THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAMS TO INSTIL CONFIDENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, there is not a Canadian today who is not being affected by the serious economic recession in the country. The escalating collapse of our business base, the alarming rise in unemployment, a crippling increase in the cost of consumer goods and services, harshly punitive interest rates, and the indifferent attitude of this government toward its wasteful spending habits have all contributed to the tragic mess we are in today. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the government use its power, not simply as a means to rule and control arrogantly, but to govern in such a manner that it addresses the real and immediate needs of the people by developing programs with a sense of purpose and direction which will instil confidence in the public and in all sectors of the economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

SUGGESTED REALLOCATION OF FUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the recent news that the Department of Employment and Immigration has earmarked $5 million for an advertising campaign to convince Canadians that the economy as a whole is working, when the reality is that unemployment is at the highest level since 1940, is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians and a slap in the face to those 1.2 million Canadians unemployed as a result of the government's disastrous fiscal and monetary policy. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That, if the government is going to spend the $5 million, it would be better to invest it in job training for the unemployed, instead of wasting it on another attempt by this floundering government to sell itself to the voters with the taxpayers' dollars.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

FUEL COMPENSATION RECOVERY CHARGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the National Energy Program continues to drive Canadian business south of the border. We have recently learned that British Columbia companies are buying their fuel in the United States at a saving of 30 cents per gallon and that some Great Lakes shippers have called for tenders from the United States. Whereas the National Energy Program's export fuel tax is in part responsible for giving the United States the competitive edge on marine fuel prices, and whereas the government has promised flexibility on this tax, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources remove altogether the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge before the United States becomes Canada's number one supplier of marine fuel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CANDU TECHNICIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a motion under Standing Order 43. Whereas in answer to my question posed on Monday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources clearly did not understand the Candu reactor's unique on-line refuelling process and the fact that the spent fuel containing the plutonium can be removed from the reactor core, chemically changed, and diverted for military purposes at any time; and in view of the fact that in its desperation to sell Candu reactors the Canadian government is prepared to ignore the danger associated in doing business with the Argentinian government, a country beset by internal strife, a place where human rights do not exist and where thousands of people have simply disappeared, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the Canadian government withdraw 71 Canadian technicians from Argentina in order to express our opposition to human rights violations in that country and the occupation of the Falkland Islands and to ensure that the spent fuel from the Candu reactor will not be used to make nuclear weapons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, Liberal administrations over the past 14 years have consistently promised to fight inflation. It started with the Benson budget in 1968. In 1973 the minister of finance at that time, John Turner, said "This budget is aimed at reducing inflationary pressure in Canada and at offsetting the effect of past inflation." In 1974 the same minister said, "Two digit inflation . . . is simply not acceptable to this government." In the same year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised to wrestle inflation to the ground. In 1976 the then finance minister, Donald Macdonald, said "Our first objective must be to maintain the underlying trend to lower inflation." In 1978 the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) said, "We are being held back by serious unemployment and inflation and we must do all we can to deal with them."

• (1410)

It goes on and on. In 1980, 1981 and 1982 the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said the same thing. Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the present administration has lost the battle, inflation has gone from 4 per cent in 1968 to 11.6 per cent today.

Madam Speaker: Order. At every sentence I have been hoping the hon. member would finish his enumeration and go to his motion. I must ask him to go to the motion.

Mr. McDermid: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Prime Minister accept defeat in his battle against inflation, go to the Governor General to dissolve Parliament, call an election immediately, so that Canadians can decide who should be leading the battle against inflation and toward economic renewal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, in view of the importance and increased need for a greater emphasis on science and technology in order to reverse our economic decline, and in view of the fact that both Dr. Stuart Smith of the Science Council of Canada, and Dr. Larkin Kerwin of the National Research Council, have endorsed the urgent need for this new emphasis on science and technology, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That there be established a committee of the House of Commons to be known as the Standing Committee on Science and Technology.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—DEMAND THAT MINISTER ANSWER HOME OWNERS' QUESTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) made statements in this House yesterday which were misleading when he said the federal Liberal government was the only government attempting to help the owners of homes with urea formaldehyde foam insulation; whereas recently released research indicates that the federal government program may be a colossal $110 million failure, and in the interest of providing accurate, honest information to home owners so they will be informed about the long-term hazards they face, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That in the future the minister spend more time answering questions rather than criticizing his colleagues and misleading the people of the country, and that he and the Minister of National Health and Welfare give an undertaking that they will in this House provide written answers to the list of questions which are being given to him by hand this afternoon which have been asked by home owners with UFFI in their homes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PAYMENTS TO "STARS" TO ATTEND PARLIAMENT HILL CEREMONY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to take exception to the allegations that certain Canadians received funds from the public purse, courtesy of the CBC, to appear "spontaneously" in the crowds on Parliament Hill last weekend and be interviewed. I therefore rise to move and to ask, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

Twinkle, twinkle little star
You came to Ottawa from afar.
Did you come because you care?
Or because the CBC paid your fare?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Yesterday, the provincial court in St. Jerome decided to postpone a ruling on whether or not to evict 77 farmers from expropriated land at Mirabel until May 14. Considering the barbaric action taken by the President of the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Ltd., Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer, to cancel leases and evict farmers who, in fact, were merely trying to buy back land that was expropriated indiscriminately, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the House ask the government to return to the farmers, as soon as possible, 78,000 acres of land that were expropriated unnecessarily for the Mirabel airport.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister in the absence of a never-present Minister of Finance.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is he?

Mr. Wilson: The consumer price index for the first three months of this year has increased to 12.4 per cent. In the last three months of 1981 the consumer price index was up 8.8 per cent. At the same time, Statistics Canada told us the signs that the recession was about to bottom had vanished by the early part of this year. In the face of this, the government is dithering and doing nothing. With that very discouraging information, will the Prime Minister order the Minister of Finance to bring a new budget, a new economic statement, into this House, to give Canadians some sense of direction and confidence that the government knows what it is doing?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should take the time to read the budget speech again. He would find that in his speech the Minister of Finance included a formal commitment and the means for implementing it, namely, to invite all economic partners to join the government in the fight against inflation. Going even further to emphasize the government's determination, a point stressed by the hon. member, the Minister of Finance has embarked on a series of meetings with businessmen and people from all parts of the country to urge them to take part in the fight against inflation which is necessary if we want to lower interest rates and improve the state of the Canadian economy for the benefit of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I do not know where the Minister of State for Finance has been, but the economy is going down a sewer right now because the Minister of Finance is doing nothing. We do not need consultations. We need action from the government, action to settle the economy.

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. A few weeks ago the Prime Minister said that the reason for the current high level of interest rates was to fight inflation. In light of this very discouraging news on inflation, would the Prime Minister tell the House how high he expects interest rates have to go before inflation is beaten?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member quoted me incorrectly. I did not say that the reason for the high interest rates was to fight inflation; I said it was because inflation was high and people were only lending their money at higher rates of interest. That is why rates of interest are high, and that is why inflation must be brought down.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, that is a truism. What we need in this country is action, action from the Prime Minister, not some philosophical statements.

REQUEST THAT ENERGY TAXES BE REDUCED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me put another question to the Prime Minister. The key part of the increase in prices, according to the report released this morning, was the high price for gasoline, heating oil and natural gas. Since heavy federal government taxes are a very important part of these price increases, would the Prime Minister consider forgoing some of those taxes in order to reduce the price increase in energy costs, particularly in view of the fact that the United States now has gasoline prices lower than those in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member somehow takes affront because what I said was a truism. If the hon. member had not stated a falsism, I would not have had to state a truism.

In so far as the hon. member's suggestion as to tax policy is concerned, I will make sure the Minister of Finance receives the hon. member's message.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, because we have not been able to get answers, could I direct a question to the chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs? Would the chairman of that committee confirm that he has a definite arrangement for the Minister of Finance to appear at the committee hearings on April 29 and April 30, and again in the first week of May, so that for once this year the House of Commons committee can question the Minister of Finance with respect to his policies? The chairman knows that the Minister of Finance has ducked the committee hearings not only all last fall but so far all this year. Will he give us the commitment he has from the Minister of Finance as to his attendance next week and into the first week of May?

• (1420)

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the minister has given his commitment to meet on April 29 and April 30. The question about the first week of May was raised with me last night. I have not been able to talk with the minister. I have talked with his parliamentary secretary. We will do all in our power to see that the minister is able to attend in the first week of May, but certainly a commitment has been made for April 29 and 30, and I should add that on previous occasions the minister has not been at the committee for very good and valid reasons of public policy. We should not put forward the argument to the people that the minister is trying to avoid the committee, because it is not true.

REQUEST FOR VERIFICATION OF RUMOUR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, inasmuch as the chairman has said that the minister has not been avoiding the committee, could he perhaps enlighten the House as to what urgent meeting the Minister of Finance had in Toronto last evening, or is the rumour correct that the minister needed some time to prepare for examination by banks and other officials in Toronto and that he did not have the answers—

Madam Speaker: I am not sure that question can be answered by the chairman of the committee.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the past two years Canadians have been losing their homes, businesses have gone broke in record numbers—a thousand last month alone—and thousands of workers have lost their jobs, all in the name of a high interest rate policy allegedly aimed at curing inflation. Considering that the figures released today show that the cost of living rose more rapidly during the past month than for any period in almost a year, will the government finally admit that it was wrong and abandon this high interest rate dogmatism?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as I have had occasion to explain before to the hon. member, the government does not have a high interest rate policy. There are high interest rates because the rate of inflation is high. Naturally people who save money and put it aside do not want to lend it at low interest rates when the rate of inflation is high. This is why, time after time, I have attempted to convey to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that we do not have a policy of high interest rates, that we have high inflation. The way to bring down interest rates is to bring down inflation. This is why the endless suggestions of the New Democratic Party for spending on this, that, and the next thing, are not helping to bring down inflation. On the contrary, they are helping to increase the deficit, to increase the call on funds and, therefore, to increase interest rates. Perhpas he should try to understand that.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST THAT ACTION BE TAKEN TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if I needed a lesson in economics, the Prime Minister is the last person in the country to whom I would turn.

I have two supplementary questions following on what he said. There is an area in which the government can deal directly, which has seen a month-over-month increase of considerable proportion; that is, mortgage rates. A major reason for the increase in the cost of living last month was the high levels of mortgage rates. Considering that the federal government has jurisdictional authority over the banks, and considering that before he became Prime Minister there was a requirement in the laws affecting banks that they put up mortgage money at reasonable levels for Canadians, why does the Prime Minister not take action to bring down mortgage interest rate levels as established by the banks, so that Canadians could keep their homes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member prefaced his question by saying that I would be the last person he would want to ask about economics. Maybe I could take notice of his question and have the second last person give him the answer some other day.

Mr. Broadbent: That kind of flippancy is precisely what accounts for the high level of the Liberal party in the polls today. I asked the Prime Minister a serious question about federal jurisdictional authority over banking; I hope he will deal with it.

• (1425)

INSECURITY OF JOB HOLDERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question deals with a third area, which is unemployment. Yesterday the Minister of Finance acknowledged that high interest rates have an impact on the level of employment. He implied that having high interest rates will bring down the level of inflation, which will ultimately create more jobs. We have seen an increase in the cost of living directly related to the high interest rate policy. If the government is going to maintain the high interest rate policy, as the Prime Minister said today it will, will he at least admit that thousands more Canadians who already feel insecure about their jobs will lose them in the next few months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member often asks me rhetorical questions. I try to deal with the substance behind the questions, if there is any. He is just now repeating what I said was not the case. He is repeating that we have a high interest rate policy, and he also says that my policy is to try to keep interest rates high. It proves that he should really ask someone else about economics if he does not want to listen to me. He should try to understand some of the basics.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REASONABLE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, the question put by the previous speaker is so important that I wish to pursue the subject in a question that is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. The Prime Minister is aware that interest rates are responsible for the critical situation in the construction industry and that thousands of homes were not built during the past two years, as a result of the government's policy. The result has been unemployment. In the circumstances, considering the problems facing Canada, Canadians and Quebecers in the housing sector, is the Prime Minister prepared to make his Minister of Finance see the light and ask him to provide special interest rates for housing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is pursuing the question by the previous speaker, but is he suggesting that we should have a special interest rate just for the construction industry and—

Mr. La Salle: We have to start somewhere!

Mr. Trudeau: —is it not going to apply to other sectors? All right, I will let the Minister of Finance know that the hon. member is interested in the construction industry but not in farmers or small business or the fishing industry, and so on.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPLY PREFERRED INTEREST RATES TO CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, speaking about the fishing industry, I remember the Right Hon. Prime Minister said two years ago that if gas was going to cost 18 cents more per gallon, fishermen would not be able to afford to go to their fishing grounds. I wonder what is happening to the fishermen today.

My question today is concerned with housing. I could ask the same sort of question with respect to agriculture. I wish to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister—in fact, the Prime Minister is aware that ten of his members made no secret of the fact that they wanted to see thousands of housing units built, and the answer they got from the Prime Minister was: Send me a letter of resignation instead. Is the Prime Minister at least prepared to recommend, not to ask, to recommend and explain to his Minister of Finance, who still does not understand the problem, that special rates are absolutely essential to get the construction industry going again and provide and maintain employment for thousands of workers. All the members of this House understand that.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course my members understand the problems presently facing the construction industry, but the same problems are also confronting small businesses, farmers—

Mr. La Salle: Small businesses should get something out of it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please!

CRIMINAL CODE

REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF SUBJECT OF PROSTITUTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who gave us the Charter of Rights and Freedoms but who appears to be more interested in protecting the rights of prostitutes and pimps who degrade and defile neighbourhoods than he is in protecting the rights of the residents who live in them. On Monday I asked the minister when he would deliver on his commitment to give the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the power to deal with the issue of street prostitution which infests our major urban centres. In his reply the minister insisted that he wants the committee to study the problem in connection with Bill C-53 which deals with sexual offences.

I would point out to the minister that his Liberal colleague, the chairman of the justice committee, has already ruled that the committee cannot deal with the issue of soliciting without a specific reference from the minister.

Why does the minister continue to insist—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Question.

• (1430)

Miss Carney: Why does the minister continue to insist that soliciting can be dealt with by the committee when, in fact, his own Liberal colleague has ruled the minister's suggestion out of order?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I made that suggestion some weeks and months ago, and it was the critic of her party who refused, in committee, to agree to the discussion of the possibility of a specific reference. I wanted to make the project as easy as possible. The hon. member should know that the official policy of her party when in power, as expressed by the minister of justice of the day, was that the question of soliciting on the streets was not a question under the Criminal Code but, rather, was the responsibility of the municipalities. This is still the policy of her party. At that time we had another alternative. However, in order to clarify the situation, I have offered to refer the problem to the committee. Unfortunately, I did not have the collaboration of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Clark: That is not true. That is a falsehood.

Mr. Chrétien: Therefore, I am having a discussion with the House leader of our party, and we will make a formal reference to the committee.

Mr. Clark: A falsehood.

FULFILMENT OF COMMITMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in view of the minister's—

Mr. Clark: Falsehood.

Miss Carney: —falsehood, I would like to read into the record the minutes of the proceedings of—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Miss Carney: —April 22 of the committee in which his parliamentary secretary was instructed to see the minister on this issue and that Mr. Peterson was—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Miss Carney: —ordered to come back to the steering committee with a solution.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Miss Carney: May I remind the minister that many of the victims of his announcement are youngsters—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to think that she is making a speech rather than asking a question. I would urge her to go to her question immediately.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, my question is this: since the minister first made his commitment to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code in July, 1980, when he met with the residents of the west end of Vancouver, when is the minister prepared to act on that commitment made nearly two years ago?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have said many times that cases have been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, and I asked the hon. member to wait until the matter has been clarified by the Supreme Court. It is a logical position which all ministers of justice take in such circumstances. I hope that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre will invite Senator Flynn to come before the committee to explain the position—

Mr. Clark: You get the reference.

Mr. Chrétien: —taken by the Conservative Party when it was in power, when it asked the municipalities to deal with the matter as that party felt it had nothing to do with the Criminal Code. At least I have consented to look into the matter and refer the matter to the committee, and have not simply referred the problem to the municipalities, as was the case when the Leader of the Opposition was the prime minister.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

COMMITTEE STUDY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, the minister responsible for freedom of information legislation. The minister has refused to appear before the justice committee for over four months, concerning freedom of information legislation, using the excuse that he was waiting for the provincial governments to respond to a uniform act. Now that the majority of the provincial governments have stated that they want nothing to do with a uniform act, when will the minister stop stalling the bill and bring the bill before the justice committee, or will the minister allow the bureaucrats, some of his own cabinet colleagues, and perhaps even the Prime Minister, who has never been particularly enamoured of the idea of freedom of information legislation, to kill this long overdue bill? Specifically, is the minister prepared to give us a commitment that this bill will be brought back before the justice committee in this session of Parliament?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, obviously we are all committed to the principle of freedom of information. When the hearings on the bill were suspended in November, it was at the specific request of the attorneys general of just about every province, the sole exception being the province of Manitoba. Since that time a number of the attorneys general who had asked us to pursue the idea of coming up with a uniform bill concerning freedom of information, which indeed would have been a distinct advantage for all advocates of freedom of information, have changed their minds as they feel that the uniform approach would not be productive. However, most of them have maintained a number of objections, as outlined in Mr. McMurtry's letter of November, to the effect that certain of the sections in the actual draft bill which is before the committee ought to be re-examined and changed.

As I indicated to the hon. member during the course of my answer to him and to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton a couple of weeks ago, there were basically three options in front of the government. One was to pursue the uniform bill approach, which is no longer possible since the attorneys general have changed their minds. The second was to bring the bill back from the committee without amendment, and the third possibility was, of course, to bring the bill back to the committee with a number of amendments.

I have finished my analysis of the recommendations made to us by the provinces, and I have reported to my cabinet colleagues. This matter is now in front of the cabinet, and once a decision has been taken I will be able to give the hon. gentleman a more forthcoming answer.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, when the minister appeared yesterday before the committee on communications, he did not even indicate that freedom of information legislation was a priority.

QUERY RESPECTING CROWN PRIVILEGE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. In view of the fact that the provincial objections centre around two fundamental areas, that is, removal of Crown privilege and the right to independent judicial review, both of which are absolutely critical for an effective freedom of information act, will the minister assure the House that he will in no way water down this fundamental principle of independent judicial review and an end to Crown privilege, both principles which this government, and particularly this Prime Minister, had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, to accept? Can we be assured that these principles will be maintained in any legislation which the government brings back to the justice committee in this session of Parliament?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think there are indeed two questions raised by the hon. member. One concerns the access to information legislation and one concerns Crown privilege. As far as the access to information legislation is concerned, I would very much hope that, as soon as my cabinet colleagues have been able to finish their examination, we will be able to take a definitive position as to when and how we would want to reintroduce the bill or continue hearings in front of the committee.

The hon. member himself has indicated that the main concern of the provincial attorneys general centred around the disappearance of Crown privilege. The hon. member may also know that there have been a couple of court decisions in this country during the course of the fall of 1981 which have changed the common law in many respects concerning Crown privilege. Therefore, it is indeed important to follow the recommendations of the attorneys general, to re-examine the whole question of Crown privilege in the light of evolving jurisprudence in this country and in the countries which follow common law.

REQUEST FOR URGENT CABINET CONSIDERATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, may I have an undertaking from the Minister of Communications that there will be urgent consideration by the minister and his colleagues with respect to the matter now that the situation has been changed by the letter of the attorneys general? Will he assure the House that he is considering this to be an urgent matter?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Yes, Madam Speaker, I expect that my cabinet colleagues will be able to consider the matter in due course.

AIRPORTS

EXPANSION OF MOUNT HOPE AIRPORT IN HAMILTON, ONT.

Mr. Stan Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The citizens of Hamilton and surrounding area are being agitated and disturbed by rumours that the expansion of the Mount Hope Airport is being stalled for some reason and that Nordair may be withdrawing its services. Can the minister inform this House of the current status of the expansion project for the airport in Hamilton and, I hope, allay these fears?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in the coming days I will be signing a submission to Treasury Board concerning this airport. It will be at the level which has already been announced, that is, at the $50 million level. The date for the completion of the airport will remain the same, 1985-86. Because of discussion, internally and with the carriers, on space allocation within the airport, the design work has been postponed by about six months, which means that the start of construction will be delayed until next summer, as opposed to this summer, as originally planned. However, I repeat that the completion date will remain the same.

Concerning the subject of Nordair service to Hamilton, there has indeed been a rumour founded on a discussion between the carrier and the Chamber of Commerce in Hamilton. That was only discussion. A review is now being made by Nordair, and I have informed the president of the carrier company that I would like to see him before a decision is made, and I will do so.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

EMERGENCY PLANNING—P.C. 1981-1305, MAY 21, 1981, REGISTRATION SI/81-76 JUNE 10, 1981

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader. On April 1 the government voted to support my motion for the production of papers with regard to emergency planning order PC-1305. It has now been three weeks, but those papers have not been tabled. I would like to ask the minister, what is the holdup?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we are translating the documents, and when they are translated we will be tabling them.

CONSEQUENCE OF DELAY IN TRANSLATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, if there had been an impending emergency, or if there is an impending emergency, what does the government plan to do if those papers are not translated?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we plan to translate and table them as soon as possible.

FISHERIES

TALKS ON SCALLOP EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It relates to the scallop industry. The proposed United States scallop management plan, expected to take effect next month, uses a meat count of 40 to the pound, with enforcement against the possession of smaller scallops. This could be classed as a non-tariff barrier against Canadian scallops. Since the minister stated in the House on February 4 that conservation measures which would become trade barriers were not acceptable and would be the subject of further discussion, will he tell the House whether these further talks have been held and, if so, what has been the result?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, there were contacts as late as last week. I do not have in my briefing book the report on this meeting. I suspect the official involved went on to another country for a meeting. I will check and try to give the hon. member an answer tomorrow.

PRODUCTION OF KIRBY COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, the Kirby commission has been studying the fishing industry for some time. Have any recommendations been made by the commission suggesting the type of federal aid which should be provided to the fishing industry, especially the scallop industry and the marketing problem faced by the entire industry, which would help it through this difficult period? If not, when can the House expect the commission to bring in a report?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I spoke to Mr. Kirby as late as yesterday. He still hopes to have recommendations before cabinet prior to the summer break.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER PRICES IN WESTERN CANADA

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that fertilizer prices in western Canada are between $30 and $60 per tonne higher than they are in the western United States? For the Canadian farmer who is planting a quarter section of land, this means an added cost of roughly $4,000. If he is aware of this situation, can he indicate what action he is planning to overcome what appears to be a grossly unfair situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am aware of what the hon. member is saying. It is the market system working. There is no tariff on fertilizer moving across the Canada-United States international border. It moves freely. Farmers can go there to purchase fertilizer. I know it would be inconvenient, but I am sure the hon. member does not want me to invoke more regulations concerning control of the sale of fertilizers.

It is said that it is surplus fertilizer being moved into world markets. Approximately 50 per cent of the fertilizer is moved into markets other than the Canadian market. Production is 50 per cent more than is needed for domestic use and is exported. There are three new plants that will come on stream in the next 11 months. That will make those figures look so small it will be amazing. These are nitrogen-producing fertilizer plants that will be producing mostly for the export markets.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF MANUFACTURING COMPANIES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, inasmuch as this fertilizer is produced in Canada, will the minister assure the House that he is prepared to meet with the fertilizer companies, or at least prevail upon them to instil some equity and fairness in their marketing practices, particularly in light of the fact that farm input costs are rising dramatically, mainly fuel prices and fertilizer prices, largely as a result of federal government taxes? Will the minister consider meeting with the fertilizer companies, prevail upon them, and use his ability as a friendly persuader?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we have a group which meets with the fertilizer manufacturers in Canada. Some of my officials have discussed this informally with them. I addressed this group about three weeks ago in this city. I also pointed out to them in private conversation that we had definite concerns about this fact. It is the market system working in its own fashion. We have deep concern. I repeat, there is no tax on fertilizer coming into or moving out of Canada. There is free trade. It can move freely back and forth across the border. It is an inconvenience. I agree, as the hon. member said, it is unfair that Canadian fertilizer users are being subjected to this.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

CAPACITY OF WELLAND CANAL TO ACCOMMODATE SHIPPING

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The St. Lawrence Seaway system is in potentially serious trouble if the bottleneck of the Welland Canal is not dealt with very soon. Forecasts of demand for later this decade indicate that up to 65 million tonnes of cargo could be moved through the system, yet the canal's capacity to move this much cargo is fast becoming limited. Does the minister plan to increase the size of the Welland Canal in order to take advantage of the demands placed upon it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the postulate is not right. This is an assessment made by the government of Ontario indicating five years before capacity is reached on the Great Lakes. That study is contradicted by studies made in my department and by the Seaway which estimate it will be a decade before we reach that point. A recent joint study by the Canadian and American Seaway authorities indicated, that 18 or 19 years may be a more accurate estimate. Therefore, there is now plenty of capacity on the Seaway.

Administrative and technological measures of a short-term nature are being taken in order to expand the capacity. Long-term planning for the doubling of the Welland Canal or doing something about the length of the navigation season is also being carried out. Therefore, my friend should not worry too much. Things are well in hand.

QUERY RESPECTING CANAL IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the minister's answer regarding the task force report by the Ontario government is correct. However, in his report the minister indicated that modernization of the canal, at least some restorative work on the walls of the canal and enlarging the areas in which ships can pass, should be started immediately. What is the minister's answer on that matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I could send my friend a report on what is now being done by way of administrative and technical changes to the Welland Canal. I will send him that report to assure him that what I said is correct. There will be a number of speeches on this subject in the coming months. There will be a colloquy in the city of Quebec early in June on the Seaway. A lot of good speakers will be there to give reports on the state of navigation on the Seaway and the St. Lawrence.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I think we can take from his earlier comments in this question period that he intends to have Canada follow lock-step in terms of economic policy with the United States.

The United States government is in the process of gutting the U.S. environmental protection agency, to the concern of many people not only in the United States but around the world, and now plans to gut the Clean Air Act and cut funding to research on Great Lakes water quality, something which will tamper with the treaty that is very important to both Canada and the United States in terms of keeping our Great Lakes water quality clean. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he has communicated the concern of this House and Canadians to President Reagan regarding the direction the United States is going, and our serious concern about toxic wastes in the Great Lakes and about acid rain, or are we going to follow the policy of the United States and see the changing of our Clean Air Act and the gradual loss of the pollution controls we fought so hard to get in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I did communicate those concerns, which are concerns of the government and this party, to the President.

ACID RAIN RESEARCH PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would comment on the new acid rain strategy of his government which was revealed today. As a matter of fact, I will reveal it right now. It is the awarding of a $30,691 contract to the University of Toronto to put concentrated acid rain into the eyes of rabbits in order to study acid rain. Does the Prime Minister think that will reduce acid rain, or will the new Liberal policy on acid rain be to provide goggles to all Canadian rabbits?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will ask the hon. member to think about the answer. He might be able to find it himself.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

FRENCH AIR BUS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, during his recent meeting with President Mitterrand, the subject of French aviation air bus program was discussed and whether any possibility of transferring some of that program to Canada for the benefit of our aviation industry was considered? If there are any details, could the Prime Minister tell the House about them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as I responded in the House yesterday to a question about my discussions with President Mitterand, I will repeat to the hon. member that the discussions were purely preparatory to the Summit, and they had to do with matters which are on the agenda of the Summit. Of course, the air bus is not one such matter. However, the Prime Minister of France is arriving in Canada tomorrow, and we do intend to discuss this matter, amongst others, with him.

AGRICULTURE

BLOCKADE BY FARMERS OF ONTARIO FOOD TERMINAL

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The farm sector is experiencing increasing difficulties. In one recent sampling 25 per cent of the respondents were not able to plant their spring crops because of the difficulty in obtaining financing. In addition, 40 per cent felt they were financially bankrupt. Interest rates of over 16 per cent now apply to farm credit. The small business bond is not working. Indeed, this morning in Toronto a group of 200 farmers blockaded the Ontario Food Terminal because of the failure of the minister and his government to provide adequate solutions to the increasing number of problems. Was the minister aware of this blockade? Is he aware of the increasing difficulties in the agricultural sector, and is he prepared to do anything about them now?

Mr. Greenaway: Instead of talking through his green hat.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I was not made aware that a group of 200 farmers were at the Ontario Food Terminal.

The hon. member seems to make fun of the fact that the farm credit interest rate is 16.5 per cent. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex reported to me today that he has had meetings with farmers in his constituency. They are being asked to pay 30 per cent for money for farm operations this spring. These operations include spring planting and so forth.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey knows very well that farm credit is for long-term money. We do not provide short-term money under those circumstances. Loans are made in respect of debt accumulation so that farmers can pay off their debts, but it is up to private lending institutions to make sure that money is available to farmers. First and foremost it is up to the province of Ontario to do something more than it is doing at the present time.

The hon. member also knows that we lent money interest free in Ontario last year, as well as in some other provinces. However, the bulk of the money went to Ontario. Nearly $100 million in farm credit went to Ontario. In addition, Ontario farmers received some 40 per cent of the emergency funds we lent.

The hon. member tries to get across the idea that we do not care and are not doing anything, but he is wrong. We are very concerned about the problems farmers are facing, but as far as I am concerned those problems are strictly—maybe not strictly—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: —these problems should be of more concern to the province. I met with the minister of agriculture for Ontario to discuss the urgent concern he feels in relation to how Ontario farmers will finance their operations this spring. Again I say, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Let him go on, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Beatty: Put the bull back in the pen.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, instead of asking a supplementary question, it might have been better for me to let the minister continue to talk and to bury himself. He said two important things. The first was that the agricultural community is facing a 30 per cent interest rate for planting its crops. The minister knows very well farmers cannot survive with that kind of interest requirement.

Second, the minister also knows that—

Madam Speaker: Order. We heard the minister's answer. We need a question now, please.

PROPOSED MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question to the minister is simple. He knows that one of the members of his Liberal caucus will be presenting a bill respecting a moratorium on farm foreclosures. There will be some amendments to provide interim solutions. Will the minister support that, and has he been able to persuade the Minister of Finance to agree to that proposal?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the hon. member and I discuss things very freely back and forth not only inside this House but also outside. The hon. member also discusses matters with the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex. We are well aware of the private member's bill the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex is presenting to the House. Yes, I do support the intent of that bill.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL COPY BE PLACED IN PROVINCE HOUSE, CHARLOTTETOWN

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State. The signing of the constitutional proclamation on Saturday completed the work toward full Canadian sovereignty launched by the Fathers of Confederation in Charlottetown in 1864. Given the close historic link between the Charlottetown conference of 1864 and the patriation of the Constitution, would the government give active consideration to the idea of making one, and one only, official copy of the proclamation, with original signatures, and placing it in Province House in Charlottetown? This would mark the close link between the two great and historic events.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the suggestion of the hon. member is a constructive one. I have already heard it from one of my ministers. I had to point out to him what I point out to the hon. member: there have been other requests for such copies. For instance, it was put to me that—

Mr. Pelletier: Sherbrooke.

Mr. Trudeau: Apart from Sherbrooke there were requests that a copy be placed in the House of Commons or in the Parliamentary library, in the archives and another in the United Kingdom. At some point the number of original copies might be too great.

The Magna Carta was signed in four copies and sent to four corners of the realm. That was to prevent King John from being able to destroy them. In this particular case I do not think that precaution is necessary.

Mr. Nielsen: Watch out for René.

Mr. Trudeau: I can only tell the hon. member, as I told the members of my cabinet and caucus, who made equally valid suggestions, that we are studying the matter in a real way, and we want to see if there is some possibility of priorizing the use of some copies without getting into a multiplicity of copies which, I take it, would call for Her Majesty the Queen singing—signing a great number of originals.

Mr. Crombie: Singing?

Mr. Trudeau: She could sing it too.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO IMPOSE MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is supplementary to the question posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey. Is the government supporting the private member's bill respecting a moratorium on farm foreclosures which the Minister of Agriculture says he supports?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not have information on that. I will have to discuss his answer with the minister and, as usual, be guided by his good common sense.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Was the Minister of Agriculture speaking for the government when he expressed the support of the government for the legislation proposing a moratorium on farm foreclosures?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the right hon. member is referring to an idea which, I understand, the Minister of Agriculture said seems worthy of consideration. I think the first thing we would want to do is see the bill itself. If the Leader of the Opposition has a copy of the bill, I wish he would table it so we could consider it as soon as possible.

Mr. Crosbie: It is your bill.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. If the government will not support this bill, for which the minister has expressed his support—let me rephrase the question to avoid the hypothetical. Is it the intention of the Minister of Agriculture to resign if the government does not support the bill, the principle of which he has supported in this House?

• (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I remember when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition proposed high interest rates. I never saw him resign. He should resign now because he proposed that in 1979 when he was prime minister of the country. Now that is what his party tries to win on.

I said the intent, as explained to me by the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex, of that bill—that I support the intent of that bill. If I can have something done along those lines—and we do that in the Farm Credit Corporation at the present time. We do provide maratoriums under the Farm Credit Corporation for two, three and four years, as high as that, for farmers. We are doing that same thing, so the intent is there.

MINISTER'S COURSE OF ACTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. If the minister fails in his attempt to have the government support the intent of this legislation, will he resign, or will his principles be as flexible as the principles of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who promised that he would resign if interest rates went up but he stays in office while interest rates in the country soar?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, all I have to say to the Leader of the Opposition is that I rarely fail.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, April 20, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the standing orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HEAP—UNPARLIAMENTARY INTERJECTION DURING MEMBER'S SPEECH

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the debate on Bill C-104 yesterday, when I quoted some figures from a Senate report, it caused a good deal of excitement among hon. members to my right. There were a number of shouted interjections and I waited until today to see if any of them were recorded in Hansard. I find that one that was recorded is attributed to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). The interjection was "complete lies".

At the appropriate time I am willing to discuss with the hon. member whether or not the evidence given before the Senate is to be believed. Although the hon. member is a more experienced parliamentarian than I, I believe if he has not looked at Citation 319 of Beauchesne at page 108, he should look at it. I think that he would find that in the expression he used, "complete lies", the word "lies" is not acceptable. I hope he will withdraw those words and that the record can be corrected to show his withdrawal.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member was speaking he said "the jackals to my right". There are no jackals to his right. It was a complete lie. I might add that if there are any jackals in the House they are all in front of him.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I recognize that there is room for a difference of opinion about words that the hon. member mentions now but the words that he used, "complete lies" did not follow those words, they followed statements regarding "these companies have so much cash flow" and so on. I believe the hon. member should clarify his words.

Mr. Taylor: That is another one.

Madam Speaker: I think that perhaps this problem can be solved quite easily with a bit of good will on the part of hon. members. Of course the way it is—I see these words in Hansard "complete lies", and of course that will not do. This is considered to be an unparliamentary expression. I think the problem can be solved quite easily if the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) would say that perhaps there was a difference at the time when he said this and that at any rate he did not mean to say that the hon. member was uttering complete lies. I think that can be arranged quite easily.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, if you would give me the time I could go through the hon. member's address and show where there are at least three complete lies. If you want me to say—

Madam Speaker: Statements of hon. members are accepted in the House. One can have an opinion on those statements but one may not, in the House, accuse an hon. member of uttering complete lies. The hon. member is not helping the House too much by repeating that expression. I think it is very simple, if the hon. member would assure the House that what is recorded in Hansard certainly went beyond whatever he intended to say.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I cannot say I went beyond anything I intended to say. I intended to say just what I said. If you want me to say "complete fabrication", okay, but he did give a lie. The "jackal" itself was a lie; a complete fabrication. If you want me to lie, I would have to lie, and I am not prepared to lie.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think we all recognize that the hon. member may have an opinion on whatever another hon. member is saying, but he cannot openly and clearly accuse an hon. member of uttering complete lies. I would ask the hon. member not to substitute another word now because that is not possible, but to withdraw those words.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I am not prepared to withdraw it. I will say it is a complete fabrication, because that is what it was.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member should understand that I will accept "complete fabrication" but he must withdraw the first two words, "complete lies"; otherwise he knows what the consequences are.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, if you want to replace "complete lies" with "complete fabrication", that is okay with me.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member withdraw "complete lies"? Does he do it now?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, if you want to replace the words "complete lies" with "complete fabrication", okay.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Taylor: Withdraw, my eye!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the words that have been used by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) can be and should be taken as satisfactory—

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Nielsen: —compliance with the position taken by the Chair. I would think also that it should be acceptable to the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Otherwise, should debate continue I could raise other questions of privilege which have a direct relationship to that exchange, such as the use of the term "jackal". I will not raise that now. It is not my intention to do so. However, the words that have been used by the hon. member for Bow River, I strongly suggest, should be acceptable to the Chair and to the hon. member concerned.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if I could make a slight contribution to this very serious debate—

Mr. Crosbie: It usually is.

