which sector of the economy will they come (e) what is their (i) total (ii) individual value (f) for (i) all projects (ii) each project, what industrial benefits are forecasted for Canada's economy (g) for (i) all projects (ii) each project, how many jobs will be created?

2. Are there guidelines stipulating that subcontractors and other companies must be Canadian-owned in a given percentage and, if so, what are the details?

3. Does the government contemplate investing in the projects and, if so (a) approximately how much for (i) all projects (ii) each project (b) under what form (grants, guarantees, tax credits, etc.)?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. (a) The government has not made reference to an economic strategy based exclusively on megaprojects. The government in its policy paper entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980's", tabled at the time of the November budget, stated that the 1980s hold great promise, offering opportunities of unprecedented magnitude and the potential for lasting benefits from economic renewal. Specifically, the policy paper set out three areas of major opportunity:

(i) the development of our natural resources; energy, food products, such as grain and fish, forest products and minerals, such as coal and potash.

(ii) the second area of economic development opportunity lies in manufacturing activity. The paper cites the published report of the Major Projects Task Force which identifies $440 billion in potential projects predominantly in the energy and resource sectors, noting the opportunity presented to the manufacturing sector to both supply machinery, equipment and materials needed for resource development and to extend the further processing of resource products beyond the primary stage.

(iii) the third area of growth is in the innovation, development and exploitation of advanced technology and high productivity goods and services. The paper notes that Canadian creativity has proven in the manufacturing, engineering and service areas, such as nuclear technology, aerospace, communications, electronic data processing, retailing and urban transportation equipment, that we can place ourselves at the forefront of technological change in selected world markets. It is equally clear, however, that we must build upon and strengthen our technological infrastructure.

(b) The major project task force report of June, 1981, provides an inventory of specific projects to the year 2000 having a cost of $100 million or more. The government in October, 1981, published a major capital projects inventory containing projects with an investment value of more than $100 million. These projects were divided into categories of "committed", "planned" or "possible" to the year 1990

depending upon the status of industry plans. The government inventory also provides an address list of all the sponsor companies, including a contract name and other relevant project information. It is intended, if industry agrees it would be useful, to annually up-date this inventory. Canadian industry is therefore to be kept appraised of possible current and future opportunities arising from major projects.

(c)(d)(e)(f) The two above-mentioned publications not only set out a project, specific inventory of currently identified projects, but as well set out the costs, projected employment where known and sectoral and regional distribution of the project inventory. It is expected that the massive investment in these resource development projects will generate many billions of dollars worth of opportunities for supplying these projects or developing new resource-based products.

2. In order for Canadian industry and workers to benefit to the maximum extent possible from major activity the federal government announced new initiatives in August, 1981. These initiatives were (i) the announcement of industrial benefits objectives and guidelines for owner-sponsors of major projects, (ii) the creation of an office of industrial and regional benefits within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce; and (iii) the formation of a committee on industrial and regional benefits replacing the existing advisory committee on industrial benefits. These measures are intended to increase the federal government's ability to identify and stimulate industrial benefits associated with, in particular, the development of Canada's natural resources. They also respond to a need to have a system in place to administer the industrial benefits provisions of Bill C-48.

With respect to supplier development, a critical role must be played by project sponsors. The government will encourage sponsors to put in place policies and practices that ensure that Canadian suppliers benefit from supplier development activities that are seen as good procurement strategy in many industries. These include phased contracts, performance milestones, early definition of requirements, participation in start-up costs, assistance with technical or managerial skills, etc.

3. The government, through Crown corporations, may invest in some megaprojects. The level and nature of investment in any specific project will depend upon several factors, including the magnitude of the project and the role which the project plays in the achievement of national economic objectives. For example, through Petro-Canada the government may invest in major energy projects which have the potential to add significantly to Canada's domestic oil supplies, and thus contribute to the achievement of oil self-sufficiency. The precise nature of each Crown corporation's investment will depend upon its nature and financial situation.

It is not possible at this time to estimate how much the government will invest in the several projects listed in the major capital projects inventory. Many of these projects are still in a preliminary planning stage, and even those in an advanced stage of planning may not yet have received full review by regulatory bodies and government departments to determine whether they are consistent with the public interest.

It also is not possible at this time to predict the precise form which government financial participation might take. Crown corporations will participate as equity investors in some projects. In other cases, the government may provide tax and direct incentives. The form of the government's participation will be dependent upon, inter alia, its judgment as to the national economic benefits to be derived from the project, the capability and willingness of private sponsors to assume the associated risks, the financial benefits to be derived by Crown corporations from investments, and the impact of different forms of participation such as tax expenditures upon related government policies and programs.

STATE VISIT OF PRESIDENT OF SOMALIA

Question No. 4,164—Mr. Siddon:

With reference to the state visit of President Siad Barre of Somalia (a) how many Somalian flags were purchased and installed in the National Capital Region for the visit (b) which department paid for the acquisition and installation (c) what was the total cost of their (i) acquisition (ii) installation (iii) removal (d) what will be the disposition of the flags when they are removed (e) are the flags to be stored and, if so (i) where (ii) what will be the cost of storage?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) Three hundred and four.

(b) Acquisition and installation paid for by Public Works Canada. $3,764.43 is to be recovered from the Department of External Affairs.

(c)(i) $3,764.43, (ii) $3,365, (iii) $2,753.18.

(e)(i) Yes, at Public Works Stores, Plouffe Park, Ottawa, (ii) $70.20 per year.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Question No. 4,215—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Justice for the Canadian Human Rights Commission at page 13.6, volume I of the 1980-81 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted leave with pay (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): 1. (a) Guidelines used are contained in Training Administration Guide issued under Section 7 of the Financial Administration Act and the government's policies on staff training (chapters 110-1 and 110-2 of the Personnel Management Manual). (b) The skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis.

2. (a) and (b) Nil. (c) One hundred per cent of the education leave was necessitated due to changes in the capabilities of the employee.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 4,217—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Justice for the Law Reform Commission of Canada at page 13.6, Volume I of the 1980-81 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted leave without pay (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Page 13.6 of Volume I of the 1980-81 Public Accounts of Canada appears to contain a misprint as regards purported information regarding the Law Reform Commission of Canada. In fact, no personnel of the commission were on education leave during that fiscal year and, consequently, no costs were incurred for that purpose.

MR. DONALD MARSHALL, JR.

Question No. 4,219—Mr. Crosby:

1. Was an application made to the Minister of Justice or another officer by or on behalf of Mr. Donald Marshall for a pardon, new trial or other remedy with respect to his conviction for a murder?

2. Does the minister or other official have any information indicating that Mr. Marshall was improperly convicted of the murder of Sandy Seale or does he or any other official have any information respecting the person who did murder Sandy Seale?

3. What action can be taken or what remedy can be granted to a person who has been improperly convicted of murder in Canada and who has spent a substantial period of time in prison and is there any financial or other compensation available to such a person?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): 1. Dartmouth lawyer Stephen Aronson met with one of my officials on April 1, 1982, to discuss the case of Donald Marshall, Jr. He has just lately tendered written materials in connection with Mr. Marshall's application for a pardon, or for one of the remedies under Section 617 of the Criminal Code. Section 617 permits me to order a new trial or appeal proceeding where I feel that such relief is warranted.

2. This case is currently being investigated by my officials, and I hope will be resolved with some dispatch. I cannot comment on any substantive aspect of it, until the matter is concluded.

3. There has been no suggestion that compensation might be sought from the federal government in a matter such as this, for we had no role in the investigation or prosecution of this case. I cannot speculate about what recourse might be sought from others if there were any impropriety.

VETERANS CONTRACTING MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Question No. 4,223—Mr. Friesen:

1. How many veterans of World War II who served with (a) the Canadian Armed Forces (b) other allied forces were interned in (i) Japanese (ii) German prisoners of war camps and, in each case, how many surviving veterans are now known sufferers of multiple sclerosis?

2. Of those veterans who have died, how many contracted multiple sclerosis before their deaths?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. No such statistics maintained or available. Compensation under the provisions of the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act is currently being paid to 980 former members of the Canadian Armed Forces who were prisoners of war of the Japanese during World War II, and to 4,936 former members of the Canadian Armed Forces who were prisoners of war of other powers during World War II.

2. No such statistics maintained or available. The Canadian Pension Commission does not maintain statistics on the number of former prisoners of war who are now suffering from multiple sclerosis, or who suffered from this condition prior to their death.

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like once again to ask the parliamentary secretary why he has not been able to give us a reply to question No. 2,042, which touches on the Prime Minister's December-January world tour of 1980-81. I point out to the parliamentary secretary that there are questions on the Order Paper which go back two years and one month. There are 278 pages of unanswered questions. Surely the government, if it has the will, could answer these questions more promptly, including not only the question I have referred to but my five questions Nos. 3,216 to 3,220, all dealing with these trips the Prime Minister has taken to various exotic spots around the world.

Mr. Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, as we all know, the hon. member is a very cost-conscious Member of Parliament, but I point out that the government has as of today answered 3,128 questions during this session. The hon. member has raised this question before and the answer is in progress. We have tabled some answers which have been three inches thick and cost several thousands of dollars to compile. Notwithstanding that, we are endeavouring to answer these questions in a reasonable and expeditious way.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, if I might briefly address a question to the parliamentary secretary, would it not be appropriate, out of respect for the memory of the late hon. member for Leeds-Grenville, to answer his question with respect to Air Canada passes which has been on the Order Paper for some five and a half years?

Mr. Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, of course having been on the Order Paper that long it was there the entire time the hon. member for Yukon was a minister and his government did not get around to answering it during their nine-month period. I would point out that the government answered two of the questions standing in the name of the late hon. member for Leeds-Grenville today. We have been answering his questions regularly on a daily basis, and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Nielsen: How about that one?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—EFFECT OF ECONOMIC POLICIES ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge) moved:

That this House, alarmed by the fact that over 1,500,000 Canadians are unemployed and aware that small businesses generate more than 60 per cent of all new jobs created in Canada, condemns this government for its ruinous economic policies, particularly those contained in the budget, which have effectively destroyed the spirit of entrepreneurship in the small business community, have contributed substantially to the loss of job-creating opportunities and which have drastically diminished investment in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in commencing debate on this important motion, let me waste no time in stating that it is difficult to exaggerate the sense of rage, frustration and anger felt in the Canadian small business community as a result of the disastrous economic policies which are being pursued by this government. That vital sector of our economy which we call the small business community has special qualities which distinguish it from other economic groups in our society.

The Canadian small businessman and woman have the characteristic of being the risk-takers flowing from their belief in the free enterprise system. This economic group creates 60 per cent of all new jobs in Canada. These men and women believe in the values of initiative, incentive and the spirit of entrepreneurship. These traits which are the hallmark of the small business community of our society are being sapped because of government interference and ill-conceived economic policies.

From the small service company in the petroleum industry in western Canada to the manufacturer of auto parts in Ontario to the small vessel construction industry in Atlantic Canada, the over-all outlook for prosperity is grimmer than it ever has been since the bleak days of the depression.

In normal times, statistics demonstrate that one-half of all small businesses fail in the first two years. Further, four out of five businesses are unsuccessful after five years. This is primarily because of under-capitalization of the enterprise, mismanagement or a combination of both. But in today's economic climate, superimposed on these factors the small businessman and woman must contend with punishing interest rates and a budget that snuffs out any sense of incentive. It is not enough for me to speak in terms of bold generalities. I wish to direct my attention to certain aspects of the budget which are presently having a crippling effect on small business people and must be changed.

In a budget which was replete with policies that extinguish incentives and one's personal sense of enterprise, no proposal was more destructive in the budget for the small business person than the decision to tax dividends by a distribution tax of 12.5 per cent.

The small business rate of taxation is normally 25 per cent, subject to provincial variations. But the effect of this proposal will actually raise the corporate tax on active business to thirty three and one-third per cent when funds are paid out of dividends.

Let me illustrate a typical situation by way of specific example prepared for me by a pre-eminent tax lawyer. Let us assume we have a small businessman who has a non-working wife. He has two children both under the age of 18 years. The businessman draws $2,000 a month for living expenses and when profits allow he takes $10,000 in dividends. Let us assume that the gross income from the business is $39,000 including the payment of dividends. In comparing this factual information on the basis of a 1981 return with that of a tax return which must be filed in 1982 pursuant to the provisions of the budget, there is a 10.1 per cent increase in the tax payable by such a small business person. This is so even after including the benefit of indexing and the change in the tax credit.

Thus we have the following incredible situation. We have a gross income in these two years which is exactly the same. But inflation has to be taken into account. Therefore, the purchasing power of that income is reduced in the second year, that is in 1982, by 12 per cent or more. In addition there is an increase in tax of 10.1 per cent. This is a common situation. The numbers I have used are conservative—and I use that word in the best sense—namely $2,000 by way of a draw and $10,000 taken out at the end of the year when profits allow.

A second and equally important example of a policy that works to the detriment of a small-business man pertains to the treatment of capital cost allowance. The new provisions cut the write-off in half in the year of the asset in which it is acquired. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), in a piece of propaganda that was sent out to 200,000 small business people in Canada, stated that the change in depreciation write-off in the first year "merely alters the timing of the depreciation". This is simply not true. Let me give an example to back it up.

For depreciable property there is what is known as class 12 write-offs. Class 12 write-offs apply to restaurateurs, doctors, plumbers, electricians and to people who have small tools. In my community there is restaurant called "The Mill". Assume that restaurant has breakage amounting to $500 a month. Taken over a year, it totals $6,000. Formerly under class 12 depreciable property a person was entitled to write off the total amount of breakage, but that amount is now cut in half.

Let us take a look at another illustration. A small businessman or woman wishes to purchase a building for $500,000. The capital cost allowance is 5 per cent. In year one, the owner of that building under pre-budget conditions would write off $25,000. Under the provisions of the budget, a person is entitled to write off only $13,500. At the end of ten years, the difference in deductions is $7,878.12. That is the difference after ten years and yet the Minister of Finance says it is only a matter of timing.

I want to pause for a moment to make a point. I am concerned that there is no one in this House who has not received, quite rightly and quite justifiably, many protests from the insurance industry. The insurance industry has mobilized a blitzkrieg which would make Hitler pale. There is going to be a change in the budget as a result of the pressure that has been applied by people with insurance policies who have been writing to their Members of Parliament. They have also been phoning their Members of Parliament. It is very easy to understand the inequity of the situation which occurs when a person has to pay income tax on a benefit he or she has not received. That is easy for anyone to understand. But my concern with respect to the Minister of Finance is that most people do not understand what capital cost allowance is. It is complicated but it is essential and important to the small business community. Most Canadians do not understand what dividends are, the taxation and the effect of dividends. My concern is that people will not understand.

Only political pressure, I think, will initiate any change in this disastrous budget. But for the small business community which is the backbone of our economy, in spite of the good work by the John Bullochs, and the Jim Bennetts, by our party and the other party to my left, in terms of pressuring the government, I do not see the Minister of Finance moving from his position.

I want to use one more illustration because I want to make the point that although some of these matters are very complicated, they are very, very important. The third illustration of duplicity and inconsistency in government policy applies to the raising of the limits from $750,000 to $1 million in terms of retained earnings for a company to qualify as a small business for the preferred rate of tax. While the raising of the limit is to be welcomed, in my opinion it does not go nearly far enough to take into consideration inflation. Dividends paid out of retained earnings will no longer cause a reduction in retained earnings for the purposes of tax.

Again I wish to give an illustration. Suppose company A and company B were set up in 1975, each earning $100,000 per year and paying $25,000 in taxes. Further suppose that company A annually pays dividends out of its funds, whereas company B retains all its earnings. If company B shareholders pay out the retained cash after budget night, they will be subject to a corporate distribution tax of $50,000. Further, company B has cumulative deductions of $600,000 as of January 1, 1982, leaving only $400,000 available for the small business deduction.

The point is that every Liberal minister of finance has encouraged small business people of Canada to retain earnings within the company. Now we have a situation where the small business person who has stripped the treasury by way of paying out dividends has a preferred advantage because he has from $1 to $1 million to go, whereas the company that retained earnings in the circumstances is in a less preferred position. In addition, the company that has abided by government policy in terms of retained earnings, if he wants to take it out by way of dividends, will have to pay the 12.5 per cent tax on dividends. I think this is totally wrong. Despite the fact that it is complicated, I insist that the Minister of Finance pay attention to it because it is one factor which has provided disincentive to the small business community.

During the course of the budget debate a document was sent out to 200,000 small business people in Canada. It was replete with fraudulent statements and inaccuracies; it was a piece of propaganda. I have given three illustrations of where it is incorrect, one being the 12.5 per cent tax dividend and the other the statement that investors will pay less tax. That is just absolute nonsense, and patently so. It is absolutely not the case that changes in depreciation or write-offs do not have a significant effect upon small businesses.

One of the hallmarks of the system of taxation has always been the confidentiality of the tax returns of taxpayers, yet the 200,000 recipients of this piece of propaganda received this brochure as a result of the computers of Revenue Canada being utilized for the purpose. If that is not a formal breach of the Income Tax Act, it is a tremendous violation of the spirit of the act. Whether or not a person is a prostitute or whatever, everyone is compelled to disclose their income. The quid pro quo is that no one will know about it except if a person lies or commits a fraud, yet the Minister of Finance utilized the facilities of Revenue Canada for this purpose. It does not surprise me; it is consistent with the conduct of the government. I register my protest with respect to the way this political propaganda was disseminated.

I have tried to illustrate, by the examples I have given, the betrayal in specific terms of risk-takers and small entrepreneurs, those people with incentive who have traditionally been the backbone of our economy. Although the ways and means necessary to implement the policy outlined in the budget have not been passed, there is no sign that the Minister of Finance is willing to change his posture.

As of Friday, Statistics Canada told us that there were officially 1.2 million Canadians unemployed, yet we know that the real figure is closer to 1.5 million. My community is in the heartland of southwestern Ontario. In Cambridge we have 17.5 per cent registered unemployment. We have gone from a situation where there has never been any question of employment in Cambridge to a situation where one out of five men and women cannot obtain jobs. We have 14,000 people from Portugal and 15,000 people from Newfoundland who came to Cambridge because they could always find employment; it is in the industrial heartland of Ontario. We also know that with respect to new jobs 60 per cent are created by the small business community.

In an excellent speech which was given by Mr. J. K. Gray, vice-president of Canadian Hunter Exploration Limited, he referred to the United States senate committee which in its recent investigation concluded that 97 per cent of new jobs being created in the United States were created by companies that did not make it into the list of the top 1,000 in Fortune magazine. A report of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology demonstrated that small firms with 20 or fewer employees generate 66 per cent of all new jobs in the United States. This dovetails almost precisely with our statistics on small businesses. We need new small companies to create jobs, yet the government established an economic climate which stifles initiative and enterprise.

When massive numbers of people are out of work as they are today, one only has to pick up the morning paper and look at the rocketing number of insolvencies of businesses in Canada. The statistics published by Statistics Canada for the first four months of 1982 show that bankruptcies increased by 37 per cent over the same period last year. In Ontario the number of business bankruptcies increased from 198 to 288 over the first four months. Yet bankruptcies are only one form of insolvency. Previously I told the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) that since the change to the Bank Act in the mid-1960s the number of bankruptcies does not fairly represent the number of businesses which have gone broke. This is because of what is known as the floating charge debenture which is utilized by banks today. When a creditor signs a floating charge debenture securing the money borrowed for his small business, it is only between him and the banks, not between the government, the bank and the borrower. What has happened as a result is that the number of insolvencies in Canada today cannot be calculated because we have absolutely no figures. It is my estimation that there are four insolvencies caused by receivership for one bankruptcy.

The reason is that the people who go bankrupt are the people who want to have their debts extinguished after a certain period of time. What normally happens to a businessman when the banker sees that he cannot meet his liabilities as they come due is that the bank walks in and exercises its security. Although people might be reading the morning papers and saying it is tragic that 37 per cent more businesses have gone into bankruptcy, it does not tell the whole story. Receiverships do not include the group of people who have lost faith, who have some money but are not making money and decide to close the doors because there is no economic environment in which they can sell their goods.

There are three categories in this area; those who close the door, those who go into receivership and those in bankruptcy. There are no statistics available for those people in the first two categories to show how serious the situation really is.

What is a better indicator are the unemployment figures. The reason most people are unemployed is that businesses have either laid them off or shut down. Therefore, unemployment statistics are a better gauge. When you see 17.5 per cent of the people of Cambridge registered with Manpower as unemployed, it gives an indication of how many businesses are shutting down and laying people off.

I will now move on to another point. Our way of life has been guided by this government which has an insatiable appetite for revenue. There is no better illustration of its insatiability than the new provisions of the budget dealing with the use of company cars. I would like to talk about the average Canadian who has the use of a company car for the purposes of his business. The provision with respect to company cars affects thousands of people in every province.

Since it is a complicated measure people do not want to pay attention and examine its details, but it is my duty to explain as simply as possible the ramifications of this proposal. The stand-by charge, which is a technical word for the minimum charge for the personal use of a car, is being raised by 150 per cent if the car is owned by the company; that is, from 1 per cent to 2½ per cent per month. In the case of leased vehicles, the minimum charge is being increased from two-sixths to five-sixths of the leasing costs of the undepreciated value of an automobile.

Let me expand on that point. Whether the car is being used for five years or ten years, the charge is based on the undepreciated value of that car. There is no consideration of when it is bought or how long it has been used but only of the sticker price of the car at the time of purchase.

Once again, the percentages used in the case of a company owned or leased car will be taken on the basis of the undepreciated value of the automobile, notwithstanding that such a car might be three, four or ten years old.

Let me cite a further illustration of the effect on a $15,000 company car at 1981 and 1982 rates using the stand-by charge. In this case, the amount to be added to income in 1981 would be $1,800. The stand-by charge in 1982 will be $4,500 which must be added to income. For a taxpayer earning $22,000 this will mean a $689 increase in his tax. For a taxpayer earning $35,000 this will amount to a $841 increase. For the income earner in the $60,000 bracket, the increase in tax due to the stand-by charge will be $945.

Under the new provisions of this budget, the taxpayer will have to satisfy the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) that the personal revenue he received was less than that minimum charge. To do this, every time an employee uses his company car to go to church or to the grocery store, he had better itemize the mileage. I predict that there will be more cheats and frauds created by reason of this new iniquitous measure respecting the use of company automobiles than on any other aspect of the budget.

An hon. Member: Canadians do not cheat.

Mr. Speyer: Not with respect to this provision. I ask the hon. member if he would record—because the taxpayer will have to prove it to the Minister of National Revenue—every time he used his car for personal use. Can you imagine Mr. Speaker, the book work necessary and the cost?

Every member of the House knows that punishing interest rates are the most serious problem that small-business men and women have had to contend with. Due to annual inflation of more than 12 per cent, the prospect of interest rates coming down significantly are not good. Just as the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) told the truth about the budget when he called it a disaster, it was refreshing for me to hear the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) quoted as saying, "We are fearful that if there were a recovery in the U.S., we are not sure whether we would be able to join the bandwagon."

The minister is correct. Everyone took cognizance last week of the new American statistics, showing that for the first time in 17 years the United States experienced a month where the cost of living actually went down instead of up. There was deflation instead of inflation. Inflation for the first quarter of this year in the United States is running at 3 per cent, and if this trend continues, as economic indications show it will, interest rates will plummet in the United States later this summer. Yet this is not the case in Canada; our prospects are that high interest rates and high rates of inflation will continue unabated while more businesses go broke.

The Small Business Development Bond was established in the Crosbie budget of 1979. The emphasis of that bond was on development and expansion. Its purpose was to give the small business community a cushion against high interest rates and to permit expansion and development. It would accomplish that by giving small business the incentive through cash flow—a term for which the government has no understanding—to purchase machines and increase development. When a business has expansion and development, jobs are then created. But what has this government done? It has made the Small Business Development Bond nothing more than a bail-out bond. The bond is only used in cases of desperation and where it is to the advantage of the bank to bail out a customer who is about to go under. This is just one more illustration of the element of disincentive which exists in this budget.

In order to dramatize the insensitivity of this government, I ask the House to hark back to the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who said; "I cannot accept that businessmen have to rely on the post office to make a living; if they do, they had better find other ways". Could any statement by a minister be more illuminating? If this is an indication of the thinking of this minister, who is in charge of the post office, in his attitude towards small business, surely this demonstrates how impoverished and out of touch the cabinet is with the real world on the street where the small business person is.

I take you back to last summer, Mr. Speaker, when businesses were folding as a result of lack of mail service during the postal strike. Almost immediately after the strike ended, the post office was transformed into a Crown corporation and postal rates were raised to 30 cents. The minister is still in charge and responsible for the Crown corporation. In effect, the public—including the small business community—were barely recovering from this serious jolt to the solar prexus when they received a judo chop to the neck in the form of a dramatic postal increase. Even with these increases, there are very few of my constituents who would argue that the postal service has improved.

During the course of my speech I have attempted to enumerate and expand upon in some cases the causes of resentment within the small business community and the public at large.

Mr. Speaker, since I am the first speaker I assume I have longer than 20 minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has one and a half minutes remaining.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Speyer: Let me say a word about the Federal Business Development Bank. On February 18 last, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) came to Cambridge armed with briefing notes about my community. There are 75,000 people who reside in the city of Cambridge alone. It came to light that during the last nine months of last year, the Federal Business Development Bank advanced one loan in the amount of $30,000 within my community. I am not sure of the experiences of other members, but when constituents attended at my offices having been turned down by the chartered banks, the first solution I thought of since reading the government propaganda was to send them to the Federal Business Development Bank. The government has indicated that the bank of last resort was the Federal Business Development Bank. What did we find? Last summer, people in my community of 75,000 were paying interest rates of 25 per cent as opposed to the prime rate, and sometimes more. We found that the Federal Business Development Bank, which charges two points above prime, made one loan.

Mr. Speyer: It has been what seems to me an eternity, almost a year, since the minister promised the small business community that he intended to release the information garnered from the small business financing review. In an economic climate that includes record bankruptcies, skyrocketing interest rates and a recessionary decrease in business demand, where is this financing review that the minister promised? When the most serious problem facing small businesses today is the drying up of working capital, and the consequent inability of the businessman or businesswoman to meet his or her debts and obligations as they come due, this financing review is desperately needed. How long does the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt, but the hon. member will need the unanimous consent of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speyer: How long does the minister expect Canadians patiently to listen to this government's empty promises? We on this side of the House pray that this review, whenever it is released, will contain some new measure of help to alleviate the crisis which has developed in the small business community with respect to short-term cash flow problems. That is the problem to which the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) alluded during question period today.

The difficulty is that with respect to small businesses, people are not paying small businesses for 90 to 120 days and, in some cases, longer than that. These small businesses go to the banks, they cannot cover the inventory, and they are closing up. This is a serious and desperate problem. In order for small businesses to survive, they must be able to extend credit to their customers. Today, many of our small businesses have reached the extent of their credit lines through chartered banks and there is just no money available for them to finance their operations while waiting for customers to settle their accounts. If they cannot obtain some working capital financing, they must halt their operations, lay off some or all of their work force and wait to collect their accounts receivable.

I am about to conclude my remarks. I wanted to mention a few more things, but I wish to make one last point. I was very impressed by what the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the former minister of external affairs, told me in casual conversation after she had stepped down from that portfolio. She said that in her experience while we were in government, the most brilliant man that she had come across was the former external affairs minister in Great Britain, Lord Peter Carrington. He was a leader among leaders in the international community. He was a brilliant man, yet because he had improperly assessed the Argentine invasion of the Falklands, he felt he should resign as a matter of honour. I look to the Solicitor General. When he called the budget a political disaster, he was doing nothing less than telling the truth. In my opinion, he would have served as a far better member, in terms of his own credibility, if he had resigned.

I now look to the minister who is responsible for small business and consider the disastrous shape of the small business community. I like the minister. He is a man of goodwill and a fine man. But I say to him that he has been undercut, dramatically and seriously, by the Minister of Finance and the policies he has implemented. I say to the minister that if he is to retain the credibility and respect I have for him, he had better give serious consideration to tendering his resignation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we debate a motion today which we in the NDP are happy to support. We must look at what is going on in this country and realize that we are facing the kind of recession which this country has not seen since the 1930s, just before World War II. Unemployment last month affected 1,233,000 people, or 9.6 per cent of the work force according to Statistics Canada. Added to that are another 250,000 workers who have not been counted because they have given up looking for work as there simply is not any work to be found.

The figures are so large that we cannot really realize what this means. Each one of these people, when he or she worked, was producing goods, was purchasing homes, appliances or clothes, was taking holidays, paying taxes, spending money which would help employ other people. For each of them, unemployment is a disaster. Inflation is running 11.6 per cent; that is higher than it was in 1975 when the government imposed its wage and price controls. Interest on housing mortgages is running at 20 per cent, so it is effectively stopping most Canadians who need homes from being able to purchase them because they cannot afford to carry mortgages at the rates now being charged. The rates now being charged may go up six months or a year from now. The days when people could buy a house knowing that the interest rates they were charged on their mortgages would remain the same for at least five years are long gone. The bank interest rate for the best customer is 17 per cent and, for the ordinary small businessman, it is probably 20 per cent or more.

In April, housing starts were so low that it was projected we would build only 142,000 homes in the year. That figure is down by a third over what we were building until recently. Bankruptcies are up by 45 per cent over the same period last year. In April, 850 companies went bankrupt. The liabilities for outstanding debts from business bankruptcies across Canada rose by 82 per cent from April of last year, to $139 million this year. Let us keep in mind that for every company which went bankrupt, probably five to ten went into receivership or voluntarily closed up because they realized they would not be able to continue to operate successfully.

John Maynard Keynes once said that if a company had to borrow a hundred pounds from a bank, it would really have to worry if it could not pay the money back; but if it could borrow a million pounds from the bank, it became the bank's worry, because the bank could not afford to let the company fail. Those words spoken in jest are very true. We know that a company like Massey-Ferguson owes the banks of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars. The banks cannot afford to let Massey-Ferguson go bankrupt. We know that Dome Petroleum borrowed $1.25 billion last year to buy Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. We know that if these companies cannot meet their interest payments or pay off their loans on time, the banks will extend their loans because the banks cannot afford to accept that kind of loss.

For the small businessman and for the farmer, there is no such option because the banks are refusing to increase the amount of money they will lend them, as indicated by the bankruptcy figures. Banks are increasing the interest rates which these people have to pay. In fact, the banks are very effectively doubling the collateral they request if the loans are to be continued.

All the indicators show that the Canadian economy is not only in a recession but that it is also being driven into a greater recession, and that that recession will be prolonged.

• (1550)

The minister will tell us, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has frequently told us, that all industrial countries are faced with severe economic problems. It appears that Canada's economy is in a more pronounced recession than any of the other industrialized countries and that any improvement in business conditions will be delayed and lag behind the other economies.

The Chase Econometrics Association has predicted for 1982 a real growth in gross national product of 2.6 per cent in France, 2.3 per cent in West Germany, 2 per cent in Japan and 1.5 per cent in Britain. What does it predict for Canada? A decline of seven-tenths of 1 per cent.

This tends to show that our high interest rate policies, advocated and carried out on the advice of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and successive finance ministers, Liberal as well as Conservative in the short period when the Conservatives were in power, are not helping the economy to move out of the recession. Moreover, they do not seem to contribute toward solving the problem of inflation which, according to the most optimistic estimates, can only fall to about 10 per cent for the next year.

High interest rates coupled with a high rate of inflation hits small business people especially hard. The record number of bankruptcies reached in March, over 1,000, will likely increase if the necessary policy measures to reduce interest rates are not taken immediately. According to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, high interest rates are the major factor leading to the decreased profitability and increased number of bankruptcies of small-business men in this country.

In a letter which the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Glen Flaten, wrote to the Minister of Finance and which was recently circulated to all Members of Parliament, he pointed out that the depressed returns to most of the farming industry mean that the industry cannot support any significant level of indebtedness, even for current operating purposes, at present interest rates. He pointed out previously acquired indebtedness has increased in cost 75 to 100 per cent for many farmers and there is no way it can be repaid at today's prices or at any prices which farmers are likely to see in the near future.

Farmers and small manufacturing firms that regarded the small business bond policy of tax concessional lending by the banks as a source of hope now find that it was a hoax and a delusion. The policy does not affect any guarantee that the loans would actually be available and imposes overly strict eligibility criteria, which leads to a situation where loans are available only after it is too late for most business people. Moreover, in spite of the high demand for the program, Department of Finance officials say that they have not stepped up their spending estimates, set at $20 million compared with $150 million last year.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is urgently calling on the government to replace the small business bond with a policy of real substance to face the critical situation which farmers and small businessmen have to cope with. It suggests that the Farm Credit Corporation should be empowered to borrow the quantities needed immediately on a tax concessional basis so that it can lend at 10 per cent interest to the farmers, especially those in difficulty.

The availability of loans to small businesses is an important issue which must and should be dealt with through an efficient mechanism of credit rationing which cannot be left entirely to the willingness of the lender. At present the chartered banks control the allocation of investment funds. We know of the tremendous loans which the chartered banks made to the oil, gas and mining companies in the last year or year and a half. As I indicated earlier, one and a quarter billion dollars was loaned to Dome Petroleum, Inco, Brascan and others. They could get hundreds of millions of dollars to permit them to go ahead with take-overs. At the same time, in the third quarter of 1981, the mining and petroleum industries received 44 per cent of all loans made by chartered banks in the industrial sector. In the same period, business loans to industries under the Small Businesses Loans Act was around 1 per cent of all business loans made by the chartered banks.

As has already been indicated, small businesses employ 60 per cent or more of all workers in this country. The large corporations such as the mining and petroleum industry are capital-intensive and employ a relatively small number of workers. Yet because government policies have encouraged them to do so, the banks made the vast bulk of their loans to the large companies instead of the small entrepreneurs operating in the service sector, manufacturing and agriculture.

The recent changes in the tax system are imposing a heavy burden on small enterprises. As the Financial Times put it in a recent issue, the November 12 federal budget discourages expansion in the small business sector, minimizes the opportunity for equity financing from outside sources, and reduces the market value of each small business.

The problem areas of the budget pointed out by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business are as follows. Interest expense allowable as a tax deduction will be restricted to the amount of income earned from investments during the year. Any excess interest costs will be deferred or will be treated as capital losses, only one-half deductible against capital gains.

Instalment sales require the payment of taxes on the sale immediately rather than when the buyer makes payments. Prior to November 12, 1981 reserves were allowed to all taxpayers in respect of instalment sales where a portion of the proceeds would not be paid until a future date. Only one-half of the normal capital cost allowance is now available to be deducted in the first year. A special tax of 12.5 per cent is imposed on dividends paid by small corporations.

The tax system has become progressively more complex for small businesses already struggling under the avalanche of government red tape. This implies increased professional fees, which small business can ill afford. In this period of crisis, government should intervene to help small business and put a stop to ever-increasing unemployment and the growing number of bankruptcies.

I wish to make a few suggestions to the minister. We suggest the reversal of the high interest policy which is severely hurting small enterprises. We want a comprehensive reform of the tax system as well as a system of industrial incentives to ensure equitable treatment of large and small businesses alike.

We want policies to facilitate the access of small businesses to financial, managerial and technical advice. It is inappropriate to blame small businesses for mismanaging their affairs, as is sometimes done without taking into account the difficulties of access to expertise so readily available to large corporations. In this respect, strengthening of the CASE program is indispensable.

Foreign trade policy should be elaborated to encourage small businesses to sell overseas, thereby promoting exports. A large number of industrial countries, including West Germany and Japan, have programs to help industrial enterprises find markets for their products in foreign countries.

The emphasis of the Export Development Corporation, which has already favoured big business, should be changed to give equal attention to small and medium-sized businesses. Government investment should be redirected and restructured to help the problem areas in a way to create the maximum possible number of jobs.

In government procurement, since governments, federal, provincial and municipal, are between them the biggest purchasers of goods and services, they should be developed so that small enterprises can share in the business and purchases of government.

I should like to say a few words about that infamous pamphlet sent out by the Department of Finance to small-business men, telling them about all the goodies which were in the most recent budget. I am sure the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), who is going to follow me, knows that the mailing out of that brochure by the Department of Finance was greeted with unanimous hostility by all the organizations which represent small-business men. They argued, and I think their arguments were sound, that the claims made in that brochure were mostly spurious and false. That brochure was printed at government expense and was sent out from lists procured from Revenue Canada. Mr. Speaker, it may not have been illegal, it may not have been a breach of the confidentiality sections of the Income Tax Act, but if it was not illegal it came as close to being illegal as was possible and it certainly was a violation of the spirit of the act.

I want to tell the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism that when I heard the complaints about that pamphlet and listened to the complaints of the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, I thought it would be a good idea, and only fair, to send out their complaints to the same group of people who got that brochure from the government using the confidential lists of Revenue Canada. Therefore, I wrote to the minister in charge of Revenue Canada. I did not ask him to give me the list; I knew that it would be improper and illegal for him to give me the names and addresses. All I asked him to do was provide me with the same service which he had provided to the Minister of Finance.

I had a mistaken idea, Mr. Speaker—I have been here long enough and I should have known better—that all Members of Parliament are somehow equal. We have all been elected by our constituents and we should all have the same rights and privileges. So I had the idea—which, of course, proved incorrect,—that I could get from Revenue Canada the same kind of service which they provided to the Minister of Finance. But, Mr. Speaker, after a good long time, after five or six weeks, I got back a letter from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) telling me that he could not do for me what he had done for the Minister of Finance.

I was not so concerned that the 200,000 businessmen should know what I thought about the budget; I thought they should know what their own organizations thought about it. But, Mr. Speaker, as I might have expected, as I have learned to expect from Liberal governments, what is good for the government, what is proper for them, is improper for everybody else. So I understand that.

I say to the minister that, as has happened in all democratic countries, there will come a time, not too long from now, when the present Liberal government members will find themselves in the opposition. I will not be surprised if they find that they get the same treatment from whoever is then the government as we receive now. Then they will realize that real democracy means that every person and every elected representative is entitled to the same rights and privileges. When they realize that, we will begin to have a more open, a more honest and a more real democratic form of government than we have at the present time.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this matter and set the record straight on the efforts of this government to assist the small business community. I listened very carefully to the speeches of my two colleagues, the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

If I may deal briefly with what my colleague from Winnipeg North has said, particularly the part of his speech when he told me and the House that he was ready to give me some advice, I would like to give him a few answers to his suggestions. First of all, he spoke of the high interest rate policy. There is no such thing as a high interest rate policy in this country. There is a policy to fight inflation, and one of the means to fight inflation—

Mr. Orlikow: Is high interest rates.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): —in order to restore a higher level of employment, is to use this mechanism of high interest rates, which is quite similar to the mechanism utilized in the United States and in other countries.

Second, he is seeking that we use more government procurement in order to help small business. I would like to tell him that with regard to this suggestion I fully agree with him. That is why over the last year we have increased by 8 per cent the percentage of Canadian procurement towards small business. Here I quote an article from The Globe and Mail which says that small business increased its share of federal government contracts for purchases of goods and services by 8 per cent to 1.28 billion for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1981. I think this is a sound policy and I am glad that the hon. member for Winnipeg North is supporting it.

He also said that we should review the tax system in order to provide more incentives for investors. I am glad to hear that from the member for Winnipeg North because I can remember quite vividly his leader saying that we should have closed more loopholes, or so-called loopholes, in the last budget.

With regard to fostering the capabilities of the small business community towards exportation, I would like to remind the hon. member that there is such a mechanism in the system to help small businesses export more goods. There is one program particularly which is called the program for development of export marketing, the PDEM program. Approximately 1,000 small businesses have been encouraged under the terms of that program in 1981. So he did not come out with many very exciting new ideas, unfortunately, as is always the case.

With regard to the speech of my colleague for Cambridge, he made the usual plea that the last federal budget of November 12 is going to kill entrepreneurship and kill the small business community. He mentioned two items particularly, the tax on dividends and capital cost allowances. He certainly did forget—as is customary for members opposite—to mention all the special aspects in the Canadian tax system which affect and assist small businesses. One of these aspects—

—Mr. Speaker, is the special income tax rate applied to Canadian small businesses. We all know about this on both the opposition and the government side, but it is conveniently ignored, perhaps because it is a unique advantage in our Canadian economy. When the first $200,000 of a business with a total income of $1 million are taxed at 25 per cent instead of the 46 per cent rate for large corporations, it is not mentioned because, of course, it does not apply in the United States. We conveniently forget that the system is more generous in Canada than in the United States. In the U.S., a small business with an income of up to $75,000 will pay a 30 per cent income tax.

In Canada, as I said before, the first $200,000 of a small business is taxed at 25 per cent. Again, in the United States—people always say that American small businesses are better off than their Canadian counterparts—a small business with an income of up to $100,000 is taxed at a rate of 40 per cent. Again, in Canada, the first $200,000 is taxed at 25 per cent. In the United States, all businesses are taxed at a uniform rate of 46 per cent on income over and above $100,000. This is not mentioned because it is a loss of revenue for the government; in other words, the money remains part of the budgets of small businesses, and is either invested or reinvested, representing annually $1.5 billion in revenue that is not collected by the government, because we maintain and shall continue to maintain a special tax system for small businesses.

I looked into the situation in the United Kingdom, France and Australia as far as taxation of small businesses is concerned, and I found that in the U.K., the first $180,000 of a small business's income was taxed at the special rate of 40 per cent, while all other businesses were taxed at a rate of 52 per cent. Of course, all this is not mentioned, because it means that small businesses are getting a very good deal. In his last budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) not only enshrined this practice in the Canadian taxation system but even added a number of improvements. What were these improvements? The minister, before bringing down his budget on November 12, decided to increase the original amount of $175,000, taxed at the special rate of 25 per cent, to $200,000. So that more businesses could qualify for the special income tax rate for small businesses, he raised the maximum cumulative income from $750,000 to $1 million.

There has been no mention, of course, of the fact that under the Canadian tax system, businesses qualifying for the special tax rate for small businesses are entitled to a 25 per cent tax credit—a tax credit, Mr. Speaker, is a refund—on all research and development expenditures. No mention, again, of the fact that under our system, small businesses are entitled to a deferral of up to $200,000 of capital gains resulting from the transfer of small businesses from one generation to the next. Another very popular measure, especially for very small businesses with incomes of up to $50,000 from the manufacture of a product, is exemption from federal sales tax. And still under our system, a little over a year now, unincorporated small businessmen may deduct from their income the salary paid to their spouse. Of course, this does not seem very important to the members opposite, but nevertheless, these incentives to small business represent a loss in revenue of $1 billion a year for the government. Furthermore, in one of the amendments proposed on December 18 to the November 12 budget, at the request of various small business organizations, the Minister of Finance announced that interest costs on investment in small businesses would be deductible, up to $10,000. The amount is exactly the same in the United States. Probably because they forgot to study the budget, the members opposite also forgot to mention that, in the last budget, the Minister of Finance abolished the 5 per cent surtax on small Canadian businesses. They cannot talk about this because it would perhaps show the government in too good a light. They would rather use old horror stories to try and show that small Canadian businesses are on the brink of disaster and unable to face today's economic conditions.

• (1610)

I think that Canada's small entrepreneurs are aware of all those incentives. They are also aware of all the programs, subsidies and loan mechanisms of federal government programs in the system and are taking advantage of these opportunities.

As an example, the most recent report of the Conference Board points this out. In the first quarter of 1982 the Conference Board surveyed 4,000 small and medium-sized companies along with its usual panel of 240 large companies. The results appear in its "Survey of Business Attitudes and Investment Spending Intentions" which was published on April 28. Both the government and the private sector recognize how tough international economic conditions are impacting on investment decisions in Canada as in other countries. We do not deny that.

The Conference Board found that the small entrepreneurs in this country are more optimistic than their counterparts in large businesses about their future sales prospects, about increasing employment in their companies by the end of the year and about getting a proper return on their money.

What does this means, Mr. Speaker? It means that businessmen and women, especially in small businesses, are not crybabies like hon. members opposite, but people who have confidence in their country, who are ready to risk their capital and to invest in high technology or service industries to promote a harmonious economic development in Canada.

I agree with my colleagues opposite that the men and the women involved in Canadian small businesses are the backbone of economic development in Canada. There are 1.2 million businesses which qualify as Canadian small businesses. The small business sector accounts for over 40 per cent of all jobs in Canada and for 60 per cent of all new jobs created in 1981. Of course, it is important for the Canadian government to provide these businesses with maximum assistance through its taxation system and its various programs, and I believe that all the examples I gave earlier in my speech show that the taxation system is designed to help small businesses.

I did not even mention yet the various programs developed to help small businesses. I shall begin by the small businesses loans program. During the oral question period today, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) asked me: Is there a special program which provides advances for small businesses? Under the Small Businesses Loans Act, Mr. Speaker, $502 million was loaned to small Canadian businesses in 1981 with full guarantees from the government. These $502 million was loaned to 17,000 small Canadian businesses under the Small Businesses Loans Act. There is also the small business bond program. The hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) indicated that this program was introduced by the Minister of Finance of the Progressive Conservative government in his budget. That is correct and it was a good program. This is why the Minister of Finance maintained this program in 1981. In 1981 alone, $2.4 billion was loaned to about 13,000 small Canadian businesses under the Small Business Development Bond program.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, under that program banks could grant loans at about half the commercial rate, so in 1981 13,000 small businesses took advantage of the small business development bond, which meant a $2.4 billion investment in the small business sector. What was provided in the recent budget for that program? It was not cancelled, as implied by opposition members. What we have said is that until the November 12 budget, the program was available to incorporated businesses only. We have received numerous requests from the private sector asking us why the program was not made available to all businesses, whether incorporated or not. We also received requests from farmers and fishermen who wanted to be eligible. They wanted the program to be made available to them so they could make ends meet during this difficult period when they have a hard time making their payments because of unduly high interest rates. Well, the Minister of Finance had a positive response, Mr. Speaker, and we introduced the measure called the Small Business Development Bond program that applies to both incorporated and unincorporated businesses, fishermen and farmers alike. We said it would apply to them, because we wanted to help the people in greatest need, businesses, fishermen and farmers in dire straits, instead of promoting business development as was the case in 1981. This is the budget proposal. I would remind you that in 1981, $2.4 billion was loaned at 10 per cent or so to some 13,000 Canadian businesses, and, of course, this is in addition to the 17,000 Canadian businesses that could get loans with a 100 per cent government guarantee, as I said earlier.

In addition to these two programs, Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, the Enterprise Development Program. As you know, it is a program designed to help businesses develop new products, make feasibility studies before marketing new products, improve their performance, and so forth. And in 1981, $329 million was invested in small businesses under the EDP, either as grants of up to 75 per cent of the cost of developing a prototype, either as loan guarantees to help businesses refinance and restructure financially. Some 1,000 businesses benefited from the Enterprise Development Program during the fiscal year 1980-81. And then I can refer to the program for Export Market Development, the so-called PEMD program. And also in 1981, that program enabled some 1,000 Canadian small businesses to seek new markets for their products, either in the United States, Europe or Asia, because the government knows full well that without exports, it would, of course, be very difficult to maintain our production level and increase the number of jobs and small business earnings. I just said that 1,000 businesses benefited from that program during 1981, but after checking my notes, I find that the figure is 2,300 Canadian businesses.

I could also mention the Federal Development Bank referred to by the hon. member for Cambridge and the hon. member for Winnipeg North. The Federal Development Bank this year attained a $1 billion total loan volume. Someone may object to my throwing around those huge amounts, because such enormous figures are bewildering but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that $1 billion is circulating in the Canadian economy as loans from the Federal Business Development Bank. In addition, the Federal Business Development Bank's average loan is known to be $52,000. That gives you an idea of the absolutely phenomenal number of small Canadian businesses which have access to FBDB's loans. Furthermore, small entrepreneurs are aware of the services which are available to them at the Bank, for example the advisory service to small businesses to assist people who are hard pressed or concerned about the future of their business. It is a management assistance program which for a minimal fee will help businesses draw up a development plan expenditure projections and a research strategy for new markets etc. Regarding the seminars and information meetings which are sponsered by the Federal Business Development Bank throughout the country, Mr. Speaker, to help businessmen and women develop their managerial skills, I think they are seldom mentioned, because they are either taken for granted or deemed useless to the community.

I feel that the speeches of my colleagues opposite are too gloomy. Of course, they are expected to play politics and club the government over the head but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker that now and then they should be broadminded enough to see exactly what is going on. I would welcome suggestions but all I hear is: "The budget is no good, withdraw it." In short, that is the gist of what the hon. member for Cambridge has said. Essentially, the hon. member for Winnipeg North said this: We are going to put an end to high interest rates, increase exports and promote investments. Well, Mr. Speaker, everybody, including you, I and all other hon. members are for motherhood. But it would be most refreshing once in a while to hear an hon. member opposite contribute a constructive suggestion to help me, as minister responsible for small business, to define new avenues for the government, which is seeking further solutions to the existing programs. For instance, I hope next fall to introduce amendments to the Small Business Loans Act, but we must first explore several avenues; you just cannot get up one morning and decide on the spur of the moment that you are going to introduce this or that amendment. You must examine the amendment, consider its ramifications, its costs, etc. Should operating costs be included and covered by the government's guarantee on chartered bank loans? That is a possibility.

That possibility was not suggested to me be any hon. member opposite. That is the kind of new idea and approach I should like to hear. But because you preside over the proceedings of the House, Mr. Speaker, surely you are bound to hear a great many more speeches than I am, and you do realize that unavoidably, whenever there is an allotted day, our hon. friends take up their time trying to find as many faults with the government, hoping that by spreading their loads of half-truths and quoting all sorts of analyses which are out of touch with reality as a whole, they may slowly convince Canadian voters to fall for their tall stories. Unfortunately, today was not yet to be the day when we would be exposed to refreshing and up-dated ideas from hon. members opposite. There is nothing new in their position: Get rid of the budget, they say, and everything will be fine and dandy! I suggest that this is a somewhat simplistic approach to an essentially difficult economic situation.

Mr. Speaker, I have referred to all the tax measures we have introduced to help small businesses. I have mentioned some of the programs provided under the Federal Business Development Bank Act, the Small Business Loans Act, and the Small Business Development Bonds act. I have failed to mention the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which, only last year, subsidized small businesses in Canada to the tune of $280 million. But the fact is, there are so many good programs that there is not enough time to deal with them all. Yet, we know that through briefings and by way of the offices of the Federal Business Development Bank the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in all parts of Canada, Canadian men and women involved in business activities have access to these programs.

Further to the administrative reorganization announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on January 11, when the two main economically oriented departments were merged, we want to go one step further, Mr. Speaker, and use all the programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, all the programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and their regional offices, and even in due course, in a second stage, use the 103 offices of the Federal Business Development Bank across the country, to bring the services of the government of Canada to the very doorstep of the businessmen and businesswomen, so that they need not come from various parts of the country to the large cities or Ottawa, but that they may find in their own regions what services the Canadian government offers them. That is the orientation, Mr. Speaker, we are giving the administrative restructuring announced last January. And it is with that purpose in mind that we want our programs to have a regional character so that everyone might have equal access to them.

All these programs, new initiatives, and new taxation measures of the Canadian government not only provide strong support for Canadian small businesses, but also reflect a number of basic principles which guide the decisions made by the government to promote continuous development of the private sector. The first of these basic principles is, of course, a free enterprise system which gives Canadian small businesses equal opportunities to compete on the market. The second principle is a firm commitment by the Canadian government to promote the growth and the development of small and medium-size businesses, and I have already mentioned the programs which now aim at meeting this objective. The third principle is to create a dynamic economic environment in which small and medium-size businesses can start, survive and grow. The fourth principle is to make a fair assessment of the problems faced by small and medium-size businesses and to develop effective policies to assist them. This is why we are constantly trying to adjust our programs to existing conditions. Finally, we want to ensure equitable chances for small and medium-size businesses as far as supply opportunities and availability of government information, programs and services are concerned. As I have already explained, we have not only increased to 40 per cent the purchases of the Canadian government, which represents $1.28 billion a year, but we have also attempted to provide equal opportunities for all businesses by making the Canadian government services available to entrepreneurs and businessmen and women. Finally, we want to create a spirit of co-operation between all economic agents to ensure the development of small and medium-size businesses. In this respect of course members opposite try to suggest that there is no consultation between the business community and the government.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes I wish that hon. members opposite would participate in our consultations throughout the country. I was myself in Saint-Georges-de-Beauce last evening and I met with 200 businessmen and women to discuss the economic situation as well as existing government programs and the way to improve them. I must say that what I hear from Canadian men and women in business are not complaints such as those which I hear today but rather messages of optimism, messages which say: Try to support us with your programs, and we, the businessmen and women of Canada, shall do the rest because we believe in this country and in the economy of Canada. I wish hon. members opposite would believe the same things, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to mention a couple of things by way of introduction. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) spent a great deal of time elaborating on the position of the opposition as being opposed for the sake of objecting, for being crybabies, for not being optimistic and for not offering tangible programs for the future, instead of—and I assume this is what he means—supporting the disastrous programs of the present government.

I remind the House and the minister that on April 27, as reported in the Montreal Gazette, he said:

> We're fearful that if there were a recovery in the U.S. we're not sure we would be able to join the bandwagon.

That is the statement of the minister, the optimistic minister who said that even if there is a recovery in the United States we in Canada would not be able to benefit. The minister also noted that while the inflation rate in the United States had dropped to 6.8 per cent, it remains at 11.6 per cent in Canada. The minister goes on in his optimistic way by saying:

> Consumer prices in Canada rose at an annual rate of 13.6 per cent in March while they dropped 3.3 per cent in the U.S.

The minister still in his optimistic way went on:

> —the recession is severely hurting all levels of the economy from the retail sectors to manufacturing and that consumer and foreign investor confidence is decreasing.

I see the minister is leaving the House at this time. The minister went on to say:

> —studies show only about 37 per cent of Quebec businesses are aware of federal government programs—

Here is a government that causes us to be concerned that we might be critical when here in Canada we are experiencing the fact that small businesses account for 23 per cent of provincial sales. There were 8,055 corporate bankruptcies in Canada in 1981. Small business sales were $112 billion—obviously a crucial factor in economic growth—up 21 per cent from 1980 and up 43 per cent from 1979. And the minister says that we are critical, that we are not optimistic.

I remind the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism that the industrial production change is down from 7.8 per cent from one year ago; that urban housing starts are down 17.1 per cent from a year ago; new orders for durable goods are down 10.3 per cent from a year ago; and the unemployment rate is standing at 9.6 per cent, which is a post-war record. The Consumer Price Index—in other words, inflation—is up 11.6 per cent from a year ago; steel output is down 16.2 per cent.

What is there to be optimistic about in Canada? When will this government get through its head that there is a national emergency? Let me put on the record for the government some statements made by the Canadian organization of small business and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I will use just a few of them; they came in the wake of the disastrous government budget, and I cite six of them:

> 1. Restrict the cash flow for businesses facing excruciating pressures financing capital expenditures at high interest rates.
> 2. Increase the tax burden on investors in small corporations.
> 3. Discriminate unfairly against professionals who are unable to incorporate.
> 4. Restrict the ability of entrepreneurs to provide for their own retirement.
> 5. Increase massively professional fees for small businesses that must cope with more than 165 technical tax amendments.
> 6. Threaten estate planning for small businesses.

On and on it goes, yet the minister expects us to be optimistic here in Canada. Behind those stark, cold four-digit figures on bankruptcies and business failures you will find not only boarded up store fronts, locked doors of businesses and disconnected telephones, Mr. Speaker, but ruined businesses. You will find men who have had their lives ruined and women who have been driven out of business. You will also find broken personal dreams of thousands of families, mothers, fathers and children whose lives may now be irreparably damaged through no fault of their own.

One of our largest corporations in the city of Peterborough wrote a letter to me and I was asked to bring it to the attention of the government. This letter was written by the president of this corporation and says:

> What in fact this new budget does is not to penalize the rich, but rather eliminates the middle-class business or professional who risks, through borrowed funds, money to be invested in speculative or growth ventures that will likely not pay dividends for some years. In fact, the budget proposal on interest deductibility benefits the rich. Wealthy individuals, out of their cash reserves, write a cheque—people like myself must borrow the money to make the same type of investment.
> We are not at the stage either through age or inherited wealth to use capital already accumulated for investment purposes.

● (1640)

> The net result of this budget, from my point of view, is very clear. I will dispose of all investments in which the interest is non-deductible and will further ignore any equity positions and concentrate on cash savings as the years go on.

He concluded by saying:

> I am concerned that there is a philosophy behind this budget change that is extremely concerning. By eliminating younger investors who contribute to Canada's growth, the government will be in a much more advantageous position to take over more segments of the private sector, since, in effect, they have removed any entrepreneurial spirit from the younger business and professional class. If that is their intention, then they should have fully stated that in their philosophy behind interest deductibility.

So as not to be accused of only quoting the comments of the president of a major corporation in Canada, I will quote a couple of paragraphs from a letter by Mr. Jack McGee, a Chevrolet-Oldsmobile-Cadillac dealer in Peterborough, which was directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). He wrote:

> Not once in my nearly 34 years of employment have I ever drawn unemployment insurance, not once have I ever failed to pay my income tax on time, not once have I ever bounced a cheque or missed a payment to cover private or government obligations. I am not, nor was not unique; millions of Canadians perform in exactly the same manner!

He went on to write:

> It wasn't enough that they got their share every month and every year without any investment. Now they wanted a share of my profit of after tax dollars that I owned and they still wanted to tax me on my retirement money that we were going to use to live on for the rest of our lives.

He continued:

> We don't need "empire builders" in government. Where we need them is in the private sector where jobs should be created. This logically creates more of those income taxes that you need so badly.

He concluded:

> I will close with this plea which hopefully you will read and consider before you make your way back to Ottawa.
> I ask the Government of Canada to be responsible to its citizens. I ask the Government of Canada to be aware of the importance of the free enterprise system to the continuance of Canada's growth. I ask the Government of Canada to be mindful of the system of government we enjoy and expect—a democracy led by representatives elected by their peers to carry out the wishes of the majority of their constituents.

I sent copies of that letter to every Liberal Member of Parliament.

Turning to a small manufacturer in Peterborough, Peterboro Culvert—of course; the budget is disastrous to every sector of our economy—I should like to quote from a letter signed by Mr. J. Wallace Finnie, president of the firm:

> We are presently endeavouring to diversify our line and are tooling up to make grain bins for the agricultural market, but with decline in cash reserves it is difficult to finance this type of venture. Government assistance in this area is so uncertain, as to be considered detrimental.
> I present this situation to you in order that you, as our representative, may make the government aware of the deterioration that has taken place particularly in the past four or five months, among small business concerns such as ours. I feel that the government has mishandled, misunderstood and is apathetic in its handling of the affairs of the Canadian people.

I received a telephone call today from the vice-president of Silverwood Industries Limited. His office is in Toronto but its head office is in London, Ontario. It was announced today in a press release that because business conditions were not viable and government programs failed to make small business ventures attractive, it was closing its milk producing plant in Peterborough and laying off the staff involved. Silverwood Dairies, a company which does $500 million worth of business per year in Canada, cannot make viable a business in a community the size of Peterborough because the government has failed to make it attractive. As a result there was a net loss of $3.5 million on that amount of volume.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism said that we are crybabies and that we are complaining unnecessarily. To use his words, he said: "Small businesses are aware of all the benefits they derive from our fantastic budget." This is a lot of nonsense! People are not prepared today to invest as the minister would have us believe. This is the principal reason $13.5 billion left the country for more favourable climates. For example, in the oil and gas industry, money has flowed south. Why are they investing in Montana and Texas, but not in Alberta which would provide spin-off effects and jobs in Ontario? They are investing in the United States because they receive a return on their investment. They do not fear government expropriation, government take-over and a national policy which puts more and more control in the hands of government and less and less control in the hands of the business community.

We must remember it is cold comfort for thousands of families—wives, husbands and children—that the government is still dithering around six months after its budget in massive, collective confusion over what on earth it can do to retrieve something from a budget which has been roundly and soundly condemned in virtually every sector and quarter of the Canadian economy. The Minister of Finance, who looks more dangerously unnerved each passing day, cries that Canada's hands are tied, that she is prey to the winds of inflation and tight money blowing over the border and that the flexibility of government is limited by circumstances at large in the western industrialized world. This is nothing but feeble excuse-making and deception.

There is much the Government of Canada could do to eliminate hardships presently experienced by a very large segment of Canadians. The House should ponder very carefully the key elements which rightly preoccupy us today—unemployment at 1.5 million, inflation at 11.6 per cent, interest rates over 17 per cent and real wages declining for the fifth year in a row. To alleviate its dismal performance record, a performance record which is much worse than that of the United States, this government constantly maintains that our fortunes rise and fall. The only departure from the government position that our fortunes rise and fall predicated upon the United States is the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, who denies the statement. As I said earlier, he indicated that even if the United States recovers, he doubts whether we in Canada shall.

Of course, the government will try to detach itself from responsibility for the disastrous state of the Canadian economy today and from the effect it is having on small business. There are clear measures which the government could take to alleviate at least some of the hardships—and I do not mean that it should send key ministers to Houston and Paris respectively. It could scrap the National Energy Program. It could withdraw the budget. It could call an election if it really wanted to get things turned around in a hurry.

A leading businessman in Peterborough wrote to me in the wake of the budget of last November and said, with what I can only call remarkable clarity, that if something was not done soon, the country would be in a depression. Also I am sad to report that the vice-president of Silverwood Dairies in Canada said that the government should be made aware this afternoon in this debate that "the nation is not in a recession, it is in a depression".

It is clear, as it should be clear to anyone who has contemplated the major economic statistics which I cited before, that the government's plan to beat inflation through a high interest rate policy and to sustain it with consequent record unemployment is simply not working. What will it take for this government to realize that its present economic policies are not working? Obviously, this punitive budget must go. A budget which encourages entrepreneurial expansion, the creation of a savings and investment capital pool and, yes, even contemplates tax reduction, is what is needed.

A responsible Canadian government would provide tax incentives to invest or expand. A responsible Canadian government would take steps to increase the cash flow to small business through a truly revamped tax policy review. A responsible Canadian government would not insist on an addle-brained Canadian content requirement in the industrial energy sector as a condition for business activity. This is all very well on the airwaves, but the fact is that it is costing Canadians jobs everywhere and not just in Fort McMurray.

A responsible Canadian government would not force businesses to retool for international metric systems at tremendous cost at a time when small businessmen can barely meet their payroll, much less spend thousands of dollars for new scales, new tool-sets and new equipment of one kind or another—especially when the equipment they have now is good for another ten, 20 or 30 years.

To those who say that we have to go metric in order to increase and protect our export trade, I say "rubbish". The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) will confirm, for example, a multimillion dollar deal signed last week between Vellan Incorporated of Montreal and a Hungarian nuclear plant to supply a Hungarian-built, Russian-designed nuclear power plant with 10-inch valves. This is only one of many export contracts closed in the past year which supply imperial or Canadian parts and services.

This $4 billion cost to the Canadian economy of going metric is another program for which this government should be held accountable. At last, a growing number of people are demanding the answers.

The principal question being asked is, "Why is the Canadian government trying to ruin me? Why is it making me a bankruptcy statistic in my own country?" The answer is that this government is bankrupt itself. It is bankrupt of ideas, bankrupt of principles, bankrupt of responsibility and, as we shall see in the next election, bankrupt of votes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Public Works—(a) Request that competing firms be reimbursed for expenses. (b) Request for independent investigation; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Bankruptcies—(a) Position of purchasers of insurance from companies placed in receivership. (b) Request that purchasers be treated as preferred creditors; the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—The Judiciary—(a) Statements on constitution made by British Columbia Supreme Court Justice. (b) Judicial Council inquiry.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Speyer:

That this House, alarmed by the fact that over 1,500,000 Canadians are unemployed and aware that small businesses generate more than 60 per cent of all new jobs created in Canada, condemns this government for its ruinous economic policies, particularly those contained in the budget, which have effectively destroyed the spirit of entrepreneurship in the small business community, have contributed substantially to the loss of job-creating opportunities and which have drastically diminished investment in Canada.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montréal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in this debate on the motion presented by the opposition, in which three points are raised. The motion accuses us of destroying the spirit of entrepreneurship in the small business community, of contributing to the loss of job-creating opportunities and also states there has been a drastic reduction in investment in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I intend to respond to the three main allegations made in the opposition motion.

To begin with, on the subject of destroying the spirit of entrepreneurship, I believe my hon. colleagues have often mentioned the issue of Canada's high interest rates. I think it is too easy to work on people's emotions, and certainly no one on this side of the House will deny that interest rates are much higher than we would like them to be. However, it would be very simplistic to say that tomorrow morning we are going to reduce interest rates unilaterally to around 10 per cent, without causing undue disruption of the Canadian economy. In fact, Mr. Speaker, when one of the OECD countries, namely France, decided to maintain interest rates at a level generally acceptable to the French people, this artificial measure resulted in a very substantial drop in the value of the French franc, to the point that the same government decided to bring interest rates up with lightning speed to their present level of 20 per cent. May I remind my hon. colleagues that the present prime rate in Canada is set at approximately 15.39, and that there is continued progress from week to week. However, there is no magic formula, although our hon. colleagues seem to think there is, to make interest rates drop overnight to around 10 per cent, that is, to a level generally acceptable in our economic system, although not to the prevailing levels of a few years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the members of this House have a duty to take the present situation seriously. However, there is a difference between what the government on this side of the House is doing and making emotionally charged speeches or causing panic among investors. In any case, last week, I met a group of some twenty-five businessmen from my riding, with an annual turnover varying from $500,000 to $25 million. They graciously agreed to spend more than three hours of their time at a round-table discussion with the member for Montréal-Mercier to analyse the economic situation. And as the minister said earlier, I say that these people are far more reasonable, take a far more serious attitude to the issue, and are willing to co-operate in applying the corrective measures our economy needs. They realize that our economy does not stand alone and that the problems cannot all be blamed on the Canadian government. In fact, they believe that it is of vital importance to maintain the federal government's present policy and to maintain a monetary policy that will prevent the Canadian dollar from sliding downwards, which would be the case if tomorrow morning the reins on our monetary policy were loosened, and also, of course, if interest rates were allowed to drop which again would result in a drop in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Speaker, these businessmen do not believe in magic cure-alls or panaceas. They believe in difficult solutions that may be painful for some businesses, but they do not feel it is up to the government to intervene in all areas and at all times, to cure society of a disease which I do not think is caused by the government alone, but by every member of that society. The businessmen in question acknowledged that they were partly responsible for the problem and that all citizens, all consumers were partly responsible, and that, in fact, our entire society must share the responsibility. We have known prosperous and happy times, and these may well come back again, if the right measures are taken to deal with the present situation. Mr. Speaker, these businessmen are aware of the fact that there is not much room to manoeuvre, and they are willing to make every effort to get through the present situation. They did not ask me to double or reduce or be very generous and change the Small Business Development Bond program, in the belief that this would solve all our economic problems overnight. I do not think they believe in band-aid solutions. They feel that the present programs are flexible enough to enable small- and medium-size businesses to cope with these difficult times, and some went so far as to say that the present situation would weed out the weaker elements. Mr. Speaker, I trust that we shall all have learned a valuable lesson in this difficult period, and that the measures to be taken by our government, especially those announced in the budget, will enable us to overcome our problems in the not too distant future.

In their motion, my hon. colleagues refer to the loss of job-creating opportunities. Still within the context I mentioned earlier, namely, that the government should not take up the entire slack through unilateral measures, the fact remains that the business sector realizes that unemployment is particularly acute in two sectors, namely in the construction and forestry industries, and feels that the measures taken by this government are likely to be of some help. I am thinking of the Canada Rental Supply plan, a measure included in the budget and passed by the House which provides for the creation of some 60,000 direct and indirect jobs and has increased by some 30,000 units the supply of rental accommodation in Canada. Another program announced by the department last week and which is particularly interesting for constituencies like mine where a fair number of houses are rather old, is the Canada home renovation program. This program will help create some 10,000 jobs. In view of its flexibility, I urge my colleagues opposite to let their constituents know about it, because ultimately that measure could be beneficial to all Canadians. It is of course, people with an average salary of $30,000 per year who will be able to take full advantage of this renovation program.

However, from a description of this program, it is surprising to find how flexible it is. Among the work that can be carried out under the program, let us mention the construction of a greenhouse or such facilities; the landscaping of a permanent house; the construction or repair of fences; the construction or repair of a side entrance; the installation of various domestic appliances. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the renovation program will enable many households to hire construction workers and take advantage of job-creation measures recently taken by this government. Another very popular program, Mr. Speaker, which now applies to houses built up to 1970, is the Canadian Home Insulation Program. This program is designed to help people involved in the building industry, people who are having problems at the present time because of the slowdown in the residential construction industry. These people will be able to benefit from an additional $280 million to complete home insulation. I believe that this program is doubly beneficial as it will help reduce energy costs on the one hand and stimulate an industry in distress on the other hand.

Mr. Speaker, when we speak about industries that are in distress, we realize that one of the most tragic aspects of the unemployment problem—and I have here the figures made public by Statistics Canada for the month of March—is of course the fact that one specific group is hit harder than the others, namely young people aged between 15 and 24, who have an unemployment rate of about 20 per cent. It is tragic to see that our young people joining the labour market cannot find any employment to test their talents, their abilities and their imagination. However, I would like to point out that our government has allocated quite recently $280 million for training and job-creation programs aimed at our young people. This is not enough to create jobs for all the young unemployed, but the private sector has certainly a significant role to play in this regard. It is obviously the private sector which should do the most.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this summer the employers will have to realize that they have to take an active part in the employment programs for young people and give a helping hand to those who will be going back to school in September. In this regard, we are providing employment offices for young Canadians which are now open to young people throughout Canada, and I hope that employers in the private sector will make use of the services offered by these offices so that our young people may work in very flexible conditions and not necessarily as permanent employees. I believe that many jobs can be done at very competitive prices and that our young people will be all too happy to contribute their talents in doing light repair work and various odd jobs that come up during the summertime.

With respect to the decrease in investments in Canada, Mr. Speaker—despite the fact my hon. colleagues do not seem to have much confidence in these data they have not as yet challenged them—I believe I can still use the budget paper entitled "The Current Economic Situation and Prospects for the Canadian Economy for the Short and Medium Term". When discussing investments I feel one must use some data, and we have those provided by OECD. I am sure we can rely on statistics produced by an organization of such outstanding prestige. We see that from 1974 to 1979, investments grew faster in Canada than in any other of the OECD countries, Canada being the only country to devote an increased share of output to investment. Thus, in recent years, Canada has shown a relatively better investment performance that any other country.

That, I feel, must be recognized and noted. In discussing investments, a distinction must be made between residential and non-residential investments, the latter being mostly that of the manufacturing or natural resources sectors. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, though hon. members opposite were quite cynical last week when the Alsands project was discussed, they should know that when it comes to viability, to investment yields, the projects involved should bear within themselves the possibility of a reasonable return. In that case, public money was involved, tax money collected from the Canadian taxpayers, and I think that the Canadian government has shown its wisdom in these rather unfavourable conditions. On the other hand, hon. members opposite did not dwell yesterday on the $600 million which the Canadian government is going to invest with Esso Resources for exploration in the Beaufort Sea and especially the implementation of our national energy policy. There is an area where investments will pay off, where the combination of private enterprise and government undertaking holds the promise of a very rewarding future, and where one of the first steps in the implementation of the Canadian energy policy can be the reconciliation of the economic interest of Canadians and the know-how of foreign companies.

My colleague who reported an increase in investment money in the United States claimed that all the investment money in Canada was leaving this country for the United States. I should like to remind him that the unemployment picture in the United States is not much brighter than it is in Canada, and that the investment money, which is not coming into Canada is certainly not flowing into the United States. There is now a decrease in investment money in all OECD countries, as amply demonstrated by statistical data. I hope that this situation is only temporary and that the finance ministers currently taking part in OECD meetings will find ways to help our Western economies recover without disastrous repercussions on society as a whole.

My colleague, the hon. member responsible for small businesses, felt that we had better come up with solutions instead of lamenting over our predicament. He was right. One of the solutions which I personally favour is better co-operation among employers, employees and governments, including provincial governments, in the future economic direction of Canada. As a matter of fact, those who know something about the techniques used in Germany to plan the long-term economic future of that country are aware that the social partners sit down and discuss their economic future. I think it is high time our federal and provincial governments sat down and discussed our future with Canadian employers and employees. Recently the Minister of Finance visited many parts of Canada to meet various groups, but I think there is only one way to go about this, and it is to sit down together at the same table and talk. It is my view that a country like Canada cannot afford to waste its energies in virtually creating conflicts that should not exist with respect to this country's economic future.

Our country is mature enough for Canadian men and women to be more readily involved in the development of their economy and in the management of their businesses by ensuring that at the boardroom level employers and employees sit side by side in an effort to plan the economic future of their undertakings, to discuss productivity and quality of life at work. I believe that whatever examples we find in European countries could be very usefully followed here. Also, Mr. Speaker, I think that another avenue for concertation would be the opportunity for the employers to share their profits with the employees, when, of course, there are profits to be shared, by ensuring over-all involvement not only in management but also in equity, and in the small business sector, such a system is long overdue. Unfortunately, on account of the current recession and because of financial difficulties, management is now inviting employees to sit in their boardrooms. Mr. Speaker, I will point out that the very same employees should also be sitting at the table in times of prosperity, to plan the future of businesses. In this way we could perhaps prevent unnecessary plant shutdowns and might rapidly come up with solutions and arrive at better planning and productivity schemes. I would therefore invite my colleagues to reflect on these proposals. I share the view that small businesses in Canada may still look forward to a healthy future. We have specific programs for assisting them. We have a fiscal structure that is favourable to them, and I believe that by consultation and united efforts, the government, small businesses and labour will find ways to improve the economic future of Canadian men and women.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the issue we are debating today is one of the most important to be before this House of Commons for some time. Listening to previous speakers, I can understand their naivete as well as the lack of understanding of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette). However, I cannot accept the ignorance, incompetence and arrogance of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe). His is the responsibility. I see him smirking at a time when we are trying to bring to the attention of this government the problems that small businesses are experiencing. If he would speak to some of my businessmen, the smirk would be on the other side of his face.

There are people who have spent a lifetime and have put all their earnings together only to see them go down the tube because of the policies or lack of policies of the federal government. People are brokenhearted as well as bankrupt. The place where they put their faith no longer exists.

The other day I spoke to someone working for a company which had a $10 million turnover last year and employed 100 people at any given time. Thursday night he received a call telling him to turn in his keys on Friday morning because the firm was going into bankruptcy. Yet we have the minister smirking. Canadians deserve better than that.

My colleague from Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) should be congratulated for bringing this motion before the House of Commons. As he said, from the small service companies in the petroleum industry in western Canada to the manufacturers of auto parts in Ontario to the small vessel construction in Atlantic Canada companies are in trouble.

The service companies in the petroleum industry have possibly been the hardest hit. This part of the industry was expanding more rapidly than any other segment. We tried to tell members opposite what they were doing with their National Energy Program, but they would not listen. We tried to tell them it would eventually be felt in Ontario when the service industries would no longer be able to purchase trucks and automobiles, but they would not listen.

Last January I had the privilege of travelling through southern Ontario with the task force. I came face to face with those having to deal with bankruptcies and receiverships, yet we have a minister who smirks. This is not acceptable to the people out there trying to make their way.

We must realize that the small business community provides more jobs than any other segment of our economy. At this time we have a million and a half unemployed. People are blaming the high interest rates for this. There are three components which are creating these high interest rates; it is not just the Governor of the Bank of Canada trying to protect the Canadian dollar with high interest rates. The government has a responsibility. It has a responsibility to establish a climate in which the small business community can survive.

I agree with the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier that government should not provide subsidies to small business. It does not have to. Small business does not require that. What it requires is a climate in which it can survive. We must get away from this massive tax grab which this government embarked upon with its National Energy Program and over-all taxation policy. That is what is killing the small business community. It cannot survive. It cannot afford the expenditures of this government.

The fiscal policy of the federal government, plus the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada and the growth in our gross national product, form the basic components of our economy. Those three segments are responsible for the protection of the Canadian dollar. Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada is trying to do all three with high interest rates. This has created the nemesis for the small business community, whether it be farming or whatever.

Based on the Revenue Canada definition of "small business", which is sales of $10,000 to $2 million, over 700,000 Canadians earn all or a yearly significant part of their income through their entrepreneurial skills as small business people. An additional 480,000 earn part-time income through businesses with sales of less than $10,000. They are the linchpin of the Canadian economy.

Small business accounts for about two thirds of our job creation. It is highly labour-intensive and has a higher ratio of jobs from investment dollars than any other segment of our economy. Small business provides more business opportunities for less skilled workers. Ninety per cent of the businesses in Canada employ less than 200 people. Small businesses account for 57 per cent of all sales in the service industry and 52 per cent of all sales in the construction industry.

As I said earlier, we in Alberta are suffering more today than in the last 50 years. A lot of our people were working in the oil service industry. Now, with the National Energy Program, with the outflow of the billions of dollars to the United States because the industry has moved south and the outflow of petroleum dollars as a result of our purchases offshore, we leave the Governor of the Bank of Canada trying to protect that amount of money, trying to protect the value of the Canadian dollar, with high interest rates and with the government reneging on its total responsibility.

We have tried to explain to the members opposite what they have been doing wrong, but they have not been listening and they will not listen, and there is as yet no sign that they are changing their attitude.

There are over 1.2 million small businesses in Canada. There are a lot of small businesses which are not trying to be small businesses. They are small because of the inhibiting influence of federal government policies. They are kept small because of the stifling and suffocating impact of the federal government's dismal performance in the areas of economic stimulation and incentives.

Our record in research and development is one of the most pitiful in all of the industrialized world. The minister said earlier that he wished we would tell him and his government how to go about correcting the problems. Now he is not even in the House to listen. When this government opposite entered office in 1968, we were allocating about 1.5 per cent of our GNP to research and development. Now the figure is down to below 1 per cent and has been at that level for about ten years.

In the early 1970s the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy, the Lamontagne committee, pointed out the benefits of an enlightened science policy with the accent or emphasis on boosting spending on research and development to 2.4 per cent of GNP. Instead of doing that, what does the government opposite do? They chased the expertise and the technical ability that we have in our oil industry out of the country. You can make faces if you like, my hon. friend, but that is exactly what happened, and until you start to realize that this is what has taken place we are not going to correct the problem.

The United States are very clever. They do not take our labourers down there to work in their oil industries but they certainly are willing to take our expertise. If you talk to some of the people who are in the business, they still tell you that it takes two or three years to train these people. Of course, those are the people who have gone to the United States and to other parts of the world. This government will not heed and instead we as a country, as a people and as Canadians lumber along as exporters of our raw resources. We continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Dr. Larkin Kerwin, president of the National Research Council, said that we may be able to survive as a nation of woodcutters but if we do we will then have to be content to receive woodcutters' wages. Dr. Kerwin, in a recent speech, lamented that while Japan does so much with so little, Canada does so little with so much. Dr. Kerwin has told the government that an increase of just half a per cent in research and development spending as a percentage of GNP would create 400,000 new jobs. His research agency demonstrated in a pilot project that research and development seed money is returned to the investor manyfold. The pilot project I am referring to involved the investment of $93 million in about 500 projects with about 200 Canadian companies. NRC's monitoring of the results indicated that that small infusion of research and development capital resulted in new product sales of $1.8 billion. Every million dollars invested in research and development meant 1,500 man-years of jobs. The multiplier effect varied from project to project, but it went as high as 100 to one. The average return was $20 for every research and development dollar invested.

As a nation we have been plodding along, selling off our resources in raw form and then buying them back as finished imports. Let no one on the opposite side tell me that there is not a market there, because our deficit in manufactured products in any one given year would average out at about $20 billion.

My colleague from Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) told the House some time ago that we are selling coal, steel, aluminum and other non-renewable resources for an average of 50 cents a pound and we are buying them back at over $3 a pound in the form of Datsuns and Toyotas.

This government has demonstrated in the past that it is not interested in developing a made-in-Canada research industry. Instead, it has been content to import technology at a great cost in jobs and growth in Canada. For a while, the door to the minister's office in the science and technology ministry was a revolving door. The joke in the department used to be: "If the minister calls, get his name." Science and technology was given, and still has, a very low priority by this government, even though it may be the key to our economic recovery and survival.

I took the time and trouble to do a little mathematics, a little arithmetic, on just what research and development could mean to this country. The National Research Council estimates that each million dollars invested in research and development requires 1,500 man-years of work—or 1,500 jobs are created for one year.

In 1981 our GNP was slightly more than $328 billion—and we spent about 0.9 per cent on research and development. If we had spent 1.5 per cent, we would have created at least 295,000 new jobs and probably closer to the 400,000 that Dr. Larkin Kerwin projected. If we had spent 2 per cent, we would have created more than a half a million jobs—546,000 in ballpark figures; and if we had spent 2.5 per cent, the recommendation of the Lamontagne committee, we would have created more than 786,000 new jobs. We tell the minister this but he is not even in the House to hear. And these figures, which come not only from the Conservative side of the House, are really on the conservative side.

Dr. Kerwin is on the record as projecting that with this kind of investment in research and development we could eliminate unemployment. How true, Mr. Speaker. We have the people, we have an intelligent people, we have a people willing to work, we have one and a half million unemployed, and we have the raw resources to put it all together. Yet we do not have a government to provide the climate to bring this about. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is a graduate of the London School of Economics, an economist. Surely if he learned anything in his school years he could have put those three things together. You do not have to be a mathematical genius to figure out what the bottom line is, when just $93 million in seed money generates $1.8 billion in new economic activity. This is what we need, Mr. Speaker. That is an incredible return on investment.

Would an increase to 1.5 per cent—roughly an increase of $1.9 billion more—generate about 20 times as much or about $38 billion in new product sales? Would an increase to 2 per cent—roughly a $3.6 billion increase—then generate 39 times as much or about $70 billion in new opportunities? Would an increase to 2.5 per cent—roughly a $5.2 billion increase in research and development investment—then generate 56 times as much new economic activity or more than $100 billion in economic activity? These are the facts. They cannot be disputed.

Why, then, the foot-dragging on the part of the government? That is why I used the word I did, which is a strong word, Mr. Speaker, when I started to speak, when I spoke of the ignorance of the minister. Why does he and the government not heed the advice of the National Research Council? Why does it not pay attention to the results achieved by the National Research Council's experiment in funding research and development projects, in view of the staggering results it has shown that can be achieved?

If we invested 1.5 per cent of GNP in R and D, that would be approximately $4.9 billion; 2 per cent would be approximately $6.6 billion in total spending on research and development and 2.5 per cent would be approximately $8.2 billion.

If every dollar invested returned $20 on the average, the gross return on total R and D investment at 2.5 per cent would top $160 billion. That is about half of our present gross national product.

One of the most important categories of small business in Canada, along with the petroleum industry, is farming. It is hardest hit in the cost-price squeeze. It is hardest hit by escalations in the cost of energy and farm materials, of which energy is a major component cost. Farmers are big users of energy and must pass on these price increases as a cost of production. As a result, the price increases show up finally at the check-out counter in the supermarket.

Net farm income is expected to be down by about 15 per cent in 1982. This means that the figures that have already been given to us by the hon. member for Cambridge and by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) regarding bankruptcies will show an increase this year. High interest rates are squeezing the farmer in Canada. High interest rates are aggravating the cost-price squeeze and the cash flow squeeze.

I have received your sign, Mr. Speaker, so I guess my time has expired. I could go on because this is a serious matter. I hope that hon. members opposite will listen to those of us who are trying to explain the seriousness of the situation to them as it relates to the small business community, and I hope that they will understand.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before rising to speak I counted the number of members in the House and I am therefore tempted to call a quorum. Given the difficulties that an interjection of that sort can create, however, I decided to forgo this pleasure that afternoon.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I agree wholeheartedly with the concluding comments of the previous speaker. The situation in Canada is indeed serious. I believe that there is no one in the House or in the country who would disagree that our economy is experiencing very great difficulty. If there is anyone who would argue otherwise, it must be someone who does not have the eyes to perceive reality, the brain to understand it or the heart to respond to it.

In this debate it is important for us to realize that these difficulties are not peculiar to Canada. These difficulties, if not worldwide, are at least shared by most of the industrialized countries of the world. For we are living in a period of readjustment, one of those swing eras of the type we studied in the classroom of our youth; and we know that, in such periods, governments and peoples are forced to make choices. These will not be easy choices; they will be very hard ones. In fact, in almost all the newspapers and periodicals and all the information provided by the prognosticators on radio and television, the word that is most often used to describe the choice is "tough".

The federal and the provincial governments, then, will have to make some very tough choices in the next few years. I regret to say that, so far in the national debate on the economy by politicians, special interest and lobby groups, we have not been able to get past the rhetorical stage. That is unfortunate because rhetoric does not solve the problem; it does not point out the tough choices that have to be made; it does not indicate the degree to which we have to make sacrifices today in order to reap the rewards of the future.

There is, as well, an unfortunate preoccupation with the past in this debate. Every time a member of the opposition speaks he talks about the past—the past performance of the government or the past performance of the economy. I would not deny the right to that perspective but the point I make is that it is not conducive to finding solutions to our problems. In short, we have an unwarranted preoccupation with the past when we should be concerned about the future.

All too often we cast the debate in terms of personalities—whether we are for or against the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or whether we hate him or love him. What does that give us?

Finally, the rhetoric in this debate is characterized by wildly exaggerated and vague promises of one policy or another. Very little is focused and precise in the debate. That is what is so offensive about our national debate—it is vague and deliberately so, because politicians know that the decisions to be made will be tough ones and perhaps politically damaging. As a result, they like to stay away from clearly defined or clearly presented choices. It is always nice to couch arguments in a generalized fashion so that if things do not work out, no one can criticize you for being wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to move the debate beyond the rhetorical stage. I do not want to talk about the past, I do not want to talk about personalities and I do not want to talk in a vague, general way about promises. In the peculiar naivete and innocence that only a backbencher can bring to a debate at times, I should like to suggest, as clearly as I can, the choices that the government should make in the months ahead.

Before doing so, I should like to preface my remarks by saying that these choices are not necessarily those of the management, they are not final and are subject to revision without prior notice.

The goals to which all of us want to move the Canadian economy, Mr. Speaker, are obvious. We want drastically reduced inflation, higher productivity, and far higher employment levels. However, we all have to realize that we will not achieve those goals if we do not collectively—governments, corporations and citizens—lower our demands on the system and concentrate on rebuilding that system. As I said earlier, all of us, in some fashion or other, will have to deny ourselves the pleasures of the present in anticipation of enjoying the rewards of the future. This will prove a very difficult task because there are very few among us who want to forgo the lifestyle we learned to enjoy through the flush years of the 1960s and 1970s. But I would argue that we must do it, and do it now. The sooner the better.

I think everyone in this room is familiar with the television ad for automotive filters where the service repairman leans into the camera and says, "You can pay me now or you can pay me later." I suggest that is the option which faces this government and the Canadian people; we either pay the price now or we pay it later. And I am suggesting we had better pay it now because the price for solving our inflation, unemployment and productivity problems, although steep, will be cheaper now than in the future.

Let me look at inflation and suggest ways in which this government can fight inflation in the immediate future, Mr. Speaker. First of all I suggest that this government should implement a freeze to cover all wages, salaries—and dividends, because no one should escape the cold. I would suggest the freeze should last for a minimum of six months. Second, in order to make it psychologically acceptable, or at least more palatable, I suggest the government should simultaneously roll back the salaries of Members of Parliament by an amount equivalent to the present inflation rate.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a question right at this stage of his remarks?

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be contentious, but I would prefer the hon. member to delay his question until the end of my remarks. I have a lot to say and I would like to plow through as quickly as I can in order to cover the important subject which is before the House.

I was talking about rolling back hon. members' salaries equivalent to the present inflation rate. I would introduce a slight wrinkle to that rollback, Mr. Speaker. I suggest the money saved in that rollback should be paid back to members of the House at the rate of 1 percentage point for every 1 per cent drop in the inflation rate next year. As a result, members would have a very real and important stake in fighting inflation.

Third, after the freeze is lifted, the government should introduce guidelines which would eliminate the foreign sources of inflation. If inflation is 10 per cent, employees go to their employer and ask for at least a 10 per cent increase to keep up with inflation. However, studies indicate that roughly 40 per cent of inflation is imported from abroad. While we may have some commitment to keep people as close to the increase of domestic inflation as possible, I do not think this or any government, or any employer, has an obligation to compensate for foreign inflation. There is only one way to eliminate foreign inflation, Mr. Speaker, and that is to become more productive. If we do not, if we keep placing demands on the system to compensate for the foreign portion of inflation, we will never break the inflationary spiral and we will never solve our inflationary problems.

The fourth thing I would suggest is that this government should abolish all the price support systems such as marketing boards which have been created—

Mr. Orlikow: How about tariffs?

Mr. Kelly: —over the last two decades. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to suggest that I am abandoning the groups in our society for whom these price support systems were created. What I suggest we do for those people is to replace the price support systems with an income support system. I believe that if we can find the will, if we can exercise our judgment, the abolition of price support systems has the potential of decreasing inflation in this country by at least 2 per cent. That would make a valuable contribution to this war on inflation which everyone wants us to fight but for which no one wants to volunteer.

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest a removal of all sales taxes. I have always found it passing strange that while all governments perceive inflation as the number one problem, they rarely perceive the role they have had in creating and sustaining that inflation. If you look at the prices that you pay for consumer goods today, the most remarkable thing about them is the degree to which government taxes form a substantial part of those prices. I would argue that any government which is serious about and committed to fighting inflation would abolish, or at least significantly reduce, the level of taxes it has imposed on the system, which in turn has resulted in the agonizingly higher prices.

Sixth, contrary to the prevailing advice I hear in the House, I would urge this government to make the dollar appreciate in value. Conventional wisdom argues that we should devalue the dollar in order to increase foreign sales. But I would argue that what we are trying to do through devaluation is to buy time, to buy our way out of an economy whose productivity is slowly but markedly slipping. We cannot afford, as we have over the last 20 years, to devalue the dollar continually and hope to buy our way out of our declining productivity. We cannot do it because we are forestalling the ultimate decision which has to be made on declining productivity. We cannot do it because devaluation also adds to inflation. For every three cent drop in the value of the dollar, you can add roughly one percentage point to the inflation rate we are all anxious to reduce if not eliminate. In other words, I would argue that, if we were really serious and committed as a government or as a nation to fighting inflation we would not devalue the dollar, in fact, you would appreciate it. I would offer as proof of my argument the evidence of those countries which have been most successful in resisting inflation. They are the countries which, through the 1970s have appreciated their currencies. They are the countries with strong currencies, currencies that will get even stronger in the 1980s. If we are going to join those countries, join them in the strength of our economies, we must join them with a strong currency. I would urge this government to explore the possibility of going against the tide of public opinion and appreciate our dollar rather than devalue it.

In an attempt to fight inflation, and as a result of all the preceding advice I have given this House and government, I would urge that everything be done to lower interest rates. If we do the things I have suggested, I believe we will create a climate that will allow the Governor of the Bank of Canada, by himself or at our request to lower interest rates. I do not know how far those interest rates would fall, whether by two points or ten, but by doing what I have suggested, we would have the opportunity at least of lowering interest rates. Everyone in this House understands very clearly the dimensions of the potential that is available to us in Canada if we can only bring down those usuriously high interest rates that plague us so persistently today.

I would like to move on now to the second issue, that of higher productivity. The key to higher productivity is investment, and the key to investment is savings. This government, in one way or another, has to devise a system which promotes enhanced saving in the years ahead. In order to do this I believe the tax system has to be revised. It will have to be revised in a way that will create generous incentives for individuals and corporations to save money for reinvestment in those industries targeted by the task force which submitted its report to this House last year.

I have to confess that, at this point, I could not tell you with precision what those incentives should be, although I think that one of them at least should be accelerated write-offs. They are imperative because most of the opportunities that have been selected by the task force and endorsed by this government are opportunities that are unusually capital intensive. So if we are going to realize those opportunities and if we are going to build those industries, then we must make available the huge capital flows necessary to get them started and to sustain them. And there is only one way to do that; which is to revise the tax system and to raise the necessary money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry but I must interrupt the hon. member as his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the generosity of my colleagues and I will attempt to get through the balance of my remarks as quickly as possible.

We should also create generous research and development incentives. There should be incentives that are targeted to the most productive industries. Those industries, I think, would be in the field of high technology. I use the word targeted because I do not know whether we could introduce universal incentives. I do not know whether we can afford to introduce universal incentives or whether, based on our limited resources, we should direct the incentives to those groups which we think can make the most use of that money.

In my comments about savings and investment, I have been referring to the private sector. We must not forget the fact that there is a public sector involved in savings and investment. I think this government, as well as other governments, has the opportunity in the 1980s to save money for the purpose of investment. In order to do that, I would urge this government to review all of its expenditures with an eye to cutting them, freezing them or limiting them in some fashion or another. It is obvious that we cannot go on spending the money in the future the way we have spent it in the past.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that I have mentioned spending money in the way we have been spending it. I am not arguing that we limit our total expenditures but, rather that we should redirect the money we do spend. We should direct it away from wasteful, redundant or irrelevant programs and put it into programs that will permit this government to help build the industrial infrastructure that will complement the investment of the private sector in the 1980s.

What this government has to do is to take the money it is spending on many of its present programs, collect it and reinvest it in the building of an infrastructure that complements the decisions freely taken in the open marketplace. However, if this government does that, it will have to accept two consequences. First, it will have to accept an increased indebtedness. Second, in order to raise some new capital to pay for that infrastructure, in order to raise money to replace the money alienated through the tax incentives that I alluded earlier and in order to replace any of the sales taxes that were lost from its withdrawal in the marketplace, this government will be faced with the very difficult task of having to raise taxes income in the future. I do not think this government or any other government can get away from that.

In concluding this part of my argument, let me repeat that the government will have to implement, and the public will have to accept, higher income taxes in the near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.00 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) had completed his remarks. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I am happy to participate in a debate such as the one on the motion of the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), but in a sense I am somewhat ambivalent about the happiness of participating along with my colleagues because of the situation faced by small business people as a result of the November 12 budget and the paperwork burden of government which smothers initiative and any real creative thought. Later in my remarks I will refer to a specific case in my riding of the mandatory implementation of metric, without any voluntary or optional provision, increasing the costs of small businesses.

Quite frankly, Canada has bountiful resources which in effect are squandered by governments of the land. I am not overjoyed tonight to be speaking on this subject, which is generally the economy but is specifically focused on small businesses, because the situation they face is not the happy one it should be. I suppose we could not have a debate which better illustrates the quandary in which this nation finds itself and which relates more to the mainstreams of the land. We are not talking about the metropolitan megaprojects, the debate of which has, quite properly, consumed much of the time of the House, or about corporate infighting or corporate take-overs of one giant by another; we are talking about small business people. Quite frankly, as a layman I sit back and wonder what productive dollar is really being made when one corporate giant takes over another corporate giant while using the tax laws to do it at a minimal cost. This has been done even though in many cases the cost to the consumer has not been justified.

During this debate we are discussing the small business people, be they men or women. I will say small business person to be completely ecumenical, or non-generic, but I think most small-business men and women like to have the gender added since it seems to stimulate activity on the rural main streets of Canada. In any event, we are talking about the benefits of the small businesses on the main streets of Canada while at the same time discussing the sickness of this present economic policy which has resulted in bankruptcies, not only to small business persons but the bankruptcy of any serious government policy which was intended to address some of the problems confronting small business persons on a daily basis. This debate is meaningful if we are to confront those problems, because there are many small and big businesses across Canada which are trying to keep afloat. Coupled with this problem is the glaring lack of any meaningful government policy or program to help these businesses stay solvent. These programs are especially necessary when these small businesses are faced with these unconscionable interest rates, which, in my opinion, are one of the major factors of inflation in this country.

The political parties have stated their position on interest rates, but as far as I am concerned any government—including us if we were in power, as we should be—will not be able to come to grips with the problems of inflation if it just assumes that the inflationary cycle or the problems of small business persons will be resolved when we have interest rates of 18 per cent to 22 per cent.

When I was younger, those interest rates were thought to be unconscionable. Those were interest rates which were charged by high-flying loan companies or loan sharks. However these rates are now built into our economy on a daily basis, which results in a cash flow problem for business people who must constantly deal with interest rates. Unless we can resolve this problem—and not by government patchwork policies—we will never solve our crippling state of depression or recession which is afflicting this country.

If this debate focuses any attention or serves as a catalyst for action by members opposite it will have proven worthwhile for members to speak until termination of the debate at ten o'clock tonight.

If anyone thinks that small businesses comprise an insignificant part of our economy, they will be surprised to discover the collective effect they have across Canada. I am sure many members do not underestimate the impact of small business, but I was rather startled, after conducting some research into the matter, to discover that there are over 700,000 Canadians who earn a very significant part of their income through their entrepreneurial skills as small business people. This figure is based on the Revenue Canada definition of sales from $10,000 to $2 million, which is admittedly a rather wide definition. As well, 400,000 additional Canadians earn income through part-time employment from sales of less than $10,000. In total, that is over one million Canadians who earn income through small business.

It is as true about economists as it is about politicians that opinions vary depending on who you read or listen to, but I think most economists agree that small business entrepreneurs are really the linchpin of the whole Canadian economic fabric. During the many days of discussions on the oil and gas energy bills, my friend, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) described that industry, quite allegorically, as being the engine which would drive the economic future of Canada away from the depression or recession we are experiencing. I would suggest that long before oil and gas became so fundamental to the Canadian economy, it was the business person in both small and large businesses from coast to coast on the main streets who were and who are the engine of economic enterprise.

These small business people, who employ anywhere from 5 to 20 people, are also able to give jobs to young people during the summer to help them get through school. I feel extremely sorry for those students who will be coming out of school this summer only to find no opportunity, such as the opportunity I had when I was going to school, to earn extra money. I learned more during my summer employment than I learned in undergraduate university studies simply by being able to travel and work in small businesses in different parts of the country. Students now will not be able to earn money for their next years' tuition through working in small business. Since the collapse of the larger megaprojects they will not be able to find employment there either. It is unfortunate, because when working in a small business you gain an appreciation, you develop a personal interest and you become prepared to work hard and honestly while earning an income to further your education. Those opportunities do not exist for students this summer, especially since the collapse of the megaprojects which would have provided them with income and afforded them the opportunity to travel as students did in my day. As well, students will not have a chance to earn income from working in small businesses in their home town. This is a tragedy which is causing anguish to many young people in this day and age.

I suggest that small business accounts for two thirds of job creation because it is highly labour intensive. Small business deserves special programs because it has special needs. The fundamental difficulty facing small business today is, undoubtedly, interest rates.

Why in the name of decency, when small business persons are faced with loan sharks and usurious interest rates, should small business be confronted with this government's policy on metric conversion, which was implemented without fundamental debate in the House? Why should the government, by moving from the old weights and measures to the new metric system, add to the problems of the small business person? I am not talking about the large supermarkets, which can afford to convert from imperial—that odious word—but about the small business person who already has enough burdens. Incidentally, one of the reasons we may have converted to metric is that we still used this old, historic word "imperial".

When government members do not get away from Ottawa—which is one of the most introverted and unreal cities to live in—and do not visit their ridings, they do not find out that a small business person on the main street of their constituency may be prepared to accept many things, but when problems are piled one upon the other, they begin to wonder who is really looking after their interests. Certainly the imposition of the metric system with no option is an added cost to the small business person which should not be borne by him.

I could go on speaking much longer about the November 12 budget fiasco brought in by the Minister of Finance. Mr. Bulloch, in a telegram, which I believe he sent to all members, illustrated the highlights of what that budget would do and how adversely it would affect the small business person. In other words, in terms of small business in Canada, it cannot resort to the same excuse that the government so often uses, but I guess any government in power would try it, that is, to slough it off to international influences. The small business person, the entrepreneur of Canada on the main streets of Canada, deserves some policy and programs to help all entrepreneurs in Canada. An attempt should not be made to slough off his problems offshore, to blame them on the Arabs, the anchovies off Peru or the weather which affected the grain crop in Russia and all of the other excuses that we who have been in the House for the last few years have heard.

We should consider what Mr. Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said were the problems of the budget which would affect small business. Way back on November 18, just six days after the budget, he referred amongst other things, to the zeal to plug loopholes. We all know that this budget was a disguised tax deformity. The minister really said "tax reform". I am all prepared for tax reform, but let us debate tax reform so that we know what will happen. Let us not have tax deformity creeping into a budget here, as we had on November 12, and then having the minister recant, retreat and revise more than Napoleon. Napoleon would have been dizzy on the way back from Moscow if he had retreated, recanted and revised himself as much as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has done. Thirty-one times this minister has taken one step forward and two steps backward. MacEachen is the Scot from Cape Breton, from my province, and he sometimes does the highland fling. I do not mind his doing the highland fling by himself, but when he is doing it to the taxpayers of Canada, that is a different matter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), pirouettes whenever he gets excited because of the Queen, executes pirouettes, as he did at Buckingham Palace and around Ottawa when the Queen left. He gets all excited and does his little pirouette. Well, that is fine for the Prime Minister. He has isolated status at the moment allowing him to pirouette whenever he wants and to pick up the photographs to show that he is a pretty vibrant individual. But the really interesting person who pirouettes is the Minister of Finance, by the name of MacEachen, the good Scot who has pirouetted more of a highland fling, not by himself but, rather, with the taxpayers of Canada, and the thirty-one step sambo that he has perpetrated on the Canadian public.

Bulloch, six days after the budget, said in a very restrained way, amongst other things, that this budget will close off access to the risk capital markets for new small business ventures and high growth medium-sized enterprises, which are the major source of new jobs. It will seriously inhibit instalment sales of any kind, i.e., consumer appliances or capital assets. It will restrict the cash flow for businesses facing excruciating pressures when financing capital expenditures at high interest rates. It will severely weaken the effective functioning of the marketplace by curtailing the ability of an owner to sell his business and restrict the number of potential buyers. It will increase the tax burden on investors in small corporations. It will discriminate unfairly against professionals who are unable to incorporate. It will restrict the ability of entrepreneurs to provide for their own retirement. It will massively increase professional fees for small businesses that must cope with more than 165 technical tax amendments. It will threaten estate planning for self-employed people, and it will create an intolerable administrative hassle for employers and employees taking any form of employee loan or advance.

Those are just some of the highlights, and how sad Bulloch's prophecy has come to be. The area I come from, the deep east, is well acquainted with adverse conditions, in a way. Quite frankly, plant closures and winter difficulty and hardship is not as foreign to us as it is to some of the places here in Ontario which have experienced pretty bountiful times, as have the areas of growth in the west with their oil, gas and tremendous mineral resources, areas where the expanding economy and progressive development has been tremendous. We in the deep east, having gone through ups and downs and having been exposed to difficult times, are a little more inured, but never have we seen bankruptcies increase as they have recently increased in my area, the Atlantic region. The bankruptcies in 1979, 1980 and 1981 bear testimony to the difficulty of the entrepreneur of Main Street in these provinces. The total number of bankruptcies in 1979 has gone from 1,043 to 1,457. I gather that I cannot go into all the details, but I thank Your Honour for giving me a little hint that my allotted time, under the constrained rules of this debate, is almost over.

In Nova Scotia there were 607 bankruptcies in 1979. In 1980, there were 665. In 1981 there were 839. We do not even have the figures for 1982.

I want to tell a story which I hope will impress the gentlemen opposite. I will not go into all of the social concerns involved. We all know businessmen who have gone under. I hope that the hon. member, when he goes home to his riding, will meet some businessmen and small business people who have gone under. I am not saying it is all because of government, but I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, that part of the reason is the unsurious, loan shark interest rates that this government, after five years, still pretends will solve the problem, but which have created part of the problem. There is no doubt about this, and this is how I will conclude, because I have been trying for three days to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) concerning something called metric.

A blind constituent of mine came into my office this weekend, led by his wife who can see. He told me that he had been visited by the inspector from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who told him that, unless he converts his little scale in his little grocery operation in the basement of his house by the end of June, which is the cut-off date for that area of Nova Scotia, not only will he be fined "X" hundred dollars for every day past the deadline for conversion, but that he will also, in time, be sent to jail. This is a true story. I am trying to get the eye of the Speaker to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, without arguing the whole issue of metric, why, in the name of compassion and common sense, there can not be some exceptions and some flexibility to a program unilaterally imposed on all Canadians shown to a blind man. This man has never been on social welfare. He was not born blind, and he has lived through some tragic accidents. He is a father of three children who help him in the little store. I cannot even dignify the store by calling it a corner grocery store; it is a store on a hill in a rural part of my area, and the people there do not care whether measurements are imperial or metric. They believe in this individual. He just does not have the income to make that $3,000 conversion on his little scale from the carrots he grows and sells, for the potatoes he grows and sells and for the apples he grows and sells. He has not been a charge on the public purse in his life, and he told me very adamantly this weekend, "Patrick, if there is not some exception for a little"—I will not tell hon. members the word he used for his own operation, but one can imagine. It was a cellar operation. I was in the store. I drove 40 miles back in the hills to take a look at it. I could not believe it. It is not right for him to be told that by some inspector from Halifax, implementing a policy which we could not debate and which we do not have time to debate tonight. There must surely be some exception to this universal blanket.

Mr. Speaker, you have been kind, and I cannot continue now, but it was interesting today. Today the HUDAC people were in town. Again, to refer to small businesses and businesses which are going under in my area, businesses which are involved in the housing program and in the lumber trade, they involve McMasters and Sons and McCulloch Building Products, these are fine, established firms which have gone under. Why? It comes back to that refrain of interest rates. I hope that when the Minister of Finance comes back from Paris, he will come together with officials of the Treasury Board. Perhaps members of the Liberal caucus will go home to their ridings on the weekend, like the opposition "cauci" do, to meet their constituents. I say "cauci" advisedly, but it is a plural of the word caucus. Unless hon. members get away from Ottawa, and go back to the Main Streets from whence they came, they will not fully appreciate that there is a really serious economic problem out there which is affecting the entrepreneurs of this country. I hope the debate will stimulate a little action in a much needed area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Well, Mr. Speaker, you seem to be doing my hon. colleagues on the opposite side a tremendous favour, because as soon as I get up to speak, all I can hear is applause from the other side. I must thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving them this golden opportunity, and I hope they will appreciate what they are going to hear. But enough said about this. Being given the floor after the member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) reminds me of one occasion two years ago, when I also spoke after the hon. member, during the pre-build debate, and I must say it is always interesting to listen to what he has to say, and to speak after him in the House, because he is very vivid in his speech, has a good critical sense and is an excellent speaker. Unfortunately, he has very little to offer in the way of positive proposals, as I said before, and I say it again, Mr. Speaker. During his years on the opposition benches, the hon. member has made criticism into a fine art and demonstrates this eloquently every time he takes the floor in the House.

However, when I was listening a few minutes ago, I was thinking that the name of the official opposition party is admirably suited to its members. How did they manage it? If that party had been named differently, it would have had to be rechristened the Conservative Party, because the more I listen to them, the more I realize that anything that smacks of innovation is discarded straight away. Last year, for instance, it was impossible to get them to agree to change the name of Dominion Day to Canada Day or Fête du Canada. Impossible—it was just too much for the Progressive Conservatives to take this tremendous step. So, we are still stuck with Dominion and Steinberg.

In his speech just now, the hon. member mentioned the multinationals which are often controlled by friends or supporters of the hon. members opposite, and when I hear about small businesses that are having trouble with the metric system, I wonder how our children, who are learning the metric system at school and nothing else, are going to deal with the world of their parents, namely ourselves, who learned a different system. If we do not make the effort some time to convert to the metric system so that we can help our children get ahead, what is going to happen? These children know that since chemistry has always been done in metric and most countries, including the U.S.S.R., and in fact, entire continents are using metric measurements, it is because in the future, everything is going to be done in metric.

To get back to the subject of this debate, which is the economy and small and medium-size businesses, I can say that there are a lot of small and medium-size businesses in my riding. They are extremely important for the economy of my region and are now experiencing some tremendous problems. It is true, Mr. Speaker. Where do those problems come from? They are due to various reasons. In the first place, high interest rates surely make life difficult for the small- and medium-size businesses. Working capital and operational charges are costlier, borrowing power is reduced especially as sales have decreased. Nevertheless, it remains that to survive at present, those companies must seek help from the various government levels, among which the government of Canada, which has several programs that I will not mention because the minister responsible for small- and medium-size businesses listed them this afternoon.

There are other problems, and I was pleased a while ago to hear the member for Annapolis Valley-Hants say that part of the problem lies at the national level. It is true. However, he said that the problem is also due to various factors, among which are economic conditions. However, in my area of Quebec, one factor is even more significant than elsewhere. You know, Mr. Speaker, that Quebecers are privileged. We have a government which has been trying for a few years to make us believe that we are different from everybody else.

Moreover, there are some slight differences, let us admit it, among others: the Quebec deposit fund. Most Canadian provinces are integrated and Canadians belong and contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. In Quebec, we contribute to the Quebec Pension Fund, that is the province of Quebec collects a huge amount of several billion dollars which it collects from year to year from Quebecers and gives back to them when they retire. That enables the province to invest for various purposes in industry in every conceivable way as owner or shareholder on the real estate market. This brings me to tell you about a strange philosophy which has developed in Quebec. I mean especially the philosophy expounded for quite some time now by Minister Bernard Landry who is said to be one of the shining lights of Quebec's economic policy. Now, Mr. Landry has a vision of Quebec, or rather, as he sees it, there are two Quebecs: there is the Quebec of Montreal and vicinity, and then, there is the hinterland, or those areas we come from—

An hon. Member: The Lac Saint-Jean area!

Mr. Gimaïel: Yes, Lac Saint-Jean, Lotbinière; there are quite a few people there, those who supply lumber, those who supply hydropower, in short those people who supply quite a lot of things to the people of Montreal. Now, that is the vision Bernard Landry has of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Do not forget La Beauce!

Mr. Gimaïel: La Beauce also; it slipped my mind because I come from there, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Landry is telling us that Quebec is the Eden of small and medium businesses. I scratched my head and said: Yes, it is true; there are many small and medium businesses in Quebec. I have noticed that too, naturally, having been executive assistant to a federal minister, an MP and even an inspector for the Minimum Wage Commission; I visited small and medium-sized businesses, those that did not have collective agreements. I realized there were very many of them. I told myself: whatever else he may be, our minister for the economy is doing all right; he is aware there are many small and medium-sized businesses. Pretty good of him, he is aware of that. I then carried his reasoning a little further. Instead of telling myself there were many of them because Quebec is a real garden of Eden, I started wondering why there were so many of them. I looked around to see whom they were working for. In most cases, I came to the conclusion they were working for bigger businesses. So I told myself: I must go around the various regions. I looked around and what did I see? In the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean: a garden of Eden for small businesses? What does this really mean? It means ALCAN, it means Consolidated Bathurst, it means Abitibi Price, it means Domtar, and Donohue and all the other big companies. On the North Shore, what does it mean? The Iron Ore Company, Quebec Cartier Mining, Quebec North Shore and so on and so forth. I said: Dear God, we will go up and see what goes on in Abitibi. In Abitibi, there were Noranda Mines and several other mining corporations which have established themselves there. Would there be an area, the Gaspé region maybe, where there would be no large corporations? The first thing I saw when I looked at the Gaspé region was Abitibi Price, and a little further, it is the same thing again: Noranda Mines has set up shop also in Murdochville. So, there are large corporations everywhere in this paradise of the small- and medium-sized businesses.

Then I went by way of La Beauce. La Beauce, that must be an Eden for upon checking, I found no large corporations. Then I wondered: to whom do these people sell their production? I turned around and not far from La Beauce, I found a community called Quebec City where there is the Quebec government, a really large corporation indeed. Then, it hit me. The people from La Beauce who are clever people must have said to themselves: We are not far from the Quebec government; and the federal government has several offices in Quebec City; surely these people must buy all sorts of things they need; why should we not sell them things we make here? Mr. Speaker, there came a point when I said to myself: Minister Landry, who after all is a Quebecer, must get only part of Quebec's economic picture, for without major corporations, his Eden of small- and medium-sized businesses would not exist. Then I decided to find out whether these people were really aware of the presence of major corporations in Quebec. I took a look back home. One must look in one's own garden first to find cucumbers and tomatoes. Then I realized that there is indeed a major corporation, ALCAN, apparently a multinational which is a former subsidiary of Alcoa and which has now become Aluminum Co. of Canada. Then, I realized that there is an ALCAN shareholder whose name is known throughout the world.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, all companies whose shares are listed on the stock exchange must reveal and make known the names of their shareholders who are holding over 5 per cent of their shares; well, I was quite surprised to learn that ALCAN has a shareholder who is holding 5.5 per cent of all its shares and that it is la Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec, that is to say, the Government of Quebec. So, I said to myself: If Mr. Landry has 5.5 per cent of Alcan shares in his pockets, he must be aware that there are major corporations operating in Quebec. That was not the end of my discoveries. I learned also that the Société de développement industriel is holding 51 per cent of the Donohue Company, in Saint-Félicien. This is again a pretty big corporation and accounts for quite a number of large mills.

An hon. Member: It is in the Roberval riding.

Mr. Gimaïel: Of course, it is again in the riding of Roberval, in my region. Then, I notice the presence of REXFOR and SDI here and there and everywhere, as well as in the steel industry. I then have to wonder what Mr. Landry means when he talks about the small business paradise. What I think, Mr. Speaker, is that Mr. Landry has just realized that there are small- and medium-size businesses in Quebec because they are not having problems. He had not realized this before. I shall even go further and say that no provincial government had ever done anything to help small and medium-sized businesses. It has started only recently to do so with a few grants from the Quebec planning and development agency.

Since 1968, it is the government of Canada which has been providing constant assistance to small and medium-size businesses, either through DREE, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Federal Business Development Bank or through investment or employment tax credits, manpower training programs or subsidies from the Department of Manpower and Immigration, or various other means such as the sales services of the Export Development Corporation or EDC. This is what the government of Canada has done for so many years and continues to do. On the other hand, if anyone wants to know what the Quebec government has done for my region, I shall tell him. What I find the most revolting is to have to sit here and listen to the prima donnas opposite blow their own trumpets and boast they are working for the welfare of the people. They should not forget that I come from an area where five PQ members were elected, Mr. Speaker. We recently had the visit of the French Prime Minister, Mr. Mauroy. We took him around to see the people in Chicoutimi. We wanted him to see our francophone region. I was glad about this because I have always been proud of the French character of our province.

Our region is perhaps the true focus of French culture in Canada and it will remain so all our life. We took the French Prime Minister around to meet the people. He shook hands with everyone. We fed him tourtière and blueberry pie and gave him a hearty welcome. And then where did we take him to? To Bécancourt. We took him to Bécancourt to announce that Hydro-Québec—but I must explain the situation differently. The major shareholder in ALCAN, which has its largest facilities in Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean because that area is the largest aluminum producer in the world, the most important shareholder in ALCAN took the French Prime Minister to Trois-Rivières to announce to the people that Hydro-Québec would sell so many kilowatts a year to Pechiney, a French aluminum company that is planning to open a plant in Bécancourt. In fact, what this company will do is produce aluminum with electricity which probably comes from my own area; this will mean fewer jobs in my constituency in the ALCAN plants, which are now getting obsolescent.

This ALCAN shareholder made this announcement. What happens to poor Quebec in such a mess? It is easy to imagine. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in my capacity as Member of Parliament for the constituency of Lac-Saint-Jean. There is in my riding a town called Alma where ALCAN had 1,200 employees five years ago. There are now only 600 left, Mr. Speaker. The problem is not that a few employees were laid off because of a depressed aluminum market. The extraction rooms are empty, all the machines have gone, everything has been removed. The plant looks like a big warehouse. One of the ALCAN shareholders twiddles his thumbs while ALCAN closes down in Alma and this same shareholder simply announces that he will sell electricity to another aluminum company so that it can open up a plant in Bécancourt. I suppose that all this is simply so that ALCAN can close once and for all in Alma. This is the economic situation in which we must fight, we the regional representatives of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. And then, these people rise and preach nationalism, supernationalism, and say: "We are different!" However, when it is time to invest money in our regions, it is a different story. The best example I can give is the famous national park of the Upper Saguenay which the Canadian government wanted to create. I am sorry to always have to compete with the region of Trois-Rivières, but such are the facts.

At the time, the Quebec government told the government of Canada: "You can invest $60 million in the National Park of La Mauricie, but you will not invest millions of dollars in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area. That is incredible, Mr. Speaker. What are we doing that is so terrible in Lac Saint-Jean for those people to deny us our basic right to economic survival and to prevent the government representing all Canadians from investing in our region? What is it we are doing that is so wrong, Mr. Speaker? You know the situation is truly difficult. It is also true however that this year, exceptionally, the Canadian government will spend $2,200,000 in community development projects in my constituency under the Canada Works Program. It is also true that, exceptionally, $375,000 will be spent to provide work for 251 students.

Certainly I would like the province to do the same. But no way! They wipe out jobs. Do you know what the big question is in Quebec right now? They keep asking whether they should build the mast over the stadium or do away with 17,000 jobs. But this is not the way Quebecers are informed. Quebecers are told: We may build the mast, or then we may not. Unions are told: Accept pay reductions, or else we are going to fire 17,000 workers. Mr. Speaker, that is not the real question. The real question is: are we going to build the mast or fire 17,000 people?

We shall see where the Quebec government stands. Whether they are a socialist government, as they have been saying for so long, or a fascist government. If they are a fascist government, they are going to build the mast and fast, and fire 17,000 people. If, on the other hand, they are a socialist government, they will say: Maybe, if we keep those 17,000 people in their jobs, they will bring in enough taxes for the mast to be built. I do not want to push the argument too far, because often there is a lack of reasoning on economic matters. On constitutional or other matters, they are never at a loss, but when it comes to economics, do not ask too much in the way of ideas, because nothing comes out. There is some sort of blocking-up or, as Mr. Lévesque would say, something gets "jammed". Anyway, my area has a sound economic future, namely the jobs that have been created under the Canadian government policies over the years.

I know it is out of style to refer to the moneys the Canadian government may grant to help control unemployment, but we have in Canada a fantastic policy that perhaps should be better appreciated today. I remember in the early seventies, the Liberal government was harshly criticized for having developed a workable unemployment insurance policy. Mr. Speaker, if we did not have a Canadian policy, a federal one as the P.Q. would say, a federal unemployment insurance policy that provides something like $150 to $200 a week to people currently facing difficulties in my area, in the city of Alma alone, Mr. Speaker, people would be short of $1 million in income every week. I repeat, $1 million a week for a city of 20,000 inhabitants. I know this is not an ideal situation but, nonetheless, let us admit that we have had a Canadian government that was wise enough to develop a viable unemployment insurance policy. If the federal government had not developed these policies, where would we be now? Some people would probably not have enough to eat. Moreover, it is to this same Liberal government that we owe the development of social legislation which now pays 58 per cent of the bills in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this government can justly claim to have provided assistance to small and medium-sized businesses. This government can claim to be the only government in Canada to have developed a policy which applied to regions like mine or like Lotbinière and La Beauce and not to major centres like Toronto, Winnipeg or Montreal. This government was the only one that had the courage to say: "We shall defend and help the have-not areas." I am proud that this government continues to provide this assistance. What I ask is that the provincial governments try to do the same, that they stop paying cocktail guzzlers for doing nothing worthwhile in Paris and use that money instead to help businessmen in our regions develop their businesses, and most important, that they do not create false competition for these businesses, because we must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the big food chains in Quebec are now for the most part in the hands of the Caisse de dépôts du Québec and they are the direct competitors of small and medium-size businesses. We must not forget that, Mr. Speaker! The Caisse de dépôts is becoming more and more omnipresent, and the same can be said about the Alberta Heritage Fund. If the provinces give a fair chance to small and medium-sized businesses, do not compete with them and give them the same support as the Canadian government, those businesses will thrive and provide revenue for our governments.

[English]

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege to be able to speak on the motion presented by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer). I have listened with interest to many of the speeches today. I was quite impressed with the speech of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) who spoke before dinner. I hope a good many of his Liberal colleagues will pay attention to his remarks, some of which will probably not be popular with them. In fact, one of his remarks will not be too popular on either side of the House.

The issue before us today deals with the plight of the Canadian business community, in particular small business. The word "small" is accurate but is very misleading at times. Taken individually, each business may be considered to be small, but as a group and through the impact of this group on the economy, the more appropriate word would be "large".

Let us consider these facts for a moment. Slightly more than 90 per cent of all businesses in Canada can be classed as small businesses. Firms with fewer than 100 employees and under $5 million in annual sales account for more than $40 billion in the Canadian economy and for 20 per cent of the gross national product. Small business employs 42 per cent of the private sector work force in Canada, or nearly nine million people. Small business contributes one third of the commercial and industrial output of our economy. Nearly 60 per cent of all new jobs created in the country this year were created by small business. Small in this instance is obviously large.

The problems being faced by small businesses in Canada today are equally large. According to figures issued by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, last year business bankruptcies in Canada rose by 22 per cent. Of some 8,055 tabulated bankruptcies, the majority were small businesses. This total does not include firms that went into receivership or those failures where the owners just sold out their equity and closed shop.

There is an instance in my own village of Burks Falls of a business that had been established for a good number of years. It had a firm lease for ten years on the building it occupied at a reasonable rent. When the lease came up for renewal and there was obviously going to be a big increase in rent, the owner just sold the stock out and closed the doors. This excellent business location and store is now vacant. This is the sort of thing that is taking place in a great many communities across the country where the main streets now have two, or three, or sometimes more vacant premises.

A week or so ago the television news carried an item about two towns fairly close to Ottawa and showed pictures of the main streets with five or six stores closed down. That is a sizeable number in any town of 5,000 or 6,000 people.

The business community itself has set the rate of bankruptcies even higher than the figure I mentioned. Experts say that three to four times the number occur that is stated by the government. In fact, they say that last year an estimated 30,000 businesses went under. Those monitoring the activities of small business place the blame for this problem squarely on the doorstep of the government and on the government's high interest rate policy.

Some members who spoke previously mentioned the high interest rate policy of the government. A few years ago anyone charging today's interest rates would have been accused of loan sharking and would have gone to jail. I am well aware that a great many depositors in Canada are reaping the benefits of high interest rates, but by and large this is not good for the economy.

Small firms are almost unanimous in their contention that many of the now defunct businesses would have survived if interest rates had been lower. But the government will have no part of that argument. We have heard time and time again that the government is adamant in its belief that its policy on high interest rates is good for the nation.

A lot of good it has done the nation, Mr. Speaker. How good can it be for Canada when thousands of firms go belly up? How good can it be for Canada when millions of Canadians are unemployed? How good can it be for Canada when our national productivity is suffering beyond belief? How good can it be for Canada when our ability to compete in the international marketplace is put in jeopardy? Good for nothing, that is how good it is!

When large businesses get into trouble the government is quick to chase its tail in search of solutions. This inevitably means spending money, and then more money. But when small businesses tumble one by one, the government gives one of its infamous shrugs and looks the other way.

The government should realize by now that large businesses and industry depends very heavily on the small firms to supply specialized goods and services. Because of their size, small businesses can ensure quality control and the kind of detailed knowledge that is required by larger firms.

When small businesses fail, the impact is naturally felt by large business, and conversely, when large business fails or even reduces production, the effect on the smaller, support firms is obvious. When any business, large or small, ceases operations, the impact on the local and national community is horrendous.

We are all very well aware of the domino theory. A business shuts its doors and the owners and employees are out of work. These people, now having to resort to unemployment insurance benefits or social assistance, have no extra money to spend in the community. Other firms, including those that supplied the bankrupt business, soon begin to suffer set-backs and eventually have to lay off staff of their own. The cycle is predictable and deadly.

Not only does the government turn a blind eye to the situation of small business with respect to the economy, it adds to the problems in its own dealings with small business.

I see the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) in the House tonight, Mr. Speaker, and I hope he is listening. I certainly commend his department for purchasing goods and services from small business, and I hope that trend grows. I see the minister shake his head the right way.

Mr. Blais: Up and down!

Mr. Darling: That is good. Do not shake it the other way. It has been well known for some time that any number of firms have had difficulty getting the government to pay its bills within a reasonable time. I wonder how the minister is going to shake his head with respect to that matter!

Many businesses have stopped doing business with the government for this reason, but others have no alternative except to wait for months for their cheques to arrive. The government is well aware of this situation, and I presume the minister is doing everything within his power to correct it, but some bureaucrats within his department could perhaps be told to hustle and get those cheques out much quicker than they are doing.

In February of this year the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) in a speech at the University of Western Ontario, admitted that the small business problem was serious. I am delighted to see the minister in the House this evening. At that time he said that several meetings had been held to try to speed up the process of payment, and he even wanted to examine the possibility of paying out interest on overdue accounts. I hope he will have a word with the Minister of Supply and services about this. This minister said that any improvement in the payment system would have considerable impact on the cash flow of these many enterprises, large and small.

Any improvement in the payment system would be welcomed by the firms that deal with the government what would be even better for the entire business community, however, would be an improvement in the economic system of the nation. Given the past record of the government, no one is holding his or her breath waiting for this to happen.

If you listen carefully you can hear a response of sorts from the government—"We are doing something", it says, "We are working feverishly to get things rolling again; we are in control."

Something the government did was to bring in that disastrous budget in November last year, and now it is working feverishly at changing the draconian measures contained in it. It is controlling the ever-erupting rebellion of its backbenchers and a few ministers who understand the mess the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) created. We are all well aware that the minister has had a change of heart, like Paul on the road to Damascus, because I believe he has changed, postponed or cancelled about 31 of the terrible things in that budget. Let us hope there is more to come. That was the government's response. Staggering under the burden of oppressive government paper work, cringing from the blows of continuing government folly in dealing with inflation, and then beaten half to death by the budget measures, it is small wonder that the business community neglected to say thank you to the government for such assistance.

Then there is the question: what has your government done for you today? Nothing, you hope. Every time the government does something, we suffer. They created VIA Rail, and most of the trains stopped. They created the Canada Post Corporation, and our stamp cost nearly doubled and will undoubtedly go even higher. We are well aware that this has added greatly to the burden of small-business men because a great many of them use the mails. In fact, the mails are absolutely essential for the survival of a great many of them, and some have gone under. The government created a National Energy Program and our gasoline and home heating costs rose astronomically. At a time when there is a glut of oil and the price of gasoline is considerably less in the United States than it is here, and they do not have the supplies we do, it makes you stop and wonder. Of course, we are all well aware of the Alsands deal falling through, and of course the Alaska pipeline was pushed down the road for two years and maybe even more. What the legendary King Midas touched turned to gold, and what this government touches seems to turn to ashes.

It would not be half so maddening if those responsible were digging into their own pockets to pay for the mess they create, but not a thin dime of their own money is used. It all comes from the taxpayers of this nation. In their desperation to convince the beleaguered taxpayer that the money they collect is for the good of the country, they spend even more money, thousands of dollars every day, on propaganda. Or, as the government calls it, advocacy advertising. "Canada Works" proclaims a billboard; "It makes sense to me" is the advertising copy in the newspaper. I can assure this government that for those Canadians who still have a job, the government's economic policy makes no sense at all.

What has this government done to small business in the last year or less? It has dealt a crippling blow by raising postal rates 76 per cent, and some businesses have had to fold. There have also been changes in the budget restricting capital cost allowances. The dividend provision has been tightened up. The government has crippled the automobile industry, with many dealers going bankrupt as a result of restrictions on company car leasing, just to name one cause. Just last week one of the largest, if not the largest, automobile dealers in Ottawa went bankrupt. Insurance restrictions, which affect many small businessmen as well as many policyholders, have the whole country up in arms. I admit the minister did say he was taking a second look at that. Let us hope it is a good look and there will be a sensible decision to leave well enough alone in that particular case.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is much talk about the Small Business Development Bond which was to be an absolute bonanza for the small businessman. It was going to help them out of the mess they find themselves in due to high interest rates. I give full marks for the fact that it was broadened to include individuals and partnerships rather than limited companies; that was a step in the right direction. However, for that one step forward, there were about ten steps backward when the new regulations were put in and the bond was no longer available to successful entrepreneurs who wanted to enlarge their operation and probably hire more people. No, the only one eligible now for the Small Business Development Bond is someone who lives in that mythical town of dire straits. Then, when they reach that particular point, they go to the bank and in only a very few cases will the bond be approved. If there is any doubt at all in the minds of the bank, it is curtains for the businessman and he will be turned down. Those of us who are Members of Parliament, from all sides of the House, I am sure, have interceded on behalf of our constituents in similar circumstances. On several occasions I have talked to bank managers, and of course many of them were not too familiar with this bond. Bank managers in small towns did not know too much about it. We talked to some officials higher up who said, "Oh, yes, there is money there to help them but we are restricted because of this new clause that the Minister of Finance put in which says that a reasonably healthy business is not eligible for the bond." That, to me, is absolutely ridiculous.

Another thing which is a millstone around the neck of many small businessmen is this mandatory metric conversion program which is creating great hardship for individual merchants and entrepreneurs across the country. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), there was one particular case where if the businessman did not convert by the end of June, he was liable to a fine of up to $5,000 and a jail term of up to two years. This in a great, free, democratic country like Canada, Mr. Speaker, makes you wonder what kind of country we are living in. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) said there were just a few crackpots across the country and members of the opposition who were stirring up a tempest in a teapot.

A few weeks ago a petition was brought in with 122,000 signatures on it, and the minister, in a weak moment, said he was going to write each one of those individually. I wonder what hours he is working day and night to do that, and how many of those 122,000 letters have gone out under his signature. He stated that categorically, and a good many of us have been telling our constituents to write to the minister at the House of Commons, no postage required. I hope he is inundated with mail. If the minister had used some common sense and left it up to individual companies and businessmen to decide for themselves whether they wanted to go metric, there would not be this hue and cry across the country. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) has chosen this topic today. It is always interesting to note that the issues of main concern to Canadians are introduced by this side of the House and very seldom, if ever, from the opposite on the government side of the House. Therefore, I appreciate the opportunity which the hon. member for Cambridge has given to us so that we can speak about a very important sector of Canada, a sector of our economy that is absolutely crucial. The hon. member identified that the small business community of Canada is taking a particularly hard beating these days. Who are these small business persons? What is this small business community to which the hon. member from Cambridge refers? Of course, the small business community of Canada refers to something like 940,000 small firms employing one, two, three and even up to 15 and more individuals, which represents about 42 per cent of the work force which is virtually Canadian-owned and controlled. They are comprised of the small shop down the street, the independent restauranteur, the small manufacturing shop, the individual contractor, the little welding shop at the corner and the little pop store down the street. The people who run these businesses are our neighbours and our friends. They are the people who support the Boy Scouts, the Little League, the local artistic and theatre groups, the local symphonies and so on. These are the people who have a commitment to the community and to the country. They are the people who are providing 60 per cent of all the new jobs created in Canada, both in the good years and in the bad years. The large multinationals and the branch plants do not produce jobs like the small business Canadian-owned sector does. Research and development takes place in the Small-business sector. That is where creativity takes place in this country, and where research and development goes on into new areas, new products, and new types of marketing. By and large, the small business community is the mainstream of Canada. They are the people you see when you drive down the streets of large and small communities in urban and in rural areas. They are the people I like to refer to as the builders, or the present day frontiersmen. They are the people who are prepared to move out into new areas and to take risks and chances. Some people refer to this group as the entrepreneurial group. They are the ones with ideas who are prepared to risk their life savings, prepared to toil long hours to try a new idea, to try a new way of life, and to try to build and add to the Canadian economy.

What is happening to this group within our society today, the group I suspect that all of us know very well? I am sure there is not a person in Canada today that at one time or another has not looked forward to being a small business person or who has not dreamed about being a small business person. The small business persons are the fabric of Canadian society. They are the basis of the Canadian economy. What is happening to these people today? What is happening to this fabric of our economic society?

Primarily as a result of the policies of the government, two million Canadians are not working today. People are not purchasing many goods and services from the small business community. Full employment is the best thing that could happen to the small business community. Full employment allows everyone to purchase goods and services. It enables people to pay the prices which the small entrepreneur requires for his or her product or service. The best thing that could happen in this country for the small business sector is full and total employment, not having 2 million people unemployed, a figure that is growing daily.

Of course, the critical blow to the small business community is the punishing interest rates which this government has now perpetuated for seven years. In an effort to combat the other enemy of the small entrepreneur, and I am speaking about inflation, the government says, "Be patient because the high interest rate policy, given time, will result in a reduced inflation rate." But the question I must ask is, how long must we wait? This program was introduced in 1975. That was seven years ago. The inflation rate today is as high as it was when it was introduced. Interest rates have literally killed small businesses across the country.

Mr. Fulton: Supported by Joe Clark.

Mr. Riis: It is an interesting point that my colleague from Skeena says that this was the policy which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said the other day in an interview with the press is the best thing they as well could come up with. But I can tell you it is not the best thing we can come up with. We say interest rates have to come down and they have to come down quickly. The sooner the better, not only for the small business sector but for the people of Canada.

Then, of course, there is the budget. The budget was supposed to do good things for small business. I remember the government mailing out 200,000 copies of a brochure which was meant to convince the small business sector the budget was good for them.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): There were 250,000 mailed out.

Mr. Riis: I stand corrected, there were 250,000 mailed out which tried to convince the small business community that this was the best thing that had happened in a long time, that this government was taking action, was concerned and was providing leadership for that sector of the economy. But nobody believed it. The best way to get the small business sector encouraged in this country is to provide sound economic leadership. You do not have to send out a brochure to try to convince people of all the good deeds. These people are intelligent. They know when good things are happening in the country on their behalf. Quite frankly, I think they were offended by the 250,000 pamphlets that were sent out as a result of access to the so-called security of the income tax lists of the country. The Government of Canada sent those out.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): How many returned the questionnaire?

Mr. Riis: We talk about some of the things that are happening to the small business sector. They are not very pleasant. I suppose the most difficult thing that has happened today is the fact that the small business sector is losing faith and confidence.

When you look at the 30 per cent increase in bankruptcies in the first quarter of 1982, that is 37 per cent over last year, which had an exceptionally high number. Therefore, we are talking about thousands of individuals who have experienced the pain of bankruptcy. For every person who experiences bankruptcy—and I am talking now about the first part of this year, which amounted to 3,651—there are many, many more who have experienced the agony of the receivership procedure, let alone thousands of small businessmen who have simply closed their doors and walked away from their dream, their vision of a future for themselves, their family and loved ones.

This government has literally strangled the life out of the small business sector. It has dashed the hopes and the dreams and the future of these small business people. That is the kind of reason that encourages the government to send out pamphlets, trying to convince people that all is well.

The decay of the small business sector is occurring more rapidly each day. Who stands up for the small business sector? The New Democratic Party has had its members up on their feet as often as possible in this House and in committee trying to convince the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) that changes must be introduced quickly. I admit the Progressive Conservatives have risen in their places to speak out on behalf of small business as well. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has done whatever it could to lobby against the insanity of the November 12 budget and the monetary policy of this government. The Canadian organization of small business has raised its voice in hearings across the country and at every opportunity in front of the Minister of Finance. The association of business and professional people of Canada has spoken out for its membership. That association has said "Abandon the budget, Mr. MacEachen. Abandon the budget before the small business sector in this country is essentially eliminated." I will have more to say about that in a moment.

But I think it is fair to ask what can be done. Often we are criticized on this side of the House for simply trotting out a list of problems and disappointments and concerns we have, without offering solutions. Let me suggest a number of solutions that would assist the small business community.

First, the government should introduce a program that will result in a reduced interest rate for a Canadian borrower. There is no recovery program that can be introduced that is worth anything in terms of any economic recovery without a reduction in those particular interest rates. I hope that when the Minister of Finance returns from his discussions with his colleagues in Europe he will have news for us. Also I hope he will have admitted that inflation is being fuelled by high interest rates and that the way to fight inflation is first to begin a process of reducing those rates.

The need for working capital is something of which the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism is well aware is a difficulty. I encourage him to work with his colleagues to introduce changes to the Small Businesses Loans Act which would provide an opportunity for working capital, particularly in critical sectors that the Government of Canada could identify for support. I beg the Minister of State for Small Businesses to lobby his cabinet colleagues to bring the development component back into the Small Business Development Bond.

This was a tragedy which the Minister of Finance laid upon the small business community of Canada when he took development out of the small business bond and said, "Here is a welfare program for small businesses." When the development aspect of that particular program was removed, the dreams and hopes of many small business people was also removed. The government should put development back into the small business bond.

Where is the small business financing review? We have now waited about two years. The minister of state has promised that it was about to come with recommendations on how to improve the situation for small businesses in the country. Again I urge the Minister of State for Small Businesses to provide the small business community of Canada with that review so that it will see what are some of the alternatives. I hope he asks for input from the small business community as soon as it is made public.

Also I ask the minister to co-operate with the Minister of Finance and to meet with the chartered banks of Canada so that they can do what they say they would like to do with the small business bond. This was to be a program to assist needy businesses and needy farmers. All of us as parliamentarians know that small business and farmers are simply unable to take advantage of the program. The banks are refusing to co-operate, with perhaps one exception of all banks operating in Canada. The ministers must approach those banks and say that it is mandatory for them to co-operate on this particular program.

Also I ask the minister to consider altering the Small Businesses Loans Act to provide emergency short-term borrowing opportunities for businesses having difficulty. There are some real emergencies out there. When we talk about thousands of bankruptcies in the first part of this year, let alone receiverships and closed businesses, there are some emergencies which must be dealt with quickly. I suspect the Minister of State for Small Businesses will be appearing before the House shortly, asking for an extension of the Small Businesses Loans Act for at least another year. Let us look at an amendment to that particular act to provide emergency capital for the small business sector.

What about the procurement policies of government? We are not holding our breath any longer waiting for the megaprojects, but there are projects which are proceeding. Let us have effective procurement policies, which will assist the small business sector. The existing procurement policies do not necessarily assist the small business sector or Canadian manufacturers but often provide for the foreign manufacturer who has an outlet in Canada as a source into megaprojects. Of course this is something the government could change very quickly.

Let us reform the Federal Business Development Bank. One thing which puzzles the small business community is what assistance is available in this area and that area, if any. Of course, small business people are often shunted from one department to another, from one sector to another. It is very difficult for the small business person who is out there struggling from dawn until dusk to make a few dollars to try to keep his business going. He does not have days on end to spend running around from government department to government department trying to find out what programs are available.

Therefore, the government should consider remodelling the Federal Business Development Bank to make it more sensitive to the needs of the small business community and perhaps to act as a clearing house for at least all federal government programs, if not federal, provincial and local government programs. It could be sort of a one-stop shopping centre for small business people looking for programs which might be able to assist them.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): I announced it this afternoon.

Mr. Riis: There is need for more venture capital. These are difficult times, but despite the difficult economic climate in the country, individuals and firms out there are expanding and trying new ideas in the telecommunications, transportation and exploration fields. They have difficulty obtaining much-needed venture capital or high-risk capital. Of course, this is where the government could play some role in providing assistance.

We found out today when inquiring into bank profits that some of the chartered banks of Canada have a significant portion of their capital lent out to only one company. In some cases it is as high as 30 per cent, 40 per cent, 50 per cent and even 75 per cent. There are some exceptions where 100 per cent of the capital in certain banks is lent to one business. We must ask how much money is available to small businessmen, farmers and persons seeking mortgages, if 75 per cent is lent out to one particular company. It is a very serious situation, something of which the Government of Canada should take notice and take steps to limit. The Inspector General of Banks indicated a guideline of 50 per cent to only one company, whereas in the American banking system the ceiling is 10 per cent to one company. This is the kind of situation at which we must look very carefully in order to provide an opportunity for funding and financing to the small business sector of the country.

Another area in which the government could play a much greater role is assisting the small business sector in marketing its products overseas. I understand the national trading corporation is now on the backburner and is unlikely to see the light of day. Perhaps the government could use that kind of model to provide an opportunity for the small business sector to market its goods and services in new and exciting areas. It is very difficult for the small businessman in Clearwater, British Columbia or in Chase, British Columbia to attempt to open up new markets in the Pacific Rim or to attempt to open up new potential sales in another part of Canada, which might be thousands of miles away. If there is some mechanism which the government could introduce to encourage the development of new marketing opportunities, it would certainly be an appreciated gesture in the small business community.

There are many areas upon which one could elaborate as to ways and means in which the federal government could assist the small business community. It could send out a signal to the community saying that it understands the role it plays and that it appreciates its role. The government could say, "Here are the ways in which we plan to assist and nurture you in developing and expanding your enterprises." But the government stands back and throws up every hurdle it can, trying to create an atmosphere of discouragement, disappointment, frustration and anger. This is not what the country requires. The small business community requires leadership to provide a sound and stable economy. That is the best news which the small business community could receive.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, this is the third occasion in perhaps a week when I have had an opportunity to speak on related subjects, in each case arising out of the suggestion of the Tory opposition that the government was inadequate in all its policies and almost always pointing to the budget as the single cause. I have heard very little in terms of any real suggestions from the Tory party except to get rid of the budget.

I have talked with many small business people who are very unhappy about certain provisions in the budget. Some people worry about some provisions; other people worry about other provisions. But I do not know of any small businessman who said to me that the budget is the real problem. The small businessman who is having real trouble is not in trouble because of the budget. He is in trouble because of interest rates and the general world economy. He rates this first, and he rates second the difficulty he is having with the Canadian banking community. Only as a third cause does he come down to the budget. Basically, if the small businessman is having trouble he is not paying taxes. If we see the budget as the main problem, how can we solve it when the small businessmen say that the budget is not the centre of the problem?

When the opposition was in power for nine months, it adopted, believed in and subscribed to a notion which was put forward by the large business community, the banking community, the Chamber of Commerce and others, that high interest rates were necessary in order to reduce inflation. Monetarism was the situation we were in and we had to stay with it.

I recall asking the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who was the minister of finance at that time, why our real interest rates in Canada, that is the prime rate minus the inflation rate, was 5 per cent or 6 per cent when the American interest rate was negative. He said that we need high interest rates because our inflation rate will go up. He said that in the House. I have not heard anyone in this party suggest in any fashion that high interest rates must come down even though the bankers are now suggesting this. For instance, the president of the Bank of Montreal stated that two weeks ago.

I have some difficulty understanding the general theme of this debate because it seems to deal with the problem at a rather superficial level by singling out the budget as the main problem. The opposition seems to suggest that if the budget is defeated all the problems would be solved. I cannot see that as an answer.

The solution which was suggested by the NDP was that we could have lower interest rates by implementing a form of exchange control which would prevent money from leaving the country. I do not believe that is a feasible proposition.

I would like to comment on a proposal which should be carefully considered. It involves letting the dollar drop to 75 cents, which I think is essential and should be done. However, speaking in broader terms, I would like to discuss what I would perceive to be happening today. During the late sixties and particularly during the seventies we had learned to expect as almost normal an increase in growth rates in Canada by 5 per cent or 6 per cent, such as was happening in many other parts of the world. Although the growth rate was very high in that period Canadians and people in other countries of the western industrialized world accepted it as a normal occurrence. Subsequent events, such as the general energy situation with the long and short-term shortages, the cost of oil from OPEC nations and environmental problems, made this type of growth rate almost impossible, to the point that we cannot expect this growth rate to happen in the future. Now we can only expect moderate growth rate as a reasonable possibility over the next ten or 20 years.

I recall that during the mid 1960s, when I was a principal of a high school in Thunder Bay, we were experiencing a very large growth period. There were many students coming to us, which required the construction of more schools, and there was a constant demand for teachers. We were attempting to hire teachers regularly and it was a major problem to get qualified people in our schools. I remember that the school board indicated to me that it wanted to double the size of my school—which had approximately 1,200 people—in order to accommodate the students coming into the system. Even at that time I thought that small was beautiful and I strenuously objected to having my school enlarged. I attempted to convince the school board that I did not want the school to become any larger.

To my dismay, I found that the demography was such that we were very rapidly seeing a decrease in the number of students coming in. This caused me to reflect upon the situation. In 1970, the supply of pupils to high schools in Ontario suddenly dried up. The demand for teachers and the tremendous growth in the system no longer existed. We should have foreseen this possibility and dealt with it as a country, as a province, as a city and as a school. As was described in a book called "Limits to Growth", we were in a time when high schools in Ontario suddenly found that not only was there no increase in the number of students, the number had, in fact, started to diminish. Teachers were angry because they felt the state was out to get them. There were strikes and many other problems, which caused tension in the school between teachers and the community. This situation lasted from about two to four years. I came to this job in 1972, but this tension persisted until 1976. Suddenly it dawned on the teachers and others involved in the system that this was not a plot but was actually happening. The growth rate which they had grown to expect, of a 7 per cent to 10 per cent increase in students per year, was no longer there.

I believe that the chagrin, tension and other reactions of people in my community and many other communities was totally avoidable. When I looked back at that situation I thought that I was fortunate in foreseeing the end of this demographic growth, albeit accidentally. I thought that there must be some other approach which could have been taken to alleviate the end of this growth era which would have been better than suddenly ceasing school construction or cutting teachers back when you were attempting to hire them six months previously. I figured that there was a much more sensible way to approach this problem.

I recall considering in the early 1970s such things as work-sharing. For example, if we need fewer teachers, instead of firing them and cutting back we could have a certain number performing particular functions on a full-time basis and we could hire some teachers on a part-time basis and have a phase-out retirement plan at the same time.

What I was attempting to do was to understand the nature of this very massive change which occurred to the people in that community and many others. This is small part of the whole picture, but I submit that the entire problem we are facing today was predictable in 1976 when our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was ridiculed for suggesting that this was, in effect, what was going to happen, that there would be some very major changes in our social structures which would cause us to do many things which we would not be very happy about. There would be much chagrin and strife in our society. When the Prime Minister predicted this, he was almost booed out of the country because it was very disturbing to say that the free market system was not working.

It was unfortunate that that particular wording was used because everyone singled out that particular area. The House was in a great state of confusion because the Prime Minister has said that. We should have listened to what he said at that time because that is what is happening today. It is unfortunate that the factor which has slowed things down or has brought about much of this chagrin has been high interest rates. I can certainly sympathize with those people who saw monetarism as one approach to the problem. Of course, one of the problems of the modern era and one which we have to learn to live with is the fact that there are not simple answers and that macroeconomics do not work. It was formerly very effective in the sixties. One could say that the Keynesian theories work well. If they did not work perfectly, it was because we did not time them properly. But we can basically stimulate the economy by fiscal arrangements and some minor monetary arrangements. We can either slow it down or stimulate it. We are fairly effective at it.

As I say, the only reason we failed, or were not as effective as we could be at solving some problems, was that the timing was not right. But there was a workable system. However, these solutions are not working any more. We have stagflation, which is a contradiction in itself, and we have the use of the monetary system which creates more problems than it is worth. All of this is going on, but I maintain that we are in a new era and those solutions just do not work. That is why I do not understand why people are so critical in saying that the government must resign if it tries something which does not work. It is because there are no simple answers. We are living in a very difficult, very fragile, strife-torn era. It is not easy to govern at this point and we will have to move in several different directions.

I am suggesting that I do not like high interest rates because they are indiscriminate. They may not affect me because I happen to have a 25-year mortgage on my house, but someone else who has a five-year mortgage may, all of a sudden, find that his interest rate has risen from, say, 10 per cent to 17 per cent, 18 per cent or 19 per cent, doubling his mortgage payments and hitting him very hard. If something else happens, for instance, if he loses his job, then he could very well lose his home because he does not have sufficient equity. Therefore, there are some very massive problems affecting people, and they are indiscriminate.

In the period between 1970 and 1976, I would have liked to have seen an easing of the school problems so that they would not turn into a complete revolution. In 1976, the Prime Minister and others were ridiculed for their views as to how to ease these problems, but these views should have been considered by others.

In the two or three minutes left to me, I very strongly suggest that we should adopt the policy being followed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), which is to push very hard at the summit for some real relaxation in the U.S. interest rates. Of course, at the present time the American real interest rate is ridiculous. It is about 14 percentage points. Ours is about 6 per cent. This is one way that we must move. Certainly, what the Americans do is very important. However, I suggest the other way is to consider very seriously the study commissioned by the Financial Times and announced about three weeks ago. It requested Data Resources, Informetrica and the Conference Board to find out what would happen if the dollar were pegged all of a sudden at 75 per cent. The results were quite interesting. There were several approaches to their findings, but their basic conclusion could be summarized in the idea that somewhere along the line we would likely have a 12 per cent prime bank rate, we would likely create about 100,000 new jobs and we would likely have an increase of about 2 percentage points in inflation. I am not suggesting this is something we should do or that we should wing low if we do not have to.

We must put enough pressure on the U.S. government. When I refer to the U.S. government, I do not simply mean the Reagan government. I am referring to support from those other Republicans, and certainly the Democrats, who find Reaganomics to be an extremely unworkable system. I think we must put pressure on and support those people who are also moving in this direction in the United States, because the U.S. government is in very bad shape. There are some major things happening in the United States, particularly in the area of disarmament, and it is affecting that government. It is quite possible that the government will have to reduce its defence spending for many reasons, and one of them would be to reduce its deficit. Do not forget that when the U.S. deficit of $130 billion or $140 billion is compared to our deficit on the ratio of 10 to 1, it is really about twice as drastic because the American savings rate is about half the Canadian savings rate. That makes a very large difference when considering a deficit of $140 billion. Our savings rate over the decade has run about 10 per cent or 11 per cent, while the American rate has been about 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Therefore, a $140 billion deficit, even though it is only ten times our deficit, is significantly more dangerous to the U.S. economy than to our economy.

If we are not successful in the next month or two or three, and if President Reagan and his government refuse or make no effort to lower interest rates, and if the Federal Reserve Board does not move on the situation at all, then I suggest that we must try to move independently. I do not think we can do anything with exchange controls as the two economies are too closely related. We must let the dollar drop.

I think there are other things we must consider. It seems to me that it is very important in our society today that we carefully ease into this different period to which we are moving and that we ensure that the people in our society who are most harmed by high interest rates and other problems are protected. We as a government must be more solicitous toward these people. We must find ways to ensure that people can get work. I strongly commend the efforts of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who has embarked very seriously on a program of work-sharing. When it is not possible to create the jobs that our society would like or needs then it may very well be necessary to share the work available among a much larger group of people.

I could go a long way toward discussing work-sharing because I think work-sharing has much to do with productivity. Most areas in which there is work-sharing have shown great increases in productivity because people tend to be more productive over a shorter period of time. I gave a long speech on this in 1976 or 1977. To me, the work I had done indicated that this would be a very successful approach to the entire problem. I am saying that we must do some things which are quite different from the kinds of patterns we followed in the past. I am always disappointed that the New Democratic Party is not trying to look at some of these new features which must be considered as we change from a very large-growth society to a moderate-growth society.

Therefore, in closing, I would suggest that the debate in this House might well concentrate more on the massive changes which are occurring. We must consider how the people in the country and in the world can be brought into this new era with a minimum amount of discomfort.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder why this government has a minister responsible for small business at all because it is clear from the actions of the government since it came back to office in 1980 that it believes in only one thing, that big is beautiful. The government operates like its mandarins do. Its mandarins understand big business because big business and big government play in the same kind of sandbox. They operate the same way. The concepts of big business are the same concepts as those of big governments. During the period 1980-1981, a disaster befell small business. Under the government's Canadian ownership program, its nationalist ownership scheme, the banks have been directed to finance massive take-overs of business through bank borrowing. Tonight I want to show some of the things that have happened in terms of bank borrowing which has starved small business of funds. It has caused home owners, fishermen, farmers, small business people generally to pay rates of interest described in this House tonight as totally usurious. At some point rates of interest have been 5½ per cent above U.S. rates, rates that no business, small or large, can carry. Certainly small business, which does not have the resources of big business, has no possibility of carrying those rates of interest.

In the period since October, 1979, the end of the bank year, bank loans of over $5 million amounted to $16.9 billion. Large loans today are $39.6 billion, an increase of well over 100 per cent. What happened to relatively small loans? According to the bank statements, in October, 1979 small business loans under $1 million, which we will call relatively small loans, were $16.9 billion. After three years, with inflation running at 10 and 12 per cent, those loans now amount to $20 billion.

The banking system has been directed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who is responsible for the banking system under the Bank Act, to take over all foreign companies in the country and to finance huge movements of capital. Massive bank loans have been made to large corporations which would normally go out on the market and borrow money in the stock market. However, they have borrowed with bank financing, literally starving small business, and have bid up interest rates unconscionably. The federal government, which is responsible for banking, has allowed that to happen.

Large businesses have borrowed most of the $20 billion for Canadian businesses that Canadians now owe foreigners in foreign currency liabilities. The effect has been a disastrous run on our currency.

In order to maintain any sense of parity on the dollar, over the past year we have had to pay between 2 per cent and 5 per cent more than anybody in the United States, certainly higher interest rates than most other OECD countries.

This has been a deliberate policy, which was damaging to small business by a federal government that claims, as the minister claimed when he sent out a quarter million pamphlets on the budget to small business people, and he claims every time he sends out bumf with respect to the Federal Business Development Bank, economic development loans, grant programs and various other things he has in his quiver, to show he is there to help small business. He has been organizing the financial affairs in this country in such a fashion as to starve small business of money and force up interest rates.

What is the purpose? It is because the mandarins like the mandarins. They like to look after their own type. Over the past two years they have used the credit system in this country to damage seriously those people who want to run a store, small factory, fish plant, trawler or a farm, those people on the main streets in Canada about whom the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) spoke.

We know how the system operates in favour of large corporations. There have been massive borrowings by Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and other corporations which have got into trouble. In that kind of situation, the banks somehow all of a sudden, have a non-interest bearing loan. They come to the assistance of those companies and so does the government. Somehow, somewhere, they convert some of those loans into an equity of some kind. They do some kind of reorganization, something to protect those large loans. The government helps them. However, what does the government do for the small fellow who must close or be sold out under power of sale? What does the government do when the banker tells some people they must double their collateral, provide their wife's signature, and give a mortgage on their home or the bank will close them down? Are those loans put on hold? Are they put to the side? Are these classified as non-interest bearing loans? Are the loans negotiable? Not really. These small businessmen do not have the clout. We have a situation where the government has not taken its responsibility seriously with respect to interest rates and the way lending is carried out to ensure the total community has an opportunity with regard to the resources, savings and other things that should be available to it.

I was hoping to have more time to speak about the budget. The minister said he sent out a quarter million pamphlets saying how wonderful the budget was for small business. We know the answer, and we have known it ever since budget night, November 12.

A 12½ per cent tax was placed on dividends. Capital cost allowances were cut in half. A sale or exchange was a deemed sale or purchase for cash. Capital gains continued to be treated as a capital gain, even though most of the gain is inflationary. We saw what was done to the Small Business Development Bond. The program was gutted. No businessman I know of who did not already owe money to the bank has been able to take advantage of the new small business bail-out bond, the welfare bond authorized in that budget.

There has been no effort by this government since taking office to come to the aid of small business people and make capital more available, keep interest rates down and provide an incentive and an opportunity to grow and build.

This country was built on small business by people who were entrepreneurial. They went out and did things. They created. These people were imaginative. They worked 16 hours a day, seven days a week. They mortgaged their homes and borrowed from friends and relatives just to get an operation going. Many times they did not succeed. How could they succeed when the government deliberately organized the financial affairs of the country so that they have had it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—REQUEST THAT COMPETING FIRMS BE REIMBURSED FOR EXPENSES. (B) REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to deal with an issue which I think has unfortunately put the office of Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of our country into a very bad light indeed. One always hopes in political life, amongst people who are interested in the welfare of our country, that our Prime Minister will occupy a position in which he will give leadership in terms of matters of integrity, in terms of the kind of actions that are illustrated throughout his government and the party that supports him in the leadership of a government and the leadership of a country.

I am sorry, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to have to rise tonight in the adjournment debate to indicate my very grave dissatisfaction with the way in which the Prime Minister has responded to some very serious questions about political patronage, about cronyism, about the awarding of contracts to friends of the Prime Minister, as opposed to following the well-established rules for tendering, which should be followed by any government worth its salt. As a result, I think it is important for us to have a quick look at some of the background of this particular situation.

Hon. members will know that the matter of the design of the Washington embassy in the United States originated by the government establishing a selection board. That selection board consisted of seven members chaired by a retired and distinguished diplomat, Mr. A. Edgar Ritchie. There were two representatives of the Royal Architectural Institute, two representatives from the Department of Public Works and two representatives from the Department of External Affairs. About 2,000 firms were canvassed with respect to submissions to be made in connection with the design of this project; and 318 architectural firms responded. In the final analysis, 71 firms put in submissions.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that these firms spent considerable moneys in terms of submitting these proposals, on the basis that they would be processed through the selection panel and that there was some legitimacy to this whole process because it had been established by the government.

The information that we have is that the 71 firms in question spent some $10,000 each on their submissions. Of the 71 firms that made submissions at some considerable expense, 11 firms were finally selected by the selection panel. These 11 included Mr. Erickson.

In November, 1981, this group was invited and in fact visited Washington to discuss the plans for the new embassy and to observe the site. They were subsequently brought back to Ottawa for a discussion with the panel at extensive and additional expense. The information we have is that the minimum expense for those last firms was somewhere between $40,000 to $60,000 each. An average of $50,000 would give a total of $550,000. That, added to the $710,000 spent by the 71 firms orginally, means there was an expenditure of over $1.25 million dollars, in terms of the firms offering themselves for this particular important project.

After considerable discussion with the final 11, the panel reduced that number to four finalists. One of the four finalists was deemed to be outstanding. Zeidler Roberts of Toronto were judged by the panel to be outstanding, the other three firms being in the running but not in the same category.

The chairman, Mr. Ritchie, has stated with respect to Mr. Erickson: "Erickson was unlikely to do as good a job as the four finalists in this case." That was his considered opinion.

Mr. Smith: Nonsense.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That was on the basis of expert opinion, expert advice that was received. We find now, Mr. Speaker, that the information we have now is that Mr. Erickson in fact knew some two years ago that he was going to get this job, notwithstanding the charade with respect to the selection process.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that we now have a very serious situation when the Prime Minister puts out a very misleading release in respect of the appointment of Mr. Erickson, in which he suggested that the selection panel had indicated that Mr. Erickson was somehow a selection of that panel—which was quite contrary to the fact.

What the Prime Minister is telling us now is that he alone is the expert in terms of choosing architectural expertise and design and that his opinion should prevail over that of the selection panel. If he was so dissatisfied with the conclusions of the selection panel, was he saying that it was incompetent? If he was not satisfied with its recommendations, why did he not refer the matter back to the panel for further consideration? He should have done that if it was the opinion of the government that none of the four finalists really qualified.

We have a situation where the fix was in before the panel had a chance to come to a decision. The tendering process was a charade. The Prime Minister was pork-barreling. Apparently there are new rules and unless there are compelling reasons to the contrary, favouritism prevails.

The people of Canada will not put up with this, Mr. Speaker. They have had enough of the Prime Minister and his extravagant ways, and now he is wasting public money on political patronage. I say that the time has come for the Prime Minister to accept the proposition of an independent investigation into the conflicting statements that have been made in this matter. If he refuses, then I say that indicates that he is afraid of the findings that an independent commission might make. If he has nothing to be afraid of then he should allow an independent investigation into this matter. I thought that anyone in this country who by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means defrauds any person, whether ascertained or not, of any property, money, valuables or securities was guilty of an offence. I thought that was still the law in this country.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would urge the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to read a recent article which appeared in Fortune magazine in which architects in North America were discussed. In that article Mr. Erickson was described as the foremost architect in North America. Any suggestion that he is not eminently qualified to carry out this assignment is pure and utter nonsense.

We live in a parliamentary democracy. One of the fundamental and basic premises of a parliamentary democracy is responsible government, and that means that the incumbent prime minister and ministers are responsible for what the government does.

It may well be that officials might decide to set up a panel which, as was done in this particular instance, will assess the technical competence of architects and suggest a number, all of whom would be qualified from a technical point of view, who are eligible to do the job. That is what was done in this case.

In the final analysis, as the Prime Minister has repeated again and again in the House, he and the cabinet take responsibility for the decision that was made.

It is correct that the bureaucrats, or whatever you want to call them, said that 11 architects were competent to do the job. Mr. Erickson's firm was amongst that number although it was not ranked first. The hon. member is quite correct about that.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, we live in a parliamentary democracy in which the cabinet and the ministers take responsibility for the decisions they make. Mr. Erickson is the most honoured architect in Canada; in terms of awards he wins hands down. I think it is reasonable that a prestigious building on a prime location in Washington should have the best that we can produce.

Mr. Erickson has disputed the statements made in this morning's Globe and Mail. I think it is quite irresponsible for the hon. member to go off on a witch hunt based on that report.

We should all be proud that a greatly honoured architect has agreed to do this building. It was obviously a wise decision and one of which we will be proud for many years to come.

BANKRUPTCIES—POSITION OF PURCHASERS OF INSURANCE FROM COMPANIES PLACED IN RECEIVERSHIP. (B) REQUEST THAT PURCHASERS BE TREATED AS PREFERRED CREDITORS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, most people who hold insurance policies on their business premises, their homes, their cars and even their health and their life assume that in the event of a claim the policy will be valid, that the insurance company will be in business and that their claim will be paid.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is not necessarily so because events over the past year reveal that insurance company failures can leave policyholders seriously exposed. In other words, policyholders who regularly pay their premiums and renew their insurance on a regular basis, who presume they are covered and expect their claim to be paid in the event one is made, are really in effect living under a false sense of security. In this context I addressed questions to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) last Friday as reported at pages 17166 and 17167 of Hansard where I drew this to the attention of the minister. He indicated that he was aware of the situation and that certain actions on his part were going to take place. The reason I brought it to the attention of the minister is that I have a case which has been brought to my attention where a statement of claim has been filed and the policyholder has just been advised that because his insurance company is being liquidated there will not be sufficient funds left over to cover his claim. The insurance company involved is Pitts, and my constituent received a letter dated March 2, 1982, from the law firm of Milner & Steer. Before I quote from the letter, I would once again point out that while this is a small claim, it could be a very substantial amount. Nevertheless, the principle remains the same. Milner & Steer are solicitors for Pitts Insurance Company, and the letter says:

> You may have recently heard that Pitts Insurance Company has been wound-up, pursuant to a Court Order granted by the Supreme Court of Ontario at the request of the Federal Superintendent of Insurance. The Superintendent has been appointed as the Provisional Liquidator of Pitts, and the Clarkson Company Limited has been appointed to act as the agent of the Provisional Liquidator. In turn, The Clarkson Company Limited has retained the Toronto law firm of Goodman & Goodman to look after the legal aspects of the winding-up.
> We have recently been advised by Goodman & Goodman that the assets of Pitts Insurance Company are insufficient to provide full coverage under the various policies of insurance. In this regard, we have been instructed to advise you that, in the event that Mr. Mapletoft's claim is successful, Pitts will not be in a position to pay 100 per cent of the claim. Accordingly, Beverly Crest Motor Inn Ltd. will be responsible for any deficiency.

That pretty well sums it up, Mr. Speaker. There are other companies which have gone bankrupt and rumours of more. The issue of solvency of insurance companies, and the effect upon the policyholder in the event of bankruptcy, is a matter which has been raised before the appropriate standing committee. Away back in December of 1981 the minister gave essentially the same answers to the committee that he did in the House. Really, the expected corrections or changes in the legislation are not anticipated to be brought forth until the fall. Basically, what he is doing here is waiting for recommendations from the Superintendent of Insurance. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the parliamentary secretary, what about the losses faced by the policyholders? They bought an insurance policy in good faith and expected their insurance company to honour any legitimate claims. Why are policyholders being asked to settle their own claims?

In a matter where two companies went bankrupt, Pitts and Strathcona, there was an agreement by the insurance companies to establish a fund in the case of Strathcona so that all unsettled claims would be paid. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government has a responsibility here to provide the kind of climate that will preserve the integrity of the insurance company business. Surely it is inappropriate for people who in good faith buy insurance policies to have nothing more than a worthless policy when they come to make a claim. People in business buy this protection and expect to have the security. The superintendent is charged with the responsibility of monitoring. When he deems there is financial trouble, he is supposed to recommend and take the necessary corrective action. But as I said before, in the case of Strathcona, a consortium of insurance companies agreed to honour all claims. However, that is not the case with Pitts. Why is there a double standard?

The minister and the superintendent have indicated that some changes will be made, such as amendments with regard to reserve margins of capital and security, insurance treaties, tighter controls in the case of re-insurance, and the general rating of financial standards. But that will not solve the problem we face now, I believe we face two problems now. They are the losses and the confidence of the insurance industry and insurance companies. What is needed as well is to give the superintendent more than simply an advisory and a monitoring role. As it now stands, he cannot act until it is too late. He also needs broader disciplinary powers beyond fining or winding up. There is considerable doubt that the superintendent reacted quickly or firmly enough in the case of Pitts and Strathcona. In my view he needs to be mandated to assist those failing companies vigorously. Confidence and security are vital to the insurance business, and the superintendent must have the power to ensure that stability and solvency exist. As a matter or principle, I think the minister should move very quickly to implement these changes without delay so that the integrity of the insurance system can be preserved and upheld. Immediate steps should be taken to save any losses that may accrue to those policyholders who now have claims that are not being settled.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to this question. As the hon. member is aware, we have a very strong record in the insurance industry in Canada. In the last 50 years we have had only three federally incorporated insurance companies that have experienced this type of financial difficulty. Unfortunately, in 1981 there were two. That is three companies in 50 years so I do not want the public to think that if they go to an insurance company and put their premiums there that they are at risk in suffering grievous harm. Our insurance industry, as I shall conclude later, is on a very sound financial footing. I think our record over the years indicates this.

The fact is, as the hon. member has pointed out, we have had two failures. In the case of Strathcona, friends of the company rallied around to make sure that the people who placed their money with that company were made whole. In terms of Pitts, it has been a different matter. Pitts has not been able to meet its obligations. But the remaining assets are going to be reserved for the policyholders. As we are aware, the provisional liquidator is still in the process of investigating what type of proceeds will go to those policyholders. The preliminary indications are that they will receive a substantial sum. But it would be inappropriate for us to guarantee or undertake immediate action on this particular matter until we have all the facts in hand. I can assure the hon. member that this question is under very active investigation and we hope to realize as much from the assets as is possible.

The reasons for the failure of these two companies in the past year relates to low premiums and very healthy competition in the market—maybe excessive competition—and also a record number of claims. Nevertheless, in spite of this climate which prevailed last year and which led to the bankruptcy of these two companies the industry as a whole, because of its investment income, had a profit. This year, in order to correct this measure, the companies are increasing premiums. The superintendent is still undertaking his investigation. This investigation will continue. We are still looking for concrete ways to help resolve these problems in the future. I can assure the hon. member and I can assure Canadians that this is a matter of great concern to us and we look forward to proposals on how we can proceed in the future.

THE JUDICIARY—STATEMENTS ON CONSTITUTION MADE BY BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT JUSTICE. (B) JUDICIAL COUNCIL INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on March 8, 1982, the Canadian Judicial Council ordered a formal investigation into certain complaints lodged by Federal Court Trial Justice George Addy about the conduct of Mr. Justice Thomas Berger, a respected judge of the British Columbia Supreme Court, a ten-year veteran of that court.

The basis of Mr. Justice Addy's complaints were certain statements which were made by Mr. Justice Berger, both in The Globe and Mail and in a speech at the University of Guelph which was subsequently reported in that journal. In those particular speeches Mr. Justice Berger was critical of the constitutional accord which had been arrived at between the provincial premiers and the first minister. Mr. Justice Addy's letter was addressed to the Judicial Council and was dated on November 18 and November 19. In that letter he indicated that in his view Mr. Justice Berger's conduct was, among other things, worse than sleeping with prostitutes or drunk driving.

Just a few days later the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking on a television program hosted by Mr. Jack Webster, stated, "I just regard this as the judiciary getting mixed into politics and I hope the judges will do something about it". Clearly the Prime Minister was urging the Canadian Judicial Council to take action on Mr. Justice Berger's comments. Mr. Justice Berger stated, "If he had wanted to do this, I wonder why he didn't support the bill when he was there and when it gave Quebec the veto and gave the Indians aboriginal rights; he didn't support us then." As I will show very shortly, that statement is patently false.

The two issues raised by Mr. Justice Berger transcend narrow partisan politics. First, with respect to the question of aboriginal rights, it was Mr. Justice Berger's view that the constitutional accord which had been arrived at failed in the promises that had been made to aboriginal peoples. He stated in his speech at the University of Guelph in November of last year:

> The agreement reached in February this year by all parties in the House of Commons, to entrench aboriginal rights and treaty rights in the new Constitution, has been repudiated by the Prime Minister and the premiers.