Mr. Broadbent: —the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) obviously objected to the word "jackal". I understand the context in which that expression was uttered and I am sure my colleague did not mean, quite literally, that the people sitting to his right were jackals—or the entities to his right. He made the error of thinking that those things that sound like and look like jackals are jackals. He was not lying; he was making a judgment, Madam Speaker.

• (1510)

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, in the strictest sense, when a member is charged by the Speaker to withdraw, normally that is the only matter dealt with. That is the issue. When the opposition House leader suggests to you that that is not what the hon. member had said, when in fact he has refused three times to withdraw, then indeed you must instruct him once again to withdraw.

The fact of the matter is, Madam Speaker, that with respect to our rights and privileges the rules apply to everyone on all sides of the House. If the hon. member is going to call someone a liar and he is requested by you to withdraw, he has no alternative but to withdraw.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have been sitting here quietly listening to what has occurred. I listened to what the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said and, as I recall it, he said, "Madam Speaker, if you wish to substitute the word "fabrication", or "complete fabrication" for "complete lie", that is all right with me". I believe that is a withdrawal.

Madam Speaker: There is a certain nuance to the words "substituting" and "withdrawing", but I think this debate can be solved perhaps by the two hon. members agreeing on something. There is another factor in the matter of using unparliamentary language, which is whether or not it creates a disturbance in the House even if the word is listed. Sometimes it goes by and does not create a disturbance in the House.

I wonder if the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would feel his honour is restored by the fact that the hon. member for Bow River has substituted "fabrication" for the word he had uttered previously in the House.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I find that on page 106 of Beauchesne's the word "fabrication" is listed as a word not to be used.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: I am trying to learn the rules of the House and I do not think I should take instruction from the hon. member for Bow River because he does not seem sure himself.

Mr. McDermid: He has a lot more experience than you do.

Mr. Heap: I understand he has a great deal of experience, but he does not seem to have learned from it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, what is at stake is not my personal feelings or those of the hon. member for Bow River; it is a question of the rules of the House, and I would leave the matter in your hands.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is absolutely right, the word "fabrication" also appears on the list. Therefore, I have no other choice but to ask the hon. member for Bow River to withdraw those expressions.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, when the hon. member starts showing respect, then he will get respect. It was a lie, it is still a lie, and I am not going to lie by saying it is not.

Madam Speaker: So the hon. member refuses to withdraw those expressions?

Mr. Taylor: I said I would replace it with "fabrication".

Madam Speaker: I just told the hon. member that "fabrication" also appears on the list of unparliamentary expressions. Does the hon. member withdraw those expressions which he used yesterday and today in the House?

Mr. Taylor: I will use the word "mendaciousness", then. Replace it with "mendaciousness."

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I am asking the hon. member to withdraw, not to substitute another word. If he will not withdraw, he will understand that I have no other choice but to name him.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I regret intervening again. However, I submit to you our rules are not so rigid that there is only one option. Members have, through many, many years in the House, been permitted to substitute an offensive expression with something which is not unparliamentary, which substitution has for many years constituted sufficient withdrawal. In my submission, if the hon. member for Bow River, wishes to withdraw the word "fabrication" and the word "lies" and substitute the word "mendacity", I submit that is sufficient compliance with the rules of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: I would agree with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). If the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) will follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Yukon, I will accept that.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I said I would substitute it with the word "mendacity".

Madam Speaker: The hon. member withdraws the two previous expressions? I am afraid that has to be done.

Mr. Taylor: Put it right over the top of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETITIONS

MR. SCHELLENBERGER—SAFETY EQUIPMENT AT LEDUC AREA RAILWAY CROSSINGS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 1,300 citizens of Leduc and district in the constituency of Wetaskiwin is to urge the government to increase and upgrade the safety equipment at all Leduc area railway crossings. This action is prompted by the occurrences of railway accidents in that area. The petition urges that all railway crossings be equipped with adequate safeguards as rapidly as possible, and that the enforcement of the relevant regulations be rendered more effective.

The petitioners hope you will find the petition in order and will note the great urgency of the circumstances leading up to it, and ask that you use the powers of your office to allow discussion and referral to committee as soon as possible.

MR. McGRATH—ESTABLISHMENT OF SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition sponsored by the St. John's Jaycees and signed by 72,000 citizens of Newfoundland. The petition points out the hazardous conditions prevailing in the northwest Atlantic, which was tragically highlighted by the sinking of the oil rig Ocean Ranger with the loss of 82 lives. It points out the dangers to the men who work on these oil rigs, and the men and women who work off the Newfoundland shore in our fisheries and other offshore industries. It also points out the lack of protection our people have at the present time. Your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament directs the government to establish full search and rescue capability in Newfoundland so that its citizens can enjoy the same degree of protection enjoyed by Canadian citizens who work offshore in the maritime provinces.

MR. GREENAWAY—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 805 citizens and owners of firearms in the Cariboo-Chilcotin riding of British Columbia. The purpose of this petition is to protest the introduction of Bill C-451, a private member's bill concerning gun control.

Most of the signatories to this petition are legitimate gun owners who use their firearms for sport and often in the course of their work. The petition demands immediate withdrawal of Bill C-451 or the denial of passage of the bill should it come up for consideration in the House. The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find it is in order, and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to allow discussion at the earliest possible time in order that the flaws in this proposed legislation may be pointed out.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,004, 2,528, 3,509, and 4,111.

FORMULA TO DETERMINE INTEREST EARNED BY SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS

Question No. 2,004—Mr. Crosby:

1. What is the formula or method used for determining the rates of interest earned by the (a) Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) (b) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) (c) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA)?

2. From January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1981, what were the effective annual rates of interest earned quarterly by the (a) PSSA (b) CFSA (c) RCMPSA?

3. What is the formula or method used for determining the rate of interest earned by the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (SRBA)?

4. What effective annual rates of interest would the (a) PSSA (b) CFSA (c) RCMPSA have earned quarterly from January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1981, if it had earned interest at rates determined in accordance with the formula or method described in the answer to part 3?

5. As of January 1, 1981, what are the balances of the (a) PSSA (b) CFSA (c) RCMPSA?

6. What is the balance of the SRBA as of January 1, 1981?

7. What would be the balance of the SRBA as of January 1, 1981, if the SRBA were credited with interest on the quarterly balances that existed in the PSSA, CFSA, and the RCMPSA from January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1981, at rates equal to the difference in the rates contained in the answers to parts 2 and 4 and if these interest earning credits themselves earned interest quarterly at rates determined in accordance with the formula or method described in the answer to part 3?

8. What would be the balance of the SRBA as of January 1, 1981, if from its inception the (a) interest earning rate had been increased by an annual rate of ⅛ of 1 per cent (b) interest had been calculated and credited to the SRBA monthly on the monthly balances of the SRBA?

9. What would be the balance of the SRBA as of January 1, 1981, if (a) interest earnings had been calculated and credited to the SRBA in the manner described in part 8 (b) it was credited monthly with interest earnings on the actual or estimated monthly balances of the PSSA, CFSA, and RCMPSA that existed from January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1981 at effective annual rates that were ⅛ of 1 per cent above the difference between the monthly equivalents of the rates determined in accordance with the formulas described in the answers to parts 1 and 3, and if the interest earnings so determined themselves earned interest and had been credited to the SRBA at the rate and in the manner described in part 8?

10. What would be the dollar value of the (a) PSSA (b) CFSA (c) RCMPSA (d) SRBA as of January 1, 1981, if the interest earned on all contributions from January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1981 were calculated at a 1 per cent higher rate, as indicated in the Tomenson-Alexander report would have been possible in a well diversified private pension fund?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. The (a) Public Service Superannuation Account, (PSSA), (b) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) and (c) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) earn interest quarterly. The quarterly rate is determined as if the excess of receipts over disbursements, each quarter since the accounts began, and been invested in long-term Government of Canada bonds (20 or more years) and as if these amounts had been reinvested at current rates every twenty years.

2. From January 1, 1960 to June 30, 1969 the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA earned quarterly interest at an effective annual rate of 4 per cent. The quarterly interest rates earned since the quarter commencing June 30, 1969, expressed as effective annual rates, were as follows:

10. The balances shown in question No. 5 for the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA would not have been affected by additional interest earnings of 1 per cent per annum since the three acts provide that any interest earnings of the accounts over the rate assumed in the actuarial reports (i.e.: interest over 4 per cent until the late 1970s and more recently, interest over 6.5 per cent can be used to offset the cost of amortizing actuarial deficiencies caused largely by salary increases. SRBA—$838,100,000.

BILINGUAL POSITION IN NEWFOUNDLAND POST OFFICE

Question No. 2,528—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the government intend to take action with regard to the fact that the 1980 annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages states there are no bilingual positions in the Post Office Department among Newfoundland's 1,036 postal employees and, if so, what are the details?

2. For what reason would it be necessary to have bilingual employees in Newfoundland?

3. What is the estimated percentage of persons living in Newfoundland who speak the (a) English (b) French language only?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Canada Post and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. In Newfoundland, bilingual services are provided, and have been for a number of years, at the Cape St. George Post Office to serve the only area that has an established demand. The Postmaster of this office is employed under the terms of the Post Office Act, therefore is not included in the figures quoted by the Commissioner of Official Languages. As well, Canada Post is committed to the introduction of bilingual services in Labrador City in 1981-82.

2. As a federal institution, Canada Post recognizes an obligation to provide services in both French and English to Canadians in areas where a demand is established.

3. The latest information on languages is from the 1976 census, but that information relates only to mother tongue, as opposed to language currently spoken. According to the 1976 census the distribution of the population in Newfoundland by mother tongue was as follows:

Mother tongue English: 97.7 per cent
Mother tongue French: 0.5 per cent
Mother tongue neither English nor French: 1.8 per cent

The most recent information on official languages capabilities was collected in the 1971 census, which asked whether English or French were spoken well enough to conduct a conversation. For Newfoundland, the official languages capabilities of the population in 1971 were:

English only: 98.0 per cent
French only: 0.1 per cent
Both English and French: 1.8 per cent
Neither English nor French: 0.1 per cent

Similar information is being collected in the 1981 census.

HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Question No. 3,509—Mr. Herbert:

1. Do Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta and the Yukon territory levy provincial health insurance premiums as a form of provincial revenue?

2. (a) Did the government transfer $42 million on behalf of federal employees in 1980-81 to provincial treasuries as a part of this levy (b) did the government estimate the amount that it would receive in personal income taxes on this transferred sum?

3. Does the government collect personal income taxes for Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta and, if so, in each province, what is the approximate percentage of the amount collected as federal taxes?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Finance, National Health and Welfare, National Revenue (Taxation) and by the Treasury Board as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) The federal government, as employer, pays a portion of the provincial health insurance premiums payable by its employees in the aforementioned provinces and the Yukon territory, and makes such contributions directly to the provincial authorities. In 1980-81, the amount of these contributions was $38.9 million.

(b) On a payment such as this, the federal government estimated to recoup 20 per cent in aggregate in federal personal income taxes. Since the amount transferred in 1980-81 was $38.9 million, federal income taxes recovered are estimated to have been $7.8 million.

3. Yes. The amount of personal income tax assessed for the year 1979 in the three provinces in question is as follows:

	Total Tax	Provincial Tax
	(millions of dollars)		Percent of total
Ontario	10,566	3,501	33
British Columbia	3,489	1,169	34
Alberta	2,716	791	29

(Source: taxation statistics 1981)

These amounts reflect the application of the income tax acts of the three provincial jurisdictions including a variety of provincial income tax reductions and provincial tax credits.

NCC CHANGE OF OFFICIAL COLOURS

Question No. 4,111—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the National Capital Commission decide to change its official colours from green and white to browns, beige and white on vehicles and stationery and, if so (a) what is the name of the highest-ranking official making the decision and on what date was it made (b) what is the total estimated cost of the change in colours and is it approximately $1.2 million (c) what is wrong with the present colours that requires that they be changed at considerable expense (d) what is the justification for such an expense, in view of the government's restraint program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Yes, to brown and beige. (a) Mr. C. M. Drury, chairman, and the executive committee on November 17, 1981, on the advice of its advisory committees on design and the arts.

(b) $1.4 million of which $1.2 million is estimated replacement cost of signs.

(c) Green has been used for vehicles and black for signs with white lettering in both cases. In order to standardize on one colour system, adoption of brown and beige in both areas, plus future stationery needs, is intended to give continuity to public recognition of NCC property, activities and vehicles. The use of the Canada wordmark will also be introduced in all applications.

(d) Changeover is phased over next four years on normal replacement or renewal basis within budget limitations.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-105, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned last evening, I was about to analyse the bill, the changes in corporate law, and comment on what this bill can do. This bill affects all corporations in Canada. First, the bill essentially has two major features in it. It allows changes with respect to shareholdings in companies to be handled in two separate ways. For the first time in the history of corporate law this bill will allow a corporation, through its directors, to go into the open market and purchase publicly held shares in the name of the corporation. Those shares will continue to remain outstanding shares of the corporation, albeit not subject to vote and the bill will allow the corporation to qualify under the oil arrangements and under any other provincial or Canadian laws or licence requirements with respect to ownership or control by Canadians.

Let us go into the history of this question of companies being able to trade in their own shares. Corporate law originally set out that a company could not invest in its own shares. A company was prohibited by law from buying up its own shares. In 1974 and 1975 and through that period we changed the corporate law of this country with the Canada Business Corporations Act which allowed a company for the first time to invest in its own shares. The law was changed in order to give a company a great deal more flexibility with respect to financing. Indeed, it allowed a company to use the capital and surplus to buy up shares of shareholders, thus allowing those shareholders to get their investment back and at the same time withdraw their money out of the company. It also allowed for certain takeovers and amalgamations that were possible as a result of a company being allowed to purchase its own shares. But those provisions for purchasing shares only relate to purchasing the shares for cancellation. What a company can do under the present law is to purchase the shares, and when those shares are purchased they are in effect no longer available in the marketplace. They can no longer be put back into the marketplace.

The effect of this bill is to allow a company to purchase its own shares and within a period of two years put those shares back into the marketplace. This is a dramatic change in corporate law which the House must realize is taking place and it is taking place in the name of Canadianization.

The other night I said that patriotism was described as the last refuge of a scoundrel. An appeal to patriotism is the refuge of a scoundrel, which is exactly what this particular provision will allow. For the first time it allows scoundrels to wheel and deal in the corporate stock of their own company. Indeed, it is a very dramatic change to what has been allowed up to now with respect to the activities of companies. I say with all sincerity that this is a very, very serious change in law. What in fact you have is an ability of directors, under the guise of wanting to maintain Canadian ownership and control of their company, to speculate in the stock market with their own stock using the company's own money. When you look at it that way you will say there is something wrong here, Mr.

Speaker. It may be all very well for us to want to have Canadian ownership of corporations, but in doing that, are we going to allow the possibility of directors of corporations, able to use the company's earned surplus, the company's financial ability, to go into the market and buy up shareholders' shares—they could even be Canadian shareholders' shares because presumably they will be shares purchased on the market—take those shares back in, speculate on them or sell them off privately to some other person? If that is allowed, it is a total misuse of the trusteeship that directors elected for public corporations have to their shareholders. Indeed, the corporations could be private corporations. Therefore, we have a situation for the very first time where a company and the officers of a company can go into the market and use the company's assets to buy shares which the company intends to resell. Indeed, the very purpose of the section is to allow the company to buy the shares to resell.

I have no quarrel with the existing system where a company buys up the shares. If for the purpose of continuing to get credit for Canadian ownership they can buy up the shares to qualify in some way for ownership and control in terms of the crazy rules and regulations that were proposed under Bill C-104, that is all right, but what we have here is a situation where the corporation, through its directors, is allowed to speculate using shareholders' equity, to speculate and play around with the shareholders' own money, for private benefit. This is a dramatic change in what until now has been the basis of sound corporate practice. When we make changes in the way corporate law is structured, we not only seriously affect the value of corporate stocks of companies affected by the possible change, but we generally hurt or damage the reputation of federally-incorporated companies. This is a serious concern which the House must address.

Another change in the act involves a provision which was originally contained in Bill C-94. Significant changes have been made to Bill C-94 as a result of the efforts of my party in drawing to public attention the damages inherent in it. Those changes resulted in other portions of the constrained share regulations being altered as they were in the first paragraph on the top of page 9 of the bill. Nonetheless, as pointed out by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), the changes to Section 43 of the Canada Business Corporations Act that were followed up with amendments to Sections 122 and 168 of the act do not seem to have solved the problem totally.

The essence of Section 43.1 in Part V.1 on page 4 of Bill C-105 is that a company should be entitled, in order to keep its qualification in line, to expropriate somehow the shares of shareholders, then sell those shares to other persons and pay the expropriated shareholders the net value of or the net receipt from the sale. It is true that this only applies where there are constrained shares, but I submit that the definition of constrained shares in inadequate. The details as to how the expropriation sale and eventual distribution of net proceeds are to be effected are not properly set out. Indeed, the entire concept that directors of a company should somehow be entitled to seize a shareholder's share for which the shareholder has paid, to sell it in the marketplace as if the shareholder never owned it and to pay the net proceeds to the person selected to be expropriated, must be offensive to us all. It is not a fair compensation for property or even an ordinary expropriation. It is an actual seizure and payment of net proceeds to the holder of the share. In other words, all the costs of the expropriation are borne by the person expropriated.

Let me turn to a situation wherein one's property is taken over by the Ontario department of highways. Departmental officials could say that they had to appraise it, do this or that, and that they had only been able to obtain so much for the property, and turn over the net proceeds. This is what we are talking about. While the provision refers to constrained shares, there is no provision with respect to what the constrained shareholder will in fact receive. There is provision in the bill for notice to the constrained shareholder that he had better sell his share or shares, but if there is little or no market, but only hopes for opportunities with those shares, then he could be virtually expropriated without any compensation because in fact he is forced to sell and all he receives as a result of the sale are the net proceeds. In a weak market such as the one of today he could be wiped out. Both of these provisions are bad ones and should not be included in the statute law.

It is one thing to talk about Canadian ownership. I think we want Canadian ownership. But to include these provisions in the Canada Business Corporations Act is wrong. It is wrong to allow directors of a corporation—or the majority of shareholders of a corporation organizing with the directors—to so damage the interest of other shareholders, for the alleged purpose of Canadianizing or allowing the corporation to take advantage of some provincial privilege or some other privilege in some other statute. The hon. member for York-Peel produced in the House a series of Ontario and federal statutes which particularly require some element or a totality of Canadian ownership and control. It is also wrong to allow minority shareholders, albeit foreign or perhaps not that foreign, to be expropriated without really being compensated or to allow, as in the first part of the bill, directors to go into the marketplace to wheel and deal with the money of shareholders, to favour some persons over other persons. These provisions are wrong.

There is no need for this bill. Even if we were to go along with the government's Canadian ownership package with respect to grants to the oil industry, we do not need this bill. Companies can change their incorporations. They can create more shares. They can request supplementary articles of association to give them larger capital. They can organize their control in many other fashions. They do not need these powers. Inasmuch as these powers extend beyond the oil and energy industry, they should not be in this piece of legislation because they do not properly belong there. Therefore, I suggest that we must oppose this bill.

I would like to review for a moment some events which are occurring in the marketplace. Yesterday and today articles appeared in The Globe and Mail which contained parts of a speech given by Mr. W. A. Macdonald to an IBM conference in Banff, Alberta. Mr. Macdonald is from the law firm of McMillan, Binch, and you realize there is another famous partner of that firm who used to be in the House. Apparently, Mr. Macdonald and that former member got along well and I suspect they compared notes with respect to this presentation.

In any event, in Mr. Macdonald's speech he listed some elements of Canadian financial policy which were important to the Canadian nation. In that speech, which appeared in The Globe and Mail on April 20, he said:

> Canada has an open economy, which is deeply dependent on world trade in goods and services and on international capital flows. This has always required a recognition that there are severe restraints on insular policy-making, based on a false premise as to the ability of any Canadian government to control the details of the Canadian economy against the power of external economic forces.

He said further:

> Canada has an isolated economy with a small market alongside the largest and most powerful economy in the world. Canada has always sought to handle these special vulnerabilities by a twofold approach: first, to support a stable, relatively free, multilateral and financial order; second, to develop a close, but not too close, relationship with the United States, whereby trading and financial particulars can be worked out within the framework of a stable, multilateral order and on the basis of constructive, mutual self-interest.

In other words, until now our success was based on those rules which provide a stable arrangement in our corporate law and state that we do not attempt to be too ultra-nationalistic and that we rely on the financial power of the New York marketplace to a great extent.

Speaking to that very issue, Mr. Macdonald said in the same article:

> . . . Canada continues to increase its foreign debt at an accelerating rate. Much of this foreign debt is long term and floated in the New York market. The limited funds available in relation to expected demand in that market have resulted in high interest rates.

He went on to say:

> Can we really believe we can increase our claims on the New York financial market and persist in our unwillingness to acknowledge any U.S. concerns as to major unfairness and protectionist elements in the NEP and FIRA? Is it realistic to believe we can continue to enjoy unimpeded access to U.S. financial markets while the overcrowding of U.S. government issues arising out of their rapidly growing deficit is already threatening both the economic recovery in the United States and the entire economic revolution on which President Reagan is staking his political future?

He says further:

> At the very time when the country needs to put its strongest economic foot forward to offset the costs of the present world economic situation, we have been pursuing increasingly interventionist, nationalist and provincialist policies.

That is what this legislation is, a policy which is part of an attempt somehow to Canadianize not only the oil industry but other industries as well. This is to be accomplished by changing the very fabric of the Canada Business Corporations Act to allow individuals—not the government—to expropriate shares and pay not the market price but the net proceeds for those shares. It will allow directors of Canadian corporations to use shareholders' money in the marketplace, to expel foreign shareholders and perhaps to favour their own friends and others.

There are provisions in the bill for rules and regulations to be proclaimed by the government. But the problem with imposing regulations in corporate law by order in council is that laws of this nature can be changed at will. In other words, there can be regulations which will protect the investor to make sure that directors do not, at their discretion, play with the stock market.

To have rules imposed in this manner is not the answer because there is no certainty as to what future regulations will be. Instead, rules with respect to financial transactions of this nature and to the activities of corporations should be clearly stipulated in a statute. In this way, regulations could only be changed by an act of Parliament through the usual process of three readings here and in the other place and through committee hearings.

The difficulty arising from regulations which are made by order in council is that no committee hearings are required. We would only find out about a regulation after it has been made. Changes can be made again and again without any opportunity to prevent the government from changing the rules in the middle of the game. Protection for minority shareholders is not set out in the statute in any detail. The details required with respect to stipulations for directors of companies buying shares and then reselling them are not set out in the bill. For example, directors could buy for $10 and sell for $20 or perhaps even sell for $5 to friends and thus rape the treasury of the company.

There is no requirement that they can only buy from foreign shareholders. It only stipulates that in order to keep Canadian ownership content they must buy shares in the market. Do they buy Canadian shares or what? When shares are purchased on the stockmarket there is no way of knowing whether they are foreign or Canadian shares. Indeed, with the manner in which shares are handled presently, behind trusts and pension plans and in street form, it is difficult to know who owns what.

You could be buying Canadian shares but you would not really know. It is true that the intent is to buy foreign-held shares in Canadian corporations, but these shares are purchased through the use of shareholders' money, and that is what I believe is wrong. I see nothing wrong with a company investing in its own shares provided those shares are then cancelled. Companies would then buy the shares in the marketplace and reduce the number of shares outstanding. However, that is not the case here. I see nothing wrong with the situation where a share was specifically issued which could only be held by a Canadian—a living Canadian individual and not a Canadian corporation—and a share was not a share unless it was in fact registered to a living Canadian. If that living Canadian sold his share to a foreigner, then that living Canadian would lose his rights in that share. That would be possible. I see nothing wrong with that. However, that is not what is in this bill. This bill speaks of constrained shares and then it says that a constraint must be shown on the face of the constrained shares, but it does not say there is anything wrong with shares which do not have any notification of constraint on them. There is a provision in the bill for shares which are not dealt with as constrained shares because when they were originally issued they were not then constrained shares.

Therefore, this a bad law. It is important that the bill go to committee, but it is even more important that members of Parliament who are concerned about the kind of laws we have realize that this bill contains bad law. I see that the minister responsible for foreign affairs is here in the House. As he is a former law professor, I think he should be concerned about the bad law in this bill. This bill should be considered and it should be withdrawn. I say it has nothing to do with the Canadian ownership concept of the oil industry. The bill goes beyond that. It affects all corporations. It affects our activities, fund raising and financial arrangements whereby Canadian companies, in some cases, are listed on the New York market, and properly so. A number of our major companies are there. They use the New York market, which is really the world finance market. Certainly, we use either the London or New York market to raise funds. Much of those funds must be raised by shares issue or share pledge. Consequently, a company needs to have its shares listed in those markets. It is not good for Canada to be so insular as to make it possible that changes could be made which would affect those shares now being issued in other countries when there is a cutback in the trading position of companies largely held in Canada, indeed, with the majority of the shareholders presently in Canada.

Therefore, I say that this bill is a bad bill. It should be defeated. It must be defeated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to speak briefly on Bill C-105. Let me first say that in my estimation this is a dangerous bill. This is a new dimension in corporate practice, and I do not like it.

The government is overly obsessed with Canadianization of the oil and gas industry in Canada. By 1990 it wants the industry to be 50 per cent Canadian owned. The time-frame is too short. The methods of the government, like this Bill C-105, are devious and destructive to government and industry relationships and particularly to federal-provincial relationships. The economic climate generated on the short term is one in which there is a flight of capital, a flight of technological competence and a flight of management skills.

In 1977, as the newspaper reported today, there was a Canadian capital outflow of some $265 million. By 1980, the outward flow was $2.2 billion. In 1981, it increased to $10.2 billion. The cause of this terrific increase has been stated to be the National Energy Program and subsequent legislation. How can our economy, which is geared to megaprojects, possibly recover? We desperately need capital, yet the government works furiously to drive capital away. How does it intend to bring capital into the nation to build the vast megaprojects that we have before us? This must surely be some form of self-strangulation.

Yesterday the minister told us that last year the investment in the energy industry dropped by some 30 per cent to 40 per cent. I think he acknowledged that. Yesterday he also advised the House that the U.S. department of commerce, in its recent report, projected an increase of investment of 28 per cent in the energy sector in Canada this year. However, the minister did not tell us how much investment on Canada lands was projected as against the protection for provincial lands. He did not tell us whether this projection included investment in Alsands or projects like it.

I can understand, and even to a partial degree accept without too much difficulty, the Canadianization program worked out in Bill C-48 concerning Canada lands. This is a future course dictated by political philosophy and perspective. All companies know the rules in advance so that the private sector will behave accordingly and form the necessary partnerships and consortiums to explore, develop and market, knowing full well that no less than 25 per cent will be under Canadian ownership and that, in most cases, it will be more. This is very similar to the Norwegian policies which were explained to us in detail when we were debating Bill C-48. There is nothing wrong with that type of approach, whether one agrees with Canadianization or not. It is a future movement. The new regimes of state ownership and Canadianization can readily be imposed on the new development, in new areas, under the jurisdiction of a single regime under Canada lands.

Canadianization on Canadian lands is done under a single regime: the federal government. It does not involve the provincial governments. However, to try to impose a devious regime of Canadianization on an entire industry, presently almost entirely limited to activity on provincial lands, exploiting provincial resources, is no less than economic madness. The federal government can administer PIP, as it has indicated, on federal lands to Canadianize, if it wishes. Surely, this is appropriate action, but it should surely allow the provinces to administer PIP on provincial lands in accordance with provincial policies, provincial priorities and provincial political perspectives which may not be associated with the rapid Canadianization. Why not? Why must the federal government dictate to the provinces that it shall Canadianize their industry on their own resources at a certain rate so that they will be 50 per cent Canadianized by 1990? Why must the government insist on this in order for those companies working in the provinces, on provincial resources, to receive the PIP grants? I find this difficult to accept. As a result, the whole Canadianization program is badly curtailing the oil and gas sector on provincial lands, particularly Alberta. I say again that I have no difficulty if that is what the federal government wants to do with Canada lands. It is a single jurisdiction dictating the development of a massive new industry where they are fully responsible.

Today we have two governments fighting over maximizing their economic take. One is bent on getting due economic rent for its resources. The other, the federal government, is massively bleeding the industry through the PGR tax and incremental taxes. It is partially using such taxes as incentives through the PIP program to force corporate reorganization, corporate refinancing and corporate restructuring of companies developing provincial resources.

The federal government through this legislation is poaching upon provincial areas of jurisdiction. In my estimation, it is severely undermining the very intent of Sections 50 and 51 of the Constitution just patriated. That section is very explicit. It reads:

In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy. . . .

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom,

How can a province maximize its take from its own resource and have freedom in relation to taxation when the federal government comes in in a massive way with a big hand and takes a major portion at the front end? This taxation is only possible after the federal government gets its take. If there is nothing left, the provincial government gets nothing. This section in the Constitution tends to be meaningless. The federal government can make it meaningless. I find that contradictory to the very intent of this section and in fact contrary to the patriated Constitution.

The federal government is trying to impose its political philosophy on the provinces in the development of provincially-owned resources. That is wrong. It is unconstitutional in accordance with the new Constitution. Surely Saskatchewan can nationalize all it wishes and Alberta can promote free enterprise regardless of ownership all it wishes in the development of resources without the hand of Big Brother in Ottawa forcing its political philosophy and direction on the provinces.

This is basic to the patriated Constitution. It is very basic to Sections 50 and 51 of it. I find that a very serious anomaly in this area. The constitutionality of this legislation must be tested in the courts at the earliest possible time.

I repeat, I have no dificulty with the federal government Canadianizing the industry on federal lands. It is a single jurisdiction. It has every right to do that and to do it as it wishes. However, when it involves itself in Canadianization of provincial lands, it must respect provincial authority and the provincial constitutional rights which those provinces have in connection with their resources.

I can understand the desire of the national government and its philosophy in imposing the Canadianizing requirement on industries involved in renewable resources and industries involved in non-renewable resources such as oil and gas where it has sole jurisdiction, like Canada lands. With renewable resources such as electricity, governments all across the nation, with the exception of Alberta, have got involved because that goes on forever.

To force that on the provinces with regard to provincial non-renewable resources is unacceptable, particularly when some of them have a lifetime of only five or ten years. Why would a government want to Canadianize companies having a resource if it wants to do additional exploration and it only has a five to ten-year lifetime on that resource? Surely it would want to Canadianize a renewable resource industry such as fisheries, forestry, hydroelectricity, but why Canadianize something with a very finite lifetime? I find it difficult to understand. The only explanation I can give is that it has not been fully thought out. It must be examined more fully.

Why would a government or any political philosophy generate such economic instability to Canadianize an industry involved in non-renewable resources which have a very finite lifetime? If the government wants money, surely it can tax the industry to its heart's desire. If it wants to control and discourage capital outflow, it can tax dividends as heavily as it wishes and make them non-tax deductible.

A government with restrictive conditions imposed on the Canadian subsidiaries of multinational companies will have these overseas branches stripped from them at the earliest opportunity. Instead of having Canadian companies with a multinational effect throughout the world, we will have Canadian companies with little association with world industry, with a limit in terms of technological interchange and exchange.

Multinational oil and gas subsidiary corporations in Canada are good citizens. They employ only Canadians. They reinvest most of their generated cash flow in Canada. Many do massive research in Canada such as the Syncrude project, Suncor and the heavy oil Cold Lake plants. The world knows that in Alberta and Canada we are at the forefront of technological development in heavy oils, oilsands and in many other areas, in drilling, for example. The world runs to Alberta to get our technology, so no one can say research is being done outside the country in this particular industry. It is done in Canada. We are the experts in this area. If the South Americans want heavy oils, they come to Alberta to get the technology. One cannot say we must Canadianize if we want research to be done here.

I can understand policies which limit the corporate size of Canadian subsidiaries of multinationals to prevent massive accumulation and concentration of assets because a diversity of small companies is always healthier than just a few major ones in a particular industry. I can understand a government, whether it is provincial or federal, withholding licences and permits from foreign-owned corporations. I can also understand—but I reject—the myriad government controls and regulations imposed on the oil and gas industry, although much too often they are excessive and expensive. If governments control, regulate, monitor, tax heavily and restrict corporate growth, what earthly reason is there for Canadianization, or even nationalization, of a corporate entity producing non-renewable resources which have a finite lifetime? We can do anything we wish with the companies or industry now. We can destroy them overnight, as is being done in western Canada. What earthly reason is there for trying to Canadianize something which has a very finite lifetime? I find it difficult to understand the reasoning. It is only because a few politicians hunger and thirst for power without ever really having earned the right to it or knowing what the industry is all about. There is a massive design and desire to control what belongs to the people in any event. The resources belong entirely to the people.

I have worked for multinational corporations. I know the mood in many of them. I worked for General Electric in Peterborough, and I have never seen greater Canadian attention and greater Canadian realization than I have witnessed and experienced in some of the multinational corporations. Surely we must control them and regulate them, but surely we must not drive them from this nation. We need capital, we need technology and we need multinational corporations to develop the energy industries of this nation.

I can understand that the federal government would wish to Canadianize the oil and gas industry to a certain degree on Canadian lands, but I cannot understand why the federal government extends this Canadianization policy to the development of non-renewable resources like oil and gas on provincial lands without provincial consent or even desire. I have no difficulty understanding why the Government of Saskatchewan would work hand in hand with the federal government to increase Canadian content, but if there is a different political philisophy in Alberta, Manitoba, British Columbia or Newfoundland which calls for somewhat different behaviour with respect to the oil and gas industry, surely this government must permit that. Why must this government force its political philosophy on all the provincial governments in this nation? That is being done through some of this legislation, particularly this bill and, indeed, the PIP legislation. Why is it being done? For what purpose? It is because of a political whim.

This legislation must be revised at the earliest opportunity. It must be revised through sound political thinking, and I think there is such thinking in the party across the way. It just has to assert itself. There is that kind of thinking on all sides of this House, and it has to assert itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

During the vote:

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) came in too late for the division.

Madam Speaker: The point of order may be raised after the division.

After the vote:

Madam Speaker: The motion is carried. The bill is therefore referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Madam Speaker: The President of the Privy Council, on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, a number of members on this side of the House were witness to the fact that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was not in his seat when the division started, and since this has happened before, when there was a request to nullify a Liberal member's vote, I feel that all members should be treated the same. The hon. member may have been late, or perhaps he just got back from Gabon, but whatever his reason, he was not in his seat when the division started and his vote should not be recorded.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I did not see the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I did not realize he was allegedly late for the vote. I ask the hon. member to tell me whether he was in fact late.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I plead the fifth amendment!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Of the new charter!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I have a complaint. There is a conspiracy to keep me from voting in this House. I was a little late. The count had started but it had not proceeded very far.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Therefore, the hon. member's vote should not be counted.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing with this marathon that we started the week before Easter. We are not beginning debate on the seventh bill dealing with energy. The bill we have before us this afternoon consists of amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act. The act will be renamed the Energy Administration Act and formal authority is being sought for several oil and gas pricing and compensation initiatives.

First, this bill will establish a new ceiling of $75 per cubic metre for the petroleum compensation charge on refiners and importers and broaden the scope for payment of compensation to include new domestic oil.

Second, it will establish a new oil export charge ceiling of $350 per cubic metre and provide us with authority to share one-half of the revenue from this charge with the producing provinces.

Third, it will establish the Canadian ownership special charge and the Canadian ownership account and ensure the charge cannot be raised above its current level without additional legislation.

Fourth, it will establish the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge on marine and aviation fuel used by carriers in international transportation with a ceiling of $350 per cubic metre. It will establish authority for and terminate the special compensation charge which had been established at the time of the breakdown in our negotiations with the Government of Alberta.