He went on to give some history and to say:

> There was, at the end, not one of our Canadian statesmen willing to take a stand for the rights of the Indians, the Inuit and the Métis.

At the end of the article it read:

> This is not the end of the story. The native peoples have not come this far to turn back now. But it is an abject and mean-spirited chapter. No one can rejoice that it was written in Canada.

He spoke as well in opposition to the removal of the veto power for the province of Quebec. On these fundamental questions in both instances ultimately the Prime Minister agreed that a mistake had been made. There was a restoration of aboriginal rights to the constitutional resolution, albeit a qualified restoration, and the Prime Minister has said publicly on a number of occasions since the signing of that package that he would support the restoration of the veto power for the province of Quebec.

We are not dealing with a narrow political issue in the everyday partisan sense. We are dealing with a fundamental fabric of the nation, the Constitution of the nation. Who better to speak out on these questions than Mr. Justice Berger himself, the respected author of the Berger report into the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. The Prime Minister is guilty of the worst sort of hypocrisy in attacking Mr. Justice Berger on this instance when he stood silently by in 1970, for example, when Mr. Justice Freedman supported his invocation of the War Measures Act or indeed when Mr. Justice Berger himself, in September of last year, supported the constitutional resolution as it then was, with its inclusion of aboriginal rights and its respect for the veto power of the province of Quebec.

This is nothing less than a judicial witch-hunt by the 27 most senior judges in Canada. In my view they should be ashamed of themselves for taking part in this rather sordid spectacle. It is one of the most meanspirited and shabby chapters which has been written in the judicial history of Canada for some time. This is only the second inquiry in the history of the Judicial Council. I am sorry that the Canadian Bar Association has not seen fit to speak out on this important question and indeed that Mr. Justice Berger's fellow judges have all remained silent on it. We do not intend to remain silent on this important question or on this fundamental issue. I have called upon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) to make public all documents surrounding this serious allegation and as well to use his powers under Section 40 of the Judges Act to order that the hearing of this particular matter be held in public.

• (2225)

The Minister of Justice can attempt to evade responsibility by saying that the Judicial Council is the master of its own affairs, but under Section 40(6):

> An inquiry or investigation under this section may be held in public or in private, unless the Minister of Justice of Canada requires that it be held in public.

I strongly urge the Minister of Justice to take that step and let the people of Canada see this judicial witch-hunt for exactly what it is.

In closing, I would like to quote from Judge Irving Kaufman of the United States Court of Appeals of the second circuit, a very respected American judge who dealt with this important issue in the New York Times in an article entitled "Judges Must Speak Out". He said:

> In the final analysis, when the public interest requiring that judges share their special expertise is balanced against the risk of a seeming impropriety, the scales tip heavily in favour of expressing one's views.
> The public may remain confident that judges will follow the advice they give to juries: A case must be judged on its own merits, not on one's personal predilections.

He goes on further to state:

> Judges have the duty to speak on matters that affect the judicial system because the public interest cannot be served by silence. Silence is not always golden.

In this case, Mr. Justice Berger was speaking out with courage on a matter of fundamental importance to Canadians, particularly to minorities. Instead of being criticized for that, he should be commended.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, my colleague from the opposition already pre-judged the situation he has been referring to. The Canadian Judicial Council established by the Judges Act consists of the Chief Justice of Canada as Chairman and the Chief Justice, associate Chief Justice and Assistant Chief Justices of each Superior Court in Canada. That council may enquire into and investigate complaints or allegations made in respect of a judge. The Council decided on March 8 to investigate a complaint filed in November 1981 against Mr. Justice Thomas Berger. When the investigation is completed, the Council will submit a report on its conclusions to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

It is of prime importance to know that the Council consists of the most competent justices in this country and that they took the decision to act on the complaint filed against the judge. I am informed that the investigation is the first one to stem from a complaint filed by a person other than the Minister of Justice. The Council has been meeting since 1971, and receives some 30 complaints every year.

It is also very important to know that the Chief Justices who sit on the Council are fully aware of the basic principles of justice and equity that must apply in such investigations. The Judges Act sets the major guidelines pertaining to such investigations and, in addition, the Council also established rules of procedure for the holding of such investigations. In view of the foregoing, the Minister of Justice concluded it would not be appropriate to require that the investigation on Justice Berger be held in public. It would be much better for the Council, which is responsible for promoting high standards of effectiveness and uniformity in the administration of justice within superior and county courts, to make all the important decisions that will lead to the conclusion of this inquiry.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it would be improper to make remarks on the subject matter of the inquiry. The Council must be allowed to deliberate without any interference whatsoever. Everything must be done to ensure that the inquiry and the findings are based entirely on essential principles of Canadian law.

DEMAND FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT PLANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In order to dispel the uncertainty generated by the public dispute between various Liberal cabinet factions over economic policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Government of Canada make a clear statement as to whether it plans to impose any form of wage or price controls, whether it intends to devalue the dollar, and whether it intends to fix interest rates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR ADJUSTMENT INCREASE IN PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In 1919, and again in 1972, Canadian veterans were led to believe that their government would tie their pensions to the average wage of five specific categories of unskilled workers in the public service. Since veterans pensions lag a full $900 behind that average wage adjustment despite adjustments in response to increases in the Consumer Price Index, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the government introduce, without further delay, amendments to the Pensions Act which would grant war veterans a pension adjusted either to the average wage of those five categories of public servants or by the Consumer Price Index, whichever happens to be more advantageous to those Canadians who were prepared to offer their lives for their country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS LAID OFF BY SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Massive lay-offs have taken place at the Sydney Steel Corporation. These lay-offs are the severe blow, not only to the workers and their families but to the whole community of Sydney. These workers' applications for unemployment insurance are being investigated on the question of whether or not the lay-offs were caused by the labour-management dispute or by a lack of orders. While the president of SYSCO, Jack McCarthy, has already testified before a Nova Scotia legislative committee that the lay-offs are due to a lack of orders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration direct his officials to pay immediately those unemployment benefits to which these workers are entitled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last evening the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) advised this House that if the government would only allow the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar to drop to 75 cents, interest rates would drop to 12 per cent. Presumably by following this theory, if the rate dropped to 60 cents, interest rates would drop to 8 per cent, and if the exchange rate dropped to 20 cents, interest rates would drop to 4 per cent, and if the exchange rate dropped to zero, money would be valueless and so no interest whatsoever would be charged. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House deplores any diminution in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar as any devaluation will only certify to the world the disaster in the Canadian economy brought about by this government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALL FOR COMPUTER PROCESSING OF CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The number of people applying for unemployment insurance benefits across Canada is increasing at alarming rates, resulting in increased workloads on staff in Manpower offices. This increased pressure is resulting in increased sick leave, delayed payments because of error, and a declining morale in the Manpower field offices. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the minister responsible for Manpower make an "on-line" computer system for UIC application processing a first priority of his department.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEMAND FOR MADE-IN-CANADA INTEREST RATE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) failed to convince his U.S. counterparts to relax their high interest rate policies at recent OECD meetings in Paris, and that the Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Boards, and the Housing and Urban Development Association yesterday joined millions of other Canadians in calling on the government to take independent action finally, to lower interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House call on the government to abandon its high interest rate policy, a policy which destroyed almost 4,000 jobs every working day last month, and immediately initiate a made-in-Canada interest rate policy designed to put Canadians back to work rather than in the unemployment insurance and welfare line ups.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

STATEMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR SKEENA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Socialist standards of civil liberties, fair opportunity for self defence and just plain decency were again demonstrated in the House on April 27. Although the College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia requested on January 20 and on March 3 that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) put his complaints regarding Dr. William Jory in writing, he chose to ignore those requests and to use the sanctuary the House provides to attack the professional ethics of a medical specialist. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the hon. member for Skeena display his bravery by making a statement outside the House and declare to what degree he had a personal concern for health care or whether, since his father is a physician and was a member of the BCMA Hospital Committee, the hon. member was trying to influence the BCMA elections which were being held at that time.

DEMAND FOR RECALL OF CANDU TECHNICIANS WORKING IN ARGENTINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas Candus can be converted into instruments of war, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House urges the Government of Canada to recall immediately the Canadian technicians who are working on the Candu in Argentina and thus show that Canada is 100 per cent behind Britain in the current conflict.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF LOW INTEREST RATE LOANS FOR FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since November, 1981, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) extended the provisions of the Small Business Development Bond to include unincorporated farmers, there have been some 2,424 bonds approved, but by the government's own figures only 185 in all Canada have been given to unincorporated farmers in financial difficulty. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance re-evaluate the government's position and attitude toward the financial needs of farmers and come up with a real program which will actually help Canada's primary producers get low interest loans.

FEDERAL SUPPORT URGED FOR PORT OF CHURCHILL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, whereas the proposed ports bill legislation stresses economic viability for federally-owned ports moving toward greater autonomy, and whereas the Churchill port could be economically viable if icebreakers were employed to lengthen the shipping season and if the Canadian Wheat Board would route more grain through Churchill, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That the federal government demonstrate a firm commitment to Churchill by doing the following: employ icebreakers for an earlier and longer shipping season, channel more grain through the port, upgrade rail lines, and basically get off its ass and do something.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Salvadoran journalist Victor Regalado has been ordered deported from Canada based upon a security certificate signed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), which certificate contains information that Mr. Regalado has no opportunity to rebut, and in view of the fact that both ministers have refused to appear before a hearing of the Immigration Appeal Board to explain their reasons for this travesty of justice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That this House condemn the refusal of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to appear before the Immigration Appeal Board, that it order them to appear forthwith before that board, and further that Victor Regalado be granted landed immigrant status in Canada.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, as the head of government. Is the government giving consideration now, or at all, to the imposition in any form of wage or price controls?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to read the comments made by the Minister of Finance before a standing committee of the House last week, if I remember correctly. In answer to a question from one of the members during consideration in committee, the Minister of Finance clearly and unequivocally indicated that he had no intention of imposing such controls.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister a second question. Is the government giving any consideration now, or at all, to pegging interest rates in this country in any way?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member would do well to refer to the speech made by the Minister of Finance yesterday to his counterparts at the OECD in Paris. He would realize that the Minister of Finance, on that occasion, reiterated the Canadian government's intention of carrying on with its fight against inflation and invited his OECD counterparts to do the same, in order to provide for a steady and gradual recovery of the economy. In this context, he also said that if the nominal interest rates prevailing in the United States are compared with the real rates, there is a very substantial margin, which could be used by American financial authorities to relieve the pressure of current high interest rates on all industrialized countries.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: The Acting Prime Minister seems to be struck dumb. I will try once again.

EXCHANGE RATE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, is the government giving any consideration now, or at all, to the devaluation of the Canadian dollar?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, it is clear from the hon. member's question that he reads the papers and has an ear for rumours.

However, speaking for the government, I can inform the hon. member straight away that the government has no intention, and that it has never been the intention of the Minister of Finance, to whom I was talking a few minutes ago, of devaluating the dollar.

The House will recall that at the First Ministers' Conference held last February, some of the provincial premiers had suggested this course of action. At the end of the conference the Prime Minister made it clear that a decision to devaluate would have a disastrous effect, and the government's policy has not changed in this respect.

[English]

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROLS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have one last brief supplementary question for the dumb Acting Prime Minister. Is the government giving any consideration now, or at all, to the imposition of foreign exchange controls in any form?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think I should answer that question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: The reason I did not answer the previous questions is that the Minister of State for Finance is obviously much more informed about the thinking of the Minister of Finance and follows these matters much more closely than I. For example, I spent a good part of the morning with the Premier of Nova Scotia, which the Minister of State for Finance was not required to do.

However, to answer the question, I would like to state, as the Minister of State for Finance did, that nothing the Minister of Finance has said can be taken to mean that there is any shift in the government's anti-inflationary policy.

Mr. Nielsen: What about foreign exchange controls?

Mr. Pepin: Furthermore, our policy with respect to the Canadian dollar remains the same. No devaluation of the dollar is being contemplated. I am obviously reading from a document which I received from the Minister of Finance. He has confirmed this to us today from Helsinki where, I am sure everyone knows, he is attending the International Monetary Fund meeting.

• (1420)

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, now that we have the Acting Prime Minister talking, perhaps he could answer a further question from myself. The Minister of State for Finance has indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Who is "myself"?

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance has indicated that the government's priority is still to fight inflation. Would the Acting Prime Minister reconcile that statement with the statement made by the Minister of State for Economic Development only yesterday in the other place, where he said that there will be "a higher level of emphasis on the unemployed than has been the case in dealing with inflation"? What is the government's chief emphasis? Is it to fight inflation or to relieve unemployment?

Some hon. Members: Both.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should look up the basic principles of economics. He ought to know that as soon as we are able to eliminate the climate of uncertainty in our economy by reducing inflationary expectations and reducing inflation rates, the resulting economic climate will favour increased investment and economic recovery, not only on a short term but on a sustained basis. Therefore, by fighting inflation, we are pursuing a policy of economic growth.

[English]

RATE OF INFLATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, almost in exasperation, may I ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who perhaps has a better grasp of the stark facts which describe the existing situation in Canada. As inflation, contrary to what the Minister of State for Finance has been saying, was 11.4 per cent in January, 11.6 per cent in February, and 11.6 per cent in March, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicate why we are continuing, notwithstanding the high unemployment in this country, to have such inflation at a time when the Americans have at least brought their inflation to a negative level in the month of March?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I think that instead of the hon. member asking me his fatuous question, he might try to explain why, in spite of the supposed reduction in inflation in the United States, its interest rates remain so high, to the extent that all the western countries are very concerned about the impact of those policies on our economy and the economies of the other western countries.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS DRILLING IN OFFSHORE AREAS—PUBLICATION OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING ON ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Two years ago, I believe, as the minister knows, the Ixtoc well in the Gulf of Mexico blew over three million barrels of oil into environment. Despite the best technology in the world, it took seven months to cap it. On Monday, outside the House, the minister announced a five-year, $600 million gas and oil exploration program in the Mackenzie Delta and in the Beaufort Sea, two thirds of the costs of which will be carried by the Canadian taxpayers. The majority of that drilling will be in extremely sensitive offshore areas where it will, without question, disrupt wildlife and fisheries. According to the government's own sources, should there be a spill or blowout there is not the technology in Canada to deal with such a disaster.

Since the minister promised on June 18 to make public an environmental memorandum of understanding on the offshore, why has it never been made public?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, would the hon. member specify the memorandum of understanding to which he is referring? If he is referring to a specific agreement which has been signed, I will certainly be very happy to make it available. I am sorry I do not have the exact reference.

Mr. Fulton: The memorandum of understanding is the understanding between EMR, DIAND, the Department of the Environment all the different departments which are responsible for monitoring the environment. Perhaps the minister could respond to that.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the minister. As the minister knows, the taxpayers will carry two thirds of the costs of this five-year drilling program, and the public has a right to know that thorough, scientifically sound steps are being taken to protect the environment. These steps are not being taken now, as the minister knows, and provisions of Bill C-48 are being mobilized for the oil industry to get the rigs out there and to get the drilling going, but concerning protection for the environment, the baseline studies and so on have not been done and are not being done. I wonder if the minister would explain why the advisory committees provided for in Bill C-48, of which he is very well aware, have not been set up.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would be very happy to make available the documents to which the hon. member refers. I think they may take the form of an exchange of letters between the ministers, if what he was referring to was an understanding between the departments.

• (1425)

As far as the latter point is concerned, I want to draw to his attention that the Government of Canada has the highest standard in terms of environmental protection offshore and in the Arctic. The fact is that for several years there has been exploration in the Arctic and offshore in Canada, and there has not been a single incident in terms of environmental hazard or accident—not one. This is testimony to the quality of the environmental concerns, the inspection, and the high standards that have been set by the Government of Canada to protect that very fragile environment. It is a concern that this government has very much at heart. The companies are required to take a number of steps with regard to the environment.

In addition, as late as Monday of this week, the Government of Canada released a study by the environmental assessment review panel dealing with the Beaufort Sea situation. All the information we have is made public as soon as it becomes available. I can tell the hon. member that we have been exploring for over ten years and there has not been a single incident or accident. We have been able to ensure that the environment is protected. That is testimony to the quality of the work being done by the officials in the government in that regard.

ACCESS TO FUNDS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, it is nice to know that there are a lot of words in Bill C-48 and that all these things are being done, but the memorandum of understanding on environmental matters has not been made public. The minister promised that last June. No advisory committees have been set up to look into environmental matters in the Mackenzie Delta or the Beaufort. The minister sent me a letter last week, in which he said the following:

> The environmental studies revolving fund is an integral part of the Canada Oil and Gas Act. Its purpose is to provide the regulatory agency, the Canada Oil Gas Lands Administration (COGLA), with the information base for its decisions regarding hydrocarbon exploration and development.

I see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is here now. However, perhaps the minister can tell us why it is the $15 million revolving fund for environmental studies is inaccessible to native groups, concerned scientists and the public. They cannot get at those moneys. Would he tell us today how groups can get hold of that money and where they go to get it, because those studies should be under way now, not two or three years after the drilling?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member made a number of statements in his question. I will take the time to answer only some of them. He says no advisory body has been set up. I just told him that on Monday of this week a report by the environmental assessment review panel on environmental protection in the Beaufort Sea area was made public. Therefore, there are things taking place. Documents are being made public. I suggest to my friend that he is wrong in some of the assertions he is making.

HOUSING

ADMINISTRATION OF CANADA RENTAL SUPPLY PLAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. The minister will know that the executive of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada is currently meeting in Ottawa. In a number of meetings with the various regional caucuses of this House they have made the case that the funding available under the Canada Rental Supply Plan, the $7,500 interest-free loan, is not being taken up by builders because it is not enough to close the gap between the economic rent for an apartment unit and the market rent. Consequently the proposition cannot be a viable one. Does the minister intend to make any changes to the regulations regarding the administration of the Canada Rental Supply Plan?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. It gives me the opportunity of saying that I have, on two occasions this week, met with representatives of HUDAC and their executive.

• (1430)

I also take the opportunity to indicate to the hon. member that the Canada Rental Supply Plan which speaks of the $7,500 per unit grant is advertised as a target mark. In the program which has been distributed and made available to interested developers across the country, we have said to them that we will not turn these down, that in any application which requests a grant larger than $7,500 the developer will have to indicate what the cost factors are that require a grant for a higher amount. Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate as well at this time that since the program has been advertised, which was roughly three weeks ago, the corporation has received approximately 2,000 inquiries, and we are now in the process of dealing with individual applicants to see if some of those projects will get started.

CONSTRUCTION OF SINGLE FAMILY UNITS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister keeps referring to this as a grant, which I think is part of the problem, because it is not a grant. He knows full well it is a loan that has to be amortized by the builder and consequently adds to his cost of financing.

I would like to change the subject, Madam Speaker, and ask the minister what the government intends to do with respect to the disastrous situation prevailing in the housing industry with regard to single family units. The minister knows that the seasonably adjusted rate right now is 146,000, and that appears to be seriously inflated. The projections for the year, by all the forecasts, including CMHC, show there is going to be a disastrous situation of only 135,000 starts. There is going to be a shortfall, taking into account the shortfall for the last three years, of 211,000 units. That will drive up the cost of housing even more because it will reduce the supply of housing.

The minister knows that housing is the most labour-intensive industry in the country. I would ask the minister what recommendation he has for the government or for the House, what advice he has for the building industry in Canada, which is on the verge of collapse unless the minister is prepared to act.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question gives me an opportunity of pointing out that the $7,500 per unit interest-free loan under the grant program is just that, it is an interest-free loan repayable at the end of 15 years. So he is correct, it is not a grant; but it is of economic value to the developer in making a proposal.

In terms of the support of this government to the single family sector, Madam Speaker, I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that Bill C-89, passed approximately a month ago by this Parliament, made it possible for innovations in terms of new mortgage instruments with insurance for those instruments by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgage insurance fund. I understand, for example, that a presentation was made to all caucuses, including the Conservative caucus, for a shared equity mortgage proposal. That is a very interesting and innovative mortgage proposal which I think will have an important effect on the market.

Finally, Madam Speaker, we believe that inasmuch as this government put forward, for example, $350 million towards supporting rental construction, inasmuch as we have put $30 million within the last few weeks towards rehabilitation, there is a role for the provinces to play. We must not forget that the provinces and the federal government traditionally and jointly have shared the support for stimulus to the industry. I would be very interested to see how those governments, such as the government of the province from which the hon. member comes, faced with its new budget, are going to assist the industry; and what, for example, the government of the province of Ontario, of which I am a resident, will do in its budget tomorrow to assist supplementing housing.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT INCREASE IN PENSIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The minister will know that some 130,000 veterans who are receiving war pensions find themselves $900 behind the composite group of the lowest five categories of civil servants in terms of pension payments. How can the minister justify allowing veterans to fall so far behind? Will he immediately introduce amendments to Section 58 of the Pension Act to provide that pension increases reflect the principle of parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of public servants, or the increase in the CPI, whichever is the greater, and that this principle be entrenched in the Pension Act?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is in fact asking two questions in one. It is true that as a result of the latest adjustment in the five categories beginning April 1, in fact the basic rate of pension has fallen behind. Over the last three years the cost of living adjustment has enabled the basic rate of pension not only to remain equal to the five categories but in fact to run slightly ahead of the five categories. As a result of the latest round of negotiations and the new contract which began on April 1, the basic rate of pay has in fact fallen behind. We are looking at that at the moment.

In relation to incorporating the suggestion brought forward by the veterans' association and presented to the standing committee last night, I have a copy of the brief and I am certainly prepared to consider that amendment.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF PRESENTATION OF LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that Bill C-202 incorporating a one time only increase in the basic pension rate, was passed in 1973. The matter of entrenching yearly increases has been under review ever since then. Veterans are forced to petition the minister cap in hand on a yearly basis. There is no need to make veterans grovel for increases which should be given automatically. Will the minister give the House a firm date on when such amendments will be presented to the House for debate?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to say now. I received the brief only last night from the veterans association. I certainly will be prepared to indicate to the House as quickly as possible, upon consideration of that brief, when the amendments might be considered.

ENERGY

EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Monday, May 10, the Government of Canada announced a $600 million oil and gas exploration program in the Beaufort Sea region. Could the minister inform this House when the project is likely to get under way? Could he tell the Canadian people when they can expect jobs to be created from this new project?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member may know, $600 million is involved in this particular project.

An hon. Member: Over 50 years?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The money is expected to the spent over a five-year period.

The company has filed what we consider an excellent Canada benefits program in terms of millions of dollars going into supply of goods and services by Canadians, and employment generation for hundreds of Canadians, starting very soon and stretching over this particular period of time. Details of the Canada benefits program, in terms of job opportunities and training, we can make available to the hon. member through the standing committee any time they wish to look at it.

May I say, Madam Speaker, that I would see this package of $600 million as a very great stimulus indeed to the entire economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly it is a stimulus to the industrial sector which is so important. May I conclude by saying that, for all the doom and gloom that the official opposition has been talking about, why don't they start talking in an upbeat fashion about Esso Resources agreeing to $600 million in development in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a dead beat government.

PARLIAMENTARY REPORT ON BATTERED WIVES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I have an upbeat question for the minister responsible for the Status of Women. The minister knows that the parliamentary report on battered wives was tabled in the House yesterday. It states that one in ten husbands beat their wives regularly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: These women—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: I do not think it is very much of a laughing matter, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: I don't beat my wife.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I do not think it is a laughing matter. I would like to say that the battered wives in these cases rarely have any refuge. They have no safe place to go with their children. Police who are called on an emergency basis rarely respond to domestic calls. Charges are not laid in the courts, and there are very few instances of prosecutions in our judicial system.

• (1440)

I want to ask the minister responsible for the status of women what she intends to do immediately in a major way—we do not want just reports, research and conferences—at the federal level to protect battered women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I too am not amused by the derision which greeted the statement that one in ten women is beaten. I do not find that amusing, and neither do the women of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Erola: The hon. member is quite right in asking what can be done at the federal level. I intend to pursue with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, procedures which we think the federal government can take to offer the kind of leadership which will lead to an increase in the number of transition homes. Currently this matter comes under the Canada Assistance Plan, and we will review that program to see how we can open it up to provide some sort of leadership. There certainly are not enough homes in this country. I have taken that up with the people who attended the conference with me during the past day and a half. It is one of the recommendations I intend to pursue.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I note that the minister is again passing the buck to the provinces and not getting at the federal responsibility.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT WIFE ASSAULT BE TREATED AS CRIMINAL OFFENCE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is on the same subject and is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that witnesses told us there are only two convictions in every 10,000 incidents of violence, will the minister take action to require that the federal courts and law enforcement agencies treat wife assault as a criminal offence? Will he also intensify training programs for the RCMP and other police so that they will enforce the law to protect battered women?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will do so, but I can inform the House that I already have done so. The RCMP recently introduced a training program, at the depot, on family violence. Young cadets are being trained to deal with family violence problems. I can point to the positive side of the alarming statistics about family violence because, while those statistics are alarming, they indicate that more and more cases are coming to the attention of police and are being dealt with in the criminal justice system in a way that they were not before.

PUBLIC WORKS

AWARDING OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The president of the Royal Architectural Institute has called the selection process used recently for the Washington embassy a political sham. He wrote to the minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Prime Minister about that matter. Only the Secretary of State for External Affairs has replied. He says he will sit down with him and check the barn after the horse has gone. However, the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for these matters in the government, has not replied.

It is the usual practice that the Minister of Public Works makes a decision when his selection team reports to him on whom it recommends. In this particular case, did the minister make the decision that Mr. Erickson be appointed, despite the fact that four others were recommended? How did the matter get before the cabinet, and did the Prime Minister ever speak to the minister about the selection?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member gets his information that I have not replied to the president of the architectural society. As a matter of fact, on Monday of this week I spent approximately an hour meeting with the president of that society as well as the head of the engineering society of Canada. We discussed the letter. I gave a response. I indicated what the practices of the Department of Public Works are. Quite frankly, I am quite surprised that there would be that kind of misinformation, even in the media, in view of the fact that I personally had spoken with the person referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, perhaps the minister has a hearing problem. I asked him if he made the decision, whether the Prime Minister spoke to him, and how this decision got to the cabinet. My information comes from Mr. Miller, who spoke on CTV this morning and said that he has not heard from the minister and has had no reply to his letter. The minister makes Tammany Hall smell like a rose garden.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, is the minister prepared to promise that there will be no further prostitution of this process in the future, and is he prepared to make available to the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence his assistant deputy minister, Mr. Desbarats, and other people involved in this decision, so that we can get first-hand from them just what happened in this particular instance? Would the minister answer some of those questions?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if anyone has a hearing problem I respectfully suggest it is the hon. member who has asked the question. Indeed, his question was a repetition of questions asked of the Prime Minister in the House. I, of course, adopt the Prime Minister's answers, and I indicate further that cabinet discussions and procedures are matters for the cabinet. Because he at one time enjoyed those responsibilities, the hon. member must know that.

Mr. Crosbie: What a hopeless turkey. It is your department.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

McDONALD COMMISSION REPORT—UNPUBLISHED CHAPTERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and it is about the McDonald commission. In the light of Robert Winters' story in this morning's Le Droit I wonder if the minister would be prepared to tell the House what was the distribution of the unpublished six secret chapters of the McDonald commission report.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the chapters to which the hon. member is referring are those which I withheld when the rest of the report was made public. I withheld them in order to give attorneys general, both provincial and federal, a chance to consider whether they should exercise their discretion to lay charges against any of the individuals named by McDonald in that section. I wanted to withhold them simply to avoid sensational publicity which might prevent a fair trial from being held in any particular case. When charges were laid against individuals, the withheld portion of the McDonald commission report was made available to those individuals or to their counsel.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, it seems to me that large portions of the secret chapters and transcripts might, in the present circumstances, be made available to the Canadian public.

MANDATE OF SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. On October 28, 1977, the solicitor general of the day, now the Minister of Communications, said in this House:

On March 27, 1975, the cabinet defined the mandate of the security service of the RCMP—

If that mandate is new, it has not been explained to anyone. Will the Solicitor General tell us whether that mandate is still in force now and what in general terms is the difference between that mandate and the mandate in force prior to March of 1975?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as to the request of the hon. membler that the withheld portions of the McDonald report be made public, I agree that they should be made public, but I do not think they should until prosecutorial decisions are made by the attorneys general concerned as to whether they intend to lay charges, and until trials which might result from those decisions have been completed. However, it certainly is my intention that Part V and Part VI of the McDonald commission report eventually be made public.

As to the second part of the hon. member's question, the mandate which preceded the present mandate was not in writing and was subject to interpretation and reinterpretation. The published report of the McDonald commission describes completely the basis on which the security service operated before that mandate was made a cabinet directive and tabled in this House. I might add that that directive, which was tabled in the House, is still the mandate of the security service and is respected by the security service.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECTS RESULTING FROM CLOSURE OF ONTARIO CATTLE BUYER'S BANK ACCOUNT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The minister may have heard that a number of cattlemen and several livestock auction barns have been seriously hurt by the recent actions of a bank in shutting down the acccount of an Ontario cattle buyer. In the days just before the Royal Bank shut down this account, the cattle buyer had entered into a number of transactions which will not be honoured by the bank. The net effect is that the bank's position has improved considerably at the expense of the third parties and uninvolved cattlemen and livestock barns. Is the minister aware of this situation and, if so, what does he intend to do about it?

• (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am very aware of it because a constituent of mine lost about $160,000 on the sale of his fed cattle. That marketing system is what I call antiquated, and it has been used in Ontario, as the hon. member knows, for many years. I am told the Ontario government was aware of some of these things taking place more than two weeks before this person was actually put into bankruptcy and the bank seized all his accounts. Again the farmers end up losing, and I am sure the hon. member agrees with me that they should not be the ones to lose because they sold their cattle through an auction mart in good faith, but the cheques they were given in payment were returned marked "insufficient funds".

Mr. Mayer: Sit down.

Mr. Whelan: The person who sold the cattle had a very good record in the community, but the one he sold them to had a very bad record.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, there is something antiquated in the House but I am not really sure how to describe it. I think it has more to do with the minister's responses to questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF UNSECURED CATTLE SELLERS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, the reason this could happen is because of a major flaw in the Bank Act. Section 178(6)(b) gives the bank legal entitlement to the assets of those unsecured cattle producers.

Is the minister prepared to sit down with his cabinet colleagues and arrive at some amendment to the Bank Act so this will not be possible in the future, because there are a number of other livestock producers in a similarly vulnerable position. Secondly, will he or a representative from his department sit down with the Royal Bank, and representatives of the auction barns, and the cattle producers, to work out some equitable compensation for the affected producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that this is a free-market system working to its fullest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: It is his party which wants to deregulate everything. The first private member's bill amending the Bank Act ever to become law was one which I sponsored many years ago to protect primary producers against that kind of thing. The banking interest have since found ways to get around that. We have already met the bank officials, and our officials have been in contact with some of the cattle producers who have lost money. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex has made representations because he has cattle producers in his constituency who have already been in touch with him. We are assisting them in hiring solicitors, etc., because it was referred to by—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Whelan: —a farm broadcaster in our area as modern day bank robbery, and I agree with him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN STATUS OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT EXAMINATION

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Tranport and is with regard to the possible change of the status quo in the use of Dorval and Mirabel airports. Because such a change could involve government expenditure in excess of $200 million, and industry expenditure in excess of $175 million, can the minister assure this House that before any decision is made he will seek the advice of independent experts unconnected to the original Mirabel decision?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Watson: Can he also assure the people of Montreal and the Canadian public generally that there will be a genuine public process of consultation before he submits this matter to cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, how I wish we had an expert in Canada or elsewhere who would be capable of ruling on this complex issue with all its economic and psychological factors, an expert to whom everyone would listen and who would make everyone respect our decisions. However, my hon. friend is surely aware that this area requires wide-ranging expertise, and that no one expert has all the answers. I have consulted a number of people who can claim to be experts, but opinions vary, even in my own department. I have also met with community leaders, who very often gave me contradictory advice within one and the same representation. These meetings are continuing, and it may well be that we shall have a public process of consultation on the decision I shall recommend to cabinet, but the decision has not yet been made.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUERY RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the only legal battering which should be allowed in this country is the battering of cabinet ministers, particularly the Minister of Transport.

Yesterday, Madam Speaker, one Jack Horner, ex-MP, ex-Conservative, lost Liberal in the wilderness, said he saw little future for passenger trains, branch lines, and the Crow rate. Since the minister is considering appointing this gentleman as chairman of Canadian National Railways, and the policies he talks about are opposed by most Canadians, is the minister still keeping this gentleman's name on his list for appointment as chairman of the CNR? Is he still considering putting a coyote in charge of the chicken coop?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already said, on being questioned by the press, that Mr. Horner's name was on the list of those who might be appointed as chairman of the CNR.

Mr. Crosbie: Another Erickson.

Mr. Pepin: I am surprised by the question, particularly its nasty implication, because Mr. Horner was for a good number of years a distinguished member of the House committee on transport, and even its chairman. I think he did remarkable work, and I thought that was generally recognized by those of us who give ourselves the title of politician and claim at times to have a bit of expertise in matters like transportation. The hon. member who asked the question is a good example of those who claim a lot of expertise in matters of transportation.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the minister lauds that gentleman's experience in transport matters. That was when he was a Tory. It was this same gentleman who, in 1976, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, said to a CTC hearing that the Super Continental passenger train should be abandoned. By the way, it runs through the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is an expert in long questions.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, does the minister think it is appropriate to consider appointing as chairman of the CNR a person who wants to implement the Conservative user-pay policy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know what to say because there are so many implications in the question. However, my hon. friend, who claims the title of expert and most probably deserves it, should not postulate that anyone who disagrees with him loses the title of expert.

THE ECONOMY

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON CONTROLS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board who made a speech to the Conference Board of Canada in Toronto last night, when he stated that controls have more to commend them than fiscal and monetary expansion. Does the minister imply that controls are under consideration by him and his cabinet colleagues at the present time?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the particular reference has to be taken in the context of the whole sentence, which I would invite the hon. member to read.

Mr. Crosbie: Give an honest answer for a change.

Mr. Johnston: That is a very honest and straight-up answer. The issue of wage and price controls was touched upon in the course of the text and rejected as not being an appetizing alternative, as the Minister of Finance has already done before a committee of this House.

• (1500)

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE IMPLEMENTATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the minister also pointed out that he was disturbed by the fact that Canadian unions were not acting as good citizens, compared to their American counterparts, and he indicated that he would be taking a tough line on further salary negotiations in so far as the unions that come under his jurisdiction are concerned. Can the minister indicate whether he is advocating some form of guidelines as a means of implementing that so-called tough line?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that the hon. member for Vegreville should ask that question. I was just looking at the numbers and I see that in 1981 the federal civil service salary increases were less than all other sectors. In the first quarter of 1982 the percentage is 11.5 per cent, which is lower than all other sectors, private and public. I would suggest that we have always taken a fairly tough line, but a very fair position as well.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KAPLAN—MOTION OF HON. MEMBER FOR BURNABY UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I wanted to raise a question of privilege on a matter which was raised by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) under the provisions of Standing Order 43 before question period today.

I gave short notice to him, and he is not in the House. I would be prepared if you would agree—

An hon. Member: He has come back.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, at two o'clock today, the hon. member for Burnaby stated that the Minister for Employment and Immigration and I had refused to appear on subpoenas issued by the Immigration Appeal Board in the Regalado matter being heard now in Montreal.

Mr. Crosbie: Exactly.

Mr. Kaplan: I am rising because, in fact, we have not refused to appear on those subpoenas. When we received them—I will speak for myself—we both took the same course. I sought advice from the Department of Justice. The department suggested that if I had information to give—

Mr. Nielsen: That is debate.

Madam Speaker: I am very sorry. I recognize the minister's frustration but he is obviously continuing the debate and he may not do that under the guise of a question of privilege.

NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I would like to reserve my right to raise a question of privilege at a later date once I have had the opportunity to look at the record to see what the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) said. It seems to me that he was twisting the truth.

Madam Speaker: I do not know how many times I have to repeat to hon. members that they need not give notice in the House. They should give me notice in writing if they have a question of privilege. If there is a question of privilege, the hon. member should know it immediately. If he feels his privileges are affected, he should know that right away. At any rate, after the hon. member has looked at the "blues" and if he thinks he has a question of privilege, I will see his notice.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT—EDUCATION LEAVE

Question No. 2,816—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of the Environment at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $445,619 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. (a) and (b) The department has developed a set of guidelines regarding educational leave which are in accordance with Treasury Board Policy, chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions Governng Education, Training and Development, including Subsidization, and which are described in the Department Personnel Policy and Procedures Manual.

2. Approximately 4 per cent of the $445,619 was necessitated because of the acquisition of new equipment.

3. Nil.

4. Our records indicate that between 12 and 15 per cent have permanently left the public service.

DIAND—EDUCATION LEAVE

Question No. 2,821—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $379,275 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) and (b) Education Leave is based on Treasury Board guidelines, Personnel Management 110-5, Human Resources-Education, Training and Development and Personnel Management Manual 525-2. In addition, employees in the education group. e.g., teachers, principals, are considered according to the criteria set out in Sections 19.01 to 19.10 of the group's contract.

2. Nil.

3. One hundred per cent of the education leave was necessitated by the department's requirement for improved management and policy making capability.

4. All employees granted education leave in the past three years are still employed in the public service.

STATISTICS CANADA—EDUCATION LEAVE

Question No. 2,841—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Treasury Board for Statistics Canada at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $22,331 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. On the basis of Statistics Canada's 1979-80 Public Accounts submission for education leave, volume I, page 13.6:

(a) The guidelines used to assist management in determining the educational leave status, both the Terms and Conditions for departmental personnel are "Educational Leave Policy and Procedures", chapter 7, section 3, Statistics Canada's Personnel Manual.

Education leave authority is exercised personally by the Chief Statistician of Canada or his designate. Educational leave proposals are supported by senior management within the area where the individual is employed.

The granting of education leave and the scale of assistance are determined in light of the following criteria: level of university degree sought; necessity-usefulness of studies both to employee and employer; employee's capacity, potential, past work and scholastic performance; commitment to return to Public Service employment; cost.

(b) All skills acquired were needed by Statistics Canada on a permanent basis.

2. The $22,331 reported in Statistics Canada's 1979-80 public accounts for educational leave was not necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment nor the need to have new skills in order to use equipment.

3. There was no education leave approved by reason of job redundancy.

4. Fifteen per cent, two of the 13 people granted educational leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,855—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Labour at page 32.18, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $27,596 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): (a) Nil.

(b) Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual, Chapter 360—Hospitality.

(c) The information on hospitality requested in this question is not readily available. We do not maintain records of hospitality payments by nature or by class of recipients. There are approximately 1,000 travel claims on file for FY 1979-80 plus a number of petty cash payments. To assemble payments by recipients would mean a search of each individual travel file plus a review of all petty cash claims.

HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,874—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the health and social services program at page 32.23, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what services does this entail (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (d) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (e) of the $9,867 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) The services referred to involve the extension of hospitality at federal/provincial or federally sponsored meetings.

(b) Hospitality was extended in the form of formal meals, food and drink at official receptions and light refreshments during meetings.

(c) The department made only one payment in excess of $2,000. This payment, totalling $2,469, was made to the Department of Public Works for refreshments, meals and services provided on behalf of the department at government conference facilities. The balance of expenditures were paid to hotels, restaurants, lodges and other such organizations for similar services.

(d) The department is subject to the policy on hospitality found in chapter 360 of the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual.

(e) The amount of $9,867 is broken down on a percentage basis as follows:

(i)	Foreign visitors	5 per cent
(iii)	Provincial public servants	50 per cent
(iv)	Federal public servants	20 per cent
(xii)	Canadian health professionals	25 per cent

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,885—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the accommodation program—capital at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the 909 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) and (b) The increase in other types of services in 1979-80 is a result of different reporting methods.

Reported in Public Accounts	1978-79	1979-80
Other types of services	$ 2,621	$26,452
Catering	1,130*	—
Hospitality	781*	1,207*
Snow and garbage removal	677*	1,626*
Sundries	33*	161*
Fees to Public Service Commission	—	1,200*
Training educational services	—	17,796*
Membership fees	—	680*
Other real estate fees	9,628	3,782*
	$12,249	$26,452

* Included above in other types of services

The comparable figure for 1978-79 is $12,249 which reflects an increase in 1979-80 of $14,203. This can be attributed to the training services carried out in 1979-80 related to the solar design course.

(c) Payments over $2,000 were all in the training educational services category and were as follows:

Dr. S. Karaki—Fort Collins, Colorado, $ 5,733; Multiple Access Computer Group Don Mills, Ontario, $ 7,200; I.P. Sharp Associates Ltd. Ottawa, Ontario $ 3,663.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—REAL ESTATE SERVICES

Question No. 2,891—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the land management and development program at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other real estate services (a) how does the department explain the 5,750 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Land Management and Development—Vote 40, standard object 04, other real estate services

Expenditures	1978-79	$ 10,205
	1979-80	597,005
Increase		$586,800

(a) The increase in expenditures over 1978-79 can be attributed to a special program which was carried out at Mirabel for the peripheral lands. This program included the surveying, measurement and registry of each of the lots held by PWC at Mirabel. It was undertaken to ensure that the number and size of each lot agreed with the records held by the city of Mirabel.

(b) The types of services included under other real estate services include surveying, measurement and land registry although the costs are reported in total.

(c) Individual payments over $2,000 are as follows:

Order Paper Questions

DIAND—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,924—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development under the northern affairs program at page 32.16, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department account for the 1,605 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The expenditures under the "Other Services" classification increased because of the amendments to the reporting requirements for professional and special services as specified by the Public Accounts Instruments Manual. Previously, aggregate payments for a particular service classification equal to or exceeding $2,000 were listed separately. The Public Accounts Instruction Manual now requires that if the aggregate payments for a particular service classification are not equal to or more than $25,000, the payments will be included in the "Other Services" classification. Also, under the "Other Services" classification, only recipients of payments equal to or exceeding $25,000 are now listed, whereas previously, this was required for recipients of $2,000 or more.

(b) Other services include expenditures for the following: accounting services $1,336, hospital services $71, other health services $19,508, welfare services $324, laundry dry cleaning and related services $6,836, other real estate services $4,923, storage and warehousing $7,384 and membership fees $1,666.

(c) Since the Public Accounts Instruction Manual requires that a list be maintained of all individuals or organizations whose aggregate payments meet or exceed $25,000, a list of each contract of value more than $2,000 is not readily available. This information would have to be requested from our regional offices and the cost in time and money does not warrant it, in light of the specified requirements for public accounts.

DIAND—TRAINING OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 32.15, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training of public servants (a) how does the department explain the 37 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The 37 per cent increase in training costs is attributable to the department's efforts to support improved financial accountability and to train employees in native culture. In order to improve financial accountability, managers and financial staff were trained in the new budgetary control and expenditure accounting systems across the department. In addition, the procedures relating to the structure of contribution arrangements to bands were strengthened and made more precise; this also involved training of regional and district staff. In terms of cultural awareness, new native awareness workshops were offered throughout the department.

(b) As a result of the training, more effective financial systems and procedures are in use. Employees in the department have a better appreciation of the culture and aspirations of the client groups. Both of these contribute to improved program delivery in the department.

(c) The requirement for public accounts was amended to keep only records of individuals or organizations who were in receipt of payments of $25,000 or more, instead of $2,000 or more. The requested information would have to be obtained from our regional offices, and the cost in time and money is not warranted in light of the specified requirements in the Public Accounts Instruction Manual.

NATURAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 2,934—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council at page 32.31, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to catering and quartering services (a) how does the council account for the 44 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (d) for what reason did the council require these services?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is concerned, the answers are provided below.

(a) The 44 per cent increase in expenditure incurred over that in 1978-79 is accounted for in three ways:

(1) An additional cost over 1978 was incurred when a reception and dinner were hosted by the president for university officials and the members of the council.

(2) The increases in cost for the grants and scholarships selection committees were a result of inflation and represented an additional cost of 26 per cent over 1978.

(3) An over-all increase in hospitality was a result of inflation and additional committee meetings and represented an additional cost of 12 per cent over 1978.

(b) Type of service: (1) luncheons, food services for working groups; (2) luncheons, food services—hospitality.

(c) Amount paid for each service: (1) luncheons, food services for working groups, $13,550.21; (2) luncheons, food services—hospitality, $8,445.45. Contracts over $2,000 and to whom it was paid, Public Works Canada (Government Conference Centre): $6,722.75.

(d) These services were required for food services and hospitality to committee members and other officials.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,944—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Finance for the Auditor General at page 32.13, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Other types of services, $78,196.

(a) Services entailed are as follows:

(i) Building Security Services; (ii) Preparation of course material for comprehensive auditing training program; (iii) Department of Supply and Services contract administration service fees (e.g. printing, supplies); (iv) membership fees of Professional staff to accredited Associations; (v) exchange under Career Assignment Program.

(b) Contracts over $2,000:

(i) Canadian Corps of Commissionaires, Ottawa, Ontario, $44,871; (ii) Carleton Productions, Ottawa, Ontario, $6,530; (iii) Department of Supply and Services, Hull, Quebec, $5,821; (iv) nil; (v) Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, B.C., $7,515.

DPW—UNINSURED LOSSES OF EQUIPMENT

Question No. 2,973—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Public Works at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, how does the department explain the loss of $2,314,953?

2. Under what circumstances was the equipment lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

3. What use does the department make of the equipment?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. Of the loss of $2,314,953 reported, $298,349 was for salvage and repair costs for Dredge, DPW No. 31, which sank off the coast of P.E.I. in October, 1978, and $2 million was attributed to the loss of Dredge, DPW No. 422, which sank off the coast of Newfoundland in June, 1979. The balance of $16,604 covered other miscellaneous losses, each of which was less than $1,000.

2. (i) Dredge—DPW No. 31 (a, b and c). The Transport Canada casualty investigation has determined that the sinking was attributable to three causes: (1) The dredge was not properly designed for towing, (2) The dredge was not properly ballasted while under tow, (3) The dredge was being towed too fast. The Tugmaster and mate of the tug towing the dredge were held responsible and the department suspended them for two and one months respectively.

(d) The dredge was raised and the hull was rebuilt to make it suitable for coastal towing.

(e) A book of "Master's Standing Orders" is being prepared which will, among others, contain instructions on how to reduce the risk of recurrence of this type of losses.

(ii) Dredge—DPW No. 422 (a, b and c). The cause of this sinking cannot be established definitely since the vessel is on the sea bottom in deep water. The Transport Canada casualty investigation report speculates that a fracture may have been experienced in the way of a spud or the new crane platform, the latter being, in their opinion, the most likely.

(d) The dredge was replaced by converting a surplus drill boat into a dredge with a reduced capacity at a cost of $44,980.

3. The dredges lost form part of Public Works' Atlantic Region's fleet and carry out dredging operations mainly in support of the fishing industry.

DIRECTIVE ON TRAVEL

Question No. 3,589—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does page 13 of chapter 370 of the Administrative Policy Manual issued by the Treasury Board, dealing with travel, state in part that: "long journeys shall not be considered justification for authorizing a higher standard of air travel. The comfort and speed of modern aircraft and cost considerations dictate that the most economical means available shall be used, e.g. economy class . . . "?

2. Did the Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Michael Pitfield, write a letter marked "Confidential" dated November 18, 1981 to Mr. A. E. Gotlieb, Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, stating in part: "However, review of the policy indicates that it would be appropriate within its expressed parameters for the ambassadors to Paris and Washington and High Commissioner to London to use first class air transportation on official business within the limitations set in the Treasury Board directive . . . " and, if so, how does the government justify this statement with the directive on air travel issued by the Treasury Board dated September, 1980?

3. Did Mr. Pitfield authorize first class travel to Paris, Washington and London for those of ambassadorial class but not to Bonn and Tokyo and, if so (a) for what reason (b) was Mr. Pitfield enunciating a government policy that (i) Bonn and Tokyo are not as important as Paris, Washington and London (ii) the ambassadors to Bonn and Tokyo are not as important as Canada's representatives in Paris, Washington and London?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. Section 3.2.3. of chapter 370 of the Administrative Policy Manual, based on a December, 1975, Treasury Board decision, relates to the comfort of employees on travel status and considerations of cost. The authority, issued in January, 1981, to utilize first class travel contained in Treasury Board Circular No. 1981-8 (T.B. 775270) is based on the recognition that the inherent workload of certain senior public service positions is such that incumbents might reasonably be expected to have to work while on travel status. The facilities in first class, both on the ground and in the air, are clearly more conducive to effective work resulting in cost effective travel time and have been authorized on that basis.

3. Following discussions between the Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, and the Clerk of the Privy Council, it was agreed that within the expressed parameters of the first class travel policy, it was appropriate for the Ambassadors to Washington and Paris and the High Commissioner to London to use first-class air transport.

(a) The special work requirements involved in the positions of Heads of Mission in Paris, Washington and London, as reflected in the fact that persons assigned to those positions have generally been of former ministerial or deputy ministerial rank, led to the judgment that first class travel was appropriate in their case.

(b)(i) No, (ii) no.

MR. A. E. GOTLIEB

Question No. 3,590—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. A. E. Gotlieb officially appointed Ambassador to Washington on December 1, 1981 and, if so, on what date was (a) his name unofficially submitted to Washington for approval (b) he first made aware that he was being considered for the position and asked if he was interested?

2. Did Mr. Gotlieb discuss use of first class air transportation with the Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Michael Pitfield, and, if so (a) on what date (b) was it discussed after he was aware of his pending posting to Washington and/or after reports of his possible appointment to Washington appeared in the news media (c) for what reason?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. (a) September 29, 1981. (b) In the case of potential appointments as Head of Post, the initial sounding out of candidates is done orally on a most informal basis. Because of the foregoing, the exact date on which Mr. Gotlieb was first made aware he was being considered for the Washington appointment is not known.

2. Yes. (a), (b) and (c) As Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Gotlieb raised the question of first-class air transportation with the Clerk of the Privy Council on many occasions, some long antecedent to his selection as Ambassador to the U.S.A., as part of his concern as Undersecretary for the terms and conditions of service of officers assigned to particularly demanding positions.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-111, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, the members of this House are probably wondering why, since we have already had an opportunity to consider a borrowing authority bill at second reading, we are coming back today with another borrowing authority bill for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, we are resuming second reading of the borrowing authority bill because during the debate on the previous bill, some hon. members expressed their concern that the bill contained three parts, namely, borrowing authority for the government, a number of amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the third part, a number of revenue tax measures relating to petroleum and natural gas.

As usual, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) gave careful consideration to the representations made by hon.

members. There were meetings of the various party critics and myself and also meetings of the government, official opposition and New Democratic House leaders, and we finally agreed to split Bill C-93, so that the House could consider a separate bill on borrowing authority and another bill that would relate to the taxation aspect, namely, the amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the series of amendments regarding petroleum and natural gas revenue taxes. These negotiations also resulted in an agreement on the period of time the House would allocate to consideration of the respective bills, at all stages, including, second reading, with consideration in the standing committee as far as borrowing authority is concerned, and consideration in Committee of the Whole of the bill providing for amendments to the Excise Tax Act and petroleum and natural gas revenue taxes, and finally, approval in the House of these bills. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall briefly what I said on second reading of Bill C-93. The purpose of this bill is to provide for supplementary borrowing authority for the government to cover the financial year 1982-83.

The highlights of Bill C-93 now Bill C-111 which we are considering today, have already been discussed. It is perhaps useful to recall that the bill is seeking borrowing authority for $6.6 billion, and that all unused borrowing authority granted under the Borrowing Authority Act, 1981-82, and in excess of $3 billion has expired. This means that the balance of less than $3 billion will be carried over to the new fiscal year. The new borrowing authority of $6.6 billion being sought corresponds to budgetary and non-budgetary requirements for 1982-83 as set forth in the budget brought down in the House last November by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

In addition to covering requirements set forth in the budget speech, as is customary, we shall require some room to manoeuver in order to deal with any contingencies that may arise as a result of exchange transactions or other eventualities. In past years, this contingency fund has remained at about $3 billion and has usually been added to the total borrowing requirements presented by the government. This year, however, the $3 billion or what will be left of the 1981-82 borrowing authority if the balance is less than $3 billion, as I said earlier, will not automatically lapse at the end of the financial year, and thus this remainder which is less than $3 billion can then be carried over. Consequently, that amount will be the government's contingency fund for 1982-83. The provision referring to the government's authority to contract and reimburse loans in foreign currency is a technical one, and the House will recall that this provision was also included, and I said earlier, in previous borrowing authority bills, and more specifically in the last four.

I would like to give an overview of the government's borrowing transactions since the beginning of the current financial year, and of the amount of borrowing authority used. As for the Borrowing Authority Act for 1981-82, which provided a new borrowing authority of $14 billion, the House will recall that this legislation received royal assent on April 8, 1981. Consequently, the debt program covered by this borrowing authority started at that time. From April 8, 1981 to March 31, 1982, the government borrowed a total of $9.9 billion in new funds on domestic markets. Of that amount, $9.3 billion was obtained through Canada Savings Bonds, $3.1 billion through marketable bonds, while net Treasury bill redemptions reduced the amount borrowed by $2.5 billion. As far as the marketable bond program is concerned, $0.1 billion is tied to foreign markets. These markets have provided the government with $300 million, thanks to the private sale of an issue to the central banks of Saudi Arabia. There was also a partial repayment on a loan of $700 million, which was due on March 8, 1982. Considering the spirit of co-operation existing on all sides with a view to limiting the debate on this new bill, I would rather not impose any further on the time of the House, and I would give other members an opportunity to take part in this debate. However, I would just like to refer to some of the points made in the previous debate on Bill C-93 and comment briefly, while further details could be given when the bill is considered in Committee of the Whole.

During the previous debate, one hon. member remarked that the petroleum revenue tax was supposed to increase federal revenues by several billion dollars. If I remember correctly, two different figures appeared in the English and French versions of Hansard. I would like to give the exact figure for federal revenues collected in the form of petroleum and gas revenue taxes and tax on additional oil revenues, namely, $23.2 billion for the period from 1981-82 to 1985-86. I am giving this figure to remove any misunderstanding that might have been caused by the fact that two different figures were printed in the respective versions of Hansard.

One of the points raised concerned the figure quoted in the estimates for the percentage of increase in government expenditures. I may inform the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) that his explanation was not quite accurate. Expenditures in 1981-82 increased by 16.3 per cent, and not 22.3 per cent, as the hon. member stated. In 1980-81, petroleum compensation payments exceeded revenues by $2.7 billion. In 1981-82, payments more or less balanced revenues, which explains why there is no negative balance here. It is always possible to juggle figures and delete an item that is decreasing in order to get an expenditure total to increase more rapidly. It is also possible to delete an item that is increasing faster than total expenditures, for instance, debt servicing, in order to slow down the rate of increase of the total amount. But this is mere juggling with figures and actually does not prove anything. In any case, the real increase in total expenditures is, officially, 16.3 per cent.

During the previous debate, it was observed that expenditure increases should be brought back to the rate mentioned by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, namely, they should be kept at a level below the growth rate of the national economy. I may point out that the government is maintaining its objective to keep the growth rate of its expenditures below that of our economy. This is reflected in the lower ratio of budgetary expenditures to gross national product, which dropped from 21.2 per cent in 1975-76 to 20 per cent in 1980-81. During that period, government expenditure objectives were set according to a broader concept, namely, that of total expenditures, in other words, the sum of budgetary expenditures and capital loans and non-budgetary advances. So, from 1976 to 1980, total expenditures increased at a slower rate than the nominal gross national product. During that period, the gross national product increased, respectively, by 9.3 per cent, 10.3 per cent, 13.7 per cent and 10.7 per cent, while total expenditures increased by 6.6 per cent, 9.3 per cent, 7.9 per cent and 8.8 per cent. During the debate, there were also some comments on the government's justification for its borrowing authority request. Mr. Speaker, I should like very briefly to remind the House of the government's commitment to take a far more rigorous approach to the management of public funds and thus bring about a reduction in the deficit. These objectives involve a policy of restraint that should help relieve inflationary pressures and promote the development of a better climate for economic recovery in our country.

As a result of the debt program, $9.9 billion of the borrowing authority of $14 billion approved for 1981-82 was used, as I said earlier, while $1.1 billion lapsed on March 31, 1982, and $3 billion was carried over to 1982-83, to be used for contingencies, as I explained a moment ago. Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on further questions raised by hon. members. It was asked, for instance, why the government needed new borrowing authority for $6.6 billion at this time, when, and I believe it was the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who made this comment, when the government's cash balance is high and it has already received $12 billion for 1980-81 and $14 billion for 1981-82.

In answer to the last part of the question, I would like to point out that the entire unused borrowing authority for 1980-81 lapsed on March 31, 1981, and the entire unused borrowing authority for 1981-82, in excess of the $3 billion to which I am constantly referring, also lapsed on March 31, 1982, and consequently, the only borrowing authority available to the government for 1982-83 is this sum of $3 billion which has not expired and which represents the government's contingency fund for 1982-83. Mr. Speaker, I would now like to answer that part of the question dealing with cash balances which at the beginning of the new financial year amounted to $6.6 billion. At the end of the financial year, a reasonably high level of deposits is necessary in order to cope with strong seasonal demand during the first quarter of each new financial year.

In addition, the government cannot let its deposits drop to zero, that is quite obvious. We have deposits for our daily transactions and also for contingencies, for instance, to respond to demand created by foreign exchange markets. In addition, let us not forget that deposits give the government some room for manoeuvring in managing its debt program, a fact that is particularly important in periods where interest rates are very volatile. I may add that the deposit amount in excess of $100 million produces 90 per cent of the interest of 91-day Treasury bills.

Mr. Speaker, several hon. members also criticized the government with respect to the 19.5 per cent interest paid on Canada Savings Bonds. One hon. member alleged that the government was paying 19.5 per cent on Canada Savings Bonds at a time when all indicators showed that rates were declining and that sales of Canada Savings Bonds would add $1 billion to the national debt and to the burden of Canadian taxpayers. Mr. Speaker, here I would like to point out that the government cannot plan its debt program according to the forecast for interest rate trends, and that it must take into account the situation existing at the time the bonds are put on the market to compete with other savings instruments. The cost of the 1981-82 issue of Canada Savings Bonds was much closer than usual to competitive interest rates. Over one million people purchased Canada Savings Bonds and it takes at least five weeks before paycheck deductions can begin. All these sales take some time.

During the campaign, interest rates fluctuated, and this made the yield of Canada Savings Bonds very attractive, since all interest rates on the market on other savings instruments were on a downward trend. With hindsight, it is easy to claim, this volatility having taken its toll, that the rate on Canada Savings Bonds was too high. However, this was not obvious when the rate was set for the marketing of Canada Savings Bonds. It is important for the government to set an equitable rate as well as a competitive rate for this instrument, which must compete with other savings instruments on the market. The sales of Canada Savings Bonds will not add one billion dollars to the cost of the debt since the product of the sales was used to pay the negotiable debt which was falling due and would have had to be renewed otherwise. Until November 1981, for the previous 18 months, Canada Savings Bonds were, all in all, the least costly source of funds for the government.

As a final point, I would like to refer to another aspect of debt management which was raised during the debate on Bill C-93. Based on the different percentages of the various borrowing instruments of the government, some members wondered whether the government had changed its policy of using short-term instruments rather than medium or long-term instruments to finance its debt. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the diversity of the borrowing instruments available to the government to manage its debt can be explained by the fact that this allows the government to use some flexibility in adjusting to existing conditions on the market when it needs to borrow. That is the reason why there have been a number of variations over these last few months, for instance, a larger rate of financing through Canada Savings Bonds. This signals no basic change in the government policy of debt management. Simply, the government used the tools at its disposal and the flexibility needed to adapt to the extremely volatile conditions it was facing on the marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, I indicated at the beginning of my remarks that under the agreement reached by all parties in this House on this legislation and the one that is to follow tomorrow, there is a time limitation. Therefore, I will not take too much of the time of the House, but I simply wanted to give a few explanations following some remarks that were made in the preceding debate, and I am sure we will have an opportunity for a very fruitful debate at the committee stage, to further the consideration of this legislation. I would like to thank the House leaders of the government, of the Official Opposition and of the New Democratic Party as well as the party spokesmen since we have agreed to a much more expeditious consideration of these two bills.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly on this bill at this stage because I spoke at length on second reading. I want to point out to the House and to the country in general that Bill C-93 was opposed by this party on the same basis as Bill C-94, on which bells rang on an adjournment motion for over 15 or 16 days. If the government had any sense, it would never have introduced Bill C-93 in the way in which it was introduced. I compliment the government on finally coming to reason. This bill is a bad bill and so are the tax provisions contained in the balance of Bill C-93, which will be debated under Bill C-112 tomorrow. However, if it were not for this party putting extreme pressure on the government, this bill would not have been divided. We would not be debating Bill C-111 today. I say to Your Honour and to the country that we are at last seeing some democracy around here. At least the people have an opportunity for input. At least we are reaching a situation where, under the terms of reference of this bill, even though debate will be somewhat limited, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will be required to come before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to explain the financial policies of the government. Your Honour knows that the minister always tries to avoid coming before the standing committee, so for the first time, we will be able to have the minister before us again for two full sessions to explain why he needs to borrow $6.6 billion.

The question of $6.6 billion came out of the air. It was a figure in the budget. But we all know, and the country knows, that the budget of the Minister of Finance is just so much air, smoke and feathers. It is really not a budget at all. It has no particular approaches in it which make sense. The country cannot go along with it. The minister made at least changes to it, and there are still more changes coming up. So we expect the minister, either in the House or before the committee, to explain to us and to the country in general a new financial policy which must be proposed by this government.

Speaking to the question of the Canada Savings Bonds issue, it clearly costs the country at least $1 billion. It was clear to any intelligent person in the financial market, in August, that 19.5 per cent was too much money to pay for interest. It became clearer in September and even more clear in October. It became an absolute certainty in November, yet the bond sale was held open until November 6. If there was ever a government incompetent at borrowing money, it is this government, and for that reason alone this bill must be opposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, there was a time, not too long ago, maybe as recently as the last year or so, when I looked forward to getting on a plane, travelling back to my constituency, meeting with my people and trying to hear and solve their problems. I must say that as I think about that prospect for this week and next week, I do not feel good about it because I know that when I walk down the street or go to my office, I will meet a group of young people who will be looking for jobs which I cannot help them to find.

The community in which I live was once a progressive, growing community of Fraser Valley West. At one time, if the people of Langley and Surrey who came to my office really wanted a job, I could find places for them. I could send them here or there. But now, all of a sudden, for the first time in some time I send them on the circuit, and they come back empty-handed. Instead of simply finding no jobs, they are unfortunately finding, again and again, that businesses have gone bankrupt. So it is not only those seeking jobs in the business community who are suffering, but it is also the business community which is suffering to a very great extent these days. This hurts. It hurts when I see these massive cutoffs. I see professional people and small business people who have always had jobs in the last 15 or 20 years but now, not only have their jobs run out, but their unemployment insurance has run out as well. As the unemployment insurance runs out, they fall on to the welfare system, which makes them lose their confidence and self-respect. We see a new kind of depression, which is indeed disgusting and discouraging in this great country.

It is not that the potential is any less this year than it was last year, or five years ago; rather, it is that something has gone wrong with the direction of our economy. That direction has been consistently pursued by the Liberal government which has its mind set or a set attitude toward possible solutions. We find that every time the government comes forward with a solution, it is an obsession. It is obsessed with overtaxing, over-borrowing or government intervention. It constantly seems to want the people to give to the government so that the government may redistribute and thus somehow solve the problem. If the government does not have sufficient money from taxes, it then goes out and borrows it, regardless of the cost. The government has the attitude that it somehow has the answer.

Our society has followed a long trend, one in which we had a great deal of confidence in professionals and in an elitist, intellectual policy. We have stopped looking to ourselve and have started looking toward others. We have cast responsibility on to governments. Of course, the government assumes the responsibility, and to pay for it, collects taxes. The government taxes to a certain point, and when it can tax no more, it begins to borrow, and here we are.

It is pretty hard for me to tell the unemployed persons from Langley or Surrey that we will go out and borrow billions more dollars on their behalf and that somehow we will get the economy going through government intervention, government bureaucracy, government regulations, and that the government will create jobs. That confidence, that mind-set, must change.

I am not saying to the minister who just spoke that the government which sits opposite is morally wrong or that it is trying to do the wrong thing morally. It is not trying to drive the country into bankruptcy. It is not trying to drive the people along. Maybe it is trying to drive the people to unemployment to cure inflation, because that is the solution it sees: more unemployment to cure inflation. But, instead, we get more unemployment and more inflation. The solutions are not working. Although the idea is right, the solution to implement the idea is wrong. Morally, we all want the same thing, a stronger, better Canada, full of opportunity for all our citizens, but we need to change the idea of solutions. The solutions lie in ridding the economy of unwarranted and unneeded regulations, simply the factor of regulation, the restriction of regulations, the requirements.

I wonder how many members opposite, instead of simply buying a house, have gone through the process of trying to build a house, the process of regulation, the process of requirement. Last week I attended the Surrey Volunteers dinner, and Ivy Adamson, an old pioneer of Surrey, the first alder-woman in Surrey, said, "When I first came on council here, there were a bunch of tarpaper shacks. People started with little shacks and they started building houses for themselves. What a shame it is that in today's society we cannot start to build again modestly, what a shame that this opportunity has been taken away from us, because we now require a $150,000 house instead of providing for our basic needs." It is overregulation and overrequirement.

We must also try to develop a freer trade policy. We keep thinking and teaching others as though we were an island unto ourselves and as though somehow Canada, by putting up higher and higher tariffs, will create more and more jobs here. I think history shows that creating more and more tariffs might create a job for a day or even a decade. All too often those tariffs turn into subsidies. In fact, they become counter-productive to the point that the whole economic system begins to break down and we lose our capacity to compete in international markets. We must have policies and solutions that work toward freer trade. The only way to create a stronger economic lifestyle is to sell what we produce. Everything we now produce in Canada we can use. This is a small market, so it does not do any good just to produce those things that wear out and need to be replaced. That is not good enough. We have to look to the great markets of the world. If we place tariff upon tariff upon tariff and exclude trade from other markets, they will excude us from their markets. There will be no jobs in Ontario, British Columbia or anywhere else in Canada. Free trade relations in the world need to be expanded by reducing tariff barriers, thus working toward freer trade.

We need to cut government spending. We are not doing that with this provision. What we are doing is borrowing more money. How many people want the government to borrow more? Do they want their government to spend $6 billion today? At 20 per cent interest, who is going to pay? It will be our children. They will pay and pay the deficit created by this bill.

That is not what Canadians want. They want government spending cut back. They want less government not more government and more regulation. Canadians want that, as was demonstrated in Saskatchewan.

Does this bill give us more? No, it gives us less and less because we are getting more and more government. There is less and less responsibility for the individual and more and more for the government. You cannot cut government spending by borrowing more. The more the government spends, the more we need to borrow on their behalf; the more taxes we pay, the more they spend.

Let us talk about government cutting spending, not expanding it. However, that is what is being done today, creating more government and more tax burden, and we will have to pay for this at 19 or 20 per cent.

In addition to cutting spending, we must restore incentives. I talked with workers in the housing industry. I asked them why they did not stay an extra couple of hours to complete a job rather than putting all their tools away and having to come back the next morning. They replied that they would get overtime, but the government would just take it away in taxes. How many times do we hear people ask, "Why work longer, why produce more?" There is no incentive left in our society.

It is time to rebuild the incentive society. It is the motive of profit and the individual getting ahead that created the wealth of this nation and of the rest of this world. It worked before, so why not give it a chance to work again?

We must cut government spending and cut taxes. Everyone says that is a dream; whoever heard of a government cutting taxes, it just does not happen. It does happen and it is happening. It is happening right here on our continent. Not only is it happening, but it is working again. This is not the first time.

Our biggest problem is inflation. We will not solve that problem by borrowing more or by increasing interest rates, which is what we are doing today. Instead, we should be working for a tax cut. That is what President Reagan did in the United States. He implemented a 30 per cent across-the-board tax cut. It was not just for the big guys, but also for the little guys, the middle guys and everyone in between.

Is there a Canadian today who does not want a tax cut? Some may say it would not be good, but maybe at this time it would be. What did the tax cut and control of government spending do in the United States? It cut the inflation rate to zero.

Mr. Kelly: Come on.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): You know that's not true.

Mr. Wenman: It may be 4 per cent this year. Mr. Socialist to my left and Liberal socialists across the way, would you like to have the American inflation rate today? Would you trade it for Canada's? Would you trade ours for the 4 per cent projection this year? It reached zero in one quarter. These members know it worked. It is the truth.

Mr. Kelly: What is their unemployment record?

Mr. McRae: And a world depressions was caused by it.

Mr. Wenman: Where will you be on the recovery? When the American recovery comes because they cut their taxes, inflation rate and government spending, we will be seeing the opposite. Have we cured inflation or unemployment? No. We have high inflation and high unemployment.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a brief question?

Mr. Wenman: Certainly.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I know the finance critic for the Progressive Conservative Party indicated he would advocate that the policies of Ronald Reagan be applied in Canada. He, of course, is praying that they are successful. Will the hon. member indicate whether he too is an advocate of the economic policies of Ronald Reagan and whether, in his view, they should be applied in Canada today?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will listen to my speech, I will tell him about supply-side economics. That is the basic text of my speech today. I support those points and I will tell him why. I support them, Mr. Socialist, because they work, and I will give an example of how they work.

The brother of the late President Kennedy is now promoting the same policies as our Liberal government. Let us see what President Kennedy did. In 1961 when John F. Kennedy took office, the unemployment rate stood at 6¾ per cent and the budget was in deficit by almost $4 billion. Between 1961 and 1966 real output as measured by constant dollar GNP grew at a 5½ per cent annual rate. It grew. Our growth rate is going in the other direction. It is going down.

Mr. McRae: What is happening to the American growth rate?

Mr. Wenman: It is going up, my friend, you just wait. The unemployment rate fell to less than 4 per cent and the federal budget moved to a roughly balanced position. That is what happened when President Kennedy applied a 30 per cent tax cut across the board. Inflation throughout the era averaged between 1 and 2 per cent annually, not 1 and 2 per cent a month as it is in Canada.

Surprising as it may seem, given the mythology surrounding Jack Kennedy, government spending as it relates to total output actually declined during the Kennedy era. Government spending declined. Some may say that is not the right medicine today, that it was the right medicine a decade and a half ago. President Reagan has begun to apply it, and it would be more effective if he did not have the brakes on him. It is working. Would anyone deny that it is working in the United States? Then, by a spillover—unfortunately by a spillover, not because of anything members opposite are going to do over there—we may benefit somewhat. But they should be prepared now for the recovery, not dragging deeper and deeper into recession and depression, and that depression is as bad as the recession.

The depression that I feel about the economy, the fear that I have to invest, the fear that I have to go out and create something new, that fear is real in my constituency. It is real amongst my people. We need a reinstall a new, strong attitude amongst those people. We have to recognize it. I hope it is the bottom. We might have to wait until 1985 for the turnaround in Canada, as they are experiencing it in the United States this year. We might have to wait a little longer. We might have to wait until we get rid of this government, because we cannot change their attitude. This borrowing bill is a perfect example. I hope the Canadian people will see it. Do you understand? Do you understand what I am saying? I hope so. Well, if you do not come and see me afterwards and we will talk about it.

We will get into the subject of supply now. Let us consider a little what these tax cuts are. In our society there is something called a resistance theory, not an astounding theory but a very interesting one. It was evolved by Professor Arthur Laffer. The professor made a statement saying that you can tax people and then you can tax them more and the government gets more money; you can tax people still more, and you get more money; you can tax more and more and more, until people get to the point where they say: "Just a minute, I am not paying any more tax, that is too much, I am not working any more because I am only working for the government, the government is taking more of my money than I get myself." We then find this resistance to taxation. So the more you tax, actually at that point the curve goes the other way and you start getting less revenue. This has proven to be true, the more you tax at a certain point, the less revenue you get. In order to get more revenue at that point you have to cut taxes. The main game in Canada right now amongst businessmen—it is survival, at the moment—generally, amongst those who are surviving, is to figure out how to get more disposable income, how to beat income tax, how to establish income tax shelters. The avoidance of income tax is the biggest game in town. Why? Because we have reached that peak where taxation becomes regressive, and to get more tax revenue we have in fact to cut taxes. That is what John F. Kennedy found in 1961 when he started his program. He cut the taxes by 30 per cent, and in the end he got more tax revenue. He got more tax revenue because by cutting taxes 30 per cent more people went to work. As more people went to work less people were being paid unemployment and welfare. Those people soon began paying unemployment insurance. They were producing some real goods that could be exchanged domestically and internationally. They could exchange those goods for real hard currency, for real money. In so doing the United States stabilized the dollar. The American dollar became so stabilized that they could in fact afford to go off the gold standard.

Unfortunately, through these heavy liberalized programs that we have experienced in the past 15 years, we have moved in the other direction, and the American dollar now is less stabilized. Perhaps the Americans need to do something as President Reagan said, to make the American dollar as good as gold. A lot of people are saying the U.S. is going in that direction. It may be that they will bring the gold standard back again, and make the American dollar good in that way. It is an interesting idea. If that happens, Canada must be ready. We may have to reconsider pegging our dollar.

What is happening to our dollar today while we are sitting here? It is dropping, and dropping very fast. It is at 80 cents, or 80.1. It is falling fast. I heard on the radio that it may drop to 77 cents. Some analysts are saying it will drop to 77 cents. It may be that we should think about pegging our dollar and making it good, too. It may be that we need to peg it at about 70 cents, but perhaps we should peg it at 75, 76, 77, 78, or 80 cents. I do not know what you are going to peg it at, but perhaps you had better peg it at some point and guarantee it. Let the Canadian government guarantee that dollar because if it guarantees that dollar, we can start controlling the interest rate a little better and we would not have our interest rates fluctuating up and down and being influenced so much by international markets. To stabilize that dollar, we would have to put some money again today into the money markets. If it were pegged, it could be stabilized and that stabilization of the dollar would mean we could then work on the interest rates. That is what we have to do now.

I would be happy if the Liberal government would wake up to supply side economics, if they would swallow their pride and look at the way it works. Then we could control inflation rates better, interest rates would begin to drop, and the unemployment rate would follow suit as sure as can be. That will drop as well. Why not take those good ideas and apply them? Some people say that that is fine for the Americans but that ours is a different stituation. That is a large model, they say, there are 250 million people there, that situation does not apply here.

Very well, let us take the other side and see if it has worked anywhere else. Let us go to a smaller model, let us go to Puerto Rico and see what has happened there. Under Governor Romero's leadership, income tax in Puerto Rico has been reduced by 5 per cent per year since 1977. Can you imagine, our starting a program this year and saying that for every year we are going to reduce taxes by 5 per cent? What if we had done it for five years, since 1977? It would be 25 per cent, 30 per cent next year. If people had that kind of confidence that the government was going to do that, what would happen? In Puerto Rico the additional 5 per cent reductions have been legislated since 1982, tax rebates have increased each year, employment has soared, and the Puerto Rican government has gone from deficit to surplus. That is what happened there, with tax cuts.

Let me say that again. That is the message I am trying to leave with you today, Mr. Socialist over there. I say, listen, here it is. Tax rebates have increased each year. In other words, in Puerto Rico they cut the taxes every year by 5 per cent and they got more money than the year before because they increased productivity and people were working at real jobs. Employment soared. We used to talk about Puerto Rico and the unemployed, that they all had to come to New York, to the United States. Now the Puerto Ricans are employed on their own merit, on their own quality and on the ability of their own government to design an economy. The Puerto Rican budget, which was hopeless, which was blocked into deficit, in fact went from deficit to surplus.

We have a long way to go in this government to get from deficit to surplus. The government opposite have been borrowing, as they are doing today, spending and wasting. There is not one Canadian who does not know about that wasting and is not concerned about it. The government opposite suddenly has adopted the attitude that it can do better than the individual Canadian can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the government opposite cannot do it better than the individual can. You cannot beat individual initiative, individual incentive and free enterprise. For too long free enterprise has been a dirty word. People kept talking about free enterprise and thinking that somehow all the wealth would come into one hand. It does not work that way, it has not worked that way.

We keep talking about how the other system, the socialist system, would redistribute the wealth, in other words, take it from everywhere and give it back, redistribute it. We have had great faith in that redistribution. What we have lacked faith in is the goal. It is not a redistributed profit that we need; it is the creation of new wealth. That is what we need. We have to say that there is a certain amount of dollars in our society. We do not need to take them and squash them down into a little thin line. No, we do not have to do that. We have to take this little line of wealth that is here and note that above it is another pile of wealth and power that has not even been tapped. That is the wealth and power of the Canadian people themselves. They can produce more, if they are given the opportunity and incentive to do so. That is the great wealth of this nation, the great resources of this nation, that the government over there is bungling.

What is happening to the potential of the west? I spoke here last year about the potential in the west. I spoke excitedly about the Alsands project and the pipeline and coal development in British Columbia. I said that if the Government of Canada could just see our potential and let us grow and develop, by our growth and development all of Canada would rise with us.

Mr. Parker: Grants.

Mr. Wenman: We should not give money out in grants. It should be given back to the people through tax cuts. If we gave people their money back, they would know how to spend it. They would buy things and create incentives. That is how to create a new and strong society. That is the new Conservative supply side economics.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Reaganomics.

Mr. Wenman: Why are hon. members on my left so afraid of what works? Why are they so afraid of success? I do not understand it. I know that what the socialists to my left and the socialists across the way want is morally right. I see their good and shining faces here. I see their halos. I know that they, like I, want a better way for all Canadians. We all want the same thing. It is just that they are naive.

Mr. Parker: You want the multinationals to take it all.

Mr. Wenman: That line is so sick and old that it went out 30 years ago. Even socialists do not pump that one any more.

This is a great nation with great potential. That potential is in the east and the west. There is a potential inside me and inside everyone here. It can be developed, but it will never be developed properly by the government's taxing more and borrowing more. It will only be developed if we rid the economy of unwarranted and unneeded regulations, restrictions and requirements.

There are six things which need to be done to bring a new economic order to Canada. First we have to rid the economy of unwarranted and unneeded regulations, restrictions and requirements.

Second, we have to maintain the integrity of the Canadian dollar. That may mean pegging the Canadian dollar and making sure it retains its value, because when the dollar retains its value we will not have to worry about interest rates bounding up and down. We can lower interest rates. We need lower interest rates, and I am telling hon. members opposite how to do that. Another thing we could do is to get involved in forward markets. Instead of going day to day and buying the dollar day to day, perhaps we should buy it for a year from now so that we will guarantee its value a year from now. Then there would be stability in relation to interest rates. We should get involved in forward markets. That is an alternative which is worth looking at. It would stabilize the dollar and perhaps make it as good as gold. We can make the dollar good by pegging it to the American dollar, if we want to.

Third, we should develop freer trade. We should take away trade restrictions. We should go into the Pacific Rim. I could talk about other examples. I have talked about Puerto Rico and the United States. What about Japan? What is the unemployment rate in Japan? What is the inflation rate? What is the interest rate? It is about 5 per cent across the board. It could vary a couple of percentage points either way. What about Malaysia? What about Thailand? What about those upward real growth economies? Real growth can be shared, whether under the trickle-down theory or whatever. It is like the tide coming in. If there is a tide of wealth, power and opportunity coming in, everyone rides on that tide. All the people are lifted by the tide in proportion equally.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Or they can be washed up.

Mr. Wenman: They could be if there is not social justice. I agree there must be social justice, but that does not necessarily mean redistribution or lack of incentive.

Fourth, we should cut government spending. We should make government a smaller part of our lives.

Fifth, we should restore incentives in society. We should restore the old profit and free enterprise motive. It works. Why should we not do it? It has worked.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Rubbish.

Mr. Wenman: It is not rubbish. It has worked. It has not had an opportunity to work in the Soviet Union. It has not had an opportunity to work in the socialist countries of the world, although I notice the Chinese are starting to come along. They are beginning to look positively at motive, incentive and profit. I have been to many Third World countries, and some of them are turning around. Peru is one example. Others have turned around on the basis of a free enterprise model, but they have not done so on the basis of a socialist model. Socialism does not work. That is an outdated, dead philosophy of many years ago, and its time is passing fast.

Mr. McKenzie: Sweden saw the light.

Mr. Wenman: Finally, we need tax cuts. I do not mean little tax cuts; I mean a big one. A little one will not make any difference. We need a big one to provide real incentive.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): What if you don't pay taxes? What about the poor and the elderly?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking for almost 40 minutes. I have given the hon. member the answers. As I said, he has the right idea; he just has the wrong solution. He means well; it is just that he is somewhat naive economically. For that I forgive him. I encourage him in the other things he speaks about in this House, and I support him, but on economic matters he should listen to me because we in the neo-conservative movement of North America and the world have the answers. The answers are not in the hands of professionals, socialists and intellectual elitists. The answers lie in basic common sense and in basic humanity. We in this House of Commons have the answers. Let us give power back to the House of Commons. Let us have the authority. Let the government listen to us, and we will provide the answers for the Canadian people. It is too bad Parliament is being destroyed.

I could go on for much longer, but I want my message to come through clearly. We can have lower taxes and lower interest rates. If we did, we would have lower unemployment rates, and that would bring about a better and stronger society. I believe that. I hope someone listening today believes it. I hope everyone listening today will agree that now is the time to move upward. We must always judge where the bottom of the market is, and if we are at the bottom, now is the time to take a chance and invest in this country. Now is the time to show our Canadianism, to demonstrate that we really believe in it and to get in there, work a little harder, and invest a little more. If we did that, we we would be participating in a recovery which would allow this nation to continue to be the best in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jarvis): The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased to see such a distinguished hon. member occupying the Chair.

I rise this afternoon to say a few words about the bill before us, which asks Parliament to authorize the borrowing by this government of some $6.6 billion.

I view this bill from the perspective of the representative of the people of Burnaby, who have told me in no uncertain terms that the economic and budgetary policies of the Liberal government are a disaster. I intend to touch this afternoon on several areas of concern to my constituents. They are of concern not just to my constituents but, I believe, generally to the working men and women in Canada.

However, before doing so, I cannot resist commenting on the remarks made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on behalf of the Conservative Party. He indicated that the Conservative party is an advocate of Reaganomics and neo-conservativism. On February 15, his colleague and finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), said that the Progressive Conservatives had better pray that Ronald Reagan is successful with his economic policies in the United States, or his party could suffer enormously here in Canada.

The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre said:

> It's something that we would be doing if we were a government. Something we will do once we are in power again.

He said this to Conservatives:

> You had better pray that the United States is successful in turning around their economy because if they aren't it will be very hard for us as a party to convince people of our policies.

Was he not right? The policies of Ronald Reagan in America are a disaster, and every day it is being shown more and more clearly what a disaster they are for the people of America. Those are the policies the Conservative party is advocating here in Canada.

Mr. Wenman: What is their inflation rate? What is their interest rate relative to ours?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Members of the Conservative Party have spoken of interest rates, and I agree we should talk about interest rates and the devastating effects high interest rates are having in our communities, and particularly on small business people. However, I remind the Conservative Party that the person who is responsible for that particular policy is the Governor of the Bank of Canada together with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The governor is a fellow named Gerald Bouey, and he was reappointed as Governor of the Bank of Canada not by a Liberal government, but by the Conservatives.

Mr. Nystrom: Shame!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Gerald Bouey, this great economic guru who is being bitterly attacked by the Conservative Party as the author of high interest rate policies, was reappointed by the Conservative Minister of Finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). So let us hear no more about the Conservative alternatives.

Some of us, Mr. Speaker, who were Members of Parliament when the Conservatives were in power, remember the telegrams, letters and phone calls we received from our constituents. I am not going to read a lot of them, but I have a telegram sent to Prime Minister Clark from a small businessman in my community of Burnaby. He said this:

> Congratulations Mr. Prime Minister Clark. We both are flat broke. You politically, me financially. We all will be out of business very soon. It is impossible for me or anyone to pay 16.5 per cent interest on $2 million on debenture to the Bank of Montreal from business $2.3 million gross take.
> Prime Minister Clark, you just didn't have heart to muzzle these interest rate hungry pirates.
> P.S. Please don't tell me it is good for Canada and the only way out. I can give you half a dozen ways to keep dollar where it is today without bankrupting Canadians.

That, Mr. Speaker, was one telegram I received in response to the disastrous Conservative economic policies. Now the Conservatives say the NDP was responsible for their being thrown out of office. Mr. Speaker, the only people responsible for the defeat of the Conservative Party were the people of Canada in the election of February, 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Let us recognize that fact very clearly. What hypocrisy for the Conservatives on the one hand to call for a speedy election so that the people of Canada can have their say on the Liberal government—and I certainly agree with that and I know they would be turfed out—when on the other hand they were not prepared to accept the verdict of the people of Canada in February, 1980. They say they present an economic alternative. I would like to quote the former Conservative Minister of Finance, who has now been shuffled over to being their External Affairs critic speaking on the policy of interest rates as follows:

> Yes, I would continue to back Mr. Bouey.

No surprise, Mr. Speaker; he reappointed him. He said:

> I agree that our interest rates have to keep track of those in the United States.

That was not a Liberal, that was the Conservative finance critic in the summer of 1981. "I agree with the policies of the Liberal government; interest rates must stay high."

Recently the present Tory finance critic said this:

> One after another the premiers proposed reducing interest rates, while accepting the inflationary consequences of a lower Canadain dollar. They were convinced that the benefits of lower interest rates and increased economic activity would offset the negative effects of increased inflation.

Some of us happen to agree with that, but what did the finance critic for the Conservative Party say? He said, "I do not agree with the premiers, I agree with the Liberal Party."

Mr. Nystrom: Shame!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): He said:

> It's a quick fix that Mr. MacEachen is against, and I agree with him on that.

I am not quoting a Liberal colleague of the Minister of Finance; I am quoting the finance critic of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Mazankowski: That did not work in Saskatchewan and it did not work here.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): We know the Conservative Party has suported the policy of hewers of wood and drawers of water. We know that one of the top financial advisers to Prime Minister Clark said:

> There's nothing disgraceful about being a hewer of wood and drawer of water if that's where you have your comparative advantage.

That was said by a senior adviser to the Conservative government, Mr. Speaker.

Let us just come right up to date and see what the very distinguished Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), faced with disastrous economic policies, high interest rates, high inflation and a totally unacceptable level of unemployment, said one week ago today. He said:

> We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative.

What an abdication of responsibility on the part of the Official Opposition. They condemn the government's policies, as we do, but when they are asked to come up with an alternative, what does the Leader of the Conservative Party say? I repeat:

> We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative.

He continued:

> At this moment I don't have a better solution.

What an admission of the bankruptcy of the policies of the Conservative Party! So much for the so-called alternative offered by the Progressive Conservative Party.

In the same interview, the former prime minister indicated he was not really a Conservative, he was really a progressive. I think some of us know that particular tendency in the Conservative Party is under bitter attack, and some of us wonder just how long the "progressives" in the Progressive Conservative Party will survive in the fact of that attack.

Enough said, Mr. Speaker, on the absence of any alternative offered by the Conservative Party to the very real economic crisis facing our community. It is clear the government today is prepared to fight inflation on the backs of working men and women, the poor and the elderly. What action has this government taken to close the tax loopholes which so riddle our income tax system? I need only point to a recent issue of Canadian Business with the headline on the cover "Tax avoidance as a way of life. How to turn the toys in your life into income tax deductions". We suggest, Mr. Speaker, that an income tax system so riddled with loopholes which benefit only the well-to-do and wealthy must in fact be radically altered. It is a system in which the rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

We have seen the failure of this government to bring forward any effective competition legislation despite the fact the small business sector is being rapidly driven under by corporate concentration in the Canadian economy. What does the Conservative Party have to say about that? They are silent. In fact, when pressed, they say competition legislation is not a priority at this time. Let the big corporations get even bigger. The government purports to be fighting inflation. We all know the devastating effects this policy is having on unemployment. Almost two million Canadians cannot find work, many of them young people and women, but they say they are fighting inflation.

Well, what are the facts? In the greater Vancouver area, which I am fortunate enough to represent, the percentage increase in inflation year-over-year until March, 1982, was 11.4 per cent. How can they suggest with any credibility that they are in fact fighting inflation in light of that kind of increase in the cost of living?

There are many sectors reeling under the impact of this government's economic policies. I do not intend to cover all of them, but one of the most significant is the impact on the forest industry in British Columbia. Members of the International Woodworkers of America have documented very clearly the devastating impact on their members, and the absence of any sensible alternative. Nothing whatsoever has been done about high interest rates, and we know the effect on the construction industry. Not just the construction workers, but others in the labour movement who are supported by the IWA membership are hurting. We know the high levels of unemployment in the forest industry are directly attributable to the high interest rate policy of the Liberal government. We know as well that the proposal in the budget to tax the reasonable benefits, which in particular such people as union business agents and field workers receive, are totally inequitable. The tax, for example, on vehicles used by business agents means an average increase of some $100 a month in their expenses. The company car which is given to the high-priced corporate executive is a perk, but these people of course need these cars to do their jobs. We know as well the impact of this budget and the failure of this government in the bill before us today to come to terms with the serious slump in the plywood industry, particularly in British Columbia. Plywood made in Canada is largely sold in Canada. The slump in construction, particularly in the area of home building, directly affects those in the lumber industry, especially plywood mill workers.

In British Columbia today there are 10,000 unemployed IWA workers. At the peak of unemployment there were some 15,000 people unemployed. In the last six months, over 22,000 IWA members have had a lay-off of six weeks or more. There will be permanent damage to many industries in Canada as a result of this government's high interest rate policy, including the forest and the lumber industry. What must be clearly shown is that it is the same policy which I have talked about that put woodworkers out of work and is so profitable for those who are already wealthy, those who have high salaries, such as the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). They have extra money to invest. These high interest rates are beneficial to these people because they can receive a significant return on their investment. Once again, the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. It is the same old story.

We know as well that the decision to tax working people on the benefits they receive from their employers is most discriminatory. Loggers have to go to logging camps in order to work. They have no choice. They are charged a certain amount for room and board. In some cases it is $2.50 a day. But the budget has brought in measures that will see these loggers taxed on a benefit which the government claims is worth as much as $60 a day or more. This could cost IWA members some $3,000 a year or more in additional taxes. While businessmen and women can go and spend a few hundred dollars for their hotel, their meals and their martinis at lunch time and claim these as business expenses, the working men and women in the logging sector of British Columbia are being forced to shoulder a significant increase in their costs as a result of the impact of this budget.

I might add that there are as many as 2,500 or 3,000 IWA members who live in my constituency of Burnaby.

There is one argument that I believe should be laid to rest. It is an argument that has been repeated with increasing frequency by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. It is that somehow Canadian workers are the highest paid workers in the western world and that we have to cut back on the salaries of working men and women in Canada. By doing that, all of our problems will be answered.

It may have been at one time that we did well in Canada compared to workers in other countries. In 1970, for example, the hourly compensation of Canadian workers was second only to that of the United States. It is important to note that in 1980 Canada's relative position had slipped. Workers had moved from second position of ten countries in the western world to seventh position. The percentage growth in hourly compensation for the manufacturing workers in U.S. dollars was lowest of any of the ten countries being compared. From 1975 to 1980 working men and women in Canada had a percentage increase of approximately 48 per cent in their hourly compensation. Other countries, such as Belgium, had a 100 per cent increase; France had a 104 per cent increase; Britain had a 116 per cent increase. There were many other countries with much higher increases in their hourly compensation. Therefore, to suggest that working people should be made the victims of this government's economic policy is blaming the wrong people. If anyone should be brought to task for the failure of this government's economic policies, surely it is the members sitting on the government side themselves.

The ultimate insult in this government's economic policies and in the policy which is enunciated in the bill before the House today is suggesting to Canadians through a degrading and an offensive advertising campaign, a campaign which costs some $4.6 million, that it is "Making Canada Work." We all agree that we should be making Canada work. I know the people of Burnaby question the waste of Employment and Immigration Canada spending $4.6 million on an ad campaign which shows a young man standing in front of high tech video screens and a young woman posing in front of construction equipment with a caption "Making Canada Work". In the bottom corner there is a sticker from Employment and Immigration Canada. This amount of $4.6 million is an appalling waste of money on this kind of government advocacy advertising. Its sole objective is to promote the government's corporate image. If this government has $4.6 million to spend, it should not be wasted on this kind of advertising—and we know that millions are wasted on similar advertising by this government. Instead, the government should be spending the money on putting Canadians back to work.

I would like to turn now from some general remarks to the situation which particularly affects my constituents in Burnaby. The unemployment rate in Burnaby at present is officially at 12.5 per cent, but the real rate is at least 15 per cent. The volume of unemployment insurance claims at one Burnaby Employment and Immigration office has been running at almost double the anticipated volume since January. It averages between 45 and 50 claims a day. The normal average is 20 to 25. The vast majority of these claims are generated by lay-offs.

The forestry turndown is showing up on Burnaby unemployment records. Many of the loggers who live in Burnaby who would normally be working in the woods right now are registered already in the employment office. This situation applies also to miners who live in Burnaby.

Construction activity in Burnaby is minimal. The only major construction at this point is the erection of three high rises. South Burnaby has three work-sharing agreements in effect and even more is going on in North Burnaby.

The B.C. Institute of Technology is laying off 26 faculty members, perhaps more. There have been serious cutbacks at the Burnaby General Hospital. Somewhere between 100 and 150 staff positions have been cut, half of them are nurses. Thirty-six acute care beds are being lost at the Burnaby General Hospital. They are being eliminated. The number of Canada Manpower industrial training programs in Burnaby compared to this time a year ago is exactly one-half. The biggest clerical employer in Burnaby is the B.C. Telephone Company. At the present time it has a hiring freeze in effect. B.C. Tel laid off all its temporary and part-time operators. Simpsons-Sears is the second largest employer in Burnaby. It has been laying off people steadily since last November, to the extent that its staff is now cut in half from 800 to 400.

There are a number of small businesses in Burnaby employing ten people or less. They are very seriously hurting as a result of this government's failure in the economic field. Building permits are down about one third over last year. That is a clear indication that construction is in the doldrums.

Perhaps one of the most significant statistics is the stock of UIC claims with people who are resident in my federal constituency of Burnaby. In July, 1981, there were 1,780 individuals resident in the federal constituency of Burnaby claiming UIC. In October that number had risen to 1,863. In December that number had risen to 2,545. But we come now to the statistics which are most alarming. In the first four months of this year the figures increased as follows. In January, unemployment insurance increased to 3,061, in February, that figure rose to 3,475; in March it rose to 3,796, and in April the figure rose to 4,215. From July, 1981 to April, 1982 the figures rose from 1,780 people claiming unemployment insurance to 4,215, which is an absolute disgrace.

I would also like to comment on the over-all situation in British Columbia. I will quote from a confidential document entitled "Economic Review—British Columbia—Yukon Territory Region". It is dated April, 1982. This is the most recent document which summarizes the economic situation in British Columbia and the Yukon. This document is prepared by Employment and Immigration Canada. I will read just a few extracts from it to give the government some indication of the seriousness of the recession facing us in British Columbia. According to this document, the good news is that the recession has hit rock bottom. The bad news is that we are likely to remain at rock bottom for some time to come.

What kind of forecast is that for the people of British Columbia? The document also indicates that lay-offs are continuing throughout the forestry industry. MacMillan-Bloedel expects many of its mills to be shut down for considerable periods during the summer because of the reduced demand for newsprint. In my own constituency two industrial mills laid off 15 people two months ago and are placing a further 75 people on a work-sharing contract.

Also the document indicates that the mining industry is following the path of the forest industry into the depths of a recession. For most of the workers in the mining industry the big problem will be getting through the coming summer. Two mining companies with head offices located in Burnaby indicate that they expect very serious difficulties in coming months. In the oil and gas sector exploration activity has dropped significantly over the past year. This confidential document prepared by the department continued:

> A victim of continuing high interest rates, many small and some not so small construction companies are facing bankruptcies, receivership or just general hard times.

One construction company in Burnaby is now in receivership.

In the service sector all services are being hurt in the current recession. These include consumer services, business services and government services. As we know, retail sales have been particularly hard hit during the current recession. The current overall picture is of major lay-offs which have caused generally across the board high unemployment. Many other industries, especially service industries, which rely on people who work in sectors such as mining and manufacturing having money to spend are also under restraint.

We know that the hospitals in British Columbia are being attacked, that jobs are being lost in the hospital sector and that schools are being shut down. In my constituency of Burnaby five schools—two senior secondary schools and three elementary schools—have been shut down. I recognize that this bill and its authorization of borrowing will not do anything whatsoever to alleviate that very serious problem and the effects of the economic policies of the government.

There is nothing whatsoever in this bill to deal with the serious housing crisis facing the people of Burnaby. What is in the bill, in particular for young people, who want to buy homes, to deal with astronomical interest rates? There is absolutely nothing but a usurious interest deferral scheme which was recommended to the minister by the banks. Is it any surprise that the policies of government only help the banks? If we look at the most recent disclosure figures for contributions to the Liberal Party and to the Conservative Party, we see the following statistics. In each year each of the major banks gave $50,000 to the Liberal Party and $50,000 to the Conservative party. The banks know very clearly where their interests lie in this particular economy—it is with the Conservatives and the Liberals who regularly receive money from the Canadian banking sector. They do not see any difference, neither do the people of Canada.

I should like to turn to the impact of the economic policies of government on post-secondary education and on young people, particularly post-secondary education students. In my constituency is located Simon Fraser University, the British Columbia Institute of Technology and the Pacific Vocational Institute, as well as a number of high schools. I will be attending graduation ceremonies this month and next month at the high schools in my constituency—Burnaby North, Burnaby Central, Burnaby South, Cariboo Hill, St. Thomas More and Marian High School. What do I tell the graduating students when they ask what their prospects are for jobs? What do I tell them at the British Columbia Institute of Technology or at Simon Fraser University or at the Pacific Vocational Institute? I can tell them about the bankruptcy of the Conservative economic policies and of the failure of Liberal economic policies. But I can do no better than to quote one of the senior instructors of forestry at the British Columbia Institute of Technology. He said:

> I've been involved in forestry for 35 years and the job situation now is the worst since about 1947. There's been ups and downs but never as bad as this year. Maybe 25 per cent of the student body will find jobs . . . normally it's 90 per cent at the time of graduation.
> Other technical students, including mining students, are experiencing setbacks.

The branch manager of BCIT's Canada Employment Centre said:

> Right now, the opportunities are dismal. Usually 90 to 95 per cent find work but it will go a way down this year. They could get work fighting fires—

Even that is no longer present. He went on to say:

> —students cannot look to the public service sector for help.

BCIT noted as well that the number of employers recruiting on its campus is significantly less this year. I also point out that the situation at Simon Fraser University for graduates of that university is very much the same. The summer job market is bleak. It is the bleakest it has been for post-secondary students in many, many years. The housing situation facing post-secondary education students is impossible. The Liberal government and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has refused to allow CMHC to provide any funding for housing for post-secondary education students.

A young man came to my constituency office a month ago. He told me that he worked for two years to save enough money to study at technical school. He spent two years of his life training to become a wildlife technician. For two years since he graduated he has been looking for a job. What do I tell him? What kind of waste of human resources in the country is that? What kind of waste is that which is being duplicated across the land?

It is young people who are being particularly adversely affected by the economic policies of government and it is also women. I should like to point out the serious impact of government economic policies on women and the failure of this particular piece of legislation to come to terms with that devastating impact. We know that traditionally the unemployment rate for women is higher than it is for men and that in times of economic crises, such as those we face now, this problem is exacerbated by the last-hired-first-fired syndrome. Although the number of women entering the labour force has increased very significantly during the last ten years, basically more women are doing the same kind of work. Sixty per cent of all working women do three kinds of jobs—clerical jobs, sales jobs and service jobs. These are low-paying, dead-end jobs; in effect, they are job ghettos. In many of these areas we are seeing significant lay-offs which disproportionately affect women and disproportionately affect young women.

Also we know that the wage gap between the wages of women and the wages of men is 60 per cent. For every dollar a man earns, a woman earns 60 cents. For example, in Canada in 1979 the average working woman earned $11,741 compared with the average man's salary of $18,537. Women do not only suffer from this wage gap at the present time, but as well when it comes time for a pension, including the Quebec pension plan and the Canada Pension Plan, their low pay follows them. Low pay means little or no pension benefits on retirement.

Basically the federal government has been providing lip service to remove this disparity. It acknowledges that the problem exists but it refuses to implement effective affirmative action programs to mitigate against this job ghetto and wage gap disparity. It insists upon voluntary affirmative action programs in the private sector, and the result of those has been a dismal failure. The last count shows that some 27 of 750 companies approached have signed such an agreement. Also we know that in this time of economic crisis there have been serious cutbacks in child care facilities which once again discriminate heavily against women. There is still a very small percentage of women in the management category. I believe there is some 4.3 per cent in the public service. The government's record on its commitment to equal pay for work of equal value is absolutely vacuous.

We know that there is nothing whatsoever in this budget and the bill which was introduced by the minister to assist the elderly and old age pensioners who are falling further and further behind. In 1980 some three million Canadians lived in poverty. Ten per cent of all Canadian families and 30 per cent of all single people were poor, according to statistics provided by the National Council of Welfare.

Perhaps the most searing indictment of this government's economic policies is the fact that over half of the single persons in Canada over the age of 70 live in poverty. Over two-thirds of the elderly women in Canada live in poverty. In this day and age, that statistic is an absolute disgrace.

There has been virtually no change in the distribution of income from 1951 to 1981. The bottom 20 per cent of families still receive 5.9 per cent and the top 20 per cent still get about 40 per cent, which is almost ten times as much. That figure has not changed over the last 30 years.

We in the New Democratic Party advocate a fundamental approach to the serious economic crisis facing Canadians today. Our first proposal is for a massive injection of funds into the economy in order to create jobs in Canada. We must recognize that at this time in our history there is much work which needs to be done. Jobs could be created if only this government would take the initiative and put Canadians back to work instead of having them collect unemployment insurance and welfare.

We also believe that we must take control of the manufacturing sector in Canada which is now so heavily dominated by foreign interests in general and American multinational corporations in particular. The government should revitalize our manufacturing sector and ensure a far greater proportion of research and development is carried out in Canada. As a result of our branch plant economy, the proportion of our research and development being conducted in Canada is one of the lowest of any western nation.

We must immediately lower interest rates to break their stranglehold, particulary on small businesses on this country. We must eliminate the insidious situation where the only ones who profit from the economic policies of this government are the banks.

As I have said, there is much work to be done and I do not have the time to enumerate the many sectors in which jobs could be created. However, one such sector would be the field of shipbuilding, where literally thousands of jobs could be created if a Canadian shipbuilding sector were developed. This sector would have a significant impact on our balance of payments. Other sectors which could create jobs are energy conservation, reforestation and, most importantly, as I have indicated, the manufacturing and high technology sectors of our economy. All these areas must be stimulated.

The most important step to take is to break the corporate stranglehold on our economy once and for all. This stranglehold on our economy is a result of the dominating pursuit of profit and greed. The pursuit of that profit and greed has led to the poverty we have seen, particularly among the elderly and single parents. Another result of this pursuit has been the destruction of our environment in many parts of Canada because the way to achieve greater profits is to cut corners. Profits will be greater if you do not take precautions to ensure that there is no pollution or that acid rain does not destroy the lakes of northern Ontario, that there is no arsenic poisoning in the Northwest Territories. The pursuit for greater profits means to disregard the question of ensuring that Minamata disease and mercury poisoning does not affect the native people in northwestern Ontario. We should make sure that Amax does not pollute Kitsault Inlet in northern British Columbia.

An economic system based on the pursuit of greed wreaks havoc on the health and safety of workers and, indeed, on the lives of working people. Since it cost money to ensure a safe and healthy working environment which would result in reduced profits, it would be natural for those whose only goal is the pursuit of profit to be unconcerned about injuries to a few workers, or illness or possibly loss of life. Just last month, a company in southern Ontario was fined $4,000 because a worker lost his life. The reason he lost his life was that the company involved had not followed the occupational health and safety regulations of Ontario.

In an economic environment where the pursuit of profit is based upon squeezing as much as possible out of the system, the result is the destruction of the environment and death, maiming and sickness of working people.

Hazardous products are another result of this economic environment. Since companies are primarily concerned about squeezing as much money as possible out of the manufacturing process, they will try to manufacture their products as cheaply as possible. If your company builds Pinto automobiles, for example, you will calculate that it will cost more to produce a safe car than to face court costs resulting from litigation. What kind of obscene economic system is it when it is based solely on the pursuit of profit and results in unsafe and hazardous goods? Another example is flammable nightgowns for children which are permitted to be made. This type of system also results in degrading and offensive advertising and the waste which is so prevalent.

Our party envisions an economic system which is fundamentally different from the one advocated by the Liberal and Conservative parties. We seek an economic system in which all people who want to work will have jobs. We seek an economic system based upon serving the needs of people instead of satisfying the greed for profits to the greatest extent possible.

I have received a great deal of correspondence from my constituents in Burnaby concerning the budget and the proposal which is before the House today. These letters from my constituents have urged the government to change fundamentally its economic direction. I have received more letters describing the pain being felt by my constituents as a result of the budget, high interest rates, unemployment and the high cost of living than on any other issue.

Just last week I had a gentleman, Mr. Berkenpas, come into my office. He worked for 18 years as a draftsman in Burnaby and had been laid off due to the effects of this government's economic policies. He is 56 years old and has worked 18 years with this company. What is he to do with his future? He has a family to support.

Pensioners have written me about their anger over the suggestion in the budget that the provision regarding contributions to an RRSP will be changed so that they will no longer be eligible for a $1,000 pension income deduction.

A Mr. Terpening who lives on Southwood Street in Burnaby said:

> My wife and I have been married for 27 years. I am a pensioner and the pension I receive from my former place of employment is such that, in the event of death, the pension will, of course, be cut in half with a further reduction due to the fact that my wife is 20 years younger than myself.

He goes on to say:

> As you will appreciate, the Government proposal to prevent seniors putting monies into an RRSP without their being penalized will, in our case, cause an unnecessary hardship, as it will no doubt to other senior citizens.

I have some more examples of the economic impact of this government's policies. I had another letter on the question of taxing RRSPs and the taxation of benefits. Many constituents are concerned about the taxation of life insurance and annuities. One constituent will lives on Montecito Drive in Burnaby wrote:

> I do not feel it is fair to discriminate against policy owners who choose permanent life insurance to provide long term protection rather than term insurance—

I have taken this opportunity to bring to the attention of the Government of Canada and the people of Canada, through the vehicle of Parliament, the concerns of my constituents about the economic policies which, in my view, are having a very serious impact not only on my constituents, not only the people of British Columbia, but on all Canadians. We say that there must be a fundamental change in the direction of the policies of the government.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will not present my economic speech in the House today since I attempted to do that yesterday.

I cannot help but feel compelled to comment on the tenor of the speech made by the preceding speaker. I would hope that most politicians in this House would understand that all of us irrespective of political persuasion are trying humanely and intelligently to do our best for the electorate. There is no one in this House who does not come to this chamber sensitive and eager to help seniors, handicapped, businessmen, the young, females; but to hear that type of harangue or diatribe makes me think that the New Democratic Party, which poses as the party of reform, the party of change, the party of the future, in fact has a mind-set which is at least 150 years old. That is the type of social—

• (1650)

An hon. Member: Think of something!

Mr. Kelly: I have so many images going through my mind right now that I am finding it difficult to sort them out. But that language is typical of the class warfare which characterized political life a century and a half ago, when the aristocracy was fighting the middle class and there was a growing working class or proletariat. In those days, that language may have been appropriate because life for most people was very difficult. But that is not the case today. I would argue, as my colleague to my left just suggested, that that type of intervention in this debate is not at all profitable. It obscures the real debate. It hinders the efforts by hard working members of this House to make the very real and tough decisions which face us in this chamber, now and in the years ahead. I would almost say that the New Democratic Party is, in its mind-set, a medieval party. For that reason, I would argue that it is a reactionary party.

Mr. Jarvis: That does not mean shining knights.

Mr. Kelly: It really casts this debate in moral terms which come right out of the writings of the medieval clergy, the priestly cast which set itself apart and above the mere mortals who had to work for a living. Those people could make their grand moral pronouncements and feel great satisfaction in having done so. That was one of the functions of the priestly cast in those days. Frankly, I do not think it was a very productive one; and it appears to be the function of the New Democratic Party today, at least as it has been revealed in the rhetoric of the hon. member who spoke earlier. But I am carrying myself away from the major topic of debate today, which is Bill C-111.

Mr. Rose: You should be carried away, Kelly.

Mr. Kelly: I have been following the debate on Bill C-111, and, from what I have been able to see, there have emerged, in the criticisms of the opposition, three major themes. The three major themes are that government is big and expensive, government is out of control; and, perhaps the most condemning of their criticisms, government today is inept. For those reasons, the opposition argues that government does not deserve to be given the money that it has requested and that the House should therefore vote with a clear conscience against Bill C-93. I would like to take—

Mr. Mazankowski: Bill C-111.

Mr. Kelly: I am sorry, I meant Bill C-111. I would like to take the opportunity to offer my appraisal of those criticisms.

I would like to start with the first one, which is that government is big and expensive. I have to agree; the opposition is right: government is big and government is expensive. But I do not think that is really the point that the opposition members make when they argue that it is big and expensive. I think that what they are really saying is that this bigness is, in some way, unnatural, that it should not be big, that there is something artificial about the size of government and that, because it is artificial, because it could not exist naturally, then it must be as quickly as possible contained in its size and reduced.

I would argue, sir, that governments these days cannot be anything else except big and, for that reason, expensive. The public, in its quest for a comfortable existence which is as risk-free as possible, has placed demands on government which have led to the growth of government. As proof of my statement, I would offer not only the fact that the federal government has grown extremely large over the past two or three decades, but the fact that so, too, have the provincial and municipal governments. In the latter there are no party loyalties. Ostensibly, municipal governments are party-free. If one takes a look at the voting records of these governments, one will see that there is a free mix of votes in that forum, so that people do not vote strictly along party lines. But municipal governments have perhaps been the fastest growing level of government in Canada in the last decade and a half. Therefore, I simply cannot accept the arguments of the opposition that this party, this Liberal government which has been in office for so long, has—

Mr. Mazankowski: Too long.

Mr. Kelly: —of its own volition deliberately and manipulatively expanded the size of government for its own political purposes. This government has been sensitive in listening to the demands of the public and has grown in response to those demands. Rather than being condemned for them, I think this party should be praised.

Mr. Mazankowski: A lot of cheering on that one!

Mr. Kelly: As the hon. member in the opposition said, no one is cheering me on that one. Well, Mr. Speaker, take a look at the provincial governments. Whether the government is Progressive Conservative—

Mr. Mazankowski: There are quite a few of them.

Mr. Kelly: —whether the government is Social Credit, whether the government is Pequiste, whether the government is New Democrat—

An hon. Member: No Liberals.

Mr. Kelly: —all of the governments of Canada have listened to the demands of the public and, in their responses, have grown proportionately as large as the federal government, if not larger. I do not hear hon. members opposite criticizing those governments, presumably because many of those governments are of the same political persuasion as they are and it would not be fit or seemly to have an interfamily quarrel on the floor of this chamber.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, never do that.

Mr. Kelly: The point I have been making is that the federal government has grown in a very natural, very humane and therefore very compelling way over the last two decades.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In a very indebted way.

Mr. Kelly: I would illustrate my argument by asking the members in the opposition to turn their criticisms around and to ask themselves what they would cut from the present federal budget. If government is too large and too expensive, what would they cut?

• (1700)

Mr. Taylor: Cut out metric.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Purchases of Petrofina.

Mr. Kelly: The budget is divided roughly into four parts. Transfer payments account for 51 per cent of government expenditures, the public debt about 23 per cent, government operations about 16 per cent and national defence approximately 9.7 per cent.

If you go through the arguments of the opposition parties as we listen to them in the House or find them in newspapers or magazines, Mr. Speaker, you will find that while each party has a different emphasis on how it should spend money, or a different mix in the programs they project, the size of government and the totality of its budget would be really very little different from what we have today. In fact, I would argue that both would probably be larger then what we have today.

For example, in our transfer payments 51 cents of every dollar is transferred to provincial governments, corporations and individuals. I have not heard any spokesman for the two opposition parties suggest they would make any cuts, let alone sizeable cuts in any transfer payments to the three recipients I just mentioned. In fact, if you look at the rhetoric of the opposition parties, you will find that that portion of the budget would probably increase, and increase dramatically.

What about the public debt? It was not that long ago when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), on the verge of an electoral triumph in 1979, was talking about the need for a stimulative deficit, the need for the Government of Canada to go even deeper into debt in order to make those investments that would be necessary for a greater return, both privately and publicly, later in the decade. In light of that right hon. member's desire for a stimulative deficit, the demands by his colleagues for greater incentives to the business community and their strident demand that we give more to the provincial governments to help them look after education, medicare and social services of various sorts, I do not believe that party is committed to a reduction of the public debt.

If, Mr. Speaker, you have been following the arguments made in this House by members of the New Democratic Party, you will see that they are totally committed to a significant increase in the public debt. I am pleased to hear that at least they are honest enough to commit themselves so openly to increased indebtedness. They at least have the candour of their commitments, something which cannot be said about the party which forms the official opposition.

When we look at the cost of government operations, I doubt that the NDP would give us any reduction in this area. In fact, to deliver the types of programs they anticipate, there would be a significant increase in the size of government operations.

The official opposition party would probably make government operations slightly cheaper than they are right now. I do not know whether they would follow through with the slasher's desire to eliminate 60,000 public servants, but I expect we would see a determined attempt to reduce the size of government operations in the years ahead.

The trouble with cuts in government operations is that this is a minor cost of doing business, a minor cost in the government budget. No matter how rigorously you apply the paring knife to government operations, you will not find a lot of money. I suggest that the official opposition's desire and eagerness aside, any savings that would be found in a reduction of government operations would be minimal at best.

In the last category of budget expenditures, national defence, the New Democratic Party makes no attempt to hide its commitment to a lower defence budget. I believe I can say that without fear of contradiction. However, the official opposition has been equally candid in its projected policies in the area of national defence. If they form the government, the budget of the defence department will be increased dramatically.

In sum, when we look at the four categories of budget expenditures and the policy pronouncements of the opposition parties, we have to conclude that their argument against big expensive government is nothing more than posturing. If they have the opportunity or privilege of forming the government, we would have a government and a budget as big as we now have, with a very good chance of larger ones.

I now want to look at the second criticism, that this government is out of control. I know in saying this in the House, members opposite are reflecting a widely spread feeling among contemporary Canadians. When I go to my constituency, I rarely attend a meeting or a function without someone making the accusation that while the government is asking them to tighten their belts, the government itself is out of control and is spending money as though there were an unlimited supply.

Let us see if in fact this government is out of control, for that is a very serious accusation and has to be met head-on in this House. I will preface my analysis of government by indicating that there are three important players and relationships in government. First, there is the bureaucracy and the relationship between its executive management and labour. Second, there is the cabinet and its relationship with the bureaucracy. Third, there is the cabinet and the bureaucracy and their relationship with Parliament. As well, there are two important concepts: first is value for money; the second is accountability.

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker, in the light of those relationships, from a perspective of those two important concepts, is this government out of control?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Kelly: From what I can see, and I do not claim omniscience though some members opposite do, I would have to argue that no, this government is not out of control. Mr. Speaker, it was not that long ago that the Lambert Commission, the D'Avignon report and a succession of auditors general sounded the warning that this government was on the verge of being out of control. This government listened to those warnings and it acted on them so that we have today in place a very sophisticated and thorough management system which did not exist a few years ago.

I would like to take this opportunity to outline this management system so that all hon. members opposite, and the public with whom they talk, can understand that this government is making a very serious effort to discipline this very large and expensive government that has evolved over the last few decades.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is the fiscal plan. That is a five-year projection of the anticipated expenditures of the Government of Canada. Then inside each department, in an effort to create programs that can fit into that five-year plan, there are what are called departmental strategic overviews. These overviews represent an annual review of the objectives of each department, according to the planning guidelines generated by its parent cabinet committee. These reviews examine in detail the objectives of the department. They ask a number of important questions. Do the objectives of the department still make sense? If they make sense, to what extent has the department achieved those objectives, and at what cost? If it has not achieved those objectives, or if the cost is too high, are there reasonable alternatives?

Still within the department, Mr. Speaker, there are multi-year operational plans. These plans indicate the way in which each department attempts to realize the objectives enunciated in the strategic overview. The plans are continually updated and are submitted yearly to Treasury Board and the parent committee of cabinet, with accompanying additional evaluation plans, so that Treasury Board and cabinet have the information necessary to make a wise and prudent judgment of the performance of those departments.

Still within departments, Mr. Speaker, there is something called the budget year operational plan. This is an attempt by the department to establish the relationship between the estimates presented to Parliament and the department's management system.

Now moving on from the departments there is the very real accomplishment of the reform of the estimates. The reform of the estimates has its expression in three separate documents. The first document is the government expenditure plan which outlines the expenditure plans of the government in total and by envelope for a number of years in the future. The second document shows the appropriations necessary to carry out the plans outlined in the preceding document. Thirdly, still under development and not yet submitted, are the program evaluation plans which get down to the nitty-gritty of the expenditure of the dimes and the pennies necessary to carry out the appropriations which themselves flesh out the plans of the first document.

Supplementing all of these plans and estimates is the IMPAC program. This program is three years old. There are 25 plans that have evolved in 31 departments, covering 85 per cent of the expenditures of this government and covering 95 per cent of the government's employees.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you take all the programs that I have just outlined in boring detail and look at their impact on the system and ask yourself, has the evolution of these programs, has the establishment of all of these planning systems and the recruiting of all of the staff necessary to carry out these evaluations and plans expeditiously and accurately all produced results? Have they managed to discipline the system that Lambert and others suggested was on the verge of uncontrollability?

If you look at the evidence, I think you would have to say that the results have proven the benefits and the wisdom of the system. The growth rate of the government in person-years has been curbed substantially. In 1975 there were 317,184 person-years in government. In 1981 there were 315,680 person-years; that is a decline, Mr. Speaker, an important decline.

An hon. Member: Not enough.

Mr. Kelly: In 1982 the increase in person-years will be less than 1 per cent and we will have a work force measured in person-years lower than the work force similarly measured in 1976. That, Mr. Speaker, is a remarkable accomplishment.

Take a look as well at the total cost of government in Canada. I mentioned earlier that the cost of government is roughly 16 per cent of the total budget. Mr. Speaker, I point out that it was not that long ago that the cost of government in Canada was 25 per cent of the budget. So while government is more expensive today, and I would not argue that it is not, as a proportion of the government's budget the cost of government is in fact coming down. I think that is another remarkable and laudable accomplishment of this government.

• (1720)

In the light of those accomplishments and in the light of the fact that the present Auditor General has nothing but muted criticisms and mild commendations to make of the government's performance, why do we not hear more about the successes of this government? Why do we—that is, the public—not have a greater understanding of this government's ability to discipline itself and to control its size and expenditures?

The answer is two-fold. First, good news, frankly, is no news. What does it profit an opposition to praise the government? No one on this side of the House should be waiting with bated breath for opposition members to say anything good about the very real and important steps this government has taken and about the resulting efficiency achieved over the last few years.

The second reason we do not hear much about the gains which have been made in government productivity or efficiency is the fact that, regrettably, most members of this House—certainly the vast bulk of members of the opposition—have never read the documents in which these plans and their successes have been documented. Quite frankly, most members of the opposition do not have the foggiest idea of how the system operates and because they do not have the foggiest idea, they are trapped in the outmoded rhetoric of the mid-1970s when most of their criticisms were beginning to emerge.

Finally, I would like to take this opportunity to assess the third and, as I said, perhaps the most serious criticism which has been made in this particular debate, and that is that this government has so mismanaged the economy that Canada is on the verge of collapse. Rutgers University appeared to document this perspective and to give it some intellectual legitimacy when it revealed in a report several weeks ago that of the executives in the seven industrialized nations it surveyed, the 4,200 Canadian executives were the most pessimistic. It was Canadians who, looking ahead to the future, concluded, unlike their counterparts in other countries, that there was nothing ahead except more doom and more gloom. I would argue that their predictions do not prove mismanagement of the economy. They offer nothing more than soft impressions and a psychological knee-jerk reaction to contemporary difficulties. They reflect the dark cloud syndrome in the Canadian psyche that opposition members—especially of the official opposition—so successfully manipulate in the debates in this House and on the hustings across Canada.

If we have to make a judgment about the economic performance of this government—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Who is "we"?

Mr. Kelly: Anyone. "We" is anyone in this House or outside this House, businessmen, academics, workers, or people who stay at home. It does not matter; it is anyone. If we have to make a judgment about the very serious criticism which has been levelled at this government, let us at least deal with some hard, objective data. When we look around for this hard data, what do we find? There have been two very illuminating, independent and objective studies which have been published recently, in 1981 and 1982. The New York Stock Exchange undertook the study, published in 1981, that examined the performances of the industrialized countries of the world from 1960 to 1979. Its conclusion was that the Canadian economy had the second best record of performance in the industrialized world. When we realize that Japan was number one, second best in that study represents a remarkable achievement by the administrations which were in power during that period.

That is an American perspective, and to some hon. members opposite it may be tainted for that very reason. But there has been another report published more recently, this one in 1982 by the European Management Forum, which decided to research, evaluate and write a report on industrial competitiveness. The Forum evolved 241 criteria and applied them to 21 industrialized nations. As a result of its studies the Forum concluded that the Canadian economy was number five. It was not number 13, not number 20 or not number 21, as one might guess from the rhetoric of hon. members opposite; it was number five. I think that is a respectable placing. Japan was first, Switzerland second, the United States third and West Germany fourth.

As far as I am concerned, those two reports indicate conclusively that this government has had, if not the best record, certainly a fine record of achievement in the last two decades. I am not ashamed of its performance. I am not prepared to apologize in this House to hon. members opposite for the performance of this government and for the performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

There is a sub-theme inside this theme of mismanagement, and that is that the Government of Canada interferes so badly in the Canadian economy and that the heavy hand of government is so pronounced—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jarvis): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue, of course, with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jarvis): The hon. member does not have unanimous consent.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-111 seeks to provide borrowing authority for $6.6 billion. That is a big item. It is a big ticket item, and the fact is that it is one in a series. This government will undoubtedly be back for more.

The hon. member who preceded me spoke about the fantastic record of this government over the last two decades. What is staggering is that 20 years ago this $6.6 billion figure represented the total federal government expenditures of Canada. Ten years ago it represented about one-half. Today the $6.6 billion represents roughly 10 per cent of total federal government expenditures. So we can see that the growth has been phenomenal and more Canadians are wondering where this trend will eventually lead us. Our expenditures and deficits are growing. We are spending more to service our debt. Our rate of growth is declining and production is stagnant. Canadians note that the only growth in Canada today is that of government, and that is not productive.

• (1730)

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that this trend cannot continue. It is obvious that the direction of this country must change. I submit that we must reduce the level of government expenditures as a percentage of the GNP. Secondly, we must stimulate growth in production to generate new wealth. We must do this if we are to sustain the level of government services we have been accustomed to in this country, if we are to provide those less fortunate with the kind of support services we have in the past so they can live in dignity.

Let us briefly look at our current economic setting, Mr. Speaker. We all know our economy is in a shambles. This year, in spite of the Minister of Finance's (Mr. MacEachen) predictions of a $10.5 billion deficit, economists predict it will be in the order of $13 billion plus. Next year it is expected to rise to $14.5 billion as opposed to the budget forecast of $9.6 billion.

Why this trend towards higher deficits? There are a number of reasons. Number one, energy revenues are lower than originally anticipated; some suggest $20 billion or $30 billion less. Second, lower corporate incomes result in reduced income taxes collected. I note with interest, Mr. Speaker, that the CNR has reported the worst quarterly loss in its history, at $67 million for the first quarter of 1982. Compare that to its 1981 first quarter profit of $69.9 million. Other companies have experienced similar cutbacks in their profits. The oil companies are just one example. Banks have registered profit reductions in the order of 25 per cent to 30 per cent. It has been estimated that more than 50 per cent of the Vancouver business community will be applying for tax refunds this year. As of 1981 corporate profits are at their lowest level since 1947, when the national accounts were first published.

Third, there is the fact of escalating interest costs. We are now spending one dollar out of every five to service our debt. Last year there was an increase of 38 per cent in that category alone, and I suspect it will be higher this year.

Fourth, we continue to rely upon oil imports to supply domestic needs. This will not only have a negative effect on our balance of payments and budgetary transactions, but indeed it has a very significant effect on growth, development and job creation in this country. It certainly has a major effect on the level of the Canadian dollar, which also impacts on interest rates.

Fifth, because of the slowdown and massive unemployment with more people being forced on unemployment insurance, welfare and other government social benefits, those costs will escalate, which will further increase government spending.

We are experiencing a stagnation in growth. It is now estimated that our growth is going to be minus one-half per cent in 1982, compared to a supposed increase of 2.2 per cent projected by the Minister of Finance.

I cite these points because it is clear that the Minister of Finance and his bureaucrats have clearly misread the behaviour of the economy. They have clearly been irresponsible in projecting the effects of the November 12 budget, and to me this kind of gross incompetence should trigger both the minister's and his advisers' resignation, if not that of the whole government. I say to you, Sir, that that would be the best way of improving business confidence in this country. But, of course, that is not about to happen.

The mess we are in is not something which materialized over the last year or so; rather it was over the last 14 years. It is part of a pattern. For example, since this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in 1968 we have only had one balanced budget, which was in 1969. If you look at his record further you will note that during the period 1968-82 we have accumulated budgetary deficits totalling approximately $90 billion. And the hon. member across the way asks, is this government out of control? You are darned right it is out of control, Mr. Speaker. Our national debt now stands at roughly $135 billion, or $14,260 per taxpayer, or $5,560 per capita.

Mr. Kelly: What about Japan?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not talking about Japan. This is the House of Commons of Canada, we are dealing with the Canadian economy, and that is what is important.

Interest on our national debt is some $16.6 billion a year. Put another way, it is $1,750 per taxpayer, or $680 per capita.

Looking at inflation, we know that in 1968 it was something in the order of 4 per cent. Today it is hovering around 12 per cent in spite of wage and price controls in 1975 which were supposed to see the rate of inflation drop to 4 per cent. In the day leading up to wage and price controls the Prime Minister said he had wrestled inflation to the ground. Well, it has been some match! The consumer price index has increased by 183 per cent, and the purchasing value of the dollar has fallen by some 70 per cent more or less since that man has taken office. In 1968 unemployment was 4.5 per cent; today it is about 9.6 per cent, or 1.2 million Canadians are unemployed. The bank rate was approximately 7.5 per cent in 1968; today it is around 16 per cent with customers having to pay anywhere from 18 per cent to 20 per cent. The Canadian dollar was worth 93 cents U.S. in 1968; today it is 81 cents and falling.

We have a shameful manufacturing deficit of $21 billion, the result of which has been 133,000 fewer manufacturing jobs in 1982 compared in 1981. We have a current account deficit of $8 billion. Investment capital is flowing out of Canada at unprecedented levels, seven times greater than the average during the 1970s. We have identified some $10.2 billion, of which $5.3 billion is foreign and $4.9 billion is Canadian, plus $8.4 billion worth of unidentifiable capital which has left this country, all for a total of $18.6 billion.

I say to you, Sir, that the major part of this was caused by the Canadianization program, which was itself responsible for the outflow of $6.5 billion in the first six months of 1981. Unfortunately, that outflow is not slowing down. If you look at the outflow in the last quarter of 1981, Mr. Speaker, you will note that capital is flowing out at the same rate it did during the second quarter of 1981.

We have this risk-taking, productive capital leaving the country. It is being replaced by passive money seeking high interest rates in the form of bonds and bank deposits. It has been pointed out that some $5.6 billion in interest is flowing out of the country. It has also been pointed out that the failure of Canadianization is demonstrated by the fact that under the Canadianization program more money is now leaving the country to pay the interest than there was in the form of dividends paid out. This results in higher interest rates, pressure on the Canadian dollar, loss of jobs and a further loss of confidence in the economy.

That is clearly the central problem in Canada's economic woes, but it is clearly within the control and the responsibility of this government. It has not acted, but it must act. This outflow must stop. That is crucial if we are going to restore the kind of economic vitality that we need in this country. We need investment capital to stimulate production, to re-tool and to embark upon the various projects that are proposed but, indeed, at the present time are being stalled, postponed and delayed.

Other members in this House have made the following point: the outlook in this country is bleak. There is no hope. There is no promise. There is doom and gloom which is increasing day by day. There is a sense of despair in the country. Why is that? There are two reasons. First, the government does not appear to be addressing the problem. As a matter of fact, it is obvious the government is not addressing the problem; rather it is adding to the problem.

Second, we go back to the election campaign of 1980. One must go back because at that time there was the creation of false expectation. This government campaigned on a policy that was full of deceitful rhetoric. It promised cheap energy. It promosed lower interest rates. It promised a healthy economy. It promised a vibrant oil industry. The expectations were high. It was "elect us, and we will show you the way".

This goverment has not been able to show the way. This government's simple, slick solution has not worked. They have backfired. What do we have today, sir? We have the cancellation of Alsands, the cancellation of the Cold Lake Project, the cancellation of Judy Creek, the delay of the heavy oil upgrader in Saskatchewan and/or Alberta. We have the delay of the Alaska highway pipeline. We have a 40 per cent reduction in exploration and driling activities in western Canada, the result of which has thrown hundreds of thousands of Canadians out of work. Associated industries have gone bankrupt. The whole industry has collapsed. There has been an exodus of men, equipment, expertise and, indeed, capital.

The petrochemical industry is now another entity of the once vibrant petroleum industry that is now suffering. The latest edition of the "Alberta Report" cites "The Petrochemical Calamity; how Alberta's brightest industrial hope vanished overnight." And what are the chief reasons? There has been a slump in demand in global markets, primarily because of increased costs of petrochemical feedstock prices in Canada as a result of taxes and high interest rates. It has been a sobering situation for an industry which held such promise in Alberta. It was to be the star of the economy in 1980. It was to be the stimulus, the catalyst, that was going to diversify the economy of Alberta.

But the negative impacts of the National Energy Program in addition to the high interest rate policy and the very devasting provisions of the budget have thrown 13 out of 15 petrochemical projects into a state of limbo. I shall cite them for the record.

The Alberta Energy Company project of 1.1 billion pounds of benzene located at Bruderheim, worth $350 million, to be completed in 1984, is delayed while new partners are sought. Another Alberta Energy Company project also at Bruderheim, worth $300 million and to be completed in 1984, also delayed while new partners are sought.

AEC and Dupont Canada Inc. project for a low-density polyethylene plant at Redwater, worth $200 million; planned completion date 1984 and delayed six months.

The Alberta Gas Ethylene Co. project for 1.5 billion pounds of ethylene at Joffre, worth $590 million and due for completion in 1985, is delayed one year at least. The CIL and Trimac Ltd. Project worth $128 million is also delayed.

The Celanese Canada project worth $255 million, to be completed in 1982, also is delayed.

A Dow Chemical of Canada Ltd. project, a 180,000 tonne per year polyethylene plant at Fort Saskatchewan and worth $75 million, to be completed in 1984, is also delayed. Another Dow Chemical project worth $135 million, to be located also in Fort Saskatchewan and to be completed in 1984, also is delayed.

Gulf Canada Products Co. project, worth $250 million, is delayed in its early stages.

Enesco Chem Ltd. has two projects. One is worth $250 million and the other $240 million, both delayed, to be announced later.

Union Carbide Canada Ltd. has a $259 million project for ethylene glycol and it is further delayed.

AEC, Esso Chem. and Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, which had a $700 million project to be completed in 1986, is delayed indefinitely.

That is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. This government has killed the exploration industry. This government has killed the Canadian component of the industry. Now it is killing the petrochemical industry. The fact is that the National Energy Program has crippled and destroyed a once vibrant industry out there in Alberta. Mr. William Wilder, President of Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. has stated:

> The NEP is just part of an approach to the economy of this country on the part of the federal government that is undermining the ability of every industry in Canada to meet the kinds of economic challenges it faces today—
> Because federal policies have so eroded the real market attractions of investing in Canada, increasingly the only way we can attract money to keep our currency relatively strong is by paying historically high interest rates.

I think that sums up the National Energy Program quite well. It has hurt the manufacturing industry, small business, the farmers and the workers.

As a matter of fact, I would like to read a letter that I received from one of my constituents, Mr. Henry C. Wilson, sales manager for Sun Life of Canada. He addressed his letter to the Prime Minister of Canada, a copy of which he forwarded to me. It reads:

> As a Canadian of several generations I wish to ask you if you know what you are doing to this great country of ours? I write with respect to the re-election of your government in 1980, the introduction or nationalization of our country through programs such as NEP and thirdly with respect as a life underwriter, in the life insurance industry to the November 1981 budget and change in December 1981.
> As in hockey, Sir, usually five players make a mistake before the goal keeper makes his. Canadians were first to make the mistake in re-electing you to govern our country again. You then had your chances and have made your mistakes many times since.
> The NEP is a disguise I believe to socialize our country and it appears to be working better than you even planned I am sure. With the number of companies moving out of Canada or going broke, our wonderful Canadian Crown Companies will not even have to pay for some of the assets they will take over, simply pick up the keys. By the way, part of my tax dollar is in that Canadian Crown Company you have been playing with and I don't like it. As a result of NEP unemployment is higher than ever, as are corporate bankruptcy in our area of this country. This was before the budget of November 1981.
> The Budget of November 1981 will kill any of the free enterprises or small businesses that were missed by the NEP.
> It takes cash flow to purchase life insurance. My business today is 25 to 40 per cent of pre-November 1981. Do you know how many dollars this represents in Canada that are not flowing through the system to provide life insurance protection for families? Do you realize the dollars that life companies do not have today to finance homes, apartments, commercial buildings and finance industry—all these things that put people to work and lastly pay tax dollars to you to keep you flying around the world?
> I write to suggest that you do two things very quickly to save our country.
> (1) Scrap the NEP.
> (2) Bring in a new budget that gives reward for work and provides incentive for people to put a dollar away for a rainy day—through life insurance or a deferred annuity as was pre-1981 income.

This gives us an idea of the depth of the feeling and the impact of the National Energy Program and of the budget upon average Canadians.

We know that the government's program for economic development is based upon resource megaprojects. Either deliberately or through stupidity, economic leadership in the country has been such that economic infrastructure has been destroyed. Now we have a large number of potential megaprojects which were once on stream and are now down the tubes. I remind hon. members of the House that back in February, March and April of 1980 the oil industry was humming. At that time Alsands project was proceeding. It had the support of the Alberta government and the approval of the Alberta government and the approval of the Alberta Resources Conservation Board. As a matter of fact, it was working on site. The industry was humming, but it is now down the tubes as are so many others.

What about the alternatives? What will the government do now to pick up the slack? Will it make any fundamental changes to the National Energy program? The National Energy Program was referred to in the Edmonton Journal as "a real life nightmare". It went on to recite the deficiencies in it. The government must do something to refuel the engine for economic development upon which it has relied. If we are to alleviate the unemployment situation, there must be changes to the National Energy Program.

Mr. John D. Porter, management director of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, said recently that what was needed were some fundamental changes to the National Energy Program. He indicated the following:

> (a) Reduce the charges under the petroleum gas revenue tax.
> (b) Reduce the level of incremental oil revenue tax.
> (c) Reintroduce tax incentives so Canadians will invest in exploration and development in Canada.
> (d) Establish priority access to Canadian markets for Canadian crude oil production, thereby eliminating imports from foreign sources, thus reducing our balance of payments problem.
> (e) Open new long-term competitively priced natural gas export markets for Canadian producers at the earliest opportunity.

Those are some very logical and common sense recommendations which I suggest the government should consider seriously.

There are other options. We on the opposition side are looking for some answers. With the cancellation of the Alsands project, does it mean that efforts will now be redirected to revitalize the Cold Lake project or something similar to it, even though it would be on a smaller scale? I think this requires serious consideration.

Further, what will be the government's policy with respect to encouraging conventional oil drilling and exploration? Given the fact that supplies are dwindling, I believe serious consideration should be given to revitalizing that particular sector. What efforts will be made to commence in earnest a heavy oil upgrader? There are huge amounts of heavy oil shut in which we cannot now use because we do not have the facility to upgrade it to a level where it can be accepted by our conventional refiners. Now that Alsands has been cancelled, surely it is incumbent upon and behooves the government to reconsider and accelerate the establishment of a heavy oil upgrader in Alberta or Saskatchewan or both.

What plans does the government have with regard to establishing the kind of necessary initiatives toward enhanced recovery of heavy oil? There are huge deposits of heavy oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan. If we are to work toward achieving energy self-sufficiency, we certainly cannot wait until production is in place as far as the high Arctic, frontier lands and Hibernia are concerned. We have a long time to go before the regulations, the transportation system and all obstacles will be overcome. We must move toward revitalizing this very important sector. Since the announced cancellation of Alsands there has been nothing coming from the government in terms of what it proposes to do alternatively to take up the slack.

Finally, in order to end the uncertainty, the confusion and the devastation, the budget must clearly be withdrawn. I bring these recommendations to the attention of the House at this time in the interests of preserving and enhancing our leadership in technology in oil sands and heavy oil recovery. Also I bring them forth in the interests of ensuring adequate and secure supply, of aiding the restoration of our economic health and of looking at serious problems in regard to interest rates, the current account deficit and the outflow of capital to other countries. I bring forth these recommendations also in the interests of job creation and stimulated economic development and growth.

I believe these alternatives must be actively explored and that industry once again must be the major catalyst. The ground rules must be clearly spelled out. There must be stability and confidence. The government cannot move in and out and change rules in the middle of the night. There must be a clear set of rules, regulations and guidelines within which industry can function. We certainly cannot stand any more destruction and division as has occurred in the country over past years.

It is time to renew our economic and political partnership so that it will encourage production and growth, encourage the Canada first policy, reduce our dependence upon imports, and revitalize the private sector. We must attract new investment and ensure that investment dollars stay in the country. We must restore investor confidence and build upon our natural strengths. We have many natural strengths. I have talked mainly about the energy industry, but we also have agriculture, the oil industry and the mining industry. We have much potential in the country.

I should like to quote from a speech by Mr. Jim Gray, executive vice-president of Canadian Hunter Exploration in Calgary. He said:

> This country is languishing in a state of economic gloom and political rancour.
> Entrepreneurship and free enterprise are out of fashion in the decision-making regions and cities of Canada. The centralization of political decision-making in government offices, especially in Ottawa, is apparently the new process for building one Canada.
> Quite obviously it is a process that, because it is designed to centralize power in Ottawa, is in direct conflict with regional decision-making. An inevitable result is serious tension.
> Canada today is a game played by and for bureaucrats and government theorists. We were once a great nation of producers and entrepreneurs. The hands that once drove industry and created jobs now spend weeks out of every year in the stroking of politicians.
> The builders that once spent all their time driving production on the drilling rigs, at the mine site or on the factory floor now sit, cap in hand and hour by hour, in the outer offices of the Ottawa bureaucrats. They are waiting for their decisions as to the tax regime and regulations under which the entrepreneur will operate and strive to create jobs and production and make a profit.

This is a very, very sad litany of what has happened. The enterprise spirit in the country has been destroyed. Unless the government fundamentally changes its direction, that spirit will be destroyed to the extent that it will be very difficult for any government, even a Conservative government, to recover and redirect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, pursuant to order made Friday, May 7, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of second reading stage of the bill now before the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Bussières), which was agreed to on the following division:

SUGGESTED CUT IN TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Federal government taxation is killing business and pounding the life out of the people. One utility company which paid a total federal tax of $8 million in 1980 was required to pay $64 million in 1981, or eight times as much, even though its revenue was only three quarters of the 1980 revenue. This increase was due to the excise tax and the Canadian ownership tax. These taxes are passed on to the people, including the aged, the poor and the crippled. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House urge the government in the name of humanity and compassion to cut these taxes before we have a tax revolution in this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to move a motion which I believe will obtain the consent of the House. Whereas Glendon College of York University, Toronto, will next month be honouring with the degree of Doctor of Laws, Anatoly Shcharansky, a man who has struggled to obtain his fundamental human rights, and whereas this Soviet dissident has involved himself fearlessly in mankind's struggle for freedom of thought, of expression and of movement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urge the Soviet authorities to acknowledge Anatoly Shcharansky's courageous principles and allow for his release in order that he may accept in person an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws to be conferred by Glendon College of York University.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

OMISSION OF UKRAINIAN FROM MAP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the information branch of the Commissioner of Official Languages recently published a map supposedly depicting the languages of the world. The map is apparently intended as a teaching aid for students from the age of 13 to 17 years. The map pointedly omits any reference to the Ukrainian language. There are over 600,000 Canadians of Ukrainian descent in this country who have contributed their language and their traditions to enhance the cultural mosaic of Canada. The publication of this map by the government is an insult to each and every one of them. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House direct the Commissioner of Official Languages to withdraw this offensive map immediately and prepare a proper one which recognizes the Ukrainian language as one of the world's languages.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EXPLORATION OF NEW BRUNSWICK'S OIL SHALE DEPOSITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the collapse of the Alsands project and the Prime Minister's statement in the maritimes that the government will be looking for self-reliance in other areas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the government immediately commit itself to funding exploration of the oil shale in New Brunswick.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CALL FOR APOLOGY BY HOUSE OF COMMONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I ask for support of this motion by all parties in the House. Yesterday many male members of the House laughed uproariously when they were told that one out of every ten men in Canada beat their wives repeatedly. As a result, there has been a public outcry against the appalling attitude expressed by these hon. members. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That all members of this House apologize to the women of Canada for the shameful and disgusting display of discrimination and ignorance by members who degraded this House yesterday with their performance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AGRICULTURE

NECESSITY FOR BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been talking about a national beef program of one sort or another for over a year. In the meantime, because of the lack of any effective national program, every beef producing province has announced assistance to the beef industry which significantly varies from province to province. I therefore move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Minister of Agriculture stop accusing farm leaders of being gutless and show some leadership by calling a meeting of provincial agriculture ministers to work out a nationally co-ordinated and jointly funded beef stabilization program between the two levels of government and the producers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

STATUS OF WOMEN

REGRET CONCERNING REPORTED ATTITUDE OF MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to remind hon. members of an incident that occurred in the House yesterday when a question was being put to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, the Hon. Judy Erola, and some hon. members seemed to be unmindful of the situation concerning wife battering in Canada. I move, seconded by the member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the House apologize for this attitude and shows that its members are aware of the extent of the problem of violence done to women in Canada, and that it reiterate its support for the third report of the Standing Committee of the House and urge hon. members to support its main objectives, which are to gain a better understanding of the problem of violence and provide better protection for its victims.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, more and more men and women across this great country are losing their jobs, causing real tragedy in the daily lives of ordinary Canadians. They depend on members of this House of Commons to show leadership in the direction of our economy. The absolute stupidity of the government is pushing Canada into a depression. The greatest resource of Canada is our young people who have spent years of effort to prepare themselves so that they may take part in the richness of our nation, but they are now finding no jobs and no hope of jobs. The stubborn jackass of a finance minister—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Shields: —who knows full well that his policies are not working, that they only serve to make a disastrous situation worse, must now change his policies before it is too late. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) must throw out his national energy policy which has already wreaked havoc on the one industry which could have led the way to Canada's economic recovery.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That this House do immediately receive the resignations of the members of this lunatic group called a government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Shields:

—whose disastrous, short-sighted and ignorant economic and energy policies are responsible for hurling our great country toward another depression.

Some hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, the people of Canada want to work, they do not want to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Shields: —they do not want welfare.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

FARM INCOME STABILIZATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is at least six weeks past his own deadline for a federal-provincial agreement on an improved stabilization program to assist in preventing further declines in Canadian net farm income, which has basically remained unchanged since 1974, at which time that income was close to parity with other sectors of Canadian society, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That this House order the Minister of Agriculture to report to it the principles being proposed by himself and his department, as well as to report how many meetings he has initiated on this topic since June of 1981 when he set his deadline for the introduction of a new program.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

POSITION OF MEMBER FOR YORK-PEEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas my good friend, the illustrious hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), has been one of the harshest and most severe critics of the National Energy Program, and whereas it was disclosed in the press today that he is chairman of the board of a company which is now a partner in the recently announced $600 million Beaufort Sea exploration project, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel):

That this House invite the hon. member for York-Peel to prove that he is a man of conviction by asking him either to change his position on the National Energy Program and begin to support its excellent policies or to resign his corporate position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today the Canadian dollar fell to its lowest level since the depths of the depression 50 years ago, before the Bank of Canada stepped in to support it. This alarming drop reflects the conviction of investors that the government will again introduce the wrong economic policy at the wrong time and take steps to devalue the dollar or bring on exchange controls. Will the Prime Minister commit to this House, on the basis of whatever credibility his government still possesses, that the government is not planning to devalue the dollar or impose exchange controls, now or in the foreseeable future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is probably right in ascribing this drop in the dollar to an assumption that we are going to take the wrong policy. I can assure her that we are going to take the policy which she seems to prefer in her question, and which has been this government's policy, that of not devaluing the dollar and not imposing exchange controls.

Oral Questions

BANK OF CANADA

POSITION OF GOVERNOR

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my second question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The panic selling of the dollar and the flight of money from the country reflects the fact that the whole world, not just Canadians, has lost confidence in the ability of this government to govern. After all, it is the government which brought in the national energy policy which cost us hundreds of thousands of jobs, and has even put our banking system at risk. Has it also lost confidence in the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Will the Prime Minister confirm whether the governor's resignation has been asked for or has been offered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can also say quite categorically that that is a completely unfounded rumour. The governor's resignation has not been offered, nor has it been asked for, nor has it been discussed in any way.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE REPLACED

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my third question is also addressed to the Prime Minister. I am advised, by talking to people throughout the country, that the one positive step the Prime Minister could take to restore some degree of confidence would be to replace the finance minister and withdraw the budget. Is the Prime Minister prepared to take that step, or, having pulled the plug on the economy, is he prepared to let the country go down the drain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that the people who advised her of that seem to have a very simplistic view of the world economy and the Canadian economy if they think that one man in Ottawa can be responsible for the high unemployment in Germany, Britain, Italy and the United States.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we again have the example of bellowing backbenchers who refuse—

Mr. Shields: Go home and talk to the residents in your riding.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member on my left does not have the floor.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I apologize for the backbenchers to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre who should be as distressed as I am that they do not find her questions important.

THE ECONOMY

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who will know that today interest rates went up 25 bases points in Canada. This week interest rates on American T-bills went down about 40 bases points. Will the Prime Minister tell us how long he is going to force interest rates up in this country, now nearly three points above American rates expressed on T-bills, in order just to protect the market value of our dollar? What is he going to do to get interest rates down in Canada, and not keep blaming the Americans?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we have in these two questions an example of the confusion which is present in the opposition ranks. The hon. member is suggesting we should not do anything to protect the dollar. The previous questioner from the same party wanted to be assured that the Canadian dollar was not going to be devalued and, therefore, that it should be protected.

REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that we have advocated policy after policy to strengthen the exchange value of the dollar without resorting to ridiculous, high interest rates, which he seems to want to impose on the country.

• (1420)

One of the reasons the dollar is going down is the lack of confidence in the economy, the lack of confidence in his government. When is he going to bring in a new budget? When is he going to set the country on a new economic course? When is he going to change things so that Canadians will not take their money out of Canada and that foreigners will not take their money out of Canada? When will there be some confidence in Canada again so that we can build the country and make it go forward? When are we going to turn off the fiscal doomsday machine?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Amid all that shouting, Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member was asking me when we should be changing our economic policy. I would point out to him that a member of his own party, a couple of minutes ago, wanted to be reassured that we were not changing our policy in so far as devaluation of the dollar is concerned.

Mr. Corbett: What devious hypocrisy!

Mr. Trudeau: There is hypocrisy over there, Madam Speaker. The problem could be solved if the Conservative Party were to get their act together and know what economic policy they are going to follow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENTS MADE BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The internationally accepted role of an ambassador is that an envoy should not interfere in the host country's politics by speaking out publicly on matters which are to be resolved domestically. Considering that the United States ambassador to Canada has once again violated this principle, this time by asserting, on the one hand, that Canadians spend too much on social programs and, on the other hand, by asserting publicly that we should not strengthen our FIRA legislation, what action does the Government of Canada propose to take to ensure that this does not happen again?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has not stated the international rule exactly. It is that ambassadors are expected to represent their countries in another country and to speak on issues in that country which affect their own country's interests and policies. As I am sure all hon. members of the House would wish, we give a fairly wide latitude to that rule, just as we would expect other countries to do so in the case of our ambassadors.

I would admit what the hon. gentleman says, that there are some instances which, from time to time, could be considered borderline. In those cases, by and large, I think it is better that those be dealt with, as long as they are borderline, by the normal political and free speech process of this country, so that members like the Minister of National Defence or other members of this House can publicly answer things which are publicly said. It seems to me that that is in the best tradition of Canadian democracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION TAKEN BY FORMER UNITED STATES AMBASSADORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have rarely heard such a weaselly answer, even from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, since the Prime Minister has decided that he is not going to get involved in this rather basic question which simply involves the principle that the American ambassador in Canada should act precisely according to the same rules as do all other ambassadors. That is really the point at stake here.

One predecessor of the current ambassador, namely, Adolph Schmidt, has said "I would never use a public forum to criticize Canadian policies." Another former American ambassador, Mr. Porter, has also agreed with this principle. Since I know of no person other than the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has said that ambassadors should be going around publicly engaging in domestic debate, does the minister not agree with the two former American ambassadors who said that an ambassador's role, when he has differences with the Government of Canada, is to express those differences with the Government of Canada, and otherwise keep his views to himself?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, first of all, there is no difference in any rules or tolerances that we apply as between one ambassador and another in Canada. They are all treated exactly the same.

• (1425)

We must understand that an ambassador's role is not just to represent his government to the government of another country in the sense that he gives messages privately to that government; he is also entitled to speak out publicly—as our ambassador, for instance, in Washington does—on the issues of the day as they affect the interests of his country. It is only when an ambassador departs from that course that he is rightly subject to censure.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I would like the minister to be able to give to the House any comparable example of a Canadian ambassador going down to the United States and criticizing domestic U.S. policy. I suggest, with all respect, that the minister cannot give any such example.

UNITED STATES PRESSURE RESPECTING FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the context of the present American ambassador's objectionable practices in this country, and considering that Mr. Robinson said, shortly before last fall's budget, that Canadians could anticipate an announcement that the Liberal commitment to strengthen FIRA would in fact be withdrawn shortly—and when we saw the budget we saw that his forecast was confirmed—does this acquiescent attitude of the Government of Canada to U.S. pressure really account for the minister's response to these questions today rather than the substance of the arguments he is presenting?

Mr. MacGuigan: Do you want to take that, Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why don't you ask Pierre Bussières? Get up, Pierre.

Mr. Blenkarn: He hasn't got any notes on that subject.

Mr. Broadbent: Ask your backbenchers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Prime Minister, Bill Rompkey has his hand up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I should not have to recall for the hon. member the cases in which our ambassador, our officials and our ministers speak openly and publicly in the United States against various aspects of American policy. Often at the instance of the hon. member's party they raise the question of the Garrison dam, for instance. We speak publicly. We lobby publicly in Washington on this issue—

Mr. Broadbent: That is an international question.

Mr. MacGuigan: —because we believe it is in the interests of our country.

As I stated before, this is a question relating to a host country's policies and the effect they have on the policies of an ambassador's home country, in his view, and that is the rule which is internationally accepted as a valid one.

With respect to FIRA, I might say that our policy on FIRA has not changed. Our explanation of it in the United States has not changed.

Mr. Broadbent: Read the budget.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is not for me to say what the product of the review of FIRA will be, but the fact is that this is not the highest profile issue we have in our relations with the United States, and the effect of the American pressure to which the hon. member refers is not a crucial factor in the formulation of our policies.

KENT ROYAL COMMISSION

ESTABLISHMENT OF NEWSPAPER ADVISORY COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the last exchange of questions was like putting a question to Edgar Bergen and getting the answer from Charlie McCarthy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Perhaps I can go directly to the ventriloquist. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. It arises from a cabinet document entitled "Response to the Royal Commission on Newspapers." Can the Prime Minister confirm that cabinet is currently considering a set of proposals dealing with the Kent commission which would substantially scrap its recommendations and result in a Canadian newspaper advisory council being set up, and in policies which would restrict Southam and Thomson to their present size, and which would result in the breakup of those two chains if they were to be sold?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking to be informed of a discussion which has gone on in cabinet and which has not yet been the subject of a public announcement. I think that even Charlie McCarthy would know that the rules provide that a cabinet decision will not be announced until the minister responsible wants to make that announcement. The Minister of Multiculturism is at present travelling with the Governor General, and when he returns he may or may not want to deal with this question.

QUERY RESPECTING CABINET DOCUMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, one of the recommendations is that in future non-media companies wanting to acquire newspaper holdings would first have to demonstrate to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission that the purchase would be in the public interest. In view of the fact that the cabinet document itself says that even this review process may be struck down by the courts, can the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that, if this proposal is included in legislation presented to Parliament, before asking Parliament to pass it the government would first seek a reference to the courts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have to repeat to the hon. member that he is asking me to comment on a cabinet document—an alleged cabinet document. I can assure him that the rules of Parliament do not call for me to answer such a question and he, as a former cabinet minister, although admittedly an insignificant one, should not have to be told that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRANSPORT CANADIAN AEROBATIC TEAM AIRCRAFT TO EUROPE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns a question I put to him on April 28. I am informed that the Canadian aerobatic team has received an offer from the Solidarity Union, of Poland, to help finance the movement of the Canadian aerobatic aircraft from Canada to Austria where the world championship competition will take place, in exchange for painting on the Solidarity logo on the aircraft. I understand those concerned have written to the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking for some assistance in getting their aircraft over to Europe. Has the minister responded to the Canadian Aerobatic Association and, second, has he responded to its request to use the Solidarity logo on its aircraft instead of the Maple Leaf?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question that was addressed to me by this Canadian body was one asking for advice about the appropriateness of using the Solidarity logo. As hon. members know, many people in Canada wear Solidarity pins and are very proud to carry the Solidarity logo. That is a decision which, in a free country like this, Canadians are free to make, and they do so, showing their solidarity with the Polish organization. It is not for the government to advise a private organization whether it should adopt such a position. That is basically for it to decide, and that was the advice we provided.

Regarding the question of transportation, I think that might be more appropriately addressed to my colleague, the Minister of National Defence.

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF FISH PLANTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans concerning employment in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. The minister knows that Atlantic Canada is experiencing record unemployment, and now the Fisheries Council of Canada has suggested reductions in the number of fishermen, vessels, and processing plants. The minister also knows that further fish plant closures would have drastic effects on unemployment in Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces.

Will the minister undertake to fight against further fish plant closures? Will he also make every effort not only to continue employment in the fishing industry at current levels but to reactivate closed plants, and will he work to create more job opportunities in the Atlantic fishery? Surely with millions starving in the world, we can catch, process, and sell this high protein food.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member's last question underlines exactly the problem we have had in the fishery, which is to try to load upon this industry all the other economic problems and all the problems of unemployment caused by closure of mines or whatever. For a good number of years I have advocated—and in this I have been supported by members on all sides of the House—that we should see the 200-mile limit not as an unlimited expansion but as a way go give the industry which existed some chance at stability. I am afraid that many people, including some of the large companies on the east coast, have expanded beyond anything that the oceans can provide.

On the question of disposing of surplus fish, I might say to the hon. member that if we had been able to convince the industry to co-operate, and if international markets had been better than they have been, we might have made more progress.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I want to point out to my colleague from Atlantic Canada that, while I welcome his answer, he should remember that our colleagues in Ontario do not solve the problems in the auto industry in Oshawa by closing plants in Windsor. In Atlantic Canada we do not want this problem resolved by closing plants and getting rid of fishing vessels and fishermen because we are already faced with great unemployment. Does the minister have a plan for curing the difficulties in the fishing industry so that we can get on with developing this great resource industry and thus create more job opportunities? If he does not have a plan, can he assure us that the Kirby task force will come up with a plan to resolve these difficulties?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is exactly because we felt that putting money into the industry, as we did in 1974, would not give us a long-term solution to the problem that the Prime Minister appointed the task force which I recommended before Christmas.

I might say that the first part of the hon. member's question underlines the problem again. Some companies have made decisions against the advice of my department and against the advice of DREE and, in one case, against the advice of its usual banker. It went ahead and expanded, spending $7 million. I really do not think that in that situation the government should be expected to carry the responsibility.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

APPLICATION OF EMPLOYMENT BRIDGING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In Port Alberni alone 1,200 UIC claims will run out by the end of August. The only thing that the minister has announced that might give some aid to these people is the employment bridging assistance program, announced three weeks ago jointly by the province of British Columbia and the minister. That announcement was met with a lot of opposition from the union, and a lot of silence from the companies. Inquiries at the CEIC offices by people interested in the program are met with a big silence also. No details of the program have been announced and no one knows who can apply or who will benefit.

Has a final agreement been signed with the province of British Columbia and, if so, when will details be announced to CEIC offices? Will those people who are already off claim, or who will be coming off claim within the next couple of months in the forestry industry, be eligible for the program if it ever gets under way?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in putting forward the program a very clear public announcement was made jointly with the province of British Columbia which is co-operating with us in this venture. The guidelines for the program were very clearly established. Officials of the Employment and Immigration Commission in B.C. were part of that announcement. The province and the federal government have a joint committee which administers the program, and it has undertaken discussions with the forestry industry and its unions.

I just do not believe that what the hon. member is saying is accurate. There has been a fair degree of consultation. Because of the affiliation of the hon. member's party with the unions, I would ask them to encourage the unions to be co-operative rather than standing completely opposed to this. They should give their members the opportunity to go to work in the very valuable area of forest management rather than simply standing on the principle that they will have nothing to do with a new employment program and will hold out for something different. This is an opportunity for their workers to go to work. I think if the hon. member worked with the unions in his own area he would find he could be of much better assistance to his constituents than by standing here asking these questions.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FOREST INDUSTRY LAY-OFFS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, one of the difficulties unions have in accepting this program is there was no consultation with them in developing the project.

Madam Speaker: Order. Members have to restrict themselves to questions. Every question is preceded by a commentary on the previous answer. This cannot go on because we will not have all the questions we want to have in question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, I am often the one who criticized—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Miller: I shall ask the question, thank you. The purpose of the program is to establish better forest management. Just as the government is introducing this program, Noranda in Nanaimo recently laid off 35 people in their—

Madam Speaker: Order. Unless the hon. member goes directly to his question I will have to recognize another member.

Mr. Miller: Will the minister investigate the charge that they are laying off people directly involved in improving forest management, and take some action against companies which are laying off people doing work which this program is supposed to cover?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we are always pleased to look into any representation made by Members of Parliament, and we will certainly look into that one. I would assure the hon. member that in the Vancouver Island area we are already committed to establishing special response employment programs so that workers who do come off their entitlements will be able to re-establish their eligibility. He can take that particular word of comfort back to his riding.

UNEMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONVENE QUEBEC LIBERAL MEMBERS TO SETTLE PROBLEM

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As you know, Madam Speaker, 50 per cent of the members on the government side and 33 per cent of the government's cabinet ministers are from Quebec, and this government is nevertheless responsible for the fact that 43 per cent of bankruptcy cases in Canada occur in Quebec. In the circumstances and since he has such a formidable team, does the Prime Minister intend to call a meeting of Quebec members, both ministers and other members, and propose a special strategy to deal with the fact that 400,000 workers are unemployed in his own province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member wanted me to call a meeting of ministers of the Quebec government or the federal government. I can assure him that the latter regularly, that is several times a week, attend meetings of parliamentary committees, where these very important issues are discussed. I do not know what the procedure was when the hon. member opposite was a minister, but I trust that he too was consulted, and on this side, consultation is alive and well.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE SPECIAL MEASURES FOR QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I was, of course, referring to the federal, not the Quebec government. However, I repeat that although the Prime Minister is proud that 50 per cent of the members on the government side and 33 per cent of his cabinet are from Quebec, they are nevertheless responsible for the fact that Quebec has 43 per cent of the bankruptcy cases in Canada. In the circumstances, does the Prime Minister intend, in the short term—I suppose he does sympathize with Quebec's 400,000 unemployed workers—does he intend to present a specific industrial strategy, because 400,000 Quebecers are waiting for these exceptional measures that were promised by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the member for Joliette made several mistakes in his statement. When he referred to the fact that 43 per cent of Canadian bankruptcies occur in Quebec, perhaps the hon. member should realize that during the past ten years, Quebec's share of bankruptcies in Canada varied between 39 and 43 per cent. This is simply because Quebec has far more small and medium-size businesses than other Canadian regions. Quebec has more restaurants and retail and wholesale merchants, and that is why the percentage of bankruptcies is higher in Quebec. The hon. member is asking what measures have been taken to bring relief in this difficult situation. The hon. member should know that during the past year, we have provided loan guarantees, through existing programs under the Small Businesses Loans Act, to 5,000 small businesses in Quebec. If we consider the past five years, Madam Speaker, 29,000 small businesses in Quebec have received direct assistance through federal programs. That is what we are doing, Madam Speaker.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—REPORT OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Over 6,000 jobs have been lost in the Canadian footwear industry since last November when the Liberal government lifted its quotas on leather shoe imports despite Anti-Dumping Tribunal recommendations to the contrary. Notwithstanding the insensitive attitude of the minister and his cabinet colleagues toward the growing number of unemployed Canadians, can the minister either justify his action of last November—which was totally contrary to the recommendations of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal—or indeed justify the continuing existence of the tribunal itself, the advice of which the government does not heed? Who is right, the minister or the tribunal?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I advise the hon. member to take another look at the report of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. We have not disregarded its advice. We have acted in a way we believe is totally consistent with its findings, which said that our industry is in the position to meet competition from developed countries, the main source of imported leather footwear. That is why we decided not only to maintain the existing quota on non-leather footwear, but extend it to canvas footwear, while taking into account that conclusion of the tribunal. This was in addition to creating a special fund of $17 million to aid our industry in modernizing and becoming more efficient and competitive. We are not insensitive to the industry; we consider it and its workers very important, and I think we have read the report of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal a lot more carefully than did my hon. friend.

GLOBAL QUOTA ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, according to the president of the Canadian Shoe Manufacturers' Association, unless leather shoes are reinstated in the global quota at once, a further 10,000 Canadians will lose their jobs within four months. Two months ago the minister gave an undertaking in this House that he would make a decision in that regard within 30 days. He is now one month behind schedule, and I ask the minister to stand up in this House and tell us if a decision has been made. If so, what is it? If not, when can we, and in particular the shoe industry which is functioning in a void out there, know when the decision will be made by this cabinet minister who has promised it?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the decision in question is that of cabinet.

Mr. Jelinek: You promised it two months ago.

Mr. Gray: We will be in a position to state very soon the results of our review of information provided to us by the industry and other elements interested in the Canadian footwear sector. I think we will be able to state the conclusions of our review before too long.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

INCLUSION OF NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY IN DREE AGREEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his role as minister responsible for DREE. Can he report to the House what progress he is making in including the County of Northumberland in the eastern Ontario subsidiary agreement, a project on which I had been working for many months with his predecessor, and about which his predecessor wrote me last December 17 as follows:

I feel that federal and provincial officials are making real progress in the development of the agreement format. It is hoped that the matter will be put forward for governmental decision early in 1982.

In answer to a question I put to him in the House on February 3, 1982, he said:

—I am very happy to remind the hon. member that one of my last acts as minister responsible for DREE was to deliver a letter to his office by hand, stating that the draft of that agreement would be ready very soon. I also remind him that at my first meeting with the provincial government of Ontario, with his support, I stated my initiative to do something for the county of Northumberland. I hope that in the very near future that initiative will reach its final conclusion.

Can the minister advise when he expects to announce the entry of the county of Northumberland into the eastern Ontario subsidiary agreement?

• (1450)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am happy to confirm my hon. friend's great interest in this subject. This matter is being actively worked on in connection with the review of departmental programs that has to be carried out because of something which intervened since the letter that my hon. friend read, that is, the announcement of the Prime Minister of the eventual integration of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This is a subject which I know is of great importance to a number of people on both sides of the House, and I am working on it very actively.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I am glad to hear that. I would just like the minister to know that his predecessor also said to me that in his first meeting with—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry, we have to stick to questions. If the hon. member has a question, I can recognize him.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I will certainly ask the minister a supplementary question.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF DECISION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Could the minister give the House some indication of just when he expects to come to a conclusion on this matter? I have written to him several times. I have had great difficulty in obtaining answers. His predecessor told me that he expected to bring the matter to a conclusion very, very soon. He had an agreement with the provincial government. Everything was done, except actually announcing that Nothumberland was to be included in the eastern Ontario subsidiary agreement. I can see no justification for the minister holding up this decision any further. His predecessor had the whole thing done.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James.

HOUSING

PROGRAM TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. HUDAC has indicated that the housing construction industry is in a real crisis today. Predictions for housing starts are down to 145,000, that is, down some 18.5 per cent. Yesterday the minister seemed to express some skepticism about his own program when he said:

—we are now in the process of dealing with individual applicants to see if some of those projects will get started.

Is the minister satisfied that the meagre program for housing starts approved by cabinet is sufficient to help the industry survive in present conditions?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am quite satisfied that the $350 million allocated in the budget of November last year will go a long way toward assisting the industry in adding to the number of starts this year, notwithstanding the fact that the New Democratic Party voted against 30,000 units and 60,000 jobs in that industry.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the minister should know that 60,000, at a time when we have nearly two million real unemployed, is pretty insignificant. He should take note of the fact—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Proceed to the question, please.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, given the fact that interest rates have gone up today and that building permits are down by 22.2 per cent, is the minister prepared to recognize that the housing industry is in a real crisis and that he should go to his cabinet colleagues and convince them to bring down the general interest rate policy in the country?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the government realized that the industry would need support and that is why in November of last year these moneys were allocated in the budget for that assistance, and that is why in December of last year I introduced legislation in the House and sought the support of all hon. members for that legislation. It is unfortunate that that legislation was delayed unnecessarily for three months and was eventually voted against. I hope the 60,000 people who find employment under that program and the 30,000 families who will enjoy that program know that the NDP voted against it.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

MINISTER'S POSITION ON EXPANSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister may or may not know that at the recent Canadian pension conference held in Ottawa, the Quebec minister of social development said that he had been working with federal officials on pensions and that for the first time Quebec officials and federal officials were on the same wavelength. Then he proceeded to say that he favoured and would institute benefits under the Quebec Pension Plan to equal 37.5 per cent of pensionable earnings. Does the minister favour expanding benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, thereby following the Quebec scheme or alternatively does she favour expanding benefits under pensions in the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Neither, Madam Speaker, because there are other avenues that are perhaps just as interesting and would be worth exploring. I am glad to hear questions by members of the opposition, but I would like to know what kind of reforms they would like to see in private sector pensions. The fact is that Dr. Denis Lazure has finally, if I may say so, announced the position of the Quebec government, which is in need of money and, if I understood correctly, is going to replenish the funds of the Quebec Pension Plan. That is one negotiating position, and I hope that all provinces will be able to make their positions known in this national debate as soon as possible, so that Canadians, namely all employees and part-time workers, can be covered by private sector pensions in the future.

[English]

Mr. Dantzer: Madam Speaker, the minister did not answer the question and I understand why. I gather she is having some difficulty with cabinet.

TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR PROPOSED ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I will ask the minister a less contentious question. She was reported as saying in that conference that the government would establish an all-party committee to study the whole question of pensions and the long-awaited green paper. Has the minister set the terms for that committee?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member did not properly read the text of my speech to the Canadian Pensions Conference last Tuesday. There will be consultation with the persons concerned, and therefore I feel we would be lacking in respect for the opinion of Canadians if we immediately announced our position. Unlike Quebec, we want to hear what the main economic partners and what the employees themselves want in the way of reform and we want to know who has the best plan for investing these vast sums of money at this stage. These are fundamental issues, and we are therefore considering the possibility of setting up a parliamentary committee on this question, to seek out the views of Canadians across Canada. I feel very strongly that before we commit ourselves, we should find out how anxious Canadians are to contribute to a pension plan and how such funds can best be invested for the wellbeing of all Canadians.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DECISION TO APPEAL COURT AWARD TO MUSQUEAM INDIAN BAND IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like him to direct his mind to the long-standing dispute between himself and his department and the Musqueam Indian Band in Vancouver. As the minister knows, the matter was adjudicated in court and Justice Collier of the federal court of British Columbia found the minister and his department fraudulently negligent in the discharge of his trust responsibility to these native people. The minister has now launched an appeal against this judgment which awarded the Indians $10 million. Why has the minister launched this appeal after this lengthy court hearing? Why is he not withdrawing this appeal and paying this money which belongs to the Indians, forthwith?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware—at least I think many of his colleagues who were in cabinet in the previous government would soon tell him if he is unaware—that most ministers accept the independent legal advice of law officers of the Crown. In fact I think there is a primary duty on the part of ministers of the Crown to do so. Of course I took a legal opinion with respect to whether an appeal was the appropriate thing to do in this particular case, and they felt that an appeal was warranted. I do not think I should substitute my legal views for those of the law officers of the Crown who presumably are unbiased and non-partisan, and who would be far more acceptable in terms of credibility to the opposition than one of the ministers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I was assuming that they would endorse that procedure and agree that I did the right thing in this particular case.

COSTS OF APPEAL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, the appeal will be fought on the backs of Canadian taxpayers. The Indians have already spent $250,000 in court and the appeal will cost them $1 million. How long will the minister ride on the backs of these people, knowing full well that he is responsible? It would not be the first time that ministers have not accepted the advice of legal officers of the Crown.

If the minister insists on taking this matter to court for another two or three years, will he assist the Indians in paying for the legal costs? Furthermore, since he has the jurisdiction and the responsibility, will he pay interest on the money which is sitting somewhere following the judgment of Judge Collier?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member is also aware, in many criminal proceedings where an Indian has pleaded not guilty in the court of first instance, we do pay the costs of appeal. If the circumstances warrant it, in some cases we are prepared to enter into arrangments of that kind and, yes, I would be prepared to look at it.

As well, there is another question here of which I think the hon. member is aware. It is the fundamental principle of whether the minister has a trust responsibility, which is a key question to the Indian community in Canada. That is what is involved in this particular case. I think some Indian leaders, to whom I have talked, realize that this fundamental question which has been a source of frustration to everyone concerned for so many years will have to be determined. It will not satisfy anyone to have a lower court decision on it, and since it is so fundamental it will probably have to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Musqueam case does serve that particular purpose, not only for the Indian people but for all of us who are concerned about this principle.

PETITION

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and thirty-eighth report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on Wednesday, May 12, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I ask the government House leader whether he could give the House some idea as to the business for the remainder of this week and as far into next week as he can take us.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, first of all, we will complete debate on second reading of Bill C-112. After consultation, we made an agreement this morning, and I would ask you to seek unanimous consent to the following motion:

That notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order, if a recorded division has been requested previously on either Bill C-112 or on Bill C-61, the said division or divisions shall be deferred until 3 p.m. on Tuesday, May 18, 1982.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Following this agreement, tomorrow will be an opposition day.

[Translation]

As far as next week is concerned, for Monday we have also made an agreement to deal with third reading of Bill C-61 concerning young offenders. By order of the House, as agreed just now, if a recorded division is required, it will automatically be deferred until 3:00 p.m. on Tuesday. After Bill C-61, and before ten o'clock on Monday, we shall, if possible, start consideration on second reading of Bill C-110, which deals with export development. On Tuesday and Wednesday, we shall proceed with consideration at the report stage and third reading of the energy bills, which are to be referred back to the House, by the Special Committee on Energy Legislation, in the following order: C-101, C-106, C-105, C-102, C-107 and C-104. Finally, Thursday will be an opposition day.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the government House Leader whether or not there has been a decision by the government to advance Bill C-43, the freedom of information bill, or is it the position of the government that it will lay quiet and allow the bill to die before the end of this session? What is the intention of the government with respect to this bill?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I hope to be in a better position to answer that question next week. However, I can assure the hon. member that we have taken good note of his offer to allow this bill to be dealt with in a future session at the same stage as it would be if we were to prorogue.

This is not to say that we would not want to conclude debate on that bill through all stages before the summer.That is why I would prefer to be more specific next week after consultations with the hon. Minister of Communications.

PETITIONS

MR. WISE—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I have the responsibility today to present a petition signed by some 994 residents of my constituency of Elgin. These citizens, by way of this petition, are vigorously demonstrating their strong and united opposition to the private member's bill, C-451, and consider its purpose to be a serious infringement on their rights as law-abiding Canadian gun owners.

I believe the record should show that Bill C-451 is not a government bill and has not received second reading, in spite of what the petition indicates.

I fully support the views of the petitioners and indeed, judging from the conversations and correspondence that I have had with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), the changes sought in Bill C-451 will indeed not become law.

MR. DARLING—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I too wish to present a petition from the undersigned residents of the towns of Gravenhurst, Bracebridge and many other municipalities of Parry Sound-Muskoka. This petition also deals with the private member's Bill C-451.

These petitioners humbly sheweth that the private member's Bill C-451 regarding gun control legislation deals with the number of firearms in circulation in this country and the control of the number of firearms in Canada, and the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this legislation and deal directly with the present gun laws which are cumbersome, expensive to administer and ineffective except to harass law-abiding people. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,822, 2,823, 2,835, 2,843, 2,848, 2,861, 2,888, 2,890, 2,901, 2,950, 3,133, 3,495, 3,736, 3,737, 3,895, 4,121 and 4,224.

NORTHERN PIPELINE AGENCY—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,848—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Privy Council Office for the Northern Pipeline Agency at page 32.26, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) how does the department account for the 86 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $14,786 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): (a) The increase of 86 per cent in expenditure in hospitality services over that for 1978-79 is the result of:

(i) Accelerated activity in 1979-80 which was really the first full year of activity at the operational level;

(ii) The role of the agency in ensuring that maximum economic energy and industrial benefits for Canada are achieved.

(iii) The 'single window' role that the agency performs which requires frequent liaison meetings with departments and agencies of the Government of Canada, most of which are held at the Calgary operational office of the agency.

(b) "List of each contract of a value more than $2,000"—none.

(c) Guidelines are used to determine when the Northern Pipeline Agency will pay for hospitality. These guidelines are in strict accordance with those issued by the Treasury Board which are common to all government departments.

(d) Of the $14,786 paid for hospitality in 1979-80, the following percentages were used to entertain:

(i) Foreign visitors (includes U.S. and others), 6 per cent; (ii) Canadian businessmen (includes community and native representatives), 41 per cent; (iii) Provincial public servants, 5.8 per cent; (iv) Federal public servants, 41.2 per cent; (v) Ministerial exempt staff, nil; (vi) Members of Parliament, nil; (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Assemblies, etc., .6 per cent; (viii) Canadian dignitaries, Governor General, Lieutenant Governors, etc., nil; (ix) Federal Crown Corporation executives, .5 per cent; (x) Provincial Crown Corporation executives, nil; (xi) Members of federal commissions, boards and councils (includes advisory councils), 1.5 per cent; (xii) Other (Yukon Government)—contractors, 3.4 per cent.

Did a grain boxcar No. CN-422258 leave Rosalind, Alberta on November 19, 1981 filled with select grade oats and, if so (a) was the destination for the oats Thunder Bay, Ontario and did they first travel to Vancouver before reaching their final destination (b) did the car travel from Vancouver to Peace River before leaving for Thunder Bay?

2. Do grain box cars or grain hopper cars on CN rail lines travel to Thunder Bay via Vancouver and Peace River and, if so (a) how frequently and what is the reason for the error (b) is the cost absorbed by the railway company or by the farmers directly (c) is CNR taking measures to alleviate the problem and, if so, what measures?

3. What methods, if any, does the government have to control such inefficient transportation routes?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of the Canadian National Railways and Transport Canada advise as follows:

1. On November 20, 1981, the Alberta Wheat Pool agent at Rosalind, Alberta, gave "telephone release" to CN's Edmonton Carload Centre for three carloads, including CN-422258, loaded with oats. (a) Yes. (b) The carload travelled from Vancouver to Athabasca and then to Thunder Bay.

2. (a) Rarely. In this instance an error was made in recording the information given by the pool agent in the "telephone release", and as a result, the billing details fed into CN's computer system recorded the destination for CN-422258 as Vancouver. Upon arrival there, it was sent to the Lynn Creek Yard to await placement to a terminal elevator; subsequently, the loaded car was diverted to Vancouver's Thornton Yard and returned to Edmonton's Calder Yard where the staff, being unaware the car had not been unloaded, sent it to Athabasca, Alberta. At that point it was found to be still under load and was returned to Edmonton. Identification and destination were established and the car was forwarded to Thunder Bay.

(b) The cost of the extra transportation was absorbed by Canadian National in this case.

(c) Canadian National is continually striving for the elimination of this type of error.

3. The Canadian Wheat Board has access to the railway car training computers and the Grain Transportation Authority also keeps a close watch on car movements. It should not be forgotten that last crop year 233,686 cars were unloaded at Thunder Bay while 150,059 were unloaded on the west coast. The vast majority of these cars were moved to terminal position with dispatch.

INDIAN LAND CLAIMS

Question No. 3,895—Mr. Miller:

1. Did the Nuu-chah-nulth submit a comprehensive land and sea claim to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, if so, on what date?

2. What was the procedure and criteria used by the Office of Native Claims to analyse the claim for historic accuracy and what were the results of the analysis?

3. To date, since the claim was submitted by the Nuu-chah-nulth, what information and documentation was the claimant group required to provide to the Office of Native Claims in support of the claim?

4. Were meetings held concerning clarification of points that seemed subject to misinterpretation in the claim and, if so, in each case (a) what was the date (b) who attended and what was his/her affiliation (c) what were the results?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, October 1980.

2. A review of the claim was undertaken under the provisions of the 1973 policy on comprehensive claims. No decision has yet been made.

3. None.

4. No. (a), (b) and (c) not applicable.

ERECTION OF STATUE BY NCC

Question No. 4,121—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the National Capital Commission or any division thereof contemplate, consider, or authorize the erection of a sculpture, statue or monument in the area of the former Rideau Club at Metcalfe and Wellington Streets, Ottawa and, if so (a) was the estimated cost approximately $300,000 (b) what was the name and job designation of the highest-ranking official dealing with the matter at the commission (c) was the decision vetoed and, if so, what was the name and job designation of the person who vetoed it (d) did Mr. Michael Pitfield, Secretary to the Cabinet and Clerk of the Privy Council, oppose the erection of the sculpture on the grounds that he did not want to look at it out of his office window (e) what was its purpose in the first place and how could it be justified in view of the government's restraint policy (f) was it to be a monument to the Prime Minister; the Hon. Bud Drury, chairman of the National Capital Commission; the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; or the hon. member for Edmonton East?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Yes. (a) No. (b) NCC executive committee chaired by Mr. C. M. Drury. (c) No. Project was cancelled after consultation with the Offices of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works. (d) No. (e) To instal an interesting work of art as a centre of attraction and to facilitate future animation activities on the site. (f) No.

OMNITRADE LIMITED

Question No. 4,224—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did the government issue work permits to any of the directors of a corporation named Omnitrade Ltd. at 750 McArthur, Montreal who are not residents of Canada and, if so (a) what was his/her name and address (b) on what date and for what reason was the permit issued?

2. What is the residence status in Canada of each director and is he/she a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant?

3. Are any of the directors residents of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1 to 3. Yes. As of the date of the question, there were four non-residents working at Omnitrade Limited of Montreal with work permits. In so far as the remainder of the question is concerned, personal information or information concerning a person's employment in Canada is considered by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission as personal and confidential.

Taxation

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Madam Speaker, yesterday hon. members had an opportunity to discuss a borrowing authority bill, and on that occasion I explained that we were resuming second reading on the same subject because the previous borrowing authority bill, which also covered, in its second part, a number of amendments to the Excise Tax Act and in its third part, the legislation on natural gas and oil revenue taxes, had been split, following discussions between the government, opposition and New Democratic House leaders and the finance and energy critics, to provide a format for debate on borrowing authority and fiscal measures that was more appropriate in the opinion of hon. members. I also explained that, in addition to splitting the bill in two and thus providing for separate debates, this agreement also provided a time limit for debate in the House, in Committee of the Whole or in the standing committee, depending on the bill. I explained to the House that I would restrict my comments so as to enable the largest possible number of members with an interest in this issue, both on this side and on the other side of the House, to speak to this bill.

During the debate on the previous bill, which in its second and third parts covered the subject of the present bill, hon. members complained that the government had failed to explain why the bill raised the ceiling on the natural gas tax from 70 cents to $4.00 per gigajoule. I shall briefly give some of our reasons for wanting to regulate the tax in this way.

At the present time, the Excise Tax Act provides for a set schedule of tax increases, according to which the tax increased from 28 cents on November 1, 1980, to 56 cents on January 1, 1982, and will increase to 70 cents on January 1, 1983. The schedule was established on the basis of assumptions relating to the policies and prices set in the National Energy Program which, the House will recall, was announced in October, 1980. According to this policy, the tax will apply to both domestic and export sales, according to a proposal in the National Energy Program published in October, 1980. Hon. members will recall that the province of Alberta objected to the price schedule set in the National Energy Program and objected very strenuously to the tax on natural gas exports. Following negotiations, it was agreed to increase domestic oil prices beyond the prices provided in the National Energy Program, and following this increase, to abolish the natural gas export tax. Thus, a new mechanism had to be established for determining what the natural gas tax rate would be. The House will recall that the tax rate must be set in such a way that the ratio thus established between the price of natural gas and the price of oil in eastern Canada will promote the use of natural gas in eastern markets. This ratio is determined by the natural gas tax rate, the price and quantity of imported oil, the price paid to producers for domestic oil and natural gas, the Canadian ownership tax rate and the cost of transporting natural gas from Alberta to the eastern provinces.

Thus, we have a complex formula with a large number of variables. If the use of a specific formula of this kind were prescribed by law, the result would have been frequent rate variations, perhaps every two months or even more often. The companies that distribute natural gas to consumers raised the point that the time and money involved in implementing the rate changes, including the submission of applications to regulatory commissions, could, and certainly would create a number of problems. Therefore they requested a procedure for minimizing the administrative costs resulting from too frequent changes in this tax. By prescribing the rate of the tax through regulations, we shall have some flexibility and the margin of autonomy required to reduce the effect of short-term mistakes in the variables underlying this complex formula which I described earlier.

A ceiling of $4 had been chosen as the maximum amount in a possible range of rates which would apply during the life of the energy agreement between Canada and Alberta. In view of the forecast increases in world oil prices and the expected reduction in natural gas transportation costs, it is possible, while not probable, that the tax could reach $4 per gigajoule by 1987. However, to meet the representations and the requests of certain hon. members, I undertake to introduce in committee of the whole an amendment to lower the ceiling from $4 to $3 per gigajoule. Moreover, I shall propose in the same amendment that this ceiling of $3 be phased in over a number of years for the period of the agreement. I believe that this amendment will meet the requests and the representations made during the debate on second reading. Of course, this does not meet all the representations made at that time, but it responds to a basic concern reflected by these representations.

The rate of tax proposed in this bill for the year 1982 is not much higher than the rate provided by existing legislation. In 1982, the tax will amount to 42 cents for January and 63 cents for the rest of the year, which gives an average of 61 cents over a 12-month period. This rate is only five cents higher than that prescribed by the existing legislation. I would also like to emphasize that the removal of the tax on natural gas exported from Alberta and British Columbia reflects the wish of this government to take into account the representations made by the producing provinces. Moreover, the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has been able to reach an agreement on so critical a subject as oil and gas prices demonstrates that the government, and particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on behalf of the government, has shown a lot of flexibility and skill in his negotiations with the producing provinces.

In view of the objective which is to increase the share of the Canadian government in the revenues generated by oil and gas production, and especially of the emphasis placed on the need to obtain this increase by other means than an export tax, it has been necessary to increase other taxes collected from the industry, such as the oil and gas revenue tax. I would like to remind hon. members once again that the bill now under consideration simply implements the arrangements arrived at after months of intensive and skilful negotiations between the Government of Canada and the provinces, and which were finalized and officially endorsed in the agreements signed with the Premiers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, through this bill, the House is asked to approve the agreements signed between the Government of Canada and those of the producing provinces.

Concerning the provisions for levying special taxes on profits derived from crude oil production, I would remind the House that all other producing countries insist that their government get a significant part of oil revenues. Britain, Norway, Mexico, the OPEC countries all levy heavy taxes on production. The United States are already levying a tax on windfall profits from old oil operations in order to tax extra profits on the production of oil that has long been discovered. This bill provides for the implementing of a tax on incremental oil revenues, in respect of revenues derived from the production of old oil. That tax is meant to achieve exactly the same purpose as the American tax I have just described.

I would remind the House that the financial situation of oil companies in Canada compares favourably with that of companies in most other oil-producting countries. Although a number of Canadian companies thought they would be better off if they invested money in oil operations in the United States, they now realize that involvement in the United States is not without any risks. The Canadian government here is generously encouraging Canadian corporations into finding new oil, through the many incentives to be found in the Canadian Energy Program. Sure enough, Mr. Speaker, the government is not unaware of the indebtedness of some companies, of the decline in world oil prices, and of the impact which capped oil and gas wells may have on the industry. I want to assure hon. members that the government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) are closely monitoring that situation.

This bill introduces a resource deduction from the oil and natural gas revenue tax. As of January 1st, 1982, there is a 25 per cent deduction on production revenues, before deduction of any resource royalty payment. Such a provision was requested by the province of Alberta in order that the oil and gas revenue tax be levied at a later stage after extraction. The deduction structure was also designed to grant an extra incentive to operators who pay Crown royalties and transfer part of their production revenues to other persons in the form of royalties. Those royalties are not deducted from revenues on which the 25 per cent resource deduction will be based. Details of the resource deduction will be introduced in the oil and gas revenue tax regulations. Legislative authority to proceed this way is provided under Clause 19 of the legislation now before us.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also includes a number of lesser provisions that relate to the federal sales tax. I do not wish to take time to outline these provisions, since the hon. members who referred to them admitted that the amendments are of a rather technical nature. As I said in my opening remarks, an agreement was reached to expedite the legislation, and I hope that all the hon. members who wish to contribute to this debate will have an opportunity to do so. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am limiting my remarks to the few minutes I have used up to outline the main aspects of the legislation and to confirm to the House the commitment to change both the ceiling and the implementation of national gas taxes and savings.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say I was a little bit surprised to see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) as opening speaker for the government on this legislation, given that the taxes imposed and legalized by this legislation represent the very heart of the National Energy Program in terms of the devastation it has wreaked upon this country.

Bill C-112 introduces three new monstrously huge federal taxes extracted from the oil industry and the consumers of this country. They are monstrous taxes; not minor, not insignificant, but monstrous. They are so monstrous as to have caused the decimation of the oil and gas industry in this country. Prior to the introduction of the National Energy Program, that industry was one of the most vital and healthy in this country. It provided hundreds of thousands of jobs and earned the country enormous amounts of income. In general, it provided an engine for growth in the economy from coast to coast.

Prior to the National Energy Program and these taxes being introduced, the energy industries in Canada were looked upon with envy by other countries. They were looked upon by economic groups such as the Economic Council of Canada as our ace in the hole, the one thing Canada had going for it that would give us a chance in the eighties. It was to make this country purr in the eighties. It could have generated the hundreds of thousands of jobs that are necessary for our population. This is what the energy industry could have been, would have been and was predicted to be in the eighties.

If it had not been for the National Energy Program as exemplified by these taxes, we would not be facing the interest rates we face today; they would be two or three points less. We would not be facing nearly the number of unemployed we now have. At least 100,000 more Canadians would be employed. Instead of looking at a depression which more and more people are seeing for the future, we would be looking at a rosy future indeed.

That is what this bill exemplifies—taking away the future of Canada as we go into the eighties. It is a massive, horrendous tax grab that has devastated the industry. It has driven many into bankruptcy, driven many out of the country, driven a lot to the brink of bankruptcy and caused havoc. That is the consequence of the taxes levied by this bill which are part of a so-called National Energy Program. There is nothing national about it if one considers the energy sectors of this country, the oil and gas producing sectors in western Canada, as being a part of this nation.

This bill is a massive tax grab as a result of analysis done by brilliant people working for the minister at Tunney's Pasture. They prepared for him and a new cabinet an analysis of the energy sector in Canada. I saw that analysis. They projected what was going to happen. They projected what was happening in terms of ownership, what was happening in terms of activity. They projected an absolutely devastating scenario unless the government acted. They projected huge revenue flows into the oil and gas sector in western Canada. Their projects were such that, if they were right, something would indeed have to be done because the country would have been destabilized as a result of this massive transfer of wealth into a very small area, namely, the province of Alberta.

Based on these projections by those geniuses in Tunney's Pasture, they produced the National Energy Program. It was the answer to a hypothetical, totally false, totally inaccurate description of the future. It makes one wonder when there will be a recognition of all of this cabinet secrecy, all of this notion that no one should know what the government is doing until it is finally announced, and when we are going to address that problem. Anyone who had any knowledge whatsoever of the energy sector could have destroyed those analyses which were prepared by the officials for the minister. You did not have to be particularly brilliant. All you had to have was a little bit of knowledge of the real world, in terms of the energy industry, to know that the projections made by those officials were wholly inaccurate.

Of course, the system which is designed by the bureaucrats for the protection of the bureaucrats does not allow that. So they sit there, they put together a scenario, and they convince the minister, who knows no more than they about what is going on in that part of the country. That is not intended to be demeaning in any way, that is the reality. He would not know any more about energy than I know about fishing. I do not happen to live in a fishing area and so have not been exposed to the fishing industry. So the minister did not know the energy industry, he is advised by officials who do not know the energy industry, on an analysis that is totally out of whack with reality, and the consequences of that are the National Energy Program, which destroys the industry.

Mr. Thacker: Ask him what Dome has got for the workers. No jobs this year? And children on welfare?

Mr. Andre: I want to deal with the natural gas and gas liquids tax. Mr. Speaker, there is another technique that governments use for disguishing what they are really doing. When you talk about taxes to the ordinary citizen, the citizen assumes that you are talking about income tax and says that everyone should pay income tax and contribute to the upkeep of the government. He looks at analyses of income tax paid by Canadian industry and says they are not paying very much tax, that they can afford to pay more. But what the citizens fail to realize is how many new taxes the government has invented. Those new taxes do not mean very much to the public; they cannot be concerned about them when they do not know about them. We have the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the NGGLT, the PGRT, the petroleum gas revenue tax, the oil warranty, the incremental oil revenue tax, the COC, the Canadian ownership charge, the PCC, the petroleum compensation charge and, of course, there is excise tax and sales tax on top of that. There are about seven or eight different taxes, the sum total of which is a horrendous tax load on one sector. How come? That sector happens to be in an area of the country which does not have that much population; therefore they are not able to express through the ballot box their indignation in a way to cause the government and the bureaucrats harm.

Yesterday in committee the member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) said he wished he had some oil wells in his riding, and I had to say "Amen, me too!" Boy, I wish there were some oil wells in Pontiac, in Montreal and in Quebec and Toronto. I wish there were oil wells all over central Canada, because that is the only way we would ever get a national Canadian energy policy. That is the only way we will get one until the system is changed.

In regard to this natural gas and gas liquids tax, there is an interesting little history on how that one came about. Just prior to introducing the national energy policy, which was part of the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in October, 1980, the government were threatening to put an export tax on natural gas. That was objected to quite strenuously by the province of British Columbia in particular and also by the province of Alberta. There was a lot of lobbying and agitation on that matter, so the government was feeling the heat. When the Minister of Finance read his budget speech, he said, right in the budget speech: "In response to the representations, there will be no export tax on gas". And because they had a lock up and were able to control the media, that is what went out on national television—"No export tax on natural gas". That is what the propaganda masters had told the television and radio people who were at the lock up. The very next line in the speech said: "There will be a charge on gas sold to United States customers." That was the very next line—a charge on gas sold to U.S. customers. If that is not an export tax, what is it?

Mr. Speaker, I am not allowed to say that is a lie; I am not allowed to say the author of that is a liar. But what is it, Mr. Speaker? It certainly is not true?

Then the province of Alberta took the federal government to court and said this charge on gas sold to U.S. customers is in violation of the Constitution of Canada. The lawyer representing the federal government, Mr. William Code, said the federal government had the authority to put on an export tax. The judges said: "Well, the Minister of Finance said it is not an export tax." Mr. Code replied: "Well, in reality it is an export tax." So the government had to admit in court that what the Minister of Finance had said to this, the highest court in the land, was not true. The Minister of Finance who said there would be no export tax was deceiving this House and the country when he made that statement, and that is what the lawyer for the government had to admit in a courthouse in Alberta. The court ruled, five to nothing, that that export tax was unconstitutional.

So the negotiations carry on. The federal government now has to negotiate. They lost in court so they have to negotiate. They negotiated with the province of Alberta and in the negotiations said: "Yes, we are going to have an export tax on natural gas, but the export tax will be zero rated."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would just like to remind my hon. friend that the case he referred to is now before the Supreme Court. I would invite him to exercise care in his comments about a matter that is before the Supreme Court of Canada and upon which the court has not yet rendered judgment. The premier of one province got himself into trouble recently as a result of comments about things going on before the courts, so I would just draw his attention to that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister's point appears to be well taken. Will the hon. member for Calgary Centre please take note of it.

Mr. Andre: I recognize that, Mr. Speaker, and my next comment was to be that that case has been appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. Argument has been heard by the justices. I am told the court has indicated that it has made a decision and that it is preparing it for presentation.

• (1540)

Mr. Lalonde: An additional reason to be careful.

Mr. Andre: I am not commenting on the merits of the argument or the lack of them, other than to state the fact that the Supreme Court of Alberta ruled, five to nothing, against the federal government.

What we have in this bill is an export tax, zero rated. There is no export tax; there is a charge on gas sold to U.S. consumers. There is an export tax but it is zero rated. If that is not Orwellian 1984 double-speak, I do not know what is. It is no wonder the public does not know what is going on when that kind of language is used.

How much is involved for this fiscal year? In this current fiscal year that tax will bring in $1.505 billion, a very large amount. I do not want to prejudice court cases, but it seems that the only way to get things done in this country nowadays is to go to court because this institution, the highest court in the land, does not work.

There is another case going on respecting the NGGLT between the federal government and the city of Medicine Hat. The city of Medicine Hat is suing the federal government because this natural gas and gas liquids tax has caused utility bills in the city of Medicine Hat to double. The cost of heating a home in Medicine Hat has doubled as a result of this tax. Rudyard Kipling said, "They have all hell for a basement." In Medicine Hat natural gas is literally underneath the people's houses. It is just a few feet below. It is available everywhere in the vicinity of Medicine Hat. For 100 years people there have heated their homes with natural gas literally taken right out of their basements, and now they are facing horrendous increased costs.

What is really ridiculous is that it is now more expensive to use natural gas for various agriculture purposes—operating sprinkler systems in irrigation areas and so forth—than it is to use diesel fuel. Diesel fuel is refined. In the case of Medicine Hat I think it has to be trucked all the way from Edmonton. People in Medicine Hat have natural gas in their basements, but because of this additional horrendous tax increase, their utility bills are twice the level they were just a year ago.

Mr. Thacker: I wonder if they tax Quebec electricity.

Mr. Andre: It is natural gas that is taxed. Electricity is produced in central Canada and, of course, there are too many voters there, so electricity is not taxed.

Mr. Waddell: They took off the export tax.

Mr. Andre: But it is all right to tax natural gas because there are not many Liberal voters in Medicine Hat anyway.

I read in the newspaper yesterday or today that the beavers in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are working on the so-called son of the National Energy Program. They are going to produce some documents. They are worried about criticism and the obvious fact that the National Energy Program is a disaster. They are worried about the observations being made by everyone that the National Energy Program is a disaster. Those observations are not being made just by politicians but by literally everyone in the country involved in business in any way, shape or form. They are going to produce a new paper called "The son of the National Energy Program" which apparently will say that the National Energy Program is alive and well and on schedule. The National Energy Program might be alive and well, but the country is dying of it. If we want to revive the economy and the country, the best way to do it is to kill the National Energy Program.

The government told us the three goals of the National Energy Program were self-sufficiency, Canadianization and fair revenue sharing. Everyone supports those goals. The problem is that the National Energy Program is working against the achievement of every one of them. It is working against self-sufficiency. Self-sufficiency is out the window. We will not have it in this generation or in this century. We will not come anywhere near self-sufficiency. That is the conclusion of the National Energy Board and everyone else who has looked at the energy situation.

With respect to Canadianization, between 1975 and 1980 the degree of Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry increased very substantially. That was before the National Energy Program. All that happened in 1975 was that the tax law was changed to put Canadians on a par with foreigners for the first time in history with respect to investment in Canada. That was all. The tax law just put Canadians on a par, and the degree of Canadianization or growth in the Canadian-owned sector of the industry grew spectacularly. The National Energy Program finished that. It drove Canadians out of Canada. There are more Canadian companies with offices in Denver than there were Canadian offices in Calgary ten years ago. Downtown Denver looks like Calgary did four or five years ago. Buildings are being put up by Canadians and filled by Canadian oil companies.

In order to Canadianize the Canadian oil and gas industry, the minister's officials telephoned companies in 1981 and said: "We want to encourage Canadianization; we would like you to look into acquiring some American-owned oil and gas companies." The banks were telephoned and told this was government policy and that the government wanted them to cooperate. Many companies accepted those blandishments. Such companies were Dome, Sulpetro, Turbo, Drummond and Husky. They said, "Hey, this is a good idea. The banks want to give us money, and the government thinks it is a good idea. We are being encouraged and applauded."

Seven and a half billion dollars left the country. Not one new job was created. Not one new barrel of oil was added. There has not been a single benefit to the country in terms of achieving real goals. Foreign-owned companies have become for the most part Canadian owned, but every single one of those companies today has regret because they are all in deep trouble. They are in such deep trouble that the bankers who lent them money are in trouble. The latest estimate is that there might be as much as $5 billion in uncollectable bank loans outstanding in Canada. That is just absolute insanity. Why would the country spend $7.5 billion and not get a single job out of it? We did not get a single extra barrel of oil out of it. We did not get a single extra cubic foot of gas out of it. There has been absolutely no benefit. We have crippled the companies which were enticed by the blandishments of the minister and his officials. What incredible stupidity!

In the meantime, that $7.5 billion was joined by about $10 billion of capital. Investors said: "I guess we are not welcome in this country," and they left. Canadian and foreign money totalling about $17.5 billion also left. When that happened, the dollar was put under pressure. To keep the dollar from falling through the floor, we have to keep interest rates high. The interest rates we have are much higher than necessary because of the stupid National Energy Program. It is supposed to Canadianize. What has happened is just incredible.

Then there is the claim of fair revenue sharing. From each barrel of oil produced the federal government collects 44 per cent of the revenue. The people who go out to find the oil, the people who take the risk of acquiring the land, the people who take the risk in doing the geophysical work, the people who take the risk in drilling the oil, the people who take the risk putting the system in place, the people who take the risk building the pipelines and who do everything else, get 7 per cent of the revenue while the others get 44 per cent. Is that fair revenue sharing? It has resulted in fewer companies searching for oil; it has caused lay-offs; it has caused companies to go bankrupt; it has caused companies to leave the country; it has caused carnage in what previously was a buoyant and growing industry which generated jobs all across the country. That is what "fair revenue sharing" has done, Mr. Speaker.

Some weeks ago the province of Alberta reacted to the devastation and carnage by adjusting its royalty rates. I do not know of anyone who criticized that move. The federal government needs to show that it is equally concerned by making the same move and I am pleased to note that the minister has not rejected that notion. He has kept the door open. If the gossip columnists in the newspapers are right, he is engaged in a debate with the Department of Finance. Apparently that department wants the money and is not willing to give it up. If that argument really is going on, I would be on the minister's side.

I am absolutely convinced and I think it can be demonstrated that if the federal government would back off some of these taxes, the resulting stimulus to the economy would generate more revenue to the government than it would lose. People would be put back to work and would pay taxes rather than receive unemployment insurance benefits. Perhaps some Canadian companies who deserted the country as a result of the National Energy Program in 1981 would be encouraged to return and devote their energies and skills, which we certainly need, to activities in this country.

There does not seem to be much that we can do about this Mr. Speaker. I have been objecting for a long time and mine is not a voice in the wilderness. There is a veritable Mormon Tabernacle Choir out there which has been objecting for a year and a half.

I wonder if it was necessary to go through the pain of this carnage or if we could not have had a different system, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps in the first instance we could have avoided the mistake that is the National Energy Program if we had opened up the policy-making process, as the Minister of Finance is now talking about opening up the budgetary process. Perhaps all of government should be opened up. There should be some scrutiny of the advice given to the minister by his officials on the energy policy process. We should be able to make an analysis of the data that are given to him as facts. I know they were not facts. The information could have been the result of error or it could have been cooked, but it certainly was not factual.

I wonder if things would have been different if the minister had listened to the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. After the National Energy Program was introduced, it asked him to refer the matter to a standing committee of the House or to a joint committee of the Senate and the House for study. If the minister had agreed and there had been an opportunity for full discussion and analysis of that program 15 months ago, then perhaps we could have foreseen the consequences for Canada. Perhaps we could have avoided some of the worst consequences if the matter had been fully aired. How many billions of dollars or hundreds of thousands of jobs could have been saved? How many companies could have avoided bankruptcy if there had been fair and open and honest debate among parliamentarians?

When the Independent Petroleum Association said that the national energy policy was going to be a disaster for the country, the minister said that the association had no credibility. As a result, the head of Petro-Canada quit the association because it did not have nice things to say about the government. I wonder if things would have been different if the minister had listened, instead of discounting the credibility of the association. Would they have been different if the head of Petro-Canada had listened to the association instead of quitting? If the matter had been referred to a committee for study, I wonder how many people would be working today who are presently unemployed, wondering how they are going to maintain their standard of living and keep a roof over their head.

Is it not time that we demanded that the bureaucrats who actually run the government come out into the light? It is time we had an open democracy so that we can see what they are doing and perhaps prevent the terrible mistakes that are destroying the country.

I had hoped that the minister would announce some changes in the incremental oil revenue tax and the petroleum and gas revenue tax. The small producers have been lobbying the minister for over a year and I had hoped that he would do something for them along the lines of their suggestions. It appears that my hopes were in vain, Mr. Speaker, although there is still time left in the debate and committee stage is still to come. Perhaps the minister can bring himself to admit that his advisers are not doing well by him. I hope that he will admit that it is time to stop devastating the oil and gas industry. It is time we got back to the position we were in before the National Energy Program was introduced. We must be able to pursue self-sufficiency, Canadianization, and growth. We must be able to adopt a positive outlook and direct our efforts to making this country work. We continue to hope for all that, Mr. Speaker, although only a fool would hold his breath waiting for it.

Taxation

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-112 is the new version of the former Bill C-93 which dealt with the energy taxes, namely, the tax on industrial gas only consumed domestically, changes to the petroleum and gas revenue tax or PGRT, and implementation of the oil revenue tax, the IORT.

The hon. member who has just spoken was talking about taxes. No one likes to pay taxes, Mr. Speaker, least of all the oil industry. At the committee hearings which are presently continuing, the president of Dome Petroleum, Mr. Richards, answered a few questions that I put to him about the taxes that the company paid. Dome Petroleum is the largest Canadian-owned oil company in Canada today. It is not Petro-Canada but Dome Petroleum that is the largest. Dome Petroleum was going to receive from the government about $640 million in grants over the next three years. Mr. Richards himself is reputed to be making in the neighbourhood of $600,000 a year, according to the book "The Blue-Eyed Sheiks". Dome Petroleum does not pay taxes. Some oil companies do not like paying taxes; Dome is one.

This is simply an incredible thing to have to explain to your constituents. I represent a working class riding in the east end of Vancouver. My constituents work hard and their income tax is taken right off the top of their cheques, yet here is an outfit like Dome which pays no taxes.

I know the last speaker is a spokesman for the oil industry, and I know people in the industry wonder why the public is not sympathetic to them. Well, when you go around like the hon. member calling everyone stupid, strutting and fretting, ranting and raving, it is sometimes hard to get people to listen to you.

I am going to refer to this later on because I think small oil and gas producers in Canada have some case to take to the government about changes in taxation. However, what I hope to do in my speech today is to tackle this Liberal government and make some criticisms in areas I think are solid. If the members to my right would listen for a change instead of ranting and raving, they might learn something.

I am a western Canadian MP from a consumer area of the country, but I have also spent a lot of time in a producing area. I am going to make some detailed and solid suggestions which the government might consider. I think that is the way to approach things because Canadians are tired of federal-provincial and Liberal-Conservative bickering. They want some suggestions for solutions to the problems. I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I think that is what Canadians want and I propose to make a few today.

I am going to deal with three areas on behalf of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker. One area is the taxation itself, the PGRT and the IORT, and what they mean. I am also going to deal with the natural gas and gas liquids tax which is levied after the gas reaches the city gate and which represents about 65 per cent of the burner-tip price of $5.51 per mcf.

What happened was that the government was going to bring in a tax on the export of gas. We pressed them in this House not to do that because it would really cripple some of the western provinces. The government backed off after some strong opposition. But what it did was to bring in a general tax on all gas, and that tax is really hurting consumers. Last winter in Ontario that tax added $848 to the heating bill of consumers, $544 in Alberta, and $708 in British Columbia.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention that we are having an historic event tonight in my city of Vancouver; that is, the first Stanley Cup final in 50 years. I am sure all members of this House will show some support for the Canadian team.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Getting back to the more mundane matter of my speech on taxes, the third area I want to deal with is the agreement with Alberta and what it means to the Canadian consumer. During the period 1973-80 the Canadian public became largely disillusioned with the oil industry for several legitimate reasons. I hope the oil industry will listen to this. I have noted some industry people are writing in Oilweek and other energy magazines who have started to look at the issue as dispassionately as they can. If they do, they can make a solid case where they have one. In my view, the Canadian public saw first of all that the price paid for domestic oil was no longer related to the cost of production, but was being legislated in response to the arbitrary prices set by OPEC. We call them the Arabs, but they are not all Arabs. It was seen that this cartel was really determining prices in Canada.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the price increases were, by and large, not benefiting the Canadian public or the Canadian-owned portion of the oil and gas industry. Instead, the increases were contributing billions of dollars to the assets of the large foreign-owned corporations which had established reserves. For example, for every $1 increase in the price of conventional oil, it is estimated that the value of the reserves of Imperial, Amoco, Texaco, Shell and Gulf rises by more than $4 billion. We have to remember that this is a country which allowed as much as 75 per cent of its oil industry to be dominated by foreign-owned oil companies. It is really shameful that we did that. So every time we increased the price of oil, we gave these people more money. It is a wonderful scheme if you are a large, multinational oil company.

The assets of the industry as a whole increased by 260 per cent between 1973 and 1980. I understand that now industry profits have gone down and they have cash flow problems, but between 1973 and 1980 they made a heck of a lot of money. These gains seem particularly unfair to the Canadian public which had subsidized through taxation and super-depletion allowances the discovery of these reserves. So the consumer is paying once with the subsidies, paying again at the pump, and now they are going to be asked to pay a third time with increased taxes; but I will come to that in a minute.

Another reason the Canadian public was suspicious is that although the industry and governments had assured the public there was no shortage of crude oil and subsequently promoted large exports to the United States, by 1974 the reserve figures had been altered so dramatically that it was forecast that Canada would be a net importer of crude oil by the end of the decade. Understandably the public was shocked and appalled by this turn of events and demanded that the government start collecting and distributing accurate information on Canada's energy future.

Everyone knows that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) once said in this House that we have enough conventional oil reserves for 300 years. Now it is about nine to 11 years. On the basis of what that minister said, we exported one-half our daily production, and that is why this government has all the problems it has today, because we are self-sufficient in all forms of energy except oil. We are going to do the same thing with our natural gas. We are on the point of exporting that as well, and in a few years we may have the same problem with natural gas.

Our party, Mr. Speaker, sharing these concerns, forced the minority Liberal government to form a public energy corporation which could provide accurate technical information on the oil and gas industry to the government, which in turn would earn profits for the Canadian people from the development of Canadian resources. That company is PetroCan. It belongs to us. For the same reasons there was a limited movement towards this end in Alberta when that province formed the Alberta Energy Company, which was involved in Syncrude. By 1980, Mr. Speaker, the oil and gas industry was by far the most profitable industrial sector of the Canadian economy. In fact, in Alberta it became almost impossible to raise investment capital, I am told, for anything but oil and gas exploration.

This sets the background to why the government would come in with some taxes to tax away these windfall revenues. It was to be expected, but the problem is that it may be killing the goose by the manner in which it levied the taxes.

• (1610)

The Liberal government's answer to the growing problem was the National Energy Program. I agree with the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) in the sense that perhaps there was not a problem, but it was a rich industry and the money was flowing to few individuals and to many multinational oil companies, and this was money from Canadian consumers, so the government was bound to take some of that windfall back in the form of taxes. This was done in the United States. It enacted a windfall profits tax after the OPEC oil increases. It was perfectly in keeping with what had happened in other areas. The American ambassador may be surprised to learn that the United States did exactly the same thing.

While the thrust of the National Energy Program to Canadianize is correct and while its thrust to obtain a larger share of revenues from the industry is correct, the problem is that it is hurting independent Canadian companies by imposing a more complicated tax environment and by emphasizing development of frontier areas which are in the control of the oil giants. These submissions were given to the committee. We sent an economics committee from our caucus across the country. We went to Alberta and listened to the Alberta Energy Services Association, to some oil companies and oil groups, and to some servicing groups. If we could take away the Canadian Petroleum Association and if we could cut through all the guff, we would see that there was a problem for small companies because of the complicated tax environment. Also we would see that the NEP was taking the action out of Alberta and moving it to frontier areas. Of course, that was part of the war between federal and provincial governments. It was hurting small Canadian companies and was helping the oil giants which the National Energy Program was supposed to curb in the first place. This is the real critique of the National Energy Program.

Moreover, the federal government unilaterally increased its share of the the energy resource revenue pie without making any significant commitment to encourage domestic conservation, alternate fuels, or expansion of domestic use of our relatively abundant supplies of natural gas and heavy oil. I know that there are provisions in the National Energy Program for alternatives and conservation, but they are far outweighed by the emphasis upon supply and upon going to the Beaufort Sea and Hibernia to find new oil. I think we must find new oil and we have to develop Hibernia, for example. We need oil in Canada. We cannot be ostrichlike in our critique of the government. But more could have been done in the area of conservation.

Last week I saw an advertisement in the magazine Oilweek in which a company was advertising a heat pump. It claimed that if heat pumps were installed in houses it would save something like 80 per cent of energy used. It was broken down per barrel, but unfortunately I did not bring the article with me. However, I will raise this matter again in committee debate on the bill. If I read the advertisement correctly, it seemed to indicate that we could save two, three or four oil sands plants by simply bringing heat pumps to all homes in Canada. This would provide employment. It is the kind of thing we should be doing instead of megaprojects. But that is another subject; I was discussing the National Energy Program.

Then there was an agreement between the federal government and Alberta which was signed on September 1, 1981. The agreement was premised upon rapidly rising world prices for crude oil throughout the decade. That premise has been shown to be wrong. In all my reading, I see a stable environment or a stable price for OPEC oil in the next decade. This makes sense for OPEC; if one thinks about it, one will realize that it is in the interests of OPEC. I see a stable price, not a rapidly rising one. The problem is that the National Energy Program and the agreement with Alberta were designed on a false premise, namely, simply to stuff more petrodollars into the federal deficit and the heritage fund without regard to either domestic producers or consumers.

I hesitate to mention this, but if there is a lesson one must learn from the Saskatchewan election, perhaps it is that a government with lots of money in its heritage fund and in its provincial coffers does not necessarily mean that the average grassroots person thinks he or she is receiving benefits. That was the problem in the agreement with Alberta. There was lots of money brought into the coffers of the federal government and into the Alberta heritage fund, but it does not help the man and woman in Vancouver-Kingsway, the man and woman in Spadina, or the farmers in the various ridings which my colleagues represent.

After ten years of acrimonious debate between the federal government and the government of Alberta, we have the worst of all possible worlds. We have high consumer prices and therefore increased tension between the producing and consuming provinces. We have a domestic industry which is in serious trouble. We have a deteriorating domestic supply of crude oil.

For the benefit of my friends on my right who are fond of heckling me, let me repeat that we have the worst of all possible worlds with the Liberal energy policy. We have high consumer prices when we were promised low prices; we have a domestic industry which is in serious trouble when we were promised a program to help small Canadian producers; and we have a deteriorating domestic supply of crude oil when we were promised energy self-sufficiency. Is that not the situation today?

Are there any solutions to these problems? Let me suggest some solutions, some of which are new ideas. It seems to me that one problem faced by small companies in western Canada is shut-in natural gas. They have trouble selling natural gas. The government should look at the possibility of a public natural gas bank, consisting of gas received instead of some provincial royalties. Of course, there would have to be an agreement with the producing provinces. If Alberta did this, in lieu of 20 per cent in natural gas royalties, it would increase the market for natural gas by some 10 per cent.

We could aid the provinces in the construction of facilities for the production of high quality gasoline from natural gas feed stocks, following the process developed by Mobil and currently underway in Germany and New Zealand. This facility would create an additional local market in Alberta alone of 5 per cent.

We could bring in a program to encourage maximum substitution of natural gas for heating oil and gasoline. I know there is a program in place, but we have done very little with our automobile and truck fleets. Most hon. members with offices in the Confederation Building come to the House on a bus. That bus is one of a fleet of buses. By what is it propelled? Is it propelled by natural gas? No, it is propelled by scarce gasoline. We could do much more here.

Another area in which we could become involved is the expansion of heavy oil in the west. The federal government, should immediately construct, in co-operation with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, one or more heavy-oil upgraders which would provide necessary facilities to expand the Lloydminster, Wainwright and Cold Lake heavy oil fields. Such development should emphasize small-scale modules, and in situ miniprojects which would provide a much needed shot in the arm to both the drilling and service industry and smaller, independent, Canadian-controlled companies.

As much as we talk about Alsands, that kind of project would not have helped small drillers in Alberta. There is no doubt that the spin-offs will help some of the industry. If you really want to help the small, independent companies they would be better served in the areas of heavy oil and small drilling projects, not in mining, which is what Alsands was. This provides an economic alternative to the uneconomic Alsands megaproject route.

Second, the federal government could improve prices for heavy oil to bring on stream otherwise semi-marginal deposits.

Third, we could have a public heavy-oil bank, assisted in the process by a deferred royalty on heavy-oil payments. This would allow a shorter pay-out period while protecting the royalty share in Alberta, for example. There could be public participation with Petro-Canada, the Alberta Energy Company or Saskoil, or other miniprojects at manageable levels and economic prices.

What we could do for the Canadian industry is to replace the unfair and overly complex tax regime, the PGRT and the IORT that we are debating in this bill, with a simple federal and provincial royalty sharing agreement, analogous to the tax rental agreement.

I would like to expand on that particular matter. It may be the crux of the problem with this bill. Rather than face the problem of revenue sharing in a straightforward and rational way, the federal and provincial governments have engaged in a series of tax wars which have continued to the present time. They have burdened the oil and gas industry with one of the most complicated and consequently unfair tax regimes in Canada. This regime must be changed. Overly complex taxes are unfair taxes. To the largest corporations, these taxes become fine instruments to be tuned and played by well-paid accounting staffs for the benefit of corporate interests. On the other hand, for the small, independent Canadian producer, they represent a mountain of paperwork and added expense.

What we need is further price negotiations between Ottawa and Edmonton. The provincial government should consider voluntarily sharing a portion of its provincial royalties with the federal government. This would eliminate any justification for the PGRT, the IORT and excise taxes and would hopefully give the provincial government more say in what the surrendered revenues would be used for.

This is a novel suggestion. Some people may say it is naive or wishful thinking, but I believe there is a political will within the country for the producing provinces like Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia to arrive at better agreements with the federal government. The oil agreement that the Premier of Alberta and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) toasted on September 1, 1981, is gone. It has become redundant because the price of oil on the world market is not going up. The tax regime so instituted is too complicated for Canadian industry, especially small industry. If it is redundant, let us change it.

There is another approach I would like to put forward on behalf of our party. We do not support the concept of giving tax incentives or bonuses without earning an interest in the particular venture. Therefore, if there are to be grants by either the federal or provincial government of up to 80 per cent of the cost of a well, we say that either the provincial or the federal government should get that share of equity in the well. We believe that there have been vast giveaways in that area.

The introduction of equity incentives, federal-provincial royalty sharing and the elimination of complex federal taxes would require a careful review of the existing royalty structures. This has to be done at the provincial level and done with federal-provincial co-operation. The object would be to simplify the taxation regime of the industry and not to fatten the coffers of the provincial governments.

I think I have made some positive suggestions about how to deal with an industry which appears to be ailing. I do not think I have strutted or fretted or called everyone stupid. I believe that my criticisms of this government have been just as effective as the criticisms of my friends to my right. They have made some changes and they will have to continue to do so.

I mentioned the tax on domestically consumed natural gas. That affects every member opposite because I suspect that most of them have people in their ridings who use natural gas. The tax on that natural gas is unfair and regressive. It affects senior citizens, people on fixed incomes and poor people just as much as, or perhaps more so than, the rich person because they spend a greater proportion of their income on such things as energy, food and housing. I believe that this tax is a regressive one and should be removed.

Total energy costs, as measured by a component of the consumer price index, have gone up 46 per cent since 1980 under the Liberals. Natural gas prices rose 28 per cent in 1981. The present cost to consumers for oil and gas will double by 1986. I am already receiving complaints from constituents in my riding who tell me that while their salary went up 8 per cent or 9 per cent, their energy costs are going up 28 per cent. They ask me what is going on. It cannot be explained. It is a regressive tax which should be removed.

I have already spoken about the PGRT. It is a very complicated matter. This royalty has certain advantages because it is put on at the wellhead, which makes it difficult to manipulate in order to deduct expenses at that stage. As I said, though, the problem is that it will hurt the small producers. I have suggested some ways to replace that tax with a method of sharing provincial royalties with the federal government, which may work.

During the committee hearing I would like to raise the matter of oil companies which have received a windfall gain from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) for one quarter in 1981 in which no higher taxes were levied. What happened at that time was that the government boosted the price of oil by $2.50 a gallon for three months, from October 1 to December 31, 1981. However, the taxes did not come in until January 1. Therefore, the government may talk tough with the oil companies but they gave them a windfall profit for those three months. I want to press the government on that matter during the committee hearing and perhaps introduce an amendment to the bill which would provide that this money be paid back to the Canadian consumer.

I would like to conclude by saying that the Canadian consumer is getting hosed by a Liberal government that promised during the election campaign that it would bring in lower energy costs. The official opposition have been roaming around the country, including Saskatchewan, saying that they are a party of low energy prices. Do not believe it. In the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was Minister of Finance, there as an initial 18-cent per gallon levy and it was going to rise further. People forget that fact. Let us not make any mistake about it: the Conservatives are the high energy cost party and they are being followed by the Liberal Party. I suggest to hon. members to my right that they review the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West and cut out the malarkey in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: It was 18 cents. How much is it now?

Mr. Waddell: It was 18 cents immediately, then $4, then another $4, and so on. The price was going to be high and we voted against it. When the Liberal Party returned to power they proposed a similar regime and we voted against that as well. That is the point I am making. There are no members in the House who are prepared to get up and take the position of the consumer. They are always bleating about the oil industry, but we hear very little about the small oil industry and very little about the consumers of Canada.

• (1630)

Let me tell my friend that our proposal with reference to taxes would be the lowest priced energy proposal put forward by the two parties in Canada. I make that quite clear.

Mr. Jarvis: You sold them down the river in 1979. You are a hypocrite!

Mr. Waddell: There is another problem. I detect a little consternation on the faces of the members to my right, but I simply offer them the simple facts.

Mr. Jarvis: How many taxes do you propose, Ian?

Mr. Waddell: I simply ask them to read John Crosbie's budget and to look at the figures for future increases. I ask them to look at the agreement between Alberta and Ottawa, and they would then see that the figures are not that much different. They are just a little lower. I again ask, who represented the consumer—

Mr. Jarvis: Certainly not the NDP!

Mr. Waddell: —and who represented the small oil and gas companies? Premier Lougheed, the Conservative—

Mr. Jarvis: The Chamber of Commerce represents them better than the NDP!

Mr. Waddell: —is the great chief in hiding of the Conservative Party. What happened to the chief in waiting when he made the deal with Pierre Trudeau, the present Prime Minister, and they raised their glasses—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should refer to hon. members of the House by their functions or constituencies.

Mr. Jarvis: He is too new, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: When Premier Lougheed and the right hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) raised their glasses, where was the consumer represented there? Who was representing the consumer? No one. Certainly, no one. When that agreement was made between Alberta and Ottawa, did we ever really think that we would get the worst of all possible worlds from a Liberal Prime Minister and a Conservative provincial Premier?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Waddell: What we have is the worst of all worlds. We have high consumer prices, we have a domestic industry which is in serious trouble, and we have a deteriorating domestic supply of crude oil. Hon. members, ask what the NDP would do. Put us in government, gentlemen, and we will show you what we can do! This country has every energy resource known to mankind.

Mr. Jarvis: And you voted against every one of them!

Mr. Waddell: Only a succession of Liberal and Conservative governments could literally turn the situation on its end and get us into a position where we are short of oil and we have these high prices. And they criticize the NDP! That is ridiculous.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Emergency Measures—Order in council provisions affecting manpower. (b) Effect on unions; the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Watson)— Airports—Possible change in status of Dorval and Mirabel airports—Request for independent examination; the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Finance—Request for increased tax rebate on farm fuel.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the statement of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) that we should have a chance to debate this subject and to kick it around. He felt we should have a parliamentary committee and that we should have a chance to go over it really thoroughly. This is the fourth time I have had a chance to speak on this subject. It is also the fourth time in the last seven days that I have had a chance to speak on subjects surrounding this issue.

Mr. Taylor: Nothing has been changed.

Mr. McRae: I recall that we spent 82 days on the first major bill and 35 days on this bill. I do not know what we mean when we speak about not having debate.

Mr. Taylor: Nothing has been changed.

Mr. McRae: I do not suppose there is any other jurisdiction or any other Parliament in the world where this kind of subject would be debated for 125 or 150 days, because in that list I did not include all of the opposition days and so on and the emergency debate we had last week. It seems to me that there has been a tremendous amount of debate around this particular subject or subjects related to the economy. I simply cannot believe that this Parliament has not aired its views very fully by now concerning this area.

In the last few days I was very interested to hear some of the comments coming from the opposition, particularly from the Tory opposition. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) made a very interesting series of statements about how his party sees this problem and our economic problems. Certainly one cannot separate them. He sees all of the solutions in terms of following Reaganomics, following President Reagan's economic and energy policies, and believes that if we follow those we will all arrive at the point where everyone will be healthy, wealthy and very wise.

Mr. Jarvis: That is yesterday's speech, Paul. Come on, give us today's speech.

Mr. McRae: That is not yesterday's speech. It has been the whole debate all along.

Mr. Jarvis: Oh, come on! It is a different bill today.

Mr. McRae: I was fascinated by some of the comments which were made along this line, that if we were to simply follow President Reagan and free up the economy, our energy economy and everything else, everything would be hunky-dory and we would have no problems.

Mr. Taylor: Could not be a bigger mess than you have made of it.

Mr. McRae: Members opposite say that if they were in power, this is exactly what they would do.

I was also interested in some of the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who spoke just before me, in his discussion of the whole energy program and the energy bills. I think I support a good many of the things he has said; but, concerning the energy program, I find it very difficult in not understanding the position of that party, considering the positions it has taken in the past concerning its approach to energy.

In early 1973 I was in the House and really had the first inkling that we would have some real difficulty in terms of oil supply. That is when we had the first sense that we could not simply sell all of the oil we had as fast as we could get it out of the ground. I remember sitting in committee, I suppose it was in January or March of 1973, when Donald Macdonald, who was the then minister of energy, mines and resources, suggested that we would have to put on an embargo, a limit, on the amount of oil that we were exporting to the United States. I remember the absolute horror with which this comment was greeted by the hon. members of the Tory opposition. They grumbled and said: "This is ridiculous; we have unlimited quantities of oil. There is no limit to what we have; the only limit is how fast we can take it out of the ground." For about two years they took the attitude that it was an absolutely ridiculous policy that we should not keep pumping that oil out of the ground and exporting it.

Then I recall a change a little later on when we heard that there was a shortage. Because we had a shortage, the price had to go up along with the OPEC prices. This was in late 1973 and 1974. I recall a statement by one of the majors who told us that if the price of oil went up to $8 a barrel, we could expect an 800 per cent increase in the discoveries in this country. There would be no less than an 800 per cent increase. Actually, I think we had something like a 30 per cent increase in discoveries in that period, but we did not go to $8 a barrel; rather, we went to about $20 a barrel or a little more than that.

I have listened to this argument going on for a long time in this House, and I find that there have been two very interesting arguments, especially of late. One of them is that a terrible tragedy has been brought on by this government's National Energy Program and its policies because we are not taking that oil and gas out of the ground fast enough. The argument is that we have to get it out of the ground, we have to continue to explore and we have to sell that oil. There is a kind of inference there that there must be a hole or something beneath the earth's crust and that all the oil will disappear into the hole, that it will run away if we do not get it out fast!

No one in this House has told me that in the long run we are not going to run out of conventional crude oil. We talk about cutting back to about 10 per cent of supplies in the 1980s by the early 1990s. Because of new discoveries, certainly the Hibernia, the north and other factors I will come to in a minute, we will probably not be down to that point so early. We may get a couple of years' grace.

We keep hearing that if we do not explore, drill and pump the oil and gas out immediately, it will not be there. Somehow it will disappear and be lost to us. We hear that it is a terrible crime not to take out the oil at this point. Future generations will want that opportunity in the next 10 or 20 years, but we do not hear about that. The exploration does not have to be done tomorrow, next year or ten years down the line. The oil is not going to disappear. There are no perforations in the caps on the national gas wells which will allow the gas to leak away.

There are over a thousand wells that have been drilled and capped. We are told it is a terrible thing that the gas was not taken out right away. I have great difficulty understanding that kind of mentality. We were told by the minister of energy, mines and resources in the Clark government that the crossover time between the supply and demand for natural gas and western reserves would be 1997. It may have been extended a bit, but it is still there. It will still be a resource that our children and our children's children will have a hard time finding.

The fact that we are not selling or exporting this gas immediately is not a tragedy for Canadians, it is a good thing. It is and will remain a valuable resource even though it is not being pumped out now. That is a myth that must be dispelled immediately.

There is another myth we constantly hear from the Tory opposition. If a company buys a property or the controlling interest in another company, that is considered an investment. That investment is made in the expectation that there will be some profit. That is the way business works. It is a legitimate function.

However, if the government should buy Petrofina, Phillips Petroleum or Atlantic Richfield, that is an expenditure and the money is wasted. They say that money is being thrown away by purchasing such a company. That is what we hear. They believe that if the government buys it, it is not an investment, not profitable and will not yield a return. I have difficulty with this kind of mythology that says that Canadians have no business investing Canadian dollars through the Government of Canada and owning a national oil company. It is something I do not understand.

These two mythologies leave me cold. I am prompted to speak time and time again because they keep coming up. Those opposite always say that we are losing tremendous opportunities by not pumping the oil and gas out of the ground. They say we should be exporting it. They also say the government has no business buying a company because that is an expenditure and a waste of government funds.

The Tories talk about when they were in government. One reason they are no longer in power is that they do not understand the Canadian public. Canadians respected the notion of this government forming Petro-Canada. They liked that idea. Canadians, through their government, want to own a strong, powerful, active company, one involved in exploration and the sale of gas at the pumps.

When I drive around this city or Thunder Bay, I am pleased to see the Canadian flags and the name Petro-Canada. I feel good about that. We in Thunder Bay were very happy to see the Petro-Canada sign go up. At that point we were the most easterly region where Petro-Canada stations existed. In eastern Canada we now see the sign at stations that were formerly Petrofina.

This is the way Canadians want it to be. It gives them a sense of owning something, of owning part of their own resources. I am proud to be part of the government which brought that about. I know I will hear the argument from the New Democratic Party that they were responsible for Petro-Canada. However, I was at the caucus meeting where this idea was presented. We were a part of selling that idea. The minister talked about it long before it became an issue, long before the so-called "forced" vote. It was eight or ten months before that happened.

Six or eight months before the debate in this House, I attended a convention of our party where this idea was strongly suggested. There is no question that the NDP were very interested and wanted the same thing, but to say they brought it about is not true. The truth is that it came out of this government. There was a lot of work done by many of us in this party, and I resent being told that somebody else do it. When we were in power in 1974, we were not under the gun. It was not a minority situation at that time. That is when this proposal was brought in. Nobody forced us to do it.

It is interesting to note that the Petro-Canada bill was one of five bills brought in at that time. The NDP energy critic, Tommy Douglas, a long-term member of this House and a great Canadian, attended the committee meetings on that bill and supported this government in every respect. He supported second reading in principle, supported the bill in committee, introduced amendments that were accepted and supported the bill all the way through. Other members of his party did the same. He did the same with regard to the emergency supplies allocation bill, the monitoring bill, the Petroleum Administration Act, in fact, all five bills. They were supported by the NDP and filibustered by the Tories.

Now here we have the granddaddy of them all, the bill that says to the people of this country, in fact throughout the world, that we are determined to get control of a resource that should be Canadian. We are determined that we are going to be owners of our own natural resources. This is the bill that says we are going to do it. This is the bill that the people on the left are with. It is the one bill that Mr. Douglas came to speak to our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about, and I am very pleased that he did, to give him support, he and a bunch of other Canadians, good Canadians from all over the country. They came down to see our Prime Minister and said they support what we are doing in this bill. But not that other party. I am very disappointed that when we get to the crux of the debate—the bill that Mr. Douglas said he would like to have had ten years ago—that support is not there.

That is why I am proud to be on this side of the House as a Liberal, speaking about our energy policy. I admit that it is not easy right now, that these are difficult times for the National Energy Program and that things may look tough in these difficult times; but in the long run there will be hundreds of billions of dollars for Canadians when we hold and develop our own resources.

In the last few weeks I keep hearing people on the other side and even some on this side being called socialists. There is that kind of talk. The word "socialism" is some kind of word that condemns you, saying you are stupid and do not know what is going on, that you are destructive. It is a word I find used with much disdain by many people on the other side. Certainly on this side of the House there is no one who is a pure socialist, a socialist per se. We as Canadians are a people who believe in a mixed economy. I do not know that there are many people on the other side who would say that we should sell Ontario Hydro back to a private corporation. I do not know how many would sell OC Transpo or the Toronto transportation system or the Thunder Bay transportation system back to the private sector. It makes sense to run them as public enterprises. I suppose you could call that socialism. If Ontario Hydro is called socialism, it was probably put into effect by a Conservative government. You could call the CBC, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, socialist. Pacific Western Airlines was purchased as a private company by the government of Alberta and made into a socialist enterprise, but I do not call Mr. Lougheed a socialist. I do not call the Premier of Ontario at the time who bought Ontario Hydro and made it into a public corporation a socialist. Because I am proud to be part of the formation of Petro-Canada, I do not call myself a socialist. I believe there is a decent, intelligent mix between the private and public sectors in a democratic country like ours. Some may say we should lean a little more this way, others may say we should lean a little more the other way; but basically speaking, that mix is a decent mix.

I do not believe that the kind of mix that President Reagan would have in the United States is the kind I would like. I think there are more valuable things being done in the public sector than he believes in. For instance, I believe strongly that our medical and health care system in Canada is better than any in the world. I would not want that to be turned back to some kind of private insurance company to operate. I do not know how many on the other side would want that to happen. But because I say it, I am called a socialist. The word does not mean anything. It is a word that deals with the extent to which people organize their affairs either in the private sector or in the public sector, and that mix is always there. To say this group is socialist and that the others are free enterprisers is just using two blurred terms.

With Canadian ownership of, first, the oil and gas industry, these particular enterprises, we are not saying the Canadian government is going to buy up all of the multinational controlled companies. We are going to buy up some of them and we are making it possible for other parts of the industry to fall into the hands of Canadian companies.

When Nova Corporation—it was not Nova Corporation at the time, it was Alberta Gas—purchased Husky, almost simultaneously we bought Phillips Petroleum. I thought this was a great combination. I was quite pleased in many ways that Petro-Canada did not get Husky. At the time I felt rather badly about it, but I thought better about it afterwards. What happened was that we did not spend our money on Husky but we got Phillips, and Alberta Gas, or the Nova Corporation, bought Husky. In those particular deals we ended up with two good American companies that had become part of Canada. Was that not a sound proposition? It seems to me it was not a socialist proposition. It was a proposition where we as Canadians worked out a mix between the private sector and the public sector which was a very valuable and very good mix.

So, Mr. Speaker, I welcome this particular program because it enables us to put control back into the hands of Canadians, whether it be through the public sector or through the private sector, and more can be done through the private sector than through the public sector. We get it back into our hands so that we can control those resources. We will be able to control the kind of development we want from those resources. We can decide whether we want to develop those resources instantly or leave them there, knowing full well that there is no hole in the ground that they are going to disappear into or that the caps are not perforated, that they will be there for a long time.

Even though it is a difficult time, Mr. Speaker, and even though it is not easy sitting on this side to be buffeted constantly, I really feel proud to be able to say that we believe in something and we stand up for it. I believe in the National Energy Program. In the long run, in the history of Canada it will prove to be a very important development and I am proud to have been here in the last ten years to be part of that development.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a real opportunity to follow the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), because I have never in my life seen such a display of ignorance of a subject from a man who was educated, a former principal in our schools. He does not have an inkling of what happens in the oil industry. A person asked me the other day what has happened. Is it because the government has a design to destroy the system? Surely no one could be that incompetent. But then, having listened to the previous speaker, I am beginning to wonder; perhaps it was a combination of both. The situation we are in now is totally unnecessary.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I could call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers).

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions, production of papers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Motions Nos. 22, 35, 1, 48, 28, 43, 5, 54, 34, 83, 71, 89, 36, 94, 84, 88, 49, 76 and 95 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

AIRPORT SERVICES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and other communications during the last year between the government and the representatives of airline companies in connection with the division of landing rights and other services between Dorval and Mirabel airports in Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion is certainly appropriate at this time when we anticipate that within the next week or two we shall hear some announcement from the government about its intentions with regard to these two airports, Dorval and Mirabel.

To put the subject in the proper context, I would like to go back over the history of the past three decades. When I came here from Scotland after the war, I came over on a Northstar into Dorval airport. I remember well that I was so happy to get off that aircraft that it would not have mattered what kind of airport I was landing at. In fact, I disliked the flight on that Northstar from Scotland to Dorval so much that I would not travel in an aircraft for the next 15 years.

Be that as it may, it was interesting to watch the development of Dorval. In those days it was obviously not intended for use as a major international North American airport. Dorval was the first airport to undergo extensive renovations, alterations and additions, and in those days the work that was being done in Dorval was a great assist to my own industry, the construction industry. Plans were developed and the building got underway.

I recall that at that time many criticisms were made of the design of Dorval and that, when the airport at Toronto was to be built—or rebuilt—that particular design would certainly not be used. The concept at Dorval at that time was an open one, and even today the availability of space is such that there is really no difficulty whatsoever in providing the accommodation needed for automobiles and other forms of traffic going into and out of Dorval. Access is easy and fast.

When the Toronto airport was built in its present form, it was decided that it would be a more modern airport, so it was built, as everyone knows, in an entirely different form and concept. I know this too well because I had what I suppose I could call the misfortune of having to go through that airport once a week, as I had an office in Toronto, and many was the time I was stuck in a taxi approaching the airport and watching my plane take off because I could not get into that airport.

Being proud of Montreal and always somewhat jealous of Toronto construction, I obviously felt we had made the right decision at that time. However, the years went by and it again became obvious that additional work had to be done at Dorval. In the mid-sixties when I was president of the Montreal Construction Association we were making representations to senior cabinet ministers at that time, and plans had been made both to extend and to widen the runways. The intention was to turn Dorval into an airport which would be good for the next 20 or 30 years. Rather strangely, the local mayors resisted any further expansion at Dorval. What had happened was that there had been considerable house building in the vicinity of the airport. People had even built houses in line with the runways, and suddenly they were objecting to the fact that planes were going overhead, despite the fact that the airport was there first and they built their houses later. They objected to the airplanes and made representations through their elected representatives at the municipal level that the amount of traffic at Dorval should be cut down, to the point that night traffic at Dorval was not allowed, and it is still not allowed.

This obviously took away the effectiveness of Dorval as an international airport, to the point where the government had little choice but to decide to build a second airport, leaving at that time Dorval to service the continental traffic, with Mirabel obviously to become the international centre. I say Mirabel because prior to deciding on that region a study was undertaken, and the area which was chosen for this new international airport was my own constituency of Vaudreuil. That was vigorously opposed by the Quebec provincial government because of its proximity to the Ontario border. The provincial government refused to give its approval of the site on the basis that some of the benefits from this development in the constituency of Vaudreuil would accrue to the province of Ontario. The choice of the provincial government, as we well know, was the south shore. The eventual compromise site was Ste. Scholastique, which is now Mirabel, and construction got underway. Surrounding land was expropriated. It is rather interesting now that there are complaints from the people whose land was expropriated that an attempt was made at that time by the government to expropriate land to make sure Mirabel would never be in the position in which Dorval found itself when it was not able to expand its runways as it would have liked.

The airport at Mirabel was eventually opened, at a cost of some $1 billion, in 1975 and, according to the projections made prior to the decision to build the airport, there was to be an annual increase in passenger traffic which warranted the construction of that second airport.

However, there were two subsequent events which changed that projected increase in passenger traffic. The very first one was the decision of the government to allow foreign airlines to enter Canada at Toronto rather than Montreal. Of course, the foreign airlines immediately took advantage of that permission and, as a result, the Montreal area was no longer the point of entry for many of those foreign airlines. The second event was the economic downturn which resulted in less use of airlines.

The decision to construct Mirabel, the second airport in the Montreal area and a truly international airport from the point of view of its size, its quality and its capability of handling all kinds of aircraft, including the largest aircraft presently flying, cargo planes and so forth, was a wise one based on the conditions which existed at that time.

And, as everyone knows, subsequently the same logic was applied to the construction of a second airport at Toronto. However, the people of Toronto resisted the construction of the Pickering airport and, as a result, a move was made to expand the existing Toronto airport. For those of us who use the Toronto airport it possibly was a reasonable compromise, but of one thing I am absolutely convinced: ten years from now we in Montreal will be very pleased that we have two airports.

To return to the immediate problem, the Dorval airport cannot handle 24 hour per day traffic. Second, because of the length and width of its runways Dorval would be in a very difficult position if it had to handle all the additional traffic from Mirabel.

I put this on the record because I am going to argue that we should still mothball Mirabel. The problem with transferring any traffic to Mirabel is that some of the passengers who presently fly out of Dorval would not go via Mirabel but instead would go by shuttle service to Toronto, thus increasing the traffic in Toronto and defeating the purpose of the move. At the present time Air Canada runs some of its Caribbean flights via Toronto; the reason for this is that it wants to avoid using Mirabel. The Montreal chamber of commerce believes that any change to Mirabel would result in many airlines leaving Montreal altogether.

We have what is, in my opinion, an even more serious problem, however. At the present time the Dorval airport is the hub of the West Island/Montreal activity. The maintenance facilities are there and one must admit that the language of a large number of the workers at Dorval airport at the present time is English. If any attempt is made to move services to Mirabel, it is unlikely that the present employees at Dorval will be willing to move. They will do what many Anglophones have already done—move out of the province. The result will be a further decrease in the proportion of Anglophones in Quebec and the reason for that will be the decision of the federal government.

I note from the statistics that whereas the traffic growth in Montreal has been just over 4 per cent per annum, the traffic growth in Toronto has been almost double that. Any attempt to move flights out of Dorval into Mirabel will inevitably increase the amount of traffic in Toronto for the reasons that I have stated.

The airlines themselves have come up with a simple solution—mothball Mirabel. It is understood that the loss at Mirabel is in the order of $1 million per week. The profits at Dorval are probably about $1 million per month. The cost of moving from Dorval to Mirabel is estimated to be in the order of half a billion dollars. This is without taking into consideration the disruption of employees who may or may not decide to make the move when the transfer is made. I do not think the transfer is going to be made for the simple reason that the federal government has a commitment to the West Island community.

In any other province it is possible that persons might be willing to move a distance of 30 or 40 miles from one location to another, but the very sensitive language problem in the province of Quebec means that it is not quite that simple. The probability is that the employees at Dorval will be unwilling to make that move.

It is realized that if Mirabel were mothballed it might be impossible to get all the flights into Dorval. That may be so, but I suggest the consequences would be far less severe than if an attempt were made to take flights out of Dorval and put them into Mirabel.

If one looks at the price tag for the move and compares it with the present $50 million per year loss, it will be seen that if the shift is to cost half a billion dollars and the interest on that amount alone is almost twice the total annual loss, economically it would not make any sense either.

When an international airport is constructed it is essential that there be easy access. Because the government of the province of Quebec was annoyed that it did not get its own way and because the present provincial government has no intention of co-operating with the federal government, there has been a refusal to construct a main highway linking Montreal to Mirabel despite the fact the federal government has offered the financing. It makes absolutely no sense, when the provincial government refuses to construct a high-speed highway linking Montreal to Mirabel, to give any consideration to transferring flights from Dorval to Mirabel which businessmen would refuse to take because of the additional time factor and the additional inconvenience involved. We cannot force people to use a different location if they are not so inclined. Unless all flights were taken out of Dorval, businessmen would still use that airport and travel by the alternative routes I have suggested, such as going via Toronto.

For these reasons, I suggest that any move by the federal government to make any transfer whatsoever of flights from Dorval to Mirabel at the present time would be uneconomical, contrary to the interests of the residents of the West Island of Montreal, would be a very damaging blow to the anglophone community that remains in the province of Quebec, and would be foolhardy in the extreme.

Whether in its wisdom the federal government decides to retain Mirabel for its present international and cargo flights, it must swallow its pride, accept the fact that the decision to construct originally was correct—and as I have said, I fully support the original decision—absorb the inevitable losses and be patient for another five, six or seven years when the people in Montreal and the province of Quebec will be very proud that they have access to two airports in Montreal, Dorval and Mirabel.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that he will have the full support of hon. members in this party for his Notice of Motion for Production of Papers. I think the hon. member showed considerable courage in making the statement he did about Mirabel today. It is regrettable that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is not here to listen to that statement.

On two successive days, yesterday and today, members of the Liberal caucus from Montreal have raised the concerns of their constituents about the fact that the government is considering actions which would be to their detriment by considering the possibility of transferring a large number of domestic flights from Dorval to Mirabel. That is not in the best interest of the west end of Montreal. The decision clearly would not be in the best interests of the airline industry, which does not want it. Travellers do not want it either and it would be a very regressive step.

From the time the decision was first made to build Mirabel it should have been apparent to the government that it would be a white elephant, extremely costly, underutilized and would cause very serious problems for the future. We have seen those problems manifested in the massive deficit run up by Mirabel, in the treatment of landowners on the site whose farms and homes were taken away from them and who found that their treatment by the government was totally unfair.

We have seen Dorval's competitors advertising for some time to encourage people to route themselves through competing airports. One example is that of a few years ago when people were encouraged to route themselves through Logan instead of Mirabel because it is more convenient. We have seen that the reaction of the travelling public is that they find Mirabel extremely inconvenient and very costly to get to.

Anyone who has gone through Mirabel, Mr. Speaker, recognizes that it is very severely underutilized at the present time. The government's investment there was a mistake in the first place, and it is continuing to cost Canadian taxpayers over the course of time. It would be useful for members to have the opportunity of trying to find public transportation from downtown Montreal to Mirabel, or to take a cab and pay for the expense of travelling to such a remote location. If they do, they will discover something about the inconvenience that airport has caused for so many of the travelling public. For the government now to be talking about depriving air travellers of services they now have in Dorval and requiring them to use Mirabel is, I feel, a very serious and regressive step.

The real question, Mr. Speaker, is to what extent members of the Quebec Liberal caucus are prepared to speak out against this policy currently under consideration. To what extent are they prepared to put their constituents' interests first and give consideration to the concerns of the travelling public, the airlines, and the people of Montreal. Surely it is time that other members of the Liberal caucus showed the courage shown yesterday by the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) and today by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, and speak out to make it known that the decision under consideration is very regressive.

One need look no further than page 4 of today's Globe and Mail to see that concern is running very deep in that part of Montreal. It quotes the hon. member for Châteauguay as follows:

> He said in an interview later that the issue is shaping up into "the biggest political problem in the Montreal area. We'll lose two seats for sure" in that area in the next election if the government's plan goes ahead.

Mr. Bujold: Nonsense.

Mr. Beatty: The hon. member opposite says "nonsense". He is saying nonsense to his own colleague. It was the hon. member for Châteauguay who is quoted in today's Globe and Mail as saying that. Perhaps the hon. member wants to get up and attack his friend, the hon. member for Châteauguay. Perhaps he wants to say that the comments of the hon. member for Vaudreuil, who spoke a few minutes ago, were nonsense. We on this side do not believe they are nonsense. We believe there is a very deep-seated concern among the people of Montreal about this waste and inconvenience. We believe for the government to simply bull ahead and ignore this problem is to do a disservice to all Canadians, in particular the people of Montreal.

We should put on record, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Progressive Conservative Party are prepared to fight for the people of Dorval and west end Montreal. If voices on the other side are silenced, if members of the Quebec Liberal caucus are not prepared to stand up for those people, then members on this side will.

We believe Mirabel was a very serious mistake and it is being compounded today by the consideration of shifting domestic traffic from Dorval to Mirabel which would be very unfair to everyone concerned. The taxpayers of Canada have been forced to subsidize a very costly and unnecessary airport at Mirabel. In that regard I disagree with my friend, the hon. member for Vaudreuil. It was a mistake in the first place to have built Mirabel, an airport which served only to take prime farm land out of production and deprive farmers of the opportunity of growing and supplying food to the people of that area. It was a mistake, Mr. Speaker, but let us not compound the mistake today by allowing the Minister of Transport to go ahead and transfer domestic routes from Dorval to Mirabel.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would underline that the hon. member for Vaudreuil has the full support of members on this side of the House for his motion for the production of papers. If it comes to a vote we are prepared to support him. If it does not come to a vote, it will not be because members on this side have talked it out, thereby preventing members of the House of Commons from expressing themselves in a free vote on this issue. It will be because members on the government side have decided to talk it out and deprive the hon. member for Vaudreuil of the opportunity of having a vote on this motion. The people of Dorval have our support and the hon. member has our support. I hope all members of the House will recognize their responsibility and allow this motion to come to a vote today. I hope members on all sides will support this very reasonable motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken. We will not contribute to this motion being talked out because we support it. I merely want to say that it is hard to hide an elephant. In fact, you can ask any undertaker—it is even harder to bury one, whether it is white or any other colour.

However, the Liberal government deserves an "E" for effort on Mirabel, because after that fiasco they shuffled much of the expropriated land and much of the costs over to the Department of Public Works accounts from the Ministry of Transport accounts. They wiped out the interest payments on Mirabel and tried to shut the closet door on that. Now the government wants to force passengers and airlines to abandon Dorval in order to try and justify the existence of Mirabel.

The simple fact is that Mirabel covers only 14 per cent of its costs. If one uses the same formula for grain that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is relying on arrived at by one Mr. Snavely, farmers should get $12.90 a bushel for grain. If the minister used the Snavely formula on Mirabel, we would recover 14 per cent of the cost.

The government proposes to transfer long-haul domestic flights from Dorval to Mirabel. That is an expensive proposition at a time when the government says there is no money for other things. First of all it will cost about $400 million to build new hangars, terminals and other facilities at Mirabel, duplicating what we now have at Dorval. As Dorval starts to lose traffic it will start to lose money, and we are back into a different rut.

Mirabel is a one-hour and $40 taxi ride from Montreal, so it is no wonder people do not want to use it. If Mirabel were set up in the same way as Gatwick in England, or Frankfurt in Germany, that might make some sense. Gatwick has a high-speed electric train for the transportation of passengers some 40 miles to London at a cost of $6 or $7, and that might make some sense at Mirabel. Of course passengers are reluctant to use Mirabel and you can hardly blame them. CP Air has threatened to discontinue non-stop flights from Mirabel to western Canada. Air Canada and CP Air passengers will of course avoid Mirabel. As the hon. member who sponsored this motion has said, they will go via Toronto instead, which not only avoids Mirabel but hurts Dorval as well. Malton airport will be under pressure to handle more traffic as airlines and passengers avoid Mirabel. The department will then use this new problem to justify a new airport at Pickering for which it has already thrown $187 million down the drain.

The need for mega-airports such as Mirabel and Pickering died with the death of the supersonic transport. This is what they were designed for. The visions of the mid and late-1960s was that an airport like Mirabel would be the greatest supersonic transportation airport in the whole world. It was to be the first one as well as the greatest one. This has gone down the drain. I agree with the hon. member that it needs mothballing.

Airport congestion at Malton and Dorval can be solved by improving ground transportation on routes up to 500 to 600 miles. I am referring to bus and rail. This will take some money but not as much as the $1 billion which the government has already thrown into Mirabel or the $1.5 billion the government will throw into these projects if it gets away with its plan to shift traffic from Dorval to Mirabel.

In supporting this motion, let me indicate that I have a final solution for Mirabel. The government of the United States purchased some property in Ottawa in order to build a new embassy; the Government of Canada will build a new embassy in Washington. I suggest that if we saw the Mirabel terminal building in half, we could give half of it to the U.S. government for its embassy. It could pay for the bill to move that half to Ottawa. We could transport the other half down to Washington. I suspect that the architect's fees for the new embassy in Washington would cover much of the cost of moving the other half of that terminal building to Washington. Then we would have two embassies. We are good, co-operative international neighbours, and we would not have to put mothballs in the buildings. We could saw the terminal in half, have two embassies, and let farmers return to growing food on the land which the runways occupy.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this private members' debate provided by Standing Order 48(2), and specifically to debate Motion No. 96 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), a motion for the production of all communications between the government and the representatives of airline companies in connection with the division of landing rights and other services between Dorval and Mirabel airports in Quebec.

As we are well aware, the issue of the assignment of traffic between Mirabel and Dorval airports has been with us for a long time. Virtually from the opening of Mirabel, it has been reviewed by successive ministers of transport. The issue is an extremely complex one which has many different technical and economic aspects and is one which affects people from many different sectors of society. For example, it affects business travellers and leisure travellers; people living in the vicinity of Mirabel and people living in the vicinity of Dorval; travellers from other parts of Canada, from the United States, from Europe and from all corners of the world; employees at Mirabel and employees at Dorval.

Clearly each of these sectors will see the issue from their own perspective, as did the three hon. members who have participated thus far in the debate. In addition, the view of different people in these sectors will vary to some considerable extent as a result of personal experience and personal involvement. The situation has been exacerbated by further complexities such as Montreal origin-destination passenger traffic which has not grown as anticipated mainly because of the economic downturn, as mentioned by the hon. member for Vaudreuil. It is not only a Canadian economic downturn but a worldwide one. Another complexity is the increased cost of aviation fuel, which no one mentioned, and the resulting raising of fares. Since Mirabel basically serves international traffic, excluding the United States, passenger traffic growth has been reduced even further by the introduction of more direct flights by domestic and foreign European carriers, to other Canadian cities, thereby reducing the number of connecting passengers at Montreal. This development has taken place despite the moratorium on new foreign carriers at Toronto International Airport since 1976 and considerable efforts in bilateral negotiations to encourage the use of Mirabel.

The present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is vigorously attempting to resolve the Montreal airports issue, and fully intends to be the minister who obtains a government decision on the issue. He is a minister who is not afraid to make tough, unpopular decisions. He is one who makes decisions, keeping in mind what is best for the country in the long term.

I know he will appreciate the debate which is taking place this afternoon because it will certainly help him to come up with a solution that will benefit Canada in the long term. As all hon. members are well aware, on February 12, 1981, the same minister released a report entitled, "An Interim Report On Airport Role Options". This report was the culmination of the first phase of a study which had been undertaken by the Department of Transport, assessing a range of possible traffic assignments for the Montreal airports system. With the release of this interim report, all interested parties were invited to submit comments and concerns on the analysis done to date, with a view to providing a broader input base for the analysis in the second phase of the study.

In total, some 92 interested parties submitted their viewpoints and concerns, with the greatest response being from municipal governments and local chambers of commerce. As well, ten air carrier companies submitted detailed information on the potential cost-revenue implications of transferring additional traffic to Mirabel.

Let me reflect for a moment upon the findings of the first phase of the analysis which are documented in the interim report. The analysis indicated the following:

> That the original long-range plan to consolidate most of the commercial air traffic at Mirabel is still the best solution.

I emphasize the words "long-range plan". It continued:

> That the timing of any such transfer must be carefully assessed taking into account the anticipated demand; the residual economic life of existing facilities at Dorval; the current availability of under-utilized new facilities at Mirabel; and the impact of substantial traffic reassignment on the social and economic wellbeing of the communities adjacent to the two airports.

It went on to indicate:

> —that the focus of the second phase of the study must be on not only the costs and benefits of transferring traffic to Mirabel but also on the optimum timing for any such transfer.

I also emphasize the word "timing". Many of the submissions made in response to the minister's request for comments attempted to identify the costs which would be incurred by the respective party or interest group as a result of any transfer of traffic to Mirabel.

Needless to say, rarely does the summation of the individual aspects of any transportation issue portray the total effect upon the system. The detailed cost benefit analysis which was undertaken in the second phase of the Montreal study, while taking into consideration the information and concerns contained in the individual submissions, at the same time addressed the question of the total impact on the Montreal airports system. This detailed cost benefit analysis is now being finalized. Regardless of what conclusions the analysis indicates, it is inevitable that the proposed solution, whatever it is, will not fully satisfy all parties. It will not satisfy the parties which I mentioned earlier. I could add others. Whatever solution the minister comes up with, it will not satisfy the mayor of Dorval and the mayor at Mirabel Members of Parliament whose ridings are around Mirabel and Members of Parliament whose ridings are around Dorval, MLAs whose constituencies are around Mirabel and MLAs whose constituencies are around Dorval. His solutions will not satisfy local businesses, because whatever move the minister makes, some businesses will be affected.

I was hoping that I would have heard more alternatives from the hon. members who spoke in this debate. They gave one alternative, namely, to mothball. Is that the way to run the country? If you have alternatives that will benefit the country, give them. Give some alternatives which will help the minister make a good decision. Do not come up with just one alternative solution, such as to mothball the project. If we ran the country in that manner we would really be in a mess.

Mr. Taylor: You are.

Mr. Flis: I would like to inform the hon. member for Vaudreuil that when the original motion was transferred for debate, officials within the Department of Transport were already in the process of readying the documentation requested for tabling in the House.

In conclusion, I would like to stress upon the hon. members that most of the information compiled as a result of this study is already public knowledge. The positions of the air carriers with respect to any transfer of traffic to Mirabel have been made public in a news release by the Air Transport Association of Canada. I have a copy of it here. It was released as far back as April 22, 1981, under the heading, "ATAC statement on Pepin's Dorval Mirabel options". It says:

ATAC believes that one of the two options, i.e., the transfer of all air traffic, except short-haul domestic flights, from Dorval to Mirabel, would result in higher costs and great inconvenience to travellers; would impose serious new financial burdens on financially fragile airlines, and would require unwarranted major expenditures of public money that should not be countenanced by any prudent government or responsible M.P.

Mr. Beatty: Do you agree?

Mr. Flis: The hon. member asks if I agree. I do not think the minister has, at this point, taken one side or the other. That is why I was hoping this debate would have produced various alternatives, which I could have taken to him.

Individual air carriers have, on several occasions, stated their position with respect to any changes in the assignment of traffic at Montreal. One needs only to pick up any newspaper, such as the The Gazette dated April 28, which has the headline "Air giants face new pressure to move to Mirabel". Another article is headed, "Mirabel shift would raise air fares". Mr. Taylor, in a speech to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, said that while Mirabel has the potential to become one of the world's great airports, any further transfers of traffic from Dorval to Mirabel would be economically unsound at this time for both airlines and travellers.

I do not know what the intent of the member for Vaudreuil was in making a motion for the production of papers. Really, people's positions are quite well known. All you have to do is to read the newspapers.

Furthermore, one needs only to pick up any issue of a Montreal daily newspaper to read about some particular group being either in favour of or opposed to a particular scenario for allocating traffic between the two airports.

As I have stated previously in the House, the Mirabel-Dorval solution must be one that recognizes the long-term socio-economic development of the Montreal area. There can be no doubt about the importance of proper airport facilities to the economic wellbeing of a community. Such a solution can only be found, however, after all the facts have been thoroughly assessed.

Given the rapidly changing times and the unstable world economic situation, such an assessment is not easily made, and consequently a decision on this issue will only be forthcoming at such time as the minister is confident that the best solution has been determined and that he has been able to convince his cabinet colleagues accordingly.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil for raising this topic because it gave hon. members who were interested in it the opportunity to give their views and state alternative solutions. My only disappointment was that I wish I had heard more alternatives and possible solutions which I could have taken to my minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the construction of Mirabel Airport. There was, of course, the initial decision to build this airport. I also want to comment on the positive impact of the airport and also on the less favourable effect it has had on the airport facilities at Dorval. During the 1960s, the growth of air transportation in Canada was tremendous, especially in flights to Europe and North America. Air transportation progressed annually at rates varying from 8 per cent to 15 per cent, and as a result, it was necessary to expand all our major airports. Increased air traffic at Dorval, and especially the advent of jet planes for long-haul flights, created a serious conflict between the need to expand operations and the fact that people in the surrounding areas were suffering increasing exposure to the noise connected with airport operations so that it became necessary to restrict-operating hours. Towards the end of the 1960s, the alternative was to either acquire new property and expand Dorval or select another site that would eventually replace Dorval.

It was thought at the time that the first solution would permanently add to the problems of surrounding communities, because the noise factor could only be expected to increase. It seemed more sensible to opt for the second alternative, namely to develop a new site that would minimize the environmental impact. The share of air traffic originally proposed in 1975 for Mirabel consisted of international flights other than those to the United States, while long-haul flights to western Canada would necessarily be directed to Mirabel.

Now to the present situation. Following consultations with Canadian carriers, only international flights have been transferred, because the airlines maintain it is impractical to fragment domestic traffic. Here I would like to mention the positive impact of Mirabel. It was supposed to eliminate congestion at Dorval in the air terminal, on the runways and the roads to and from the airport. There would also be a substantial reduction in noise near Dorval, and more than 2,500 jobs would be created in the area north of Montreal. The road network would be considerably improved as a result of the construction of the longest section of Highway 13, installation of street lighting along Highway 15 and improvement of regional and local roads. There would be no restriction on air operations at Mirabel.

Hon. members will agree that there was a great deal to be said in favour of opening a new airport at Mirabel. Obviously, there is also a negative side which concerns the airport facilities in Montreal and the decline in the level of service provided to passengers in transit in Montreal, who often have to travel between Dorval and Mirabel. This may be resulting in a loss of traffic. There is also the fact that more time and increased costs are involved for passengers who have to use Mirabel.

Obviously, the problems encountered by air carriers who had to use both airports led to other decisions, and most of the negative effects would be relatively short-lived, since the original traffic transfer plan provided that in 1975 Mirabel would be taking over the majority of Montreal's flights, except for short-haul flights. However, slow growth of air traffic owing to various economic and social problems, the financial situation of the airlines and the opposition of some groups in the Montreal Urban Community have all in some respect contributed to the postponing of a decision in this respect. The issue has been studied thoroughly for several years. There is, however, a risk of promoting solutions that would merely reinforce the negative aspects of the traffic split.

Several scenarios for traffic sharing have been considered, but there are only one or two that would meet the main objective which is to give Montreal efficient airport facilities while helping to develop transportation, supporting the economic viability of carriers and providing a comprehensive and efficient service to the travelling public. One of the most controversial aspects of increased utilization of Mirabel is surface transportation, in terms of access time, additional costs and road congestion. A number of experts have examined these factors, especially road congestion, and since some conclusions have been received, I shall mention the main ones. It is true that for many travellers it takes longer and is more expensive to go to Mirabel than to Dorval. However, the travelling time to Mirabel compares favourably with the situation in other major air traffic centres such as New York, Paris, Rome or London, to name a few. Actually, the express bus service provided by the MUCTC from downtown Montreal is fast—about fifty minutes—and very comfortable.

Other options were considered, including railway transportation that could provide a better service, and the conclusions of these studies were that a high-speed train that would make the trip from Mirabel to Montreal in thirty-five minutes would require the construction of a new tunnel under Montreal at a cost of several hundred million dollars. This option was therefore rejected. The second option, a semi-high-speed train, which would take forty to forty-five minutes and use the present tunnel under Mount Royal and existing railway tracks, would still cost more than $100 million in 1980 dollars. The possibility of a semi-high-speed train is still being considered, but it is a fact that the infrastructure costs are relatively high compared to that of a bus line. Also, the service is not that much quicker that the present bus service. According to the experience at a number of other airports, there is no marked preference for trains and the majority of travellers still prefer to go by car.

Actually, the road system from downtown to Mirabel and the restricted-access roads from Mirabel to downtown Montreal are fairly good. Once Highway 13 is completed, this will cut down even more on travelling time. Of course, completion of this highway was promised by other levels of government, and it seems that it has not been completed as planned. Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I wish to say that construction of a railway line would require a high passenger volume to be profitable, and would not be justified unless the volume of passenger traffic increases very substantially over the one existing at the present time. The train as such will not generate additional traffic. The surface aspect is only one of the factors that adds to the complexity of the analysis. Clearly, any decision will have to make a thorough assessment of all these factors. I shall conclude with the comment that there are not many alternatives, and I feel that in the House, most of the options—if there were any and I do not see very many, Mr. Speaker—were often presented in a very partisan spirit and often failed to consider the interests of the majority of our fellow citizens.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what my colleagues had to say about Mirabel Airport, but none of the hon. members who spoke to this subject this afternoon were here when the decision was announced in 1969. I was one of the members in this House at that time, and I must say that the decision, and it was a long-term decision, was made after lengthy consideration and many in-depth studies. When I hear my colleagues opposite saying that the airport should be mothballed or should be split in two to send some of it to Ottawa and Washington, I must say there is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. Usually, people who take the shorter view of things are on the opposite side of the House, and in fact that is why they are in the opposition. People with a more realistic view of the future are usually on the government side. And when a government becomes a shortsighted government, it does not take long for it to land in the opposition. In the case of Mirabel, Mr. Speaker, I feel this was one of the best decisions ever made by a federal government since Confederation. It is certainly the best decision ever made for Quebec.

As a parliamentarian, I have had an opportunity to visit a number of countries and I have travelled to several airports throughout the world. I must say that Mirabel compares very favourably with any of these. In Toronto, for instance, if you have to change planes, very often you have to take a minibus and transfer to another air terminal, which may take half an hour or an hour. This is never mentioned. If you go to Paris, you have to change airports. If you go to New York, you have to change airports and it takes hours, and hundreds of millions of dollars just go down the drain. If you go to Mirabel, you do not have to change air terminals. You do not even have to walk to the plane. So there are very real advantages, and all foreigners arriving at Mirabel are amazed at the size of the airport and the surrounding area. It has been much criticized, but I still think this was one of the wisest decisions ever made. I know that some parliamentarians are talking about giving back part of the land. I think that would be a serious mistake.

Once more, I believe these people take the shorter view and have an entirely mistaken concept of the future. I think that people who talk about mothballing Mirabel are talking through their hats. I heard one of my colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party say that the best farmland in Quebec was used for this airport, although it is widely known that most of the land, although excellent farmland, was not under cultivation, and that today, farm production, despite the construction of Mirabel Airport, has increased over what it was in 1969. These things are forgotten because there is no knowledge of the real situation. Mr. Speaker, I could go on for two hours about Mirabel. When they talk about it, all they can say is that you need a taxi and it costs $40 to get there. As my colleague said, Highway 13 has not been completed. Three years ago, the federal government signed an agreement with Quebec for the completion of this highway.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) had the floor.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, at least—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let me point out, with all due respect to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), that the customs and practices in the House are well known to him.

Mr. Towers: I guess the Vancouver Canucks are going to be playing hockey tonight. I surmise that is the reason for the waving of one of their sweaters.

Prior to private members' hour, I was expressing the thought that it was unbelievable that a cabinet or a government could be as incompetent as the one which brought in the National Energy Program which is causing destruction of the economic wellbeing of this country. There is no doubt about it. We have never had a program which has done as much damage to this country as has the National Energy Program. The people who perpetrated it will not listen.

I should state tonight that it is a pleasure not only to speak on behalf of my constituents, but to do so also on behalf of those of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who is looking after the people's interest in another part of the country. Our problems are pretty much the same. I am sure he would support anything that I say in trying to bring the attention of this government to the serious problems it is creating for Canadians.

The heavy hand of government is taking more and more of the gross national product in taxes. The figure is creeping up each year. Unfortunately, the government does not seem prepared to cut the pattern to fit the cloth. On a national accounts basis, expenditures for all levels of government which far exceed receipts of most years, are inching up to almost one half the GNP. In 1977, government expenditures accounted for 41.4 per cent of the GNP. In 1978, the last complete year for which the Canadian Tax Foundation has provided information, government spending accounted for 42 per cent of GNP. This year the percentage will be that much worse because the GNP is growing much more slowly and government expenditures are escalating more rapidly.

As the Canadian Tax Foundation notes, such payments, which include pensions, family allowances, unemployment insurance railway subsidies and interest on the public debt, redistribute income within the economy but do not increase the government's claim on the goods and services produced. That is a gentle way of saying that government is passing out dollars it has not produced, and the net result is that no new wealth or productivity is created.

Government taxes take about 38 per cent of the gross national product, that is government at all levels, and the federal government takes the lion's share, a share almost equal to the combined share taken by the two other levels of government.

Federal tax collections amounted to only 7 per cent of GNP in 1926. They peaked at 21 per cent in 1946 and then rose to 30.5 per cent in 1978. Together with revenue from other sources, capital cost allowances, investment income and other minor items totalling 7.7 per cent, a hefty 38.1 per cent was taken out of the gross national product.

My own province of Alberta shells out $5.028 billion in all forms of taxes to Ottawa and gets back $3.490 billion. That means we are a net loser to the tune of $1.538 billion. I guess that is the price of being a have province. However, this year there will not be the income tax coming from that province because of so many workers departing from the oil industry in Alberta. They have gone to the United States where they will be paying income tax.

I wonder how long we will continue to be a have province with this federal government's insatiable appetite for new and higher taxes. The federal government's disastrous national energy policy has wrecked the oil and gas industry in Alberta. The boom is over in Alberta thanks to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) together with their tax policy. They are the great destroyers. Their clumsy attempts to Canadianize the oil and gas industry have resulted in Americanizing it. That is where all our jobs, risk capital, drilling rigs, expertise and technology have fled. The New York Times of May 9, 1982 reported on the price of the national energy policy as follows:

> Oil exploration, drilling and production plunged, prices soared and consumption fell.

New oil wells completed in 1981 were down from 8,865 the previous year to 7,165—a loss of 1,800 wells. Oil rigs in use dropped from 446 to 303—a loss of 143 rigs. Petroleum output fell from 1.76 million barrels a day to 1.61 million barrels a day. Gas prices at the pumps soared from an average of 0.61 cents a gallon in 1980 to an average of $1.21 a gallon in 1981, and up to $1.75 in 1982. Do hon. members opposite think this makes sense, when 400,000 barrels a day from Alberta is locked in?

The New York Times says that the fact is that Canada's energy policy will cut off the competitive edge in new technology just when it is most needed. What has happened since the national energy policy in Canada and Reagan decontrol in the United States? For the first time in a decade production of crude oil within the continental United States rose. Drilling of new wells increased 40 per cent and the number of operating rigs hit a record high. Matching this increase, continued decreases in per capita consumption caused crude imports to decline by as much as half a million barrels a day.

The New York Times went on to say that in Canada, on the other hand, 1981 production of crude oil and natural gas fell 10 per cent and 4 per cent respectively. Exploratory activities declined by 20 per cent in western Canada as companies moved to the north to obtain production incentive payments or left the country entirely.

The article in The New York Times said that while $4 billion to $5 billion was spent on drilling, $7 billion left Canada as Canadian companies bought out foreign interests. The outlook is for another 25 per cent reduction in well completions this year. Thus, more than half the rigs in the country during 1980 will have left by the end of 1982, principally for the United States.

So much for the Canadianization of our industry. And The New York Times concluded:

> If the northern projects fail, as the $13 billion Alsands heavy-oil project did, then Canada will be importing half of its crude oil by the end of the decade. Since the United States should only be importing 10 per cent of its crude by that time, the Canadians will likely come to us for help in the next embargo. Let us not be of assistance, given that they've wrecked their markets and expelled efficient United States companies. Let them freeze in the dark.

That is a sad commentary the United States has made about the activities of this government. There is no remorse among members opposite, and there does not seem to be any understanding.

So much for our goal of energy self-sufficiency by the end of this decade. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier were alive, do you think he might say that the twenty-first century will belong to Canada, and the twenty-second? Canadian individuals and industries are being buried by taxation, they are being frustrated by new and revised levies. The Fraser Institute on the west coast said, in a recent report:

> In 1961, for example, the average family had an income of $5,000 and faced a total tax bill of $1,675.00; by 1980, the average family was earning $22,500 but of that $10,306 went to the tax collectors at the federal and provincial municipal levels in the form of hidden and direct taxes. The Institute's tax index shows that the tax bill of the average family has increased by 515 per cent since 1961.

In fact, it has increased even more in recent years because of the increasing extent to which governments, especially the federal government, have engaged in deficit financing. The bonds that governments issue to cover these deficits are, in effect, deferred taxation, since tax revenue must ultimately be raised to pay the interest and redeem the bonds. Including this deferred taxation, the Fraser Institute estimates that taxes between 1961 and 1980 have gone up 619 per cent. I wonder if in this reconciliation of net debt, this so-called deferred taxation, the Fraser Institute has taken into consideration the billions and billions of dollars the government owes for Crown corporation debts and the pension and superannuation funds.

And then, of course, we heard the member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) saying today that he did not mind the government buying oil companies, companies that do not produce another barrel of oil, and the money leaving Canada in large amounts.

The last public accounts of 1980-81 show that the government has to account for $18.9 billion in Canada pension at 10.59 per cent. Does the government have that money? The accounts also show $22.3 billion in public service pension contributions at 8.2 per cent, $8.7 billion in the Canadian Armed Forces superannuation fund, which it does not have, and almost $1 billion in the RCMP retirement fund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that this is of concern to you, because we have sat on many committees and discussed this. I was absolutely flabbergasted, when I was elected as a Member of Parliament, to find that these funds did not exist. It actually is a paper debt that the federal government owes to all these people. No other business in the world would be allowed to do this. If that money existed in those funds, it would be different, but it does not. It is a debt the government owes to the Canadian people.

Those are liabilities of the government, which simply show up in the public accounts as specified purpose accounts. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this adds up to almost $51 billion, just in those three or four accounts alone. Then, of course, we have people on the other side—elected representatives of the people, saying it is okay to go on buying oil companies.

Taxes today account for a more significant chunk of the consumer budget than shelter and food combined. The average family with a $22,500 income paid $10,305 in all taxes and had average shelter costs of $4,239 and average food costs of $4,631, for a total of $8,870.

The Fraser Institute said: "In other words, taxes other than incomes taxes accounted for nearly 70 per cent of the total tax bill of the average Canadian family." And many of these taxes were hidden taxes. Commenting on the Fraser Institute report, the St. John's Evening Telegram editorialized:

Most Canadians, unfortunately, won't see a copy of this Fraser Institute document, and they will scarcely get such information from their taxman or their political representatives. But, until they "wise up" to the fact that governments cannot spend the people's money better than the people themselves, we will continue on the long slide to total dependency on the state and its expensive bureaucracy.

The Calgary Herald said in an editorial:

Nevertheless, there is a point at which any further increase in the proportion of total income taken through taxes is held to be intolerable. That point may vary from time to time according to the perceived worthiness of governmental programs and performance, but it is out there somewhere and governments dare not ignore it.

If they do so, they do so at their own peril.

The message of the Fraser Institute's report is that the point of intolerance is substantially closer today than it was in 1961 and that further appreciable increases in taxation, relative to real wealth, may be at the risk of economic well-being and political stability.

The escalation in energy prices has had a drastic effect on the food chain. I must impress upon this House, Mr. Speaker, that it is not necessarily the escalation in the price of energy that is creating the problems, but, rather, it is the taxation of the energy. Farmers must pay higher prices for their energy and for their products which have a high energy concentration, such as, for example, fertilizer. These costs must be passed on, and eventually they come to roost at the checkout counters in the supermarkets.

I have here a document from one of my constituents which shows that the tax on natural gas alone is creating real hardships for many people. One fairly large hog operation in my constituency had a tax bill of $725.95 for the month of March alone. That was just excise tax on natural gas alone. That is more than the total cost at the original installation, so we can see the devastating effect of this excise tax on natural gas. This has to be added to the cost of the operation, and that cost is reflected right through to the grocery counter. The consumer will have to pay. We should not be taxing fuel for home heating or fuel used in production because that is where Canada is falling down.

I also have a letter from Mr. Gerald Kemp, who is a director of the Federated Co-operatives Limited. He is also the vice-president in the Calgary region. This is what he wrote to me:

The following is an excerpt from a directive sent through Federated Co-operatives Limited—

"There is concern among agricultural producers over the effect that scheduled increases in energy costs, as negotiated in the Canada-Alberta energy agreement, will have on farm production costs. While we are sympathetic to the need for higher energy costs, we share the concern of producers. Based on the projected increases to the cost of crude oil and natural gas, we have calculated the effect these will have on a farm with 1,000 acres under cultivation. The cost of motor fuel, heating fuel, and fertilizer for such an operation was about $11,820 in 1980, and increased to $16,573 in 1981. Our calculations indicate that by 1986, costs will increase to about $42,536, an increase of 280 per cent over the 1980 level. The predictable result is that as well as eroding farm income, the increased costs will be reflected in the food bill for all families".

He included working papers. Motor fuel for that farm with 1,000 acres under cultivation in 1980 cost $4,540; heating fuel cost $810; fertilizer cost $6,470, for a total of $11,820. Then in 1981 the motor fuel cost $6,860; heating fuel cost $1,223; and fertilizer cost $8,670. The total was up to $16,753. In 1986 we will find that from $16,753 the cost will go up to $42,536.

How in the world are these people going to survive and keep producing if the government continues to impose taxes like these on the industry? It just cannot be done. There is absolutely no way those people can survive. The government must realize that one third of the cost of natural gas is federal tax. In addition to that, the federal government will not wait for the tax to be collected by the co-operatives. No, it has to have it within 30 days. There is absolutely no way co-operatives can collect the tax and pay it to the federal treasury in 30 days. They need 90 days. But no, the government will not listen. Not only does the federal government take approximately one third of the cost of natural gas in tax, but there is also a top loading because the tax must be financed for 60 days. A co-operative has to have about $100,000 at any one given period, and that is borrowed from the bank. These co-operatives have to pay ordinary interest, so hon. members can imagine the extra cost involved. It is absolutely senseless that we have allowed ourselves to get into that kind of situation.

The escalation in energy prices has had drastic effects on the food chain, and it will have a much worse effect in the future.

The cost of air travel is becoming prohibitive. Because of the massive VIA Rail cuts, that is the only option left to some communities. Last May the government introduced the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge to force air carriers to pay world prices for fuel used in international flights. The initial levy was about 11 cents a litre. The government used this dodge because it claimed that foreign carriers were taking advantage of cheap Canadian gas prices to tanker fuel from this country. The airlines, through the Air Transport Association of Canada, fought this measure, claiming it was simply an illegal export tax on fuel. They said it was discriminatory because it applied only to aviation jet and marine fuel. They said it contravened bilateral air agreements and that it was never made into law. Air Canada, Nordair and a couple of other airlines paid, but other Canadian carriers withheld their payments pending the outcome of protests. Foreign carriers all paid the illegal levy. Canada caved in when the United States got tough and threatened to take the levy to international arbitration. The recovery charge ended on January 31. The foreign carriers, who paid a total of $46.5 million, can apply for a rebate. The $50 million paid or owed by Canadian carriers will not be rebated, and the Canadian consumer does not get a rebate either.

Foreign carriers will get a break. British Airways will get back $4.5 million. Canadian Pacific owes $11.5 million. The new scheme to get around the recovery charge boggles the mind, but it amounts to the same thing. Canadian carriers have to keep separate accounts for fuel used on domestic and international flights. The Air Transport Association of Canada believes that this sneaky scheme is also illegal, and it is deciding whether to challenge it in court. It is a monumental rip-off of the domestic airlines and is resulting in higher costs in fares for travellers. Canada must surely be the only country in the world where domestic carriers are singled out for special punishment in the form of irregular and doubtful energy levies.

In the end who pays? It is the Canadian consumer who pays, and no one else. It is terribly difficult to understand why the elected officials of the people on the side of the House opposite me would stand idly by and let three people, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister get away with it.

The late John Diefenbaker had a phrase for this. He used to call the rare affliction most Liberals have the "Otto Lang syndrome." Mr Diefenbaker used to say in the House that if Otto Lang was walking across a cow pasture with four cow pies in it, he would walk in all four. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appear to have terminal cases of the disease, and the Prime Minister should put them out of their misery. I challenge hon. members across the aisle to tell me one positive benefit they have brought to Canada and Canadians in the two years plus since they were elected to office. They have brought Canada and Canadians nothing but misery. The Prime Minister shrugs and says that our economic climate is but a spin-off of worldwide recession. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier this week in the House, he has left the Governor of the Bank of Canada hanging out to dry, trying to protect the Canadian dollar with high interest rates. He forgets that the gross national product and the fiscal responsibility of the government adds more to the protection of the Canadian dollar than interest rates ever could.

• (2030)

The statements of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance are just baloney. We are in poor shape because the economy is being mismanaged. Every major economic indicator is in disarray. The Liberals achieved office through stealth and guile. They lied to the Canadian people when they said that they would keep the increase in the price of gasoline below 18 cents per gallon and probably at around 14 cents, to quote the Prime Minister. There have been about 15 gas and oil price increases since the Liberals were returned to office, but some of these were due to the extra taxes that were levied. How can they justify this when they were returned to office on a promise of keeping prices down?

In 1981 a typical Canadian family driving one car and heating their home with oil paid about $550 more per year than in late 1980. Of this, $409 was paid indirectly to the federal government.

Since the Liberals assumed office in 1980 the cost of heating a home has just about doubled. Where the average annual cost was about $560 in 1979, the cost in the winter of 1981-82 was just about double that. I have never had so many complaints from people about the cost of heating their homes. Senior citizens have to pay $100 to $125 more to heat their homes. They used to be able to heat them for $25 or $30.

The price of natural gas for home heating was driven up by excessive federal taxation. One third of that cost is federal tax and goes directly into federal revenues. Two years ago there was no excise tax on natural gas for home heating. Now the consumer pays about 32 per cent of the total cost in the form of excise taxes to the federal government.

Not content with avoiding cow flaps, this accident prone government is spending its spare time creating new cow flaps to walk in. We wasted a year and a half on the Constitution, a pet project of the Prime Minister. The debate was counter-productive and divisive and did nothing to draw this nation closer together or to increase productivity and real growth. We ended up with a flawed document, which will be a judicial nightmare and a bonanza only for lawyers.

We could have used all that time to ensure that proper procedures were developed for the tarsands. Cancellation of the megaprojects is a body blow to the Canadian economy, and in particular to the province of Alberta. At a time when we need productivity and jobs, we are being forced deeper and deeper into the morass of recession and despair. I have never seen the morale of the Canadian people as low as it is today.

Canadians have been browbeaten and put down for too long. They need hope, they need optimism and they need confidence in their elected officers and their elected leaders. They need a government which, first of all, understands what makes our marketplace economy tick.

The government says it wants to nationalize the Canadian energy industry. I say that for the word "nationalize" it should substitute the word "socialize" because that is what it is trying to do. Its clumsy attempts to Canadianize the industry have resulted in an Americanization of the industry. That is where all our drilling rigs are—in the United States. That is where about $17 billion in risk capital, equipment and payroll has fled. Mr. Bouey is left trying to protect the outflow of the Canadian dollar with high interest rates, when it is being shovelled out the back door faster than it is coming in the front.

The little independent businessman, the service and supply small businessman, is feeling the squeeze most in Alberta. Companies have gone under. Operations have been transferred to the United States. Jobs have been lost. Most people out there thought that the future looked bright for them. They invested their life earnings, and much of that has disappeared.

The ripple effect has spread into the manufacturing plants in Quebec and Ontario. There is no way of telling just what the loss of activity in the oil patch means to the steel mills and auto plants in central Canada. I dare say that the impact has been devastating. Companies in Alberta are not buying the cars or trucks that they would ordinarily buy, and this is reflected in the eastern market.

I am normally an optimistic person, Mr. Speaker, but I fear for my country. I fear because there are men across the aisle who do not know what they are doing, nor do they seem to care. I fear for my country because the clumsy, ham-handed, bumbling of the government is fueling the fires of separation and separatist talk and action in the provinces.

I fear for my Canada because there are more than a million Canadians without jobs and unable to find work. I fear for my Canada because for many the dream of owning their homes has vanished in the smoke of high interest rates and double digit inflation. I fear for my Canada because the government is doing nothing to stimulate the economy. It has done nothing for productivity, for industrial strategy, for research and development. We had the promise of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) that if interest rates increased he would resign, but he is still with us, Mr. Speaker.

We are still hewers of wood and drawers of water, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Larkin Kerwin, President of the National Research Council, says that the Japanese do so much with so little and we do so little with so much! It is tragic, when the potential is there for greatness and for prosperity.

Laurier said that the twentieth century would belong to Canada. May we expect a statement from the right hon. gentleman amending Laurier's prediction? Will we perhaps hear him say that the twenty-first century will belong to Canada, or maybe the twenty-second century?

We have been content for too long to let the external forces of world patterns and conditions pull and tug us along. We have been passive instruments, not active movers, shakers and doers.

It is the responsibility of the government to establish the climate in which all this can be brought about, Mr. Speaker, and we hold it responsible. If it cannot achieve this then it should resign and let someone do the job who can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to hear how members of the opposition described the national energy policy, which was agreed to by the western provinces through negotiation and compromise on all sides. A lot of Canadians may fail to realize that under the terms of the British North America Act and the new Constitution it is recognized that resources within a province come under provincial jurisdiction. When a product crosses a provincial or international boundary, however, it comes within the jurisdiction of the federal government. It is in these areas that an agreement had to be worked out between the producing provinces and the federal government.

I want to make it plain, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government does not set retail prices. It establishes the price paid by refiners for crude, however; that is, the blended price. As of January 1, 1982, this stands at 70.6 per cent of world price. After a refinery purchases the crude at the blended price, several costs are added to the retail price, such as the cost of refining and of transportation to market. Profit margins for refiners and retailers are often influenced by local competition. And retail sales taxes, a constant 9 per cent for federal taxes, but from zero to 40 per cent for provincial taxes in the case of gasoline. There is no provincial tax on gasoline in Alberta, but in the province of Quebec it amounts to 40 per cent. The breakdown of federal government taxes is 0.72 cents per litre of gasoline for the Canadian ownership charge, with which we have purchased Petrofina, which will be paid for this coming fall. The sales tax is 2.40 cents a litre. The excise tax is 1.5 cents. The upstream tax, including federal corporation tax, is 2.79 cents a litre. The total federal tax per litre of gasoline is 7.41 cents.

• (2040)

Mr. Friesen: Would the hon. member entertain a very short question?

Mr. Ferguson: At the end of my statement, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to point out that the petroleum compensation charge returns to the industry. Perhaps Ontario has gone up to 40 per cent in their new budget, but before six o'clock tonight the province of Ontario took 16 per cent, the Government of Canada took 18.8 per cent, and the producing provinces had 12.3 per cent. However, the industry had 42.9 per cent of a litre of gasoline. Add the petroleum compensation charge to the 42.9 per cent, and that would appear to be a very logical division of income from that litre of gasoline that retailed at 39.1 cents per litre.

Getting back to the agreement arrived at last September, it was agreed that, subject to the fiscal undertakings contained in the agreement, it was the intention of the government to set the rate of the petroleum and gas revenue tax at 16 per cent effective January 1, 1982. There would be provision for a 25 per cent resource allowance, and then an incremental oil revenue tax at a rate of 50 per cent on incremental old oil revenues after deduction of related Crown royalties. I wish to point out that in many of the provinces those royalties ran as high as 21 per cent. In the province I come from, where we own our mineral rights, those royalties are 12.5 per cent. For one of the Indian bands which appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs a year ago in March, the royalties averaged 60 per cent. So when we talk about the need for royalties to be reduced, particularly on low producing wells, the need is there. The Government of Canada recognized this because it made an adjustment in its incremental oil revenue tax to compensate for this. This assistance came into effect January 1, 1982, and is known as the low productivity well allowance. It applies to wells which produce less than 3.18 cubic metres of oil per day, or less than 20 barrels. That arose from the comprehensive energy agreements reached with the producing provinces in the fall of 1981. I believe, if my figures are correct, that this will apply to approximately 40 per cent of wells in Alberta and may account for about 10 per cent of the oil produced. It will apply to most of the wells in my own riding, which are very small but very important.

I would suggest that in the administration of this tax there is a need for an agreement with the producers on wells operating in one central collection system, wells which are still in existence today. There should be a special allowance made so that one common gathering tank can be used to collect the oil, and the tax should then be applied on the total, and averaged out over the total number of wells. Some of these wells are more than 100 years old and maybe they are only producing one, two or three barrels a day. It is a very expensive proposition to have a collection tank for each one of these wells, but working out a single system of collection and bookkeeping to administer the tax will be a big help. I have already made submissions to the minister in this regard and he has looked upon them very favourably. I suggest these taxes are not out of line when you consider what is being paid in other countries by the oil industry.

Looking back in history, the North American petroleum industry as it is known today did not begin in Texas or in Pennsylvania; it began in Eastern Canada, my own area. The technology spread into other areas of Canada and around the world. But they had their problems, too. It was back in the late 1800s and the early 1900s that drillers from my constituency went into 70 different countries in the world with their technology to produce the oil. The irony of it was that within a very few years the price of oil tumbled drastically and a lot of those old wells in my area were shut down because of the flood of cheap oil hitting the market, particularly from the United States. The potential is still there because even the fields discovered back in the 1850s still contain approximately 60 per cent of the oil originally discovered. So it is a very positive move on the part of the minister to ensure that the low producing wells had a special tax incentive to allow them to extract the rest of that oil. Perhaps as this is applied to Alberta a lot of the service rigs will go back to work bringing these wells back into productivity.

In listening to the previous speakers, I could not help thinking that theirs is a typical response. I should remind the hon. member across the floor that it was not the federal government which made the production cuts last year which resulted in the increase of oil imports. I would like to make a couple of comparisons. For example, the 1981 annual report of Amoco Canada says:

> The federal government's National Energy Program, announced in late 1980, was primarily responsible for a near one-third reduction in both the company's 1981 net income and cash flow. Subsequently, the long-awaited pricing and revenue sharing agreements concluded between Ottawa and Alberta in September, 1981, did very little to improve the company's financial performance. Moreover, the Alberta crude oil production cutbacks, imposed during the ... negotiations, seriously reduced our production during the year. The after-effects of these cutbacks were continuing to impact on our production beyond year end.

The amazing part of the entire report is that drilling and exploratory activities from 1977 until 1981 showed a success ratio which increased from 32.6 per cent to 44 per cent. That was a tremendous increase in the success ratio. Also it is amazing that while total exploratory wells drilled were down in 1981, extension and development wells in oil producing sectors nearly doubled in 1981 over 1980. They knew where that oil was, so those were the wells they developed. They developed seven wells in 1980 compared with 13.9 wells in 1981. Their net oil wells increased by 50 wells. By December 31, 1981, there were 901 oil wells, compared with 851 wells in 1980.

Turning to page 15 of the annual report of Imperial Oil, it shows that in 1980 the company had an interest in 35 wells drilled in Canada, and that in 1981 it had an interest in 44 wells, for an increase of nine wells. These were exploration wells to determine the location of oil fields. However, we know that there was a decrease in gas well development. I can understand this because of the thousands of shut-in gas wells in Alberta currently. There is no market for the gas, so they are capped. It is only logical, consequently, that they would concentrate their development in oil producing areas, especially when there is a surplus of natural gas. Perhaps the most telling statement, when we look at the annual reports and compare them, can be found in the 1981 annual report of Imperial Oil. It was the statement of the retiring chairman of the board and chief executive officer, Mr. J. A. Armstrong, in which he said:

> The industry is passing through a period of transition but Canada, almost alone among industrialized nations, possesses the opportunity for achieving self-sufficiency in all forms of energy within the foreseeable future. And it is energy development, more than any other industrial activity, that offers Canada the greatest prospects for economic growth. For a resource-rich country in a resource-hungry world, energy development represents a major opportunity and a major priority. And hydrocarbon development, for obvious reasons, heads the list.
> The federal government certainly recognizes the importance of energy development to Canada's future. Its growing role in the petroleum industry is to be expected at a time when oil supply has become a matter of national concern. Imperial, for its part, supports many of the objectives contained in the federal government's National Energy Program, in particular the achievement of self-sufficiency in oil.

He was very emphatic that Imperial Oil supports many of these programs. He continued:

> And moreover, we have never been opposed to the intent of the program in promoting greater Canadian ownership of the oil industry. It is entirely reasonable that Canadians should play a greater role in domestic energy development.
> However, it is reasonable, too, that a proper balance be struck between competing energy objectives. The urgency of energy development and the need for increased Canadian participation in that development, while both important, are very different objectives. Reconciling them represents a significant challenge for both government and industry. Canadianization will certainly reshape the oil industry and can do it in a way that benefits all Canadians.

It is very obvious that the largest of these Canadian oil companies endorses the programs of the federal government in its annual report and is prepared to proceed and expand in co-ordination with them.

Little more needs to be said in this regard as to the benefits of the program to all Canadians. It is the major thrust of the Government of Canada to ensure that Canadians are in charge of the energy which will shape the future of this great nation. It will allow the companies to work together, not only Imperial Oil but the other companies involved in the search for new resources, in a way which will benefit all of Canada and the oil industry in particular. When we look at the huge investments required in the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic, Hibernia and other offshore areas, we realize that it will take the joint efforts of a consortium to pool their resources to find new discoveries. We now have the power as a federal government to ask them to drill step-out wells which will determine the extent of the fields, so that Canadians are ensured supplies in the future.

When we look at the projections made back in the early 1970s and at the glut on the market at the present time, we realize that Canadians have a right to know and, consequently, it stands to reason that this legislation is before us in the House of Commons. It ensures that the various taxes are in place, taxes which will allow the industry to expand and to search out new areas to be developed. The present programs are different than the ones of the past.

Earlier I referred to the industry in my own area. In the town of Petrolia alone there were some 600 wells, many of which were drilled but never plugged. As they dried up, they were abandoned. That area can no longer be water-flooded or pressurized, but we must work out new schemes to recapture that old oil. Perhaps we should listen to the suggestions of one of the old pioneers who died about six weeks ago. I am referring to Mr. C. O. Fairbank, whose father once represented the Petrolia area in the House of Commons. One of his ideas was that we need to put down shafts in the shallow fields and run laterals out from there to let the oil seep in without pressurizing it.

The flexibility is in the legislation before the House. It takes into consideration the establishment of a level of tax which recognizes the need of the industry for cash flow. The industry must have adequate funds to do the job. Some activities, notably exploration, cannot be readily financed through debt alone. Either internal funding or new equity capital is needed.

Some members in the industry have suggested, however, that the oil and gas sectors must have the cash flow equal to all their projected capital investment. I find this difficult to accept because there are no compelling reasons why the industry should have such a favoured position, particularly with the returns on the investments, when the returns on the investments even this year are so attractive compared with the returns in other sectors of our economy. For example, I look at the fact that over a few years 2 per cent of that total GNP in the United States was going to the OPEC nations.

We in Canada must be certain that the climate here is as was reflected in the statement by the chairman of the board of Imperial Oil. That climate must be created in order for the Canadian companies to go ahead and expand and develop those resources here in Canada. I was delighted to read last week about the increase in value of the shares of Dome Petroleum in response to another find in the Beaufort Sea.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House that in spite of the gloom and doom that we hear from the other side regarding the megaprojects, it is not only Canada who has had to postpone such projects. Other countries have also had to postpone projects. For example, there is the Exxon-shale project in the United States which has been stopped. In Colorado the lignite gasification program has been shelved and the panhandle coal gasification project in Wyoming has been scrapped. Mexico has delayed a huge project there, and so has Nigeria. The United Kingdom has delayed some projects in the oil field in the North Sea. The Netherlands is continuing theirs, but their emphasis is on small fields requiring a minimum financial commitment. The British Petroleum Company is turning to less costly equipment as an alternative for its North Sea development. The investment costs per barrel of oil produced is thereby being lowered.

The uncertainty of the world oil market and the pricing uncertainties have led the French to shelve plans to buy 40,000 barrels per day of heavy crude from Venezuela, as well as shelving plans to build a plant in France at a cost of over $1 billion. I suggest that even though the Alsands project has been put on hold. New technology is developing so rapidly that these plants may have been obsolete by the time they were built. Petro-Canada is very heavily involved in the experimentation and development of this new technology. I can only hope that this will continue over the next few years as the Beaufort Sea begins production along with the Hibernia oil. We know that there will be security there not only for the province of Alberta but for all of Canada, and by working together we can create the harmony which has existed since the national energy agreement was signed last September. The achievement of that agreement was a major step, as far as I am concerned, in the development of one of our primary resources that Mr. Armstrong of Imperial Oil described so well in his annual report.

Perhaps I should point out that it has been implied on many occasions that the price of gasoline may be cheaper in some parts of the United States. That may be true if one considers the level of provincial sales tax applied in Canada in various provinces, along with the federal tax. However, when these provincial sales taxes are removed or lowered to a more reasonable level there is very little difference. I would suggest that a litre of heating fuel is cheaper in Canada at the present time than it is in the United States.

I believe that we will have a much more secure future in Canada, with the energy reserves which exist in this country, if we develop them in an orderly manner.

Much has been said about equipment moving south across the border to the United States beginning in September of 1980. I want to make it clear that this exodus did not just start with the introduction of the National Energy Program on October 28, 1980. It started in September of that year. As well, many of those rigs were shallow rigs that could not achieve the depths required for the deeper fields in western Canada. There were also rigs which were left unused because of the thousands of gas wells that are capped owing to the lack of export markets.

It was interesting to note that in the last few months the activity in the United States has dropped off dramatically, and the more modern rigs which are capable of reaching the deeper oil in Canada are beginning to return. It is also interesting to note that although some companies are suggesting that they are not renewing leases, they are in fact renewing leases in areas which have the highest potential. The reason for this is the new technology which has been developed for this.

It was only a few years ago that the seismic rigs did not have the capability of producing three dimensional readouts of the formations below the surface. This technology is now available, and I believe that the success ratio, which I referred to in the annual report earlier, demonstrates their present capabilities as compared to a few years ago. Activity is taking place in areas which show potential, and the emphasis is now being concentrated on oil production rather than on production of both gas and oil. No doubt it should be very plain to those in the oil industry and those who follow it very closely that the reason for the decrease in the over-all activity is that this activity has been stepped up in the sector of oil production itself.

I believe that the taxes proposed in the bill we are debating tonight are essential for the continuation and expansion of Canada's oil industry. It is important that the terms of the proposal are set out in the bill so that the oil companies know what lies ahead and that the provinces and the country as a whole know what is ahead of us. These taxes will benefit those Canadians in the provinces that produce oil as well as all Canadians. Taxes have to be expected by the industry involved in this sector.

I should like to say in summary that when the industry adjusts—as Imperial Oil has shown it is doing in its annual report—and when we realize the potential which is laid out in the annual report of Petro-Canada and the reserves we have, I believe that our objectives can be achieved. This bill is a major step in the right direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member indicated earlier that he would entertain a question if there was time left at the end of his speech, so I presume that he is ready to hear me now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) has an incredible talent for taking the most universal and complex of subjects and reducing it to the most unutterable simplicity. He has again invoked the concept of sharing, just as long as the resource is energy and it is western Canada and central Canada that benefit. However, in his earlier remarks, he indicated that the Canadian ownership charge was being collected in order to pay for Petrofina, which would be paid off this fall.

I would therefore like to ask the hon. member, is he promising that, after Petrofina is paid off, that tax will no longer be collected, or will it be a temporary tax like the one which was invoked in World War I, called the income tax?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my memory does not go back as far as World War I, as does the memory of the hon. member across the way.

Mr. Friesen: Mine does.

Mr. Ferguson: I heard about that, but I suggest to the hon. member that when the charge of 0.72 cents per litre has been collected to the extent that it has paid for the acquisition of Petrofina, there may have to be an adjustment. If, for example—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ferguson: —another company has been taken over. I would like to suggest to the hon. member across the way that we understand that the Ontario government may need assistance to help pay for Suncor. It is looking for another buyer to buy out 25 per cent of it. I do not think we should get involved in that one because of the fact that it has paid approximately twice too much, according to a story I read in The Globe and Mail. I do not think we can get involved in that with our Canadianization tax.

Mr. Mayer: Six times too much!

Mr. Ferguson: I am certain that if the Canadianization tax is extended to another level for another purchase, we will make a better selection than did the government of Ontario when it elected to buy Suncor for twice as much as its real worth.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is always a riot to hear the speeches of the gentlemen on the other side because they go on to give the impression to the Canadian people that everything is just hunky-dory and rosy in this country, that the government is not at fault in the slightest degree for the situation in which Canadians find themselves, that everyone is to blame except the gentlemen and ladies on the other side. Well, that does not wash with the Canadian people any more. When the hon. member who last spoke stated that the Canadian ownership charge may come off and then went on to fudge and widget around, he left no doubt that the government will not reduce the taxes of the Canadian people when that is paid off; rather, it will buy out another company because, you see, once it starts on this road to socialization, taking everything over, it cannot have private companies operating because their level of efficiency is so much more superior to that of the Crown corporations that it makes the Crown corporations look bad. Therefore, the government must take it all over. That has been the history in every country in the entire world where there has been socialization.

Mr. Smith: They are over there in the corner, Blaine, that is why.

Mr. Taylor: They are over there, across the way.

Mr. Thacker: Bill C-112 causes me great sadness because there is no doubt that Canada is in deep trouble. I will not state the statistics on unemployment, the position of our dollar or our inflation rate. There is no need to do so because Your Honour knows of them, and so do the Canadian people. But what most Canadians do not realize is that their trust in government is a misplaced trust because it is a trust which has been broken and breached by the Liberal government over some 14 years.

However, let us look at where we are. We sit here, a small number of people, 24 million, on the resources of half-continent. Other countries have huge populations and small resources. They are in trouble, and so they should be in trouble, because the vast bulk of those countries have tried this route to socialism, whether one looks at Sweden, the United Kingdom or at the ultimate in socialization, which is Russia and the East bloc. Most of those countries were wealthy countries at one time. Indeed, if one looks at Roumania, Poland or Russia, one finds that they were exporters of food until they became socialized, which simply means that the decisions are made by a small group of people.

That is what the National Energy Program does. It takes that huge oil industry which we had, where millions of individual decisions were made throughout the course of the year, where there was instant adaptability to changing climate, circumstances and finance in the world and all the other items of change, and it brings that decision-making to Ottawa. We now have a small cabinet which is really inundated with so many other concerns that it honestly cannot make those decisions, and we also have a bureaucracy which is totally isolated from the reality of the world. Those people in the cabinet are making decisions. Of course, it has not worked in any other country in the world, and it will not work here.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer any question at the end of my comments.

Mr. Speaker, why, in 1982, do we find ourselves in this situation, and particularly why, in 1982, do we find that during the last fourteen year period—although it is true that inflation has affected the entire western world—Canada, with its small population and its vast resources, has dropped from third to thirteenth place? Now, hon. members opposite never talk about that, but the reality is that they have taken this great country, this small number of educated, ambitious, pioneering people, and they have reduced us from third to thirteenth place. Why is it that Japan, comprising 114 million people, sitting on a rock in the middle of an ocean, has done so well?

Mr. Rose: Feudalism.

Mr. Thacker: It is not because of feudalism. It is feudalism which has destroyed this country because, as the hon. member knows, we are taking over land, we are expropriating the oil industry, and we are reducing people to slaves.

An hon. Member: Tell us about PWA.

Mr. Thacker: The reason for this has been the result of the last 14 years. Of course, it is because we have been engaged in a process of socialization. Our friends to the left in the NDP have effectively been the government of this nation.

Mr. Smith: Nonsense!

Mr. Thacker: Well, they have been. Why has the Canadian ownership charge gone up so much? Why do we have 400 Crown corporations? Let me tell Your Honour why Crown corporations do not work. Not only are they inherently inefficient because they do not have to meet and face their shareholders, but they also have a permanent pipeline into the public purse. We know that if 400 corporations were set up in private industry in all of the areas in which the Crown corporations are now operating, at least a third, and probably half of them, would be gone because of the natural cleansing process of the marketplace. In the marketplace, the inefficient are weeded out, those with bad management are weeded out, and if some other company comes up with a new process, it takes over if it can produce the product more cheaply.

Mr. Smith: Tell us about Suncor.

Mr. Thacker: But not one of these 400 Crown corporations has ever failed, because to become a Crown corporation and take from the public purse means you never have to say you are sorry. You do not have to meet the test. Therefore, what happens? The industry is permitted to continue, more money is poured in, which it never saves in the long run, and it builds up such a massive load that when it collapses tens of thousands of people lose their jobs.

The most recent example was in Nova Scotia where, in order to save jobs, the government became involved in SYSCO, turned it into a Crown corporation and kept pouring in money. I guess in SYSCO's case it amounted to something like $1 million a day or $1 million a month, but it finally came to an end. So all of a sudden, thousands of people were laid off. Under the market forces, where government is not keeping companies, there is a constant cleasing at the bottom. But those people can be absorbed because they are usually from smaller companies.

An hon. Member: That's what happened to Chrysler and Massey Harris.

Mr. Thacker: Absolutely. To the extent that the government keeps Chrysler going—

An hon. Member: Thirty thousand people out of work.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, sir, we will keep them and then drop them, all at the same time, perhaps when we have 15,000 or 20,000 going.

• (2120)

Mr. Smith: What is your position on Petro-Canada this week? Are you for it or against it?

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member opposite speaks about Petro-Canada. There is no doubt that it will succeed. It will succeed if it has to take every last tax dollar out of every last Canadian's pocket. As the last speaker said, they will not do away with that tax. They will purchase another company. They must take away all private companies because they set up a competitive position which makes Petro-Canada look sick.

We have over $2 billion in Petro-Canada, and it cannot make it on the open market. If we were not kicking in $400 million a year and $800 million for the purchase of Petrofina, PetroCan would be gone. It cannot compete. It would not be able to compete if we were in government. It does not matter which is the label of the government. It is just an inefficiency that is inappropriate, particularly in the oil and gas industry.

The Canadian people will learn a lesson in the co-operative movement. The government has offered to the co-operative movement $100 million if it will kick in some money and set up a co-operative oil and gas company. I predict with absolute certainty that the members of a co-op will suffer a terrible loss.

The oil industry is not like the airline industry to which you give routes. All it has to do is to buy some planes, put some people on them and fly back and forth. You can do away with competition, as was done with Air Canada.

An hon. Member: What about Pacific Western?

Mr. Thacker: Canadian Pacific cannot get in. They can make it work, but the oil and gas industry depends on people with creativity, people who are prepared to work 18 and 20 hours a day. You do not get that in a Crown corporation. Members opposite can laugh, but I am confident that in a few months or years Canadians will come to realize that.

I want to deal with some comments made by previous speakers. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) seemed to imply that the producing provinces totally agreed to all of the provisions in the agreement which they signed and therefore were in favour of the federal taxes. That simply is not the case. The province of Alberta had a position to protect its citizens in their capacity as owners of the resource. The federal government had a position to protect what it thought was the national interest. They negotiated and ultimately came to an agreement. Albertans were party to that agreement only to the extent of protecting Albertans as owners of the resource and were in no way condoning all the federal taxes.

They really had no choice because the federal government had unilaterally come out with a National Energy Program which said it would do this and this and this. The provinces had no choice because under the Constitution the federal government was really intruding into provincial jurisdiction. For example, these taxes were put on as a royalty, so the provinces had no choice but to defend themselves. That led to a stalemate. Months and months passed, and finally a mutual agreement was reached under which the citizens of Alberta were satisfied with the royalty portion they were keeping. That does not imply they were in favour of the federal taxes.

The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex pointed out that the blended price is now 70.6 per cent of the world price. Canadians now pay 70 per cent of the world price to the owners of the resource, but the retail price is much higher than in the United States. In the United States, they give the owners 100 per cent of the world price, and yet their retail price is less than ours. The difference, of course, is in the taxation.

Mr. Kelly: It is provincial.

Mr. Taylor: There is no tax in Alberta or Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thacker: I know my facts. If the backbenchers on the other side had been doing their job for their constituents, they would know the facts. The difference is in taxes, provincial and federal, which means that Canadians are paying more.

In the United States there is an excess profits tax. If the world price goes up and the cost of producing the resource does not, there is an excess profit which the U.S. government taxes away to the benefit of its citizens. When the world price drops and there is less profit, there is less tax. We have not chosen to do that in Canada. We have a fixed tax. Whether the price is up or down, a Canadian citizen must continue to pay that price. That is why our retail price is more than in the United States.

Let me give an example. In Ontario the price per gallon was recently $1.67. Of that, 22 cents went to the people of Alberta as owners of the resource. That was the royalty, 22 cents. The Ontario government took 25 cents by way of a tax. The people of Ontario and other provinces need to know that their provincial governments are taxing oil and gas being sold at the pumps. That 25 cents is more than the owners receive, an interesting point.

Let us look at the federal tax. Why is the federal government taxing the purchaser 53 cents on a gallon of gas which sells for $1.67? That is regressive tax. That is not part of the progressive income tax system where the rich pay more than the poor. When you put a tax on a gallon of gas of 57 cents, it hurts the poor much more than those of us with a higher income.

The federal government is not prepared to tell the people that it has increased taxes. It is trying to sneak it in. My job as an opposition member is to bring that out. I hope people will remember that, particularly those in the province of Quebec, because they will be hurt. Later in my speech I will point out that if there is a war in the Middle East tomorrow, the people in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec will be the first to be hurt.

Of that $1.67 per gallon, 63 cents goes to the industry, the searchers, producers, refiners, distributors and retailers. They receive 63 cents. The government, which does not do one stitch, not one thing, receives 57 cents, more than twice what the owners receive.

The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex referred to the United States megaprojects that are being cancelled. The reason is that so much conventional oil has been found. They can cut back their megaprojects because they float. One thing about the Americans, they have the ability to cut and bleed and get on with it. Because of our government trying to solve every problem for every citizen, it does not work in Canada.

I want to make some comments in response to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). I was astounded at his admission, which was the first I have ever known. He said this is tax by regulation, and the reason is that it gives the government more flexibility to quickly increase taxes. That is exactly what he said. It is true. It gives it the power to increase taxes by a minister signing a piece of paper. Never will those taxes come before this House for review, nor will they therefore, they hope, get out to the Canadian people. Sir, it is a gimmick to avoid facing the people with taxes. When you think about it, the whole purpose of Parliament originally, the entire and sole reason for Parliament, was to control the purse, so that the ruling governments, which in those days were the monarchs, would have to come to the people to get the money.

• (2130)

Mr. Friesen: Quite so.

Mr. Thacker: Well, we are being thrown back in time because the Liberals, for a while at least, are going to avoid it. Then he too went on to imply that the Alberta government had agreed to all the federal taxes. Of course, as I pointed out earlier, that is absolutely untrue. When the Premier of the province of Alberta signed that agreement he was not agreeing to the federal taxes. He was saying in effect that that was their jurisdiction, that "Canadian people will have to deal with the federal government for those taxes, the Alberta people will have to deal with me with respect to the royalty." And he did a good job for the people of Alberta.

The Minister of State for Finance went on to say that the Canadian tax regime is approximately equal to that of other countries, and therefore the Canadian oil companies should be happy. If that were so, Mr. Speaker, why is it that there were some 275 oil rigs leaving this country? If our tax regime is so good and so comparable, why did they leave? It costs hundreds of thousands of dollars to pack up a rig, take it across the border, then get it established, buy more leases, and enter into agreements. It cost a lot of money. Why did they go? The truth is that the tax regimes are not the same.

We have had a substantial change because prior to the National Energy Program, we used to encourage industries, through tax deductions or tax credits, whichever we felt were best, and we would bring in a tax deduction for an oil company doing some work. Any company could therefore go out, do the work and get the benefit of the tax deduction. Now the National Energy Program has changed that. All of the tax money is being collected in Ottawa and the money will then be given out, depending on whether the Liberal government and its bureaucracy decides the company is deserving. What will be the test? The test will be, "Where are you going to drill?" If you are going to drill in Alberta, you are not going to get very much. If you are going to drill up in the Beaufort on federal land, you are going to get a lot. So taxpayers from the province of Alberta, for example, will be paying tax dollars to Ottawa. If a company wants to work in Alberta, they are not going to get the same grant as would a company going to work on other land, like federal land. That is inherently unfair, because under the tax deduction system the company made the decisions based on where the oil was and where they could get at it. So that is a substantial change, and it will mean less oil production.

The point that is really interesting to me as an Albertan is that prior to the National Energy Program, even though the manufacturing industry in central Canada was having some problems and needed to have federal government help, we had one part of our country that was really going flat out. That was the oil and gas industry in the western basin, moving up into the Arctic and moving off to the offshore on the east coast. That industry was providing tens of thousands of jobs, not for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, because we do not have very many of our own people, but providing jobs for boys and girls from Ontario, Quebec and the rest of the country. We were becoming more unified as a result of that. We were mixing, and it was great.

Now that is all over. As a result of the National Energy Program, the rigs leaving and people not drilling, the Alsands and Cold Lake being cancelled, it is the Ontario young people and the young people from the rest of the country who are now having to go home without a job. The spin-off benefits of the Alsands, where there would be pipe produced in Ontario, equipment and clothes in Quebec, rail cars and pipe in Nova Scotia, are no more. It is not there, Mr. Speaker. Those people are losing their jobs. So it is ironic that, to express a very selfish Albertan point of view, for Alsands not to go on is in the best long-term interests of the people of Alberta. If it is not used by our generation, it will be there for our children, our grandchildren and our great grandchildren. Alberta was prepared to have all of that oil produced. Even with our conventional oil, it would be best if Albertans could leave that in the ground. But they are not doing so, because, in the Canadian dimension, they are producing 1.2 million barrels a day to send it down the pipeline for the rest of Canada. Even at 50 per cent of the world price, that has built up the Alberta heritage trust fund. Alberta could have decided to hold production down, because the Constitution permits that, just export 200,000 barrels a day and keep the remainder for Albertans for the rest of all time. But that is not right. So they built up the heritage trust fund.

That brings me to the next point. The Minister of State for Finance was indicating that Albertans were somehow greedy because they had built up that heritage trust fund. Mr. Speaker, that heritage trust fund has helped the rest of Canadians in several ways. First, it is a source of money that other provinces could come and borrow. It keeps the interest in the country, as against having to go outside the country to borrow the money, which means more dollars flowing out of the country.

Second, several billions of dollars of that heritage trust fund has gone into the Alberta home mortgage corporation, which lends that money out to Alberta citizens to build their homes. That means that there is more CMHC money available for other Canadians. The same occurs with the Agricultural Development Corporation. It uses Alberta heritage trust fund money, and that means that there is more money through the Farm Credit Corporation to other provinces. In that sense, it is a major help. If it were not for the heritage trust fund, more money would have had to flow into Alberta and there would be less available for other provinces.

Then what happens, Mr. Speaker? When Albertans have money, just as when Newfoundlanders have money, they buy a car. Where is the car produced? In Ontario. So you get this tremendous mixing. I was a member of the fiscal tax force and even the four Liberal members sitting on that task force joined us in agreeing unanimously that the Alberta heritage trust fund was in no way a detriment to this country and that the existing economic links would recirculate that money so that we would all benefit a great deal.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Minister of State for Finance to rise in his seat and tell me that if the oil and gas were located in Ontario or Quebec, or in both provinces, we would have the same National Energy Program. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is not one way that one of those members opposite can stand and honestly say that if the oil and gas were in Ontario and Quebec we would have the same National Energy Program. Their people would not permit it. The only way they can get away with it is that it is in the west, in Alberta, with only 21 members, and while we stand here and try to explain to them the problems it is causing, it does not affect them because they do not have their own constituents there. That was true at least until a while ago. I think their constituents are going there now. The young men and the young women who went west to get jobs found no jobs there. I hope they are in yelling and screaming, because it is just not right. It should not be. If members opposite want to come with me, I will take you out and I will introduce you to people who have lost their jobs, to men and women who have put 20 and 30 years of their lives in building up a small business, only to have it smashed. Those are human beings, Mr. Speaker. Those are hot, living bodies out there that have lost it. They would not have lost it, if it were not for the National Energy Program.

Mr. Taylor: Right on. All we have is empty seats on the other side.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, what have we got? Canadians need to know exactly what the government has done. In fact, this bill tonight contains three new taxes, but it is part of seven taxes that are increasing the burden of Canadians at the grassroots level. These are regressive taxes which are being levied on people. We have the PGRT, the IORT, the NGGLT, the COC, the PCC, an excise tax and a sales tax. There are seven individual and separate taxes which are coming out of the pockets of Canadians directly.

• (2140)

The whole National Energy Program is based on a false model designed by intellects who have never had to meet a payroll in their entire lives. The officials in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the minister himself, have never gone out and operated a business. They have never set up a business. They have never had to hire people. They have never had to produce. They have never had to pay people at the end of the month. They have never had to pay workmen's compensation premiums or unemployment insurance premiums. They have never had to make income tax deductions and Canada Pension Plan deductions. They have never had to stay up until midnight filling out their own papers. They are indulging in an academic, intellectual exercise. At will, by signing a paper, they can increase the workload of people in the field.

While it saddens me that Canadians have to do this, I am pleased they are starting to fight back, and they are fighting back in several ways. They turfed out a government which believed government should take everything unto itself. They turfed out the government in Saskatchewan. That government was buying land from people and denying them the right to own property. That government was nationalizing and creating Crown corporations. That government was into every conceivable type of business but still taxing the people because Crown corporations did not have to say they were sorry and therefore kept coming back to the Saskatchewan provincial purse. The government kept kicking in tax dollars until finally people said, "Enough".

When I was in Saskatchewan and knocked on doors for three days during the election campaign, it was a genuine pleasure to hear people say, "We have had enough." They wanted to turf the government out, and they did.

Canadians are beginning to rebel in another way, and I think that is just great because the ultimate way to stop a government is to stop the flow of tax dollars. Hon. members will have noticed that the underground economy is expanding enormously. At a time when we do not really need much cash because there are so many credit cards—and they are used—the use of cash in our society is growing enormously. The reason is that people want to be paid in cash because in an underground economy no taxes are paid. While that is unfair in the sense that other people are paying their taxes, it is a sign that people are waking up and saying "No". Rather than doing that, I encourage people to wait until the next election and put in a party and a government which would not take everything away from them.

As hon. members have heard me say previously, a slave is simply someone who is taxed 100 per cent in the sense that someone else makes decisions as to the human rights of that slave, where he lives, where he works and where he sleeps. As an economic creature, a slave is simply taxed 100 per cent. All that person's economic rent goes into the hands of someone else who decides how it is spent. That is exactly where we are because when we add up our municipal taxes, our provincial taxes and our federal taxes, we find that over 55 per cent of the sweat of our brows goes into the hands of someone else who decides how to spend it. That is the major difference between the parties in this House. The party to the left, the NDP, clearly would tax away 80 per cent or 90 per cent, as is done in the socialist countries of Sweden and the United Kingdom. In places like Russia and China 100 per cent is taxed away. Hon. members opposite in the Liberal Party now believe in the same thing. They want to take away so that they can pay back in the form of grants. This party would not do that, and this party will be a real alternative in the next election.

This bill deals with the goals of the National Energy Program. First, the bill deals with self-sufficiency. That goal has been lost, and that is a tragedy because Canada continues to use about 1.7 to 1.8 million barrels of oil a day. We were getting about 1.2 million barrels a day of Alberta light crude, and we were getting about 200,000 barrels of synthetic crude per day from Alberta's tar sands. We were importing about 400,000 to 450,000 barrels a day. We are still faced with the reality of importing 400,000 to 450,000 barrels a day and, if there is ever trouble in the Middle East, that supply will be cut off and we will be exactly where we were in 1978 during the last Middle East crisis when suddenly we realized we were exposed. When the OPEC increased the price, we were caught. We had no choice but to pay the price. If we were self-sufficient, we would not give a hoot what the rest of the world does. If the OPEC were to put its price up to $500 a barrel and if we were self-sufficient, we would decide how much we would pay in the Canadian interest.

But we are not there. We are still importing, and that is how we are getting ourselves into a real jam. If there is a war tomorrow, the people in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec will be cold. They will be cold because we will not be able to get oil to them.

Alberta's offer was incredibly generous. What Alberta said then was: "Pay us, as owners, up to 85 per cent of the world price, and we will guarantee that with that money we will put those tar sands plants in." As our conventional crude supplies dropped, as they are dropping even this year, Alberta would have guaranteed there would be synthetic oil in production to offset that, as well as to cover imported oil. Alberta also guaranteed that the extra money would be used in Manitoba to develop the hydroelectric project on the Nelson. Alberta guaranteed it would go into Quebec and Newfoundland to develop their water resources in the north so that we could be self-sufficient in all forms of energy. Well, that is gone, and it is a tragedy because it need not be gone. We as Canadians could be self-sufficient, and should not have to be beholden to anyone. No form of blackmail should get us.

The next goal of the National Energy Program was Canadianization. When the Liberal government, now in its socialist form, talks about Canadianization, Canadians should never be fooled because the government is not giving Canadians a chance to buy shares. Indeed, it is expropriating shares from Canadian citizens. Many Canadians held shares in Petrofina. Those shares were expropriated. Many Canadians held shares in Altantic Richfield. They were expropriated. Many Canadians owned shares in Pacific Petroleums. They were expropriated. The Liberal-NDP coalition kept the right of property out of the Constitution because if we had the constitutionally entrenched right to ownership of property—and that includes shares—the government could not under the Canada Business Corporations Act, expropriate our shares because the clauses of the Canada Business Corporations Act dealing with that would be null and void. The government would have to buy my shares. It would have to negotiate with me. If it gave me enough money, of course I would sell, but the government could not take my shares away. We do not have the right to own property because that would block nationalization.

The Liberals agreed on a Friday to include the right to own property. The next day the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) held a press conference and told the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that if he continued to propose the inclusion of the right to own property in the charter, the NDP would withdraw its support. The Liberals came crawling back on the Monday following. Having agreed to include the right to own property on the Friday, the Liberals withdrew that right and used their majority. In the next election campaign there will be a plank in my party's election platform proposing to give the people that right, and then they will truly have that right.

What has been the effect of his great Canadianization? Let me give exact figures. They are truly astounding. The amount of money which has left this country to purchase the shares of foreign-owned companies is $5.3 billion. the amount which has left this country by way of take-over when Canadian companies have borrowed money in the United States, primarily to buy other companies, was $4.9 billion. Then there was an unidentified outflow of some $8.4 billion, for a total cash out flow of $18.6 billion. Let me tell hon. members why $10 billion went out. We had foreign ownership of shares. The cost of those shares was a dividend, the long-term average of those dividends was 3 per cent to 5 per cent. It must be remembered that a dividend is only paid if a company is making profit. In good years you would lose the dividend and in bad years the dividend would stay because one would not be declared. What we have effectively done with $10 billion is to convert that from foreign equity ownership into foreign debt, on which we pay between 15 per cent and 20 per cent. So whether it is a good year or a bad year, 15 per cent to 20 per cent of that $10 billion goes out just to service it. That does not count the $10 billion for the principal, and that is the tragedy.

We have already been through this during the 1920s and even before, when most of Canada's foreign ownership was in the form of debt. A great intellectual exercise went on at that time when the bright boys of the day decided that because the interest flows out in good years and in bad years, the debt had to be converted into foreign equity, and then a dividend would just be paid in the good years. That is why we have foreign ownership today. Now we are doing exactly the opposite and turning it back into foreign debt and facing that hemorrhage of money.

There is another figure that must be considered, Mr. Speaker. At the present time $31.4 billion short-term speculative money flows into Canada. That is the international, Arab, petroleum, energy money—the petro-dollars, the international banking community money. It is the capital market that flows wherever the investment is best. In order to keep that money here and to protect our dollar, we have had to increase our interest rates to 15 per cent or 20 per cent. That is why Canadians are hurting today, Mr. Speaker. We lost all our direct investment money, $18 billion of it, and we have had to bring in $31 billion of speculative money.

That money would be gone by noon tomorrow if some other country offered an extra 2 per cent interest. That would justify cost and we would be left holding the bag. That is why we are forced to keep our interest rates up. It is not because of anything that the people of Canada have done wrong; it is something that the government has done to them. People should remember that is was done by a Liberal government.

I could go on for a long time talking about this, Mr. Speaker, and I could deal with the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). We can see how his speeches have changed, Mr. Speaker. He is beginning to understand the enormous loss being felt in the oil and gas industry. He is starting to realize that this represents jobs and that when a company in Alberta, Saskatchewan or B.C. is hurt, people in Ontario, Quebec, and the rest of the country are also hurt. I think the hon. member will be able to make a positive contribution to this debate soon, because he is beginning to see the ramifications of all that his colleagues are advocating. Many of them sit there laughing and smiling, but they should remember that it is their constituents who will be put out of work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired but he can continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to go back to some of the most interesting points made by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) during his speech—a very good speech indeed—for which I congratulate him.

I think the first good point he made and that I was glad to hear, for having heard it often during my first year here in this House, is that because of what happened with the Alsands project, the Alberta people are going to keep the oil from the Athabaska oil sands and sell it later to Canadians. That is the sort of nonsense which members of the Progressive Conservative Party kept repeating the first year I sat in the House. They used to say that the main reason for raising oil prices to world levels and making fuel oil and gas more expensive for Canadians was to teach them to conserve it for the future so that future generations of Albertans might get higher incomes; well, last week, the official opposition turned this argument around and insisted on an emergency debate on this issue. It was somewhat strange, because they seemed to realize all of a sudden that the Alsands project had been set aside temporarily, owing to the fact that Canadians have learned to develop and use other sources of energy. What makes it even more surprising, as I said at the time, is the fact that Canadians had just learned from Premier Lougheed himself that Alberta oil did not belong to them, something he confirmed by reducing oil production first by 60,000 barrels a day, and later by 120,000 barrels a day. With that information, and having been told by the Leader of the Official Opposition, the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), that oil had to be expensive—

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would clarify one point. He said, "When the premier of the province of Alberta found out that the oil did not belong to the province of Alberta—". I wonder if he would clarify that point for me?

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: What I mean, Mr. Speaker, is that while negotiations were in progress between Alberta and the Canadian government, the Alberta government twice cut back oil production and oil sales to the rest of Canada, the first time by 60,000 barrels a day and the second time by 120,000 barrels a day. These cutbacks proved beyond the shadow of a doubt to the Canadian people that the oil locked in Alberta's subsoil belongs, not to Canada, but to the people of Alberta, and more specifically, that it is controlled by the Alberta Premier, who may decide tomorrow morning, if he so wishes, that Alberta will not produce one more barrel of oil. This is what I was trying to say. That is the obvious reason why, from that moment on, the national policy established by the government to promote alternative forms of energy suddenly snowballed. All the people in eastern Canada come to the conclusion that since the Arabs could stop shipping us oil tomorrow morning in the case of a war and since Peter Lougheed could decide tomorrow morning to stop piping oil from the west, it was essential to turn to alternative energy sources. Many of my friends back home have installed wood-burning stoves. Many others have converted to electric heating. Still others have installed windmills to generate electricity, have turned to all sorts of other means, have added to the insulation in their homes and have benefited from the federal programs, with the result which seems to surprise the members of the official opposition seem to be surprised that we are now using much less oil in eastern Canada today than 10 years ago. Much less!

That is quite normal, and it is a logical result of what the official opposition party, the Progressive Conservative Party, wanted. As the hon. member for Lethbridge Foothills has just said, oil prices had to increase because Alberta must keep some for future generations. He has just said so himself. This is what we were told two years ago in this House. I remember hearing with my own ears that Canadians would have to learn how much oil costs. Members opposite are now surprised, Mr. Speaker, to see that Canadians are aware of the high costs of oil and that they are now using less oil, and these members now are requesting emergency debates because a project has been postponed as a result of this decrease in demand in Canada. I find this to be quite normal, and personally, I am grateful that it should be so, that we should be able to keep some oil for the future. I am very happy about that. Because actually—

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) did not say anything of the kind. What we are saying is that they are importing 400,000 barrels of oil and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, in any case, the facts show that Canadians are using less oil than before. I heard some members talk about oil prices earlier. I heard someone mention a figure of 57 cents per gallon of oil in federal taxes. I tried to do a little arithmetic, Mr. Speaker. I have always known that there are 4.54 litres in one gallon of oil. At the present time, federal taxes per litre of oil are as follows: an ownership tax of 0.72 cents, a sales tax of 2.4 cents, an excise tax of 1.5 cents, and 2.79 cents for what is known as upstream taxes. This makes 7.41 cents, times 4.54 litres, which comes to the tremendous amount of 33.64 cents in taxes per gallon of oil. This falls mighty short of 57 cents a gallon, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please! It being ten o'clock, under the provisions of the order made on Friday, May 7, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith all of the questions necessary for the disposal of the second reading stage of the bill now under consideration, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to the order made earlier this day the recorded division stands deferred until 3 p.m. on Tuesday, May 18, 1982.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EMERGENCY MEASURES—ORDER IN COUNCIL PROVISIONS AFFECTING MANPOWER. (B) EFFECT ON UNIONS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will know that for some time now I have been exploring the implications of the emergency planning orders as documented in The Canada Gazette of June 10, 1981. Among other things, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is empowered in peacetime to nationalize the energy industry in Canada. The minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is empowered to nationalize the means of production in Canada. These immense powers given to various cabinet ministers are of growing concern to me and, according to my mail and that of many other members, to Canadians all across the country. That is why ten days ago I rose to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) questions regarding the implications that order had for his portfolio, and therefore all Canadians. As I pointed out at the time, he is empowered to, "establish a population register for the effective management of manpower and arrange any required international manpower transaction." I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that those are peacetime powers being given to the minister under a very loose definition of what constitutes an emergency. In answering my question, if you can call it an answer, the minister said:

—that any time there is a major catastrophe that would affect this country, there are obviously international implications in terms of the movement of workers and movement of people across borders.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what constitutes a national emergency which would have those broad international implications? Suppose there were large scale floods. Is that big enough to call for an international transfer of manpower? Suppose there were an earthquake of massive dimensions in Canada. Should that empower the minister to register all manpower in Canada and transfer them to other sovereign countries in the world? Suppose there were a drought for several years in Canada as we experienced it in the 1930s. Is that enough of a catastrophe to justify empowering the minister to register everyone in Canada and then ship them out of the country? The specific question is: what kind of an excuse does the minister need? Under what circumstances does a domestic national emergency call for the Minister of Employment and Immigration to transfer Canadians to another country? These are the bizarre implications of the emergency planning order.

When the Solidarity union in Poland faced military rule, and in fact the entire country was under military rule, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the demands of Polish workers were "excessive". I came across a quotation in the Solidarity union weekly newspaper which I should like to read. It indicated what might transpire as follows:

> Militarization of work enterprises which converts bureaucratic directives into commands; military courts replace civil courts; all union activities as well as activities by other organizations and associations are terminated; all public gatherings outside of religious observances are outlawed; the censorship law is suspended, which means a position of arbitrary censorship could include the proscription of any publication; limitation on freedom of travel out of the country as well as—attention—movement within the country.

This was published by Solidarity workers two days before the imposition of martial law in Poland.

Several months ago in committee I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) whether a general strike would be enough to impose the emergency planning order in Canada. He said, "If it got serious enough, yes." That is an implication of bizarre proportions. On that same day I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) whether, according to the emergency planning order, he was able to regulate and control conditions of work, rates of remuneration, and occupational safety. Again, this is a peacetime power, and the Minister of Labour is able to abrogate all union contracts and is able to deny workers the legitimacy of union agreements which have been arrived at. I want to point out that the powers given to the Minister of Labour under peacetime are nothing short of dictatorial. At the time the Minister of Labour gave an even more alarming answer. He said:

> Until that emergency situation appears on the horizon, the integrity of collective agreements will prevail.

What does he mean?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member because his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we all know the interest taken by the honourable member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr.Friesen) in the issue of emergency measures. It must be said however that, by itself, the emergency planning order gives the minister no authority to establish a population register nor arrange any emergency international manpower transactions. Those are the responsibilities of the national emergency manpower administration that can only be formally established in cases of serious national emergencies. And even then, the enactment of such an emergency act remains a prerequisite.

Section 5 of the order only requires the minister to develop and update appropriate plans and duties for the establishment and operation of the above-mentioned administration. It does not empower him to exercise responsibilities, powers and functions mentioned in the appendix to the order. The same goes for labour conditions, pay rates, work safety and labour relations, that would be the responsibility of the above-mentioned administration.

AIRPORTS—(A) POSSIBLE CHANGE IN STATUS OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS—(B) REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT EXAMINATION

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, in the answer he gave yesterday to my question dealing with a possible transfer of services from Dorval to Mirabel, which was directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and in which I asked for a genuine consultation process with all the interested parties, namely the air transport industry, labour, Montreal businessmen and above all the public, the minister answered, and I quote:

> It may well be that we shall have a public process of consultation on the decision I shall recommend to cabinet, but the decision has not yet been made.

If I read his answer correctly, this means he will first make a decision, then a recommendation to cabinet, and after that we might have that public consultation process.

• (2210)

[English]

This is just not good enough. What kind of a democracy are we living in when the minister, in a matter which is as important as this to a population of some two million people, is beating around the bush with regard to the question of a full public consultation with the air industry, businessmen of Montreal, the travelling public and the unions who represent the workers who may have to move from Dorval eventually? What is the problem with a consultation process? Is it because the department is afraid to have a full public consultation process? Are they are afraid of the facts?

I am absolutely amazed that we are faced with the situation where several options are being presented to the public while another one is being presented to a particular segment of the public. They are the 33 mayors from the north side of Montreal who, as well as members on this side who are supporting that Mirabel effort, have legitimate local interests. However, that local interest is certainly not anywhere near as important as the more general interest which exists on the part of the vast majority of the people living on the island of Montreal and on the south shore opposite Montreal in the continuing full use of Dorval airport for domestic and North American service.

Under the circumstances, we are finding that the options that are being presented are limited. The two most important options are not even being considered. Those two options are the status quo or the closing of Mirabel altogether. If options are going to be considered, these latter two are legitimate and must be considered and be part of any public consultation process.

Finally, I think we should review the history of Mirabel for a moment. I was aware of and supportive of the political reasons for the construction of Mirabel airport in the first place. There were technological reasons advanced for it at that time: noise reduction and the argument that Mirabel would be the gateway for freight transfer and passenger transfer to the rest of North America. Technological developments have bypassed Mirabel. Sound has been reduced by two thirds, and aircraft can now fly almost twice as far. Therefore, flights from Europe can go to the centre of North America or even the North American west coast. The dream of Mirabel as a gateway to North America has gone forever.

The present reality is something quite different. Mirabel is there and we are losing in the order of $25 million a year in operating costs. That is regrettable. If we want to be totally hardnosed, I guess we should shut Mirabel down. At the moment I think we can consider leaving it open, hopefully, because the present passenger traffic, something which not even the so-called experts in the department could have predicted, will increase. However, I doubt that it will happen to the point where it would justify the full use of Mirabel.

We are now in a situation where it has been suggested that we replace the present $25 million operating loss with an expenditure of some $400 million at least, $200 million from the public sector and another $175 million or so from the private sector. The interest on that alone is two or three times the present operating costs of Mirabel.

There are other items here that we have to mention. The travelling public in Montreal certainly do not want the move. Business in Montreal certainly does not want the move. Twenty minutes may seem a minor amount of time to a lot of people, but it is just enough time, 20 minutes each way, to make many businessmen and the travelling public decide to take a plane to Toronto and make a transfer there, or to take a plane into the United States and make their transfer somewhere further down the line rather than to spend extra money themselves on gasoline or on a $40 taxi trip. If the recommendation that the northern mayors are making is followed through, the end result will be a decrease in total passenger traffic coming through the combination of Mirabel and Dorval.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent to anyone who has followed the recent events and has read Hansard that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is giving the Mirabel-Dorval issue his fullest attention. The solution must be one that is reached after a full examination of the long-term development needs of the Montreal area. Information provided to this House as recently as during the debate this afternoon has shown that there have been many reviews and opinions on this extremely complex and difficult issue. With the release of the interim report on airport role options in February, 1981, known as phase one, all interested parties were invited to submit comments and concerns on two proposed options, with a view to providing broader input to phase two, which is the detailed cost benefit and arrangements of these options. This indication represents a genuine public process of consultation as called for by the hon. member, but the process of consultation has gone farther than this.

The hon. member will recall that the minister has personally met with large delegations representing both the Dorval and Mirabel areas. He has also personally met with the president of Air Canada and CP Air to discuss the issue, as was recently disclosed in an article in the Montreal Gazette. So there can be no doubt that the minister is taking the issue seriously and has made considerable efforts to hear the interested parties. The minister is searching for the best possible solution. It may be that the solution will not satisfy everyone, but the hon. member can be assured that once the minister is satisfied that every aspect has been fully considered, he will not hesitate to recommend a course of action to his colleagues, however difficult it may be.

FINANCE—REQUEST FOR INCREASED TAX REBATE ON FARM FUEL

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, on April 8 I raised a question with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) concerning the rebate on farm fuels. The reason I raised it was that I believe everyone knows that there is much difficulty, not only in farming communities, but also in the business community as a whole across the country. Specifically, in relation to the farming community, it is very important that we maintain a productive agricultural economy at home so that we can have access to relatively inexpensive food and so that we can meet what most people believe to be an expanding export market for our agricultural products. If we are to do those two things, we must ensure that farmers stay in production.

In the farming community, we have been experiencing some very large increases in the cost of farming, and it looks as though this will continue. As we all know, farming has become very capital intensive because farmers spend much money on machinery and other costs, such as fuels, fertilizers, insecticides and pesticides, most of which are based on the petroleum industry.

Therefore, I specifically requested the minister to take a look at the taxes which are being collected simply on farm fuels, not on fertilizers made from petroleum products and not on insecticides and pesticides.

• (2220)

I see the parliamentary secretary is here this evening. He will know that approximately 40 per cent of the cost of farm fuels is made up of federal excise tax. It is presently about 40 cents a gallon on diesel fuel and 60 cents a gallon on gasoline. That is an alarming amount of money. The sad part is that that amount of money which the federal government collects from farmers in the form of taxes on farm fuel will increase.

I have some figures which my colleague, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), used in his speech this evening which point this out. In 1980, the cost on an average size farm in western Canada, a thousand acres, related to all petroleum products such as motor fuel, heating fuel and fertilizer, was estimated to be $11,800. In 1981 it was estimated at $16,750. the disconcerting figure is that the projected 1986 figure is $42,000. The tax on farm fuels is expected to go to almost half that, $16,800 for an average thousand acre farm. If that happens, farmers will have a very bad time trying to stay in business. The farm community will have a bad time meeting export commitments. We all know that a healthy agricultural economy adds to the domestic economy.

Despite the fact that we import a lot of food out of season, citrus fruits from the southern United States and all kinds of other foods that we cannot grow in this country because of our climate, when you compare our agricultural exports with what we bring in in the form of imports, you find that there is still a surplus of approximately $3 billion.

Canadian agriculture is thus a very large earner of foreign exchange. Therefore, it should be very important to this government to keep that industry healthy. It will not stay healthy if the federal government chooses to tax it out of business. I submit very sincerely that we are coming very close to that point.

The government should look at what it is doing to the farm community in terms of taxes. If through excess taxes we drive farmers out of business, and therefore have less food available domestically, the consumer will have to pay more. This will not only add to inflation but cause all other kinds of problems. The distinguished chairman of our agriculture committee, who is sitting beside the parliamentary secretary, will understand that a very efficient agricultural industry at home is important not only for our exports, but to maintain a healthy and productive economy at home.

I know that when the parliamentary secretary responds with an answer prepared for him by the department, he will state that any remission of taxes will add to the deficit and that the opposition is being inconsistent by screaming at the government to hold down expenses while at the same time proposing measures that will add to the deficit.

Let me point out that farmers who go out of business do not pay taxes. They will require some form of social assistance and that will add to the deficit. They not only lose the job they created for themselves, but in many cases lose the opportunity to make jobs for others they employ.

Farmers who go out of business do not buy machinery. That hurts central Canada where a lot of the manufacturing takes place. We have seen evidence of that in the House. Massey-Ferguson, White Farm Equipment and International Harvester, which has a big plant in Hamilton, are all in trouble. When those equipment manufacturers are out of business or are suffering financial hardship as a result of farmers not buying their products, they do not pay taxes, and that adds to the deficit.

The government should take a close look at what the opposition is suggesting in the terms of an increase in the rebate on farm fuels. When the federal government is taking, as I said, approximately 40 cents a gallon on diesel fuel and 60 cents a gallon on gasoline, and the rebate is 7 cents a gallon, if farmers and businessmen apply for that rebate, there would be nothing wrong with increasing that, doubling it or tripling it, particularly when you look at what is going to happen as the National Energy Program and the pricing agreement reached with the producing provinces last September comes into effect. A $42,000 tax bill on a thousand acre farm means $40 an acre tax on farmland. I do not know how you can expect farmers to stay in business, to be efficient, to provide food for our consumers at home, and at the same time to look after what we believe our obligation is to the international community, to feed them, while at the same time, helping out our balance of payments.

I would hope that when the parliamentary secretary rises this evening to answer my question, he will take into consideration what the opposition is suggesting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) has expressed his concern about farm fuel costs and has requested that the present tax be increased.

The government recognizes that all Canadians are experiencing increased costs in a number of areas. All householders have to pay more for food, heating fuel and electricity. All persons who operate motor vehicles or equipment powered with internal combustion engines are experiencing cost increases, both because fuel is more expensive and because the costs of repair labour and repair parts have increased.

The government has mitigated the cost of gasoline for commercial users by rebating 100 per cent of the seven cents a gallon special excise tax which is imposed on all gasoline for use in internal combustion engines. Farmers are, of course, entitled to receive this rebate when the gasoline is used in their farming activities.

The special excise tax is also rebated to municipalities, provincial government departments, clergymen, the handicapped, transportation companies and a number of other users.

Increasing the rebate to farmers beyond the amount of excise tax originally paid, would constitute a special subsidy to members of the farming community. I believe it would be difficult to single out farmers as being more deserving of a special subsidy than, for example, loggers, commercial fishermen, municipal transit systems, taxi operators, freight forwarders and the handicapped, as all of these users face the problems identified by the hon. member.

Proceeding in that manner would cause a substantial loss to the treasury and further increase the deficit. In the light of this fact, it would be difficult for the government to proceed as the member for Portage-Marquette has suggested. Even though farm fuel costs are rising, the cost of fuel is generally lower in Canada than in most other countries around the world. In some countries internal combustion fuel costs are more than double the costs being experienced in Canada, and those countries impose heavy tax levies on those prices as well.

PRAIRIE FARM EMERGENCY FUND—CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Some 16 months have gone by since the question of the disposition of the $9,060,000 of western grain producers' PFAA contributions held in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund was debated in this House. Despite undertakings by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), no steps have been taken to make this money available for badly needed research and development of cereal grains. The emergency fund being non-interest bearing, the Government of Canada has, in effect, stolen millions of dollars in producers' money over the years, and since the debate some 16 months ago, $1,963,000, using Farm Credit Corporation rates. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House condemn the Minister of Agriculture for having such a lack of interest in research and development and call upon the said minister to resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEMAND FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, whereas all sectors of our society are facing disastrous economic effects because of the Liberal government's budget and its high interest rate policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to introduce immediately a new budget offering specific aid to those individuals hardest hit by this government's high interest rate policies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

PREPARATIONS FOR CONFERENCE ON NATIVE ISSUES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter which I sincerely hope will receive the support of all hon. members of this House. Section 37 of our new Constitution guarantees that there will be a federal-provincial conference held with native representatives within one year in order to discuss constitutional issues of concern to native people. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That this House reaffirm its commitment to serious negotiations with native leaders and request that the federal government provide adequate funding to major native groups so that they may be able to prepare their positions in advance of the constitutional conference.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

GRAVITY OF FAMILY VIOLENCE ISSUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That this House assure the women of Canada that the issue of family violence, and especially of wife battering, is considered by all members of this House to be an extremely grave and alarming one; and that the Report on Violence in the Family, tabled in this House last Tuesday as a result of deliberations in committee by members from all sides of this House, will be given serious consideration by all members in recognition of the fact that wife battering takes place in every constituency across Canada, and affects one out of every ten women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S.O. 43

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to debate the motion?

Mrs. Appolloni: Yes, Madam Speaker. This subject is far too important to be allowed to drop so easily in the House of Commons. I recommend, first of all, that the report from the committee be recommended reading in every school across Canada so that children will begin to learn from an early age that women are not chattels, that women are being battered, and that up until now society has unfortunately turned a blind eye.

I very much hope that as a result of this report, and of deliberations on all sides of the House, Canadian society will learn to treat women with respect, and will give them the protection they need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in rising to support this motion I want to say on behalf of my party that we very much regret what happened in the House yesterday, or at least the way in which the incident was reported yesterday, because I do not believe the House intended, yesterday or at any time, to belittle this report or the importance of it.

• (1110)

I want to say we commend the committee for its excellent report. We believe it is a very serious problem in the country, probably more widespread than is generally believed. We feel very strongly that not only should the House address itself to the report in this way, but that the government, through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), should address itself to this report so that the people who are the subject of the report, namely, battered wives, can receive the same protection of the laws of Canada as all other groups.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too join with other members in this House in congratulating the committee for bringing forth such a report, and would urge the government to take immediate action on its implementation.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, lack of faith in the ability of the Liberal government to run the affairs of the nation has forced the Canadian dollar to the 80-cent level in international markets. This will result in higher interest rates, which it has done already, and higher prices for all imported goods. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the government immediately reverse its national energy policy and withdraw its silly budget before the Canadian dollar disappears right out of sight.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICIES TO GENERATE EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, over a decade ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dismissed unemployment as a regrettable side effect of inflation. The situation today is more than regrettable; it is alarming. Not a day goes by that we do not learn of more firms having to reduce their work force or of going bankrupt, of more and more Canadians joining the ranks of the unemployed, and of more Canadian communities, large and small, staggering to cope with economic and social burdens. Government continues to express its indifference to the very urgent and very pressing problems of this country, problems it created through mismanagement, by citing international influences and repeatedly stating it can do nothing until other nations act. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the government stop passing what is now the devalued buck, and recognize and accept the fact that it can, indeed must, begin to implement sound economic policies, policies independent of outside conditions which would restore confidence in the business community, generate employment and get this nation back on its feet.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE AND OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that is becoming increasingly urgent and pressing. In view of the news that farm bankruptcies have risen 70 per cent in the first four months of this year, interest rates have passed the peak reached last November, and business bankruptcies are up 40 per cent over the same period last year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House unanimously requests that, upon his return from Helsinki, the Minister of Finance take the first major step toward an economic recovery program by tendering his resignation and calling for Governor Bouey's as well.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE LAW OF THE SEA

SUCCESSFUL NEGOTIATION OF TREATY—CONGRATULATIONS TO UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. For the last nine years a Law of the Sea has been negotiated in the United Nations, and at long last the United Nations has agreed to a Law of the Sea. The event has been referred to by some as the single most important international diplomatic event since the creation of the United Nations. Canada's ambassador, Alan Beesley, who played a major role in the talks over the years, has described the treaty as a compromise that is fair to all nations. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House commend the United Nations General Assembly for obtaining the broad consensus that it did on such an important issue in the modern-day history of mankind.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF PAY SCALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the pay scales of the Canadian Armed Forces are unrealistic and very unfair relative to the private sector. The cost of living throughout Canada has forced many Armed Forces personnel to seek welfare to supplement their pay. Whereas this humiliation and degradation of the men and women who have chosen to serve their country are utterly contemptible and cannot be allowed to continue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House direct the Minister of National Defence to review immediately the pay scales and benefit programs for the Canadian Armed Forces, with equity and fairness in mind, and reward the fine people who serve our country instead of punishing them with low wages, inadequate benefits and humiliating trips to the welfare offices.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

AWARDING OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Mr. Arthur Erickson during the last week has asserted that he knew that he was going to be chosen to design the Canadian embassy in Washington two years prior to selection and prior to the appointment of a selection committee which was going to be constituted for that purpose. At any time did the Prime Minister have any discussions with Mr. Erickson, or were there any direct or indirect communications with Mr. Erickson which would cause him to believe that he would be selected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has got his facts wrong. That is understandable because there was a newspaper report, I believe on Monday or Tuesday, which quoted Mr. Erickson as having said that. But if the hon. member reads the newspaper of the next day he will find that the newspaper was stating an inaccuracy and that Mr. Erickson said the contrary.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE COMMUNICATIONS WITH SELECTED ARCHITECT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, at any time, at any point in time prior to the selection of Mr. Erickson, did the Prime Minister has any discussion with Mr. Erickson, or were there any direct or indirect communications which would lead Mr. Erickson to believe that he was going to be appointed to build the embassy in Washington?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, there were no direct or indirect indications to Mr. Erickson that he was going to build the embassy in Washington. He is one candidate amongst many. I knew he was in the competition. There was no indication by me or by anyone I know of, directly or indirectly, that he was guaranteed to have that contract.

Oral Questions

FACTORS INVOLVED IN CABINET DECISION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Did the Prime Minister have any discussions—I am not interested in guarantees—did he have any discussions with the architect, Mr. Erickson? And, finally, would the Prime Minister enumerate the factors that caused the cabinet to select Mr. Erickson, in preference to the designs of other architects who were preferred by the selection committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the reasons why Mr. Erickson was chosen are given in the press release which announced the choice, that he was one of the great architects of the world, that the cabinet felt that an embassy such as that in Washington, which is very prestigious, should be done by one of Canada's best architects. We made that choice, and we are satisfied with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

PLIGHT OF RESORT OPERATORS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for small business and tourism. The minister will know that, at this time of year, the concerns and interests of the two groups he represents in cabinet are intertwined. This year, as the summer holiday season approaches, the owners of thousands of small businesses—tourist resort operators and those directly associated in support of the tourist industry—are having more than their share of problems, due to the high interest rate policy of the government. Has the minister any special plan of action to aid these people, many of whom cannot afford to borrow the money they need to prepare for the tourist season?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, last week I had the pleasure of attending Rendez-vous Canada in Calgary, an event organized to bring together members of the tourism industry with both domestic and foreign travel agents. This event lasted three days and, afterwards, it was found that $75 million worth of business had been done at Rendez-vous Canada, a very substantial increase over last year's results at Rendez-vous Canada in Halifax.

The volume of foreign and Canadian tourists visiting Canada has been increasing regularly during the last six years, and according to our forecast, this move upward will continue, and I am sure that people in the tourism industry will continue to make the necessary investments and offer a quality product which is the trademark of our industry.

IMPORTANCE OF TOURIST INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the minister knows the potential of a healthy tourist industry and that it generates extra income for all sectors of our economy. He knows that in many regions, and especially in my region of Parry Sound-Muskoka, tourism is vital. Would the minister undertake to consult with his cabinet colleagues, and especially his cabinet colleague responsible for regional aid, and with him establish a plan of financial assistance for those in the tourist industry who need help now?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that he represents an area that is one of the most important for the Canadian tourism industry and one of the most pleasant regions to be visited in Canada. As for prospective or existing programs to help owners of tourism businesses to obtain financing, the hon. member is aware that there are agreements on tourism development between most provinces and the federal government. In most provinces, tourism businesses located in certain areas have access to special financing and grants to improve their facilities and maintain their level of quality service.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICES OF LEADED AND UNLEADED GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns pricing, namely, the price spread between leaded and unleaded gasoline across Canada. There is some evidence to suggest that the oil companies may have used public confusion about the introduction of metric to justify yet another rip-off. I would like to ask the minister if he is aware that in January, 1979, in Ottawa the spread between the price of unleaded gasoline and the price of leaded gasoline was 4.9 cents per gallon. In May of 1982 the spread was 12.1 cents. Is the minister aware of this scandalous 145 per cent increase in about three years and, if not, will he investigate and take appropriate action to protect consumers from constantly being hosed at the pump?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member that there is no legislation in Canada to control prices. Second, if the hon. member has some evidence of abuse—

Mr. Rose: I gave it to you.

Mr. Ouellet: —he should convey it to the director of combines, and action will be taken.

INCREASED PRICES IN QUEBEC—REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER ROLLBACK

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I know the minister is aware that because this industry operates across Canada it does come under his authority. He has the power to order such investigations, and I just made him aware of and gave him evidence.

This matter was the subject of a motion under Standing Order 43 a few days ago. The oil companies have a habit of taking every opportunity to maximize profits, usually at the expense of consumers. When the provincial sales tax was increased in Quebec, the companies piggybacked increases of three cents to four cents per litre on top of that sales tax. Now the sales tax has been rolled back. Has the minister investigated whether the oil companies have rolled back their prices similarly and, if he has not already done so, and if the evidence uncovered in his investigation justifies it, will he direct the oil companies to roll back these piggybacked increases?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, there is a long-standing practice in Parliament that I cannot deny or confirm that an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act is taking place.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it is related to the same matter. The Penner report made a number of recommendations dealing with the Northern Canada Power Commission. Will the minister set up territorial commissions for the NCPC? Also, will he write off the capital debt of the corporation, and will he give grants for hydroelectric development in the territories?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member may be aware, a press conference took place here about two weeks ago. At that time the government made that kind of commitment through various types of subsidies amounting to millions of dollars to defray the high cost of energy for northerners. That commitment was well received as a means of meeting these concerns.

I received the parliamentary report, and I want to congratulate members of the standing committee on it. When you add up the additional cost over and above the amounts which were committed in the conference of two weeks ago, you are talking about millions of dollars in the deficit alone—something like $50 million or $60 million for that one item. To move the head office north and put in subdivisions for each of the territories, as well as writing off the deficit, all mounts up to a heavy cost which the government will have to find out and consider. It can then decide whether it can meet some of these recommendations.

I can only say at this stage that we are taking the recommendations very seriously and are very conscious of the work and effort that were put into the report.

METRIC CONVERSION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW MANDATORY IMPOSITION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Several Canadian provinces have officially indicated their opposition to forced metric and have indicated that any transition ought to be purely voluntary. Public opinion polls conducted by the Metric Commission, although suppressed, show that metric is not gaining favour with the majority of the Canadian people.

The Attorney General of the province of Alberta has indicated in the Alberta legislature that his government may intervene in a court case against a Calgary woman charged with advertising carpet for sale by the square yard and by the metre using both measurements.

In the face of rising opposition and increased unpopularity, will the minister indicate whether the government is willing to consider dropping the forced aspect of metric and allowing merchants to conduct their business in the system of their choice, that is, a voluntary system?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this very long preamble does not allow me to answer all the aspects of the points raised by the hon. member during question period. We will have a debate later today on the subject and I will answer every point raised in the numerous questions asked by the hon. member. I can indicate to him that indeed, if all parties in government have approved going metric in Canada, it was done because it was in the interests of Canada. If some people now have second thoughts about it, particularly Conservative Members of Parliament, that is their right. But they should not pretend that it is in the best interests of Canadians, because it is not in the best interests of Canada to prevent metric.

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, if the rules of the House would allow it, I would like to say that the minister is misleading the House, because forced metric was never agreed to by this party nor was it ever agreed to in this House. The minister had better get that straight.

APPLICATION OF METRIC SYSTEM TO CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Cattlemen in Alberta went to considerable expense to get a commitment from the Minister of Agriculture that there would be no enforcement of the metric system in the cattle industry in Alberta until January, 1984. Now we have heard from a reliable source that an order in council will be passed and metric will be enforced in the cattle industry in January, 1983, instead of 1984. Is this true or not?

• (1130)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, again this is a good example of a bunch of Conservatives trying to brew the pot. There is no substance in the hon. member's allegation, and it is again a clear indication of people deliberately twisting the facts in trying to make a case out of a lost cause.

PUBLIC WORKS

APPOINTMENT OF HALIFAX DOCKYARD CONSULTANTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked earlier and has to do with the process surrounding the appointment of Mr. Erickson. In light of reliable information I have that, in connection with the due and proper appointment of consultants with respect to work at the Halifax dockyard, on three occasions these appointments were reversed by the Secretary of State and his colleague, the Minister of Finance, I ask the Prime Minister if this is the normal procedure. Is this indeed the policy of the government or cabinet? Consulting engineers and other professional groups expect the government to adhere to a proper process with respect to appointments in these general categories.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member is referring to when he quotes those specific cases, and I hear the Secretary of State say that he does not know what the hon. member is talking about.

The hon. member is asking questions about due process. I am not sure what he would consider due process, or what the opposition party considered due process when it was in power. There is a procedure, Madam Speaker, as everyone knows, that when there are contracts involved above a certain amount of money there must be bids, they must be opened, and consideration must be given to them. But as far as I know, when it comes to choosing architects or engineers and there are no bids involved, there is a certain discretion left to the cabinet, and I believe it was always thus.

I indicated in the House the other day it was important that the candidates for appointment, no matter what their number, be judged as competent and qualified—

Mr. Shields: Liberals.

Mr. Trudeau: —either by the professional bodies or the departments involved. But beyond that, certainly there is a measure of discretion in the choice by the government.

PROCEDURE IN AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Sectretary of State since he does not seem to be aware of what it is I am talking about. Did the minister have occasion to intervene and question the appointment of Beasy Nicoll, consulting engineers in Halifax, with respect to work on the Syncrolift in Halifax, and does he have any knowledge of the Minister of Finance intervening earlier last year in connection with the ship repair unit and Jetty 2 reconstruction?

The questions, Madam Speaker, are rhetorical, and the minister can reply if he wants to, but my basic question is whether this is the process and procedure which professional groups can now expect with respect to the proper awarding of contracts for consulting and other professional work.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I want to say to the hon. member that I have no knowledge of the particular case he mentioned, and I certainly did not intervene in that instance. Let me go further and remind him of the words of Senator Muir when he was a Conservative member in this House from Nova Scotia, that there is a responsibility on those in elected positions to make some selection in circumstances such as those just described by the Prime Minister. If a selection has to be made in circumstances where tenders cannot be called, that is for engineers or architects, far better that the selection be made by elected people who have to answer to the public, than by bureaucrats who are in a position of favouring their friends without ever having to answer to the public on the wisdom of their choice and whether the people selected were competent or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN DORVAL AND MIRABEL—INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. About three months ago, Madam Speaker, in answer to a question I put to the minister when the thirty-three North Shore mayors were present in the House, he said that a document was being considered by cabinet and that the mayors would receive an answer on or about May 18 of this year. We are getting closer to that date, Madam Speaker, and my question is: Is this same document still being considered by cabinet and when does the minister intend to give his answer, on the 18th or the 19th?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to explain why I made this promise. I am thoroughly convinced that a decision must be made on the question of transferring certain routes from Dorval to Mirabel. That is why I undertook to submit a proposal to my cabinet colleagues. I said I would do so in May, and I still hope to do so this month.

[English]

SUBMISSION MADE BY MAYORS IN WEST MONTREAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I hope the Minister of Transport will also give full consideration to the submission of the mayors from the west island of Montreal not to move any of those flights from Dorval until all sides of this question have been considered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): That is in fact the whole point of the exercise, namely to consider and analyse all possible and conceivable proposals, to weigh the pros and cons, bearing in mind that it will be impossible to please everybody, because the positions on this issue go from the absolute negative to the totally positive. My purpose is therefore to make a decision on the basis of a comprehensive knowledge of the facts and consequences.

EMPLOYMENT

VOLUNTARY AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM—REPORTED CONTENTS OF MEMORANDUM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning the voluntary affirmative action program. As the minister has long been aware, no affirmative action agreement has been signed in Manitoba over a period of seven years. A government memo has now come to light as direction to the affirmative action consultants, which reads as follows:

—you will not promote Affirmative Action nor visit employers in this regard. In addition, you will not conduct any seminars or disseminate any information to the field to explain or promote Affirmative Action.

The public would like to know, Madam Speaker, just what level of commitment the government has to affirmative action.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should know that this government is very deeply committed to affirmative action. It has introduced a major program in the federal public service, which the President of the Treasury Board is responsible for, and which is having very major success. In reference to that particular item which appeared as a news story, Madam Speaker, I was distressed to learn that such a memo might exist and I have asked for a full investigation as to its purpose. If that in fact was the direction given, it is in total contradiction to the policies of my department and this government.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF MANDATORY PROGRAM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the voluntary affirmative action program has been in place federally for four years and only 27 companies out of 750 approached have signed. The minister's own colleague, the minister responsible for the status of women, has said that the results of this program have been bleak. After four years of a voluntary program is it not now time to introduce a mandatory program based on the concept of contract compliance?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may not be aware that there is already in process the development of new policies and programs in affirmative action. However, unlike the hon. member and his colleagues who do not believe in consulting with the private sector on any matters at all, we have been engaging in very serious discussions with business and labour so that we will develop a program based upon agreement, not on confrontation which is usually the advice we receive from the NDP.

Miss Jewett: You better consult with your consultants.

AIRPORTS

NORDAIR SERVICE TO HAMILTON CIVIC AIRPORT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, and I think it will be a little easier to field than the ones he had from the hon. member for Argenteuil-Papineau and the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. I can assure you that we on this side are watching the Dorval-Mirabel question with very great interest.

• (1140)

A couple of weeks ago the Minister of Transport said that he would be meeting with officials from Nordair about Nordair's indications with respect to servicing Hamilton civic airport. Can the minister report on that meeting?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sorry it has not been arranged yet, but it will take place very soon.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Clearly the minister is working on metric time, Madam Speaker!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT NORDAIR BE ASKED FOR COMMITMENT TO SERVICE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, because Nordair is clearly planning to cut back on service at the Hamilton civic airport which, as the minister well knows, services the entire southern Ontario-Hamilton-Brantford-Niagara region, will he insist when he does meet with Nordair officials that the airline lives up to its commitment and continues to service the Hamilton civic airport, as that airline promised to do when was placed under the aegis of Air Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was just talking to me, so I have lost a bit of the hon. member's question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Do you want me to ask it again?

Mr. Pepin: No, Madam Speaker. The important thing to underline is that Nordair is not going to make a decision changing the status quo without consulting with me and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development fully. That is pretty solid stuff.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I rest my case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FINANCE

PROJECTED BUDGET DEFICIT

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. On November 12, the Minister of Finance tabled a budget in this House projecting a deficit for the current fiscal year of $10.49 billion. Since that time government expenditures have increased because of economic circumstances, and revenues have declined. It has been anticipated by some that the current deficit will amount to something in the neighbourhood of $15 billion or more. Can the minister tell the House whether the Department of Finance has drafted new anticipated deficit figures? If so, will he supply the House with the information which those figures would disclose?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Department of Finance's new figures are not ready yet and I do not wish to speculate on what those figures will be.

[English]

Mr. Gamble: Madam Speaker, I am rather surprised that six months after debate of the budget none of those figures are available, because it must be apparent to all in government that they are very badly out of date.

FOREIGN AID EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, last evening at the regular meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, members of that committee heard the president of CIDA explain that the total budgetary expenditures of government with respect to foreign aid are standing at $1.724 billion. This is at a time when farm bankruptcies have increased 70 per cent and general bankruptcies in Canada 39 per cent in the first quarter of this year. As well, unemployment has increased. Some members of the committee were of the view that these expenditures on foreign aid were out of line having regard to the circumstances in the country. Will the minister consider recommending to his colleagues that the issue of the quantum of foreign aid paid by this government be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for an in-depth study and report to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member could stop staring at his navel and take a look outside the country, and then consider the problems facing those countries that are receiving development aid from Canada. He would realize that there is every justification for this aid, considering the poverty in those countries and the relative prosperity of Canadians in this country.

PUBLIC WORKS

COST OF NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. For the sake of the economy is the Prime Minister considering postponing the construction of the embassy in Washington? As well, does he think that Canada can afford to construct such a project at this time of economic difficulties?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the work of the embassy staff is done in Washington, I believe, in a series of buildings. In view of the fact that the United States remains our most important economic and political power, it would seem to me that it is self-evident that a building housing all the embassy personnel which will make their work efficient and effective should proceed. I believe the amount involved is some $38 million, or a figure in that area. That is an important building, Madam Speaker, and as the hon. member knows, the Government of Canada is building more expensive buldings in various cities across Canada which are needed to ensure the federal government is be able to discharge its services in various parts of the country.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, maybe it is self-evident to the Prime Minister and his cabinet that a building of this nature is needed at this time in a foreign country which, incidentally, will create jobs there, but at a time when Canadians are biting the dust, why do we need to construct a new embassy? Rental facilities can certainly do for another five years. They have been fine up to now. Where are the priorities of this government when people are biting the dust as a result of unemployment right across the country? I find the situation ludicrous. I would like an answer from the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot give the details of the particular reason why that building is being built at this time. I have given them in general terms. The same question, I suppose, could be asked of the United States government, which is planning to build a new embassy here, which is going to cost a lot of money at a time when there is high unemployment in other countries. I do not think that the hon. member and his party are suggesting that we cease to have international relations, and to have them in acceptable conditions, when there are economic difficulties in Canada because that applies, as the hon. member knows, to most other countries.

CRIMINAL CODE

USE OF TEFLON COATED BULLETS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. He will know that some time ago I brought to the attention of the appropriate authorities my concern regarding a teflon coated bullet known sadistically as the "cop-killer". Given that the Assembly of the State of California recently outlawed the manufacture and sale of this bullet which can pierce layers of protective armour, house walls and even an automobile engine block, will the minister give his assurance that his department will press ahead urgently with the requested investigation, and if this bullet is available in Canada will the minister see to the eventual prohibition of this extraordinarily dangerous bullet?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the problem in Canada is quite different from that in the United States. In my view, no change in the law is required. Teflon bullets are widely available in the United States. But in Canada, since 1972, they have been on a list which restricts their use to police departments. There are very few in Canada to my knowledge, and in fact no import permits have been authorized by the government since 1976.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the CPR announced lay-offs for three weeks of 3,800 shop craft employees in Montreal, Winnipeg and Calgary. That four-week lay-off is added to the three-week holiday. This means that the shops will be closed for seven weeks. Considering that the Wheat Board is projecting a 50 per cent increase in sales in the next few years, and we are projecting an increase of 100 per cent in the export of potash and an increase of 300 per cent in the export of coal, is this not the time for the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to get together with the CPR and the CNR, which has also announced lay-offs, and suggest to them that now is the time, when business is slow, to upgrade freight cars, tracks, engines and signal equipment so that when the new sales come onstream they will be able to move the goods rather than tell the country that they cannot move the products we can sell?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is not bad reasoning, but we are now in a rather difficult situation. There is a slump in the export and domestic traffic of raw commodities. At the same time, grain is doing extremely well, as the hon. member and everyone should know. It is doing extremely well at this moment.

However, at the same time, discussions are taking place on the Crow, we have the Gilson exercise, and the railways are uncertain, quite understandably, about the results. This is the explanation for the particular situation we are in now with respect to the railways.

I might add that the CP employees who are being laid off—I thought it was for 20 days on top of the usual two weeks—will be compensated, of course, by UIC payments, and more because of some clauses in their contract. I am informed that in most cases it might add up to 80 per cent of their salary. I realize this may not be good economic thinking but it is reasonable humanitarian thinking.

Mr. Orlikow: I am not blaming the companies. I realize that traffic is down and their cash flow is not very good. But surely we can follow the example of countries like Japan and France which say that we should not worry too much about today's events but plan for three, five or ten years from now.

REQUEST THAT EMPLOYEES BE RETAINED IN EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, given the projections of tremendously increased sales of these bulk commodities, is it not now the time—instead of two years from now—for the government to get together with the companies so they can keep people at work to prepare for the future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think that the managers of CN, and I am sure CP as well, have that in mind. I was talking to the president of CN and there is no doubt that had it not been for this contemplation for the future CN might have laid off more employees than they are actually laying off. They might have reduced their capital budget more than they have done.

These managers are quite wise. They have in mind the events of the near future to which the hon. member refers.

CHILD CARE TAXABLE BENEFIT

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Since the Minister of Finance has refused to increase the child care deduction from $1,000 which was established in 1975, while child care costs have soared in the meantime, and since the Prime Minister receives the free services of a nanny for the care of his children, in order to restore some measure of equity to the Income Tax Act will the Minister of National Revenue invoke Section 6 of the Income Tax Act and include a taxable benefit in the income of the Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TRIAL OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On April 30 the Prime Minister gave a commitment in the House to the hon. member for Edmonton Strathcona that he would investigate allegations surrounding the 17 RCMP officers who are charged in the Quebec courts that there were some partisan overtones because of his government's involvement. Could he now reveal to the House the results of his inquiries into those allegations.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I honestly do not remember the case to which the hon. member refers. Would he be more specific and I will perhaps ask the Solicitor General to assist me in the answer.

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INVOLVED IN FORCE'S ACTIVITIES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I am referring specifically to the 17 RCMP officers who were charged before the Quebec courts. The allegation is that his government was directly involved in instructing those officers to become involved in inquiring into separatism in Quebec. I must say that I am somewhat suprised at the Prime Minister's lack of interest since it is suggested that he was directly involved in giving those instructions. Would the Prime Minister either confirm or deny the allegation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I remind hon. members that the allegations about senior authority for the conduct of the RCMP during the 1970s in relation to separatism was the subject of a Royal commission, one of the longest in the history of Canada. That Royal commission had full access to and examined all the records of the government and the RCMP, and conducted a very thorough investigation. The commission found that members of this government as well as former members were not involved in the acts which were found to have taken place by the commission.

Mr. Elzinga: I would remind the minister that the Chief Justice inquiring into that was at one time the Alberta party president of the Liberal party.

EXISTENCE OF PERTINENT DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister if he would give us an unequivocal assurance that no documentation relating to this case has been destroyed or will be destroyed.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will take note of the question because I want to be perfectly sure about the documentation to which the hon. member is referring. The file destructing policies have been discontinued in relation to documentation touching the matters that the McDonald Commission investigated. However, the RCMP is a large organization. There are tremendous accumulations of files, and file destruction policies do exist in the RCMP for the disposal of routine files which are no longer required or relevant to ongoing matters.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—CABINET RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The departmental review of the implementation of the James Bay and Norther Quebec Agreement was completed some months ago. Early this year that report's recommendations went to Cabinet.

The James Bay Cree, the Inuit, and other interested parties in the House and across the country are anxious to know what those recommendations are. In addition, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development wants to examine the adequacy of those recommendations. We would like to do so before our current reference expires at the end of this month. Would the minister tell us how soon we can expect those recommendations to come forth from Cabinet?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may be aware that the draft report—the so-called Tait Report—with respect to the alleged breaches in the James Bay Agreement, was sent both to the Cree and the Inuit on more or less a confidential basis. However, we dealt with them in an open fashion so we could get their comments to see if these recommendations were adequate and whether the analysis was good. We did get their comments and we incorporated them.

The Cabinet is in the midst of deliberating on them now, and I would expect a decision from cabinet reasonably soon. Of course it will be announced in the usual fashion at that time.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR TAX CUTS AND REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. For several years now the number one economic priority of the government has been to wrestle inflation to the ground. The United States government has been successful in bringing that country's inflation rate under control, largely by substantive government spending reductions and a 30 per cent across-the-board tax cut. Is the government considering, or will it consider, substantial reductions in government spending and a 30 per cent tax cut for Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Canadian government through its indexing policy, particularly as it applies to taxation, has effectively cut taxes for the past several years to a total of several billions of dollars. I believe that the United States is catching up to our good example.

Mr. Wenman: Unfortunately, the President of the United States has proven to be a more successful wrestler than our Prime Minister. Perhaps he could use some more coaching.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): In view of the serious damage being done to the Canadian economy as a result of high interest rates, is the Prime Minister considering pegging the Canadian dollar to the United States dollar? In order to stabilize the dollar further, has the Prime Minister considered intervening in the forward money markets as well as in the day-to-day money markets?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to the first question is no, Madam Speaker. The answer to the second question is a bit too complicated for me to answer with a yes or no. I can say that there is no intervention by the bank in the money market except to iron out occasional fluctuations.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,825—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Labour at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $1,745 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. (a) and (b) The directives used in selecting an employee for educational leave were those of the Treasury Board Secretariat on Training and Development (PMM-10); the department also followed the guidelines of the Secretary of State Department (5A-110-5) mainly to determine what expenses should be paid.

2, 3 and 4. Nil percentage.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,838—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of the Solicitor General at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $27,592 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions Governing Education, Training and Development, including Subsidization.

2, 3 and 4. Nil.

DSS—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,839—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Supply and Services for supply administration at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $21,510 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Purpose of leave in question: To grant education leave to an employee to train in Naval Architecture at the University of Michigan.

1. (a) The selection of candidates for education leave is governed by the DSS education leave and reimbursement guidelines/policy which is derived directly from TB PMM guideline 110-5. Recommendations of supply education committee made up of all assistant deputy ministers are presented to the deputy minister for his approval. (This case was subsequently submitted to the Treasury Board for final approval).

(b) This particular education leave submission was approved under TB 761920 guideline on the basis that it was consistent with anticipated departmental requirements.

2. The Marine and Industrial Machinery Products Centre of Science and Engineering Procurement Service has an ongoing requirement for naval architects and marine engineers for projects such as the frigate and icebreaker programs. The age profile within the product centre indicated a high rate of attrition over the next few years. Efforts to recruit individuals in these disciplines have been unsuccessful due in part to the extremely small number of graduates available both in Canada and abroad. To obtain the necessary expertise, it was decided that the most practical procedure would be to select an engineer in a closely related discipline from the current internal officer program, and provide the opportunity to obtain a master's degree in naval architecture.

We are not able to breakdown the cost of the education leave in terms of needed skills and acquisition of new equipment as requested by this inquiry since these are non-applicable.

3. There was no question of job redundancy, no acquisition of new equipment, nor change in the role of the agency, nor change in the capabilities of employees except for the reasons provided in item 2.

4. Of the 10 employees granted education leave for supply administration for FY 1976-77, 1977-78, 1978-79 (three years), eight are still in the employment of DSS. Information is unavailable on the remaining two who may have transferred to other government departments or left the public service altogether. We are using the above fiscal years given the fact that most education leaves are granted for a period of one to two years and the obligation on the part of the employee to return to work for a period equivalent to the education leave time or reimburse the government for all the financial support received during the education leave.

DVA—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,844—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Veterans Affairs at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $27,504 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the Public Service?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions Governing Education, Training and Development, including Subsidization.

2, 3 and 4. Nil.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,847—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the administration program at page 32.21, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) how does the department account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $17,680 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) The department carried out an extensive reorganization during the fiscal year 1979-80 during which the following offices were incorporated into the administration program: (1) Special Advisor, Policy Development; (2) Welfare Information Systems Branch; (3) Policy, Planning and Information Branch; and (4) Federal-Provincial Liaison.

It is therefore necessary to include the expenditures incurred by these offices for hospitality during the fiscal year 1978-79 with those of the administration program for 1978-79 before a valid comparison between the two fiscal years can be made.

The hospitality expenditures for these offices totalled $5,187 during the 1978-79 fiscal year and when added to the amount reported for the administration program of $14,483 result in an adjusted total of $19,670. Comparing this figure to the hospitality expenditures incurred in 1979-80 results, in fact, in a decrease in expenditure of $1,990 or about 10 per cent.

(b) The administration program made one payment in excess of $2,000 during the 1979-80 fiscal year. This payment was a reimbursement for expenditures incurred by Dr. J. A. Dupont on behalf of the department in extending hospitality to the Polish delegation during Polish-Canadian Health Week (November 5-12, 1979).

(c) The department is subject to the policy on hospitality found in chapter 360 of the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual.

(d) The amount of $17,680 is broken down on a percentage basis as follows:

(i)	Foreign visitors	38
(ii)	Canadian businessmen	4
(iii)	Provincial public servants	17
(iv)	Federal public servants	5
(v)	Ministerial exempt staff	5
(vi)	Members of Parliament	6
(vii)	Federal Crown Corporations executives	2
(viii)	Members of federal commissions, boards and councils	4
(ix)	Newspaper representatives	13
(x)	Representatives of Native Peoples' organizations	5
(xi)	Recruitment	1

CIDA—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,850—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of External Affairs for the Canadian International Development Agency at page 32.11, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the agency will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $63,563 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) and (c) The extension of hospitality on behalf of the government is governed by Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual, chapter 360.

(b) There were no individual hospitality claims in fiscal year 1979-80 of a value more than $2,000.

(d) Records are not maintained which would enable us to respond to this question without devoting an inordinate amount of time and reallocation of staff from regular duties.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA—HOSPITALITY EXPENSES

Question No. 2,856—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the National Museums of Canada at page 32.33, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality expenses (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $42,467 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows:

(a) During the fiscal year 1979-80 National Museums of Canada entered into one contract which was in excess of $2,000 re hospitality expenses. The company's name is Lolacher's Catering Ltd. located in Ottawa and the payment amounted to $2,501.

(b) N.M.C. Administrative Manual-Finance chapter VII sub-section 3000 derived from Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual, chapter 360, hospitality.

(c) Records are not maintained which would enable us to respond to this question without devoting an inordinate amount of time and reallocation of staff from regular duties.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA—HOSPITALITY OUTSIDE HEADQUARTERS

Question No. 2,857—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the National Museums of Canada at page 32.33, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality outside headquarters (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $17,692 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows:

(a) National Museums of Canada did not enter into any contract, for hospitality, where the amount was in excess of $2,000.

(b) N.M.C. Administrative Manual-Finance chapter VII sub-section 3000 derived from Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual, chapter 360, hospitality.

(c) Records are not maintained which would enable us to respond to this question without devoting an inordinate amount of time and reallocation of staff from regular duties.

STATISTICS CANADA—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,864—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Treasury Board for Statistics Canada at page 32.41, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $8,298 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: On the basis of Statistics Canada's 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada submission for hospitality payments, volume II, Page 32.41:

(a) There were no individual contracts for hospitality services of a value more than $2,000.

(b) The department uses the following guidelines to administer hospitality services: (i) Hospitality chapter 360, Treasury Board Canada, Administrative Policy Manual, (ii) departmental policy on hospitality No. 1980-4, (August 1, 1980). This essentially elaborates on chapter 360 of the Treasury Board Manual.

(c) The percentage distribution of the $8,298 hospitality expenses paid to the following categories in 1979-80 was:

		Per cent
(i)	Foreign visitors	9.36
(ii)	Canadian businessmen	6.92
(iii)	Provincial public servants	47.80
(iv)	Federal public servants	35.92
(v)	Ministerial exempt staff	—
(vi)	Members of Parliament	—
(vii)	Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly	—
(viii)	Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General	—
(ix)	Federal Crown corporation executives	—
(x)	Provincial Crown corporation executives
(xi)	Members of federal commissions, boards and councils
(xii)	Any other categories	—
	Total	100.00

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—PHOTOGRAPHY SERVICES

Question No. 2,882—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the health and social services program at page 32.23, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photography services (a) how does the department explain the 90 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) The department carried out an extensive reorganization during the fiscal year 1979-80, at which time the non-Medical Use of Drugs Directorate, previously with the Health Protection Branch, was incorporated into the Health Services and Promotion Branch. It is therefore necessary to include the additional expenditures for the Non-Medical Use of Drugs Directorate for photographic services with those of the Health Care Program. The combined expenditures would then amount to:

Health Care Program	$2,276
Non-Medical Use of Drugs	5,489
Combined total 1978/79	$7,765

The increase in photographic services for the branch would then be as follows:

Fiscal Year 1978/79	$ 7,765
Increase	$ 3,048

This is a percentage increase of only 39 p. cent. The increase can be explained by the higher cost of photographic services, materials and supplies and increased emphasis by the branch on the provision of promotional health-related films to the general public (See our reply to enquiry 2,979 answered this day).

(b) The primary service received was the provision of film duplication of health promotion films by the National Film Board to expand the departmental inventory of health related films. Other services were slide reproductions related to the design of health facilities, film processing, passport photographs, and photographic work related to health promotion posters and leaflets.

(c) The National Film Board received $7,552 for film duplication. The departmental Audio-Visual Services Section provided slide duplication and miscellaneous photographic services in the amount of $1,262. The balance of $1,999 consisted of miscellaneous photographic services provided by local firms in the production of health promotion posters and leaflets.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—TRAINING AND EDUCATIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,922—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Finance at page 32.11, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training and educational services (a) how does the department account for the 3,641 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): In so far as the Department of Finance Canada is concerned:

(a) The training and educational services cost referred to in the public accounts of 1978-79 should have been divided into two parts: Part one—Finance: As indicated on page 32-20 of the 1978-79 is $65,252. Part two—Anti-dumping Tribunal Program: The amount of $1,817 indicated on page 32-20 of the 1978-79 public accounts represent the expenditures of the Anti-dumping Tribunal.

The printer omitted the title of this program. Therefore, the 3,641 per cent increase is not valid if you compare the finance expenditures of 1978-79 of $65,252 to 1979-80 of $67,979 which is an increase of $2,727 or 4.18 per cent.

(b) The expenditures listed under "Training and Educational Services" include any courses taken under the different training programs offered by the Public Service Commission, any courses which are job related taken at universities or other institutions by employees in the department.

(c) Public Service Commission $2,500. All other individual contracts for training were less than $2,000.

EM&R—COMPUTER SERVICES

Question No. 2,938—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources under the earth sciences program at page 32.8, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to computer services (a) how does the department explain the 383 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) what was the name of each type of service (d) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: (a) Expenditures for computer services in the earth sciences program were $1,920,000 for 1978-79 and $1,992,143 for 1979-80. Therefore, there was an increase of only 4 per cent.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—PHOTOGRAPHY SERVICES

Question No. 2,945—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Finance for the Auditor General at page 32.11, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photography services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Photography Services, $29,496. (a) This entailed production work for an orientation film (English and French) on the introduction of comprehensive auditing. (b) Contracts over $2,000—The Communications Centre, Toronto, Ont. $28,100.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—TUITION FEES

Question No. 2,946—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Finance for the Auditor General at page 32.11, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to tuition fees (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Tuition Fees—$15,049. (a) Reimbursement of tuition fees to employees, based on successful completion of courses. All courses approved are related to the work of the Office. (b) There were no contracts of a value of more than $2,000.

DIAND—MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 2,976—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 32.15, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

(a)	Native Opportunities: Native People in the Performing Arts	$ 12,069.77
	The Child and the Moon (DIAND share of total $78,000)	13,500.00
		Total: $ 25,569.77
(b)	Native Opportunities: Native People in the Performing Arts	—Indian people, Indian school children, education and general audience.
	The Child and the Moon	—general audience

(c) There is no actual or anticipated cost recovery for these films by this department. Public Accounts lists an amount of $177,807. The balance of $152,235 is for the distribution and purchase of copies of motion pictures produced previously.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FILM AND SLIDE PRODUCTION SERVICES

Question No. 2,982—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of External Affairs for the Canadian International Development Agency at page 32.10, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to film and slide production services (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films (d) how does the agency account for the 64 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over than for 1978-79 (e) what services does this entail?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) and (b) "Last Day in the Life of Richard Johnson in Puno Peru", (a Charlotte Gobeil production), $52,172 for general television audiences. "Beyond the Rift Wall", (a Charlotte Gobeil production), $14,000 for general television audiences. "One World" (TV Ontario production), $15,000 for secondary schools and universities.

(c) Nil.

(d) The 64 per cent in expenditure over 1978-79 was the result of the purchase of copies of films on international development for distribution to Canadian viewers.

(e) See the answer to (d) above.

LAURENTIAN PILOTAGE AUTHORITY

Question No. 3,126—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the statement of operations of the Laurentian Pilotage Authority for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 125, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which notes that "the objects of the authority are to establish, operate and maintain an efficient pilot service . . . " and that the service operated at a net loss of $391,142 (a) how does the authority justify this loss with reference to the objective of operating an "efficient pilot service" and considering that it had a surplus of operating income over operating expenses for the previous year of $447,597 (b) has the authority taken measures to ensure it returns to a net operating income position and, if so (i) what measures (ii) how soon does the authority anticipate this position will be regained (iii) what steps is the authority taking to prevent a recurrence of this sort?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Laurentian Pilotage Authority advises as follows:

(a) The tariffs in force for the years 1979, 1980 and 1981 were calculated and published to cover our expenses, without profit or loss. For purposes of publication of tariffs, we must use a marine traffic forecast and an estimate of expenses. Any discrepancy between our forecasts and reality necessarily results in a profit or a loss.

(b)(i) In order to prevent repetition of a deficit, the authority was obliged to publish a second tariff in 1981. This tariff entered into force on September 1, 1981;

(ii) The authority forecasts that 1982 revenues will be sufficient to cover operational and capital expenses;

(iii) In each of the following years, a tariff will be published to ensure financial self-sufficiency.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Question No. 3,127—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the statement of operations and schedule of revenue and operating income (Loss) of the National Harbours Board for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 136, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which notes that the board operated at a net loss of $2,375,000, how does the board explain this loss?

2. Did seven of the 15 harbours listed in the schedule of revenue and operating income (loss) operate at a loss and, if so, what measures did the board take to improve the efficiency of the harbours so that such losses would not recur and on what date does the board anticipate these measures will have the desired result?

3. Did the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert show an increase in operating loss and, if so (a) was this contrary to the trend in the five other losing ports (b) what special conditions at these ports caused the increases and were the difficulties overcome (c) what steps has the Board taken to forestall a recurrence of these losses?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1. The National Harbours Board improved its financial performance from a net loss of $16,625,000 in 1978 to a net loss of $2,375,000 in 1979. The loss in 1979 is principally due to a strike at the port of Montreal that lasted five months and shut down the grain elevators which are major revenue generators of the corporation.

2. As reflected in the schedule of revenue and operating income (loss), seven of the 15 ports did have an operating loss for 1979. However, in total, the National Harbours Board has a positive operating income for the first time since 1971. This reflects the results of the application of the principle of full cost recovery through tariff increases, the reduction of manpower (9 per cent in 1979), the discontinuation of non-profitable activities and the modernization of facilities (cost: $50,144,000). The benefits derived from these measures are realized to a greater extent in 1980 where the National Harbours Board had a positive operating income of $18,821,000 and a net income of $17,360,000.

3. The ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert did show an increase in operating loss from 1978 to 1979.

(a) This was contrary to the improvement trend established by the five other losing ports.

(b) and (c) At the port of Churchill, the results are attributable to the lack of grain traffic. The grain volume allocated to the port is beyond the control of the National Harbours Board. Another factor was the upgrading of the port's facilities at a cost of $3,660,000 which consequently increased its depreciation and taxes by $233,000. In 1980, the operating loss is solely due to the lack of grain traffic.

At the port of Prince Rupert, the upgrading of facilities, at a cost of $1,780,000, caused depreciation expense and grants in lieu of taxes to be $183,000 higher, in total, than the previous year. However, it was an economically viable project and will earn a positive return that will more than offset the excess expenditures. The results are already showing, as evidenced by the fact that, in 1980, Prince Rupert earned $37,000 in operating income because of the project.

MRS. SHIRLEY THORPE

Question No. 3,549—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mrs. Shirley Thorpe hold a contract for cleaning services at the federal building in Prescott, Ontario in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville?

2. Did the contract expire on November 30, 1981 and was Mrs. Thorpe told just before finishing work on that date that it would not be renewed and, if so (a) on what date and by whom was the decision made not to renew the contract (b) what are all the reasons she was not given the courtesy of advance notice (c) who instructed that no advance notice be given and who should have given her that notice?

3. Is it the intention of the government to go back to the former system of using public works employees for maintenance in the building rather than using a contract?

4. Will Mrs. Thorpe be considered for such employment by the Department of Public Works and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Mrs. Thorpe's contract was awarded by letter for the 12-month period December 1, 1980 to November 30, 1981. Mrs. Thorpe was advised verbally in late October that a new contract would not be put out to tender call.

(a) District management made the decision on or about August 27, 1981.

(b) The letter of contract award dated December 8, 1980 to Mrs. Thorpe indicated clearly the contract term and she was also verbally advised during the month of October 1981.

(c) No instructions were issued that advance notice not be given. As indicated above advance notice was given to Mrs. Thorpe.

3. Yes, for the portion of the work under question.

4. All applicants were considered. A competition was held in accordance with Public Service Commission regulations. The position was offered to the successful candidate who has accepted the position. The additional background information regarding this competition is of a personal nature.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Question No. 3,619—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were equalization payments made to the province of Quebec based on the census count of June, 1976?

2. By province, what was the percentage of the number of persons missed relative to the number counted, as a result of the special survey following the 1976 census to estimate the number of persons missed?

3. Were equalization payments made to Quebec adjusted as a result of the special survey and (a) if so, by what amount (b) if not, what is the estimated amount that any adjustment would have been?

4. What are the principal reasons why persons are missed in the census count in Quebec?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Finance and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. Yes, for the 1976-77 fiscal year.

2. The proportion of persons missed by the 1976 census, as estimated by a special survey conducted following the census, is shown below by province expressed as per cent of the total population:

	Per cent
Newfoundland	1.10
Prince Edward Island	0.38
Nova Scotia	0.86
New Brunswick	2.16
Quebec	2.95
Ontario	1.52
Manitoba	1.07
Saskatchewan	1.33
Alberta	1.49
British Columbia	3.13
Average for all provinces (10)	2.04

The estimates above are subject to sampling and measurement errors. The sampling errors can and have been estimated.

3. Section 3 of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Regulations defines the population of a province to be used for equalization and EPF purposes in each fiscal year as "the official estimate of the population of that province on the first day of June of that fiscal year as most recently estimated by Statistics Canada", for years other than census years, and as census population data for census years. The official estimates and the census population data are not adjusted for the result of the special survey. If the adjustment had been made, Quebec would have received an additional $62.8 million in 1976-77.

4. Persons are missed by the census either because, in spite of best efforts, the household in which they live is missed by census takers, or because the residents completing the census form fail to include everyone living in the household. There are no special reasons for missing persons applicable uniquely to Quebec. Indeed, in the 1976 census the difference in the rate for Quebec and all other provinces was not statistically significant. Comparable rates from the 1981 census are not as yet available.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND LOANS

Question No. 4,227—Mr. Mazankowski:

For (a) 1980 (b) 1981, by province (i) how many loans were granted to farmers and small businesses under the provisions of the Small Business Development Bond (ii) what was the total amount of the loans (iii) what was the average interest rate charged (iv) how many loans, if any, were defaulted?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)):

(i) & (ii) Distribution of Benefits of the Small Business Development Bond Program by Province

Province	Small Business Development Bond
	Number	Amounts ($ millions)
Newfoundland	215	24.8
Prince Edward Island	77	10.1
Nova Scotia	358	45.8
New Brunswick	406	44.8
Quebec	1716	239.7
Ontario	4724	679.6
Manitoba	771	124.5
Saskatchewan	1224	189.3
Alberta	1788	311.8
British Columbia	2467	406.0
OTHER	58	10.6
All Canada	13804	2087.0

These estimates provide information on the number of small businesses and farms and the amounts of loans issued to these entities under SBDB program for the period ending April 14, 1982. The SBDB programs started in December, 1979 and ended in January, 1982. It is not possible to provide this information on an annual basis. No adjustments are made for bonds that are issued but where elections had not been filed with Revenue Canada as of April 14, 1982.

(iii) In general, the average rate of interest charged on these bonds is half the prime rate plus one to three percentage points.

(iv) No information is currently available on loans, if any, that were defaulted.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—METRICATION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough) moved:

That this House deplores the continuation of the policy of the government of enforcing compulsory metrication in Canada which is causing substantial hardship to all sectors of the Canadian economy and contributing to the ever-increasing rate of bankruptcies and strongly recommends that the government immediately implement a moratorium on all metric related prosecutions, now or to be commenced, and that the necessary action be taken to forthwith abandon compulsory metrication in Canada.

He said: Madam Speaker, today I will deal with the subject of enforced implementation of metric from four positions. First, it has come to my attention that the Metric Commission is so desperate to regain its credibility and justify its very existence that it has now resorted and fallen to the temptation of escalating untruths and distortions.

I am also saddened to report that it would appear that certain ministers in the House today are of the same opinion and that, in order to keep this on track, they now find it necessary to circulate what I consider to be untruths and distortions, because the ministers who are in the House today are not saying the same thing as the minister has said over the past nine years. I will clearly document some of the statements of some of the former Liberal cabinet ministers and their position on metric.

The third concern I would like to point out, as mentioned in our motion, is that it would appear, at least to the Conservative party, that this imposition of enforced metric is creating unnecessary hardships on the business community, not to mention all of the other burdens which it has to bear at this time because of economic conditions. I will document some of those hardships.

Finally, in the summation of my remarks today, I will deal with the fallacy of the government trying to convince the Canadian people and this House of Commons that, in order to do business in the world, it is mandatory that Canada go metric. That simply is not the case, and I will deal with that in more detail later.

First, let us deal with some of the history of metric and some of the fallacies as stated by the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in complete contradiction to the original understanding of metric. I must point out in my preamble that as opposition spokesman on the subject of weights and measures, I am not opposed to metric. I used the metric system for 25 years in business. I was a fuel oil distributor and a General Motors car dealer. I know why General Motors went metric, and I know why the fuel oil business went metric as well, I will cover that in detail later.

In commencing my remarks, I would like to refer to the statement of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on "Canada AM" just a few weeks ago. The minister said: "In general, the public has support for metric, industry supports metric and the consumers support metric." That statement was made by the same minister who, today in this House of Commons, had the nerve to say that Conservatives are trying to "brew the pot", to use his exact words.

Earlier this past month the minister also stated that this movement is motivated by a tiny group of fanatics. When we presented a petition to the House on April 6 just passed, comprising 135,327 signatures, he also had the nerve to say that that petition was the result of misleading and false representations and information. That was simply not true. If the minister were honourable, he would consider the withdrawal of that statement. Instead, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, he made a commitment to the Canadian people, wisely or not, to respond personally and individually to each of those 135,327 signatures. I remind the minister that prior to that petition being presented, 52,000 signatures were presented to this House by myself in the same year on behalf of constituents from right across Canada. Concerning petitions presented by other Members of Parliament, as recently as this past week another 14,000 signatures came in from one area. Compounded, over 300,000 petitions have been presented to the House of Commons in less than two years.

Mr. Darling: And more to come.

Mr. Domm: These petitions have not been against metric but, rather, against forced metric. That has clearly not been the history of how we arrived at the point today where we have the implementation of the Metric Systems International. It was never intended to be forced. I will deliver some statements by three former ministers of industry, trade and commerce of the Liberal government, two ministers of small business and one minister of consumer and corporate affairs, to back up the statement that it was not to be mandatory.

I would like to refer to the minister's statement on this same TV show, "Canada AM". He said that there was a white paper, an agreement in this House in 1970, that metric should take place. He was right, but he totally misled the people of Canada, because that agreement in 1970 was the original white paper on metric. I have it here in my hand. It was presented to this House of Commons by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), the then minister of industry, trade and commerce. I refer the minister to page one of that white paper where it says:

• (1210)

No legislative action is contemplated which would make mandatory a general use of metric in place of inch-pound units.

The minister is misleading the Canadian public when he says that all political parties in Parliament approved the implementation in 1970 and 1971 when it approved this white paper. I will cover in more detail what the Metric Commission is saying. The minister should be fully aware of the fact that on page 10 of the same white paper, the one we all agreed to, section 4.1.7 states:

Because of the close ties between the United States and Canada in science, technology, industry and commerce, each country has a special interest in the course likely to be followed by the other in respect of metric conversion . . . The question is a complex one because the United States, which is Canada's main export market, has not made the decision to convert.

Let us go on to the voluntary aspect with the agreement of the sectors involved. We are dealing now with one sector that did not agree in the beginning to move. We are dealing with weights and measures in the food industry. That is fish, meat, fruit, vegetables and other weighted-out retail products.

What did the retail sector say? I have here a copy of a letter sent to the Right Hon. Joe Clark by a major corporate manager, Patrick Carson, the corporate planning development manager for Loblaws. What did they think about it? They sat on the Metric Commission for many years. I quote from that letter to document clearly the position of that metric sector:

This letter, as you can see, is self-explanatory and for detailed information represents the wishes of approximately 85 per cent of those Canadian retailers responsible for food consumed at home.

To appreciate the efforts required to achieve this consensus statement being forwarded to Mr. Lapointe, one requires to have been exposed to the steamrolling tactics of the Metric Commission hierarchy, for a period of not less than three years.

Having objected on behalf of my particular company, for this period, to the strategy and methods imposed by the MCC it is indeed satisfying to know that the power of a government's bureaucracy is not always allowed to prevail over the wishes of its citizens—

Thank you for allowing time for this important issue to be raised on our behalf, and I am certain on behalf of many Canadians.

The letter was signed by Patrick Carson, corporate and planning development of Loblaws.

What was that consensus taken in 1981, four months before the order in council was passed by this negligent Liberal government which does not really care what the people want? Here is the consensus of the sector dealing with the implementation of metric. I quote:

The working group on scales in the retail food industry met in Vancouver on Tuesday, 28 April, 1981 and achieved the following consensus:

1. The retail food industry members of the working group wish to recommend strongly to the government that the scheduling of retail food scale conversion to metric units in Canada, which appeared in the Canada Gazette Part 1 of 28 February, 1981, be delayed so that conversion will take place at a time closer to when retail food scales will be converted in the United States.

That is the consensus. They go on to say:

2. If the government decides to continue with the implementation of these regulations in January 1982 in spite of the above recommendations, then the retailers will continue to manage the process—

What else would they do? Corporate citizens do not intend to go to jail because they do not like the order in council. However, for this government to state over national television and at press conferences that metric is being implemented because the people want it and the sector agrees is totally untrue. There should be an apology in this House of Commons for the falsehoods and misapprehensions of this government.

I would also like to read what was said by former Liberal cabinet ministers. On March 17, 1975, Herb Gray was then minister of industry, trade and commerce. He would have people believe that ministers, government and all parties agree with metrication regardless of what the United States did. I quote Herb Gray from page 4180 of Hansard:

—change would likely be closely related to progress in the United States toward conversion . . . it may prove wise to allow the timing and process of conversion to be closely related to the development of United States practice.

That was the Liberal policy in 1975 before the government passed the order in council. The hon. member was the minister; he should have been responsible. That is what he told this House of Commons. I would now like to read a more recent answer from Hansard for April 23, 1980, given by the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe). I asked the minister this:

In light of the adverse reaction and effects to small businesses and consumers, will the minister responsible for industry, trade and commerce assure this House—and answer the question—that he will allow full parliamentary discussion on the subject of the implementation of the metric system before it is forced on business communities across Canada?

The minister replied:

If members opposite will please quiet down, Madam Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member that the suggestion he just made will be examined.

In my supplementary question I asked:

—why must we force metrication on the people of Canada—

The minister responded:

—the government has no intention of imposing the metric system manu militari and that it has always been the policy of the Liberal party and government of taking care of the people first, not regulations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I am quite certain the hon. member is doing this inadvertently, but he is referring to ministers by name. I would ask that he refer to them by their ministry or constituency.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a statement made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On January 14, 1981 I asked the minister:

—is it the intention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to lock up stores, put bans around cash registers and prohibit stores from doing business—

The minister replied:

—we shall not resort to the methods the hon. member would have us use.

Those were his words, totally contrary to what he is saying today.

Let us look at a couple of other former Liberal cabinet ministers. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is infamous for referring to all-party agreement on enforced metric. The debate is not on metric but enforced metric. We are not debating the pros and cons of metric over Imperial measurement. I want to quote what was said on March 17, 1975 while introducing a motion to approve the program of guideline dates for metric conversion. The then minister of industry, trade and commerce, Alistair Gillespie, stated as reported at page 4158 of Hansard:

Every effort will be made to co-ordinate work between the two countries so as to obtain the greatest benefits for the Canadian program.

At page 4160 he stated:

Concern has also been expressed that the cost of conversion might impose an undue hardship on some small businesses.

Len Marchand, then responsible for small business, said at page 2230 of Hansard for December 21, 1976:

—the implementation dates are not mandatory, they serve as guidelines for each . . . company or organization in a given sector . . . The bill before us today is the first of four such bills—

We have never seen any bills in this House of Commons. We were guaranteed at that time by the minister that that was the first of four such bills before the virtual completion of the final or implementation phase of metric conversion. There are 90 acts affected and not one of those bills has ever been received in this House to this date.

The matter foremost in people's minds is, how did we get from the understanding of a voluntary approach to metric to a forced approach to metric? The Los Angeles Times figured it out. It sent someone to Canada a month ago to interview people to find out how we moved away from our understanding with the United States. Mr. Paul Robinson, ambassador of the United States to Canada, has said it would cost Canadian jobs because we cannot operate in a form of measurement foreign to the United States. I think that Mr. Robinson, the American Ambassador to Canada, is speaking the same lines Liberal cabinet ministers have spoken in this House from 1970 until today.

• (1220)

I have a quotation from the acting executive director of the Metric Commission, Mr. Pat Gampathy. First of all, I have this report in the Los Angeles Times for February 11, 1982:

—Canada needed to keep pace with conversion in the United States, its dominant trading partner.

Asked what his comment was, the acting executive director of the Metric Commission said:

What we do in the retail stores within Canada has no bearing on selling to the United States.

That shows me what little this acting executive director of the Metric Commission knows about retailing in border cities that rely on tourist business from the United States. He says it has no bearing, it does not matter, that we can deal in anything we want to in Niagara Falls, Ontario, regardless of what the measurement system is in our principal tourist business with the United States. That is simply not the case. That is a lot of hogwash. There is no truth in it whatsoever.

I now refer to an article in the New York Times of March 14, 1982:

The United States ambassador, Paul H. Robinson, Jr., told Canadian reporters that metric conversion was "rubbish" and opposed by most Americans. He warned that it might create trade problems between the United States and Canada.

The Canadian Government was not pleased with Mr. Robinson's remarks since one of its basic arguments in favor of the metric system was Canada's need as a trading nation to adapt its weights and measures to the predominant system in the world.

We will find out how predominant the system is in the world in just a moment. I want now to deal with what I have currently been considering putting before the RCMP for investigation.

The minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, has a conflict of interest in his position as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs responsible for the protection of the consumers of Canada against false advertising. I have risen in this House on three occasions now, going right up to three different ministers, trying to get an answer as to how come these people can do two things in the Metric Commission. They can control the media through a $1.8 million advertising tool, while at the same time spreading false rumours about how things are in Canada.

If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has no intention of investigating articles like this full page article in The Globe and Mail, full of falsehoods and untruths, I think the RCMP should start investigating some of these statements. Statement one: "Except for retailers' scales, there is no compulsion in Canada". That is totally wrong. There are three sectors, and the minister knows it. I suggest that he bring that to the attention of the Metric Commission. Statement two: "The provinces have been a full partner in the conversion". That is not true.

What is happening in regard to the conversion program? Let us take a look at the situation with the Alberta government. I am reading from a CP story of May 13, 1982:

The Alberta government may intervene in a court case against a Calgary woman charged with advertising carpets for sale by the square yard, Attorney General Neil Crawford told the legislature Tuesday. Crawford told reporters he is not sure of all the facts. He said, however, if the charge was laid simply because the carpet company advertised in both measures, it should not be prosecuted.

Metric is not being forced, with the support of the Alberta government. Let us take a look at Manitoba's government. Let us see what is going on in their legislature, as reported by the Canadian Press on April 30, 1982:

Manitoba should tell the federal government to keep its metric snoopers out of stores in the province, Opposition Leader Sterling Lyon said Friday.

Lyon told the legislature the federal government apparently is taking legal action against carpet stores in other provinces that offer goods for sale in imperial measure as well as the metric system.

He said Attorney General Roland Penner should take the lead and advise the federal government such anti-business action would not be appreciated in Manitoba.

That does not indicate support on the part of the provincial governments. Let us move to Prince Edward Island. This is a CP story from Charlottetown, P.E.I.:

Canada's conversion to metric will be costly for this island's potato producers, says Norman Ramsay, chairman of the P.E.I. Potato Producers Association.

Legislation to enforce metric will cost producers a great deal of money to buy new scales, he said.

Ramsay also said the continued use of the Imperial System in the U.S. will aggravate the local farmers' problems.

The most serious statement of all in this full page article is a statement on the direct cost. Here is a statement by a commissioner—imagine, a commissioner. Cleo Mowers, also an editor of a western paper, obtains almost a full page story. Talk about conflict of interest! We have a metric commissioner writing an article in support of metric as an unbiased person, yet deriving his income from a stipend he receives from the minister responsible for the Metric Commission. He is spreading this kind of propaganda.

Item three: "The direct cost of forced conversion is about $1.50 per Canadian". I have not got my calculator here, but $1.50 a Canadian to me means approximately, if we have about 23 million population, a cost of $38 million or $40 million.

The minister thinks that he as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs can implement metric in the retail sectors of this country with the Metric Commission spending $50 million to date. There is $3 million for payroll, $2 million for advertising, and I do not know how much for sales promotion since they do not have to tell us what they are doing. All we know is that they have $12 million budget this year, for 12 months. They sit in an ivory tower here in Ottawa, feeding their insatiable appetite for tax dollars, the survival of the fittest, the last Metric Commission on the North American continent as of September, the last area in the free world that forced metric on people.

Even Japan has a voluntary implementation program. There is no law in Russia to prevent someone from selling a handful of beans or a pound of bananas. The point is this, that we are less free in this part of the free world than many people are in parts of the world that use the old European method. I will deal with some of those areas, in conclusion.

What does British Columbia say? Listen to one statement by the minister of education, who feels the same way as a great number of educators in different parts of the country who say that to teach only metric in our school systems is a deficiency. If we can teach French and English and graduate children out of our schools better equipped to enter the world, surely we can teach Imperial measurement in our school system, enabling those schoolchildren to deal and trade with the United States, our major trading partner which is not going to metric but going back to Imperial.

Shell Oil has just announced that in the state of Florida they are converting their pumps at considerable expense back to Imperial. So has Amoco, so has Chevron in California. Yet the Metric Commission spreads its last piece of propaganda, that the service stations in the United States are going to metric, and that the highway signs in the United States are going to metric, both in the same article. Hogwash! I drove to Chicago and saw only one metric highway sign, by way of introduction, between Windsor and Chicago. Is that changing their highway signs? When you get to Florida you see them converting the pumps back to Imperial. If the minister thinks that is moving to metric, then he is totally out of touch. That admission indicates that he knows about as much about metric as he knows about the small business community when he says it can operate without a post office.

The RCMP investigation stems from the fact that the Metric Commission printed propaganda with the use of government presses. The commission handed that propaganda out in grocery stores and retail outlets across Canada, and that propaganda said that the Metric Commission was set up by the government in June of 1971. The Metric Commission was set up by an order in council. This governmet never passed any piece of legislation which set up the Metric Commission and gave it a mandate to bring in metric by force. As a result of a white paper we set up the Metric Commission with two main principles in mind. One was that we would change at the same time the United States changed. The second was that it would be voluntary and with the blessing of the sectors involved. I have proved without doubt that that is not the course that this government is on.

Hon. members on the government side have received notifications of petitions from their constituents. They have not brought those petitions into the House of Commons. They have denied their constituents the opportunity to have petitions protesting forced metric presented in this House. Is that democratic? Is that the parliamentary procedure under which we are supposed to operate? A Member of Parliament does not have to agree with a petition but, out of respect for his constituents, he should present their petitions to the House of Commons.

By going metric we are supposed to be able to do business with foreign countries. The Canadian government has just signed a contract with Japan to fill one of the largest orders even for prefabricated homes. The Japanese are moving back to Imperial and conventional two by fours. I am told the Japanese are doing this because they have to manufacture four by eights and two by fours to ship to the American market. Our Canadian metric homes are of no use to the Japanese people because a four by eight sheet of plywood will not fit a metric home, and neither will squares for roofs or blocks or bricks.

The whole world is not moving to metric. We have large orders, the most recent one to Velan Incorporated. Velan Incorporated has just received a multimillion dollar order in Montreal to supply Imperial valves to a Russian-designed factory overseas which was Hungarian-built with Czechoslovakian participation. The order is totally in Imperial.

I have here a whole list of companies from all over the world which are ordering from Canada in Imperial. Orders in Imperal are placed with the automotive industry, the aviation industry and the aerospace industry. Orders for prefabricated homes stipulate Imperial. Orders for valves stipulate Imperial. The list is endless. And this government would have the people of Canada believe, through false advertising, that the whole world is going to metric.

Time will not permit me to list all the business that are going out of business. I see some smiles on the government side of the House. We should not be driving business out. We do not need another cross to bear. Loss of business is the cost of conversion to metric, for which there has never been proven cost justification given by this or any other government.

When the Conservatives were in office, they threw out the order in council making metric in retail stores the only form of measurement and allowed stores to do what they wanted in their sectors. In Peterborough the stores immediately went back to Imperial and now, while half of Canada is converting to metric, Peterborough is receiving cheques from the present federal government to cover the cost of their conversion back to Imperial. There are grounds for objection. People in the canning industry told this government they would not change their cans from six-ounce, ten-ounce and twelve-ounce sizes but that they would agree to put comparable metric measurements beside the Imperial measurements on the labels. They have the right idea. We do not need added costs. We do not need to exclude Imperial or Canadian measurement from use. There is no wish on the part of the Conservative opposition to bring about anything but the right to choose, when that can be justified on the basis of cost and when the sector involved requests that. The government says the majority wants forced metric. I hope sooner or later this government will come to the conclusion that it is not listening to the majority.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to follow the hon. member and to address this subject. The hon. member has dreamed up a cause and has devoted a lot of time and energy to trying to stop the clock. In today's world I think it is sad to see such a performance.

I believe metric should have nothing whatever to do with party politics, any more than whether motorists should be driving on the right or left side of the road and whether they should be free to choose. Metric is simply a matter of public convenience and economic necessity. Its merit has been recognized in Canadian law since 1871. In fact, it was the Tories who took the first step toward moving to metric.

Mr. Domm: Not forced.

Mr. Ouellet: The first Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, was the first to bring in a legislative measure dealing with metrication. He would be turning in his grave if he could listen to the hon. member speaking today.

I understand that the vast majority of the members of the hon. member's party are away today doing more important things. There are only a few left to discuss this lost cause.

In the modern world today I think one has to be dumb to oppose metrication. Metric has been requested by scientific Canadians, industrial Canadians, businessmen and consumer organizations in the country. Canada's scientific, industrial and trading communities appreciate the advantages of metric, and more and more pressure for its increased use has developed. I think former Prime Minister Diefenbaker reacted favourably to the movement to metric when he was Prime Minister, but he did not move to metric conclusively; therefore, more pressure was brought to bear. In late 1968 and soon after a number of prominent organizations in Canada asked the government to give some leadership. I could give a list of all the associations which at the time requested the Canadian government to go metric.

Mr. Domm: Not by force.

Mr. Ouellet: The Canadian Pharmaceutical Association—

Mr. Domm: Not by force.

Mr. Ouellet: —the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers—

Mr. Domm: Not by force.

Mr. Ouellet: —the Chemical Institute of Canada—

Mr. Domm: Not by force.

Mr. Ouellet: —the Engineering Institute of Canada.

Mr. Domm: Not by force.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. gentleman is pretty nervous. I appreciate that he would be nervous today, but I invite him to relax. He had his time in front of the camera. He is now all shook up. I think he should relax, calm down—

Mr. Pepin: And enjoy himself.

Mr. Ouellet: —and listen. The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has received all the documentation and information necessary for a person to understand. After listening to him today and after seeing him twist the facts, I can only conclude that he does not want to read the facts correctly, that he does not want to see the facts correctly or else he is unable to do so.

• (1240)

I was talking about other associations which asked the Canadian government to go metric, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation Inc., the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Teachers' Federation and the Canadian Construction Association, just to name a few.

These associations put pressure on the government and asked it to go metric. In late 1968 or early 1969, in response to this perceived public demand, the government commissioned a committee of senior officials to investigate the demand, need, advantage and practicability of conversion to metric. Two years later this body issued a report recommending conversion, which at the time was considered both inevitable and desirable. That report was adopted by the government and became the white paper of 1970.

The Canadian government did not convert Canada to metric; the Liberal party did not convert Canada to metric; it happened by public demand. It was done and continues to be done by the people and by business, at their request and for their benefit. The white paper was submitted to the people's elected representatives who, through their House leaders in Parliament, said clearly and unequivocally: "We agree; let's get on with it."

This also required the partipation of the provincial governments and all ten Premiers agreed that the federal plan suited their own plans to convert to metric. Signs on the highways in Canada have not been put there by the federal government; they have been put there by the provincial authorities.

If the hon. member for Peterborough does not like it, he should not go around trying to make the people of Canada believe that metric has been forced on them and that it is a plan made by the Canadian government and the Liberal party. As I understand it, there are not many Liberal provincial governments in Canada but there are metric signs in every province.

In the education system today our children are taught in metric. Does the federal government, the Liberal Party of Canada or the provincial authorities run the education system in Canada? I want to tell the hon. member for Peterborough that again he is not telling the truth when he tells the people of Canada that metric has been imposed on them by the Liberal Party of Canada and by the Canadian government. Children are taught metric in school and this is through the will, desire and understanding of the provincial governments despite what the hon. member for Peterborough says.

I want to say one other thing about the voluntary aspect of metrication, Mr. Speaker. To implement such a system in Canada requires public participation. This was obtained through some thousands of volunteers representing every sector of the Canadian economy who over the last ten years organized the details of the conversion in their own sectors.

From the outset it was planned that the conversion would be as voluntary as possible, with a minimum of compulsion, but it was acknowledged that converting to metric measurement would probably require compulsion at some point. The white paper that the hon. member who spoke before me referred to and which has been unanimously endorsed in this House anticipated the compulsory conversion of retail scales.

Mr. Domm: Read it!

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member is asking me to read it. If he has not read it after having launched this type of campaign for the last year and a half, that shows quite clearly that he is not serious with his campaign.

Mr. Domm: I read it. You read it.

Mr. Ouellet: The House debated and passed two metric bills, one in 1971 and another one in 1975. It unanimously supported the resolution to approve metric conversion programs.

When the hon. member for Peterborough and the very few who follow him try to say that Parliament never approved metrication and that it was done by order in council, they are not relating what really took place. There was a lengthy debate in Parliament and there was a request by the opposition party for a formal bill. Authority for this was given by the House of Commons in 1976 through amendments to the Weights and Measures Act which specifically authorized the cabinet, by order in council, to make only metric legal in retail trade. This House approved that bill unanimously and the Conservative party voted for it in 1976.

That a few of them do not want to remember this today and regret their vote is quite possible, but the vast majority who are still around know that this is the case. The hon. member for Peterborough was not here at that time and he can say what he wants, but when he tries to convey to the public of Canada that metrication has not been amply discussed in Parliament and has not received the sanction of legislation, he is not correct. He is dead wrong.

The experience of other countries which have recently completed conversion, such as Australia and New Zealand, is that at the retail trade level there must be compulsion. The Canadian retail food industry told the government that if its scales were to be converted this should be compulsory for all merchants; so the government, having been authorized and instructed by Parliament to do so and having been requested by the industry to do so, has complied.

To pretend today that there is compulsory metrication in Canada because of the Government of Canada is not to tell the truth. The reality is that there are only three sectors where compulsory decisions have been made. In those three cases it has been done at the request of the industry—

Mr. Domm: That is not true.

Mr. Ouellet: —and for very good reasons.

Mr. Domm: That is definitely wrong.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member does not like to hear the facts. He is showing by his constant opposition to what I am saying that he does not want to know the truth.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. The minister is misleading the House. He said there was a vote on metrication and that we voted for it. There was not a vote. He does not know what he is talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member will have a chance to enter the debate and make his point.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) was in the House in 1976. I challenge him to say that the bill that was passed in 1976 was not passed.

• (1250)

Mr. Towers: You say there was a vote; I say there was not.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member is talking about a vote, and I am telling him that this bill was passed unanimously in Parliament.

Mr. Towers: You said there was a vote, and there—

Some hon. Members: There was a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, in order to pass legislation you have to vote upon it.

Mr. Towers: There was no vote.

Mr. Ouellet: There is a recorded vote at the request of those who oppose the passing of legislation. Five members stand up in the House and request a recorded vote which allows them to register their opposition. This bill was passed in 1976 unanimously and approved on their reading by all members of Parliament who were present. The hon. member, who was a member of Parliament in 1976, did not stand up and ask for a recorded vote to register his opposition. He was either not present or he did not want to oppose metrication at the time. He might have changed his mind since, but that is an entirely different situation.

Mr. Towers: There was no vote.

Some hon. Members: There was a vote!

Mr. Ouellet: I want to say that 102 sector committees have been quietly working on the voluntary conversion of the rest of the Canadian economy. Many have completed their work and most are nearly finished now. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that until three years ago this was truly a non-partisan, non-political affair for the people, and it was surely done by the people of Canada in a very non-partisan, very practical and very intelligent way. It was perceived to have broad public support and to be in response to public demand in the best interests of the Canadian economy.

It was inevitable, and to a certain degree natural, that there would be a certain measure of public resistance. In the general election of 1979 the Progressive Conservative candidate in Peterborough, seeing some pockets of resistance there, inflamed the debate, encouraged reluctance, distorted the record, and put the whole responsibility on the Liberal government. In so doing, he was able to win a seat in Parliament for the riding of Peterborough. Well, he might have been successful at distorting the facts in his own riding, but now he comes to Ottawa and tries to distort the facts and make a case among his colleagues. Judging by the number I see around him today, he has not been very successful in convincing many of his colleagues to support his fight.

Mr. Domm: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister knows we have a conference today which our party members are attending. I wish he would—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker. The party has a convention, which is much more important. So they are there and a few dumb MPs like him are here wasting there time and using up the time of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) on a point of order.

Mr. Neil: I would ask the minister to withdraw that remark; he called us "dumb". That is an unparliamentary expression and he should withdraw it. If there is any dumbness around here, we know where it is.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed. I am sorry, I want to withdraw. I am talking about the hon. member for Peterborough who thinks it is more appropriate to waste his time here than to go to the national convention of his party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Peterborough on a point of order.

Mr. Domm: If he is referring to the hon. member for Peterborough, as he says, then I would ask him to withdraw the word "dumb".

Mr. Ouellet: If it bothers the hon. member, I indeed appreciate his sensitivities; but I think it is unfortunate that an hon. member would think it is more important to attack a program which was implemented in Canada for the good of our country and which will bring much more value to our commercial activities that to go to his own party convention. I regret that he finds his time is spent more usefully in this House today than with the numerous other members of his party now having their convention.

Mr. Towers: Sad, sad.

An hon. Member: Nothing better to say.

Mr. Ouellet: The reasons we moved to metric in Canada are numerous and the benefits of metric conversion are well known. However, I would like to put them on record because obviously the hon. member has not seen them. Metric saves classroom time. Training in metric creates Canadian jobs.

Mr. Domm: For civil servants.

Mr. Ouellet: Metric means fewer package sizes for consumers. Metric makes shopping easier and it simplifies calculations. Metric eases international communications. These are six fundamental reasons why we moved to metric in Canada.

Mr. Towers: You are unbelievable.

Mr. Ouellet: The exclusive use of the metric system in our schools simplifies the teaching of mathematics and many of the natural sciences. This has resulted in an estimated saving of 5 per cent to 10 per cent in the time it takes to teach the school curriculum. This time can be and is being used to teach more useful things than the number of feet in a mile or yards in a furlong. Secondly, trading in metric creates Canadian jobs.

Mr. Domm: Who wrote that?

Mr. Ouellet: Canada needs to produce goods in metric to trade with a predominantly metric world.

Mr. Domm: The United States.

Mr. Ouellet: Our standard of living depends on our export trade. Over 31 per cent of every Canadian dollar is earned from exports, versus less than 6 per cent to the United States. Producing cars and parts in metric for the United States by itself is keeping over 100,000 Canadians employed. With our newsprint, wood pulp, petroleum and natural gas industries also converted to metric, close to 50 per cent of our exports, even to the U.S., are now described in metric units.

The idea put forward by the opposition that we should not convert to metric because the Americans are not converting is totally false, Mr. Speaker. The vast majority of American industry doing business with Canada and throughout the world is already totally metric. These American companies who have subsidiaries in Canada have brought metric to Canada through those subsidiaries. Therefore, this argument that we should not go metric because the Americans are supposedly slowing down their conversion is totally wrong.

When we resume at two o'clock I will continue on this subject—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Ouellet: —and read a letter from President Ronald Reagan on this subject.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Ouellet: When the House adjourned at one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was saying, quite contrary to what was said by the hon. member opposite, that President Reagan in the United States is supporting the effort to go metric. He wrote a letter dated April 6, 1982 to members of the American National Metric Council on the occasion of their eight annual conference. He wrote:

> My administration supports the policy of voluntary metrication expressed in the Metric Conversion Act of 1975.

Mr. Domm: Voluntary?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: The Conservatives are excited because the letter mentioned voluntary metrication. Voluntary metrication is what we have in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: The President's letter continues:

> As the representative of the private sector in this area, your council fulfils an important role in facilitating such conversion. I look forward to continued co-operation with your organization as we work together to make the United States more competitive in world markets.

If it is good enough for the United States, it is indeed good for Canada. What we are trying to do is to be more competitive in the world markets. This is one of the reasons we are going metric.

I want to return to two aspects which were developed by the opposition. One has to do with the impression that we are imposing metrification, making it compulsory and not voluntary. More than 100 sectors of the industry are operating voluntarily within the framework of the mandate of the white paper on metrication.

There have been only three area where regulation have been passed making metrication compulsory. In these three cases the passive of regulations was done at the insistence and request of the industry. The first one has to do with gasoline sales by the litre. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was at the request of the gasoline industry that appropriate regulations were passed to make the sale of gasoline by the litre mandatory.

Mr. Clarke: Blackmail.

Mr. Ouellet: The second area is that of home furnishings. The third one is the retail food scale sector. In these two cases regulations were passed clearly at the request of the industry—

Mr. Domm: That's nonsense.

Mr. Ouellet: —and at the request of consumer associations in Canada. Why was that done? It was done for a very simple reason. It was felt that to do otherwise would create confusion and difficulties. As well, it would not have been in the best interests of the consumer. The industry stated that if appropriate regulations were not passed in the area of home furnishings and that of retail food scales, it would be incorrect and unjust for many retailers or clients.

The special committee of the home furnishings industry requested, after unanimous approval by all the various national associations that were involved in this special committee, that regulations be passed to make sure that metric conversion would take place in all areas at the same time. This decision was based on the reasonable assumption that someone buying carpeting would likely be wanting to look at furniture, bedspreads, wallpaper and other similar types of products.

It was also felt that, because of the competitive nature of their own industry, regulations would be required to ensure that all retailers converted at the same time. If this is true for the home furnishing sector, it is equally true for retail food scales. If this did not occur, the consumer would be unable to compare prices easily between stores where one might show the price per square yard while another may show the price per square metre, which is approximately 20 per cent larger.

In the motion which is before us today, the opposition would like us to stop the prosecutions which have come before the courts in relation to the implementation of the regulations dealing with home furnishings. Once again the hon. member for Peterborough is misleading the House when he quotes me as saying that I assured him that there would be no prosecutions against those who are faced today with the implementation of metric retail food scales. In fact, it is very clear that the implementation of the retail food scale conversion program will take place over two years and we are confident that by the end of that two-year period—that is, by the end of next year—everyone would have complied with the regulations and there would be no reason to prosecute.

The hon. member mentioned some prosecutions which he read about in the newspapers. I do not want to comment on those cases but I do want to say to him that to abandon prosecutions at the present time would be unfair to those who were involved for a number of years in the implementation of the regulations concerning home furnishing. If prosecutions have taken place in that regard, it was indeed at the request of the Canadian Carpet Institute and at the request of those who have said that it is not fair to advertise a product at a price which is obviously lower than the price advertised under the metric measure. Therefore, in fairness to all the retailers in the industry, allowing some retailers to advertise a price to consumers under one system that is different from the price using the metric system could give undue advantage to some retailers. It is precisely for this reason that the industry itself has requested that the appropriate regulations come into place.

With respect to those who are peacefully converting their retail food scales in an orderly fashion, according to the plan which was asked for and designed by the industry itself with the support of the Consumers' Association of Canada, we will indeed be helping them to facilitate this conversion. We will co-operate with them in order to facilitate this conversion and make sure that it is done in an orderly fashion.

I disagree with the motion that has been presented today which alleges that the enforcement of metrication is causing substantial hardship and contributing to an increasing rate of bankruptcies. I suggest that this is grossly misleading. I know of no case where a retailer who has been asked to change his scales has been forced into bankruptcy because of the cost of the new scales. Some opposition members have gone to see retailers contending that it will cost thousands of dollars to change their scales. This is not true. For a few hundred dollars new scales can be purchased or converted. I repeat that you can have scales converted to metric for just a few hundred dollars. Retailers have two years to accomplish this.

the government is not imposing this program. It is following the views and advice of the industry, and it is only at the request of the industry that regulations were passed. As I indicated earlier in my speech, these regulations were authorized by Parliament, by legislation tabled in Parliament and approved unanimously by Parliament.

In the spirit of co-operation I am prepared to discuss with the people involved in this sector in the coming weeks the possibility of exempting some small retailers from compulsory metrication. It is common knowledge that when we implemented the regulations for sale of gasoline by the litre, we exempted some retailers marketing diesel fuel who did not exceed a particular amount of sales. I believe this could be contemplated in relation to those concerned with retail food scales.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ouellet: I just have a closing statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This can be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet: I thank hon. members for allowing me to finish because I do want to make an important point which I think they want to know. In this regard, the government has never acted unilaterally to impose regulations or force compulsory metrication. The only exeptions—the three I have mentioned—out of the 100 sector industries which are going metric in Canada result from regulations which were passed at the specific request of the industry.

Mr. Domm: No, that is not right.

Mr. Ouellet: I am therefore ready to have discussions with these people to find out if it is feasible to excuse some small retailers from compulsory metrication. If the industry agrees with this and allows us to do it, I will indeed come forward and announce it. I do not think it would be fair or correct for the government to do this unilaterally.

The Consumers Association of Canada and the various retail council associations of Canada have requested compulsory regulations in this regard. Therefore, before doing anything I want to consult with them to discuss the implications.

In closing, I want to say that we in the government, and I believe the vast majority of Canadians, believe the pace, the degree and the nature of change to the metric system should, and must, be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms or industries directly concerned, with minimal government interference. I took that last remark directly from a speech which was made by my hon. friend opposite. I share his view in that regard.

We do not want to impose metrication on anyone. We believe that the vast majority of Canadians want it because they believe it is in the best interests of Canada. However, we also understand and appreciate that in order for it to be implemented fairly and in an orderly fashion, some regulations must be passed to protect the majority against the unacceptable competition of a minority. In these cases, particularly in the retail sector, it is important that we protect the large majority of those who want to accept metrication. They are welcoming this opportunity because they know that through metric we have substantially reduced and rationalized the number of package sizes and that we have been able to standardize them using round metric sizes to the best advantage of consumers. Those in the industries who have voluntarily accepted this must be protected against the few exceptions who will not follow the rule and who could try to take undue and unfair advantage in the marketplace. This is why some regulations were passed, and it is why we have some regulations, at the request of the industries, I repeat again.

The motion which is presented to us today unfortunately sides more with the past than with the future. I think it is a regressive resolution. It is not a resolution which is in the best spirit of Canada, a young nation looking to the future, looking for markets abroad, looking for opportunities. I think the motion presented by the hon. member for Peterborough should be massively rejected.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, this issue was presented to all members of Parliament in my first year here, in 1968, in 1969 and again in 1970. The series of events which have occurred since 1969 include the presenting of a white paper on metric conversion in 1970, amendments to the Weights and Measures Act (1971), a motion to approve the program of guidelines for metric conversion in 1975, Bill C-23, Metric Conversion (Statute Law Amendment, 1976) Act, from December 1976 until June of 1977, and a no-confidence motion in June of 1980. That was the series of parliamentary events which occurred. Mixed in with those were numerous hearings in two or three committees of this House.

The motion of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) carefully avoids stating that the Conservatives were opposed to conversion to a metric system of measurement in Canada. I am glad that it was carefully avoided. In fact, the hon. gentleman carefully avoided saying that in his speech.

The first studies launched with regard to conversion to metric in Canada took place under the Diefenbaker administration in 1960, 1961 and 1962. Finally, a white paper evolved through the channels of the bureaucracy in this capital and it was presented to Parliament. We held hearings. I will deal with some of the activities of the minister a little later.

The minister mentioned a number of organizations which supported the conversion to metric, but I also want to add to that list some more independent witnesses who testified in relation to Bill C-23 in 1977. We heard the testimony of Mr. Lister, chairman of the Metric Advisory Committee, although what he said might not carry too much weight. We heard from Mr. Gilbey, of the grain services union. We heard from Mr. Dobson Lee, president of Alberta Unifarm, who said, "We have supported the metric system for a good many years." We heard from Mr. A. E. Hall, president of the Manitoba Farm Bureau, Mr. Eyre, director of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, and Mr. Hart of the Saskatchewan urban municipalities, who said: "We accept a program of conversion to metric." Of course, we also heard from Mr. Maine, who was then vice-president of the National Farmers Union. All of these various organizations appeared before parliamentary committees. I was there to hear them.

The question is not what is being done but, rather, how it is being done. I gather that no one in the official opposition will stand up—certainly the hon. member for Peterborough did not—and outrightly oppose the conversion of Canada's measurement system to the metric system. The Conservatives will not do that. Therefore, the question is not what but, rather, how.

Mr. Darling: Emphasize that.

Mr. Benjamin: I have problems concerning the kind of eighteenth or seventeenth century propaganda and baloney which has been put out in the country by various and sundry people in the Conservative party, which has been nothing more than a sheer scare campaign. It is the old turn-the-clock-back syndrome, but we cannot turn it back. Every organization has said, "Whether we like metric or not, we cannot stop it and we cannot turn it back." The country elevator systems for grain handling in the prairie provinces have already gone through a few million dollars converting to metric scales. I do not imagine anyone in this House who would want to junk it, throw it out and go back to something else. Almost every private enterprise organization has already converted. In fact, 65 per cent of the B.C. forest industry has already converted and there is no way it can turn back.

Let me return to the question not of what we are doing but, rather, how we are doing it. We do not need any neanderthal organization which is in opposition to metric. I challenge any hon. member in this place to interrupt me on a point of order if the hon. member is opposed to bringing about conversion to the metric system in Canada. I challenge any hon. member of this House to get up right now and tell me, on a point of order, that the hon. member is opposed to conversion to metric.

Mr. Pepin: Not one.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not hear a word, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Towers: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Red Deer rises on a point of order.

Mr. Towers: Could the hon. member tell us to which system of metric he is referring? Then we would probably know. Which one of the four or five systems is he talking about?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I could read a couple of quotes of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) if he wants me to embarrass him. The hon. member for Red Deer realizes that the system of metric conversion being used is under the rules and regulations of the Parliament of Canada. That is the system of metric we are referring to.

Mr. Neil: That is nonsense.

Mr. Towers: You do not know what you are talking about, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am just as far behind as the hon. member for Red Deer with regard to conversion. I am just as far behind, too, because—

Mr. Nickerson: You can say that again.

Mr. Benjamin: —I have not caught up with it yet, and that is probably the problem of the people of Canada. So nobody, but nobody, in this House opposes Canada converting to the metric system of measurement.

Mr. Neil: On a voluntary basis.

Mr. Benjamin: Let us get to the question concerning not what the government is doing but, rather, how it is doing it. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) mentioned that it should be on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Neil: Right.

Mr. Benjamin: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is some kind of Saturday night beer parlour dreaming. General Motors, for example, has already converted to metric, and a farmer in the hon. member's riding who buys a GM car or truck does not have a choice. It is not voluntary for him. He is into metric whether he likes it or not. It is not a case of compulsion or voluntariness; rather, it is a case of attrition and habit. That is not necessarily criminal. Some habits happen to be good.

• (1430)

The minister and the government have been less than reasonable in terms of how the costs of conversion are being shared among the population of Canada. That is the main complaint. A farmer purchases a pail of chemicals. It is measured in litres, but his sprayer is calibrated for Imperial gallons. The chemical industry lobbied the government to have this chemical measured only in litres and the government agreed. There is no reason why there cannot be two sets of directions on the label for both litres and gallons. The farmer cannot be expected to throw out his sprayer and buy a new one.

The matter of dual directions is similar to dual languages. The minister has been a bit supine with regard to statements by various and sundry multinational corporations designed to make it cheaper and more convenient for them. I invite the minister to launch an investigation into how multinational corporations which manufacture scales are hitting our retail merchants and garage men on the head with the prices they charge. It is outrageous.

Members on all sides of the House have merchants in their constituencies who have been taken advantage of when converting to the new scales. If the minister wants conversion to metric to be more acceptable and agreeable to the ordinary citizens of this country, whether they be small-business men or farmers, that is where he should move. It is not necesary to fine anyone. Metric conversion is irrevocable; it is here whether we like it or not. I gather we all like, but do not understand all of it.

I again say to the minister it is not what we are doing, but how we are doing it. That is the problem which is causing the neanderthal and eighteenth century reactions in places like Peterborough.

I understand that the 50 per cent write-off for the plumber, electrician, pipefitter or tinsmith when buying a new set of tools expired on March 31, but that the minister has now agreed to extend that. I hope he will nod his head if I am correct. I hear some rattling from over there. Is it correct that he has extended the provision beyond March 31 so that this 50 per cent write-off will still apply?

I further understand the extension will be covered by a new set of regulations. I hope whatever member on the government side speaks, the minister will provide him with the material to tell us what these new regulations will be. There has not been a word of objection from any of the three parties with regard to metric conversion. What the government is doing is okay. How it is being done is the problem.

The cost of conversion should be borne by the nation as a whole. There should just not be a 50 per cent benefit for the mechanic who has to buy a new set of tools or the small storekeeper who has to buy a new scale. There should be a 100 per cent write-off immediately. If the government wants a greater degree of acceptance, support and speed in the conversion to metric, those are the kinds of things it must do. This is something the country should do together, all of us.

I object to the mindless baloney put out by various and sundry people, those people mainly to my right and their mindless opposition to any kind of change. Every organization which appeared before this and previous Parliaments back to 1970 said to convert. The nicest quote of all is one from a good friend, a gentleman I admire. This was said in 1975 when we were debating Bill C-23. The hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) was the lead-off speaker. He said:

> —we supported metric conversion when it was introduced by order in council and the white paper, and that is our position today—we still support it, but we have reservations and hope to place them on the record during this debate.

That is what he and a number of his colleagues then proceeded to do. He went on to say:

> Metric conversion in Canada will put us in step with the rest of the world.

He said that his party was "appalled at the lack of progress being made" by the Metric Commission. One of the most respected members ever in this House, the former member for Peace River, Mr. Baldwin, in 1970 completely supported the opening statement by the minister in the white paper on metric conversion. The former member for Malpeque who went on to become Premier of Prince Edward Island had a private members' bill to implement metrication. I do not think the hon. member for Peterborough really believes there should not be a conversion to metric.

The costs of conversion for every plumber, electrician, mechanic, pipefitter, retail merchant, tool and dye maker or whatever, should be recoverable through the tax system by a tax credit, tax exemption, 100 per cent write-off or grant. I do not care how it is done. When someone has to put out $5,000 or $6,000 for a scale for a corner grocery store, the merchant does not necessarily object about the conversion to metric but to the fact that he has to pick up at least half the tab. That is not fair. I therefore urge the minister to be generous in the regulations he brings forward.

I am glad he has extended the period beyond March 31. He should now look at other sectors of the economy to which that extension should apply and provide a 100 per cent recovery of the actual cost. All people have to do is attach their receipts to their income tax form. If the government wants more co-operation and support with regard to metric conversion, that is the only decent thing to do.

It took almost 50 years for Canada to go metric in our monetary system. It took us almost 50 years to go from pounds, shillings and pence to dollars and cents. I hope to goodness it will not take us that long to do the same thing with metric measurements in other parts of our economy. In fact, I find it ironic and amusing that in 1871 Sir John A. Macdonald had legislation passed in this place that made both Imperial and metric legal. The Conservatives were unanimous in their support of it, and the Liberals opposed it. Believe it or not, they opposed it!

Another reason seems to be that neither one has a policy. I am glad the Conservatives are going to Toronto; I hope they come up with a policy for a change. I urge the eight or nine of them who are here, as soon as the House adjourns, to head for Toronto and come up with a policy on metric—or on anything else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: You guys should not laugh.

Mr. Darling: Tell them about their policy.

Mr. Benjamin: This government is the outfit, Mr. Speaker, that says they are not left-wing or right-wing but middle of the road.

Mr. Nystrom: Bang in the centre.

Mr. Benjamin: And that is where all the accidents happen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: They try to please everybody and end up pleasing nobody. They have got the whole country mad at them, whether it is on interest rates or metric conversion or whatever. I do not mind a fellow being dumb if he cannot help it; it is when they work at it. That is what bothers me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to thank the House and appreciate their courtesy. Under the rules, I can go to five o'clock!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I promise my colleagues I will not do that. In fact, my own colleagues are asking me not to do that.

Mr. Cullen: That would be worse than the bells for two weeks.

Mr. Benjamin: In the course of a change to a fundamental apparatus in the operation of a society and its economy, and in the course of having measurements for the goods we produce and sell, every civilization, every population, adapts and then changes. The whole history of this problem, which goes back thousands of years, has been one of the entire world trying to get one common system—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: —one system which, no matter where you are in this world, no matter what language you speak, no matter what kind of political regime you are under, would mean a common communication between men, among mankind.

Mr. Nystrom: Social democracy.

Mr. Benjamin: While there are problems, while there are people who do not want change, they are a minute number of the total population.

Mr. Cullen: Right on!

Mr. Benjamin: There are those problems that automatically come about when you make a significant major change. What else is new? One of the British kings said that a foot is as long as his foot and a yard is as long as his arm. They had a great deal of problems about that kind of change.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: The kind of help I am getting, Mr. Speaker, from behind me is not much help!

It seems to me that it is incumbent on all parties to assist, in every way we can, our fellow citizens in adapting and converting to this change. That is an obligation we all have, since all of us supported the conversion to metric. But the other obligation falls upon the government. You do not need to fine anybody. Any merchant who decides voluntarily not to convert to metric is going to go broke three or four years down the road; he will be out of business. His suppliers will not understand his orders because those orders will be in Imperial measure and he will not get his supply. His customers will understand kilograms and litres and they will not understand his pints and pounds. So you do not need any fines. In fact, Mr. Speaker, all 282 of us could rally a wealth of support and effort to understand. I suspect that I, among many other members of this House, am still in my head about 10 or 15 years behind in this conversion matter. My children know it. I do not have any grandchildren but the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) has grandchildren who understand it. It is there; it is a fact of life; it is a reality. This mindless screaming and yelling really harms the country. All we need is to get the government to be a little smarter about how they are doing it, not what they are doing.

Mr. Nystrom: Its tough on the Liberals.

Mr. Benjamin: I urge the minister to go to his colleague, that tightwad, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), and the other tightwad, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and get 100 per cent credit on the cost of conversion to metric. That will help a lot of ordinary citizens.

The corporations have already converted and have passed on the cost to the customers. In the price of your car, tractor or combine, those costs have been passed on. The consumers are absorbing them. But the corner grocer, the plumber, the people who are still converting, buying another set of tools or a new set of scales, do not have sufficient benefit. They are not being treated equally under our tax laws or under our pricing system. The corporations have already done the conversion, many of whom persuaded the government to do the conversion. The minister should be very generous in this conversion and forget about taking people to court and having fines imposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Anyone who will not convert now will convert in any event four or five years from now. That will not be because it is compulsory, not because it is not voluntary, but just because he will not have any choice. It will have become the mode used in our economy and in our commerce. We have probably got more than halfway to completion already. You cannot fly in the face of what is actually going on and expanding.

In regard to the United States, I recall that in a committee in 1970 and in this House, and again in 1971 and again in 1975, we were told the Americans were going to convert and that we were going to convert in Canada within ten years. Well, it is taking us 12 or 15 years. It will take the Americans 20 or 25 years, but the Americans are going to convert; there are no ifs, ands or buts. It is likely that it will not be done by the American government but by the multinational corporations. They are going to make sure that the American bolt fits in a French tank. That is already in process. The Standing Committee on Transport visited Bombardier, which manufactures LRC trains. Bombardier was the successful tenderer in New Jersey, Oregon, Washington, California and various cities.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): And Mexico.

Mr. Benjamin: Mexico and various cities and states in the United States. When those states and cities called for tenders, they asked for them in metric; they did not ask for them in inches, yards or pounds. The process in corporations and state and municipal governments in the United States is already in place, regardless of what the Ronald Reagan republicans have to say. It is already in place. It is there. It will grow. It will take five or ten years longer in the United States than it will here, but that is the only difference.

I agree with the gist of the motion of the hon. member for Peterborough as it applies to how the government is implementing metrication. I hope we have persuaded the minister that it is the "how" that is important. I hope he will go back to the drawing board and be much more generous with the people metric costs.

A farmer puts so many bushels of wheat and so many gallons of treatment for his seed into his drill. In his sprayer he puts in so many pounds of chemicals or fertilizers. There is one thing which could be made compulsory tomorrow, and there is no darned reason in the world why the minister should not do it. We would agree that it should be compulsory that chemical companies put dual directions on five-gallon cans or on bulk tanks which are delivered by various and sundry fertilizer, petroleum and insecticide distributors. That would help people understand and convert, and it would save them time and money. That is the proper route.

While we support the gist of the motion of the official opposition, we dislike the direction some hon. members of the official opposition have taken. At the same time we dislike the methods used in implementing conversion to metric, particularly as they apply to tradesmen, retail merchants and farmers. This is the area in which the minister must be much more generous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Irwin).

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) was—

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Chair recognized a Liberal speaker and then an NDP speaker, and now the Chair is recognizing another Liberal speaker. This is our opposition day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I understand the concern of the hon. member very well, but it has always been a practice, accepted by the whips of the parties—with whom the Chair co-operates on a continual basis—that we alternate from a government spokesman to an opposition spokesman. The Chair has already recognized two opposition spokesmen, and this time I am recognizing a government spokesman. I am following our practice to the letter.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): You will be next, Gordon.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Towers: You have not heard the last of this one, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Irwin: I am rising for the third time, Mr. Speaker. The opposition keeps objecting, as it is doing with respect to the metric system. Hon. members opposite are heading headlong into the eighteenth century and moving the clock back. Even a stopped clock is right twice every 24 hours.

I was not here in the House when metric was passed and I was not here when it began to be implemented, but I was a citizen and I remember the initial reaction at the border when a CBC reporter interviewed Americans coming over to Canada. One person was asked what he thought of Celsius. He said, "I haven't even been there yet." Then the interviewer asked another person whether he thought the change would make much difference in the distance between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury. That person said, "I think so; it will be a shorter trip." This story is part of the historical record, and it should be on the record because this is a very serious debate this afternoon. The reporter tried to correct that person. He said that the distance between the cities would not change. He said it was the same distance. The American replied, "Yes, but the kilometres go by faster!"

I have since learned that there have been other benefits. I checked with my secretary, and she tells me that it is psychologically good for a woman to go into a store and say: "I wear a size 92 centimetre". My secretary also tells me the metric system is good because people are now only half their previous weight!

Mr. Ouellet: That is why Kempling supports it.

Mr. Irwin: I am told that is why the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) supports it. There is a psychological benefit.

Usually I say it is a pleasure and a privilege to speak here on a Friday afternoon, but today is historic. The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) was elected in 1979 on an anti-metric platform. He defeated the Hon. Hugh Faulkner. The hon. member for Peterborough waited so long for his metric ship to come in that his pier collapsed. Where is he? He has left the House. His pier has collapsed. Until I did some research last night I did not understand why the only questions he has asked in the House and the only motions he has moved in the House over the last three years have been about the metric system.

Mr. Elzinga: That is not true.

Mr. Irwin: There have been other questions?

Mr. Elzinga: Of course.

Mr. Irwin: I stand corrected, but when I have been here the only questions put and the only motions moved by the hon. member for Peterborough have been about the metric system.

Mr. Elzinga: He asked about capital punishment.

Mr. Irwin: Oh, he asked about capital punishment. I am sorry. I stand corrected by the hon. member opposite.

The hon. member for Peterborough must understand history. I have researched it. The hon. member keeps talking about the Imperial system. What he does not realize is that the Imperial system he wants to adopt is really a French system. The French got rid of it at the time of the revolution when they went metric, followed by about 90 per cent of the world. I know a lot of history about this subject because I was very serious in preparing for today's debate. The crazy 60s cycle we are in is from Babylon. It is a mystical, religious thing. There are 60 seconds, 360 degrees and 60 minutes. Feet come from paces. If a room was 20 paces by 30 paces, the measurement evolved to be 20 feet by 30 feet.

There is a big difference between the origin of the Roman or Italian inch and the English inch. The inch actually comes from the Roman uncia, which means one-twelfth of anything. The English came along and said, "No, no; historically the inch comes from three barley corns." The English said that three barley corns equal one inch. As a matter of fact, even today barley corns are used in shoes. The difference between a shoe size nine and a shoe size ten is one barley corn, or one-third of an inch.

The matter gets more complicated when we get to miles. The mile comes from the Italian milliare, which was the distance a Roman army would cover if it marched 1,000 paces. A mile was 5,000 Roman feet. The English would have nothing to do with that. One could not divide English feet and yards into the Roman mile, so the English came up with the statute mile. This expression is borrowed from the Italian word statutum, or "that which is set up". Why? Because it would not divide.

It was not good enough for the English just to have statute miles because the English had their navy to consider. The navy did not want to go with the statute mile, so it went with the nautical mile. A nautical mile is 6,076.1 feet. If that were not bad enough, the English had to have a third mile, the admiralty mile, which is 6,080 feet. That is what we have to live with today. As a matter of fact, around my area of Sault Ste. Marie, between what has been done in England and what has been done in the United States, we now have three types of pints, two types of quarts and three types of gallons. We have a system of pints, quarts and gallons that is different from pints, quarts and gallons in Sault, Michigan. The United States also has another system of pints and gallons, so we wind up with three types of pints, three types of gallons and two types of quarts. That is what we are trying to rationalize.

• (1500)

There is nothing new about all this, Mr. Speaker. It goes back as far as the French Revolution. In 1789 the French got rid of the system that we are trying to evolve from, and by 1840 they had the metric system. I do not think things would have changed in Canada had it not been for the imperial push we received in 1965 when, because of the demands of industry, the United Kingdom decided to go metric. The big impetus for this whole program came from the United Kingdom. It was not only Canada that was affected either. In 1968 South Africa, Ireland, Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda were affected; in 1969 New Zealand and Rhodesia adopted the system. As a matter of fact, in New Zealand everything is metric at the moment except for snooker and billiards. In 1970 Canada, Sri Lanka and Zambia began the changeover.

All the countries in the world except Canada, the U.S.A., the United Kingdom, South Yemen, Burma, Brunei and Borneo are now either operating in metric or very close to it.

The history of what has happened in Canada has been told several times but it bears repeating. It is not something new. We have had the two systems in Canada since 1871. As a matter of fact, they have had the two systems in the United States almost as long. In 1875 we signed the Treaty of Metre; in 1960 the Agreement of Metric Nations and then in 1970 there was the white paper on metric conversion.

Who has supported all this, Mr. Speaker? The list represents a cross-section of the country. There is the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Hospital Association, the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Construction Association, and the Canadian Teachers' Federation. The white paper of January 16, 1970, was supported by Mr. Ged Baldwin of the Progressive Conservative Party, the hon. member for Winnipeg-North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the NDP, and Mr. Gilbert Rondeau for the Social Credit Party. All three parties agreed with the white paper.

On March 17, 1975, when the guideline dates were moved in the House they were supported by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) for the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Arnold Peters for the NDP and Mr. C. A. Gauthier for the Social Credit Party.

In 1976 the omnibus bill went from the House to the committee, witnesses were heard, it came back and—as far as history will ever record it—was passed unanimously by the House. I am surprised that after all these years the hon. member does not know what a vote in the House is. The bill was voted on and passed. If the hon. member opposite did not like it then, he should have stood up and at least have been on record as opposing it.

Mr. Towers: It was not voted on.

Mr. Irwin: That was a vote of the House in 1976. In 1971 the provinces unanimously supported the resolution, and in 1977 they changed their highway signs. It is now in all provincial school curricula, and on all highway signs. Each province has a metric co-ordinator. The national building code is in metric. New Brunswick was the first province to adopt it in October, 1981.

Let us look at what happened in the business sector. The Ford Motor Company has build the Escort, the Lynx and LN7 according to metric specifications. The company says that within three to five years it will convert its operation completely to metric. General Motors began its conversion in 1973, and at the moment 95 per cent of its car output is in metric.

Mr. Ray Pinard, chairman of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, says that they " . . . have been shipping to overseas markets for years in metric."

The output of steel is now 20 per cent metric. The food industry is 70 per cent metric. Ellis-Don Ltd. of Toronto says that 40 per cent of its projects are completely metric.

We should consider the costs now, Mr. Speaker. General Motors says that it amounts to less than one per cent of the cost estimates made in 1960. Mr. Bill Ellison, director of engineering standards for General Motors says that it was "easier than we anticipated". Mr. Ron Strang, supervisor of engineering standards for Caterpillar Tractor Company says, "It hasn't been difficult at all." He also says that "I think everyone has made a mountain out of this thing".

The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is so lost for issues that he comes here making a mountain out of a molehill. I cannot think of a greater waste of the taxpayers' money on a Friday afternoon. I am not sure of the cost of keeping the House of Commons open, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is about $500,000 per day. I cannot think of a worse use of the taxpayers' money than to spend $500,000 on this issue today. We have economic problems and more important things to do in the country. I think this is a waste of the taxpayers' money, and I want that on record.

The hon. member for Peterborough is always talking about what is happening in the United States. Of the top 1,000 manufacturing and industrial firms in the United States, two thirds foresee using metric as their predominant system. Most of them make at least one product in metric and more than half favour metric conversion within the next 20 years. Only 16 per cent report sales losses due to lack of supply of metric sizes. School children are learning the system in the United States; cameras are metric; film is metric; prescription drugs are metric; ski equipment is metric. In electricity supplies, amperes, volts and watts are all metric. Soft drinks, wines and alcoholic beverages are metric, so are grocery stores; General Motors will be fully metric this year, and 20 per cent of gas pumps will have converted to metric.

The Port of New Orleans handles 18 per cent of offshore transportation and it wants a total conversion to metric in order to protect foreign markets. The fastener industry in the United States plans total conversion. The food and drug administration wants the nutrition data in metric on all food packages. President Reagan supports the 1975 act, contrary to what is said by hon. members opposite.

It comes down to a choice of whether we make metric mandatory at certain times. Japan did not, and it took that country 40 years to convert. England started the program, then got cold feet and now there is chaos because it is half in and half out. Australia started at the same time we did and has completed the program. Mr. John Norgard, the head of the Australia Metric Conversion Board has said that the most trouble-free changeovers were those in which it was possible to have a definite cut-off.

There are several reasons why we should be moving to metric, Mr. Speaker, the most important of which is that 90 per cent of other nations in the world have converted. Mr. Cleo Mowers of the Metric Commission has said that two systems will not work; that the United States is going metric; that the provinces are full partners; that at all times there has been all-party support for the program; that in a few years most Canadians will know only the metric system, and that other nations have gone through the same process and have no regrets.

In this House when a whip or a leader speaks for his party, that should be accepted as the position of that party. I do not think we can push and pull in politics, at least not in the House of Commons, and retain credibility.

On November 14, 1979 when this party was in opposition, the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) put this question to the then minister for consumer and corporate affairs:

• (1510)

—I would like to ask the minister how he intends to ensure that metric conversion is completed, or does he intend to act on his own to dismantle the program?

The minister said:

Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. The government—

Which was Progressive Conservative at the time:

—is still wedded to the concept of metrication.

Mr. Neil: But not forced.

Mr. Irwin: The world moves on—

Mr. Benjamin: The Tories don't.

Mr. Irwin: The Tories do not. That is exactly where I was heading. The Tories move onward to the 18th century. That has been their history on the NEP, the budget, the Charter of Rights; you name it. I have been sitting here for two years, not debating the future but debating and listening to the past. It is no different today. The Tories move on with vigour and passion into the 18th century. But with or without them it will move.

It is difficult to change the status quo, but the responsible thing to do for Canada and Canadians is to move with the times. This we have done, Mr. Speaker, patiently and within the process we know, and that is exactly what history will record. In the final analysis I think this whole process will be nothing but a footnote, because we are going to be virtually the last country on this planet to convert to the metric system.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, first of all I reserve the right to bring up a question of privilege on the Speaker's decision whether it was my turn to speak. We had a speaker, the government side had a speaker, and the NDP had a speaker on our motion. I felt I was entitled to be the next speaker, but the Speaker chose a member from the government side. In other words, they had two back to back.

Mr. Ouellet: Not back to back.

Mr. Towers: I am not going to waste the time of the House arguing about it; we will do that another time. However, I have never heard so much garbage in all my life as I have today from the minister and his parliamentary secretary, as well as the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Talk about people who do not know what they are talking about!

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, I just want to correct a statement made by the hon. member. The government side did not have speakers back to back as he just stated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) has made his point. I am sure the matter will be examined and if there are further discussions they will take place at an appropriate time.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, as to the hon. member for Regina West, I have never seen a case of skinned shins like the one he displayed today because there is not way a person can come down on both sides of the fence without getting skinned. Of course a person who tries to sit on the fence and keep his ear to the ground gets out of position, and I guess that is what has happened to the hon. member today. I ask the hon. member for Regina West what form of metric was he talking about. There are so many different types of measurements in the world today that it is creating horrendous problems, especially for the agriculture industry. The minister and his parliamentary secretary have apparently forgotten about that, or they know nothing about it.

A businessman called me the other day. He had a German-made loader on which he broke the hose. It was a metric hose. He bought a Canadian-made hose, the same size, drove 50 miles, and took it back because it would not fit.

I would be the last person in the world to stop a universal system, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I would have thought that, had the government any imagination whatsoever, that is the type of system we would be moving to. But we are not; we have a worse system today than we ever had. I just happen to have half a dozen nuts and bolts here, and this is what it is all about, Mr. Speaker. I know I am not supposed to display anything, but here they are if anyone wants to see them. None of them will fit. In the agriculture industry it used to be that you had your two styles and the measurements were always the same: 1/2; 3/4; 7/8; 3/16; or whatever it is. They were all the same. You could guarantee that a coarse thread of any size would fit, the same with a fine thread. And here these are, and none of them fit. This is the problem we are running into. I am told there are up to 15 different sizes in bolts, so it means that you can no longer go by size, you have to go by parts. Can you imagine what that will mean to the business community, to farmers? No longer can they rely on what we have called the Imperial measurement.

We have been ridiculed this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, because Sir John A. Macdonald allowed two systems of measurement. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, Canada came a long way with the two systems side by side in 110 years. I learned metric when I went to school, and there was no problem. I learned the Imperial system. They worked together and that is the way it has been. And all this garbage which has been presented to us today is absolutely unbelievable. They read a statement from the President of the United States. Well, what has happened in the U.S.? The U.S. Metric Board has been told by the Reagan administration to walk their last kilometre. Their transportation department floated a plan for switching highway signs from miles to kilometres, but an outcry from Congress prevented it from reaching the board for official consideration. The same for a plan by the national weather service to determine temperatures exclusively in Celsius instead of Fahrenheit. That metric weather plan never reached the board for consideration, and is dormant.

We just heard that the provinces were full partners in this plan. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who misled the premiers of our provinces. I remember in 1976, when one of the provinces made a move towards metrication, I asked a member of that legislature why they did it. He said that the Prime Minister said it was inevitable and that all of Canada was going that way. He misled them. Now we find the provinces backing out. Just this week Nova Scotia, unanimously—I suppose that takes in some Liberal members, if they have any—moved a resolution to opt out of forced metric. For them to stand up in this House and say that the provinces are full partners, well, I have never heard anything so ridiculous and dishonest in my life.

The minister says he is going to assist any hardship cases. Is he prepared to assist the broadloom company in Montreal which has a chain of, I think, seven stores? They have gone bankrupt, and they have now been fined $1,700 for not complying with the government's order in council, its edict on forced metrication. Is the minister prepared to assist the woman in Calgary who appeared before a court not so many days ago because she was advertising her product in metric and Imperial side by side so that she would be taking advantage? A representative of the minister's department went into her store and laid a charge, so is the minister prepared to assist her? Is that what our charter of rights means? We have this kind of thing happening to some of our people before the ink on the charter is even dry. Where is the freedom in this country? I guess possibly one of the problems which has befallen us as Conservatives is that in 1975-76 we trusted that government to keep its word.

Reference has been made time and time again to the white paper Ged Baldwin agreed to. Yes, Ged Baldwin agreed to a voluntary system of weights and measurements, nothing more! That is what we agreed to in 1975-76. There was not a vote on that omnibus bill when it went through—and this is why I have argued with members opposite—because we were not happy with it. The government had a majority. We made a deal with the government that if it put back the measurement of acres in the bill relating to the Canadian Wheat Board and left the system voluntary, we would not oppose it by a vote even though we had held up the bill for months. The government wanted that bill. There was a further understanding with respect to that, which was that we would keep in step with the United States.

We are told that we are going into metric to facilitate our trade. But 75 per cent of our trade is with the United States. How utterly ridiculous that is. I have seven or eight documents here which show that Canadian companies are making deals with their United States counterpats and there is money coming into Canada for deals all made in Imperial measurement. My friend, the hon. member for Regina West, said that he was out to Bombardier, and the U.S. wanted the LRC in metric. They only take it in metric because that is the way it is set up. But the hon. member never said anything about Canadair, did he, Mr. Speaker? He never said anything about Canadair at all. Canadair tried to go metric but it could not. Other facets of the air industry have tried to go metric but they cannot do it. Why does the government take the small corner grocery stores across our country and enforce metric measurement on them? There are certain areas where metric conversion is unenforceable. Why do hon. members opposite not talk to representatives of the lumber industry in British Columbia? I talked to a member of that industry the other day. He told me that the only orders he has in metric are from the federal government. He told me that all sales to the United States are in the Imperial measurement. The largest order ever from Japan for prefab homes is in the Imperial measurement. Why in the world does the government lay on the heavy hand and force people into something that is unnecessary? People should not have to convert to metric, quite apart from the fact that it is very costly to do so.

Today I asked the minister a question. He almost jeered at me as if I were creating problems. That question is very relevant in western Canada because it has to do with the beef farmer and the beef industry, which industry is one of the greater providers of income in Alberta. I want to read a portion of a letter written to me from Mr. Ralph Vold who speaks on behalf of the beef farmers. This letter is dated September 1, 1981. In part his letter reads:

> This photostat tells the story January 1, 1984. Could we not have another election before this?

I do not suppose we will. Mr. Vold enclosed a photocopy of a document to which he was referring. His letter also stated:

> I have been in Ottawa three times and Winnipeg twice over metric.

Mr. Vold made five trips to Winnipeg and to Ottawa in an attempt to impress upon the government that it should not be moving to convert the beef industry to metric. But now a brown envelope has shown up mysteriously stating that the government intends to force metric in the beef industry on January 21, 1984. That is not fair. It is not just and it is not in the best interests of the livestock industry. The argument is used that it is being done for trade. Goodness me, anyone who knows anything about trade in the beef industry recognizes that the greatest amount of trade is with our neighbour to the south, the United States. The buyers of our purebred cattle come up here to sales and shows. I do not suppose anybody opposite, not even the member for Regina West, has ever been to a livestock show, otherwise he would know that in front of each animal is the date of birth and the rate of weight gain. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) understands this. The rate of gain is very important. The pounds per day gain is what they recognize in the United States. But now the Americans will come up here and will have to figure out everything in kilograms. Of course, the same situation will occur when animals are sold at auction. I do not know how many members opposite have ever been to a cattle auction. I doubt whether the minister himself has ever been inside an auction mart. At these auctions, split second decisions have to be made in the purchase of large numbers of cattle. As I say, trade goes back and forth across the border. It is a very healthy industry and it is a healthy way to do business. But all that will have to change. Canadians are going to be forced into a different system than the one followed in the United States.

As time goes on, and perhaps if this government is successful in what it is trying to do, it will mean that our young people who are growing up today, will know nothing about the system that is being used in the United States. That, to me, is a crazy way of doing things. I am sure our young people going to school today are just as intelligent as we were when we were going to school and we had the two systems.

The government is trying to push two languages. Therefore, why can we not have two systems of weights and measures? It seems to me that before we have two language systems, it would be far better for us to have two systems of weights and measures which have stood us in good stead for well over 100 years. The government is wrong. It is dead wrong going in that direction. The only sensible thing to do, as the hon. member for Regina West said, was for the government to allow industries or businesses to go to the system best suited to their interests, and let them convert to metric in their own time. But here we have a government that is prepared to throw people in jail. This government is prepared to fine people up to $5,000 if they do not comply with the edicts of this government.

There has never been a time in Canadian history when the Canadian people distrusted a government as much as they distrust this one, and I will tell you why. First, there was the War Measures Act, which was the start of it all. Second came wage and price controls. Third, the government told Canadians that energy prices should not go up too drastically. But look at what has happened. Three times now we have heard the people say, "That is enough." And it is a reason, in spite of what the minister says, for the majority of Canadians to tell us they do not want the metric system enforced upon them at this time. There is absolutely no way that Canadians are prepared to accept that edict. If the minister thinks he is right, why does he not have a plebiscite on the matter and give the people a chance to voice their opinion? If the minister were really honest in the approach he is taking, he would disband temporarily the Metric Commission. He could wait for the next election, which will probably come in a year or two. We have lived 110 years with the two systems side by side. Why can we not live for another two years with it? Let us have a plebiscite at the same time as the next election. Let the people vote on whether or not they want to convert to metric. I am sure if the majority of Canadians wanted the metric system, the minority would go along with them. But the majority is not prepared to accept the edict of this government.

We have just had a provincial by-election in my constituency in western Canada. I am sure that members opposite are pretty much aware of the results of it.

Mr. Ouellet: You lost.

• (1530)

Mr. Towers: One of the main platforms on which that candidate was elected was anti-metric. He garnered more votes than all other candidates put together. The minister then tells me that a majority of the people favour the metric system. How is it then that that candidate won an election on that issue with over 50 per cent of the vote?

Some of the things the minister has been saying are absolutely untrue. The government's approach to metrication is callous, brutal, insensitive, and it is an underhanded method. It is unfortunate that it is being imposed upon Canadians by order in council, the refuge of the scoundrel. The government does not have the courage or the courtesy to permit Canadians to have laws which affect their lives and their livelihood discussed in open debate in the House. Again, it governs by stealth through jackboot tactics. I protest the brown shirt method of circumventing parliamentary debate through the use of order in council to impose metrication, make imperial illegal and set up a system of fines or imprisonment for those Canadians who prefer to engage in business and commerce in Imperial or in both systems.

For the benefit of the minister who said that perhaps we have been reading some of these stories, Mrs. Kasparian told me this morning, after quite a lengthy discussion, that she is quite prepared to go to jail before she will change her mind or pay a fine.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this motion which requests a moratorium on the implementation of a planned metric conversion program in Canada.

As my friend, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) mentioned earlier, he was not in the House when the idea and the approval was given for converting to the metric system. I, too, was not here.

However, I have been involved in the media and broadcasting industry over the years and recall doing a number of special programs relating to the conversion to the metric system on a number of occasions. It is because of that experience that I wanted to have an opportunity to speak this afternoon.

Based on some past records and information, I think it is very necessary that we set the record straight with facts and figures since all we have heard throughout this entire metric debate—especially from the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and some of his colleagues—has been nothing but scare tactics. We heard about scare tactics from the last speaker, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) when he talked about fines and imprisonment and created the impression that everyone opposed to metric will go to jail. That is the furthest thing from the truth. I believe any sensible Canadian knows that. It is nothing but scare tactics on the part of the opposition.

Mr. Miller: The Official Opposition.

Mr. McGrath: The only opposition.

Mr. Burghardt: It is really very little opposition today. For example, when we think of the concerns about the beef industry, I would remind the House that the chairman of the Metric Commission, Mr. McArthur, comes from the city of Calgary and is a retired businessman. Also, the executive director of the Metric Commission, Mr. Beckman, is also from Alberta and previously was a civil servant in the provincial government. I am sure that these two gentlemen will have the very best interests of the beef farmer in mind when it comes to implementing the metric system. I am sure that the beef farmers, not only in western Canada but throughout all of Canada, will be well served just by the fact that we have these two men in place operating the Metric Commission in our country.

The debate so far as been very emotional. As I mentioned earlier, I would like to put on the record some of the events which have taken place in a very quiet and orderly manner. It is very easy to rant and rave and present scare tactics, as we have heard this afternoon. It is another matter to conduct proper research and come up with the proper facts and figures. Therefore, I would like to mention some of those facts officially for the record.

First, I will describe the nature of the national conversion program as it now exists. As has already been mentioned this afternoon, over 100 sectors are operating within the framework of the Metric Commission of Canada and represent all areas of endeavor ranging from iron and steel mills to fishing and farming. Of course, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie is well aware of what is happening in the iron and steel mills.

Of these 100 sectors, only three—gasoline sales by the litre, home furnishings and retail food scales—are subject to regulations under the Weights and Measures Act of 1976-77. Both of these Acts were fully debated over many months and Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada was requested by the industries involved to make relevant regulation changes in support of the conversion to the metric system. Not only were these regulation changes supported by industry, they were also endorsed by the Consumers Association of Canada. The remaining sectors are converting according to time tables as suggested by over 2,000 industry volunteers in every sector of the Canadian economy. In order to facilitate the implementation of sector plans, existing measurement sensitive regulations and legislation must be converted to metric units at some point in the program. In this respect there are three main industries where regulations under the federal Weights and Measures Act are restrictive with respect to measurement units. They are the three which I mentioned earlier: gasoline dispensing, home furnishings and retail food sales.

Metric Commission Canada has established planning methods and scheduling procedures based on industry consensus for the renewal and approval of the sector plans which are national in their scope and application.

The planning methodology established by the commission for use of voluntary—I stress the word "voluntary"—sector committees offers the means of change, and the actual implementation is initiated in co-operation with the specified business or industrial sector.

I would like to mention in greater detail each of the three conversion programs where it had been considered necessary to publish regulations under the Weights and Measures Act. I wish to do so in order to dispel the notion that metric conversion is being implemented in Canada by legislative compulsion in the face of overwhelming resistance from business, industry, education, labour and consumer organizations.

With respect to the conversion to gasoline sales by the litre and the conversion of other petroleum products, an ad hoc committee comprised of representatives from the major Canadian petroleum companies first met in July, 1972—ten years ago—to assess the opportunities and problems facing the industry with respect to metric conversion. One year later the group agreed to the formation of a committee covering petroleum refineries, wholesalers and gasoline service stations for the purpose of developing a suitable conversion plan and timetable. The complete plan was approved for publication in September of 1976.

This sector has a major economic impact on the Canadian economy. Petroleum products with which we are familiar and which are refined and marketed in Canada include gasoline, fuel oils, lubricating and illuminating oils, greases and petrochemical agricultural products. During 1976, some remote areas of the country were faced with gasoline prices in excess of $1 per gallon. I am sure many members will remember that the response by the industry was to introduce half-gallon pricing, since pump price dials could not be set at a price greater than 99.9 cents per gallon. At the same time, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada was urging the industry to minimize half-gallon pricing. A bulletin put out by CCAC in 1976 limited the duration of half-gallon pricing to 12 months. As a result, the sector's pump conversion task force examined the feasibility of converting service station pumps to dispensing in litres. Alternatives to metric conversion were considered but none were viable.

• (1540)

The sector committee persuaded CCAC to rescind its bulletin limiting half-gallon pricing on the understanding that the industry was committed to the eventual conversion of service station pumps to litre dispensing. In preparation for conversion, new pumps were being ordered beginning in late 1975 with supplementary metric gear boxes installed which could be activated later so as to operate in the litre mode.

The sector's metric conversion plan called for conversion to commence on January 1, 1979, and be essentially complete in two years' time. However, both the industry and CCAC were concerned with a possible haphazard conversion of pumps to metric. Thus, regulations were drafted by CCAC in concert with the sector committee, so that pump conversion could begin on January 1, 1979 and, with certain exceptions, be complete by December 31, 1980. The exceptions referred to small retail outlets in remote regions dispensing less than 100,000 gallons per year. The conversion of retail pumps began on schedule and implementation is complete at this time except in some sparsely populated regions. Virtually no complaints were received concerning the program, making it a "non-event" in terms of consumer reaction.

Aside from the conversion of retail gasoline pumps, the provincial tax acts for petroleum products had to be converted. As we know, all provinces now have litre taxes. Perhaps one of the most difficult areas in the program which required considerable lead time was the conversion of the many measurement-sensitive business systems used by each company.

The use of regulations under the Weights and Measures Act was also requested by the home furnishings industry. The minister referred to this earlier today. A notice was published in the Canada Gazette, Part I, on March 17, 1979 by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada to issue regulations under the Weights and Measures Act regarding this industry. The proposed regulations established cut-off dates after which the advertising, offering for sale or sale of piece goods and home furnishings in other than the international metric system of units would be illegal. The products involved include linens, beddings, furniture, carpets, wallpaper and resilient flooring. The request for regulations was initiated by a subcommittee on home furnishings of the sector committee for consumers, home economics and retail trade. The recommendation was supported by the full sector committee and other committees for textiles, wood, furniture, paper and allied products, and labour.

In addition, the following national associations, through relevant sector committees or on an individual basis, formally stated their support for the regulations: The Canadian Home Sewing Association, The Retail Council of Canada, The Retail Merchants Association of Canada, The Consumers' Association of Canada, The Canadian Textile Association, The Canadian Home Economics Association, The Canadian Retail Hardware Association and The Canadian Carpet Institute.

The committee on home furnishings decided it would be in the best interests of the consumer to plan for metric conversion to take place in all of their areas at the same time. This decision was based on a reasonable assumption that someone buying carpeting would likely be wanting to look at furniture, bedspreads and wallpaper at the same time. It was thought that it would be only confusing for the consumer to have to buy one of these products in customary units and another in metric units. It was also felt that because of the competitive nature of their own industry, regulations would be required to ensure that all retailers converted at the same time. Just on that point, the hon. member for Red Deer mentioned a carpet company which had gone out of business in the Montreal area, I believe. The courts are now charged with the matter. I am sure the hon. member knows that that case is before the courts and should not be raised in this House—

Mr. Domm: It is over.

Mr. Burghardt: —because we could certainly get into arguments with the other side. However, be that as it may, the reason the retailers wanted to convert at the same time was to ensure that the consumer would be easily able to compare prices between stores, because one store might show the price per square yard while the other would show the price per square metre, which is about 20 per cent larger.

The third area where regulations have been used concerns retail food scale conversion. The working group on scales in the retail food industries is comprised of representatives of food retailing chains and independents, scales manufacturing and servicing enterprises, consumers and weights and measures regulating authorities. They are all involved. In 1977, the working group formally requested suitable regulations under the Weights and Measures Act to deal with advertising, as well as the conversion of scales, which were deemed necessary for achieving a co-ordinated and orderly transition to metric units. The decision to request necessary regulations for the conversion of retail food scales was based on experience gained in Australia and New Zealand where the initial effort to convert Australian retail scales on a strictly voluntary and retailer-by-retailer approach proved unsuccessful. Subsequently, under regulation, programs in both countries were implemented smoothly without undue confusion to consumers.

The initial decision to make metric conversion mandatory in this sector was made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and the cabinet on the recommendation of the food retailers and with the full support of the Consumers' Association of Canada. The hon. member for Red Deer also mentioned a lady in the city of Calgary, I believe, who had been charged because of improper advertising. He did not mention the fact that this particular person had been warned at least 12 times that she was contravening the regulations and that the complaint came not from the Consumers' Association of Canada, not from the Government of Canada and not from the Liberal Party but, rather, from her competitors who felt it was unfair for her to be advertising in the manner in which she had been doing. So, let us get that on the record and get that story straight, as well.

Apart from the three sectors which are converting with the assistance of regulations under the Weights and Measures Act, the balance of the over 100 sectors within Metric Commission Canada's structure are quietly proceeding with their voluntary conversion programs which require minimal legislative action to effect implementation.

It may come as a surprise to many hon. members of the House that an example of one of the many low profile sectors converting to metric, without fanfare and on a strictly voluntary basis, is the fire-fighting equipment and operation sector, which is a very important sector to our way of life and to our protection as Canadian citizens. This sector includes equipment manufacturers and distributors as well as the fire protection and fire fighting services across Canada. Several major associations and government bodies when contacted in October, 1977 expressed considerable enthusiasm in forming a sector committee to determine their interest in metric conversion.

Associations which are represented include the Canadian Fire Apparatus Manufacturers Association, the Fire Equipment Manufacturers Institute, the International and Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs and the Association of Canadian Fire Marshalls and Fire Commissioners. Standards writing organizations such as Underwriters Laboratories and the National Fire Protection Association are also represented. Sector committee members are directly involved in the various aspects of the industry. The economic impact of this sector is mainly associated with the supplies, equipment and capital facilities which are used by the fire protection and firefighting services. The major emphasis concerns safety and the establishment of effective operational services, yet we have all these organizations, the firefighting community, in line with metric conversion. We know the principal benefits expected from metric conversion in this sector concerning the economy and safety enhancement that can be realized from the standardization of many types of equipment.

Metric conversion provides an excellent opportunity to address standardization in an efficient and effective manner as all parties are adequately represented on the committee. The standardization of equipment is viewed as a long-term goal. Equipment which is already in use will not become obsolete because of metric conversion. The application of a single coherent measurement system for both equipment and operational use is also considered beneficial to members.

A comprehensive metric conversion plan was prepared by the sectors' planning subcommittee and was approved by all elements within the sector in February 1979. Shortly thereafter the sectors' recommendations for standardized sizes dated May 1979 were prepared by the standardization subcommittee of the sector. The report was distributed widely for public, industry and government comment, and appropriate corrections and clarifications were incorporated. The Association of Canadian Fire Marshals and Fire Commissioners has accepted the equipment standardization report in its entirety.

January 1981 was a major event in the sectors' conversion program. This was the date when the staff at a majority of fire stations across Canada commenced using the metric system in day to day use. Fluid flow and pressure gauges were also converted before this date. To support this program, a public awareness poster concerning measurement units has been distributed widely. Comprehensive training programs for firefighters have also been developed.

The committee has published "Training Guidelines for Metric Conversion in the Fire Services of Canada" to support provincial training programs. Those firefighters who have been trained report that metric is easy to use and simplifies many calculations, particularly those concerning hydraulics.

One very important sector of society involved in the protection and safety of Canadians has already converted to the metric system. I could go on and on. Many other points have already been mentioned.

In conclusion I would like to state that in view of the considerable progress which has been made in the metric conversion program over the last ten years and the fact this program has been and is being conducted in a manner fully compatible with the wishes of those involved in the changeover, and this has been and can be proved, I cannot support the motion before us.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it has been my custom through this ongoing debate on metric to speak in measured tones. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate (Mr. Ouellet) and the people of Hamilton-Wentworth will know that I have used all the restraint and moderation at my command when sounding off about this government's imposition of metric on the lifestyles of Canadians.

However, after listening to the minister's intervention earlier this afternoon, I find that my sense of restraint, that sense of moderation and patience, is being tried to the extreme. I have never heard such unadulterated bilge coming even from this minister who was indeed protesting too much in his government's defence of force-marching Canadians into metric. Surely the minister in charge of metric conversion must have had his tongue gently nudging the inside of his cheek when he suggested to the House of Commons that metric conversion is being done fairly and that the large majority of Canadians are welcoming metric with open arms.

The minister cites the three incidences where metric conversion is mandatory, as the minister says, at the specific request of the industries concerned; gasoline by the litre, home furnishings and, oh yes, almost as an afterthought, the retail food sector.

I do not care what kind of argument this government tries to put up as to the viability of metric and the reasons why this country should go metric, the minister's speech can be summed up with one statement: everybody seems to be in step with metric except the people.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Irwin) made a statement which I believe needs challenging. He asked whether any member of this House could think of a worse way of wasting the taxpayers' money than by discussing this issue here on this Friday afternoon. He quoted a figure of something like $400,000 or $500,000 that it is costing the Canadian taxpayer to have this issue debated in the House of Commons.

One of our complaints over the years has been that the metric issue has not come before the House of Commons for a full-blown debate. Not one single piece of legislation has come before this House to be voted on. We feel that an issue as important as converting to metric, an issue which is a massive incursion into the lives of every individual Canadian, has not been ventilated and aired in this House of Commons.

If the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie wants to challenge us and ask what worse way there can be of spending the taxpayers' money than debating the metric issue in the House of Commons, I can think of one. It is the astronomical amount that this government has spent on metric conversion over the past 10, 11 or 12 years. It has been incredibly costly to convert to metric. It now amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars, if not $2 billion or $3 billion. Tell that to the pensioners, the consumers and the home owners. Hand out $2 billion or $3 billion to people who are in need of that money. Try to explain to them how the government can justify that expenditure for metric conversion.

I began to argue against the advisability of imposing metric conversion on Canadians when I first entered this House of Commons about four years ago. During the past four years I have been trying to bring democracy to metrication from the consumer's point of view. All governments in the free world are supposed to be responsible to public opinion. If it is responsible public opinion, it is the duty of a government to be responsible. In the case of metric conversion, we are dealing with many millions of Canadians who have made their views known to this government through their elected members of Parliament. As a spokesman for the consumers of Canada I entered this debate, the third or fourth such opposition debate in this House, to register in no uncertain terms the outrage expressed by Canadians over this enforced metric business.

The latest Liberal government has been imposing metric on the Canadian population in a way which is nothing short of dictatorship. It is force-marching Canadians into metric shopping, demanding that Canadian home owners do metric cooking, have metric carpeting, metric carpentry, metric clothing, metric everything else. It strikes me as being repressive and undemocratic.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who once took the state out of the bedrooms of the nation, has now put the state into the kitchens, corner grocery stores and supermarkets of the nation. I know what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is going to say. He will say that I, and many of my colleagues, and the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have registered their protest against enforced metric conversion are a bunch of fanatics. I would prefer to present the case of the Canadian people, those who are virtually being ignored by this government. I would prefer to present their case through the letters that have come to me and to many of my colleagues and particularly to members of the media. As a former member of the media I have great respect for the journalists' reflection of the views of the people in their areas.

Without getting into the debate on whether metric was made legal or mandatory or was voluntary through the years, the Canadian people know that they were conned. They know that when metric was first introduced, it was voluntary. That was the intention of the Canadian government when it first presented the metric conversion before the House of Commons, in principle. It was a Friday afternoon just like today, there were not many members in the House, it was somewhere around four o'clock. It happened to be March 17, St. Patrick's Day, 1976, as I recall, when the House of Commons approved guidelines voluntarily. It was the assumption of every single Member of Parliament sitting in this House. I was not one of them, Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in the Press Gallery at the time. I was watching that debate. It was the clear understanding of every single Member of Parliament that adoption of metric would be voluntary. It was also the assumption of many sectors of Canadian society that this country could go metric in a voluntary way and particularly in step with our largest trading partners around the world.

Several of my colleagues have dealt with what has happened in Great Britain and in the United States. I have been interested to look into the Australian experience, and I will speak about that in a moment. In the meantime, why do we not look at what some of the media people have been saying across the country? In some communities and in some areas and in dealing with some subjects, the media people may leave something to be desired, they may be controversial. Nevertheless, in my view, they genuinely reflect what the people are thinking.

Let me start off with a pro-metric comment which comes from the Chronicle Journal in Thunder Bay. This was sent to us through the courtesy of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). The editorial deals with the massive petition which was tabled by my colleague, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) in the House of Commons a few weeks ago. An editorial in the Thunder Bay Chronical Journal says:

The interesting aspect of all this latter day criticism is that seven years ago when the guidelines legislation was passed, all political parties were in favour of the switch.

I guess that technically that is right, that all 17 or 18 or 20 members of the House who were here on that Friday afternoon were in favour of going to metric in principle. None of us has ever denied that. The editorial carries on:

Canadians survived the switch to litres, the switch to kilometres, to Celsius temperatures and all those other aspects of metrication, with little more than momentary confusion and discontent and today most take all those things for granted.

Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I can take them for granted, too. I can learn to live with kilometres, with Celsius—and I am getting at my osmosis—and I think many Canadians are trying to do that. The editorial continues:

But then metrication hit the retail trade and Domm—

Referring to my colleague from Peterborough.

—and such people as Neil Fraser, the federal civil servant for his continuing criticism of metrication and other government policies decided that they had to make a last ditch stand for what they say are their principles.

Too bad people don't recognize those principles for what they really are: political exploitation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in fairness I am quoting the Chronicle Journal editorial. All I can say is that if political exploitation means that Members of Parliament respond to the very strenuous and urgent requests on behalf of hundreds and thousands, and indeed, millions of Canadians, that this headlong plunge into metric be slowed down or reviewed or made more democratic, if that is political exploitation, then I do not know why I or the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) or the hon. member for Peterborough or the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) or anyone of us in this House are here to represent the views of the people.

I make no apologies whatsoever in standing up in front of this House of Commons to state as strongly as I can on behalf of the people whom I represent, and not only my people but many millions of Canadians, that this government is going about the metrication process in the wrong way.

Let me quote, Mr. Speaker, from the Hamilton Spectator very briefly:

Shops and shoppers never asked for it but metric measures will become mandatory in the stores of Hamilton-Wentworth, Halton, Brant and Haldimand-Norfolk January 11.

It goes on:

Ottawa's metric conversion has been imposed in the arbitrary, callous style of a hamfisted dictatorship.

The only rationale the government has condescended to offer is that metric measurements would make things easier for our industries to see goods abroad.

That is not the truth and the government knows it is not the truth.

Approximately 60 per cent of Canada's exports go to the United States—which uses Imperial measures, with American variations. President Reagan's administration has—

It has already announced that the Metric Commission there will be wound down in September. He personally hopes that the government of the United States has walked its last kilometre. I know that the American system is voluntary, Mr. Speaker, and it is the voluntary aspect of metric that I want to come back to later.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, a pretty respected newspaper across this country, and one which has been known to take issue with us on subjects which we, the opposition, support, said "The Metres Don't Scan" and then:

The federal government has a curious device for monitoring reaction in the towns where it has enforced metric conversion. It turns a deaf ear.

In all three towns, grocery stores were ordered to convert from Imperial to metric; in all three, the stores switched back at the request of a hostile public.

But in the Commons the other day, Industry Minister Herbert Gray confirmed that the Liberal Government intends to order 21 more towns to convert next January.

That was this past January, Mr. Speaker. It continues:

The steamroller rolls, regardless, the wrong way along a one-way street.

There are stories, articles and editorials, by respected journalist and newspapers, from one end of the country to the other, which would indicate that this is not just a little group of fanatics from Ontario that are discussing this metric question.

Here is what the Cape Breton Post for Saturday, March 20, 1982, had to say:

Mr. Ouellet says "it's very sad to see a little group trying to make a cause at the last moment. Now, at the very last minute, there are some people trying to make a fuss about it. They have to be reminded that we have been doing things for the last 12 years in this direction."

What is really sad is that Mr. Ouellet, throughout his interview, produces no argument on behalf of metric but confines himself to downgrading the intelligence of opponents. "Those who are joining the anti-metric forces", he advises with that assurance which comes from membership in this federal government, "must surely be misinformed."

The editorial goes on to quote the Canadian Press:

'Actually, many small-business men and farmers have been vocally protesting for years against metric conversion, partly because of costs involved in adapting scales, tools and machinery.'

Small-business men and farmers—these are fanatics, Mr. Speaker!

We can go to the west coast. I can read some comments from one member of the media. Here is one:

• (1610)

I presume everyone heard—or read—the comments of U.S. Ambassador Paul Robinson who told a news conference that Canada will be at a "definite disadvantage" if it sticks to a schedule of conversion to metric by the end of next year.

The ambassador told us, as plainly as he could, "most Americans don't like metric at all," . . . he thinks metric is "rubbish".

I realize the ambassador is in the news these days for his controversial statements but, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has pointed out, the ambassador has the right to state his own opinion.

There are other of my colleagues who want to get into the debate this afternoon. I just want to make clear one more time that, speaking for myself and, I am sure, for members of my party, I am not against conversion to the metric system per se. I am willing to learn it. I am willing to adapt to it. I am learning it through osmosis. What I resent deeply and what the people we are hearing from resent very much is the way this government has gone about imposing metric.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not true.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The government is force marching Canadians into metric, and Canadians are fed up. They are fed up with this Liberal government's intrusion into people's private lives.

Mr. Ouellet: You are misleading the House.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I think it is time for parliamentarians to speak up and to speak out for millions of Canadians.

Mr. Ouellet: Be honest.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The minister asks me to be honest. I am speaking out as honestly as I possibly can. I have been speaking out as honestly as I can on behalf of many millions of Canadian consumers, and I am dealing far more honestly with this issue and far more honestly with the people of Canada—

Mr. Ouellet: Millions? Come on.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —than the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Government of Canada. Surely it is the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to safeguard the interests of Canadian consumers.

I repeat that we have been looking out for the senior citizens, pensioners and farmers of this country. Hon. members opposite cannot tell me that farmers are not having problems when all of a sudden they get one single measurement on a package and when the directions on the package tell farmers to spray a hectare with so many litres of dangerous insecticides and poisons, which are dangerous if they are improperly used and which must be used by specific measurements in order to do the job. Many farmers are running into problems on that score.

I repeat that I am not against metric conversion per se.

Mr. Ouellet: Well, sit down.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I am against forced metric conversion the way this government is going about it, and I am saying that if we are going to bring a sense of democracy to metric conversion, what is wrong with putting tandem measurements—imperial and metric—on packages to allow at least this generation of Canadians to become accustomed to the system? Surely, if the Government of Canada can put French and English labelling on all packaged goods to give French Canadians and English Canadians and other Canadians freedom of choice with respect to language—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank members of the House.

I just want to make one last plea to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If the government can require that all package labelling be in English and in French to give Canadians freedom of choice in that regard, is it too much to ask that the Government of Canada require that all retail goods carry both—for as long as the sectors in Canadian society believe they should be carried—

Mr. Ouellet: Two years; that is what the industry said.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —metric and imperial measurements without deadlines? The government should not impose deadlines on consumers.

Mr. Ouellet: It is not us; it is the industry.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I am asking the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to bring democracy to metrication in this country. If he will do that, and if he will agree to make metric far more voluntary than the government has done thus far, he will receive the blessings of many—

Mr. Ouellet: It is not the government.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —hundreds of thousands—if not millions—of Canadians. That is what we are requesting, and that is what I will continue to demand of this government.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate today and to try to bring a balance to the debate. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), who has just finished speaking, told us he is not opposed to metric conversion but that he is opposed only to its implementation.

Mr. Clarke: Compulsory.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Compulsory.

Mr. Clarke: Read the motion.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is a little difficult to understand. I could accept that position if hon. members opposite would learn to express their point of view in somewhat less strident and divisive tones.

The hon. member talked about a forced march to metric. He knows, of course, that is not true.

We listened to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) previously. The hon. member is noted for having a rather keen sense of humour and for using it quite frequently in the House, but he seemed to have forgotten his sense of humour today when he talked about jackboot tactics. If I am not mistaken, he even used the word "Nazi". I find that offensive, and I think any thinking Canadian would find it offensive. It is strange that hon. members can get up in this House and use terms like that, knowing they are false and knowing that no such situation exists in Canada. They know that they will not suffer and legal repercussions, so they make those statements. This certainly demonstrates how falacious the statements are.

The same hon. member, the hon. member for Red Deer, referred to the metric issue being a very large issue in the byelection in Olds-Didsbury, which is part of his federal riding of Red Deer. I am sorry the hon. member is not here at the moment because I would like to put a question to him directly. I wonder what he did in that campaign to set the issue straight. If Mr. Kessler was as dishonest with the electorate on matters metric as he was on the constitutional issue, the hon. member for Red Deer could have done a great deal in the service of this country by participating in that campaign and setting the record straight.

A considerable number of scare tactics were used in this debate but very little logic. For instance, the opposition tried to excuse its own betrayal of principle by spreading one canard after another. We have heard that there has been no debate of this issue in Parliament. In fact, there has been.

Mr. Domm: Not on forced metric.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The implementation of the metric system in Canada was passed unanimously by Parliament. We have heard time and time again—and this is the principal stalking horse of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—that we have forced metric. We do not have forced metric. Nothing has been legislated. Nothing has been ordered by order in council until particular sectors of the economy have asked the government to do so. That is an indication of the inaccuracy of some of the information—I will use the word because I know it is parliamentary—hon. members are putting out.

It has been said that Parliament was not consulted on conversion of retail scales, and that is not true. It has been said here that Australia has abandoned metric conversion, and that is not true. As a matter of fact, Australia proceeded originally to convert to metric by the method hon. members opposite advocate, the dual system. We had to go to a strictly metric system because it would take an interminable length of time to convert. They talked about the cost of the so-called conversion and about the fact that it should take longer. As has been the case in so many of their arguments, they contradict themselves. The longer it takes to convert to metric, the greater will be the cost. If we had converted to metric in 1871 when Sir. John A. Macdonald's government passed the first Weights and Measures Act to make metric an official system of weight and measure in this country, we would not have as many problems as we have today. Any rational person knows that metric system makes more sense than the imperial system.

• (1620)

Mr. Domm: That is not so.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wonder if the hon. member for Peterborough knows how many chains there are in a mile or how many square chains in an acre. That is part of the imperial system that he loves so much.

Mr. Domm: I just told you.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I am sorry, I did not hear.

Mr. Domm: I said 5,280.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is the number of feet. I asked how many chains in a mile and how many square chains in an acre.

Mr. Domm: How tall are you in metric?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Slightly less than two metres.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to hon. members, the usual form of debate should be observed.

Mr. Domm: He does not even know how tall he is.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I may not know exactly how tall I am in metric but I am tall enough to tell the truth. I wish hon. members opposite would learn to do the same.

Mr. Regan: You are asking for too much.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I weigh about 65 kilograms, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clarke: It looks more like 85 to me!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): An hon. member opposite just shouted that it looks more like 85. I think he is trying to judge me by his head. There has been just too much rhetoric connected with this issue, as with so many issues of late, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what purpose the opposition is trying to serve in confusing the issue—well, I do know, but I think it is a rather base purpose and will not serve the nation well.

The metric system has been legal in this country since 1871 as part of the first Weights and Measures Act. It was amended in 1971 by Parliament to specify the international system of units. That should answer the question of the hon. member for Red Deer who asked what metric system was being introduced. It is the International System of Units known as the SI system. This action followed a decision made in 1951 by the world's major trading partners, which form the General Conference on Weights and Measures, to adopt improvements to the metric system. Recognizing the worldwide use of metric measurements, the modernized system was re-named the International System of units, or SI for short.

The policy that metric conversion was inevitable and in the national interest was established with the House leaders of all parties on January 16, 1970 speaking in support of the white paper on metric conversion in Canada. Those speeches were made in Parliament, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Domm: For voluntary metric.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The white paper on metric conversion was developed in response to representations which had been pressed upon the government from widely diverse segments of the nation, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Home and School Association, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce—and that is a pretty left-wing group—the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers.

These organizations were convinced and are convinced of the practical benefits to be derived from a system whose advantages range from simplifying the learning process in school to improving and consolidating Canada's competitive position in world trade.

There are over 100 voluntary sector committees with over 2,000 volunteer representatives from industry, labour, consumer and government bodies. Metric Commission Canada initiated the over-all strategy of involving every sector from every region of Canada as early as possible in planning for metric conversion. Does that sound very compulsory, Mr. Speaker?

Sector plans of industry, business and education are developed through a consensus process. Voluntary sector committees take responsibility for scheduling and monitoring the implementation of their plans. The voluntary participation approach is characterized by plans which are developed by those who will have to implement them. This helps to ensure that the benefits are achieved at minimal cost.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, to delay and prolong the implementation of metric simply increases the cost. That is about the only thing it accomplishes, and that is negative.

A program of guideline dates for metric conversion recommended by Metric Commission Canada, after consulting with industry, labour and consumer groups, was approved by the government and debated in the House of Commons on March 17, 1975. The standing committee reported back to the House on December 17, 1976, with recommendations to adopt the program of guideline dates and to introduce additional legislation supporting metric conversion.

That bill was debated in the House, it went to committee and after eight months was reported back to the House with recommendations for legislation regarding the implementation of metric conversion, but still the opposition goes about the country saying it has never been debated in Parliament; that it is being forced down people's throats; that Parliament has not been consulted and therefore the people have not been consulted. That is a lot of nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and it is time they stopped using that kind of scare tactic and started using logic. Surely hon. members opposite must have heard something before now about the necessity of elected representatives of the people providing leadership. Maybe it is time that some of them started providing a little of that leadership and began explaining the facts instead of exacerbating the situation and promoting the canards that they spread across the country about the metric system as well as many other aspects of government policy.

Out of a total of 94 sectors which have public conversion plans there are only three sectors for which regulations have been issued under the Weights and Measures Act. These regulations establish cutoff dates for the sale and advertising of goods in other than the metric SI system. Regulations were requested by the working group on scales in the retail food industry, by the home furnishing and piece goods industry, by the petroleum refiners and by the wholesale and gasoline service stations. These committees have consumer, industry and appropriate government representation on them. Proposals to make metric conversion mandatory in these three industries were initiated by the industries concerned and not by Metric Commission Canada. Where regulatory action has been requested, the industries cited were concerned about achieving an orderly conversion without unfair competition. Government action was requested to ensure that the ground rules for metric conversion are the same for all in the industry, thus reducing the possibility of consumer confusion to a minimum. The Consumers' Association of Canada approved this approach.

• (1630)

The working group on scales in the retail food industry comprises representatives of food retailing chains and independents, scales manufacturing and servicing enterprises, consumers and weights and measures regulating authorities. In 1977 it formally requested suitable regulations under the Weights and Measures Act to deal with advertising as well as the conversion of scales, which were deemed necessary for achieving a co-ordinated and orderly transition to metric units. I wish to emphasize the fact that the decision to support mandatory metric conversion in this sector was made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and the cabinet under the authority of the statute law on the recommendation of the food retailers in 1977, and with the full support of the Consumers' Association of Canada.

The information I have provided in my remarks so far, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the Canadian metric conversion program has followed a voluntary participation approach. Where legislation has been enacted and regulations used, it has been at the request of the interested parties.

I would also like to remind hon. members that this program is now in its tenth year and is approaching completion in many significant areas. Several sectors within the Metric Commission Canada framework have already identified to the commission that implementation of metric conversion in their industries is now substantially complete. Based on the 94 conversion plans currently published by Canadian business, industry, education, labour, farm, consumer and other sectors, about 80 per cent of these sectors expect to achieve their completion goals before December, 1984. In addition, the conversion of scales in retail food stores, which is the last major program to affect consumers, is now under way in the major urban centres across Canada. Consequently, I suggest this is not a time for seeking a review of our metric conversion policy. If we have a review now and change horses this late when we are almost to the other shore, what is it going to do to all of those industries which have already converted? The opposition is worrying about costs, yet they want us to turn the hands of the clock backwards. Sometimes I wonder how many of them over there have accepted the wrist watch yet.

The reason given for the introduction of the Weights and Measures Act in 1871 was:

> It is expedient to legalize the use of the metric system of weights and measures for the promotion and extension of the internal as well as the foreign trade of Canada, and for the advancement of science.

One hundred years later, in January, 1970 the white paper on metric conversion in Canada stated:

> Because of the vital importance of foreign trade to Canada, especially the need for growth in exports of manufactured goods, there must be serious concern about Canada's competitiveness in world markets as a result of the worldwide changeover to the metric system.

It went on to say that:

> Since a trading nation must take account of the measurement and standards system of the buyer, the overwhelming world trend to the metric system is a powerful argument for Canadian conversion.

The government fully anticipated that adoption of the metric system would improve Canada's ability to penetrate world markets with manufactured goods, and that holds true today.

We heard about the United States, and the U.S. ambassador to Canada has a penchant for shooting off his mouth, saying that conversion to metric would hurt Canadian trade with the U.S.

I just want to close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that about 50 per cent of all exports to the U.S. today are in metric measure. Therefore, it has not hurt our exports, it is not likely to, and despite the reactionary regime in the U.S. at the moment, they too will convert to metric.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to say a few words on this subject. I am also delighted to see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) here; I am aware he has stayed for pretty well the entire time of the debate. However, there is one thing he did not mention in his very kind offer to the people of Canada, so I will do it for him. Some few days ago the minister stated that he would be delighted to hear from all the people in Canada on metric and he would answer them all personally. I think the invitation still holds, and I hope those in favour will write to the minister as well. I also hope he will give us the results some weeks or months down the road.

There is one other thing which is very unusual, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I feel the minister is very concerned about this motion. The minister spoke for 35 minutes outlining his case. Being a very distinguished Member of Parliament and cabinet from the province of Quebec, it is the only time he never said one word in French. He was trying to get the message across to that part of Canada which is not so enthusiastic about this program. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am going to go a little further than the minister and say, "Bienvenue à mon collègue." So I have spoken more in French than the minister has.

The motion before us today, Mr. Speaker, is on a very specific issue, one which a great many Canadians feel is of singular importance, and I appreciate the privilege of being able to speak on their behalf. As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in our Press Gallery today is a very distinguished former parliamentarian in the person of the former Leader of the Social Credit Party, Mr. Robert Thompson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: He is also a former Conservative MP. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the truly significant aspect of the debate on this issue is the fact that the necessity for such debate reflects upon and embodies something absolutely fundamental to each and every issue debated in this chamber. I am referring to democracy, appropriately defined as government by the people, direct or representative. We on both sides of this chamber are here because we are part of democracy. The people of Canada elect us to represent their views and act in their interest. This is the way democracy works in Canada, or at least this is the way it is supposed to work. However, under this government, and increasingly evident during all debates in this House, government by the people—democracy—has all but been abandoned in many cases. The views of the people we represent and our capability to act in their interest have been swept aside and dismissed by the authoritative and arrogant attitude of the government. Our treasured form of democracy is being replaced by a form of tyranny, which is described as "a despotic and cruel exercise of power".

That this government is both despotic and cruel is something well known to the thousands of unemployed, homeless and hungry Canadians. Its despotic and cruel exercise of power has destroyed our economy. As I mentioned some time ago, the indifference of this government is such that, having shattered the economic base of the nation, its only response to victimized Canadians is that they must adjust to living amidst the rubble. Recently, and with increasing regularity, the victims of this tyranny are registering their refusal to adjust. As this becomes evident, Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be most appropriate at this time to quote the remarks of someone who obviously neglected to heed his own warnings:

> The great lesson to draw from revolutions is not that they devour humanity, but rather that tyranny never fails to generate them.

• (1640)

The words I have just quoted were written in 1958. The author, 24 years later, has become universally viewed as a very despotic Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). As the Prime Minister said, tyranny never fails to generate revolution. Among the many growing forms of protest we are witnessing against this government is one which involves the issue we debate today, namely, the mandatory conversion to metric measurement. Let me repeat that, "the mandatory conversion".

The motion before us bears repeating because it so clearly exemplifies the importance not only of the motion but of the debate itself. It is that the compulsory element in metrication should and must be abandoned as an affront to representative, parliamentary democracy.

To compel Canadians, to order them, to convert to the metric system or be punished is abhorrent and odious. When this tyrannical method of conversion is so obviously against the wishes of the majority of the people so compelled, it is indeed an affront to democracy.

There can be no doubt in the mind of the government that the majority of people in this country are against being forced into metric conversion. This government knows that various public opinion polls have impartially tabulated this opposition. Members on both sides of this House have received letters from constituents registering strong objection.

Just over a month ago, I and a number of my colleagues on this side of the House presented to the House a massive petition opposing the mandatory method of conversion, a petition bearing some 130,000 signatures. The names on this petition were collected for the most part in response to a mail-in poll conducted by the Sun newspapers in Toronto, Calgary and Edmonton. Canadians in three major centres of this nation took the time to express their disapproval in this way. Almost as significant as the fact that so many people felt strongly enough opposed to being forced into using metric that they participated in the poll is the fact they had to spend 30 cents on a stamp to reply. That means Michael Warren, the Postmaster General, and his post office gain to the tune of about $40,000. No one in this House need be reminded that the decision to raise our postal rates was not made by, nor even referred to, Parliament.

Let me repeat for the benefit of viewers and those listening and reading my remarks that when they write regarding postal matters to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs they can write to him free of postal charge. He will still have to spend his time opening and replying to those letters. The rise in postal rates is one glaring example of what this government has done to extract a considerable amount of money from the taxpayers much against their will. This rise in rates, like the compulsory nature of the switch to metric, was passed by a government order in council, both evidence of despotic and cruel exercise of power.

The government, in its devious attempts to confuse the issue with respect to parliamentary approval and input into the switch to metric, cites, with glaring omissions, past approval of opposition parties. The government knows full well that what it is saying about this aspect of conversion and what really occurred are two completely different things.

Back in 1971 when the Progressive Conservative opposition agreed to support the government's white paper on metric conversion, our support was based, among others, on two main considerations. At that time it appeared that other nations, notably our major trading partners, were also going to convert to the system, and it made sense to keep in step with the times. The government, in its white paper, drew attention to this fact. At that time I had the privilege of speaking, not only inside but outside of the House on the subject. I said that I could see some merit in moving toward metric on the basis that our biggest trading partner, the United States, was going that way. I said that we should move at the same speed as the United States, and you know what that is now. We find in the white paper the following:

> —because of the close ties between the United States and Canada in science, technology, industry and commerce, each country has a special interest in the course likely to be followed by the other in respect of metric conversion.

The government assured us that Canada would co-ordinate her conversion with that of the United States. From that I gather it meant at the same speed. Since then, as a result of strong public opposition, the United States has backed away from the process and is abolishing its Metric Board and placing the question of conversion under the aegis of the department of commerce to pursue voluntary conversion if desired.

Our other trading partners, Britain and Japan, have also either halted the conversion process or are reverting to the voluntary system, again as a result of strong opposition from the public. Only in Canada, what a pity—that reminds me of the tea ad we see on television when we hear "Only in Canada, you say. What a pity!"—do we have the spectre of people being fined or imprisoned if they do not comply. Only in Canada has tyranny replaced democracy.

The second major consideration which led to our support of the white paper was that one section of the paper stated:

> No legislative action is contemplated which would make mandatory a general use of metric.

Would the government now have us believe that the order in council making metric conversion mandatory is "no legislative action"? That is yet another broken promise by a government which has perfected the process of saying one thing and then doing exactly the opposite. The government knows and has always known that Canadians are firmly opposed to mandatory metric conversion.

The first evidence of this arose in 1977 when western farmers and Members of Parliament forced the government to amend the metric conversion bill to enable grain producers to keep the acre as the major unit of land measurement. The bill was also amended to allow the natural gas industry to sell gas either in cubic feet, cubic metres or other forms of measurement depending on whether gas was sold by volume, mass or energy units. At the time the fight was won a western newspaper noted that when it came to domestic usage, the retention of the imperial system of measurement "would hinder nobody except the Ottawa bureaucrats determined to hammer us all into neat moulds of conformism."

Another example of the problems faced by Canadians in dealing with metric conversion occurred the year after the farmers won their battle. The year 1978 was to be the primary conversion year in Canada for the construction industry. Problems surfaced almost as soon as the program began. Millions of homes in the country were built according to imperial measurement, and the maintenance and upkeep of these houses required supplies conforming to the same system. Manufacturers faced the cost of double production lines and suppliers faced the cost of stocking two inventories, one metric, the other imperial.

Thousands upon thousands of self-employed Canadians, carpenters, plumbers, carpet layers and the like faced horrendous costs to covert their tools, all because of the government's incomprehensible and unwavering march toward total metrication.

It was in October of that same year that the comptroller-general's report to the United States Congress was published. The report estimated that metric conversion would cost the United States about $100 billion and, after dealing at length with each aspect of a potential change-over, warned Americans that the metric system might not be that great a deal after all. Usually in Canada we hear it said that it would be one tenth of the cost. You can imagine what it would be. We have heard figures given by government spokesmen that it is just a few million dollars. The only great deal involved in the Canadian conversion program is the great deal of money that it will cost us. It will be astronomical. It will be extremely difficult to put any figure on it. This year's budget for the Canadian Metric Commission is $12 million, and of this amount $1.8 million will be spent on advertising. The total cost of the commission's budget, since it was formed in 1972, is now $50 million, and in all probability a good deal more than that is hidden in other estimates and in other departments.

• (1650)

But the Canadian government continues its quest, still holding firm to the belief that mandatory conversion is absolutely necessary because metric measurement is the greatest thing to have happened to improve our lives since the advent of sliced bread. That is probably why the government took its toughest stance on metric in the area of retail food sales.

Here, as well, Canadians are and will be paying through the nose because of the way the government approached the issue.

With conversion dates firm and fixed, retailers had no choice but to replace or adjust the more than 120,000 food scales in Canadian food stores, outlets both large and small.

The cost to the retailers has been accurately estimated to be between $2,000 and $8,000. Yet the minister in his remarks earlier today, stated that it was a few hundred dollars. What I find equally ludicrous is the fact that 98 per cent of all new metric food scales in Canada are manufactured outside of Canada. Over one half billion dollars is being spent outside of Canada to implement a program that we do not even want here, or at least the majority do not want.

If our grocery vendors refuse to comply with the rules of the government's mandatory metric conversion program and decide that the unnecessary cost to them and the inconvenience and annoyance to their customers is not worth it, they can be fined up to $5,000 or jailed for up to two years. The minister did budge somewhat when he said that he might consider small retailers being exempt. We wonder just how small a retailer will have to be in order to be exempt.

This plan to punish retailers for non-compliance may be one of the reasons why the government proclaimed yet another order in council—the Emergency Measures Act. It might be planning to incarcerate grocery store owners in the civilian internment camps it plans to establish.

An hon. Member: Come on, do not say that.

Mr. Darling: Come on, it is there. It is very unlikely but it is there.

I might also remind the government that when our party was in office we recognized the folly of the retail sales program, and the minister then responsible for small business, the member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), cancelled the order in council at the request of the retail food sector.

However, once again under this government, the metric juggernaut rolls blindly along. It is a government uncaring that the sacrifices being made by those in its path are forced to adopt the metric measurement and being ordered to comply. In a great many areas of our life metric has become a fait accompli but not because, as the government would have us believe, it is advantageous either to the individual or the nation.

Metric measurement of our gasoline has certainly not led to a lowering of prices. Metric measurement of highway speed limits has certainly not resulted in fewer accidents. Metric measurement of consumer products has certainly not expanded our overseas trade opportunities. Metric measurement of our environment has certainly not helped eliminate the menace of acid rain. Metric measurement of the tools of labour is certainly not stemming the tide of unemployment. Metric measurement of the distance from home plate to the outfield fence in Olympic Stadium has certainly not guaranteed Expo fans that the Montreal Expos will win the World Series. If the minister has ever seen that field on television, the distances are shown in huge numbers in metric and much smaller ones in feet. You need field glasses to see them.

Metric measurement of our meat and produce certainly will not save families money on their grocery bill. It is, rather, the opposite. Every time metric is used it seems that the goods that are purchased cost more.

Mr. Ouellet: Oh, come on!

Mr. Darling: Just take a look. I will give an example to the hon. minister from Quebec. We used to buy maple syrup for $23 a gallon. With metric, all we get is four litres and it still costs $24 dollars.

Mr. Cousineau: You buy it in the wrong place. I pay $18.

An hon. Member: It is the biggest consumer rip-off in the history of the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, since we have only five minutes left, I think I will have the privilege of ending this debate. First, I would like to say in passing that if the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) is paying $23 or $24 per gallon, he is not buying it at the right place, because I pay $18. So, better luck next year.