[Translation]

The basic elements of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, are directly related to the main goals of the National Energy Program. They include expanding the application of the petroleum compensation charge, which will enhance the effectiveness of higher prices for new oil as an incentive to undertake exploration and development operations. This promises to strengthen the energy security of Canadians and promote industrial activity in western Canada. The increasing importance of Petro-Canada is another vital element of the energy program that has been incorporated in this bill. Previously, a major step was made in this direction when the Crown corporation acquired Petrofina Canada, while the Canadian ownership special charge covers the major part of the cost of this acquisition. One of the main goals of the National Energy Program is to end our dependence on foreign oil by 1990. We shall honour this commitment, while maintaining a fair and realistic pricing system that will be acceptable to both the oil industry and the general public.

• (1650)

Our oil and gas pricing schedule, as created in consultation with the provinces, reflects the sense of realism and fairness which characterizes our energy program. Our pricing system has three essential advantages over the regime proposed by the previous Conservative government in 1980. It ensures that prices rise gradually and predictably so that consumers and the Canadian economy in general are given time to adjust. It ensures oil pricing fairness on a national level by providing a blended price to all regions of the country, and it results in a consumer price which has been and will continue to be lower than that paid by people of most other countries.

The Conservative government proposed in 1979 to pay one price to producers of oil in Canada except synthetic oil, regardless of the cost of developing and producing different types of oil. Moreover, the price was directly linked to 85 per cent of the international price, whatever the international price might be, thereby directly exposing Canadian consumers to the uncertainties of international oil prices regardless of the consequences to the country's economy.

[Translation]

This kind of pricing system would have forced Canadian consumers to spend several billion dollars more on already discovered oil and old oil, and to keep paying higher prices although at the time the oil was discovered, production costs were much lower. In addition, under the same system, production of new oil in Canada would not have been as profitable as it is elsewhere. I think people will find that our pricing system is entirely different and more sensible.

[English]

Our pricing system provides producers with the kind of return on investments they need to get on with the job of finding and producing oil for Canada—no more, no less. Returns on existing oil production have not been increased appreciably. However, returns from our new oil reference price created by the energy agreement with Alberta compare favourably with returns offered anywhere else in the world. This price applies to all companies developing new oil anywhere in Canada. This regime provides the Canadian economy with the certainty and stability needed to plan sound economic development in the 1980s.

At the wellhead prices for old oil, that is oil discovered before December 1980, will rise gradually and predictably at a fixed schedule to no more than 75 per cent of the international price. Unlike Conservative budget proposals, this price is not fully linked to the world price. It reflects the fact that this oil was relatively easy and certainly less expensive to develop than oil discovered recently. The substantially higher new oil reference price will be paid to producers of oil discovered after December 31, 1980, to producers of synthetic oil and new frontier production.

This reference price will provide a powerful incentive to producers to develop new oil supplies. It will never exceed world prices. Also, in the event that world prices rise sharply, the new oil price has a provision for phasing in increases, thereby protecting Canadian consumers.

[Translation]

Prices for recently discovered conventional oil, imported oil, frontier oil and synthetic oil are weighted in order to set a price that will apply in all areas of Canada. Today, the weighted price, that is, the average blended price for all oil produced in Canada and imported oil is 70 per cent of the world oil price. Oil that may be sold at the new reference price, plus imported oil, account for 36 per cent of the weighted price. Although this percentage may increase during the period covered by the energy agreement concluded with Alberta, we expect that the lower price for conventional oil will still constitute the major part of the weighted price when the agreement expires in 1986, thus keeping the weighted price below world levels. Our blended price, or average price if you prefer, which will apply to all imported or Canadian oil, will guarantee not only that Canadians will pay much lower prices than consumers in other countries, but also much lower prices than they would have had to pay with the Progressive Conservative budget.

[English]

The opposition continually attacks our pricing system on the basis of gasoline prices at the pumps. Its spokesmen never bother to point out to the general public that the Government of Canada does not control retail gasoline prices. We establish the price refiners pay for the crude they buy. This is the blended price. As I indicated, it stood at about 70 per cent of the world price in January of this year. If we included only the price of the old oil or oil discovered in Canada and exploited before December 31, 1980, we would have a price for old oil which is 54 per cent of the international price.

The integrated or blended price for all oil produced in Canada stands at the present time at about 70 per cent of the world price. After refiners purchase their crude at the blended price several costs, many of which are not under our control, are added to the price. For instance, they include the cost of refining and transporting oil to markets. They include profit margins for refiners and retailers and, very significantly, they include retail sales taxes. These retail sales taxes in turn include a constant 9 per cent in federal taxes, and then from zero to 40 per cent in provincial taxes depending upon the province—zero per cent in Alberta, 40 per cent in Quebec, and various levels of taxation according to the provinces.

[Translation]

Obviously Mr. Speaker, Canadians are in a good position because our blended price is still only 70 per cent of world prices and will remain much lower over the next four years. It is interesting to note the substantial at-the-pump tax in some provinces, including those provinces which pretend to be concerned about the impact of rising energy costs on their economy. In this regard, I would once again point out that Quebec has the highest sales tax in Canada, namely a 40 per cent sales tax on gasoline at the pump and this tax means gasoline prices in Quebec are the highest in Canada.

[English]

But even with substantial provincial taxes, the price of gas at the pumps continues to be half what it is in most European countries. It is rather difficult to compare Canadian and American prices because of differing sales taxes in the two countries and varying prices throughout the United States. I would invite my hon. friends to have a little patience. I will answer all their arguments, including those questions they will ask in the next few days.

• (1700)

I would like to deal with the comparison between Canada and the United States and explain it quite clearly on the record. I would point out that before sales taxes—I have talked about those sales taxes before—gasoline in the United States cost 36 cents a litre while in Canada at the present time it is only 29 cents a litre. That is a difference of 7 cents. However, it is clear that this substantial price advantage offered to consumers by our blanket pricing system is eliminated in many provinces through retail sales taxes imposed by provincial governments. I have indicated that provincial sales taxes vary in this country from zero cents in Alberta to 13 cents per litre in Quebec. The highest sales tax in any state in the United States goes up to 4.5 cents a litre, about three times less than the highest tax in a province in Canada. In effect, this means that you have a significant difference at the pump due to large differences between provincial taxes in Canada and state taxes in the United States.

Obviously, I do not challenge the right of provincial governments to impose such taxes. But I want to make it clear to the Canadian public that it is the provinces, not the Government of Canada, that are taking away the benefits offered by our blended pricing system in those provinces where they have very high sales taxes indeed.

The petroleum compensation charge is an integral part of the blended pricing system. It is the charge that will be used to ensure that the producers of new oil receive the new oil reference price for their production. This ensures that producers receive a fair price for their oil.

The petroleum compensation charge also ensures fairness among regions in Canada. As we know, certain parts of Quebec and all of Atlantic Canada depend upon high cost imported oil to meet a substantial portion of their energy needs. The Government of Canada has taken steps to ensure that these regions will soon have access to domestic oil and gas production but these efforts will take a few years to come to fruition. Since 1974, it has been the policy of the Government of Canada that no region in Canada should have to pay substantially higher oil costs because an accident of history and geography has made them dependent upon imported oil.

Currently, the largest portion of the petroleum compensation charge is used to compensate refiners in these regions for the difference in the international oil price they must pay and the price paid by refiners in other parts of the country who have access to less expensive domestic production.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada has benefited greatly from the petroleum compensation charge which, since its introduction by our government in 1974, has cushioned the Canadian economy and Canadian consumers against the shock caused by the sudden major increases of world oil prices throughout the seventies. Since 1974, this charge has been used to pay $13.7 billion in compensation to those regions of Canada, namely Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, which, because of their geographic location and their history, have had to rely in varying degrees on imported oil to meet their energy requirements. This is what our government means by equity and this is what we have really done for consumers in this country, especially those in eastern Canada who were in a very unfavourable position. These moneys have been spent to ensure that Canadians across the country will pay similar prices for the oil they need.

[English]

This bill contains a major provision relating to an important goal of the National Energy Program, that of vastly expanding the opportunities for Canadians in the petroleum industry.

We are seeking formal authority for the Canadian ownership special charge which provides the means to allow the Government of Canada to expand its ownership in the oil and gas industry. Revenue from the charge which is placed in the Canadian ownership account is currently being used to help defray the cost of Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina slightly more than a year ago. In future, revenue could be used to finance additional purchases on behalf of Petro-Canada, the government or other Crown corporations created for the purpose of expanding public sector involvement in the oil industry. But I want to make it clear that no future acquisitions will be financed from this account without Parliament having the choice to debate the matter through the negative resolution procedure.

It is clear that the Canadian people support an aggressive public sector presence to promote projects that will make a major contribution to energy security and encourage the Canadian private sector to get involved.

Some commentators in the House, and outside, have complained about these charges in aggregate. It is not so much that they quarrel with the purchase of each charge, but they say that the cumulative effect on consumers is excessive. A fair-minded observer, however, would recognize that Canadians support these measures as an investment in securing our own energy future. Each charge in this bill serves a specific purpose related to one of the golas of the National Energy Program. They are the means whereby the government can carry out the major goals of the National Energy Program for the benefit of all Canadians.

In that respect I was interested to read today the most recent report by the Canadian Petroleum Association on the proven reserves, especially after having heard all the moans from the Conservative benches during the last few weeks. It is interesting that this report that was made by the Canadian Petroleum Association—not by the government—indicated that in 1981, the year about which our friends on the other side complained so much, we have had an increase in established oil reserves in Canada for the first time in many years. An increase, Mr. Speaker, when our established reserves had been decreasing each previous year.

In 1981 a very significant increase was also obtained in our established reserves in oil and gas. This happened after the National Energy Program had been proclaimed and started to come into effect.

I would also stress that some of the charges indicated here contain an increase in the maximum that is set for those charges. This does not mean that the government is increasing those charges to that level. This provides a ceiling under which the charges can be varied according to the needs. For instance, each month the National Energy Board reviews the petroleum compensation charge and my department reviews how much we need to pay the refiners for imported petroleum. When the petroleum which is imported decreases in price, the charge decreases. If the price of imported petroleum increases, the charge obviously has to increase to pay the difference between the Canadian price and the imported price.

This is the reason we need to have that flexibility, to enable us to vary the charge every month, for instance. Similarly, this applies to the export charge on oil that we export to the United States. We need the flexibility to vary this charge. This is the reason this bill provides for possible increases in the level of those charges.

This bill represents a very fundamental part of our National Energy Program and I commend it to the House. I urge all hon. members to give their strong support to the bill.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, it will be interesting to see how many Liberals stand up and debate this bill and how many stand up and vote for it when it comes time to vote. This bill represents the recognition of the Liberals violating every single promise they made during the 1980 election campaign. They said re-elect the Liberals and they would provide cheap gasoline and heating oil for Canadians. They said: "Re-elect the Liberals and you will get to pay over $2 a gallon for gasoline."

Mr. Lalonde: Cheaper than you!

Mr. Andre: The United States deregulated the oil industry. The United States has world prices. They do not claim they charge less than world prices. The people in the United States are paying world prices. However, if one lives in Windsor, one pays more for gasoline than if one lives in Detroit. If one lives in Vancouver, one pays more for gasoline than if one lives in Bellingham, Washington.

Mr. Lalonde: Provincial sales tax.

Mr. Andre: If one lives in Canada under this great government, one pays more for gasoline and heating oil than if one lives in the United States, which is at the world price and does not claim anything else.

Mr. Lalonde: Provincial sales tax.

Mr. Andre: For some reason, the government there is expected to tell the truth. For some reason, it is held to account for its promises.

Mr. Lalonde: Compare Calgary and Montana.

Mr. Andre: This minister says, "Oh, but look, crude oil is cheaper; we do not pays these western producers as much for the oil as Americans pay their western producers." We know why, of course. On October 22, 1981, in his speech in Sherbrooke, Quebec, the minister said that a greater threat to national unity than Quebec nationalism is the growing wealth of Alberta, and that it was necessary for him to show his teeth.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Andre: So he did. He showed his teeth. He is putting those companies into receivership and forcing them into bankruptcy, left, right and centre. He is doing this constantly. However, he says that he is doing it to save the consumers.

Well, what has he done? Sure, the price of crude oil is cheaper, but how does that affect the consumer? We do not buy crude oil at the pump. We do not put crude oil into our furnaces. We do not put crude oil into our cars. We use gasoline, diesel fuel and heating oil. So after the crude oil, what comes next? There is the PGRT, the NGGLT, the PCC and the COC; there is the special levy, and I forget the initials, the federal excise tax, the federal sales tax; and yes, on top of all of those six or seven federal taxes, there is a provincial tax as well.

The minister says: "I cannot help it that our gasoline prices are higher in Canada. It is those rotten provincial governments; they have put on a highway tax". However, he did not mention the seven taxes which the federal government has put on. He has produced more blooming taxes than there are initials in the alphabet. The petroleum compensation charge alone amount to 74 cents a gallon.

Does Your Honour remember the outrage, the indignation and the screaming about 18 cents per gallon? "Oh, terrible! Eighteen cents per gallon of gasoline! My goodness, that is awful! The poor consumers of Canada! Re-elect the Liberals and there will be no 18 cents a gallon excise tax!" Oh, no, there will be a 24-cent petroleum compensation charge and a 4 cents a gallon ex-Canadian ownership charge, and I do not know how much a gallon for the rest of those charges which are laid on. Therefore, the net result is that when one goes to fill up a car with gasoline here in Ottawa, in Montreal, or anywhere else, one is paying more than one would be required to pay if one lived in the United States, and the United States is at the world price.

The minister proudly announced that he would beat those westerners into place, by cracky. He said they would not sell their crude oil to the rest of Canada at world price. They would sell it at less than world price to show what a big, strong, tough man he is. However, the poor consumers will have to pay on the way. Honesty is not a long suit for Liberals.

One of the charges in this bill does not affect the consumer in the direct way it should. It should in fact reduce the consumers' bill, but it does not, again as a result of the broken promises, violation of commitments and chicanery of this government. That is the oil export charge which is levied by the bill. It states that since Canadian producers cannot charge world prices for their crude oil, which is the type one uses in a furnace, the government wants to charge world prices when the oil is sold to the Americans. Therefore, the government put on an export charge to take up the difference.

I would like to go over a little history about where that export charge came from and the way in which successive Liberal ministers have used, abused and deceived Canadians about that charge. That charge arose in early October of 1973, to be precise, when we had a minority government. The inflation rate was about 5 per cent. Outrageous! The New Democratic Party said: "By cracky, if you do not bring down inflation, we will defeat your minority government." So in a speech to the House on September 7, 1973, I believe, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said: "I will bring down inflation. I will put a price freeze on oil, bread and milk. I will save you from inflation by having western Canada subsidize you." That was the genesis of the Western Canada Concept: it arose from his speech on September 7, 1973. Yesterday, the minister had the temerity to say that separatism is a result of western politicans. Separatism is the result of himself and his colleagues—

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Andre: —saying that the west shall subsidize and maintain the Liberal party in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Now, as circumstances would have it, in October 1973 there was a war in the Middle East and OPEC put on an embargo and the price of crude oil shot up. We were frozen in Canada. Obviously, eastern Canada, which imported crude oil, could not be expected to pay what was then considered to be a very high level of $8 a barrel for crude oil while those relying on western Canada would get theirs for $4. So at the insistence of Mr. Robert Stanfield, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, the then leader of the opposition, and at the reluctance of the Prime Minister, a one-price crude oil system was brought into this country and an export tax was put on to capture that difference between the Canadian price and the American price.

The then minister of energy, Hon. Donald Macdonald, said to the producers: "Do not worry; we have put this export tax on, but it is our intention to give it back to you because it obviously belongs to you." Well, the bill for subsidizing the imports started to rise, so this very fair-minded person in the Liberal Party, Donald Macdonald, said on November 21, 1973: "Gee, we cannot give you the money. We need it for subsidization. We will split it with you, 50-50. We will keep 50 per cent to help subsidize imports and we will give 50 per cent back to the producers since it is obviously theirs." Six days later, between Christmas and New Year, when there was sure to be no press attention, the Hon. Donald Macdonald said: "I am sorry, we will keep it all".

It was from that point that the west-east battles, the federal-provincial battles in terms of western Canada, began. First, the federal government was quite willing to exploit a weaker region of the country in order to remain in power. Second, it was quite prepared to break its promises as quickly as it made them if it felt it could get away with that and it served its purposes. That export tax was going into subsidization of imports. In that way the west was making its more than fair share of contributions to a uniform energy price across the country.

That money was not enough. In the 1975 budget the then minister of finance, the hon. John Turner, said that we had to have an excise tax on gasoline to help pay for the imports of crude oil. Therefore, a nine cents a gallon tax was put on to help pay for imports.

Then along came the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who said we are going to have a blended pricing system. He abuses the petroleum compensation charge, and he increased it illegally; I will get to that in a moment. He said that henceforth the moneys collected from the petroleum compensation charge would be used to pay for subsidizing imports.

What happened to the excise tax on gasoline and the export tax? Last year those two taxes amounted to $1,414 million.

Were they used to subsidize imports? No, they went into the general treasury. The consumers were already paying an excise tax and, indirectly, an export tax. On top of that, the petroleum compensation charge was collected in sufficient amounts to totally subsidize all imports.

In its very sneaky, dishonest, immoral manner the government put into general revenues taxes which were supposedly collected to maintain the one-point system. One can say so what, the government needs money. What bothers me more than the money is the downright dishonesty of the minister. I will give an example of what I mean. On March 23, 1982, in the Public Accounts Committee we heard testimony from the assistant deputy minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. A. D. Hunt. These are his exact words:

> The petroleum compensation charge revenues are used to compensate domestic classes of petroleum—

That is, Syncrude.

> —as well as to pay compensation for imported oil.

Mr. Hunt, the assistant deputy minister, said that imported oil is fully compensated by the petroleum compensation charge. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appeared on "Canada AM" on April 2, 1982, at 7.50 a.m. I suppose he thought no one would be listening who would catch him at his less than truth. He was asked by Miss Pamela Wallen:

> The taxpayers in this country pay more than $6 million a day to subsidize oil imports yet now, to solve a problem, we have to increase our exports?

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources replied:

> Now whatever we export is charged, there is a tax export charge and the revenues coming from that export charge help in reducing our cost for the imported oil.

That is an absolute falsehood. What the minister said over public television when Miss Wallen asked him an embarrassing question is absolutely untrue. Truth to this minister is whatever facts he happens to believe suit his political purposes. That is the truth as far as he is concerned.

The net result of all of his chicanery, all of these taxes and all of these broken promises, is that right now in Canada we pay over $2 a gallon for gasoline, $1.35 of which is taxes. Sixty-seven per cent of what we pay at the pump is taxes.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has used unparliamentary language. I did not call it to your attention before because I wanted to be sure by reading Beauchesne and Erskine May. We are used to the hon. gentleman's diatribes and language that stretches propriety, as well as his allegations that are usually unfounded, misleading and, in my view, not worthy of this House. However, on three occasions in his speech he used the word "dishonest" applicable to members of this government, either present or past.

The use of that term is completely unparliamentary. I suggest that the hon. member not only abstain from using it, although he has used it on numerous occasions, but also withdraw his use of it in the recent past. In future he should refrain from using that term, in effect attempting to inflame public opinion in a very unparliamentary way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The minister is saying that the word "dishonest" is unparliamentary when addressed to a member. I did not hear that. I did not hear him say a certain member was dishonest. If that was said, it is the privilege of the member to request that the word be withdrawn. I did not hear the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) call a particular member dishonest. The member can say that in his opinion the government acted in a dishonest way, but it is hard to ask that it be withdrawn if the words are not directed to a particular member.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply reserve the right to look at the blues and to inform the minister, because I understood the hon. member to use the term "dishonest". He used it two or three times in talking about the action taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I do not want to waste the time of the House, but I simply want to remind the hon. member that he is a parliamentarian and that he should respect the rules of this House.

[English]

Mr. Andre: I will have to examine the blues. I certainly do not want to use any unparliamentary language, but the thoughts behind those words are factual. If the sensitive Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) believes that the accusation is untrue, when he reads this I also ask him to read the statement made by the minister on "Canada AM" and I ask the minister to correct the wrongful information that he transmitted across the country. I ask him to be equally concerned about the truth as he is about the use of language in this House to try to describe the behaviour of the government of which he is part. He accuses me of inflaming. Unless there is some recognition soon by himself and by what the Prime Minister has called the "trained donkeys on the bankbenches of the Liberal Party"—and, by the way, that is a quote from his book, so hon. members opposite cannot accuse me of using unparliamentary language or being unkind; it is a quote from Pierre Elliott Trudeau's book—of what is happening and what hon. members opposite are doing by blindly—stupidly, I maintain—voting in favour of what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources keeps proposing to this House, they will leave carnage across the country.

• (1730)

It might be that the Minister of Supply and Services thinks I am being inflammatory, but 1,700 people were at a meeting of the Western Canada Concept in the Fraser Valley last night. Why were they there? They were there because of what I have just been talking about. They were there because of promises and deceits, dishonesty and statements by the minister that they know to be untrue. This continuous propaganda barrage through multimillion dollar advertising campaigns—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If there was any doubt in Your Honour's mind prior to the last expressions used by the hon. gentleman, surely that doubt must now have been dissipated. The hon. gentleman has been in this House since 1972. I have observed him since that time—

Mr. Andre: And learned nothing.

Mr. Blais: —and the accusations he is making are made as if he were looking into a looking glass. I have heard him use hyperbole of the worst kind with the precise view in mind of exciting in western Canada the kind of behaviour which resulted in the meeting which took place last evening.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) informed me—and I hope I am not breaking a confidence—that there would be only one speaker for the Liberal party on this bill. There seems to be some pent-up need on the part of others to participate, and I welcome their participation. If the minister would like to give a speech on this bill, I hope he will read the bill first because, if he did, he might be a little less critical of the remarks I have been making. He would be less critical if he was aware of the issues. However, if he feels a need to speak, I certainly hope he takes advantage of the opportunity the House of Commons provides. If he feels his speech would contribute to a reduction in the feelings of frustration, anger and rage which cause people in the hundreds and thousands in western Canada to look at separatism as an answer, and if he can allay their concerns and cause those meetings to decrease in number, then I would welcome that speech. I sincerely would, but I am afraid that is not likely to occur.

So far the only answer from the government is an advertising campaign which brings more people out to such meetings. They know why they are angry, and when they see ads on television with geese flying into the sunset and the government saying "We have to inform you", the implication is: "Look, you dummies out there, you don't know what is going on. If you watch these ads, they will make you know what is going on, and then you won't want to join the WCC." The $70 million the government is spending on advertising is not just money down the drain; it is contributing to the membership of the WCC, but the government does not seem to understand.

There were marvellous promises made. There was no way the party opposite would allow an 18 cents tax increase. Hon. members opposite said: "Vote Liberal and we will keep the price of gasoline down". Vote Liberal and pay more than $2 a gallon for gasoline. We pay $1.35 in taxes alone. We have to listen to the minister say he is keeping our prices below the world level. What do we have to do to get a minister to tell us the truth? Can we expect truth out of our national government?

Mr. Kelly: Can we expect it from you, Harvie?

Mr. Andre: This is what causes people to think that perhaps the WCC is the only alternative, and that is the tragedy.

Mr. Kelly: Get out of the gutter.

Mr. Andre: Let me tell hon. members about the competence of this government which fills us full of hope. Item two of the long list of taxes attached to this bill is a transportation fuel recovery charge. Let us remember that all this is to help Canadian consumers! Canadian consumers are going to pay less than world price! Let me read from the Vancouver Province of Sunday, April 11, 1982:

> A special tax imposed by the federal government on diesel oil burned by Canadian ships engaged in international trade has raised the cost of fuel well above the prevailing U.S. price, the Council of Marine Carriers claims.

I suppose that is propaganda designed to enrage and inflame feelings of separatism, according to the hon. member who was mouthing off and is now silent. I suppose that is what that is all about. We are protected from the world price unless, of course, we happen to drive cars and need gasoline or if we happen to have ships which burn diesel fuel.

Mr. Kelly: This garbage passes for insight out west, but not here.

Mr. Andre: I referred to automobiles and ships. What about aircraft? Let us see what the geniuses and marvellous people who bring us "cheap energy" are doing in relation to aircraft fuel. According to the Edmonton Journal of April 11, 1982:

> Canadian airline and oil industry officials are shaking their heads in disbelief at a complex new fuel tax system now being proposed by the federal government.
> A direct tax on aviation fuel used for international flights has been withdrawn following complaints by other countries that the tax violated bilateral air agreements.

What we are asked to approve in Bill C-103 is a tax the government cannot impose because it violates International Air Transport Association agreements. However, the government has collected it, so we now have to pass a law to legalize a tax collected previously which the government was not allowed to collect. Can hon. members believe that? And the government says "Vote for us and we will keep prices down"!

Let me quote from this article again:

> "I think they (federal officials) are out of their minds," said Gordon Lindsay of the Air Transport Association of Canada.
> "This is the most complex thing I've ever seen pulled on a tax."

The article goes on with equally complimentary comments about the competence of this government, to which those—to use the description of the Prime Minister—"trained donkeys" say, "Aye, sir, aye, we approve; we think you are wonderful and doing just a great job."

Mr. Smith: Thanks, Harv.

Mr. Cousineau: Don't be so generous.

Mr. Andre: Then the petroleum compensation charge is a dandy. That was brought in originally to set up a special fund to subsidize Syncrude production to domestic levels. We passed an act in this House, with relative dispatch, which provided that there shall be collected on every barrel of oil in Canada sufficient funds to subsidize the Syncrude price down to world levels, or production from any other tar sands plants which might come along. It was somewhat like unemployment insurance. It was a special fund. It did not go into consolidated revenue. It was not a tax. It was not preceded by a Ways and Means motion, which would have been required if it was a tax. It was a special fund to take care of the Syncrude situation, which arose out of an agreement between various provinces and others which participated. The government decided to raise more money to subsidize imports. It was not getting enough from the export tax. An excise tax could have done it, but in the election campaign the Liberal Party made a big thing about excise taxes, so it could not use excise taxes. The government had to invent a new tax. It has the same effect. It still hurts when you pay it out of your jeans when you buy gasoline, but the government would not use the horrible words "excise tax." It was the petroleum compensation charge. One of the geniuses—one of the "Tanzanianizers"—in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources discovered that perhaps the government could use this petroleum compensation charge. Lo and behold, on July 10, 1980, the minister comes tramping in and lays down a piece of paper, saying: "This is a notice of ways and means; effective midnight tonight you will now pay more for the petroleum compensation charge".

I raised a point of order and asked: "How can you do that? How can you just lay down a piece of paper and suddenly start collecting money, since the bill you purport to amend by that ways and means motion was not a tax bill in the first instance but a special fund?" Madam Speaker said: "That is a legal problem; I cannot deal with it, sorry."

We then sought legal counsel and were told: "You are right, it is illegal; they are not supposed to do that". We asked: "How much would it cost to pursue this?" The reply was: "About $200,000." We just do not happen to have $200,000 to spare in order to require the government to keep the law. That is all we are asking—that the government obey the law.

Finally, in Bill C-103 the government is trying to catch up and make legal what is illegal. This time it introduced a notice of Ways and Means, and so suddenly something that was not a tax is defined as a tax. How that magic transformation occurred I have no idea. I asked legal counsel for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Elwood, how that could be. He replied; "Just because there is a procedural imperfection, that does not mean it is not a tax." Just because there is a procedural imperfection? It is as if he were saying: "Look, you turkey, you Member of Parliament, you are just a sausage factory. You are supposed to spit out whatever we geniuses decide. You should not be asking us to obey all of these little procedural niceties in the House of Commons." That is simply unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. And we are supposed to live in a parliamentary democracy!

I recommend that members examine a letter I received from the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which is signed by the two chairmen, Senator John Godfrey, a Liberal, and the Hon. Perrin Beatty, a Conservative. It states that the government is currently breaking the law in regard to the export tax, that it is collecting more than it is authorized to collect by law. What do you do with a government that refuses to obey the law, Mr. Speaker? Some people feel that you must go to Western Canada Concept meetings. Unfortunately, that is what they feel. Is that not sad?

This business about the petroleum compensation charge has not stopped yet. The government collects the equivalent of 24 cents per gallon now, or about $3 billion per year. Now it wants us to give it authority to allow that to be raised to $7.5 billion per year without having to ask the House for permission.

An hon. Member: How much is that per gallon?

Mr. Andre: That is 48 cents per gallon. The government wants us—not us, but the "trained donkeys"—to turn over to the executive the right to levy taxes of up to 48 cents per gallon. That is almost a victory, Mr. Speaker. I am almost smiling about it because in the original version of Bill C-94—

An hon. Member: Bill C-98.

Mr. Andre: Well, on this one they were asking for authority to raise 70 cents per gallon. The minister says: "Ah, but this is just to subsidize imports and will not be abused." I would remind him of what one of his predecessors, Mr. Macdonald, said about the export tax. He said that it would be used for import subsidization. But not any more, Mr. Speaker; it is for another purpose. I would remind him of what the Hon. John Turner said about the excise tax on gasoline. In his budget of 1975 he said that it would be used for import subsidization. Where is it going now? It is going into other revenues.

The minister stands up and says: "Don't worry about that 48 cents per gallon, about that $7.5 billion. We won't abuse it; we will just use it for import subsidization." To that I say: "Listen, when two of your predecessors gave us a line like that and then had it flipped around, why in blazes would we believe you now?"—unless, of course, one was a trained donkey.

It is absurd that we are asked to give the government authority to collect that kind of tax without ever having to come back to this House. It is an incredible principle that we should be asked to turn over to the Crown the authority to raise taxes at will without ever getting the approval of Parliament. That bears no resemblance to parliamentary democracy; it bears a closer resemblance to a dictatorship.

Related to that and just as offensive is this Canadian ownership charge. That is a sneaky little deal, another sneaky little tax which amounts to four cents per gallon or $800 million per year. It is being used to pay off the purchase of Petrofina. Petrofina is a company whose shares were trading at about $40 until some people who were lucky, or got to know somebody, bid them up to about $80. Then along came Petro-Canada and paid $120 per share for them. I would like to know who those people were who bid them up from $40 to $80. In the early summer of 1980 they were worth $40. At that time a few other oil companies were trading around that price but they are trading around $20 now. We can fairly say, therefore, that had Petro-Canada not bought Petrofina for $120 per share, one could probably buy a share today for about $20 or $25. The government only paid about four or five times what the market shows the company is worth.

That is not declared in the blue books and the estimates in a way that might alert the public to what is happening so that people could make a judgment. The government does not want to have people looking at the record, apparently. It does not want spending to go up because it wants the minister to be able to claim that it is holding expenditures down. So this sneaky little Canadian ownership charge is created in a sneaky little account which is outside the regular government accounts and the money pours in. That means that the minister or his appointees at Petro-Canada have $800 million per year to play with and buy companies.

What a joy that is! What a great job they have! We do not know what they are paid. We do know that some get free mortgages, such as Mr. Phelps, if they happen to work for the minister and we know that his salary is augmented. But we do not know what all these people are being paid. All we know is that every time we fill up our automobile tank at the pump, four cents per gallon goes into a little pot for them to play with. Apparently we do not have any right to know; we are only Members of Parliament elected by the citizens of Canada and that does not give us any right to ask questions about how $800 million per year is being spent or should be spent.

That $800 million is almost a victory, Mr. Speaker, because originally the minister asked for the authority to raise the amount to $4.5 billion a year. He wanted to be able to add 28 cents per gallon on his own say so as a tax to be used by him and his Crown corporations, Petro-Canada or others. He wants the authority to create a whole bunch of others in order to buy whatever he wants. Well, a lot of people made money on those Petrofina shares. You can imagine how many wealthy speculators there would be if the same people had $4.5 billion a year to spend buying up whatever they can. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely immmoral, improper, dishonest, and only a trained donkey would vote for it.

Then there is the special compensation charge which was thought up by the genius who wants to Tanzanianize Canadians. It is exactly the same as the petroleum compensation charge, but they had to call it "special" because the minister was playing his political games. When there was a cutback in Alberta's production he called it the Lougheed levy; the rest of the country called it the Lalonde levy. It was a gimmick, but it has been collected and, even though it has come and gone, here we are six months later being asked to legalize something which was illegally put in place and which no longer exists. What kind of trained donkey would allow himself to be abused that way?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have the petroleum compensation payments, the spending part of the petroleum compensation charge. They are collecting now in the vicinity of $3 billion; that is, 24 cents a gallon at the pump. Talking about cooking the books and everything else, that item is listed in the blue books as a negative expenditure. Can you believe that? How do you get government spending to decrease, because each year the number gets bigger? Last year it was up 22 per cent. What you do is invent a negative expenditure which results in it being up only 16 per cent. That is what they have done with this!

In any event, we are taking 24 cents a gallon from every Canadian who buys gasoline, heating oil or diesel fuel and that money is being used to subsidize oil imported from Mexico, Venezuela and Saudi Arabia. At the same time non-subsidized oil produced by Canadians is shut in to the extent of 300,000 barrels a day because of this program to subsidize imports. We are subsidizing Pemex and Aramco while Canadian producers—western Canadians I admit, but Canadian producers—are shut in. It is costing one company, Oakwood Petroleums, 100 per cent Canadian owned, a million dollars a month.

When we ask the minister about that, he says: "Well, I am asking them to cut back." This shut-in production, Mr. Speaker, means hundreds of small service companies owned by Canadians do not have any work. You do not need to service a well which is not working. They are going bankrupt left, right and centre. The smart ones left for the United States last year, but the minister says he is proud of his National Energy Program because it is Canadianizing the oil and gas industry. Well, those who are still here are card carrying members of the WCC; they consider Canadianization a dirty word. That is sad, Mr. Speaker. It should be a marvellous word; it should fill us full of enthusiasm and we should be driving towards majority Canadian ownership and giving these junior Canadian companies the opportunity to participate in this tremendous growth. But in the incompetent and stupid way this program is being administered, these people are being driven out of business.

I have not mentioned, Mr. Speaker, what that 300,000 barrels of shut-in production are costing the Canadian economy. It costs us what, $20 million a day to import that same amount. We have to borrow that money so we have to keep our interest rate higher than the United States. What does that do to the dollar? Has it raised our inflation and interest rates by 1 per cent or 2 per cent? It is pretty hard to tell, but it has for sure raised both. Yet these people will still vote for that program and say to the minister he is doing a good job, even though he has driven hundreds of businesses into bankruptcy, even though consumers are unnecessarily paying 24 cents a gallon for gasoline, heating oil and diesel fuel. All this despite the fact the minister's own officials—the smart ones, not the Tanzanianizers—are telling him it is a disaster, change it. But he says: "Oh no, you do not change things; that means recognizing we may have made a mistake. I cannot do that, there might be some political cost. Why should I admit a mistake and get egg on my face just because there happens to be a few hundred companies going out of business in western Canada?"

Mr. Waddell: Why don't you say something positive so they will think that western Canadian politicians might have something to say occasionally? Then maybe they would listen.

Mr. Andre: The NDP member wants me to say something positive.

Mr. Waddell: Right.