Substantially, what does the motion say, Mr. Speaker? The member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is asking to abandon metrication forthwith. In fact, the position taken by the members opposite has become a real farce. I have never heard Progressive Conservative members give so many different opinions on a given subject. In any case, it was the same for Petro-Canada, the interest rates we are discussing currently and the Constitution. The metric system is no exception. What was their position in 1979? They favoured conversion to the metric system as soon as possible. The then Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was asked the following question by my colleague, the member for Timmins-Chapleau, and I quote:

> I would like to ask the minister how he intends to ensure that metric conversion is completed, or does he intend to act on his own to dismantle the program?

He answered, and I quote:

> Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. The government is still committed to the concept of metrication.

I also want to quote a question by the member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), which was reported in Hansard of November 14, 1979, page 1302, and directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I quote:

> Therefore, I want to give him an opportunity to correct an impression that he gave yesterday when he is quoted as having said there is a possibility that there will be a postponement of the conversion to the metric system, planned for January 1—

And the then Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses and Industry answered, and I quote:

> The fact is, the whole process has been handled very well by the members of the Metric Commission, who are engineers, who have been dealing with sectors of industry and associations, who have had time to sit down and study the various implications and problems involved.

Going back a little further, to March 1975 when they were the official opposition, my hon. colleague, the member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), the Progressive Conservative whip, made an excellent speech. He spoke on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, and I am referring to what was reported in Hansard on March 17, 1975, on page 4060, and I quote:

> I am pleased to lead off this debate for the official opposition. I think I should say at the outset that we supported metric conversion when it was introduced by order in council and the white paper, and that is our position today: we still support it. Let me say again that we in the official opposition support the principle of metric conversion.

And the hon. member, who today is the Progressive Conservative Party whip, went on to say, and I quote:

> —the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister, had his ministers undertake studies in this field.

So I would ask the hon. members representing the Progressive Conservative Party to contradict the right hon. former member for Prince Albert.

The member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) said that he never voted on the issue. I would refer him to Hansard, June 16, 1977, page 1142, on the subject of Bill C-23, where it says that the member for Red Deer voted on that day on Bill C-23, introduced by this government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, I must advise the House that debate on the motion is ended, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11). Therefore, the House stands adjourned until next Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SUPPORT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 in connection with the first national conference of citizens of Canada representing 27 Solidarity support committees who met in their first national conference on April 24 and 25 at Toronto. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House resolves, since both the Canadian and Polish governments signed the Helsinki Accord, the Canadian government is morally and legally obliged to defend human rights now suspended in Poland; moreover, that the Canadian ambassador to the United Nations raise the issue of Poland at the United Nations debates; that the Canadian government, using moneys put away for Poland, finance a national or international delegation of accountability to verify whether indeed Canadian food exports to Poland are reaching the people; and finally, that the Canadian government replace the present symbolic and ineffective sanctions with more meaningful ones and therefore implement a full range of trade, diplomatic and cultural sanctions against Poland and the Soviet Bloc until the state of war is lifted in Poland and human, citizen and trade union rights are reinstated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION TAKEN BY SOME QUEBEC LIBERALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in order to spare Canadians the spectre of public dissension and discord between the "Gang of Ten" led by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister of State on the one hand, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his supposedly loyal supporters on the other hand, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet):

That the Liberal Party be advised to wash its dirty linen in private rather than on the front pages of the Montreal press.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER STUDENT UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the lack of Liberal leadership in most areas and the lousy Liberal leadership when it was exercised have caused economic disaster throughout this country. Witness only the bungled budget, the disastrous and devastating results of the National Energy Program, and the crippling burden of high interest rates. Now we have yet another victim of Liberal mismanagement. This month tens of thousands of young Canadian students will not be able to find summer employment. It is expected that the student unemployment rate will be 18 per cent to 20 per cent. This means that next fall their further education will be in jeopardy. Since this Liberal government threatens to ruin a whole generation of young Canadians who are the future leaders of the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House condemn the Liberal government, and in particular the Minister of Employment and Immigration, for the refusal to institute adequate federal programs to enable students to find jobs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISARMAMENT

MINORITY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In a speech at Notre Dame University in the United States yesterday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in effect came out in favour of a nuclear arms freeze by both super powers and a no-first-use of nuclear weapons pledge, two recommendations found in the recent minority report on security and disarmament. The Prime Minister said:

Let us pledge that we will not be the one to start a war. We are worried by statements in the United States about . . . first-strike scenarios.

The text of the Prime Minister's speech also said that the United States has persistently taken the qualitative lead in the arms race while the U.S.S.R. tries to catch up, suggesting that the time may indeed be right for a nuclear arms freeze. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House, in light of the Prime Minister's remarks, endorse the minority report on security and disarmament and urge the Prime Minister to take the recommendations of that report to UNSSOD II next month in New York, calling specifically for a nuclear weapons freeze and a no-first-use pledge.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

PURCHASES OF MECHANICS' TOOLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, in view of the rumour of a major scandal in the Metric Commission that is now being investigated, it would appear that large sums of money appropriated to mechanics' metric tools is being fraudulently used to purchase "imperial tools" or, in some cases, items that are not even tools. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs immediately make a statement on this subject to this House clarifying this situation and at the same time indicating why sloppy practices of the Metric Commission permitted this situation to arise.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF SENIOR CITIZENS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, senior citizens, like all those on fixed incomes, are changing their priorities, as instructed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by cutting down on their food. They have to pay for their lodging. They have to pay the increased costs of utilities made high by the federal excise tax and the federal Canadian ownership tax, or their light and power will be cut off. The only priority left to them is to eat less. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

• (1410)

That this House urges the government to eliminate the excise tax and Canadian ownership tax or increase the pensions of the people who toiled and sacrificed all of their working years to build this country. They should not have to spend their sunset years "cold" and "hungry."

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

PREPARATIONS FOR CONFERENCE ON NATIVE ISSUES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter on which I rose on Friday. I did not receive unanimous consent then, but I hope I will do so today. Section 37 of our new Constitution guarantees that there will be a federal-provincial conference held with native representatives within the next year in order to discuss concerns of the native people. Therefore I move:

That this House reaffirm its commitment to serious negotiations with native leaders and requests that the federal government provide adequate funding to major native groups, including representatives of native women, so that they may be able to prepare their positions in advance of the constitutional conference.

This is seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSIONS

CALL FOR TABLING OF ORGANIZATIONS' SUBMISSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in light of the many references made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in his intervention in the House last Friday to the associations which had asked the Canadian government to go metric, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and the Canadian Construction Association, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House require the minister to table all letters and submissions from such organizations explicitly asking the government to convert Canada to metric I.S.U., making Canadian units of measurement illegal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF TAX ON FUEL USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter in relation to agriculture. Farmers are now engaged in the operation of seeding and it is becoming increasingly evident that the high cost of farm fuel will have a counter-productive effect on agricultural production. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That this House request the government to remove the federal tax on fuels used for the purpose of farming so as not to have an adverse effect on the production of food.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY CONVENTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Conservative Party, which claimed on the weekend to be the only truly national party, managed to scrounge up only 38 people to discuss this country's most urgent problem, unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House urge the Conservative Party to reconvene this workshop, entitled "Policy for People", and instead of inviting its own members, who have only a marginal interest in the subject, that the Conservatives invite the one and a quarter million unemployed Canadians to develop policies for the "Decade of Decision" that will provide the country with some vital insights into this problem and allow the Tories to hear a perspective that is truly national in scope.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS AFFECTING 55 TO 65 AGE GROUP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the current economic recession, with its increasing number of lay-offs, is hitting hard at Canadians in the 55 to 65-year old bracket. Many are already victims of lay-offs. They are without jobs, often without pensions, and literally without income. And, most of all, they have extremely great difficulty getting back into the labour force. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the federal government recognize that its economic policies are forcing many Canadians in the 55-65 age group onto the unemployment rolls, and that special attention be given to their particular problems so that they can again become productive members of the labour force.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

CONSULTATION TOUR BY TEN MONTREAL MEMBERS—GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This weekend we saw the following bizarre spectacle: the group of ten MPs from downtown and eastern Montreal, who were on a fact-finding mission and decided they wanted to meet with their Parti Québécois counterparts in order to seek a solution to the problems of unemployment, inflation and high interest rates. My question is as follows. Ignoring this lack of confidence in the cabinet's economic policies shown by two of its members, does the minister intend to meet Mr. Parizeau or does he think that a meeting with Mr. Ryan would be more successful?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thought the bizarre spectacle at the weekend took place in a city other than the city of Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the comments made by the hon. member recognize the fact that there are provincial governments, and that they too have some responsibilities for economic matters within their jurisdictions.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the minister is speaking to two members of his cabinet as well as Messrs. Parizeau and Ryan.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since last fall the number of people unemployed in this country has increased by about 150,000. Interest rates are about the same but are starting to rise again. About 5,000 companies have gone bankrupt since the minister's budget of last fall. Thousands of Canadians are concerned about their jobs and concerned about losing their businesses. Will the Minister of Finance explain why he is persisting with a combination of policies which, as he indicated in Europe last week, have brought the economy to its knees? And I might add we are expecting there will be further trouble ahead with these same policies.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member were correct in stating that the policies which were being followed by the Government of Canada had brought about the recession in this country and the recession in every industrialized country, then indeed he would be cutting quite a swath. But, of course, the budget and economic policies we are following are directed to trying to bring this economy and to help bring other economies out of the recession in which they presently find themselves.

I might say that there was a very broad consensus at the meetings of the OECD and the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund, made up of finance ministers from all the representative countries, that the mix of policies being followed in Canada was appropriate to the circumstances.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES IN BUDGET LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, as I have pointed out on many occasions in the past, that there are things which can be done here in Canada, and there are things which the Minister of Finance just totally refuses to do. We saw examples of things which can be done in the Ontario budget of last week. The Ontario budget has turned around. That budget said that three principal elements of this minister's budget will not be adopted by Ontario, principally the change in the capital cost allowance which has such an impact on the creation of jobs and more investment in this country. Is the Minister of Finance considering changes when he brings down the draft legislation for his budget, particularly as it relates to those three areas the Ontario Treasurer saw fit to change in his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait for the draft legislation. I have no announcement to make on these points at the present time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, we now have the spectacle of ten Liberal members, including two cabinet ministers, wanting to have something done about job creation next November at their policy conference.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, unbelievably, had to go to France to find out that unemployment in Canada is a question which needs tackling. Was the minister not aware that real unemployment in Cape Breton is running at 40 per cent in places like Inverness and Port Hawkesbury in his own riding? I want to ask the minister if he is now prepared to do something about that 40 per cent real unemployment in Cape Breton and elsewhere, or is he, like his colleagues, prepared to leave it until next November?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member must know that over the past several months we have announced a series of programs intended to help the unemployed. The Minister of Employment and Immigration on several occasions has announced improvements and extensions of existing programs, as well as new programs. The minister in charge of housing has done the same thing through various housing initiatives intended to increase employment in the country. That is the policy of the government—to do everything possible within its means to help those who are unemployed.

I would remind the hon. member that it was not necessary for me to go to Paris to find out about unemployment. If she had been in the House, and I think she was, the Friday before the OECD meetings, she would remember that I did discuss employment during question period and expressed my view that the unemployment figures were disturbingly high. They are very high in Canada, and equally high in the United States. Unemployment figures in all OECD countries are likely to rise to about 30 million by the end of this year. Never, since before the war, have we had unemployment in every country in the world as high as we have at the present time. It is our job, working together, to try to bring solutions to this problem of recession which exists in Canada and every other country in the world.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the minister's genuine concern about unemployment in the United States and in France. I would appreciate it even more if he would turn his attention to the problems of this country.

REQUEST FOR CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Before the minister's budget was brought down, the unemployment figures jumped from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. This should have given the minister some warning last autumn about the seriousness of the unemployment situation. Since the budget has been brought down, unemployment in this country is running close to 10 per cent. It has taken post-war record high unemployment to make the minister realize that it is a problem.

What is it going to take, in the way of additional numbers of people of the unemployment rolls and additional numbers of people without jobs in this country, to make the minister realize there has to be a solution right here in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I obviously cannot agree with the rather naive position taken by the hon. member in her question. She ought to know that many of the depressed industries and many of the declining job opportunities in Canada are due to recession in other countries of the world. It would be rather foolish for Canada to concentrate solely upon its own economy without making recommendations and suggestions about what ought to happen elsewhere.

One clear message came out of the discussions, both in Paris and Helsinki, and that is that the surest way to assist the process of recovery, not only in Canada but in the United States and other European countries, would be some success in bringing down interest rates in the United States. That is a clear message.

The hon. member is talking about what policies ought to be pursued. Can she tell us what policies were adopted at the spectacle in Toronto at the weekend, to help Canada out of the recession?

Miss MacDonald: Get rid of the minister.

Mr. Epp: That is the best economic policy there is.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

ENERGY

EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS—CHANGE IN NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD FORMULA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and deals with energy security for Canada. When the Conservative government authorized new exports of natural gas in 1979, the minister, the then Liberal energy critic, had this to say:

> We should be extremely careful and cautious when we talk about exports. We should think in terms of the necessity of conserving it for future generations and of the future needs of our country. The worst thing we could do—> —is to export gas for a fast buck or in order to support a faltering dollar.

He went on:

In view of that concern expressed by the minister when he was in opposition, why is he now reversing himself and supporting the National Energy Board decision to change its formula for needed Canadian reserves to include unproved or trend reserves in order to justify additional gas exports?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I indeed stand by what I said at that time, and which the hon. member has quoted. The reason I endorsed the conclusion of the National Energy Board is very simply that in the last couple of years Canada has seen a very significant increase in its gas reserves and is now in a better position than it ever was, not only in terms of ensuring a supply of natural gas for domestic needs for more than 25 years in the future, but we can still make good money, and help our economy and our balance of payments by exporting what is surplus to our needs. That is also in the national interest.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the minister may have disastrously bad policies, but he is not a fool. He did not answer the question I asked.

REASONS FOR CHANGE IN FORMULA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I asked about a change in the formula. I am not talking about the export of temporary surpluses of gas, I am talking about the fundamental problem which led a former minister, Joe Greene, back in 1971 to accept unproved reserves as the basis of a formula for ascertaining our needs. Considering that under that formula exports were allowed to increase, which led shortly thereafter to a shortfall and the NEB to change its definition so as not to include unproved reserves, why is the government now changing the formula? Is it not precisely because it is after a quick fix to deal with the dollar problem?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have to tell my hon. friend no, that is not the reason. We are in a situation now where, because of the slowdown in the American economy in particular, there is less demand for the authorized exports than we had expected. The demand is only about 60 per cent of production at present. In light of large additional discoveries of gas in Canada in the last couple of years, the NEB has come to the conclusion that we are now in a position to authorize more exports than had been anticipated, that we can be more flexible than we have been. As to what that surplus might be and which companies would be authorized to export it, the NEB will determine that at a later stage.

There has not been one extra metre of gas exported, nor will there be, just because of the NEB decision last week. The NEB has to hold hearings on the various applications before it, and then, on the basis of the modification it has made to the formula, decide how much of a surplus is available for export—after carefully allowing for all the needs of Canadians, as I said, for at least 25 years. I think that is a pretty responsible attitude on the part of the board.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the minister looked a little uncertain about his answer, as well he should, because again, for the second time in a row, he did not answer the question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as the minister knows, a few years ago a former minister assured us we had a 900-year supply of gas because he was acting on a formula based on unproved reserves. Shortly thereafter we were told we would be out of gas by 1985. I repeat, given the energy needs not only of the present but of future generations of Canadians, why is the Liberal government now repeating the error it made in 1971 which will potentially sell us short on gas for the future?

Mr. Nielsen: The minister will never be out of gas.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think I have covered that point extensively in my previous two answers. My hon. friend says I have not answered; I am afraid I have to tell him he has not listened to my answer.

FINANCE

AUDITING OF FISHERMEN'S INCOME IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Now that the officials of the minister's department who were involved in the income tax audit of the Atlantic provinces' fishermen have admitted that they made a mistake in not notifying the fishermen involved of the subject of the third party demands, what steps has the minister taken to correct the injustices that occurred? The minister will know that there is a litany of horror stories of fishermen who have been left with little or no money to support their families as a result of the over-zealous activities of this team of auditors and their third party demands.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, indeed a mistake was made in not sending notices of garnishee to the fishermen as well as to the fish buyers. I regret that. I deplore it, and I have said so to the department. I have given instructions that that sort of thing is not to happen again. The mistake was corrected about six weeks ago, and I intend to see that it does not happen again.

I might say that I have appointed a special adviser to myself who started work some days ago and who will look into the administration of the law as it applies to the fishing industry. I have received some interim recommendations from the special adviser, a Mr. William Rowe, who is a lawyer in St. John's, Newfoundland. I expect to be advising the House, the public, and the fishermen shortly—possibly this week—of what steps I intend to take.

Mr. Nielsen: He is an expert on fish?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, given the insensitivity and the over zealousness of these auditors, and the mistake that was made with respect to a group of people who, by tradition, do not have a system of written statements like most other Canadians, along with the fact that a number of fishermen have been badly hurt and their confidence in the system has been eroded, what disciplinary action has the minister taken against those overzealous auditors? Will the minister accept the invitation of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of this House to appear before it so that members from the Atlantic provinces can cross-examine him on this very unhappy situation?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would be quite happy to appear before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Indeed, I appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The topic was raised. We had an exchange of views, and some information was put on the record of that committee. As I said, I would be quite happy to appear before the fisheries committee. I deplore the mistake that was made and I have given instructions that it is not to happen again. I have expressed my serious concerns and feelings directly to the department on that score. I hope this week—possibly very soon—to announce what steps I intend to take as a result of the recommendations made to me by Mr. Rowe.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE FURTHER MEASURES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On February 23 the government announced its response to the situation in Poland. It consisted of mild and very ineffective measures against Poland and the U.S.S.R. For example, we suspended academic exchanges and restricted the Polish airline to two flights per week to Canada. In its press release, the Canadian government urged the Polish government to re-establish civil liberties, to end martial law, to release those arrested and restore dialogue with the church and Solidarity. Now three months later, the Prime Minister knows that none of those things have taken place in Poland. Repression is worse than ever. Peter Kent saw Poles being beaten brutally in prison while he was in Poland a weekend or so ago.

My question to the Prime Minister is—and there is no point looking around for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any of his deputies, they are all away—will the government now take further and more effective measures to indicate Canada's disapproval of this repression and to exert some pressure for change on the Polish government? Will the government introduce some other measures that may induce the Polish government to change those policies? For example, I recommend my release of March 24 last to the Prime Minister.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to refer the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the hon. member's release of March 24 last.

Mr. Crosbie: That is progress after three months, Madam Speaker.

PLEA BY CANADIAN SOLIDARITY CONFERENCE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I will repeat my question to the Prime Minister. Is his government considering further and more effective measures to help the people of Poland who have been subjected to savage repression since last December without any assistance from our government? As a further part of that question, will the Prime Minister do what the Pan-Canadian Conference of Solidarity has requested the government to do, that is, to replace the present symbolic, ineffective sanctions with more meaningful ones until human rights are reinstated? That is a plea from Canadian citizens who support Solidarity.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member pointed out the importance of helping the people of Poland. That is what the government's policy has been attempting to do. While on the one hand we condemn the government, the use of martial law and the slowness in the reconciliation process, we attempt to help the people of Poland. That is why, in the food area, for instance, we have extended very large credits. We are reluctant to do what the hon. member seems to suggest, namely, using punitive measures against the government, because that would really be a burden on the backs of the Polish people.

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday the Prime Minister acknowledged in a press conference that his government's anti-inflation program may not be working and, as a result, his government may have to consider unilaterally introducing wage controls in the public sector. Since his Minister of Finance has publicly stated that wage settlements are not necessarily responsible for the inflationary rate, will the Prime Minister justify this notion of his that the new direction of government policy to control inflation would be to impose controls on employees' wages which, in real terms, have dropped for the fifth consecutive year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may have misread or misheard what I said on Friday. I was asked about the public sector. I reminded the press conference that, as early as last February, I was proposing to the premiers of the ten provinces a program of restraint on wages and salaries in the public sector. I was asked if I was still considering that. I answered the question that I was not announcing any new policy. I was indicating I regretted somewhat on February 5 that the ten premiers were not able to arrive to any consensus with me that the public sector should be exercising restraint. That is still our position, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST THAT PLANS TO IMPOSE WAGE CONTROLS IN PUBLIC SECTOR BE ABANDONED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, last January it was indicated in a leaked cabinet document that inflation had proven highly resistant to anti-inflation policy, including wage and price controls which had been introduced previously. The document indicated that we are not currently facing a wage-driven inflation such as we were in 1975, and that there might be a greater willingness on the part of the public to accept wage controls when the situation got quite a bit worse. We have reached that point now.

The economy has worsened. It has worsened because of the government's monetary policy which has resulted in these high rates of unemployment now and, as we say, in a high rate of inflation. Since this is, in fact, a government-led inflation policy, will the Prime Minister assure this House today that he will abandon any thought to impose wage controls in the federal public sector, and cease to attempt to make working Canadians not only the scapegoats but the victims of this economic incompetence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think it would have been helpful to the hon. member if his research group had prepared an alternative for his second question. In answer to his first question I answered the very question he is repeating in his second. In formulating that question, if I understood him correctly, he indicated that in some way the government was leading the inflationary push. Surely if he thinks that, he would not be blaming the government for seeking areas of restraint and in trying to get the other ten governments in Canada, with which the federal government provides over-all economic leadership—

• (1440)

Mr. Nielsen: It is 12.

Mr. Trudeau: —to exercise that restraint collectively. The hon. member cannot argue at the same time that we are leading inflation and then accuse us of wanting to press down on it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WITHHOLDING OF DOCUMENTS IN TRIAL OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICER

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The decision of the Superior Court justice in the province of Quebec to declare a mistrial in the trial of an RCMP officer gives the minister a certain chance to reflect upon some of the decisions he has taken. I am wondering whether the Solicitor General would now pay some heed to the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so recently proclaimed and hailed by him and his colleagues, in particular the Minister of Justice, as ushering in a new form of just society for Canadians. Will he now, with justice in mind as a guiding principle, reconsider his decision to withhold documents from the court which have been requested by the court, so that the defendant can prepare his case with all pertinent documents in hand?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that a reconsideration of the affidavit that I put forward would change my opinion about it. I reviewed all the documents which are covered and made a decision that they ought to be kept confidential in the interests of national security and of federal-provincial relations. Also I ought to say that I do not believe that my exercise of authority under the section contravenes the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Until the legislation introduced by the Quebec government in its legislature becomes law, any citizen in Canada, including of course any citizen in Quebec, can have recourse to the statute. My own opinion, though, is that the action which I took would be sustained over the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS BE DISCLOSED IN CAMERA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind the precedent established by the Liberal government, as shameful precedent to be sure, but a precedent none the less, in its handling of the Treu trial in camera from beginning to end, does the minister not feel, in the current situation where an RCMP officer is being tried for offences for which the Prime Minister or any other minister of government so far refuses to accept responsibility, that the time has come to apply the provisions of Section 41(1) of the Federal Court Act to the disclosure in camera of documents requested by the defence once the retrial begins? Does the minister not feel that by proceeding in this way he would be serving justice much more equitably than by withholding vital evidence, as he is now doing?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, my view is that Section 41(2) is the section to be used in the case of material governed by national security or federal-provincial or intergovernmental relations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You want to cover up ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Kaplan: Section 41(1) is there in the law as well. In my view it is there to deal with matters which could be put to a court to make a decision about other than matters which cover national security and are squarely within Section 41(2). In other words, I did not feel that I had a choice—and I had legal advice about this—between Section 41(1) and Section 41(2). The opinion I had was that when the matters were covered by Section 41(2), that was the section which was to be used. If the new freedom of information law had been in effect—and it would have been in effect except for some of the tactics of the opposition while the matter was before committee—then Section 41(2) would not have been there and I would have relied on the machinery provided in the new law. But that law is not in effect now, and the only option I had was for Section 41(2), not Section 41(1).

FINANCE

TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS IN MANITOBA

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the recent budget of the NDP government of Manitoba, that government imposed a 1.5 per cent employee tax on all earnings of Manitoba employees and stated that this tax was to be paid by Manitoba employers. The rationale of the provincial minister of finance was that, due to the sharp reduction by the federal government of federal-provincial transfer payments, the province of Manitoba by imposing this employee tax would allow the provincial government to recover approximately $17 million from the federal government. I should like to ask the minister whether the federal government views this so-called employee tax of 1.5 per cent of gross employee earnings, paid on behalf of the employee by the employer, as an employee benefit, and is considering taxing it under federal jurisdiction.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not examined those budget provisions in detail. My offhand answer would be no, but I want to comment upon the suggestion that somehow the necessity of imposing additional taxes by that province was due to reductions in transfers to the province of Manitoba. The same explanation was given by the minister of finance in Nova Scotia, and the same explanation was given by the Treasurer of Ontario, and in each case federal transfers to each of these provinces increases substantially each year.

Mr. Epp: The minister will know that even by his own calculations there was an adjustment made to Manitoba because of the negative manner in which federal-provincial transfer payments impacted on that province. He cannot deny that; he knows that.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in view of this employee tax or employee benefit, depending upon which side of the equation one looks at, and that employers in Manitoba are trying desperately to maintain jobs and employment for ordinary Manitobans, will the minister be in contact with the Manitoba government shortly in order that indecision can be removed, since many people are now facing the prospect that this extra 1.5 per cent will either be deducted from their income or could be eligible for taxation later on?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned the adjustment which was made in the equalization formula for the province of Manitoba. The reason for the adjustment was to ensure that Manitoba would benefit more by increasing amounts of equalization each year than it would have had the equalization formula itself been in operation. That was a very substantial concession, in my opinion, to ensuring that equalization worked to the benefit of all provinces entitled to the system. With respect to the request that I be in contact with the Manitoba minister on this subject, I do not see the necessity of having such contact. I will look at the situation and, if it is necessary, I will follow the suggestion.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSIST FARMERS AFFECTED BY COLLAPSE OF ECON GRAIN COMPANY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the pending class action suit, or the legal case being launched by a group of Manitoba farmers over the bankruptcy of the Econ grain company, which has been discussed before in the House of Commons, and the fact that the producers involved feel that the federal government was wrong or lax because of the Canadian Grain Commission not protecting their interests. Could the minister inform the House whether or not the Department of Agriculture will move to settle with the farmers before this whole question becomes involved in a law suit, which could take many, many months, or perhaps even years, the way law suits are dealt with, vis-à-vis the federal government and these particular producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the legal advice I have at the present time is that the Canadian Grain Commission acted properly. Until I receive other legal advice, I cannot answer the hon. member's question about paying, etc. The advice I have is that they acted within the legislation by which they are bound, and that they have acted properly. The hon. member knows the procedure for bankruptcy and that it can take an awfully long time.

ROLE OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister and I have held discussions, both in public and private, concerning this particular matter. Some of the farmers involved could face bankruptcy this spring because of the moneys they lost, along with interest rates being so high, and the costs of all their input being so desperately high.

One of the suggestions was that the Farm Credit Corporation in Manitoba could be used as a vehicle to loan money to farmers who could justifiably demonstrate that they need extra financing because of this particular situation. Has the minister looked into this suggestion made by me, and can he indicate to the House whether or not he has convinced himself that this is a viable alternative route and, if it is not, can he indicate whether there will be any help or any hope whatsoever for some of these farmers who could go out of business because of this particular bankruptcy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we have seen the list of the farmers who have been affected by the bankruptcy of this grain-buying operation. It is difficult to say which ones really need assistance. We have made it publicly known that they should apply to the Farm Credit Corporation. I have no way of knowing how many have applied at this time. The Farm Credit Corporation has been known to be human in its approach to lending money to those who most urgently need it and to those who are in the greatest need of it. I can say no more at this time. I would love to be able to look over the list and say that every one of those people who need it will receive a preferred loan, or will have payment from the federal government in one form or another, but the procedure of bankruptcy does not allow me to do that.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON JAPANESE IMPORTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the fact that he has just returned from the OECD discussions in Paris, empty-handed and red-faced, as a result of his inability to get a bilateral agreement with Japan with respect to the importation of Japanese cars, trucks and parts, I would like to put a question directly to him. What, now, is the minister's next concrete move in order to save jobs and industries in this country?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member should know, the meetings of the OECD are not on a bilateral basis but, rather, on a multilateral basis, with all the membrs of the OECD. However, following the multilateral discussions I did have bilateral talks with my counterpart from Japan with respect to the automobile situation. There was some progress. Madam Speaker, I realize that for the hon. member, and indeed for all hon. members of this House, it is very difficult not to be answered directly, but if the hon. member wants a positive conclusion to the negotiations, I do not think this is the place to discuss them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, for two months, while more and more auto workers have been losing their jobs, the minister has been saying that this is not the place to discuss the matter. Yet he has constantly spoken to the Japanese but has failed to get an agreement.

REQUEST THAT IMPORT QUOTAS BE IMPOSED ON JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES AND PARTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Will the minister now unilaterally act and impose quotas of 15 per cent of the Canadian auto market on Japanese cars and trucks? Will he also insist on quotas or a surtax, or both, on parts, until the Japanese are prepared to sit down at the table and come to an agreement with the Canadian negotiators? Otherwise, that figure of 18,000 unemployed in the parts industry alone will soar to 25,000 by summer.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I do not think the hon. member realizes the fact that Japan is our second largest trading partner. We not only trade in automobiles, but we also sell over $4 billion worth of goods and services from companies all across Canada to Japan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: During the multilateral discussions, the Japanese indicated that they will announce further liberalization measures prior to the Versailles Summit. We did make representations to the Japanese on behalf of several sectors of the Canadian manufacturing industry, such as the forest products sector in British Columbia. The hon. member might be advised to speak to his fellow members in the New Democratic Party from British Columbia who are interested in forest products, as well as to those from Ontario who are interested in automobiles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

FUNDING FOR CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN TERMINAL AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The construction of the Prince Rupert grain terminal is being jeopardized by projected cost overruns and labour uncertainty which have necessitated a re-evaluation of this project by all parties involved. Central to the positive decision for the project to go ahead is the requirement that the federal government provide an additional $10 million worth of funding through the National Harbours Board. Can the minister indicate to the House whether he is discussing this matter with the National Harbours Board, and can he give the House the assurance that the level of funding will be increased so that this project can go ahead?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the bids on the Prince Rupert grain elevator were indeed substantially higher than expected. The consortium had three possibilities. The first one was to negotiate with the bidders in order to bring the price down. They have done that. The second possibility was to simplify, to cut some of the parts of the elevator which were not totally necessary, and that is being done. The third possibility was to gain some more money from the federal government, and this will be the next step. I expect that consortium leaders will be back to us on that subject in a few weeks.

REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Is the minister saying that representations have not yet been made to him by the National Harbours Board? Assuming that such representations will be made, can the minister give the House the assurance that he will look at this proposal with a positive frame of mind?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, previous representations have indeed been made to us, but the implication of our attitude was that the consortium should explore the first two avenues first in order to find out what could be achieved. I expect, having done that, that the consortium will come back and report to ministers and will say how much they have been able to achieve, which will give us a better indication of what might be needed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON SUBJECT OF WIFE BATTERING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who will know that one of the recommendations of the excellent report of the all-party committee on wife-battering was that:

—a federal-provincial conference be held on the subject of wife battering and family violence as it relates to the enforcement and the administration of the criminal law.

Would the Minister of Justice tell the House whether he is prepared to act immediately to seek to convene a federal-provincial conference of ministers of justice and attorneys general to ensure that there be immediate discussion between the two levels of government on actions which we can jointly take to deal with the problems of wife battering which were so effectively outlined in the report of the all-party committee of this House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I read the committee report with a great deal of interest, and I feel it would be an excellent idea to discuss this problem with the attorneys general of the provinces, because the problem is not with the Criminal Code, but rather with the administration of justice. I believe we are to have a meeting of justice ministers some time this year, and this will certainly be one of the items I would want on the agenda.

PETRO-CANADA

ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—COLLECTION OF TAX

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last Thursday, here in the House, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex indicated that while the government is collecting the Canadian ownership charge to pay for Petrofina, it might well continue to collect that tax even after Petrofina has been paid for. Could the minister tell the House if that is indeed government policy to collect that tax after Petrofina has been paid for in order to pay for the purchase of other companies it wants to take over, as the hon. member suggested might be the case?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is obviously a question which the government will have to decide when the time comes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: This is not a matter which is being considered at the present time.

Mr. Friesen: I am sure the minister will want once again to flag companies for attention so that the public can pay double the price when the government goes to take over those companies.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP CHARGE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): I would like to ask the minister, on the basis of the information he has received by way of mail and the protests directed to him with regard to the Canadian ownership charge, whether he feels that the Canadian public can afford the continued payment of the Canadian ownership charge in order to take over other companies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the question concerns whether we can afford to Canadianize the oil and gas industry. With regard to that matter, whether it is by the public or by the private sector, it is substantially the same phenomenon. I must tell the hon. member that the Canadian public overwhelmingly wants Canadians to own and control a larger share of that industry.

Mr. Crosbie: Not at your price.

Mr. Lalonde: It is high time that we do it. This is a basic element of our National Energy Program. This government is committed to that objective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Not for long.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,813—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Employment and Immigration at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $176,084 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration) 1. (a) and (b) Please refer to Treasury Board Policy, Personnel Management Manual, chapter 110-5, "Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization"

2. Three per cent was spent on upgrading the technological skills of computer programmers.

3. As far as our records indicate, education leave was never granted for reason of redundancy.

4. It is 13.2 per cent.

AUDITOR GENERAL—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,851—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Finance for the Auditor General at page 32.11, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (c) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $14,938 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): (a) Extension of hospitality during meetings, functions, receptions as part of official government business; (b) There were no contracts of a value of $2,000 or more; (c) The office uses the Treasury Board Hospitality Directive as a guideline.

(d) The $14,938 was applied as follows:

HEALTH PROTECTION PROGRAM—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,875—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Health Protection Program at page 32.22, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what services does this entail (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (d) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (e) of the $7,710 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) The services referred to involve the extension of hospitality at federal-provincial or federally sponsored meetings.

(b) Hospitality was extended in the form of formal meals, food and drink at official receptions and light refreshments during meetings.

(c) A payment, totalling $2,454, was made to the Department of Public Works for refreshments, meals and services provided on behalf of the Health Protection Branch of the department at government conference facilities. The balance of expenditures was paid to hotels, restaurants and other such organizations for similar services.

(d) The department is subject to the policy on hospitality found in chapter 360 of the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual.

(e) Hospitality was extended to the following categories of recipients only:

(i)	Foreign visitors
(ii)	Canadian Businessmen	56 per cent
(iii)	Provincial public servants
(iv)	Federal public servants	44 per cent

The records of the Health Protection Branch do not permit a further percentage allocation of expenditures for hospitality for the above four categories.

CITIZENSHIP PROGRAM—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,898—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State under the Citizenship Program at page 32.32, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): (a) There was in fact a decrease in expenditures for other types of services, in 1979-80 compared to the amount for 1978-79. Expenditures for 1979-80 totalled $154,292, compared to $416,927 in 1978-79.

(b)(i) Training of public servants; (ii) non-departmental conferences; (iii) hospitality; (iv) miscellaneous services.

(c)(i) $21,609 (no contracts over $2,000); (ii) $4,516 (no contracts over $2,000); (iii) $24,176 (no contracts over $2,000); (iv) $103,978 F. W. Chenoweth, Ottawa, Ontario $6,047; Corre Paquette and Assoc. Ottawa, Ontario $2,240; Supply and Services Canada, Hull, Quebec $57,466; Saskatchewan, Minister of Finance, Regina, Saskatchewan $3,743.

EDUCATION SUPPORT PROGRAM—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,899—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State under the Education Support Program at page 32.32, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): (a) There was in fact a decrease in expenditures for other types of service, in 1979-80 as compared to the amount for 1978-79. Expenditures for 1979-80 totalled $12,632, compared to $66,488 in 1978-79.

(b)(i) training of public servants; (ii) non-departmental conferences; (iii) hospitality; (iv) miscellaneous services.

(c)(i) $9,722 (no contracts over $2,000). (ii) $1,103, (iii) $521, (iv) $1,286.

DSS—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,902—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Supply and Services under the Services Program at page 32.37, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the 929 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) The reason for increase is not volume of expenditures but presentation format. In 1978-79 all expenditures over $2,000 were listed in the public accounts for professional and special services. In 1979-80, only items over $25,000 were listed as per Receiver General Directive 1980-2, therefore a greater number of items was included in the other types of services category. The statement below discloses that in fact a reduction of $3,028,681 or 26 per cent occured in 1979-80.

NCC—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,958—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Public Works for the National Capital Commission in footnote No. 14 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the equipment lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The losses were sustained at the Moodie Drive Conservation Centre as a result of a breaking, entering and theft incident which was investigated by the City of Nepean police.

Specific replies are: (a) Person(s) unknown. (b) Not applicable. (c) See (a) above. (d) Yes. (e) Yes. An intrusion alarm was installed.

DVA—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,962—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of miscellaneous items recorded by the Department of Veterans Affairs in footnote No. 21 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances were the items lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The items were lost due to theft. (a) Unknown. (b) Not applicable. (c) See (a) above. (d) Yes. (e) Yes, both offices have been moved to new buildings which have better security measures. Also, all staff have been instructed to lock up all moveable items each night.

STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS—PACIFIC PILOTAGE AUTHORITY

Question No. 3,129—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the statement of operations of the Pacific Pilotage Authority for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 146, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which notes that the authority operated at a loss of $108,569 after having registered a substantial level of operating income the previous year (a) how does the authority justify the loss in light of its stated objective "to establish, operate, maintain and administer a safe and efficient pilotage service ... sufficient to permit the authority to operate on a self-sustaining basis" (b) what special conditions caused this reversal in the authority's operations (c) has the authority taken steps to forestall the recurrence of such a loss and, if so, what steps?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Pacific Pilotage Authority advises as follows:

(a) Unforeseen increases in expenses; see part (b).

(b) The 1979-80 tariff increase was nullified by the inflationary increases in pilots' fees, salaries, fuel and repair expenses in 1979. Again in 1980, spiralling costs in fees, wages and general expenses, as well as unforeseen legal and pilotage service costs, outweighed the 1980-81 tariff increase.

(c) Indications are that the 1981-82 tariff increase, effective June 1, 1981, finally has caught up with the unpredicted inflationary spiral creating a small monthly surplus which in turn will restore the authority to a self-sustaining basis.

AID TO CENTRAL AMERICA

Question No. 4,108—Mr. Heap:

1. Does Canada intend to triple its aid to countries in Central America and, if so, for each country (a) what amount will be sent (b) to what purposes will the money be put and what amount will be given to each purpose?

2. Did Canada place conditions upon the expenditure of the money regarding sourcing of supplies or services and, if so, in each case, what were the conditions?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) and (b) Canada recently approved an allocation of $106 million as bilateral development assistance for the countries of Central America. This amount is to be disbursed over a five-year period starting this year and represents in approximate terms a tripling over cumulative disbursements for the previous five-year period. Exact amounts have not yet been determined for the countries of Central America, as these can only be decided on the basis of detailed program discussions which are pending.

In addition Canada has already expended over $5.5 million during fiscal year 1981-82 in the form of financial contributions to Canadian institutions and non-governmental organizations working in Central America. These funds were provided by CIDA through its Special Programs Branch. This type of contribution will continue in the future but no estimates of levels are available at present.

Moreover, the Industrial Co-operation Division of CIDA has disbursed slightly over $1 million for projects in the region in fiscal year 1981-82 and will probably continue disbursements of an equivalent level in the coming years.

Canada also provides funds to the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, to the United Nations Development Program and to other international institutions which are active in Central America. However, Since these Canadian contributions are pooled with funds from many other countries, there is only an indirect link between the Canadian development assistance provided to these multilateral institutions and their programming activities in the region.

2. In the case of Canadian bilateral assistance to developing countries, up to 20 per cent of the dollar value of the program may be untied to pay for local costs in the recipient country, non-Canadian procurement of goods and non-Canadian procurement of services, i.e. 80 per cent of the dollar value of the bilateral program is tied to the procurement of goods and services in Canada.

In the case of Canadian government contributions to Canadian non-governmental organizations and institutions as well as to international non-governmental organizations there are no conditions requiring that moneys be expended for Canadian supplies and services.

Under the Industrial Co-operation Program all arrangements with Canadian companies are contribution agreements and not contracts. There are no formal guidelines regarding Canadian content levels but by convention companies must use Canadian personnel unless it can be verified that qualified people are not available in Canada. However, there are no restrictions on the use of the individuals who are citizens of a country for which a project is being undertaken.

In the case of multilateral programs Canada places no conditions on the expenditure of money for the sourcing of supplies and services.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-61, respecting young offenders and to repeal the Juvenile Delinquents Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kaplan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Madam Speaker, in many ways it is a historic moment to reach third reading of the young offenders bill which has been on the national agenda for active consideration for nearly two decades.

I want to thank all of the members who contributed to the improvement of the bill in the committee. I must say I liked it the way it went in, but I cannot help but feel that many of the amendments which were put forward and forcefully debated from all sides improved the bill. We have made substantial progress in the criminal justice system in our country in bringing the bill to this point.

I would like to say one word not about a specific subject in the bill, but about the process of meaningful consultation. Even at this moment there are groups, interests and some provincial governments who feel that the bill might benefit from more meaningful consultation. I would like to say to all of them from this place that you reach a time when Parliament has to take its responsibility, and this is that time. As with any difficult decisions we have had to make, there have been, if I can put it in vernacular terms, winners and losers. Those who in the consultation process found that their position was not being adopted by their colleagues and other participants in the criminal justice constituency inevitably tend to feel that something would be gained by further consultation, especially if meaningful.

One would not like to argue that absolutely nothing would be attained by further consultation. However, I think hon. members can feel that very little further consensus would be reached by allowing further consultation. If in the process of legislation there was ever a time reached, after 14 years of consultation, when Parliament had to take its responsibility, make the tough decisions and put forward the new young offenders regime, this is the time.

In closing, I want to thank the members on my side for their forbearance in permitting and encouraging the process, and members opposite for their contribution and indeed the forbearance which at this point makes it very likely that the bill will pass third reading today.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the House will be relieved to know that I do not intend to speak at great length. Following the conciliatory remarks and attitude of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), I want to assure him and the House on behalf of this group that there will not be a long list of speakers. We do not intend at this stage to hold up further passage of this bill.

Indeed, it has been our consistent attitude that, basically and fundamentally, the statutes regarding young people who run afoul of the law are sadly in need of reform. This is not necessarily the great step but it is a step along the road to needed reform of the existing statutes.

I said a step because we are in fundamental agreement with the improvements to the law respecting young offenders and, of course, the repeal of the existing law. Indeed, when the Clark administration took office in 1979, it found that there had been, at the ministerial level with at least the two preceding solicitors general, an attitude that the passage of reform legislation was not necessarily a matter of top priority.

That attitude was changed by the Clark administration. The young offenders legislation was given top priority. A meeting was convened of all the justice and law officers of the Crown at the provincial and federal levels at which top priority was given to reform of that law. When the present administration took office, I believe that priority continued, and it resulted in the bill before the House today.

We want to see this bill passed. It is not a perfect piece of legislation by any means, but at least it is a reform. And, to our mind, an improvement over what we have had up until now. If there is a division, we certainly intend to vote for it. However, my belief is that a division will not be required on third reading.

The bill still suffers from defects. In our view, the major defect is the provision that a person is a young offender until he or she reaches age 18. We believe that that age should be lowered to 16 and we have said so consistently. We said it in committee, at second reading in this House and we say it now.

Consistency has not always been shown by all the parties in this House regarding this matter. On second reading there was a five-day debate in this House. That was in April and May of 1981. If there had been a clear indication of government policy and government consistency at that time, the official opposition would have been quite content to see a ten-minute debate. A lot of words, a lot of rhetoric, a lot of time has been devoted to the time wasting that goes on in this chamber.

• (1510)

I would like to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the five days' debate in April and May of 1981 on second reading stage. We clearly indicated on behalf of the Conservative opposition that in the bill presented by the government and by my friend the Solicitor General, the major defect was the provision that the variations in the maximum age for young offenders in Canada, at that time and at the present time, were going to remain. As a matter of fact, on second reading I had the honour of introducing an amendment, a reasoned amendment which was accepted by the Chair. I read from page 9497 of Hansard for May 12, 1981, when I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-61, an act respecting young offenders and to repeal the Juvenile Delinquents Act, because the bill rejects the fundamental principle of equal treatment of all persons before the law by specifying that the act will apply to different age groups in different provinces."

We had a five-day debate on that principle that we espoused—a five-day debate, Mr. Speaker. The arguments and the speeches from just about every government member who spoke before second reading was given denied that principle. Indeed, the Solicitor General himself in introducing the bill, as reported at page 9308 of Hansard of April 15, 1981, said:

> Differences exist as to when an individual is or should be considered sufficiently mature to be held responsible and dealt with as an adult. Practically speaking, due to the specialized programs, resources and services which are in place to deal with young offenders, considerable program shifts and adjustments would be required if the maximum age, which is under 18, were to be made uniform.

In other words, the minister came out flatfootedly against our reasoned amendment. Indeed, he managed to bootleg in another small comment later in the debate, as reported at page 9645 of Hansard of May 15, 1981. The minister said:

> I would have wished that the provinces would agree to that age—
> That age being 18.
> —but the financial implications for provinces which now have a lower age are tremendous. It is by and large a burden which the provinces would have to bear almost completely on their own.

In other words, the Solicitor General was arguing that no one could really come up with a consensus on a uniform age, and therefore there was to be no uniform age. He was arguing that the burden imposed on the provinces by a uniform age of 18 would be so great as to destroy the whole concept of uniformity throughout this country.

I will not burden the House with the history of this bill as it passed though its various stages in the House and in committee. I simply want to point out that the House voted on second reading to reject our concept that there be a uniform age.

When the bill came to the committee one of the first acts of the minister was to indicate that yes, there was now to be a uniform age. We all congratulated him on at long last seeing the light. However, he made what is a mammoth blunder in the eyes of most of us and of most of those at the provincial level who have to deal with this very complex matter. I suggest he also made a blunder in the eyes of a great many people in the private sector—those who have to deal with young people who run afoul of the law—by picking the wrong date. That wrong date is still there.

We were concerned enough about it, Mr. Speaker, that in committee an amendment was moved by the members of this party. But, of course, the government majority, as they did previously in the House, voted down our reasoned amendment and voted it down in this House as well.

I do not want to rub the noses of the Liberal members too hard and too long in their past misdeeds and follies regarding this legislation. I merely point out that today obviously we are going to have a speech or two by government members indicating that yes, this is a step along the right road; yes, this is the direction the government should be headed; and yes, this is a wonderful thing that the Liberal government has done, that they are bringing this bill forward for third reading and finally it is going to be passed by this House. I merely want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of the House that there has been a marvellous flip-flop on the part of the minister and the government over this bill.

The debate in the House could have been shortened considerably if the concept we first proposed had been accepted by the government in the first place. The debate in committee could have been shortened considerably again if the government had accepted the principle of 16 as the maximum age. I am fully convinced that before long that age limit will have to be accepted. As I said in the committee, it is a retrograde step to use the age of 18. We are firmly committed on that. But we feel we have made our point, even though we have not been able to convince the minister. Nevertheless the bill does fulfil the long needed demand for reformation in this whole area of the law. Because of that, we are willing to allow it to reach third reading and to be implemented.

The bill is going to take a much longer time to be implemented as a result of the stand of the minister and the government. In the long run there will be very serious defects in the administration of the bill, at the provincial level especially, because of the extremely burdensome and unnecessary costs which will be imposed on the federal treasury as a result of this government's stand. Sooner or later the age of maturity as far as young offenders are concerned will have to be dropped to 16 years. The age should be 16 now.

We are creating an administrative and financial nightmare. There are only two provinces in the country, Quebec and Manitoba, in which 18 is at present the age of maturity. All the other provinces have a lower age. The nightmare will be beyond belief and it will be the result of the minister and the government sticking to the age of 18. As I say, the age of maturity should be reduced to 16. That has been our position all along. It is still our position; but we also want to see this bill passed.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to speak on the third reading of Bill C-61, the Young Offenders Act. I agree with those who suggested that in many ways this is a historic day.

There have been no changes in substance to the Juvenile Delinquents Act, originally an act of 1908 with some amendments in 1929, since its original enactment in 1908. Of course, a number of attempts to do so were made. A report was prepared by a special committee of the Department of Justice in 1968. Legislation was tabled in 1970—I believe it was Bill C-192—which was heavily criticized at that time as being a criminal code for children.

• (1520)

After that a number of committees examined the various provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The report on "Young Persons in Conflict With the Law" was in many ways a progressive document and well ahead of its time. It was tabled by the then solicitor general, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), in 1976 and, following that, the solicitor general in the Conservative government, who has just spoken on this legislation, indicated that it was a priority for his government to amend the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

The original bill which was tabled in this House did unquestionably contain a number of important advances over the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. For example—and I will cite only a few advances in this legislation—there was an end to status offences which, by the way, tended to discriminate particularly against young women who came into conflict with the law. The sweeping offence of being involved in sexual immorality or other similar vices was used overwhelmingly against young women.

The offence of truancy was one which, it was argued quite rightly, should not be contained within the scope of criminal law dealing with young persons.

Indeterminate sentencing, which was permitted under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, has now finally been ended, and provisions with respect to young persons are being brought into line with those for adults.

There are guidelines in the legislation on transfer of young offenders to adult court, and the minimum age has been increased from seven to 12. I do not think many would argue that young people who are seven, eight, nine, ten and 11 years of age should not be dealt with as young criminals but, rather, should be dealt with within the scope of provincial social services legislation.

Perhaps some of the most important advances in this legislation are the clauses of the bill dealing with procedural safeguards for young people at trial. Too often in the paternalistic approach of the youth court—a closed-door, paternalistic approach—the legal rights of young people were overridden. Now, of course, the courtroom will be opened to public scrutiny, and that is as it should be, although the anonymity of the young person will be maintained. The young person who is before the court will have access to legal counsel whether or not the young person is able to pay for legal counsel. Young people will have the right to bail, a right which for too long has been denied them.

There are a number of other significant advances of a procedural nature in this bill. The provisions with respect to dispositions are broad and varied. Again, we welcome the opportunity for juvenile court justices or youth court justices, as they will now be known—to use a variety of sentences which do not involve incarceration; because in many instances when young people have been put into jail the time they have served in jail has in fact been more destructive to them, and ultimately to the community, than another form of disposition. I will come back to this aspect of the bill later on because, as we will see, far too often governments, both provincial and federal, have refused to put adequate resources into the juvenile justice system in our country. While we can establish a legal framework, as we are doing in passing the proposed young offenders act today, unless governments finally get serious about putting money into this area, we will still see far too many young people in conflict with the law, and ultimately we will see these young persons become hardened adult criminals.

While Bill C-61 did contain a number of progressive steps forward, it did, however, contain a number of very serious flaws. In fact, those flaws, in the view of the New Democratic Party, were so serious that at second reading we voted against the bill. Perhaps the most important weakness in the legislation was the failure of the bill to impose a uniform maximum age right across Canada. Both the official opposition and the New Democratic Party agreed that the principle of equality before the law was made a mockery in this bill, which allowed a young person to be dealt with under the provisions of a youth court in some provinces up to the age of 16, in other provinces up to the age of 17 and in Quebec and Manitoba up to the age of 18. We condemned that particular provision, and we felt so strongly about this denial of equal rights for young persons that we voted against the bill at second reading.

The question then came before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and after the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was advised by his legal advisers in the Department of Justice that the bill might very well be challenged under the charter of rights as denying equality before the law, the Solicitor General had to make a decision. He accepted that there would be a uniform age, and the question as to what that age should be then arose.

After having carefully considered this question and after having listened to a number of very outstanding witnesses representing a cross-section of the Canadian criminal justice community, we in this party came to the conclusion that that uniform age should be 18. That age was the age which was proposed by the Solicitor General, and I would like to take a minute or two just to explain why it is that we on this side of the House were prepared to support a uniform maximum age of 18.

First, I note that a lower uniform maximum age such as 17 or 16 would effectively seriously weaken the existing programs in the province of Quebec and in the province of Manitoba. In both those provinces young persons are dealt with within the context of the juvenile justice system up until the age of 18, and if we in Parliament were to impose the maximum age of 16 or 17, what we would be telling those provinces is that we are not prepared to accept the validity of their particular schemes for dealing with young persons. We in this party were not prepared to gut, effectively, those important programs which, in many instances, have been very successful in keeping young persons out of the scope of the adult criminal law and within juvenile detention systems and juvenile justice systems for as long as possible.

The second concern we had in approaching this question of a uniform maximum age was that if the age were lowered to 16, or even to 17, effectively what we would be doing in too many instances is dumping young persons into the adult criminal justice system and into adult prisons, and it was our view that young people should be dealt with within the context of the juvenile justice system for as long as possible, recognizing the right of the community to be protected from crimes by young persons. However, if we were to have a uniform maximum age of 16, this would mean that effectively 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds who came into conflict with the law, no matter how minor their offences, would be dealt with as criminals under the provisions of the Criminal Code and imprisoned with adults and, in many cases, imprisoned with hardened adult criminals. We do not believe this is the most desirable way of rehabilitating young offenders. We believe we should be putting additional resources into the juvenile justice system for as long as possible so as to keep young people out of contact with adult criminals until the age of 18.

There are those who argue that there are some hardened young persons who indeed should be dealt with as adult criminals because they may have a record of a series of violations of the law. To those persons I point out that indeed they can in fact be dealt with under the provisions of the Criminal Code because the proposed young offenders act does continue to allow for the transfer of young persons over the age of 14 to the adult court system. Those young people who, as has been pointed out, in some instances are perhaps hardened to the youth criminal justice system can indeed be transferred and, in a number of instances, already are being transferred to the adult correctional system. However, for the other young people up to the age of 18, hopefully we as a society will be prepared to accept an additional responsibility to put additional resources into that particular system to ensure that to the extent possible these young persons will be kept out of contact with adult criminals. As I say, we believe the age of 18 is acceptable.

However, it should be borne in mind that by increasing the age to 18 a substantial financial burden is being placed upon a number of provinces and territories. In response to a question raised by me in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and also in a speech in the House of Commons, the Solicitor General indicated that, while he is prepared to look at some additional resources in this area, this was a burden that the provincial and territorial governments would have to bear largely on their own.

If this government is serious about improving and humanizing the system of criminal justice for young persons, it has to be prepared to put additional financial resources into the hands of provinces and territories to ensure that the legal framework which is established in the proposed young offenders act delivers a system which indeed will encourage young people to stay out of involvement with the criminal law. If indeed the federal government does not come up with additional resources, the provisions in the bill which provide, for example, for dispositions alternative to incarceration will be redundant.

The provinces will argue that they cannot afford these provisions, and what we will see is an increased number of young persons dumped into jails for children. That is effectively what detention centres are. There should be disposition before an actual court appearance; in other words, diversion away from the criminal justice system. This will not take place unless the federal government is prepared to ensure additional resources are made available both to itself and to the provinces.

Surely we as a society must accept our responsibility to young people and our responsibility for dealing with many of the circumstances which lead young persons to become involved in crime. I will come to this in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, but first I will deal with some of the other weaknesses of the present legislation as we see them.

I should note that we are now dealing with third reading stage of the legislation. We did not propose any amendments at report stage despite the fact that we would like to have seen improvements to a number of clauses in the bill. We agreed that if the Solicitor General and the government did not propose amendments at report stage either in the House or in the Senate, we would not do so either, much as we would like to see the bill improved.

I will not go over all the areas of the bill that were dealt with in committee but I will emphasize two or three areas where we think the bill should be strengthened. In fact, in our opinion some of those areas contribute to weakening the existing protection of young persons under the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Instead of providing increased protection for the community and for the rights of young persons in conflict with the law, the existing Juvenile Delinquents Act, enacted in 1908, is being watered down. Clause 7 of the bill allows young people who have been arrested and detained to be locked up with adults. Under the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act as it now stands, young people under the age of 14 cannot be locked up with adults under any circumstances, but the young offenders bill would allow young people of 12 or 13 or older to be locked up with adult prisoners in certain circumstances. Those circumstances include conditions in which adequate resources do not exist in the community.

Clause 7(3)(a) provides that a young person can be locked up with adults if "no place of detention for young persons is available within a reasonable distance". This will ensure that young people in rural communities, young natives in particular and young people in poorer parts of Canada, in some instances will be locked up with hardened adult criminals.

Surely these young persons are presumed to be innocent. What we are saying is that in those parts of the country in which there are not separate facilities for them, they will be locked up with adults. That represents serious denial of their rights. In addition, it represents a violation of Canada's commitment to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which requires Canada to ensure that young people are not locked up with hardened adult criminals.

In committee we sought an amendment which would ensure that young people were detained separately from adults, but the government refused to accept it. As a result we will have a regime which will discriminate against young people from rural communities, native young people and children from poorer parts of Canada.

Another provision of the bill which weakens the existing Juvenile Delinquents Act is Clause 24(14). Under this provision the attorney general of a province is allowed to authorize the transfer of young persons over the age of 18 from youth correctional facilities to adult jails. As things now stand, once society has accepted responsibility for dealing with young people within the context of the youth correctional system, they cannot be taken out of that system at age 18 or 19 and dumped into adult jails. That is the present provision of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. What the government is doing is allowing young people to be dumped into the adult prison system in those parts of the country which do not have other resources. If we are trying to ensure that they will be kept out of contact with adult criminals, we are failing. This particular provision has no guidelines whatsoever and represents a step back from the existing provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

There are other clauses in the bill which weaken the Juvenile Delinquents Act. This is ironic when we are supposed to be moving toward protecting not only the community but increasing the rights of young people in conflict with the law.

The records provisions of the bill have been described as pernicious and an outrageous violation of the right to privacy of young persons. A respected organization called "Justice for Children" presented a brief to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in which it pointed out that these provisions are far broader in scope than the provisions respecting the records of adults. When we are supposedly ensuring that young people have the same rights before the courts as adults, why do we take this backward step and permit sweeping access to records even before the young person is convicted? These provisions have been described by Justice for Children, the Canadian Bar Association and a number of others as representing a fundamental denial of the right to privacy of the young person. I will not go into a detailed analysis of this at this time, but I want to put on record our serious concern that we are weakening the existing provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act in these clauses of the bill.

Another area in which we are taking a backward step instead of moving forward in the area of juvenile justice is Clause 5 of the bill, which would allow the young offenders act to be subject to the provisions of the National Defence Act. As things now stand in law, those young people convicted or accused of a criminal offence, whether they live on a military base or not, are not subject to the jurisdiction of the National Defence Act. What we are saying in this legislation is that we are goint to take a step backward and subject these young persons who happen to live on a military base in Canada or outside the country to the provisions of the code of service discipline. In many ways this is a relic of the eighteenth or nineteenth century which denies not only the young persons subject to it but all military personnel many of the fundamental rights which other Canadians are entitled to.

In fact, the Department of National Defence has had the unmitigated gall to ask for exemption from the Canadian charter of rights to ensure that the code of service discipline is upheld. This code denies bail to persons accused of criminal offences and countenances a number of abuses of their fundamental rights. This bill will allow these young persons to be subjected to the harsh and, in many ways, unjust provisions of the National Defence Act.

The bill does not go far enough in dealing with the concerns that society must have with respect to the mentally retarded and those persons subjected to lieutenant governor's warrants. I need only point to the case of Emmerson Bonar who has the mental capacity of a six-year-old and was incarcerated at age 16. This bill fails to come to terms with some of the serious problems of a young person who may have psychiatric disturbances or may be mentally retarded. To the extent it fails to do that, Mr. Speaker, we on this side will be pursuing this question.

My colleague the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has played an outstanding role on the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped and has a special interest in this area. We will certainly be pursuing this to ensure that justice is finally done to these individuals.

There are a number of other provisions in this bill which are weaker than we would liked to see. We tried to amend it in committee, and I am pleased to note that a number of amendments I put forward on behalf of the NDP were indeed accepted by the government. The atmosphere in that committee was one of co-operation; as a result, a number of the amendments we submitted were accepted, and I believe it is a better bill because of that.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to an area which is not directly addressed by Bill C-61 but which in many ways is perhaps the most important element of a juvenile justice system in Canada. I refer to the question of prevention. One of the amendments I proposed and which was accepted was an addition to the statement of principles in Bill C-61 which would ensure that society recognized its responsibility to prevent those conditions which lead young persons to become involved in crime. Recently the Senate Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Science produced an excellent report entitled "Child at Risk". The committee documented many of the conditions which unquestionably lead young persons to become involved in crime. It is very important that we as a society accept our responsibility to do what we can to eradicate these conditions. I am not going to go through all the conditions so eloquently documented by that committee, but I will note some of them.

Child abuse has been recognized as a very significant factor in the development of violent criminal behaviour in later years. A number of eminent psychiatrists who appeared before the committee noted that violent criminal behaviour is in many instances a direct result of child abuse and neglect in the first three years of life. In the past our society has paid more attention to cruelty to animals than it has to cruelty to children. This does not just involve the beating of young children; it is part of a broad range of characteristics which can include family instability, minor criminal offences, high mobility, unemployment, and general economic and social stress. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the conclusion of the committee that violence breeds violence is entirely accurate.

The committee noted as well the phenomenon of violence on television and pointed to a study which showed that in ten years of viewing, an average Canadian child would likely have watched the violent destruction of more than 13,400 people. In the United States it has been estimated that a child is exposed to something like 17,000 murders during his formative years.

The committee pointed to a number of other problems which can often lead to young people coming in conflict with the law. This goes right back to the fetus, to conditions during childbirth, problems which can be attributed to children being shunted from foster home to foster home. There is also the fact that in many instances children, particularly in single parent families, are raised in conditions of abject poverty. Surely we as a society must, if we are serious about eradicating crime among young people, finally start to accept our responsibility to deal with the economic conditions which so often lead young people to become involved in crime.

In 1975 the National Council of Welfare published a report which should be required reading for all Members of Parliament entitled "Poor Kids". I only wish I had the time to read the whole report to Parliament and the people of Canada, but I will just read a couple of extracts from it:

> To be born poor is to face a greater likelihood of ill health—in infancy, in childhood and throughout your adult life. To be born poor is to face a lesser likelihood that you will finish high school; lesser still that you will attend university. To be born poor is to face a greater likelihood that you will be judged a delinquent in adolescence and, if so, a greater likelihood that you will be sent to a "correctional institution". To be born poor is to have the deck stacked against you at birth, to find life an uphill struggle ever after. To be born poor is unfair to kids.

How true that is, Mr. Speaker. The report goes on to note that:

> Among children in two-parent families across Canada, 21.2 per cent were in poverty; among those in male-headed single-parent families, 33.7 per cent were in poverty—

And what a shocking statistic this is:

> —among those in female-headed single-parent families, an incredible 69.1 per cent were in poverty.

This overwhelming probability of poverty for children in families headed by mothers alone was true right across the country.

We know as well the particular incidence of poverty among native children and the way they are in many cases subject to harsh conditions not only during their childhood, but in many instances as a result of a fetal alcohol syndrome which results from excessive consumption of alcohol by the mother. As the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has pointed out, and I commend him for his outspokenness on this subject, we have in Canada in many ways our own "third world", and that is surely the world of our native peoples, the Indian, the Inuit and Metis. It is about time we as a society recognize our historic responsibility for the conditions in which they live today, stop playing our paternalistic and in many ways colonial games and allow the native people themselves to start to take control over their own destiny.

I would also like to note, Mr. Speaker, that the question of resources is central to a comprehensive approach to crime among young persons. Right across this country provincial and federal governments have far too often paid lip service to dealing with the terrible conditions of young people who have come into conflict with the law. In my own province of British Columbia conditions are appalling. In August of 1981, provincial court judge Patricia Byrne declared that she was:

—appalled and disgusted by the way three government departments have been fighting over what to do with a 16-year-old youth with a history of violent behaviour stemming from an emotional disorder—

British Columbia still does not have a single secure facility for dealing with young people who are psychiatrically disturbed. What kind of priority for our society is that, Mr. Speaker?

Then there is Quebec, where it has been admitted that there is a terrible shortage of facilities for juvenile offenders, particularly young Anglophones. In 1981 the Youth Protection Committee in Quebec made a public plea to the Quebec government for more money, facilities, and a greater level of over-all recognition of the needs of young people in Quebec. Quebec does not have a single juvenile detention facility which is equipped to deal with anglophone juveniles who need both maximum security and psychiatric treatment. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, a 15-year-old English-speaking Montreal boy last year spent more than five months in an adult prison in New Carlisle, 900 kilometres from his home, before returning to Montreal.

Again, in British Columbia far too many young people are being locked up because of the unavailability of alternate resources. Instead of dealing with these young persons in facilities which do not constitute secure containment, what has happened is that they are being locked up in jails which are chronically overcrowded. In my own constituency of Burnaby the so-called youth detention centre has regularly been far too crowded. Its capacity is something like 63, and in a number of instances there have been over 100 children crammed in. How can we possibly expect rehabilitation under those circumstances?

The final example is one right here in Ottawa where there is still a terrible need for a facility for psychiatrically disturbed adolescents. Dr. Selwyn Smith, the director of the Royal Ottawa Hospital, said that there is an acute need for a secure handling unit for young offenders, where they can be given specialized psychiatric assessment and treatment. Such a facility is long overdue. It is all well and good to pass a new piece of legislation such as the young offenders act—and as I say, we welcome the changes that have been made; we are particularly pleased to note the number of improvements made in committee—but we as a society must finally accept collective responsibility to create a society in which young people do not live in poverty. We must create a society in which child abuse is recognized as a serious problem. It will not be until we put resources into this area of the criminal justice system that we will be doing justice to young Canadians.

We support Bill C-61. We will be monitoring its progress very closely in the months ahead to ensure that where there are weaknesses in the bill they will be strengthened. Most important, we will be pushing, prodding and cajoling governments, both provincial and federal, to ensure that adequate resources are put in place so that when we talk about justice for young people we mean, indeed, that young people are achieving justice.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a red letter day for the House of Commons because we are finally about to pass the young offenders act, which will replace the old Juvenille Delinquents Act of 1908. I am myself particularly pleased with the impending passage of this bill. When I was Solicitor General in 1973 the special committee to review the Juvenile Delinquents Act and to recommend changes was set up. That committee was made up of officials from the Solicitor General's department, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Law Reform Commission. It presented its report in 1975 under the title of "Young Persons in Conflict with the Law." That report was the result of wide consultation with the provinces, with private sector associations, experts and groups.

As I and others have stated, the Juvenile Delinquents Act which is now in force in this country was originally passed in 1908. It was amended only once substantially, in 1929. That means that for 53 years we have not had any substantial change to our juvenille delinquency legislation.

As we all know, much has happened in those 53 years. We have experienced a depression, a world war, very widespread social, political and economic changes affecting the family, the church, community organizations and so on. Because of much public concern about the state of the legislation, the Department of Justice set up a committee in the early 1960s which reported in 1965. That committee recommended widespread changes to the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

In 1970, the government presented Bill C-192, called the young offenders act. That bill passed second reading in the House of Commons but died in committee when the election was called in 1972.

In 1975 the report "Young Persons in Conflict with the Law" was published. This work was done during the time I was Solicitor General. The people responsible for the report tried to take into account many of the submissions made to the justice committee during hearings on Bill C-192, and they attempted to deal with the many objections people had to the original bill of 1970. Nothing much could be done following publication of that report in 1975.

As hon. members know, we had elections in 1979 and in 1980. Solicitors General pursued the subject and tried to get agreement with the provinces to bring in legislation. The subject matter was certainly moved forward, but it was only in June, 1981, that we passed the present Bill C-61 at second reading. It was then sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I must say that I was extremely pleased with the work done in that committee. It passed over 70 amendments. I mention that because many people think our parliamentary committees do not work, that they just rubber stamp government legislation. In this case, the minister—and I congratulate him for being reasonable—accepted amendments from all sides of the House—from the Conservative Party, from the New Democratic Party and even from some of us on the government side who had amendments to present. The Solicitor General himself presented amendments which improved the bill. This was a good record and an example of co-operation among all parties in the committee to improve the legislation. It is true that not all amendments were accepted. Some were voted down on division, including some of mine. But a very good job was done by Parliament in that committee.

With respect to the importance of the subject matter, that of juvenile crime, the last Statistics Canada report we have on the subject is for 1980. It indicates that 28,008 children as defined in law committed 73,098 offences in 1980 under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, which in itself is a serious problem. But what is even more alarming is that in the past a good number of young people who commit crimes as juveniles remain criminals. They become adult criminals, in my opinion because not enough attention is paid to them when they commit their first offences as young people.

It is my hope that, with the provisions of this legislation and with the services that are in the process of being set up and are underway in several provinces to deal effectively with juvenile crime, with diversion, with many types of rehabilitation, with closer consideration and care to the problems of young people which lead and instigate crime, this situation can be turned around. If we are ever to solve the adult crime problem in this country, we have to start with the juvenile.

Bill C-61 is not a perfect piece of legislation but it is an immense improvement over the present Juvenile Delinquents Act. It gets rid of the status offences, that is, the offences of delinquency and so on. It no longer covers provincial offences or school board offences. It deals with offences which are criminal properly speaking. It gives the young person the full right to counsel that an adult has. It gives the young person all the rights an adult has. It also gives the young person certain responsibilities.

The subject which led to most disagreement in committee and in the House was with respect to age. The chief critic for the Conservative Party, who was Solicitor General at one time, stated that he and his party had always been in favour of a uniform maximum age across the country for juvenile offenders under the law, and they wanted that age to be 16. I must say that the report published while I was Solicitor General also suggested a uniform age, but the age suggested was 18.

The hon. member stated in his speech earlier this afternoon that he feels 16 is the proper maximum age for juvenile offenders. I do not agree with that. I think the maximum age should be 18. If we think it is correct that people should vote only when they reach the age of 18, that they should drink alcoholic beverages only at 18, then they should not be tried as adult offenders at the age of 16. If they are to be considered young persons for many other things until reaching the age of 18, then they should be treated for criminal purposes as a young person until reaching that age.

I do not want to delve into that topic too much at the present time, but I do not think there has been any flip-flopping on this. If we read the different legislation which has been produced and the different reports of the last ten to 15 years on this subject, we will know that we wrestled with the subject of what a uniform age in Canada should be.

• (1600)

The area of Ottawa-Hull is where the difference in maximum age showed up the most. Under the present law, if a 17-year-old person in Hull commits the offence of breaking and entry, because the maximum age for juvenile offenders in Quebec is 18, he will be tried in the juvenile court system in Hull under the Juvenile Delinquents Act. If he is found guilty, he will be sent to juvenile detention centre or be treated under the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. However, across the river here in Ottawa, because the age in Ontario for criminal responsibility is 16 years, a person of the same age would be tried in an adult court and very likely sent either to Joyceville or Millhaven penitentiary. We can see how unfair it is to have within a few miles of each other two individuals of 17 years of age being treated differently. One could end up in Millhaven penitentiary and the other could end up on probation under the Juvenile Delinquents Act for committing the same offence. This situation was completely unfair and had to go. We were all agreed that we needed a uniform age. The question was whether the age should be 16 or 18. I opted for 18, as did the New Democratic Party and the government. The Conservative Party opted for 16, and I must say that it had a certain number of supporters. But it was nothing which could be settled absolutely or dogmatically.

Mr. Lawrence: Why did you vote against a uniform age at second reading?

Mr. Allmand: I was in agreement with a uniform age at second reading. But I was against 16 years and I knew the proposal of the Conservative Party was 16.

Mr. Lawrence: You voted against it at second reading.

Mr. Allmand: I would rather have a variable age than a uniform age of 16 across the country. I am very much opposed to the maximum age of 16 years. The hon. member can check the record. For years I have been for a uniform age of 18 years. This is pretty clear both in Hansard and in the record of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs over the years.

I am extremely pleased, as are many people in the country, that we are finally passing the young offenders act. It contains much improvement but it is not perfect. As time moves on, I am sure we will make this legislation even better.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I join with the other hon. members who have participated in this debate in saying that this is long overdue legislation. Any act which is 74 years old obviously has come in confrontation with some anachronisms. As the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) enumerated, there are a number of them, so we welcome the updating of the legislation.

I disagree with some of the points of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). First, he commended the committee for working so well, as did the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. If the minister looked over the record of the committee and its work, if he took off his vested-interest glasses which he wears as a minister of the Crown, he would have to say that in terms of parliamentary work, as a Parliament and one of its committees should function, the committee was a joke. It really did not function as a committee should. It heard all the witnesses and went through the pro forma of presenting amendments, but in terms of working in an open-minded way and hopefully improving the legislation by the contribution of all parties, it was a total joke.

For example, I had a minor amendment which I wanted to make concerning Clause 3(1)(h). Obviously subclause (1) contains sections (a) to (h). My amendment was to move the position of (h) to that of (a) and then reletter all the sections. Section (h) dealt with the fact that young people are accountable. It read:

(h) parents have responsibility for the care and supervision of their children, and, for that reason, young persons should be removed from parental supervision either partly or entirely only when measures that provide for continuing parental supervision are inappropriate.

I support that provision. I think it is a good inclusion in the law. But it should not be the last, it actually should be the first. If we leave it to the last and begin with individual responsibility at the outset, and then move through a progression where the courts and government support systems move in, we really have a statist, progressive role in the role of the family. All I wanted the minister to do was to move section (h) to position (a) so that parental authority would be number one and, after parental authority broke down, the state could move in. That was a monumental change for the minister. The committee could hardly accommodate such a revolutionary concept and it was summarily voted down. This was how well the committee functioned!

It was faulty in another very important sense, and that is, it ignored provincial representations. As I recall, there were only two provinces which represented themselves and presented briefs. It may have been that I was absent on one or two occasions and other provinces appeared, but I recall only two submissions from the provinces of Saskatchewan and Ontario. At no time do I recall any representation from Quebec or Manitoba. But presto, somehow the position of Quebec and Manitoba took precedence on the subject of uniform age.

It so happens that Ontario has a maximum age for juveniles of 16, Alberta has a maximum age of 16 and British Columbia has a maximum age of 17. The combined population of these three provinces is equal to half the population of Canada, whereas the combined population of Quebec and Manitoba is less than one-third. Despite these disparities and representations, somehow the message from Quebec and Manitoba got through.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Without a presentation.

Mr. Friesen: Even without a presentation. The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), in his vaunted eloquence, supported age 18 as the uniform age. He may have a legal opinion on that. Later on in his presentation today he objected to the fact that young people will be incarcerated with adults—what a crime to put 12-year-olds with 20-year-olds. I agree. Why should young people, children in fact, who are really on the threshold of life and beginning to engage in criminal activities, be given a kind of "university education" within the criminal system by being put together with 20 and 21-year-olds? Exactly, but why does he support age 18 as the uniform age? It would be a sure way of incarcerating children with adults. He cannot have it both ways.

At the outset I said that the province of Ontario opted for age 16 as the uniform age. That was its recommendation which the minister, hiding behind the curtains, seems to have forgotten. The province of Ontario indicated that if a uniform age were adopted, it would recommend the age of 16 as the uniform age, but that if this were not accepted it recommended that age 17 be adopted. In its supporting documents, the province of Ontario submitted the following points:

1. Inclusion of 16 and 17-year-old youths in our junevile justice system would represent an increase of more than 165 per cent in the number of charges brought before the youth court each year. Many of these charges will represent more serious types of crimes by seasoned offenders. We have grave concerns that the excellent juvenile programs developed in this province may be severely damaged by the need to accommodate such a mix of children and young adults.

This is just the very thing the hon. member for Burnaby wants to avoid yet supports.

• (1610)

2. In proposing these changes you have expressed concern that 16 and 17-year-olds not be exposed to older, more experienced offenders. Ontario is greatly concerned that your proposed changes will expose 12-year-old children to offenders who are up to 22 years of age. In many parts of Ontario, there will simply be no practical way to avoid this most unfortunate result.

The province further stated:

Another concern you purport to be addressing with your amendment involves reducing the number of young persons being institutionalized. We are afraid that you are achieving precisely the opposite result. Our experience shows that in practice few 16 and 17-year-olds are incarcerated because the courts respond to this age group generally as first offenders. However, if the maximum age is raised, many would undoubtedly be appearing before the youth court as repeat offenders and would draw stiffer penalties. The number of custody dispositions for 16 and 17-year-olds may increase by 200 or 300 per cent. Furthermore, the adult court would probably adopt a more lenient approach to 18 and 19-year-olds, as first-time adult offenders.

That kind of concern ought to register with the Solicitor General. On the one hand, he wants to prevent young people from being incarcerated with adults, but, on the other hand, he brings in an amendment which will ensure that young people will be incarcerated with adults. I find that to be reprehensible.

Further, he ignores the testimony given in committee by members of the Ontario government. I would like to quote from page 63:54 of the committee hearings held February 23, wherein Mr. Drea says:

> Now, there is no way, even at a cost of some $83 million—

I might say in passing that the hon. member for Burnaby wants us to spend more money to assure that the justice system works. I agree that we do need to spend more money in some areas. I would remind the hon. member, however, that the way to save money is to let the family look after the juvenile if at all possible, rather than to institutionalize, and it would not only save money but would also be much better for the juvenile.

Mr. Drea continued:

> —and that may be low—that I can provide at least 20 new maximum security—and I am not talking about maximum security for juveniles, I am talking about detention centres that would be built to the standards of Toronto East or the Don jail; that would be built to the standards of the Millbrook provincial institution. There is no way I can provide those—forget the money; just the bricks, the mortar, all the security that goes in. We are not going to be able to do that in three years.
> Therefore we are going to have to take over from the adult system some maximum security detention centres. If this goes through, you are going to have juveniles in the Don jail in Toronto. It is that simple. I have no other place to put them. I cannot put them in a group home. I cannot put them in an observation place. Perhaps after trial or a disposition they may go off into something not that secure.

On the one hand, the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Burnaby want to ensure that these young people are not incarcerated with adults, while on the other hand they are making sure that it will happen. Two pages later on, Mr. Drea states:

> —By the way—and this has not even been touched—the probation caseload in Ontario will change by about between 7,000 and 8,000 people a day. Now, the important thing about that is that most 16 and 17-year-olds are the prime users of probation and with community service orders and a number of other things, it is working. It is really working. Okay. Now, you are switching, you are having to fragment your probation thing without any regard to the end of the system. It is what you want to accomplish. Knowing all the restraints and all the legalisms, which are quite popular, that I would prefer to look at.

I suspect that the secret of the hon. member for Burnaby, certainly, is that he enjoys having that kind of a state role in juvenile affairs, that he wants to have a state enterprise in the juvenile system and to move into those areas which are properly the family areas. I suspect that that has more to do with ideology than it has to do with the welfare or prescient understanding of where the children or the young people are at.

The hon. member for Burnaby also ignored a representation by the New Westminster crime prevention committee. This is an organization of private citizens, ratepayers' groups, business people, members of the MHR, police, YMCA, YWCA, probation services, detached youth programs, etc. They state:

> We are opposed to the item whereby the age limit of prosecution for an adult will be raised from 17 (the current age here in B.C.) to 18. In our collective experiences we believe this will only serve to give too many juveniles another year to continue their anti-social (criminal activities) before they will be held fully responsible for their actions.
> We are also concerned about the involvement of lawyers at the initial phase of investigation of first offenders. This will, in all likelihood, put an end to our very successful police diversion programs. We find that the youth are already very familiar with their rights and the presence of a lawyer at this stage could in many instances hinder our working with youth before they get into the justice system.

That is the presentation of a committee from New Westminster, the city bordering on the constituency represented by the hon. member for Burnaby. He ought to be informed about the cause in B.C. He ought to know how people in British Columbia think. Instead, he would rather choose to represent the feelings, ideas and presentations of the people of Quebec and Manitoba and forget about those in British Columbia. Of course, we are familiar with that from the members in the New Democratic Party of British Columbia. We saw that during the constitutional debate and we understand where that sort of thing comes from.

The other point, which is ambiguous to the extreme as far as the Solicitor General is concerned, and certainly the hon. member from Burnaby, is that on page five of his presentation to the committee the Solicitor General pointed out that:

> The key principles which underlie the proposed young offenders act are:
> That young persons should be held more responsible for their behaviour but not wholly accountable since they are not yet fully mature—

I agree with that. As a matter of fact, that was corroborated by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) only a few days ago when he was referring to the child pornography provisions in Bill C-53. I agree that young people ought to be held accountable, but not wholly accountable. It strikes me as somewhat strange that the hon. member for Burnaby takes the same position, but in a different way. Here in the House he has been pontificating as to how society ought to operate under a load of guilt for the many wrongs that it has perpetrated on young people and children, and that one really cannot blame children for doing wrong because, you see, society is at fault. That may be incredibly sound socialist principle and ideology, but it is rotten psychology. Even that university-educated hon. member for Burnaby, who has done a lot more reading than he has living, ought to know that if young people are trained to shove the blame on to someone else, they will learn that very well and they will never learn to be accountable. There is a choice between making young people accountable or making society accountable. The hon. member for Burnaby ought to learn that there are sometimes people who choose—who decide—to do wrong regardless of the circumstances and regardless of what society has done. Witness the affluent community from where he comes.

An hon. Member: Like the Conservative Party.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, including the Conservative Party. It is part of human nature.

Mr. Darling: Like the NDP in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Friesen: I do not absolve any segment of society from that. But even in the community which the hon. member for Burnaby represents, there are affluent members of that community who do wrong. Will he blame that on society? Will he blame it on poverty when the upper and middle-class people in his community commit crime? As I say, it may be great Skinnerian dogma, but it is not good psychology. It certainly portrays an incredible lack of understanding of human nature and of young people.

• (1620)

As I said before, I agree with the minister that there ought to be joint responsibility between the young people and some other body in society. That is why I was so relieved to see the Solicitor General, when he was a backbencher, table a private member's bill which called for joint responsibility between young people and their parents in certain cases. I thought that was a good idea, so I took up that idea. I admittedly modified it very slightly and submitted it as an amendment. The minister is enjoying this, is he not?

Mr. Kaplan: Not very much; not this part.

Mr. Friesen: Here is the amendment I submitted in committee:

> That Clause 3 of Bill 61 be amended by
> (a) striking out line 31 on page 3 and substituting the following:
> "(a) parents have primary responsibility for the care and supervision of their children, and, for that reason, young persons should be removed from parental supervision either partly or entirely only when all measures that provide for continuing parental supervision are inappropriate;

Later there was an amendment asking that the parents of the children be held jointly responsible when the judge deemed it appropriate to do so. When the Solicitor General was a backbencher, he found that to be a good principle. In fact, he did so at the behest of his constituents. Apparently there was a lot of vandalism in his riding. The community organizers came to him and said they needed a back-up to the present law. If parents are irresponsible, the law ought to bring them to account and make them jointly responsible for the children. I think that is good.

That was the view of the Solicitor General when he was a backbencher. A marvellous conversion took place between his move from the back bench to the front bench. When he became a cabinet minister, he either had a conversion or lapse of memory because he felt that it was not an appropriate piece of legislation.

I am quite astounded at that. I think it is a downward move. For support, I have the credo of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. It underscores this. I quote:

> Most parents are willing and able to provide their children with the necessary loving empathic care, given support from others, appropriate understanding of the task and the conviction of its absolute importance.
> It is unutterably cruel to permanently maim a human being by failing to provide this quality of care during the first three years of life.
> There is an urgency therefore to:
> —Re-evaluate all our institutions, traditions and beliefs from this perspective.
> —Oppose and weaken all forces which undermine the desire or ability of parents to successfully carry out a task which ultimately affects us all.
> —Support and strengthen all aspects of family and community life which assist parents to meet their obligation to each new member of the human race.

That is a very positive statement. It addresses the perception in the way it ought to be seen—that the family comes first. When there are families which are irresponsible, the support mechanisms of the state step in, but only as a final resort.

While we support this legislation and while there are aspects of the bill that are upgrading and do away with some of the anachronisms in the legislation—and it is necessary to do that—there are some very dangerous trends in the legislation. I want to go on record and absolve myself of the responsibility for those aspects of this legislation that are destructive, and to point out to the members of this House and the Canadian people that there are aspects of this legislation that lead us down the road of statism.

The role of the family is being eroded, the position of the family is being eroded, parental responsibility is being eroded, and there is an easier intrusion on the part of law enforcement agencies, human resource agencies and the court system into the family unit. This will, in effect, allow parents more easily to absolve themselves of their responsibility, allow the state to come in and say to parents that because they are not doing it, the state will have to.

I want to go on record today as one person who tried in this House and in the committee to stop that slide toward a statist trend and intrusion into our family lives, who tried to preserve the integrity and sacredness of the family unit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)) moved that Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to initiate second reading debate on Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Corporation Act.

I hope I will have the indulgence of my colleagues since, due to my international travels, this is my first opportunity to speak in this House since becoming a minister, other than answering questions during question period. I would like to speak for a few minutes, before getting into the details of the bill, about the initiatives we have undertaken since March, 1980 with respect to export development, as well as to pay tribute to some of my colleagues in the House.

Most ministers upon entering their portfolios do not have the luxury of having several of their colleagues in the House of Commons having been their predecessor. For my part, I have four distinguished members of this House who have been previous ministers of trade; the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) and the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin).

I sincerely appreciate the guidance and counsel of these individual members who have made my job much easier, particularly the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton who has spent a great deal of time working with me. As my neighbouring Member of Parliament he not only has worked hard in his own area of responsibility of transport, but also has spent a great deal of time with me on what I think is his first love, international trade.

I also want to thank colleagues on both sides of the House who participated in the various trade missions we undertook during the past two years. We decided two years ago that it would be to the advantage of the Canadian business community as well as to all parties in this House to have individual members of Parliament travel with the trade minister to various countries on trade missions with the Canadian business community and participate in those discussions. The contribution made by members on both sides of this House has been applauded by the business community and, I might add, by trade ministers and industry ministers in just about every country that we visited. In particular, I would like to single out my two trade critics, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), who have participated in several trade missions and have made very important contributions to our trade efforts abroad.

Canada is historically a trading nation, depending on international markets to consume close to one-third of the goods and services produce. With respect to goods, almost 50 per cent of domestic production is for the export market.

The degree to which we are successful in selling abroad has a large impact on new investment and new jobs in Canada. Because such a large portion of our GNP is export-oriented, Canada is much more trade dependent on other countries, such as our friends to the south. In addition, because of the relatively small size of Canada's domestic market a successful export effort is crucial, since it provides the opportunity to achieve the economies of scale necessary for Canadian firms to compete effectively at home. All of these factors suggest that the continuous support of Canadian exports is essential.

The ultimate goal, of course, of increased exports is the creation and maintenance of jobs which are consistent with the social and economic goals of Canadians in all regions of our country. It is for this reason that successive governments have recognized the importance of the Export Development Corporation and has supported its efforts.

The international marketplace is becoming increasingly competitive. Developed countries have traditionally stressed exports as the key tool in difficult economic times and as an engine for economic growth. Competition has always been fierce among these countries and continues to be so today.

Recently the newly industrialized countries, recognizing the validity of economic arguments in favour of increased exports, are putting considerable effort into the development of export markets for their own goods and services. In order to be successful in international markets, Canada must appreciate the challenges of international competition, face them squarely and pursue the many opportunities that exist with imagination and aggressiveness.

What are some of the areas, Mr. Speaker, we have been concentrating on during the last couple of years to increase Canada's exports abroad? First we have put increasing emphasis on capital projects. Why have we emphasized capital projects? There are three very simple reasons, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, the successful acquisition of a capital project by a Canadian company, or by a consortium of Canadian companies, means an increase in the export of Canadian capital goods, the labour-intensive side of our industrial structure.

Secondly, we have tried to accelerate our aggressiveness in the non-traditional trading markets of Canada. It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the areas of indigenous expertise to Canadians such as in energy, power generations, transportation and communications, etc. are also the major capital projects being undertaken by many of the newly industrialized and less developed countries throughout the world. So by acquiring these major capital projects we increase the image of Canadian manufacturers as excellent suppliers of goods and services in the highest technology sectors.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, we increase the image in our own country of our fellow Canadian businesses in terms of being successful in acquiring these contracts—to try and spread the good word—and I think this is having substantial success due to the fact that more Canadians than ever before are bidding on major capital projects throughout the world. Perhaps the best indication of our success in this regard, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that in 1981 we acquired more one-hundred million dollar contracts than at any other period of time in our history. As a matter of fact, we acquired more of these contracts in one year than we acquired in all the years previous. I think that is an indication of the aggressiveness, the international marketing ability and the technical capability of Canadian business men and women in a very difficult international marketplace.

How have we done? What have our results been? Canadian trade results are testimony, I think, to our increasing success in the international marketplace. When we consider the adverse economic conditions which we and our trading partners are facing, as well as the intense competition that exists in all export markets, Canada continues to perform impressively. For instance, merchandise exports increased by 17 per cent in 1980 and a further 10 per cent in 1981, outpacing the growth of the GNP in each of these years. Our 1981 trade surplus of $6.5 billion was exceeded only by the surplus of $7.8 billion in the preceding year. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the most important statistic is that Canada has had 23 successive months of merchandise trade surplus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: In the areas of manufactured exports, the labour-intensive side and obviously the most important side to us, we are doing much better than many of our critics would lead us to believe. Some 70 per cent of Canada's merchandise exports take the form of semi- and fully manufactured products, a fact which often seems to escape the notice of those who characterize Canada as simply a country rich in natural resources.

The measurement of a trade surplus is based on the value of exports against the value of imports. I suggest that there is another way of looking at our export data which provides us with new insights about our trade performance. Industrial growth and employment show a direct relationship to the volume of output, and thereby to the volume of trade, and are not simply aggregate values in current dollar terms. Over the period 1970 to 1981, the price index of crude materials, as outlined in StatsCan figures, soared to almost five and one-half times its 1971 base, whereas the increase in the price of end products—"inedible", to use StatsCan terminology—is much more modest, having only slightly more than doubled. The result of the greater increase in the price of crude materials has obscured full recognition of the doubling of the physical volume of end product inedible exports between 1970 and 1981.

In citing these figures, I do not want to imply that I am not concerned about the further growth that still remains to be achieved in our export of fully manufactured end products. Rather, I want to highlight the important progress that Canadians have achieved in the production and sale of manufactured goods, and to stress the importance that this government places on the production of these types of products from a socio-economic perspective. Further, I would like to emphasize that growth in this sector is an important aspect of current economic development policy.

One of the other areas of priorization for our trade officials during the past few years, Mr. Speaker, is the area of market analysis. Traditionally, and as used many times in this House by speakers on both sides, we state the figure of 70 per cent as representing our total trade with the United States of America. In the last two years this figure has dropped from 70 per cent to approximately 65 per cent to 66 per cent. Thus it can be seen that Canadian businessmen and women are doing their very best to diversify and develop a much broader base from which to export Canadian goods and services.

In our market analysis we have first of all looked at the areas of the world which would have the largest GNP growth. The 7, 8 and 9 per cent annual GNP growth that used to be experienced by the developed world is now being experienced by countries in the Middle East, the Pacific Rim and in Latin America. During the past two years our officials have been working on special market analysis programs not only for these regions but for specific countries in these regions. The first three of these studies have been made public and I understand from the business community have been very well received.

What have we done with respect to some of the other programs to encourage Canadian business to export? Perhaps the most important program incentive to the Canadian business community is the PEMD program, the program for export market development. The Government of Canada last year tripled the budget from the PEMD program. The PEMD program, very simply, Mr. Speaker, is a program to cost-share the risk with Canadian business, particularly small and medium sized businesses, in trying to increase the marketing of their goods and services abroad.

We have opened up a new post in Quito, Ecuador. We will be opening up a new post in Perth, Australia this year and we have under discussion right now a request to cabinet for several other posts which should assist Canadians in markets which we think will improve our ability to export.

On ministerial visits, Mr. Speaker, in the past we have not taken advantage of ministerial visits to a variety of countries as requested by the Canadian business community. During the past two years we have put special drive on furthering ministerial visits to accompany Canadian business people at their request, where and when required. Based on the Canadian Export Association's last annual report, this has indeed been appreciated.

One other point I would like to highlight, one which does not get full credit, relates to the travels of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The comments of the president of the Canadian Export Association last year at the association's annual convention were indicative of how the Canadian business community appreciates the Prime Minister's travels abroad.

Mr. Blenkarn: You don't believe that, do you?

Mr. Lumley: The businessmen appreciate the high esteen in which the Prime Minister is held abroad and the doors that are opened to Canadian business by his reputation internationally.

• (1640)

Another positive development is the formation of the Export Trade Development Board which was recommended both by the previous minister in my department and the last time our party was in power. The formation of the Export Trade Development Board has made a very important contribution to a co-ordinated, cohesive approach by the private and public sectors with respect to our trade effort abroad. The only group we were not able to include in the formation of that board were the provincial governments. However, the formations of federal-provincial committees on export promotion and trade policy have given the provinces direct input into the discussions of the Export Trade Development Board and, obviously, into discussions by the Government of Canada with respect to trade policy.

Finally, with respect to new financing programs, which in essence is what we are here to discuss today in relation to Bill C-110, as I have stated repeatedly, the international trading environment is indeed competitive. Among the other things, Canadian exporters face a form of concessionary financing, called credit-mixte, offered by the governments of other industrialized countries. In the face of such competition this government established the EDC credit-mixte program in early 1981. The establishment of this financing instrument was a measure taken to combat the growth of such financing. While backing Canadian exporters with our own facility as long as necessary, Canada continues to oppose the use of credit-mixte and is working with other like-minded nations to reduce its application.

The firm position which Canada has taken in respect of credit-mixte underlines the position which this government has taken in the broader context of subsidized export financing. Our government has put important efforts into international negotiations to achieve a reduction in the subsidies being offered by some other countries to make the goods and services of their exporters more attractive. I am pleased that important progress has been achieved in this area and particularly that internationally agreed minimum lending rates for official export credits have been adjusted significantly upward in recent weeks. The government is somewhat encouraged by these developments; however, it will continue in its efforts to reduce subsidies in export credits further, allowing Canadians to compete effectively on the basis of price, quality, delivery and service.

Canada is very fortunate to have a strong and internationally oriented banking system. However, the creation for exporters of any country of an acceptable risk environment for trading involves risk management and financing of a nature beyond the capability of their commercial banking and insurance systems. Thus, governments have become involved and act as required to complement facilities offered by the private sector to finance and assume some of the risks associated with export trade.

The Export Development Corporation, the instrument through which official export credit and credit insurance is delivered in Canada, is an integral part of the national trade development policy and program. Continuing government support of the EDC such as that shown in this bill is indicative of the priority which this government places on exports as well as its willingness to help exporters meet international competition.

The EDC is a Crown corporation—not known to the average person in Canada—which provides financial services to Canadian exporters and foreign buyers in order to facilitate and develop export trade. It does this through a wide range of insurance, guarantee and loan services. Because it is a Crown corporation, it enjoys status as a government agency when funding itself and in foreign government dealings. The EDC is determined in its effort to assist Canadian exporters facing tough, government-supported foreign competition while at the same seeking to maintain minimal subsidy levels in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer.

The corporation encourages maximum private sector involvement in the provision of services to exporters, consistent with the realities of international competition. Therefore, an important part of its role is to work in partnership with the Canadian banking community to combine their efforts effectively to the benefit of the exporter.

The EDC conducts its affairs in accordance with commercial principles and disciplines, seeking, in the long term at least, to cover all costs and preserve the invested capital. Accordingly, it extends its support only to transactions that are in all respects commercially sensible. The corporation is in business to take foreign risks, but it does not insure when, so to speak, the house is on fire; nor would it be prepared to lend to a bankrupt buyer.

The corporation's performance in recent years, particularly in 1981, has been exemplary. I am sure that during this debate individual members will detail the EDC's performance. I will limit my comments to saying that the EDC should be commended for the quality of its operations and particularly for its responsiveness in the last few years to the needs of the exporting commmunity—small and medium-sized in particular—and is deserving of the ongoing parliamentary support which is implicit in this bill.

Bill C-110, which we have before us today, would allow the EDC to continue to fulfil its role in support of Canadian exporters. Three major types of change can be identified. First, the bill extends the corporation's legal capacity to deliver its services. It should be noted that the statutory limits are not an indication of the cost of EDC services to the taxpayer but, rather, represent ceilings on the amount of liabilities which can be incurred by the EDC on behalf of the government. The actual scale of the EDC program is established annually through the government's budgetary systems and necessary appropriations by Parliament.

Second, there are a number of changes which authorize the EDC to improve the range and flexibility of the services it offers to Canadian exporters.

Finally, a third group of amendments is designed to facilitate greater administrative efficiency and speed in the delivery of the corporation's services to the advantage of exporters. I am sure details of the bill will be outlined by colleagues on both sides of the House before the end of this debate.

In summary, I would like to commend the Canadian exporting commmunity for its success in recent years. As I indicated earlier, Canada's trade performance statistics are testimony to the drive and aggressiveness of our exporters in the international marketplace and are indicative of the fact that they are prepared to face the tremendous challenges ahead.

For its part, the government is very active and has undertaken many initiatives recently in the quest to improve further the environment within which Canadian exporters must operate. The amendments proposed in the legislation at hand are a further indication of the continuing support being accorded to exporters by the government through the Export Development Corporation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans Affairs—(a) Request for adjustment increase in pensions. (b) Inquiry respecting date of presentation of legislative amendments; the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—The Economy—(a) Level of interest rates. (b) Request that new budget be introduced; the hon. member for Winnipeg-St.James (Mr. Keeper)—Employment—(a) Voluntary affirmative action program—Reported contents of memorandum. (b) Request for introduction of mandatory program.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lumley that Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments about Bill C-110 but, before doing so, I should like to make a couple of points of a general nature about Canada's trade. In spite of the very glowing picture which has been left with us by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley), I have to say that I think we in Canada are losing the trade battle. I am afraid that we are going backwards. I know the minister does not like to refer to this and he does not really consider it a valid point, but the fact is that we are losing our share of international trade today and have been for some time. Canada's share of world trade has been on the decline for the last six or seven years, and I think that is a very important point we have to take into account in assessing our trade performance.

The second point is that our deficit in fully manufactured goods in Canada this year will approach $21 billion. That is a very large sum of money. To put it in some sort of perspective, $21 billion is about one third the federal government's level of expenditure for this year. It is about one and one half times the federal government deficit we will be looking at this year. So it is a very significant number. More important is the fact that in order to produce a $6.5 billion surplus in trade we have to have a surplus in our natural resource industries of some $28 billion to offset the deficit in fully manufactured goods of $21 billion.

While $6.5 billion sounds like a good surplus, Canada is becoming increasingly reliant on its trade surplus for selling the natural resources of coal, iron, natural gas, lumber, forest products, copper, etc. That is another factor we have to take into consideration in our trade performance.

Perhaps the third point that I want to make in connection with trade is the most important. Trade cannot be considered in isolation from all the other things that we do with our customers. Whether we want to believe it or not, we have alienated a good number of our customers over the last few years. Some people do not like to buy from Canada now because of the National Energy Program. They do not want to do business with Canada because of FIRA. They do not want to do business with Canada because we discriminate in some other fashion, be it in fisheries or something else. We certainly do not discriminate against anyone in terms of acid rain.

All these factors have to be taken into account when examining our trade performance and our ability to trade with our neighbours and our customers. We cannot trade in isolation from everything else. When we make a bad friend because we have discriminated by virtue of lower prices and by subsidizing Canadian industry through the National Energy Program, that contravenes the spirit and intent of our agreement under GATT. It is no wonder they get mad at us. The same holds true with FIRA. Some people think we are not playing according to the rules of the game, but then we think some of the people we do business with do not play by the rules of the game either! I like free trade, Mr. Speaker, but I also like fair trade and I think that a good many of the signatories of GATT are not playing the game either.

I come back to the point that trade cannot be considered in isolation from everything else. We have to take a whole political spectrum into account when judging our ability to trade with our customers.

I should like to turn to some of the specific provisions of Bill C-110. This bill to amend the Export Development Act essentially increases the limits of borrowing and increases the limits under which the government can undertake to do business in insurance and guarantees. The present legislation allows the Export Development Corporation to take on liabilities equal to ten times the amount of its authorized capital which at present is $1 billion. That means that the government can make loans of up to $10 billion. Up to the present time the EDC has made loans and unfunded commitments totalling almost $8 billion, so it is approaching the upper limit and I can understand that it must be extended. I have no quarrel with giving EDC a greater line of credit to enable it to expand its business. Under the Export Development Act the government was permitted to make loans or to undertake guarantees on its own account as distinct from the Export Development Corporation, up to an amount not to exceed $3.5 billion. Again, the government is pushing the upper limit so the amount is being raised to $10 billion.

The third element of the legislation is a technical one dealing with the number of directors. The existing legislation allows for 12 directors, of which six must be members of the public service. The amendment to the legislation would raise the number of directors from 12 to 15. Apart from the change in the number of directors, we are dealing with the creation of new financial limits with respect to the Export Development Corporation and the amount that the government is allowed to borrow to finance export sales.

I should now like to deal with the question of financial disclosure, Mr. Speaker. I sense that today there is a lack of trust on the part of the public toward all governments, not least the federal government. I believe the public mistrusts all levels of government, so it is absolutely essential that governments go the extra mile to reveal the financial dealings of all Crown corporations to the public. Not everyone believes in Crown corporations but I happen to believe in the Export Development Corporation. Regardless of whether it is the Export Development Corporation, Petro-Canada or any other Crown corporation, I think it behooves us as parliamentarians to go that extra mile to provide complete financial disclosure. That is what I want to speak about with respect to the Export Development Corporation.

This may become a little complicated, Mr. Speaker, but I shall try to simplify it as much as I can. The money that the Export Development Corporation has loaned out and the commitments it has made amount to close to $10 billion. That is why we need to increase the limit. Of that $10 billion, $4 billion has been borrowed to cover the $8 billion or $10 billion that is committed or loaned. That leaves what we call unfunded disbursements of about $4 billion or $5 billion. In other words, the government has committed Canadians to $5 billion worth of loans that will have to be funded in future at unknown interest rates.

We do not know what the interest rate will be at the time we go to borrow the money but we know what it is today. If the EDC goes into the market today it will have to pay roughly 16 per cent for its money. The Export Development Corporation has made firm commitments to others that it will lend the money at something close to consensus rates. We hope they will be consensus rates, Mr. Speaker.

Another factor is that the government will not say what kind of loans the Export Development Corporation makes. I am not suggesting that the government should tell us the terms of every individual transaction, but it is the Canadian people's money, not the government's, and surely they are entitled to know what the government is committed to on their behalf. But no, the government will not open up, and that is part of the problem. The people do not trust government because government will not put the facts on the table. What the government is saying, in effect, is, "You are not smart enough to know, so we will not tell you."

The government has committed taxpayers to $4 billion or $5 billion in loans at subsidized interest rates for anywhere from 20 to 30 years. But those liabilities have not been funded. We do not know what it is going to cost us at some point down the road, but we do know what it is going to cost us today. What I am driving at here is that the Canadian public should be told what the liability is. For example, if we loan that money out for 15 years at, say, 8 per cent, and we have to borrow at 16 per cent, we are liable for 8 per cent on $5 billion for 15 years. So let us get it up front and tell the Canadian taxpayer what it is really costing. We are increasing the loan limit of the corporation from $10 billion to $20 billion; we are increasing the limit on government account from $3.5 billion to $10 billion; and we are increasing the corporation's authorized capital from $1 billion to $2 billion. Those are pretty big sums of money. The Canadian taxpayer is going to have another $30 billion at risk.

Let us talk about the Candu reactor sales for a moment. They provide a lot of jobs and keep Canada at the forefront of technology. Maybe they are a good thing. I am not convinced that Candus are all that great a thing, but let us assume for a moment that they are. I think the minister confirmed to me in committee that if we sell a Candu to Mexico we could be talking about a $5 billion line of credit. A sale to Roumania, if it goes through, would, I think, be something over $800 million, perhaps $1 billion. I have heard a figure of between $3 billion and $4 billion for the sale to Korea, if it goes through. I am not certain whether we have any commitments there at the moment, but the point is that we could be looking at $10 billion in financing. While I doubt very much that we would be able to sell Candu reactors on the basis of 11 per cent financing, let us assume that we can and that we have to borrow the money today at 16 per cent. We are then talking about a 5 per cent interest spread on $10 billion. That comes out to about $500 million a year.

The point I am getting at is that I think the Canadian people are entitled to know that is the kind of commitment the EDC is making on their behalf. Admittedly, the government does not know what the interest rate is going to be when those loans are actually funded, but let us tell the people, for heaven's sake, what it would cost the taxpayer if we funded those commitments today. No private corporation would ever get past a security exchange without providing that information. You have to tell the people what you are committing them to.

What the government is saying to the public is: We are going to lend all this money out to help Canadian exporters—which is fine—but we do not know what it is going to cost you, the Canadian public. Trust us, we will look after it. We are a good government and you do not have to worry about it.

Well, I think the government has to come back to Parliament. We as parliamentarians are the representatives of the Canadian people, and I think it behooves the government to come to Parliament and say, "Here is what we are committed to." We do not want to be looking over the minister's shoulder on a day to day basis, but when we reach these staggering amounts our priorities could change. The EDC will lose something like $35 million in 1982, and I am not saying that is wrong. As a matter of fact, it may not be enough; perhaps we should be doing more financing at a loss to promote Canadian industry. I understand also that it is forecast the EDC will probably lose $60 million in fiscal 1983.

As competition for international trade increases and more and more countries are desperately looking for trade to support their balance of payments, then pressure on all countries to export increases. Who knows what will happen to interest rates? It is very unlikely in the near term that the rates at which we finance Canadian exports will be anything close to the market rates we pay for the funds. I suggest to the minister and to the government that very likely we will be looking at significant interest rate spreads for quite some time. No one knows what is going to happen, but the trends are there. We are facing tough competition to get Canadian goods abroad. We are facing subsidized concessions that our competitors in other countries make. We have to face the fact that our interest rates will remain at a high level. We are looking at a sizeable interest rate spread and at large amounts of money. I do not want the government to come back here looking for a blank cheque. Five per cent, 6 per cent or 10 per cent of $30 billion is a lot of money. I do not think the government should have the right to ignore Parliament and just come back to report what commitments it has made. Our priorities could change.

If we should have learned anything in the last year in this Parliament, surely we should have learned that man's ability to forecast is pretty fragile. All we have to do is look back at the National Energy Program and all of the good things that were expected to happen six, seven or eight months ago. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) were saying, "We do not need to make any changes in the National Energy Program; we are still going to get $53 billion over the next five years." I see only two members of cabinet on the opposite side, but I would like to ask them what they think the budget deficit will be or how much oil revenue they think they are going to get now. Some people say the amount received will be $30 billion less than forecast. I do not know what the number is. It might be $30 billion, but let us assume it is $20 billion less. Where will that money come from?

The deficit will be a paltry $13 billion this year. What if the federal deficit reaches $20 billion or $25 billion over the next few years? If that were to happen, would you not think that the government should reconsider its priorities? Does not the government think the Canadian people might want to reconsider what is being spent by the Export Development Corporation? I am not saying that we would cut back on the financing to the Export Development Corporation, but maybe we should reconsider it. Maybe we do not want to commit $10 billion, $15 billion or $20 billion to the sale of Candu reactors subsidized by interest rates of 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Perhaps with so many other problems at home, we should be reconsidering our priorities.

I ask the government to amend this legislation so that if it makes a commitment over and above a certain amount in the way of potential losses in the future, it will give us the opportunity as parliamentarians and as representatives of the people to take a look at what it is doing.

I have another point I want to bring to the minister's attention. It is a message I have tried to get across to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) without success for the past three years. It concerns the method of reporting; the question of financial disclosure. I am glad to see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is here; I want to get his attention for a moment on this question. I am talking about the estimates. I think the form in which these estimates are presented is a disgrace, not only to the public but to parliamentarians. God help the Canadian public. I happen to be a lowly chartered accountant and I think I can read a few numbers, but I cannot understand the form of this document. I have been in the business for 25 years and I cannot understand the form in which these estimates are presented.

I will not read the amounts but I will read the terminology. There is an item in the 1981 estimates "Program by activities". This is supposed to tell you a whole lot. We find "Export development corporate account: bank so much; Canada account so much; total; less repayments. Corporate account so much; Canada account so much; retained earnings and outside borrowings so much; total estimates."

That is really an informative piece of information which tells everybody absolutely nothing! Surely to goodness we can have a little more information presented than that. We should at least have some form of description which will tell us ordinary parliamentarians what in the world is going on. I do not think that is too much to ask. I ask the minister of state to speak to the President of the Treasury Board to see if something can be done.

What I have just pointed out is typical of so many of the estimates that come before this House. It is typical of the disregard which this government has for people who want to know where the money is going and how it is spent. People want to know the background. It is very difficult even for trained people to understand these estimates. I ask the government again, does it not think it is time to try to put the information in a form which the people of Canada can understand so people can trust their parliamentarians?

My next point deals with the board of directors of this corporation. The number of directors is to be increased from 12 to 15. The present legislation calls for 12 members. If I remember correctly, I believe the present legislation calls for six directors to be public service employees. The export development committee recommended that there be a greater proportion of private sector directors on the board, a recommendation with which I fully concur. In my opinion, any board, public or private, should not consist of a greater number of inside rather than outside directors, because boards must be independent. Independence is absolutely critical to the operation of any board, whether public or private. If the directors are under the thumb of a government or are perhaps employees of a corporation, those directors are not in a position to make an independent judgment. My experience, having been in industry over 20 years, leads me to believe that they are not in a position to make an independent judgment. I think it is absolutely wrong for any board of directors to have 50 per cent of its directors being, in effect, inside employees, which is the present situation in the Export Development Corporation.

When the government in its wisdom drafted this piece of legislation, I guess it decided to leave the six public service employees on the board, that it would not do anything to them, but to increase the number to 15. This provided an opportunity to increase the number of private sector representatives on the board but not do anything with the public service employees. The Export Development Corporation does not need 15 directors. It is ridiculous, it is nonsense. EDC is a fairly cut and dried operation and 12 directors is plenty. Let us have nine directors from the private sector who are independent and three directors from the public service. This would be plenty to get the job done.

I have no axe to grind. Obviously the president of the corporation should be a director, but I do not see what useful purpose is served by the Governor of the Bank of Canada being on the board. I am sure he has more important things to do than that at the moment. I do not understand why the president of CIDA should be on the board. I understand that he becomes involved in some of the dealings, but why should he be on the board? I cannot see his being on the board. I certainly cannot see the deputy minister of finance being on the board, or the deputy minister of industry, trade and commerce. The interests of Canadian taxpayers would be far better protected if there were three or four private sector representatives on the board.

I have nothing against these people personally. They are all able and probably capable, but we need independence in that board of directors. Independence is the key to the management of any successful institution, whether it be government or the private sector. I have said that many times in the House, but I do not seem to be able to get my message across. If we do not have independence, all we have is a rubber stamp.

If I invited a person who was working for me to be a member of a board of directors, he would realize that I am his boss and he would not want to say anything against me which might jeopardize his future, salary increases, pension or even security of employment. Therefore, he is not independent. I do not think that all these gentlemen would fall into such a category, but there is a very good chance that they would be yes men rather than representatives acting in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers.

Another matter which I would like to see discussed in committee is the provision of greater opportunity for chartered banks in Canada to participate in export financing. It strikes me—and I cannot be certain of this without a real in-depth review of the Export Development Corporation—in looking at the financial statements of EDC that the delivery of service is very, very expensive, as is the case with so many things in government. I can think of many reasons why the Export Development Corporation cannot farm out all export financing business to the chartered banking system. It is not an impossibility, but I do not think I agree with that approach because it is necessary for EDC to do certain things with respect to financing, which a chartered bank would not ordinarily do, in the interests of Canadian exports. I hope this matter will be raised in committee, because I think there is opportunity for greater participation on the part of the Canadian banking system than is presently the case.

Perhaps the government could encourage Canadian chartered banks to go further than they are presently by allowing them to look after some of the every day cut and dried export financing and by letting EDC look after special situations. This matter requires a great deal of study. Perhaps we could save a good deal of money in the cost of the administration of EDC but, perhaps even more important, we might be able to limit the amount of funds which EDC and the government will be required to borrow in coming years to finance Canadian exports. We are looking at very substantial sums of money. If we could shift the burden of these borrowings on to the chartered banking system, it would remove an equal amount of burden from the shoulders of Canadian taxpayers, and perhaps we would make EDC a more efficient corporation.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-110 which is before the House today. I begin my remarks by responding to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) by saying that I am very interested in his ideas on accountability but that I would like to see the wording of the amendments. It would have been interesting to see his party, when it was in power for a short period of time, amend the legislation so that there would have been more accountability.

Mr. Blenkarn: You made sure that we did not stay there.

Mr. McDermid: We could not do everything in six weeks; we could not clean up the mess in six weeks.

Mr. Nystrom: It seems that I have, in a very low key manner, struck a few nerves. I remember that the election took place in May and that Parliament was not recalled until October. There was approximately a five-month break. It was unprecedented that a party which had won an election would take a massive holiday at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers. At any rate, I would be very interested in seeing these amendments because I believe that there should be as much accountability as possible. I believe in openness in government, and I believe that we should reform this institution so that it is more meaningful to us and to the people of Canada. If we can accomplish this in any way, it will make things more open and democratic. I can guarantee that my party and myself are very, very interested.

The hon. member for Calgary South and the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) have both stressed the importance of trade to our economy. Not many Canadians realize that trade amounts to about 25 per cent of our gross national product. We are one of the great trading nations of the world in terms of depending, for jobs and economic activity, upon the export of our commodities from this country to other parts of the world. Our neighbours to the south, for example, depend upon approximately 12 per cent or 15 per cent of their GNP in terms of trade. Thus, what happens in terms of trade around the world and world economic trends affects Canada more than most other countries. The Export Development Corporation, as we all know, is a Crown corporation which has been set up to facilitate trade and to try to develop trade around the world. It offers such things as insurance to our Canadian exporters. It offers all kinds of financial assistance, credit assistance and export financing to the exporters of Canada. I noticed in the 1981 annual report that a number of very interesting things are happening in relation to export financing. For example, I found that the net earnings of the Export Development Corporation were $2.2 million last year, while two years ago they were some $42 million. I think that this, as the minister indicates, reflects the reality of the trading world today, which is that it is highly competitive, that people from many other countries such as the Japanese, the French, the Germans, the Americans and others, are offering all kinds of highly subsidized rates to their exporters, which puts us in a very difficult position as a nation unless we make a few changes ourselves.

The legislation we have before us today will amend the Export Development Act in about five or six different areas. Many of these areas are very technical, and perhaps we can get into those at the committee stage of the debate, which is to come. Some of them are perhaps a bit more important. We have here, for example, an amendment to increase the size of the board of directors from 12 to 15 people. That is an interesting amendment. I am not sure we need 15 people, but I do like the idea of involving more people who are in the export business. I would also suggest to the minister that since the provinces are so important, perhaps we should involve the provinces a bit more in the spirit of co-operative federalism. Perhaps someone who comes from one of the Crown corporations which exports into the international market should be on the board of directors. We have federal Crown corporations and we have provincial Crown corporations, such as Saskpotash and Hydro-Quebec. Perhaps people from those corporations should be involved.

I also think the time has come in our country when we must start looking at the whole question of economic democracy. When we have a private corporation, a Crown corporation, or a mix of the two, I think it is very important that the employees of a particular company have some representation on the board of directors and some direct input into how that company operates. An employee in the company, be it a secretary or working person, is very sensitive as to what that company is doing right or what it is doing wrong. Those are some of the matters we should consider at the committee stage.

There is also an amendment before us which will increase the capitalization of the company from $1 billion to about $2 billion. That reflects the reality of inflation and of the international interest rates. I have already mentioned that we face tremendously stiff competition today from a number of countries, such as France and Japan, when it comes to trade. That is one issue we will have to get around.

I, like the minister and the hon. member for Calgary South, want to mention a few ideas we should be discussing in relation to over-all trade. When we refer to trade, we should not discuss it in isolation. I do not think we should discuss any issue in the world today or in our country in isolation. I suppose, by nature, I am very suspicious of people who go on one issue crusades or one issue campaigns, regardless of the issue, because it should fit into a system of values for Canada and for all of mankind. Therefore, when I refer to trade, I do so in relation to an over-all strategy for Canada and how it should fit into the world.

I want to mention about seven or eight different points. The hon. member for Calgary South and the minister himself mentioned the problems we have in exporting fully manufactured goods. In about 1970, we had a trade deficit of around $2.5 billion or $3 billion in fully manufactured goods. Last year, in 1981, our deficit was $21 billion. That meant a lot of money and a lot of jobs which could have been here in Canada or kept here in Canada for Canadian workers. I believe any trade policy and any policy of the EDC must attempt to push the export of fully manufactured products to other parts of the world. That must be part of policy of the Export Development Corporation.

A second point, and I noticed in the annual report that there was a positive trend here last year, is that more and more aid from the Export Development Corporation should go to small business and medium sized enterprises. The multinational corporations and the large companies have a much better chance in terms of their international organization, their economy of scale, their contacts, their internal financing, their long-time establishments and so on, to find the markets, to be able to promote their exports and to finance those exports, than do the ordinary smaller and medium sized enterprises in this country. I also noticed a very interesting statistic which came out of the report of the committee in relation to the National Trading Corporation, which pointed out that some 63 per cent of Canadian businesses knew of the EDC. In other words, about 37 per cent, or over one third of Canadian businesses, were not even aware of the Export Development Corporation. Only 29 per cent of Canadian businesses use the services of the Export Development Corporation. So many people out there who could be exporting something are not aware of the corporation or of its services or, if they are aware, they are not using its services. I have not had the opportunity to sit down and analyse which companies use the corporation's services and which do not, but my guess would be that the majority of the people who do not are probably those in the small and medium-sized enterprises. If one looks at the nature of our country, one will find that more jobs are created by small and medium-sized businesses and more people work for small and medium-sized businesses than work for the big corporations of Canada. I believe that one of the policies of the EDC should be to make itself known to the small and medium-sized business and to aid them more than it has in the past.

The third point I want to mention, which should fit into our over-all policies, is in relation to the attempt to Canadianize our economy. I know of no other industrialized country in the world which is as controlled by foreign shareholders and companies as is our great nation of Canada. In fact, we find that last year several billion dollars of profit and dividends flowed out of this country to foreign shareholders. The EDC should be trying to promote a policy of Canadianization in terms of making its programs and policies known to Canadian firms. It should perhaps aid and assist some of the Crown corporations a bit more, not only at the federal level but at the provincial level as well. That would be a very important step to take.

A fourth point I might discuss a little more later relates to increased aid to what I would call the sunrise industries, the futuristic industries around the world. By that I mean the industries involved in the whole area of science, high technology and the world of the future. I suppose we are moving into a society where, in a few years, every kid in every classroom will have a computer on his or her desk. It is a very rapidly changing society. There is a massive technological revolution going on out there, so much so that even in our most efficient industries, such as the steel industry, even if there were a booming economy and if we were to get out of the recession, we would probably never gain back all the jobs we had before it started, simply because of technological and scientific change. It is important for our country to ensure that our industries remain competitive and up to date so that as we go through this revolution, we as Canadians will be in the forefront and will control the robots and computers so that they will not control us. That is very important. As I look at the statistics, I find that we are lagging further and further behind in this field. For example, in Japan there are 40 times as many young people attending electrical engineering schools as in Canada, and that means a lack of foresight. In terms of percentage of GNP devoted to research and development, I find that we do not rank equal with Japan, the United States, France or Germany; rather, we are on the level of countries like Ireland, Egypt and Italy.

Mr. Blenkarn: What's this got to do with the Export Development Corporation?

Mr. Nystrom: So when it comes to Canadian trade policy and the EDC, we should be putting more emphasis on developing industries which are involved in the more modern technological side of things. We can do this in areas like communications. The hon. member asks, "What about the EDC?" in terms of Brazil, Canada has signed a contract which will involve some Canadian firms which will supply equipment for satellites in that country. These are some of the points that should be kept in mind involving the EDC and our trade policy.

A Conservative asked, "What does this have to do with trade?" His party's spokesman mentioned a number of areas for innovation in terms of trade, and so did the minister. I am simply making a few more suggestions myself.

A fifth point, as mentioned by the minister, concerns the need for diversified trade. About two thirds of our trade is with the United States. The Americans are obviously going to be our biggest trading partner. They are our best friend. We are side by side geographically and share a large border with them.

• (1740)

It is very important that we diversify that trade and not put too many eggs in one basket. When the Americans are in trouble and have a recession, we are somewhat isolated and insulated from some of their harsh economic realities. Looking around the world, we should look more and more to the Pacific rim countries, which are very important to British Columbia. We should look to Japan, Latin America, the people's Republic of China, the Middle East and other greatly-populated areas. It is very important that we not rely as much as we do on only one nation for trade.

I have not had a chance to work out all the statistics, but when it comes to the Export Development Corporation, we should be aware of what this does to national policy. Unfortunately, most of our manufacturing and industry is situated in central Canada. Therefore, most of the assistance goes to the corporations located there.

Much of what has been done by DREE, such as equalization payments, for years has been directed to the poorer provinces. The effect of that is diminished or nullified by programs such as those of the Export Development Corporation. It puts money back into that part of Canada that is already more developed and wealthy. It is a very difficult question, but we have to look at EDC in terms of national policy and ensure that what we do to improve underdeveloped provinces is not nullified through the EDC.

My sixth point, and this is very important, is that on the board of directors we have the head of CIDA. It is important that we not forget about world politics. The hon. member from Calgary mentioned world politics; he spoke of our friends and those who are not our friends in terms of our trade policy. We must think of trying to help the Third World and developing nations. There should be a moral and humanitarian purpose to our trade. We should not always be after the big buck and the fast buck but, rather, should try to help those less fortunate than ourselves. We should export some of our knowledge and know-how to help people in other parts of the world become more self-sufficient and thereby improve their standard of living.

When I look at some of the projects financed by the Export Development Corporation, such as the Candu reactor, I am not sure whether those should be our priority. I believe there are other priorities we should be stressing instead.

Mr. Blenkarn: How would it be financed otherwise?

Mr. Nystrom: A member of that hon. member's own party raised some doubts about the Candu reactors about half an hour ago. When we talk about trade and exports, we cannot divorce them from the international political situation. Our role as a more fortunate nation should be to help people in other countries who are less fortunate.

There are a number of other things that one could say. Over the last few months and years we have heard many stories about our being the boy scouts of international trade. In many ways we are. We have to become more aggressive and recognize the realities. We have to diversify our economy and start manufacturing and processing more goods in this country.

One of our problems historically is that we have relied on the exporting of raw materials and importing of finished goods. We export a lot of raw materials that are not processed or refined. This started with Jacques Cartier back in 1608 with the exporting of beaver pelts to Europe and the importing of fur coats. In many ways we still have that kind of simplistic policy, and it has to be changed.

Another problem is that we are afraid to be independent of the United States. We tend to be the shadow of the Americans. We have a tag-along economy, and when they have monetarism in the United States, we in this country tend to follow. The government believes they can squeeze inflation out of the system by upping interest rates and restricting the money supply. Galbraith described this as the horse-and-sparrow system. If you feed enough oats to the horse, perhaps enough oats will pass through for the sparrow. Those policies are not working. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will put forward new ideas in Versailles when he attends the very important summit to be held there in a few weeks' time.

We have to look at our economic and trade policy and decide where we want to concentrate, look at what we as Canadians do best. Also, we have to look at where Canadians spend their money. When we look at the spending habits of ordinary citizens, we find that between 80 per cent and 85 per cent of the money goes to housing, food and transportation. Because so much of our money goes into those three fields, why not specialize more in those areas? Why not develop those areas more so that we can supply more of our domestic market? When we become better, we can export our technological know-how and products.

I keep watching the clock, Mr. Speaker. I know the time is going on. In concluding, I want to mention five areas where this country can specialize, not only in terms of the domestic market but also of the international market, in areas that are naturals for Canada. I do that because of the rapid changes in the world and the need to modernize our industry to be competitive in world terms. We must do this if we are to continue to provide jobs for Canadians and increase the national pie so that we can equalize income, wealth and power in Canada among people and among regions. I will name these five.

First, we must build on our resource base. We have a lot of resources. In the past we have tended to export them as raw materials. Last year we had a $21 billion deficit in manufactured goods. We must, as much as possible, process, manufacture, refine, upgrade and fabricate our natural resources, prior to export.

We have many resources and projects. I think of oil, gas and hydro. Therefore, we use a lot of machinery and equipment. More and more of that machinery and equipment is being imported. Since we use so much of it, it is important that we have an economic strategy to encourage Canadians to produce more of that machinery. Canadians would be put to work producing that machinery for an industry in Canada that will use the machinery.

If we become competitive and produce a quality product, we can export that machinery. I think of Hydro-Quebec and the big hydro projects. We have much expertise there and a potential to produce our own machinery and equipment for the resource sector.

The next thing outside of resources is food and agriculture. I see the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the minister of agriculture in the Diefenbaker government. He will agree that there must be a greater emphasis on food and agriculture in this country. We are a great food producer and have a small population. We must look at this sector in terms of increasing our exports. The People's Republic of China and other areas could use more Canadian products. In the longer term, they could use more of Canada's knowledge and know-how. This would make other countries self-sufficient in the production of food.

I believe that almost every country can be self-sufficient in the production of food with the proper technology, irrigational and farming skills. I have been to Israel, a small country carved out of the desert. It has become a Garden of Eden in terms of production of food. They export a lot of their products, such as oranges. They do all this despite the fact that they have been faced with many wars over the past 30 years. If it can be done there, it can be done in other countries. We should play our role in terms of exporting the knowledge and technology that we have developed.

We should process more of our foodstuffs as close to the source as possible. This would provide jobs close to the source of production rather than centralizing them in certain parts of the country. We should produce more farm machinery in Canada. That industry has been going downhill. It is now in serious trouble. We have many farm machinery industries that are small but are developing. I can think of three in my own riding of Yorkton-Melville, that is, the Morris Rod-Weeder Company, which has been developed from scratch and is doing very well. I think of Leon's Manufacturing in Yorkton. I think of Ram Industries in Yorkton. These are industries in a small city of 15,000 or 16,000 which have been able to flourish and develop. I think we must aid and assist that kind of development across the country. We must also assist as much as possible Co-operative Implements Ltd.

• (1750)

I had a chance a few weeks ago to go to Co-op Implements annual meeting in the town of Preeceville, one of the regions in my riding which gave me an opportunity to understand their concern about the grim and bleak future for farm machinery.

We are an agricultural nation and we should be putting more emphasis on assisting machinery production and everything else that goes into the food and agricultural production for our own markets and for markets overseas and around the world.

Third, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of transportation. We are a big country that stretches for miles. Yet we see smaller countries in size, like the Japanese and the French, who are well able to develop a transportation system. My friend, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) is an ex-railroader and knows more about this than I do. They, the Japanese and French, have a transportation system where the trains travel at 200 kilometres an hour, they are very rapid trains. If those trains were put on our road beds, however, they could not go very far because we do not have the proper road beds. We have a trans-continental train that crawls across the country at a snail's pace in comparison with those high speed trains in other countries. Our trains seem to travel across Canada at only 19 or 20 miles an hour.

We want to keep this country together and develop our expertise. That will give us much knowledge and enable us to increase our exports later on. We should be putting more money and more emphasis on transportation, on rolling stock and on road beds. These things would help not only the prairie farmer but all people right across the country.

This morning I came back from Halifax, where I heard about the problems in SYSCO, a plant where they produce only one commodity, that is, steel for the CNR. If we were to improve our rail beds and our transportation system we could at the same time be putting people to work in Cape Breton Island in producing that steel. We could also be putting people to work in Trenton, Nova Scotia, producing rolling stock to haul our potash and our grain and other products. That would help depressed areas like Cape Breton and give some of those people some hope, and some good feeling about this country.

I have dealt with resources, with food and agriculture, and with transportation, and now I would like to deal with two subjects. One of them is communication. The minister mentioned that we have developed a lot of expertise in communications. I remember being with him in Brazil a few months ago. We were there with Spar, a company that was bidding on a communications payload for a couple of satellites down there in competition with the French. We have not only that company but many other companies, including some federal government Crown corporations and provincial government Crown corporations, such as Saskel in Saskatchewan. They have developed tremendous expertise in communications. We should build on that. Once again, we are a vast country and we have to develop communications. If we can do it for our market we can become leaders in the world and supply other markets in other continents far, far away.

I would give you one or two examples again . The Saskatchewan Telephone Company decided some time ago that they were going into fibre optics. These are laser beams communications through a little thin glass tube. It is a far more efficient and effective form of communications than the satellite. To get sound from a ground station to a satellite and back again takes about half a second. When you go through the fibre optics, it travels at the speed of light which is almost instantaneous. They decided they were going to develop this sector, and because of that they started shopping around for someone to produce fibre optics. They were able to say to a company like Northern Telecom: "You can get all the contracts for fibre optics in our province, if you come out to Saskatoon and establish a plant." That is what is being done. We have used that kind of leverage to get fibre optics into our province. They have already installed the first fibre optics, which happens to be in my constituency in a rural area, and it is working well. The hope of Saskatchewan Telephones is that after Saskatchewan has been supplied with fibre optics, the plant will become big enough and will be a world leader, because we are now in the forefront of the entire world in this area and we can become a major exporter of fibre optics to other countries around the world. Other countries have not thought of the idea yet, or are just in the embryonic stage of trying to develop fibre optics.

There is also the SED Industries in Saskatoon, a company that is owned half by the university, 25 per cent by the workers at SED, numbering about 300 employees, and 25 per cent by the provincial government. It is high technical industry and it is diversified and develops a lot of products. It produced part of the Canadarm, the space arm for the space shuttle Columbia a few weeks ago. We were able to do that in a small province, in the city of Saskatoon, with a bit of courage and vision and imagination. So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that with national visage and a national dream, we can do things that are as great and much greater from coast to coast.

The last dimension I should like to mention, Mr. Speaker, is the whole area of high technology. I have referred already to the fact that we are moving into the computer generation, not just into the PacMans and the video games, but into the micro and the silicone chips. It is an area that is revolutionizing very rapidly, where the robots are doing more and more of the calls and where the computers are doing more and more of the work. Everything is going through that massive scientific revolution.

My suggestion is that we will have to put a lot more emphasis on making sure that we are in that race and that we use that technology for ourselves and for a better human life. That technology is going to come. If we do not develop it ourselves explicitly, it will arrive here implicitly through imports, with people demanding cheaper and cheaper imports because they are done through technological change. It is important that we become a leader, it is important that we invest in that kind of future.

I think of a lot of the possibilities that are missed. A friend of mine said, for example, "Why does a province like Ontario, that uses thousands and thousands of word processors, not use some imagination and buy into a computer firm, along with the co-operatives or the unions or anyone else, and establish that firm in an area that has high unemployment and then channel the orders for word processors from departments and industries and the educational systems and the hospitals, to that firm and into that area, to create jobs and economic stimulation in the province of Ontario?" Ontario should do something like that, as Saskatchewan has done in the area of fibre optics and will be doing in fibre optics in the city of Saskatoon.

It is this kind of vision, this kind of future orientation, that we are going to need in terms of a national economic development policy, to keep Canada in the forefront of the twenty-first century.

In conclusion, I emphasize that there are these five areas: resources, food, transportation, communications and technology. I do not think you can deal with anything in isolation in this world. There must be an over-all vision of where we want to go. I suggest that the Export Development Corporation may not be the leader, it may not be able to play a major leadership role, but certainly it can play a player in developing that kind of policy for Canada in the years that lie ahead.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that it is six o'clock. I do not want to indulge the House any longer, except to say to the minister that we will be taking a very serious look in detail at the amendments that are before us, and asking him some questions between now and the final passage of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do not leave the Chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in my business career I have had the opportunity to deal with the Export Development Corporation, and that is what prompts me to speak tonight. At First Canadian Place in downtown Toronto a floor of space is devoted to this corporation. It has the finest boardroom I have seen. The boardroom table is three yards across, and the chairs are so comfortable one could fall asleep. Mr. Speaker, you would be very comfortable in one of those boardroom chairs.

The overhead of the Export Development Corporation is something else again, and it is about that I want to speak tonight.

The Export Development Corporation basically has two functions. The first is its insurance company function. The corporation is designed to insure Canadians who are exporting against the political and economic risks of selling their goods where they may have a difficult time collecting payment for those goods in a lawsuit.

People who export from Canada require some sort of insurance policy which enable them to insure their receivables. The insurance aspect is the first responsibility of the Canadian Export Development Corporation, and I suggest that is the most important responsibility of the corporation.

I am disappointed the minister is not here tonight. I see him coming in now. I am glad he is because I want to repeat that the most important thing the Export Development Corporation does is to provide insurance so that when an exporter sells his goods on commercial terms in a foreign country, he can have credit cleared for the foreign recipient of the goods, and he can be insured against political risks, economic risks, current currency exchange risks and all the risks implicit in selling goods in places where it might not be easy to collect because of political and legal systems. That is the first job of this corporation.

Last year the Export Development Corporation sold insurance for which it received a gross premium of $14.2 million. As any insurance company does, the EDC invested those premiums and earned investment income of $2.6 million for a total receipt of $16.8 million. It placed reserves against its total collection of $13.6 million, for a profit or a gross margin on its insurance operation of a little over $3 million. Out of its reserves the corporation paid $8.2 million in claims, which was probably the highest payout in history. I think the minister will confirm that. In any event, based on the premiums the corporation charged exporters and based on the income the corporation received from the interest, its gross margin was over $3 million, even allowing $13.6 million as a reserve against claims, and I point out to the House that the corporation paid only $8.2 million out of its reserves. That particular business of the corporation is essential to exports. The exporter has to be able to take his receivable and pledge it to his bank for working capital. Unless the receivable is guaranteed by some sort of insurance policy, the commercial banks in this country do not treat it as worth anything. If a company is involved in exporting, its major problem is being able to borrow against its receivables, so export insurance is probably the most valid thing that this corporation could offer.

• (2010)

For a moment I want to explore with the House the way this insurance corporation handles its concerns because I have been involved in this. I opened a new market in Australia for a company. The Export Development Corporation asked for the status of the people I proposed to sell to. I sent the Export Development Corporation a list of the companies and asked if, in their opinion, they were good credit risks. The corporation replied that it was not their concern to determine that as they were only an insurance company, and it was up to me to determine that.

I was absolutely shocked, Mr. Speaker. The corporation took the position that the Canadian manufacturer should supply it with Dun & Bradstreet reports and with other evidence of the quality of the proposed customers. I did that. I went to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Sydney and gave it a list of the proposed customers and asked that they be checked. The department did so. It said, this one is pretty good, that one is not very good and so on. Of course I sold to the good ones.

Then I sent the Dun & Bradstreet reports in to the Export Development Corporation. It said, "You sold the goods to those people but you have not got credit approval. We don't like this one or that one, or that Dun & Bradstreet report is not good enough and this one has not got enough capital invested. We will not insure your sales and we want one per cent across the board for our fee, whether we insure them or not."

That particular corporation, which had signed up with the EDC, wound up going private, wound up having to go to Australia and discount Canadian receivables of the merchant bankers through Singapore because the Export Development Corporation, sponsored by the minister, refused to do anything, it was so bureaucratic.

This is the attitude expressed in Toronto in the beautiful boardroom with its nine foot long, three yards wide table and great big comfortable chairs, with its beautiful paintings on the wall—the kind that come from the National Art Gallery. They cannot be sold anywhere else so they are hung in First Canadian Place and people are hung out to dry in First Canadian Place too!

It is about time a bill came before the House that would allow the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to review the Export Development Corporation, its bureaucracy, its incompetence and its inability to deal with people and make trade move for this country. The corporation is overloaded with people—people who have never met a payroll and who do not know what it is like to go out in the marketplace to try to sell a product. People are told that the Export Development Corporation cannot insure the customer because it has not given approval. The attitude is: cancel the sale or do not make the sale. The Canadian manufacturer has an order, but he must just take his chance. He must take the total political and commercial risk on his own behalf—if his bank will let him—or cancel the order. That is the kind of thing that happens with this corporation day after day after day, Mr. Speaker.

The financial statement of the corporation for this year shows that the gross amount it covered by insurance declined from 1980 to 1981 despite 12 per cent inflation.

I am happy that this bill is before the House, Mr. Speaker, because I want to hear the officers of the corporation and the minister explain why it cannot act sensibly and aggressively; why it cannot make things go for this country.

In its own statement the corporation declares that it has 1,429 people or different companies who have signed contracts for export insurance. The figures produced by the minister in his annual statement show that only some 830 people bothered taking export insurance this year. That is all. Why is that, Mr. Speaker, when export insurance is the most important type of insurance for people who are selling goods abroad? By and large, those goods are financed in the country of purchase and they are sold in the country of purchase. They are manufactured Canadian products sold for consumption in one form or another. Payment is three months or six months, that is all. Large loans are not required, but the Canadian producer needs insurance to make sure the receivable is worth something so that he can pledge it to his bank. He needs a guarantee against the foreign receivable. Without the guarantee he cannot borrow against it, and without borrowing he will not have the cash flow he needs to build the product in the first place. That is what this bill is all about and that is what this corporation is all about.

Saddled with a large bureaucracy and its failure to understand the nuts and bolts of exporting for small business, the corporation has failed badly.

Sir, I want to relate some figures to you. Talk about the Export Development Corporation being an insurance company! Royal Insurance Company took in $470 million in premiums last year. The smallest of the big ten insurance companies, the Fireman's Fund, took in $128 million. It took $14.2 million in premiums; that is where it stands. This is supposed to be a big exporting country, a world trader, and this world trader's insurance company did $14.2 million in premiums and that is all. It does not even rank with an insurance company doing ordinary household policies. Where is the go, the drive, the enthusiasm to sell? We are talking about a Crown corporation with $535 million in capital, $350 million subscribed and $185 million in earned surplus over many years. That is what we are talking about, a company which should be able to do a hell of a lot better—I put that bluntly—than it is doing.

It is only relatively recently, Mr. Speaker, that the company got into the loan business on the international market. That is the reason for the huge increase in authorized capital set out in this bill. It is going to be a big lender. Well, we can see some of the loans it is making and some of the countries it is lending to. Some really secure countries, the Algerias, the Polands. We are supposed to give a government stamp of guarantee on these countries. We should be pretty careful about using the credit of Canada to finance Algeria and Poland. But this minister does not seem to worry about it. No limits are placed on specific countries, the corporation can lend to anyone it wants to, at any time it wants to, up to $20 billion.

This corporation made a total of 115 new loans last year, and has a total of 543 loans outstanding. Strangely enough, the corporation also has 543 employees. Can you imagine, one employee per loan. Of the 115 new loans last year, 13 were to the de Havilland Aircraft. I suppose they needed one employee per de Havilland loan. The minister did not explain that when he explained the bill, but at least he will do so before it gets through the committee stage. Perhaps the president of the EDC will be happy to explain how he can justify 543 employees per 543 loans.

Mr. Mazankowski: Small business.

Mr. Blenkarn: My colleague says it is a small business corporation. If you look at the loans, most of them are in packages. You come to Israel and you find there are five loans for computer equipment, all to one company, Control Data Limited. That company is in my riding. Great stuff for Mississauga, but there are five loans. Does it need five employees for five loans to one company? I am happy the EDC and the minister will have to come before the committee to explain why this company has so many employees. How many insurance companies doing $14.2 million in premiums would have 543 employees? How many companies with 543 loans would have 543 employees and offices in Vancouver, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Halifax? They have nine foot wide boardroom tables, big comfy chairs, lots of paintings, and an inch and a half thick broadloom.

Mr. Irwin: Use metric.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, we must promote the export of Canadian manufactured products and we must have insurance for those products in order to satisfy banking requirements. We must be prepared to lend the capital required to finance those exports from time to time. But we must do it sensibly and on the basis of value for money paid. The minister talks about the need to export and how essential it is for Canada to be a world trader. However, he must show us that it is being run effectively, efficiently and profitably. It should be run profitably, not in the sense of money at the bottom line necessarily, but profitably for the country. When you wind up with a company which has 543 loans outstanding and 543 employees, one begins to wonder where the efficiency is. Where is the concept of making the country grow and prosper? That is what it is all about. It is not a question of attacking the corporation or the idea, or the reason it might need more capital; it is a question of being concerned with whether we are getting value for money or whether we are being ripped off, as I see it, by ineffective and incompetent management and government which, considering the talent, facilities and money it has behind it, is not doing the kind of things which need to be done in Canada. It is a question of whether we are getting productivity or production for what we are paying; are we getting our money's worth? I say there is grave doubt as to whether this corporation is giving us its money's worth.

• (2030)

I want to point out a couple of things to you about the balance sheet of the company. This year the administration costs for this corporation amounted to $21.410 million. Last year these costs amounted to $15.995 million. The administration costs alone went up 25 per cent in one year. This minister was in charge for that year. Can the minister explain to the House why the administration charges of that corporation went up 25 per cent in one year? Can he explain that? The minister might want to say that the problem with the change in profit was interest rates. I want to point out to the minister, from his own statements and nowhere else, that last year, after paying interest on the loan portfolio, he had $39 million left. This year he had $20 million. He lost $19 million in the loan portfolio. When you get down to the bottom line, the profit this year was $2.2 million; last year it was $32 million and the year before it was $42 million. It makes one begin to wonder what has happened. This minister has been in charge of this corporation since 1980. He took over a corporation that showed a bottom line of $42 million. He ran it down to $32 million in one year, and the next year he ran it down to $2.2 million. At that rate he will run it into bankruptcy. Where is this minister's alleged business experience? Where is the bottom line? It is not in the interest differential. I say to you, sir, that it is in the administration costs. The overhead went up $5 million. That is the reason. Did the service to Canadians go up? It did not do so in the insurance portfolio. The gross amount covered by insurance went down. Did it go up in the lending area? Yes, it went up $500 million. That is all it went up, and that is gross assets, about 15 per cent.

One must look at this corporation and its profitability. One must look at whether this corporation is doing the work we have employed it to do. Has this minister, in managing this corporation, done what we have employed him to do? On second reading of this bill, I see there is serious concern whether this corporation is doing what it was engaged to do effectively and profitably. When we take a look at the total number of employees in the corporation, the increase in overhead, the massive decrease in profitability and the massive amount of taxpayers' money in this corporation, we can see that this corporation is not carrying its weight. That is what it is all about. That is why it is important that when this bill goes to committee the minister must be ready to explain in detail his management and his tenure in the office of Minister of State for International Trade. When we were in government, the corporation made a profit of $42 million. During the minister's tenure, he saw when we were in government this profit reduced to $2.2 million. The insurance operation has declined in value. The minister has made loans to the Algerians, the Poles, the Israelis and the Argentinians. What has he really done? He has financed 13 sales for deHavilland Canada Limited. That is a Crown corporation and it, too, is in the hole.

Let us get down to brass tacks. Are we selling Canadian goods? Are we financing Canadian trade? Are we making Canadian trade go? Are we messing around?

This minister knows that the greatest opportunity in trade for Canada is with South Africa and Taiwan. Yet he refuses to open offices in those countries. He refuses to promote trade because he somehow believes it is not politically advantageous for the government to do that. I might agree with his political affiliations if he were Secretary of State for External Affairs

(Mr. MacGuigan), but he is Minister of State for International Trade. I want to say to the minister that trade knows no boundaries. He had better get into the business of trading and selling for Canada instead of worrying about what the Secretary of State for External Affairs is going to say to the United Church of Canada. I say to the minister, "Let us get on with it." People are buying goods and we ought to be out there selling and winning deals. He has the agency. He has an insurance corporation and he has a finance corporation, and this bill gives him even more power to do that. But he has to get out and do the work. He has to make sure that it is done properly for Canadians. If he cannot do that, then he had better go back to Cornwall, or wherever. We have to make sure that we have somebody in Canada running things that will get trade going again, who will get things moving, who will explore new markets, who will say that Canadian producers and manufacturers are entitled to have sales where sales can be made.

If you want to influence people, you have to influence them by dealing with them. You do not influence people by refusing to deal. You do not influence people by being stupid in your transactions or by saying, "I am a boy scout and I will be fair in my dealings." You influence people by hardnosed dealing.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a very strong feeling in this country that we have given away our potential. When my friend, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), talks about the unemployment in the automobile industry because of Japanese imports and when people talk about the lack of pork exports to Japan where they pay three times what they pay in Canada for pork, one wonders where the minister has been when it comes to trade. Has he been having a holiday? Has he been having a grand tour around the world? The minister has a lot to answer for regarding the validity of trade in Canada, as well as regarding what he is doing with what he has in the way of an armory to advance, protect, develop and finance new trade for Canadians. With what the minister has in his arsenal, he should be doing a great deal better than he has been doing.

• (2040)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate as one who has had some experience with the current problems faced by the minister. We are looking at a very important area in the economic development of the country. Also it is a very important area when we look at the basic problems in the country today of high unemployment and slow economic growth.

The bill seems to make a number of technical changes as well as some very fundamental financial ones such as the amount of taxpayers' money which the corporation will invest on our behalf.

When I look at the Export Development Corporation, I realize that it is a very positive and important organization. As the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) just said, it is important in the development of exports, both through insurance transactions and capital financing transactions.

Initially in my remarks I want to be quite specific, and then I want to move on to matters of broader concern regarding our over-all trade and economic development policy. In looking at the requests of the minister through these amendments, I must come to the conclusion that he is being irresponsible in the extent of his requests. He is quite aware of what he is doing here. In Clause 5 of the bill he is requesting an increase in the authorized capital from $1 billion to $2 billion or twice the amount of capital which the company has today. What is more important, the company is only using today about one third of its authorized capital or $350 million. He is asking for a blank cheque to go out and do all the things he would like to do without any control by or any further reference to Parliament as to how the funds will be spent. The $350 million supports borrowing of $3.5 billion, and the $2 billion worth of authorized capital supports $20 billion worth of borrowing, which is a full six times the current liabilities of the corporation.

The minister also knows that there is another limitation in the bill which calls for all liabilities of the corporation, for insurance, for capital financing and for other contingent liabilities to be a total of $10 billion. Again the minister is requesting a very substantial increase in the authority. He wants a free hand. I gather this was the minister's first speech as minister in this Parliament, but I do not think he has told the House sufficiently clearly what he wants to use the money for or what are his plans for developing exports for the Canadian marketplace.

We have seen ample evidence in the last couple of years—and more recently some very important mistakes have come to light—of mistakes by the government which have caused Canadian taxpayers a tremendous amount of grief. For example, there are the losses of the Consolidated Computer, a debacle which has seen $125 million written off because of mistakes and lack of control of the government in the operations of a company one step removed from the control of Parliament.

Also the hon. member for Mississauga South referred to the guarantees of a number of Crown corporations. We have seen the government requesting carte blanche authority for a number of Crown corporations. Currently we have before us its request to increase the authorized capital of Petro-Canada from $500 million to $5.5 billion, or ten times its current capital. Again insufficient information has been given to Parliament to allow it to judge whether it is an appropriate decision to make. There are billions of dollars outside the scrutiny of Parliament at the present time. Again referring to the Consolidated Computer mess, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) never asked during his entire period of time in office who caused the problems or which officials reporting to him were responsible for the mistakes or the lack of control that resulted in a $125 million loss. We tried to find out who it was, but the minister said, "No, I will not tell you". Then we said, "Did you ask? Do you know yourself who caused the problems or who was responsible?" No, he did not ask, that was the answer we obtained.

For that reason we must have a better understanding of the use of these moneys. We cannot forget that it is the money of taxpayers which is at risk here, not just money borrowed out of the air and spent on behalf of taxpayers by the minister and his officials. There will be no further recourse to Parliament. There is no further way to draw information out of the minister or to have some degree of control over the operations of the organization, because any increases will now be done by order in council—the same old way, by order in council. How many times have we heard that there is a rubber stamp from cabinet for the minister to go ahead and spend money?

I have referred to this because that $2 billion will now allow for a substantial increase in borrowings by the corporation to finance its operations. We also know that the corporation is an agent of Her Majesty, therefore the obligations of the Export Development Corporation are the obligations of the government and, therefore, direct obligations of the taxpayers. When we see this vast amount of money being authorized and also understand that there will be considerable financing received from the general public and from foreign investors, we realize that they are all direct obligations of Canadian taxpayers and that as parliamentarians we must take very seriously the authorization of this increase in capitalization.

Let me turn to another area of the operations of the Export Development Corporation which I raised with the minister in committee about two or three weeks ago. I am referring to the mandate of the EDC. What is its mandate? Is its mandate to make a profit? Is it to break even, or has some other fuzzier mandate been given to the corporation? With this vast increase in capitalization there are possibilities for a very substantial hidden subsidy, because as the corporation draws down capital funds from the government, if it does not make money and breaks even, people will say that it is good. If the corporation does not lose money or show a loss—and they know that with international competition it is tough to make a profit—people will say that EDC has done well. But we must not forget that the $1,650 million which will be drawn down in capital funds by the corporation must support an interest rate because the money is being borrowed from the markets by the Government of Canada. Thus, there is an indirect subsidy here.

I think the minister said in committee that he proposed to use an increasing proportion of equity capital funds to support the loan capital as a means of subsidizing indirectly or in a hidden way the exports of Canadians. As hon. members have heard me say on a number of prior occasions, I am in favour of increasing trade and I am in favour of the government doing whatever is reasonable to increase the exports of this country. I believe in trade. It is very important to our wellbeing, both economic and social. But, at the same time, it is essential that any subsidy provided to our exporters in this country is known to taxpayers and to parliamentarians. I do not think we will have nearly the same control if we follow the way proposed by the minister, because it will not be apparent, it will be a hidden subsidy. I can hear the minister now; he will come into this House and say, "We broke even despite the competition from the Japanese, the French, the English and the Germans, and that is good." He will not say for one minute that the vast amount of capital he has drawn down from the Consolidated Revenue Fund has not earned a penny. That $2 billion, earning no money, is equivalent to a $200 million a year subsidy at 10 per cent, and a $300 million subsidy at 15 per cent. The point I am making is that we do not have the proper control here.

Let me refer briefly to another element of the annual report which came out after the minister presented himself to the committee a few weeks ago. It concerns the whole question of rescheduled loans, loans which have effectively gone bad but which the government has taken steps to extend, through the Export Development Corporation, so that they do not show up as bad loans in the books. This year there has been an increase of $30 million in these loans, and there is a substantial increase in the provision for bad debts amounting to another $15 million. I think this acknowledges our difficulty in the international trading markets today. It is also a warning sign that because these problems are growing there is a greater degree of risk to the Export Development Corporation. Viewed from that standpoint, it is all the more reason we should not be asked to give carte blanche, a blank cheque, to the minister to go ahead and operate and, through him, to the Export Development Corporation to operate without parliamentary control, without the duty of having to come back to justify a further increase of capital. I must say to Your Honour that in the context of the problems with the Consolidated Computer Corporation, I am not convinced that we should allow ministers opposite the use of the taxpayers' funds in that way. When we were in office, we initiated some studies on the extension of the Export Development operations into the private sector, sharing the operations of EDC with the banking community and others in the private sector who also had expertise in international trading markets. I must say that I am disappointed that we have not seen any extension or any further work done on this privatization, if I can use that word in a broader sense than is normally given it. I believe there has been a considerable increase in the expertise of the private sector since EDC was formed and, prior to that, since the Export Credit Insurance Corporation was formed. These two organization were formed because there was a gap, a void, in the capabilities and in the interests of people in the financial sector to become involved in international trade. But now, in the past few years, there has been a considerable increase in expertise, and most of the loan packages put together by the EDC are put together in consultation and in co-operation with the private sector, so there is a private sector package and participation by the EDC.

I believe there are other ways, more than have been followed to date, of drawing in the expertise and financial resources of the private sector to increase our capacities as a trading nation. It is important that this government initiate a study to this effect, and I call on the minister to do this, to carry forward the work we had started, to discuss the situation with some of the banks and other institutions which have an interest here and to consider ways in which they can become involved. I do not believe the small business community is as well served as it could be by the Export Development Corporation.

My colleague, the hon. member for Mississauga South has referred to the size of the EDC staff and the number of loans it has handled over the past year. However, when one looks at the size of these loans, one finds that it points out the nature of the involvement of EDC in that it is more concerned with huge projects. A number of huge projects are on the drawing boards and are being actively pursued by Canadian exporters in co-operation with the EDC and the banking community. However, more than likely, the EDC does not have the time, the staff, nor the interest to ensure that the small business community is as actively served as are the major corporations. It is probably human nature that if one has a $100 million here and a $10 million or a $1 million deal over here, one will spend more time with the $100 million deal.

It is for that reason that the government should try to co-opt the resources, the expertise and the day to day business contacts of the banking community to try to service that small business sector more efficiently and more effectively than has been the case to date. So I call on the minister to try to involve the private sector in the decision-making of the corporation to a greater extent and also to take that one step further so that a task force or some form of consultative body might be created with a specific mandate to increase the degree of activity that the private sector can take over from the operations of the Export Development Corporation.

I would like to address the balance of my remarks to a very important area of trade policy, that is, I would like to look behind trade policy to see what we are doing in our economic and industrial development policies. The minister is probably quite aware of the fact that if the proper economic development policies are not in place, he will be spinning his wheels more and more as time goes on. If we are not competitive as a nation, if our inflation rate continues at today's rate of 4 per cent, 5 per cent or 6 per cent, whatever is the proper ratio compared to that of the United States or of our other major competitors, and if our product development is not up to the current standard of technology, he will be spinning his wheels. He will be fighting an ongoing battle, which he is bound to lose.

Looking back over the past ten years, we can see that we have been losing that battle because we have seen our manufacturing trade deficit increase from about $3 billion ten years ago to a current level of about $21 billion or $22 billion. I am sure the minister will say that we still have a positive balance of trade. Last year I believe our trade balance was $5.8 billion. He is very proud of that. The important fact he has to recognize is that during that same year, the manufacturing trade deficit increased from $17 billion to $22 billion. We lost $5 billion in our balance of trade. This essentially means we exported probably 50,000 to 60,000 jobs to other markets in the United States, the Far East, Germany and so on.

Let us dwell for a minute on the importance of our economic development policies. Let me take one by one those policies that we in the Conservative Party feel are essential and must be the yardsticks which the government should build around in order to make the minister's job easier than it is today.

The first is training. If we do not develop the expertise and capability for our people in this country, it makes it very difficult to take advantage of the new technologies that will be coming forward over the next few years. We are not just looking at training of people who are already on the job, but also at training in the high schools, community colleges and universities. We must get the programs together to allow us to have the skilled people available to take advantage of the opportunities that will be ours in the future. That is why we have opposed so strenuously the cuts in post-secondary education funding. It is cutting our future at a time when we need it most.

We also have to look at a much greater degree of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. I was very disappointed when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced his new policy. Right on the heels of that announcement, not one, not two, but ten provincial ministers spoke out strongly against the initiatives the federal government was taking. Surely something was wrong that there could not have been that degree of co-operation to allow for policies announced at the federal level to be warmly received by the provincial and municipal governments. If we cannot have that co-operation, we will continue to knock our heads against each other and not move ahead in co-operation to fight the problems of not just our Canadian domestic market, but the world market.

The next important point in any economic development strategy has to be research and development. My colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist), has spoken time and again and has been very specific in recent speeches in the House about moves we can make in this country to improve our capacity to develop our own products for our own markets rather than always buy from outside. We have lost the technological development. We do not get the advantage in terms of the expertise that we gain from developing things on our own. We lose a tremendous amount of profit which can be reinvested into development for further technology.

We have seen this country stumbling along in seventh place of all the industrialized summit nations in research and development over the past seven or eight years. Those figures are right out of the government's document "Economic Development for the Medium Term". From time to time we hear how sad it is to watch the way the Italians and the English struggle along with all their economic problems. Let us look at some figures drawn from that document. Our productivity improvement—

Mr. Mazankowski: What productivity?

Mr. Wilson: That is the point I am going to make. Our productivity improvement has been one seventh the productivity improvement of the United Kingdom and one eleventh of that of the Italians. The government says that we have a commitment, that 1 and one half per cent of our GNP will be invested in research and development. The government has been saying that for four years, yet we continue to stumble behind further and further. We are not reaching that goal because policies have not been put together to allow us to do so.

Time and again this government comes out with the right objectives, but it does not know how to get there. It does not understand the problems. The government does not know how to go about finding the ways to achieve those objectives. That is why I urge government members to listen to the speeches of my colleague from Scarborough East who has done considerable work in developing policies here.

I would like to say that we can wait until the next election when we can put in those policies ourselves as a government, but we do not have time. People are losing their jobs. We are losing ground day in and day out in the technology race. In the meantime I urge the government to listen to my colleague from Scarborough.

Let us look at some of the broader problems such as inflation. If we cannot get inflation under control in this country, we are going to lose our competitive position. In the mid-1970s when John Turner was at the helm, government spending ran at 26 per cent, 27 per cent and 28 per cent per annum. We had a runaway monetary policy and no control whatsoever over public sector collective bargaining. John Turner was saying at the time that his was the government of restraint, that that was to be the year they would control government spending. That was the year that government spending increased by 26 per cent.

The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) saw that from the outside. He had to come back to pick up the pieces as chairman of the anti-inflation board. He understands the problem. Unfortunately, he is not having much impact with the man in the next seat to him who is inviting inflation. Therefore, it still continues to be a major problem, and we are not getting any action.

That is the same government that said this will be the policy of restraint. What happened last year? Government spending went up 22 per cent. What happened to our inflation rate? It went from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. It is no surprise that what happened caused inflation to g^{o} up.

As I said a minute ago, the government has all the right objectives, but it does not know how to get there. It does not know how to reach those goals. Let us look at another fairly broad program. That is the world product mandate approach to economic development. This is a policy that will be very important for this country to follow in the years ahead.

In this country we have many companies that are subsidiaries of multinationals. That is a fact of life. It is something that developed from loose policies of the Liberal Party in the fifties and sixties. It has developed contrary to statements made by that party, but we have that problem.

It is a fact that many foreign companies are represented here. What can we do, kick them all out or make the best use of them here? I say we have to make the best use of them here. One way to do that is to make them more independent from their parent companies, giving them such greater control over their product line and over the operations and development of their company so that we can improve the economy of the country over all. By giving them encouragement to develop the world product mandate, control of their product line from the research stage through production and marketing, having total control of that over-all cycle, we can develop our country better.

People talk about Canadianization. We have a much greater chance of getting more and more Canadian ownership of these companies if we allow that cycle to develop. Once those companies achieve a greater degree of stability and independence and less reliance on their parent company, at that point we will see many more of those companies going to market and being realistic investments for Canadian investors.

Let me move now to the whole question of dumping.

Mr. Blais: Did you read the Gillespie guidelines?

• (2110)

Mr. Wilson: I have read them. The minister asks, "Have I read the Gillespie guidelines?" I have also asked his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about these Gillespie guidelines. He says yes, but he also has written that no one is paying any attention to them because the government does not pay attention to them themselves.

Mr. Blais: That is not so at all.

Mr. Wilson: When were the Gillespie guidelines discussed in this House last?

Mr. Blais: Last year.

Mr. Wilson: He says they were. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that the agenda of Parliament is controlled by the government, not by the opposition. Surely he has been around long enough to know that. These guidelines, if they are to be of any use, have to be implemented by the government.

Mr. Blais: They are being implemented.

Mr. Wilson: I have yet to hear of any serious attention being paid to them by the government, to the development of the world products, to the development of a greater degree of independence of the subsidiaries of foreign companies in Canada. The only thrust of that government is "kick 'em, get rid of the foreign subsidiaries, tell them to sell out," "get rid of the foreign investment from this country and take the jobs that go with them, too." That is the attitude of the government, and it does not work. That is why there is one and a quarter million unemployed today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: I think the minister has some experience with this. I would encourage him to flex his muscles a bit, if he has not been getting too flabby over the last little while. Let him flex those muscles a little and possibly show the people who are exporting to this country that we are not going to accept dumping here, that we are not going to accept the fact that they are using our markets as a way of supporting jobs back in Japan, jobs in Germany or jobs in Brazil. He should get tougher there and recognize that when a Japanese company sells something here at 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 30 per cent below the prices at home, there is not much we can do. Where can we buy that here? We are exporting jobs to Japan, we are making their life much easier for them and we are increasing our unemployment here.

I encourage the minister to discuss the whole question of dumping to a much greater extent with the people he is trying to fight with, in Japan, because if he says there will be no selling, no sales of electric generators or turbines or other products that we sell in this country, that would make for a much healthier economic and industrial climate.

Let me move to savings and investment, Mr. Speaker. The attitudes to savings and investments are one of the critical problems. We had a budget brought down last November which had the effect of totally undermining the attitudes of entrepreneurs, the attitudes of people who are investing money, of people who are saving money for their retirement. These were moneys that will be reinvested in the economy to provide the wherewithal for the various things I talked about in the last few minutes. The government must learn that you cannot fool around with how people regard their savings, savings that they have worked for years to develop, businesses that they have worked for years to develop, you cannot tamper with that. We have seen the direct result of that tampering in the past couple of years, with the energy program and the attitude toward foreign investment and the attitude towards broader intervention in the economy, and then the budget on top of that.

Last year we had an outflow of capital, domestic capital as well as foreign capital, from this country, totalling some $19 billion. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. It represents one tar sands and half of the Cold Lake plan. It represents about one and a half times the total amount of money that we spend from coast to coast on housing. If that money had been invested in this country it would have created some 200,000 jobs. That is equivalent to all of the people who are unemployed in Toronto, in Hamilton, in London and in Windsor. That is why it is such a serious problem, and it is a serious problem because the government has ignored the impact of their policies on the investment attitude and the savings attitude of the people. People are scared, they are scared that they are going to lose their savings and lose their business, because of the attitudes and policies followed by this Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) so they are shooting their money out of the country.

People have said, "Let us let the Canadian dollar drop, let the interest rates drop, and then the Canadian dollar will drop." That is okay. It will help the minister sell more exports. But that is a short-term palliative, it is a short-term relief for long-term grief, and it does not work. Once we get the dollar down, what is going to hold it at that level? We will have greater inflation, we will have higher interest rates, we will get the dollar down and have the same high interest rates as we have today. That is the wrong way. It is the wrong way to approach the problem. We have to get the basic economic development policies right.

I say to the minister, do not just throw money at the problem—as he is doing now with the Export Development Corporation, do not throw money at the problem—as he was talking of doing with the national trading corporation that, thank God, has now gone the way of the wild goose. Let us get the economic development policy right, because that is the way he will make his job easier. He has to speak to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

We have a great opportunity to build up this country but the policies that we have been following over the past ten years are a burden, and that burden is apparent in the huge increase in the manufacturing trade deficit.

We have to make some changes. That is the positive approach that I am trying to take in the debate tonight, to encourage the minister to take these ideas to his colleagues, to encourage the economic-development thinking of his party, so that we can attack the basic problems that are causing so many difficulties in the country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think the House has been well served tonight by the remarks of several members of the opposition. I am thinking of the member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) who put forward a policy of approach to the minister. Also, the member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) laid down the priorities of trading in techniques of production. We had the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) bringing together his considerable experience in the actual question of efficiency of the corporation. We have heard from the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) speaking about the credit responsibility of the corporation and also about the relationship to the economic growth of the nation.

The minister himself should be congratulated on bringing this bill in, with clause 1 in it, that I will speak on in a minute. Apart from that, he has paid the House great courtesy by coming in and listening. These speakers have been tough, but they have been constructive. The minister is to be congratulated for paying the courtesy of listening to this House, because the only thing he can do is to listen. This is a Parliament, a talking place, and the talking has been of a very high standard tonight.

My remarks will be on one point in the bill and may include a little philosophy. It gives the minister a great opportunity to expand the services of the Export Development Corporation and do so in a way that does not put any extra great bonds on to the ways and means of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I am talking about the capital structure. This particular corporation is founded on a principle similar to the principle on which the Farm Credit Corporation was founded in 1959. The Farm Credit Corporation has a capital structure and, depending upon how much money is put into that capital, the Farm Credit Corporation can lend up to 25 times as much as that capital. It has one of the characteristics of a bank. The Export Development Corporation has a multiplier of only ten, but it has a bigger capital base. That base is now being raised to $2 billion, and if the multiplier is ten, that is a sizeable sum of money to have to play in the big poker game known as world trade.

What struck me as radical and what struck me as more than important was the amendment contained in Clause 6. I will read it into the record to make certain the record shows there is a consistency here which, for government, is rare indeed. Clause 6 says:

Section 12 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

I have described the previous section in a general way. Under this amendment the new Section 12 would say:

The Corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the Corporation.

If with that one amendment an aggressive, intelligent group of people working under the minister—and according to the hon. member for Mississauga South there are 543 of them—

Mr. Mazankowski: One for every loan.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): —cannot put together a series of deals and ideas as to how to get money into the corporation much cheaper than they can get it by having to borrow from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, they are not worth their salt.

This same sort of amendment appeared in a previous bill of this session, Bill C-88, regarding the Farm Credit Corporation. I will not read it, but it is exactly the same, word for word, as the amendment we have in this bill.

What to me is so exciting about this is that if I were to put myself into a minister's position and try to do an aggressive, constructive job, I would like nothing better if someone gave me the key to the kingdom. Lawyers in the Department of Justice tell us that the words "by any means" mean what they say, and when I proposed an amendment to this section in the Farm Credit Corporation Act, it was turned down as being unnecessary. I wanted greater certainty, and I named some of the other techniques on the ground that the lawyers say that that clause "by any means" means exactly what it says.

What are those other means by which money can be put into the capital account—and therefore into the lending account—of this corporation? One technique which was put forward a year ago in the House by the Conservatives was that we could use the principle of the Small Business Development Bond. That does not mean that we have to call it the Small Business Development Bond. In plain English it means we could use the principle of the Small Business Development Bond, which is well established as a precedent in our financial history as well as in the financial histories of the United States and other countries. The principle is very simple. If an individual in Canada lends money for any worthwhile national or social purpose, that person does not have to pay tax on his income from that loan. At the time of the First World War we used it for bonds, but the Crosbie budget of 1979 laid it down as a principle to get money into the hands of small business, which included incorporated farms. That principle was a good principle because when the banks began to realize its potential, they began to lend money to small businesses and farmers across Canada at a little above half the normal interest rate. That principle is workable.

The administration or handling of this money could be put into an organization which is free from the difficulties of working with a civil service operation, and I suggest the minister should be asking the people of this corporation to be laying plans down now, long before the bill goes through committee. They should be making plans now to put before the Treasury Board, the Department of Finance and, eventually, the cabinet which will be acceptable to the Department of Finance.

The only argument I have heard against this approach by the Farm Credit Corporation, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and this export agency is that it may take an amendment to the Income Tax Act. This should be faced up to right away because if the Income Tax Act can be amended for the Small Business Development Bond, it should not be very difficult to get a similar amendment through for these other agencies. I suggest to the minister very seriously that he work in co-operation with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who has the same clause in his legislation, and see if they cannot put together a proposal which would include this method of raising money cheaply. If they can raise money at half the going interest rate because of the exemption from federal tax, then they have a base for cheap money on which they can begin to build and expand by giving cheaper loans to borrowers. As the minister knows, this is very important in the great fight for markets. We are competing, really, for credit arrangements. We might have the best product in the world, such as the Candu; we might have the best farm machinery in the world, which we have; and we might have the best quality steel at the lowest price in the world, which we have; but we cannot sell unless we offer credit terms, because that is the base upon which we compete with other nations.

The minister well understands the other difficulty. The euphemistic phrase used for it is "marketing expenses", but I think I have made my point that we in this House in all parties—I am sure the government party—will do everything we can to help the minister improve the performance of the Export Development Corporation, and the first step is getting a supply of capital at the lowest possible price so that we can compete with other nations doing the same thing. With a bigger bank roll we have some chance of success. I suggest that the principle of the Small Business Development Bond is a sound one. If the minister wants, other members of my party will explain other techniques.

The budget got rid of all these incentives to save money that were built up over the last seven or eight years, but they can be restored under this clause by allowing people to lend money to the Farm Credit Corporation. The income-averaging annuity could be used to spread income over a number of years. Retirement plans could be set up under this clause, or anything else you want. The only limitation is the initiative and the imagination of the staff administering it. If they are not already in the department, they should be hired, but this opportunity should not be missed. Any number of these devices could be used.

I put these things forward because as an ordinary Member of Parliament I am very pleased to see evidence of ideas that were presented in this House at the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other ministers, put to use. A year ago we put forward some positive suggestions, and I am pleased to see them included in the budget and in this legislation. This proves that if one is patient and constant, sometimes one can manage to get certain items included in legislation.