Mr. Andre: We know that as the little red rump of the Liberal Party, this hurts him as much as it hurts them. The only positive thing I can say about this is to plead with you to defeat this legislation and serve Canada well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Smith: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It would appear that due to a typographical error in the instructions which the Table has received, Bill C-108 was called rather than Bill C-103. I would seek the unanimous consent of the House that the debate which has occurred so far on this bill be deemed to have applied to Bill C-103 rather than Bill C-108.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that Bill C-103 will be deemed to have been introduced, rather than Bill C-108?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Agreed and so ordered.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED EXPANSION OF COMMITTEE'S REFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the headlong rush to Canadianize the oil industry and indeed somehow every other industry in the country has resulted in a massive outflow of Canadian capital to the United States and elsewhere. This capital outflow has caused massive foreign borrowing at rates running as high as 2.5 per cent and today 5 per cent above American rates. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House directs that while the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is studying the profits and interest concerns of banks, the reference be extended to include an examination of how the National Energy Program, the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the bills now before the House that militate against foreign investment have contributed to the excessively high interest rates in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL UNITY

EFFECT OF CENTRALIST POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has again been publicly blaming the rise in western separatist sentiment on unspecified western politicians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That, bearing in mind that there are none so blind as those who will not see, the Liberal government re-examine its centralist policies especially as they relate to energy, budgetary measures and the pursuit of socialist doctrines, to find out the real root cause of western alienation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENTS MADE BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On Saturday in Vancouver, and in Calgary on Monday, the United States Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Paul Robinson, in public addresses called on the Canadian government to buy warships, send another brigade of Canadian troops to Europe, purchase missiles for the F-18 fighter aircraft, and increase this country's defence budget beyond the 18 per cent per year planned for the next two years. This is unsolicited advice on the spending of taxpayers' money and a clear interference in Canadian affairs and policy making by the representative of the United States government. In light of the government's investigation of Sir John Ford's mild comments last year on the Constitution, comments that were not even made in public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House condemns the direct interference in Canadian affairs by the U.S. Ambassador and calls on the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ask the ambassador for an explanation of his behaviour and public remarks in Vancouver and Calgary, and that he protest to Washington this interference in Canadian affairs by its envoy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL POTATO MARKETING BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the potato producers of Ontario and in my riding of Grey-Simcoe are undergoing very difficult financial times, mainly because they have had their product undercut below cost by almost 50 per cent due to the dumping of potatoes in Ontario by the maritime potato producing provinces, mainly Prince Edward Island, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That Agriculture Canada take all necessary steps to establish a national potato marketing board to assure potato producers across Canada of a just and adequate return on their investment and at the same time guarantee consumers a continuing supply at a fair and just cost.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

BANKS AND BANKING

PENALTIES IMPOSED FOR PREPAYMENT OF MORTGAGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that most banks and financial institutions impose substantive penalties for the early retirement or prepayment of mortgages and short-term loans, and in light of the fact that this constitutes usury of the highest sort in today's financial climate, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki):

That the Minister of Finance immediately undertake such legislative or regulatory action as may be necessary to remove or restrain substantively the imposition of penalties for the retirement or prepayment of home mortgages and short-term loans by banks and financial institutions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

KENT ROYAL COMMISSION

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Kent commission recommendations on newspapers are long overdue, and while the government drags its heels while more and more papers fall into fewer and fewer corporate hands; whereas Commissioner Kent indicated a need to limit the concentration of newspaper ownership but his proposals have so far fallen on deaf ears; whereas the public was invited to the original hearings but newspaper publishers, the group with a vested interest in seeing the Kent commission sabotaged, have met with government officials on several occasions to discuss the recommendations; I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the minister of multiculturalism allow more public input into the Kent commission process, and that the government stop dragging its heels and get the Kent commission proposals before the public as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, whereas on Monday last the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in Vancouver, and on Tuesday separatists held a meeting in the Lower Mainland attended by at least 1,500 people, the largest crowd attracted by the WCC to date, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That the Prime Minister stay away from British Columbia as his every visit adds high priced Liberal gasoline to an already hot separatist fire.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CORN COMPETITIVE FORMULA PRICING ARRANGEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, it has been reported that it could cost the government $100 million a year to subsidize the domestic price of barley in eastern Canada under the corn competitive pricing formula. Recognizing that this subsidy is totally unnecessary since other programs already exist to move subsidized feed grains into this region, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately abolish the corn competitive formula pricing arrangement and allow feed grains sold in Canada to be priced at the going export rate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

USE OF FUNDS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY ROUTES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which I am sure the Minister of Transport would want to support. In view of the fact that in April, 1977, the B.C. Subsidy agreement for replacement ferry service was signed between Ottawa and British Columbia, and in view of the fact some $45 million has been given to British Columbia in these past five years under the agreement, and since the member of the provincial legislature for Prince Rupert, Mr. Graham Lea, was refused the right to an emergency debate on the continuation of the agreement by the Socreds earlier today in Victoria, despite rumours that these funds are to be diverted to Pier B.C. and B.C. Place, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

That this House call on the Minister of Transport to intervene in this matter and renegotiate the agreement, providing all particulars to the transport committee, and ensure that these funds are spent on northern B.C. routes as they were originally intended, keeping in mind, of course, that B.C. received only $11 million last year, while the east coast received $128 million.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF MATERIAL RECOMMENDED BY McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General who is just taking his seat. Since we must assume the Solicitor General is aware of the recommendation in the McDonald commission report, even those which have so far not been published, and can also assume that the Solicitor General is aware that one of those recommendations which is still not published which states that those who were involved in Operation Ham should have available to them all material that would help them in the preparation of their defence, and bearing in mind that one of the officers is now on trial, is the Solicitor General planning to release this material?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, one of the hon. members opposite recently issued a press release in which he commented on McDonald's reference to this background material which should be made available. I checked that and discovered on reading it—and the hon. member should have been able to discover it himself as well—that the reference was to material which was not public at the time that the third McDonald commission report was prepared, and which is now public. In other words, the material which the McDonald commission recommended be made public was in fact made public, is public, and is available for the use of the accused in that trial now going on in the province of Quebec.

EXTENT OF RELEASE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, is the Solicitor General suggesting to me that all the material connected with the McDonald commission has been released, or is there a great deal of it being withheld because it would place some of his colleagues, past and present, in great difficulty—perhaps with the law—but certainly with Parliament for having evaded responsibilities which are manifestly theirs?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the McDonald commission report was edited—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Edited?

Mr. Kaplan: —and it was edited with the concurrence of the commissioners to delete matters which dealt with national security and international relations. But the reference which the McDonald commission itself made for giving material to members of the force, was to this background material, and what the McDonald commission was referring to was Part V, Chapter 3, of the second report. Part V, Chapter 3 of the second report has been made public. The recommendation which the McDonald commission made for giving access to material to accused members of the force has been fully implemented.

STATUS OF CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I gave the minister notice over the noon hour of my intention to ask this question. I hope he got the letter. It was very short notice, but I know the minister is aware of the issue. What is the present status of the Canada-Nova Scotia agricultural development agreement which has been in limbo now for almost a year and a half? The minister's own officials advised Nova Scotia agricultural officials that the agreement had to be processed by many federal officials before it came to the minister to be presented to the cabinet. Can the minister tell us where it is at the present time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it has received, as the hon. member stated, very serious consideration. One of the big problems, of which I am sure the hon. member is aware, is the priority the province of Nova Scotia gives to agriculture. It was number three on its ratings list for the cost-shared programs of the federal government and the province. I think part of that problem has been rectified. We hope to present something to the province of Nova Scotia in the not too distant future. There are still discussions going on and we hope it is going to be the kind of program which the province wants.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister in part for a part answer.

STEPS IN PROCESSING AGREEMENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I am really trying to find out what priority the Government of Canada has in agriculture for Nova Scotia. The province has done its work. As I understand it, the minister's own officials said that the matter has to go through senior management of Agriculture Canada, then to deputies of the Department of Agriculture, and then be presented to the economic and regional development committee. We appreciate that with the re-organization of cabinet this has caused delay. Specifically, can the minister tell us whether the matter has gone through those different levels of senior management of agriculture and/or cleared the deputy ministers, and has the minister finally presented it to the responsible committee for approval?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is partly right again. First, the matter goes through the minister's office for approval. I approved the program for discussion some time ago. That is where it is at at the present time. I hope it will be in its final discussion stages in the not too distant future so we can present it. I realize it is an important program but, as I said earlier, if the province of Nova Scotia had given it top priority, as we give agriculture top priority in Canada, it would have been approved. For instance, the one for New Brunswick is ready for approval right now because that province gave it top priority.

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON INFLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He will know that the recent report of the Conference Board of Canada indicated that, as a result of the high interest rate policy of the federal government, rates of unemployment will continue to increase, consumer spending will decrease, and business investment will continue to decrease in Canada for the rest of 1982, well into 1983, and perhaps beyond that. Is the government's high interest rate policy intended eventually to reduce the rate of inflation in the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I may remind the hon. member that the views expressed by the Conference Board are a little more complex than the simplified version he had to give because of the nature of the question period. Furthermore, the government is not pursuing a high interest rate policy; the hon. member should understand that interest rates in Canada are high because of very strong inflationary pressures. In addition, as a result of the dependence of our economy on the economies of our trading partners, high interest rates prevailing elsewhere affect our economy as well. If the hon. member supports the government's anti-inflationary policy and inflationary pressures continue to decline, he will find the Conference Board agreeing that interest rates will go down. Another conclusion is that this year will be seen as a period of transition to 1983, when an upswing in investment is expected, with more jobs and thus a drop in the unemployment rate.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE EFFECT OF INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, on a number of occasions the Minister of Finance has indicated that the present monetary policy pursued by the government is intended to be a major step in the fight against inflation. If inflation is defined as when there are too many dollars chasing too few products, or when spending increases more rapidly than production, would the minister agree that while Canada and other nations have been attempting to reduce inflation by reducing spending, another approach to combating inflation would be to increase significantly the amount of production in the country?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in his first question the hon. member referred specifically to the Conference Board, and I am going to refer him to the Conference Board. There he will find the answer to his question, since the Board is advising the government to maintain its policy of restraint as expressed in the fiscal plan set forth in the budget, and it is by maintaining the restrictions in the government's fiscal plan that the fight against inflation can be made yet more effective so that it will remove uncertainty among investors, thus increasing investment and creating jobs and consequently bringing about a drop in both the unemployment rate and our interest rates.

IMPACT OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamploops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, despite the minister's response and his continual reference to the Conference Board of Canada, while other countries are pursuing a monetary policy in their efforts to reduce inflation a country such as Canada has another alternative, and that is to increase production in the country. Why is the government not taking immediate steps to reduce the idle capacity in our economy which currently stands at 25 per cent, and refusing to require corporations like Toyota and Honda to source and assemble automobiles which they sell in the country, right here in Canada?

• (1425)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, as far as the question about negotiations with other countries on automobile manufacturing is concerned, the minister responsible for International Trade is always available to answer this type of question. Regarding the general economic situation and our production capacity, I have already made it clear to the hon. member that as long as we have a climate of uncertainty which is, in fact, caused by high interest rates, investment will drop and consumer spending and consumer demand will drop as well, so that idle production capacity is due to this climate of uncertainty. If we really want consumer demand to pick up, we must get rid of the uncertainty caused by high inflation rates.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—INVESTIGATION BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe-North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister will know that my colleagues from Newfoundland and Nova Scotia have continually questioned the government with respect to the Ocean Ranger tragedy. Last evening, nine weeks from the date of the tragedy, Canadians watched a television news report from the United States covering the U.S. Coast Guard hearings in Boston. This House welcomes their concern, but I suggest to the minister that Canadians find it offensive that Americans have acted promptly to determine why so many Canadians lost their lives when the Canadian inquiry will not even start until October. Does the minister not find that delay to be unconscionable and offensive?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada have set up a joint royal commission to investigate this tragedy. This has been agreed to by both governments and supported by all parties in this House. The royal commission is chaired by the Chief Justice of Newfoundland, accompanied by five prominent Newfoundlanders. At the present time the commission is at work gathering information and conducting studies. As a matter of fact one member of the commission is present at the hearings in Boston. I would suggest to my hon. friend that it is not appropriate to ask me to reflect upon the members of such a prominent commission.

CANADA-UNITED STATES CO-OPERATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe-North): Madam Speaker, while Canadians are obtaining offices and hiring staff, the Americans have been able to get their inquiry under way. Was there ever any attempt to hold a joint inquiry with the U.S. Coast Guard so this matter could be acted upon immediately, since there will be lives at risk at sea next winter and the commission will not even be off the ground?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first, it has been determined that there will be full co-operation between the Canadian and the United States governments in this regard. Any information that we have is accessible to our American friends, and vice versa. As far as the internal investigation by the American Coastguard is concerned, it is being followed very closely and, obviously, when it comes up with recommendations they will be public and it will be up to the government to make sure that those recommendations which we find acceptable are put into effect without having to wait for the report from the royal commission. But again, our royal commission is one with a broad mandate and it wants to carry out a very full investigation, not only of the Ocean Ranger tragedy but also of practices aboard drilling rigs and platforms offshore. I think we should give that commission the necessary time to do its work.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—PETITION FOR BETTER SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. The minister will know that the joint inquiry will not get under way until October. According to press reports it may be three to four years before it reports. The minister will also know that yesterday in the House, a petition bearing 72,000 names was presented asking for increased search and rescue capabilities in Newfoundland, specifically two search and rescue vessels to serve the offshore and fixed wing aircraft support for rescue helicopters. Is the minister, on behalf of the government, prepared to act now before more lives are lost?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of Defence): Madam Speaker, I read the petition tabled by the hon. member yesterday very carefully, I note that it was signed by some 72,00 Newfoundlanders who want to see improvements to search and rescue capabilities in Newfoundland. I can assure you that we have examined its intent already. My department is currently re-evaluating all the dispersement of our search and rescue capabilities on the east coast with the view to determining how we may improve the search and rescue capability in Newfoundland, without unduly depriving other areas of Canada due to the displacement of helicopters and fixed wing aircraft stationed there. I assure the hon. member that we are looking into it as we have much concern for their petition and we do want to see this matter resolved.

REQUEST THAT FIXED WING AIRCRAFT BE STATIONED IN EASTERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, would the minister now give the House an assurance that the necessary navigational equipment, specifically radar equipment, is being placed on the three rescue helicopters in Newfoundland? They do not have that equipment at the present time. Will he also give the House an assurance that fixed wing aircraft will be stationed in eastern Newfoundland at all times in order to maximize the effectiveness of the helicopters and provide some element of protection for offshore workers and fishermen?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I cannot assure the hon. member that there will be fixed wing aircraft in Newfoundland. I think we must first consider the evaluation done by my department of the entire SAR program to ensure that we do not deprive on area, and further that we do not cause shortfalls in other areas on the east coast. However, as far as equipment is concerned, I have mentioned it to the hon. member, in fact I wrote to him about it, and I believe there was what we call a late show on the subject, as well, when we gave him some additional details with respect to this matter. All of our helicopters are being updated with our SARCUP program. At the moment we are spending over $26 million. As far as the long-range radar improvement to instrumentation is concerned, this will be carried out. I will do what is possible to see that Newfoundland is equipped with one of these new helicopters, at least by the end of this summer.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I am now advised that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will not be in the House today, and I therefore direct my question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. During the period in which last November's budget was being prepared I am sure it was evident to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the Canadian automobile industry was heading into its third consecutive year of reduced sales, because there had already been many thousands of automobile workers laid off even prior to that November budget.

Can the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism advise us whether the Minister of Finance was aware that the budget's provisions, which would adversely affect an already severely depressed industry, could not be borne by that industry without adding many more thousands of automobile workers to the jobless list?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I think it is too easy to set up a cause-and-effect relationship between the budget and reduced sales of cars produced in Canada. I think the problem is a much broader one, namely, the state of the Canadian economy, and that because of high inflation and the general economic slowdown, Canadian consumers are buying fewer cars than they did in the past. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I think it is a bit simplistic to establish a causal relationship between the budget and the problems of the automobile industry.

[English]

ESTIMATED LOSS OF SALES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Maybe I could help the minister with that causal relationship, because the government took an already depressed industry and clobbered it with the capital cost allowance provisions in the budget.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism will be well aware of the thousands of lost sales and thousands of lost jobs, because the head of one car rental firm alone said that with respect to his industry 50,000 new vehicles would not be purchased because of the budget provisions, and that is just the car rental industry. Added to that, of course, are the fleet purchases and the individual purchasers of cars who take advantage of capital cost allowance. Now, instead of buying new cars, those lessees under contract are extending existing leases on old vehicles.

Having regard to the capacity of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to monitor the automobile industry, can the minister give us his estimate of the loss of new car and truck sales which is directly attributable to last November's budget provisions?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I do not have that information.

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a final supplementary question. Yesterday, as the minister will be aware, the Minister of Finance made his fifth retreating announcement, that is, an announcement resulting in the thirty-second or thirty-third individual change to the budget. Having regard to the estimated 30,000 automobile workers directly employed by that industry who are now on permanent or temporary lay-off, and having regard to the additional 20,000 to 25,000 who are now jobless and who had been employed by dealerships across the country, I wonder if the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism is in a position to advise us whether the capital cost allowance provisions of the budget are on the priority list for future budget changes. If they are not, I wonder if he could explain why they are not.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, it is not up to me to tell the House whether there will be budget changes and what those changes will be.

[English]

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to those of my colleague, the hon. member for Perth, directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. The Canadian Construction Association has advised the government that the budget proposals relating to capital cost allowances have a particularly negative impact on the construction industry in comparison to most other industries. Since the industry is desperately suffering from the high interest rate policy of the government, and currently has some 153,000 people out of work, would the minister state whether he is concerned with this problem and, if so, whether he is likely to propose yet another budget change to the Minister of Finance?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I just said that it was not up to me to provide information on possible budget changes, since that is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

In his question, the hon. member implied that the capital cost allowance no longer exists. I would like to point out that in his November budget, the Minister of Finance actually extended the application of this allowance.

[English]

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The minister obviously does not understand the problem because there is a very serious problem relating to this industry, particularly as a result of the budget. That was the answer I was expecting from the minister.

My supplementary question also concerns the construction industry. This industry will be bearing an additional tax load because of the changes in the sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level. These sales taxes on the construction industry will not change, but will remain at 5 per cent, whereas other industries will see a reduction of one percentage point. Why is the government deliberately attacking this particular industry through the capital cost allowance changes and the sales tax changes, particularly when there are so many people in that industry who are out of work?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I do not really understand the hon. member's question, and I do not see why, in referring to the transfer of sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level, the hon. member does not want Canadian goods to be treated the same as imported goods.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The minister does not understand!

EMPLOYMENT

NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENTS WITH ONTARIO

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my questions are addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There have been rumours floating around northern Ontario that the minister is about to enter into an agreement with the province of Ontario for a temporary measure to alleviate unemployment being suffered by miners in northern Ontario. I want to ask the minister three questions, and the first is whether or not it is his intention to agree to extend the fisheries and forestries agreement, signed with the province of Ontario, to include unemployed miners? Has he been in negotiations with his opposite number in the province of Ontario, the minister of natural resources? If those negotiations have in fact been going on, how quickly will any recommendations be implemented?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can confirm to the hon.

member for Kenora-Rainy River that the Minister of State for Mines and I have been holding discussions with officials of the government of Ontario concerning the extension of Section 38 provisions, relating to job creation, to the mining industry. We have reached a basic agreement that that industry could be covered under Section 38 funds. We are now developing specific projects and proposals which will be reviewed by provincial officials, officials from my ministry and from the mining industry. They will be announced in due course. We have received several very good applications which I think will be able to provide some relief in the unemployment situation to the mining industry. We will keep Members of Parliament informed as those individual projects are confirmed.

PETRO-CANADA

REQUEST THAT SHIPBUILDING CONTRACTS BE PLACED IN CANADA

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Petro-Canada television ads are urging Canadians to use PetroCan products because "It's Ours".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Yet, here we are, with over 1,200,000 unemployed, while PetroCan continues to place orders offshore in foreign yards in amounts in excess of $200 million for drill rig construction.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now clap.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Press releases indicate that Husky Oil, a subsidiary of Nova, will be having three, perhaps four, offshore supply vessels built in Korea. Since we have in Canada both the capacity for ship and floating equipment construction, and the manpower to do the job, why are these jobs not done at home? Why do we let contracts slip out of our hands and place orders ourselves outside Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Petro-Canada has been very active in expanding the possibilities for Canadian industry to provide supplies for the oil and gas industry. For example, two service ships have been ordered from Marystown, Newfoundland, recently. An order was placed with Marine Industries in Sorel quite recently by Petro-Canada. There has also been an expansion at the Petro-Canada refinery in Montreal worth about $150 million. There are certainly many things that Petro-Canada is doing to encourage Canadian suppliers. At the same time, obviously, Canadian suppliers have to be competitive. Whenever orders can be placed with Canadian suppliers who are competitive and can meet delivery time, I am sure Petro-Canada will encourage Canadian manufacturers first.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, we well know that with the size of PetroCan, it is having some work done at home.

QUERY RESPECTING SUBSIDIES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The marine industry estimates that $33 billion worth of work is to be done in floating equipment and ship vessel construction within the next ten years. What steps will the government or the minister's department take to ensure that Canadians get those jobs, not a PetroCan share but a fair share of that $33 billion? Will it go so far as to cut off subsidies for ship construction offshore?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I listened to the answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I could almost say ditto to what he said. We, the ministers responsible for Crown corporations, are good Canadians. We do our job well. When we see a Crown company procuring material abroad, we intervene to find out if maximum efforts have been made to procure in Canada. It is only when we are convinced on matters of technology, delivery dates or things of that kind, are we satisfied that Canadians are not awarded contracts. That is the only way we can do it. There are other preoccupations, for example, building a port facility or a refinery on time. These must also be taken into account in the decision-making process.

TRADE

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for International Trade. Just two days ago the United States International Trade Commission filed its report on "Condition Relating To The Importation of Canadian Softwood Lumber Into The United States" with the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance, a topic of serious concern to our number one export industry. The report does not accuse Canada of subsidizing our lumber exports and is, in the view of most objective reviewers, both factually correct and fair.

My concern arises from the fact that a ranking member of the Senate Committee on Finance used his privileged access to this important report to issue a widely publicized statement which is, even according to American sources, a misrepresentation of the report's tone and content and is thus unfairly to Canada's interest. Will the minister comment on the report and advise this House what action he and his colleagues are taking to correct the misrepresentation being spread in the United States, and thereby protect Canada's legitimate interest?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, on April 19 the United States International Trade Commission made its report to the Senate Finance Committee. They have not commented on that report up to this time. They are now analysing it and possibly will comment in a couple of days.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, Senator Packwood, the senator I referred to, due to his privileged access to that report, even before parties which made major submissions to those hearings had a chance to get a copy, made statements totally at variance with the facts exemplified in the report. I urge the minister to get together with his colleagues, consult both industry and labour, and make some representations to the United States because Senator Packwood said he feels that, based on the study, the timber industry could petition the ITC and Department of Commerce for possible imposition of trade duties on Canadian lumber products sold in the United States.

I talked today with the IWA in Portland. They take a completely opposite view. So do the industry people to whom I have talked. Will the minister consult his colleagues and the industry and make immediate representations in an attempt to correct the mistaken impression now being so widely spread throughout the United States?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): As the hon. member knows, Madam Speaker, we have been following these discussions very closely, in Ottawa, Washington, and on the west coast of the United States. The situation is well in hand as far as we are concerned. Because one senator has allegedly made a specific comment, I do not think that will have the dramatic effect the hon. member thinks it will have on the U.S. Senate Finance Committee or on the United States Special Trade Representative who is ultimately responsible to Congress and the administration for actions in this regard.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—CONSTRUCTION OF YUKON SECTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister knows that the Alaska gas pipeline project was to have been completed at the end of this year. He also knows it is not even started yet. There is some very disturbing news coming out of Alaska. For example, Senator Frank Murkowski now thinks that the project will be indefinitely delayed. My question to the minister is quite simple. When will this project start? When will construction of the Yukon section of the gas pipeline begin?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as soon as private enterprise in the United States has reached a satisfactory agreement with financial institutions. As my hon. colleague knows, the government of Canada has taken all the necessary steps to meet its commitments. The government of the United States has also taken steps to remove all legal and administrative obstacles to the project, and at the present time, everything depends on the promoters and financiers who are to put together a financing framework that will be acceptable to all parties, not only to distributors but also to the natural gas producers in Alaska.

[English]

PROVISION OF JOBS IN CANADA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the minister advised us earlier that there are about 220,000 man-years of desperately needed work in connection with this project, work that would go to Canadians from coast to coast, work in construction and manufacturing in the steel industry. I asked this question not too long ago. I ask it again. What has happened to those iron-clad guarantees that this work would be made available to Canadians? Are we to take it from his earlier answer that the Government of Canada is leaving it completely in the hands of American financiers and not doing anything to get this project to proceed?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in my previous reply to the hon. member I already indicated that the Canadian government had taken every action it could be expected to take, and that furthermore, the government had made a number of representations to the American administration and Congress. As a result of Canadian pressure, Congress and the administration have taken all the necessary steps to provide for the realization of this project by the private sector in the United States. At present, the last stage is in the hands of the private sector.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INC.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, who will recall that only a short while ago the House was startled to learn of a $125 million write-off that the government had to take with respect to Consolidated Computers Corporation. Would he indicate to what extent he has investigated this loss and when he will be tabling any report that may be available setting out what exactly went wrong in this debacle?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, anything the hon. member from York-Peel might say on this subject would be appreciated—since he had the problem on his desk during the whole time that he was president of the Treasury Board under a previous administration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is there still, for two years now.

Mr. Johnston: Appropriate action is being taken, Madam Speaker.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE TO CANADAIR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, this supplementary question is again to the President of the Treasury Board who must feel that our brief seven months in power are more significant than his two years in that office. Let me ask the President of the Treasury Board a further question, concerning Canadair, which as he knows has now been guaranteed, through this House, to the tune of $1,350 million. Can he assure the House that Canadair is viable, that a profit will be made, that the guarantee will not be called upon and, in any event, will he indicate whether he has checked with the Comptroller General of Canada who, only in August of 1980 indicated in a statement filed with the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates of this House that if Canadair was wound up at that time it could cost the government up to $400 million? Is that still the figure, or may we assume that it is much higher, now that we have increased the guarantee to $1,350 million?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I believe that hon. members opposite have had ample opportunities to question the minister responsible, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on all matters relating to Canadair, and I suggest that the hon. member reserve his question for that minister in the committee.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—FUTURE OF EXPROPRIATED LAND

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who is also responsible for reporting to this House on the Mirabel Airport peripheral lands. Yesterday he made a statement that he would have an answer in the first week of May on what is going to happen with that land. At the same time he denied that that land would be available to the farmers of the region. I would like the minister to explain to the House what the government's position is with regard to that land and with regard to the farmers who are still on that land?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, questions in this House should be directed to the minister responsible for a certain area. In the case of the peripheral lands at Mirabel, the minister responsible is the Minister of Public Works, to whom the Société immobilière du Canada, which administers those peripheral lands at Mirabel Airport, reports. Obviously the question should be directed to that minister, and the hon. member knows that pretty well. He is simply indulging in some cheap political exploitation.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would say that the cheap exploitation is of the farmers in that region. If you want the Minister of Public Works to answer the question, that is fine and dandy.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Would the hon. Minister of Public Works tell us what he is going to do for those farmers?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I was not in the House yesterday, so I did not hear that question. I assume that the hon. member is referring to an incident that took place recently concerning some farmers who had been renting lands from the company established by the Government of Canada. That is an issue that really stems from a legal relationship, a civil relationship between the residents in the area and an agency of the government. I assume that that matter is before the court and I would think that that is an appropriate forum for it.

AGRICULTURE

PROTECTION FOR FARMERS IN CASE OF GRAIN EMBARGO

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity of answering questions for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and also since the relevant civil service body comes under his particular jurisdiction in connection with this question.

About two weeks ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a speech in Winnipeg in which he said that Canada is prepared to use food as a major foreign policy tool in its relations with other countries. Specifically, he went on to say that Canada would use grain embargos against countries threatening world peace. If this is the general policy of the government at this particular time, as enunciated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board indicate whether his group, the grains group within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or any other group, is giving any thought to putting a mechanism in place whereby the farmer will not be adversely affected if in fact the government moves in the direction of a grain embargo?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am too old and too experienced to try to answer this question without verifying first what it is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said and what it is that the minister of state responsible for the Wheat Board said. It seems to me rather to confuse the situation by accepting the interpretation given by the member for Lisgar, because I have no indication, and I do not think there is an indication, that the government has been practising politics with the sale of grain in the post or in recent times.

CONTINGENCY PLANNING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question to the minister is not that the Canadian government has been practising politics in terms of grain sales. It is that if we find ourselves either forced to or willing to go along with a grain embargo imposed by some other countries, obviously the group of people most adversely affected are the producers. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that Canada would be prepared to use food as a political tool to go along with other countries, if in fact we should be requested to do so, is the government giving any consideration to putting in place a mechanism whereby the farmer himself would not be caught with falling world grain prices as happened some years ago?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when it did happen, and I am talking about an embargo in the case of the Soviet Union, for example, the federal government was led at the time by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and took the responsibility to compensate the farmers for what they had done for an overriding state objective of international policy. That promise, made by the then government, was honored by the government that came after it. However, may I take notice of the question and have a friendly discussion with the two other ministers mentioned and see if I can come up with a reasonable answer that will be satisfactory to the hon. member for Lisgar.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

PROPOSED DUMPING OF RADIOACTIVE SOIL IN ONTARIO

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What is the status of the government's plans to dump radioactive soil at Base Borden?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if I remember correctly, an injunction was requested by a number of citizens and subsequently granted by the court. The government has taken no further action and we are respecting the injunction.

[English]

FUTURE OF PROPOSAL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, counsel for the Atomic Energy Control Board has indicated that he does not intend to contest the injuction. Is the minister saying that this decision was not made with his knowledge and consent, and is he saying to the House that the proposal to move the radioactive soil to Base Borden is still alive?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, counsel for the Atomic Energy Control Board has indicated that the government does not intend to contest this injunction, and that is the government's position as I said before.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader what the order of business will be for the remainder of this week and as far as he can take us into next week?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the business for this week and next week will be Bills C-103, C-108 and C-93.

[Translation]

Consequently, next week we shall continue the debate on the energy bills. There are two bills left, and we should be able to refer these to committee by the end of next week, at the latest. If debate is completed earlier, we shall resume the debate on second reading of Bill C-93, a measure to give the government authority to borrow funds.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Can the government House leader give us any indication when the next allotted day will be designated by the government?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, because of the House order dealing with the study at the second reading stage of the energy bills and the aspect of the time block involved, it is difficult, as the hon. member will understand, for me to state today that there will be or there will not be an allotted day next week; but I can assure my hon. colleague that if the government plans to have an allotted day next week, I will raise the matter with the hon. member first and give him sufficient notice.

Mr. Nielsen: I have one last question, Madam Speaker. We are prepared to give unanimous consent today to a reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the matter which has been raised often by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre; that is, the matter of street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, including Section 195.1 and Section 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada. Is the government prepared to bring forward that reference today? We are prepared to consent to its passage immediately without debate.

The second reference I understand the government might be prepared to move is one which would extend the life of the subcommittee on Latin American affairs. We are prepared to give our unanimous consent without debate to the extension of the life of that subcommittee as well.

Miss Jewett: Well, high time.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on the first point raised by the hon. member for Yukon, we were ready to propose the reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. However, I had consultations and it seems it is too early for my colleague in the New Democratic Party to give his consent today, so we might have to come back later with this.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pinard: I am told that a member of the NDP is not ready to give his consent at this stage.

In so far as the second question is concerned, I welcome the offer made by the opposition. I understand that the hon. member for Labelle will move the appropriate motion later on today, with a few corrections that will make it very clear that the committee will not be able to travel when the House is sitting.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I think there was another alteration to the reference of the subcommittee on latin American affairs, and that is that that committee would be reporting in a final way to the House on the completion of its extended mandate. Would I be correct in that assumption?

Mr. Pinard: I recall having read the long order of reference. My colleague is right in saying that there was an agreement to delete two words, and I think the deletion of those two words would have the effect the hon. member just mentioned.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, on the second last question raised by the Conservative House leader, I, as the acting House leader for the New Democratic Party, just saw the reference a few minutes ago. Our House leader is not in the House. Our critic is not in the House. We cannot, of course, give unanimous consent without the necessary foreknowledge. I asked the assistant to the government House leader two days ago if there was business to be brought forward, and I was told there was nothing, so I assumed there was nothing.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member if he was not consulted. The consultations did not involve myself but the Minister of Justice and his parliamentary secretary, and it was reported to me that the justice critic for the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Burnaby, telephoned and wanted us to know he does not feel he has had sufficient time to consider this matter. He wants further consultation. That is why I said what I said.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby did call, after we received this notice just a few minutes ago. He did not have it in front of him and did not have a chance to check with anyone. That is not the way House business should be done. We believe there should be a committee on this matter and we have said so in the past; but we believe that with respect to any House business all parties should have equal notice and a chance to study matters.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can confirm for the House that both opposition parties were given notice at the same time, but I can understand that my hon. colleague may need a delay. I do not quarrel with that at all. If need be, we will come back with the same proposal tomorrow. This will probably allow the time required by the New Democratic Party justice critic.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I simply want to concur in the remarks made by the government House leader. I was indeed consulted by the Minister of Justice during the question period orally, and upon his oral request I gave that consent immediately. It was not until some time later that I received a written copy of the intended reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Since the matter has been one of concentrated attention in the House, since all opposition parties have been eager to get the matter referred to the standing committee and since the motion is very plain in its terms, I appeal to members of the New Democratic Party to give consent to that motion's being put now so that reference could be made to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I would just like the record to be clear as to what has gone on in the House here today. Yesterday in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the hon. member for Burnaby moved that a subcommittee be struck to look into this precise matter. The Minister of Justice came over and sat down beside me briefly during question period and asked whether we would give unanimous consent. I called our justice critic, who had been given no notice of these terms of reference. The jiggery-pokery of the hon. member for Yukon is interesting. He says the New Democratic Party is holding this up.

Madam Speaker: Order. This period is for an exchange of information on government business, not to engage in debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. colleague who referred to the member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in connection with the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, that the committee was not sitting yesterday and therefore the member for Burnaby could not possibly have presented a motion.

MR. GREENAWAY—FISCAL AND BUDGETARY POLICY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 184 concerned citizens of Quesnel, British Columbia. The purpose of this petition is to protest the government's present fiscal policy and its November 1981 budget proposals. The nature of the petition is to urge the government to move boldly into new economic and budgetary plans which would reduce unemployment and bring us out of our deepening recession.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of this petition you will find it in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible time in order that the flaws in the November budget and the government's economic program may be corrected.

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES ON CANADIAN SOIL

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-653, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Ferguson: The purpose of this bill is to update, amend and expand the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. In view of the fact that many farmers in Canada are caught in a cash flow squeeze, particularly those who are not able to recoup their production costs from the marketplace, and in view of the fact that many of these farmers are in danger of losing their farms, this bill will provide a mechanism whereby those farmers may not be forced off their land without due recourse. While many provinces have subsidies on interest rates and offer other programs, these are sadly lacking in Ontario in particular and this bill is urgently required.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, I move that the tenth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, presented to the House on Thursday, April 8, 1982, be concurred in.

All parties have discussed the issues raised in this report and I understand that it would be the disposition of the House to concur in it should it be amended by adding on the second page, after the words "August 1982", the words "provided that the House is not sitting"; and, two lines further down on page 2, to eliminate after the words "prepare a" the words "further Interim".

Madam Speaker: This can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the House consent to the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF SECURITY ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 3,498—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has anyone in the Department of the Solicitor General or in the RCMP been approached, directly or indirectly, in any way for recommendations or suggestions for a person to be appointed Assistant Director of Security on Parliament Hill and, if so, what are all the details?

2. Is it the policy of the government to promote the employment of former RCMP officers to security positions within the Parliament Buildings?

3. Is it the policy of the government to promote the eventual abolition of all uniformed and un-uniformed Protective Staff on Parliament Hill and to have the operation taken over by the RCMP?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as it concerns the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police:

1. There has been no official approach to them for a recommendation or suggestion for a person to be appointed Assistant Director of Security on Parliament Hill. They do not know if any person was approached unofficially for a personal opinion in this matter.

2 and 3. These matters fall under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons. Questions concerning them should be made to the Speaker.

RCMP ESCORTING PERSONS IN PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 3,499—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did members of the RCMP at any time in the past six months enter the Parliament Buildings as escorts for visiting persons such as King Hussein?

2. Did they receive permission to do this and (a) if so (i) from whom had they requested such permission (ii) by whom was it granted (b) if not, by whom was it refused?

3. Is it government policy that the RCMP take over providing protection for visiting dignitaries within the Parliament Buildings and, if so, what are all the details?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes. (a)(i) The Sergeant-at-Arms. (ii) The Sergeant-at-Arms. (b) Not applicable.

3. This matter falls under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons. Questions concerning it should be made to the Speaker.

TAXES ON PROPERTY OWNED BY NCC

Question No. 3,731—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. What was the grant in lieu of taxes for 1981 in respect to property described as lot 35, plan 470, of the city of Nepean referred to in a letter dated January 20, 1982 to the tenant of the National Capital Commission, File Reference GNO A-6-62?

2. What are the municipal taxes and rates payable by the commission and/or the tenant of the property?

3. Does the grant in lieu of taxes fully pay the municipal rates and taxes assessed against the property and, if not, for what reason?

4. Does the commission charge the tenant any rates or taxes in respect of the land and, if so, on what basis?

5. Is there alleged to be owing an excess tax charge of $855.62 due for 1981 and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. $1,013.87.

2. $1,013.87.

3. Yes.

4. Yes in part. The terms of the lease between the commission and the tenant of the property specify that the tenant is responsible for taxes in excess of the 1967 base year namely in excess of $158.25.