In all humility, I say God bless the civil servant who sneaked this item into the bill. It gives the minister a chance to get around the budget which changed incentives into loopholes. It leaves room for cancelling the budget without loss of face.

The minister has an opportunity to let his imagination and initiative have free rein so that when the race is run he can say, "By jove, I got something done in spite of the system!" I should like to see the minister supported in that approach by all members of the House.

That is not the only way to get money, however. The minister must be aware that there is a lot of money around which is looking for investment. I am sure that officials in government are aware of this as well. I am referring particularly to Eurodollars and Petrodollars. The minister probably knows that there are people who are very anxious to get their money into the United States and into Canada. As far as I can establish it, if one were dealing with a Swiss bank today the effective rate would be about 11 per cent, and with Saudi Arabia it is probably about 10 per cent. Of course there is the risk of a change in value of the relative currencies when one borrows from such countries. There were some bad experiences seven years ago when a big change took place over a year and a half. However, these loans can be insured from any variation in the basic principal or in the rate of interest. A premium of 2 per cent is charged for this by most of the Swiss banks which would bring it up to 13 per cent interest, but there would be no risk of a change in the value of the Canadian dollar.

I put that forward as the second alternative for getting cheaper money. Certainly the Export Development Corporation does not want to borrow money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund at 17 per cent. First of all, it is not available and second, who wants to pay 17 per cent when it can be borrowed at 11 per cent plus 2 per cent? The Arab investment corporations would probably charge about 10 per cent plus 2 per cent.

These things should be looked at by the minister. These people are desperate to get their money invested and also, they do not want it back too soon.

The same methods cannot be used in dealings with the developing nations. In those cases a three way trade operation is best. We cannot lend them money because they do not have a credit rating and it would be bad for them and bad for us. But a relationship could be set up through a well qualified international trading agency which knows that in order for these countries to pay us back, they would have to sell some of their goods somewhere else. The EDC is not equipped to do that—in fact none of our agencies are, but some private international trading companies do a good job with three way trade. The financing of such a deal becomes very complicated.

I am not trying to read the minister a lecture here but am simply pointing out some of the difficulties to him. Today, with our growing industrial might and our potential productivity growth, an export technique has to be developed at a very high level. It is important to get good terms on interest rates, the payout period and the marketing expense. These techniques are sometimes handled by an experienced international trading corporation.

Another thing to be negotiated is mutual advantage. The old North American concept in the days of economic imperialism was that there was only one type of deal—to get the best of it. The new type of deal that works with the more sophisticated developing nations is one that offers mutual advantage on both sides. This can always be arrived at if both parties approach it in the right spirit. Of course, every nation is different; in Mexico it is oil versus the CANDU. In Japan, it is whether they really want access to our resources in the future. It is important not to be backed down by Japanese politeness and firmness. As long as one speaks politely to the Japanese one can be tough. In fact, that is how they gain respect. With Europe it is also access to resources. If Europe wants our coal and our iron it will have to split its tariff structures. I am sure the minister knows how effective this idea is in dealing government to governent. In the case of Poland and the Iron Curtain countries the key is food. We have it, but the question is how they will get the money to pay for it. The minister knows the answer—it is three way trade. That is why I always put in my notes, "No more than three years' credit."

I will not speak of the joint enterprise technique and I will not speak of the international trade companies in detail nor will I talk of the relative position of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund and so on.

I want to leave one thought with the House. This bill has given the minister an opportunity to put a credit base under the Export Development Corporation where he has a fighting chance to meet the competition from other industrialized nations engaged in the same business. It is a rough world out there. He has listened to my colleagues who have spoken of efficiency and how these things will be established, but I say that I wish the minister the best of luck in getting action immediately on this. We certainly need action immediately on our export business over the next few decades.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2140)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this bill subject to the reservations expressed by my colleagues, which have been expressed for some very good reasons. This company is a wholly-owned Crown corporation with broad powers including the power to borrow, lend, guarantee loans, enter into export and foreign investment insurance contracts, and issue guarantees in respect of export transactions. Hopefully, some of the points raised by my colleagues will be fully dealt with in committee.

While the Export Development Corporation has been a useful instrument for expanding Canada's world trade, I think we all recognize that our record in international trade is not all that impressive. One can only speculate about what might have been had we not had the EDC. The record shows that Canada's share of world trade has declined over the last ten years from 4.9 per cent to 3 per cent. In absolute terms, and compared with other western industrialized nations, our productivity has declined rather dramatically and continues to do so. One only has to look at the recent budget papers, specifically the document entitled "Current Economic Situation" to see that Canada's productivity percentage change over the last ten years was 0.2 per cent. In the U.S. it was 0.6 per cent; in the U.K., 1.5 per cent; in Germany, 3.1 per cent; in France, 2.7 per cent; in Italy, 2.2 per cent; and in Japan, 3.4 per cent. So out of those seven countries, Canada has the worst record of performance. Our manufacturing sector can be described in general as being inefficient. I think it is fair to say we produce far too many lines, and our economies of scale are such that we find it difficult to compete in the international marketplace. We are weak in research and development, we do not have an effective marketing system, and we seem to lack a degree of persistence and continuity in exploiting and maintaining our markets. In other words, there is a tendency to be in and out of the marketplace; when things get a little tough, we withdraw; when we have a surplus we try to get involved in a marketing situation. So the in and out nature of our marketing strategy hinders us.

Excluding the auto pact trade, Canada's exports of fully manufactured goods represents only one fifth of our total exports, well below the average of one half to three fifths of all major industrial nations. This of course contributes to two of our very pressing problems, that of the balance of payments, and unemployment. In the 32-year period from 1950 to 1981, on only four different occasions did Canada manage to achieve a surplus in its current account. To a large extent it is fair to say that that has been caused by the outflow of dividends and the cost of servicing our debt, but our deficit in manufactured products during the 1970s was some $88 billion, $60 billion of that in the last five years of the decade.

That deficit is worsening, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the 1980s. In 1980-81 the manufacturing trade deficit was close to $40 billion, with no indication the trend is going to reverse. We rely far too much on our resource industries which are capital intensive and light in labour content. I am pleased that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House today because he is grappling with the issue of railway capacity, particularly in western Canada. The demands on that capacity are largely in the natural resource sector, particularly coal, the west bound exports of which will increase from about 15 million tons in 1980 to about 59 million tons in 1990, an increase of about 350 per cent. Fertilizer components will increase by 78 per cent to 28 million tons, and raw forest products will increase by 65 per cent.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the arguments that western Canadian farmers placed before the minister, as they do before other politicians, when they say: we are being asked to share in the cost of increasing railway capacity, but what we are going to be doing is exporting a larger amount of our own real estate to other countries. That coal will probably come back to us in the form of a television set, refrigerator or automobile. On the other hand, the movement of grain will probably increase by maybe 40 per cent over the next ten years. So what we are doing in effect is aggravating the situation.

It is further aggravated by the fact that we are in a worldwide recession. The government continues to base its policy for economic recovery on resource megaprojects as outlined in the economic development strategy which accompanied the recent budget. That budget did nothing to enhance our manufacturing capability. As a matter of fact, it aggravates the situation as well, for example, the reduction in the capital cost allowance in the first year and the impact that has had on the automobile sector. In the leasing industry alone it will mean the loss of some 44,000 units during 1982. There are no incentives in the budget to encourage manufacturers to retool and improve their productivity. This whole question of reliance on resources and the failure to recognize our manufacturing potential is manifest in the fact we do not seem to have the resolve to increase our productivity, research and development, or to encourage retooling. These are all part of Canada's dismal performance record.

It is not very often that we have a bill of this nature to stimulate the kind of debate that I think has taken place here today. But when we really examine our own situation as a nation we find ourselves in a serious export crisis. I must compliment the agricultural sector, particularly the grain and oil seed sector. Once again I am pleased to see that the Minister of Transport is here. I think he has recognized the importance of the grain and oil seed sector, particularly the importance to Canada in terms of its export potential because it does generate huge amounts of spin-off activity. I know the minister addresses that problem most seriously. While we have slipped somewhat over the last ten years, we have not really penetrated our market potential in the way we should have. Perhaps that is due in part to the unreliability of our transportation system. I am happy to note, and I give full credit to the minister, that this year we will probably establish an all-time record of 26 million tonnes, which was the target established.

I have always been one to believe in establishment of targets. I did so when I was minister. I think you have to have something to strive for. I am pleased the minister and his colleague, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, established a very ambitious target of 26 million metric tons, which I think will be achieved. It charges the system to work, to function, to iron out the wrinkles and the deficiencies.

Ten years ago we participated to the extent of 26 per cent of the world's wheat trade. Last year we recorded only about 17 per cent of the world's wheat trade. It means that while in aggregate terms Canada's share is going up, in terms of our penetration of markets Canada's share is going down. Clearly, that is a challenge to all of us. Part of that challenge is to improve our transportation system. We must also sharpen up our marketing abilities. I firmly believe that Canada's producers will produce if they are challenged with that task. The export of grain and oil seeds in Canada will generate some $5 billion to $6 billion in foreign exchange this year. When you look at the tremendous spin-off that is generated throughout the country, I think it fair to say that for every dollar's worth of export trade in grain and oil seed products, we witness a multiplier effect of something in the order of $4 to $5 which generates activity right across the country from Vancouver to the Atlantic sea ports. That is most remarkable. One only has to visit a place such as St. Catharines to recognize that that community is very much attached to and involved with the grain growing centres of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. Notwithstanding the fact that there has been a dramatic increase in the price of imputs and a rather substantial reduction in the price of the net product to the producer, our producers are still competing in the international marketplace.

Take for example this year. When you look at the increase in input costs and couple that with the decline in prices in the international marketplace, you will note a 25 per cent reduction in net income. Yet our producers are competing and penetrating that market. I merely make this point to indicate that given the will, the resources and the desire, we can compete and penetrate those international markets. I think the agriculture sector can be held up as a clear example of maintaining its prominence in ensuring we maintain the markets that have been established over the years. I hope we can improve. I am sure that we can improve because I believe our trade potential in agricultural products is greater than what we have achieved to date.

I am not sure whether Canagrex will make any major impact on our ability to improve. The bill dealing with Canagrex at present is hung up in committee. I think there are some real second thoughts about the ability of Canagrex to achieve what it was intended to do. Whatever happens to Canagrex, given the right climate, given the right kind of transportation facilities and the marketing mechanism, and given the credit arrangements that are required, our agricultural producers can produce. There is no question about that.

One of the problems that affect Canada's ability to penetrate world markets is the arrangements in which we are involved with respect to GATT. Someone has suggested that as far as Canada is concerned we are the boy scouts in the trading world. Whether it is correct or whether it is implied, the fact still remains that we do not fare very well in terms of dealing with our counterparts in terms of how we honour commitments to GATT and how other countries, our competitors, get around some of these things. We recognize that there are protective shields which some countries adopt to protect their own sectors. We know there are tariffs; we know there are non-tariff barriers, we know there is a lot of unequal treatment, and we know dumping goes on.

I have to point out that in the case of the megaprojects, and I refer to them once again, I think it is overlooked by many that out of the $440 billion worth of identified megaprojects, about 50 per cent relate to the electrical sector. When we look at what has happened in that sector we note that 10 per cent of those megaprojects are currently under way. We notice also that 80 per cent of the hardware for those megaprojects has been provided by offshore resources. While we are here talking about the need to penetrate our export market, we should also be talking about and recognizing the fact that we had better capture our own domestic markets. Dumping is crippling our basic manufacturing industry. That is clearly an area of government responsibility that should be addressed. There is no question that some nine hydro generator purchases in the last while have been supplied by offshore sources, essentially by Japan at 50 per cent below the prevailing price. These same markets are closed to foreign manufacturers. In other words, Canada cannot penetrate that market even if it wanted to.

As a matter of fact, when we look at specific prices, we note that in the case of one power transformer there was a differential of 35 per cent. That was the margin of dumping. In another case, the figure was 33 per cent. While we must stress the importance of export markets in penetrating markets and in achieving our potential, we have to make sure that our own market potential is not raped, that we have some protection for our own markets here in Canada.

In the area of agriculture and agricultural products, I am fully aware that the ECC and Japan have closed the door to many agricultural products, and agriculture is heavily subsidized. I could go on. I hope I will have the opportunity later on, either in committee or through further debate in this House, to elaborate on some of the points that have to be made. I understand there is agreement to see that this bill moves on to committee. It is with that spirit of co-operation in the House that I will yield the floor. Speaking on behalf of our party, I believe, that we are prepared to see this bill move on to committee at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT INCREASE IN PENSIONS. (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF PRESENTATION OF LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight because of a totally unacceptable answer which I received from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) on May 12, 1982, to the question concerning increasing the basic rate of pension payment to disabled veterans. The minister's answer indicates to me that perhaps he has not done his homework as well as he might have. I asked the minister how he could justify allowing some 130,000 veterans to fall $900 behind the composite group of the public service in terms of pension payment. Also I asked the minister to introduce amendments to Section 58 of the Pension Act which would provide that pension increases reflect the principle of parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of public servants or the increase in the consumer price index, whichever is greater, and that this principle be entrenched in the Pension Act. Such an amendment would guarantee veterans a fair and constant increase compared with increases in the public service.

The minister replied that he had not enough time to study the proposal which had been presented through my question and by national veterans' organizations of Canada in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The minister failed to realize in this admission that this very same recommendation had been put forward by veterans' organizations, by various governmental committees and by a 1972 study group established by and with representation from his own departmental officials. As far back as 1972, his department was recommending that, and I quote from the study group recommendations:

It would seem readily apparent to the study group that these disabled veterans should be permitted to join in the standard of living available to other Canadians, and should not be restricted to relating future increases in pension to the cost of living today. By their service and sacrifice they have earned the right to enjoy the standards which working Canadians have as a matter of course.

The recommendations of the study group continued:

Pensions should be adjusted annually on a fixed day in accordance with changes in the average wage rates for the public service groups selected and taking into account income tax deductions in effect on that fixed date.

If the minister and his department need more than ten years to study and implement such a simple amendment to the Pension Act, it is no wonder that more complicated problems like pension application processing delays have been with us since the advent of the veterans' benefits system. Ten years is simply too long for any person to have to wait for a simple decision, yet the minister says that he needs more time to review the proposal. Meanwhile, veterans' organizations must come hat in hand to plead on behalf of their members for pension increases on a yearly basis just so veterans can survive.

There have been a number of encouraging improvements made to the management and operation levels of the department, but there is no reason this healthy trend should not continue here tonight by the minister agreeing to the cancellation of this grovelling which veterans must do just to keep up with the cost of living.

I am especially pleased that the minister recently stated in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs that he had no objection to a six-month time limit on pension processing and the appeal process, except for the possibility that the retrieval of medical records would be hard to accomplish. Surely, with the introduction of the computer system on which the department's newspaper has reported so glowingly, the retrieval of medical documentation from one end of the country to the other will be accomplished well within three months, thus leaving three months for appeal procedures.

In response to my questions tonight, I know the minister will reply that it has only been recently that veterans have actually fallen behind. Still, he cannot justify making them come back year after year to beg for increases just to keep up with the cost of living. This is a completely unnecessary complication both for veterans' organizations and for the department. If it is true that such amendments would not cost the department unaffordable sums of money, what sense does it make not to have the system regularized by having annual automatic increases?

The amendment to the Pension Act which has now been recommended by almost every veterans' association in Canada, by the Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, by officials within the Department of Veterans Affairs, and by the Conservative Party can no longer be ignored on the basis that it is under review. I hope the minister will stand up tonight to accede to the many proponents of this proposal and that he will tell us that legislation will be forthcoming before the summer recess. He could be sure of all-party support and quick passage if this were the case. Disabled veterans across Canada will be very interested in the minister's reply tonight.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, in 1973 the basic rate of disability pension was set so that a pensioner without dependants, whose disability or disabilities were assessed at 100 per cent, would receive a pension equivalent to the composite average salary of five selected categories of unskilled public servants, after income tax had been deducted, as if the public servant lived in the province with the lowest tax rate. Of course, we all realize that income tax is not payable on pensions paid by the Canadian Pension Commission.

As of January 1, 1982, the average annual salary of the five categories of public servants was $10,371. This meant that there was a difference of $554.52 per annum between the average annual salary after taxes in favour of the 100 per cent unmarried disability pensioner who receives $10,925.52 per annum following a 12.2 per cent increase, in line with the consumer price index.

Following recent wage adjustments in certain of the civil service categories used in computing the composite average salary, as of April 1, 1982, the salary after tax of the average of the five selected categories of single public servants is $988.91 a month, or $11,867 per annum, while a 100 per cent unmarried disability pensioner receives $910.46 per month, or $10,925.52 per annum, for a difference of $78.45 per month or $941.48 per year in favour of the composite public servant. A married 100 per cent disability pensioner with no dependent children receives $13,656.96 per annum, whereas the married average public servant will receive $12,613.00 per year after tax for a difference of $1,043.96 per annum in favour of the disability pensioner.

It should be noted that approximately 76 per cent of disability pensioners are married, and therefore most pensioners receive substantially more than the composite public servant who, as we all realize, receives nothing extra for being married.

The Royal Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veteran Associations have indicated their concern with the present rate of pension, and I wish to assure hon. members that I have this subject under very active consideration.

THE ECONOMY—LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES. (B) REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, I raised a question with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) because of the change of interest rates in Canada on Thursday. Your Honour will recall that interest rates in Canada rose a quarter of 1 per cent, or 25 basis points, on Thursday. At the same time, interest rates in the United States declined 40 basis points, increasing the separation between Canadian and American interest rates to very close to 3 per cent per annum.

Your Honour will recall that the government has blamed the Americans for our interest rate problems in Canada, but the fact is that the basis of the treasury bills is that interest rates in Canada are very close to 3 per cent above those in the United States. Commercial paper is about 2 per cent above that in the United States, and it is a little better than that on long-term Canada bonds. The effect is that we have a high interest rate policy in this country. We presumably have it to maintain the value of the Canadian dollar. The Prime Minister was concerned that I was trying to advocate a lower dollar, in his opinion. That is not the case. The Prime Minister knew perfectly that we had 35 hours of debate the previous week with respect to the economic problems of this country, initiated because of the failure of the Alsands project. In that debate we made a number of references to what needs to be done in this country to turn around the economic conditions of Canada and reduce interest rates.

We have said time and again that the budget of November 12 must be dumped. It has almost been dumped, but it has to go completely in order to cut down the uncertainty and lack of confidence in Canada.

We said that we have to reverse the National Energy Program which has driven capital out of the country. In fact, lately there has been a flood of capital out of the country. In order to balance that capital, we have to pay higher and higher interest rates in order to attract hot money from the rest of the world to this country.

We said that we must take a very serious look at the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The government refuses to do that. It brings in legislation that discriminates against foreign capital. It gives Canadians generally the attitude that their capital might be expropriated.

We have said to the government it must change its penchant for creating a series of grant and loan programs. We have almost a Campbell's alphabet soup of initials for various programs, enterprise development-oriented programs, housing programs, or whatever. We have a whole series of programs involved in grants which Canadians are supposed to look at as a benefit from government. We said that should be reversed. Instead, we should have incentives in the tax system to encourage Canadians to invest and make Canada a place where they can stand and grow.

We have told the Prime Minister time and again that if he really wanted to make this country grow, he would look seriously at the capital gains tax structure in this country. If he did that, he would see that most of the capital gains tax the government collects is as a result of inflation. True gains should be indexed. In fact, we would be better off without the whole concept.

Time and again we have said the government should get its costs under control. It must reduce government overhead to below the rate of inflation, not above as it has been for the last year, this year 16½ per cent of the budget and 22 per cent the year before, far above the rate of inflation. Time and again we have said it must control costs, but the government has yet to do that.

We have said time after time that the government should look at the various departments of government and at such things as Consolidated Computers. We spoke tonight about the Enterprise Development Corporation and corporations such as Canadair which have benefited from all sorts of loans, grants and programs. Money is funded into unprofitable and very marginally profitable operations at enormous costs. The Prime Minister refuses to look at these. No wonder the Canadian dollar drops. No wonder interest rates go up higher and higher in Canada. This government refuses to look at remedies proposed by the opposition and by Canadians generally. With blinders on, it continues its high interest rate policy designed to ensure that our recession will become a massive depression.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear such a hodge-podge of fuzzy economic thinking from the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who usually presents himself as knowledgeable on economic matters. He approached an important topic, the question of interest rates and inflation in Canada. He presented a long list of what he sees as sins by the government as the cause for high interest rates. I am surprised that in the list of those sins he did not give even a token acknowledgement of the fact that he was acting as a spokesman for a very reasonably small group of privileged people. He was attacking some very important programs that happened to help a broad spectrum of business, industry, labour and ordinary people in this country.

The hon. member's claim that we can drop interest rates is a direct lead-in to several important economic consequences. He does not want to tell us that his claim to drop interest rates will lead to a devalued dollar, that it will push up prices enormously for ordinary Canadians. He does not want to tell us that this higher inflation, which will result from his policies, will end up eroding the savings of ordinary people, especially the pensioners in his riding who depend very much on their savings. He does not want to tell us that the kind of thinking he has given us leads to the sort of panic and despondency, the kind of bad psychology, that he wants to lay at the government's door.

These are the logical consequences of the kind of attack and the kind of policies that he has presented. I am surprised to hear him make the claim that we can arbitrarily drop interest rates. It sounds to me that once again the hon. member is cozying up with the NDP and its kind of magical economic thinking. Usually he tries to present himself as something more Conservative than that. He knows full well that the real way to get rid of high interest rates is threefold. First, it is for all of us to dedicate ourselves to some kind of fight against inflation, some kind of restraint that will get inflation down. Second, we need to encourage areas of genuine growth, genuine strength. Third, we need in the course of this activity to find the people who are suffering from the recession and to provide them with specific and well-deserved help to help them bridge these difficult times. That is what this government is involved in, Mr. Speaker. We are not involved in negative thinking, negative attack or magical answers.

EMPLOYMENT—VOLUNTARY AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM—REPORTED CONTENTS OF MEMORANDUM. (B) REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF MANDATORY PROGRAM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening because the response to the question that I put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) on May 14 of this year was totally inadequate. My question was with regard to the affirmative action program, and I want to spend a couple of minutes indicating why that question was important.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that basically what we are dealing with here is a program that attempts to help disadvantaged people, native people, women, and the handicapped. The facts that lead to the creation of such a program are that, for example, 60 per cent of all women in the labour force end up working in jobs which are classified as clerical, sales or service. There is nothing wrong with these jobs in and of themselves, but when 60 per cent of all women work in these kinds of jobs only, rather than in senior management, for example, or in professional employment, these jobs in themselves become job ghettoes. These low-paying jobs, dead-end jobs, mean that women today earn only 60 per cent of what men earn. That is, for every dollar that a man earns, a woman who is working full time will be earning 60 cents.

The reason that I asked the question with regard to affirmative action is that affirmative action in other jurisdictions has proven to be a good, effective way to bring about greater equality in the incomes and working conditions of men and women.

In my question to the minister I began by focusing upon Manitoba in which over a period of seven years of a supposed affirmative action program, no agreement has been signed between the government and the private sector to establish these affirmative action programs. The fact that there has been no agreement has been well known to everybody, including the minister, and therefore was clear evidence that nothing was happening in the area of affirmative action, that there were no results coming out of the government's activity. To underline the fact that the government was not getting any results, a memo came to public light over the last week or so. I would like to quote from that memo directed to affirmative action consultants, those civil servants whose job it is to go out into the community to meet with companies in the private sector to encourage them to establish affirmative action programs. These consultants received the following directions in a written memo:

—you will not promote Affirmative Action nor visit employers in this regard. In addition, you will not conduct any seminars or disseminate any information to the field to explain or promote Affirmative Action.

That memo in and of itself is shocking and disgraceful, and I must say it was not surprising that when this came to the attention of the minister, he ordered an investigation. I have only one comment about the investigation, which the minister describes as a full investigation: the investigation is an internal departmental investigation. I think the public would have more confidence in this investigation if it were a public, open investigation in which everyone could see that justice were done rather than being an internal departmental investigation, in other words, the department investigating itself.

However, be that as it may, there is an investigation, and perhaps some good will come of it. I certainly hope it does because if there is any way to put a little energy behind the affirmative action program in Manitoba, perhaps it will be found in that investigation.

What strikes me most deeply about the memo is the fact that it raises the whole question of what level of commitment to affirmative action the government has. Just how much energy is the government putting into affirmative action? The memo raises this question because it seems to me that only in government which has no real and firm commitment to an affirmative action program could any civil servant even conceive of writing such a memo to employees whose job or mandate it is to promote such a program. I think what the government has to deal with is the whole question of its level of commitment to affirmative action.

The minister responded to me by saying that the government is deeply committed to affirmative action and citing the "very major" success of the affirmative action program in the public sector. I want to put on the record a few facts about the program in the public sector, which the minister describes as a very major success and as evidence that the government is deeply committed to affirmative action. The annual report of the Public Service Commission for 1981 gives statistics in relation to affirmative action in the public sector, and I will put some of those on the record here tonight. Only 4.3 per cent of the management category in the public service are women, and 81.6 per cent of the administrative support category are women, so at the top end of the public service there are mostly men and at the bottom end of the public service there are mostly women. With regard to salary levels, 67 per cent of public servants earning less than $10,000 were women, while 97 per cent of those earning over $50,000 were men.

I see an indication that I should be winding up very quickly. I just want to say that the statistics I have quoted—and many more could be quoted—demonstrate that the results of affirmative action are as bleak in the public service as they are in the private sector.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before discussing the specific question let me provide for the hon. member some background information about the affirmative action program.

Affirmative action is a process undertaken by an employer to identify and eliminate systematic discrimination and to redress the imbalances in the work force caused by past discrimination. Affirmative action was first enunciated as commission policy in 1979 and became operational in the 1979-80 fiscal year.

There are presently 16 affirmative action consultants located in the major centres across the country. For example, there are two such affirmative action consultants in Winnipeg. It is true that affirmative action has not enjoyed a great deal of success in signing agreements with employers in the past few years. Many employers have a negative perception of affirmative action based upon the American experience. Some employers, in addition, fear that by signing an agreement they will be admitting that there is presently something wrong with their hiring practices. This attitude neither helps the employer nor target group members who are being excluded from jobs. Finally, there is a group of employers who simply feel that any government intervention in business is unacceptable. For these and many other reasons, affirmative action has had a difficult introductory period.

The hon. member has asked if we should not now consider a mandatory affirmative action program utilizing the contract compliance mechanism. In response, let me say that the minister is not happy with the voluntary program because it does not seem to meet the needs of disadvantaged workers nor the needs of the employer community. He is, therefore, determined to make changes in the approach being used, and it is for this reason that they are presently reviewing the affirmative action strategy and are considering various options. They will, of course, continue to consult with business and labour before taking a final decision in order to ensure that any new policy option will be workable.

With regard to the specific situation which has risen in Manitoba, the minister has now seen the memos. Mr. Lussier, Chairman of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has been asked to investigate the situation and to provide the minister with a detailed report at the earliest possible time. If, in fact, the report shows that our officials were operating contrary to commission policy, the situation will be immediately rectified.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

FINANCE

IMPOSITION OF BUDGET TAX PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is taxing the people of Canada on items contained in the November 12 budget on the strength of a non-debatable Ways and Means motion, the necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax or the extension of an existing tax, etc., and before a law is passed by the House of Commons and Senate. Without a law being passed, the government issued a leaflet telling the people who may be affected to fill in their income tax forms on the basis of the information in the leaflet. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House condemns this totalitarian act which is completely contrary to the Magna Carta and in addition undermines the justice system in Canada.

Should not Canada have an impeachment law to protect the people in such cases?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAYS IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, unemployment rates have reached an all-time high, and this has caused an extraordinary burden on staff in unemployment offices as they are literally unable to keep up with the huge increase in applications for benefits. This inefficiency has caused a real hardship on those whose survival depends on these cheques. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the minister responsible for employment immediately transfer person-years to offices experiencing more than a 40 per cent increase in applications.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF TAIT REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, on February 23, at a special meeting called by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development were assured by the minister that the Tait report on the implementation of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement would be brought before cabinet for a decision within three weeks. Twelve weeks have now passed since that meeting and still nothing has happened. In 1980 a number of Cree children died of gastroenteritis, a condition predisposed by deplorable sanitary conditions in Cree villages. In view of the fact that health officials have warned that a repeat of the 1980 outbreak has every chance of occurring this summer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and his cabinet colleagues recognize the urgency of this situation and act immediately on the recommendations of the Tait report.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

In view of the fact that the degree of civilization of a nation depends not only on its social justice, but also on its creativity—

That the House congratulate this year's winners of the Governor General's awards for distinguished writing and thank them for their enriching the lives of Canadians and of those who live beyond our shores.

Madam Speaker: If the House wishes to applaud these writers, it is free to do so.

EDUCATION

PROVISION OF FEDERAL FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, every thinking Canadian knows that technological upgrading of Canadian manufacturing processes and products is the necessary prerequisite to economic recovery, sustained growth and Canadian jobs, but these jobs call for educated and trained people. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance renounce immediately the ill-considered cutbacks in financial aid to Canada's community colleges and universities so that talented Canadian young people can receive the teaching, and the training which is their right and which will provide Canada with the skills it desperately needs to counteract 15 years of Liberal shortsightedness in buying from other nations those things which could be produced by educated and trained Canadians.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES BY TEN LIBERAL MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, ten Members of Parliament from Montreal, including two senior cabinet ministers, have decided that the economic policies produced by the government are so inept that they are intending to call public hearings into what might be done to solve the increasing unemployment problems. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

That this House does congratulate Members of Parliament from Montreal and does demand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the minister of whatever it is from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve who bear responsibility as cabinet ministers for the actions of the government to come clear with their constituents and with the people of Canada and resign their cabinet positions so that the public hearings that they will be conducting and the criticism that might be levied will appear honest and forthright.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH PEGUIS INDIAN BAND IN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, whereas the Peguis Indian Band in Manitoba suffers from a housing backlog of 120 units and now faces a cutback of more than 50 per cent in its 1982-83 housing allocation, whereas the Winnipeg regional director-general of Indian Affairs, Mr. Brian Veinot, has refused to negotiate in good faith with the band, even threatening to cut off housing grants entirely unless the band, with an unemployment rate of 90 per cent, seeks loans for reserve housing, and whereas the band has been forced to mount an ongoing demonstration outside the Indian Affairs offices to pressure Mr. Veinot to negotiate in good faith, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development direct Mr. Veinot to come out from under the rug and negotiate in good faith to solve the Peguis housing crisis and that the minister and the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development launch a full investigation of the operation of the regional office of the Department of Indian Affairs.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY QUEBEC MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The House will probably recall that two months ago, ten government members, including two ministers, had the audacity to ask, in a joint letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), that additional efforts be made to stimulate the housing sector. The House will also recall that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking for the government to those unfortunate members, said that next time he would only accept a letter of resignation. Now a few days ago, more or less the same group started to meet with Quebecers and Quebec organizations to find out what the situation was and, you will agree, better late than never. In the circumstances, in order to confer a degree of credibility on this action taken on behalf of Quebecers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the House unanimously urge the Prime Minister to give Quebecers the assurance that this time, recommendations made by the group of Members of Parliament will not only be considered but also implemented, if the members ever have the courage to make the recommendations public.

CALL FOR REVOCATION OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT FOR NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON, D.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Mr. Edgar Ritchie has stated that Arthur Erickson was not recommended to design the new Canadian embassy in Washington because "his project did not measure up to others," and in view of the fact that the government cannot answer such questions as how ethical it is to establish a selection committee that will have no real role, or to ask for costly submissions from architects for a project they cannot win, or for Erickson to accept the project that the panel has decided he is not the best qualified to design, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That Erickson's commission be revoked by the Prime Minister and the recommended firm of Zeidler Roberts be appointed so that, as the Edmonton Journal has observed, we will not have an embassy that looks like a pork barrel.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT (NO. 2)

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Liberal and Conservative attempts to disenfranchise Canadians—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Miller: —have been exposed by the introduction of Bill C-113. A 5.30 p.m. or 6.30 p.m. poll closure in western Canada will prevent fair access to the polls for working parents, organized and unorganized labour, farmers, and people working in small businesses. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen):

That Bill C-113 be withdrawn so the government can consult Canadians from coast to coast to consider alternatives to restrictive polling hours, alternatives such as stricter black-out provisions and penalties, withholding count results, delayed counting, or other propositions that could meet electoral needs and still not discriminate against voters in any region.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF FEDERAL FUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, when Peguis Indians protested inadequate housing on their reserve, with as many as 15 people crammed into one house, the Manitoba Regional Director of Indian Affairs said, "I can do nothing about your housing; conditions on the Peguis are no different from many other reserves in Canada." The regional director for British Columbia admits that his budget falls $30 million short of the identified needs of the Indian people. Indian people in New Brunswick tell of cutbacks in community development programs, education programs and recreation programs. The James Bay Cree continue to live in substandard conditions. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House demand that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development go back to Treasury Board and obtain adequate funds so that he can meet his commitments to the Indian people.

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF INSULIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that diabetes is a major health problem and is ranked as the fifth leading cause of death in Canada, and it has been estimated that there are some 130 million victims of diabetes world-wide, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That since Canada and Canadians are justly proud that two Canadians, Doctors Frederick Banting and Charles Best, discovered insulin as an effective means of controlling diabetes, this House proclaims 1982, which is the 50th anniversary of this miracle discovery, as "The Diamond Jubilee of the Use of Insulin on Human Beings."

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING BILL C-43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On May 13, the President of the Privy Council stated that the government would be in a position to tell the House its intentions with respect to Bill C-43 on freedom of information. Would the Prime Minister now advise the House of his government's intention respecting that bill and the principle of freedom of information, and is his government now prepared to proceed with the bill, or is it the intention of the government to allow it to die on the Order Paper?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the President of the Privy Council I want to repeat his assurance to the House that it is our intention to present that bill before the end of this session, and to express the hope that we will get more co-operation from the opposition parties in getting it passed expeditiously than we did the previous time around.

OPPOSITION COMMITMENT TO SPEEDY PASSAGE—REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE STUDY BE COMPLETED

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister has consulted his Minister of Communications, he knows that an undertaking has been given by our party that the bill could proceed speedily through the committee and could be dealt with at report stage and third reading stage in the House in one day. Having been given that commitment, will the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Communications to go forthwith to the committee to have that bill completed at the committee stage, and will he instruct the government House leader to schedule that bill for completion in this House forthwith—in fact, within the next two weeks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the House leader of the opposition would be prepared to turn that into a House order on which there could be agreement by all parties—that after the bill emerged from the committee it would be dealt with at all stages in one day—I can assure him that the government would be prepared to do that. I do not necessarily say in two weeks, but I say before the end of June.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION ON TIMETABLE WITH NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I consulted with the House leader and the members of my party prior to today's sitting of the House. The Prime Minister has that commitment. With that commitment from us, will the Prime Minister undertake to consult with members of the New Democratic Party to see whether they agree in the same way?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Thank you very much. It is not often I get applause from the other side, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: On this one you deserve it.

Mr. Trudeau: I am happy hon. members think I deserve applause. I will continue to try to do better every day. Now if we could hear from the members of the New Democratic Party, we would know if we could give them a bit of applause.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: No problem.

REQUEST FOR REVOCATION OF SECTION 41(2) OF FEDERAL COURT ACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the silent Minister of Communications who, ostensibly, has some responsibility in connection with freedom of information. As the minister will know, this is the most secretive, manipulative government in the history of our country. Its action are the antithesis of openness, particularly with respect to Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act. The government has been using this device to obstruct justice and not to allow accused persons to have access to information which would afford them proper defences and fair trials. With respect to the package to be brought before the House I want to ask the minister whether he is now prepared to commit his government to including a revocation of Section 41(2). If he is not able to make a commitment to get this bill through and if he cannot handle his job, will he do the honourable thing and resign?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. question for his—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: That was obviously a slip of the tongue, Madam Speaker. What we need is better members so that we are not asked silly questions.

The question of Section 41(2) is indeed part of the bill on access to information. There is a number of amendments to Section 41(2) proposed in the bill which is presently before the House. As the Prime Minister indicated, and as the House leader indicated last week, we expect to be in a position to take a final decision on whether we will be bringing amendments back to the House when the bill is brought back from the committee, and the hon. member will be able to see at that time exactly what is the status of the new Section 36.1.

• (1420)

OBSERVANCE OF SPIRIT OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Earlier in this part of his tenure he issued a directive to all government departments, all public servants and all ministers, that notwithstanding the fact that the freedom of information bill had not been passed, the spirit of the legislation was to be followed.

In view of the fact that yesterday the Solicitor General indicated in the House that because the freedom of information bill had not been passed—and that was the only reason—he felt obliged to invoke Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act, whereas if the legislation had been in place—Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is consulting with his today, if you do not mind. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether that directive stands, and will he direct the Solicitor General to release documents for the fair defence of accused persons in the province of Quebec, in the spirit of the freedom of information bill? The Solicitor General is apparently reluctant to do so as the bill has not been passed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would want to defer to the Solicitor General to know to what document the hon. member is referring. If they are documents which are not intended—for instance cabinet minutes—to be produced to the court, the answer would have to be no. I would have to know to what documents he is referring. Perhaps he could pose a supplementary question to the Solicitor General.

REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS IN TRIAL OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Yesterday the minister gave us the insane proposition that if the freedom of information bill had been passed he would have released the documents with respect to the RCMP officers on trial and hung out to dry by this government in the province of Quebec. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister indicates there is a directive, will he now reverse his decision and allow those documents to be produced for the RCMP officers in question?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister wrote to me, as he did to all other ministers, asking us to be guided by the access to information legislation as if it were in effect. The difficulty in dealing with the documents that I had before me was that the access to information law provides new machinery which I would rely upon if it were law, but upon which I cannot rely until it is enacted by the House. I am governed by the access to information law as far as I can be.

The presence of a bill does not create machinery for going to a court, such as the access to information bill would provide, to weigh considerations of public interest of disclosure or non-disclosure. If the access to information law were in place it would have machinery which I would be able to follow. But it is not in place, so while I follow the policy of access to information law I cannot use the machinery that that law would create if it were in effect.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, first of all, in response to the question raised by the Prime Minister I should like to say that we join completely with the official opposition in offering assurances that there would be most speedy debate on the freedom of information bill if the government would only bring it forward.

An hon. Member: One day?

Mr. Broadbent: There would be a one-day debate if the government would produce that bill.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

CHANGE IN NATURAL GAS SUPPLY FORMULA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday I asked him a question about the new formula to be used in determining natural gas supplies in Canada. He is aware that the present formula refers only to present reserves, that is to say, reserves known to exist. The National Energy Board recklessly wants to change that formula by including unproven reserves in its calculations. Considering that this will really put into jeopardy the energy future of Canada by relying on guesstimates about our gas supplies, will the minister give unequivocal assurances to the House that he will not agree to the change proposed by the NEB?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already agreed to the change made by the NEB.

REASONS FOR ACCEPTANCE OF CHANGE IN FORMULA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the following supplementary question. A previous Liberal government in the early 1970s, which was also under pressure by the oil businesses to increase exports, relied on a formula that then included unproven reserves, and fantasized about having a 900 year supply of gas, which turned out to be completely false. I want to ask the minister what the government's motive is in now changing its formula, particularly when the National Energy Board said in a report issued last fall that we do not have sufficient supplies of gas to increase natural gas exports.

• (1425)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the National Energy Board has recommended taking into account not only established reserves but also what is known as trend gas, which is—

Some hon. Members: Unknown!

Mr. Lalonde: If the Leader of the New Democratic Party will hold his horses, he will get the answer he is looking for. We are taking into account not only established reserves but what is known as trend gas. This change in the formula will allow the NEB to establish the potential surplus. That having been done, the NEB is now going to hold hearings on the various export applications before it, and also on whether or not there is a surplus which can be exported. At the present time there is no conclusion that there should be more export licences approved, or that there is—

Mr. Broadbent: That is why they changed the formula.

Mr. Lalonde: —a definite surplus to be exported. My hon. friend will have to wait for the result of the next two phases of the NEB hearings. After that we will know whether there is a large surplus which can be exported, and who the successful applicants are. For the time being the Board has made a change in the formula which, in the view of the Board, takes into account in a more realistic way the reserves which are available in Canada.

EXPORT OF LOW-COST GAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows this is extremely serious; it goes to the heart of the energy future of the country. He also knows that under the existing formula the NEB itself has said we do not have a surplus, therefore it is changing the formula. Will the minister admit that, under the proposed formula he has sanctioned, Canadians could end up in the years ahead, having sold off our low-cost gas on the hypothetical possibility that some reserves will materialize in the future, having gotten rid of our low-cost gas and having replaced it with very high-cost gas, or possibly no gas at all in the future? Is that what the minister is committing himself to?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEARINGS CONDUCTED IN MONTREAL BY GOVERNMENT MINISTERS AND SUPPORTERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. Would the Minister of State—

Mr. Crosbie: For nothing.

Mr. Blenkarn: —advise this House whether the public hearings that he and his colleagues from Montreal are holding are conducted by him in his capacity as Minister of State?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that question cannot be answered by the hon. minister since it does not pertain to his ministerial duties.

Mr. Andre: What are they?

Mr. Crosbie: What are his responsibilities?

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I accept your ruling, but I am asking him a question with respect to his capacity as Minister of State. If that is not permitted, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister?

Madam Speaker: That is fine.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister advise whether members of Parliament from Montreal, including the Minister of State and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, are conducting public hearings on government business, as members of the government, as to concerns with respect to unemployment and economic matters affecting people throughout Canada? Are these government inquiries, or are they private ventures by the members on their own?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that in our system of government the members of the executive are also members of Parliament, and they can and do act in both capacities.

Mr. Andre: In which capacity are they acting?

RESPONSIBILITY FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that members of the government in our system are collectively responsible for government policy and direction, is it the Prime Minister's view of democracy and our parliamentary system that Members of the government are entitled to act differently than members of Parliament and say things to some people in their private capacity, and different things to some people in their ministerial capacity? How do we differentiate between a member of the government and a member of Parliament, in his government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously in their statements of policy any minister has to respect the policy of the government. However, the ministers mentioned by the hon. member are involved in consultation. We believe in consultation, and I encourage my ministers to continue with it.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY QUEBEC MEMBERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, to continue in the same vein, I also wish to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I imagine he is well aware that the same, or more or less the same, group of ten which signed a letter that was thrown out by decision of the Prime Minister, that the same group which includes two ministers who are receiving representations from Quebec organizations and private citizens to the effect that the present policy followed by the Minister of Finance is unacceptable. In the circumstances, to confer some credibility on this group, could the Prime Minister give Quebecers the assurance that he is willing not only to receive but also to implement recommendations the group may make if it ever has the courage to make these recommendations publicly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am really surprised at this kind of question. The ministers are involved in a consultation process, which is nothing new, and these two ministers are certainly not the first to do so. Since I became Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, myself and other ministers have been accustomed to consulting the people and to receiving briefs and representations from individuals, which are then passed on to the government through caucus or directly discussed in cabinet. This is continuing, and although the party opposite may claim to receive its knowledge from a divine source, we do not. We prefer to consult the prople, and we will continue to do so.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL SUPPORT RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY THREE UNION LEADERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, the Canadian people know perfectly well how the recommendation for stimulating the housing sector that was made by two ministers and ten Members of Parliament was received. In view of that experience, the people of Quebec have every reason to be concerned about the value of the exercise. I merely wish to ask the Prime Minister, to give Quebecers some comfort—lest they think this is another smokescreen like the previous exercise—whether or not he is willing, at least out of respect for Quebecers and the group of ten, to give them the assurance that he will consider the proposals resulting from this exercise and will also implement the recommendations made by three union leaders and endorsed by the head of the Liberal caucus?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when we consult the people, and political suggestions are made, either by union leaders or the general public, it is the duty of Members of Parliament to make such representations known in caucus. In cabinet, ministers have a duty to indicate they have received certain representations and to discuss these. I can assure the hon. member and the public that this is done, and what the opposition criticized in the action taken by the ten a few months ago was that they made such representations publicly in a letter addressed to the government. So—

Mr. La Salle: You were criticized for not meeting a basic need, although this was requested by your own members. The answer should not be that difficult.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The question I would like to put to him is an informational one. This morning Dr. Stuart Smith, chairman of the Science Council of Canada, released a rather striking report called "Planning Now For an Information Society. Tomorrow is too Late". In this report Dr. Smith states that we are falling far behind in the modern technologies, and many sectors of our manufacturing industries soon will become obsolete if we do not move and plan. By 1985 in computers alone we will have a trade deficit of billions of dollars.

In light of this report, can the Prime Minister tell the House what the government is planning in order to meet these new technologies? What kind of development does the Prime Minister envisage for the future? Are we going to rely on branch plant economy, or is the government going to rely on importing these new technologies from abroad?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the House has heard the Minister of State for Science and Technology indicate many times in past months the policy of the government in the area of research and development. He knows that we are increasing funds to be spent in that area at a considerable rate. He knows also that there have been many policy statements by the minister. In so far as Dr. Smith's publication this morning is concerned, I have not had time to take notice of it. However, I am sure the minister will be in the House presently and will be prepared to deal with it.

PUBLIC FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, this is a question of over-all government policy. What Dr. Smith is saying in the report is that, despite a few moves, Canada is falling far behind Japan, France, the United Kingdom and the United States. Because these other countries are investing a lot of public money and there is a lot of public intervention in the economy in these fields, is the Prime Minister prepared to say today whether or not our government is prepared for significant public intervention and public investment to guarantee there is a future for Canada in these new industries so that goods are produced here in Canada and not imported from abroad?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking for a declaration of intentions. It should be clear, from what I understand the report itself says, that Canada until now has been doing very well in certain fields of high technology. For instance, in communication satellites we are among the best in the world. In transmission of high voltage electricity we are among the best in the world. In many areas of computer technology we are the best in the world. We will continue being the best in the world under the aegis of this government.

FISHERIES

BANNING OF SEAL PRODUCTS BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will be aware of the surprising decision that was taken by the European Parliament some months ago with respect to banning Canadian seal products in the European Economic Community. Can the minister inform the House what action or position the government will be taking with respect to protecting the position of Atlantic Canadians concerning these products?

Mr. Parent: Good question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we became convinced that the European vote was very much the result of misinformation and misunderstanding. We offered to open the issue of the EEC on the basis that the population of seals was not in danger and that a scientific committee of a reputable international organization would look into the question. We have also told the Commission that if they want to send reputable scientists, pathologists and others to have a look at the method used to kill seals, we are perfectly open to that proposal. We believe that good information will solve this matter, and not emotion and photography.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EDUCATION

PROVISION OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Every knowledgeable Canadian knows that product and process research precedes and leads to increased sales of goods and increased jobs in the country which does the research. Research is done by people, trained people, people whose skills are developed in our community colleges and universities. Why has the minister undermined the very future of Canada by drastically cutting support for the education of young Canadians in his disastrous budget, and will he reverse his ill-considered cutback immediately?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the first part of his question which was very informative. I wish the second part had been up to the same standard, especially when the hon. member said that we had made cutbacks to the support of post-secondary education in the provinces. We have not made any such cutbacks. We debated that issue very fully in the House of Commons. That bill has been enacted and is now the law in the land.

Mr. Gilchrist: That is one of the minister's black is white answers, Madam Speaker.

ADVICE GIVEN BY CHAIRMAN OF SCIENCE COUNCIL

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I want to follow up on the questions asked by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville concerning Dr. Stuart Smith, the new chairman of the Science Council of Canada. Dr. Smith is proving to be more a thinking Canadian than a Liberal and has called for a commitment to technological development instead of "pitching the boat to and fro" by dabbling with monetary policy. Dr. Smith contends that 100,000 jobs would be created and that the $21 billion deficit in manufactured goods this year could be cut in half. Will the Minister of Finance, therefore, take this good advice and restore vitally needed educational support for young Canadians so that these 100,000 jobs will be filled by trained Canadians, not by people from foreign lands?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by Dr. Smith. I would refer the hon. member and Dr. Smith to the document tabled at the time of the budget entitled, "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s"—in which was outlined very clearly the approach of the government to research and technology in Canada. Probably both Dr. Smith and my hon. friend would be further inspired by reading that very interesting paper.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEW BRUNSWICK PROVINCIAL OFFICE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I should like to ask the minister to clear up speculation that the provincial office of DREE is being moved out of the provincial capital of New Brunswick. Any move to place distance between a multi-purpose development body like DREE, or its successor, and the New Brunswick government would appear to downgrade the co-operative role DREE has always played and for which it has always justly been given great credit in New Brunswick. Will the minister tell the House whether or not it is his intention to move the provincial office of DREE out of the provincial capital of New Brunswick? Is he considering such a move, or a reduction in staff at this office?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in the course of developing ideas for the most effective integration of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce, officials have been looking at a number of options. I will be reviewing them shortly, but no final decisions have been taken on them. However, I can assure my hon. friend that the new department will be a very vigorous, active and supportive presence in the province of New Brunswick in future, as it is now and as it has been in the past.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, the minister's clarification is just as clear as muddy water. The minister will appreciate the apprehension of the people of New Brunswick because he will recall that the gutting of the rail passenger service followed rumours and studies like this, and that the people were denied any meaningful input.

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF RELOCATION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, will the minister be specific and tell the House exactly how many people employed by the DREE office in Fredericton may be required to move, forced to sell their homes and to try to buy new ones when mortgage interest rates are at an all-time high? Is he prepared to sacrifice the efficiency of DREE and provincial co-operation to fulfil a bureaucratic nightmare?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, no final decisions have been taken with respect to the location of offices in the province. I will certainly keep the concerns of my hon. friend in mind.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON TAIT REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the implementation of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Last week, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior, the minister said that the decision on the Tait report which was before cabinet would come down in a reasonable amount of time. That report has been before cabinet for 12 weeks. We were assured in committee by the Cree this morning that their situation is desperate. Could the minister give us a very firm commitment today on when we might hear the cabinet's decision on the Tait report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, soon; very soon.

SAFETY OF WATER SUPPLY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, in a letter dated March 19, 1982, to the chief of the Paint Hills Band, the minister stated that the water supply for that village was now safe because of measures taken by his department last summer, but on March 9 staff from the Quebec ministry of the environment found that the water was heavily contaminated, so contaminated that it must be boiled for washing clothes. Could the minister tell us what measures he took last summer to make the water safe? I want to remind the Minister that in that village four children died in the summer of 1980 from gastroenteritis caused by the same type of contamination that is in the water right now. What will the minister do about this deplorable situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that I personally visited that particular village.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I saw the director general and we built funds into the budget and insisted that he get our offices to look at that particular project. Allocation was made to correct the situation. The hon. member said that it has not been corrected. I will check into the matter and report back to him.

AGRICULTURE

SHORTAGE OF VETERINARIANS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As he will know, Canada desperately needs more veterinarians right across the country, especially in the Atlantic provinces which have no veterinary college. Now the only English-speaking veterinary college east of Saskatoon, Ontario's veterinary college in Guelph, is starved for funds and consequently risks losing its accreditation because of plunging standards. Given the supreme importance of veterinary medicine to the agricultural and fisheries industries, what will the federal government do to respond to the crisis in this important area of national concern?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that we have the same concern as he has that we have proper educational facilities for people to train to be veterinarians and to study marine biology. Several years ago we proposed the sharing of that kind of a program in the maritimes. They selected an independent commission to select a site. The independent commissioners selected a site in Prince Edward Island, and then the provinces could not agree among themselves where the school should be, so I had to withdraw the funds from the appropriations of my department because they were not being spent. At that time there was not the shortage they said. The veterinarians association of Canada indicated that there was not the shortage which we foresaw when we proposed the building of the school. We participated in the OAC, in funding the school at Guelph and also the school at Saskatoon. We provided the same provisions for the school to be built some place in the Atlantic region, but it is up to them to make that decision.

DISAGREEMENT ON LOCATION OF NEW VETERINARY COLLEGE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the failure of the four Atlantic provinces to agree on a site for the proposed Atlantic regional veterinary college, how does the federal government intend to break the stalemate? Does it consider it important to break the stalemate which has caused this long-awaited project to flounder? For example, is the federal government actively pursuing the possibility of private investment funding of the college, to get it off the ground?

Hon E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows very well that we met a group from his province who were making that proposal. They will be making a written submission to us in the very near future. I understand that it is finished or is about to be finished, and that they want to arrange another meeting as soon as they can. But I think the tragic thing is that in the Atlantic provinces every province is under Tory administration and they cannot agree among themselves where it should be; I think that is the tragic part of it.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION WILL PREVAIL OVER NEW POWERS GIVEN TO NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Quebec Minister of Energy, who was in Ottawa yesterday, stated that with the passing of Bill C-108, the powers of the National Energy Board with respect to foreign exports of hydroelectric power will be increased. He added that decisions by the National Energy Board will constitutionally take precedence over provincial legislation relating to farmland and the environment. Can the minister give the House the assurance that when Bill C-108 is adopted, the powers of the National Energy Board with respect to the issuing of foreign export licences for hydroelectric power will remain as they are now and that, as the minister stated himself during the debate on second reading, provincial legislation shall prevail over the new powers conferred on the National Energy Board?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that in the debate in the House on this subject, I indicated that the powers to be conferred under this bill on the National Energy Board relate directly to the authority of Parliament over matters concerning interprovincial and international trade, and that the powers the National Energy Board would be obtaining are the equivalent of, or actually fewer than, those the Board already has with respect to oil and gas pipelines. Therefore, the National Energy Board will have powers that are equivalent to existing ones relating to oil and gas.

As for the second part of the hon. member's question, he will also recall that I mentioned the same practice now being followed for oil and gas pipelines would also apply to the transmission of hydroelectric power. The point is that we must have equivalent and fair procedures applying to various forms of energy, whether electricity, natural gas or oil.

PUBLIC SERVICE

BUSINESS COUNCIL'S CALL FOR WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday nine members of the Business Council on National Issues publically urged the Prime Minister to impose wage and salary guidelines on public employees, of less than seven per cent. Given the fact that if this principle were applied to all Canadians, and that the salary of one of the members of that delegation which made the proposal, the chairman of Bell Canada, last year was $626,000, his increase would be more than the total income of two typical public sector employees. That demonstrates the hypocrisy of these proposals. How does the Prime Minister rationalize his call for the same kind of restraint on the salaries of public servants?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot give a rationale for the statement to which the hon. member refers because I have not read it, although I was notified that such a statement was made. I would point out to the hon. member that the government has expressed the view that if we all try to get settlements at the same rate as inflation, inflation is not likely to come down. That is why I proposed a scheme to the provinces in February whereby we would not give 7 per cent but perhaps freeze entirely those in the upper brackets, and give more than 7 per cent, perhaps something like CPI, to those in the lower brackets.

I repeat that the proposal did not make much headway with the provinces or, I believe, with the NDP. But I do think there is much to be said for government's giving an example of restraint and making the argument with the Canadian people that if we all expect to keep up with inflation, inflation will never come down and interest rates, therefore, will never come down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: We had the same kind of argument from the Prime Minister in 1975 when he imposed the so-called wage and price controls. In that period when we had the wage and price controls, unemployment rose from 6.9 per cent in 1975 to almost 8.5 per cent in 1978, and at the end of the control period inflation was back to what it was when the Prime Minister imposed the controls.

EFFECT OF WAGE CONTROLS ON INFLATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, given the fact that inflation at the present time is running at 11.6 per cent, why does the Prime Minister hope that he will achieve better results if we adopt the present proposal than we achieved last time when they were such a failure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is correct to say that they were a failure. The member will recall when controls were brought in, and I would remind him that it was the ten provincial premiers who were meeting for two summers in a row who were begging the federal government to do something exceptional about inflation.

When the controls were brought in, wage settlements were running in the area of 12 per cent for the federal sector, 14 per cent for the private sector, I believe 18 per cent for the provincial sector, and something like 25 or 26 per cent for the municipal sector. When we emerged from controls, settlements were considerably below that. They were, as the hon. member said, around 8 per cent or 9 per cent.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

REPORTED REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT ON OWNERSHIP OF OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who will know that there are news reports today indicating that the federal government is considering a unilateral reference on offshore resource ownership to the Supreme Court of Canada, and is considering doing that as early as this week. Is that the case?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, if the government does make a decision to that effect, it will be announced as soon as it has been made. No decision has been made at this time.

[English]

REASONS FOR POSSIBLE REFERENCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have a situation here where that matter has already been referred to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland as long ago as February. Is the Minister of Justice telling us that the Government of Canada does not want to give the Supreme Court of Newfoundland the opportunity to be heard? Is he telling us that the Government of Canada is actively considering a reference which will, in effect, be a direct insult to the Supreme Court and the people of Newfoundland? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I do not believe I have any comment to make to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. He is just speculating, and I cannot argue on speculation.

Miss MacDonald: Deny it, then.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, does the Minister of Justice deny that the Government of Canada is considering a unilateral reference of the offshore resource question to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, when the right hon. member says "unilateral reference to the Supreme Court", I remember some months ago when the Leader of the Opposition was urging us to refer directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. Why would it be bad today when a year ago he was arguing that we should go to the Supreme Court?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF REFERENCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada considering a direct unilateral reference of the offshore question to the Supreme Court of Canada? It is a simple question. Yes or no?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said that there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question. The question that the right hon. member is asking me today is a very surprising one. He used to tell us that the best thing to do in difficult circumstances was go to the Supreme Court. Now, if I decide to take his advice for once, I hope he will applaud me.

Mr. Nielsen: Are you?

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN BANKRUPTCIES—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Citing the government's own figures, the indication is that farm bankruptcies have increased by 70 per cent during the same term this year compared to the same term last year. I am certain that the minister should know that Canadian agriculture faces the worst financial crisis since Confederation. It is obvious that existing programs are not appropriate. FCC funds have been exhausted, and the banks are not issuing any small business bonds. In view of this situation, what new programs is the minister considering bringing forth shortly and, if there is no assistance forthcoming, perhaps the minister might provide some information as to what we might tell some of these young farmers who are going down the tube?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member states that nothing was done. He knows full well that it took some time to amend the Farm Credit Act. His party was responsible for ringing the bells for three weeks so that legislation could not have third reading and could not move ahead with that legislation. He now indicates a sign of urgency that something should be done. I agree that there is a need. The Farm Credit Corporation gave me a report yesterday. They are moving rapidly in that area where many members want them to head, to raise funds to loan money. The hon. member does know that some of the markets have improved rapidly over the last couple of weeks. Prices have improved for them in many areas, especially in the red meat industry.

When he says that all agriculture is in worse condition than it was before, he knows full well that bankruptcies in agriculture, if he wants to compare them to any other sector, such as small business, are not as great. There is hurt out there, and we are doing something about it.

TAXES ON FUEL USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, since the Minister of Agriculture knows that one of the major components contributing to this agricultural massacre is the high level of fuel prices caused by the high level of federal government taxes, what specific representations has he made on behalf of the farmers of Canada to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to encourage him to reduce this massive rip-off at the expense of the producers of food in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes representations about the high energy costs.

Mr. Mazankowski: Taxes.

Mr. Whelan: We have made a study of this. We have made surveys of the crops being planted this spring. In the areas where farmers are already planting there is hardly an acre that is left unplanted. We are planting crops as much as we ever have. We also have had discussions about what we can do to reduce energy costs to the producers of foodstuffs in Canada.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. BEATTY—OPPOSITION TO PACE OF METRICATION POLICY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of over 300 residents of Ontario, most of them constituents in the riding of Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. The purpose of the petition is to indicate to the House of Commons the opposition of these residents to the pace of the federal government's metrication policy. The petitioners hope the federal government will reconsider its policy and slow down its forced march to metric.

MR. NIELSEN—RATE INCREASES FOR ELECTRICITY IN THE NORTH

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 4,313 Yukon workers, is to indicate to the government that unreasonable rate increases for electricity have been inflicted upon them.

The nature of the petition is to demand that these unreasonable rate increases for electricity in the north be alleviated. These rate increases are caused solely by the flumbing, bumbling and gross mismanagement of the Ottawa-controlled NCPC. These rate increases could be alleviated by concurring in the report of the subcommittee on the NCPC of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition to be in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

MR. DARLING—OPPOSITION TO GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present the following petition:

The PETITION of the undersigned of the Town of Bracebridge in the Province of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefor provide a remedy.

HUMBLY SHEWETH

THAT the Private Member's Bill, C-451, regarding gun control legislation which deals with the number of firearms in circulation in this country and to control the number of firearms in Canada,

WHEREFORE the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this legislation and deal directly with the present gun laws which are cumbersome, expensive to administer, and ineffective except to harass law abiding people.

AND as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BLENKARN—SCOPE OF QUESTIONS PUT TO MR. JOYAL IN HIS CAPACITY AS MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker I rise on a question of privilege. The question arises out of the question period. I do not raise this question of privilege to interfere in any way with the ruling Your Honour made during the question period but to seek some clarification.

Your Honour will recall that in the question period I put the question to the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal), who represents the riding of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, about public hearings the minister is apparently conducting in the Montreal area of the province of Quebec. We have no indication as to what exactly are the duties of this minister, but presumably his duties relate to the province of Quebec and matters of government concern in that province and, indeed, in the whole country. If the minister is conducting public hearings—according to the information we have the Minister of State is involved in those hearings—presumably he has been directed by the government to hold those hearings. My question to the minister was about what seems to be his responsibility.

Your Honour will appreciate that we have no House order or any direction as to what the minister really is doing, and my concern is about what we can ask the minister. He is conducting hearings. Presumably they are Crown hearings because the minister is a minister of the Crown, and my question was to inquire as to the nature of the hearings the government—

Madam Speaker: Order. I must quote to the hon. member Beauchesne's Citation 361:

A question may not be asked of a Minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or part of a province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group.

The hon. member does not have the basis of a question of privilege. He received answers to his questions from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I do not know whether those answers satisfied him, but that is not for me to judge. I was only applying the practices of this House in not allowing the question to be addressed to that particular minister. I allowed it to be directed to another minister, in this case the Prime Minister, and I think that should satisfy the hon. member entirely.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No. That is the ruling. That is it.

Mr. Blenkarn: On a question of clarification, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No. I am sorry. That is it. I am sure I am applying the practices of this House exactly. In answer to the hon. member's question of privilege, that is my decision.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to make absolutely certain I understand the nature of your ruling.

Mr. Pinard: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think it is fair, Madam Speaker, and I am not being argumentative, but I think it is important for the House to know the exact nature of the ruling.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made a statement in the House of Commons that this minister has particular responsibility for the province of Quebec. This was not a question we directed, for example, to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) about any responsibility he may have in Prince Edward Island. If in fact the responsibilities of the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal), as stated by the Prime Minister, are for the province of Quebec, does that not of itself allow us to ask questions respecting the performance of that minister vis-à-vis the province of Quebec? That is the only clarification I would like to get.

Madam Speaker: I think what I just quoted is quite clear, and I will read it again for the hon. member. Citation 361 reads:

A question may not be asked of a Minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or part of a province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group.

That is quite clear. I do not think I can make it any clearer.

Mr. Nowlan: What is his capacity?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I also rise on a point of clarification respecting your ruling.

Madam Speaker: No, no. Order. I cannot—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But if there are public funds involved, Madam Speaker, how do we determine—

Madam Speaker: It is quite easy to determine. In this particular case I interrupted the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and did not allow him to ask a particular question of a particular minister. That is quite clear, so I do not think hon. members need further clarification. If another situation presents itself in the House, we will rule on that one.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is the minister unquestionable?

Mr. Nowlan: Take away his ministerial pay, then.

Question No. 2,819—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Finance at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $187,834 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. (a) and (b) Treasury Board Policy: Chapter 110 sub-chapter 5 of the Personnel Management Manual—Conditions Governing Education, Training and Development, including Subsidization.

2. Nil.

3. (a) and (b) Nil. (c) 100 per cent.

4. Nil.

DOT—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,840—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of Transport at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $115,844 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Sound needs identification by managers, plus the use of career review boards and training committees, are the major vehicles used to establish education leave for employees. The selection process is governed by Transport Canada's policy on Education Leave, PM3-2(13) and by its policy on Training and Development PM5-2, Part II(4). The administration of costs of such leave is governed by Treasury Board's Personnel Management Manual Chapter 110, subchapter 5 (PMM 110-5) on Human Resources Education, Training and Development.

(i) PMM 110-5 (3), (4), (11)
(ii) PMM 110-5 (11)
(iii) PMM 110-5 (11)

(b) The guidelines contained in PM3-2(13) and PM5-2, part II(4) are used to determine whether the skills to be acquired are needed on a permanent basis.

2. None.

3. (a), (b) and (c) None.

4. It is 8.3 per cent.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,858—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the Public Service Commission at page 32.33, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (b) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (c) of the $11,448 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): (a) The Public Service Commission has not in fiscal year 1979-80, concluded any Hospitality contract of a value more than $2,000.

(b) The Public Service Commission is using the Treasury Board directive on hospitality (Chapter 360 of the Administrative Policy Manual) and Chapter 3.11 of the P.S.C. Financial Administration Manual, to determine when a payment for hospitality is to be made.

(c) Of the $11,448 paid for hospitality as reported in 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, the percentages by category are as follows:

(i)	Foreign visitors	4.29
(ii)	Canadian businessman	19.62
(iii)	Provincial public servants	10.32
(iv)	Federal public servants	60.03
(v)	Ministerial exempt staff	information not available
(vi)	Members of Parliament	.97
(vii)	Members of Provincial Parliament, Legislation assemblies and the National assembly	included in category (iii)
(viii)	Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General	Nil
(ix)	Federal Crown corporation executives	included in category (iv)
(x)	Provincial Crown corporation executives	included in category (iii)
(xi)	Members of federal commissions, boards and councils	4.77
(xii)	Any other categories	Nil
		100.00

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—HOSPITALITY SERVICES

Question No. 2,867—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of External Affairs at page 32.10, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) are guidelines used to determine when the department will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (b) of the $4,350,250 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories (c) what percentage of the $4,350,250 was used for hospitality (i) inside (ii) outside Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Yes. With respect to hospitality extended within Canada, the Department of External Affairs follows directives and guidelines set out in chapter 360 of Administrative Policy Manual. Hospitality extended outside of Canada is governed by directives and guidelines set out in two Treasury Board Directives: (A) Head of Post Directive, T.B. Minute 692275, October 1, 1968. (B) Foreign Service Official Hospitality Directive, T.B. Minute 694890 February 12, 1970.

(b) The department does not maintain precise statistics on the occupational background of individuals invited to official functions. As a general rule the department tries to ensure that, for any particular function, 40 per cent of the guests are foreign dignitaries, no more than 30 per cent are federal civil servants and 30 per cent are Canadians who are not federal civil servants.

(c)(i) 92 per cent, (ii) 8 per cent.

DPW—MARINE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,892—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the marine program—capital at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the 343 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) and (b) The increase in other types of services in 1979-80 is a result of not reporting expenditures in as great a detail as in 1978-79.

Reported in Public Accouts	1978-79	1979-80
Other types of services	$ 3,410	$15,103
Printing services	12,587	8,120*
Photographic services	1,281*	1,276*
Professional fees	—	4,958*
Sundries	1,092*	749*
Secretarial services	1,037*	—
	$15,997	$15,103

* Included above in other types of services

The comparable figure for 1978-79 is $15,997 which reflects a decrease of $894 in 1979-80.

(c) One payment was made in excess of $2,000 to Dominion Blue Print and Reprographics, Vancouver, British Columbia, for printing services in the amount of $3,000.

DPW—MARINE PROGRAM—OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE

Question No. 2,893—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the marine program—Operations and Maintenance at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the Department explain the 2,531 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) and (b) The seeming increase in other types of services in 1979-80 is a result of different reporting methods.

Reported in Public Accounts	1978-79	1979-80
Other types of services	$ 2,389	$62,865
Architectural services	14,273	14,088*
Caretaking services	16,278	17,361*
Data processing services	12,218	—
Exhibits design consultant services	8,769	—
Garbage removal services	4,452	3,687*
Legal services	6,892	894*
Photographic services	2,302	2,434*
Printing services	8,201	3,349*
Snow removal services	4,361	3,409*
Training education services	4,345	3,274*
Secretarial and clerical services	1,914*	13,378*
Sundries	475*	991*
	$84,480	$62,865

* Included above in other types of services

The comparable figure for 1978-79 is $84,480 as compared to $62,865 in 1979-80 which represents a decrease of $21,615 in 1979-80.

(c) Payments over $2,000 were as follows: Robert Létourneau, Lauzon Quebec—snow removal, $2,208; Star Cleaners Ltd., New Westminster, British Columbia—laundry & dry cleaning, $3,973; Johnson, Sustronik, Weinstein and Associates Ltd., Toronto, Ontario—architectural fees, $14,018.

DPW—PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,894—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Professional and Technical Services Program at page 32.27, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the 654 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) and (b) The increase in other types of services in 1979-80 is a result of not reporting expenditures in as great a detail as in 1978-79.

Reported in Public Accounts	1978-79	1979-80
Other types of services	$ 3,240	$24,446
Hospitality services	4,846	957*
Motion picture services	53,972	6,124*
Registration fees	15,018	16,581*
Sundries	3,240*	784*
	$77,076	$24,446

* Included above in other types of services

The comparable figure for 1978-79 is $77,076 as compared to $24,446 in 1979-80 which represents a decrease of $52,630 in 1979-80.

(c) The only payment over $2,000 was to the National Film Board of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario, for motion picture services—$2,765.

DOT—ASSESSORS FEES

Question No. 2,910—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport under the Marine Transportation Program at page

32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to assessors fees (a) how does the department explain the 354 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) The increase in expenditures was due to an increase in the number of formal investigations into shipping casualties over the previous year. The following formal investigations were held in 1979-80, pursuant to Section 552 of the Canada Shipping Act:

(1) George Davies, Robert C. H. Reed and Pierre A. Boisseau were appointed by the minister as assessors for the formal investigation into the circumstances surrounding the fire aboard the Canadian vessel Cartiercliffe Hall in Lake Superior on June 5, 1979.

(2) G. Rousseau and D. R. Jones were appointed by the minister as assessors for the formal investigation into the collision between the vessels Cielo Bianco, Algobay and Pointe Marguerite in the Bay of Sept-Îles, Quebec on November 14, 1978.

(3) David J. Fraser, R. T. Dodge and T. H. Goodyear were appointed by the minister as assessors for the formal investigation into the disappearance of the f.v. Barracudina and crew in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on or about November 26, 1978.

(b) Pierre A. Boisseau, $7,923; George H. Davies, $10,600; Thomas R. Dodge, $9,200; David J. Fraser, $5,600; David J. Fraser in trust for Maritime Marine Consultants Ltd., $3,400; Gas Turbine Corporation, $5,562; Thomas H. Goodyear, $8,800; Public Works, $2,500; D. R. Jones, $11,400; Laboratoire B-Sol Ltée, $5,116; Robert C. H. Reed, $9,600; Gaston Rousseau, $10,200.

DOT—MARINE TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

Question No. 2,915—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport under the Marine Transportation Services Program at page 32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photography services (a) how does the department explain the 113 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) The increase in the cost of photography services in 1979-80 was due to the increase in formal investigations into shipping casualties, the grounding of the oil tanker Kurdistan, and the associated requirement for additional pictures.

(b) Operations-oriented photographic services only. Due to an error in the classification of an expenditure, an amount of $23,755 paid to Sullivan Construction for the rental of heavy equipment required for the Kurdistan incident was included in the amount reported for photography services. Therefore the 1979-80 public accounts should have shown only $46,453 which represents an increase of 41 per cent over 1978-79.

(c) Canadian Government Photo Centre, $8,302.

DIAND—OTHER TYPES OF SERVICES

Question No. 2,925—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 32.15, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department account for the 8,716 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The expenditures under the "other services" classification increased because of the amendments to the reporting requirements for professional and special services as specified by the Public Accounts Instructions Manual. Previously, aggregate payments for a particular service classification equal to or exceeding $2,000 were listed separately. The Public Accounts Instruction Manual now requires that if the aggregate payments for a particular service classification are not equal to or more than $25,000, the payments will be included in the "other services" classification. Also, under the "other services" classification, only recipients of payments equal to or exceeding $25,000 are now listed, whereas previously, this was required for recipients of $2,000 or more.

(b) Other services include expenditures for the following: engineering services $9,522, training educational services $68,191, scientific services $2,654, laundry dry cleaning and related services $322, motion picture production and distribution $1,466, photo service except motion pictures $50,722, storage and warehousing $360, hospitality $9,951 and membership fees $2,027 for a total of $145,215. Due to an administrative oversight, educational services and photo service except motion pictures were not reported separately. In light of the small amount involved as compared to the total expenditures of $131,000,000 on professional and special services for the department, it would not appear significant that these services were not highlighted in this statement.

(c) Since the Public Accounts Instruction Manual requires that a list be maintained of all individuals or organizations whose aggregate payments meet or exceed $25,000, a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 is not readily available. The requested information would have to be requested from our regional offices, and the cost in time and money is not warranted in light of the specified requirements for public accounts.

DIAND—PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,926—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 32.15, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other services (a) how does the department account for the 3960 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) The expenditures under the "other services" classification increased because of the amendments to the reporting requirements for professional and special services as specified by the Public Accounts Instructions Manual. Previously, aggregate payments for a particular service classification equal to or exceeding $2,000 were listed separately. The Public Accounts Instruction Manual now requires that if the aggregate payments for a particular service classification are not equal to or more than $25,000, the payments will be included in the "other services" classification. Also, under the "other services" classification, only recipients of payments equal to or exceeding $25,000 are now listed, whereas previously, this was required for recipients of $2,000 or more.

(b) Other services include expenditures for the following: hospital services $14,905, storage and warehousing $19,019, hospitality $22,054 and memberships fees $5,599 for a total of $61,577.

(c) Since the Public Accounts Instruction Manual requires that a list be maintained of all individuals or organizations whose aggregate payments meet or exceed $25,000, a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 is not readily available. This information would have to be requested from our regional offices and the cost in time and money does not warrant it, in light of the specified requirements for public accounts.

DOT—REPRODUCING AND PRINTING SERVICES

Question No. 2,935—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport at page 32.38, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to reproducing and printing services (a) how does the department explain the 690 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (d) for what reason did the Department require these services?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) As of April, 1978, a program was undertaken to convert to the French language all didactical instruments utilized at the Transport Canada Training Institute currently located at Cornwall, Ontario. The program for the conversion of work instruments, which was allotted a budget of approximately $800 thousand a year for three years, was responsible for the substantial increase in the cost of reproducing and printing services in the departmental administration program during the 1979-80 fiscal year.

(b), (c) and (d)

HEALTH PROTECTION PROGRAM—PHOTOGRAPHY SERVICES

Question No. 2,948—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Health Protection Program at page 32.22, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photography services (a) what services does this entail (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) Photography services consists of the production of slides and the development and/or printing of photographs, slides and pictures for health education and information.

(b) The following services were provided: (1) development and/or printing, which includes film processing, enlargements and duplicating; and (2) production of slides, which includes their scripting and assembly.

(c) The following amounts were paid for each type of service: (1) development and/or printing, $11,781, (2) production of slides, $9,526.

A total of $9,526 was paid to the National Film Board Canada. No other payments in excess of $2,000 were made.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,963—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the Public Archives of Canada in footnote No. 18 at page 13.4, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the two-way radio lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the two-way radio?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Public Archives as follows:

1. On January 29, 1980, the commissionaire at the post used the radio on a patrol at 1015 hours and did not have occasion to use the radio again during his shift as he became busy at the dock area. It was not until 1645 hours, same date, that the radio was missed from its place in the cubicle.

(a) During the intervening period (1015 hours—1645 hours) there were many persons in the area or passing through the dock area who could have removed the radio while the commissionaire was busily engaged elsewhere in the area. The theft was reported to the Ottawa City Police but an investigation into the loss over the succeeding two days failed to reveal the identity of the person(s) responsible for the illegal removal of the radio. To date no trace of the radio has been found.

(c) See (a) above.

(d) Yes.

(e) Procedures now require the commissionaire to carry the radio with him whenever he is out of his cubicle on duties within the shipping/receiving dock area.

2. The radio is used to maintain contact with the main post during the security and fire patrol of the building.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,978—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Labour under the departmental program at page 32.18, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): (a) Costs were for the purchase of various prints of films, filmstrips, plus the charges for the booking and distribution of films for the Industrial Relations Film Library administered jointly by the National Film Board and Labour Canada.

(b) Various audiences; bookings arranged through National Film Board.

(c) None.

ATLANTIC PILOTAGE AUTHORITY

Question No. 3,130—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the statement of operations of the Atlantic Pilotage Authority for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 10, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which notes that the authority had a net operating loss of $124,613 during the year and that the stated objective of the authority was "to operate and maintain a safe and efficient pilotage service" (a) how does the authority explain the fact that it has operated at a significant loss in each of the past three years, since this is contrary to the objective of operating an efficient service (b) since the level of the deficit has been diminishing, on what date does the Authority anticipate becoming a net contributor to the Equity of Canada (c) is the Authority taking measures to ensure that it will be operating at a profit as soon as possible and, if so, what are the measures?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Atlantic Pilotage Authority advises as follows:

(a) The Atlantic Pilotage Authority has operated at a loss in each of the past three years (1977, 1978, 1979) because the tariff increases which were instituted in 1976, 1977 and 1979 were not sufficient to recoup expenditures in 1977, 1978 and 1979. The tariff increases levied in those years were felt to be fair and reasonable and therefore within the objectives of the authority.

The level of expenditures experienced in the three-year period are also considered reasonable: 1977 as compared to 1976 indicates a 3 per cent decrease; 1978 as compared to 1977 an 8 per cent increase; 1979 as compared to 1978 a 6 per cent increase.

The pilotage tariffs in the Atlantic region were historically low for a number of years and in order to bring about economic self-sufficiency it was felt reasonable to levy gradual increases over an extended period of time rather than large increases over a short period of time.

(b) The authority has not relied on government monetary support since the 1979-80 fiscal year and does not anticipate receiving contributions from the government in the future.

(c) The authority is taking measures to ensure it will be operating at a profit as soon as possible. A profit of $115,358 is budgeted for 1981.

The measures being taken are: (1) continual monitoring of pilotage activity as it relates to pilots' workload and the number of pilots on strength; (2) planned contracting out of pilot boat service in order to increase efficiency; (3) a new tariff, to be published soon, and to become effective January 1, 1982; (4) these measures will ensure the Authority continues to operate in an efficient manner and without financial assistance from the government of Canada.

AIR CANADA

Question No. 3,132—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to item 6 of the notes to financial statements of Air Canada for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 8, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which states " . . . the cost of shares purchased exceeds the underlying net book value of Nordair Ltd.'s assets by $5 million at the date of purchase" (a) was an appraisal made of Nordair's aircraft to support the payment of $5 million more than the share value in Nordair's books (b) on what date will the amortization of the $5 million commence and how will the amortization be treated in the accounts of Air Canada?

2. Did Air Canada integrate the operations of Nordair Ltd. into its own operations and, if not, is there a duplication of such operations?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1. (a) Yes. The appraisals were made by independent third parties and were corroborated by studies carried out by Air Canada specialists.

(b) The amortization of the $5 million commenced on the date of acquisition and is reflected as a reduction of Air Canada's share of Nordair's profit under the equity accounting method.

2. Air Canada did not integrate the operations of Nordair into its own because of the different nature of regional operations. Duplication has resulted in direct competition on the Montreal-Rouyn, Montreal-Toronto, and segments of the Toronto-Winnipeg routes.

PROPANE VEHICLE GRANT PROGRAM

Question No. 4,152—Mr. Mazankowski:

Under the Propane Vehicle Grant Program (a) how many applications were received and how many grants were awarded (b) what amount was dispensed (c) how many applications were rejected and for what reasons?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

(a) 4,208 vehicles applied for grants and 2,645 grants were awarded, (b) $1,053,600. (c) Twenty applications have been rejected due to the fact that applications were submitted for ineligible vehicles (i.e., off-road vehicles, such as forklifts, or in cases of dual fuel conversions) or duplicate claims were submitted for the same vehicle.

WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 4,210—Mr. McKenzie:

Did the government enter into any negotiations through the International Air Transport Association in an attempt to establish Winnipeg International Airport as a base for transpolar commercial air travel between North America and Europe and (a) if so (i) at what location and on what dates were the meetings held (ii) what were any agreements reached (b) if not (i) for what reason (ii) are there any other negotiations planned or in progress?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: No. (a) Not applicable. (b)(i) and (ii) The International Air Transport Association (IATA) is an industry organization of the world's schedule airlines, and as such, the Government of Canada does not enter into any negotiations with the association. There are no inter-governmental negotiations planned or in progress involving the establishment of Winnipeg International Airport as a base for transpolar commercial air travel between North America and Europe.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time, by leave now?

• (1540)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) was on his feet to speak at report stage so I wonder if the Chair might recognize him now.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I believe that I have the concurrence of House leaders and members of the House to move four amendments. I would assume that they would then be discussed at report stage ad seriatim.

Madam Speaker: I understand that the hon. member wants to waive the normal notice that he would give and is asking for unanimous consent so that these motions could be presented to the House now. Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hawkes: Merci, Madam Speaker.

I move:

Motion No. 1

That on page 2, line 2, clause 1, the word "four" be deleted and replaced by the word "two".

Motion No. 2

That in clause 1, page 1, line 14, the word "thousand" be deleted, and in line 15 the word "hundred" be inserted immediately following the word "six".

Motion No. 3

That on page 1, line 19, clause 1, the word "shall" be deleted and replaced by the word "may".

Motion No. 4

That on page 2, line 10, clause 2, the words "and Parliament" be inserted immediately following the word "Finance".

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member for Calgary West want to debate one motion at a time?

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, Madam Speaker. The first motion reads as follows:

That on page 2, line 2, clause 1, the word "four" be deleted and replaced by the word "two".

Unless members have the bill before them, Mr. Speaker, they may have difficulty in assessing the impact that this would have. In Bill C-101 the government has proposed that in addition to the $600 million which has been given to Petro-

Canada for the purpose of capitalization, another $4,900 million of taxpayers' money be given to its board of directors in the form of capitalization. From evidence given in committee it is clear that Petro-Canada needs an infusion of capital. If it is to continue with the mandate granted to it by Parliament it needs something in the order of $2,000 million as quickly as possible. The projections which the president of the Crown corporation laid before the committee showed that it would need additional capital in the years ahead.

This is a public policy issue which has been before this chamber on several occasions over several years. The question is whether the capital required by Petro-Canada should always come from the pockets of the taxpayers or whether a portion of that capital requirement should be freely given by Canadians who would like to invest in the corporation. I think the nature of that choice is exemplified by this amendment.

Sooner or later independent, elected members of this chamber will have to recognize, when they want to spend $5,500 million for the purchase of business assets, including service stations, that the taxpayers of the country do not have unlimited amounts of money. If we in this chamber choose to spend money on buying service stations, then we have to give up the opportunity to purchase hospital beds.

I wonder how many of us have consulted our constituents asking them, do you want to pay taxes to your government so that it can buy service stations, or do you want to pay taxes to your government so that it can help senior citizens who are in need? Do you want to pay taxes to your government to buy service stations, or do you want to pay taxes to your government so that it can provide better medical care? Do you want to pay taxes to your government so that it can provide jobs, or would you rather pay taxes to your government so that it can buy service stations?

We are not dealing with a small amount of money here, Mr. Speaker. What the bill seeks is that the taxpayers of the country give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) permission to take $5,500 million out of their pockets and not spend it on pensions, not spend it on tax cuts, not spend it on job creation, not spend it on hospital beds but instead, give it to the board of directors of Petro-Canada. With this money they can go down the street in Ottawa, in Oshawa, in Toronto or in Halifax and say to someone who owns a service station, "We have lots of taxpayers' dollars, so if you want to sell your service station we will take those taxpayers' dollars and buy it." The next thing is that they will use taxpayers' money to drive the Canadian who owns a service station across the street, out of business.

Petro-Canada has an unlimited amount in its hip pocket because elected Members of Parliament choose to provide the board of directors with that kind of money. In committee we heard testimony to the effect that Petro-Canada is doing just that. This crown corporation, using taxpayers' money, is cutting prices on some corners and driving Canadian-owned service stations out of business. People who have put ten or twenty or thirty years of their lives into a small business cannot compete with a Crown corporation that has unlimited resources because it has access to the taxpayers' purse.

It is interesting that members of this House have historically voted to create the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, partly because it was to be a window on the industry and a source of advice to the government of the day. If we were to look at the Order Paper and Notices today, we would find a series of energy bills that have been reported from committee to the House. That committee has worked a lot of hard hours in bringing witnesses before it to hear testimony.

The bill we are looking at today, Mr. Speaker, affects PetroCan in a direct way. The amazing thing about the bill is that the government chose not to amend so much as a single comma in that legislation. If you look at the other bills on the Order Paper you will find the government is moving amendments. I was on the committee and witnesses told us there were things wrong with each piece of legislation, including this bill. But the government is not proposing any amendments to the bill regardless of the testimony of witnesses.

I spoke about a window, Mr. Speaker. If you read the transcripts of the committee hearings, what we have here is a very powerful body of appointed people on the PetroCan board of directors who advise the government on energy policy. A remarkable characteristic of each and every piece of energy legislation before us is that PetroCan will benefit. It will benefit more than the majority of other companies in the energy field. We have a window, Mr. Speaker, but when you stand back and look at how it is used, it should be clear that it is a biased window, one which is distorting Canadian energy policy so that a single corporation called PetroCan can supposedly get bigger and become healthier. Does it matter if that energy policy is hurting all those other companies? Does it really matter to the board of directors of PetroCan that there are several thousand Canadians out of work today because the advice those directors have been giving the government has been followed? Does it matter to them that in towns like Brooks, Alberta, or Kindersley, Saskatchewan, Canadians who have struggled for many years and built themselves a small welding shop and employed two or three people, have gone bankrupt and closed their doors? Is that the responsibility of those appointed people in PetroCan? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in part it is. But they do not have the responsibility of caring about that. They might as individuals, but it is the elected members of the House of Commons who have the responsibility to examine the impact of this proposed legislation, both direct and indirect.

In the last election, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals and the NDP successfully sold the Canadian people on the view that this party was against the expansion of a company called Petro-Can. I think most members of the NDP and the Liberal Party believed that; they certainly said it a lot. Their energy critic, now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, certainly told them that. But the reality was that that was a lie. It had nothing to do with reality. In its brief period in government the Conservative Party proposed that legislation should be passed which would encourage Canadians to voluntarily, through share offerings, provide the capital to PetroCan in order to make it the biggest in the country, as fast as the national will would allow. If we think about that, what would be the difference today? Do Canadians realize that every gallon of heating oil which goes into their house costs a little bit more because the government is giving it to PetroCan? Do Canadians really understand that every gallon of gasoline which goes into their car costs a little bit more because the government is giving it to PetroCan?

Mr. Kristiansen: And Gulf, Shell and Esso.

Mr. Hawkes: Do Canadians really understand that everything which travels by truck, such as the food they eat and the furniture they buy, everything which travels by rail, such as the wheat which makes our bread, and everything that travels by plane or by water costs them a little bit more because the Liberals and the NDP want to give more money to PetroCan? They want to take it out of the pockets of Canadians, but as they do they make everything we consume more expensive. Would that be true if private investors, pension plans—and individual Canadians were providing the money as equity for PetroCan?

Mr. Kristiansen: You had better believe it.

Mr. Hawkes: It would not be true. Well, the NDP says "you had better believe it". Canadians are paying this money through taxes. We are collecting it from the senior citizen who is struggling in this time of inflation to hang on to his home. We are making the cost of heating that home more expensive so we can give the money to PetroCan, when in fact right from day one there was never any need for taxpayers to pay that bill. Individual Canadians would pay that bill and the members over there would have the money to start creating jobs in their ridings, or increase pensions. Members opposite should look at my amendment. Essentially it says that the taxpayers of this country shall be saved the expenditure of $2 billion. That is two thousand million dollars! If you pay 20 per cent interest on that—and a lot of home owners are—that is $400 million a year. That money could be available to cut taxes a little bit. That money could be available to put into our health care system, or it could be available to put into pensions. But the NDP does not really believe in pensions. The NDP does not really believe in health care systems. The NDP believes that governments should be collecting money from the pockets of taxpayers to buy service stations and to compete with other service station operators, the little people of this country who own the small businesses. That is what the NDP believes in.

• (1600)

The money has already been borrowed and it is already costing Canadian taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars per year. But do you know where that money goes, Mr. Speaker? It goes to Germany, the Arab states, Switzerland and New York. It goes right out of this country in the form of interest payments, payments which do not have to be made. If the Liberal government had not borrowed the money, the government would not have to make the interest payments and the taxpayers would not have to pick up the cost. That mentality of the Liberal government is allowed to continue.

When I was elected to this chamber, 17 cents out of every tax dollar collected went to pay that interest, large portions of it went right out of the country. Less than three years later, 22 cents out of every tax dollar goes to pay interest, again a large proportion leaves the country. What does that process do? It causes the value of the dollar to drop. That is just one of the things that happens. If our dollar is worth only 81 cents or 82 cents, then everything we import is more expensive. Our dollar is so weak that the government tells us we have to keep interest rates high to protect it. These interest rates are 18 per cent or 19 per cent. What do you think these high interest rates do to our economy, Mr. Speaker? When the corner grocery store has to borrow money to put groceries on the shelf and has to pay 18 per cent or 19 per cent interest, that corner grocery store has to charge more for its groceries. The same thing happens with the car dealer around the corner. When he brings cars to his lot, he has to finance them and he has to charge more for his automobiles. What about the furniture dealer? The furniture dealer has to put furniture in his shop and he has to pay interest on his goods. You, the consumer, has to pay more for the piece of furniture or the dishwasher or whatever.

The government is running a deficit this year which people estimate to be in the order of $15 billion. The amount of money this government wants to give to Petro-Canada is one third of that amount. Interest at the rate of 20 per cent on $15 billion amounts to $3 billion. Those amounts are so huge that people cannot comprehend them.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said in this chamber and in committee that she would like the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to find $700 million more so that pensioners, our senior citizens, those who are really hurting, could be helped. But that is just one quarter of the amount of increased interest payments. Just think about it, it is only one quarter of the increased interest payments.

We should have a government with the courage to make a choice by deciding what is the best way to spend taxpayers' dollars. We should have a government that knows you cannot have everything. Faced with a choice, how many Liberal members opposite, for instance with $100 million to spend, would choose one of the following on which to spend it: pensions, medical care, a reduction in taxes or the buying of service stations? Are there any members opposite who would pick as their first choice the buying of service stations? I ask members opposite or members of the NDP, is that the social priority in Canada today, to buy service stations? Is the buying of service stations more important than the creation of jobs? Is the buying of service stations more important than the provision of education to our young people? That is what this bill is all about.

Members of Parliament in the New Democratic Party and in the Liberal Party of Canada are determined to make the public policy choice that the buying of service stations is more important than the health of home owners, because that is what this bill is all about. I see the minister responsible for housing is in the chamber. We will probably have the Minister of National Health and Welfare voting for this bill once more. We will probably see her standing up during the voting process and, in effect, saying, "Yes, the expenditure of tax funds to buy service stations is more important than the expenditure of tax funds to provide better quality medical care." Each Liberal member opposite later today will be asked by this whip and his House leader to support the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his personal public policy choice that the buying of service stations is more important than health, more important than job creation and more important than pensions. Given past performance, members of the Liberal Party, including 74 from the province of Quebec, will stand up and say, "Yes, the minister of energy is right. Buying service stations is more important than health care or pensions."

Interestingly enough, members of the New Democratic Party have consistently through their speeches—and if we hear one of them later today speaking on this bill, we will hear the same thing again—tried to cover up the fact that the choice is service stations or pensions; service stations or health; service stations or education. You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

Members of the Liberal Party stood in this House five or six weeks ago and in effect said, "We will cut transfers to the provinces to the tune of $5.7 billion." Just a few days later, they stand up and support this bill to take $5.5 billion—an almost identical amount—which is to be given to the board of directors of Petro-Canada. It is being taken away from health care, social services, adolescents in trouble and from services to senior citizens. It will be taken away from all of those potential recipients and it will be given to the board of directors of Petro-Canada so they can go out and buy more service stations. That has happened within the space of a week. It is a graphic example of the will of the Liberal Party of Canada. That party has progressed over a period of years to the point where its willingness to support a bad idea simply to maintain a particularly bad cabinet minister in office causes its members to take leave of their common sense. It is interesting to meet them in the halls and to speak with them individually. I ask hon. members opposite whether they would choose to purchase service stations or to give more money to senior citizens? I ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) whether he is content with purchasing service stations rather than providing relief to the victims of UFFI? Will he rise later in the House and vote to give that money to the service stations rather than for other purposes? Has he clearly identified for himself that that is the public policy choice?

When the House votes for this particular piece of legislation, it guarantees that for the next three years, and perhaps longer, every consumer commodity in the country will cost more than it needs to cost. Every piece of food that we consume, everything involving heat and every plastic product made with petroleum, will cost each and every Canadian more money than they would have cost if this bill were defeated and not passed. This is the issue which lies behind the bill. Because of the financial circumstances of the government, it will have to borrow that money. The bill will provide the corporation with the mandate to expand, but the government and Canadian taxpayers will have to borrow more money. This may cause interest rates to remain higher than they would normally which, in turn, will affect the cost of everything we use. That money will have to be borrowed abroad, which will have some impact on the value of the Canadian dollar and will make everything we import more expensive. Those are the consequences of standing in the House of Commons today and voting for this bill.

Sometimes we have to vote for pieces of legislation which increase expenses, but if there is one crystal clear example which has come to our attention in the last 12 months that we do not have to borrow that money and take it out of the pockets of taxpayers, surely it is this one. There are pension funds and individual Canadians who would welcome the opportunity to invest in Petro-Canada, to invest in that maple leaf which flies on its service stations. All we have to do is to allow the corporation to seek some or all of the capital it requires in the money markets. It is a well-endowed corporation; its potential is enormous. It could easily become the biggest oil company in the country, but we do not have to do it with the money of taxpayers, we do not have to do it with the borrowings of taxpayers, we do not have to drive up the cost of everything we use. We must simply allow people to put some of their savings into the growth of Petro-Canada.

This was our vision in 1979. It is a vision which wears well. It is probably more true today as a necessity than it was in 1979. The financial situation of the government was better in 1979 than it is in 1982. We are on the wrong path whenever we have the choice of allowing people to accomplish voluntarily a desirable objective and we compel them to do so. I would choose to make it voluntary, but in this particular instance there are individual Canadians, pension funds and small Canadian companies that, given the opportunity to become shareholders in Petro-Canada, would do so. Surely hon. members opposite could bring some pressure to bear on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to allow at least part of the growth of that company to occur in that way, to save Canadian taxpayers that amount of money, and to free up money for pensions and health care rather than to purchase service stations.

There is now a public record of advice and information which has been gathered by the special committee on energy. Nowhere in the record is there an indication that what I have suggested to the House at this time could not be done or would not be a good idea. We are the victims of the stubbornness of a single vision of a single man. We cannot escape from fulfilling the obligation which we assumed when we ran for public office—to act on behalf of our constituents in the public good. That is our obligation, that is our responsibility. We do not have to support one man who is on a bad track. We can bring him to his senses and we can bring cabinet to its senses. Then we can start to make the kinds of choices which I believe brought most of us to the chamber—some sense of responsibility for the economic health of the nation and for the less advantaged people in the nation. We could start to help those who need help. Surely our electorate did not send us here to make the choice that their dollars should be used on a priority basis for the purchase of service stations rather than for the provision of education, health care or pensions. Surely we did not come here with that in mind and we do not run campaigns on that basis.

Then why should we feel any sense of compulsion to stand in the chamber today and support the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his determination to use the dollars of taxpayers on a priority basis to purchase things that we do not need as a nation rather than to use tax dollars to purchase and to provide things which are really necessary in the nation?

The Conservative Party rang the bells of the House for 16 days for several reasons, but the primary one was to split Bill C-94, and it was split into eight parts. Once that split had occurred, we could call witnesses before a committee to help us know what was right and what was wrong with each of these eight pieces of legislation. The government acknowledges that there is a great deal wrong with Bill C-102 and Bill C-104. The House will get to those bills before much longer, but the government is proposing massive changes to the two pieces of legislation.

In the case of Bill C-101, the government, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the officials of Petro-Canada have ignored every piece of advice which was given to the committee. This legislation will become law in exactly the same manner as it was originally worded, unless the members in this Chamber decide collectively that it should not become law.

I moved a series of four amendments, but the first one, the replacement of the word "four" by the word "two", is the significant amendment in regard to saving the consumers of Canada some money and in restoring a philosophy of public expenditures which puts people ahead of pride. It is a philosophy which puts people ahead of the minister, and I urge members of this Chamber to vote for this amendment. I look forward to the opportunity of bringing the three remaining amendments to the attention of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the amendment defeated on division.

The question is now on amendment No. 2.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. What Bill C-101 says is that the equity capital for Canada shall be issued in the form of shares, each of which is worth $100,000. I would hope that members of the House would see the day where, in the best interest of the taxpayers of Canada, they would want to sell some of those shares to Canadians to get back some of the invested money and use it for other purposes. The effect of my amendment would simply be to change the par value of those shares from $100,000 each to $100.00 each. This would be an amount that many Canadians could afford. Some day in the future, instead of the government owning all those shares, if we wanted individual Canadians to own part of that company, we could sell them those shares at $100.00 par value, rather than restrict the sale to large corporations which can afford to pay $100,000.

Perhaps there is a member of the Liberal Party who could afford one share at $100,000, but I could not afford it and I do not believe most of the members of my caucus could either. I know that most of my constituents and, in fact, very few Canadians could afford that amount.

All we are asking for in this amendment, which I hope all hon. members will agree with, is to provide an opportunity for every Canadian to participate in Petro-Canada at some future date. This amendment does not change the total amount; it just makes the issuance of the shares worth $100.00 each instead of $100,00 each. That would provide an opportunity for the average Canadian to participate in Petro-Canada instead of just the big multinationals or large corporations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the amendment defeated on division.

The question is now on amendment No. 3.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, this amendment is simply to help the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is very brief. The way in which the clause is now worded requires the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to do something with which he may not agree. All that we on this side of the House are attempting to do is to allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to have some option by replacing the word "shall", which in legal terms is a requirement, with the word "may", which would provide a future minister of energy, mines and resources with some flexibility and not require him to do something with which he may disagree. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the amendment defeated on division.

The question is now on amendment No. 4.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, to really understand the implication of the clause it must be carefully read. The clause with which we are concerned, as it appears in this bill, allows a small group of appointed people—the board of directors of Petro-Canada and a couple of appointed ministers of the Crown—the ability to borrow money.

An hon. Member: Just like a corporation.

Mr. Hawkes: I heard a member from the NDP say, "The same as a private corporation." Perhaps he should check with his party's energy critic, because it is not the same. We moved a motion to restrict the borrowing of the corporation to the limits of its assets.. That is the discipline of a private corporation. Money is lent to private corporations up to the amount of its assets, but what is provided for in this particular piece of legislation—which is quite disturbing and should be disturbing to every member in the House—is that there is a small group of appointed people who can borrow an unlimited amount of money.

Earlier, the House expressed its opinion that $5,500 million of taxpayers' money should be given in the form of equity to Petro-Canada. If we do not change this clause, that same board of directors, with the concurrence of a couple of appointed Cabinet ministers, will be able to borrow $20 billion, $40 billion or $100 billion more. Do the members opposite realize that it is the Crown—

An hon. Member: The customers.

Mr. Hawkes: It is the taxpayers of the nation whose money is being put at risk, and no elected body has the power to stop that action. If there is one fundamental element to our system of government, it is that people who are to be taxed have the right to choose who shall do the taxing. They have the right to vote for one person rather than another in the expectation that the elected person has been given by them the power to tax. However, in the clause as it is in this bill, appointed people shall determine what taxes shall be paid in the future, and elected people will have no power, no responsibility and no authority to say whether they are right or wrong.

• (1630)

We on this side of the House in the Conservative Party of Canada think that that is dead wrong. Our kind of democracy exists and hopefully flourishes because one of its principles is that we have the power to elect those who will have the power to take things away from us, such as our freedom, in the sense of criminal law, and our money, in the sense of taxation law. Then, if the people we elect take our freedom or our money away from us, we can get rid of them at the next election and choose people who approach the world with a little more sensitivity and sense.

In Bill C-101 with regard to Petro-Canada, the government is seeking to give appointed people the authority to tax us in the future, because today the government borrows money without checking with us, the elected people, and makes us responsible for paying it back in the future, and we never have a say as to whether borrowing it was a good or a bad idea. If hon. members of the New Democratic Party think that appointed people should be able to tax Canadians, then let them have the courage to put it out in a pamphlet. Let them have the courage to go to the electorate and say, "Elected people should not have any responsibility for determining taxes. Hand it over to appointed people and let them decide what taxes we shall pay." If we leave this piece of legislation alone, that will be the principle to which we agree.

All I am seeking to do in my amendment is to assert that that matter concerning this large amount of money which is to be borrowed today and paid back tomorrow by the taxpayers of this country should be brought to this chamber, to the Parliament of Canada, to the elected body, and be approved or rejected by the people who were elected to come here to approve or reject taxation.

Mr. Smith: That is what we are doing today.

Mr. Hawkes: The parliamentary secretary to the Liberal House leader shouts, "That is what we are doing today." Well, if one believes that elected people are the only ones who should be allowed to tax, then one must vote for the amendment that I have proposed. If one shouts, "Nay", then one is asserting that appointed people should be able to put the taxpayers at risk and should, in effect, be able to tax Canadians in the future. That is what a "Nay" means. A "Yea" means that this is a democracy and that elected people should be the only ones allowed to tax. A "Nay" means that elected people should be given power to tax. I urge every hon. member in this chamber to vote "Yea" for this amendment for that reason.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: On division!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment defeated on division.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kempling: On division.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is report stage and no debate is permitted at this stage.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of pain to the hon. member for—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: —is it Calgary South or Calgary West? I forget just where—

Some hon. Members: Everywhere.

Mr. Blaikie: —because I do not think there is anyone in this House who can match the capacity of the hon. member from Calgary for a kind of oozing, shrill, self-righteousness concerning the position of other parties. I can only say how relieved I am that we have come to the part in the debate where he is no longer speaking because it was difficult, I am sure, for anyone with any intelligence to listen to him go on about the nature of borrowing in the private sector as if the customers of Imperial Oil, Gulf or Shell never paid at the pumps or anywhere else for the borrowing by those private corporations and as if it were only when it came to Petro-Canada that such was the case. He demonstrated what many Conservative members demonstrate from time to time, that is, a complete blindness to the way in which the private sector operates and to the way in which its costs are passed on to the consumers. However, they only manage to notice that when and if it is true of Crown corporations.

The hon. member went on at great, self-righteous length concerning the fact that the Conservative Party would like to spend more money on health care and would not want to spend all this money on Petro-Canada. He said that the Conservative Party would not want to spend all this money to increase the borrowing authority of Crown corporations, but would rather spend it on health care. We certainly have not seen any evidence of that from the provincial Progressive Conservative governments across this land. I do not see any inclination on their part to spend more money on health care. I did not see the hon. member standing up to object to the $6.5 billion which this government will give to private oil companies under the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, and I did not see him standing up to say, "Do not give that money away. Spend it on health care." We did not hear anything about that. It is absolutely sickening, Mr. Speaker.

We are here to discuss Petro-Canada this afternoon. We will not spend any more time on the obvious inadequacies of the hon. member from Calgary West or South, or wherever. He is obviously from Calgary. He might better be described as the member for the oil companies.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Blaikie: It is a matter of public record that Petro-Canada was first formed as a result of pressure put on the Liberals by the New Democratic Party during the minority Parliament of 1972-74. The NDP put pressure on the Liberals to begin setting up a coherent energy policy for Canada, an energy policy which would see the interests of Canadians served rather than the interests of the private oil companies and the interests of the United States of America. Unfortunately, the Liberals have managed to set up Petro-Canada but have not yet developed a coherent energy policy which serves Canadian interests. They have failed to set up a coherent energy policy because all they have done was to insert Petro-Canada into an otherwise unchanged policy on energy economics and on the role of resource development in the Canadian economy.

This is true in a number of ways.

Basically, Petro-Canada is not the threat to private industry that my Progressive Conservative colleagues have tried to make it out to be. Their position on Petro-Canada is an ideological position. It is sometimes hard to sort out. They have two to three positions on Petro-Canada. We will deal with that later. However, the people of Canada passed their judgment on the Conservative position on Petro-Canada in the federal election campaign of 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Talk about Saskatchewan now!

Mr. Blaikie: The people made a judgment on the ideological position of the Conservatives rather than on their practical ones. It is quite all right to have ideological positions, but I just wish the Progressive Conservative Party would have the guts to carry on the debate with regard to Petro-Canada at that level instead of trying to mix the issues. It does not like to do that because it knows it is out of touch with the Canadian people on this issue, not to mention a whole lot of others. The Liberals, in spite of Tory rhetoric, have really not departed from an energy policy which favours private interests over the interests of the public. In fact, it could be argued that PetroCan is the best friend the multinationals ever had. It is a ready source of capital through joint venture in high-risk exploration while the private companies have seen their traditional monopoly over easily extracted resource reserves left untouched. What is happening? The people of Canada will pay for all the risk exploration, getting only a small amount of equity in return. The private oil companies, the great risk takers and entrepreneurs that the Progressive Conservatives are always fantasizing about, will have the cushion of government money at the beginning of exploration and the cushion of the profits which will be theirs alone after.

• (1640)

We argue that PetroCan should be the number one oil company in Canada, and that the Liberal national energy policy is really a political charade by which Canadians are given to understand that the Liberal Party is actually doing something to recover control over a crucial area of our economic life, our energy resources, a control shamefully and cynically given away over the years by the same Liberal Party.

The only credibility which the Liberals have in this so-called move to the left comes from the Conservative Party. The Conservatives, in their usual politically stupid way, are giving the Liberals far more credit than they deserve. They rant and rave about socialism, public ownership and all this kind of thing, which is exactly what the Liberals want them to do. They want the Canadian people to believe that is what they are actually doing. Their best allies are the myopic speeches given time after time by Progressive Conservative members in this House.

The real truth of the matter is that the Liberals are no different than they ever were. We witnessed just in the last 24 hours that they are still willing to mindlessly and shortsightedly sell off our energy reserves on the basis of unproved reserves. This is a mistake they made once before. My leader pointed this out two days in a row in question period. It is a mistake they are preparing to make again.

They talk about surpluses. When it comes to a non-renewable energy resource, in the long run there is no such thing as a surplus. Only an idiot would get up and talk about a surplus after all the literature regarding the limits to growth which has appeared in the last 10 to 15 years. It is evident that it is ridiculous to talk about surpluses. In the long run, there is no surplus of a finite resource. Our resources have to be managed accordingly.

I said the Liberals were no different than they ever were. They were sucked in by the Americans two years ago, just like the Tories, because the Tories believe what the Liberals believe when it comes to megaprojects. They were sucked into believing that the pre-build of the southern portion of the Alaska gas pipeline would be a pre-build. That is to say that the construction of the whole pipeline would follow, that there would be a post-build. It now appears that was the height of gullibility on the part of the Liberal government.

The Liberals are no different than they ever were in that PetroCan represents no change from the energy economics and developmental model followed so long by the multinationals in Canada. Instead of irresponsible drilling in the Beaufort Sea and across the Arctic by multinationals alone, we now have to bear the pain of watching our own corporation doing that kind of irresponsible energy development. This is what I meant earlier when I said that all the Liberals have done is to insert PetroCan into an otherwise unchanged energy policy. For those of us in the New Democratic Party, this is the tragedy of PetroCan. We do not see PetroCan as simply another big oil company, only publicly owned, imitating private oil companies in everything it does. We want PetroCan to take on the job of beginning to manage our energy resources in a more responsible, democratic and farsighted way, a way which sees the political task in this area as one of stewardship rather than quick exploitation.

We want PetroCan to embody a new ideal of what it means to be involved in energy development, developing our resources in an efficient and life-affirming ways. Resource development should be managed in such a way as to encourage conservation rather than taking advantage of ever-increasing commercial promotion of energy-consuming devices. Resource development should have as its priority the development of resources that are renewable, that can be extracted and used in an environmentally safe way. Resource development should be geared to take into account the long and the short-term real, economic, environmental and social costs of extraction, production and marketing and also the cost of replacing the energy being developed and used. A resource development policy in this country ought to take into account the fact that we live not just on the North American continent, but on the planet earth. We need to develop our resource policy in such a way to take account of our ethical responsibility to make sure that what resources are needed for the development of human life on the whole planet are taken into account. This PetroCan does not do in the same way as the multinationals. We want to see that kind of energy development embodied in PetroCan. We want to see PetroCan able to do that as the number one energy company in this country.

I often hear that I am not being realistic, that realistic is the bottom line, that realistic is two years from now. Let me tell hon. members that realism is getting about the business of having a sane and ethically responsible energy policy now.

That is the realistic program. Idealism, in the negative sense of idealism, means illusion, and in that sense the idealists are those, like many on my right and indeed many across the way, who think we can go on as we are doing now. They are the ones who are not being realistic.

We in the New Democratic Party would like to see Petro-Can, and for that matter all Crown corporations, set up differently. The present PetroCan board of directors should be replaced with a board of directors selected equally from the north, from environmental organizations, from business, labour, religious groups, consumer groups and other public interest groups. Perhaps the board of directors could be renamed the board of stewards as a way of saying what we want PetroCan to become.

PetroCan and other Crown corporations should be more responsible and accountable to Parliament. Instead we find the Liberals moving even more toward bureaucratic authoritarianism of these issues by wanting to give themselves power to set up new energy corporations without parliamentary approval. In Bill C-102, they want to set up new energy corporations without even coming to Parliament, with no parliamentary debate. We have seen too much of this here. The Progressive Conservatives yelp a lot about it. But in 1980 it was the New Democratic Party which took the Liberals to task for doing something for which it did not have parliamentary approval. That was to build the southern portion of the Alaska gas pipeline. The NDP stood up to the Liberals. The Progressive Conservatives voted with them to do that for which they did not have parliamentary approval. They should think about that the next time they get up and start waxing self-righteous about what the Liberals are doing to Parliament.

Mr. Taylor: Who supported them in property rights?

Mr. Blaikie: The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) mentions property rights. That is another way the Progressive Conservatives have of telling only half the truth all the time. They talk about the NDP opposition, including property rights, in the Constitution. They do not talk about all the Progressive Conservative premiers who did not want property rights in the Constitution. You will never, as long as you live, hear that coming out of the mouth of the hon. member for Bow River. He just likes to stick to the portion of the truth that suits his fantasies.

Mr. Taylor: Who took it out of the charter?

Mr. Blaikie: Having noted the division between the hon. member for Bow River and the Progressive Conservative premiers in this country, maybe it is time to say a bit more about the idealogical chaos in the Progressive Conservative Party. This is something which bears on the debate this afternoon. I would like to know who speaks for the Progressive Conservative Party on some of these issues.

• (1650)

Mr. Taylor: We all do.

Mr. Broadbent: Right on!

Mr. Blaikie: That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. They all do. It is the greatest cacophony and confusion one could imagine because we have, on the one hand, Robert Stanfield saying, "Do not forget the old Tory tradition of the appropriate, positive role of government in the economy," and then we have the member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) thinking that anything that smacks of having at least one Crown corporation exist, still existing, that this is part of the creeping communist conspiracy. Who is speaking for the Conservative Party? Is it Mr. Stanfield or is it the member for York-Peel?

Mr. Broadbent: "We all do."

Mr. Blaikie: Has the Conservative Party been so infiltrated by American neo-conservatives that they cannot even see the value of Crown corporations any more?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: It is a terrible thing to see them go down the tube like this. Who speaks for the Progressive Conservative Party on foreign affairs?

Mr. Kempling: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Broadbent: What about Manitoba?

Mr. Taylor: Where is Allan Blakeney today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The debate is hardly dealing with foreign affairs at this stage. The hon. member might stay with the subject matter of the debate.

Mr. Blaikie: I was trying to address what I consider to be a general malaise within the Progressive Conservative Party, and which I think bears on their approach to PetroCan. There are many people, at least I like to think there are, who are not as against Petro-Canada as some of their more right wing ideological friends try to make the party out to be. At least we hope that is the case. We have no indication of it, because they have two or three different positions on PetroCan. Why do they not have the guts to come out and say they do not like PetroCan? Why they do not go right across the country and say that? Of course, they did, Mr. Speaker, and they lost the election. That is what happened.

I was speaking about the ideological malaise within my colleagues to the right. I mentioned foreign affairs only as an analogy to what I am talking about when it comes to Petro-Can, and therefore I think it relevant, Mr. Speaker.

We have two different factions speaking for the Progressive Conservative Party all the time. Who speaks for them on foreign affairs? Is it the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), or is the hon. member for York-Peel, or is it the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)? What is going on here? Who speaks on foreign affairs?

Mr. Broadbent: They all do.

Mr. Blaikie: How many bases do they want to touch at one time?

An hon. Member: One hundred bases.

Mr. Kempling: Taking it out of the cookie jar again.

Mr. Blaidie: They take the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) off the subcommittee on foreign affairs and they put on the hon. member for York-Peel, who gets his view of Central America from reading journals from the United Fruit Company in 1955.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is what he is reading.

Mr. Kempling: At the cookie jar again.

Mr. Blaikie: I do not want to spend too much time, Mr. Speaker, on the right-wing element of the Progressive Conservative Party which seeks to destroy its leader—and will destroy its party, if it is allowed to continue. So I say, continue, continue, go right ahead, keep on, continue and take over your party. It is the best thing that could happen.

Mr. Taylor: Wishful thinking.

Mr. Blaikie: I was speaking about Crown corporations, that they ought to be more accountable to Parliament. We find a good example in Norway of how Crown corporations can be made accountable to parliament. Statoil in Norway has to make annual reports to parliament; it has to lay its five-year plan before the parliament of Norway. These are the kinds of things we would like to see. We do not want Crown corporations to be alienated, bureaucratic institutions, any more than anyone else. We want to see them become part of the community, part of our economic life, where people will have more say in what they do where people see them not as distant organizations but as part of the decision-making process and economic life of the community.

When we vote for the expansion of Petro-Canada and for the opportunities that this bill makes possible, we are voting for the idea of PetroCan that we have, because we hope that the day will yet come when we have a government that will make PetroCan the kind of energy corporation that will do a service to the notion of public ownership, rather than the kind of disservice the Liberals have rendered us over the past few years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Petro-Canada—Acquisition of Petrofina—collection of tax; (b) Canadian ownership charge; the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble)—Finance—Projected budget deficit; (b) Foreign aid expenditures—request for referral to committee; the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett)—External Affairs—Namibia—selection of electoral system; (b) Position taken by South Africa and United States.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Mr. Cosgrove (for Mr. Lalonde) that Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): We had a rather full debate this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I will not take much of the time of the House. It is important for Canadian taxpayers and for people who have been viewing us today, or perhaps anyone who has been listening or any member of the press who has been in the gallery, to take a close look at what the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) said. Anyone who takes a look at it will see a speech written by a researcher in which the researcher laid out the wish of the New Democratic Party for Petro-Canada. There was one real specific wish, that it have a different board of directors, with people from the north on it and with people from labour on it.

Look at the transcript of today's debate, Mr. Speaker. The report reading stage is the time to move amendments. It is the time for a party to indicate clearly to the Canadian people and to members of this Chamber what is wrong with the piece of legislation. It is the time to indicate to the Canada people what you would like to have. What do we get, Mr. Speaker? We got a speech, but we did not get an amendment to vote on. How credible is a political party that says it wants change in legislation but does not have the courage to move amendments that would change that piece of legislation in the direction it claims it wants?

Mr. Taylor: Right on!

Mr. Hawkes: What kind of political courage does it take to stand up and read a researcher speech and say all kinds of pious, wonderful things that are not followed by action? We find as we get a little older—maybe when we were younger we were swayed more easily by words—that one of the characteristics of getting a little older is that you start to look at what people do, not just what they say.

Mr. Kristiansen: You are learning.

Mr. Hawkes: There is the test. What do they do? In the case of the New Democratic Party, I suggest that the whole speech we have heard, of what they would like, is immediately suspect because they did nothing, they moved no amendments.

Mr. Kristiansen: What did the Tories do?

Mr. Hawkes: The NDP moved no amendments, they did not try to change the legislation, so how can they say they want it changed? They did not move for a change. Then you look at the speech of the hon. member and find that he ascribes to the Conservative Party of Canada, and to me in particular, all kinds of things which I supposedly believe in. But look at what I said, Mr. Speaker. Look at what I did, with amendments. You will find that those things ascribed to me are not things I said, they are not things I did, they are simply figments of the imagination of the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill. When a person says one thing and does another and when he says his opponents said something when they did not, I think one might be well advised to conclude that in the future one should not waste one's time even listening, because someone is trying to do a con job.

• (1700)

Let me repeat in summary for the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill why I think his party and Liberal backbenchers should vote against this legislation at third reading. The decision to run for public office carries with it the responsibility to stand and speak out and vote on issues. Frequently they are difficult, but surely we must have the courage to tell Canadians what we believe reality to be and to act in a fashion consistent with our view of reality.

Those who vote for this piece of legislation are voting to increase the costs of everything Canadians use. Every bit of food coming into their homes, every piece of furniture and every trip Canadians take will cost more if this legislation passes, and the money will be used to buy existing businesses, including service stations. This does not have to be. We are not increasing costs to provide more money for education, health care or other things for which many of us came to this chamber to work. We are not making things cost more so that we can create more jobs. We are simply handing money over to a group of appointed people so that they can go around and buy things like service stations. That is the hard public choice. It can be covered in any way we like, but the reality is there.

What else do we accomplish when we increase those costs? I suggest that every single member of the New Democratic Party and the members of the Liberal Party obtain copies of the transcript of the hearings held in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation this morning because what they will find is that the combination of energy policies of this government, including this Petro-Canada bill, have increased the cost of transportation fuels through taxation. The increase has not been in the real cost of gasoline but in taxation. As a result, our fuel costs are higher than those in the United States of America. We are a big nation with very few people in it, and transportation is very important to our economy. When we want to sell our wheat, our lumber or our manufactured products to other nations, we have to transport them, and in Canada that costs more than it does in the United States because of taxation on fuel. We are losing customers for our wheat, our lumber, products from our mines and our manufactured goods because we have a federal government which taxes fuel oils so heavily that our transportation costs are greater than they are in the United States.

Any Canadian who makes a trip to the United States in the near future can ask someone there about gasoline and heating oil costs, and the truth can be found. Two thirds of the price of transportation fuels and home heating oils in Canada is taxation. Only one third is the cost of the commodity. Two thirds is taxation, and that is a choice the Liberal government is making and the New Democratic Party is supporting. They are saying it is all right that our transportation costs are higher than those of our competitors. When people will not buy our lumber, the products of our mines or our manufactured goods, Canadians will be out of work, and they are out of work now.

We may have difficulty seeing the relationship between $5.5 billion for Petro-Canada and people being laid off at a mine in northern Ontario or northern Quebec, but there is that relationship. That relationship is caused by the policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). It is a relationship supported by the backbenchers of the Liberal Party and by the members of the New Democratic Party. They might laugh at the fact that the Conservative Party of Canada, at its policy convention and in its caucus, goes out of its way to encourage individual members to speak up and to share ideas, facts and information, but in a free society people of good will who work together and share good information are much more likely to reach good decisions.

To play "follow the leader" blindly and myopically without examining the facts is to invite disaster. I suggest that the entire package of energy legislation is a matter of playing "follow the leader" blindly, It is a disaster for this country, and the first building block is an idiotic proposal to increase the cost of everything we consume for the purpose of buying service stations rather than delivering services to people. I urge every member of this chamber to vote against this piece of legislation.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in a rather spirited oration, got himself into the field of foreign affairs, at which time he said I was replaced by the Tories in the subcommittee on Latin America. I would like to tell the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, and I ask him to accept my word as a gentleman—I know he is—that I voluntarily withdrew from that subcommittee on Latin America in order to spend my time on the United Nations disarmament question. I would like that to be clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has made his point.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to participate in this debate. I will be closing off the third reading debate on this particular piece of legislation, and I will say at the outset that I will be extremely brief.

I was somewhat concerned that the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) should suggest that the Government of Canada is providing too much money for the operation of Petro-Canada. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) mentioned that members of the Conservative Party have not stood in the House of Commons or, indeed, in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation and said they were against money being offered under the Petroleum Incentives Program. If the hon. member for Calgary West is so clear and so certain of his policies as they relate to Petro-Canada, then I cannot understand why he and his colleagues would not have placed a resolution before that party's policies convention which was recently held in Toronto. He did not take that step, and therefore I have to agree with others who have said that the Conservative Party's position on Petro-Canada is seven different positions, depending upon the day.

• (1710)

Mr. Paproski: You will find out after the next election.

Mr. Dingwall: When private sector companies purchase other companies, members of the Conservative Party refer to these transactions as sound economic business decisions and good investments, but when Petro-Canada takes over another company somehow that is regarded as wrong and not good business. I do not understand the rationale of that. It is important for Petro-Canada to increase its authorized capital so that it will continue to do the work we all want it to do.

The legislation before the House is an extremely important part of the government National Energy Program. During the 1980 election campaign the Liberal Party promised to strengthen and expand Petro-Canada as an instrument of energy policy. The government is committed to delivering on that promise which was formally repeated in the Speech from the Throne, and the importance of Petro-Canada was also mentioned in the National Energy Program. Bill C-101 will give effect to this particular promise, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was the subject of thorough and extensive examination in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation. Many witnesses appeared before the committee, including officials of Petro-Canada, the committee to Canadianize the petroleum industry, Canertech, Petro Canada International Assistance Corporation and the Canadian Federation of Independent Petroleum Marketers. The committee recommended no amendments to the bill.

I hope that members on all sides of the House will support the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cosgrove for Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division.

ENERGY MONITORING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH PETROLEUM MONITORING AGENCY AND TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-106, respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That Bill C-106, respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 42 of the French version by striking out lines 32 to 37 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"42. Le comité de la Chambre des communes habituellement chargé des questions énergétiques est saisi d'office de la présente loi lors de la première séance qui suit l'expiration d'un délai de cinq ans à compter de l'entrée en vigueur de celle-ci."

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary, I believe, wishes to speak to the amendment.

Mr. David Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I just have a brief explanatory statement about this particular amendment. Clause 42 was proposed by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) in committee and it was adopted by the committee. It is essentially the same provision as the one now contained in the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act. There exists, however, a discrepancy between the French and English versions of that provision. Whereas the English version deems the act to be referred to a committee of the House, the French version provides for an order of reference. Our understanding of the intent of this section is that the act is to be automatically referred to the committee. This is what the amendment we proposed at the report stage would do.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would just indicate that we have no objection to that report stage amendment. I would certainly recommend to my colleagues, if so desired, that after this stage is completed we move to third reading on this legislation at this point in time. We would be so disposed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, there was so much shouting I do not know what the question of privilege by the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was about. I would just like to have a clarification as to whether the announcement by the hon. member had anything to do with Dome Petroleum.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to this bill, on behalf of the New Democratic Party we would agree to this amendment. It is basically a technical amendment. We are prepared to give our consent and move into third reading tonight, and the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) will be our speaker on that part of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

• (1800)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I notice the commitment of the Conservative Party this evening, as its members vacate the House with great vigour, concerning the question of maintaining fair prices and adequate supplies for the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: Certainly, their performance over the last few months would indicate that this contempt has probably been amply demonstrated so that the electorate of Canada can fully understand the problems here. At any rate, the questions we would like to address concerning this particular piece of legislation relate to the need for a serious monitoring policy of the energy industry and, beyond serious monitoring, the ability to deal effectively with those aspects of it which are not in keeping with the interests of Canadians in general. Basically, in support of the need for this ongoing monitoring, I guess we do not have to look much further than to the issue of the Bertrand inquiry into the state of the competition within the oil industry over a substantial period of time. Of course, just to review very briefly the findings of that commission, they indicated that the Canadian people have been taken to the cleaners to the tune of some $12 billion over an extended period of time. Unfortunately, rather than putting anything in place to deal effectively with that kind of activity, there was a very weak monitoring agency, not an organization designed to pay attention to the needs of consumers. Over many years, the federal government has advocated amendments to the Combines Investigation Act which would allow for more effective treatment of this kind of activity. In terms of the history of the Combines Investigation Act, it probably goes back to an attempt between 1969 and 1971 to get new legislation before the House. Reactions from large elements of Canadian business, particularly the oil companies, have indicated that they are not interested and would not be prepared to support a government which would put in effective monitoring as well as provisions which protect Canadian consumers. Over the years, we have seen a tremendous failure on the part of the Liberal government to put anything in place which would protect the Canadian people from the colossal rip-offs which have occurred in the oil industry and which, to our own way of thinking, are continuing to take place.

Concerning the present state, I would like to deal with just one small facet of the monitoring and kinds of control which should go in. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) stood up to speak the other day. For years, he has continually said that this Parliament is in place to bring in competition legislation. He has watched the merger operations, the concentration of Canadian business, the release of the report on the oil industry, the continued concentration of the newspaper industry, but there has been nothing forthcoming. In terms of that particular aspect of the governments failures, the minister is now promising that maybe next spring or in the fall he will bring in legislation. But ultimately, in terms of the monitoring and the kind of control and roll-backs in price increases which are unjustified, or behaviour which is unjustified as far as competitive aspects are concerned, I doubt that we will see anything from the government.

The legislation before us this afternoon is certainly not the kind of legislation which will protect Canadian consumers or small businesses involved in the energy industry. We will certainly find, under this kind of monitoring, although it is a very small step, the same type of control which the multinational corporations, in particular, have exerted in this country.. The competition legislation is one important aspect, but there are certainly other aspects which need to be considered. The one strange fact is that when we do wind up with examples of tremendous rip-offs of Canadian consumers exploitation of small businesses involved in or related to the energy industry and, beyond the exploitation, actual, concerted attempts to drive them out of business in order to maximize that dollar gleaned from the consumer, we find absolutely no action on the part of the government.

The NDP would like to see a commission or a committee which would have the right to do a thorough study, a complete monitoring of the actions of the energy companies, and which would have the power to roll back unfair prices in cases of blatant abuse. It should have the power to regulate fair business practices. What we would advocate is a much stronger proposition. The government should have the power to monitor the activities of the energy companies. We would like to see additional powers in place to roll back unfair prices and to protect Canadian consumers as well as Canadian business involved in the energy industry.

The critical aspect concerning this particular legislation, as far as we can determine, is that there is a need to put this material in place. However, both the government and the Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, have not put this forward as a priority, in our opinion. As a matter of fact, throughout the entire debate on the energy issue, whether with regard to Bill C-48 or the current legislation before us today, the Conservative Party, which has ranted and raved in the House over many of the issues, has really fought on the side of the multinational oil companies—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: —on the side of the large oil companies in Canada, advocating higher prices and non-interference in a very concentrated industry in which five major oil companies have pretty well had the run of this country for many years. When it came down to the crunch in the very weak-kneed and, I would say, delicate attempts by this government to provide some additional measures to protect consumers and small business people, the Conservative Party screamed the rafters down, saying that we were ruining the oil companies. Basically, over the years, it has been the oil companies which have caused tremendous problems for the people of Canada, whether concerning supply or pricing.

Mr. Gustafson: That is because the NDP always aligns with the Liberals!

Mr. Skelly: I hear hon. members across the way and from the Conservative Party screaming that it is all the fault of the NDP. However, I would suggest to Your Honour that it is very clear, if we look at the voting patterns in this House, that both the Liberals and the Conservatives have the same philosophy with regard to giving the oil companies exactly what they want and failing to actually put legislation into place. It is certainly not the NDP which stands up to say it does not want competition legislation. The government has failed to bring it in, while the Conservatives have said, "If you bring it in, we will tie it up forever or put it on the back burner," as it were. In terms of what the members of the Conservative Party are saying, it is basically a problem with the Conservatives and Liberals on this.

• (1810)

To go back, the history of Bill C-106 eventually comes out of and has its historical roots in the Canada Oil and Gas Act, Bill C-48. Essentially what we have is a bill which took approximately a year to get through the House. It was fought over, amended, and changed and worked through. It involved a tremendous amount of time. It dealt with taxation proposals, Canadianization proposals, and the industrial strategy attached to the megaprojects in which aspects of the energy legislation would guarantee that the spin-off benefits came to Canadians.

Weak as they were, the members of the Conservative Party hollered, yelled, and fought alongside the New Democratic Party in attempting to get some improvements, especially the industrial strategy. When they departed, they did so to support the oil companies. That was their interest in that legislation. And it carried over into the bell-ringing episode. They turned around in this House when they felt that the energy package laid before them was unacceptable and created an impasse in the House during which the bells rang for an extremely long period of time, and none of the business of the House was done.

When the agreement was finished, did we work these bills for a year? Did we look after the interests of Canadians, consumers and small business people? No. The bills are being shot through with the speed of a rocket.

It is extremely unfortunate that these bills are being allowed to proceed because of a very ill-conceived activity on the part of the Conservative Party. It not only disrupted the House of Commons in an unwarranted, childish and foolish manner, but gave the government the opportunity to bring in this very poorly designed legislation. Because of the inept nature of the Conservatives, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) must be laughing up his sleeve and having a field day.

These bills, which are going through with the speed of light, will have tremendous effects on Canadians and small businesses. These bills are being stuffed through at an incredible pace. This is all part of the deal the Conservative Party put up "to protect" Canadians. I am absolutely astounded, considering the work that was done regarding Bill C-48. For them to think that they have somehow created a deal for Canadians is a sad mistake. They have shortchanged the Canadian people.

The beneficiaries will continue to be the oil companies. It is unfortunate that we are not taking more time considering that this is extremely important to the country.

I would like to dwell for a moment on a comment that came from a member opposite, that this was some kind of nefarious plot between the Liberals and the NDP. The only aspect we take any solace in goes back to the days when the minority government was in place, from 1972 to 1974. Then there was a great deal of pressure from this party to create PetroCan.

In terms of monitoring, we not only need effective competition legislation but an organization that is capable of carrying out effective monitoring, the ability to roll back unfair prices, and to terminate and modify practices which are unfair. In addition, we need a window on the industry, the PetroCan concept, the development of a Canadian-owned petroleum corporation, one that gives us access to the information, skills and expertise. It will give us fair information. It will not come along and say that we will have oil supplies for 900 years and therefore we should export all the surplus and then suddenly, as prices go up, withhold it from the market and say that we do not have enough oil to carry us through to the end of the century.

With that kind of monitoring capability, effective competition legislation, a fair prices commission to evaluate pricing of the commodity and the ability to roll back unfair practices and prices, and a window on the industry, the Canadian people would be in exceptionally good shape.

Canadians ask themselves where this protection is that has obviously been needed over the years. In any library in any city of Canada there is literature accumulating on the rip-off not only of the Canadian people but of people in other nations who have been ripped off just as heavily as Canadians. It indicates that these problems were well known years ago. The only conclusion anyone can reach is that the Conservative Party is in full support of the continued unimpeded actions of the oil companies. It will be interesting to hear their critics comment on the need for effective monitoring of the behaviour of those companies, if they have the courage to do so.

Second, it will be interesting for the government or the Conservative Party to stand up and state their position on the competition legislation. That again would protect small businesses in particular which have been torn to pieces by the major oil companies.

If the question is not asked as to why they do not stand up to talk about these and other areas of protection and monitoring, it is because we know where they stand. The Conservative Party was totally opposed to PetroCan. It told Canadians that our interests are in the operations of Imperial Oil, that Imperial Oil knows what is good for Canada and therefore we should not pass laws regulating what the oil companies will do.

On the other side of the coin, when the Liberal government in 1973 had the opportunity to put the petroleum corporation legislation in place, it did absolutely nothing. It stood still for years. It never took hold of the opportunities and the mandate required by many people in Canada. For years it sat and spun its wheels.

That was the fault of the Liberal government. I suspect it was working on the same operating philosophy as the Conservative Party, but was a little more crafty than the organization to my right. On one hand its members said they had to put in something so that they could say to the people that they were attempting to offer some protection and monitoring, some opportunities to have a window on the industry. On the other hand they were putting forward a program that the energy corporations, especially the multinationals, were quite capable of living with and operating within the framework in which they had operated for so many years.

Basically we have a party that is honest enough to say that it is opposed to PetroCan, that it should be sold off, that it is opposed to monitoring, price roll-backs and competition legislation which would prevent some of the business practices in which those energy corporations were involved for so many years. That party made those kinds of statements and sits forever in the opposition.

Unfortunately the party across the way, in conducting the business of the nation in the best interests of the people, has come in second rate. It partially does what is required, but never goes the full distance. Therefore we have this energy legislation before this House. This bill is one example. The entire energy package falls far short of what should be done. But they sit back and say, "What a great group are we!" Given the polls, and by talking to people on the street, we know what is going to happen to that party. Unfortunately, we have the situation where this legislation is going through because at the present time the government has a majority in the House. That majority will put legislation on the books that will fail to conduct the energy business in the best interests of Canadians.

Unfortunately the opposition has not come forward with a constructive policy. At every turn they have criticized intervention in that industry, intervention designed to protect Canadian consumers, that would give the people information about the operation of oil companies so that they could make judgments as to what is not good just for Imperial Oil, or Shell Oil, or Texaco, but what is in the interests of the people. That information is vitally important, and the access to that information provides the ability to interfere in an effective way to protect people. We do not have the effective power today to roll back prices, to terminate unfair business practices effectively, to prosecute those who commit offences. One needs only to look at the record to see how poorly these things are done and really it is poor in terms of the needs of the Canadian people. What we essentially need to have happen in this House is for the government to make a commitment to strengthen this kind of legislation and so ensure that it is enforced vigorously.

On the other hand, we see the Conservative Party members and their performance in this House over the Constitution debate. They were down on the floor of the House, hollering and yelling, fighting irrationally. If we go to the housing bill debate, we notice that kind of irrational behaviour where a tremendous battle was put up, and then they voted for the bill. Again, there was the bell ringing episode, at a time when these bills should have been given a very thorough exhaustive consideration. Yet the Conservatives got themselves into a Mexican stand-off with the government, standing here and both of them ringing the bells.

Mr. Blenkarn: We got the bill divided and you did nothing except collaborate with them. Remember Saskatchewan!

Mr. Skelly: I have been invited by one hon. member to remember Saskatchewan.

Mr. Blenkarn: Remember what happened to the Liberal Party out west.

Mr. Skelly: I remember the night when we sat in this House and sent the Conservative government to its just desserts.

Mr. Andre: So did the people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Taylor: Right on.

Mr. Skelly: I certainly respected the right of that previous Conservative government to put forward energy policies, with higher energy prices, which created that situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: They created a situation in which they would get rid of PetroCan, and also created the high interest rate policy that clearly would have destroyed the Canadian economy, in the same way that the Liberal Party has destroyed the economy of the country. I suppose that the Conservative government would have done it much more quickly; that is all.

Nevertheless, there is an opportunity to go into a reasonable electoral position, if the parties would recognize clearly the problem, that we are not here to defend the multinational companies or the oil companies—we are basically here to ensure fair play for the people. That fair play has to be for all, not just for the oil companies, those the Conservative Party has represented entirely in the debate. It has to be fair play for the consumers and for the small businesses. Conservatives really need to take the time to think the problem through, to support and encourage the development of strong legislation. That includes improvements in Bill C-106, and improvements in the general energy policy, not just to protect the oil companies and the oil barons who have ripped us off before and who have driven businesses into bankruptcy. Such a bill would effectively monitor the activities of those companies that are so important, not just in the areas of oil and gas but also in other sources of energy.

We need to deal with the entire energy program, so that we have it controlled here at home, to see that it is developed in a rational manner. Monitoring is extremely important. But beyond the monitoring function, what we really need is legislation that would give effect to interference or interception of the negative business practices that harm people. We also need the competition legislation that has been promised for so long, to stop those practices that have been so harmful to the Canadian economy. We need to have the ability to punish those offenders who have harmed Canadian businesses and the Canadian consumers.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of the ability to roll back unfair prices and to give Canadians a fair price for their energy and a fair access to supplies. I challenge speakers in the Conservative Party, who have done so much to disrupt this House, and who have done so little to provide constructive alternatives, to get up and speak on this and tell us what they are prepared to do to protect consumers, and to protect small business which depend on us in this area.

I would also challenge government members to stand up and indicate their real interest in protecting consumers and small businesses, rather than placing before us the kind of legislation we see here today in Bill C-106. With that challenge, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to put some of my points forward.

Mr. Taylor: You talk one way and vote the other.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, listening to the New Democratic member speaking reminded me of that saying "Partial knowledge in the hands of a fool is extremely dangerous." On the one hand, he said that this legislation is going through too fast, that it is terrible and should be looked at closely. On the other hand, he decried the episode of the bells. We wonder what planet he was living on during that period.

Mr. Blenkarn: He went home to his riding and went to sleep.

Mr. Andre: Does he not recognize that if it had not been for the bells there would have been one piece of legislation which would have been passed by now, one law? It would never have got to committee. There would have been no opportunity for outside experts to appear. Since then they have appeared, although that member has not been in the committee to hear them. If he had been there he might have learned something. Without the bells episode, he would not even have had this opportunity to make his speech on this bill and talk about the wonderful things that would happen through monitoring. It is only through monitoring, he says, that the government could know what is going on in this evil conspiracy in the private sector, the corporations! It seems that terrible things happen to people when they work for a corporation. They become conspiratorial, they become evil, they want to rip off people, they are certainly not full-fledged Canadians, they cannot be trusted, they are just terrible people. But the people who work for governments, now they are pure, saintly; they are trustworthy, they are honourable, they care about people.

Mr. Blenkarn: And they hire architects.

Mr. Andre: Yes, they hire architects. What you want is to put these people who work for governments, who are pure, honourable, outstanding, marvellous, sincere, wonderful people, in charge of these awful, rotten people, these unCanadians who work for corporations. If they work for corporations in the oil business, they are really vicious, Mr. Speaker—they are the most despicable people! These are the kind of people who get together in conspiracies to defraud, to cheat, to rip off. They are just awful people, these people who work for corporations. We must put them under the control of the people who work for governments! That is the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. Their philosophy is that we need a window on the industry. We need to know what it is doing.

• (1830)

I suppose if the government owned all of the industry in the country and all the means of production, it would know everything, and then we would have the kind of perfection they have in Warsaw, Moscow and all those other places where the window is wide open! Government knows everything in those countries because there is nothing else to know but government. The New Democratic Party says that is perfection and that under that system we would have a beautiful society. Members of the New Democratic Party say that when government knows everything, everyone lives happily and well clothed. Everyone is super happy in a society like that. It is marvellous! I think the New Democratic Party has a great idea!

Mr. Blenkarn: As a matter of fact they ought to move to Russia.

Mr. Andre: It is just a little ridiculous to listen to the hon. member and his conspiracy theories, but what is sad is the fundamental belief he probably has that in fact the conspiracy is real and that somehow people in the oil industry and people who work for corporations are conspiring against poor, honest citizens.

It surely is one of the weaknesses of human nature that we so easily accept conspiracy theories to explain what is wrong. If there is a problem in rents or housing, it is a conspiracy of landlords or developers. If there is a problem with the German economy, it is a conspiracy of the Jews. If there is a problem with the oil industry, it is a conspiracy of oil companies. We should not so easily and willingly accept these conspiracy theories. Those who do not take responsibility very seriously very quickly utilize conspiracy theories to try to explain all the difficulties which are encountered. I think it is a sad commentary on human nature that we so willingly accept conspiracy theories. The hon. member would be serving his country better if he were to back up his accusations of conspiracy with some evidence. He was not serving this institution or this country well by making the blind accusations he made throughout his speech.

This bill is a bill written by bureaucrats for the benefit of bureaucrats. It provides nothing more for Canada than red tape and paper work. I asked the proponents of this bureaucratic invention whether they performed a cost benefit analysis to find out what benefits would accrue from this, given that there is a cost associated with it. The forms which have to be filled out are several pages long, and there are many little squares which have to be filled with numbers. Accountants and administrative staff will have to be hired to provide all this information.

Presumably this information is to be collected for some purpose so it can be assessed and a value attached to it. As a matter of fact, the bureaucrats do not do that. They could not name anyone who uses the information. They were unable to tell me what happens to the information once it is gathered. They were unable to tell me who uses it, how much it costs to gather it, and what is the cost-benefit. It provides jobs for some civil servants who have to collect these forms and compile them and assemble them. Then they produce a report. That provides jobs for some administrative people in the industry who have to fill out forms, but the net benefit to Canada is sweet nothing, and the cost to Canada is several hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars. Consumers do not benefit. The industry does not benefit. The taxpayers do not benefit. What happens is that our productivity as a nation decreases that little bit again because the people doing this are contributing nothing to the productivity of Canada.

It always amazes me how people in this institution and elsewhere will stand up and say we need this and we need that, and that it would be nice to have certain information. They say we need more laws, more regulations, and more civil servants to shuffle paper and so forth, but then the next day they say our problem is productivity. They say we have to address our productivity problem in Canada. By passing this legislation what we are doing is contributing to Canada's poor productivity performance in terms of the rest of the world. Let there be no mistake about that; that is exactly what we are doing.

This act has been in place for a number of years. The agency has been in place for a number of years. Presumably the information collected was available to the people who designed the National Energy Program and the other parts of the energy security package, which the hon. member in the New Democratic Party who just spoke decried as being ineffective in terms of the needs of the country.

The petroleum monitoring agency is in place. It has been gathering information. These are the wonderful people the hon. member feels are honourable and outstanding and much more concerned about Canadians than people who work for corporations. Why, with the benefit of this information, do they produce such a crummy package? I wonder why the hon. member cannot draw that simple distinction.

The reality is what I indicated—partial knowledge in the wrong hands is dangerous, and that is exactly what has happened. The officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources produced a scenario for the minister of what was happening in energy development in Canada. I saw that description of the energy industry and of what was happening. It was wrong. It was fundamentally wrong in its assumptions and in its data. It had some incredible factual mistakes in it. One would wonder if in fact it was not cooked in order to create the atmosphere which would allow the authors to promote their program in such a way as to be acceptable to the minister.

This entire year and a half of chaos in energy is the result of a program designed to cure a problem which did not previously exist. A problem was created, or designed, by bureaucrats in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, based on fallacious assumptions and material. Had the description of the industry and the energy situation in Canada which the bureaucrats provided been true, then the National Energy Program would probably have been appropriate, and certainly more than it is. However, the National Energy Program was designed to cure a problem which never existed. It was a poor design for a non-existent problem. That is why we have chaos. That is why some $20 billion of capital left the country last year. That is why half our drilling capacity is idle and tens of thousands of Canadians are unemployed.

The information this bill seeks to acquire is downright dangerous in the wrong hands, and it is certainly in the wrong hands if it is in the hands of those officials. In ordinary circumstances if this truly were an elective body which could legislate, as opposed to being a rubber stamp for whatever those officials decide needs approving, then indeed my colleagues and I would be examining this with a much finer-toothed comb. We would be trying to amend it and improve it to make its impact on the country less onerous and make its results more beneficial to Canadians. We do not have a parliamentary democracy, however. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wrote in his book "Federalism and the French Canadian", backbench Liberals are trained donkeys whose role is to say "aye, sir, aye" to whatever cabinet proposes, and that, of course, is whatever the bureaucracy writes. That is the situation we live in and there is not much use beating our heads against the wall.

This legislation was designed by bureaucrats for bureaucrats, and it contributes nothing to Canada. It is the bureaucrats who run this place, and in this instance, I for one, concede defeat. If the bureaucrats want it, let them have it. I hope that enough Canadians appreciate what is happening so that at some future date they will provide an opportunity for parliamentary democracy to be restored, so that members may represent their constituents in this House and not just be rubber stamps for the bureaucracy's proposals.

According to the New Democratic Party the bureaucracy should be running things. We are opposed to that philosophy and welcome the opportunity to present these alternate philosophies to the people of Saskatchewan, of British Columbia, of Ontario, or any other province. The NDP should have the integrity to come out and honestly state their position in that regard.

We do not find the legislation extremely damaging, but it certainly will not help. It is one more piece of bureaucratic red tape, and we already have an enormous pile of paper to deal with. It is unfortunate that the office which was established to cut the paperwork burden cannot seem to cut into this pile of paper. I guess the way to perpetuate oneself in government is by creating new institutions, new programs, new agencies, and even more paperwork by having people fill out forms. That is the way to get government to grow and to get cities to grow and, if the rest of the country is in recession, then that is just the way things go.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are debating was the subject of a thorough and extensive examination by the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation. As a result of the committee discussions, a number of amendments to Bill C-106 are recommended. First, with respect to the Energy Monitoring Act, the committee recommended the addition of clause 42, which would have the effect of referring this act back to Parliament for consideration five years after its coming into force. This clause is identical to one which was contained in the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act, 1978. I feel confident that hon. members will agree with me that the reference back to Parliament is a desirable addition to the act.

In order to correct an inconsistency that we have since discovered between the English and French versions of that clause, we are now moving an amendment to the French version.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to summarize for the House some of the salient aspects of the legislation contained in Bill C-106. The Energy Monitoring Act gives the Petroleum Monitoring Agency the authority to collect data required to prepare reports on the oil and gas sector. A broad data collection authority is provided in the act so that the Government of Canada and Canadians generally can have a comprehensive overview of the activities and financial performance of the petroleum industry in Canada.

The regular monitoring surveys published by the Petroleum Monitoring Agency are an important component of the information required for Canadians generally to assess the effectiveness of government policies for the management of Canada's energy supplies and resources. For example, the monitoring surveys will indicate the amounts of capital expenditures being undertaken by the petroleum industry for exploration and development activities, and the amount of government Petroleum Incentive Program, PIP, grants associated with these expenditures. Thus, Canadians will be able to assess the large public investments being made to ensure Canada's energy future. Similarly, the regular monitoring surveys indicate the level of Canadian ownership and control of the petroleum industry in Canada. This will allow Canadians to judge the rate of progress made toward the Canadianization objectives for the industry as outlined in the NEP.

I think that my earlier comments have made clear the purpose of the Energy Monitoring Act. The energy sector, particularly the oil and gas industry, is of vital importance to the country's economy. Therefore it is essential that all concerned—Parliament, the public, the industry, as well as government—have available timely and comprehensive information of a factural nature to permit an evaluation of the effectiveness of the various initiatives within the NEP, on an ongoing basis. The Petroleum Monitoring Agency, by providing independent comment on data and information collected under the authority of the Energy Monitoring Act, will allow Canadians to judge for themselves the effectiveness of the government's energy policies.

As I indicated during my speech on second reading, the government is anxious to minimize the reporting burden faced by the industry. In this connection I would make two comments. First, only those enterprises with over $10 million in gross revenues or $10 million in assets must report. This relieves smaller companies of the administrative burden of completing questionnaires. The legislation has a provision which would permit the reporting threshold to be raised in the future. Second, a significant part of the data required under the act that relates to research and development activities, international flow of funds, and ownership and control, is being provided, with the permission of reporting companies, by Statistics Canada. Accordingly, these data requirements do not represent an increase in reporting requirements.

Energy Monitoring Act

The Energy Monitoring Act contains provisions to extend, at some future date, monitoring activities to encompass coal, thorium and uranium, or any of these, should this prove necessary in the national interest. In its various states, coal is expected to become increasingly important as an energy commodity so that information about the industry's costs of production, profitability, ownership structure and reinvestment behavior may become necessary for public policy purposes. Uranium and thorium, of course, are important inputs into the production of nuclear energy.

I now turn to the proposed amendments to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act. As I pointed out during the debate on second reading, the amendments being sought are to a large extent of a housekeeping nature. They include a broadening of the definition of wholesale customer, an increase in the board's authority to delegate its workload, and other changes to help the board react efficiently to its mandate.

Some questions were asked at the committee stage as to whether, in working out an allocation program, the Energy Supplies Allocation Board might not be prone to some unintentional bias as a result of the background of members of the Board. I believe that these concerns were answered most completely by the Chairman of the Board, Mr. Harry Stevenson, who gave evidence regarding his own background as well as that of other members of the board.

I feel that the Energy Supplies Allocation Board has done and is continuing to do an excellent job. It has worked with the industry, essentially on a volunteer basis, and has benefited from tremendous co-operation by the various sectors of the industry and other groups in Canada. As a result, if we are faced with a supply emergency in the future, I am confident it will be dealt with as quickly and fairly as advance planning can make possible.

The final group of proposed amendments contained in Bill C-106 relate to the Oil Substitution Conservation Act. One of the main purposes of these amendments is to ensure that sufficient parliamentary authority exists for the government to use the market development incentive payment which Alberta has agreed to pay under the September and November, 1981 agreements. These payments may generally be used for the purpose of encouraging and promoting the expansion of markets east of Alberta for Alberta-produced gas. At the same time they will ensure that similar incentives may be offered out of the consolidated revenue fund to gas distributors in British Columbia and to encourage and assist other types of oil substitution measures across Canada. The amendments will serve to maintain and increase the momentum achieved to date by our off-oil program.

There has been a reduction of some 7 per cent in oil consumption in Canada in the last year. Part of this is of course due to economic circumstances, but we estimate about two thirds is due to conservation and substitution. Although the exact figures have not been refined as of yet, a good estimate is that about five million barrels of oil were displaced in the first year of the substitution program. This leads us to conclude we have an extremely cost-effective program even in the first year. The benefits will continue year after year, and the proposed amendments will enable us to expand this very important element of our goal of obtaining energy self-sufficiency. I hope all hon. members will concur in passing this particular piece of legislation on this, its final and third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, due to an error in the Orders of the Day which would bring Bill C-105 forward on May 19, there must be unanimous consent to proceed with that bill today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed with report stage of Bill C-105?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-105, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Cosgrove (for Mr. Lalonde) moved:

That Bill C-105, An Act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 5 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) in the case of a constraint in respect of a class, the shares of the class, or (b) in the case of a constraint in respect of a series, the shares of the series are already subject to a con-".

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I shall give just a brief explanation of this amending motion before we proceed. It is primarily technical in nature and would not in any way change the effect of Clause 9 (1.1) which was inserted to ensure that existing classes of shares not constrained under the new constraint provisions, or new classes of shares not constrained under those same provisions, at the time of issue, could not be constrained under the new provisions. The sole purpose of the amendment is to clarify the drafting of that particular clause so that it is clear that both a class and a series of shares can be constrained.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the amendment is one we certainly would support but it points out the faulty nature of the drafting of this legislation. This bill should be called "the Dome Petroleum Bill". The drafters of the bill, in their eagerness to interfere with corporate law generally, and without understanding the share structure of companies and the fact that companies can have classes of shares, have left us with a situation where at the last minute the government has to come in with this particular amendment. I will have more to say about the bill itself on third reading, but this amendment just points out the poor attitude of the government with respect to some very serious legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan) (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan) (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this legislation is an unnecessary, poorly drafted and thought-out amendment to the Canada Business Corporations Act. In 1975, after a great deal of discussion by the Canadian Bar Association and other people involved in business corporations, this House finally passed the Canada Business Corporations Act. That act was at least ten years in the drafting stage. That act made it easier for companies to raise money. It made it easier to incorporate companies. It gave minority shareholders, and shareholders generally, remedies against directors so that they could not be abused as they had been in the past. Generally speaking there was a modernization of our corporate law.

• (1900)

I want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that act was thought out, drafted, and redrafted. It was presented as a comprehensive piece of legislation dealing with how we organize business corporations on a national basis. But this is an ill-conceived piece of legislation that is now presented to us as part of the national energy package.

I want to say to members of this House that while they may think they are passing a piece of legislation that has something to do with energy, this bill has absolutely nothing to do with national energy or energy policy. This bill allows changes in the basic structure of corporate law. It will seriously hurt the raising of capital on the stock markets. It will seriously hurt companies in all sorts of deals other than energy; in transportation; in banking; in trust companies; in the distribution of liquor or of beer. It will seriously hurt all sorts of activities yet to be devised, and perhaps land holdings. It will hurt the development of business in Canada and the raising of capital in Canada. The bill does not just apply to oil. It applies to any company where the laws of Canada, or any province, make it more advisable for a company to have shares held by Canadians. If the particular business in which the company is involved falls within that ambit and there is a prescription of that type of company, it can take advantage of the provisions of this act.

Briefly, its provisions provide that a company can first deal in its own shares by buying shares on the stock market and reselling them, allegedly to Canadianize itself. Or a company can do one thing further. It can issue shares that are constrained with respect to ownership. It can then sell those shares and, at some future date, call in those shares in proportion as it feels best. It can take the shares of people who may not be Canadian that are allegedly constrained and it can sell those shares for what can be obtained on the marketplace, giving those shareholders who happen to be investors in Canadian corporations the net proceeds from the sale of that stock.

The bill demonstrates a complete lack of understanding of how the market system works. I want to deal with the issues in the bill as two separate portions and how those issues affect the entirety of corporate law in the country. The first portion of the bill, Clause 2, deals with the situation where a board of directors finds that it would be advantageous to a company to be Canadian, so to speak, gets designated in that fashion by the minister, then goes into the market, purchases its own shares and resells them. In other words, the company wheels and deals its own shares.

When the Canada Business Corporations Act was passed in 1975, for the first time in our corporate history we gave companies the right to be able to buy their own shares as an investment. That gave companies in Canada a great deal of flexibility. It meant that they could buy out shareholders and pay them off for their share of the equity in companies. We must remember when looking at the ownership of a company that the equity in a company is basically held by the common shareholders. They may not be common shareholders, but equity shareholders of some kind, some of whom may or may not have a vote. But the equity in a company is what we will call for argument's sake the common shareholders' share. That equity represents what was originally subscribed for the shares in the first place from treasury together with the built-up profits or surplus, after tax, reflected in the corporate balance sheet. By dividing the equity among the shareholders, you find out the book value of what each share is worth. If there is a reduction in the number of shares by the company buying some of its own shares, then there is no damage to the balance of the remaining shareholders. However, if we allow that to take place, there is no damage and it is good for business.

But what we have here is a situation where the officers and directors of a corporation are entitled by the provisions of this bill to go to the marketplace, buy up shares with the treasury of the company, using all shareholders' money, but instead of leaving the benefit to the remaining shareholders as is presently the law, turning around and giving that benefit away to whomever they wish in any kind of a deal they wish, as long as they stay within the purposes of Section 31(1), which presumably is to increase Canadianization of a particular company.

I say to you, Sir, if we were really necessarily Canadianizing companies this way, some people in an ultranationalistic fashion might say that is appropriate. But what happens and what is contemplated under the statute is that shares openly traded on the market might be purchased by the company without notification—because there is no provision for notification in the act—and sold out to someone else. In other words, the shareholders' money, the equity in the company, can be used by the directors in the company to speculate in its own stock to buy and sell that stock. In the name of Canadianization, it is an open door for scoundrels to wheel and deal at the expense of shareholders. Indeed, the wheeling and dealing can take place at the expense of Canadian shareholders, not just of foreign shareholders.

May I remind you that in an open market situation, in the average well-traded corporation, the majority of shares are held by people who have no intention—certainly for some considerable period of time—of trading those shares. Under normal conditions it is easy to determine the ownership or the citizenship of those shares. But some of the shares represent shares which are often held in the hands of brokers in street form. Those are the shares on which the day-to-day trade back and forth determines the market value listed in the daily newspapers.

Now, what has happened? Under this bill the corporation is entitled, if it is prescribed, to go into the marketplace to wheel and deal in the trading of shares of the company. The corporation does not know, when it wheels and deals, whether the shares are held for Mr. Speaker, for example, in his broker's name. They could be held for Mr. Speaker in his broker's name in street form so that they can be easily transferred—and he is a Canadian—or they could be held for someone else in the broker's name. Who knows whose shares are whose? Shares in that form do not carry a passport or a birth certificate. They are shares which are open and being traded. Some of them may be held that way for weeks, for months or indeed for years. Some of them may be traded overnight or day to day. They never hit the registry again until someone says to the broker: "I want them registered in my name." Then one might be able to find out who is the citizen; but until that occurs one has no idea who the citizen is who owns the shares.

The government, the minister and his departmental officials have some idea that market shares held in street form should carry a passport with them. The clear indication in any market is that they do not. The only company mentioned in the public hearings which could even possibly want this legislation was Dome Petroleum. When its directors decide to go into the marketplace, they might buy Mr. Speaker's shares, the shares of some other member or the shares of a foreigner. It would not matter whether they bought in New York, Toronto or Vancouver because they would not know whose shares they were buying. When, Mr. Speaker, you buy a share in the stock market, you do not know whether you are buying a Canadian, an American or a Greek share. You buy a share, you pay the market price and you pay the broker's fee. In effect, this bill will allow the company to use corporate money which belongs to shareholders allegedly to Canadianize and to go into the open market to buy shares. I say that they could well be buying only Canadian shares and that only Canadians will be defrauded by the misuse of the equity in their company.

Does the minister pay attention to that? No, he is so set in his ways to get this bill through that he refuses to take a look at what the bar, the stockmarket, or life insurance companies and pension funds say on the matter. He says, "I am going to Canadianize." Somehow he now wants to go one step further and change basic corporate law. In committee we pointed out to the minister that it would be very simple, if he wanted, to provide for a company to make a general offering to foreign shareholders to purchase their shares at a specified offer or tender form. That would reduce foreign shareholdings and that would be fair. Foreign shareholders could take their shares and tender them to the company for transfer or cancellation. We would know that we were buying foreign shares at the offered price. The minister would have none of that because presumably it would mess up the trading activities he had in mind. One wonders whether the minister really has Canadianization in mind or whether it will be an opportunity for those who are directors of energy corporations or other corporations, where some conceivable benefit might be available from Canadian ownership, to wheel and deal in the marketplace. This wheeling and dealing in the marketplace concerns us a great deal.

We are a country which needs to raise equity capital, not just from Canadians but from anywhere we can. We are talking about raising risk capital for risk investments. We must ensure that our market is as broad, fair, honest and straightforward as possible. When we allow a situation to exist where it is possible under our corporate law for a shareholder somehow to be diddled by the directors of the corporation, when there is a fear that he could be diddled or bought out with his own money and not know it, we put into the investment climate of the country uncertainty and a feeling that perhaps the game is not fair or honest.

I say to hon. members on the government benches—and there are few of them here—that this is a piece of legislation which should not be passed. When I asked the minister and his officials in committee who made representations to them and said that they needed this piece of legislation to Canadianize the oil industry, they could not answer. Finally, at the last meeting of the committee before the bill was rammed through with the usual government majority—ready, aye, ready—they told me as the member of the official opposition who was there—and no member of the New Democratic Party bothered to come—that they could only find one company which made representations, Dome Petroleum. They said that maybe it would affect Norcen, that maybe Norcen could take advantage of it, but that Dome Petroleum could use it. I think the bill should really be amended to read, "An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act for Dome Petroleum Limited or Dome Resources". We could call it the Dome bill. When the basic corporate law is changed because of the representation of one widely-held energy corporation that might like to Canadianize or might do better if it could Canadianize in full, there is something wrong.

I should like to go on to other portions of the bill which do not necessarily deal with the business of wheeling and dealing in stock but deal with another serious issue, and that is the issue of constrained shares. The bill, in its amendments to the act, provides that a corporation can issue classes of constrained shares, constrained as to ownership. I have no objection to that other than the fact that if shares are constrained as to ownership, I am not at all sure that we have not somewhere along the line breached the recently passed Charter of Rights and Freedoms contained in the Constitution. Surely the constraint we are talking about here is not that of preventing non-citizens from owning shares. It constrains Canadians, because the concept of "constraint" is Canadians who happen to be citizens of this country or landed immigrants living in this country.

What happens if you are a Canadian citizen posted abroad with our armed forces, or posted abroad in the foreign service, or a Canadian working for Petro-Canada International off the coast of China where we are drilling oil wells? In those cases you have broken the constraint. You are not a Canadian any more! Another example is those Canadians who have retired after working hard in this country for all their working lives and have moved to a warmer climate. They are no longer Canadian.

When asked about that the minister said that there are people who take their shares out of the country because they do not want to pay taxes in Canada. So he concludes that if you do not live in the country you cannot own oil company shares because those oil companies could get the advantage of PIP grants. What kind of minister, what kind of party, what kind of government is it that tells Canadians that they are no longer Canadians at some point but are relegated to second class because they have retired to Florida or the Bahamas? What kind of government is it that tells a person he is not Canadian any more because he is asthmatic and had to move to Arizona? Because a person works for the Government of Canada in an embassy or trade commission abroad, he is not a Canadian any more. Or since a person is a member of our Armed Forces in Europe, he is no longer a Canadian according to these statutes. That is the effect of this act on those Canadians. This is what the government is supporting.

Let us consider further the question of constrained shares. These shares can be constrained in regard to what kind of Canadian is resident in Canada, but for some strange reason they can be bought and held by people who are not Canadians resident in Canada. The exception is that if a Canadian should ever move out of the country, or if a foreigner should ever acquire shares, there is provision in the bill whereby the directors have the option to select any particular owner of these constrained shares and take the shares from some but not from others, sell the shares and give the owner the net proceeds. That shareholder does not receive what the shares are worth but only the net proceeds. In addition, this does not apply to every person who holds constrained shares but only to those who the company wants to place that constraint on. In other words, if you are a Canadian who lives outside the country the government might not acquire your shares but could take someone else's. If you have a friend who is on the board, you may be able to hold on to these constrained shares while living outside the country. However, someone else might end up being expropriated in the worst possible way. That is, the company takes your shares and after it deducts whatever it costs for their sale, seizure or trusteeship, you receive whatever proceeds are left.

The reason the legislation is written in this manner is due to poor draftsmanship. The law was intended to be much more serious to enable the company to deal with any class of shares. The intention was that the company could constrain shares after they were issued and do it all over again. However, the act was amended in that respect. All the other cumbersome clauses dealing with trusteeship, seizure of some shares and not others, and the sale and payment of net receipts were left in. When we asked the officials and the minister why these provisions remained unchanged, we did not get an answer in committee. The minister and the officials did not know the answer, though I suppose Dome Petroleum did not know the answer.

This statute which we are discussing is being presented as an energy bill. Members of the official opposition are told that the only company which ever made representations with respect to some changes in the Canada Business Corporations Act was Dome Petroleum. The act deals with more than just the oil and gas industry. It affects anyone with respect to any federal or provincial laws who wish to receive licences, permits, grants, payments or benefits by reason of obtaining and maintaining a specified level of Canadian ownership or control. This is a poor piece of legislation and this House will be doing a great disservice to Canada, to corporate law, to the development of our resources and the development of equity markets in our country if it is passed.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to debate Bill C-105, which is part of what used to be the omnibus Bill C-93 which caused the bell-ringing incident in the House when the Conservative Party refused to return to the house until the bill was split. We agreed with the Conservatives that parts of the bill should not have been grouped together because we had different views on various sections of the bill. The eventual beneficial outcome of that incident was the splitting up of the bill. It has been split up into eight different bills up until this point in time.

What we disagreed with, however, was the mockery which was made of Parliament in order to arrive at that solution. I believe it showed the archaic institution we have in Parliament and the need for some kind of parliamentary reform. I would like to say a few words about that before I begin my remarks on Bill C-105. Since this is my first experience as a Member of Parliament, I have been very disillusioned by how this institution operates. Sometimes I feel frustrated and at other times I feel angry about the way business is conducted in the House. I would not want to be considered as a long-term planner at any stage of my life. I have worked as a public employee and I have also had my own business in Saskatchewan where I have lived for most of my life. Both as a public employee and as a small businessman I have some appreciation for what the government should do for the people we represent as members of Parliament. However, both in business and as a public employee I had to do some planning in order to decide what should happen in the future. I had to decide priorities for myself and for my family, for my business and for the government which I represent as a public employee. However, here I find that any kind of planning, short-term or long-term, is almost impossible because of the way this institution operates. I find that one cannot plan for a year ahead of time, or even a month ahead of time. In fact, sometimes things happen in this institution from hour to hour. It is very difficult to plan one's time to make the most constructive use of one's faculties and time. Therefore, in relation to this bill, I speak of the frustration I am sure many people across Canada feel with regard to the old forms and rules under which we are operating.

I would urge all hon. members in this House to work toward parliamentary reform. That should be of utmost concern in the minds of parliamentarians as we deal with future pieces of legislation. I know that the docket is fairly full now. There are many items on the Order Paper with which we should be dealing as they are important to the wellbeing of our economy and to our country as a whole. However, I would urge Members of Parliament to look at parliamentary reform at their earliest possible convenience as reform is so necessary in order for this House, this institution, to operate more efficiently than it presently operates.

It saddens me to think of the opinion held by the people of Canada in general concerning what this Parliament and parliamentarians do for the country. I assume hon. members that that opinion is not very high at this point in time. That is why I urge hon. members of this House to get on with parliamentary reform at the earliest possible time and help the people of this country so that they can have a little more certainty about their lives and their futures.

I do not want to dwell on that subject because it is not the subject of debate this evening, which is Bill C-105, dealing with the Canada Business Corporations Act. As I understand it, it is a bill which encourages Canadian investment in the energy industry. That is a laudable cause. There should be more Canadian investment in all sectors of the Canadian economy. We have been dependent for far too long upon the policies, economies and whims of other countries. Small things affecting other countries sometimes carry over into Canada.

I feel that if we had more control over our own destiny through parliamentary reform and also over our own economy through greater Canadian ownership, we would be all the better for it. I often think of Canadian ownership in the same light as the Potash Corporation in the province of Saskatchewan. The Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan was formed some years ago, in the early 1970s when the NDP government defeated Ross Thatcher's government. The idea came into being that we should have more control over our own resources. Part of the reason for this wish was the fact that in 1971, the last year of the Liberal administration in the province of Saskatchewan, we took in something like $14.7 million in resource revenues. I stand to be corrected on the figure, but it is fairly close. The people of the province of Saskatchewan said; "That is not adequate; we do not think the holders of the resources in this province are paying their fair share to the people of Saskatchewan and we would like to see this situation changed." The newly elected NDP government in Saskatchewan went to the potash corporations and said, "We will increase the rate of taxation against your industry in the province of Saskatchewan". Some of the potash corporations, all of the privately-owned ones, said, "We think the tax is a little unreasonable. It is much higher than we have previously been paying, but we are willing to pay that to the province of Saskatchewan because we enjoy operating in the province. You have a commodity that is of interest to us and we can resell it at a profit, so we will pay that higher rate of taxation and remain in the province of Saskatchewan."

However, in the meantime there were other potash companies in the province of Saskatchewan which said: "That rate is unfair and we will not pay the new increased rate of taxation; we will refuse to pay it." The province of Saskatchewan replied, "Well, that is fine. We think we represent the people of Saskatchewan with a fairly strong mandate and we think the taxation rate is fair. However, if you open up your books to us and show us that you are not making a good profit, a good return on your investment, then we are willing to reduce that rate of taxation." Some of the companies opened their books to the province and showed the returns they were making, not only in their own company but sometimes in their mother company, which might be in Pittsburgh, or in Johannesburg, South Africa. Many of the potash company owners, in the early years before the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan came along, were owned by foreign investors.

This speaks to the point of Bill C-105, which is to encourage Canadian investment. We needed that. However, other companies would not open up their books at that time in Saskatchewan. Accordingly, the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan was set up as a publicly-owned Crown corporation. This illustration extends beyond the boundaries of Saskatchewan. It could have been Canadian people investing in Canadian business; it does not have to be on a provincial scale. However, through the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, the people of Saskatchewan invested in the potash resource there.

As someone who has been involved in small business, I would not have minded had some private investors from Saskatchewan bought into some of those potash companies. But for the life of me, I cannot find that there were people in Saskatchewan with the millions of dollars in venture capital it would have taken to go into the potash mines. I therefore thought to myself that it was better that the people of Saskatchewan owned the resource than some outside interests from the United States, South Africa or other countries throughout the world. In Saskatchewan there were not the private investors with the kind of capital necessary to invest in some of the potash companies. Some of the small business people could not form together as co-operatives. Even the larger businesses in that province could not. I say that it holds true throughout the country that there was not enough capital to go into that industry.

When the Potash Corporation was set up, its objective was to buy the controlling interest in potash production in the province. It succeeded in that objective. But the beauty of the potash industry is that not only is it a publicly-owned Crown corporation, the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, based on the profit motive for the people of that province, but there are also privately-owned corporations still mining potash in the province. I think of Noranda, Central Canada Potash and Kalium Chemicals between Moose Jaw and Regina. These companies are happy to be private sector investors in the potash industry in Saskatchewan, which will continue to expand the economy for many years to come.

It remains to be seen what will happen with the new government, whether it will retain that very valuable Crown corporation or sell it off to the private sector. I think the new government will likely keep that Crown corporation. It brings a great deal of money into the coffers of the province of Saskatchewan. As a result, the many social programs there do not have to be taxed directly to the people and taken out of their pockets. Every year the potash corporation puts a great deal of money into the provincial coffers. I would speculate that the new Saskatchewan Conservative government, which, having been democratically elected and having majority in that province, deserves to be given a chance, will not sell that Crown corporation because of the benefit it gives to the people of that province.

As I said earlier, the resource funds which flowed into the provincial coffers in 1971 amounted to $14.7 million. That was under a Liberal administration. Some ten short years later, an NDP administration under the very capable and undisputed leadership of Allan Blakeney was able to turn around that resource revenue to the point that in 1981 the province of Saskatchewan received $1 billion in resource revenue. That is one thousand million dollars in 1981 under an NDP administration compared to $14.7 million ten years previous under a Liberal administration.

Bill C-105, which encourages Canadians to invest in the energy industry, is good because of the fact that it encourages Canadians to invest. However, we do not believe that Bill C-105 will accomplish that. We think that such things as the resource sector should be heavily owned by the public sector and should have the strongest interest of Canadians at heart. Resources, whether it be energy, hydrocarbons, potash or any other non-renewable resource, will not be there forever.

The interests of the Canadian people who own the resources should be protected. We in the NDP believe that people within a province or country own the resources that are upon or beneath their soil. To keep something that is not renewable in the best interests of the people, there must be very heavy public sector involvement. The profit motive, which most Canadians have because they want to feed their families and provide them with a good lifestyle in appreciation of the high standard of living we have had and want to continue to have, requires public sector involvement to ensure that it is good for all people in the country.

We in the New Democratic Party feel that over the years the Liberal Party and Conservative Party have not had the best interests of Canadians at heart. I do not say the Liberals and Conservatives are not interested in the Canadian people, I believe they are; but the route they are taking is the wrong one. I do not think private sector involvement alone in the energy industry or with regard to any non-renewable resource is in the best interest of the Canadian people.

We in the New Democratic Party intend to vote against Bill C-105 because it is not going to benefit Canadians as a whole. We would like to see Canada prosper more than it is now.

We have what is even worse than a stagnant economy. It is going downhill every day. One need only watch the news reports each evening. If it is not the disastrous world situation where people are afraid of a nuclear holocaust or another world war breaking out, it is the disastrous economic condition of our country. We have an abundance of natural resources and well-trained people in terms of our academic and technical skills. We have come too far to give away what we now have.

I thank the House for listening to my input in this debate. I believe that Canadians will gain further through public sector involvement in the resource industries of this country. We should have a public sector involvement which will guard the interests of Canadian people.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps fitting that I have an opportunity to speak on this rather important bill immediately following the remarks of our socialist friend, the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). I found it very interesting to listen to his remarks with regard to the wonderful things done in the name of socialism in the province of Saskatchewan. However, he did not seem to hit on what I thought was a very critical question. If there was such a breakthrough in that province as he told us occurred under the leadership of Mr. Blakeney, why did the people there vote out not only Mr. Blakeney but his government with such vengeance in the last election?

As perhaps those who have been students of politics know, what we are evidencing in the New Democratic Party is the throwback they still linger with from what they were taught in university, the London School of Economics or some other school of socialism many, many years ago as a concept which at that time was thought perhaps to be workable.

As a result, we find that these poor souls are still resurrecting things which were taught to them by certain professors and teachers in their school days. After two decades of various countries and provinces experimenting with these theories, and in spite of the fact they have proven in all instances to be unworkable in the production of wealth in the country or province concerned, they still feel that somehow they are going to work in the future.

After talking about what he thought were credible advances of his socialist cousins in Saskatchewan, the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake then came back and said how sad he found it that we lacked, as he called it, prosperity in this country. He would like to see more prosperity. That hon. member did not seem to link the cause and effect of what the type of socialism that he is espousing has led Canada into, as we have witnessed over the past ten years.

In short, that hon. member does not seem to recognize that if you permit the government-type of intervention, the government spending, the loading on to the people of not only taxation but more and more regulation, you have the cause and effect we are now living with as sure as the sun will rise tomorrow. You will have an overinflated demand and consumerism running ahead of production, with the net result that you will have the twin demons of inflation and unemployment. That is due to socialist thinking, and let there be no doubt about it. To the degree that this Trudeau Liberal government, in the 14 years it has been able to guide this country, has followed those socialistic principles, they have seeded the problems we are now living with.

• (1950)

I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, that we stopped pretending that the various policies advocated, and to some extent even implemented, by the emperor, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), do not have an effect on the economy that is most adverse.

Mr. Riis: Whom would you use as a model, Margaret Thatcher?

Mr. Stevens: I see, Mr. Speaker, that I have the NDPers starting to heckle. That is good news because it is time that we got them at least asking questions, at least thinking a bit about the subject before us.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Stevens: I am not clear, Mr. Speaker, how much time I have to speak. There are various matters I want to cover. If there is time at the end of my remarks, I would be more than pleased to receive a question from my socialist friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I am only sorry that the vice-president of Socialist International himself, the member from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), is not with us tonight. If he were here, he might join in this debate and tell us the view of Socialist International concerning Bill C-105. I know that those in that organization are very interested in various international affairs, including things that happen in Central America and in various other areas of the world. Undoubtedly he would have a view concerning the international implications of the bill before us.

I was only making a few comments on the remarks of our socialist friend. I did not intend to spend all my time questioning the role of the NDP and the sad state of our economy. We know that they have been making the snowballs over the years to be thrown at the Canadian public by the Prime Minister. In short, it is their concept, their philosophy, that breaks the ground.

We know that the hotbed, the seed area for much of what is spread throughout Canada in the form of socialist thinking, came from Saskatchewan. I am very pleased that the good citizens of Saskatchewan have chosen to stamp out this socialistic government that was so permeating the Canadian political scene.

My colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has spelled out, as only he could do, the implications of Bill C-105. I believe that members who choose not to participate in this debate are overlooking some very serious matters. As my colleagues have stated, this is a bill that in no way can be called an energy bill. The only reason it was drawn into this package was that the government ran into certain difficulties in implementing some of the share provisions and standards and that type of thing that they felt was essential to their National Energy Program.

As we know, instead of dealing, as with a rifle shot, specifically with what they felt was their problem, they have chosen to amend the entire corporate law of Canada, namely, the Canada Business Corporations Act. That act is the act that all corporations that are formed under the laws of Canada are guided by. What have they done in order to satisfy a problem that exists perhaps more with Dome Petroleum Limited than with any other company? What they have done concerns something that could happen to any corporation in Canada potentially. If you use the wording of the new Section 43.1 of the act, it will:

—assist the corporation or any of its affiliates or associates to qualify under any prescribed law of Canada or a province to receive licences, permits, grants, payments or other benefits by reason of attaining or maintaining a specified level of Canadian ownership or control—

In short, rather than concentrate simply on solving whatever problem Dome Petroleum Limited lives with, or any other similar problem that companies such as that may need to qualify under the new National Energy Program, they have chosen to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act. In the case of any corporation now incorporated under that act which wants to qualify for some type of licensing or to meet some regulation standards—such as the broadcasting companies or the banks—the government has said now that in future if, in qualifying for whatever licensing and so on they are looking for, it turns out that they have a share ownership problem—in the sense that they have too many foreign shareholders—under the new provisions of the act, under certain circumstances, it will be possible for the directors of that company to sell out those foreign shareholders as if, as the act says, the directors themselves were those shareholders. They take the proceeds; and the only right that that former shareholder of that company has is to get those proceeds at a later date. He has no further voting right. Presumably he has no right to litigate. He has just been sold out.

The reason we believe that this is a very serious precedent that is being set here is that, generally, when laws are made they are copied. Provinces may decide certainly if they are socialistic in nature as my friend to the left here knows, to follow this type of legislation with regard to their own companies' legislation.

Mr. Anguish: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we have a quorum in the House. I am asking for a quorum count, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, if I may speak to it, I think the hon. member's intervention just demonstrates that these socialists will go to no end to silence any type of adverse comment concerning their activities. I think you will find, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Anguish: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: —that this is so typical of their thinking.

Mr. Anguish: On a point of order, I maintain that this demonstrates the archaic institution we have here, which cannot even keep a quorum in this House at any point in time. I called for a quorum count and they come in like snakes out of the bushes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I asked for a quorum count, Mr. Speaker, and I expect to have that quorum count conducted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Very well. I would ask the Clerk for a quorum count.

And the Clerk having taken a count.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): There are more than 20 members in the House. The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has the floor.

Mr. Anguish: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that members who came in after the quorum count was called should not be counted. Also, members who are not in their seats should not be counted as being present in the House this evening, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (2000)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please. Hon. members can enter this House at any time and stay as long as they wish. I recognize the hon. member for York-Peel.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, most of us were present, since we are here. I think the hon. member could at least have the courtesy—

An hon. Member: The decency!

Mr. Prud'homme: No, I do not want to start a debate.

[English]

I do not want to be rough, so I will be—

An hon. Member: Be nice.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think the hon. member knows he called Members of Parliament snakes. I do not think that is parliamentary. I have no objection because he did not name any of us, but I do not think he would like us to call him all kinds of names. The rules are very clear.

Mr. Lalonde: Don't call him what he is.

Mr. Prud'homme: The rules are very clear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: Hon. members do not need to be sitting in their places to be counted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: That rule is clear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please.

Mr. Anguish: Show some respect for the institution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Desmarais): Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the people of Saskatchewan clearly know how to handle socialists. Given another opportunity, I am sure the people of Canada will deal with them in the way they deserve.

Mr. Kristiansen: Twenty-seven years out of thirty-four isn't bad.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was simply saying that Bill C-105 is designed to help, in the main, Dome Petroleum Limited. Unfortunately, this bill has been brought in in a form which modifies the Canada Business Corporations Act to such a degree that I think a dangerous precedent is being set. We are now being asked to accept the concept that directors, who notionally are simply trustees for shareholders, may, if it suits their purpose to qualify for a certain licence or that type of thing, reach out and sell out those who are deemed to be foreign shareholders.

I said that Dome Petroleum is the particular company which had a problem. If we check the share ownership of Dome Petroleum, we will find that there is a rather interesting share ownership between Dome Mines Limited and Dome Petroleum Limited. Dome Mines owns 25.7 per cent of Dome Petroleum Limited—as of 1981, in any event—and in turn Dome Petroleum holds 39.5 per cent of Dome Mines. Dome Mines shares trade at various stock exchanges—including, I notice, the one in Paris—and generally are very actively traded in international markets, as are the shares of Dome Petroleum Limited. The simple problem is that it is very difficult to define at any particular time what in fact is the Canadian content, as far as share ownership is concerned, in Dome Petroleum, which is partly owned by Dome Mines, which has foreign shareholders and in turn is partly owned by Dome Petroleum.

Let us bear in mind that international investors are fickle. They buy and sell shares as the marketplace allows them to do that, and at any particular time foreigners might get enthusiastic about Dome Petroleum stock. They might buy it at one time and at another time sell it, and there might be a great number of Canadian owners—or certainly non-foreign owners—of Dome Petroleum shares. As I understand the situation as it is now, the directors of Dome Petroleum have no effective way of knowing exactly what the Canadian ownership content is unless they have some kind of mechanism whereby, if the Canadian ownership content falls below a certain level, they can come in and start buying up foreign shareholders' interests.

Hon. members might ask what is wrong with that. I do not think there is anything wrong with favouring Canadian owners, but I suggest what we should consider before we vote on this bill is whether it is right to support the concept the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) proposes in this bill. As I have indicated, rather than zero in with a rifle shot to try to help Dome Petroleum—if that is where the minister feels the main problem is—he has decided to change our whole Canadian corporate law. He is now making it possible for the directors of any corporation incorporated under federal jurisdiction to sell shareholders out just because they decide they want to qualify for some type of licensing, either of a provincial or a federal nature, which requires a certain Canadian content.

That is a dangerous precedent in itself, but what I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members, especially the socialists to my left who like to cry crocodile tears periodically for the old and the poor, is that this type of provision hurts the very people they like to pretend they are protecting. It is often overlooked that the main shareholders of corporations in North America are not institutions but the average people we meet every day.

Mr. Orlikow: Widows and orphans.

Mr. Stevens: They are the people who are working in our factories and in the civil service. They are labourers. They are the labour force, be it Canadian or American.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is flim-flam and you know it.

Mr. Stevens: Socialists call that flim-flam because they do not like to hear about the effects of their type of thinking.

Mr. Riis: Maybe "balderdash" is a better term.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps when my friend from Winnipeg asks his question, he will bear the following in mind. Have hon. members to my left ever taken a look at the portfolios of pension funds?

Mr. Kristiansen: Yes, many times.

Mr. Stevens: I refer to the pension funds set up to provide a decent living to the people who are working today and who should be able to expect decent returns when they choose to retire. One of the things our socialist friends and, of course, their cousins opposite, the Trudeau Liberals, overlook is that one of the few ways investment people feel they can hedge against future inflation is by investing in equity stocks of corporations. Many pension funds choose to put a certain amount—perhaps not more than 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 30 per cent—of their total assets into equity investments in the hope that as inflation goes up the value of those stocks will also increase. It is a hedge, if you like, against inflation in preparing for the retirement days of the workers to whom I have referred. The net result is that the growing—and perhaps the largest—pool of funds in North America today buying the shares of companies are pension funds. Those funds are being held in trust for the workers of North America, the workers for whom the socialists pretend to be the great protectors. I suggest that the truth is the reverse. In fact, they are not protectors. Through their policies and their thinking they are selling those workers down the road every day of the week.

This again is another reason to be cautious about supporting this bill. I do not think it matters whether the worker whose shares we are taking lives in the United States or in Canada because he is still a worker. He is still a person trying to make provision for his retirement, and yet we have a government which in effect is saying that provided he is technically across the border or in some other country, directors, at their will, should have the right to sell him out and to simply say, "You have no further rights with respect to your Canadian investment." Is that a fair way to treat people who in good faith decided to invest in Canadian corporations? But that will be the effect of this legislation when it becomes operative, Mr. Speaker.

• (2010)

My friend from the socialist left who spoke just before me made a point of saying that in Saskatchewan there was not sufficient equity money to buy into various corporations, and asked if it was not almost a great salvation that the state set up one or more joint ventures, as he calls them, in that province.

Let us look at Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. Is that the alternative? Is that really what the government has in mind—that as a temporary expedient you can force-sell people from their share holdings and eventually adopt a Crown corporation approach?

We have an example of one of those corporations in operation. Only at six o'clock tonight did we learn of the quarterly report of Air Canada. It turns out that it lost $27 million in the last three months. Projected, that would be $100 million per year. What does that mean to the Canadian public? This is a Crown corporation which has suffered the loss but it automatically has to be shared by every Canadian now, whether they like it or not.

Mr. Kristiansen: It sounds like Braniff.

Mr. Stevens: My socialist friend says it sounds like Braniff. Perhaps he has put his finger on the essential difference between state ownership and private ownership. In the case of Braniff the losers are the shareholders who have to pay the price for whatever made that company go under. With Air Canada, the losers are not the management of Air Canada, not the bureaucracy and not the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who is in charge of Air Canada, but the average Canadian who has to pick up the tab whether he likes it or not. That is where state ownership comes apart. Unfortunately, when a Crown corporation loses money, the bottom line is the people of Canada. When a private company loses money, the bottom line is generally the shareholders and they alone have to cry about the loss.

I say this because I find it remarkable that Air Canada, which is given the most privileged position of any airline in North America, which is given preferential treatment for landing locations for routes and is still operating under a regulated transport system, should incur such a loss.

The odd situation is that if you fly from Toronto to New York today, for example, the fare is $125 one way or $250 return. Recently when I was in New York I noticed a billboard advertisement for U.S. Air offering a one-way trip to Buffalo for $19. I checked with the U.S. Air counter and was told that this was correct; after nine o'clock at night the fare was $19. I asked how much more it would cost to continue to Toronto. I was told that as Canada was still subject to regulation, the fare would be $125. So, Mr. Speaker, it costs over $100 more to get from Buffalo to Toronto. The reason is that one airline is subject to regulation and the other operates in an open, competitive system.

Our socialists to my left tell us that that is their standard and that we need more state ownership in this country. Yet Air Canada, given such a comfortable position in North America, has ended up with a loss which will amount to something like $100 million this year if the present trend continues.

I think this is bad legislation for the reasons I have given and it should be challenged. Unfortunately, the people who will be hurt by it are not the fat cats the socialists talk about but the ordinary worker who is preparing for retirement, be he in the U.S. or in some other country.

I mention this because I think the real effect of this legislation will be further to discourage investment in Canada. It will underline the feeling that some people have that Canada cannot be trusted as the investment haven it used to be and that there are better places in the world to invest. That is a shocking development to witness when Canada should be one of the most ideal areas of the world in which to invest. It has often been said that we have everything going for us in this country, but unfortunately our drift to the socialistic state interventionist approach has helped kill off the potential we could have realized.

This bill is another contribution to our sad plight. The socialists like to say on the one hand that they do not know what is causing this malaise without realizing it is because the Liberal government has implemented many of their ideas and this is causing inflation, unemployment and a lack of growth in this country. All those things could be relieved if we could regain confidence in the marketplace that created the prosperity all Canadians share in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Stevens: I would be pleased to.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member spent a good part of his time condemning members of the New Democratic Party for their socialist ideas. When he got near the end of his speech and was explaining what he did not like about those socialist ideas, it turned out that it was our belief that in some sectors of the economy there is a place for public ownership. The hon. member made it clear that he does not think public ownership can be as efficient as private ownership.

I want to ask the hon. member why it is that in Ontario, which has had a Conservative government for most of the last 65 years, there is a publicly-owned hydroelectric system which was established by a Conservative government, and recently the Conservative government of Ontario bought a substantial share in Sun Oil. The present Conservative government of Alberta bought 100 per cent Pacific Western Airlines, and it owns a substantial share of Ipsco and of Nova.

Would the hon. member explain why it is permissible and advisable for Conservative governments to run corporations owned by the state but not for anybody else?

● (2020)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is obvious. My time has been so occupied with trying to keep track of what those socialists are up to here in Ottawa, aided and abetted by their cousins across the floor, that I have no time to keep up to date with what he has been talking about. Certainly I do not, unlike the earlier speaker, purport to speak for the Premier of Alberta or the Premier of Ontario. They are very capable of speaking for themselves.

Mr. Thacker: What is more, Mr. Speaker, 467 federal Crown corporations do not pay provincial income tax—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Campbell, Cardigan, for Mr. Lalonde), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded with consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, reported (with amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"and Resources may, where the Governor in Council by order so approves,".

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give a brief explanation of this amendment. It is to clarify that the approval of the governor in council is expressed by the order, and therefore to clarify that the order tabled in Parliament for the proposed affirmative or negative resolution is the order expressing the approval of the governor in council. Mr. Speaker, it is strictly a technical amendment and I just make those comments to clarify it.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be able to wear two hats this evening. One is as spokesman for our party. I am indicating that our party supports the changes being made. Secondly, as joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, I would like to indicate another reason which was not enunciated by the parliamentary secretary. There is a long standing dispute between the standing joint committee and the Department of Justice concerning the so-called magic formula.

The position has been taken by the Department of Justice for some years now that when a statutory instrument is being proposed, unless it says expressly in the statute that the governor in council may do something by order, the Department of Justice takes the opinion that the matter is not properly before the statutory instruments committee and in some instances need not even be published. Mr. Speaker, what this does is to ensure that the matter will be brought before the regulations and other statutory instruments committee, and that it is deemed to be a bona fide order.

As far as the members of the standing joint committee were concerned, it is our position that all orders in council, whether it says "by order" or not, should be deemed to be properly before the committee and should be deemed to be publishable. But if the government choses to do this for greater certainty, then we welcome this sign of good intentions on the part of the government and we support it.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in committee both our party and the Conservative Party, and in the House the member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and particularly the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), have been pressing to make this terrible bill really, in terms of parliamentary procedure, somewhat better. We are prepared to agree to this technical amendment, although we hope that the government will come up with some more amendments that will make the bill one that will fit in with parliamentary tradition as we understand it.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there have been discussions among the various parties and that there would be unanimous consent for me to move a motion at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This could be done with the unanimous consent of the House? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 2 and by renumbering the subsequent subclauses accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on the amendment by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful if I were to explain to the House what we are voting on before we take the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The amendment will have to be put to the House. Mr. Beatty, seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moves:

That Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 2 and by renumbering the subsequent subclauses accordingly.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it is germane for me to spend a few minutes discussing this, because I consider this the single, most important amendment to this bill that will be dealt with in the discussion of Bill C-102.

The amendments that we will be moving on this side to this bill are not to be deemed, even if they pass, as to warrant support by this party and this House for the bill. The amendments we are proposing tonight are simply a means of damage control, of trying to limit the amount of damage that is being done to the public interest by the bill before us. Let us make no mistake about it; it is a bad bill. It is a bill that does not deserve the support of the members of the House of Commons. It is a bill that is injurious to the interests of the people of Canada.

In no area is this bill a worse bill than the provision in the bill that would automatically accord agent of Her Majesty status to all new Crown corporations incorporated under this legislation. I am delighted that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is here tonight, because it is the President of the Treasury Board who has the responsibility in government for drawing up comprehensive Crown corporation policy. It is very important that he participate in this debate as well to explain his position as President of the Treasury Board and whether he believes that automatically all new Crown corporations incorporated under this bill should be given special privileges.

The privileges which would come from this provision are very significant ones. Most Canadians are not aware of what "agent of Her Majesty" means. It is an expression which appears very Archaean and innocuous, but it conveys very significant privileges.

Perhaps the best way for me to explain to members of the House is to refer them to the uranium cartel case which is currently before the courts. I will not comment on the merits of the case. Hon. members on this side of the House have raised them on a number of occasions, but suffice it to say that the government finally agreed that a number of uranium companies should be charged with price-fixing for contravening the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. That is a criminal offence, and the case included both private sector companies and two companies which were owned by the Government of Canada. One of them was Eldorado Nuclear, and the other was Uranium Canada.

When that matter came before the courts, the two Crown corporations pleaded in their case that they could not be charged because, as agents of Her Majesty, they were immune from the criminal law. Indeed, in a decision made by the Ontario Supreme Court on this case, the court found as follows:

> It is clear that the long-standing historical immunity of the Crown or its agent is not to be lightly dispensed with. Section 16 of the Interpretation Act was in force before the commencement of the period specified in the charge, prior to the incorporation of U.C. and prior to the inclusion of Eldorado under the protection granted by section 3 of the Government Companies Act. Whatever the intention of Parliament relating to the application of the Combines Investigation Act to these companies, adequate time has expired to permit this to be done. Nothing has been done and at present there is no language in the Combines Investigation Act which purports to make that statute binding upon Her Majesty or to affect Her Majesty's rights or prerogatives in any manner. The language of section 16 is, on the other hand, clear and unambiguous. (See The Canadian Broadcasting Company and The Attorney-General for Ontario, supra, particularly the judgment of Rand J. at pages 198 and 199).

The judge said:

> In my opinion then, section 16 is a complete answer to all submissions made by the Attorney General here, and I find that the Combines Investigation Act is not binding upon either of the applicants. In this regard, the conduct complained of in these charges, assuming it is capable of proof, cannot be characterized as criminal and there exists no foundation upon which these charges could be validly laid or prosecuted under the Combines Investigation Act.

What does this mean? This means that when the government includes a provision for automatically granting agent of Her Majesty status to these Crown corporations, it sets two standards. There is one standard for the private sector and for all ordinary Canadians and another standard entirely for the government. It says that federal corporations which operate as agents of Her Majesty are above the combines law and that they can engage in price-fixing. They can engage in the sort of manipulation which would lead to charges being laid in the private sector. In other instances they could engage in false and misleading advertising. A Crown corporation can be exempt from prosecution under statutes dealing with false and misleading advertising. They can be immune from other criminal prosecution as agents of Her Majesty.

It is intolerable to any Member of Parliament who is concerned about respect for the rule of law to accept a situation whereby automatically all new Crown corporations incorporated under this bill would automatically be given that immunity. There must be one standard of law in Canada, and if the government chooses to put in place combines legislation designed to ensure that price fixing does not exist, designed to ensure that one cannot engage in false and misleading advertising and designed to ensure that practices in the marketplace are fair and scrupulous, how can it with any justification seek to exempt its own companies from maintaining the same standards of behaviour we would expect of private sector companies? If private sector companies violate the Combines Investigation Act or if they violate other criminal legislation, charges are laid against them and they are prosecuted in the courts. Yet what we find in the Eldorado and Uranium Canada case is that the government using the fact that the two Crown corporations were agents of Her Majesty, and the corporations have declared themselves immune from the application of the criminal law.

Mr. Benjamin: That is baloney. Come off it! You know better.

Mr. Beatty: If he says that, the hon. member clearly has not read the decision of the Ontario Supreme Court.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell that to Peter Lougheed and Bill Davis.

Mr. Beatty: I regret that the hon. member would make such an attack on the Ontario Supreme Court. Surely it is incumbent upon a Member of Parliament, including the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), to respect a decision by the Ontario Supreme Court which very explicitly says what the law of the land is today.

Mr. Benjamin: Humbug.

Mr. Beatty: It may very well be that the hon. member for Regina West believes that Crown corporations should be above the law and should be able to engage in improper and illegal activities with impunity and immunity.

Mr. Benjamin: None is above the law.

Mr. Beatty: Unlike government members, members of the Progressive Conservative Party in the opposition believe such behaviour is intolerable.

The position we put forward to the House tonight is that when the government enters into the marketplace of the country, the government should not ask for standards of its own behaviour which were more lax than the standards which apply to everyone else. The government should be prepared to set an example which goes well beyond the standards of behaviour expected of everyone else. How can we expect to see respect for the rule of law in this country if the government says: "What we do is all right, but if you engage in the same sort of behaviour, we will lay criminal charges against you?"

For that reason alone it would be wrong automatically to confer agent of Her Majesty status in these instances on these companies which, by and large, will be operating as competitors in the marketplace. However, the privileges and immunities which are conferred by the granting of agent of Her Majesty status goes well beyond simply the ability to thumb one's nose at the Combines Investigation Act.

Equally important and equally odious is the fact that these companies operating in the marketplace would not raise money on their own credit rating. They would not have to establish that they were credit worthy, that they were well managed, that they were good companies or that they were worthy companies to which to lend money. When an agent of Her Majesty enters into markets and tries to raise money, an agent of Her Majesty does so with the credit rating of the Government of Canada. That means these companies automatically have a triple A credit rating. Their competitors in the marketplace have to raise money on the basis of their own credit rating. These Crown corporations, being granted agent of Her Majesty status, will automatically be able to do so with the best terms possible, that is, the best commercial terms available to the Government of Canada.

It goes one step beyond that. In cases where these companies are ill-managed and where ultimately we find they go bankrupt and there are massive losses incurred, as was the case with Consolidated Computer in which $125 million was poured down the drain, what happens in the case of an agent of Her Majesty? In a case where an agent of Her Majesty has incurred debts and goes bankrupt, those debts are automatically charges upon the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. Parliament does not have any discretion in a case like that. The people of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada, are automatically responsible for any debts which are incurred by these Crown corporations.

No one knows—and if the President of the Treasury Board in any way disputes this, I invite him to participate in the debate—what the potential liability of agents of Her Majesty is or how much the taxpayers of Canada could ultimately be charged for mismanagement by Crown corporations which are agents of Her Majesty. Nor do we know when we are asked to pass this legislation tonight how many Crown corporations will be created, what will be their scope, what will be their size and what sort of debts they will be running up for which the taxpayers of Canada would be responsible. If tonight we grant automatic agent of Her Majesty status, we will be giving an unlimited credit card drawn on the account of the people of Canada to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to be used by any new Crown corporation in the energy field which he chooses to set up. How could members of this House of Commons do that? How could anyone who witnessed the fiasco of the Consolidated Computer case and the loss of $125 million because of the negligence of the President of the Treasury Board and his colleagues accept that as a practice which would be tolerable for Members of Parliament? Clearly we have a responsibility on us, and clearly the President of the Treasury Board has a direct responsibility on him, to ensure that we do not give this unlimited ability to Crown corporations to run up debts on behalf of the people of Canada beyond the control of Parliament.

I should make one thing clear, and that is that the government already has the capability through other legislation to confer agent of Her Majesty status on any Crown corporation it chooses. The government can do that today. The issue is not whether in some instances it will be appropriate in the future to confer agent of Her Majesty status on some Crown corporations. The issue is whether Parliament today should be saying for all time that all Crown corporations created under this legislation will automatically be given agent of Her Majesty status. By doing so we will automatically be granting them immunity from combines investigation legislation, will automatically be granting them immunity from some taxes and will automatically be giving them privileges in terms of raising money that their competitors do not have. They will automatically be able to borrow on the government's credit rating and to hold the taxpayers of Canada responsible for their debts, if they are ill-managed.

If the hon. member for Regina West is prepared to do some homework, I would invite him to consider the reports of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts on Crown corporations. That committee found that it was essential to bring some control and accountability to Crown corporations. This was after a succession of scandals during the sixties and seventies that involved Crown corporations and the misuse of public funds. I would invite him to look into the Estey report on Air Canada which found there were inadequate controls on these Crown corporations. I would invite him to look at the report of the Lambert Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability which recommended that controls be put in place. I would invite him to read the successive reports of the Auditor General of Canada to Parliament which said it was essential to bring in legislation that would ensure that the taxpayers of Canada are protected and that the sort of fiascos that occur when Crown corporations run up unlimited bills and pick the pocket of the taxpayer to pay for them could not happen in the future.

These are not partisan authorities, Mr. Speaker. The public accounts committee represents all parties in this House, and the Auditor General of Canada, a royal commission and a judicial inquiry have some standing. The hon. member for Regina West may scoff at those authorities, but there are some members in this House, Mr. Speaker, who believe they have a responsibility to the taxpayers of Canada. There are some who believe that when they are dealing with billions of dollars they have a responsibility as custodians to ensure that the money is well spent and is not simply poured down the drain.

I have constituents who are smarting because of the present financial situation, who desperately need the money that is being taken from them in taxes, who need assistance from the government. If money is not available to my farmers in the form of assistance but is poured down the drain because of the mismanagement of a Crown corporation which has been granted agent of Her Majesty status, then I have not done my job as a Member of Parliament.

If constituents of the hon. member for Regina West who are having a hard time paying their mortgages, who find there is no assistance available to them from the government, are being forced to pay taxes as a result of the mismanagement of Crown corporations because the hon. member has decided that the liabilities of Crown corporations automatically become liabilities of his constituents, then I say he is not doing his job either.

I will return to my first point, Mr. Speaker. Even if it were not enough that Parliament had a responsibility to exercise some prudence and to show some concern about the management of the moneys we hold in trust for the people of Canada, surely when the Canadian people are beginning to lose respect for their institutions and when respect for the rule of law is being lost, the government should act to restore respect for the rule of law. It should not take actions which would create a new group of companies operating in the marketplace which would be immune to criminal legislation and would be able to take the law into their own hands and disregard law passed by Parliament to protect consumers.

This is not the time to slacken laws; it is the time to ensure that the government meets the most stringent standards and sets an example that can be respected by the people of Canada.

At the present time some 50 Crown corporations operate in the marketplace as agents of Her Majesty. This bill would give the government authority to incorporate an unlimited number of new Crown corporations, every one of which would automatically be agents of Her Majesty.

To go a step further, because they would be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act, these corporations would have the ability to incorporate subsidiaries and those subsidiaries yet further subsidiaries in Canada and outside Canada, under federal companies legislation, under provincial companies legislation, and under international legislation. All of these would automatically be agents of Her Majesty and would automatically have the ability to stick the Canadian taxpayer with any bill incurred because of mismanagement.

There have been a number of instances where mismanagement has existed.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Beatty: Consolidated Computer. The hon. member is unaware of the fact that $125 million of taxpayers' money was squandered in this way. How many instances do we need before members of the House, and particularly members of the NDP, are prepared to show respect for taxpayers' money, money which is coerced from their constituents?

This is a crucial issue, Mr. Speaker. If Parliament defaults tonight and allows two standards to be set, if Parliament allows the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to sign the wallets of the taxpayers over to these Crown corporations, then I say that as members we have no right to take pride in the way we have conducted ourselves.

This bill is dangerous, Mr. Speaker. My amendment would simply reduce some of that danger. I would ask the people of Canada to judge members of the House on the way they vote for this bill. All the amendment would do would be to provide that all these Crown corporations would not automatically become agents of Her Majesty. The government would still have the right, as it does today, to make any Crown corporation it chooses an agent of her Majesty.

The only thing that we are asking the government to do tonight with this amendment is to confer that authority on a case by case basis and not by a blanket grant. Surely the people of Canada have a right to expect no less from us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few quick lessons for the expert on Crown corporations who does not even listen to members of his own party in the provinces.

In the first place, a Crown corporation is automatically an instrument of Her Majesty the Queen, no matter how you slice it, in any province or in the federal government.

Second, the hon. member mentioned credit ratings for Crown corporations as if they had somehow earned an advantage. Credit ratings have always had to be earned, whether in the provinces, under the federal government, in the United States or in Europe. They have had to be earned by the way a Crown corporation was administered. I invite the hon. member to ask the Premier of Ontario or of British Columbia or of Alberta about that little item.

I gather from the hon. member's remarks that he feels a number of Crown corporations have always been above the law. If that is true, it means that all of us, and particularly the hon. gentleman, have not been doing our job.

Mr. Beatty: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: Why would the hon. gentleman condemn Crown corporations because members of this House have not been doing a good job?

Mr. Clark: Because he has read the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: His logic escapes me. The hon. member also held that massive losses or massive investments are borne by taxpayers. I invite the hon. gentleman to explain the difference, because I am just an innocent country boy from the prairies. For instance, if $1 billion is invested by citizens in a private corporation, that corporation pays dividends or interest. If they lose money, they do not pay dividends. If they make money, they pay taxes. I thought that was just pure and simple grade nine stuff. But the costs of that investment are borne not only by the investor but also by the consumers of the company's product. If I am wrong, I hope the free enterprisers on both sides of the House will convince me that the consumer does not bear that cost in the price he pays for the product. It does not matter whether it is a Crown corporation or a private corporation; both have to recover the cost of their borrowings. If I am wrong about that, I hope someone gets up and tells me.

An hon. Member: Keep going.

Mr. Benjamin: The other things I would like these private enterprisers on both sides of the House to show me is one instance where a private company returned part of its profit to the consumer and not just the shareholders. I would like all these big-wheel private enterprisers and barefoot boys from Bay Street to show me an instance where a lovey-dovey finance company, which built into their charges the cost of borrowing on which they made a profit, returned to their customers a share of that profit. I am willing to be converted, Mr. Speaker, if they can show me—

Mr. Ellis: Stay where you are!

Mr. Benjamin: —where that happened. Go to an "anal" meeting of Cominco, Inco or the CPR and listen to all these beautiful free enterprise investors. Does the little old lady in running shoes from the local Tory convention with her $100 worth of shares have any say? It is like the Tory convention last weekend where they brought in a bunch of foreigners who had all the say, and it was to hell with policy, let us just play politics. Go to the annual meeting of a corporation and see how much say the average shareholder has in the operation of that company. The truth of the matter is, none whatsoever. At least, Mr. Speaker, with a Crown corporation we have a chance to get back at them. I invite my hon. friend to buy one share in Canadian Pacific and go to their next "anal" meeting and see how far he gets with a motion from the floor. He will not get anywhere. He will be ruled out of order; it is all decided by five or ten people. At least with a Crown corporation whether it is owned by the federal or provincial government, we can call it to account.

Mr. Gamble: Where?

Mr. Benjamin: Right in here.

Mr. Huntington: How?

Mr. Benjamin: Where have you guys been? You have had lots of opportunity. When we were in committee and dealt with annual reports of Crown corporations, where were these free enterprisers? All they want to know is how to get rid of them; they do not ask about accountability.

Mr. Gamble: What meeting have you ever attended?

Mr. Benjamin: If you watch some of these right-wing nitwits from the two so-called major parties, when they have an opportunity to do something about the accountability of a Crown corporation, they blow it. Then they come in here and condemn the principle of Crown corporations.

The hon. member called into question the fact that a Crown corporation is in the name of Her Majesty. He better check the laws of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: By the way, we are going to vote with the official opposition on this one, but for different reasons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, for any hon. member to suggest that this legislation is going to give something automatically and for all time is either sheer ignorance or sheer stupidity. There is no such thing. The hon. member should know better than to make those kinds of statements instead of appealing to the worst—

Mr. Clark: Read the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: —in people, instead of appealing to other people to agree with his ignorance.

Mr. Clark: What day is it, Les?

Mr. Benjamin: It is strange, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman makes no protest about massive losses in private corporations when tens of thousands of consumers are hit and thousands of shareholders lose everything; but when a Crown corporation does, he gets up and says they are bad.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—PROJECTED BUDGET DEFICIT. (B) FOREIGN AID EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I had the occasion to ask two questions of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). The first dealt with the serious deteriorating nature of our current deficit. I made reference to the fact that the deficit was originally projected six months ago to stand in the amount of $10.49 billion. I asked the Minister of State for Finance whether the Department of Finance had prepared new projections as to what the deficit for the current year would be. The question was founded upon the presumption, logically arrived at, that having regard to the massively increased costs incurred by the government as a consequence of the failing economy and the known reduction in revenues generated, it was anticipated that the deficit would increase and increase substantially.

The uncertainty as to the quantum of that increase, however, has led in my view to a serious undermining of the value of our currency. That decline has been rectified in part by the traditional practice followed by this government of shoring up the value of our dollar by increasing interest rates in Canada using the agency of the Bank of Canada. The increase in interest rates has triggered a negative response to the government's alleged attack on inflation, the declared enemy. At the same time it has forced more businesses out of business and it has exacerbated the amount of unemployment suffered in the country. Currently we have at least 1.5 million working Canadians who are no longer working as a result of this foolhardy policy adopted by the current government.

It seems appropriate, in the event the decline of our dollar with all of the consequential effects to which I have made reference is to be stemmed, for the government to disclose a new set of financial figures indicating exactly the nature of the deficit that we may anticipate for the current year.

The government's response to this significant issue has been to lay blame for our economic plight upon the government of the United States. I pause to ask if, indeed, our entire financial position as a nation is to be determined by actions of another government, why do we need a Minister of Finance? Why do we need a Department of Finance and why do we need a Minister of State for Finance if all they can do is come into this House and explain to the people of Canada that we must await some measure of improvement to come from a foreign country.

If I had any doubt as to the need for the Minister of State for Finance, that doubt was rather rapidly resolved by his response to my second question. I asked, in light of current economic circumstances in this country, whether it would not be appropriate, having regard to our massive foreign aid program which currently in terms of direct funding exceeds $1.724 million, to refer the issue of the quantum of foreign aid to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for examination. The minister's response to me was as follows:

> Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member could stop staring at his navel—
> I asked that question in all seriousness.
> • (2205)

I am not familiar with the constituency represented by the Minister of State for Finance, but I can tell the House that somewhere within his constituency there are some of those businesses which have gone bankrupt that are represented by the 39 per cent increase in insolvencies in the country in the first quarter of this year over last year. Somewhere in his constituency there are farmers who have become insolvent and are represented by the 70 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies. Somewhere in his constituency there are some of those unemployed persons who are now forming an army.

Canadians are angry, and I am angry, with the flippant, arrogant response which the minister presented to me and to the House. Surely it is time that the government came to recognize that the people of Canada will no longer accept this kind of abuse. The government must begin to have some regard for the welfare of the people of Canada and adopt policies—if not this one, then surely some other—which will bring some relief to hard-pressed citizens of Canada.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last week I had an opportunity to visit the Caribbean Development Bank, an institution which serves the small islands running through the Caribbean Commonwealth area, the areas we think of whenever we think about a Caribbean vacation in the middle of the winter. All through that area, Canada has contributed magnificently in very practical ways to schools, fishery projects, forestry projects, airports and in a myriad of practical ways which enormously help the people in those countries. We are proud of our contributions in that area. I saw them with my own eyes. I saw how those projects improved the standard of living of those people. But I also saw, which the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) will never admit, how those projects improved Canada's reputation abroad, improved our trade and how, in turn, they improved the ability of the people in those areas to rely on their own capacity and their own strength. We can be proud of those kinds of contributions. Those are the ideals which many of us who look higher than our navel will find are possible in the world.

The hon. member for York North plays on the opposite. He plays on the stingy and mean-mindedness in all of us. He tries to drag us down to a small ideal. He implies that we are all suffering some kind of enormous economic damage because of an act of generosity to other people around the world. His comments tonight carry these ideals to an extreme. He is telling us that building schools, airport hangars and forestry projects are leading to business and farm bankruptcies. The hon. member claims to be a practical man. He should in fact try that claim out on a few of his constituents, where he would be laughed out of the hall.

Let me give one simple example. Canada has said that it will increase its official development assistance to other countries to 0.5 per cent of our gross national product, hardly an extreme case, hardly an excess which will lead to suffering or damage in the economy. Instead, it is a universally recognized, humanitarian level which also helps our businesses, our self-reliance and our trade patterns around the world. We benefit as much as the people who receive this money.

As a final note, I will tell the House that when I listened to the people at the Caribbean Development Bank talking about the money we were using in that bank, they talked about good management, good project evaluation, increased purchases from Canada, streamlined loan administration and constant management review, ideals which I support.

ZIMBABWE—IMPRISONMENT OF PARLIAMENTARIAN AND OF OPPOSITION LEADERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, Canada has a special interest in wishing the success of the multi-party democracy thrive in Zimbabwe. Recent events give grave cause for concern regarding this kind of democracy in that country. The imprisonment of a Member of Parliament, Mr. W. E. Stuttaford, the threat of arrest of Member of Parliament, Mr. Dennis Walker, and especially the imprisonment of black leaders who oppose the ruling party, should make all of us especially concerned about the future. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs establish a special liaison with the Government of Zimbabwe to register our concern and to monitor the level of political freedoms for all parties in that country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR GENERAL ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, federal ridings where the Liberal incumbents are justifiably terrified of the voters' wrath are to be the recipients of millions of federal dollars supposedly earmarked for make-work projects. Actually, this is a cynical, thinly disguised attempt to buy voters with their own money. In view of this treachery, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That Canadians be soon allowed to exercise their franchise, so that they may indicate their revulsion at this blatant vote-buying ploy, by defeating all current Liberal Members of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROTECTION OF YOUNG CANADIANS AGAINST SOLVENT INTOXICATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. Recently the Manitoba Court of Appeal quashed the city of Winnipeg's anti-sniff bylaw, which was designed to discourage the availability of model glues and plastic cements for sniffing by juveniles, a practice which is known to do serious damage to its young users, and which is a problem not only in Winnipeg but in the north and in other Canadian cities. The argument against the bylaw, accepted in the Appeal Court, was that the issue is a matter of federal jurisdiction and needs to be dealt with by Parliament. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urges the Minister of Justice to put before this Parliament very quickly legislative proposals for dealing with this serious problem, so that mechanisms will finally be in place to help protect the minds and lives of young Canadians who, for other reasons that also need to be dealt with in this House, see their only recourse in the cheap and very dangerous escape of solvent intoxication.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR REFERRAL OF FARM FINANCING TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) what proposals he had to aid farmers now, since the Farm Credit Corporation and Small Business Development Bonds have failed. The Farm Credit Corporation is out of funds and the banks are reluctant to issue Small Business Development Bonds. The minister gave us the same idiotic runaround we are always getting. Obviously, no one over there cares about agriculture. Farmers are going bankrupt in ever-increasing numbers, and the Minister of Agriculture says it is no worse than in other sectors of other industries. I might remind the minister, Madam Speaker, that his responsibility is not those other industries; his responsibility is agriculture.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bradley: Must we have the initiation of food stamps before the government will address the problems in agriculture? This issue must be resolved now. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the whole issue of farm financing be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture where it can and will be addressed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, parts of the National Energy Program are as destructive as anything ever done by a democratic government in the free world. It has, for example, to date subsidized the import of foreign oil out of the public purse at an estimated cost of $17 billion, which represents more than 20 per cent of our national debt.

An hon. Member: Lunacy.

Mr. Kilgour: This subsidy program now favours imported oil at the expense of oil from western Canada. In April alone approximately 300,000 barrels a day were expected to be locked in, representing unnecessary oil imports costing approximately $12 million a day. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the government reconsider the more perverse aspects of its energy policy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPORT FOR POLISH PEOPLE AND OBSERVANCE OF POLISH DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the problems of the Polish people continue to be of great concern to all Canadians. Considering that today the Polish Alliance of Canada is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary here in the Parliament buildings, and considering that Her Worship Mayor Marion Dewar, Mayor of the City of Ottawa, has declared Thursday, May 20, 1982, Polish Day, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House support the mayor on this day and urge all citizens of Ottawa to continue to show their concern and support for the people of Poland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is moved by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House support Mayor Dewar on this day, 19th day of May, 1982, and urge all citizens of Ottawa to continue to show their concern and support for the people of Poland.

Does the House agree to the said motion?

FRASER RIVER FLOODING—NECESSITY FOR DYKING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given that dike inspectors along the Fraser River watershed are now preparing for a major flood, possibly of disastrous proportions causing, millions of dollars of damage to important agricultural crops and private property from Prince George and Kamloops all the way downstream to Westham Island at the mouth of the Fraser River, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the Government of Canada move immediately to reallocate all federal funds available for diking and disaster relief during 1982 to prevent devastating damage to private property and to the most severely threatened farmlands such as the fertile food and seed producing acreage of Westham Island, B.C.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AIR TRANSPORT

FUEL COMPENSATION RECOVERY CHARGE—POSITION OF CANADIAN AIRLINES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, a year ago the government introduced the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge, forcing air carriers to pay world prices for fuel used in international flights. When that charge ended on January 31 foreign carriers were allowed to apply for rebates amounting to $47.5 million. However, Canadian carriers were denied the right to apply for rebates of the $50 million paid or owed by them. It is seriously unfair that foreign carriers are given an advantage at a time when Canadian carriers face the terrible dilemma of going bankrupt or going heavily into debt. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the government reconsider the position it has taken and, recognizing the grave situation of Canadian airlines, allow them to have equitable status with other airlines and grant them the right to apply for rebates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE LEADER OF THE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, last week the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) berated the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) for not muzzling the U.S. ambassador to Canada for speaking in Canada on what the Leader of the New Democratic Party thought was an exclusively domestic Canadian matter. Last week Canada's Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in an American forum and included remarks regarding U.S. policy. Strangely enough, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has been silent about that. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the Leader of the NDP have his ideological eyes checked to see if he has equal vision in both of them.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR ASSISTANCE TO FOOD PRODUCERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, Quebec workers have received the welcome news of the award of an $800 million contract to Bombardier, facilitated by 9 per cent seed money from the Export Development Corporation. At the same time Waterloo region farmers are being unceremoniously hauled off their fields and onto bank managers' carpets at the very time of the growing season when they are literally sowing for their livelihoods. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House urge the government to direct the Minister of Finance to make low-cost seed money like that used to assist the Bombardier tender available to Canada's food producers; and, furthermore, in view of the ongoing investigation into the profit situation of chartered banks, the Minister of Finance ask the banks to hold off on farm foreclosures until the tabling of those findings and so let our farmers get the country's food supply into the ground unharassed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NUCLEAR ENERGY

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON PROMOTION OF CANDU SALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Before the government came to its senses and realized the so-called sale of two Candu reactors to Roumania was an economic farce and would never result in the actual transfer of paid-for nuclear technology, the Roumanian government had spent $44 million of a low interest Export Development Corporation loan provided to finance the sale.

This week we learned that the Lopez Portillo government in Mexico has put the whole idea of nuclear megaprojects on hold indefinitely and that the $5 million AECL spent to prepare and promote its Mexican reactor bid is just another in the long list of fruitless mega-write-offs of taxpayers' money to the Canadian nuclear industry. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

• (1415)

That this House instruct the government to stop squandering taxpayers' money on nuclear megamania both at home and abroad, and further, that the government spend the accrued savings on a policy improvement which would direct the savings to the development of Canada's conservation, solar and alternative fuels industries.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FUNDS LENT TO NEW YORK METROPOLITAN TRANSPORTATION AUTHORITY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who undoubtedly has noted the financial assistance given to the New York Metropolitan Transit Authority which was announced yesterday. It got a loan at 9.7 per cent to run for 15 years, to 1997. If the government has been able to find this kind of money to lend to the New York authority, would the minister indicate if there is similar money available that could be offered to transit authorities in Canada or other worthy groups who would like 9.7 per cent financing for the next 15 years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the financing to which the hon. member refers was provided through the Export Development Corporation and is justified, of course, by the very substantial benefits it will provide to Canada. I would have thought that the hon. member would agree that this project was a very desirable one from the Canadian point of view and that, in the present circumstances, we ought to stretch every possible and legitimate method of securing business for Canada. This will have very important employment effects in Quebec particularly, but also in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I might comment that certainly employment in Canada is fine but did it never dawn on the government that two things could be accomplished—help for Canadian transit authorities and the creation of jobs in Canada if funding at 9.7 per cent for 15 years were available?

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, perhaps I may put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Would he indicate if this type of funding is available to similar authorities in Montreal, Vancouver, Toronto and Edmonton, for example? The New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority is boasting in New York this morning that, thanks to the Canadian government, it has saved over $300 million on its transportation acquisition.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I thought the Minister of Finance explained very, very well that this was an export oriented matter. Now I am going to do what I do not think I should do, because it is dangerous—I am going to thank publicly the Minister of Finance for his help to transportation in recent months. He has provided $1.3 billion for western rail transportation. He has increased the budget for my department by $20 million last year, $40 million this year, and $60 million next year for air transportation and the building of airports.

Mr. Clark: Whose money?

Mr. Pepin: Canadian money. That is his job, and that is what he has done. I could go on giving a long list, but the end of the list would be the amount of money he has provided for research and development into transportation in Canada. That is $20 million.

The sale to the United States also has to be seen in terms of Canadian transportation because the equipment that Bombardier is going to export to the United States will add to the equipment that Canadian cities will be able to procure.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, we must note that the Minister of Transport carefully avoided admitting that he has not offered a red cent to Canadian transit authorities. He is the man who has crippled Canadian VIA rail services from coast to coast.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce inform the House whether he has taken up with the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Federal Business Development Bank, the question of seeing if some of this 9.7 per cent funding might be available through the FBDB to worthy small businesses in Canada which are being subjected to interest rates as high as 22 per cent by that Crown corporation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the financing that my hon. friend is talking about was offered in order to meet the competition from a French company. My hon. friend is talking as though he would prefer that the French got those jobs instead of Canadian workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The hon. member asks what I have to say on this subject. I want to say that today I announced the federal government is providing $9.9 million—

Mr. Blenkarn: At what rate?

Mr. Gray: —to Mitel Corporation toward the development of a new digital PABX system which is expected to create close to $1 billion in additional sales and 1,300 jobs over the next five years in both Ontario and Quebec. I presume my hon. friend is against that, too. Well, he ought to be ashamed of himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR FARMERS

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, while we are focusing on ways in which government contributes to the creation of jobs and national wealth through its fiscal powers, I want to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. He is not here, and the buck always ends up with the Minister of Finance, so I will go to him.

The minister is aware that the $5 million given to the Farm Credit Corporation early last winter helped only about 200 farmers, and many more are still hard pressed. The Minister of Finance can find $1 billion at 9.7 per cent for projects outside Canada, but what is he doing to help agriculture? Can he find an equivalent amount immediately for our hard-pressed farmers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has a legitimate point in asking what one can do to assist the hard-pressed farmers. But to suggest at the same time that there was something unworthy, improper or illegitimate about providing export assistance to Bombardier in order to sell 825 subway cars and provide 25,000 persons-years of employment in Canada, is quite another matter.

The hon. member has to understand that there was very strong competition from international suppliers, including those from France, and in order to meet that competition and get this order it was necessary for the Canadian government to provide this particular form of credit financing through the Export Development Corporation.

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, I am not criticizing the program the minister has just initiated to help Bombardier, not for a moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cardiff: But today and tonight we have the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting with us and many of the hon. members opposite, and they are crying for help. We know there is money available; I have had approaches made where there would be offshore money made available to assist in the agricultural sector. You are telling us what you are doing for Bombardier; the bottom line is: what are you going to do for the farmers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his acknowledgement that there is no basis for criticism of the arrangement that has been made by the Export Development Corporation to support bombardier. I thank him for that, and I think it is a much more enlightened attitude than the one taken by the hon. member for York-Peel.

Mr. Stevens: No difference at all. You have missed the point.

Mr. MacEachen: However, I would like to tell the hon. member that very shortly I will be meeting with representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I intend to have a very deep discussion with them about their problems. And if, out of that discussion and later consideration it will be possible to do more than is presently being done, then I would be a very happy person to do it.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

MUNICIPAL ENERGY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister. I have learned that the municipal energy management program, which is a $23 million conservation program to train energy auditors, and is part of the National Energy Program which the minister read out in the House in his first budget, is in danger of being cancelled. I have a letter from the Mayor of Vancouver indicating that such is the case. Can the Minister of Finance confirm that indeed the government is cutting back on energy conservation programs?

Why is the minister prepared to give $600 million to oil companies operating in the Beaufort Sea, and goodness knows what other additional moneys to Dome Petroleum, next week or thereafter, while cancelling important programs which really could conserve energy and make us energy self-sufficient?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, with reference to the subject raised by the hon. member, he should realize that conservation is a major element of the National Energy Program. However, with reference to the particular subject matter, the Government of Canada is encountering difficulties in its negotiations with the various provinces concerning this program. As a result, a complete review is taking place at present as to whether or not we will pursue this particular program.

ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. He has been standing up in this House day after day, together with his colleague, the Prime Minister, saying that with the collapse of the energy megaprojects, such as Alsands and the Alaska gas pipeline, that other energy megaprojects are coming along. Apparently it is now confirmed that the program to which I refer is on hold. It is a small program worth $23 million but, according to the Mayor of Vancouver, this program will provide jobs and it will really have an impact on energy conservation in the country. What is the Government of Canada's program now? Is it to cancel energy conservation programs in return for putting more money into these mega-loser projects?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to one particular program in relation to conservation. However, he refuses to acknowledge the success of some of the conservation programs announced in the National Energy Program. I refer him to the Canadian oil substitution program and to the home insulation program, which have been major success stories of the National Energy Program. The problem which the hon. members raises is of particular concern to the Government of Canada. However, negotiations with the provinces have not been proceeding well. Our government is intending to review not only our negotiating position but indeed the positions taken by the various provincial governments. It is hoped that the matter will be resolved. However, I do not wish to raise false expectations with the hon. member, and he should be prepared to place some of the blame on the various provincial governments.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT OF OWNERSHIP OF HIBERNIA OIL FIELD RESOURCES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice said in this House yesterday that no decision had been made at that time, less than 24 hours ago, about referring the offshore mineral resources dispute question to the Supreme Court of Canada. This morning he proceeded to Newfoundland and the Prime Minister telexed the Newfoundland government stating that the question was today filed with the Supreme Court of Canada. The reference has been filed today referring the issue of the Hibernia oil field's ownership to the Supreme Court of Canada. There has to be some explanation for this.

Today the Minister of Justice met with the leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland—the defeated Liberal leader—rather than with the minister of justice for Newfoundland. He refused to meet with the minister of justice before holding his press conference. Why has the government interfered in the orderly handling of this matter by the Canadian court system, the matter having already been referred to the Appeal Division of the Newfoundland Supreme Court? That court has already set dates for factums to be filed. It has fixed October 8 as the date to set the hearing. Why is the government interfering? Does it not trust the Newfoundland court after its constitutional decision?

• (1430)

Does the Acting Prime Minister not realize that court decisions will never settle this issue, which is an issue of justice and fair treatment for the people of Newfoundland, our tenth province?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member would conclude his question by saying that no court would ever decide this matter, when he himself in his opening sentence suggested that it was somehow improper for the federal government to proceed to the Supreme Court of Canada, while the matter or several related matters were before the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. The gist of his question was: why has the federal government gone to the Supreme Court?

I should tell the hon. member that the Minister of Justice stated today that while the provincial government had recently filed a reference to the provincial court of appeal, the questions submitted by the provincial government raise a number of complex issues in addition to the question of jurisdiction in respect of Hibernia. These other matters include the status of inland waters, the territorial sea, and perhaps the interests of other provinces as well. In the view of the Minister of Justice, it was necessary to move rapidly to have the urgent and pressing questions of jurisdiction in Hibernia resolved at the earliest possible date by the highest court, the Supreme Court of Canada. That was the explanation offered today by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not think it is ever necessary for a minister to deceive the House by stating that no decision had been made, and then flying to Newfoundland to announce the decision.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I think I mentioned the other day that the idea of question period is not to offer comments to all the answers received. The hon. member who was very long in his first question, should please proceed to his question now.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House why the Minister of Justice met first with the defeated leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland who was rejected by approximately 61 per cent of Newfoundland voters? Why did he meet first with him? Of course he and the Liberal Party of Newfoundland have rejected the federal government's course of action. Why have they found it necessary to declare war on the province? When will the government respond to the fair offer of the government of Newfoundland which was made to the federal government on January 25 but was never responded to? Do they think they can bully the smallest province of Newfoundland into a settlement?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, the intention is not to bully the smallest province at all. The intention is to try to settle—

Mr. Crosbie: How will this settle it?

Mr. MacEachen: —the jurisdiction of Hibernia which, until it is resolved, will constitute a block to the development that we can all foresee for the province of Newfoundland. I should say to the hon. member that in the letter which the Prime Minister sent today to Premier Peckford—

Mr. Crosbie: There was no decision yesterday.

Mr. MacEachen: —he concluded by saying:

> I continue to hope we can resolve our differences over resource management and revenue sharing despite the fact that two legal actions have been launched. In the meantime, while these two court actions proceed, the federal government remains committed to working co-operatively with the government of Newfoundland in order to ensure that current oil and gas activity in the offshore continues.

I assure the hon. member that it is not our intention to bully; it is our intention to work co-operatively with the government of Newfoundland in the way indicated.

Mr. Crosbie: What is the date of the letter?

PROPOSALS MADE BY NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister who will know that this unprecedented legal action will be seen as an affront to the integrity of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and an insult to the people of Newfoundland; he knows that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I want to ask the minister why the Government of Canada did not respond to the reasonable request of the government of Newfoundland, made as recently as May 4, whereby it once again asked the Government of Canada to set aside the question of ownership during the period of negotiations and permanently, if there was an agreement; and the very reasonable position of the province which called not only for shared management and revenue sharing but for setting aside permanently the question of jurisdiction? Why, in the face of that very reasonable proposal, did the Government of Canada affront and provoke the people of Newfoundland by this unprecedented action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that question was also dealt with in the letter of the Prime Minister to Premier Peckford, in which the Prime Minister said:

> You have insisted that the federal government agree, in advance of serious negotiations, to set the issue of legal ownership aside permanently and commit itself to a framework for resource management that could produce a stalemate which would not be in anyone's interest.

The Prime Minister went on to say that pre-conditions of that kind obviously make meaningful negotiations quite impossible.

QUERY RESPECTING RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I ask the Acting Prime Minister what is more important, the creation of a stalemate or the development of this very important resource for Canada? This is the question which must be addressed. Does the Acting Prime Minister expect the House to believe that reasonable negotiations can resume in the light of this unnecessary provocation? He knows that there can be no negotiations as long as this question has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, while it is before the Newfoundland Court of Appeal. Why have they not responded to the request of the Newfoundland government to sit down and negotiate the reasonable proposition which was put to the Government of Canada on January 25 and which, incidentally, was supported by almost 62 per cent of the people of Newfoundland who voted in the last provincial election?

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that it is possible to secure and work out arrangements between the federal government and the provinces. I remind the hon. member, who is normally a reasonable person, that the Government of Canada has succeeded in working out arrangements or agreements with three western producing provinces, and that we were able to work out an agreement on the offshore, after intensive negotiations, with the province of Nova Scotia. I believe that what has been possible with four other provinces is possible and can be attained, with good faith on both sides, with the province of Newfoundand as well.

TIMING OF CABINET DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, could the Acting Prime Minister tell the House of Commons when cabinet took the decision to refer the offshore question to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I do not have that information. I do know that the order in council was signed this morning, but I have no other information which I can give. The Prime Minister will be in the House later, and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition may want to follow up that question, but I have no further information on the point.

TIMING OF PRIME MINISTER'S ARRIVAL IN CHAMBER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, just for the purposes of clarification, will the Prime Minister be in the House before the end of question period?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is meeting with the Prime Minister of Australia, and I expect him to be in the House before three o'clock.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

ALLEGATIONS OF CIA PAYMENTS TO CANADIAN ELECTION CANDIDATES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. In 1976 the Prime Minister and British Columbia Senator Ray Perrault met with one John Meier of British Columbia, a former Howard Hughes associate. At that time Mr. Meier provided them both with extensive documents and tapes concerning allegations of CIA penetration of Canadian security services and funding through CIA agents of specific election campaigns and candidates in Quebec, British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan between 1970 and 1976. Will the Solicitor General confirm that, as a result of these serious allegations, the Prime Minister ordered a secret investigation into the allegations and the charges by Mr. Meier and that there was in fact an inquiry conducted by a lawyer named Pierre Genest? Will the Solicitor General now make public the results of that secret inquiry?

• (1440)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have no information on that subject at all. I hope to be able to look into it and comment on it shortly.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I gave the minister notice of this question yesterday. Of course, if these allegations can be confirmed, they represent a massive violation of Canadian sovereignty by American CIA agents.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE STUDY ALLEGED CIA INVOLVEMENT IN CANADIAN ELECTIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in light of the importance of the issues raised by Meier's petition, a petition which I intend to table in the House at the conclusion of question period, and since these issues were also recently raised in the Quebec trial of RCMP Officer Vermette, will the minister now give the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs a reference to study the question of CIA involvement in Canada, to hear witnesses, including Meier, and determine whether indeed the Canadian security service has been infiltrated by the CIA and whether, most important, the CIA attempted to influence democratic elections in Canada just as they did in Chile in 1973?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the hon. member did not give me notice that he would be asking that question today.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FISHING RIGHTS OF MICMAC INDIAN BAND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have learned that the Quebec government has again refused to recognize the legitimate fishing rights of the Micmac at Restigouche and has provoked them by withdrawing from an offer which might have settled this matter. Since the fishing season in the Restigouche opens in three weeks, and we do not want to see a repetition of the raids and violence of last year, will the minister tell the House if he will intervene in this matter to negotiate with Quebec and demand a reasonable and just settlement as soon as possible?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker. As a matter of fact I have intervened, in the sense that my officials in Quebec have been talking to the Quebec government this morning. We are urging, and I am urging, the chief and the band to continue discussions with the province. We are urging the province to do that same thing. We do feel disappointed. We thought this was close to resolution a short time ago when there seemed to be an acceptance of the quota. The province has reduced the quota and that has inflamed emotions, but we hope that can be corrected fairly shortly.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVINCIAL TAXATION AUTHORITY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the federal government accept the principle that a provincial government has the constitutional authority to tax another level of government, namely, the federal government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROVINCIAL TAX

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, when the minister takes that question as notice, would he also examine whether the imposition of an employee tax paid by an employer, in this case the federal government, a tax collected by a province, falls within the jurisdiction of the Constitution, namely, what I always thought was a provision whereby one level of government could not tax another level of government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when I took the question as notice it was not to be unco-operative but because of its importance. I will add the second question to the first and provide a reply, after I receive legal advice, as soon as possible.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the excise tax on natural gas is possibly one of the most abhorrent taxes which has come out of the National Energy Program—not only is it a bad tax, it is a cancerous one—does the minister realize it is adding one third to the home heating cost of all home owners in Canada? Further, if he wishes to help the farmers, the quickest way to help them is to delete that tax since natural gas is the basis for fertilizer and this is the time of year when farmers use a tremendous amount of it. Is the minister prepared to withdraw the excise tax on natural gas?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if I had an alternative source of revenue that could be easily applied without objection, I would consider withdrawing the tax. However, I have no such alternative source of revenue.

The hon. member must realize how difficult it is to raise taxes under current circumstances because, as the Treasurer of Ontario discovered, any tax is bound to provoke a reaction from those persons affected.

Mr. Towers: If the minister would withdraw the money which is going into PetroCan-Petrofina it would be a good start toward relieving the tax.

PAYMENT OF TAX BY DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the distributors of this gas have to pay the tax even prior to collecting it. This means that the distributors have to borrow the money in order to pay the tax to the Department of Revenue. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in committee last night that he is prepared to look at that and perhaps give the distributors at least 90 days in which to collect and pay the tax to the Department of Revenue rather than having to do it within 30 days. Would the Minister of Finance at least go that far?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, yes, I will agree to look at the matter as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources undertook before the committee.

MULTICULTURALISM

SPEECH MADE BY CHAIRMAN OF RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism remarks made in a speech delivered on April 23 to a federally sponsored conference on racism in Vancouver. It was delivered by Israel Ludwig, a Winnipeg lawyer and government appointed chairman of the Race Relations Committee of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism.

Incredibly Ludwig urged that Christmas, Good Friday, and other religious holidays be abolished in order to combat racism. He urged the government to monitor the news media, and demanded that the CRTC have the power to revoke licences of radio or television stations that give prominence, where prominence is not justified, to racist groups. He urged a similar body to monitor the press. He alleged that the press gives coverage to racist groups in order to sell their newspapers. An admission of unacceptable government interference in the freedom of the press emerged from his remarks. I would ask the minister if he plans to remove Mr. Ludwig from the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism because of his statements.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, no, I do not intend to remove someone for expressing his views. I believe that this country belives in the freedom of expression.

Mr. Huntington: What about metric?

Mr. Crosbie: What about Fraser?

Mr. Fleming: I think that if the hon. member would read the full text of the speech he would have a better understanding of the suggestions of Mr. Ludwig. For instance, he did not suggest for a moment the abolishing of Christmas; he suggested that some consideration might be given to honouring the high or holy holidays of non-Christians who are as Canadian as the Christian population of this country.

The hon. member should also be aware, if he reads his newspapers, that I said following Mr. Ludwig's speech that I differ considerably with some of the points which he put forward but I certainly do not argue with his right to express his views.

Mr. Paproski: I guess you mean that Neil Fraser is an example for freedom of speech after being fired.

Madam Speaker: Order. May I point out that that has nothing to do with the question that was just asked?

Mr. Paproski: I do feel it is a worth-while comment.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I do feel I have the freedom of speech to make a comment—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is precisely what I was saying. I do not think it is time to make comments. It is time for question period. I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton North for that purpose.

MINISTER'S UNDERSTANDING OF MULTICULTURALISM

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary. Mr. Ludwig seems to think that multiculturalism means ruthless suppression of the traditions of freedom of the majority. I hope that this is not the way the minister understands multiculturalism.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is putting too many peppers in his pirogis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh! Racist!

• (1450)

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, I would love to arrange, if I could, a meeting with Mr. Ludwig and the hon. member because I think he would find him an interesting Canadian with some interesting ideas. I agree with some of the proposals in that speech. Some of them I do not agree with.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Epp: That's the way to keep Canada together.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It's right down the line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Wonderful Wednesday again!

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—IMPORTATION OF CANVAS SHOES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns his recent statement that a decision will soon be made concerning the problems facing the footwear manufacturing industry since he lifted the quota on leather footwear at the end of November. Does the minister agree with the statement of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal that any system of restraint less than comprehensive would offer no protection at all? Does he therefore agree that the surveillance system of counting imports did not work as a method of controlling the quantity of canvas footwear imported at the time when the canvas footwear loophole was found to be injuring our domestic footwear industry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the existence of the canvas footwear loophole was taken into account by the government when it made the decision which was announced last fall to include canvas footwear in the quota. I think we have certainly responded to that concern.

Mr. Heap: The minister knows his action was too late.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF IMPORT QUOTAS ON LEATHER FOOTWEAR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, having in mind the Anti-Dumping Tribunal's warning that imports of leather footwear from low-wage countries compete directly—and this was over a year ago—in the middle-range points of the Canadian footwear market to which the Canadian producers direct about 90 per cent of their product, will the minister assure this House that he will not rely on such an ineffective method as counting alone for solving the problem presently facing the footwear industry, and will he encourage his colleagues to reinstate the quotas on leather footwear before that industry is entirely destroyed?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my recollection about the Anti-Dumping Tribunal is that they found our footwear industry could meet competition from developed countries, including state-trading countries. These are the major sources of imports of leather footwear. In addition to the quota system which we announced last fall, we also created a $17 million fund to assist in the modernization and upgrading of our industry. In any event, we are actively studying and reviewing representations from all elements of the industry, and have been doing so since the announcement of the policy. When that review is completed, we will announce any decisions we have to make as a result of the review.

LOSS OF JOBS FOLLOWING REMOVAL OF QUOTA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, since the minister will not answer my questions about the surveillance method or the quotas, and since he has promised for three months to make an announcement, which he has not done, will he now say whether he is aware of the fact that we have already lost one third of the jobs in Canada's leather footwear manufacturing industry since he removed the quotas? Will he say whether he seriously intends to take action now to defend the remaining 14,000 jobs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we are certainly interested in the well-being of the industry, including the workers in it. That is why we continue to have a quota on canvas footwear and other forms of non-leather footwear, and why we created the modernization fund of which I just spoke. There is a debate about the number of jobs in the industry at the present time as to the extent to which they are affected by the economy as a whole or whether they are affected by increased imports. This matter is being actively looked at by cabinet. The matter is one for decision by cabinet and any decision will be announced as soon as possible.

METRIC CONVERSION

THREAT OF PROSECUTION OF GROCERY STORE OWNERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday I was advised that several owners and operators of small grocery stores in Ontario received notification from the regional manager of the weights and measures division of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that officials intend to prosecute them and that they face fines of up to $1,000 and/or jail terms of up to six months, for using pounds rather than kilograms. Since the minister is responsible for the weights and measures division of his department, can he tell this House why that division is not following the minister's statement made in the House last Friday that he will recommend exempting small retailers from compulsory metrication?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I indicated I was going to discuss this policy with the industry. The discussion has not yet taken place. Therefore the policy currently being followed is one that was established and approved by Parliament in 1976-77, and later implemented as set out in the legislation at the time through regulations.

Mr. Domm: So much for the word of the minister.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the minister undertook on Friday to consult the industrial sector committee to which he just referred. I advised the minister that 25 per cent of those people are from foreign manufacturers of weigh scales and another 25 per cent are from his ministry and that of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister assure the House at this time that the people he consults about this proposal will be the people affected, the small business sector, not those who manufacture foreign-made weigh scales and members of his own ministry and that of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as usual the hon. member's questions are misleading and based on wrong facts. I assure him that the consultation that will take place will truly be with the people concerned. The hon. member's remarks indicate the spirit of negativism which characterizes him.

CASE OF KINGSTON COUPLE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to the answer to the first question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I want to bring to his attention a specific example, the case of a couple in Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. Len Menikefs, hard-working people who have the respect of the community. They have been suddenly confronted with the idea that they may be thrown into jail for a six-month period. While the minister is considering whether there should be compulsory or voluntary implementation of the metric system, why should those people have to go to jail just because of some whim of the minister? Why are they not allowed at least to have the benefit of the understanding which the minister gave the House the other day?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, let me assure you that I am not at all impressed by the plea of the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: —which is absolutely without foundation. Nobody will be charged or threatened with being jailed until the program has been fully implemented, which will not be before two years down the line. All the stories dreamed up by the Conservative Party, which has decided to make a political issue of a non-partisan question, are false and without foundation. The hon. member should be ashamed of creating fear.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON REFERRAL OF OFFSHORE OWNERSHIP TO SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who has just come back to the House and who will know that yesterday, at about five minutes to three o'clock, the Minister of Justice, in answer to a question as to whether or not the government was going to refer the question of offshore jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Canada, said:

—there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether that response by the Minister of Justice yesterday was a truthful response and, if so, would he tell the House of Commons at which time, what time yesterday or today, did the cabinet of Canada meet to make the decision to refer the offshore jurisdiction question to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the decision became effective when the order in council was signed some time this morning. I cannot say exactly at what hour.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister perhaps wonders why his word is not accepted. Responses like that are the reason.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TIMING OF CABINET DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me put the question again. When did cabinet make that decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question of what goes on in cabinet, as the right hon. member knows, is a matter for the Privy Council to keep to themselves. When a decision is made by cabinet is when that decision results in an order or in a decision by the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Yes?

Mr. Trudeau: That is right. Sometimes you discuss questions and you do not make the decision effective then, because you want to know if certain other things are going to happen, whether negotiations can become effective, and so on. There was discussion of this matter over the past many weeks. The decision became final this morning when the order in council was signed.

TIME OF CABINET MEETING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): When did the cabinet of Canada meet to make this decision?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: And was the Minister of Justice telling the truth to the House of Commons yesterday when he gave his answer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the cabinet met yesterday, yesterday morning. It took what in effect was a conditional decision, and that decision became effective this morning.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented on Tuesday, May 18, 1982 and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—ALLEGED UNFOUNDED ANSWER BY MR. KAPLAN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, as a result of the answers which were given today during question period by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the answer which was given by the Solicitor General during the question period today. I want the record to be very clear that the Solicitor General was in fact yesterday morning given detailed information concerning the allegations which I had made in question period today, and the suggestion that he was not informed that he would be questioned on this matter today is completely without foundation.

Madam Speaker: That really is not a question of privilege, it is debate. I will not even allow the hon. member to respond. I do not recognize that as a question of privilege.

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY MR. CHRÉTIEN

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege relates to the answer given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I refer to page—

Madam Speaker: Order. There is some disturbance behind the hon. member for St. John's West. I want to remind the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) that the hon. member for St. John's West had risen on a question of privilege just ahead of the hon. member and therefore I will recognize him in his turn. I recognize now the hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I refer to Hansard of yesterday at page 17533 and 17534 where the Minister of Justice, questioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) as to whether the federal government is considering a unilateral reference on offshore resource ownership to the Supreme Court of Canada, said:

—No decision has been made at this time.

On the next page, in response to a further question about a direct unilateral reference, he said:

Madam Speaker, I said that there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

Madam Speaker, this morning a telex went from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the Premier of Newfoundland informing him that a reference had been filed with the Supreme Court of Canada this morning putting to the Supreme Court of Canada a question, the whole question of offshore ownership of resources off the east coast of Newfoundland. The Minister of Justice himself flew to Newfoundland to make the same announcement at a press conference. Today we have heard from the Prime Minister that a decision was made by the cabinet of Canada yesterday morning.

An hon. Member: Deliberately misleading.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not care whether the decision was conditional or not. The decision was confirmed by order in council last night so that the Minister of Justice has deliberately, on a most important matter, deliberately misled this House, deliberately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. I gather the hon. member is commenting on the way in which the hon. minister or the Right Hon. Prime Minister answered him yesterday and today in the House. I must say to the hon. member that answers of ministers in the House, if they do not satisfy the members, do not constitute a basis for a question of privilege. What the hon. member is doing until now is debating that question. That is his right, he may debate it, but he may debate it at another time and not under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I am not debating the adequacy of the answer. I am saying that the privileges of members of this House have been affected by a minister deliberately misleading this House, and that is a breach of the privileges of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not care if he is in the House or not. He should not be, an outright liar who deceives the members of this House.

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I would like hon. members to try to be a bit less nervous. The only way to get through debate is to do it in an orderly fashion, and I would appreciate the co-operation of hon. members to do just that. Someone was speaking to me. Did I hear the hon. member say that someone had deliberately misled the House?

An hon. Member: You got it right!

An hon. Member: Remember Profumo!

Madam Speaker: That is quite unparliamentary. I am afraid I must ask the hon. member if he wants to confirm that. There are things that cannot be said in this manner, unless they are done under a substantive motion, to charge a member with deliberately misleading the House. I would ask the hon. member if he would withdraw those words.

Hon. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am sure you will want to consider the distinction between a difference in the subject matter of a debate and a charge that the minister has deliberately misled the House. If ever there was a question of privilege that was a substantive question of privilege, throughout the years in the House, it was the assertion by a member of the House that a minister of the Crown had deliberately misled the House. That is the substance of the question raised by the member for St. John's West. I would submit most strongly, Madam Speaker, that the Chair has an obligation when such an assertion is made that a minister of the Crown is deliberately misleading the House, and that it raises a very substantial question of privilege which must be considered by the Chair. I also suggest that the Chair has an obligation to hear submissions with respect to the position the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is advancing, both pro and con, before coming to a decision. To do otherwise would be very dangerous, and in this very vital and sensitive area of questions of privilege I suggest it behooves the Chair to hear substantial submissions before coming to any premature conclusions.

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: We are dealing with two things, obviously, and we will make a distinction between the two things. The first thing we have to deal with is the unparliamentary language which was used. That is one point. If the hon. member wants to maintain that accusation or that unparliamentary language and if he wants to insist on that charge, he knows how he can do that. He must give notice of a substantive motion to charge an hon. member with having "deliberately" misled the House. Otherwise, in the course of normal debate, which we are having now, the expression "deliberately misleading the House" cannot be used. It is unparliamentary. Debate can continue on this question of privilege only on the condition that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) withdraws those words.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, with great respect—

Mr. Cousineau: Order.

An hon. Member: Who is running this House?

Mr. Nielsen: If hon. members opposite will be quiet, I would like to point out that to come to a judgment that words used by the hon. member for St. John's West are unparliamentary would be to prejudge the very matter the hon. member for St. John's West is raising. The hon. member for St. John's West has been very specific in asserting that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has deliberately misled this House. This happened not only during question period yesterday, in which case I agree with the Chair that notice should be given and the question raised in the normal way under the rules, but it also arose again today as a result of the responses given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the questions advanced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Our rules provide that questions of privilege with respect to matters raised during question period on the current day should be raised now, and that was the purpose of the hon. member for St. John's West in raising the matter now. If the Chair finds that, pursuant to her interpretation of the rules, the matter should be raised tomorrow, naturally notice will be given, but I suggest very strongly to the Chair that the hon. member for St. John's West is entitled to be heard now since the matter did arise during today's question period.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is really going right around the question.

Mr. Harquail: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member a bit later.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is really going right around the question. There is no question whatever as to the right of the hon. member for St. John's West to submit a question of privilege today, if it follows from the deliberations of today. There is no question about that whatever, and I will hear him for as long as he wants to do just that, but he must raise his question of privilege without using unparliamentary language, which is quite clearly determined in Beauchesne and many other authorities. "Deliberately misleading the House" may not be used in the course of debate or the raising of a question of privilege. If the hon. member wants to maintain that an hon. member has deliberately misled the House, he has to do that through a formal motion, and I will not hear him today on his question of privilege—which he is completely entitled to raise—unless he withdraws those words.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I certainly have no intention of withdrawing any language I have used here, and I certainly wish to proceed with the charge that the Minister of Justice has deliberately misled this House. That is what he did yesterday, as shown by the answers of the Prime Minister to questions raised here today. I am not withdrawing. That is my charge, and I will follow it up with all the formalities as soon as I can. No way am I withdrawing—no way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I take note of what the hon. member has said and, if he wants to lay a formal charge subsequently, he may do that, but the words "deliberately misled" have been pronounced in this House. They are unparliamentary, and the hon. member will have to withdraw them. I ask him to do that, in co-operation with the Chair, who has the responsibility of maintaining order in this House. That is a responsibility the Chair exercises only through rules and practices which hon. members themselves have established. The hon. member is in fact going against himself if he does not co-operate at the present time, but I am sure he will do so and withdraw those words for the time being. If he wants to repeat them in a formal charge under a different procedure, he can do that later on.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, surely it must be apparent that to follow the course of requiring the hon. member to withdraw the words he has used, the accusation of deliberately misleading the House, is to come to a pre-judgment on the very matter at issue before the Chair. The Chair has my undertaking and the undertaking of the hon. member for St. John's West that he will give—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: If the jackals over there will be quiet for a moment, we will undertake to give the Chair proper notice tomorrow supported by—

An hon. Member: Jackass.

Mr. Nielsen: The jackasses are all over there. Long before I did, the Prime Minister called them braying donkeys.

We will undertake to give the Chair proper notice tomorrow supported by a substantive motion, but I suggest it would be a gross misinterpretation of our rules to come to a pre-judgment and to require the hon. member for St. John's West to withdraw the very substance of that notice and of that motion before he even has an opportunity to present it to the Chair for discussion by hon. members in the House.

Madam Speaker: No, I am not pre-judging the matter at all. I am only asking the hon. member for St. John's West to withdraw the unparliamentary language he has used in the House. That is precisely the reason we need a motion, so that everyone will know exactly what the minister is being accused of and charged with. That can be done by way of a substantive motion which the hon. member might bring on at a later date, but an unparliamentary expression has been uttered in this House, and I cannot allow the business to proceed without its having been withdrawn. I am sure the hon. member will understand that and that he will withdraw those words for the time being, on the understanding that he may maintain that, if he wishes, in a formal charge on another occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, to require that is to require the hon. member for St. John's West to admit that the expression he used was untrue. That is not the case. If the words used were untrue, I am sure the hon. member for St. John's West would withdraw them, but we on this side of the House maintain that they were not untrue, and if the Chair insists on following this course, my only advice to the hon. member for St. John's West is to stick by his words, and we will confront the Chair and the House tomorrow with a substantive motion and proper notice of a question of privilege on this very, very serious matter of the Minister of Justice's deliberately misleading the House by his answers yesterday.

Madam Speaker: I certainly cannot—neither can any other hon. member in the House at the present time—judge whether these accusations are true or untrue, taking into account the way this situation developed.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Madam Speaker: The precise reason we need a motion is so that the whole question can be debated. However, those unparliamentary words cannot be uttered in the course of exposing a question of privilege, and I am afraid I must ask the hon. member for St. John's West to withdraw those words, without prejudice to whatever subsequent procedure he might want to follow.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I naturally wish to co-operate with the Chair, but I am not going to lend myself to any pretence that we have not been deliberately deceived. I have had enough of it, and so have all hon. members on this side of the House. We have had enough of members of the cabinet deceiving us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We have had enough of half-truths and evasions. Yesterday there was a deliberate and serious black and white deception of this House as to what was to happen on the offshore mineral issue. The minister flew to St. John's. His plane was ready and waiting for him after he misled this House. No way will I withdraw, not for one second.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1520)

Madam Speaker: In that case I have no choice but to name the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in the circumstances, our parliamentary practice leaves me no choice. It is my duty to move:

That the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of this day's sitting.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

Madam Speaker: The motion is carried.

Conforming with the decision of this House, I must now ask the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to withdraw from the chamber.

I must again ask the hon. member for St. John's West, in conformity with the decision that has been taken by this House, to withdraw from the chamber.

Perhaps the Sergeant-at-Arms could escort the hon. member for St. John's West out of the Chamber.

And Mr. Crosbie having withdrawn:

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I tried to catch your eye earlier in the afternoon. In view of the events that have transpired I want to review and reflect on the record of the remarks of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in his answer to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) about the implementation of metric. I have a blind constituent who has been threatened and is in the situation of either being liable to be fined or sent to prison because he has not complied with metric. I want to review what the minister said and check my facts again.

I give you formal notice now that I intend to raise a question of privilege on this point.

Madam Speaker: I would just remind the hon. member that the fact that he rose in this House to give me notice does not constitute the proper type of notice. He should give me notice in writing with a brief statement of what constitutes his question of privilege and I will deal with it at another time.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, on that question of privilege I want to say that on the way out of the House the hon. member raised with me the matter of the blind person in his constituency. I told him that he was not correct, that the person was not prosecuted and will not go to jail.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that is debate and I cannot allow it at this time.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. STEVENS—REQUEST THAT LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PREMIER OF NEWFOUNDLAND BE TABLED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In an exchange of questions between the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) during question period, the minister read extensively from what purported to be a letter sent by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) to the Premier of Newfoundland. I think it is the custom of this House that upon request that letter will be tabled.

I am sorry that the Minister of Finance has left the House but the Prime Minister is here and undoubtedly he is familiar with the letter I referred to. I request that the letter from which the Minister of Finance read extracts earlier today be tabled.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I was not here when that exchange occurred; I was meeting with the Prime Minister of Australia. I have no objection to making that letter public but I think it would be discourteous to do so unless the Premier of Newfoundland agreed. I can ascertain—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I was not here and do not know the circumstances in which it was read. If hon. members object to reading from it, then that is all the more reason not to ask for production of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They will have to make up their minds. Madam Speaker, let us try and get this straight. I said that I am prepared to table it.

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: With this crowd, Madam Speaker, you have to explain everything twice—

Mr. Clark: And change your stride in mid-stream.

Mr. Trudeau: —and three times for the leader, Madam Speaker. I said I am prepared to table it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I said I am prepared to table it if the Premier of Newfoundland—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I know he is a laughing matter, and if this is the view of the hon. member he can express it himself.

Is the opposition satisfied, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: No? Let us have a supplementary. I would like to hear that.

Madam Speaker: The Minister of Finance is not in the House at the present time but the Right Hon. Prime Minister has just said that he is prepared to table this letter under certain conditions. I think we should wait until tomorrow to see what kind of consultations can take place and whether the question is posed tomorrow. I might deal with it tomorrow if a decision is made by the minister not to table it.

PETITION

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—ALLEGED CIA INTERVENTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of John Meier of Delta, British Columbia. Mr. Meier makes certain requests of this Parliament. He asks that the House cause a committee of the House to conduct hearings into matters and facts concerning the intervention of the CIA in Canadian elections, as well as penetration by the CIA into Canadian security services. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ordered an inquiry into these matters, I urge that this petition be taken very seriously and that a committee investigate these very serious allegations.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,887, 2,889, 2,895, 2,896, 2,897, 2,939, 2,955, 2,983, 4,173 and 4,280.

DPW—TRAINING AND EDUCATIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,887—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Accommodation Program—Operations and Maintenance at page 32.28, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to training and educational services (a) how does the department explain the 100 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Accommodation operating—vote 10, standard object 04, training and educational services.

Expenditures	1978-79	$166,120
	1979-80	86,929
Decrease		$ 79,191

(a) Training and educational services did not increase by 100 per cent but actually decreased by 48 per cent.

The 1979-80 expenditure of $86,929 was broken into the following categories:

(b)	(c)
Reimbursement for courses after working hours	$14,366
Course fees during normal working hours	47,089
Public Service Commission training courses	24,315
Fees paid to professional and resources persons, including guest speakers, etc.	1,159
Contracts over $2,000 were the following:
Public Service Commission, Ottawa, Ontario	$20,777
Public Service Commission, Halifax, Nova Scotia	8,217
Algonquin College, Ottawa, Ontario	15,890
Darcy Sweeney Ltd., Scarborough, Ontario	2,125

DPW—PHOTOGRAPHIC SERVICES

Question No. 2,889—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Administration Program at page 32.26, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photographic services (a) how does the department explain the 70 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

Expenditure	1978-79	$18,290
	1979-80	31,124
Increase		$12,834

(a) The increase is primarily related to the volume of work assigned to the Canadian Government Photo Centre and Public Archives by the department for photographic services.

(b) and (c) Of the $31,124 reported in the 1979-80 public accounts, $10,601 was paid to the Canadian Government Photo Centre and $12,787 was paid to Public Archives. The balance, $7,736 was for various photographic services throughout the country and for which no individual payment of $2,000 or over was made. The payment to the Canadian Government Photo Centre included Canada Week publicity costs, the Dempster Highway opening publicity costs, general photography, etc. The amount paid to Public Archives was for microfilming services. In 1978-79 payments to the Canadian Government Photo Centre totalled $5,073 and to Public Archives $5,438.

DPW—OTHER BUSINESS SERVICES

Question No. 2,895—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Transportation Program—Operations and Maintenance at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other business services (a) how does the department explain the 103 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

Expenditures	1978-79	$16,607
	1979-80	33,725
Increase		$17,118

(a) and (b) The increase is largely attributed to the increase in service fees for the procurement of materials as levied by the Department of Supply and Services.

(c) Payments to DSS in 1979-80 totalled $27,615 compared to $10,952 in 1978-79, an increase of $16,663. Other than to the Department of Supply and Services there were no individual payments in excess of $2,000.

DPW—TRANSPORTATION PROGRAM

Question No. 2,896—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Transportation Program—Operations and Maintenance at page 32.29, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the department explain the 340 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): (a) and (b) The increase in other types of services in 1979-80 is a result of not reporting expenditures in as great a detail as in 1978-79.

Reported in Public Accounts	1978-79	1979-80
Other types of services	$ 4,095	$18,008
Protection services	8,141	8,255*
Snow removal service	14,278	3,728*
Temporary help services	—	2,235*
Printing services	942*	1,072*
Contract business services	—	1,088*
Sundries	3,153*	1,630*
	$26,514	$18,008

*Included above in other types of services

The comparable figure for 1978-79 is $26,514 as compared to $18,008 1979-80 which reflects a decrease of $8,506 in 1979-80.

(c) Contracts over $2,000 were the following:

Bernard Long, Clair, New Brunswick, snow removal	$ 2,791
Manpower Temporary Services, Hamilton, Ontario, secretarial services	$ 2,235
Valley Investigation and Patrol Ltd., Surrey, British Columbia, protection services	$ 8,180

DPW—CATERING SERVICES

Question No. 2,897—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Public Works under the Accommodation Program—Operations and Maintenance at page 32.28, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to catering services (a) for what reason did the department require such a service (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

Expenditures	1978-79	$1,277,030
	1979-80	1,001,460
Decrease		$ 275,570

(a), (b) and (c) The federal government (Public Works) is responsible for the operation of the Goose Bay, Labrador facilities and has an agreement to provide meal service to the British and American air forces on a recoverable basis. In addition the department provides a subsidized meal service to all single federal public servants at Goose Bay under the isolated posts regulations. Payments at Goose Bay in 1979-80 were $803,344. The balance of costs were incurred at Ottawa and are for catering service on a cost-recovery basis provided for clients using the Federal Study Centre and the Conference Centre.

Contracts over $2,000 in addition to those listed in public accounts were as follows:

Austrian Catering Service, Ottawa, Ont.	$12,986
Capital Food Services, Ottawa, Ont.	3,210
Jack Edelson Ltd., Ottawa, Ont.	16,795

PARKS CANADA—PHOTOGRAPHIC SERVICES

Question No. 2,939—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Environment for Parks Canada at page 32.10, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to photographic services (a) how does the department account for the 955 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): (a) The increase in expenditures for photographic services between 1978-79 and 1979-80 is attributable to two basic administrative changes in 1979-80:

(i) The coding classifications for photographic finishing in 1979-80 was coded to professional and special services instead of materials and supplies as had been the case in 1978-79;

(ii) The Parks Canada program applied strict rules upon expenditures which could be charged to the capital vote with the result that in 1979-80, photographic expenditures were almost exclusively charged to operations rather than to capital projects.

(b)(i) Arthur Holbrook—$3,000.

(ii) Canadian Government Photo Centre—$33,263. (a) production of photographic mural panels for Woodside National Historic Park, $15,557; (b) mounting, lamination and fabrication of photographic display for the Sault Canal, $14,916; (c) mounting and lamination of a special text (49 titles), $2,790.

(iii) Cardinal Research, preparation of a 13-15 minute bilingual version of a 35 mm automated interpretive slide/tape program of Jones Falls, Rideau Canal engineering history and general information, $10,000.

(iv) Department of Supply and Services, payment of service fees, $4,247.

(v) National Film Board, $18,912. (a) 35 mm colour English sound slide presentation of Fort St. Joseph and the Indians, $2,723. (b) 35 mm Bilingual slide and sound presentation, Woodside National Historic Park, $2,983. (c) sound and slide presentation entitled National Parks, $3,850. (d) sound and slide presentation entitled National Parks, $6,573. (e) 35 mm colour bilingual slide and sound presentation, Woodside National Historic Park, $2,783.

PARKS CANADA—EDUCATION SERVICES

Question No. 2,955—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Environment for Parks Canada at page 32.9, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to education services, for what reason does the department pay for elementary and secondary education?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Elementary and secondary education costs are paid to school districts for children of employees in Riding Mountain and Prince Albert National Parks. These two parks have employees living in staff accommodation within the park boundaries. Employees pay rent to the Crown based on the Treasury Board Living Accommodation Directive. Grants in lieu of taxes are not paid to municipalities. Instead, agreements are entered into by the department with municipal school boards for both transportation and tuition on a "per student" basis.

PARKS CANADA—MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

Question No. 2,983—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of the Environment for Parks Canada at page 32.10, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production (a) what were the titles of all such motion pictures (b) at what audience were they aimed (c) what cost recovery can be expected from the distribution of the films (d) what was the total cost of the production of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology):

(a)	(b)	(d)
1. To Sense the Wonder	Schools, community groups, tourists, general public	$ 99,000

Order Paper Questions

(a)	(b)	(d)
2. A Likely Story	Park visitors, schools, general public	97,082
3. A Day in the National Park	Theatre patrons, park visitors, television viewers, general public	6,100
4. L'Énigme du Saphir	Schools, community groups, general public	10,000
5. La Bataille de Châteauguay	Park visitors, schools, general public	135,000
6. A Day at Fort George	Park visitors, schools	14,000
7. Military Firearms in Canada	Park visitors, schools	6,500
8. Visitors are Coming	Schools, community groups, general public	32,522
9. Cabot	Park visitors, schools	9,230
10. Historic Sites film clips	Television viewers	3,500

(c) No distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES FOR CF-18

Question No. 4,173—Mr. Corbett:

1. To date, what amount was spent on the Bagotville base to make way for the new F-18?

2. How much more is it estimated will have to be spent on the base to accomodate the F-18?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. To date no funds have been spent on the facilities at CFB Bagotville to make way for the new CF-18.

2. Future expenditures on the base infrastructure to adequately accomodate the CF-18 are currently estimated at $19 million.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

Question No. 4,280—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past three fiscal years, how many grants in Quebec of the program New Horizons were for (a) less than (i) $5,000 (ii) $10,000 (iii) $15,000 (iv) $20,000 (b) more than $20,000?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare):

(a)	Less than	(i) $5,000	(ii) $10,000	(iii) $15,000	(iv) $20,000
	1979-1980	324	178	30	5

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, again I rise with respect to question No. 2,042 from January of last year. Has the parliamentary secretary any possible explanation as to why the government is denying the people of Canada full knowledge as to what it cost them for the Prime Minister's trip as set out in that question?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, we are not denying anyone any information. As of today we have answered 3,222 questions during this session. The answer is in progress. I am pleased the hon. member has drawn this matter to my attention again and I will, of course, look into the matter on his behalf.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I am wondering when I may receive a reply to question No. 4,229 which was placed on the Order Paper a good six weeks ago at the invitation and urging of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He could not answer my question in the House and suggested I place it on the Order Paper. It is not a terribly difficult or complex question to answer, but it is very timely in view of the number of young people looking for summer employment. The question deals directly with the criteria this government used to man the Metric Commission information kiosks, and I would appreciate an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not know the answer offhand but I will be pleased to look into this matter on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, can the parliamentary secretary indicate when we can expect an answer to question No. 4,165 concerning a number of related questions with respect to the Main Square apartment buildings in the city of Toronto?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am not aware of what stage the answer to that question is at the moment, but I will be happy to look into it on behalf of the hon. member.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 18, consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and the motion of Mr. Beatty.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I am not necessarily very pleased to take part in the debate on this particular amendment. I want to draw hon. members' attention to the trend of "government out of control" which is of increasing concern not just to those of us who have worked through three Parliaments on the Public Accounts Committee, but also to the public and the taxpayers. By debating Bill C-102, an act which gives the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) the power to put in place Crown corporations subject to the approval of cabinet, we are accelerating that trend and are creating a subgovernment which is not subject to public scrutiny.

The arguments of PetroCan were that the people and government of this country needed a window on the energy industry, particularly oil and gas; but just as soon as the window is created we find it being painted black inside and out. Crown corporations are becoming a subgovernment which this House of Commons cannot get a handle on; they are in no way, shape or form accountable to us in this House. This bill only confuses the issue as to whether Crown corporations incorporated under Bill C-102 will come under the Financial Administration Act or the Canada Business Corporations Act. This definitely leaves those of us with some knowledge in this area totally confused, and I understand it leaves the legal profession and experts outside of this House totally confused as well. It is a grey area and will take a long time to sort out.

Before I speak exactly to the narrow limits of the amendment put forward by my colleague and benchmate, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), I would like to bring to the House's attention the fact that in the Thirtieth Parliament members on all sides worked for hours and hours, weeks and weeks through four sessions trying to get control of this whole subject of Crown corporations. I remember the day when one of the senior Treasury Board officials was asked how many Crown corporations there were and he did not have the answer. It later came out that there were 478 known Crown corporations.

The committee then started to work on this issue, and officials from the Treasury Board diligently attended every single one of those meetings and subsequently came up with a blue book which was the forerunner to a Crown corporations act. The Public Accounts Committee of the Thirtieth Parliament submitted a very detailed and studied report on this issue where it said Crown corporations must be brought under either the Financial Administration Act or a Crown corporations act so that Canadian taxpayers could see just how this subgovernment was developing.

• (1700)

Of the Crown corporations, either wholly owned, partially owned or subsidiaries of subsidiaries of Crown corporations, there are some 50 that have been given agency of Her Majesty status. What this amendment tries to do is remove from the powers given to the minister of energy agency status that, in our opinion, is totally unnecessary and extremely dangerous in light of the lack of accountability this House and the committees of this House have over the Crown corporation subgovernment.

Agency status was drafted as a chapter in a blue book on Crown corporations. For some reason or other known only in the Privy Council office, it was not included in the text of this book. I assume that kind of knowledge was not to be broadly spread to Members of Parliament or the public at large.

Agency of Her Majesty status is indeed a unique and powerful privilege that I do not believe this House should be conferring on any one minister. Everything the minister of energy has to do in terms of incorporation of Crown corporations can be done under the present structure of going to cabinet and incorporating through governor in council order. But what is happening here is that we are giving the minister the right to confer unbelievable powers on this string of companies that he is creating as he takes control over the whole national energy structure in this country; state control, I might say, Mr. Speaker.

Agency of Her Majesty status exists probably in 50 corporations. We heard that wonderful speech from the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) last night. I would urge everyone to read it. That speech illustrated how shallow our knowledge is in this important area of government business. There are about 50 Crown corporations that have been given the gift of agency of Her Majesty status. Some of the powers that are automatically conferred by that status are immunity from taxation by provinces, and immunity from the law. The law as it applies to other businesses incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act does not apply to the gift the Minister of Energy is giving in Bill C-102 to these Crown corporations, the need for which the minister has not yet defined.

The minister is seeking and getting this power which will give these special corporations immunity from provincial legislation and provincial taxation. Not only that, but these corporations get immunity from federal legislation federal laws. They get very special status. These Crown corporations that are given this status, which my colleague is trying to have removed from this bill in the subamendment to which I am speaking, also allows these corporations the special privilege and right to borrow money from any sector at the cost of the government. There is an automatic government guarantee conferred by giving agency of Her Majesty status. It is questionable.

We already know from the Supreme Court of Ontario ruling which my colleague put on the record last night that the competition act and actions that are unlawful for everybody else in the private sector in Canada will now be lawful for administrators or corporations that are conferred this agency of Her Majesty status in this bill. We as Members of Parliament really do not fully understand the breadth nor the complicated nature of the power being conferred by Bill C-102. It will empower the Minister of Energy to put Crown corporations in place as his need so arises in the marketplace.

In committee the minister told us that rather than use Petro-Canada for these purposes he thought there would probably be more control and it would be safer if special corporations were put in place. Yet my colleague the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe pointed out that the powers needed were absolutely unnecessary, that they existed, and the agency status of Her Majesty carries a potential for abuse that we in this House do not understand. I join with him in a plea to members opposite and to members in the NDP ranks that we strike from the bill lines 11 to lines 14 found on page 2 because everything the government needs is in place now. Surely we do not have to confer this special status on corporations, the need for which has not yet been defined by the minister.

Having said that, I am very sorry the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is not with us today. He was here last night. He has been very diligent in his duties as a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. He sat through all the hearings and studies on the need for a Crown corporations act in Canada. This was before we started expanding this subgovernment which is now out of control and is not accountable, in spite of what anyone else wants to say in this House, to the committees and the systems under which we operate.

The President of the Treasury Board wrote a book when he was in the private sector called "Fiscalamity". We have read the book. His sincerity and the depth of his concern is known to us all. Having worked as a colleague with him on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, I know how able and sincere his concerns are. But why, now that he is President of the Treasury Board, is legislation like this coming in that flies in the face of the work of the Lambert Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, and which flies in the face of years of work on the part of the Treasury Board in that department's blue book calling for Crown corporations? Why does it fly in the face of a very good report submitted in the Thirtieth Parliament by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which laid out major recommendations and conclusions on this subject matter?

What do we have to do in the way of an appeal to the government on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, an appeal on the part of people who are now becoming genuinely concerned that their freedom is being threatened because the parliamentary system is not working, the bureaucracy and the subgovernment of Crown corporations are in a runaway condition, able to call on the Consolidated Revenue Fund when they fail and they have agency of Her Majesty status?

We are also dealing with the fact that the boards of directors and their powers in the special Crown corporations are not the same and are not subject to the same laws as are businesses incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act. This gets back to Professor Florie's warning in 1979 to us in Toronto, which is that government controls the private sector but no one controls the public sector.

My plea and cry in this House to members on the government benches is: "Please wake up and understand the seriousness of what we are doing when we allow Crown corporations to be put in place at the whim of a minister with agency of Her Majesty status." That is a power the minister does not need.

If you had been attending the special committee hearings on Bill C-102, Mr. Speaker, you would have found that the second reading speech of the minister in this House, he had to admit, was somewhat misleading. He mentioned that we needed competition, that this was a way of providing competition in the marketplace and that these Crown corporations were necessary.

What concerns me is that we have moved way beyond the fifty-fifty mix of private-public involvement in the marketplace. These Crown corporations, particularly with the status which we are asking to be removed from the bill, are outside the laws that apply to everyone else. Also, their directors are not accountable as are directors in the private sector.

In committee the minister assured us that the chief executive officers of the new Crown corporations would be appointed from their boards of directors. One just has to look at the incestuous relationships which are now developing within the Crown corporations sector, within the public sector or this subgovernment that is outside the purview of and accountability to the House. Accountability could only come if this major piece of work on the part of the Treasury Board had been implemented in the Crown corporations act. That act has been drafted and is ready to be tabled, but we have not seen it.

I pleaded with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources not to come in with a bill like Bill C-102. He had all the power he needed in the present processes to do what he wanted, but he said: "That takes time and there is not time for what I want to do." the powers in Bill C-102, particularly the status we are trying to remove with the amendment to which I am speaking, are far broader than anything that minister or any future minister needs to act on behalf of Canadians.

I believe hon. members of the New Democratic Party and all speakers on this side have said that Bill C-102 is very, very bad. The bill itself should be withdrawn, instead of our being required to struggle with the powers being given to the minister in the bill.

I want to re-emphasize that we are mixing apples and oranges here. The bill talks about the Canada Business Corporations Act. If there is to be any accountability to Parliament, it should come under the Financial Administration Act. The experts cannot tell us how it sorts out. One can listen to a lawyer in committee give a fuzzy answer. When one takes the answer to be analysed by outside lawyers, they say that the entire area is in confusion. The bill is giving unbelievable powers which do not exist anywhere in the private sector to Crown corporations that are shells and phantoms. If there is an area of concern in my gut, it is that Crown corporations do not have the sense of behaviour which is required of the private sector, be it their boards of directors, chief executives or otherwise.

Committees of the House have worked for years on the poor behaviour of Crown corporations and their officers. For example, Polysar was using dummy invoices to transfer profits made onshore to offshore corporations in order to avoid tax in Canada. Also Radio Engineering Products, a Crown corporation which was put in place with Crown money, transferred its assets out of the country so that the government could not seize them. They have the slickest legal minds in the world working in these areas. All we have to do is review the behavioural problems in AECL, particularly in its international dealings, none of which has been properly accounted; commissions being paid to people offshore; and joint contracting deals made with other countries, for example, the Argentina Candu reactor. All these behavioural problems exist when people are not accountable through a system of disclosure.

Hon. members on both sides of the House, Liberal and Conservative, have worked on this question for years. The Auditor General has written reports that the system has been out of control since 1974. With all the warnings of the Auditor General, with all the work of the office of the Comptroller General and the Treasury Board, we have not heard one word about the Crown corporations act, a magnificent piece of work on the part of Treasury Board. We have not heard one word on the reports of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts on the entire matter of bringing accountability to the government and to the House for this whole level of subgovernment.

There are various examples of runaway behavioural problems because these corporations are not accountable. There is no window on their operations. After all these years of work, one really wonders if this place is worth the time, sweat and energy one puts into it, because bureaucracy and that government will do what they want—to hell with accountability. I have just about had it, with all the work which people like myself, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), the President of the Treasury Board, one of the Acting Speakers and hon. members on both sides of the House, have done. We have worked our hearts out to bring this issue to account. Then we see Bill C-102 brought in by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which thumbs its nose at those of us who are trying to represent our constituents and the people of Canada in general in an area of accountability. There is something tragic about the entire bill.

All I am doing is speaking to you, Mr. Speaker, or to anyone on the government side who is listening. No minister should have the powers which are conferred in this bill. No corporation, if we do not know the purpose of its formation, should be given agency of Her Majesty's status. This is really the last straw. Anger is starting to build in the country. The government should wake up to the fact that what we want through Part III of the estimates is some decent, honest disclosure; that is what is needed. This bill flies in the face of years of work by hon. members on both sides of the House. It flies in the face of totally apolitical work and dedicated, sincere energy and effort to try to make the system accountable to Canadian taxpayers.

Also there is taxation without representation in the energy package. In the total package of these bills unbelievable powers are being given to a minister of the state. This would not be half bad, but an essential element of Parliament which we inherited from the mother of Parliaments is ministerial responsibility. Obviously from the examples we have had in this session, ministerial responsibiity no longer aplies in this Parliament.

This form of government cannot stick together. It will not work. It will cause anger and frustration. I am awaiting the point of outrage when the people at large really understand how out of control is the entire system. To pour my heart out into this stuff is almost the most thankless thing I have ever experienced in my life. The problem with the Crown corporation issue, which will be aggravated and developed further with Bill C-102, particularly with agency of Her Majesty status therein, is the fact that there is no review. There is no one to question the mandate, or the manner in which the Crown corporation is serving its mandate and its objectives.

We have a comptroller generals act and an Auditor General Act which contain a value for money concept that is the most advanced in the world. It is not that we want supply to return to where the opposition can hold it up by endless debate and impede the government in forward progress, but there is only one alternative to returning to what was pre-1971—an honest, well organized system of information which provides a window, a view and a degree of accountability on how well the mandates and the objectives of Crown corporations are being served by their managers. All too often we find the incestuous relationships of boards of directors being comprised of former public servants or public servants moving out of the department which created the beast into a position as chief executive officer or on the board of directors. How can a board of directors discharge or question a chief executive officer who has been appointed by cabinet or by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? We should just think about that. They cannot and they will not.

This whole subgovernment concept, which is further aggravated with the presentation of Bill C-102 and this agency of Her Majesty's status, flies in the face of everything. I plead with members opposite to talk with the minister and allow this amendment, which removes lines 11 to 14 on page 2 from the bill, to pass and to let those people in the Crown corporations create their entities and shells through the normal channels which are available to them and in place right now. Let these bills provide for some accountability under the Financial Administration Act. Let us stop giving these Crown corporations an automatic and direct guarantee to call on the Consolidated Revenue Fund to rectify their mistakes.

Under this bill the minister can create corporations which will be able to take billions of dollars in the form of government guarantees. For example, I understand that just this fiscal year closing, 1981, there is over $58 billion in known guarantees on contingent liabilities that are not in the public accounts of Canada. If we allow this type of legislation to go through, that situation will be aggravated to the point of national bankruptcy, and I believe that this is what we are really dealing with today. If we are going to allow a bill such as this to be passed, let us make sure that Members of Parliament have the proper tools to have an overview on the bill and access to the disclosure of the needed information to examine the mandate and efficiency with which managers and the boards of directors are serving their objectives. There must be some control over Crown corporations and, above all, there must be accountability.

The need for this accountability in Canada and within the governmental system has arrived. The clock is ticking away in the final hours because I believe that the taxpayers of Canada are close to the point where they will no longer tolerate intervention and interference by the state over the entire marketplace. The Crown corporations of this country are too interrelated, cross-subsidized and have too much communication between their directors to allow any company in the private sector to survive. I do not want to see a fifty-fifty balance of private and public corporations in the marketplace because I believe that would mean too many Crown corporations. The difference between private and public corporations is that a private corporation cannot survive without a bottom line.

It is interesting to see the advantage that Crown corporations have over major private corporations. For example, I was talking to two employees of Canadian Pacific Airlines. They were telling me that the problem they have competing with the very-well-run national airline, Air Canada, is that Air Canada had its debt cancelled and is therefore operating with an unnatural administrative burden. The private sector corporation, which comes under the taxpaying sector under acceptable accountability, just cannot compete with the lighter burden of the Crown corporation.

What is at stake is freedom in the marketplace. As we move from concentration on ownership in the private sector to allow even more concentration on allowing the state sector to have control over our lives, we lose freedom of choice. When we lose that, we have lost our freedom. All through the ages history has told us that when this happens, power over the people is the objective. I want to see this system survive and I want to see Crown corporations and the public services accountable to the institutions. I believe there should be parliamentary reform which will deliver that accountability.

I urge members on the government side to vote for this amendment and strike from Bill C-102 the phrase, "agency of Her Majesty status". Because that in itself has serious implications. I would also urge those members to develop legal answers which would clear up the confusion which exists between the relationship of a corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act and one accountable through the Financial Administration Act.

In order to have any kind of accountability, any corporations which are created by the minister should come under the Financial Administration Act. The Canada Business Corporations Act content of Bill C-102 confuses the issue and I suppose it is there deliberately to confuse the issue so that we cannot make inquiries within the time frame and workload that we have as Members of Parliament in this place.

The issue which is raised by this amendment which was introduced by the hon. member from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe is one of the most serious we have had. The minister does not really need these powers provided to him under this bill and I am surprised that we did not catch his ear after all the pleas we made to him in committee about this. If the intent of this bill is that which we were told in committee, the minister does not need the broader powers he is seeking through this legislation. It is a bad bill, the minister does not need it and I would like to see it withdrawn. All the powers he needs are in place today. In my opinion, agency status is an offence to the President of the Treasury Board, who is a former chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and a member who has worked hard on this issue for years.

I plead with hon. members to let us bring ourselves back to the point where we have some accountability to the people. Let us not create a subgovernment that not even we can examine and review. I plead with hon. members opposite to support this amendment so that the bill will at least be 50 per cent improved. It is quite hard to improve compost and rot so perhaps we can empty the bin and get rid of the bill altogether.

I close by saying that Crown corporations do not need these powers and should not be allowed to have their mistakes and debts automatically guaranteed by the Government of Canada. I do not believe that these corporations should be exempt from both provincial and federal laws. Crown corporations should be subject to the same law that private corporations work under. The issue we are concerned about is the authority of the cabinet to set up Crown corporations. We are concerned about the whole subgovernment that is outside the reviewing and accountability process that is being called for by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, by the Auditor General and which the office of the Comptroller General has been attempting to initiate.

I repeat once again that we in the House have no opportunity to examine the mandates given these Crown corporations or to examine the efficiency with which their mandates and objectives are served. There is no control over boards of directors as there is in private sector corporations. If the state is going to be involved in the marketplace, I must ask what is wrong with making Crown corporations subject to the same laws as the private sector. Why do we need to give an unnatural advantage to Crown corporations in financing and provide them with a legal umbrella and isolation? Why cannot the laws pertaining to cartels, competition, intervention, and all other laws which apply to the private sector not apply to the public sector?

I urge hon. members of the House to support this important amendment, because I do not believe that any one minister should be given this type of power.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly on this amendment which was introduced by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). At page 17576 of Hansard for May 18, the hon. member had this to say:

• (1730)

How many instances do we need before members of the House, and particularly members of the NDP, are prepared to show respect for taxpayers' money, money which is coerced from their constituents?

The members of the Conservative Party do not help their case when they try to amend this bill, which I agree is a bad bill because of the way it deals with the set-up of Crown corporations, by going on a right-wing tirade, as the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out in his speech last night, against the whole principle of Crown corporations. That is the inarticulated major premise of many of their speeches. Nor do they help their position by saying we in this party are prepared to throw taxpayers' money around.

I do not say the hon. member who spoke last was particularly saying this, but I draw his attention to an example in our home province of British Columbia. A Social Credit provincial government, really a conservative provincial government, took all the resources of public Crown corporations that had been set up under the previous NDP government, such as BCRIC, the British Columbia Resource Investment Corporation. Its shares sold at $6 and eventually went up to $8. Now they are down to a little over $3 a share and the shares have gone into fewer and fewer hands.

We have a situation where the government took a public resource which belonged to all the people, "BCRICed" it, and put it into this corporation whose shares have done nothing but go down. It has been poorly managed since they have been there. Who is giving away public money? I just point that out. Otherwise I agree with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe.

Let me state again briefly the problem that we on this side have with this bill. We have no objection to the government setting up Crown corporations, but we do not see why it cannot come in and set up a Crown corporation by an act of Parliament. Surely that is the proper way to do it. Then after we had debated it, the Crown corporation could be properly set up.

Members opposite have said we cannot do that because it takes too long to go through Parliament. The answer is not to go around Parliament or continue the practice of orders in council setting up corporations and do all of the lawmaking outside Parliament. The logical answer is to reform Parliament. You do not say that we do not have to reform Parliament and therefore you will continue with this kind of lawmaking. The logical way is to reform Parliament and then do the proper kind of law-making.

The other day I pointed out that if the government had not made an order in council amendment without parliamentary scrutiny of the Alaska pipeline act, 1978, it would not be in the exposed position it is in today over the pre-build of that pipeline. We could have had a full debate in the House and then sent the bill to committee to be looked at. Maybe it would not have made what in retrospoect turned out to be an unwise decision.

Our position is that if you want to set up a Crown corporation, which we are not philosophically opposed to—unlike many of my friends to the right—such as in the energy field, there is a proper way of doing it. There may be room for an expanded alternate energy corporation, a conservation program, a neighbourhood energy corporation or an Inuit energy corporation to share in the Beaufort Sea resources in partnership with other Crown corporations. There are all sorts of possibilities. However, it must not be done by a quick order in council by whoever happens to be the energy minister on a particular day and gets support from a couple of cabinet colleagues.

I was only half jokingly referring to the minister when he said he was a socialist and that these are socialist policies. I said they were Stalinist policies, not socialist. Socialist policies would have a lot of reference to the proper working of a parliamentary institution because that is the way to go. I just wanted to clarify that.

I want to reiterate some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Regina West, who said that we would support this amendment, not because we are philosophically opposed to Crown corporations but because we want to make the whole process better. Ultimately, we think the Crown corporations would be better constructed and would work. Unlike some of my friends to the right, we want Crown corporations to work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for Mr. Lalonde) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1

(a) by striking out lines 37 to 41 of the French version at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(7) Il demeure entendu que ces sociétés ne peuvent constituer d'autres personnes morales dont l'acitivité principale n'est pas une des activités prévues au paragraphe (1)."

(b) by striking out lines 36 to 40 at page 2 and lines 1 to 3 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(8) The Minister shall, not later than the fifteenth sitting day of Parliament after a corporation has been incorporated under subsection (1), table or cause to be tabled in each House a statement giving the reasons for the incorporation of the corporation."

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I should like to point out first of all that in the notice of motion, the French version was printed on both sides by mistake, but in any case, the first part of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is solely aimed at making the English and French version consistent by changing the wording, and that is achieved by the words "Il demeure attendu"—

As to the second change, Mr. Speaker, its purpose is to make the text more consistent with the rest of the amendments to be introduced under Motion No. 3, and to ensure that when a Crown corporation is established by the minister, a statement giving the reasons for this decision is tabled in the House of Commons to inform members accordingly. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this information will satisfy the requirements of the committee which was seeking to obtain as much information as possible, and as regards the possibility of discussing this issue on Motion No. 3, most of the committee's objectives will thus be satisfied.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, we certainly have no objection to this motion and concur with it. Putting in the proper French is something we agreed to in terms of the amendment to what is designated 6(8) at the bottom of page 2.

I point out that this amendment, which would have asked that when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is creating a new Crown corporation and the bill has passed committee, that he make a statement in the House giving the reasons, thereby allowing the opportunity for a reply from the opposition, plus questioning. It was interesting how that came about in committee, Mr. Speaker. There happened to be a little bit of background noise and two of the Liberal members accidentally voted with members on our side and, lo and behold, the amendment passed through! I am sure that the officials and the minister have taken them aside and chastised them properly for being so undiligent in their work as to actually agree to something suggested by the opposition.

However, that requirement upon the minister, that he actually make a statement in the House, that he stand up here and say why he should be incorporating a new corporation, apparently was too onerous an obligation to put upon the minister, so we have this amendment that he only make a statement or table a statement. This allows the officials to write the document for him and he can table it in the House. It saves the minister going through the onerous duties and responsibilities of actually reading the statement and then submitting to questions in the House. We all appreciate that that is really an undue obligation to put upon a minister of the Crown, that he go to that effort. Of course, we will agree to any facility that will let the bureaucrats get their work tabled in here quickly without having to interfere with the minister and cause him to have to read what the officials have written for him, and perhaps defend them in reply to questions in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there is a government amendment that deals with amending Clause 1. I would like to seek unanimous consent to introduce one of our amendments.

Mr. Andre: It is a one-clause bill.

Mr. Waddell: This is to Clause 1, line 18, page 3.

Mr. Andre: We have a motion also.

Mr. Waddell: I understand that my friends to the right in the Conservative Party have a motion, so perhaps we could deal with that. Perhaps I could just give notice that the better way of dealing with our amendment would be to deal with it after the Conservative motion is dealt with and before the government amendment. Because our amendment refers to the original wording of the bill as it is and not the new wording that the government may bring in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is aware that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) will seek the unanimous consent of the House to put an amendment. The way that the amendments are now ordered provides that the amendment put forth by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) will be first put to the House and then a government amendment put forth by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). The only suggestion I can make is that while the amendment by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe is under debate, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway might want to arrange the matter as to the order of debate on these motions.

Mr. Harvie Andre (for Mr. Beatty) moved:

That Bill C-102, an act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act be amended in Clause 1

"7. No corporation incorporated under subsection 6(1) or this section, or of which any shares have been acquired by the Minister thereunder, shall, without the approval of the Governor in Council,

(a) procure the incorporation of a corporation or

(b) acquire shares of a corporation which by virtue of such acquisition would become a subsidiary, within the meaning of the Canada Business Corporations Act, of the corporation.

(B) By striking out lines 4 and 5 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

8. (1) An order of the Governor in Council under subsection 6(1) or section 7 shall be laid".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the intent of this amendment is to provide for the incorporation of subsidiary corporations the same kind of check, minor though it is, that exists in regard to incorporating a new Crown corporation. That is, Mr. Speaker, the gist of this bill when it is fully amended is that the minister, if he wishes to set up a new Crown corporation, must first table a statement in the House of Commons indicating the reasons for the formation of the Crown corporation. There is the ability through a negative resolution, or a positive resolution if introduced by the government, or there will after this amendment is passed, for the House to cause a debate to be held, a three-hour debate with a vote at the end, either concurring or not concurring in the establishment of this Crown corporation.

However, Mr. Speaker, because of the ability of a corporation then to incorporate a subsidiary corporation, we do—without the benefit of this amendment—have the possibility that a Crown corporation could be set up. Whatever minor checks the system provides now in terms of a negative resolution and a statement from the minister, and so on, would be there, but that Crown corporation could set up unlimited subsidiary corporations. Those subsidiary corporations could be established without the knowledge of Parliament, without any indication to Parliament as to the reason for their establishment. Those subsidiary corporations could have the full range of powers of the main Crown corporation. They could undertake debt obligations on behalf of the Crown. They could undertake all manner of activities that could serve as a pork barrel and could serve any number of purposes without there being any way in which this House could even know what they are doing, let alone hold them accountable.

So I would ask government members and the New Democratic Party members to give serious consideration to this motion. It is not going to hamstring the government in any way, shape or form. It simply provides that if we are setting up Crown corporations, whether directly or by way of subsidiary, we at least have the same kind of check, minor though it is, for both types of Crown corporation. This amendment would guarantee that, Mr. Speaker, and in no way, shape or form restrict the government from pursuing the fundamental intent of Bill C-102, offensive as it is to us in a general sense.

We nonetheless would request of the government that if they choose, and they obviously do, to proceed with Bill C-102 and this ability to create Crown corporations, then at least let us acknowledge that in order to be truly honest about the amount of accountability and openness we will have, we must also include subsidiary corporations. This amendment would take care of that problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it. Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1750)

I have before me a motion standing in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), but the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order if he wishes to seek the unanimous consent of the House to put his own motion first.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I so seek that consent. I think it would be easier to deal with our motion briefly at this point since it does refer to the bill as printed now, and I believe there is agreement. I will just put the motion and ask the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) to speak briefly. I move:

Energy, Mines and Resources

That Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1

(a) by striking out line 18 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but what I offered him the opportunity to do was to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put his motion before the government motion. That is what I am prepared to deal with now, if that is all right with the hon. member.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, that is what I ask.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway seeks the unanimous consent of the House to place his motion ahead of the one which will be presented by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Now either the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway or the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) may address Motion No. 6.

Mr. Waddell moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1

(a) by striking out line 18 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"not less than ten members of the House"

(b) by striking out lines 38 and 39 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"than five hours and, on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiry of the fifth"

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly on what is a rather minor amendment to substitute the number ten for the number 30 which is contained in Bill C-102 as it is now.

A negative resolution is one of the options which will be available to us under this bill. In other legislation the number of members required to call for a negative resolution is ten. For example, Section 52 of the Petroleum Administration Act allows ten members of Parliament to present a negative resolution if they object to the unilateral setting of oil or natural gas prices by the government. The amendment we are putting forward seeks to amend a provision the government agreed to in committee, and that provision would reduce the number from 50 to 30. Our amendment proposes to reduce the number required to initiate a negative resolution from 30 to ten. That seems eminently reasonable to us. It is consistent with other legislative practices. Before the government can act, Members of Parliament should be afforded a better opportunity to fulfil their legitimate functions.

The second part of the amendment would delete the reference at page 3 of the bill to a maximum of three hours' debate and institute in its place a maximum of five hours' debate. The clear reason for that is to ensure that while there is not an unreasonably long and dragged out debate, this House, Members of Parliament and the people of Canada would be protected. Three hours on a Wednesday—or three hours on a Friday especially—would provide very little opportunity to bring about any public recognition of the issues involved.

We propose this amendment for those two basic reasons, and I ask hon. members to support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 9 to 50 at page 3, lines 1 to 49 at page 4 and lines 1 and 2 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless, before that time,

(a) a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons to the effect that the order be confirmed, signed by a Minister of the Crown, is filed with the Speaker of the House of Commons; or

(b) if no motion has been filed under paragraph (a), a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons to the effect that the order be revoked signed by not less than thirty members of the House of Commons is filed with the Speaker of the House of Commons.

(3) Where a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons is filed as provided in subsection (2), the House of Commons shall, not later than the sixth sitting day of Parliament following the filing of the motion, take up and consider the motion.

(4) A motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (3) shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours and, on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiration of the third such hour, the Speaker of the House of Commons shall forthwith, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary for the disposition of the motion.

8. If a motion described in paragraph 7(2)(a) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection 7(3) but is not adopted by that House, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

9. If a motion described in paragraph 7(2)(b) is adopted by the House of Commons, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

&ed1339;-1 10. (1) If a motion described in paragraph 7(2)(a) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection 7(3) and is adopted by that House, a message shall be sent from the House of Commons informing the Senate that the motion has been so adopted and requesting that the motion be concurred in by the Senate.

(2) Where a request for concurrence in a motion is made to the Senate pursuant to subsection (1), the Senate shall, not later than the fifth sitting day of Parliament following the receipt by the Senate of the request, take up and consider the motion.

(3) A motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours and, on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiration of the third such hour, the Speaker of the Senate shall forthwith, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary to determine whether or not the motion in question is concurred in.

(4) If a motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) is concurred in by the Senate, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force immediately on the concurrence therein.

(5) If a motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) is not concurred in by the Senate, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

11. (1) If a motion described in paragraph 7(2)(b) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection 7(3) but is not adopted by that House, the particular order to which the motion relates shall come into force on the fifth sitting day of Parliament after the failure of the House of Commons to adopt the motion unless before that day a motion to the effect that the order be revoked, signed by not less than fifteen members of the Senate, is filed with the Speaker of the Senate.

(2) Where a motion for the consideration of the Senate is filed as provided in subsection (1), the Senate shall, not later than the sixth sitting day of Parliament following the filing of the motion, take up and consider the motion.

(3) A motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours and, on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiration of the third such hour, the Speaker of the Senate shall forthwith, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary for the disposition of the motion.

(4) If a motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) is adopted by the Senate, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

(5) If a motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) is not adopted by the Senate, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force immediately on the failure of the Senate to adopt the motion.

12. An order of the Governor in Council under subsection 6(1) that has been laid before Parliament but has not come into force shall stand revoked on the dissolution or prorogation of Parliament.

13. For the purposes of this act "sitting day of Parliament" means a day on which either House of Parliament sits."

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this amendment contains the procedure for an affirmative or negative resolution. It provides the following.

A motion for negative resolution can only be filed if no motion for affirmative resolution has been filed.

Where a motion for affirmative resolution is filed, if the House does not adopt the motion, the order is revoked and therefore the Senate does not play any role.

Where a motion for affirmative resolution is adopted by the House, the Senate will have an opportunity to look at the order. If the Senate concurs with the House, the order will come into force. If the Senate does not concur with the House, the order is revoked.

Where a motion for negative resolution is filed, if the House adopts the motion, the order is revoked and the Senate has no role to play.

Where a motion for negative resolution is filed, if the House does not adopt the motion, the Senate has an opportunity to consider the order. If the Senate concurs with the House, the order enters into force. If the Senate does not concur with the House, the order is revoked.

Finally, it should be noted that the amendment provides for the situation where there is a dissolution or prorogation of Parliament. In this case, an order that has been laid before Parliament but has not come into force is revoked.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we debated this matter in committee at some length, and before we got to committee the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) gave a very succinct and well-thought-out speech on this issue in the House. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) did likewise. Both opposition parties agreed that this negative resolution procedure is an inadequate procedure at best. As the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe pointed out, at the worst it is perhaps even an unconstitutional procedure.

This matter was debated in the committee with some care. The government has moved to bring an amendment forward, but it seems to us that we are still in the odious position of dealing with a bill containing a negative resolution aspect.

The reason we introduced an amendment a few minutes ago—and perhaps this should have been said then—is that there can be parties in the House which do not have 30 members. For example, in 1979 when I first came to this House, my party had only 26 members. Even if we had wanted to do so, we could not have mustered the 30 members necessary to deal with a negative resolution. Now we have 32. What is the magic in the number 30? If the government really wanted to be democratic, it could have reduced the number to ten. Perhaps we are past that, but we are still dealing with the negative resolution problem.

This goes back to the original problem of creating a Crown corporation. The government has basically asked to be allowed to create Crown corporations by order in council and, to allow some semblance of parliamentary scrutiny, the government has said it will allow a negative resolution, tabling and so forth. However, that does not really allow for a full and fair debate in Parliament such as there would be if the government brought in a bill and we had second reading debate and committee study and the bill returned to the House for third reading. That is the proper way to deal with matters and that is why Clause 1 of this bill is still defective.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can conclude my remarks very briefly when we debate this, probably next Tuesday, and we will have a vote shortly thereafter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not clear as to the intent of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the hon. member's wish that I call it six o'clock and not put the question?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal government's economic program is a disastrous failure. Unemployment continues to increase, interest rates remain high, and inflation is rising. The country is sick unto death. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House demands the resignation of the Prime Minister and his cabinet before Canada goes down the tube.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the PC Party are Canada's only hope.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS IN WINNIPEG—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the ill-advised VIA Rail cutbacks, the Canadian National Railways laying off of 1,200 at the Transcona shops in Winnipeg, and the disastrous economic policies imposed on Canadians by the government have caused the worst unemployment since the Depression. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who has ample evidence of the failure of his policies in his own home city, take immediate action to reverse the spiralling unemployment in Winnipeg and across the country by putting a halt to the laying off of 1,200 people at the CNR's Transcona shops in Winnipeg.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES OF UKRAINIAN POET, IVAN SVITLYCHNY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, which I believe will have the support of all hon. members of the House.

In 1972 the Ukrainian literary scholar and poet, Ivan Svitlychny, was given a 12-year sentence for alleged anti-Soviet crimes. He spent seven years in a strict regime labour camp, and is currently serving five years in internal exile. In the past year he has suffered two strokes and is in grave condition. His left side is paralysed, he cannot talk, his spine is damaged, and he has severe kidney problems. If he is to survive it is imperative that he be released into the care of his sister in New Jersey so that he can obtain the necessary medical treatment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That, in light of Mr. Svitlychny's serious condition, this House urge Soviet authorities to release Ivan Svitlychny under provision of Article 100 of the Russian SFSR Corrective Labour Code, which states that convicted persons suffering from serious illnesses can have their sentences commuted, and that Mr. Svitlychny be allowed to join his sister in New Jersey.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DISARMAMENT

SUPPORT FOR NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREEZE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity on this day of the Canadian women's petition for peace. Under the authority of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), who is the minister responsible for emergency planning, the government continues to distribute civil defence information, including "Eleven Steps to Survival". Again and again at the SCEAND hearings on security and disarmament, members heard testimony that there would be no survival after a nuclear exchange. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the minister cease advising Canadians that there are 11 steps to survival after a nuclear exchange, that he heed the words of one of the government's own senior advisers, Dr. G. R. Lindsey, chief of the Department of National Defence operational research and analysis branch, that "a nuclear war would be effectively the end of life as known", and that the government promote survival by pressing for a nuclear weapons freeze and a no-first-use pledge at the UN next month, and an end to Cruise missile test plans in Canada.

SUGGESTED CUT IN INDEMNITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That all Members of Parliament voluntarily accept a 10 per cent cut in their basic indemnity during the remaining duration of the Thirty-second Parliament and that the $1.5 million per year arising from this salary cut be used to create 1,000 annual student summer jobs.

PIPELINES

BUILDING OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has for months been promising Atlantic Canadians that the natural gas pipeline is going from Quebec to that region. The Prime Minister has stated that it is as vital a link in the unity of this country as is the railroad. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House invite the government to show its sincerity toward Atlantic Canada and endorse the pipeline to cross the St. Lawrence by unanimously accepting this motion, or to show its scorn and contempt for Atlantic Canadians by rejecting it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, last evening hundreds gathered on Parliament Hill to join in congratulating the Polish Alliance of Canada as it observed its 75th anniversary. They listened with great expectancy to the words of the Minister of State for Multiculturism to hear some announcement on how a greater number of Poles might be admitted to Canada from the Austrian refugee camps, but none came. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the government strip the red tape and delaying bureaucratic tactics so as to admit to this country a greater number of Polish refugees from Austria, and within a much shorter period of time.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SPEECH MADE BY MR. EVANS ON BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask this House to condemn the remarks alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) when he accused Canadians who expected more from the November budget of trying to scrounge a free lunch. What other comments could one expect from a test-tube economist who has spent all his working life in text-book economics or lapping up free lunches himself at the public trough? I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, apologize to Canadians for his boorish and inaccurate comments on the intent and impact of that disastrous document the government had the gall to call a budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CALL FOR REVIEW OF PAY SCALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the pay and benefit scales in the Canadian Armed Forces are at a pitifully low level. The Liberal government adds insult to injury by significantly raising the rents on permanent married quarters and forcing occupants to pay for all utilities and heating costs. The vast majority of PMQs are over 30 years old and poorly insulated. This will result in extremely high heating costs during Canada's severe winters. This expense, added to the already high cost of living facing our Armed Forces families, with no compensating increase in pay, is nothing short of criminal. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson):

That this House direct the Minister of National Defence to refer immediately the pay scales, allowances and benefits, including rental rates, of the Armed Forces, to the Task Force on Taxation and Northern Benefits as a very special and very urgent case so that we may restore the members of the Canadian Armed Forces to a standard of living they so richly deserve.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF FARM LOANS AT REDUCED INTEREST RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, meetings held yesterday and today with groups affiliated with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture further substantiate the need for lower-cost farm credit for those farmers in financial difficulty. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture to introduce immediately legislation providing for loans at 10 per cent for such farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation as well as extending the small business bond concept to permit the use of funds available from the retiring generation of farmers to be reloaned at lower rates made possible through the deferral of capital gains tax on such funds.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who is aware, I am sure, of the low level of consumer confidence as indicated by the Conference Board index which showed the level of confidence peaked at 96 in 1980 when his first budget came out. It is now down to 61, the lowest level in history. The minister surely must share some of the responsibility for this shattering drop in confidence.

In order to do something to reverse this serious lack of confidence, will the minister today hold out some hope concerning interest rates, by stating to Canadians that if rates in the United States drop, as is expected, he will allow Canadian rates to drop by an equivalent amount?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is absolutely no difference in principle between the hon. member and myself.

Mr. Crosbie: That is a terrible thing to say.

Mr. MacEachen: I have taken the view he has implied in his question, that in order to have any chance of a quick recovery the first essential is a drop in U.S. interest rates. Obviously that would create conditions in Canada which would make it possible for a lowering of interest rates in this country.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the minister did not answer the question. He did not say that he would allow interest rates to go down an equivalent amount.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it was announced today that there was a drop in housing starts of 58 per cent in the first part of this year, specifically in single-family dwellings. Obviously this has created a tremendous loss of jobs, so the question of lower interest rates is absolutely critical. I ask the minister again: will he make a precise commitment that if U.S. interest rates—on which he blames all our problems in this country—go down in the near future, he will allow an equivalent drop in Canadian interest rates, including the mortgage rate which is so important to housing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, may I assure the hon. member that the most welcome development from my point of view would be a drop in U.S. interest rates. It is my view that if there were a drop of several percentage points in the United States, that would make it possible for a drop to occur in Canada. That is clear.

The hon. member has asked me to give an assurance that there would be an equivalent drop in Canada. I cannot give him a precise assurance of that kind. What I can say is that we have been making representations to the American authorities since the Summit of last August—most recently in Paris and Helsinki—urging them to reduce their deficit so that there can be a drop in interest rates. I have every expectation that the American administration is attempting to work out an arrangement with Congress in order to reduce the deficit and make lower rates possible in that country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, for about 18 months now we have had the minister blaming everything on the United States, saying our interest rate problems are caused by the U.S., and our unemployment problems are caused by the United States. He cannot have it both ways. He either gives a clear commitment to get the confidence level in Canada moving up again, or he gets off this bandwagon of blaming everything on the United States which he has been on for the last 18 months.

Again the question is: will he give that clear commitment to Canadians of an equivalent drop in our interest rates when the U.S. rates come down? If not, will he admit that the problems in Canada are made-in-Canada problems resulting from his budget and his economic policies?

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I find the hon. member's line of reasoning rather distorted. It was not myself who raised the question of the United States; it was not myself in question period today who attributed the high interest rates to the United States; it was the hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Every other day you have, Allan. You cannot get off like that.

Mr. MacEachen: It is a fact that is acknowledged by every finance minister in the industrialized world. I recently met with 22 finance ministers. Every one of them signed an agreed to communique, making the very point which the hon. member is making, namely, that very high interest rates in the United States are a block to recovery. No one wants lower rates in the United States more than myself. Now the hon. member talks about confidence. I think that the quickest way to create a greater lack of confidence in the country would be to accept the hon. member's suggestion and make a commitment today that, regardless of what happens or what the market forces are, there would be an equivalent drop in interest rates in Canada as in the United States.

Mr. Wilson: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member's suggestion is not the kind of confidence-building upon which I would like to embark.

SMALL BUSINESS AND FARMING SECTORS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since it is very obvious that the minister is not prepared to take any action to ease his high interest rate policy generally, could the minister tell us now what he intends to do to ease the burden which he and his government created, specifically for the small-business man and farmer, or is the minister prepared to sit back on his bankrupt policies and watch the demise of these vital sectors of our economy which, as he knows, are responsible for over 60 per cent of the labour force in Canada? What action is he prepared to take specifically to aid those two very important sectors of our economy?

Mr. Paproski: He could resign. That would be a start.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question was largely rhetorical. It was not a request for information of any kind.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What's the matter with your hearing?

Mr. MacEachen: I would tell the hon. member that I am very conscious of the problems of the small-business sector and of the farming sector. We have taken special steps already to assist both sectors. When and if there are new measures to be taken, I will announce them in the House at the appropriate time.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, if the minister is suggesting that the small business bond is the answer to this question, I can tell him that, according to the director of marketing for Canada for the Bank of Nova Scotia, that applications for the Small Business Development Bond are down 94 per cent compared to the number of applications made in the original Small Business Development Bond program. In fact, a poll taken of 20 banks in my own riding of Halton indicates that no loans have been written as a result of the ineffective bond that was created as a result of the minister's budget in November. However, if the minister wants a specific question, I will ask it now.

SMALL BUSINESS BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, is the minister prepared to ease the restrictions on the current small business bond program and return it to its original state so that small businessmen and farmers can take advantage of that bond now when they need it, and before it is too late? Let us have some action from the minister.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the change in the Small Business Development Bond made at budget time was intended to ensure that the available funds would flow to the most needy groups in the country.

Mr. Wilson: No one is getting it, though.

Mr. MacEachen: That was the intention. If the hon. member is asking me not to concern myself with the most needy cases and to restructure the bond in such a way that those who need the money less will get it more quickly, then it is a suggestion I would have to think about very deeply. I would urge the hon. member not to dismiss changes made in the budget to the bond as quickly as he has done. For instance, the change to apply the bond to unincorporated businesses and farmers was made as a result of representations from both sides of the House. Yesterday I was able to tell the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that $100 million has gone into the farming sector as a result of that specific change to the business bond. I think that is rather significant.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO GOVERNMENT SUPPORTERS—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. A short while ago ten Quebec backbench Liberals, and then the Solicitor General, complained bitterly about the government's economic policy. The Solicitor General put it somewhat euphemistically when he said that the budget was "a disaster".

Today La Presse revealed that another group of Liberals, this time 15, are very critical of the government's economic policy. In a leaked document, a copy of which I have here, these Liberals say that the economic situtation is "very serious" and that the government must demonstrate that it has "the will and determination to govern". Since these Liberal members have finally joined the rest of the people of Canada in acknowledging the disastrous economic performance of the government, when can the people of Canada finally expect some action from the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a leaked document, as he said, which presumably appeared in the newspapers. I do not know what that document is, but I do not have any reason to believe that it was signed by members of this caucus. It was considerations that were being presented to them on the economy, but in a general sense, if the hon. member is quoting members on this side as believing that the economic situation is very serious in Canada and calls for remedial action, of course he is stating what the government has been saying all along.

Mr. Broadbent: No, Madam Speaker, they point out what we have been saying on this side of the House for months, that the government lacks the will to act, and needs to acquire that will. I would be happy to send this over to the Prime Minister. It has 15 Liberal names attached, including a minister of the Crown.

ROLE OF BUREAUCRATS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to quote to the Prime Minister one of the judgments they make. They say that the "structure of government departments frustrates effective action by ministers and prevents an imaginative, action-oriented approach". Given this very serious indictment of cabinet, does the Prime Minister agree that it is the bureaucrats who now have control of policy, not the elected members of cabinet? Has cabinet lost control?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Once again, Madam Speaker, I am speaking without having had the benefit, as has the hon. member, of reading that document. But it is a common thing in this caucus, at any rate, that we are very frank and open in caucus—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and within ourselves we are constantly trying to improve the mechanics of government and the machinery of government.

An hon. Member: By advertising!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Conservative members should not be jealous, Madam Speaker, because one question out of three goes to the NDP. They should let me answer the question, and they can bellow when their own leader is asking a question.

Mr. Shields: Don't be so testy.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not testy; I just think you are ridiculous, that is all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would urge members to answer the questions rather than the hecklers.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister should be aware that the people of the country are not particularly interested in whether he thinks people are ridiculous or whether he is testy; they would like a Prime Minister who is really interested in governing Canada. I think that is what they would like.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WESTERN CANADIAN ISSUES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, there is a final judgment on which I should like to ask the Prime Minister to express his opinion, testy or otherwise, today. In the document they say—and it is a particular concern to an important part of the country—that "western issues and concerns" are "still not properly reflected in the decision-making process" of the government. What a condemnation! I should like to ask the Prime Minister, more than two years after the 1980 election, whether he agrees with this document signed by 15 Liberal backbenchers, including one minister of the Crown, which states that the government has ignored western issues?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member offered to send the document over to me. I do not have any knowledge of that document and I do not even know if it is authentic.

I can assure the hon. member that the process of self-criticism on this side of the House is one which I encourage. If the hon. member is so devoid of ideas that he has to reach back a couple of months to some statements made in the House—

Mr. Broadbent: Three weeks.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member quoted some incident that happened two or three months ago. He quoted from a letter from the Solicitor General which I believe was written before Christmas, and he says this is two weeks.

An hon. Member: It was held up by the mail.

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that the hon. member is searching back to before Christmas to find actions of members on this side of the House in order to develop ideas for him to ask in question period. If this is an expression of my testiness, I just do not know by what judgement this House abides.

PUBLIC WORKS

WASHINGTON EMBASSY ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT—MANDATE OF SELECTION COMMITTEE

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. It relates to the selection of the architect for the construction of the new embassy in Washington. I am sure the Prime Minister recalls that when the selection panel for choosing the architect was set up there was a statement made by the government. That statement said at that time that the purpose, the mandate of the selection panel, was to "select by fair and objective evaluation, the firm considered to be the most suitable". That is a direct quote from the government's own statement.

What the government clearly had in mind at that time was to establish a panel to select—not a committee to advise. Why has the Prime Minister acted in such a high-handed manner to overrule the mandate of the panel and to reject the unanimous choice of the selection panel, which was the world renowned Canadian architectural firm of Zeidler Roberts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have a statement by one of the members of the panel which appeared in a newspaper a couple of days ago. He is quoted as saying that the panel generally felt that any of the 11 was physically capable of handling that kind of project.

Mr. Clark: Who said it?

Mr. Trudeau: "The major weight was the firm's designability on that particular problem or what we foresaw as the problem—" There is a misunderstanding, I believe, in the opposition's mind on this, because repeatedly—and this was true of a motion moved by the hon. member for St. John's a couple of days ago—there is somehow the feeling there was some plans or specific project submitted to this panel. That was not the case. There was no demand or request for a design, a mockup, a maquette, or any kind of detailed design. There was an assessment by this panel of some 300 possible candidates, and 11 were narrowed down as being able to do the job.

From then on, one has to ask oneself if the choice of four, and then one out of four, was to determine the government in accepting that choice. I have held from the beginning that there was no undertaking of that kind, and the government does not intend to give that kind of undertaking. We want to know, among a small group of architectural firms, which are competent to build a building such as this, and then we will make the choice.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, surely the Prime Minister understands by now that, by his action, he has hurt the professional reputation of a good number of very fine architectural firms.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: Indeed, he has broken faith with the architectural community. He has corrupted a process which was objective and open to all. That is the process which he has corrupted.

AMBASSADOR'S MEMORANDUM

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, in order to clear up any confusion whatsoever, will the Prime Minister now make public the memorandum which was written to the government by Ambassador Ritchie outlining the unanimous choice of Ambassador Ritchie's group of the architectural firm of Ziedler Roberts? Would the Prime Minister make that memorandum public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is returning to the point I made the other day. The assumption seems to lie with the hon. member, as it did with the hon. member from St. John—

Mr. Crosbie: St. John's West.

Mr. Trudeau: St. John's West and other points.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The assumption seems to be that the unanimous choice number one would have to be the government's choice. That has been the position of the member for St. John's and seems to be the position of the member from Toronto, somewhere—Rosedale.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: Very funny.

Mr. Broadbent: Why not just pack it in?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the rules ask for me not to refer to a member by name. I do not remember the riding of every member in the House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

AIRPORTS

STATUS OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He will know that Canada's two national air carriers do not want their domestic long haul operations moved to the Mirabel Taj Mahal airport. Any such decision by the government will not only be costly and inconvenient to the airlines, it will be disastrous to the Canadian consumer, and any shift will be done at the expense of the Dorval area as well. In view of that fact that there is a gang of 18 Quebec Liberal Members of Parliament, including three Cabinet ministers, who are pressuring the Minister of Transport to make up his mind, will he leave the Dorval-Mirabel matter at the status quo and remove the uncertainty faced by both airlines and passengers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was indeed aware of the fact that the carriers, united in the Air Transport Association of Canada, are unsympathetic to a move to Mirabel. I thank the hon. member for expressing the views of his party, as a whole, presumably, or are there other different views on the subject, and I will take them into account when I make a decision.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE ANNOUNCED IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, can we get a commitment from the Minister of Transport that whatever decision he makes regarding a possible switch from Dorval to Mirabel will be announced while the House of Commons is sitting, and that he will not go the deplorable VIA Rail route and announce it during a recess? In addition, will the minister also table the comprehensive reports on the Dorval-Mirabel situation when he makes the decision so that the travelling public will know what motivated the government's resolution of this very important matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am being more careful these days when I indicate dates for things I will do. I will not do so in this case. I want to assure the hon. member that when the decision is made it will be announced and fully explained so that everyone will have a chance to take a whack at it.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Here, in the House?

AIR TRANSPORT

STATUS OF OFFERS BY FOREIGN AIR COMPANIES ON USE OF MIRABEL AS DISTRIBUTION CENTRE

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Early in 1979, at meetings the members for Laval and the northern Montreal area had with senior officials of the Department of Transport, the latter said that they were in favour of transferring all flights from Dorval to Mirabel, because if there was a transfer, foreign airlines, and more specifically the Japanese, would be inclined to make Mirabel the distribution centre for their air freight to North and South America. This would, of course, give a considerable boost to the economy and the metropolitan area. Would the airlines in question still be willing to do so?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would really need a map to visualize the distances involved, for instance, from Japan to South America. However, I would say that a distinction should be made between two kinds of air freight. There is specialized air freight, and from that point of view, there is no real advantage in transferring carriers from Dorval to Mirabel, since the Japanese could very well come to Mirabel without going anywhere else or they could use it as a stopover en route to other countries. However, in another scenario, carriers specialized in Japanese air freight would come to Mirabel and then rely on Mirabel to forward their cargo to other Canadian airports. In that case, of course, a transfer of all routes to Mirabel would possibly offer a number of advantages.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, yesterday the CNR announced that it would be shutting down its main repair shops in Transcona, Point St. Charles, and Moncton for some six to eight weeks over and above the usual four-week shutdown. These lay-offs will affect 3,150 families across the system. Does the minister approve of this decision to have the CNR outdo the CPR by shutting down for an even longer period of time, or will he tell the CNR today that this kind of irresponsible behaviour on the part of a Crown corporation is no longer tolerable? Will he make an arrangement with the CNR to have it cancel the lay-offs and to continue to employ these many workers at doing the great amount of work waiting to be done?

People could be working at repairing existing equipment, or in building the Transcontinental equipment that the minister promised when he announced his ill-conceived VIA cutbacks last fall. There is no shortage of work, Madam Speaker. Why is the Minister of Transport not making that kind of arrangement with Canadian National Railways?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure that if I did make that kind of decision, namely, if every day, as soon as I got to the office in the morning, I gave instructions to Air Canada, the CN and other Crown corporations for which I am responsible, then several members of this House would be the first to criticize me for doing so. The role of the minister, as far as Crown corporations are concerned, is to indicate general policy guidelines and not to try to butt into the day to day activities of these corporations. Of course I regret the situation that led to these lay-offs as much as the hon. member, but I would like to point out that as a result of unemployment insurance and collective agreements, these employees will, in most cases, be receiving up to 80 per cent of their salary during the lay-off period.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, a lay-off of 1,200 people in one shop is not day to day activity, and the minister did not mind butting into VIA Rail when he saw fit to tear the passenger rail system apart.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: All those who work for the railway or those who are otherwise interested in the future of transportation in this country will not soon forget this particular Minister of Transport.

NOTIFICATION OF UNIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister approve of the fact that the trade unions concerned in these lay-offs had to hear about them from the local radio news? If he does approve, are we to understand that the government has now instructed Crown corporations to treat trade unions with the same contempt as the Liberals treat Parliament?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, because I have already answered the rest of the question, I simply want to make a distinction between the decision which the government made concerning VIA, which was a policy decision relating to the amount of money, the amount of subsidy the Government of Canada was willing to give VIA and the extent of the losses which could be sustained, and the policy concerning how many people should be laid off over what period of time which, in my view, relates to the daily operation of a Crown corporation.

PIPELINES

BUILDING OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and to assist him, my constituency is Fundy-Royal. The Prime Minister will recall that he spoke to the Board of Trade in Halifax, Nova Scotia. During the course of that discussion he stated:

—that a Liberal government will take immediate action—

The Prime Minister said there would be immediate action.

—to ensure the full co-operation of all parties in the construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the maritimes.

He went on to say that the gas pipeline would be reversible. He said that in January, 1980, nearly two and one half years ago.

Will the Prime Minister now tell people in Atlantic Canada his interpretation of the words "immediate action"? Will he instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to take action now, forthwith, immediately, right away, instantly, to provide, without delay, a schedule for the natural gas pipeline to cross the St. Lawrence River into the Atlantic provinces and reinforce the Prime Minister's determination to have it reversible?

Mr. Lawrence: As soon as possible!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I may refer the hon. member to the decisions handed down by the National Energy Board and confirmed by the Government of Canada, which include a schedule that is public knowledge. There has been some delay in getting the program started in Quebec, for all sorts of reasons connected with labour relations issues and obtaining the approval of the provincial government. We expect the gas pipeline to reach Trois-Rivières this fall and Quebec City some time next spring in 1983.

[English]

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, it is quite obvious, upon examining the record, that the Prime Minister's pledge that the gas pipeline would go into the Atlantic provinces was as hollow as his pledge not to increase the price of gasoline.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SHALES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Knowing full well that just a few weeks ago, in Charlottetown, the Prime Minister stated that, now that the Alsands project is dead, the government will be diverting funds to other areas of the economy to help make regions self-sufficient, will he recognize the viability and potential of the oil shales in the Moncton Basin in New Brunswick, which would amount to 10 billion to 20 billion barrels of oil, and be as generous with New Brunswick as he was with the province of Saskatchewan in setting up a pilot project to explore the possibilities of getting at that oil?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, these projects are being given careful consideration by my department on the basis of their respective economic viability, and in so far as projects such as the one mentioned by the hon. member can be expected to provide appreciable economic energy benefits in comparison with other projects, we shall obviously be examining them with great interest.

COMMUNICATIONS

USE OF CANADIAN SPACE SATELLITES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications who, I understand, is leaving shortly to go to Calgary to meet with his provincial counterparts on the issue of communications policy and Pay TV. I also understand that his officials have recently been meeting in Washington with members of the Federal Communications Commission with respect to changes to the 1972 letters of understanding between the two countries, which limit Canadian access to American satellites. Could the minister tell the House the nature of the amendments he is proposing? Specifically, is he proposing to allow the Americans to use our made-in-Canada satellites for direct-to-home broadcasting and rebroadcasting, an activity which is illegal in Canada? We have invented and paid for the technology, but we are not allowed to use it. Is it true that the minister will allow the Americans to use it first?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quite right in saying that there was, indeed, a very high level meeting of Canadian and U.S. officials last week in Washington. They agreed to set up a joint working group at a very senior level to look at the whole question of transport of data flow, transport or use of satellites, and the whole issue of orbital separations for satellites. These discussions of last Thursday will be followed by further discussions over the next few months. I think it actually points out or highlights the fact that when one looks at the over-all range of communications issues between Canada and the United States, our relations are indeed going ahead and progressing on an even keel.

Concerning the possible use of Canadian satellites by the U.S., it is my position, and the position of the government, that as long as those satellites are not required for use by Canadians we should be in a position to export, so to speak, the use of Canadian satellite channels to the United States, thereby allowing Telesat Canada to increase revenue and, in the long range, make the use of satellites in this country cheaper.

TRANSMISSION OF SIGNALS FROM FLORIDA

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Communications. I would point out that the revenues which are being talked about barely cover the launch costs for the next five satellites. I would also like to point out to the minister that Telesat is so embarrassed by the amount of American capacity on Canadian satellites that it is selling, that it has renumbered the satellites backwards. Therefore, we will launch Anik C-3 first, then Anik C-2, then Anik C-1.

• (1450)

Madam Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: It is an explanation. The minister should know that.

Miss Carney: I would like to point out to the minister that it was designed originally for Canadians, specifically northern Canadians. Can he explain why the system is being designed to pick up Florida?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, obviously once again if we do have excess capacity, and that is the view of Telesat and its board of directors, the strong recommendation to the government from Telesat is that we should, in this interim period when we have an excess capacity, rent this excess capacity to the Americans because there is no demand for that type of commercial service in Canada at this stage. When there is indeed a commercial demand in Canada, we will make those satellite channels available. I have great difficulty understanding the hon. member's position. On this side of the House we are indeed interested in exporting high technology products to the Americans. The use of the satellite channel is an example of exporting some high technology products.

MINES AND MINING

LAY-OFFS IN LABRADOR AND NORTHERN QUEBEC

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. It is in relation to a telegram sent by the mayor and councillors of Labrador City to the Minister of National Revenue concerning the plight faced by mine workers in Labrador City, northern Quebec and surrounding areas because of the declining market for iron ore. Madam Speaker, has the Minister of State for Mines recommended to the Minister of Finance a response to the Minister of National Revenue which would bring satisfaction to the residents of Labrador City who are faced with a serious crisis in their local economy as a result of the iron ore cutbacks?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the telegram has not been brought to my attention yet. I will answer the question when I am made aware of its contents.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Mines will also know, I presume, of a bill introduced to the United States Congress by Senator Peter Domenici who has suggested that United States consumers of uranium have their allowable imports restricted to 20 per cent of consumption in any particular nuclear installation. That will have a tremendously devastating impact on uranium mining in places like Kirkland Lake where we might see as many as 2,000 mine workers unemployed as a result of such legislation. What action is the Minister of State for Mines recommending to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government, to ensure that this type of countervailing measure in retaliation for the confiscatory aspects of the National Energy Program is stopped immediately?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I should like to make one point very clear to the hon. member. There is no uranium mined in Kirkland Lake at all. It is gold, pretty well. The uranium mining that takes place in Ontario is in Elliot Lake.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Erola: I should like to assure the hon. member that we are aware of the situation and are following it very closely.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF JOB CREATION FUNDS FOR MICMAC INDIAN BAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. One of the problems in reaching a tripartite agreement with the Micmac people of Restigouche in the province of Quebec concerning fishing rights is the Quebec government's concern about too much pressure on salmon stock. It wants some assurance from the federal government that funds will be made available for job creation so that the Indian people will not be completely dependent upon the fishing resource.

Will the minister assure the House that job-creation funds and a proper economic development program will be put in place so that the Micmacs and the Quebec government can agree on a fishing quota that will not harm the salmon stock? Will the federal government meet its responsibilities for economic development on this reserve which has had over 80 per cent unemployment?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that one of the major economic issues of this government, as a result of the last budget, was to put a top priority on economic development for natives to the tune of $245 million over the next four years. Approximately $75 million is to be allocated this year. This is in addition to all the other moneys presently programmed which the hon. member will note in the votes in our estimates for economic development for native people. So, of course, Restigouche will be considered in that context.

I hope the hon. member is not misled. The feeling of the Indian chief at Restigouche is that they want the Quebec government to continue to agree to the quota it set some weeks ago and not try to alleviate the responsibility for changing its mind by switching the blame to the federal government at this particular time.

PROTECTION OF MIC MAC FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, we have heard many times about the $75 million that is supposed to be allocated for Indian economic development. We have not seen any of it yet, and neither have the Indian people. In view of the deteriorating situation in the negotiations with the Micmac people and the Quebec government, will the minister assure the Micmac people that, if a mutually satisfactory agreement cannot be reached, the aboriginal rights of the Micmac people regarding fishing will be protected and that there will be no repetition of last year's disgraceful raid?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would be prepared, and I am sure every member of this House would be prepared also, to take every possible step to avoid the unfortunate situation that happened at Restigouche last year. That is why my officials met with the Quebec officials yesterday and today, for that very purpose, to protect the quota that the Indian people regard as evidence of their Indian fishing rights in that particular area. That is a quota that was recognized some weeks ago by the Quebec government. We hope to reinstal that quota. We hope that Quebec will keep to its commitment on the previous quota that it agreed to some weeks ago. We feel that the Indian people then will regard this as evidence of good faith in terms of their fishing rights in the Restigouche area.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTRACTUAL STATUS OF FORMER SENIOR OFFICIALS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, you will recall a question I asked the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation with respect to the number of senior officials who have cashed in their optimum pension rights to change their status from that of employment to contractual arrangement. I thank the minister for a letter he wrote to me saying that only three of the former senior executives of the corporation have entered into this kind of arrangement.

I would like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board with regard to the issue of persons receiving dual benefits in terms of pensions and salaries. Could he tell me whether the practice, now obvious in Canada Mortgage and Housing, is widespread throughout the Public Service? To refresh his memory, the question is with respect to senior civil servants who cash in their optimum pension rights and change their status from that of employment to a contractual arrangement, receiving two salaries from the Public Service.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the practice has been, and continues to be, that where public servants are hired on contract after retirement, care is taken to ensure that they do not receive a benefit beyond that which they would have received had they continued as employees of the federal government. That has been the practice in the past. If the hon. member knows of other circumstances in that department, I would be glad to take this question as a representation and ask my colleague responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to look into the matter.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, it would not be in anyone's interest for me to give names of people in several departments of the Public Service who are not only receiving the optimum pension rights but contractual payments which are higher than their salary was before they changed their status with the corporation. Unless the minister provides us here with a more positive answer, namely, that he will look into the situation and stop it, I will have to name some of these public servants who have entered into these arrangements with several departments of the federal government.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I would invite the hon. member to speak to me privately on the matter. I have told him what the policy of the government is and what the policy of the Treasury Board is. I have just explained to him that maybe that should not be the case. Obviously there are public servants who are very valuable and should be maintained on contract. However, they should not, by virtue of that arrangement, receive more than they would receive had they continued as employees in the Public Service. That is the policy. If there are abuses which have not been brought to my attention, I would like to know what they are. I invite the hon. member to bring them to my attention privately.

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—ALLEGED CIA INTERVENTION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and forty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on Wednesday, May 19, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY MR. CHRÉTIEN

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice this morning and which arises out of events which occurred in this House on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

All the precedents and authorities indicate that it is a breach of the privileges of the House for a member deliberately to mislead the House and, in particular, for a cabinet minister to do so. Incidentally, I will move a motion when I conclude my remarks, which I trust will be succinct and to the point.

As I understand it, what I must do now is establish a prima facie case that this House was deliberately misled by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and then, if Your Honour finds that the motion I will move is in order, there would be a debate on it and a vote as to whether this matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member worded his notice to me very carefully, and I ask him if he would very kindly avoid referring to "deliberately misleading" the House. The hon. member can expose any facts he wishes to put forward without mentioning those words which, of course, I must consider to be unparliamentary. There have been numerous occasions when allegations of the kind the hon. member now wants to bring forward have been brought forward, and hon. members have been able to expose their questions of privilege without using this kind of language. Such language puts the Chair in a very difficult position, the Chair wanting to hear the case on the one hand but, on the other hand, not being able to accept unparliamentary language.

I am just warning the hon. member because he used those words in reference to a document. I am not saying he intends to use them during the remainder of his intervention, but it would be easier if everyone kept in mind that it would be difficult for the Chair to accept any unparliamentary language in the course of this question of privilege.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I must rise and speak to that point because it is my submission—

Mr. Breau: You can't speak on that point.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: It is my submission, Madam Speaker, based on a very recent precedent of this House, that the course to be followed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is quite in order.

Mr. Speaker Jerome gave a very lengthy and well reasoned ruling on February 28, 1978 on a similar question of privilege raised at that time by the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, and that is to be found at page 3293 of Hansard for February 28, 1978.

Mr. Lawrence: And 3294.

Mr. Nielsen: The ruling commences at pages 3293, but on page 3294, in an extremely well reasoned judgment, Mr. Speaker Jerome very carefully and in some depth went into the history of what to him appeared to be a Catch-22 situation.

It is not reasonable to expect a question of privilege, based as this one is on an accusation of deliberately misleading the House, to avoid the very pith and substance of the question of privilege, and that is the problem which confronted Mr. Speaker Jerome. As recorded in the left-hand column at the bottom of page 3294, Mr. Speaker Jerome said:

> There are two other rather important precedents to which I would like to refer for the benefit of hon. members. I have them here and would be glad to have them copied and distributed to any members who might be interested in the discussion. One of them refers to a case in our own Journals which is reported on March 11, 1890, when Sir Richard J. Cartwright moved a motion of criticism of another member of the House which contained in it, first of all, an allegation of directly misleading the House and, finally, concluded by saying that the conduct of a certain member in the premises was and had been discreditable, corrupt and scandalous. That matter was debated by the House as a substantive motion—

And there will be a substantive motion moved here today by the hon. member for St. John's West.

> —and after debate the decision was taken that the matter would be referred to a committee for further examination.

Mr. Speaker Jerome went on to consider a further precedent in the British House which occurred on June 15, 1965, and he briefly described it. The charge in that case involved racist propaganda. In the substance of his ruling Mr. Speaker Jerome said, as recorded in the right-hand column:

> This does raise a very slight question as to whether or not in a substantive motion, since it is the very intention of the motion, language can be used which appears otherwise to be prohibited. My preliminary decision is that since the motion directs itself to that kind of criticism, obviously that language would have to be embodied in a motion and certainly would have to be permitted during the course of the debate, because I cannot see how the House could address itself to a substantive motion making that kind of allegation and complaint unless it was prepared to deal with it in specific terms. That question seems to remain—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like to ask a question of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) so that I can follow his argument.

I have looked at that particular ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome, and it seems to me that the hon. member is now saying that he was referring to a substantive motion. If I remember that precedent, there was a substantive motion under another type of procedure which can be used in this House whereby the allegations or accusations made were quite clearly written out and spelled out.

We have a different situation just now whereby the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is raising a question of privilege. That is why I cannot allow a reference to "deliberately misleading" because to the present time no one has found a prima facie case of deliberate misleading. If the Chair does find that, obviously some kind of motion will come forward and the language allowed to be used might be different. I am not saying it will without looking into the circumstances, but it might be different. I will now ask the hon. member for Yukon to answer my question because I do not have the ruling under my eyes at this moment.

The hon. member is referring to a substantive motion in which a clear accusation had been made about an hon. member. Therefore, since the accusation might have been that of deliberately misleading, then in the presentation of the accusation or in the defence thereof it is quite obvious that some of these words had to be used.

I refer the hon. member to the question raised by the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland. He debated his question of privilege without using any of the words the Chair could not allow. He exposed the facts, which I am asking the hon. member to do now.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the case is on all fours with that which was rised by the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland in 1978. If Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling is very carefully examined, it is obvious that the process we are embarked upon here today is precisely the process involved then, and I was present in the House at the time the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland raised that question of privilege. Indeed, I participated in the debate on that occasion. What happened was that a notice of intention to raise a question of privilege was given by the then hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. In that notice, the words "deliberately misleading" were used.

• (1510)

The hon. member for St. John's West has meticulously avoided the use of those words in the notice given to the Chair on this question. After having given the notice there was a debate in order to satisfy the Chair at that time that there existed a prima facie case of privilege.

At the conclusion of the submission by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland he presented, as is the intention of the hon. member for St. John's West in this case, a motion which, if the Chair had found a prima facie case, would have been put to the House and the normal process would follow. That is precisely what we are doing here.

In that motion that was presented at the closing of his submission, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham used the words "deliberately misleading". It was to that process that Mr. Speaker Jerome directed his attention in the precedent I am citing for the Chair today. It is clear from the preamble on page 3293 of Hansard that that is what took place on that occasion.

My submission is that we are following precisely that precedent in precisely that chronology.

The argument is an important one, Madam Speaker, and I should like to have the undivided attention of the Chair. I urge the Clerk to advise the Speaker, but in the meantime I want to be heard in an undivided way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I thank you for the courtesy of giving me that undivided attention, Madam Speaker.

In my submission, the circumstances here are on all fours with that case, and the proper course to be followed would be for the hon. member for St. John's West to be heard on his question, as clearly Mr. Speaker Jerome considered that there is no alternative other than to endure the use of words used in the debate to support his argument which would otherwise, as he said, be prohibited. At the end of that submission he will be proposing that substantive motion and it will contain those words which would otherwise be considered unparliamentary.

I have no doubt that the Chair will want to hear other submissions on the substance of whether a prima facie case exists. The thought occurred to me in the meantime that if the Chair wishes to have my copy of—

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member. The Clerk was giving me a copy of that ruling so that I could follow the hon. member's argument. It would have been helpful if that process had not been disrupted. I do need the copy and I would ask the Clerk to give it to me now.

Mr. Nielsen: The thought occurred to me that a way to ease the difficulty would be to put the motion right now and subsequent submissions could be made to you on the basis of that motion. That clearly has to be found to be in order.

Madam Speaker: No, I do not think it is in order. Unparliamentary language cannot be used because, except under a certain procedure, members cannot be accused of having done certain things to the House. Therefore, I submit that I think it is entirely possible to do otherwise. The hon. member for St. John's West could expose the facts that he wants to expose to the House in view of his question of privilege without using those words which I would have to consider to be unparliamentary. Once the motion is before the House, the situation might be different and I would examine it then on its merit.

If I could have the co-operation of the House to clear this matter up, I hope it will be possible for the hon. member to submit his question of privilege in this way. Unless the hon. member gives me time to read this whole judgment and the whole question of privilege that was presented at another time, I do not think in the first part of the presentation of the question of privilege by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland in the precedent which the hon. member for Yukon has quoted that any kind of unparliamentary language was used. The matter discussed was very much related to the kind of allegation that we are looking into today, however.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I direct your attention specifically to page 3294 of Hansard for February 28, 1978. The Chair has the ruling now. On that page in the right-hand column, half-way through the second paragraph, Mr. Speaker Jerome had this to say:

> My preliminary decision is that since the motion directs itself to that kind of criticism, obviously that language would have to be embodied in a motion—

Which it is.

> —and certainly would have to be permitted during the course of the debate, because I cannot see how the House could address itself to a substantive motion making that kind of allegation and complaint unless it was prepared to deal with it in specific terms.

I have admired your position in the past, Madam Speaker, for not creating new precedents and for adhering religiously to precedents already on our books. I submit to you that those terms of Mr. Jerome's ruling, in such a specific fashion, would be very difficult to avoid in prohibiting now debate on language which he says is proper to debate in a motion which in this case stands on all fours with the question he had to deal with in 1978 and which we want to proceed with now.

Madam Speaker: I would certainly want to follow the precedents which were established in this House by previous Speakers because I think they are a wealth of wisdom that I should rely on when I make decisions. But precisely because I want to follow those precedents and those traditions, it seems to me that what the hon. member is referring to is language that was permitted once the motion was before the House. We are not yet at this point. I will stand corrected if I am not following the hon. member's argument properly, but it seems to me that was permitted once the motion was before the House and not at the preliminary stage of the examination of the question of privilege. That is to say, once the Speaker found a prima facie question of privilege, then some language had to be admitted so that hon. members could make their case.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you are absolutely right. In fact, the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) quoted, out of context, part of the second paragraph of Hansard which I have here before me. It is important to remember that in this particular case, as you yourself said earlier, the Speaker of the House had ordered unparliamentary expressions to be removed from the notice of the question of privilege. Subsequently, the Speaker had second thoughts and said that he would accept unparliamentary language in a motion, provided the motion was before the House. However, today's situation is different. In fact, the onus is on the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to prove to the Chair that there is a prima facie case for a question of privilege, and a motion can be presented only if the Chair decides that such is the case. Therefore, as long as the motion is not before the House, the issue of whether or not a motion may contain an expression that otherwise would be unparliamentary does not exist.