5. Yes. There is an amount of $855.62 due from the tenant for 1981 taxes based on the above 1981 payment less the 1967 base year. ($1,013.87—$158.25)

TRAVEL BY SOVIET DIPLOMATS

Question No. 3,968—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,558 which stated in part that "It is not in the public's interest" to divulge whether or not records of Soviet diplomatic travel movements are monitored by any branch of government for more than two years (a) what are all the reasons that the government considers it not to be in the public's interest (b) what is the name and job designation of the highest-ranking official who made such a decision and on what date was the decision made?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) It is the policy of the government neither to confirm nor deny whether any individual or group is the subject of an investigation.

(b) The answer to question No. 1,558 was signed by the Solicitor General and was answered in the House of Commons on February 1, 1982.

CNR PERSONNEL

Question No. 4,049—Mr. Corbett:

Is it the policy of the Canadian National Railways to force (a) supervisory personnel into early retirement (b) senior supervisory personnel to accept positions of lower rating until their retirement?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

(a) No. However, if an employee's job is redundant due to technological, organizational, or operational changes; changes in administrative procedures, services, or volume of business; or budget requirements; and such employee cannot be fitted into another position, then the employee may apply for early retirement.

(b) In some circumstances, a senior supervisory position may become redundant due to the reasons mentioned above and the officer could elect to accept an alternative position, if available. In such cases the employee's pay, is ordinarily held at the same rate as that prior to the person's accepting a lower alternative position.

PURCHASES OF CHINA

Question No. 4,155—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. In 1981, what purchases of (a) formal china dinner service settings (b) family china (c) breakfast china tray sets did the Department of External Affairs make from Josiah Wedgwood and Son Ltd. of Willowdale?

2. How many sets were purchased and what was the cost per set?

3. Of what were the sets composed and of what quality were they?

4. Were other pieces purchased and, if so, what were the pieces and what was the cost?

5. What was the purpose of the purchases?

6. Were tenders offered?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In 1981, the Department of External Affairs purchased from Josiah Wedgwood and Son Ltd. of Willowdale, Ontario: (a) seven sets of formal china dinnerware service settings; (b) ten sets of family china; (c) Nil sets of breakfast china tray sets.

2. The department purchased: (a) five sets of formal china dinnerware service settings, crested, at $6,689.15 per set; two sets of formal china dinnerware service settings, not crested, at $5,350.75 per set; (b) ten sets of family china at $1,239.50 per set; (c) Nil sets of breakfast china tray sets.

3. The sets were composed of: (a) eighteen place settings of the Carlyn pattern of superior quality; (b) twelve place settings of the Conway pattern of medium quality; (c) Nil.

4. Numerous replacement pieces, i.e. cups, saucers, bowls, plates, etc. were purchased for a total dollar value of $4,278.75.

5. The purpose of the purchases was to provide appropriate china to enable Heads of Post to carry out formal entertaining responsibilities.

6. A departmental committee, including officers from our protocol division and other senior officers, selected the specific patterns after viewing several other manufacturers' china.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I thought we were starting debate on Bill C-103.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member seek the floor? He has it.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, at the end of the sitting the other day the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) was speaking. I believe he was stopped in the middle of his speech and he has not risen to continue speaking. If he is not going to continue then I am rising as the first speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Waddell: I rise to speak on this bill which was to be named the Petroleum Administration Act but will now be renamed the energy administration act. It is a bill that deals with energy taxation in Canada and it should really be renamed the "mugging of the consumers act" or perhaps even the "legislation of thievery at the gas pump act".

Mr. Huntington: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Waddell: It robs and plunders the poor Canadian consumer. It loots the consumer at the gas pump. That is what the bill does and we should make no mistake about that.

While the daily press hung on every moment of the bell-ringing, since we started the energy debate there has been very little interest in it and very few news stories. That is too bad because both the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party have offered some telling points about the whole energy scheme and the Canadianization of the industry and will make in this debate today some comments about taxation. The government has not shown much interest and has put up few speakers in reply. I am sorry that press reporters and commentators have not given the subject the kind of in-depth analysis it deserves.

These bills will affect Canadians in crucial ways and in many respects will change the whole energy industry and the country in very important ways. This is not an energy security bill; it is a taxation bill which will sock it to the Canadian consumer and refill the coffers of the government. Most of the money will go to a government that negligently emptied its coffers through its mismanagement and incompetence.

Mr. Mazankowski: You put them in.

Mr. Waddell: Let me deal with that matter of putting the government in. It was the Canadian people who put it in, and now the Canadian people have to judge—

Mr. Mazankowski: You aided and abetted them.

Mr. Waddell: —whether it is living up to the promises it made. In fact, it is following the Conservative energy policy, which we objected to in the first place, of high taxation at the pumps. That is what the Conservative energy policy was.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was 18 cents at the pumps.

Mr. Waddell: Let us make no mistake about that. My friend to my right will have an opportunity to speak on this and I want to hear them.

Mr. Mazankowski: They will talk sense.

Mr. Waddell: Let us make it quite clear that if you analyse what the Clark government policy was—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was 18 cents.

Mr. Waddell: —and what the Crosbie budget was, you will find that there were to be dramatic increases in energy prices over the third, fourth and fifth year of that so-called agreement with Alberta. The energy prices that the Conservatives were going to bring in were higher than those proposed by the Liberal government. I think the Canadian consumer is at the point of saying "a plague on both their houses".

These tax measures are not the type that the New Democratic Party believes in. They are something like a sales tax which is a regressive tax. Low income people, poor people, ordinary people have to spend more of their incomes on the necessities of life, such as food, lodging, heat, light and transportation, than people who have more money. I will go into more detail on these taxes that the government proposes through this bill and our criticism of them in a few minutes.

These taxes are already hurting the ordinary person and they are going to hurt more. People are asking why we have to pay more for gasoline here than we do across the border from Vancouver or Windsor. Well they should ask, because I think people feel that this thievery I spoke of is compounded by two things. First of all, there was a shameless promise in the last election by this government, supposedly to appeal to Ontario and eastern Canadian voters where apparently elections are won or lost—southern Ontario to be specific—that somehow the Liberal Party had the key to keeping energy prices low. I think it is pretty clear now that was not exactly what they had in mind. They certainly have not done it.

The second reason I think people are upset is that these prices are going up at the same time as the government proposes to give away an unprecedented amount of money to the oil industries. You know the oil industry, Mr. Speaker: "Give us more money and we will find more oil." Of course, when we do that they then want to export the oil. That has been the historical pattern in Canada and Canadians know it.

If you were to ask the person on the street they would say yes, we have given the industry a lot of money and they end up pressuring for exports, and an acquiescent National Energy Board and government allow the exports. We have just passed a bill which authorizes $6.5 billion in PIP grants to the oil industry. I know there are certain segments in the industry, the small producers, who are now hurting and both I and my party have some sympathy for them. But in general this industry is controlled by the multinationals; by Exxon of New York, the largest company in the world, Royal Dutch Shell, and Texaco and Gulf of the United States. Some of that $6.5 billion will go to them.

That money, Mr. Speaker, is coming out of the pockets of Canadian consumers. It goes back to the government and then to the oil companies. This is the Liberal idea; they call it recycling.

Mr. Mazankowski: NDP socialism.

Mr. Waddell: That is not NDP socialism.

Mr. Mazankowski: What are they doing in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Waddell: When the member gives me a chance I will point out how we will do it. It is Liberal Canadianization, Mr. Speaker, and I invite the hon. member to study the speeches of his own energy critic so that he can understand what that is. This Canadianization program, which involves taking money from us at the pumps and giving it back to the oil companies by way of PIP grants, is a sham and a fraud. It is a legal means of holding up the Canadian consumer at the pump and on his heating bill. There are alternatives and I hope in the course of my speech to point them out.

This act, Mr. Speaker, does essentially six things. It raises the oil export charge ceiling and confirms the charges imposed since May, 1979. It gives authority to turn over 50 per cent of the resulting revenue to the producing provinces. Secondly, it establishes a transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. Third, it implements changes to the petroleum compensation charge, thereby enabling the implementation of a blended price system for oil. Fourth, it establishes the authority for and termination of a special compensation charge relating to the cut-off of Alberta oil last year. Fifth, it ends the petroleum compensation board and continues and expands its function in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Sixth, it establishes the Canadian ownership special charge and the Canadian ownership account.

The operative word in those six items is the word "charge". We are going to be charged at the gas pump, on our heating bills, and we are going to be charged for planning. I now want to analyse each one of these charges and give the NDP position on them, and I invite my friend over there from Alberta to listen and give a reasoned response. I know that is asking a lot of him, but he just might rise to the occasion.

Firstly, the petroleum compensation charge is a mechanism whereby the blended price of oil is developed. It is a charge at the pump and is used to compensate refiners who import more expensive foreign oil. We have to import oil because we are self-sufficient in all forms of energy except oil. The question, I suppose, is why? The reason is that in the early 1970s we exported one-half of our daily production, which was then called surplus. The oil industry told the National Energy Board, which in turn told the Government of Canada, that we had enough oil for 300 years. Then the OPEC crisis came along, and the oil industry then said: "Oh, we have enough oil for 11 years." They misled the Government of Canada, and now today we have all those television ads by oil company executives saying: "Trust us, we will look after you." The Canadian people do not believe that because they have been burned already, and every time they go to the pumps and pay this compensation charge they should keep that in mind.

The pattern, Mr. Speaker, and it is an historical one, is simple. The industry says we have a shortage, we need more money. They are given tax advantages like the super depletion allowance, they are given $6.5 billion in grants, and then they say we have lots of oil and now we have to export it. They then lobby the government and the government allows exports. We then have a shortage again, and how do you get rid of the shortage? You guessed it: we need more grants, more allowances. That is the pattern and it has to stop. If we were the Government of Canada we would stop it. We would stop taking money out of the consumer's pocket and recycling it back to the industry. The system is stupid, it makes no sense and has to be changed. That is the reason we must import foreign oil and pay for it.

Certain refiners in Canada are currently being overcompensated anywhere from $7 to $12 a barrel because they are buying cheaper oil on the spot market, whereas the compensation under this legislation and the existing system is based on the average world price of oil landed in Montreal. While the payments may average out for the industry as a whole, nevertheless certain refiners are receiving a windfall. There should be a more accurate system of calculating the compensation, or paying additional compensation where needed. In other words, we must compensate refiners for their actual costs.

I was looking at an article printed in "Quorum" and appearing in various newspapers. The article was written by W.A. Wilson. The heading of his article reads:"Oil subsidy should draw Tory, NDP wrath." I wonder whether this Mr. Wilson exists. I wonder where he lives. In the House of Commons for the last three weeks, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), myself and several other Conservative members have been asking questions in the House of Commons and have been before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts dealing precisely with this question. It makes me wonder where the journalists are these days when it comes to analysing issues.

This matter has been raised in the House of Commons. The government has been pressed on this. Therefore, I do not know where Mr. Wilson gets his information. Perhaps he is not around here in Ottawa and does not follow what happens in the House of Commons. If he were here, Mr. Wilson would know that the charge allows some refiners to buy foreign oil for less than the cost of Alberta oil. That is what the opposition has been saying. This procedure has resulted in shut-in oil production of 50,000 barrels per day in western Canada. That amount of shut-in oil could rise to 300,000 barrels per day. I know about this because I visited Saskatchewan recently. I talked with people in Saskatchewan and with the Saskatchewan government, who have brought pressure to bear on Ottawa to change the system of the petroleum compensation charge so there would not be shut-in oil in Saskatchewan. Crudely put—and pardon the pun, Mr. Speaker—this petroleum compensation system is really crazy. So far the government has asked only eastern refiners to give preference to western Canadian oil. The government has not shown any teeth on this.

Last night hon. members heard the Conservative critic, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, rant and rave about many things. He talked about the Western Canada Concept which causes people in the west a great deal of difficulty. I suggest hon. members opposite take a close look at this very legitimate grievance of western oil producers and western business. Frankly, I think the minister could react much more strongly on this issue.

I think the principal causes of the problem are twofold. First, there has been a substantial decline in oil consumption in Canada as well as in the United States. Second, there has been a signing of long-term contracts with the federal government's encouragement during the period of Lougheed's oil cutback. In effect, this deal has now boomeranged on the province of Alberta, of which some people think the minister is taking advantage. It is sort of "Lalonde's revenge", if you like. The deal also resulted in the difficulties out west and there is a great deal of pressure both on the minister of energy here and the minister of energy in Alberta to do something about them.

Those are probably the reasons we are into the shut-in oil situation. There will be pressure to alleviate the shut-in problem by exporting western Canadian light crude. There will be pressure in western Canada to export. The government should resist that pressure. Instead, it should take steps to make sure that Canadian oil is used in place of imported oil because that makes better sense. How do we do that? We could lower the petroleum compensation charge so there is more incentive to use Canadian crude oil. This would also result in cheaper gasoline at the pump. We could expand the capacity of the present transCanada pipeline system to allow more western oil to reach eastern markets. This suggestion would fit in with the long-term plan to bring in Beaufort Sea oil by pipeline to eastern markets.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was quoted in Ottawa's paper, The Citizen. The article's heading says: "Lalonde blames separatism on Western politicians". The minister of energy, from a west end Montreal riding, I understand, is reported to have said that western politicians are distorting facts and in fact not doing their job correctly. In spite of some early provocation today, I have not stood up and ranted and raved in any way. I have tried to analyse this petroleum compensation charge and I have set out some concrete suggestions for improvement. You cannot say that western politicians are not doing their job. I just heard one of my constituents in the gallery agreeing with me.

The issue is costly to consumers. The present rate of compensation to importers is $17.32 per barrel. Who is paying that amount? The Canadian consumer, of course. The present petroleum compensation charge per barrel of oil consumed in Canada is $6.30. This means the consumer is paying 18 cents per gallon of gasoline for this charge. The cost of compensating purchases of foreign oil appears as appropriations in the Main Estimates. I invite members to look them. If hon. members do that, they will see that in the period 1980 to 1981, the amount set out is $3.16 billion; in the period 1981 to 1982, the amount is $5.16 billion; and the amount budgeted for 1982 to 1983 is $2.97 billion. That money does not come from thin air. It comes from the Canadian consumer who pays it at the gas pump. It comes from Canadian consumers when they pay their heating bills.

This is a bad situation and it must be changed. On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I will propose amendments at the appropriate stage to deal with this problem. Let not Mr. Wilson and his colleagues say that opposition politicians are not prepared to deal with the problem. Let not the minister of energy say that western politicians do not take their duty to bring concrete suggestions to this government seriously. For a change, let this government listen and bring in some of these changes.

The second charge is the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. I know that this is a very difficult bill and I am trying to go through it to make everything as simple as I can in order to explain to the Canadian people who are watching and listening to us throughout the country what these things mean. They are understandable. I explained the petroleum compensation charge because we have to import foreign oil. I explained that we had to import foreign oil because we exported all our oil years ago. I have told the people how much all this costs, but I think people know that because they pay for it at the gas pump every three or four days.

What about the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge? That is a real mouthful, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our party we object to this recovery charge being applied at this time. It is a transportation charge on aircraft, ships and so on. It should not be applied to the marine and shipping industry in Canada at this time. We advocate that Canadian water carriers be exempted from this charge since rail, air and road transportation in many ways is also exempted. The charge would bring fuel prices to world levels. Exemptions should remain until the government is committed to developing a Canadian flag merchant marine, until the government requires a minimum of 40 per cent of our international trade be carried in Canadian vessels and until shipping between Canadian ports is restricted to Canadian vessels.

We say the charge on Canadian vessels is discriminatory. In other words it should not apply to Canadian ships. Also that clause of the bill allows the federal government to set prices for offshore oil and oil in the territories. We believe this should be done by negotiation with the concerned territorial and provincial governments, with a view to arriving at revenue-sharing agreements as was done with western provinces.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appears to have rejected co-operative federalism. He said recently that co-operative federalism was dead. It was a tragic mistake for the country and for the Liberal Party, the party of Pearson and of co-operative federalism. As he throws co-operative federalism out of the window, I suggest he risks ultimately throwing his own party out of the window. The Liberal Party has chosen to be a federal party, simply a national party, only interested in winning power on the national level. The Liberal Party appears to be dead in the west. As the Prime Minister picks fights with more and more provinces and throws out co-operative federalism, he runs the real risk of ultimately destroying any power base his party might have. That is not my problem; it is the problem of the party opposite and of the country.

Canadians are fed up with provincial premiers bashing the federal government and the Prime Minister bashing provincial premiers. If there is any message in the Prime Minister's confrontation with Mr. Levesque in terms of the reaction of Canadians, it is that they would like both of them to cool it. It affects the energy field. We recall that when we debated the Petroleum Administration Act in the House, the federal government imposed an oil price on Alberta before reaching an agreement with the province. Under the terms of the act as it then was, we were allowed a six-day debate. It was a good debate, but the problem was that the government did not listen to what opposition members said. If it had, it would have understood before making the deal with Alberta that there was a problem with some small oil and gas companies and with respect to the position taken by Canadian consumers. The clause in the bill which allows the government to set prices unilaterally for offshore and the north should not be implemented. Prices should be set after consultation with offshore provinces and the two territorial governments. I propose to bring in some amendments to the bill to cover that area.

Clause 16 in effect allows the federal government to set prices unilaterally for crude oil where agreement cannot be reached with the concerned provinces. We agree in principle that the federal government ought to have the final power to do this. I say this as a westerner. I believe in provinces having control of their resources. We have moved to have that included in the Constitution, but for a strategic commodity like energy it makes sense, if ultimately there cannot be an agreement with a province, for the federal government to have the final power.

What did the federal government do in this bill? With Clause 19 on page 12 it removed the opportunity for Parliament to debate such action. Again, this will hurt co-operative federalism. The government does not have any representatives from oil producing areas in the western part of the country. I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) entering the Chamber. I am talking about west of the Winnipeg city limits. Since the government has no western representatives, it should be very careful when dealing with gut issues in western Canada. But the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who I call the six-foot Napoleon, blames separatism on western Canadian politicians! Clause 19 of this very complicated bill is important in terms of retaining co-operative federalism.

Next I should like to deal with the oil export charge. It was established in 1974 to ensure that when Canadian oil was exported the federal government received the difference between the domestic price and the rapidly rising export price which would have normally accrued to the exporter. The reason for this charge still holds true. There should be no price incentive to export domestic oil while Canada continues to be a net importer of oil. The governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan do not currently share in the export tax revenue, but because the federal government is committed to an equitable revenue-sharing system, the new act gives it authority to offer exporting provinces 50 per cent of the revenue gained through the export charge as of November, 1980. This is an example of co-operative federalism. We have no objection to it and we support it.

Another charge is the special compensation charge. Clause 39 contains a special charge on petroleum products levied from March 31, 1981 to September 21, 1981, to pay for extra imports of oil due to the decision of the Alberta government to cut back oil production during the bitter energy negotiations between the province and the federal government last year. This charge is no longer in effect because of the September, 1981 agreement. Since it is a fait accompli, the fact that it has been removed, we in the New Democratic Party do not have any objection to the clause.

However, I would not want to let the occasion pass without castigating the federal and provincial governments for their intransigence in the negotiations. When one thinks about it, that little example of co-operative federalism between Premier Lougheed and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cost Canadian consumers an extra $1.85 per barrel, or 6 cents per gallon, for gasoline over that period. Again, when politicians bash each other, ultimately the poor consumer suffers.

I heard the hon. member for Calgary Centre talk about the Western Canada Concept obtaining support in my province. For example, last night 1,200 people attended a meeting to protest. There are alternatives upon which ordinary Canadians can insist. They can insist upon better government. This unnecessary spat was a poor example of government that ended up costing consumers 6 cents extra per gallon for gasoline. By the way, the total collected by the federal tax was over $460 million. This was $142 million more than needed to pay for the extra imports. Did the government give back the $142 million to Canadian consumers? Obviously it did not. It overcharged us and then pocketed the rest of the money into general revenue, to be used for us but really to be spent on some rather strange things.

The next charge is the Canadian ownership special charge. Revenue from the Canadian ownership special charge and from increases to the natural gas and natural gas liquids excise taxes will accumulate in the Canadian ownership account and be used to increase participation by the federal government in the petroleum industry. As I have said many times in the House, the New Democratic Party believes in government participation in the industry. That is why people like David Lewis and Tommy Douglas who represented this party moved for the establishment of Petro-Canada in the early 1970s. We believe that Petro-Canada must be put in the driver's seat to deal with multinational oil companies. Logic demands that this be done.

I quoted in the House an article by Geoffrey Simson who wrote in The Globe and Mail about the system which exists in Norway. There is no problem in Norway where Statoil is in the driver's seat from where it can direct the industry and its development. This does not preclude private sectors participating in the energy industry, but they are given a clear direction as to what course the industry should follow in order to have energy security and job availability for people in that country.

While Canadians should be pleased to see Petro-Canada signs going up, they should not be misled. As was pointed out to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation yesterday in questions I put to the vice-president of Petro-Canada as well as to the minister, the number one oil company in Canada is Imperial Oil, which is owned by Exxon in the United States. The number one Canadian oil company is not Petro-Canada, it is Dome Petroleum. Petro-Canada is number five.

We should not be misled because Petro-Canada is not in the driver's seat; nor has the federal government any intention of putting it there. During the committee hearing today I asked the former Canadian ambassador to the United States whether he would confirm what he said in his speech in the United States. Speaking for the Canadian government, he said that it would not make Petro-Canada the dominant player. That is government policy. As a matter of fact, if hon. members review the bill carefully, the Canadian ownership special charge has been reduced from a possible maximum of $4 a barrel to $1.15 a barrel. There have been similar reductions in the natural gas tax maximum.

This is a significant retreat from the October, 1980 budget and the National Energy Program. The government had indicated in both policies that in its pursuit of expanding the role of Petro-Canada or other Crown corporations in the energy field, it was prepared to raise the necessary funds for takeovers by this special levy. Since the levy is at its maximum, it appears there will be no more takeovers in the near future.

An hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Waddell: I heard some hon. member to my right say good. Well, if we do not have a takeover now or in the near future, we will never gain control and set a direction for our oil industry in Canada. This Liberal Canadianization program, with its PIP grants, Canadian ownership rates and amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act, is convoluted, complicated and ultimately unworkable.

The most simple, straightforward and efficient method—and one which Canadians would understand—for accomplishing Canadianization is to use that $6.5 billion which will be given away to take over a major oil company like Imperial Oil. We would then have 50 per cent of the industry under Canadian control. We would not have to wait until 1990.

There is support for this idea. Mr. Robert Laxer of the Committee to Canadianize appeared before the committee this morning and produced a Gallup poll which indicated that 70 per cent of Canadians, I believe, wanted to make Petro-Canada the dominant player in the industry and to take over one of the foreign majors and, as well, to advance the target of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990 to 75 per cent ownership by 1985. The only way to accomplish this is by taking public ownership of one of the majors. A move such as this by the government would be supported by Canadians.

I realize that the government is faced with a Conservative party which literally hates Petro-Canada and wishes to destroy it. This sentiment is quite evident when you listen to Conservative members in committee and in the House. We should continue with the thrust of the National Energy Program and not back off from it as this government is apparently doing. An example of government backing off is shown when it proposes to reduce its original maximum tax of $4 a barrel to $1.15 a barrel.

I will let other members deal with this issue but I would like to make two points in conclusion. I recently spoke to a clothing manufacturer in Vancouver. His clothing prices have not risen recently. I also talked to a small gas producer who told me that his prices have not gone up. Therefore, where is this inflation coming from? Why are the prices going up? The answer is that they are going up through government taxes, which I think is obvious. Statistics Canada recently said that the latest oil price increase was a key reason for another rise in the cost of living. The consumer price index indicated that the cost of energy-related items such as gasoline and home heating fuel rose by 5.4 per cent during March as the impact of the January increase in the wellhead price of crude oil hit at the consumer level. Prices are rising and inflation is increasing because the government is raising these energy taxes so frequently.

I suppose some members could say that you have to collect taxes in order to provide services. The Prime Minister constantly says this to us every time we ask him a question. While it is true that taxes must be collected, there are other means of taxation. A proper proportion of corporate income tax is never really collected from the oil companies. As a matter of fact, an average Canadian family with two children which earns $25,000 pays more in tax in percentage terms than the oil companies do. This situation is scandalous. Collecting taxes at the pump is a regressive form of taxation because it applies to average Canadians who pay a greater proportion of their income for food, heating and transit. That is why these taxes are unsatisfactory. There are other ways to collect the money. I believe that the Liberal government stands indicted in the eyes of Canadians for having promised cheap energy prices and then delivering an energy pricing regime which is exactly the same as that which the Conservatives were going to introduce.

Finally, I conclude by replying to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre who is the Conservative energy critic. Incidentally, I notice that hardly any Liberal members have spoken to this energy issue——and especially the francophone members from Quebec! The Quebec members never take part in discussions on energy legislation.

[English]

I think that is scandalous. I hope that the Conservative member from Quebec will speak because we never hear from a Quebec member. Are they not interested in this Parliament? We never hear them speak about energy and I suggest that they do so. They are here just to vote, that is all. With the exception of one or two Liberal members, they are not interested or informed.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre spoke of his concern over western separatism. We all share that concern. This country seems to be coming apart in terms of regionalism. However, when I listened to the hon. member, it was like a scene from Macbeth: strutting and fretting his hour upon the stage, signifying nothing. There was much strutting and fretting, but very few positive suggestions.

I am a western MP. I have seen this country and it is a wealthy and magnificent country. It is crazy that this country should break up or that this country should have Quebec separatism or western separatism. It is nonsense. There must be some reason for it. The reason is that we are not getting good government policy. There are better ways of dealing with our differences. There are great things ahead for this country if all the people work together. What a great struggle it would be to patriate our energy industry as we patriated our Constitution! What a magnificent challenge it would be! That is the kind of thing we could do. The people of Canada like Petro-Canada and they would support such a move. The polls are there, the statistics are there and the feeling is there to illustrate support. Other countries have shown what can be done. No country worth its maturity would permit its energy industry to be as foreign-controlled as our energy industry.

What do we hear every day? We hear the Conservatives raising arguments to give more money to a basically foreign-controlled industry. We hear the Liberals, who brought in a National Energy Program at the last gasp of the Trudeau administration, but they have broken off from it and have not proceeded. We could do it better and more simply. I say to the Canadian people out there that we could take some of the money that we are about to give away to oil companies through Bill C-103 and use it to put into our own company, Petro-Canada, in which we are all shareholders. We could use it to expand Petro-Canada and to put Petro-Canada in the driver's seat. We can develop oil. We have oil in Canada. We have it in Hibernia and in the heavy oil sands. We have more heavy oil on the Saskatchewan-Alberta border than there is in Saudi Arabia. We have it. We have everything in this country.

On Saturday morning I am going back to my constituency. In my store-front office I see many people with problems. Many are immigrants and most are ordinary people. They are not sophisticated people. They do not understand all of these different taxes and they do not understand the cut and thrust of this debate in the House of Commons, but they understand that this is a magnificent country. That is why they came here. They understand that this country has the resources, but they do not understand why these politicians and this government cannot develop it for real energy security for Canada. That is the thrust of my speech today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes that the government should be given the right to increase the price of gasoline at the pump by a very considerable amount, following the increase of 28 cents per gallon at the pump which its taxes have brought about during the past two years. This is a ridiculous proposition. As we all know, during the past year there has been a world overproduction of oil, and this has caused world prices of oil to fall sharply. The taxes which the government has been adding to the price of gasoline at the pump during the past two years were supposed to pay for the increasing subsidy the government has been paying on the one-fifth of our oil requirements which could not be supplied by Canadian sources and must be bought from offshore. The subsidy was necessary so that all Canadians could enjoy the Canadian price. However, if the cost of the foreign oil we are subsidizing is falling, the taxes needed to pay for the subsidy should be decreasing also, not increasing. In other words, the price we pay for gasoline at the pump should be coming down at it has been doing in the United States and in most other countries, not going up.

For the government to seek the right to increase taxes to pay for a subsidy which is decreasing is simply ridiculous and should be refused by every hon. member of this House. I, most certainly, will be voting against this bill.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to make a few points concerning this particular bill. At the outset, I should say that when one looks at the contents of this particular piece of legislation, one immediately finds that it is really not an energy bill or a petroleum administration bill. It is indeed a taxation bill. Quite frankly, all Liberals should hang their heads in shame while asking us to approve this measure, because it could more appropriately be called "an act to facilitate a massive tax grab", rather than a bill aimed at providing energy security.

The bill is entitled, "An Act to Amend the Petroleum Administration Act", and it will have the effect of changing that title to read "The Energy Administration Act". The only thing that is administrative about it is the fact that huge taxes will be collected from the consumers of Canada, many of which are questionable, many of which are unwieldy, and many of which are very damaging and detrimental, not only to the economy but, indeed, to the petroleum industry of Canada as well.

There are essentially six different varieties of confiscation included in this particular measure: an oil export charge; a tax on transportation fuel; a petroleum compensation charge, a levy to a maximum of $12 per barrel which will be to cover the import oil compensation; there are provisions for retroactive authority to cover the special compensation charge. The bill covers a tax to fund the Canadian ownership charge. It provides the government authority to amend the pricing terms of the Syncrude agreement. It all amounts to a massive tax ripoff at the expense of the Canadian consumer. It is clearly another of those examples of a dramatic increase in the level of indirect taxation.

The effects of the budget and the provisions enshrined in this piece of legislation will be to double the level of indirect taxation on individual Canadians. It really also demonstrates the stupidity of this government's energy policy when Canadian consumers are being asked to pay taxes of the order of 20 cents to 25 cents a gallon to subsidize oil which is imported at world prices from the OPEC countries, from Saudi Arabia, from Venezuela and Mexico, while western Canadian production is shut in, throwing people out of work, creating bankruptcies, business failures and business cutbacks, causing people to lose their homes and causing communities which have thrived on the vitality of the oil industry in the west to falter.

One must examine this situation in the light of whether it is simply an act of stupidity or whether it is a deliberate attack upon the people of Canada. My colleague suggests that it is malicious. Many people in western Canada firmly believe this is an attack by the federal government on western resources. It is nothing more than a deliberate mischievous attack upon a resource, the economy and the livehlihood of western Canadians. It is drying up economic opportunities which western Canadians felt were on the horizon. The eighties were to have been the decade of tremendous growth, development and opportunity in terms of broadening the economic base and increasing the manufacturing and processing sectors so that more and more Canadians who were born, raised and educated in western Canada could fulfil their potential and their dreams. They could make their homes, establish their businesses and fulfil their careers with a sense of satisfaction and fulfilment.

The deliberate attack by this government in terms of its proposed National Energy Program, taxation policies and budgetary policies enshrined in October, 1980 and November, 1981 have caused a sense of hopelessness and despair, frustration, anger and outrage. This is causing a deep sense of alienation and aggravation in western Canada.

It is within that environment that we are now witnessing a growing tide of western separatism. Only if one lives there and speaks to the people can one sense their frustration and anger. Only then can you get a full appreciation of it. This is why we are seeing attendances at rallies of the Western Canada Concept in the thousands, at least in the hundreds.

I understand that in British Columbia in the last two or three days there have been massive rallies in some of the smaller communities with attendances of well over 1,000 people. They are simply information meetings. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that those people who are attending these meetings are there for more than simply information. They are looking for an avenue or a mechanism to vent their frustration and anger.

I am pleased that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is in the chamber. While his constituency does not penetrate the deep west, as it is in Winnipeg, I am sure he has had reports of what is occurring. I invite him to read the editorial pages and to contact his friends in the Liberal Party and other parties to talk about this very important issue. He is in a position of influence within cabinet. I implore this minister and his colleagues to realize that something must be done in order to remove this kind of feeling, which is taking off like wildfire. It will require more than simply a gesture; it will require some fundamental shifts in government policy. We cannot afford division, discord and disharmony in this country and expect it to function in a way that all regions and all citizens have a similar opportunity to achieve their full potential.

We have a situation where we now import in excess of 500,000 barrels of oil a day at world prices, $40 a barrel. At the same time, we are told that during the month of April something like 300,000 barrels of oil a day will be shut in in the province of Alberta. Simply put, we are buying oil at $40 a barrel from offshore sources and leaving 300,000 barrels of potential oil shut in in the province of Alberta. This would cost the domestic consumer $23.50 a barrel. It simply does not make sense.

We are not asking for a handout. Nor are we asking for a policy that favours the west. We want a commonsense policy. How silly, ridiculous and stupid can this government be? This is simply a matter for good common sense.

In the province of Saskatchewan and in some areas of Alberta heavy oil and low-producing wells are located. I am told that in Saskatchewan there are some 8,500 producing wells, 5,500 of which produce less than 20 barrels a day. We are therefore talking about small amounts from individual oil wells. However, the labour component is very high. The labour component in terms of collection devices, the distribution system, makes this oil production entity very important to western Canada in terms of providing jobs, strengthening the business community and vitalizing it. Those production facilities are very labour-intensive. That business has literally dried up.

The New Democratic Party supports the general thrust and objectives of the National Energy Program. I find that rather strange. It is the general objectives and thrust of the National Energy Program that have literally destroyed the oil industry in Saskatchewan and virtually destroyed the heavy oil and the industry which produced the very light crude in Alberta.

This is why we do not have on stream a Cold Lake heavy oil facility, a heavy oil upgrading facility onstream in the Lloydminister area or an Alsands project onstream. This is because of this government's failure to recognize the realities of the oil industry. There is certainly not much experience in this cabinet in Ottawa with regard to what it takes to make an oil well produce, get the oil out of the ground, refine it and put into the gas tanks of the consumers.

We are very heavily reliant on imports to provide our source of supply. That is further eroding the value of the dollar. It is further eroding our balance of payments, contributing to high interest rates, destroying confidence in the economy, increasing the outflow of Canadian investment capital, reducing employment opportunities and straining the patience of Canadians. In a letter to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada pointed out the serious difficulties facing the oil production sector in western Canada. Madam Speaker, I would like to quote from this letter which is dated March 5, 1982. It says:

> The Independent Petroleum Association of Canada (IPAC) is gravely concerned with the deteriorating market for all Canadian crude oils. Many of our members have been drastically hurt as a result of the loss of production income which seriously affects financing of exploration and production programs.

We all know that the exploration has been reduced by anywhere from 25 per cent to 30 per cent in the year 1981. That is another one of the major job-producing sectors of the petroleum industry. That will be reduced by a further 10 per cent or 15 per cent this year.

It goes on to say:

> Many factors impact on the determination of market demand for Canadian crude oil. IPAC is concerned with the effect of the Oil Import Compensation Program, which subsidizes imported crude oil.
> For example, our analysis indicates that refiners import foreign heavy crude oil at a net cost of $9. to $12. per barrel less than comparable quality Canadian crudes due to the subsidy.
> The inordinately high subsidy paid by Canadian consumers is effectively encouraging crude oil imports, while precluding the production of domestic crude oil. Canadian producers are therefore being forced to shut in their production due to lack of markets. Any subsidy program that encourages foreign crude oil imports, at the expense of Canadian production, requires immediate correction.

Immediate correction, it says. This was dated back on March 5. Over a month has elapsed and nothing has been done. This situation deteriorates further day by day and nothing has been done to correct it. That is absolutely shameful. That is why the Liberal members opposite, who have been asked to vote in support of this measure, should hang their heads in shame.

The second reason why they should hang their heads in shame is over the betrayal of their leader to uphold the election commitment that was taken during the last election campaign. I have many quotes here, Mr. Speaker, which bear repeating. It really makes a farce out of the whole campaign process. It is little wonder, when the leader of the country was out appealing to Canadians to support him because he was going to keep oil prices down, that he had his followers, who were running for office, doing the same thing; but when they got into office they turned around and really socked it to the consumers.

Look at what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in Toronto on February 8, 1980:

> So right from the start, right from the very beginning of a new Liberal government, you will know that the cost of gasoline will not rise by 32 cents a gallon this year. With the 18 cents gone, we will negotiate an oil pricing agreement with the provinces for a price increase of less than $4 a barrel. That would mean less than the 14 cents increase in a gallon of gasoline that the Tories are bringing in this year.

He went on to say in Kamloops, on February 6, 1980:

> Liberals would do things differently. First of all, that unfair and unjust 18 cents a gallon gas tax, that 25 cents a gallon diesel tax would not be reimposed. They're unfair, they're unnecessary and they're gone, as far as we are concerned.

Then there were his remarks at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, on February 5, 1980:

> For firsts, we will not reimpose the 18 cents a gallon or the 25 cents a gallon tax. That's inequitable, it's damaging to the economy and as far as we're concerned it's gone. And we will work out with the producing provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, a "made in Canada" price for oil and gas and that means a price that will not, as the Tories would have it, that will not automatically be pegged to world prices.

He goes on and on and on. What happened, Mr. Speaker? The fact of the matter is that in that first year there was an increase far in excess of the 14 cents promised. It was more like 28 or 29 cents a gallon. We all know what has happened since then. To date we have had 15 different price increases in the price of gasoline. The tax increases alone in 1981 exceeded more than 32 cents a gallon, almost double the 18 cents that we had proposed. In fact, the latest statistics that I have, show that the national average price of gasoline per gallon in 1979, at the time that this government defeated our government, was $1.14 a gallon; today it is roughly $2 per gallon. Included in that $2 is a provision for a series of taxes which total 60 cents a gallon. That is, 60 cents a gallon of the $2 goes directly into federal government coffers. That is a very good chunk of the total price one pays at the pump.

What is happening, Mr. Speaker, is that in effect, while we have a domestic crude oil price of $23.50, roughly 65 per cent of the world price, we are paying more than the world price at the retail level. What is becoming increasingly disturbing is the fact that while we have prices at the pumps on the increase here in Canada, our counterparts in the United States are finding their prices falling. As a matter of fact, we understand that in the city of Seattle the price of gasoline is roughly 13 cents a gallon lower than what it is in Vancouver.

The Liberal members across should hang their heads in shame because of the betrayal of the election promise. They have no intention of fulfilling it. This Prime Minister had no intention of doing so, and his major spokesman, his Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), had no intention of fulfilling that election promise. They betrayed the Canadian people with this sleazy tactic. It was sleazy. It has been used as an instrument to divide and to drive a wedge into confederation. I know what they were saying during the last election campaign: "Oh, we are not going to pay that excess tax to build up the coffers of Lougheed's trust fund." That is what they were saying. They were saying: "We cannot afford to make the government of Alberta super rich; we do not mind their getting a fair price, we do not mind their getting rich; but we cannot afford to see them getting super rich."

Well, what they did in the course of their campaign, and what they have done since they formed the government, is divide and further erode the sense of partnership, the sense of togetherness in this country. In effect, they have driven a wedge into confederation. I say to my Liberal friends opposite that they should hang their heads in shame when they are asked to stand and vote in support of this particular measure.

My friend who has just entered the House has been pleading the case for the farmer and I commend him for it. I had a good opportunity of sitting in committee when he challenged the Governor of the Bank of Canada on the high interest rate policy. I know he does it with deep concern and conviction. I would ask him to consider doing something similar to his Minister of Finance and his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in respect of the price of diesel fuel—60 cents per gallon in federal tax is being paid by every farmer every time he fills his diesel tractor or combine.

That 60 cents is far too much. There has always been relief for the farmer because he is a producer of food. We have always supported a cheap food policy. We know that the farmers do not have the luxury of passing on these additional costs to the consumer because many of their products are sold on the export market. But 60 cents a gallon is far too much for the farmer to pay in the form of a federal tax. That is another massive revenue grab. For the average farmer in western Canada it means that he has to dig out of his pocket roughly $4,000 to pay into the federal government coffers for that 60 cents a gallon tax that they have imposed upon farm fuel prices. That is grossly unfair. I am sure he would consider it grossly unfair, but I have not heard him say anything about it. It is not the Governor of the Bank of Canada that has imposed this but his own colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Let us look at fertilizer, Mr. Speaker. The price of natural gas has a direct impact on the price of fertilizer. They tell me that the federal tax component on production of fertilizer works out anywhere from $25 to $40 a tonne and by 1985 that will increase to about $72 a tonne. That is some 35 per cent of the total cost. That, too, is unfair because the farmer does not have the opportunity of passing that cost on.

We in western Canada also have a grossly unfair pricing structure for fertilizer. The fertilizer manufactured in western Canada and exported to the United States is selling at a price level of between $30 and $60 per tonne less in the United States than it is in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said yesterday that that is the free market system working. When he acknowledges that the excessive amount of fertilizer produced in Alberta and Saskatchewan has to be sold in the United States at competitive prices, that simply demonstrates to me that there is not a free marketplace, that the forces of the free market are not working in western Canada because there is either some price fixing or some kind of monopoly. Competitive forces simply are not evident. If they are not evident, surely the minister responsible for farmers and the production of food and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) have a duty and obligation to look into this matter. If this is the market system at work, there is certainly something wrong. In my view, the competitive market system is not at work, and there should be protection for the producers of Canada. We should not tolerate this kind of price gouging.

The farmer is getting it at every end. He is getting it in fertilizer prices, home heating fuel prices and natural gas prices, and he is experiencing an excessive and exorbitant imposition of tax on the diesel fuel he burns in his tractor. That is unfair and it cannot continue.

I hope some hon. members opposite who represent producers as their constituents will think twice before they vote in favour of this particular measure, or at least bring in an amendment which would provide exemptions and some relief for the farmers of Canada. We can bring in amendments. The government will not allow its members to vote with us, but I invite hon. members opposite to do just that. There is no question that we would support them.

This massive rip-off of consumers is something we did not hear much about during the last election campaign. It is no wonder people are losing faith in politicians and the political institutions of this country. When we consider the stupidity of some policies, the blatant deception which occurred during the last election campaign and the lack of confidence in leadership which exists in this country, we see clearly that it is no wonder that there is a sense of hopelessness and despair and a sense that things will get worse before they get better. Canadians are very despondent and frustrated by the fact that there is no hope on the horizon because of the silly and asinine policies which are in effect. We are not asking for anything dramatic. We are asking for nothing in the way of favouritism. We are just asking for a little commonsense.

We are debating here a Canadian ownership charge, and that brings me to Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada was something which was urgently needed to provide oil self-sufficiency to the country. The creature was created at a cost of some $4 billion. Today we are more reliant on imported oil than we were a year ago, and a year ago we were more reliant on imported oil than the year before.

What has Petro-Canada done? It has taken over going concerns at very heavy cost to the people of Canada. Petro-Canada is involved in places like Tanzania, Senegal, Kenya, Jamaica, Bangladesh, Pakistan and many other countries of the world, but we do not see Petro-Canada doing any pioneering or trail-blazing here in Canada. Petro-Canada has done nothing to improve our level of self-sufficiency. It puts out nice ads. Petro-Canada can hire American advertising consultants to define its trademarks, and so forth but Petro-Canada has become a joke.

No one really expects Petro-Canada to wave a magic wand and provide us with energy self-sufficiency. Petro-Canada has hired a number of bureaucrats and more government appointments have been made. Petro-Canada has become another reward centre for the diminishing number of people who have some sympathy for the Liberal cause. The whole philosophy and attitude of the government is that it should corral revenue so that the government can impose central control, assert authority, determine where growth will take place and in what region, how resources are to be developed, who will get the nod to do such development and who the winners and losers will be. The price we are paying for that kind of philosophy is seen in the growing numbers of people on unemployment rolls, the growing numbers of people who are losing their homes and the growing numbers of businesses closing their doors. Farm bankruptcies are up 50 per cent this year over last year. What is happening is that while the productive labour force is being reduced, the non-productive government labour force is being increased. The March 22 editorial of The Financial Times points that out:

> But the policies of the Trudeau government in this recession are having a curious effect: the producers are losing their jobs and the non-producers are cruising through unscathed.
> The layoffs announced week-by-week by hard-hit companies are almost all among producers. There are 133,000 fewer manufacturing jobs in Canada than there were a year ago, according to Statistics Canada. Jobs in primary industry have dropped by 41,000. Construction jobs are down 17,000.
> On the other hand, the category of "public administration" had 770,000 jobs in February, 26,000 more than four months earlier on a seasonally-adjusted basis.

The article goes on:

> A year ago the federal staff numbered about 329,000. Ottawa expects this to grow to 334,000 by the end of this month. And the government is planning to have 345,000 employees by a year from now. To be comparable, these totals include postal workers.
> Not only does the number of bureaucrats grow throughout recessions but it continues to grow in times—such as the present—when the government proclaims that it is following a policy of restraint.
> In the past year, for instance, the federal energy department has added 656 new employees, a 17 per cent increase. And that doesn't count the 1,639 employees added by Petro-Canada.

What are companies in the private sector doing? They have to lay people off. Because of the decline in the petroleum industry, a reduction in the work force is necessary. We have a paradox. The government payroll is exploding, and the private sector—the productive sector—payroll is on the decline. Oil companies are being squeezed by falling demand and rising taxes, while at the same time there is an explosion of jobs in the non-productive government sector. That is essentially what is happening in this country.

As I said in a speech earlier this week, the productive labour force in Canada is reducing. Production in this country is reducing. We have not had any new wealth generated over the last five years, and unless we start generating some new wealth, unless we start encouraging production and productivity and unless we can experience some real growth in this country, we will be in very, very serious trouble. We cannot continue to redistribute wealth. We have to create and generate some new wealth, and that is something this government is not doing.

I want to turn now to what I consider another classic example of stupidity and discrimination, and it has to do with the treatment of fuel tax with respect to Canadian air carriers. We are all aware that there has been a transportation fuel compensation recovery charge levied against our airlines and our ships which are involved in export trade. This primarily affects the ships employed in the coastal trade and service on the Great Lakes. We know that some $50 million in taxes has been imposed on internationally schedule and charter services. Because the tax is discriminatory and has violated bilateral agreements made with other countries, the government decided to rebate some $46 million of export fuel taxes to the foreign carriers that serve Canada but it has refused to treat Canadian carriers in the same way. There is a double standard, Mr. Speaker, and it just does not make sense. The decision places Canadian carriers at a severe financial disadvantage relative to foreign competitors. This threatens the financial health of Canadian airlines at a time of seriously depressed earnings.

This case has a long history, Mr. Speaker. The Air Transport Association of Canada warned the government at the time that this action would be in clear violation of the bilateral agreements. Foreign governments made representations to the Canadian authorities and they finally agreed to the exemption. But it has not been provided to Canadian carriers, Mr. Speaker, so again there is a double standard which works to Canadians' disadvantage.

This bill proposes that a tax of approximately eight cents per litre or 36 cents per gallon be imposed upon the supplier—a sort of income tax on refiners and/or suppliers. It blatantly interferes with contract negotiations between airlines and their suppliers.

Until now, fuel products exported in the east were levied a charge to recover compensation on the originally imported oil. This charge will extend this treatment to the west and will impose it on all Canadian aircraft leaving Canada. There is no reference to the level of the charge to be levied. The export charge on diesel type fuels, called middle distillates, was about $113 per cubic meter while the fuel compensation recovery charge for February was only in the $47 to $68 range. There are differences in the recovery charge for the type of user and point of departure. The charge on the east coast for marine diesel is $78.35 while the charge for the west coast is $47.20 for February.

We have to ask why the bill does not mention that different classes of users will be charged different amounts. The bill should speak to this and the minister should explain the difference between the two costs.

The bill does not speak to the adjustments that have been made to the charge with respect to airlines. The government has indicated that this charge will no longer be levied on aircraft and that they will use the income tax system to capture back the same amount as the charge, yet the bill is silent on this point. A charge of nil for February is insufficient to guarantee that the charge will never be levied again.

There is confusion and discrimination in this, Mr. Speaker. The airlines are not arguing about the fact that the taxes are to be imposed but about the method in which they are being imposed. They believe that this constitutes a gross interference in contract negotiations between the airlines and the suppliers of fuel. This demonstrates again the effects that a myriad of regulations, excessive costs, a variety of taxes, levies and surcharges will have and they have to be coped with in the consideration of this legislation. It is a bureaucrat's and accountant's haven but it is a burden to anyone who wants to live up to the spirit and letter of the law.

We are in the final throes of debating a program which, as I said the other day, will go down in history as the major man-made disaster of the 1980s—the National Energy Program. This series of bills should be considered with a great deal of caution and care and there should be the greatest input possible from the people who will be affected by them, directly or indirectly, and that is the people in the industry. I refer not only to the multinationals and the big oil companies but to the average individual and the average company that is part and parcel of this network that is the petroleum industry in Canada.

This has become a very important and viable industry, Mr. Speaker. While my province and western Canada have an agricultural based economy, in places like Vegreville, Lloydminister, Wainwright, Vermilion, Cold Lake, Leduc, Wetaskiwin, the oil industry, in various forms, is a very important component of the health of the whole economy. It provides an economic spin-off, a tax base and an economic development base. We need all of these in western Canada to provide some security so that our economy will not be dependent on one industry or another.

That component of our economy has been hurt very badly. People who have invested their lifetime earnings in aspects of the oil service, drilling and exploration industry have been hurt very badly. Companies that have been in existence for 10 or 20 years have been forced to lay-off large numbers of people. In some cases they have been forced to close their doors. All this because of a man-made, deliberate policy which is seen as an attack on the west and an attack upon industry.

The agricultural industry and the oil industry have worked hand in hand, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there have been times when producers have been in royal battle with the oil companies and the exploration and drilling companies about determining a fair value for rights of way, damage to crops and so forth, but essentially the industries have developed side by side.

The Alberta publication "Wheat Pool Budget" recently reprinted an editorial from the Brooks Bulletin which I think is worth putting on the record. It summarizes, in layman's language, the serious and combined impact of the budgets of 1980, 1981 and the National Energy Program. Under the heading "Let's do Something" it reads as follows:

It has been a relatively short time since the Budget and National Energy Program were delivered to the Canadian people. In this time, residents of Canada have gone from the inquisitive to the unbelieving.

In the short span of 16 months, many businesses have gone under—the victims of high interest rates. Many farms and ranches have followed suit.

Today, people meeting on the street no longer follow the customary greeting whith a smile. Now they ask each other how they are surviving.

We have watched helplessly as businesses closed their doors and silently disappeared. We have listened on the phone while well-respected business people tell us they just don't have the funds to pay an account. We have heard about the countless hardships a farmer has mastered throughout his life—until now.

We have watched while our country's once strong economic situation turned for the worse.

As we recently read: "The price of this human misery is unbecoming to our Canadian talent and potential. Clearly our nation is out of touch with reality."

We must do something to pull the federal government's cloak of uncertainty back from the economic window and instil the peace of mind that Canadians only a short while ago enjoyed.

• (1650)

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard from the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) a moving and masterful exposition of the depth of the dangers our country faces. I congratulate him on that speech and, sir, as I speak in the same vein as the hon. member, I hope you will interpret my remarks as coming out of the depth of the west. For indeed, Sir, virtually every member of this House from western Canada feels the same as myself, the hon. member for Vegreville and the others who have spoken in this debate.

In the light of statistical indicators, Mr. Speaker, it is evident the federal government's record on economic affairs is abysmal. But on energy matters the record is horrendous. Energy policies have been constructed out of political expendiency or gross misreading of the economy and the country's total needs. It was political expediency which led the government to embark on the ill-advised policy of shielding the Canadian consumer from the effects of OPEC price increases in 1973. It gave the consumer the illusion that he lived in the best of all possible worlds. The Canadian consumer did not learn to conserve, industry was not helped to adjust to the new reality, and the government did not push for self-sufficiency with the force it should have. Now, finally, the consumer is painfully waking up, and industry has to make adjustments in often tragic ways.

On energy matters, of which this bill is a prime example, the government is still acting in a woefully erroneous fashion. Let me put it plainly: the national energy policy is an unmitigated disaster, not just for my province, but for the whole country. As a Canadian I am truly saddened to see what is happening in my country; not only the loss of jobs, but the fear which is sweeping across the land. Millions of Canadians today fear for their continued employment. What is worse, as the Gallup poll has just shown, a large section of the public fears that if they do lose their jobs, they will not be able to get another one. What kind of society is that?

As an Albertan I am angered at the loss of potential. The national energy policy ignores the needs and aspirations of all Canadians and has its deepest negative effects on Alberta. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I stand for Canadianization, greater control of the industry in Canadian hands. As the Conservative party finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), stated publicly on July 21, 1981, "this is an economic fact of life and the reversal of a process which has occurred in Canada over the past 100 years".

But, sir, Canadianization should not be confused with nationalization. Yet that is what the government is doing. It is softening up the stock market and buying into the industry at depressed price levels. Surely it is open for all to see how oil share prices declined when the NEP was announced. Virtually the only major stock which did not lose was Petrofina, which the government later purchased at a grossly inflated price. Yes, Canadianization should be our goal, but not through nationalization or the strategy this government is following. "Canadian owned" does not and ought not mean "Canadian government owned". The Canadian private sector ought to be encouraged to invest in the energy industry.

This, Mr. Speaker, is why the Progressive Conservative Party in 1979 proposed the Canadian common stock investment plan. Canadians investing in Canada was the object of that plan. Small investors were to be encouraged to participate in Canadian-owned companies. RRSPs were to be encouraged to purchase Canadian stocks. We were even planning, as is well known, to offer shares in Petro-Canada to Canadians at $10 a share, not the $120 which the government is asking for shares in a PetroCan subsidiary. The present government has not even looked at this kind of measure. Instead by imposing a 25 per cent retroactive back-in on federal lands, it has made prospective investors ask: Will our money be safe there?

It is this lack of investor confidence, this basic uncertainty about the Canadian government's intentions, which is causing many firms to sell out and others to move to the United States. Small Canadian firms would rather be involved here in Canada if conditions permitted them to be, but they go to the United States because their policies make energy investment increasingly attractive. We now find that 12 per cent of the oil and natural gas exploration in the United States is being undertaken by Canadian companies, and that is why I, as an Albertan, am angry. Most of the companies which have moved to the United States have moved from Alberta. Two hundred and thirty-one oil drilling rigs have lefts since the NEP was announced, along with 111 service rigs. That is as if in Ontario or Quebec small factories employing 40 or 50 had closed down one by one. Drilling activity in 1981 was up 26 per cent over 1980 in the United States, and it was down by the same amount in Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger)—Airports—Future of Dorval and Mirabel; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Bankruptcies—(a) Increase in number—(b) Request that government take action; the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)—Foreign Investment Review Agency—(a) Takeover of White Farm Equipment Company by Texas firm. (b) Patents for Canadian-produced combine. (c) Possibility of Canadian control.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers).

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Orders Nos. 22, 35, 1, 48, 28, 43, 5, 54, 34, 83, 71, 89, 36, 94, 88, 49, and 76 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

DAY CARE CENTRES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all questionnaires given to public servants and all studies made by the Treasury Board in 1980 and 1981 in connection with day care centres.

He said: First, I would like to thank the seconder of the motion for enabling me to speak on it. He is not aware of my remarks and has not expressed any approval of what I am going to say, and for that matter he has not expressed any opinion. He has simply, by seconding the motion, given me the opportunity to speak.

I want to make it quite clear that the subject is not day care centres. I want to say, as I have said in this House previously, that the issue is administration, control, government spending, government procedures and for that matter even House procedures. These are the topics I will be discussing this afternoon.

Before departing from the words "day care centre", let me reiterate what I have said previously in this House. I want to see a system of day care centres throughout the public service. I want to see them efficiently operated and I want to see a subsidy program provided, either at the provincial or federal level or at both levels of government so that these day care centres will be accessible to all children of public servants and not just to those whose parents have large enough incomes to afford to pay what I consider to be very high cost.

Putting that aside, let us look at what I consider is the issue I want to discuss this afternoon. Why, as a start, did I transfer motion No. 86 for debate and not allow any further time for the production of the documents asked for in the motion? Simply because I have put several notices on the Order Paper. Notice of motion No. 85 and this one called for documents from the Department of Public Works in connection with the construction program in the last fiscal year ending March 31, 1982.

On February 24, the motion was agreed to. I thought I would be receiving the required documents. I was completely amazed at what was handed to me. I received two sheets of paper which were generalities and were, in effect, a reiteration of what started this exercise, namely a news release dated June 26, 1981. In fact, attached to those two sheets of paper was the news release of June 26, 1981. That was the answer to the motion. That was the answer to what I consider was the order of the House to produce estimates and plans for the day care centre so we could see ourselves what costs were envisaged and what plans were being made.

I brought up this matter in the House and discussed it. The Speaker, and I do not take issue with the ruling, said there was nothing she could do. However, what it does for me is clearly illustrate that a motion passed by this House which becomes an order of the House is valueless. Nothing is produced. Nothing need be produced and there is no means by which a member can ensure the production of documents.

I was particularly annoyed because I had seen certain of the documents. As a result of my comments made in the House and as a result of some pressure I brought to bear on the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), the plans which I had already seen and which I assume are the only plans were produced for me. I was able to review them. They are very extensive. They are very well put together. Along with them I received what purports to be a fairly extensive specification.

I now know why these documents were not tabled. It is because they are in one language only, the English language. I suggest that we have gone past the stage where documents for use on the Hill should be in only one of our official languages. I asked myself how any workman who just happens to be unilingual French is able to understand either the plans or the specifications. But apart from that, I have still not seen any estimates. Being a construction man, I am aware that when one attends to demolition, to all kinds of renovation work, moves libraries, messenger services, does landscaping and builds fences, some fairly detailed estimates ordinarily should be prepared. What we were given was a global figure.

I eventually got this information in a letter from the Minister of Public Works. The subject of the letter is the day care centre. The issue is not the day care centre itself; it is the way we handle costs. The cost shown for the architectural, mechanical, electrical, structural and outside play areas is $210,000. That is a nice global figure. Next we find fees and miscellaneous costs including management and contingency sums, for another $30,000. That totals $240,000. That figure was produced in a committee hearing as being the cost to public works of doing this work in one of our buildings on the Hill.

Being always somewhat cautious when figures are bandied around in such global fashion, I enquired and found out that there is another cost involved namely the cost of related work including the relocation of the branch library—we would not have had to relocate the branch library if we had not been building the day care centre—the messenger service and the traffic control services, which will be in the order of $80,000. When we are spending $80 billion, I suppose $80,000 is relatively insignificant, but it bothers me. It bothers me because as far as I am concerned when we spend money here it is coming out of my pocket in the form of taxes and I want to see better control.

But that is not the end. We now have $240,000 plus $80,000 which equals $320,000. Loose equipment and furniture will be purchased separately. I do not know how much that will be, I have no idea. But we are now looking at an expenditure in the order of $400,000 for 40 children, or $10,000 per head.

I love children, Mr. Speaker. I want every child in this country to have the opportunity my two children had of going to a day care centre and receiving that kind of advanced training before attending primary school. But to tell me, a construction man, that we have to spend $10,000 per head for every child going to a day care centre is, I suggest, absolutely ludicrous. I object and I object very strongly.

What is worse is found in a letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) who writes:

> According to what I have been told, the day care centre in the Confederation Building will be run by a board of directors independent of the House of Commons administration.

That is probably a good thing. The Minister's letter continues:

> —moderate-income employees, earning $15,000 or $20,000 a year, are far less able to pay the day care fees than a higher-income person.

That is absolutely correct, particularly when one finds that person is ordinarily a single family parent with two children. The cost to that person will be $650 a month for 12 months. We should look at the total. It is absolutely beyond the reach of most employees on the Hill. The minister went on to say:

• (1710)

> I have therefore asked my officials if employees using the Confederation Building day care centre (and similar centres at other places of employment)—

We must remember that this is an example for the country. This is what we will hopefully be able to do throughout the public service as an employer. She continued:

> —might be eligible for subsidies but would be cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Then a memo in this connection was attached, and she went on to say:

> As you will see, it is possible for CAP cost-sharing to be available for children enrolled in the centre. However, most federal employees would probably not be eligible for subsidies because their incomes would exceed the levels that have been set by the province of Ontario.

Essentially day care centres are in the provincial sphere of jurisdiction. The province is responsible for the control, the province decides the level to which they will be subsidized, and the province in that regard also sets the amount of participation of the federal government because the federal government pays 50 per cent of whatever the province decides to pay.

To ascertain exactly what kind of organization would be running the centre, I put questions. First I should explain once again that it is not because this is a day care centre which we pass every day; I am looking at examples of the way we operate and the money we spend for what we will be doing in the entire public service. I want it kept in that perspective. If we are to establish boards for every day care centre in different departments of government, apparently this is the manner in which they will be set up, through independent boards. I asked how the board was selected, who decided on the membership, and why there were no men on the board.

We have been fighting so-called discrimination. Normally when we think of discrimination, it is in the terms that women are not considered equal. I object as a male from being excluded from the consideration of what will happen to my children or the children of other people. I have every right to do so. I was not given an answer. In fact, the response was simple: "Ask the board." I asked the board who selected it and why its members were all women. Frankly, I think the whole matter is becoming somewhat ludicrous.

Mr. Blaikie: What was the answer?

Mr. Herbert: I did not obtain an answer, because obtaining an answer here is sometimes a very lengthy process.

Mr. Blaikie: We know that better than you.

Mr. Herbert: I am called upon to speak in the House long before the answer finally comes to me.

This centre, which will be the example in the public service, will be entirely self-supporting. How can we say that it will be entirely self-supporting when the cost is $10,000 per child at the outset? The interest on those moneys alone is at least $1,500 per annum per child. There are public funds involved, and since they will not be recovered, it is not self-supporting at the onset. Therefore, as government policy, why do we not accept that we will be involved in a considerable expenditure of funds and say, in all fairness to the population, that we should add the required subsidies to ensure that the facilities are available to everyone on an equal basis? How can we expect any of the ladies who work in our cafeterias, or even the men who drive our buses, to have the necessary funds to put their children into this very expensive, very nice, very attractive and very laudable day care centre? They will not have access to it, and on that basis I think it is something at which the government must look. I feel it is discriminatory.

I have raised several points this afternoon. Before we go any further, we must look at our total approach. The memorandum or the communiqué issued on June 26 should be followed up with a reasonably good study of exactly what we are getting into. Having identified what initial costs are involved, we should look at what additional costs will have to be added to construction costs in order to make the centre accessible to all employees. Furthermore, there should be a little more consultation with the province of Ontario. The centre is to be licensed by the day nurseries branch of the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services. This is fine. I suppose it means that they will be responsible for the general overhaul of its facilities to ensure that they are suitable and presumably ensure that it is run according to good standards. I think I have made my point. We have spent a lot of money and we are continuing to do so.

In conclusion, I should like to refer to one item which bothers me somewhat. The procedures by which we operate on a fiscal basis whereby everything ends on March 31, I find irritating. I have discussed, for example, control of costs with the Auditor General. It will be realized that any construction which goes over a year's end finds costs in two different fiscal years. Under those circumstances it is very difficult to put together a package. We must add to that the fact that moneys are coming out of three completely different pockets—one for the construction, one for the moving of library, messenger services and so on, and one for the supply of furniture and various fixtures. One can see that it will probably be at least the autum of 1983 before we as Members of Parliament will see the dollars involved. I do not consider that a very satisfactory procedure. I plead with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) to put the cards on the table, to tell us precisely what is involved and to tell us precisely what is his intention. He should assure us that it is government policy, if it is going into the field of day care centres, to ensure that day care facilities are available to all public service employees regardless of their levels of income.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for his concern about accessibility to the day care centre being constructed on the Hill. If I understand correctly, at this point there will be no subsidized spaces in the day care centre, but there is some hope that there might be some in the future.

This is an excellent opportunity to impress upon not only one government member, the hon. member for Vaudreuil, but upon all government members who are present, the need for a national day care act. In this case, if there was an appropriate act, it would provide guidelines for the provision of subsidized spaces in this day care centre as in all other day care centres which exist or come into existence, whether they be in the public service or anywhere else.

Today I would like to take the opportunity to put some facts on the record with regard to day care in Canada and to make some suggestions from the New Democratic Party point of view. In this regard, I would like to refer generally to the analysis of day care in Canada which is found in the annual health and welfare publication, "Status of Day Care in Canada." I would refer particularly to the one which was recently released which has some interesting statistics.

The amount of licensed or supervised day care space increased in 1980 by 16.8 per cent. Non-commercial space increased by 33 per cent and commercial space decreased by 3.7 per cent. This was the reverse from the year before when the growth in space was concentrated in the "day care for profit" sector.

Infant day care centres continue to be the big loser. It is estimated that in 1980 there were 229,000 children under the age of two whose mothers were in the labour force. A total of 3.8 per cent of these children are receiving group care or approved family day care service. As of March, 1980 there were an estimated 531,000 children aged two to six of working mothers. The data indicates that that 15.77 per cent of these children are enrolled in day care services. The conglomerate figures show that of the 760,000 children under the age of six whose mothers are in the work force, only 12.6 per cent of them are in approved day care spaces. This was a marginal improvement over the previous year's figures of 12.04 per cent. The fact remains that fully 88 per cent of Canada's children under the age of six whose mothers are in the labour force are left in unlicensed child care arrangements.

A further breakdown of day care centre spaces reveals that the overwhelming percentage of day care spaces are being utilized by children between the ages of two and six, some 79.94 per cent. Spaces for children under the age of two represent 5.38 per cent of all centre spaces, which is down by 400 spaces from 1979. This represents an acute problem for parents with infants.

Our short-term, low-benefit maternity benefits make day care that much more essential. We passed a resolution at our federal convention in 1979 calling for an increased federal share of cost sharing for infant day care spaces as a mechanism for increasing accessibility to this very important kind of care.

I will now give a few provincial comparisons, for those who may be interested. As indicated in this study, each province has its own mix of day care delivery, as we might expect. Ontario and Alberta are the only two provinces which have publicly owned—that is to say, municipally owned—day care centres. The municipalities in both of these provinces have had an active involvement in the delivery of day care services and, in both provinces, contribute to the cost of day care.

Non-profit day care centres are predominant in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec. In Saskatchewan, only parent co-operatives qualify for licensing. In Ontario, commercial and non-profit centres are approximately equal in numbers. Commercial centres in Alberta outnumber non-profit centres by two to one. In five of ten provinces, that is Ontario, New Brunswick, Alberta, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, one half or more of the spaces are commercial, principally serving the needs of full fee-paying parents.

As I have mentioned, in light of the great need which remains to be met in terms of providing day care services in Canada, we have passed a number of resolutions in our party having to do with this concern. I would like to indicate one resolution for the record which was passed at the federal convention of 1979 which continues to be New Democratic Party policy:

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the NDP reaffirm its 1971 commitment that an NDP Federal Government would enact a national Child Care Act; commit itself to the philosophy of child care as a public service, and initiate an educational campaign in support of this philosophy.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that in the meantime, as a matter of urgency, the NDP press for:

(1) initiatives on the part of the Federal Government by offering preferential cost-sharing schemes (ie. paying 75 per cent of the capital cost of building child care centres, 80 per cent of the cost of child care staff, increasing the federal part of cost-sharing child care services for infants and handicapped children) thereby increasing the accessibility and quality of childcare;

(2) the encouragement of provincial and municipal governments to make child care a higher budgetary priority and to institute a ceiling on child care fees charged to parents;

The fourth point in this resolution stated:

(4) legislation be passed requiring employers to fund quality day care centres in the workplace.

Policy resolutions are always an indication of rough intention. I believe that these policies which were passed by the national convention of the NDP are worthy of consideration.

I would like to dwell for a minute on a matter which concerns me, not just with respect to day care but to nursing homes and anything having to do with the provision of human services, for that matter. It concerns the ongoing debate about whether or not such services can be provided adequately within the context of profit-making institutions. While we have always had profit-oriented day care centres, we see more of them coming into being, especially now since we see multinational day care corporations such as Kindercare moving into this field. They obviously see it as an area in which they might be able to make money.

I would like to reflect for a moment on some of the drawbacks to profit-oriented day care. First, since fees are limited by what parents can afford to pay, making a profit from day care necessitates cutting back on the quality of day care provided. Another point is that the issue of quality of care is primary given the argument that good quality care cannot be provided on a profit-making basis. For instance, a recent investigation into the expenditures of profit-oriented day care centres in the United States concluded that:

For-profit centres typically spend much less per child than do non-profit centres. According to the 1977 Abt. data, average annual expenditures per child are about 30 per cent lower in for-profit centres than in non-profit centres.

Most of these expenditure savings are made through lower staff salaries. Lower salaries tend to mean less trained and less experienced staff and a higher turnover which disrupts relationships within the day care centre.

A 1979 Toronto survey of 30 for-profit and 91 non-profit centres found that staff salaries were significantly lower in for-profit centres. This same survey found that for-profit oriented centres provided fewer staff benefits, including paid vacation, sick leave, pension plans, life insurance and in the case of Ontario, OHIP payments. In Edmonton, a survey by health inspectors reported that almost half the for-profit centres were not providing adequate care. In Ottawa, purchase of service agreements has just been withdrawn from two profit oriented centres due to misuse of funds.

A further criticism of for-profit centres is that they do not encourage or, in some cases, even permit parental involvement. The special nature of day care in providing care for very young children makes the involvement of parents in the substitute care particularly desirable. Apart from the lack of parental involvement and questionable quality of present centres, the continued growth of for-profit day care, particularly corporate centres, as I have mentioned, raises the possibility of future lobbying activity to lower standards in day care.

I want to say that even though I have outlined many of the inadequacies which arise as a result of operating day care centres according to the profit motive, I would still have some concern even if it could be demonstrated to me that profit-oriented day care centres do provide good quality care from time to time. I am concerned about the long-range trend which is particularly in evidence in the United States, but I am also concerned that it might become a trend here to perceive human services as a new and challenging field for the marketplace. I am concerned that we will see more and more of this as traditional sources of capital and profit move into the Third World, as we try to export pollution and some of the more negative consequences of industrial society, and that here in North America we will see a move toward more commercialization of human services. We will see this through multinational corporations involved in nursing home care and in the provision of day care, and in the provision of health services, so that finally no area of human activity will be left untouched by this particular manner of regard for human life and all things will be turned into commodities in the marketplace.

It would be a mistake to see my concern about profit-oriented day care as part and parcel of the old and sometimes boring debate between those who would like to see something done by the private sector and those who would like to see something done by the public sector. As I mentioned in the energy debate just a few days ago, our debates in this country must transcend those two caricatures, because I am not interested in a broad, monolithic, all-pervasive multinational human service industry. But, neither am I interested in a broad, monolithic, all-pervasive, government-run bureaucratic human service industry either. What we should advocate in this country is that all day care centres be run as far as possible on a parent involved basis, a community involved basis. We should look to smaller scale, more co-operative, community based enterprises, particularly when we are concerned with something as important as child care. So that is what I have in mind. We need to transcend the debate over which bureaucracy is to run our lives, whether public bureaucracy or private bureaucracy, as it is a sort of rut that we tend to get into here due to certain, long-standing ideological battles.

That is about all I have to say on this matter. I did not want to get into the details of what the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) said concerning the day care centre which is now on the Hill; I will leave that for another day. However, I wanted to take this opportunity to put on the record our concern that no leadership is being shown by the federal government in the matter of ensuring adequate child care services for Canadians right across the country. We think the federal government ought to show some leadership in the way it previously did with regard to health care and other human services. This should be done, particularly in light of today's economic conditions when many women must go out to work, whether they like it or not.

A number of factors are involved, including the economic factor. Many times both parents must go out to work simply to make ends meet, not simply because there is any particular moment of liberation. Perhaps there is also the factor of changes taking place in the perception of the role of women in our society. Both of these factors are combining to create the need for more options when it comes to child care.

Those who lament the passing of the traditional perception of the family ought simultaneously to lament the fact that the particular economic system in which we live has brought us to the point where couples cannot afford to have one or the other spouse, whether it be the man or the woman, staying home to provide child care. When we say that the need for day care is compulsory rather than voluntary, I think that although this need is to be regretted, it is necessary. To the extent that it opens up opportunities for women in particular and for married couples in general to pursue different employment alternatives and other courses of action in their lives, I think the provision of day care is a good thing and the need ought to be met on that basis as well.

Mr. Herbert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the time allotted to the hon. member has not expired, I wonder whether he would accept a question from me.

Mr. Blaikie: Surely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed? It is agreed.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is generally accepted that this type of care for children is within the provincial sphere of influence and that federal intervention is either financial, through the Canada Assistance Plan, or, in the present case, as an employer, has the New Democratic Party looked at the jurisdictional problem, particularly considering the fact that there is a variation of treatment from province to province and that all children across this country do not have access to similar centres because of the difference in provincial treatment? Has the New Democratic Party considered the jurisdictional problem and has it come up with any recommendations?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, by virtue of our intention to have a national child care act, we have indicated it is possible this is an area in which there might be joint federal-provincial responsibility; indeed, there already is joint responsibility. As the hon. member for Vaudreuil mentioned once before, certain day care spaces are already under federal responsibility in so far as they are cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan. The problem of the federal government concerning that particular type of day care is that it is only available to people who meet the criterion for assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan of being in need or likely to be in need.