In the circumstances, I fail to understand the point the member for Yukon is trying to make, because there is no motion before the House, and if the member for St. John's West had wished to put a substantive motion before the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 42, 48 hours' notice would have had to be given, which was not done.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a brief contribution to this question, if I may. I want to participate in the argument. As I see it, we have to face a simple, pragmatic problem. I ask you how the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) can establish a prima facie case of somebody wilfully misleading the House if he is not able to use those terms in the course of his discussion? That is the question we have to decide. If we want to make a prima facie case that there was deliberate misleading of this House, then I think it is almost impossible to do so unless we use euphemisms. Are we to say "dm" for "deliberately misleading", or use some other euphemism? We have to be able to use those terms, not in any unparliamentary sense, but simply to establish on a reasonable basis our prima facie case.

• (1520)

Madam Speaker: There is a difference, depending on the way in which hon. members choose to present a problem to the House. If hon. members wanted to have the latitude of formally accusing another member of this House of doing a certain thing, then they could have followed the route of presenting a substantive motion before the House which could be debated in those terms. That substantive motion could have been worded so as to contain the kind of accusations which some hon. members would now like me to consider as having been made.

A question of privilege is being raised, which is quite different from a substantive motion where an hon. member exercises a very serious sense of responsibility in making his accusations about an hon. member. That is a different procedure. If hon. members want to follow that procedure, I am in their hands. Under that procedure I can allow them to conduct themselves in a different way. However, since the hon. member for St. John's West chose to raise a question of privilege, I must rigorously follow the procedures which govern a question of privilege; that is to say, allow him to expose his question of privilege and warn him, as I did a few minutes ago, that since he was acting under this particular procedure he could not use unparliamentary language because I would then have to ask him to withdraw.

Therefore, I think the hon. member can, as some hon. members have done before in quite similar situations, expose the facts. That is what I need. The facts are needed in order to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. A motion could then come before the House and I would judge that particular situation according to the circumstances. But for the time being it is either one route or the other. I am governed by our rules, which are quite clear on that, and I have to adhere to them or there will not be order in the House. I am sure the hon. member for St. John's West can expose his question of privilege in this manner and we can go on with the business of hearing him.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I hesitate to become embroiled in this matter because my party supported the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) yesterday in the vote. However, the opposition House leader invited other members to make submissions to Madam Speaker and I thank the hon. member for his Hansard reference of February 28, 1978. The whole text of Speaker Jerome's ruling was not revealed and I would just like to quote a couple of paragraphs, where he says:

> My first reference is to the nineteenth edition of Erskine May at pages 367 and 428. At page 367, under the heading "Rules Governing Subject-Matter of Motions", it is stated that certain matters cannot be debated save upon a substantive motion which admits of a distinct vote of the House. Among these is the conduct of members of either House of Parliament. I am summarizing that slightly, but the reference is there.
> At page 428 of May's nineteenth edition, under the heading "Reflections on the Sovereign, etc.", it is stated that unless the discussion is based upon a substantive motion, drawn in proper terms, reflections must not be cast in debate upon the conduct of the sovereign, etc, and among those enumerated are members of either House of Parliament.

Speaker Jerome goes on to cite a number of other references, but I will let the expanded text speak for itself.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to clarify a misunderstanding which exists in my mind regarding the practices and traditions of the House. Perhaps you can clarify them for me.

As I understand the situation, whenever one complains about a breach of privilege in the House—it does not matter whether it is unparliamentary language or whatever—one has to give a notice of motion to the Chair. It has been the tradition and practice for as long as I can remember, both in the British House of Commons and in this House of Commons, that the notice of motion has to contain the substantive motion which the member is going to rely upon if the Chair finds a prima facie case.

The difficulty back in 1978 which was clearly faced by Speaker Jerome was exactly the same situation you are facing today, with all due respect. It is a Catch-22 situation. How can a member complain of someone deliberately misleading someone else in the House but be unable to use that language? After exhaustively going into the precedents, spending at least a week, if I remember correctly, on the research involved, I think Speaker Jerome came out with the clear unequivocal position that obviously that language had to be permitted in a debate on the notice of motion—not on the substantive motion itself but on the notice of motion—and could be used in the notice of motion because it had to be used in the substantive motion.

As I understand the situation now facing the Chair, there is a claim that that language can be used in debate only after the substantive motion is put; in other words, only after the Chair finds there is a prima facie case. I feel compelled, Madam Speaker, to draw your attention to rule 81(2) which, as I understand it, requires the substantive motion to be included in the notice of motion.

As a matter of fact, if there is any doubt whatsoever in your mind, I point out to you that in 1978 I was permitted to use that language in the debate in this House; I was permitted to use that language in the notice of motion, and in the subsequent substantive motion. In actual fact the Chair found there was no prima facie case at that time. So we never reached the stage where the motion was actually put, because the Chair found there was no prima facie case.

Under those circumstances, Madam Speaker, I feel that if you are following—as I am sure you desire to—the precedent of such an eminent Speaker with the legal training and background which Mr. Speaker Jerome had—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Lawrence: —with the training and background that Speaker Jerome had, Madam Speaker, I feel that the precedent and tradition is that we should follow the results of the exhaustive research carried out by the Speaker at that time.

Madam Speaker: In answer to the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) I will have to point out to him exactly what happened in these particular circumstances. First of all, the motion sent to me by the hon. member for St. John's West does not contain any language which I could consider to be unparliamentary. It is very carefully worded and does not contain a reference to "deliberately misleading" the House. Therefore, I could find that this question of privilege was raised in a very legitimate manner.

Secondly, the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland I think forgets that my esteemed predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, who was very highly trained in the legal profession, asked the hon. member to change the wording of his motion because he felt he could not accept the wording "deliberately misleading". He concluded by saying:

• (1530)

> I would think, therefore, that the action would be to strike out the hon. member's notice of privilege because it contained the word "deliberately", on the basis of clear precedents.

That is why the hon. member was able to proceed, because he concurred with this demand from the Speaker. Mr. Speaker Jerome went on to say:

> It is entirely without prejudice to the hon. member to raise the matter again in a substantive motion after he has had the opportunity to consult these precedents.

It seems to me that I am following exactly what my predecessor had suggested to the House to do.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, you used a phrase twice which I am sure you did not intend to use.

Mr. Pinard: Be serious.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: You referred to receiving the "motion" from the hon. member for St. John's West. I am sure you intended to say "notice". You also referred to Mr. Speaker Jerome's request in his ruling that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland change the wording of his "motion". I am sure you intended to use the word "notice", as Mr. Speaker Jerome used that word.

Mr. Smith: That's what Madam Speaker said.

Mr. Nielsen: No, I am afraid that when the "blues" come to Madam Speaker she will notice those two observations. I am sure she intended to say "notice".

Mr. Smith: You are wrong.

Mr. Nielsen: I just want to make one or two brief points, Madam Speaker. First, it has always been ruled, in my experience here, that a question of privilege has to contain a motion. I cannot recollect any instance other than that if a charge is made the nature of the charge is usually right up front so that people know what they are dealing with, particularly those who are participating in a discussion as to whether or not a prima facie case exists. You yourself have said that you have to know the facts. One of the principal facts in this whole discussion is going to be the deliberate nature of the misleading. That fact is central to all of the discussion that will flow here.

Second, I cannot recall any ruling—there may well be one but I cannot recall it—that requires a substantive motion, such as the one intended to be moved here and the one moved on the occasion of the question raised by the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, to be moved at the end of the argument rather than at the beginning. Indeed, I cannot recall any instance where the motion followed the finding of a prima facie case. Indeed, it was always up front because that was part of the finding. Once a case is found, then the very motion is put to the House.

My friend the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) quoted Beauchesne's Citation 81(2). In my submission, Citation 81, Subparagraph (2), should not be read as a mandatory direction that a motion can only follow the finding of a prima facie case or can only follow the submission of argument by the hon. member phrasing the quesiton of privilege. The proper interpretation of Citation 81(2) in my submission is that, unless there is a substantive motion moved by at least the conclusion of the argument, then the question of privilege is not well founded and, indeed, there is nothing to put to the House.

I submit very strongly that Citation 81(2) which I have cited to you does not rule out the practice of putting such a substantive motion up front in the argument. I can recall no precedent in this House to prevent that course being followed.

In any event, just to deal very briefly with the point raised by the government House leader in his very brief, and in my respectful opinion ineffectual, intervention, he made the point that a substantive motion had to be preceded by 48 hours' notice. That, of course, is nonsense. Mr. Speaker Jerome found it to be nonsense. As reported on page 3294 of Hansard for February 28, 1978, Mr. Speaker Jerome said:

> If the action was deliberate and was then the subject of a substantive motion—

As this will be.

> —as required by the precedents, it might be argued by the mover of that substantive motion that rather than having the substantive motion dealt with in its regular place under private members' notices of motions, for example, it ought to enjoy the precedence accorded to privileged motions.

That is why, because of the uniqueness and rarity of substantive questions of privilege arising in the House of Commons, it enjoys the kind of procedence that Mr. Speaker Jerome points out motions based on privilege ought to enjoy.

Just so there is no inferences left that I am leaving anything out with respect to the brief and slight intervention by the acting House leader for the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker Jerome's judgment starts on page 3293 of Hansard for February 28, 1978 and concludes on page 3295.

There were other subsequent interventions based on that question of privilege. I commend not just the reading of that ruling to the hon. member who made the brief intervention, but a study of it, which I have given to the ruling.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will try not to be too long, despite the good advice given by my colleague from the Yukon. Very briefly, may I draw your attention to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 85. It describes the kind of motion that usually follows a complaint of a breach of privilege. Citation 85 reads:

> A complaint of a breach of privilege must conclude with a motion providing the House an opportunity to take some action. That action is normally the reference of the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for examination.

That is a substantive motion which does not require any other notice but a notice to raise a question of privilege, as was done by the hon. member for St. John's West. On the other hand, if the hon. member for St. John's West was to move another substantive motion accusing a minister of deliberately misleading the House, we would have to take into consideration a quote from Erskine May found on pages 367 and 368, which reads:

> "Matters to be dealt with by a substantive motion."—Certain matters cannot be debated, save upon a substantive motion which admits of a distinct vote of the House. Among these are the conduct of the sovereign—

And so on. We have also the conduct of:

> —members of either house of Parliament and judges of the superior courts of the United Kingdom—

Therefore, there are two separate points. First, if hon. members opposite choose the procedure of complaining of breach of privilege, then members are not allowed, according to a ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome, to use unparliamentary language in exposing facts. If you come to the conclusion that there is a prima facie case of privilege, Madam Speaker, then you allow a motion to be put. This type of motion does not contain any offensive language because it is a mere reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration of the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Not at all.

Mr. Pinard: On the other hand, if the hon. member for St. John's West was a little more courageous and had the courage to move a straightforward motion accusing the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) formally of deliberately misleading the House, then he would have had to give the normal notice under Standing Order 42 and suffer the consequences of his motion. But we would not be allowed to debate that today.

Hon. members opposite have chosen an indirect way to do this and they must live with the procedure as it is. Therefore, hon. members opposite are ill-founded in their approach in trying to seize this opportunity to add to the offence and insult of yesterday against the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and against this institution by trying to use more unparliamentary language through pleading a case wherein they pretend to suffer a breach of privilege.

Madam Speaker: It is quite obvious that we are really confusing two types of procedure. The hon. member for Yukon has just quoted precedents about notices of motions and different types of motions, but he confused the two types of motions in indicating to the Chair what the conduct of the Chair should be. It is quite obvious to me, having looked into the rules and precedents of the House, that having chosen the route of raising a question of privilege, the hon. member for St. John's West should now expose his question of privilege, but of course he should not use unparliamentary language. At this point or during the course of his presentation, or even in the notice he has given—he has given me notice but he has not given the motion he would like to move—he could give the Chair or the House an idea of the kind of motion he would be prepared to move if the Chair finds a prima facie case of privilege.

The other procedure would require quite different behaviour and conduct on the part of members and on the part of the Chair. If the hon. member wants to conform to the procedure which I think is well established in the House, if he would deal with his question of privilege, accept the warning I have given him, and follow the example of some hon. members on that side who have previously dealt with matters of this nature, then I would hear him and I would be delighted to hear him.

I caution the House that indeed this is a very delicate situation wherein members using strong language to make their arguments must be reminded that unless they make a formal charge under a different procedure, they have to give up something. What they have to give up is the use of strong language which the Chair cannot accept if they use a particular type of procedure.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I will be very brief but I do not want the record to stand as it is. With great respect to your remarks, I was not confused when I was making my submissions. I was not referring to a notice of motion when I referred to the notice of privilege which was given to you today by the hon. member for St. John's West. I am quite aware of the distinction between a notice of privilege and a notice of motion. We are talking about a notice of privilege and a substantive motion which will follow upon that notice of privilege. No confusion exists in my mind. I just wanted to put the record straight on that score.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, naturally I want to restrict myself to whatever the Chair dictates, no matter what contortions that might require. I am alleging or suggesting that on last Tuesday, May 18, there was a breach of the privileges of the House due to the misconduct of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in certain answers he made to certain questions. I would like to establish now, if I can, the prima facie evidence that this occurred.

I refer to Tuesday's Hansard at page 17533. That afternoon at around 2.55, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) asked a question because—and this is part of the factual background—there had been a report on CJYQ radio in St. John's, Newfoundland at one o'clock Newfoundland time—which is, as Madam Speaker knows, 11.30 Ottawa time—that the Government of Canada had made a decision to refer the question of offshore mineral resources to the Supreme Court of Canada. I also tell the House that the basis of that story came from the office of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), who is a minister from Newfoundland.

Then following that broadcast by CJYQ radio in St. John's, CP sent out a story stating the same thing. I have the CP story here. At 1.31 on Tuesday afternoon before question period started, Canadian Press sent out a story to the same effect. I have it in my hand, as a matter of fact:

> The federal government is considering a unilateral reference on offshore resource ownership to the Supreme Court of Canada as early as this week, federal sources said Tuesday.

It referred to a secret meeting on Friday between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Newfoundland minister. It continued:

> Sources said Prime Minister Trudeau and Lalonde met Monday night with the five Liberal MPs from Newfoundland to discuss the government's options, including a quick Supreme Court reference.

At my request, the Leader of the Opposition asked the Minister of Justice the following question, as reported at page 17533 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who will know that there are news reports today indicating that the federal government is considering a unilateral reference on offshore resource ownership to the Supreme Court of Canada, and is considering doing that as early as this week. Is that the case?

The answer of the Minister of Justice was:

> Madam Speaker, if the government does make a decision to that effect, this will be announced as soon as the decision has been made. No decision has been made at this time.

Then on the next page, after other supplementary questions, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked:

> Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada considering a direct unilateral reference of the offshore question to the Supreme Court of Canada? It is a simple question. Yes or no?

The Minister of Justice answered:

> Madam Speaker, I said that there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

Then he went on with the rest of his answer.

Later on that Tuesday, or I guess it was probably early Wednesday morning, there was a report in The Globe and Mail of Toronto that the minister was proceeding to St. John's that morning to inform the people of Newfoundland—

Mr. McGrath: That paper is out at nine o'clock.

Mr. Crosbie: It was reported in The Globe and Mail of May 19 that he was going down to Newfoundland to inform them that the government was asking the Supreme Court of Canada to decide who owns the rich Hibernia oil field. It read:

> Sources in Ottawa told The Globe and Mail that the question the federal government will be putting before the Supreme Court will be restricted to Hibernia rather than the more comprehensive question—

Mr. McGrath: That paper was printed the night before.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, that paper was printed on Tuesday evening. The next morning, that is the morning of May 19, the Minister of Justice flew to Newfoundland with the Minister of National Revenue. They arrived there at twelve noon or 10.30 Ottawa time, which indicates that they left here at 7 to 7.30 a.m., less than 24 hours after the Minister of Justice said that no decision had been made on the issue.

Not only that, but just before twelve noon on Wednesday, officials from the Department of Justice appeared in the Supreme Court registry in Ottawa and filed a reference with the registry containing the question on the offshore and all other necessary documentation. It would strain credulity to believe that all the intricate work necessary to prepare those documents could have been done by the Department of Justice between 2.55 Tuesday afternoon and the next morning at twelve noon.

In any event, on the same Wednesday the minister, after having had lunch with the defeated leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland who announced all this at 2.15, or 15 minutes before the minister called a press conference in Newfoundland to give to the public the letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Premier Peckford and went on to say that this reference was being made. At 2.45 Newfoundland time, a telex started to arrive in the war room in the Confederation Building at St. John's from the Prime Minister to Premier Peckford. The minister had started 15 minutes before the Premier started to get the letter from the Prime Minister, who was so fastidious here yesterday about tabling that letter in the House. He wanted to ask Premier Peckford whether he should table it, the Premier who did not even get the letter before the Minister of Justice made it or the substance of it public in Newfoundland last Wednesday.

Mr. Chrétien: I did not make it public.

Mr. Crosbie: In any event, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Chrétien: I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: We are on one now.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. minister might rise on a point of order, but he cannot rise on a question of privilege because I cannot hear two questions of privilege at the same time.

Mr. Crosbie: The minister—

Mr. Chrétien: I did not have the letter.

Mr. Crosbie: I will not argue about that.

Mr. Chrétien: Then don't say it.

An hon. Member: Your microphone.

Mr. Crosbie: I am telling you, Madam Speaker, that whoever operates these microphones has a lot to answer for.

• (1550)

This telex started to arrive at a quarter to three on Wednesday afternoon, just 24 hours after the minister said in the House of Commons that no decision had been reached on this most important and sensitive question.

In order to keep the time in sequence, Madam Speaker, I refer you to Wednesday's Hansard, May 19, in which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had an opportunity to question the Prime Minister, who entered the House at about ten minutes to three—in fact, at three o'clock since it is marked "1500". The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister this question at page 17592 of Hansard:

> I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether that response by the Minister of Justice yesterday was a truthful response, and, if so, would he tell the House of Commons at which time, what time yesterday or today, did the cabinet of Canada meet to make a decision to refer the offshore jurisdiction question to the Supreme Court of Canada?

The reply of the Prime Minister was:

> —the decision became effective when the order in council was signed some time this morning. I cannot say exactly at what hour.

That was an evasion, of course, so the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked several more questions. I read from page 17952 of Hansard where he asked:

> When did the cabinet of Canada meet to make this decision?

And:

> —was the Minister of Justice telling the truth to the House of Commons yesterday when he gave his answer?

The reply by the Prime Minister was:

> Madam Speaker, the cabinet met yesterday, yesterday morning. It took what in effect was a conditional decision, and that decision became effective this morning.

The Prime Minister himself has confirmed that there was a cabinet meeting on Tuesday morning where they made a decision which he chooses to call conditional. The Prime Minister went on to say that "the decision became effective this morning." That is, Wednesday morning.

It is a peculiar thing, but I am advised that the copy of the order in council sent to Newfoundland—the copy that the Newfoundland government has—is dated May 18. That is my advice.

In any event, at three o'clock in the House the Prime Minister said that there was a cabinet meeting Tuesday morning, before the Minister of Justice answered the questions in this House that this decision was made which he calls conditional. A decision is a decision, conditional or not. The matter had obviously been discussed. It is like getting pregnant. You cannot get half or a quarter pregnant; you are either pregnant or not. You make a decision or you do not. You do not make a half pregnant decision. But that was the Prime Minister's response.

In order to establish my prima facie case we must remember that the minister said that there was no decision made and that about 17 hours later he left for Newfoundland in a government aircraft. There must have been a fantastic flurry Tuesday afternoon and night in cabinet offices and in the Department of Justice that the minister had to hurtle to St. John's on a jet on Wednesday to advise them that the government was referring this question to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Could I just point out to you, Madam Speaker, what the ordinary person understands by the word "decision". The ordinary person understands a decision to be a decision, not when some order in council is signed. I refer to the large Oxford dictionary which says this about the word "decision".

Mr. Broadbent: The large one, John?

Mr. Crosbie: That is the small one. I am quoting from the large. The large Oxford dictionary says "decision" means "the action of deciding (a contest, controversy, question) a settlement, a determination or the action of deciding". It goes on to say "the making up of one's mind on any point or on a course of action; a resolution; determination".

Why do I refer to the definition of "decision"? Because there is an attempt to quibble about what that word means. There was already an attempt made by the Minister of Justice, as he is quoted in a Canadian Press story today, to say: "When it is not signed it is not a decision." There is a new principle now. You do not make a decision until something is signed. If I decide to walk across the street, it is not a decision until I sign it. If I decide to leave this building to go somewhere, it is not a decision until it is signed. If the government or one of its committees makes a decision, it is not a decision until somebody produces written evidence of the decision. They no longer have memories or no longer know what they have decided. It is nothing until somebody puts it into writing and it is signed as an order in council. That will not wash with the people of this country.

What does all this add up to? What it does add up to is that this House was not given a true and correct answer to the question that was asked by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on Tuesday which dealt with a most serious public question. Is this a breach of privilege? How can the parliamentary system of government function if members of the House, and the public, cannot obtain or no longer expect to obtain factual, true and correct answers from ministers—not equivocations which will be based on the minister later saying that there was no decision because there was no order in council passed. Everyone in the country knows that a decision was made when the cabinet met on Tuesday morning. Suppose the decision was conditional as the Prime Minister said it was, conditional on what?

There was no communication between the Prime Minister or his ministers and the Newfoundland government from Friday of last week when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources met with the Newfoundland minister of energy, mines and resources until the Minister of Justice flew to Newfoundland to have his press conference. The decision was not conditional upon the government of Newfoundland agreeing. It was not conditional on the government of Newfoundland being asked to do something. It was not conditional on the government of Newfoundland being informed. The Newfoundland government was not informed. It heard about the decision after the defeated Liberal leader of the opposition in Newfoundland heard about it. He has repudiated the whole course of action which, of course, is irrelevant.

After just having laid out these facts as I know them, I want to end by saying that these facts naturally can only be prima facie until someone with the power to investigate and look into this matter can do so and summon witnesses to be heard.

If our system has reached the point where we can no longer trust what we are told by ministers of the Crown in the House, if we have come to the point where evasion, half-truths, specious reasoning is given to us instead of factual answers to questions—because all the Leader of the Opposition asked for was facts—then the parliamentary system of government can no longer work in the House. It can no longer work if we have to study every answer and refer to the dictionary after answers to all our questions in order to look up every word they have used, to see what the dictionary says it means or what the Liberal cabinet minister understood it to mean in the twisted confines of that cabinet minister's mind.

I would like to end by quoting from Macbeth:

> I pull in resolution, and begin
> To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
> That lies like truth; Fear not till Birnam wood
> Do come to Dunsinane;—

Birnam wood is coming to Dunsinane because we doubt the fiend that lies like truth. Therefore, after we are concluded here, if you find there is a prima facie case—which I hope you will because this has to be put a stop to and we owe it to the people of Canada to see that this is put a stop to—I will move:

> That it is the opinion of this House:
> That in stating to the House on Tuesday, May 18, at page 17534 of Hansard in reply to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, that "there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question," the Minister of Justice was deliberately misleading the House;
> And, that this House therefore resolves: That the matter of the deliberately misleading statement made to the House by the Minister of Justice on Tuesday, May 18, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections;
> And that the committee report to the House as to whether the statements of the Minister of Justice constitute a contempt of the House, and whether the conduct of the minister is consistent with that expected of a minister of the Crown.

That is the motion I will move because I believe this kind of sharp practice and pretence must be stopped. This deviousness and this kind of answer must be stopped.

Let me also say that I am quite prepared to put my seat on the line, and if there is a proper forum to investigate this matter I charge that minister with deliberately misrepresenting the truth to the House. I am prepared to back that up. I am prepared to resign if a fair and proper forum finds that he did not knowingly and deliberately mislead the House. I am prepared to run again when the government sets a date for a by-election, if they dare to set a by-election date. I will then be back here again with ten times the majority I had the last time.

• (1600)

I also want the Minister of Justice to put his seat on the line. I want him to resign if such a committee finds that he deliberately misled the House, as he in fact did yesterday in a disgraceful and pusillanimous manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Resign!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member becomes exercised, makes a big fuss and tries to be a little bouffant as he did yesterday, because the facts themselves today just prove what is the problem. I would like very clearly to say that when I answered the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in the House on Tuesday, I stated the truth. There was this problem concerning the offshore which has been in front of the cabinet for a long time. The hon. member knows that some months ago I communicated with the minister of justice in Newfoundland, Mr. Ottenheimer, and suggested that we go directly to the Supreme Court in order to shorten the process and make sure that there was a decision. There was an election, and so on, so the decision was not made. There were discussions, there were some procedures which had to be followed, and the matter was reviewed from time to time.

Therefore, when I rose in the House on Tuesday afternoon it was one of the plans, and we had obviously been ready for a long time because all of the documents were ready. I hope the opposition will not start to blame a minister because he does his work properly and gets ready to act when the time comes. So I was ready, and I came to the House. The Leader of the Opposition asked me a question and I said there was no final decision, and it was confirmed—

Mr. Clark: No decision at all; don't weasel.

Mr. Chrétien: No decision, yes, were the words I used. So, no decision was made. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) very clearly described it. There was a decision which had been made with some conditions attached. Of course, I did not want to mislead the House. I just said that there was no decision because some conditions had to be met.

In the afternoon when I left this House at three o'clock and went back to the cabinet—because the cabinet was sitting—I had to entertain some more discussions, with my officials and with some ministers and, by the end of the afternoon, I was satisfied that I could proceed. But by that time it was around seven o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: Making it worse.

Mr. Chrétien: So the order in council could not be passed until the morning after. Because no one was in their office, I gave instructions for the processing of the order in council only in the morning. In fact, the order in council was passed at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning by the Deputy Governor General.

I did not want to mislead the House. There was no final decision. The hon. member said that I purposely wanted to mislead the House. Yesterday he misled the House, and I am sure it was involuntary, because he rose in the House and he said:

> Today the Minister of Justice met with the leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland . . . rather than with the minister of justice for Newfoundland. He refused to meet with the minister of justice—

I do not say that the hon. member wanted to mislead the House, but that is, in fact, what he has done, because I left on Wednesday morning and I had given instructions on Tuesday night to make an appointment for me with Mr. Ottenheimer. His office was called. When I arrived in St. John's, I asked my assistant to call the office of Mr. Ottenheimer. Mr. Ottenhemier agreed to meet me at 3.30 in the afternoon. Later on he called and cancelled the meeting.

The hon. member for St. John's West accused me of refusing to meet Mr. Ottenheimer.

Mr. McGrath: Before the press conference!

Mr. Chrétien: I did not call him to cancel the meeting. He did not attach any condition. I went there and informed him that I was in St. John's and that I wanted to have a meeting. I did not personally talk to him. A time was set for 3.30. I have worked with Mr. Ottenheimer for years. I have no grievance against him. We might disagree, but I respect him as the attorney-general and I wanted to see him. But he cancelled the meeting.

I do not say that the hon. member for St. John's West wanted to mislead the House of Commons. He probably interpreted that the meeting had been cancelled, or perhaps he was not even aware that the meeting had been agreed upon. So he said the same thing this afternoon. What was his intention a minute ago? He withdrew what he said. He said that I was there, giving the letter of the Prime Minister to the press, before the Premier of Newfoundland had received the letter. I am sorry, I did not have the letter. The letter was sent by the Prime Minister to Mr. Peckford. I was not a messenger. I do not say that the hon. member wanted to deliberately mislead the House, but he did not state the truth, because I did not have the letter.

When we are debating in the House and replying to questions, I think it should be understood that if I had been satisfied when I rose in my seat that there was a decision, and that I was to proceed the same day, the day after, or Wednesday, if I had been sure I would have said so. I have been a member of this House for 19 years, 15 years in the cabinet. I have always dealt with the House on a reasonable basis. I know that there are some affirmations made on a daily basis which are sometimes contradictory.

The hon. member for St. John's West tries to define when a decision has been made. I am telling hon. members that, in my own mind, there was no final decision because I had to meet certain conditions. If these conditions had not been met in the afternoon, I would not have been in Newfoundland the day after. I would have had to wait and perhaps would never have gone. I am not privileged to discuss what goes on in the cabinet, nor why I was not ready to proceed. That is part of cabinet confidentiality. Hon. members have been here long enough to realize that there is some constraint when one is in the cabinet. I just say that I stated the situation as it existed in my mind. I did not want to mislead anyone.

I was surprised at the hon. member yesterday, because when I heard about what he said, I said I found it a bit ridiculous. I said: "It is too bad I am not there because the members of the House will realize that there was nothing done to deliberately mislead the House at all."

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the House of Commons is recognized as an institution that respects its members. When the Leader of the Opposition asked me the question, I was not particularly aggressive. In any case, I thrive on aggressive questions and I enjoy Parliament. I have spent nineteen years in the House, and I am very fond of parliamentary debate. I certainly never run away from a debate. So if I had wanted to start a debate at three minutes to three—it takes time for the Leader of the Opposition to make up his mind to ask a question—at three to three I might have tried to engage in a little skirmish with the Leader of the Opposition. However, I merely said: The decision has not been finalized. That is clearly what was in my mind. I then continued consultations with my department and my colleagues, and at the end of the afternoon, I decided to go to Newfoundland, and the order in council was passed Wednesday morning.

I am not going to split hairs about the exact instant of legality and all that, but that is what happened. I had no intention of doing anything that would be in contempt of the House. Today, Madam Speaker, I could actually rise on two questions of privilege before this House, if I really wanted to make a nuisance of myself as some people do occasionally. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) accused me just now of having given the letter to the press before it reached Mr. Peckford. That is not true. I did not even have the damned letter. Excuse me, Madam Speaker, I withdraw that word. I did not have the letter. I could accuse the hon. member for St. John's West and like him, do nothing but talk, talk, talk, and I could do it but it is really not worth it. I did not have the letter.

Furthermore, the hon. member accused me of having refused to see Mr. Ottenheimer, which is totally ridiculous, since Mr. Ottenheimer himself cancelled the meeting. I did not have to see him, but I felt that although it was a difficult situation, it was my duty, on arriving in St. John's, to try to meet my colleague Mr. Ottenheimer in order to explain to him personally why we were proceeding in this way and during our meeting perhaps try to find a way to settle the problem. We have heard any number of speeches on certain issues, as the House will recall. I would rather not look back, but hon. members are aware that we have had incredible arguments about the Constitution in the House and with the Newfoundland government. And we managed to settle our differences. Perhaps this is going to help speed up the process of finding a solution. I hope so, but it does not mean that I wanted to lie to the House and break the rules of Parliament. It does not make sense. This is ridiculous. It is really childish. Today we have not heard a single question on the substance of what we have done.

• (1610)

[English]

A member of the opposition wanted to know why we had done it, if there was any reason to do that.

Mr. Clark: We cannot believe what you say.

Mr. Chrétien: Joe, come on!

An hon. Member: Come on again.

Mr. Chrétien: Joe, I said there was no final decision. The hon. member—

Mr. Clark: You did not say that. You did not say that. That is a lie.

Mr. Chrétien: Joe, I just say—Madam Speaker, it is quite clear that I have been very candid this afternoon with the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I have been candid. I said exactly what happened. They can laugh if they want to; I am not impressed at all. I just say that yesterday—on Tuesday—I did not mislead the House. I had no intention of doing that. I said what was in my mind and is still in my mind, just the plain truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I have some obligations to my colleagues. When they authorize you to do something and they say, "You do that when you meet certain conditions", in my mind, until the conditions are met, it is not authorized.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Chrétien: It is the basic principle of cabinet solidarity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —that you respect the decision of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: That is exactly what I have done. Madam Speaker, if I look at the question of legality, there are a lot of people on the other side who have been members of the Privy Council. You yourself, Madam Speaker, have been a member. Of course, at times, before the moment that there is a conditional decision made by the cabinet and an order in council, there is some change. The legal decision is made when the order in council is passed.

Mr. Clark: You did not say the "legal".

Mr. Chrétien: I could have just sat back on that today. The facts are there. Nobody can say that the order in council was not delivered, and signed too, signed by the Deputy Governor General of Canada before ten o'clock on Wednesday. So there was no decision until that time.

Mr. Clark: When was it signed by cabinet?

Mr. Chrétien: There are some decisions of the cabinet that come back, that do not turn into orders in council.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: When was it signed by cabinet?

Mr. Pinard: Conditional decisions.

Mr. Clark: When did the minister sign it?

Mr. Chrétien: Since when does cabinet sign decisions? It is recorded but not signed.

Mr. Clark: Orders in council are signed.

Mr. Chrétien: What is very disappointing is that after two days there is no question on the substance. They just want to make a big fuss about procedure.

Mr. Nielsen: About lying.

Mr. Chrétien: We have lost an hour and a half, an hour and fifteen minutes of the House's time again today on a question like that. I do not want to accuse the member for St. John's West of misleading the House. I could, but I understand that he made two mistakes within one day. It should be a lesson to him not to speak that much. I stated the truth, Madam Speaker, and I said that I had no intention of misleading the House. The decision was not final. The final decision was made on Tuesday night and the order in council was passed on Wednesday morning. I went to Newfoundland. I wanted to meet with Mr. Ottenheimer, but he decided to cancel the meeting. I was very disappointed. I hope that the decision is made, as that is important in substance, and that his decision will lead to an agreement. There was a lot of discussion on the Constitution and we got an agreement. So I hope this will help us to make a decision. As far as I am concerned, Madam Speaker, I say all this is a tempest in a teapot.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, I want to be very careful about the words I use today, and contrary to some other times I am probably going to be much more dependent upon a text than I usually am.

As you know, Madam Speaker, yesterday I and my party supported the member for St. John's West. We regret that yesterday we could not support the Speaker on a vote, but because we disagree with the Speaker on one instance—on one ruling—it does not follow automatically that we have no respect for the Speaker or that the Speaker has not done an excellent job over the past two very, very trying years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: We do believe, Madam Speaker, that the House was misled Tuesday afternoon when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) stood in his place and first tried to evade the question posed to him by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I will not go through the quotes on that, but it had to do with a unilateral Supreme Court reference regarding the Newfoundland offshore jurisdiction. Later in the same question period the Minister of Justice stated, as reported at page 17534 of Hansard—and this is not the entire quote but I think is the significant part:

> There has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

The timing of the justice minister's statement immediately followed a cabinet meeting in the morning. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on the other hand, yesterday, not on Tuesday but on Wednesday—and I think he said this to protect his minister—after first attempting to fudge the question again, had the following to say, and I quote Hansard at page 17592:

> —the decision became effective when the order in council was signed some time this morning—

Meaning Wednesday morning.

I am not going to go through the elaborate sequence of what went on here, as expressed by the hon. member for St John's West in the Privy Council office, or in the minister's office in Newfoundland regarding the Supreme Court reference. It has been adequately covered and I have no need to repeat that again. But later in the same question period, again in an answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister said this, and I quote from Hansard at page 17592:

> —the cabinet met yesterday, yesterday morning. It took what in effect was a conditional decision, and that decision became effective this morning.

The decision was taken; therefore there was no question about whether there was a decision there, but it was a decision that was conditional. Note the adjective. But it became effective only "this morning". Here I think we have the crux of the question whether or not we have a case of privilege. The Minister of Justice is on record as saying that there was no decision whatsoever, and I supported that with a quote; no decision had been arrived at. He did not use any qualifying word with "decision". We have a contradictory one by the Prime Minister the next day, saying that a conditional decision was taken.

Surely, Madam Speaker, the essential question here is not whether a decision is conditional or not. If it is a decision, it is a decision. A decision is a decision regardless of what modifiers you put in front of the word, and what other legalistic manoeuvring you might use to explain what happened.

All the Minister of Justice needed to do on Tuesday to avoid the charge that has been levelled at him, the charge that is under dispute at the moment, was to state on Tuesday what the Prime Minister said on Wednesday, that a conditional decision was reached—he did not have to say what the decision was—instead of saying there had been no decision.

Thus, I feel that the members of this House and the people of Canada were misled, and I do not put an adverb in front of "misled" because I follow Your Honour's ruling on that matter earlier.

There is no doubt that the Hibernia question is important and vital to our economy and to our energy self-sufficiency, especially since the tar sands megaprojects have collapsed around the head of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The jurisdiction questions need to be settled quickly; there is no question about that, and that may have caused a frantic deathbed reference to the Supreme Court of Canada by the government, I do not know. The government does not confide in me very often, in spite of what my hon. friends to my right might think. However, that is not the question either. That is not the question we are dealing with here. The point is that in this place we can only operate on trust and openness. Members of Parliament must never doubt and must never be given cause to doubt the veracity of a minister of the Crown. We voted to support the member for St. John's West, and we contintue to do so because I and my party are sick of contempt for this Parliament by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Day after day in this House we are treated to evasive answers or non-answers to legitimate questions put to ministers.

Mr. Cullen: You should hear the questions.

Mr. Rose: Legitimate questions are put to ministers of the Crown by the opposition.

Mr. Cullen: Pointless.

Mr. Rose: We have an inability to cross-examine important ministers of the Crown because they are not in this House. They are spirited away to the Senate, and that also frustrates us. Ministers talk out the clock in committees. That is another of their practices which we find extremely irritating. Their answers are designed to confuse, obfuscate or generally twist or reshape questions, and that is unacceptable. That is what I think has led to the most hostile, rancorous and inefficient Parliament we have had certainly in my memory, which goes back to 1968.

I am almost ready to conclude, Madam Speaker. We sympathize with your position and understand that unless the Minister of Justice admits that his reply was designed intentionally or deliberately to mislead, Your Honour will have some difficulty proving it. Nevertheless, I request that the Speaker's office review the facts as I have presented them, and once that is done, I am convinced a ruling fair to all parties will result.

We agree with the intent of the motion put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West and, if it is found that there is a prima facie case with respect to this issue, we will support a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I will be brief. Every Member of Parliament who wishes to rise in this House on issues such as this must proceed carefully because this issue is important and critical. That being the case, a Member of Parliament has to search his mind carefully in preparing his intervention for a debate such as this.

As I understand it, the matter before the House is not the conduct of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). The matter before the House is the answers of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), nothing less and nothing more, and whether those answers conformed with the truth.

The Minister of Justice made a number of arguments designed to obfuscate. He raised questions about the presentation of the hon. member for St. John's West. That is not the issue. The issue is whether the answers the minister gave in the House on Tuesday of this week were the truth. In his answer recorded at page 17533 of Hansard, at no time did the minister put any conditions before the word "decision". He did not use the words "a final decision". That did not enter Hansard. He did not use the words "a legal decision." That did not enter Hansard. He did not use the words "a conditional decision". Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tried to put that image on the decision referred to last Tuesday, but last Tuesday the minister was quite clear. He said "no decision", and that is the issue. Was there a decision or was there not a decision?

I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). He said that in order to protect the privileges of members of this House the truth must prevail in this place. That matter goes beyond whether the hon. member for St. John's West or, for that matter, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) receive truthful answers to whether, by extension through this House, the people of Canada receive truthful answers as well. That is extremely important for our country at this time.

I am not talking about political or regional differences. When members of this House and ministers of the Crown rise and speak in this place, they must be believed and what they say must be the truth. That is a very serious matter as we look at our country at this moment. It is too easy to say that the answer given was in tune with the political times or that the end justifies the means—

Mr. Pinard: Be serious.

Mr. Epp: —or that situational ethics are the order of the day. The issue is whether the words of the minister were the truth.

The situation the Chair now faces is the question of a decision. If it was not a decision, as the minister likes to put forward—it was not a decision until the order in council was signed. By extension, do we then use the same argument in the legislative process that the cabinet has made no decision until a bill has been proclaimed?

Mr. Pinard: Ridiculous.

Mr. Epp: If that is so, what are we debating when the government brings forward a bill which, as I understand it, is a motion based on a cabinet decision? At what stage does it become a decision? Up to that time what is it, only an opinion?

The minister had a choice other than the one suggested by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody correctly stated that the minister could have said it was a conditional decision, that it was not finalized or whatever, but no conditions were placed before the word "decision". The minister could have chosen another action; he could simply have said he would not answer the question or that he had no answer.

Mr. Nielsen: Or he could have apologized.

Mr. Epp: That is right. He has the right in this House simply to give no answer, but he did not choose to take that route. The route he chose was to say there had been no decision. Now he lives with it and this House has to live with it.

• (1630)

I do not want to burden you any further by getting into what I feel is another natural point in this argument, Madam Speaker, and that is the federal-provincial argument and what it means in terms of the extension of truth from this place to the partners of the federation. That is another issue and I know you have narrowed this to the issue that I believe I defined; it is not a matter of the conduct of the hon. member for St. John's West but the word of the Minister of Justice. I believe the chronology has been put forward very well by the hon. member for St. John's West and it has been confirmed by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody.

As an individual member, as I see it the question is on the word "decision" without qualifiers, without conditions, and what members of the House would naturally draw from the use of that word by a minister. When the minister used the words "no decision" and later found out that a decision had been made, I can come to no other conclusion but that, in the chronology of the use of the minister's words, a decision had been made and that it had been made prior to his rising in the House to deny it.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I should like to submit to you very strongly that we do not have before us what amounts to a prima facie case for a question of privilege. What has been suggested to you yesterday and today is that the words used by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) amounted to deliberately misleading the House. I think the key word is the word "deliberately".

What we have to do is look at how the phrase "deliberately misleading the House" entered parliamentary precedents. It will be found at page 142 of Erskine May in reference to the well known Profumo case in England in 1963 in the following statement:

> The House may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.
> In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

In order to come to the conclusion that the House has been deliberately misled, that has to be established as a fact. In the Profumo case it was quite clearly established as a fact when the former minister stood up in the House—and it was almost unprecedented in parliamentary history—and said that he had lied to the House. Is that the case we have today? No, we have the exact opposite. We have the Minister of Justice standing up in the House just a few minutes ago and saying that he did not intend to mislead the House; he did not mean to mislead the House. He said it exhaustively, he said it repeatedly, he said it clearly, and he could not have been more specific about it.

Let us see what Bourinot has to say about the matter. Bourinot is not often referred to these days but at page 351 of the fourth edition there appears the following statement:

> A member's words, in explanation or relating to the meaning of his speech or in a statement of fact as to his own position or intention, are to be taken as true and not afterwards in debate to be called in question. The words which he states himself to have used, are to be considered as the words actually spoken; and the sense in which he says they were uttered, as the sense in which they are to be taken in debate. If a member disavows the use of words attributed to him, and objected to, the matter must end.
> It has frequently been formally ruled by speakers in the Canadian Commons that a statement by an honourable member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted but it is not unparliamentary to temperately criticise statements made by a member as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible.

What are we dealing with here? Are we dealing with someone who was elected to this House last week in a by-election? No. We are dealing with a man who has given 19 years of his life to this House. We all know this man. Hon. members opposite should be fair; they know this man and what the House of Commons means to him, what Canada means to him. No one fought more valiantly for Canada in the referendum in Quebec than the minister. He stood in this House today and said that he did not mean to mislead the House, but hon. members opposite doubt him. I accept his word and anybody in this House with guts and integrity will accept his word.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Once he has clarified the situation, that is the end of it. We have a tradition in this House that we accept the word of an hon. member, and if there is anyone in this House whose word I am glad to accept, it is that of the Minister of Justice. He has proven himself as a man of integrity in over 20 years in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Today we have a dispute about the facts. I suppose you might say that. We all know the reference on page 12 of Beauchesne that says that that certainly is not a question of privilege. There may be some confusion about when a decision is made. Is a decision made when a consensus is reached in cabinet? Is it when four ministers, or whatever number, sign it? Is it made when the Deputy Governor General signs the order in council?

Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I do not think it is particularly pertinent when the decision was made. That is not the issue; the issue is whether the minister intentionally and deliberately misled the House. He has given us his word that he did not.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, he did.

Mr. Smith: That is the end of it. Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I am disappointed, when this man of integrity has given his word that he did not mislead the House, that we even have any continuation of this debate.

There certainly is not a prima facie case of privilege here and the sooner this question is disposed of the better. Then we can start treating our colleague with the honour and dignity that he deserves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), who just took his seat, put his finger right on the problem: We have to be able to rely on ministers giving truthful and factual answers in this House. That is what we are talking about.

It is interesting that the hon. parliamentary secretary cited the Profumo case. It might be well for us to remember that Mr. Profumo, who was minister of war in the British government, resigned from the House not because his actions were a threat to national security, not because he was found to be consorting with a prostitute, but because he was found to be lying to the House.

Mr. Pinard: And he admitted it.

Mr. McGrath: That is a very serious matter.

Mr. Clark: He was honest.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, my privileges are affected by the question put before the House by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). If I cannot be satisfied that I can rely on receiving honest and factual answers to the questions that I raise in this House, then I cannot function as a member of this House, and I cannot effectively serve my country, my province or my constituency. It is as simple as that.

I listened to the Minister of Justice, for whom I have great respect. From his seat he says "Come on!" and tends to cast some doubt upon that. The fact of the matter is, however, that the record shows, in my view, that there is a prima facie case to be made that the minister deliberately misled the House.

That is all you have to decide, Madam Speaker. You do not have to decide if the minister deliberately misled the House; that is for the House to decide. You merely have to decide that there is a prima facie case that the minister deliberately misled the House.

When is a decision not a decision? On May 18, the Minister of Justice stood in the House and said:

> Madam Speaker, I said that there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

• (1640)

It was not "no conditional decision"; it was "no decision". That was in reply to a very simple and straightforward question put to him by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

The following day in the House the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, and I quote from page 17592 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, the cabinet met yesterday, yesterday morning. It took what in effect was a conditional decision, and that decision became effective this morning.

We are not concerned about when the decision became effective; what is at issue here is when the decision was made. And we have it on the authority of the Prime Minister that the decision was made on the morning of the day that the Minister of Justice stood in his place in the House and told the House that no decision had been made. That is the whole question we have before us here today.

The question of the implementation of the decision is irrelevant. The question of the decision being conditional is irrelevant. Conditional on what? Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the decision had been made. The implementation was conditional on the Minister of Justice getting on an airplane and going to St. John's and announcing it at a press conference. That was the process of implementation, but that is not our concern. Our concern here is that the decision had been made on the day the Minister of Justice stood in his place in this House and said that no decision had been made.

I believe, Madam Speaker, and I submit to you with great respect, that this is a very important question. I do not want to talk about the substance of the question in terms of the impact it will have on federal-provincial relations, on the future of my province or the future of the development of the important Hibernia field, important though that may be. I am concerned with the effect it is going to have on how I can continue to function as a member of this House if I cannot rely on ministers to give honest, factual answers to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, that is what is at issue here. The record shows the minister's answer in this House to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition at page 17534 of Hansard on May 18. There is the subsequent action of the Minister of Justice in preparing the documents, ordering an aircraft, going to St. John's, Newfoundland, and then arranging a press conference and announcing the decision.

Then, Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister himself, at page 17592 of Hansard on May 19, talks about a decision having been made the previous morning. He calls it "a conditional decision", but the fact is that the decision had been made by cabinet. Whether or not it had been signed as an order in council by the Governor General in Council, whether or not other conditions had been met such as placing certain documents before the Supreme Court of Canada, whether or not there was a meeting with the defeated leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland, whether or not the press conference in Newfoundland had taken place, all that is irrelevant because that is the process of implementation. What is relevant is the fact that the decision was made on the morning of the day that the Minister of Justice stood in his place in this House and staked his reputation on saying to this House that in fact no decision had been made.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I submit to you that there is a prima facie case that the minister has deliberately misled the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall try to be very brief. It would be difficult to add much to what has already been said by my parliamentary secretary, and I shall try not to waste the time of the House by repeating what he has said so well. I must point out that the references he indicated are very apt, and that it is a long-established practice in this House that when an hon. member, who is also a minister of the Crown, gives explanations and above all gives his word that he did not intend to deliberately mislead the House, that hon. members should take him at his word and that should be the end of it. I submit that the insistence of the members opposite on trying to continue the debate is offensive and insulting, when the Minister of Justice of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) has given his word that he did not wish to deliberately mislead the House in answering a question. Therefore, the references brought to your attention by my parliamentary secretary should be sufficient to settle the issue once and for all.

I shall, if I may, add the following. The minister's reply, which is being used to accuse the Minister of Justice, should be taken in context. In the light of the explanations given by the minister today, this should be sufficient to settle the issue, because he said that what was in his mind when he said that no decision had been made at that time, was that no final decision had been made. He did not use the word "final" but that is what he intended to say and what he meant, in view of the fact of parliamentary procedure and law that a cabinet decision which requires an order in council is not final until the order in council is signed by the Governor General or his deputy.

And in what context did he give his answer, since the members opposite are putting so fine a point on the words used by the Minister of Justice? Anyone who reads the question put by the Leader of the Official Opposition and what follows will realize that, in fact, there was nothing, considering both the question and the answer, there was nothing false in what was indicated by the Minister of Justice. The question was, and I quote from page 17534 of Hansard, May 18, 1982:

> Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada considering a direct unilateral reference of the offshore question to the Supreme Court of Canada? It is a simple question. Yes or no?

The Leader of the Opposition asked whether we wanted to go before the Supreme Court of Canada. The Minister of Justice said, and I quote:

> Madam Speaker, I said that there has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

"No decision made . . . at this time on that question" means that in fact, nothing has been decided as yet, and any decision, if there is one, has to be conditional, as explained the next day by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). However, the words of the Minister of Justice should be sufficient to settle the issue, since he himself said:

> There has been no decision made by the government at this time on that question.

This means that there was nothing final. That is clear. To go on with the quote:

> The question that the right hon. member is asking me today is a very surprising one. He used to tell us that the best thing to do in difficult circumstances was go to the Supreme Court.

And Madam Speaker, what really spoiled the opposition's so-called case—the icing on the cake, as it were—is that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said just two words too many after the reply given by the Minister of Justice. He said, and I quote:

> Are you?

In French this reads, and I quote:

> Allez-vous le faire?

Does this indicate some concern on the part of the Progressive Conservative House Leader? It means that he believed the Minister of Justice when the latter said nothing final had been decided as yet, since the hon. member for Yukon felt the need to come back and ask the Minister of Justice: But are you going to do it? And he did so, because he understood that no final decision had been made. Madam Speaker, if we look at the English text and read the comment reported in Hansard on page 17534, the Minister of Justice said at the end of his reply, and I quote:

[English]

> He used to tell us that the best thing to do in difficult circumstances was to go to the Supreme Court.
> Mr. Nielsen: Are you?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: In the circumstances, it seems obvious that the hon. member for Yukon, in the light of the answer given by the Minister of Justice, did, in fact, understand that the Minister of Justice had just said nothing final had been decided as yet, and that should be sufficient to set aside all their complaints and grievances concerning the intentions of the Minister of Justice or the meaning of the words he spoke in answer to the question put to him in this particular context.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, considering the facts and on the face of the answer provided by the Minister of Justice, it would seem that the minister has not said anything that conflicts with reality. And if his words were ambiguous or incomplete or confusing, if there was any lack of precision, he has today, as a minister and a member of this House, given his word that he did not intend to mislead the House, and he has given explanations for his answer. It seems to me that on the basis of parliamentary practice, this is sufficient to settle the matter once and for all. His words must be accepted, and his answer interpreted in the light of the additional explanations given today, which I feel were not even necessary, but which he thought it was his duty to give. In the circumstances, I must say once more that I find it unconscionable and offensive that opposition members with the status of those who have risen in the House up to now, should wish to continue to doubt the word and undermine the credibility of the Minister of Justice of Canada and to misuse our parliamentary institutions, in that they refuse to take into account a simple aspect of parliamentary practice according to which, when a member gives his word in the House, it is to be accepted as such and casting doubts as to the reputation and the intentions of the hon. member in question must cease.

Therefore, for all these reasons, Madam Speaker, including the references produced so eloquently by my parliamentary secretary and which are extremely apt and deal with the matter, and also the facts themselves and the explanations provided by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) with respect to his reply, and considering the redundant comments of the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) following the reply given by the Minister of Justice, and finally, considering the Minister of Justice for Canada gave his word, I suggest, with due respect, that the matter should be settled immediately, and that there is absolutely no prima facie case for a question of privilege and that we should proceed with consideration of the motion proposed by the New Democratic Party.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I want to be brief and deal precisely with the issue before us. What I think both the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and his parliamentary secretary have asked you to do is unacceptable in this House. They have asked you to make a ruling as to whether or not you believe the minister has been telling the truth. I do not think that is your role and function, Madam Speaker. I do not think the minister can stand up now in answer to a question of privilege raised by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West, and give reasons and excuses why he said what he said.

If he really intended to persuade us in this House that the statement was actual fact, he would have taken the first opportunity and instructed the House at three o'clock today that he would be making a statement of clarification. He chose not to do that. He chose not to take the initiative in this matter, and only in response to the case put forward by my colleague from St. John's West did he then try to explain exactly what he did mean by his answer.

Mr. Pinard: He had no choice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The question here is not whether you or I or the member for St. John's West was questioning the word and the truth of what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) said. It is not any of us who do that. Rather it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has put into question the veracity of what the Minister of Justice said on Tuesday last. It is nothing that the member for St. John's West has said. The Prime Minister said that a decision was taken with respect to the whole issue in cabinet prior to the minister coming into the House. For a minister now to stand up and insert a word such as "final", or for the Prime Minister to try to explain it by using a word such as "conditional", has absolutely no relevance to the question here at all.

The Prime Minister by his words has indicated that what the Minister of Justice said was untrue. That is basically what you have to consider, Madam Speaker, in determining whether or not there is a prima facie case. It is not for you to consider whether or not the Minister of Justice said that he did not mean that or that he did not mean to deliberately mislead the House.

You have to determine in your responsibility whether or not the statement made by the Minister of Justice on a very important issue, a very complex issue, the matter of the control of the offshore resources, of which you can take judicial notice, was in fact a correct statement made by the Minister of Justice, of whether there is a reasonable basis to conclude that was a false answer, that there was knowledge on the part of the minister that a decision had been made by cabinet.

I ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider the length of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. The reference contains three pages and a map of the Hibernia area. This is a complicated and detailed reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with supporting documentation, which is not a matter on which a decision is made overnight or conditionally.

The minister will have the opportunity, if we have the matter referred to the committee, to explain precisely what did transpire, what actions took place and at what time meetings took place. He will have the opportunity to explain himself. But that is not our role in the House today. Our role is purely and simply to determine whether or not the Prime Minister was right in saying that the Minister of Justice was not telling the truth when he said in answering a question in the House that no decision had been made.

The Minister of Justice says that this is all a procedural matter. I, for one, do not accept the fact that whether a statement made in this House is true or not is exclusively a procedural matter. Quite the contrary. I think it is fundamental that we in this House can believe statements by members on all sides of the House. Certainly the Minister of Justice has a greater and an exceptional responsibility in this House with respect to the matter of truth, whether it is a question of misleading us and whether the misleading information is deliberate or not.

I ask you to look at this question as a fair and reasonable person on the basis of the record alone, quite apart from any explanations about aircraft, times of consultation and conditions that were to be discussed, conditions which the Minister of Justice did not specify, although he had an opportunity to do so. We gave him a wide range. All of those things can come out in committee. If you look at the record, Madam Speaker, the minister has ex post facto said to us in this House that he did not intend to mislead us. But that is the decision for another forum, another committee.

For the minister to say in his statement that no decision had been made is tantamount to us in the House of Commons saying that if we pass a particular bill which is then passed by the Senate, somehow we have not made a decision in this House until Royal Assent takes place. That is what the Minister of Justice is asking us to believe. That should not be believed by any reasonable person.

I simply say in my humble submission to you, Madam Speaker, that a reasonable prima facie case has been established to have the committee consider exactly what has transpired and, to return with a recommendation to this House as to whether the statement was true or not. The only thing you have before you on which to make that determination is the statement made by the Minister of Justice on Tuesday last and the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday. I submit there is a prima facie case here in which a wrong and untruthful answer was given to the House of Commons, and it is for the committee to determine what the circumstances were.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, my contribution will be brief and I hope it will be important. It may surprise even my Liberal friends when I say that I share the same sentiments in what has been said by virtually everyone who has spoken.

Perhaps what impressed me the most was the contribution made by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) who, I think, reminded us that there are really two sets of rules which govern the effectiveness and reflect on the integrity of the House of Commons. First are the written rules. We have many experts, whether advocates of Erskine May, Beauchesne or whatever. As one who has been in this House a long time, what are equally important to the written rules are the unwritten rules of tradition and procedure. They are the rather mysterious chemicals that make this place operate. I suppose those of us who have been in the House for many years appreciate that tradition and procedure are even more important than the written rules. I often listen to members in this House who are lawyers by profession who interpret rules, who define words and who quote one expert, only to have everything they say contradicted. The rules are there and it is up to members of the House to interpret them. I am speaking now about written rules.

Like many members here, I have sat in the opposition, I have sat in the House as a government member and as a member of cabinet. I have the dubious distinction of sitting here for two years listening to the question period and noting its evolution. I come to the acrimony which the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody thinks is creeping into the question period. I worry about that. In recent years questions in the question period seem to be preceded by rather long preambles, semi-speeches, if you want, perhaps because of television. Also answers tend at times to be a little vague, a little less forthcoming and a little less explanatory than we would perhaps like them to be. That is not really new, but the unwritten rule which keeps this place going is important to me—the right of an hon. member to stand in his place and say: "What I am telling you is the truth". I am surprised that that prerogative is even questioned.

I can remember many years ago when I was a minister that one of my favourite members, Mr. Stanfield, was sitting opposite and I was in the embarrassing situation of a document having been leaked to the Toronto Star. Mr. Stanfield, as House leader of the day, and Mr. Baldwin immediately jumped up to criticize and complain that the document had been leaked before it had been released in the House—the usual thing. I simply rose and said to Mr. Stanfield, "You will have to accept the tradition and the custom that I, as an honourable gentleman, am telling you that I did not leak the document; I had no knowledge of the document being leaked". It was significant that tradition in those days was so strong that it put an end to the very debate and an end to the whole question. If I recall, Mr. Stanfield withdrew the motion to send the whole issue to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I, too, was conscious of my responsibilities as a minister not to hide specifically behind the tradition, but to be as forthright, open and expansive as possible in my answer; otherwise tradition would be abused and disappear. This is one of the privileges of hon. members. We are talking about privileges which have accumulated over hundreds of years of parliamentary practice, privileges which we want to see retained. One privilege we have as members is that when we rise in our places to make statements, the statements are accepted as the truth if we insist that they are.

The significant thing which brought me to my feet was that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), who in my mind is one of the most professional, honest and forthright members of the House, rose to his feet, understanding the full implications of his words, and categorically said: "I did not intend to mislead the House". To question that bothers me as an individual member worried about my privileges. We should think about it for a moment, particularly the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who has just left the chamber. The hon. member quoted Shakespeare, that Brutus was an honourable man. Either he believes that the minister's word is not to be challenged or he challenges it.

Personally, I could see the House disintegrate if some of these unwritten rules are flaunted, taken advantage of by the minister, ignored by the member, by innuendo or what have you. I do not think the record of the Minister of Justice warrants the type of doubt which has been expressed. It seems to me that the moment the minister said: "My word as an honourable gentleman is that I did not deliberately mislead the House", that should have ended the matter. The key word is "deliberate". It is not whether a conclusion or a decision is final or qualified or whether a cabinet decision is a cabinet decision.

I can remember as a new member of cabinet being very pleased because a decision of cabinet—or at least I thought it was a cabinet decision—gave me certain latitude in a collective agreement to give a particular group a COLA clause. I spent my day quite excitedly, preparing my negotiations based on that, only to find when I read the fine print that there were important qualifications to the decision.

Perhaps Parliament wants to address itself—and perhaps it should—as to when a decision is not a decision. Is a decision a decision when it is qualified? Is a decision not a decision until it is described by the minister as the final decision? It seems to me that all of these matters are important, but not nearly as important as the parliamentary tradition that when a member rises in the House of Commons and says "I am telling the truth", it is the word of an honourable gentleman and it should not be questioned in the House. The moment a member or a minister rises in his place and says that, the inference is clear that he will pay the price when and if it is ever determined that he has lied. There are historical precedents in other Houses for that. If hon. members opposite are willing to rise in their places to say that he lied, not just deliberately misled the House, when the minister stood in the House today and said that he had no intention of misleading the House, then they are entering into a very dangerous area.

Perhaps Madam Speaker will want to take into consideration when a decision is not a decision, but that is not the issue. The issue is whether the Minister of Justice in his answer yesterday deliberately misled the House. In his defence he said that he did not, and based upon precedent, that is the word of an hon. member of the House. No one in the House can tell me that the Minister of Justice is not an honourable gentleman, that his 20 years in the House do not comprise a mignificent record. It grieves me that anyone in the House would want to leave the impression, by inference, that the hon. minister is not so honourable and is prepared to lie. I cannot bring myself to believe that, but it is really what Madam Speaker must decide over the course of events—whether the minister deliberately lied when he said that he had no intention of misleading the House, either deliberately or unintentionally.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since you have been in the chair since two o'clock and you have to occupy it on a permanent basis, perhaps there would be all-party consent to have a ten minute break.

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member very much, but I think I can continue.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I listened with some considerable interest to the comments of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), falling as they did upon the general line of argument established by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader and the government House leader himself. In terms of their submission, it really amounts to this; Once a minister of the Crown has risen in his place and said, "I did not intentionally mislead the House", that is the end of the issue and Madam Speaker's function has ended. I hardly think that that is the approach which should be taken, having regard to some inconsistencies to which I will draw Your Honour's attention. However, let me just deal with some of the remarks which have been made in terms of long service.

We are dealing not only with a member of government and a minister of the Crown, but with the Attorney General of Canada, the chief legal officer of the country. The hon. member for Lincoln said that in the event the House cannot rely upon some of the unwritten rules, it will disintegrate. I submit that it will disintegrate if we cannot, as members of the House, come to rely upon the truth of statements made here. If we as members are persistent in this issue, it is because the arguments presented and the evidence given heretofore at least arouse a suspicion in our minds. The timing is extremely close, but if it were timing alone, I am sure Your Honour's decision as to whether there is a prima facie case of the minister intentionally misleading the House and accordingly depriving all hon. members of their rights and privileges would be easily reached. However, I direct your attention to a quotation which has already been made, a quotation from Hansard of yesterday, as reported at page 17592, in the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), wherein he said:

> Madam Speaker, the cabinet met yesterday, yesterday morning.

I am sure Madam Speaker will recall the statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) today. In response to questions of members on this side of the House concerning when the cabinet met, the Minister of Justice said: "The cabinet was meeting when I left the room on Tuesday and it met until seven o'clock in the evening". There is a clear contradiction in the two statements. Is the Prime Minister telling us the truth and, in fact, did the cabinet meet on Tuesday morning as it normally does; or are we to believe the Attorney General when he tell us that the cabinet was meeting when he left the House after question period on Tuesday and continued to sit until seven o'clock? There alone, without any explanation, are sufficient grounds, in my submission, for finding that there is a prima facie case that you might then conclude represented an intentional misleading of the House by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General which should result in the reference of the entire question for debate and the gathering of sufficient evidence to substantiate the claim made by the Attorney General when he stands in his place and says on his own: "Believe me when I tell you that I did not intentionally mislead the House". If that is all that is required, we should not have wasted this time. This entire matter should have been concluded with that statement.

I submit that that kind of proposition is ludicrous and makes light of the entire process. There is sufficient evidence before you now which should lead you to the conclusion that there is at least a prima facie case to be referred for further evidence. That other evidence might include such issues as what were the alleged conditions attached to the decision that had already been made but was not final to which the Attorney General referred on three occasions when he spoke this afternoon. He gave us no indication what they were. I submit that that issue would not have been pertinent had it not been for the clear contradiction in evidence which is gained from an examination of the Prime Minister's response to this issue yesterday and the contradictory statements, which have been made by the Attorney General today.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, the charge which has been levelled by the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is one of the most serious charges which can be laid against a member of the House, that of deliberately misleading the House. Many members, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) and the government House leader, have gone through the legal precedents which prevail and have been honoured for many years.

I would merely like to restrict my comments to the facts as they exist. The precise question asked of the minister in the House on Tuesday afternoon was; "Is the federal government considering unilateral action?" The Minister's response was that if the government does make a decision to that effect, it will be announced when it is made. "No decision has been made at this time."

In his role as the Attorney General of Canada, it would naturally be his obligation and responsibility to pursue before our courts the interests of the Government of Canada on behalf of all Canadians.

Neither I, nor any member of the House, to my understanding, is privy to what goes on in cabinet because that is not how our system operates. Decisions could not be made under the confusion which would exist if we had to release verbatim transcripts of every cabinet meeting. Therefore, let us hypothesize that for many months the issue of offshore ownership has been a very important part of our National Energy Program and that it has been before cabinet and discussed there. Let us assume that many options have been canvassed and that one of those options, as I am sure all intelligent people will realize, has been the question of having the Supreme Court of Canada determine once and for all who owns those offshore resources. Let us hypothesize that cabinet at one point would have said to the minister responsible that it is his responsibility should he make the decision to pursue that action; it would lie in his hands and within his capability. Therefore, the answer to the question when the decision was made to take that course of action is that it would have been made at the precise time that the Attorney General of Canada, acting on behalf of Canadians, decided that he was prepared to act on that particular matter.

He has told us in the House today that he did not make up his mind on that precise matter until about 7 p.m. on Tuesday evening. I think the objective facts will probably support that statement. Had he made up his mind at an earlier time it probably would have been prudent for him to organize his transportation to Newfoundland prior to having made that decision.

No, the facts as brought out indicate that the decision to which we are referring—the decision regarding which the question was asked—was made on the evening of Tuesday, May 18, after question period. Therefore, I fail to see how on the narrow question before the House, that of the minister having misled the House, we can have any doubt.

As to the question of deliberately misleading the House, the minister indicated that he has not ever intended to mislead the House. Therefore, I submit two points: first, on the facts there is not even a prima facie case that he misled the House; second, there can be no doubt that he could not have done that deliberately.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Madam Speaker: Order. In accordance with Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Search and Rescue—(a) Tax exemption sought for West Coast helicopter (b) Position of minister; the hon. member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd)—Airports—Transportation between Dorval and Mirabel—Inquiry respecting date of minister's announcement; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canadian Pacific Railway—(a) Announcement of lay-offs (b) Request that employees be retained in employment.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY MR. CHRÉTIEN

The House resumed the question of privilege of Mr. Crosbie.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I will try to be brief in my intervention. I hope that I can assure the Chair and other hon. members that my intervention will be the last one from the members of my party in this discussion in the hope that we might be able to proceed with the allotted day by 5.30 p.m.

I might say at the outset that because of the serious nature of the question which the Chair has to decide, I submit most strenuously that when you have heard all the representations that you intend to hear in your discretion, you take the matter under serious and careful advisement.

I would like to lay the groundwork for what I have to say by once again emphasizing the statements that were made last May 18, by the Minister of Justice. I read from page 17533 of Hansard. While great emphasis has been placed on the phraseology, and I quote, "No decision has been made at this time", not so much emphasis has been placed on an earlier phrase which appears in the same sentence of that answer by the minister. The whole answer is:

> Madam Speaker, if the government does make a decision to that effect, this will be announced as soon as the decision has been made.

The clear inference there is that there has been no decision made, that when the decision is made it will be announced as soon as it has been made. I leave it to the Chair to determine whether the announcement was made as soon as the decision was made, whenever the Chair might find that to have occurred.

• (1720)

But by far the stronger wording of the minister's answer is that last sentence: "No decision has been made at this time". The minister did not say that no final decision had been made at that time. He did not say that no ultimate decision had been made at that time. He did not say that no conditional decision had been made at that time. He did not say that there had been any provisional decision made at that time. He did not say that there was no absolute decision made at that time. He did not say that there was no conclusive decision made at that time, or unalterable decision, or definitive decision, or complete decision, or last decision.

Mr. Nowlan: Or ironclad decision.

Mr. Nielsen: Or ironclad decision, as I hear my colleague remind me. There was no qualification whatsoever on the words that the minister used, a minister who is very skilled in the use of words, he being of a profession which earns its living from the use of words, and he being the Minister of Justice in this House. Also, Madam Speaker, I might remind you that he had the experience before which he is once again going through. This is not the first occasion on which this minister has been involved in circumstances of this kind. Indeed, he was the subject of the precedent to which I referred the Chair when a question of privilege on the same subject matter was raised by the then hon. member for Durham-Northumberland.

Mr. Peterson: Smear, smear.

Mr. Chrétien: What was the decision?

Mr. Smith: What was the outcome of that?

Mr. Nielsen: Well, the minister can read the decision; I have given him the quotation.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I would like the decision of the House and the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I refer the House again to page 3294 of Hansard, to the decision on February 28, 1978—

Mr. Peterson: The second time you have tried to smear him.

Mr. Nielsen: —wherein Mr. Speaker Jerome said, in the right-hand column:

> The last area of guidance which the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham sought related to my own ruling of April 19, 1977, in which I indicated that—

I underscore the following words:

> —in order to found a question of privilege, the allegation would have to be not simply that the House had been misled, but had been deliberately misled.

It does not say anything about a motion there, Madam Speaker. Mr. Speaker Jerome said "in order to found a question of privilege". That is what we are doing right now. He stated:

> —in order to found a question of privilege, the allegation would have to be not simply that the House had been misled, but had been deliberately misled.

I took the trouble to look up the previous ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome on April 19, 1977, which is to be found on page 4766 of Hansard for that date, in the right-hand column, the second paragraph from the end, wherein he stated:

> If it is to be pursued by way of a question of privilege, I wish to stress again that in order to qualify as a question of privilege the Chair would have to find that not only had there been actions by the minister to mislead hon. members, but that those actions were calculated and deliberate by the minister for that purpose.

What evidence is there before Your Honour in order to come to that conclusion? There is the evidence of the words used by the minister and the clear evidence, in my submission, that a decision had in fact been made at the time by the government, and the government is the cabinet. To quote the words accurately, "a decision by the government" had been made at the time that the minister used those words in the House of Commons.

It has been asserted here today by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) and others that the matter has been completely disposed of because the minister rose and said that he did not intend to mislead the House. Those who favour that argument suggest that that disposes of Your Honour's obligation—

Mr. Smith: That is what "deliberate" means.

Mr. Nielsen: —and that Your Honour then has no alternative but to find that there is no longer a prima facie case of privilege in view of the statement of the minister that he did not intend to mislead and in view of what the parliamentary secretary called "explanations given by the minister", as he put it in a second point.

In my respectful submission, that does not dispose of the obligation of the Chair. In my submission, the sole obligation of the Chair is to determine whether or not there exists a prima facie case of privilege. To adopt the point of view of the hon. member for Lincoln and of the parliamentary secretary would mean that we would be accepting a practice wherein Your Honour would be making a decision which is under the sole jurisdiction of this House to make. Because if you find that there is a question of privilege, then, of course, the House would vote on the substantive motion. Naturally, that would carry in the government's favour and would dispose of the matter. However, it would not dispose, in my respectful submission, of the obligation of the Chair to take that intervening step and to deal with the question as to whether or not, on the basis of what you have heard, there exists a prima facie case of privilege.

What Your Honour has heard is that the government, in fact, made a decision before the minister made those statements in the House. I respectfully submit that nothing could be clearer on the face of the record itself. I therefore suggest that the evidence is quite compelling that there does exist that prima facie case.

All the minister had to say last Tuesday was, "Yes, the government has made a decision on that matter, but it has not been finalized. The Governor General or his aide must sign it in order to perfect the decision." He did not say that. The Prime Minister tried to say it the following day, but that was a little too late.

The cure is not for the Chair to duck its obligation, as suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). Indeed, if your reason and logic tell you, Madam Speaker, that a decision is not a decision until the Governor General signs it, you would have to accept the proposition that no decision was made with respect to the patriation of the Constitution until Her Majesty signed it on that day last month, that it was not a decision until she signed it. That is where the kind of logic of the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Lincoln takes one. Surely we cannot adopt that kind of Alice in Wonderland reasoning.

Mr. Chrétien: You are missing the point.

Mr. Peterson: It was when Mr. Chrétien decided.

Mr. Chrétien: I am the Attorney General. I made the decision.

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to make one final point. If Your Honour finds that there is no prima facie case of privilege and, subsequently, no motion to put to the House, where are we left on this side? Every single day in question period we hear the type of question as was asked by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on May 19, when he directed a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) concerning canvas footwear. The response by the minister, as reported on page 17590 of Hansard, was:

> Madam Speaker, the existence of the canvas footwear loophole was taken into account by the government when it made the decision—

The hon. member for Spadina would have the right to ask, if Your Honour does not find a prima facie case of privilege exists here, "How can I believe that the cabinet has made a decision on this question? It may not be final." That is where that kind of reasoning leads us if we are to accept the position advanced by government members.

• (1730)

At page 17586 of Hansard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) in response to a question of the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), said as the parliamentary secretary:

> —a complete review is taking place at present as to whether or not we will pursue this particular program.

How can we believe that that is a decision that has been taken?

Madam Speaker, clear logic compels us to come to the conclusion that there was in fact a decision made by the government before the minister made his statements in the House that no such decision was made. I would ask, Madam Speaker, that you take the matter under advisement and that you come to the conclusion, the compelling conclusion, that there is indeed a prima facie case of privilege in the right of the member for St. John's West, and that his motion be then put to the House and the usual procedure adopted of calling for a vote on that motion.

Mr. Mackasey: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am not sure the hon. member is quoting me correctly, unless I check the "blues". I have no recollection of having said that this disposes of the case. The points needs emphasizing that the word of an hon. gentleman has been an unwritten rule, Madam Speaker. My point was to remind the House and the Chair that there was a new element here that was not there yesterday, that is, the word of a minister. The statement of the minister today that he did not deliberately mislead the House is an additional argument that you must take into consideration and give the weight it deserves.

Madam Speaker: That is not really a point of order. Since the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) did tell me he would be the last speaker on this side—

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I want to have my say on such an important matter.

Madam Speaker: The Chair feels now that it has been sufficiently informed and has heard all of the views that need to be heard to enlighten the Chair on this particular question of privilege.

I will, of course, take this question under advisement, taking into account the importance of the contributions that were made.

Mr. Yurko: On a point of privilege, my privilege is in this House.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I want to suggest that before this House is the personal integrity of a member—

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order, because I did say that I would not allow any more speakers on this particular question of privilege?

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I have been trying to speak on this matter for the last three-quarters of an hour and I have been popping up in my place. As the only independent member in this House, when the personal integrity of a member of this House is in question it is incumbent upon an independent member who has no affiliation with the political parties to say something. I have demanded the right to say something when the personal integrity of a member of this House is in question. I think it is a very important matter, so I demand the right to speak on the issue.

Madam Speaker: I do not deny that the hon. member might have a right to express himself in this House, but on this particular question, as the hon. member knows, it is left to the discretion of the Chair to determine when the Chair is sufficiently enlightened or informed on a particular question and to cut off the debate at a certain point. That is precisely what I did, use my discretion.

Mr. Yurko: Other people have spoken several times. Under the rules a member does have the right to speak in this House at a certain point on a matter as important as this is before this House.

Madam Speaker: I do not deny that right but I used my discretion. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—TABLING BY MR. MacEACHEN OF LETTER TO PREMIER OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, it is just to clear up a matter that was raised yesterday. In our proceedings at page 17587 the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), in replying to a question from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) quoted extensively, and that can be found in Hansard, from a letter that had been sent to the Premier of Newfoundland. Indeed, it is worth noting that he quoted from the letter before it had even been received by the Premier of Newfoundland. In any event, Madam Speaker, if you quote from a document, under our rules and I give you Beauchesne's, citation 327, if you quote from a document, it is incumbent then upon the minister who quotes from the document to lay it on the Table of the House, and I so ask.

Madam Speaker: I did look into that matter and it seems quite clear from Hansard that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) identified an official document and quoted from it quite extensively, twice, I believe. Therefore, I believe the document should be tabled if asked for, and the hon. member is doing just that. But the hon. minister is not in the House at the present time. Probably he will want to conform with that at some later time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not in the House. I have given you notice of a question of privilege that I would raise following the question of privilege that was raised today. It is not going to be as long as the one you have just heard. However, as the minister is not here, I would ask that it be stood until the minister is here. He was here for part of this debate, and it is not going to affect it. I would prefer also, as I said in my letter to you, Madam Speaker, so as to check a few of the facts regarding my blind constituent who was affronted by the Metric Commission, to have my question of privilege stood over until Tuesday when I again will see him personally.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I have a letter here from the hon. member but it does not really constitute a notice of a question of privilege. I will read it back to him and he will understand the position. He writes:

> I am writing to give you notice of my intention to raise a point of privilege, fully aware of the difficulty of proving it in terms of forming a precedent and also the wisdom of raising it today.

Then he goes on to say:

> I would like to delay the formal presentation of my point of privilege until next week.

Therefore, when the hon. member feels that he wants to raise that question of privilege, he will have to give me another written notice.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Order Paper Questions

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-25, an act to amend the act of incorporation of the association known as the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

PETITIONS

MISS JEWETT—DESIRE OF WOMEN OF CANADA FOR WORLD PEACE AND DISARMAMENT

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased and honoured today to present to the House of Commons the women's petition for peace which represents the desire of the women of Canada for world peace and disarmament. The names of thousands of Canadian women will be added to the petition to be presented at the United Nations special session on disarmanent in June where the goal is for 500 million women from many countries of the world to speak out for peace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. TAYLOR—REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND THE LASH FOR RAPE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some 400 Canadians living in or near the village of Gibsons, British Columbia, in the federal constituency of Comox-Powell River. This petition requests that capital punishment be reinstated for murder and that the lash be returned for rape. Our society is built on crime being punished. When the ultimate crime of murder occurs, the punishment should be the ultimate punishment, death. A person who deliberately plans and executes a murder of another human being has no right to live. My petitioners pray that the House of Commons will reflect the thinking of the majority of the people of Canada, and reinstate capital punishment for murder and the lash for rape of innocent women and girls.

DOT—COURT REPORTING SERVICES

Question No. 2,911—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport under the Marine Transportation Program at page 32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to court reporting services (a) how does the department explain the 225 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) The increase in the cost of court reporting services in 1979-80 over the previous year was prompted by additional formal investigations into shipping casualties which had to be carried out in 1979-80.

(b) Angus Stonehouse & Company Ltd., $41,514; Boisjoly et Associés Inc., $45,967; International Reporting Inc., $22,903.

DOT—USE OF TEMPORARY HELP

Question No. 2,912—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport at page 32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to temporary help, including stenographic and secretarial services (a) how does the department explain the 78 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) The increase in temporary help costs in 1979-1980 is mainly attributable to the effects of a staffing moratorium announced by the President of the Treasury Board on June 8, 1979. At that time, staff strength was lower than planned and continued to fall during the extended moratorium period, particularly in the secretarial, stenographic and clerical categories where turnover is high. Outside agency help was used to alleviate the resulting backlog wherever internal arrangements proved inadequate.

DOT—PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,914—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport at page 32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other professional and special services (a) how does the department explain the 79 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) Increases in costs were recorded at Transport Canada training facilities as follows:

	Amount of Increase $
Transport Canada Training Institute (TCTI) Cornwall, Ontario
Laundry, dry cleaning and related services	44,734
Messing and food services	528,184
Building cleaning services	307,858
	$880,776

The newly erected residence was not fully occupied for the major part of 1978-79, however a considerable increase in the use of the facilities took place during 1979-80. The revenue collected for training costs by TCTI showed a similar increase.

Canadian Coast Guard College (CCGC) Sydney, Nova Scotia
Operation and maintenance of facilities by contract	$498,348

In 1978-79 the billings from the Cape Breton Development Corporation for heat and water were paid as utilities, materials and supplies (S.O. 07) while in 1979-80 the same charges were classified as part of the maintenance bill and paid under professional and special services (S.O. 04).

CEIC—DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

Question No. 2,942—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission at page 32.6, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to diagnostic services (a) what services does this entail (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): (a) This program provides for the purchase of diagnostic services for CMC/CEC clients who have considerable difficulty participating in the labour market. These services are purchased from agencies or individuals in the public sector under professional service contracts. Diagnosticians provide written reports and consultations to employment counsellors for which fees are paid in accordance with contracts.

An elaboration of the service is as follows:

(i) Identify the client for whom these services are appropriate.

(ii) Determine if the commission has a standing contract (for the current year) with an appropriate diagnostician. (These contracts are usually negotiated by area or regional staff.)

(iii) Determine if the client is willing to undergo diagnosis relating to his/her inability to obtain employment.

(iv) If a diagnostician is available and the client is willing, complete the Diagnostic Services Requisition.

(v) Refer client to diagnostician.

(vi) The diagnostician assesses the client, prepares a report and discusses it with the client.

(vii) The diagnostician sends his/her report to the counsellor who referred the client to him/her.

(viii) Upon receipt of the diagnostician's report, the counsellor continues his/her employment counselling sessions with the client.

(ix) If the diagnostician indicates that there is no reasonable prospect of assisting the client through the CEIC, and the counsellor(s) handling the case concurs that the client's employment prospects cannot be improved through available employment services, the client is referred to another appropriate agency.

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION—SERVICE CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,957—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Justice for the Canadian Human Rights Commission at page 32.17, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to service contracts (a) what services did the National Film Board perform for the amount of $63,719 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): (a) Development and production of audio-visual presentations.

(b) The audio-visual presentations covered the following topics:

(1) Canadian Human Rights Act
(2) Systemic Discrimination
(3) Equal Opportunity in Employment as regards to (1) race (2) physical handicap
(4) Equal Pay for Work of Equal Value

DOT—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,967—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Transport in footnote No. 20 at page 13.4, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances were the barrel buoys and anchors lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the Department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

2. What use does the department make of the barrel buoys?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The loss of the barrel buoys and anchors was attributable to bad weather (storms, strong winds, and ice) and the normal wear and tear of such material. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable. (d) Yes. (e) A recovery procedure is in effect for material such as chains, counterweights, and sinkers, whereby a Coast Guard vessel equipped to locate such material is dispatched to the locations of the losses when the amount of material involved is sufficient to justify the recovery effort. In 1978, chains, sinkers and counterweights at a value of $81,000 were recovered.

2. The buoys assure navigational security and prevent loss of life and material. The buoys also protect the marine environment from pollution by petroleum products which could result if ships strayed from the main channel.

HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES PROGRAM

Question No. 2,979—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Health and Social Services Program at page 32.23, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare):

(a)	The department contributed towards the cost of production of the following films and film program:	Health and Welfare Contribution
1.	Challenge for Change	$100,000
	A series of films depicting Canadian society produced by the National Film Board under a program administered by a committee of seven departments and the National Film Board and funded through annual departmental assessment with an equal amount being provided by the National Film Board.
2.	Rehabilitation Film	49,049
	A film was created within the context of the International Year of Disabled Persons for the purpose of increasing the awareness of the general public towards the problem of integration of the handicapped.
3.	Adoption Film	$ 26,111

A film created to give an understanding of the current adoption situation in Canada, by explaining changes, by outlining the role and responsibility of agencies, and by examining the background and attitudes of adopting couples. The production cost was shared with seven provinces.

The Department also contributed $60,878 to the National Film Board, towards the cost of creating a captioning centre capable of responding to the needs of the hearing impaired, in both official languages. The program deals with feature films and other films of current interest and the cost includes the purchase of films for captioning purposes.

A further $63,657 was expended for booking promotional films on nutrition and drug information and a series on child abuse.

(b) With the exception of the Captioned Film Program, which is specifically directed toward the hearing impaired, all films are directed toward the general public and professional groups and include such topics as nutrition, alcohol, tobacco and drug abuse, rehabilitation of the handicapped and child adoption.

(c) As the films are made available to interested parties free of charge, no cost recovery is anticipated.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

Question No. 3,128—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to item 7 in the notes to the financial statements of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the year ended March 31, 1980 at page 141, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, concerning cancelled projects (a) how did the loss of $59,000, relating to losses on assets not put into production occur (b) does the commission anticipate that any or all of these assets will subsequently be put into production to reduce the loss and, if so, at what location and on what date (c) for what reason was the Snare Cascades Project cancelled at a cost, in 1979, of $633,000 and what is the total cost of the cancellation (d) is the commission likely to recoup any of the loss by a redeployment of assets which would otherwise have been used in the project (e) has the commission taken steps to ensure that such cancellations will not be necessary in future and (i) if so, what steps (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) Loss results as follows:

Write-off of development costs for emergency generating equipment	$ 44,481.28
Residual cost of disposal of electrical control panels after removal of all usable instrumentation	30,704.85
Less: gain on disposal of assets	(16,421.13)
Cancelled projects as per note 7	$ 58,765.00

The project was cancelled following a review of the emergency standby program. The physical dimensions of the alternator control panels did not meet current design specifications. As well, certain aspects of the instrumentation were not applicable to forecast service installation. All usable instrumentation was retained in stock.

(b) None of the above will be put into production. Credit for any salvage parts is taken into account in the $59,000 cancellation amount.

(c) The total of the cancellation of the preliminary construction costs of the Snare Cascades project amounted to $1,842,-689.13. This cost was reported in financial statements as follows:

March 31, 1978	$ 1,209,673.16
March 31, 1979	$ 633,015.97
Total:	$ 1,842,689.13

The project cancellation was related to a reduction in load growth combined with forecast inflationary cost factors which would have an unfavourable impact on the unit cost of electrical generation.

(d) Yes, based upon independent consulting advice, the commission has retained the two hydro turbines originally purchased for the project in contemplation of future small hydro development.

(e) The economic viability of all projects is continuously monitored, and the best possible forecasts of future demands are made. Contracts provide for cancellation clauses to minimize any potential loss due to possible cancellation of major projects.

SEAWAY INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE CORPORATION

Question No. 3,134—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the statement of operations of the Seaway International Bridge Corporation Ltd. for the year ended December 31, 1979 at page 162, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, which notes that the corporation operated at a net income of $205,124, for what reason did the corporation recently increase the tolls for round trip traffic by 33 per cent from $3 to $4?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Seaway International Bridge Corporation, Ltd., a subsidiary of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, advises as follows: The corporation increased its tolls to ensure that self-sufficiency will be maintained. The 1979 operating profit had diminished to $70,493 in 1980, and financial projections indicated that, without a toll increase, net losses estimated at $175,000 would be incurred in the years 1981 and 1982.

JACQUES CARTIER & CHAMPLAIN BRIDGES INC.

Question No. 3,135—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the statement of operations of the Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges Incorporated at page 123, volume III of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada (a) how does the corporation explain the $5,519,409 net loss as a result of operations (b) does the corporation intend to take any steps to eliminate this loss and (i) if so, what will they be and how long does the corporation anticipate it will take to eliminate this loss (ii) if not, what rationale does the corporation have for continuing this net loss (c) what amount of the operational expenses are incurred in the collection of tolls?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges Incorporated, a subsidiary of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, advises as follows:

(a) The revenue of the corporation amounted to $5,840,687 and the expenses to $11,360,096 for a net loss of $5,519,409. The main reason revenues have not kept pace with expenses is that tolls on the Champlain Bridge have not been increased since 1962.

(b) Yes. (i) The corporation has reviewed its financial situation and the matter is under active consideration. It has not yet been determined how long it will be before losses are eliminated. This will depend on whether future losses can be made up either by increased tolls or parliamentary appropriations, or a combination thereof. (ii) Not applicable.

(c) Operational costs amounted to $8,547,423 of which $1,193,678 were incurred in the collection of tolls.

ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Question No. 4,181—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

Is there any mention of the Security Service of the RCMP or the department's response to the McDonald Royal Commission in the 1980-81 Annual Report of the Department of the Solicitor General and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Mention of the Security Service of the RCMP appears at page 13 of the 1980-81 Annual Report of the Ministry of the Solicitor General. There is no mention of the ministry's response to the Commission of Inquiry into the RCMP in the 1980-81 Annual Report, because the commission's final report to the Governor in Council was not published until August 25, 1981. The 1980-81 Annual Report of the Ministry of the Solicitor General is for the period from April 1, 1980 to March 31, 1981.

"IMPROVEMENT IN THE SPREADABILITY OF BUTTER"

Question No. 4,274—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is a study into the "Improvement in the spreadability of butter" being conducted by Dr. A. Boudreau on behalf of the Department of Agriculture as listed in the Department of Supply and Services Bulletin No. 108?

2. Did Dr. Boudreau submit a detailed budget and (a) if so, what are the main projected expenditures (b) if not, how was the project cost generated?

3. Was the study tendered and (a) if so, how many applications were received (b) if not, what selection process was used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. Yes, Dr. Boudreau of Laval University did submit a budget on December 14, 1981 and the main projected expenditures are as follows:

1. Salaries and wages	(estimated) $ 66,258
2. Materials and supplies	(estimated) $ 5,000
3. Direct charges (chemical analysis)	(estimated) $ 14,142
4. Equipment	(estimated) $ 1,300
5. Travel and living	(estimated) $ 3,700
6. Overhead	(estimated) $ 21,451
	Total estimated cost $111,851

3. This study was the result of a submission by Dr. Boudreau of Laval University, in response to an invitation appearing in the R & D Bulletin of March, 1981, to submit proposal to Canadian Dairy Commission Research Program for various research subjects. Thirty-one submissions were received and this proposal is one of the fourteen, which were approved by the Canadian Dairy Commission, Department of Agriculture, under the Product Research and Market Development Program.

This study and similar ones funded by Agriculture Canada aim at finding ways to stop the dramatic decline in the per capita butter consumption in Canada over the past 25 years. During the period of 1955 to 1979, the per capita butter consumption has decreased from 9.19 KG to 4.46 KG (51.5 per cent).

The major variables contributing to this decline have been identified and spreadability (or lack of) remains a significant negative characteristic of butter and contributes to the decline of butter consumption in favor of replacement products. In view of the importance of butter sales for Canadian dairy farmers and the Canadian economy as a whole various government bodies fund research projects of this nature to improve the physical characteristics of butter and hence help this product to regain its popularity among consumers.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—RIGHT TO VOTE IN A FEDERAL ELECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House go on record as opposing any policy which will have the result of effectively denying people in any region of Canada their democratic right to vote in a federal election.

He said: Madam Speaker, in opening the debate on this important subject about democratic electoral laws, I would like to lay down the first general principle to which my party adheres—and I would like to think all parties in the House accept—that is, that the whole purpose of electoral laws in a democratic society should be to maximize the opportunities for citizens, wherever they may live, to participate in the electoral process. In relation to that an auxiliary principle is that the purpose of hours established for voting purposes ought to have the same objective.

In our view the present law in Canada does meet this general objective. At present we have the requirement on election day that the polls are open from nine in the morning to eight at night—the same time, 11 hours—in whatever province a man or woman who is voting may live. In addition, there is the provision that any citizen of Canada entitled to vote—if he or she is working outside the home for an employer—must be freed by that employer from obligations to work for at least four clear hours in advance of the closing time of the polls.

Before I get to the essence of my concern about a particular proposal which will be before the House for debate I would like to discuss the important question of when people actually vote during elections. All members in the House, irrespective of party, are quite familiar with election day proceedings. Indeed, the members in this House, by definition, I suggest, have been very active on election days in making sure that at least certain citizens in whom they are interested get out to vote.

Mr. Cullen: We try to get them all out.

Mr. Broadbent: We in my party, of course, try to get them all out to vote, and we try a little harder in relation to those we have good reason to believe might be voting for our party.

Mr. Darling: Good for you.

Mr. Broadbent: I suspect that is a common tendency amongst all parties, and is a reflection of the democratic process that is based on the party system.

The crucial point I want to make is that although we do not have hard data on this question for Canada compiled by Canadian political scientists or journalists who may be interested in the subject, the reality is that in terms of the practical experience of the politicians I know, some 60 per cent to 70 per cent of Canadians who vote on election days actually vote between the hours of 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. The point is overwhelmingly clear, therefore, that most Canadians vote at the end of the day. They do not vote in the morning or in the afternoon; they vote in the early evening. The reason for this is straightforward. Men and women are at work during the day. They come home and have their evening meal, and they go out to vote. Perhaps they go out to vote before they have their evening meal, but they do it at the end of their day's work. If they are commuters, they may have a fair distance to go in returning home from work, and that too delays the time when they will be able to vote.

Another category of person about whom we obviously have to be concerned in this context of the time at which people actually vote are those who are at home with small children. Men or women looking after children during the day may have to wait until someone else returns home from work before they can be spelled off and have a chance to go out and vote. All these self-evident reasons explain why, in our rough judgment—I think members of the House in all parties will agree—the vast majority of Canadians vote in the early evening at some time between 5 p.m. and 8 p.m.

That is part of the background of my party's concern which led to the motion before the House today. Another part of it is that I, as a member of the House and a party leader, heard some time early in February that the government was in fact seriously considering changing the hours for voting in Canada. The proposal I heard, which was being seriously considered by the cabinet, was that the hours for voting would vary across the country. They would be based on the principle that voters would start to vote late in Atlantic Canada and finish late and, reciprocally, at the other end of our country on the west coast, they would start to vote early in the day and finish early. The principle behind that proposal was that Canadians would be voting at a common real time across the nation. The reason given by the Liberal members who have supported this idea is that western Canadians in particular have been unhappy with the hours which have been in effect for years, and that people in the west have been quite dissatisfied, when they have seen election results come in from Atlantic Canada but, in particular, after the results from central Canada—Ontario, and Quebec—were added, that the election was over, frequently before they had even gone out to vote. That has been the argument, and I see some hon. members on the government side nodding in agreement that that is the reason—

Mr. Smith: We are trying to be responsive.

Mr. Broadbent: —behind a proposal—which, as I said, I heard about early in February—the government would make and which has now been put to the House in the form of a government bill presented for first reading.

I want to talk about the reality of this alleged perception or concern. If we take into account the elections since 1957—and there have been ten of them—fully eight of the ten elections have not had their final outcome determined until the results from western Canada were included. I repeat that in eight of the ten elections we did not know which party—or parties, if we had minority governments—would form the government until the results from western Canada were in. In fact, of the eight, the results of four of those elections were not known until the results in the province of British Columbia were known.

The point I am making is that the talk about the need to change hours because of a perception in western Canada that the ball game was completely over and that the people in the west somehow did not count—although obviously every man and woman has one vote—was largely, in my judgment, based on a reaction to the last general election. I can well understand that. Many people were very unhappy that a fellow named Pierre Elliott Trudeau and the Liberal Party were elected to be the Government of Canada. As a New Democrat I understand that, just as my Conservative colleagues will understand that, because the west is roughly divided between the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party. In that particular election it was entirely understandable that the majority of Canadians in the western part of our country should have been unhappy. They knew that a majority government was elected before the results from the west came in.

The point I want to make, and it is a serious one, is to question whether we should tinker with an electoral system which has made it possible for the majority of citizens to vote between 5 p.m. and 8 p.m., to take into account certain feelings that were produced in one general election. I think this is a very basic question.

When I heard of the proposed changes in hours I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 10 this year and made it clear on behalf of this party that it would oppose any changes of the kind being discussed. I indicated that I should like to hear from him about the government's intention and his argument for it. I received no answer except the usual acknowledgement from an official that the letter would be brought to his attention. I did not receive the commitment I had been seeking that the government would not proceed with the bill, nor did I receive a reply to the substance of my concern. Of course, it is the Prime Minister's right to reply or not and I am not quibbling about that.

More than three months ago this party made it clear that it did not like the hours that were being proposed, and I will come to the reasons for that in a moment. I urged the Prime Minister not to proceed with what I heard was the government's intention to change the hours of voting in Canada. It is not the exchange of letters that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, but the fact that the government has produced a bill that will make changes that I think are anti-democratic. I will be very explicit about that later.

I appeal to members on all sides of the House to think very seriously about the consequences of these changes. I hope this may be one of those rare occasions when the government will think very seriously about proceeding with second reading of a bill if the points that my party wants to make in the course of this debate are conceded to be valid. I hope that the government will withdraw the bill.

We object to the bill because in eastern Canada the proposed hours would be an inconvenience. I will not elaborate on that. The traditional hours of 9 a.m. to 8 p.m., with four consecutive hours being made free by employers for people to vote, meet the requirements of people in Atlantic Canada. The new schedule would cause some inconvenience to a number of fishermen and other groups, according to my information.

The real concern of this party, however, is the effect that such a change would have in western Canada. To put it very directly, the normal voting pattern of 60 to 80 per cent of the electorate will be shattered. According to the bill that the government has introduced, polls in British Columbia and the Yukon will close at 5.30 p.m. That is very serious. Fishermen, loggers, clerks in department stores in downtown Vancouver, in the Kootenays or in the Yukon or any working man or woman, will find it literally impossible to vote on election day.

The other change that is proposed is that the employer will have to provide four consecutive hours to vote, but not necessarily on election day. As long as four hours are provided before an advance poll day, that will be adequate according to this bill.

The cumulative impact of these two changes—cutting off the vote at 5.30 p.m. and removing the old requirement that employers have to leave four consecutive hours free on election day—could mean the disenfranchisement of thousands of Canadians in western Canada. We will not put up with that, Mr. Speaker.

This is a very serious matter and I want to ask all the members of the House to consider the consequences of it. There have been concerns in western Canada about the efficacy of our federal system to produce justice for people in western Canada as well as for people in central Canada and so on, but I will not go over those old and real grievances, Mr. Speaker.

In the last 48 hours I have received half a dozen telegrams from British Columbia—now that the news has been received there—expressing deep concern at the effect which the cutting off of thousands of workers from the polls will have. I hope that members of the House will not be party to a measure that will be an inconvenience in eastern Canada but will be a major liability to democracy in western Canada. If there have been problems of alienation and concern in the west before, they will increase in Alberta, British Columbia and the Yukon after the impact of the proposed legislation is understood.

I began this debate rather late because of procedural matters which intervened today, Mr. Speaker. I will not take much more of the time of the House because it is almost six o'clock. Other members of this party will speak and I hope that members of other parties will address themselves to these very serious concerns and that the government will be persuaded by the arguments.

I want to conclude by saying that this party, and I hope all parties, believe that any electoral change must maximize, not minimize, the opportunity to use one's democratic right. We believe the gimmickry approach advocated by the Liberal government in this bill, rather than dealing with western grievances and rather than alleviating some of the tensions, will only aggravate them. In this context we believe that Bill C-113 suggests a cure that is much worse than the disease.

In the final analysis we think that Bill C-113 should be scrapped. It should be withdrawn and a totally new approach to the serious question of democratic rights ought to be taken.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to state what the business of the House will be for next week since this could not be dealt with earlier today.

As agreed among House leaders this morning, the first item of business tomorrow will be Bill S-25. It is not on the Order Paper but it will be reported from the Senate in time to be dealt with as the first item of business tomorrow. It is an act concerning the association of navy, army and air force veterans. It will be dealt with by agreement through all stages, with one speaker per party. That will be done tomorrow afternoon. It will be followed by Bill C-91, which deals with public works, and, if need be, second reading of Bill C-92, which deals with national harbours.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, the schedule is as follows: Monday, the House will not be sitting, Tuesday will be an opposition day, Wednesday, the House will meet in Committee of the Whole in connection with Bill C-112 relating to certain taxes, and Thursday, we shall proceed with third reading of Bill C-112.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair would normally recognize the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who was rising to speak on the motion before the House. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has concluded his remarks, and as it is now just past six o'clock, I think perhaps the most appropriate way is to indicate to the hon. member for Provencher that the Chair will recognize him as having the floor at eight o'clock, provided of course that he is here.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—RIGHT TO VOTE IN A FEDERAL ELECTION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House go on record as opposing any policy which will have the result of effectively denying people in any region of Canada their democratic right to vote in a federal election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) had been given the floor.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to read into the record the motion which the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) moved on behalf of his party. It reads:

That this House go on record as opposing any policy which will have the result of effectively denying people in any region of Canada their democratic right to vote in a federal election.

One has to analyse that motion somewhat to determine the reason for the motion in the first place. If one looks at it, one could interpret it as saying that any Canadian should have the right to vote because we read that this House should not adopt any policy which would effectively deny people in any region of Canada the right to vote. Section 14 of the Canada Elections Act, under which all of us are governed, is entitled "Qualifications and Disqualifications of Electors". It addresses quite a number of categories of Canadians who cannot vote in a federal election. For example, the chief electoral officer, the assistant chief electoral officer, judges appointed by governor in council and people undergoing punishment in Canada's penal institutions are just some of them. But is that what the motion intends? Having listened to the Leader of the New Democratic Party this evening, I do not think that is his intention. Rather, it arises from the fact that polls close at the same hour in every region of Canada. However, because of the different time zones across the country we have the difficulty of polls in Atlantic Canada being closed first and the votes counted first. Next are the polls in Quebec and Ontario. But as to those of us who live west of Ontario, whose polls are still open, as a consequence of United States satellite stations and television stations, we are told of the election results in eastern Canada. For instance, in Manitoba it would not necessarily influence the voting because we would only know a few minutes prior to our polls closing, but as one advances further west to British Columbia and Yukon, the problem is exacerbated.

When one takes a look at past elections, where elections were close, it is true that that problem did not exist. Obviously the need to find out which party will win seats, as one goes west, determines who will form the next government. When elections are close and minority governments are elected, for example, there is no problem. Also percentagewise the problem generally has not existed in so-called modern or post-war elections.

I think the NDP is trying to address what happened in the 1980 election in which Canadians in western Canada found that a majority government had been elected up to the Ontario-Manitoba border. All western Canadians could do was add thereto, that is add to the government already elected. If all of us had voted against the party, in this case the Liberal Party, which formed the government—

Mr. Huntington: Most of us did.

Mr. Epp: Almost all of us did, with the exception of those people in the ridings of the two members from Manitoba. But it made very little difference; we were already excluded, so to speak, because the government was already elected. One must be careful to analyse whether the problem which exists is being resolved by the solution that is being put forward by the government.

There have been private members in my party who have tried to address this problem. I have absolutely nothing but praise for their efforts, but let me say in all frankness that the solution which they thought possible was not necessarily a solution. For example, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) has a private member's bill along those lines, but if one studies his bill one finds other provisions in it as well. It was not only a matter of advancing hours. He had other suggestions such as the idea of a proxy vote which could be extended to other groups of Canadians, not necessarily those classified or categorized in the Canada Elections Act. In a sense his bill went much further in an attempt to address the question of how better to democratize the election procedure.

The motion before us in effect asks us to look at the electoral procedure as proposed in Bill C-113 which has had first reading but has not been passed through all stages in the House. In fact, it has not yet received second reading. Effectively that bill denies some Canadians, especially those in British Columbia and Yukon, the ability to cast their ballots. This is a serious matter. But I for one thought there were some other areas where the New Democratic Party could have proposed a motion. For instance, it could have put forward a motion concerning lay-offs, jobs, unemployment, farming, the lay-off of CN workers today or the fact that CFA appeared before members of the House yesterday. But the fact remains that this question is important and must be addressed by us.

When the government looks at parliamentary or electoral reform, I suggest it should prove that in fact it is serious and that it does not want to take away the vote or the right to vote of any Canadian. There are three vacant seats in Canada right now, but no byelections have been called. Effectively Canadians in those ridings are losing their right to representation in the House. If the government is serious about every Canadian being represented in this place and not denied his or her privilege to cast a ballot, it should call the byelections. I imagine the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), depending upon whether or not he wants to make a decision, could make that decision tonight, and we would be in a byelections period tomorrow in respect of those three byelections. I challenge hon. members on the government side to consider it. I challenge them to take the matter to their minister so that the byelections will be called. At least that would take care of the situation wherein every Canadian is not represented in the House at present.

The government, which is almost virtually wiped out in the west, seems to have finally heard voices from western Canada indicating a problem out there. Members of the government are now saying, "If there is a problem, how can we resolve it?" They are hearing that there is alienation in the west and they are wondering how to address it. I should like to tell the House that alienation in western Canada will not be resolved by Bill C-113 or by changing or staggering the voting hours. In the 1980 election western Canadians, especially British Columbians, felt that, although they had the right to vote, what difference did it make? That seemed to be the attitude which I heard expressed in British Columbia. I am sure other colleagues of mine will express the same thing. But as we went further west, we realized that it was just an irritant. It was not the cause of the alienation; it was just a further demonstration of western Canadian feelings that they did not have a rightful place in the decisionmaking process in central Canada, in the central government.

If we take a look at what the government is proposing, it is very interesting to see the reasons which were advanced in cabinet for staggering the voting hours. For example, in British Columbia the polls would close effectively at 5.30 p.m. It was spelled out in the cabinet document, which I understand was circulated to all members of the Liberal caucus but of course not to all members of the House—this place works in wonderful and mysterious ways; sometimes we receive copies—that the polls close at the same time across the country and that, by magic, alienation would be taken care of. This is not the way it works. With the polls closing at 5.30 p.m. in British Columbia, we must remember that electors have to be given four continuous hours in order to cast their ballots. In its own cabinet paper the government said:

> The proposed new hours would place a heavier burden on employers in the west, because most of the polling hours would fall within the normal working day—

The government recognized that this would impact negatively, for instance, upon people in British Columbia. Additionally, because the election would be held on a Monday, the government wondered whether employers would be forced to give employees a half day off, perhaps Monday afternoon, to cast their ballots. The document continued:

> Moreover, it could reduce voter turnout by encouraging employees to take a long weekend, since polling day is on a Monday.

This comes back to the motion of the New Democratic Party. Would it not effectively remove the right to vote? Then there is the discretion, in other words, the four hours need not be given on polling day, they would be given on an advance day.

Mr. Blackburn: Saturday.

• (2020)

Mr. Epp: That is the point. The four hours could be given by employers on a non-working day, or what is traditionally now a non-working day. As you go from east to west, this of course would make very little difference. They point that out as well.

I think the government's conclusion is perhaps most relevant. It reads:

> Moreover, western voters would almost certainly be required to vote on a day off, and the Bill might therefore exacerbate rather than reduce the sense of alienation in the West.

Mr. Blackburn: That is why they brought it in.

Mr. Epp: If that is their conclusion and the reason for bringing in the bill, if they think they will solve the problems of alienation in the west, I suggest they get more advisers.

There is a problem as to how we address the electoral question. I already gave as one example the calling of the byelections. What I am more interested in is not this kind of tinkering but, rather, parliamentary reform which would make this House more relevant in its day to day operations so that it might be more relevant to Canadians. That is the issue which we should address. As well, we should be addressing the issue of how the regions can be better reflected at the federal level. There is also the question of the Senate addressing the regional issues and how the voice of those regions will be heard here.

I recognize that the Fathers of Confederation—our first Prime Minister, for instance—wanted a unitary state. It was clean and neat and he understood it. But he also understood the nature of Canada. He understood that we would not have a country without giving very close consideration to regional differences and the need to fit the regions into the larger puzzle of Canada. That is why we are a federal state.

I suggest to the government that if it thinks it will resolve the differences of alienation by tinkering with the hours, it is badly mistaken. The government's own paper shows that it has very serious reservations about that. What we need, then, is to call the byelections and seriously review parliamentary reform within the House. Let us look at the matter of regional representation at the central level. Finally, when we consider the question of how best to carry out electoral reform, let us take very seriously the proposal that has been put forward of delayed counting or the withholding of the announcement of election returns until the polls have closed. I believe these are suggestions which could be discussed and I make them for that purpose.

I am pleased to see that the minister who holds responsibility for western Canada is in the House. I say in all sincerity that this addresses the problem of alienation in western Canada but it does not resolve the problem of western Canadians feeling that their votes did not count sufficiently. I repeat to him and I challenge him to call the byelections and give the people the right to be represented here as well as in the electoral regions to which I have referred.

I say to the New Democratic Party members that while I have some difficulty in terms of the manner in which their motion is structured, which is a minor issue, what is more critical and the main issue is that we should not take away the right of people to vote. In Vancouver, for example, if the polls close at 5.30 p.m., people must get to their polling stations by then. Any of us who have run in an election campaign know that the heaviest voter turnout is between four o'clock and eight o'clock. The problem that would exist in British Columbia is that people might have the right to vote denied them because they were not able to get to the poll on time. That is obviously not how we want to resolve the problem that exists.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I want to apologize to the members of the House for not being here to listen to the full range of remarks that were made, but I had to serve in a committee this evening and therefore had to divide my time between the House and the committee.

I am pleased to participate in this debate. I find that increasingly the opportunity to respond on behalf of the government to resolutions and motions put forward by the opposition is becoming for me one of the more revealing experiences here because they bring to light what is true and real about the actual intentions and concerns of the respective parties that sometimes belie the rhetoric with which they like to besiege the public on a daily basis.

This is my sixth opposition resolution response in approximately eight weeks, and I am beginning to feel that there is a certain pattern emerging that tells us much more about the reality of what their basic concerns and objectives are as opposed to what they would otherwise like people to believe.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in the resolution put forward by the NDP which shows once again that they have totally and completely contradicted the suggestion that they would like to have the public believe that they are a party of reform, of change and of progress. Once again they have established firmly that if there is any party of reaction, any party which is totally committed to the status quo, if there is any party that has no vision—-

Mr. Blackburn: Get to the bill.

Mr. Axworthy: —if there is any party with the inability to respond to the changing conditions of society, it is the NDP. This is true particularly in relation to western Canada issues.

Mr. Blackburn: If you are so progressive where are all your members from out west?

Mr. Axworthy: Once again we can measure the degree to which the truth is being heard by the volume of the bellows coming from that small rump in the corner.

Mr. Blackburn: You are one big joke.

Mr. Axworthy: Particularly in western Canada have they shown themselves to be a party of no real feeling for the flow and ebb of change in that region. Only a few weeks ago we saw that when we were debating perhaps one of the most important and critical issues to the economic future of western Canada, the modernization of our transportation system, it was that party which buried its head in the sand, dug its feet in the dirt and said, "Thou shalt not change". They are afraid of change and reform. It is quite evident in the resolutions which they bring forward on opposition days that they are in defence of the past, of what was and what is and not what should and can be. They have no feeling for how human affairs can be managed and channelled in such a way as to provide for new opportunities.

I simply want to comment in a general way about how we see the NDP showing their true colors on opposition days. They show the colours of reaction and complete and total commitment to the way things were. I think it is important for all of us in the House to recognize that.

At the same time I should say that I deeply regret that we spend so much of the time of the House on motions like this which are frivolous in their commitment and objectives when there are so many more important matters we could be debating.

Mr. Blackburn: Go out to Vancouver and tell them that.

Mr. Axworthy: When you think of the issues facing Canadians and of the important legislation which could be brought forward in terms of helping Canadians become employed—

Miss Jewett: You have nothing to say.

Mr. Axworthy: —helping to develop investment, or developing new policies in the energy field, while here we have to deal solely with the commitment of the NDP in the lower mainland of British Columbia and their concern about how they can get their vote out between five o'clock and eight o'clock, it makes you realize what a frivolous motion it is.

Miss Jewett: That will come back to haunt you.

Mr. Axworthy: Look how riled they are now.

Miss Jewett: You are the one who will suffer from that one.

Mr. Axworthy: We have really plunged to the centre of their concern. The fact is that while they have tried to candy this issue over by presenting it as one that is based upon broad principles of democratic and electoral reform, it really boils down to a defence of a vested interest. It is a defence of what they think is their electoral advantage.

• (2030)

I think it is important to clear away the particular mythology contained in this resolution, and talk about the real issue of democratic electoral reform in this country and who has led the way. I would only remind the hon. members of the New Democratic Party, and perhaps even those members in the Conservative Party who might be interested from time to time in matters of democracy, that when it comes to electoral reform it was the Liberal Party which brought forward the single most important advance in the development of a democratic base across Canada with the development of the Election Expenses Act a few years ago. It provided for the deep and full participation of ordinary Canadians in the financing of their political parties. It provided Canadians with the ability to take financial control of the parties away from the big donors. In fact, the major beneficiary of that electoral reform has been the NDP. We have, in our generosity and munificence, enabled that party to establish a much broader range of fund-raising than ever before by providing tax write-offs and tax exemptions. Even its leader and party presidents have said, with some degree of self-satisfaction, that the most important basis for whatever electoral success they may enjoy has been due to the change which we brought forward. yet they have the audacity to say that we are not interested in the question of democratic reform and principles. Talk about their lack of appreciation for what we have done for them!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We have provided them with the financial basis enabling them to preserve some remnant of responsibility on the electoral scene, but all they are concerned about is what happens on the lower mainland in terms of getting their votes out.

I think it is important to discuss electoral reform. It is a question with which we should always be concerned. We should always revamp, redress and revise the guidelines and rules by which we conduct our democratic society. That is why our House leader has put forward a number of important changes for parliamentary reform and democracy. How much more useful it would have been had the members of the NDP, rather than taking up the time of the House with a frivolus motion like this, said, "Well, let us use the time to debate that parliamentary reform so that we can improve procedures of the House and get more legislation through." We find, once again, that they are not really interested or committed to this question of how to bring about change and make improvements to the way in which the system works. What they are really concerned about is the protection of their own self-interest. Yet they try to camouflage that in the broad rhetoric of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the eastern member, to camouflage it in the proposal of the member from Ontario to help western Canadians.

For a moment let us discuss the tone and direction of the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa in terms of why he feels that some denial is being made to the democratic rights of western Canadians. Where we must begin is with Bill C-113, the so-called electoral reform, which came about—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I am deeply appreciative of the support and response of the NDP members. Perhaps they are now beginning to understand what we are trying to say. The origin of that bill, the genesis of what we are talking about, emanated from western Canada. That was not something which was concocted in Oshawa, this was not something which was developed in the caucus room of the Ontario party of whatever stripe; this was something westerners requested. This was the result of a large and increasing demand by western Canadians for a change in the way and basis of organizing elections so that they would not feel separated when the vote came in. They clearly demonstrated that need and made a call for that change. What is even more remarkable—because we are hearing such a large volume of noise from the members of the NDP caucus from British Columbia—is that it was the province of B.C. which was most vociferous, most anxious and most concerned that this change be made. It was the people of British Columbia who were most deeply concerned that we make changes in this particular area. So I guess we can only conclude that the NDP members of Parliament from B.C. are not really representing the people of western Canada. Once again, they are simply representing their own particular self-interest as a party, not as a democratic organization, and what they think is to their electoral advantage. It is not what is in the interests of the people of British Columbia or of western Canada.

It is important to recognize that in putting forward the reform in Bill C-113, what we are really saying is, first, that people should not have their hopes prejudged by election returns coming in earlier. It is simply a necessity, as this country stretches for thousands of miles from one end to the other. In the days of new electronic communication there is an obvious need to ensure that when people are still polling and making their choices on the west coast, we have not already made a selection on the east coast. Therefore, not only is this a way of trying to grade and rate the voting times, but also to ensure that the electronic media, particularly coming from the United States, would not be broadcasting the election results which, as we know from every political science study, have a very direct and compelling impact upon the choices people make.

The reforms proposed in Bill C-113 are designed to correct that eccentricity in the present electoral system and to ensure that people in western Canada are treated the same, in an equal way, in parity with those in the east, even though that is being denied at this moment by the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: What is more, this proposal has been broadly discussed and debated in the House. You should ask the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who brought in a virtually identical bill, and which was discussed. The hon. member from B.C. obviously does not understand that, because he obviously does not read the proposals put forward—

Mr. Huntington: I will be on my feet! I will reply to this garbage!

Mr. Axworthy: —or even read the resolutions put forward by his own members. But that, as we realize, is typical behaviour on the part of Tory Members of Parliament, that they have so little interest in what is going on in their own caucus, let alone in this House, that they are not relevant to what is taking place.

The fact is that these reforms have already received extensive debate, both in the Senate chamber and in this chamber, in terms of coming to grips with that particular issue and trying to find ways of solving that problem.

The kind of assertions made by the hon. member for Oshawa, in Ontario, in presenting this resolution, has—

Miss Jewett: He is a national leader!

Mr. Axworthy: —somehow left the impression that if people in British Columbia had to go to the polls before 5.30, it would deny them their right to vote. He did not quite say so, but he was somehow hinting or leaving the impression that they would not have the same amount of time. However, what he really forgot was that it is clearly entrenched in Bill C-113 that every worker and every voter will have the right to receive four hours off to go and vote at any time during the day.

An hon. Member: Look at the bill, Lloyd! Section 48(b)!

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have looked at the bill. The fact is, that it is a clear and abiding part of that reform that any worker, any person, any voter has the right to get from the employer four hours to go and vote—

Miss Jewett: On election day.

Mr. Axworthy: —in advance polls or on election day. That is a choice. The fact that they deny it simply shows that they are so blinded and clouded by their own rhetoric that they do not see that that basic entrenchment and defence is there.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Axworthy: It is surprising that they are taking so much of our time in such a frivolous way when, in fact, that protection is already inherently clear in the bill itself. However, I think that we have perhaps had an opportunity to look at other ranges of reform. I think that there is certainly good cause and reason to examine the issue of how people in western, central and Atlantic Canada may themselves have better representation. I, for one, would certainly welcome debate in this House on how we can change some of our fundamental national institutions to bring about reform of the electoral process. We should be talking about the way we come to grips with the basic issue of Senate reform, to provide a major opportunity for regional representation at the national level, based upon representation by population. It is clear to me that the flaw in the democratic system, the flaw in our federalism, is that the second chamber, which was originally designed to ensure that the regions would gain full representation, is an appointed house and therefore does not carry with it the same degree of legitimacy that an elected body would have. Therefore, people in regions in which there are not heavy or large concentrations of population tend to put a great deal of emphasis, for example, in assuming that only the provincial governments can represent the regional interest.

• (2040)

As a result, we have not had the opportunity at the national stage to have those rejoinders openly debated and considered in an authoritative way and recognized in an authoritative way by the regions in which there are not heavy concentrations of population. How much more helpful it would have been, and how much more constructive, if we had received a resolution from the NDP considering that kind of reform, concerning how we go about changing the manner and form of representation in the Senate, or the manner and form of representation in the courts or in the Crown corporations or in the regulatory agencies, to ensure that our federalism would work much better and that western Canadians, those in the prairie provinces and in the Atlantic provinces would feel a much closer tie to the national arena than they presently do.

That, Mr. Speaker, would have been something that all members of the House could have bitten their teeth into and on which they could have had a good, useful, constructive, healthy and vital debate, one that would have a purpose to it, one that would have a reason to it, one that would have a rationale to it, not one that would simply serve the organizers of Vancouver east, which is really all that this bill is trying to do. It is set up to respond to the puppet calls of the west coast unions on their NDP members. That is all we are debating. It is a shame that we have such a cherished and valuable space of time in the House and we use it on measures such as this.

This party has certainly taken the lead in providing for parliamentary reform. It has provided a major leadership in electoral reform, with the Electoral Expenses Act. Now that we have our Constitution at home and a Bill of Rights, we are looking at further opportunities for changes in the political institutions, providing for a much broader debate on the way regions could be represented at the national level, to provide for a much broader and more open system of representation in Parliament and in the electoral system. That is the kind of debate we should be thinking of, not one that is based on pure, unadulterated, naked, political interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I find that what I have just heard is some of the worst kind of speaking in connection with an election reform act that I though I would ever hear here in this House. Not by one word did the hon. minister say what this legislation is about. He chastised the NDP thoroughly; he chastised us thoroughly; and in his own way, whether he realizes it or not, he chastised his own party with those comments. And now he does not even have the fortitude to remain here to be taken apart.

Let me talk about this bill for a minute or two. I believe that election reform is a topic so important and so vital that it should not be part of partisan politics, yet that is what I have been hearing.

Mr. Axworthy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) has suggested that I do not have the fortitude to stay. I would be most pleased to stay but, as I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I am also required to appear before a committee, and I would hope the hon. member would at least respect that responsibility in his remarks.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. minister wishes to go to a committee, he might find the remarks more easy to take if he reads them in Hansard tomorrow. I would excuse him on that basis and apologize to him for perhaps using intemperate language in watching him marching out of the House the minute I stood up. We have seen that with other ministers of the Crown. I find it offensive to the members of the House of Commons that it happens so often. In this case, you have a committee, so away you go!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: As I was saying, the question here is with regard to a bill on electoral reform. Electoral reform is not a partisan political issue. I believe all members of the House believe they are here because of the wisdom and the intellingence of the voters in their individual ridings. Certainly I do.

What is the question? How do we make it fair? It is the Canadian people, their right to vote, their ability to vote and their convenience to vote, that we are talking about. The question is also, how do we make it at the least cost to the nation and at the least cost to the business of the nation.

I must be partisan for one minute. I believe that this motion of the NPD was wrong. We will have a good deal of time to discuss this bill when it comes up for second reading. I would rather see them deal with some of the true issues, such as, economics, unemployment and what is taking place now. That is what they should have been discussing today, not these minor—minor, I say—changes to the electoral act. That is the problem. These are minor changes to the electoral act, when we need all of the recommendations that can be made in connection with changes. What have they done? They gave us one little change. Now they are giving us another little change. Why can we not have it all at the same time, so that it can all be discussed properly?

The problem with this bill to me, as a member from British Columbia, is the hours. It suggests closing the polls at 5.30 in the afternoon, 6.30 mountain time; 7.30 in the east; and 8.30 in the maritimes and Newfoundland. That is fine. It hardly makes any change whatsoever in central Canada, but it is a severe impediment in British Columbia.

I have basically a suburban riding. Most of the people in my riding do not get home before 5.30 in the afternoon. They talk about the four hours off or three hours off under this bill, that you are entitled to. That is absolute nonsense, because of the cost. I have a telegram here. The Employers' Council of British Columbia has already made a quick study of this bill. They represent something like 140 major companies in British Columbia. They represent 600,000 workers. They determined that if this bill is passed, it is likely to cost the economy of B.C.—and this is only this group, this 600,000 worker group, 140 companies—$30 million every time there is an election. It is wrong. It should not cost $30 million. That is what it will cost in British Columbia. What will it cost in Ontario? Absolutely nothing. Is this fair?

The minister spoke about everyone being treated the same, everyone being treated in an equal way. Well, they are not being treated equally in B.C. under this particular bill. Sure we are annoyed, sure there is that small sign of alienation when we get the results from the east long before our own polls close.

That is not the real cause of the alienation. There are other causes as well. There are ways this could be made equal, but the government has not even taken a look at it. I am referring to this suggestion, and I only put this out as a suggestion because I have not read about its being discussed, if it has been discussed. Let us have a two-day election, from noon until eight p.m. in each region of the country and then, the second day, the polls can be closed at four o'clock in the afternoon in British Columbia. Let us make it two days.

• (2050)

The briefing papers to the cabinet say it is impossible to protect ballot boxes. That is absolute nonsense. Let me make another suggestion. Why not have our elections on Sundays when no one is working or when a very few people in essential services are working? Why not a Sunday election day so that everyone can vote?

An hon. Member: We go to church.

Mr. Cook: All right, let us do it another way. Why should a national election day in Canada not be considered a national holiday? We could use one of the national holidays we already have. Goodness knows, we have enough of them. If we are having a national election day, that day would become a national holiday. Perhaps that would emphasize that people should be wanting to vote and getting out to do so.

To close the polls at 5.30 in the afternoon on the west coast would be an impediment to voters. That would make it that much more dificult for them to get to the polls, and it would be unfair. It would not solve the problem they want addressed. The only thing it would do would be to cause all polls across the country to close at the same time, and that is dead wrong for British Columbia.

Mr. Taylor: Also for Alberta.

Mr. Cook: Alberta is basically in the same position, except that Alberta gets another hour, which we on the west coast do not get.

Mr. Epp: And the Yukon as well.

Mr. Cook: I am totally in agreement with the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). There are three vacancies in the House of Commons. Three constituencies are not represented here, and it does not look as if they will be for a very long time. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could call byelections tomorrow. He has not done so yet, and he does not have to do so until September. Even when he does call them, perhaps in the fall, he can set any date he likes, up to 1985, for the byelections to be held. This is an area of reform of electoral law which could be addressed very easily and should be addressed very quickly.

The whole idea of this motion today is to deal with the government's bill. It is a way to bring on discussion about the bill. I agree with members of the New Democratic Party, particularly those from British Columbia, and I share their concerns about the bill. Some ridings in the Kootenays are 500 miles long. Some foresters and miners have to travel for up to two hours to get to polling stations. I have great sympathy for the point of view of members of the New Democratic Party on this matter. Everyone in this country has the right to vote at a reasonable time, and the bill would deny that to my province.

The government briefing paper to which I referred earlier was a memorandum to the cabinet dealing with this matter. I gave a copy of it to the hon. member for Provencher, not knowing he would say some of the things I wanted to say.

Mr. Epp: Say them again.

Mr. Cook: The briefing paper says:

> A recent Gallup poll showed that 65 per cent of respondents (74 per cent in British Columbia) would favour legislation to delay the counting of eastern ballots until the polls are closed in the West.

This is what the government gets in a briefing paper:

> This option itself is easily dismissed as impractical, because of the problems it would create in terms of keeping ballot boxes secure and making election workers put in an unreasonably long day.

Well, tough apples! It is about time eastern Canada put in a little longer day than we on the west coast do, and that is the solution right there. Ballots in the east should not be counted until polls in the west close at a reasonable time. That would solve the problem easily. It would accomplish the objective with only a little, shall we say, inconvenience to other parts of the country rather than making the west always the region which has to make do and change. Having polls in Vancouver close at 5.30 in the afternoon would deny 20 per cent to 40 per cent of the electorate their opportunity to get out and vote. Anyone who thinks that is fair certainly does not understand or have an appreciation or any feeling for western Canada. The bill is supposed to help reduce western alienation. All the government is doing is making western alienation more severe. The government will be seriously criticized for that by people in the west. I have a difficult enough time defending the national government as it is right now. For heaven's sake, the government should withdraw this bill. It is not right. It is not what we want. It will not do what the government says it will. By the government's attempting to put it through, it will only increase western alienation.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, when I listened to the speech made by the first speaker for the Progressive Conservatives tonight, I thought we would have a fairly reasonable debate on this very important bill, but we can always count on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to lower the level of debate in this chamber. Every time there is an opposition day it is unfortunate that that minister comes into the House and lowers the level of debate so that we cannot deal with anything of any substance.

The minister said he was upset to be discussing this today because there are all kinds of other issues and this is not an important one. We have been debating very important issues on opposition days, and this is one. We have been debating unemployment, energy policy and interest rate policy, but what have we seen coming from this government? We have seen no change in those policies, despite what the minister might refer to as a reasoned and logical debate. I think the Minister of Employment and Immigration has done a disservice tonight not only to the opposition parties but also to his own party.

Mr. Blaikie: And that is not easily done.

Mr. Miller: Why are we dealing with this issue tonight? The issue relates to some of the other economic issues in western Canada which we have been debating over the years and on which we have been looking for some action. The minister should be aware that workers in British Columbia have already had their jobs taken away by him. There are 148,000 people in British Columbia no longer working as a result of the economic policies followed by this government, and we are in the House tonight to see that the government does not also take away their right to vote.

The history of the bill we are talking about tonight is interesting, and so is the intention of the government in introducing it. The Liberal government senses that there is alienation and anger in western Canada. It is reacting in this way as a sop to British Columbia. The government is saying it will close the polls in British Columbia at the same time they close in the rest of Canada, without looking at the implications for working Canadians in British Columbia, Alberta and Yukon. This is discrimination on a regional basis and, to some extent, on a class basis. Workers who go to work early in the morning and come home late at night have difficulty meeting their polling obligations and responsibilities. This is class discrimination, and it is discrimination against the west, which already feels alienated from the federal government.

The anger in the west is caused not so much by the fact that the east votes early or that the east votes for one party and not another but because of the cynicism with which the Liberals approach the electorate. The 1980 election campaign was geared to Ontario and Quebec, and the issue was energy prices. When the election returns were beamed out to British Columbia on American cable, there was anger felt by both Conservative Party supporters and NDP supporters, who knew full well that that cynical campaign resulted in a federal government not supported in western Canada, with the exception of two constituencies. There is anger in the people of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They are not anti-Canada. They did not mind that election results came in a little latter in western Canada than they did in the rest of Canada, but the results frustrated their desires and optimism even before their polls were closed.

What we are talking about is the history of the bill to which I refer. This matter was dealt with in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. A bill was introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who suggested that polls be closed at a uniform time. He suggested polls open in British Columbia at 8 a.m. and close at 4 p.m., which would even be worse than what the government is proposing in its bill. The government must have been listening to Senator Jack Austin, who brought in a private member's bill in the Senate which would have accomplished the same thing. It would have closed polls in British Columbia at six o'clock in the evening. It seems to me that the discussion and consultation the government carried out was not with the people of western Canada. It was not with the people of Newfoundland or the Atlantic provinces. That bill is something which came out of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. This was the result of a discussion by a small group of people on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections who thought it might be a reasonable course of action, but there was no debate or discussion in western Canada to alleviate some of the concerns of the voters there.

• (2100)

In committee, as reported at page 5 of the proceedings, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra had this to say:

> In fact, talking to many poll workers, I find that the crowd tends to come between 5:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., in other words, during the last three or four hours of the day.

People are accustomed to voting after work, or when working parents can spell each other, or when workers come out of the woods or in from fishing.

The attitude of the Minister of Employment and Immigration surprises me, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that the government is so committed to this change that it will not consider having the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections conduct further surveys on the question in western Canada. Certainly the Conservative members who speak for people in western Canada, and particularly in British Columbia, and of course members of the New Democratic Party, have indicated that there was some phony reasoning on the government's part regarding this program.

The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) was on that committee, and on June 9, 1981, as reported at page 8 of the proceedings, he had this to say:

> I wonder if the theoretical benefit is worth the real pain or inconvenience I suspect some people may find if—I am sure if you closed polls in B.C. at 4 p.m., the percentage of people who voted would drop. I have no way of knowing that for sure, but I suspect it really would. I will be interested in hearing the views of the western members. Quite frankly, it would not bother me, but I am just not sure there is evidence to show that the benefits would outweigh the pain or inconvenience.

This was in reference to a private member's bill introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. On the same day and at the same meeting, as reported at page 11 of the proceedings, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) said:

> The election clock I suppose is more of a political question, and Mr. Smith brought up a couple of points that are interesting. I suppose speaking personally as a Liberal if uniformity is going to increase the Liberal vote in the west, then I am in favour of it, because that was the corollary of the argument which Mr. Smith put forward.

It is unfortunate that we cannot view this matter through the eyes of the people of British Columbia. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra did introduce a private member's bill, as he is entitled to, which dealt with this matter but despite that I do not think the Conservative Party is wedded to the proposition.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration spoke about consultation I had to wonder who he was referring to. I am sure that in the next few days he and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will receive a number of letters from small business people who are concerned about the provisions of the bill and about the expense they may have to incur in freeing their employees between 1.30 and 5.30 p.m. Does the government intend to close down the schools in British Columbia, the Yukon and parts of Alberta at 1.30 p.m. or 2.30 p.m. so that the teachers may have their four hours free to vote? Does the same apply to manufacturing plants and government offices and industries?

The minister should ask the Prime Minister to show him some of the telegrams he received today. They came from the British Columbia and Yukon Territory Building and Construction Trades Council; Jack Munro, the President of the IWA, representing thousands of forestry workers in British Columbia and the United Steelworkers of America in Vancouver, who are all opposed to Bill C-113. These are the people the parliamentary committee should consult before making decisions about parliamentary reform. These things should not be left to members of Parliament, who often have a jaundiced view of reality from Parliament Hill.

I would urge the parliamentary secretary to look upon this debate as a positive thing instead of dismissing it, a course of action which the Minister of Employment and Immigration seems to favour.

There are alternatives, Mr. Speaker. The problems faced in British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the Yukon must be addressed. People there are concerned about knowing the result of the election before they go to vote.

The member of the Conservative Party who spoke ahead of me indicated that there was a possibility of delaying the count in eastern Canada, but I do not think that is a practical proposition. It would mean asking the scrutineers in Newfoundland to sit around for four and a half hours before starting to count. That is not logical. Indeed, we might have some interesting results from Newfoundland—perhaps the NDP would elect six members there, depending on what the scrutineers were doing for that four and a half hours! Perhaps we should try it for a year to see how it works out. There is the possibility of counting the votes but not releasing the results. I think there could be some difficulty with that, however.

We should consider tightening the broadcast provisions in the Canada Elections Act and the broadcast regulations under the CRTC. There is also the possibility of imposing harsher penalties on cablevision companies that violate the Canada Elections Act or the Broadcasting Act. Perhaps there could be a delay in the message reaching British Columbia and the prairie provinces. We must not disenfranchise the voters of British Columbia.

This bill is a sop to British Columbia and to western Canada from a Liberal government that has no idea how to react to the real concerns of western Canada. These are concerns about the economy, about employment, about technology and all the things on which British Columbians and people in Saskatchewan have been seeking direction from the government for some time.

For the Minister of Employment and Immigration to criticize this party for moving a motion of this nature shows he has lost contact with the constituency in western Canada. As my colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) says—if he ever had it.

• (2110)

The issue we are dealing with tonight is an important one, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council has some comments to make it will be to tone down the Liberal side of this debate and to suggest there is some room to negotiate a change in Bill C-113 before it goes any further. I am sure if he were to talk to the opposition parties and consult some of the groups in British Columbia and the prairie provinces, he would make more friends out there—if that is what they are looking for—by doing that rather than trying to force this on us with the excuse that it is democratic and will make for uniform voting hours right across the country.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be quite brief because I am fully aware that a lot of time was taken up earlier today on a question of privilege and the NDP did not get the debate on their motion started until about 5.30 o'clock.

It is important to keep several things in mind when looking at the issue before us, just to keep it in perspective. First, this bill is not about to be rammed through. Whether or not we get to second reading debate during this session remains to be seen; we do have a pretty heavy agenda. But in the event that it does go through second reading, it would of course go to committee where there will be ample opportunity for amendments to be moved, which amendments will be given serious consideration by this side of the House. Also, I think it is very important to look at the origins of this bill. If someone came into the House tonight for the first time they might somehow get the impression that this bill represents a heinous and dastardly plot cooked up in the minds of Liberal members. Of course, that is not correct. What happened is that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), a western Conservative, introduced a private member's bill which would do more or less exactly what the bill in question here tonight does. In addition, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), a western Conservative, also introduced a bill to the same effect. Therefore, to suggest that this is somehow a Liberal plot simply is at odds with the facts.

Any suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that because of this bill people in the west will be disenfranchised is also totally untrue. The number of hours that polls will be open would be the same throughout Canada. Why does this idea seem to have some appeal to some western members? Well, it may interest the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) to know that when I was a boy going to Sir James Douglas school, Central Junior high and Victoria high school, all on Vancouver Island, a favourite item in the litany of western grievances was that what happened in the west as far as elections were concerned did not really count because it was all decided back in the east. I always felt that was a bit of a misconception. If you wanted to blame anyone, I suppose you could blame God because the sun moved from east to west. Had God arranged it so that the sun moved from west to east, perhaps we would have this complaint from the people in eastern Canada.

In any event, the reason for this bill was a desire on the part of this government to be responsive to a western concern. The idea was not spawned in our minds but in the minds of a couple of western Conservative members who presented private members' bills. We on this side of the House, in our continual effort to be reasonable and responsive—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: —listened in order to try to do what we can to address the problem of western alienation. We said, well, perhaps they have a good idea here, let us show some responsiveness and go along with it. The idea seems to have a fair bit of merit. That is really what it is all about. I think anyone who approaches this issue with an open mind would have to admit that the government is in that well-known position of being damned if it leaves things as they are and damned if it tries to rectify things as we propose to do with this bill.

I do not want to take any more time away from opposition members, but let us bear in mind that this is not a Liberal plot. It is, rather, a move on the part of the government in response to a couple of private members' bills moved by opposition members from the west who felt this was a reasonable way to address an historical grievance. What it boils down to is that this government is concerned about the extent of western alienation and it has tried to listen and go along with what has been presented as being a reasonable way to try to eliminate one of these historical grievances. After second reading it will go to committee where there will be an opportunity for clause by clause examination, and hon. members opposite can move all the amendments they want. I can assure them that the government will listen to and judge those amendments on their merits with the same reasonableness and responsiveness which I have indicated here tonight.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, first I want to point out one of the fundamental differences between the two parties of the socialist alliance.

Mr. Smith: We are free enterprisers.

Mr. Huntington: The parliamentary secretary shouts across the floor that members of the Liberal Party are free enterprisers. Never in the history of the democratic world has a party, going under the label of liberalism, done so much damage to the free enterprise movement or the spirit of free enterprise in the world. The tragedy is that you keep trying to tell them this, but their minds are so locked in they cannot hear you. They cannot hear the people. They cannot even read the polls or the message from the recent election in Saskatchewan with respect to the socialist alliance between them and the NDP.

However, one thing I want to say on behalf of the NDP is that, in my opinion, they have a tremendous respect for the parliamentary democratic system. In that regard I have the utmost respect for them, although I do not always agree with their ideas and their desire to have the state control all the means of production. However, I am prepared to debate that strongly and openly with them in the parliamentary system. On the other hand, the Liberals use the free enterprise label, use the trust that people had in them, to move this country away from a participatory democracy into that of a leadership democracy. That is why I am rather pleased that the NDP have used an opposition day to talk about Bill C-113 and to give warning that it is totally unacceptable to that part of the country I come from, namely, British Columbia. I appreciate the work that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has done on this issue and his warning that if this bill comes forward it will disenfranchise those of us who live in British Columbia, Alberta and the Yukon. I have said that I respect him. I put the same kind of importance on this matter as members of the New Democratic Party do. I think it is an important measure because to me the participatory democratic parliamentary system in this country is being threatened. We have moved into a leadership type of democracy, which I think is a very serious move.

I thank the NDP for this opportunity that I have been given to speak on their opposition day motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: I will say it again, again and again because hon. members on the opposite side just cannot hear. If I ever heard an arrogant, irresponsible speech from a minister, it was the one made in this House tonight which the only minister elected from western Canada gave. I think he did the Liberal Party right across the land a great deal of harm. I am sure the west will just accept it for the arrogance and ignorance that has been displayed in this House tonight. There is no respect on the other side of the House for democracy. Power is the issue. It is power at any price. It is arrogance that "we will lead, that we will not listen. We do not have to listen to you. We have the power, and that is it."

Why are we in the west excited? It is pretty tough to pick up the phone at 5.30 in the afternoon, with two and a half hours yet to go in the polls, and to learn the results as they are coming in from Atlantic and central Canada. You can defeat a cabinet minister which might be a great personal victory for all the people who were involved in a democratic election, but it is sure a downer when you know the results for the country have been decided two and a half hours before voting is finished in the west.

We heard an awful lot in the constitutional debate on fairness and equity. We heard about treating people equally and that different parts of the country are entitled to fairness. But if we are going to have that fairness, surely the government should withdraw Bill C-113. Bill C-113 gives a different time schedule for each of the time zones across the country. As a nation, Canada has four and half different time zones. Our challenge is to manage that difference. I think the people in each of the different time zones should have the polls open to them through the same hours of the day. The polls open at 9 a.m. and close at 8 p.m. in eastern, central or mountain time. Therefore, they should be opened at 9 a.m. and close at 8 p.m. in the Pacific standard time zone and in the Yukon time zone. I think that is only fair. As you move west, particularly as it affects B.C. and Alberta, the schedule set out in Bill C-113 puts an unequal burden on the employment sector of the country. After all, this whole economy lives on the ability of people to generate wealth and pay taxes. The employers' council in B.C. has stated that an unfair and unequal burden is placed on its members by the polls closing at 5.30 p.m. I accept that. We have heard many suggestions here tonight. We have heard the suggestions put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quandra (Mr. Clarke) in a private member's bill. You will find that my remarks will even be at odds with some of my colleagues from this party who have spoken. But you know, Mr. Speaker, we have not caucussed on this motion nor have we caucussed on the principles of Bill C-113. We are using an opposition day to supply warnings and to get some discussions which might allow us to come up with something that is fair and equitable for each of the time zones across the country.

As a westerner, we have never been able to understand why the polls just do not run through and why they do not keep the ballot boxes from Newfoundland, the Atlantic and Quebec closed and only start to count the votes when the polls close out west. However, that suggestion has been pointed out to me as being quite impractical. We have volunteers, scrutineers, poll captains and all the paraphernalia and staffing of a polling station. Those people would be sitting for some four and a half hours before the counting could start. I know if I were in Newfoundland or somewhere else in Atlantic Canada I would not be sipping tea or coffee while waiting for four or four and a half hours. It would be pretty difficult to keep the crew of volunteers together. That suggestion really has a down side and does not make too much sense.

An hon. Member: It would be one big party.

Mr. Huntington: It would be one big party and there would be a lot of recounts in the days following.

Mr. Prud'homme: Be careful. Could I ask a question Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. member for Capilano accept a question from the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme)?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, if it will give me some peace and quiet, yes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member very kindly to be very careful because more and more we have to be careful of what we say in the House. I do not know what he implies by these difficulties that may take place in the east, that there may be a lot of recounts. What does the hon. member imply by that, that an easterner would do what?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member move out of his province and into the Atlantic provinces to learn some of the folklore, the life and the way things happen. Perhaps after that he could come out west to see what happens when a group of hard-working volunteers with common objectives get together with four and a half hours to kill.

The opening of the ballot boxes at a uniform time across the country is impractical. Perhaps we can solve the problem by having the same voting hours in each of the different time zones. I think it would be fair and equitable if we had a 14-hour period after the polls are closed before the ballot boxes of the country are opened.

We stay up all night watching the returns trickle in. But you can go to bed and wake up in the morning and still not have the complete results. Therefore, if we had, say, a space of 14 hours in each of the time zones following the closing of the boxes before the scrutineers and the returning officers assemble in each of the ridings to count the ballots, perhaps we can deliver the equity and fairness that we in the west certainly want because of the handicap of time zones across the country. That is one suggestion we might look at.

Personally I think we will be in serious trouble if we accept the time schedule which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra put forward in his private member's bill, which the government has now picked up and put in Bill C-113. However, I would also remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was speaking in a far broader context. He wanted the polls opened fewer hours, but he also wanted to widen the franchise to ensure that no one is prevented from voting by reason of change of residence. He wanted to make it easier for proxy votes. He did not want this only for students, fishermen, mariners and air crews. He wanted to eliminate the need for registrar's certificates for students and eliminate the need for medical certificates for the sick. Those other things were what he suggested in his private member's bill in the preparation of which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) lent his efforts. He opened up the whole issue for discussion. As everyone in this House knows, private members' bills do not come out of caucus committees, caucus sessions and debate.

Let us see what would happen if you were to go ahead with the closing of the polls at 5.30. In my riding of Capilano we have a very narrow bridge which was built in 1933-1934. Quite often there is an accident on that bridge which jams up the flow of traffic. Sometimes you can be in those traffic jams for an hour and a half to three hours. What do you think would happen in a situation like that? I do not think you could risk closing the polls at 5.30, because people may be unable to vote.

What about the people who work in downtown Vancouver? They have to travel the artery to Highway 1 to the Fraser Valley. If an accident occurs on that highway, there is a traffic jam. The risks of a 5.30 closing in British Columbia and on the lower mainland are extremely serious in that it might prevent people from exercising their franchise. There would also be a rush because 74 per cent of the people vote between six and eight o'clock in the afternoon on polling day. There would still be a tendency to allow that. If people rushed to the doors of the polling stations at 5.30 o'clock, what is the returning officer or the poll captain to do? Should they shut the doors, leaving an angry mob outside? Should they allow them to come in and have confusion in the polling stations? There are very, very serious hazards in any change in the system which would move closing time from eight o'clock to 5.30 in British Columbia. It is very unfair. It will increase regional alienation in Canada rather than decrease it. We must look at a positive time after the polls close but before the counting starts in order to give the country the equity it needs.

I have another misapprehension. Members of the NDP seem to want to put more regulations, controls, fines and penalties on the media. The problem is not the media in eastern Canada leaking the count as it moves west. Anyone in western Canada can pick up the telephone and call a friend in Ontario, Quebec or Nova Scotia; the results are available to anyone who is interested in the policital process. If we start to regulate the media—television, radio and the press—that regulation will have to spill over into the United States because the United States is indifferent to what happens in politics in Canada. Its television stations or news hours on radio discuss the early Canadian returns. The only way to stop communications which cause stresses and strains within the country is to include a period of delay before the counting starts, not by threatening everyone with fines and more regulations or with a big iron fist in their faces. Then the count would come out with everyone having voted not knowing in advance of poll closing what others have done.

I have covered the points which I consider to be important. I urge the government to withdraw Bill C-113. It should not bring it forward. The government should rethink the time schedules in Clause 2(5). It should get away from that approach altogether, or it will cause more alienation in the west. I have tried to keep my reasoning as cool and calm as I can on this issue and on the bill which could have a disastrous effect upon the entire democratic process in my particular region. If the government carries on with Bill C-113, it will disenfranchise the voters of British Columbia, Yukon and Alberta. It should hear some of the comments expressed in this debate, rethink the issue, meet in caucus on it, and come up with something which will work and be good for the country.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House of Commons from western Canada, I should like to express the concerns of my constituents and of many people who live in western Canada about Bill C-113. It is amazing that the Liberal government is asking, in this particular bill, the people in British Columbia and Yukon to vote before 5.30 o'clock. Let me explain the problem I foresee. In my rather short experience I have worked as a campaign organizer, campaign manager and as an official agent in various election campaigns. I know that the majority of voters are people who work.

Let me explain what happens in a city like Thompson, Manitoba. At two o'clock on election day a campaign worker will receive a telephone call, for example, from a plant worker who has been told by his employer that he can have four hours off to vote, but this means that the employee is required to go to his boss and request time off to vote. A large number of Canadian voters cannot vote because they are unable to obtain the time off they wish. Some cashiers, clerks and persons who stock shelves, have requested time off to vote, and employers have said no. Some employers have not allowed employees the four hours off to vote. Certainly all voters want to vote, but under our system employers can determine who can vote and who cannot vote.

Mr. Prud'homme: This is why the Liberals are so weak in the west.

Mr. Murphy: The Liberals do not seem to care. A Liberal member right across from me is saying that it does not matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will never let this young colleague of ours get away with a comment such as that. That is not what I said. Too often we allow such comments to go unnoticed. This is not what I said. The hon. member should listen more attentively. I do not want such comments to be registered under my name because it is not what I said. If the hon. member did not hear, he can always check the "blues" later.

An hon. Member: He never referred to you by name; don't be so sensitive.

Mr. Prud'homme: Well, I am the only one across from him.

Mr. Murphy: I did not realize that there was only one Liberal member across from me. If he was the only Liberal member heckling, then of course this applies to him. If there were other Liberal members heckling—

Mr. Fisher: Name them!

Mr. Hopkins: What do you mean by "if"?

Mr. Prud'homme: Get back to your speech.

Mr. Murphy: —then he has no right at all to rise on a point of order. Let me be more precise by referring to what will happen to western Canadians who live in British Columbia, Yukon or in Saskatchewan. With this legislation proposed by the Liberal government, people will be able to vote by 5.30 at night or 6.30 at night, but they will only get time off to vote when their employers decide to give it to them. Employers can decide when employees receive four hours off work to vote, or when employees can obtain four hours off to vote in any advance poll.

Until the present time there have been many problems with employers—and I use Safeway of Canada as an example—saying that employees can have time off if they want it. The employer says, "You can have the time if you want". There are many situations where the employee will go to his manager, whether or not he is unionized, to say that he does want the four hours allowed to him by Canadian law in order to vote. The employer will say to him that he does not appreciate the fact that he wants to go to vote. The employer asks, "Are you sure you want those four hours?" As someone who has been a campaign manager and organizer in the past, I know that people do not get those four hours. Those employers who do not care for the rights of employees say, "You do not want that right," If you happen to live in the riding of Provencher, I am sure that the member who represents that riding or some other member would not support you in that particular case.

I have had to fight during every federal or provincial election I have been involved in to convince the employer that all employees have a right to vote. All employees have the right to have four hours in which to vote. Just review what this legislation says.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), in putting forward his argument, does not want to be completely misleading and does not want to insult the highest percentage of employers across Canada by saying that workers have to come and ask their permission to vote. I have been around a long time and I have yet to know of an employee who had to come to ask for permission to vote. They are entitled to four hours and they get it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is presenting an argument. The hon. member for Churchill has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, to answer the point of order, which was not one, I know from my own personal experience there are many workers who have had to go to their employer to ask for time off to vote.

Miss Bégin: Name them.

Mr. Murphy: Safeway. I also know that in my riding—

Miss Bégin: Name them.

Mr. Murphy: I have just named one.

Miss Bégin: Name the others.

Mr. Murphy: If the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is that concerned, the government would be doing something about it. I will not spend my time listing all of them. I have named one employer.

The point is that under the present legislation in Canada—

Mr. Huntington: That is very misleading.

Mr. Murphy: Under the present legislation in Canada and the Conservatives do not give a damn—

Mr. Prud'homme: Oh, come on!

Mr. Epp: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and possibly a question of privilege. I thought that the debate today was relatively non-partisan on the basis that this was an approach to solve what has developed as an electoral problem. For any member to get up and say that a party does not care about electoral reform is going too far in terms of debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not making a point of order. The hon. member for Churchill has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: The point I am making is that there are employers in my riding, as I am sure there are in ridings of other members, who have denied their workers the right to have four hours off to vote. Since the Conservatives and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are heckling me, I must say that they do not care about the people whom I represent who have a valid concern, which I am sure other constituents have also. If I am being heckled on that point I must assume that Members of Parliament do not care.

The point I am making is that this legislation contains two main provisions. It says that in the province of British Columbia and the Yukon territories you must vote by 5.30 at night. It also states that the employer has the right to designate on which day you can vote. Under the present legislation, you are entitled to have four hours off in order to vote on election day. All employers in Canada are required to give their employees this time off on election day. However, the sneaky provision in this legislation, which both the Tories and the Liberals know of, is that only the employer is allowed to determine on what day the employee can vote.

Mr. Huntington: That is nonsense.

Mr. Murphy: That is exactly what the legislation provides for.

Mr. Huntington: You do not even know the act.

Mr. Murphy: I am surprised that the Conservative party thinks I do not know the act. I do not think that they know the act.

I will tell you what the legislation really means. I have been an employee. I have been told that I can have four hours off when the employer decides. I know that this situation is true, I am not making it up. I am talking from my own experience because I have been told that I can vote when my employer decides. One section of this legislation allows the employer to decide that his employee may vote any one of the advanced polling days. I can give an example of what this means. There is a particular plant in British Columbia where the polls close at 5.30. This plant where employees are represented by the IWA, will determine, for example, that a particular group of employees who traditionally vote NDP can vote on Wednesday, another group may vote on Thursday and that management can vote on election day. That is what this legislation provides for. That is what the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) and Senator Austin are saying. The employer will determine the day on which the employee can vote. If the Conservatives are not concerned about that, let them say so on their own time instead of complaining right now.

It is quite obvious that the only group who will suffer from a 5.30 closing and from the right given to employers to decide when to vote are the working people of Canada.

I have been talking mainly about unionized employees. It is a group which is well represented and defended. What will happen to the non-unionized employees? Can you imagine a non-union employee who lives in Vancouver, for example, or the interior of British Columbia, telling his employer that he has to vote by 5.30 but lives a 90-minute or even a two-hour drive from his polling station? I do not expect the Liberals to understand because they do not have any members in the west.

• (2150)

An hon. Member: Buy a faster car!

Mr. Murphy: Go to your seat and you can speak when it is your turn and prove what kind of a fool you are.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Smith: Come on, now.

Mr. Murphy: If the hon. member wants to speak from behind the curtains, he is obviously a fool.

But the problem, quite obviously, is that those people cannot go to their employers and say, "I want to vote on election day." What will happen? Quite honestly, when the employer decides that he can vote on election day, or any number of the advance poll days, the employer could be in a position, based on his or her own judgment, to say, "I will let those voters who agree with me vote on the day that I think is reasonable, and the IWA members, the steelworkers, the metalworkers and the fishermen, will vote when I determine. I will give them early morning on a Wednesday to vote and I will tell them that morning, when they arrive at work." I do not know the intention of the government, and I am very suspicious as to the intentions of the Official Opposition, but I will tell hon. members that this is not legislation which the working people of Canada want and it is certainly not legislation which the working people of western Canada want. If the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member from B.C., the former minister of—

An hon. Member: Small business.

Mr. Murphy: —yes, the very small-minded businessman—do not know what the people, the workers want, then I will say this: listen to those workers once they find out what that legislation is, because that legislation means they will not be able to vote, and that is all it means. They will not be able to vote and those—

Some hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Murphy: —hon. members from the Tory Party who supported this, as it was their idea in the first place, and those hon. members from the Liberal Party who supported this, including Senator Austin, are saying that they do not want the working people of Canada to vote, and when that is the case, we might as well be back in fifteenth or sixteenth century England.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher rises on a point of order.

Mr. Epp: My point of order is simply that the motion we have before us and Bill C-113, which was developed out of a private member's motion, was not endorsed by the Conservative Party, and it would be refreshing if the hon. member stayed with the original point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gave the hon. member an opportunity to speak previously. I recognize the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Crosby: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the fact that the practices and precedents in the House permit you, as Speaker and presiding officer, to recognize whomever you see fit to see. But the fact is that the tradition has developed whereby the representation has been recognized day after day and month after month in the House, and I stood in my place and you saw fit to recognize the hon. member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member seeks—

Mr. Crosby: I ask you, Sir, what principles are you following?

Mr. Smith: It is a slight to the Chair.

Mr. Crosby: Of course it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has been trying to observe, as scrupulously as possible, the traditional principles of the House, bearing in mind that this is an opposition motion from the New Democratic Party. At this stage, the Chair has very little option but to recognize the spokesman from the government side of the House.

Mr. Crosby: Why?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Saint-Denis.

An hon. Member: Two minutes.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am even ready to give two minutes to the hon. member because I believe we should exchange views.

Mr. Crosby: Stick it in your ear.

Mr. Prud'homme: But I know that if the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker were here tonight, he would be very happy to see some of us—at least, that is what he wrote me—

An hon. Member: Wrote you!

Mr. Prud'homme: —to see some of us standing up right now, who did not expect to participate in the debate, but that is exactly what the House of Commons is made of and made for.

I listened to the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) in his sanctimonious piety—and this is an acceptable term—saying, for instance, that he does not know what the government wants and that he is suspicious of the Official Opposition, meaning, of course, only that the members of the NDP, in their great piety, are the right ones to talk about that subject. If he would only read his own motion, and if he would only read Bill C-113 carefully, he would see that this is a proposal to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. So the hon. members, after having expressed themselves in the House on second reading, having put forward the proposal, will not put the hatchet or the whip to the bill, but will only send the bill to the committee so that the hon. member for Churchill and the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) could make their representations on behalf of their parties.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—

Mr. Huntington: Capilano.

Mr. Prud'homme: —who have put forward proposals, could say, "I would like to combine some of the proposals in committee the philosophy behind what we are proposing—

Mr. Murphy: You have no philosophy.

Mr. Prud'homme: The hon. member for Churchill had better be careful, because I once had the privilege of speaking in this district, and I see that his majority is being reduced more and more to the point of his being defeated, so he is not telling us anything new in this House. This is the reason for my participation. I did not expect to participate. But I heard him throwing all kinds of names up into the air, as though he were accusing some unknown Conservative and some unknown Liberal, of plotting together so that many people would not be able to vote, when he refers to the four hours allowed. If he has names to put forward, as he did earlier on in reply to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), and if he thinks some illegalities were committed, the electoral law provides for it.

Mr. Huntington: Absolutely.

Mr. Prud'homme: If someone deprives someone of voting, when the law stated that one is allowed four hours, one knows that this is illegal and that that person could be prosecuted. If the hon. member for Churchill has that many examples.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Be quiet, please. We are trying to be quiet here, but—and I do not name people—if the hon. member has a proposal or a complaint, there was a time to raise it and a law which provides for this. I was listening to him because I am very concerned about the alienation of the west, and the hon. member is talking to someone who will soon have been in the House of Commons for 19 years. I went to western Canada to speak, over 200 times, so I know what the hon. member is talking about. I know there is that kind of alienation. I am speaking as a Canadian, not as a Quebecer. I am speaking as a Canadian who is interested. I want to know why there is such alienation. This is exactly the meaning of this bill.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: How can we cope with that?

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: If we are wrong, we could amend our bill when we go to the committee. There is a point of order raised by my hon. colleague and friend, the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Crosby: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Murphy: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that it may be a minor point, but I certainly did not attack the hon. member on where he is from and I did not attack his party from where it is from. The point is that there are people in this country who do not get to vote—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not raising a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I still have two minutes, Mr. Speaker. It is two minutes before ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN DORVAL AND MIRABEL—INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, on April 21, 1980, I put a question in this House to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). It has always been the same question, namely, when are we going to have a decision on the transfer of flights from Dorval to Mirabel? The minister answered that his goal was to transfer all air traffic, with the exception of short-haul domestic routes, and I believe this objective is still valid today. On December 2, 1980, Mr. Speaker, I again brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport the problems arising from Mirabel. Once more, the minister said that a decision was imminent. On February 18, 1981, I again asked the Minister of Transport about Mirabel and again, the minister said that studies had been made and that I would soon have a reply.

On March 23, Mr. Speaker, again in the House, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) replied that studies had been prepared and that an announcement would be made shortly. On April 23, 1981, I again raised the subject of Mirabel in the House. On February 16, 1982, a delegation of 33 mayors from North Shore communities and some eighty councillors came here to ask the minister to give them some hope that a decision in the Mirabel case was forthcoming. In answer to a question I put to him in the House, the minister then replied that he was getting ready, in the minister's words, to table in cabinet in the days ahead, a document that would help provide a solution to the Mirabel-Dorval problem. Furthermore, the minister promised before you, Mr. Speaker, to hand down a decision within the next three months.

Well, Mr. Speaker, on May 14, only a few days ago, I asked the Minister of Transport once again when we would be getting a decision. This evening, I see it as my duty to tell the House, as the representative of the people of Mirabel, the riding of Argenteuil-Papineau and the entire area north of Montreal, that mayors cannot make decisions and plan for their municipal operations because they are still waiting for a decision on what is going to happen to Mirabel. I am not asking the minister to tell me which flights he is going to transfer. I am asking for a decision on Mirabel. Mr. Speaker, It seems to me that I am not asking for the moon. All my North Shore colleagues have put pressure on the minister. All my North Shore colleagues have asked the minister for a reply, and this evening again I must address the Minister of Transport, through you, Mr. Speaker, and tell him: For heaven's sake, Mr. Minister, people have been waiting for a decision for ten years. After all, the government built the airport. It has been called a white elephant. It has been called all sorts of names, but Mr. Speaker, the people have a right to a decision on this issue, and it is this decision I am asking for, and I am asking for a decision as soon as possible.

• (2205)

[English]

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for his perseverence and his sensitivity on a very controversial and difficult subject. All of us know he is impatient for an answer. We have heard his comments in the past. We sympathize with him, and by no means are we trying now to make any further difficulty either for him or for the people he represents. Instead, all of us feel it is important to come to a decision, as he has asked.

It is equally important to come to the right decision, and that involves a long and often complicated process. It is a very difficult matter involving interests which go in all directions. Simple desire for speed does not always result in a satisfactory solution. I think we have to have adequate evidence that all parties have been heard and that all the cases have been aired.

I would like to say, just as a quick side note, that I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is one minister who pays very close attention to all sides of a case. On the one hand, he is not afraid to come to grips with issues but, on the other hand, he does so in a way which allows all parties to express their feelings. Certainly the Mirabel case is one instance in which this is happening. The Crow rate case in the west is another.

Mr. Fraser: VIA Rail was another.

Mr. Fisher: Whether it is with respect to transportation of dangerous goods, harbours policy, air policy—

Mr. Fraser: VIA Rail.

Mr. Fisher: —or a wide range of other policies, we have seen this minister come to grips with very difficult issues and do so in a sensitive and democratic fashion.

It is precisely that pattern of behaviour I want to remind the hon. member is going on here. I appreciate the hon. member's impatience. I think he is doing an outstanding job in raising this issue in such a persistent way. At the same time I hope he too will recognize the need the minister has to be sensitive and democratic in his decision-making process.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—TAX EXEMPTION SOUGHT FOR WEST COAST HELICOPTER. (B) POSITION OF MINISTER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, some time ago a volunteer society in British Columbia, which has been working to establish a competent and efficient coast mountain rescue operation, purchased, with funds raised by volunteers, an American helicopter which was fitted out for mountain rescue and capable not only of helping to find people lost in the coast mountains but also of transporting them out, whether they are injured or not. The cost of this helicopter was $200,000. When the society had the helicopter at the border, the government moved in. The excise branch of the federal Department of National Revenue initiated a charge of $16,000 on the helicopter being brought into Canada. Of course, the volunteer society protested and said, "Why is this tax being imposed on this aircraft when aircraft for public use do not have that tax imposed on them?" In its intransigence the government said that the law—or the regulations; it has never made it very clear—do not allow any room to manoeuvre.

As a consequence of public attention and that of Members of Parliament, myself included, being brought to the matter, and of having written to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) asking whether this was as a consequence of statute law, regulation or government directive, we received the answer from the Minister of National Revenue that it was the law. He did not provide very much definition as to where the law was found, but that was the law, and nothing could be done.

In answer to a question I asked the other day the minister said:

> I recognize that it does a valuable job—

That is, the society.

> —but I am afraid under the present circumstances we have gone as far as we can in responding to it.

• (2210)

The fact is that the minister has not responded to this. All the minister has done is to say that whatever the law is he cannot change it. He has not addressed the central question in this issue and that is, what is the opinion of the government? Should this be taxed or should it not? What public purpose is served by taxing this particular aircraft? I suggest there is none.

When the minister says there is nothing he can do about it I would remind him and anyone who is listening, that as minister if he wants to change the Excise Tax Act—if that is necessary—if he wants to change the regulations—if that is necessary—then he can do that. No one else can but he can. Any crocodile tears that he sheds are just that; they are not sincere.

I want to point out that the minister apparently does not even know, perhaps his officials have not advised him, that under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, a remission can be given for this tax. As almost everyone knows, that section provides that the governor in council—that means cabinet—on the recommendation of the Treasury Board and whenever it is considered to be in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty.

The section is a lengthy one and it has been used many times in this country. As I said recently, Mr. Speaker, this is the reason that Canadians are so fed up with a government that has a majority and that could do something for a volunteer organization but will not do anything. Either the minister will not do anything because he does not know the law or has not the courage to try to change it or he is getting bad advice from his officials. In any event, absolutely nothing is being done, and that is a shame. The one thing that people are entitled to expect from a minister who has the power, is that if it is in the public interest to do something, then he will do it.

I should like to know from the parliamentary secretary, who has to answer for the minister tonight, why the minister will not avail himself of the courses available to him, including use of the Financial Administration Act, to correct this ridiculous situation. Everyone in the province of British Columbia thinks it is completely ridiculous. They cannot understand why a minister who has the power to do something just says, "That is the law and I will not do anything". In effect, that is what is happening and I should like some answers.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the arguments put forward by the hon. member although I am sorry that at the end he allowed himself to get in so many cheap political shots. Initially he raised some good discussion and I should like to deal with that.

The hon. member knows there is a big difference between some kind of government program as a social policy and a specific tax law. He is asking us to use the tax law because someone is operating a valuable social service. It is as if we should reward them for doing that.

In the debates that have taken place about the budget since last November, we have seen the kind of confusion that happens when tax law is used to promote undefined or ill defined or hard to define social goals. People use the tax law for personal gain or corporate gain in the name of some social benefit. Since November the government has been trying to draw a clear distinction between tax policy on the one hand and social policy on the other.

• (2215)

Let me make it quite clear that we regard the services provided by the group the member is representing as valuable and laudable services. We do not call them into question. At the same time we ask whether the tax policy is the proper place to offer incentives for that kind of service. Why not go to the minister of transport, federal or provincial? Why not go to some other ministers, health or social services of any sort, and ask for a grant under those provisions?

Mr. Fraser: Because your minister can create the exemptions, that is why.

Mr. Fisher: That would be much better than what the hon. member is trying to promote. He wants us to get back into this fuzzy area where tax policy is used on behalf of one specific group for the benefit society gains from that group's activities. We do not quarrel with the fact that these benefits are laudable and significant, but we simply ask him to put the pressure in the right place. I think that is a reasonable request to make. If he sees the distinction between tax policy and social policy, then I think he will understand why the minister cannot apply the law as loosely as he personally wanted.

Mr. Fraser: We will go to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin); perhaps she can do something.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS. (B) REQUEST THAT EMPLOYEES BE RETAINED IN EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, one week ago the CPR announced a four-week lay-off of 3,600 shop craft workers in Montreal, Winnipeg and Calgary. Thirteen hundred of those were in Winnipeg. This announcement followed the lay-off of 311 workers by the CPR for an indefinite period. I asked the minister last Friday whether it made sense for the CPR to be laying off large numbers of workers because of a decline in traffic, given the fact that, by the government's own calculation, there would be impressively large increases in various commodity shipments in the next few years. The minister's reply was completely unsatisfactory. He said the CPR just did not have the business to keep these people on.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the CNR announced a similar lay-off in its repair shops, a major share of which will again take place in Winnipeg. The reason given by the railways is quite simple: traffic is down because of the slowdown in our economy.

The question I posed to the government is whether the present slowdown should be the only factor in such a major decision on cutbacks. Recently the president of the Sony corporation was in Canada attending a seminar at which Japanese and North American business operations were analysed and compared. We have all heard about the success of the Japanese economy, its steady and large increase in gross national product and its successful penetration of world markets for manufactured goods, including automobiles, radio and television and, more recently, computers and microelectronic products. What did the president of Sony tell his audience in explaining why the Japanese were successful? He said that the difference between the North Amerian and Japanese companies was that North American companies—and he was talking about both the United States and Canada—looked at and thought about almost exclusively this year's balance sheet, while the Japanese companies were thinking and planning for 20 years down the line. That is why they have surged ahead in those fields I have enumerated. Why do I tell this story, Mr. Speaker? I do so because that message should have been studied by both the CNR and CPR and by our government. Yes, business is slow right now but a survey done by the Western Transportation Advisory Council has predicted that westbound bulk exports would increase between 1980 and 1990 in the following manner: coal from 14 million tons to 53 million tons; grain from 10 million tons to 19 million tons; sulphur from 5.4 million tons to 6.8 million tons; potash from 3.6 million tons to 9 million tons, an increase of over 200 per cent.

Our transportation system, Mr. Speaker, is already having difficulty in moving current sales. What will happen four or five years from now if we get the kind of increases which are projected? We will fail completely. Now when business is slow is the time for the railways to do the job that needs to be done to upgrade the system, to doubletrack the system, to modernize the signals and switching system, to build the thousands of new cars, hopper cars, freight cars and engines that we need. Now is the time to renovate much of the rolling stock. If we do not do it now, when will we do it? By 1990 we will be losing hundreds of millions of dollars of sales because we will not be able to deliver the goods that are sold. But the railways say they cannot afford it. I pointed out to the government its announcement of the $1 billion sale by Bombardier of subway cars to New York city. How was that done? The government helped finance the sale by providing an interest rate of 9.7 per cent. If we can do it for export sales, then I suggest that we can and we should be doing it to improve the transportation system in this country.

I say to the minister that if we can do that for Bombardier, we can do it for the railways. Now is the time to give the railways the kind of financial assistance they need to get the system ready so the railways can move the products that we will be able to sell four or five years from now. Now is not the time to be having the large-scale lay-offs that have been announced by both railways in the last week.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member has not done his homework. I think he has spent so long attacking railroads that he does not want to pay any attention now when they make an announcement. I am happy to draw to his attention the fact that Canadian Pacific Railway announced today the purchase of 50 new diesel electric locomotives in anticipation of future need, precisely the theme which the hon. member was pointing out.

Mr. Orlikow: That does not help the people who have been laid off.

Mr. Fisher: This order is worth $70 million. It will create 300,000 person-hours of work.

It is very important to note, for the sake of the hon. member so that he will know this fact in the future instead of blaming everybody, that 20 of these locomotives will be used on prairie branch lines. This is the first such purchase in ten years made by Canadian Pacific. It is made despite the opposition of the NDP to the streamlining of the grain shipments in western Canada, and despite the losses that railroad has suffered under the Crow rate.

I am also surprised that the hon. member has not done his homework in the area of lay-offs. I know that he is usually much closer to those sorts of questions than he is to grand corporate finance.

I would like to point out to him, as the minister said in reply to the question, that the people who have worked with the railways for two or more years will be collecting 80 per cent of their normal salary while they are laid off.

Mr. Orlikow: They will not be producing anything.

Mr. Fisher: I think those are important facts, and I am sorry that the hon. member did not know them before he made his intervention because he might have risen in this House instead to congratulate us and to congratulate the companies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 10.24 p.m. without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