What we are saying is that all day care ought to be seen as a necessary social service rather than a welfare or handout provision for certain families. In many cases, the people who now qualify for social assistance or who meet the criterion set by the provinces to show that they are in need or likely to be in need qualify for day care. Of course, people with a lot of money qualify for day care because they can pay for it; but the people in the middle are the ones who really find it difficult and must make difficult decisions as to whether or not they can recover enough money from their jobs to have some left over after they have paid for day care. However, if the federal government provided some leadership and some money, I do not think it would have much difficulty with the provinces in trying to provide some leadership in that area.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am very pleased to be able to speak for just a few moments in this debate on the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who has a habit of bringing some very interesting motions to the House of Commons. It is interesting that he, being a Liberal, is always bringing motions that an order of the House issue for copies of all questionnaires given to public servants and all studies made by Treasury Board in 1981 in connection with day care centres and other matters. I would have thought as a Liberal he could just open his mouth quietly in caucus and the documentation would flow out. I thought these denial of information requests were something endemic to our side of the House. I now find that the caucus system we hear about is not as open as it should be.

My friend used a phrase in the course of his interesting speech that was important. I followed his speech and, I must say, generally approved. I think I can quote him correctly. He said it was time the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) came clean and told us exactly what is going on. That is true.

As I go about my constituency and this general area, in this era when women are trying to break out of occupations heretofore reserved to women, trying to exercise professional talents that have been gained because they have ventured educationally and are prepared to venture otherwise into areas heretofore occupied by men or believed to be the domain of men, I am amazed at the tremendous interest in the provision of day care.

Day care serves two social obligations that are mixed and are not really in conflict. First, there is an obligation to recognize the importance of providing every opportunity to equalize opportunities to the greatest possible degree with regard to participation in the work force. Second, the caring and rearing of children, although it is a primary obligation of the family, is not just an obligation of the family but an obligation of society as well. As society evolves, so must our institutions.

I have not seen copies of the documents and questionnaires which my friend has asked for. I am interested in seeing them. The essence of his motion and the questions he asks is that when dealing with day care in terms of the public service, it must be dealt with on a fair, reasonable and universal basis. There cannot be one system, whether it is here in the House of Commons or anywhere else in the public service, for the well-to-do, or no system or a different system for those who are not so well-to-do. That is the matter which concerns me.

Opportunities for work ought to be equal regardless of the economic status of the person whose family requires day care. They ought to be open in a systemic sense to all of those who require day care.

I congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I have done this on other occasions. I join him in his request for information with respect to this matter. It is important. Every time one goes around one's constituency, one finds how important this question and issue is, and the solutions we seek.

I repeat, there is a mixed obligation toward the maintenance, rearing and care of children. Although it is primary, it is just not the obligation of the family. The community has an obligation to ensure that in a changing world children are granted proper care. Opportunities must be given to those who without those facilities would not be able to advance equally with others.

I commend my hon. friend. I will not take any more time of the House. I hope that someone on the government side will stand up and say to the hon. member for Vaudreuil, "Here are your documents"; and when he gets them, that he will share them with me.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak this afternoon in the "Hal Herbert hour". I will preface my remarks by pointing out to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that no studies have been produced or made public, for the simple reason that no studies were done in 1980, 1981, before or after, by Treasury Board. The absence of these studies should not reflect badly on the department nor on the way in which our fabled caucus works internally behind closed doors.

I wish to divide my remarks this afternoon into three sections. First, in a very general way I will deal with women in the workplace and the relationship of this government to them. Second, I will deal in a general way with day care centres and the reasons for them. Third, I will deal with the experience of this government in handling day care within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Females in the workplace is a topic that all of us in this House take seriously. We do so because not only are females a large percentage of today's work force, but every study I have ever read indicates they will become an increasingly larger component of the work force in the years that lie ahead. Unfortunately, there are a number of forces that historically and physiologically work against full and complete participation by females in the work force.

The cultural disadvantage that I am alluding to is that traditionally we have reserved the best or highest paying jobs for males. We tend in our promoting practices, consciously or unconsciously, to choose male applicants over female applicants. Physiologically, a woman is disadvantaged, or at least her working life is complicated, by the fact that quite often she has to bear the simultaneous dual role of worker and mother. I wish to state for the record this afternoon that this government and this party is committed to fighting the first cultural disadvantage and to help women reach a satisfactory accommodation of the second disadvantage.

This is a Liberal government, this is a Liberal Party and the essence of Liberalism is to liberate. I would like everyone in this House to know that this government is dedicated to liberation of women in the workplace, whether it be the federal workplace in Ottawa or other federal workplaces across Canada, or in the marketplace in general.

There is evidence of that statement, Mr. Speaker. There is the creation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the creation of the Office of Equal Opportunities which was established in 1971, the announcement by Treasury Board in 1975 of a policy to promote a greater representation of females in the federal work force.

Furthermore, I would bring your attention to the publication of a plan of action in 1979 and to the pronouncement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) in June, 1981, of the day care policy—to which the hon. member from Vaudreuil alluded earlier in his speech. I would hope that there is no one in this House who would believe that day care is a luxury. All too often when talking privately in a party or a gathering of some sort, we hear people complain about the cost of day care, as if day care were a luxury that we could not afford.

I would argue that day care, far from being a luxury, is indeed a necessity, not only a social necessity but an economic necessity. That latter statement, that day care is an economic necessity, is a point that needs to be stressed this afternoon and at any time when a debate arises over the need for day care centres.

For example, an employer—or a body like an employer, such as this government is—should recognize that the creation of day care centres on site, in the workplace, has significant economic advantages to that company. For example, day care centres certainly attract employees. A company's ability to get good employees is enhanced if the prospective employees know and understand that there will be facilities at the work site for their children. Day care centres already in operation in the work force prove conclusively that they lead to lower absenteeism.

Absenteeism today is a growing problem in the work force. I have talked to businessmen in my riding about their labour situation. One of the criticisms that I hear most often is that it is hard to get good employees. Secondly, it is hard to keep them working on the job consistently day after day. They may work for a week, for a month or so, take a few days off, come back again and then take some more days off, for any number of reasons. Employers have found that if they can provide day care centres, absenteeism is cut significantly.

I would hope that in the future many of those businessmen who presently complain about absenteeism will understand the attraction of building into their work site day care facilities so that their employees will have a more compelling reason to come to work than they apparently have now.

Continuing in this vein, Mr. Speaker, studies indicate that the presence of day care centres improves employee attitudes towards the sponsoring organization; in other words, employee morale builds up with the introduction of day care centres. Such an increase in morale, of course, brings increased productivity.

How often have members stood in this House and argued that the essence of the fight against inflation ultimately is increased productivity? I am not going to argue that the emergence of day care centres across the marketplace in Canada will suddenly and dramatically decrease inflation. I will argue that widespread introduction of day care centres into the marketplace will be one of the important tools the government and private industry can utilize to help to combat this pernicious spectre of inflation which seems impossible to defeat.

In addition the introduction of day care centres lowers the job turnover rate. Those employers I was talking about earlier who were worried about this persistent problem of employee turnover—here today and gone tomorrow—will find that particular difficulty of doing business significantly reduced if day care centres are introduced in their particular business.

The government, of course, is not directly involved in the placement of day care centres in private industry. The member for Vaudreuil indicated earlier, quite accurately, that we do not have jurisdiction to get directly involved in the day care issue. That we do not have direct jurisdiction in this field does not mean that this government has not played a role in spreading day care services throughout the country. In 1980 alone, through the Canada Assistance Plan, approximately $40 million has been channelled to provinces and to municipalities to help them create and run day care centres within their respective jurisdictions. To some people that may not be enough money but I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that it is an excellent start and I would hope this government in future years will involve itself in even larger amounts.

Getting down specifically to the topic raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, I would like to indicate that Treasury Board approved of a pilot project that contemplated the creation, within the federal civil service anywhere in Canada, of three day care centres. I would like to point out this afternoon, lest there be any confusion in the minds of the members present today or to anyone who may read Hansard, that the day care centre in the Confederation Building is not one of those projects. It is an independent, separate project undertaken at the inspiration and under the leadership of Madam Speaker, but not Treasury Board, not this government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Ah, you don't want to take responsibility for that one, do you?

Mr. Kelly: The pilot project which was approved by Treasury Board has had three responses. The departments which expressed interest are Environment Canada, Energy, Mines and Resources, and Employment and Immigration. Of those three, Treasury Board approval has been given to but one, that is, Environment Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the House will now revert to Government Orders.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

• (1800)

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments during which I spoke on this bill before private members' hour I began to make a point as to why I and many other members of the House, particularly those from western Canada, are today feeling the anger we do when we see the potential of Canada being so seriously hurt as a result of the economic and energy policies of this government. Those policies, and particularly the National Energy Program, are literally driving the Canadian energy industry out of the country.

I told you, Sir, that since the National Energy Program was announced, 231 oil drilling rigs have left the province of Alberta and, along with them, 111 service rigs. I mentioned that in the United States drilling activity in 1981 was up 26 per cent over 1980, but that in Canada it was down by the same amount.

Mr. Chénier: Talk about now.

Mr. Roche: During 1982 the decline will be even greater, 33 per cent below the 1980 figure.

Mr. MacLaren: It is down 20 per cent in the United States, and dropping.

Mr. Roche: Oil stays locked up in the ground. An estimated 300,000 barrels a day are locked up. That oil could save Canada $12 million a day. That oil would spell prosperity for the whole country. Instead, we import oil from abroad. We import it from Mexico, Venezuela and Saudi Arabia, and we spend $6 million daily subsidizing the price of that oil. What kind of madness is that? Does the ghost of Kafka walk silent-footed through the bureaucratic corridors into the minds of the policy makers?

When we have Canadian oil left in the ground, why do we subsidize the price of imported foreign oil? We began that subsidy originally so that the consumer in the east would not have to pay higher prices than the consumer in the west. The eastern consumer then, as now, largely used imported oil. Yet today Canadians all over our country are paying more for their gas than the unshielded American consumer who has had to pay world prices ever since those prices started rising. In short, we are being asked to support a wrong-headed policy.

In this bill there is a section on the petroleum compensation charge. It is presently levied at $6.30 a barrel, which translates into 24 cents a gallon at the pump. What we are being asked to do is authorize the government to raise it to double that amount, 48 cents a gallon at the pump, so that foreign producers benefit when our own oil sits in the ground.

That is not all. We are also being asked to authorize a levy of $1.15 per barrel, or four cents a gallon at the pump, so that the government can continue to finance a misguided policy of Canadianization through nationalization, not through the private sector. The present gas price is $2 per gallon. How much higher can the price go? Do Canadians realize that of that $2, $1.35 goes toward taxes? That is a full 67 per cent of the price consumers pay for gasoline. What more clearly demonstrates the suffocating intrusion of government at all levels of our economy than that devastating statistic? I will repeat it; 67 per cent of what the consumer pays for gasoline goes straight to government through taxes.

In 1980 the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) berated the Progressive Conservatives for suggesting an 18 cents a gallon excise tax increase on gasoline, yet in 1981 federal taxes increased by 32 cents. Surely there are some supporters of the government opposite whose self-respect cannot swallow that. Surely they realize that it breeds in people deep political cynicism, and surely hon. members opposite will have to pay a political price for this mismanagement. In short, the people of Canada keep on paying more, not because the oil companies want them to but because the government demands it.

The increase to the consumer which is the result of the National Energy Program and the federal-provincial pricing agreements has been dramatic. That increase has not gone to the oil industry. What the industry faces now is diminished returns. Last year's cash flow declined by 35 per cent, and earnings declined similarly. Now Shell Canada Resources Limited informs us that investment in western Canada will be $2 billion per year less than in the pre-NEP era. This is not the road to the goal of energy self-sufficiency; it is the road to economic disaster.

Recognizing that the oil industry is in trouble, the Alberta government recently announced royalty rollbacks of $5.4 billion over the next five years. In 1982 alone Alberta will forgo $530 million in royalties. It will further grant $505 million in royalty tax credits to small producers and $250 million to well servicing companies. That is a responsive and positive act by the provincial government.

Now we ask, why does the federal government not take corresponding steps to spur the industry, for example, by lowering industry taxes? I am not asking the federal government to line the pockets of oil producers; rather, I am simply asking the government to look at an industry which is truly troubled, upon which the prosperity of my province depends, and because all provinces are intertwined in today's economy, the prosperity of all Canada is being affected.

The money we spend on imported oil is money which leaves the country. The capital which is attracted elsewhere is capital which leaves the country. This cash outflow keeps the dollar low and interest rates high, and high interest rates mean houses which have to be given up when mortgages come up for renewal and businesses which have to close down and go into bankruptcy. In Alberta, business bankruptcies last year were 39 per cent higher than in 1980. They are higher again this year. Unemployment is rising also. It now stands at 6.7 per cent, when a year ago it was 3.5 per cent.

A few days ago the Edmonton Journal reported:

> Alberta's slumping energy industry has cancelled job offers to 27 engineers graduating from the University of Alberta.

Last year 90 per cent of engineering graduates found jobs upon graduation. This year only 50 per cent will be successful.

• (1810)

The Journal commented on the Alberta royalty rollback, and stated:

> What started in 1980 as a federal grab for resource revenue from Alberta through the NEP concluded this week with a federal win. Alberta did not give in to industry by retreating on royalties; it gave in to Marc Lalonde.

That is the kind of statement that is finding growing empathy with Albertans. That is a fact of political life that I find extremely worrisome, for it is this fact that is provoking the spectre of separatism.

In the near decade that I have been a member of the House of Commons, I have warned of rising alienation in the west. On February 26, 1973, I spoke of western resentment at being treated as a hinterland by Ottawa. I spoke of the western desire for "an even break". I spoke of the need for economic justice. I said "Western development must transcend politics."

That is a theme that I have pursued during the years. But politics has apparently triumphed over good sense, for public policies have not recognized the reality of the new west. Western needs have not been met and what is worse, public policies are crippling our development, dashing the legitimate hopes of those who believe in free enterprise and know that free enterprise was the way in which the west was first built.

On December 19, 1980, I warned the House that the flame of separatism was growing in the west. I pleaded for tools for western MPs to fight this threat. We did not get any. Again, on June 8, 1981, I returned to the subject. I urged the government "to review its policies before it is too late." Otherwise, separatism might become a viable political force. I warned, that "a great collision of forces is coming unless a new spirit of accommodation is injected into policies and on-going negotiations."

If hon. members opposite will not listen to me, would they at least listen to one of my constituents, Mr. John Allen, who has written to me. His is one of many, many letters of anguish that I have received. After asking why a government that has practically ruined the oil industry in western Canada should now be allowed to nationalize the same industry, he writes as follows:

> The intelligent choice of remaining one strong nation seems to be irrevocably lost through a mismanaged or maybe cunningly mismanaged federal government that has all regional areas at each other's throat, and who will probably never really trust each other again.
> If I was the only person who thought this way you might say I was a crackpot, a radical, or someone suffering from paranoia, but nearly everyone I talk to who cares about the west or even Canada as one nation is angered and concerned and at a loss to know really where to turn for help, or what to do to help ourselves.

When Liberal members opposite spoke in the House concerning the threat of separatism in Quebec, the federal government took them very seriously. The government responded and gave Quebec MPs the tools to fight separatism. Why will those very Quebec members, who understand all too well the meaning of separatism, not respond to the demand for government policies that will stop the growth of separatism in another, equally precious, region of our country?

I urge members, and the government, to listen when I say that separatism is on the verge of becoming a viable political force in western Canada. The clock has moved to within a few minutes of midnight. I urge members to rise above partisanship and recognize the danger that confronts our nation. There is a separatist government in Quebec and a separatist party is gaining credibility in the west. This is no time for scoring cheap political points. This is no time for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to be accusing western MPs of feeding western separatism. Together, we need to fight that growing force. We need your help. The Canadian dream is threatening to become a nightmare.

How hollow will the Constitution events of the past weekend appear in history if the return of the Constitution to Canada is followed by the corrosive growth of separatism. Energy policies that promote growth, development, jobs and an economic future for everyone are essential. This energy bill penalizes incentive. We must replace it with energy policies that promote incentive. Give us those tools, and western separatism will never have a chance.

I close, Mr. Speaker, by telling you I am not going to give up on Canada. This country is too great. I have too much invested in Canada. My great-grandfather came to this country from Ireland and I am not going to dismiss the heritage that I have received because of problems—problems that come not out of our country but out of the government that is currently administering—and, I say advisedly—mismanaging this great country.

How dare this government continue. We want to achieve the potential that Canada has as we enter the final years of the twentieth century in a new era of technology which could be the instrument to unite and develop this great country.

What we need is a sense of direction, a desire to rebuild, a sense of self-esteem, of our worth as Canadians. We need the tools and the energy which will help us build, not destroy one another.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate today and comment on the National Energy Program. The effects of that program are far-reaching. They extend far beyond any previous government programs of taxation of the consumer and the oil industry as a whole. It is for this reason that Canadians should look closely at the NEP and question the seemingly endless list of taxes this government is adamant about passing on to hard-pressed consumers. From the consumer who fills up his car or uses oil to heat his home, to the small Canadian-owned energy company trying to keep its head above water, the story is the same. The NEP is slowly killing off the industry, slowly but surely strangling it to death.

• (1820)

In the last couple of years the government has driven billions of dollars of investment out of Canada and raised taxes almost beyond the breaking point. Every time the consumer turns around, the price of gas and fuel oil goes up because of an unwarranted increase in federal taxes. Since June, 1980, consumers have been forced to accept increases of 28 cents a gallon, and through the NEP the government intends to slap on a further 52 cents without ever having to justify or explain the increase. In total, consumers will have to pay 80 cents a gallon in federal taxes, which is an incredible price to ask them to pay.

There is no doubt in my mind the taxes outlined in the NEP are completely unwarranted. We have the petroleum compensation charge, the petroleum and gas revenue charge, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the Canadian ownership charge, and the federal excise and sales taxes. My God, Mr. Speaker, every time someone fills up with gas or fuel oil they have to pay these extra taxes, after which there is little left in their pockets. These taxes are bleeding the consumer dry and making it difficult for him to meet his other financial commitments. They simply cannot take much more of this heavy and wholly unnecessary taxation.

We have been told time and time again that Canadian gasoline prices would be kept below world prices. They will not exceed 75 per cent of the world price. However, the present situation speaks for itself. That promise, like many others, has been cast aside. While the international price of oil continues to fall because of the oil glut, Canadian prices continue to rise because of federal tax increases. Anyone who drives across the border will see that the price of gasoline is cheaper there, even when the rate of exchange is taken into consideration. Perhaps the answer to why we have all these taxes is that it is just avarice and greed on the part of government which is trying to extract as much money as possible from over-burdened taxpayers in order to finance some dubious government programs which do not have legitimate priority or should not have been included in government expenditures. I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to two glaring examples. The first is the recent loan to Russia of some $600 million at an interest rate of less than 10 per cent to finance the gas pipeline. The other is the loan of some $47 million at low interest rates to Algeria to build, of all things, a monument. This money could have been better used to alleviate the dire straits and financial difficulties of many of our farmers. Our hard-pressed housing industry could have used some of that money. However, because of a twisted sense of priority, these two groups along with others are to be denied.

I firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that charity begins at home. We should make sure our own house is not wanting before we gallivant across the four corners of the world squandering the taxpayers' money to prop up countries whose ideology is opposed or even hostile to ours.

The National Energy Program is supposed to increase Canadian ownership of the energy industry to the extent of 50 per cent by 1990. We are also promised energy self-sufficiency. Those are worthy goals and hard to disagree with, and have long been supported by our party. However, the NEP has had just the opposite effect. It has done a great deal to force Canadian companies out of Canada, and in so doing push back any hope of self-sufficiency for years to come. In the last 15 months or so some 270 drilling and service rigs left Canada, taking with them the technical expertise which in the 1970s accounted for 70 per cent of our oil and gas discoveries. Many of them will not return to Canada, nor will many of the Canadian entrepreneurs. The jobs they would have created, the secondary spinoffs which are so important to the recovery of our economy, are now being enjoyed by the Americans. Mr. William Mackness of the influential firm of Pitfield, Mackay, Ross estimated that in the first year after introduction of the NEP $17 billion in capital left Canada. With a massive outflow of capital of that kind how is the oil industry supposed to be Canadianized? How is it to survive?

While this is happening Canadians are faced with a very disturbing and unnecessary reliance on uncertain supplies of foreign oil. The government seems to want to leave Alberta oil in the ground to the tune of some 300,000 barrels a day, and to delay exploration for new resources. Again I ask, what has happened to the goal of Canadianization? I believe the answer is quite simple: the oil industry is being taxed to death, just like consumers. In the last year alone the government collected $8 billion in taxes under the NEP. The hardest hit are the Canadian-owned independent oil and gas companies, the companies which are supposed to form the cornerstone of the government's Canadianization program. According to Petroleum Monitoring Agency figures, Canadian-owned companies suffered a 52 per cent drop in income in the first half of 1981. There is no question in my mind that this government is not interested in helping Canadian independent companies grow and flourish in the oil industry. Instead, it seems intent on taxing these companies to death. I ask you, where is the common sense?

I would now like to speak briefly about the petroleum compensation charge. A close look at this part of the bill shows that a program of taxation to pay for foreign oil is an ambiguous plan, to say the least. What we have here is a description of the maximum tax which can be charged to pay for imported oil. At present it is $6.30 a barrel, but the ceiling can be increased whenever the minister wants it to $12 a barrel. The impact at the pump for consumers is another 24 cents a gallon. I do not believe this is what Canadians bargained for or what they want. Again there is no question, in my opinion, that the discretionary power given to the minister is dangerous. Nowhere in the bill is there any provision that ties in with what is charged through the petroleum compensation charge to the quantity of oil that is imported. As it stands, the government has the authority to charge as much as it wants for as long as it wants, and the tax is not tied to the cost and the amount of imported oil.

What the government is doing is demanding a blank cheque signed by the taxpayers of Canada. What nonsense. No individual or businessman would ever do business in this way. To top if off, as of now, the government has more than $1.4 billion in this fund. Yet by this tax the government insists on this form of taxation even with the fund being $1.4 billion in the black.

To me this is greed of the highest order. To make matters even worse, there are no assurances that the moneys raised through the petroleum compensation charge are earmarked necessarily to buy foreign oil. To me this represents fraud of the highest magnitude and is the taking of money from the Canadian taxpayers under false pretenses, and it should not be tolerated.

I strongly protest the authority of the minister to raise taxes at will. What is needed in this bill is a statement of principles, a clearly spelled out set of principles so as to balance out and equate the level of tax collected under the petroleum compensation charge with the amount of oil that is imported. I do not believe that any government purposely goes out and plans to shut down the oil industry and create complex havoc and uncertainty.

Having said that, I find it extremely difficult to equate common sense with the decision taken by this government in this regard. The reason I say this is that the government, despite good advice from various sources from knowledgeable people all across our land has damaged our economy. It refuses to look around to see the devastation it has created.

I believe that Canadians should pay a fair price for energy while the government moves toward energy self-sufficiency. I believe this is an important and worthwhile objective. But I also fervently believe that the government, through the National Energy Program is creating chaos in the industry and is needlessly over-taxing consumers. What is equally alarming is that we are not moving toward self-sufficiency, especially when we are importing more and more oil. Not too long ago, this government defined a fair or reasonable tax on energy as anything that did not exceed an 18-cent tax. Now that definition has changed where we will be paying at least 80-cents in tax on a gallon of gas as well and an 80-cent tax on a gallon of fuel oil.

The government has introduced many taxes, but there is only one taxpayer, the Canadian people. The taxpayer can only pay so much. You cannot get blood out of a stone no matter how hard that stone is squeezed. A tax rebellion in Canada is not impossible. It can happen here.

My advice to this government is to get its head out of the sand and take a good hard look at the real world. Then, we hope, common sense might prevail again.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, every time I speak on an energy bill I cannot help but think about just how differently I see energy from the way the government sees it. When I look at it in terms of the area I represent, I think of jobs, of opportunities, of cash flowing through my community and of the spin-offs into other industries in the area, whereas the government seems to think only of energy and of the energy sector as nothing more than a source of revenue, of capital and of being able somehow to deal with the huge deficit it has built up over the years.

I take particular interest in speaking to Bill C-103 because it is one of the bills that flowed out of the hard work done during the ringing of the bells to break down Bill C-94 into workable and debatable pieces of legislation, legislation which could be looked at and considered in some kind of a reasonable format where we could talk about the various elements of it in some detail instead of having to look at the matter in the omnibus fashion in which it was presented to us a few weeks ago. I have a few objections to this bill which stand out in particular. The first one has to be taxes. This bill is really nothing more than a tax bill, a grab for revenues. It is a grab for revenues at a time when people all across Canada are losing their jobs, their homes, their businesses and anything that would allow them any opportunity to pay taxes. But the government is increasing taxes.

The second area of concern that I have with this bill is that more money is being collected through the petroleum compensation charge than is necessary. The government is taking a greater share of taxes than it really needs.

There is a third area that I do not like about this particular bill and that I do not like about this particular government. A certain trend and approach has been developed by this government in the way it governs. We have seen so much ministerial discretion, and so much done by order in council and so much done behind closed doors. As we study this bill we find that is the format, the approach, the method and technique used in this particular bill.

Looking at the first concern I have, the matter of taxes, we find at the present time the petroleum compensation charge already being levied is around 24 cents a gallon. Bill C-103 will allow the government to almost double that amount, to increase the charge by almost another 24 cents a gallon.

At 24 cents that amount is half what was originally intended in the legislation that was before the House before we started ringing the bells. Already the government has taken the time to pause a little because it knows there will be a little more public scrutiny. The public will have a chance to look at these particular taxes. Therefore, from the first piece of legislation which the government introduced at the time of the bells until now it has cut the taxes in half.

The Canadian ownership charge, the charge that was used to enable Petro-Canada to buy Petrofina, has already been levied on consumers at the rate of about 4 cents a gallon. That amount is also to be increased. But once again it has been cut by roughly half of what was originally brought forward in Bill C-94, the bill which caused the ringing of the bells. This Canadian ownership charge when it was introduced was introduced by the minister with the promise that it would be in effect for about a year and a half only. If we take a good look at Bill C-103, we find that there is no mention of a time limit on the Canadian ownership charge. In fact, all indications are that this particular fund will be increased. It is to become the minister's cookie jar. it will be his source of funds to spend at his own discretion. It will be applied in various circumstances to make purchases, to buy shares, to buy bonds, to buy little oil companies and service stations, and to buy any number of things the minister sees fit to buy. He will have his own little fund to use.

Another tax with which we have been dealing is the oil export charge. It can now be set under the jurisdiction of the bill without the advice of the National Energy Board. Once again it is an example of taxes being set behind closed doors or without the advice of a legitimate board. The National Energy Board will no longer provide advice on this particular charge. The oil export charge and the revenues it brought to the government were promised to be split with the provinces. Producing provinces were to receive one half of those revenues. But when we look at Clause 11 of Bill C-103, we find no mention of that fact or no guarantee and, once again, the terms of the taxes are to be set by order in council.

Let us look at some of the taxes imposed upon petroleum products in the country. There is the petroleum and gas revenue tax which is approximately 12 per cent on all oil and gas production. There is the incremental oil revenue tax which amounts to about $2.50 per barrel this year and will increase next year. There is the federal sales tax on gasoline which is now running at 9 per cent. It is applied the moment a gallon of gasoline leaves the refinery. In addition, there is the excise tax on gasoline of about 1.5 cents per litre. All the way through we see nothing but taxes on taxes on taxes.

In Bill C-103 the government also saw fit to remove parliamentary debate in a large number of areas. Now we will have taxes set by order in council, as I have mentioned, and taxes set behind closed doors, taxes without debate, taxes without discussion by parliamentarians and, therefore, taxes without input from Canadians. There is an exception, that is, the fact that any "major" purchase can be debated in the House of Commons. It sounds good until we start looking into it carefully. Then we discover that the debate is limited to three hours—the minister speaks for 40 minutes, our critic speaks for 40 minutes, and then the critic of the New Democratic Party. What chance will I have as a backbencher? I represent an area which is dramatically affected by energy, but what chance will I have to speak on tax reforms or pieces of legislation which will come before Parliament? It will not be very much. There will not be much opportunity for input. In other words, my constituents will have very little opportunity to have their concerns expressed because we are limited to three hours of debate.

Another item which I find interesting about the bill is that all taxes and charges will be retroactive to October 1980. We find that taxes have already been collected for various charges and levies throughout the bill without legislation. Bill C-103 is the legislation for that but it is a retroactive piece of legislation. If we look at the total federal government tax take, we find that at present it is running about 60 cents per gallon. If we break that down to litres, which everyone is forced to buy in now, it works out to about 13 cents per litre. If we assume that we are working on about 39 cents per litre for gasoline, about 13 cents or roughly one third is being consumed by federal taxes. Approximately one third of the cost at the gasoline pumps is federal taxes.

The government's reason for collecting these taxes is most disturbing. It is motivated by a greed for more revenue in an attempt to cover the deficit which it has allowed to build up over the last decade. It is an attempt to obtain more money to support absurd spending habits, such as loans to Russia, monuments in other parts of the world, and building sewer systems in cities which are sinking. The government is not interested in taking any of this revenue and putting it to work in the country. It is not interested in using it for exploration, the development of the industry, or to create jobs. We know that if one rig is operating it employs approximately 30 people.

A short time ago I spoke in the House on an energy bill. I talked about the number of wells which will be developed in the United States next year. The number is somewhere around 10,000 wells, which will create employment opportunity, and sprinkle capital throughout the economy, locally, regionally and nationally, revenue we will not see in Canada. Instead, the Government of Canada is reaching out and taking taxes. Our consumers are already being taxed to death.

Several comments were made today about the 1980 election promise to keep prices below world levels. In fact, there is an agreement to keep oil prices below 75 or 85 per cent of world price. The difference is really significant when we compare Canada with the United States. United States prices are actually below those of Canada, yet the United States has already gone to the world price. What is the reason for this? Very simply it is taxes. We are not anywhere near 75 per cent of world price per barrel of oil today, yet our prices are already surpassing a number of American cities. For example, in Seattle gas is 13 cents per gallon cheaper than it is in Vancouver. Where are they? They are moving toward the world price and we are trailing far behind. In fact the difference is nothing more than taxes.

Almost daily I receive letters from my constituents referring to the high costs of energy and of heating homes. These costs have escalated rapidly, but if we look at the bill we find that the government has the opportunity to raise the tax per gigajoule of gas by 14 cents from time to time. My constituents are in an area which is dependent upon a large amount of gas to heat their homes. They have already been hit with high taxes, and now they find that from time to time, by order in council, the government can slap on another 14 cents per gigajoule. It is getting to the point where it is difficult for my constituents to drive their motor vehicles. This may not be so significant in Toronto, Vancouver or Montreal because of readily available bus and train services to commute to work, but in an area such as the one I represent people require their vehicles. Since your neighbor is more than two or three miles away in many cases, there is no such thing as a car pool. In my area, a vehicle is a necessity. It is our sole form of transportation for commuting to work or buying supplies. Every small increase in tax which raises the price of fuel dramatically affects people in our part of the country.

Farmers are seriously affected by these taxes because they must fuel to plant their crops and then harvest them. One of the main components of fertilizer which farmers use is none other than natural gas. In fact, farmers need fuel to dry their grain because grain that is not dried brings a much lower price. Fuel is needed wherever you turn, and wherever you turn you must pay federal taxes.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who spoke earlier mentioned the fact that if these taxes on gas and fuel are broken down, the cost to each farmer in western Canada is about $4,000 extra per year. This represents federal taxes which go directly into the federal coffers. My constituents are being taxed to death on something which is a necessity. They are being taxed to almost the same extent as they are for luxuries such as cigarettes and liquor—things we consider to be expendable. As well, we are being taxed at incredibly high rates on goods that are absolutely necessary. I believe that what will occur is that the way of life in these regions will change, and it will not be for the better. It will force farmers to pull in their horns and our business people to cut back.

When I commenced my remarks I mentioned that the government has been collecting more petroleum compensation charges than necessary. I will briefly expand on that subject. Statistics Canada figures indicate that the government has been collecting $5,688 billion in oil import compensation. If we review that figure, we find that the government only paid out $4,265 billion. Those mathematics indicate that there has been more collected than expended by $1,423 billion. If that figure is broken down to a tax per gallon, the result is about 7 cents per gallon too much tax. If that is broken down even further and regarded in terms of total tax collected and tax surplus, it equals almost one dollar in every five dollars that is surplus. That is 20 per cent too much which could have gone back into the hands of our farmers, consumers and senior citizens who must heat their homes, drive their cars and do all those things that require the use of petroleum energy.

Why has this happened? First, it has happened because there has been a decline in demand for oil and its related products in Canada. The reason for this decline is that we have begun to purchase smaller cars and better insulate our homes. All Canadians have started to become energy conservation conscious. We have started to think in terms of how we can all personally save some energy and conserve on gas and oil. The undertaking of those conservation methods have resulted in a decline in demand for petroleum products. Canada presently imports about 400,000 barrels of oil per day. Those tax dollars which have been collected through our import compensation charge have been used to reimburse importers.

The difficulty we are facing now is that while our consumption is declining we are continuing to import the same amount of fuel. The resulting over supply affects my region in Canada very seriously because oil is left in the ground. While it is still under the ground there is no possibility for creating jobs or for obtaining revenue nor can there be any economic spin-offs throughout our region. Instead, we are creating jobs outside of Canada. Taxpayers are unnecessarily paying the same amount for these imports, while money is spent outside of Canada at a time when we are creating no wealth and no opportunity to collect taxes from those people who are working and spending money. We are left with nothing.

I would like to deal for a moment with some of the ministerial discretions which are provided for in the bill. At page 8 of the bill under Clause 18.3 which is being amended, it states that, "The Governor in Council may, by regulation . . . " and it goes on. At page 11, the clause to be amended is clause 23.1. Again, the governor in council is given tremendous powers. It is stated:

> Where no agreement is entered into under Section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the Governor in Council is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the Governor in Council, may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this Part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province.

In other words, it is done by order in council, behind closed doors.

If you look at page 21 of the bill at subclause 4 of clause 33 you will find another example of ministerial discretion. If you read the amendment to Section 65.22 of the bill, once again you see that the minister can increase taxes by order in council, make changes to those taxes and impose regulations.

I am very concerned about these measures because my idea of democracy means that people have a right to make a claim and state their claim through their Members of Parliament. Members of Parliament who represent the various regions of the country have an opportunity to discuss those taxes and vote on them in a democracy. They are supposed to have an opportunity to express their concerns about tax measures. However, that opportunity is taken away throughout this bill because changes can be made secretly in the dark.

I find page 29 of the bill particularly significant. It clearly illustrates the approach the government takes to govern. It is an illustration of the government's priorities and how it would deal with legislation. Subclause 4 provides that when debate does come to the House, it is limited to three hours. As I mentioned, that three hours is virtually useless. Such little time prevents a backbencher like me from getting up and stating my position. If one looks further into subclause 8, one finds that if the House of Commons fails to pass it but the Senate passes it, it is considered to have been passed. That becomes fascinating when one looks at the system which has been set up in this country. We have a Senate which is appointed by a prime minister. Its members are not elected, they are not answerable to anyone and they are not responsible to anyone, but they can vote one way and legislation becomes law.

I suppose that in every cloud there is a bit of a silver lining. I have tried to find one in this particular bill, but I must admit that the only silver lining I can find is that now some of these hon. members opposite, who have been quietly and passively sitting on the government benches, voting for increased taxes on their constituents, will suddenly have to give justification for their action. They will have to go home to their constituents and say, "I voted to increase your taxes by 24 cents a gallon. I increased the cost of your car fuel. I increased the cost of heating your home." Some of their constituents are farmers, and the Liberals know of their difficulties. They will now have to go home and say to them, "I just voted an increase in your taxes which will push up your costs. Your fertilizer costs will go up", and they will have to defend that in their own ridings. That is the only silver lining that I see in this particular cloud.

When I go back to speak to my people in my part of the country, they tell me that they are not happy about these taxes. They are angry. I know that those people over there will go back to their ridings and will have to defend their actions. I am anxious to see them do that. I am anxious to see these people who have been silent for so long having to defend these taxes which are not necessary at this time, these taxes which are exorbitant, these taxes which are hurting the Canadian people. Therefore, I will find it very easy to vote against this particular bill.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-103, an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. The main act which this bill seeks to amend was passed by the House of Commons seven years ago almost to the day, in April of 1975. It had three stated purposes, according to the government. The first was to impose a charge on exports of crude oil and petroleum products in order to discourage such exports from being sold at bargain basement prices and, of course, to raise revenue for Canadian energy goals. The second purpose was to provide compensation for the importation of petroleum. Eastern Canada was then, and it continues to be now, highly reliant on foreign supplied petroleum which is much more expensive than domestically supplied petroleum available in other parts of the country. Thus, the government instituted a means of subsidizing the cost of foreign petroleum so as to standardize prices to the consumer from one part of the country to another. Finally, the act sought to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and in export trade. The government apparently did not want different prices being charged by different producing provinces or companies for the same petroleum products, either within Canada or for export.

Later, in April 1978—and April seems to be a special month for this act—the Petroleum Administration Act was amended to allow certain types of Canadian oil to receive the same compensation as foreign oil. I am referring, in particular, to oil from the Syncrude and Suncor plants in Alberta. The government was authorized to impose a special levy to a maximum of $1 per barrel on all oil produced in Canada or imported into Canada to pay for the subsidy.

Now we have yet another bill to amend the Petroleum Compensation Act. In fact, the government is proposing to overhaul completely the Petroleum Compensation Act. Its title is to be changed to the "Energy Administration Act". Of special concern to myself and to other Progressive Conservative members of Parliament and, I believe, to Canadians right across the country, are two particular provisions devised to authorize the federal government to impose hefty energy taxes on consumers which are already being collected without legal authority. The first one is the petroleum compensation charge. It is currently being levied at $6.30 a barrel, and that charge has increased the price of gasoline at the pump by no less than 24 cents a gallon. Only about $1 per barrel or four cents a gallon of that amount has yet received legal authority. According to experts, every time the price of oil goes up $1 a barrel at the wellhead, we get a corresponding increase at the pump for gasoline of about four cents.

The bill before us seeks to provide the required authority retroactively. The present government is making a practice of this. It announces an energy tax and then immediately collects it. Normally, the tax is effective immediately. But the government does not get around to seeking from Parliament the legal authority for the increase until weeks, months, or, in some cases, years afterward. In effect, Canadians are paying huge energy taxes which the government had no legal authority to impose. As if such a provision were not offensive enough, the government is seeking in this case to give itself a blank cheque to increase the charge even higher to a maximum of $12 a barrel or about 48 cents a gallon at the pump. That is one hefty tax.

The second hefty energy tax contemplated in the bill before us concerns the so-called Canadian ownership charge. It was instituted to raise money from the Canadian consumer for Petro-Canada's purchase of Petro-Fina. In this case, the levy is $1.15 a barrel, or about four cents a gallon at the pump. In a few minutes I hope to have occasion to talk about the purchase by Petro-Canada of Petro-Fina. However, for the moment let me just say that what we have here is a scandalous, ill-disguised tax grab by the Trudeau government at the expense of the average Canadian.

In the last election, the Liberal party promised the electorate, "Vote Liberal and energy prices will come down. Vote Liberal to keep energy prices down". That was the slogan. Since then, the government has imposed a bewildering array of energy taxes, a total of 14 separate ones to date. Fourteen separate energy taxes have been imposed on the Canadian consumer since the Trudeau government was brought back into office in February, 1980. By the end of 1982, gasoline prices are expected to be twice as high as those in effect when the Liberals conspired to defeat the Clark government for proposing to raise gasoline prices by only 18 cents a gallon. The Liberal party and the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons conspired to defeat the Clark government on the shallow and transparent grounds that the Clark government was proposing an 18-cent a gallon increase in the price of gasoline. Yet, by the end of 1985, the price of gasoline will be three times higher than that charged when the Clark government was in office.

At the time of the defeat, the price in my home town of Charlottetown for regular unleaded gasoline was $1.26 a gallon. The date was December, 1979. The price was pretty much the same for the same product in cities of varying size across the country. The price today is $2.25, an increase of 99 cents a gallon. A full 60 cents of the 99-cent increase is directly attributable to federal energy taxes. I would be the first to admit that some of the increase is the result of provincial taxes. Some is the result of the increased return to the industry. There are road taxes, all kinds of things lumped in. The bottom line, though, is that we have had a 99-cent increase in the price of gasoline since the February 1980 election, of which 60 cents is directly attributable to federal energy taxes. Former finance minister John Crosbie's 18 cent a gallon increase looks very good today by comparison.

In the same vein, the price of home heating oil in Charlottetown at the time the Clark government was defeated was 74.2 cents a gallon. Again, that was roughly comparable to the price for the same product in other cities across the country. Since then the Trudeau government has pushed it up to $1.40 a gallon, an increase of 66 cents, again largely because of federal taxes.

This government's shameless imposition of steadily heavier energy taxes after winning an election on a commitment to keep energy prices down has been the greatest betrayal of the Canadian people in the history of the country. The closest parallel was the introduction of wage and price controls by the same Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) within months of winning the 1974 election on an equally categorical commitment against controls.

I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Crosbie budget energy tax on which the Trudeau party defeated the Clark government did not apply to home heating oil, only to gasoline. The Liberal Party in the February 1980 election deliberately led people to believe that somehow the 18-cent a gallon excise tax applied equally to oil and gasoline. It did not. What is more, the Crosbie budget proposed an energy tax credit for low and middle-income consumers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I know it is quite tiresome to have to refer to members or leaders of parties by their riding or their titles. I have now heard the hon. member mention seven or eight times different members by name. This occupant of the Chair thinks we ought to change the rules. However, in the meantime I am here to see that they are observed. I would ask the hon. member to attempt to respect those rules.

Mr. McMillan: I respect your ruling, Sir, and I will defer to your good judgment on this matter. However, I hope you will appreciate that I am referring to a particular budget that is most easily identified as the Crosbie budget as distinct from the MacEachen budget or the Turner budget or the Chrétien budget. We have had many budgets in recent years, and to talk about a 1979 budget or 1981 budget does not shed much light on the subject. With Your Honour's approval and indulgence and for the convenience of exposition, may I be allowed the handle "Crosbie budget", since I am not referring to a specific member of the House in my remarks, only to his budget?

Let me continue my comments about the energy tax credit in the federal budget of December 1979 by saying that it was for low-income and middle-income consumers. The purpose was to cushion the effect of any increase in energy prices due to federal taxes. As part of that program, there was a rebate for fishermen and farmers so that the increase for many Canadians, particularly those who used energy for their day-to-day livelihood, was substantially lower than 18 cents.

The present government has applied its energy taxes on home heating fuel as brutally as it has done on gasoline. It has adamantly refused to introduce any kind of energy tax credit to cushion that blow. I ask myself how these people can live with themselves. In less than six years the Liberals have won two general federal elections on specific commitments they have totally refused to honour.

Such apostasy breeds public contempt not only for the politicians responsible for it but also for the political system itself. If politicians in Canada are held in low regard, and I fear they probably are, the present Prime Minister and his spineless followers are largely responsible. Having connived and manipulated their way back into power, they are now exercising it without any reference to what they said while in opposition or to what they promised in the last election.

Let us not forget what the Liberals actually promised in the last election. I have in my hand an advertisement that appeared in the Charlottetown Guardian on Saturday, February 16, 1980. It appeared in practically every other newspaper in the country, especially the larger ones. The ad was placed two days before voting day. In bold type it says that "Liberals will implement a program to achieve energy security at a fair price for Canadians". I do not know your definition of "fair", Mr. Speaker. I know my definition. I know what any reasonable definition of "fair" is. Let me show how they defined it. I quote from the ad as follows:

> Liberals flatly reject the 18-cent increase in the gasoline excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuels . . . Under a Liberal administration, the increase will be less than half of what the Conservatives plan to impose on Canadians.

The ad was referring to gasoline prices in 1980. The clear inference, though, was that under a re-elected Liberal administration, the public would experience lower gasoline taxes than those proposed by the Crosbie budget for the following four year period.

Time does not permit me to quote at length what the Liberal candidates on Prince Edward Island said in the last election on energy prices. However, I can well remember their pious denunciations of the Progressive Conservative government of the day for its 18-cent a gallon excise tax on gasoline.

Federal members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island of all political stripes have a tradition, which goes back many years, of not attacking one another in Ottawa. We operate on the principle that, because there are so few of us against so many, at least in the context of such a large House numerically, our time would be put to better use if we fought for our tiny province rather than against one another. In that spririt, I intend no attacks on my colleagues on the government side. They are all good fellows. I respect the two Liberal members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island, and I mean them no offence. But I recall the outrage that was expressed by the present member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) when he was a candidate in the last election, in the opposition. He attacked with great excitement the Crosbie budget proposal for an 18-cent a gallon increase in gasoline. I wonder, where is his outrage now that his own party has imposed energy taxes several times greater than the 18-cent tax he savaged with such delight while in opposition. In an interview in the Charlottetown Guardian on 22 January 1980, my own Liberal opponent in Hillsborough, another fine fellow, said that the Crosbie budget would: —have had a drastic effect on senior citizens and people on fixed incomes, and lower income people and the lower middle-income people.

I have no intention of refighting the 1980 election. Once was enough. But, I cannot help but ask myself this: if my opponent were here today, would he be any different from the dozens of Liberal backbenchers in the House of Commons who mindlessly applaud every inane justification for steadily increasing energy taxes from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and other members of the cabinet?

How many of them will refuse now to stand in their places and speak against high energy taxes in the way they did when fighting the last election? How many of them owe their seats to the blatant lies—may I put it more politely, Sir, the deliberate misrepresentations—that were propagated like dandelions in the last election? How many of them would survive an election if it were actually held now on the government energy taxes?

Mr. Lewis: Not one.

Mr. McMillan: I doubt that many of them would be returned, Mr. Speaker.

Canadians have a right to ask what they are getting in return for the burdensome energy taxes imposed on them since the last election. They can be forgiven for having no confidence in this government's capacity to use the revenue wisely. Indeed, it has made a complete hash—I do not think that is an exaggeration, Mr. Speaker—of energy policies in the last decade. No country in the free industrialized world has adjusted more slowly or more ineptly than has Canada to the formation of the OPEC cartel in 1973. We have had a whole decade—just short of that by a year—to adjust to the formation of that cartel based in the Middle East to force up quickly, energy costs without much forewarning. But Canada has dithered and procrastinated, and it has refused to take the steps necessary to adjust to the new reality.

Contrast Canada's performance vis-à-vis the 1973 OPEC cartel formation with that of Japan, for example. Japan has practically no capacity to generate energy. It is 90 per cent dependent on energy supplies from abroad. Yet by steadily adjusting to higher world energy prices from the very beginning—it did not wait a decade, it began immediately—Japan has kept its economy buoyant. Canada, which was self-reliant in oil production as recently as 1974, is now a net importer of oil, largely because of its sluggish response to the OPEC cartel.

As recently as 1974, this country was self-reliant, self-sufficient in oil. Our recent scramble to bring energy prices in line with economic forces throughout the world is causing enormous dislocations, one of the most serious of which is near run-away inflation. At a time when we are wrestling with 12 per cent inflation in Canada, Japan enjoys a rate of only 3.1 per cent.

The Clark government tried to make up for the failure of the Trudeau government to protect our country's interests against the stranglehold of the OPEC cartel between 1973 and 1979. Recognizing as it did that the Canadian government did very little between 1973 when the cartel was formed and 1979 when the Progressive Conservatives took office, the Clark government did what it could to catch up for lost time. The defeat of the Progressive Conservative government, followed by two years of wrangling with Alberta over an energy agreement, further set back Canada's goal of energy self-sufficiency based on a realistic energy price structure.

The government's ill-conceived Canadianization policy threatens to put us out of the running altogether. One of the unfortunate aspects of the debate on Canadianization is that somehow the word itself has become debased. All of us are in favour of Canadianization. All of us are in favour of getting more control over our resources and our energy capacity. None of us revels in the reality that much of our resources are controlled by other countries, principally the United States. So, of course, there is virtually unanimity in this House that we should take certain steps to patriate our energy industry. The question is, how to do that. This government, through its ineptitude, has retarded that process by bringing the industry itself to its knees. The government's ill-conceived Canadianization policy threatens to put us behind, rather than ahead, in patriating our energy industry.

As long as the government insists on buying up existing oil companies at the expense of encouraging new resource exploration and development in Canada, we will continue to fall further and further behind. Too much of our scarce investment capital is being used to buy up existing companies, rather than encouraging companies to go out and explore, develop and create new energy wealth for us and for sale in international markets. I ask, what earthly purpose is served by buying up service stations, as the government did with the Petro-Fina purchase, when that action adds not a drop of oil to domestic supplies? Such stupidity merely places greater demand on scarce investment capital, thereby driving up inflation even higher, through upward pressure on interest rates.

If I may conclude, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-103 will compound Canada's serious energy problems. No wonder the government tried to sneak it through the House in a lump with some 14 other energy-related pieces of legislation in the form of one massive omnibus bill that would have required but one vote. That is what the government did. It took distinct pieces of legislation, important pieces of legislation, rolled them all into one, presented them to the House as an omnibus bill requiring only one vote, rather than as many as 15, in a way that denied the fact that there were distinct principles involved from one piece of legislation to another. So a member of this House was put in the invidious position of having to vote for all of them at once, or vote against all of them, even though he or she might have been in favour of some provisions and against others. That is a denial of the democratic process. That is a denial of parliamentary democracy. Equally offensive is the fact that the government took tax measures and lumped them with non-tax measures so that non-tax measures, which ordinarily would go through the standing committee process, would be whipped through the Committee of the Whole instead. That is the way tax measures are normally handled. By circumventing the standing committee process the government tried to deny the public an opportunity—until we stopped the government—to meet with Members of Parliament, so as to discuss their concerns and make suggestions for changes in the energy legislation. The whole witness process was threatened because of the offensive way the government went about presenting its energy legislation in the form of an omnibus bill.

I for one am proud of the role—

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member completes his speech, I wonder if he would accept a question.

Mr. McMillan: Certainly.

Mr. McRae: In discussing increases in the cost of gasoline and fuel oil across the country is the hon. member aware of the fact that between February 1980 and roughly the summer of 1981 oil prices more than doubled? The oil equalization charge is an equalization program whereby communities or provinces in the east or on the Atlantic coast pay the same price paid by people in the rest of the country. Is the hon. member aware of that, and would he estimate what part that plays in the 99 cent increase in gasoline prices he talks about?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question. I am from the Atlantic region. No doubt that fact has prompted the hon. member who has asked me this question to pose the question. No part of the country has been more disadvantaged by the government's energy policies than my part of the country.

Miss Bégin: Shame.

Mr. McMillan: In the 1980 election campaign we were promised that energy prices would remain low. In December of 1979 the price of regular unleaded gasoline in my city of Charlottetown was $1.26. Today the price for the same product, regular unleaded gasoline, is 99 cents higher. Of that 99 cents, 60 cents is directly attributable to federal energy taxes. The hon. member has the unmitigated gall to suggest that we in the Atlantic region or, for that matter, any Canadian should be humble and should go to the federal government on bended knee to thank it for its beneficence.

Miss Bégin: Yes, you should.

Mr. McMillan: The truth is that our economy has practically been brought to its knees because of increased energy taxes not only on gasoline but also on home heating oil. In the last election campaign, fishermen, farmers and small business people were promised by the Liberal Party that if they voted Liberal the price of energy would come down. We have seen the results. We have seen energy prices in Canada skyrocket, and again that is largely because of energy taxes imposed by this Liberal government on Canadian consumers.

As I said, no part of the country has been more disadvantaged by that policy than the Atlantic provinces because we are highly dependent on oil. We use oil even for the generation of electricity, and every time this government imposes a tax on oil, it reverberates right through the economy. It affects the price of gasoline at the pump, it affects the senior citizen trying to heat his or her home, and it affects businesses, because these added energy costs are reflected in their costs of operation, and those latter costs in turn must be passed on to consumers. It is no wonder inflation has skyrocketed more in the Atlantic region than in any other part of the country.

I am proud of the role my party played in blocking the transparent effort of this government to come to the House and present 14 or 15 pieces of diverse legislation as though they were one and required only one vote. The government attempted to circumvent the standing committee process. It lumped tax measures on to non-tax measures. It tried to sneak unpopular measures on the backs of popular ones. It tried to force Members of Parliament into the invidious position of having to vote for the whole package or against the whole package, even though most hon. members favoured some aspects and did not favour others. I am proud of the role my party played in preventing that steam-rolling of Parliament. Thanks to the Progressive Conservative blockade of the government's steamroller, Parliament now has an opportunity to scrutinize this particular bill before us now. It has an opportunity to review it and all the others which have since been hived off from the omnibus bill. We have an opportunity to look at each bill on its own merits. We have an opportunity to discuss the distinct principles peculiar to each of them and to exercise our right to vote against some while voting in a different way on others. That is a restoration of parliamentary democracy, and it is a lasting and glorious tribute to the leadership of my party that the rights of Parliament were restored.

For my part, I will exercise my right to vote against Bill C-103, and I urge all hon. members to do so as well.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is a very real pleasure for me to speak to the House about Bill C-103 to amend the Petroleum Administration Act, because this is a bill by which the Liberal Party of Canada reaches the pinnacle of deceit as far as the people of Canada are concerned. There may be Canadians out there who felt the Liberal Party reached the pinnacle of deceit in 1976 after campaigning in 1974 on the basis that it would never ever bring in wage and price controls and then bringing in wage and price controls in a complete reversal of its promise and pledge to the people in 1974.

In 1979 and 1980 the Liberals lied their way across Ontario and lied their way across Canada.

Mr. Dingwall: Unparliamentary.

Mr. Gauthier: Are you listening, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: Let us take a look at this bill. It proposes to give to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) the authority to impose taxes of 52 cents per gallon on gasoline and heating oil. That may come as a shock to many people. Of the 52 cents the government proposes to tax the people of Canada it is already imposing a tax of 28 cents a gallon without any parliamentary approval.

There is one good thing about this bill, and I think it should be brought to the attention of the people. The provisions of this bill are not as bad as those originally contained in Bill C-94, which proposed that the minister be given authority to impose taxes on gasoline to the tune of 98 cents per gallon. It was that provision, among others, that caused the Progressive Conservative Party to bring parliament to a halt and demand that Bill C-94 be split into ten different bills.

Mr. Dingwall: A boycott. On strike!

Mr. Lewis: The bill was split into eight different bills despite the very, very strong statements by the government House leader to the effect, "We will not split the bill. We will forge ahead. What is the matter with ten bills wrapped in one? The people are with us." The House knows that the Liberal party, through its House leader, capitulated to democracy. It found that the public of Canada understood, far better than it thought, that the time had come for the Liberal Party to start listening to it.

The tax grab on gasoline made by the federal government totalled 60 cents per gallon as of March this year. Under the Liberal Party the federal government's tax grab on heating oil totalled 40 cents per gallon as of March this year.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no question but that one of the reasons the Liberal Party is forging ahead with forced metrication is that it wants to deal in litres as much as possible and not in gallons because the 18 cents per gallon burns it very hard. It knows that it passed the 18 cents per gallon point long ago.

This bill proposes that the government's tax grab, under the Liberal Party's policy, be higher than the current sky high levels. It seeks to approve retroactively the special compensation charge that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources imposed when he was unable to come to an agreement with the province of Alberta. It is no wonder that the minister was not able to come to any agreement with the province of Alberta. It is hard to figure out how he could ever come to much of an agreement with anybody. It is obvious that he has applied his usual method of confrontation and bulldozing ahead. His lack of reason is evident in the way he negotiates things. That is why he has had such difficulty with the Alsands project, a project which means so very very much to the people of Canada. The Alsands project is not just an Alberta project; it is a Canadian project, one which would put Canadians to work right across the country.

In my riding of Simcoe North, Fahramet Limited, which produces refractor tubes used in refineries, has had to lay off people because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cannot come to an agreement with anybody.

In December 1979 the price of gasoline in Toronto was $1.18 per gallon. By December 1981 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, under the Liberal party's high energy tax policy, managed to get it up to $1.89 per gallon. That is an increase of 71 cents per gallon in two years when the Liberals promised the increase would be less than 18 cents per gallon.

My friend who put gas in the tank and I chatted a little. He had been to Florida for a holiday. He told me that he paid as little as $1.13 per gallon on that trip, and that is the Canadian gallon, Mr. Speaker. Under the great policies of the Liberal party, it has managed to get the price of our gasoline up to $2.00 per gallon.

You will remember that during the last election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals focused on the figure of 18 cents. For a moment I should like the House to focus on the figure 16 cents. In a little over two years the Liberal Party has been responsible for 16 increases in the price of gas. I am not asking you to focus your attention on the kind of increase, Mr. Speaker—we know they amount to 71 cents in two years—but to focus on the number of times the price has been increased. There have been more increases in the price of gasoline under the Liberal Party than there have been budget retreats by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). He is off again, consulting. He has made five retreats since December 13 and we can count the number of changes to be in the thirties.

There is something to be said for the Liberal party and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker—16 increases in a little over two years from a party which said it would never increase the price of gas by 18 cents!

In December 1979 the price of heating oil was 69 cents per gallon in Toronto. Under the Liberal Party, the party which lied its way across Toronto, lied its way across Ontario, lied its way across Canada, the price has gone to $1.22 per gallon, an increase of 53 cents per gallon in the two years since that party promised it would be less than 18 cents per gallon.

In the election campaign the Liberals talked about 18 cents per gallon with great glee. They did not focus on a matter called the refundable energy tax credit. In the budget which the Liberal party criticized and complained about and said would never do, the energy tax credit paid to Canadians to cushion the impact of high prices on low and middle-income families would have been up to $80 for each adult and $30 for each child under 18. The credits would have been refundable so that families who paid little or no federal tax would have received the full benefits. That was for families with an income of $21,380.

The Liberal party, which said it would not tax Canadians 18 cents per gallon, for once may be said to have told the truth—if you consider that it did not stop at 18 cents. I see you are nodding your head, Mr. Speaker. That is actually what happened. They told the truth. In that one instance they did not stop at that 18 cents but went on and on and on. The Progressive Conservative policy, which it laid out truthfully, was to give people an energy tax credit, but the Liberals said "We won't raise the price of gasoline." They never said anything about heating oil, they just went ahead and did it.

I am pleased to take part in this debate for a very good reason, Mr. Speaker. During the 1979-80 campaign my Liberal opponent waxed long and loud throughout Simcoe North with respect to the price of gasoline and the tax on gasoline. He came to my riding from metropolitan Toronto. We did not call him a parachute candidate; he had a hobby farm in the area for several years and used to come there on weekends. We wondered why he did not go back to his riding in Scarborough on the weekends, but all that became very clear when we realized he was elected in 1974 on the Liberal platform of: "We will not put in wage and price controls." I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you had campaigned in 1974 on that platform would you want to go back to your riding on weekends? Obviously not.

His name was Allan Martin. He was very plain about what the Liberal Party was and was not going to do. He put it right on the record. The Liberals will not sock it to the ordinary taxpayer by imposing an 18-cent excise tax on gas, he said. He was right; they did not stop at 18 cents. Two more increases and they will have a total of 18 increases, let alone an 18-cent tax. So Mr. Martin trooped around Simco North saying he was concerned about the effect of this 18-cent excise tax on northern Ontario. He said that area was attempting to promote industrial expansion, revitalize the economy and provide needed jobs. Isn't that heavy? Isn't that something? That Liberal candidate went across Simcoe North promising that they would not increase the price of gasoline by 18 cents. "Not us, we won't stop there", is what he should have said. Well, he is still in the riding, fortunately, although I do not see much of him anymore. I kind of liked passing the time of day with him when I got the chance, and we could talk about the 18 cents. How is the 18 cents going, Allan? Does he feel as strongly about it now as he did then? This is kind of amusing. He had a little symposium after the last budget—can you imagine that—inviting people to spend I think $10 for lunch and a look at the last budget. How could you eat after looking at it? You have seen what it has done to the Minister of Finance; it caused a disappearing act. However, he had a few people there. I am sure he was carried out on the backs of the businessmen, home owners and farmers of Simcoe North to great cheers when he told them what the budget said.

I certainly hope that he will be around come the next election, although I have to say that with some reservations, Mr. Speaker, because we were fortunate enough to have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the riding last night, speaking to the Simcoe North Liberal Association. They rented a bigger phone booth this time. If that candidate can survice the Minister of Agriculture, he may be back. We run a list on this side as to which ministers we want to come into our ridings, and that minister is one of them. The other one is the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), who will be in my riding tomorrow in Penetanguishene. I think he is going to help our cause considerably.

It was not just candidates in individual ridings who tried to play this game with the Canadian people. The Liberal Party, in a questionnaire put out by the Financial Post, said the 18-cent excise tax was unfair, inflationary and would lead to the loss of a significant number of jobs in the Canadian economy. Well, having said that, they jacked up the price of gasoline by 71 cents a gallon and really proved it. They managed to get unemployment to its greatest height since the 1930s. They now have what they call the hidden unemployed; it is not hidden if you cannot put food on the table, but they call it the hidden unemployed. They have proven what 71 cents a gallon will do to Canada's economy.

My party lost that election on that promise, which was just as popular as the 1974 promise not to introduce wage and price controls. That promise interests me because I feel that the Liberal lie of the 1970s was: "We will not introduce wage and price controls". The Liberal lie of the 1980s was: "We will not increase the price of gasoline 18 cents a gallon." The taxes which the Liberal Party has laid on the economy of Canada in the price of gasoline have been inflationary. We have the highest inflation we have had in years. If anyone is looking for new records for this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to break, there is one.

I want to speak now, Mr. Speaker, about this energy legislation in a broad context. What has the Liberal energy policy done for the country? Well, they managed to increase the price of gasoline by 71 cents a gallon. They have singlehandedly been responsible for moving hundreds of oil rigs out of western Canada along with their operating personnel and expertise. That represents jobs, and not just in Alberta. Many members of my party from Ontario and the maritimes have gone to Alberta at the invitation of our western colleagues and we saw what it means to move an oil rig. Members on the other side have no idea what that means. It takes between 20 and 40 trucks of all different shapes and sizes to move one of those rigs. I do not know an awful lot about engineering, but it is quite obvious to me that when you set down 20 to 40 truckloads of steel, you do not pick up the rig and bring it back very easily. That is what the Liberal Party has managed to do for Alberta.

They talk about the megaprojects which are going to solve all their problems. Well, I think they might solve some but, good grief, you have to have one first. These tar sands plants mean as much to Ontario as they do to Alberta. As far as we in the Conservative party are concerned, this is a joint venture because in Ontario—in the ridings represented by many of the people on the other side of the House as well as in my party—there are jobs generated when a tar sands project is put into place. But what do we have? We have excuse after excuse after excuse from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as to why they cannot put one of those things together. I guess maybe it is because the minister cannot make threats. We have partners in those very valuable projects pulling out day in and day out because they cannot operate with someone who does not understand business and does not want everybody to have a job.

That reminds me, of the time when I was in the oil fields looking at a rig. A chap got off one of those trucks with dials and hoses—which my friends from Alberta understand so well, and I do not—came over and said "Doug, how are you?" I did not recognize him, but he introduced himself. He said to me, "You remember when I used to sell printing down the street in Orillia. I have been out here for a year now and I am making more money than I ever did or could make with my training. I am outdoors all the time and I am enjoying the job. It is going very well. I hope you fellows will do everything you can to persuade the Liberals that there is room for jobs for people from all over Canada in Alberta. We want to continue to work." But what are we doing? The Liberals single-handedly shut down the oil fields out west. While they are shutting down oil fields out west, and with that jobs are lost, what are we doing? We are importing foreign oil. What a terrific idea. You shut down what you have and you pay a subsidy to import what somebody else has. What a terrific idea. It reminds me of a story of someone who was losing money on each item that he sold and he tried to make it up on volume. Another terrific idea.

We have solved one problem, Mr. Speaker. Remember when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) had all those customs people at the border checking cars coming into Canada? Well, we were able to lay them off. There is no problem now. All those Americans are not coming into Canada to get gas any more. Americans have had to hire many more people on their side of the border because Canadians now are going to the States to get gas. Why? Because of our terrific energy policy.

I do not agree with what OPEC is doing. But OPEC has an interesting concept which is as old as any economic policy. That concept is that if you have a product which somebody else wants, you sell it. For instance, you are sitting there with nothing but sand and oil. You find that you cannot sell the sand, but you can sell the oil. That is interesting. The Liberal Party's concept is that if you have a product, you legislate it, legislate it and legislate it and hope that by the time all the bureaucrats have the legislation in place, the product will be out a date, as is coal and kerosene, and extinct like the dinosaur. The thinking of the Liberal Party as to how you sell what you have stinks. It is a dinosaur energy policy. All it does is legislate. Did Henry Ford ever legislate anything? Of course not, he built things. What is this Liberal Party doing? It is legislating energy to death. What do we have? What we have is bill after bill after bill on energy. We do not have any industrial strategy, any fisheries strategy, any agricultural strategy or any small business strategy. All we have is energy legislation.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the last thing I want in the world is some bureaucrat trying to figure out where to drill for oil. By the time the bureaucrats get that figured out we will be on to uranium power, solar power or whatever.

I see that I am running out of time, but I know that my friends on the other side are listening to me with great interest and so I do not want to cut my speech short. Therefore, I will recap for the sake of those on the other side. I want to leave the Liberal Party with the same message the people of Canada will give them in the next election.

Mr. Lewis: The price of gasoline rose 28 cents a gallon in 1980. In 1981, the price of gasoline rose 48 cents a gallon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: If the time comes that we will need advice from those on the other side on how to make speeches, they will want to have practised what they preach.

Mr. Kempling: They are mute. They never speak.

Mr. Lewis: I wondered when the Liberals would wake up to the fact that all of Canada knows that they lie.

I want to conclude by saying that we are going to vote against this bill because of the terrible increase in taxes that it proposes, the burden that it puts on the consumers, but basically because the Liberal Party lied to the people of Canada.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak in the debate on Bill C-103 to amend the Petroleum Administration Act, I find it quite extraordinary that the first thing the government wants to do is to change the name of the act. It is now to be the energy administration act.

In view of the problems that were created for the government by its attempted bootlegging of Parliament and of the original energy bill, I am surprised at the effort the government is making now to try to bring in a bill with the name of the Energy Administration Act. I do not know what is wrong with the Petroleum Administration Act. I noted that yesterday the minister in his remarks told us what he wanted this bill to do. He said that, first, it would establish a new ceiling for the petroleum compensation charge on refiners and importers; second, that it would establish a new oil export charge ceiling; third, that it would establish the Canadian ownership special charge; and fourth, that it would establish the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge on marine and aviation fuel used by carriers in international transportation. This bill does not sound as though it were any kind of administration bill or even energy bill. It sounds to me more like a tax bill. The four principles stated at the outset by the minister all have to do with establishing some kind of a charge for the taxpayers of Canada.

I ran across a column today written by Mr. Roy Farran, who writes a column regularly in The Edmonton Journal. In his column of April 16, he starts off with this paragraph:

Politicians would do an enormous favour to the nation if they would quit lying and start telling the truth.

Any chance of Canada's becoming energy self-sufficient before 1990 has been blown long ago.

I know because of the dates—the minister spoke yesterday and Mr. Farran wrote this column last week—that Mr. Farran could not have read the minister's speech before he wrote that column. But in reading his remarks, one might think that he had been referring exactly to what the minister had been saying here in the House. What else did the minister say? The minister continued, with syrup oozing from every pore, as follows:

Our oil and gas pricing schedule, as created in consultation with the provinces, reflects the sense of realism and fairness which characterizes our energy program. Our pricing system has three essential advantages over the regime proposed by the previous Conservative government in 1980. It ensures that prices rise gradually and predictably so that consumers and the Canadian economy in general are given time to adjust. It ensures oil pricing fairness on a national level by providing a blended price to all regions of the country, and it results in a consumer price which has been and will continue to be lower than that paid by people of most other countries.

I think that may be the part to which Mr. Farran was referring in his opening paragraph.

Let us go back and examine some of the minister's phrases. He said, "It ensures that prices rise gradually and predictably." He might have said that prices will rise inexorably, mercilessly or even unnecessarily. I think those adverbs would describe the price rises more accurately than the words of the minister.

He went on to talk about the government's policy of "providing a blended price to all regions of the country". I do not know what he meant by "blended", but we could substitute the words "equally high". The minister could have said that the policy would provide an equally high price to all regions of the country. I do not care from where hon. members opposite come; they will suffer in the same way all across the country.

The minister also said that the price would "continue to be lower than that paid by people of most other countries". That may be true. I do not know what countries the minister was counting or not counting, but he could have said that the price he was proposing would not be lower than the price proposed by the previous Conservative government to which he referred. Certainly it is not lower than the price which now exists in the United States, our neighbour to the south.

What else did the minister say? He went on to talk about the proposals of the Conservative government. I hope he knows them well. He said:

The Conservative government proposed in 1979 to pay one price to producers of oil in Canada except synthetic oil, regardless of the cost of developing and producing different types of oil. Moreover, the price was directly linked to 85 per cent of the international price, whatever the international price might be, thereby directly exposing Canadian consumers to the uncertainties of international oil prices regardless of the consequences to the country's economy.

In other words, he said there was one price to producers of oil whether old or new oil. In the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), I ask his colleagues why that is unusual. The marketplace does not distinguish between old and new. I ask hon. members opposite to consider whether old houses are cheaper than new ones, whether old shares of a company are cheaper than new shares of the same company, whether old labour is cheaper than new labour. The answer is obvious. The marketplace attaches the same price to old as to new. For the minister to suggest that there is something wrong with paying one price does not make sense at all.

He also said that the Conservative price was linked to 85 per cent of the world price. Under this government, Canadian consumers and taxpayers—we are all consumers, we are all taxpayers—are directly linked to 100 per cent of the world price. We are now buying on the world market on long contracts. As a result of this policy and the policy to have the subsidy provided by the federal treasury, we are now in a position of exporting more than $3 billion from Canada in tax payments to foreign oil producers.

I referred to the estimates for the 1981 fiscal year before coming to the chamber this evening. The amount was $3.2 billion, in 1982, it was $5.2 billion. In the estimates for the 1983 fiscal year, the amount was $3 billion. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) earlier referred to the fact that the National Energy Program was a massive tax grab on the part of the government, put upon the poor, long suffering taxpayers of Canada. He was so right. I wonder whether he knew how right he was.

Every year Revenue Canada puts out a very interesting book entitled, "Taxation Statistics". It contains a table summarizing all income tax returns of individuals by income. I wonder whether taxpayers realize that approximately $4 billion, on average over the three years about which I am talking, represents the amount of personal federal income taxes paid by Canadian taxpayers who earned $17,000 or less. I wonder whether Canadian taxpayers realize that there are 11,300,000 people who in the last year for which statistics are available, 1978, had total incomes of $17,000 or less. This represents 78.95 per cent of all individual Canadian taxpayers. I wonder whether these 11,300,000 Canadian taxpayers, or 78.95 per cent of the total, realize that they paid $4 billion in order to subsidize the oil import program of the government.

To put it another way, we often hear, especially from hon. members to my left, about the number of taxpayers who earn over $50,000 and do not pay taxes. There happened to be 118,000 taxpayers that year who earned over $50,000. The tax grab of the government would have taken or did take more than twice the amount of taxes which all 118,000 taxpayers paid in 1978 in the form of federal income taxes.

The minister also said we would have been "exposing Canadian consumers to the uncertainties of international oil prices regardless of the consequences to the country's economy." Let us look at the economy. First, I should like to return to the column of Mr. Farran in the Edmonton Journal, wherein he told us what happened to the Canadian economy. He said:

> What do you think it means when Imperial pulls out a petro-chemical plant near Edmonton, when half the companies withdraw from the third oil sands plant, when Imperial disperses its team at Cold Lake, when Shell sells off subsidiaries, when oil lease sales drop by half?
> Why do you think Alberta energy shares fell from $25 to $10?

I ask the government why it thinks the shares of First Calgary Petroleums, a company which I happen to know, which were selling at $6 a little over a year ago on the Toronto Stock Exchange have sold as low as $1.10 this year? Dozens of other companies have been decimated on the stock exchange.

• (2020)

What does that do to the economy and to investors in Canada? The drop in the value of shares on the Toronto stock exchange since the beginning of the fall-off in stock prices last year is over $50 billion. You can imagine what effect that could have had on the deficit in Canada. Try as the government might, it has not been able to build the deficit up to much over $15 billion in one year. This $50 billion which has been cut from Toronto stock exchange shares would go about half way to retiring the national debt of this country. It is a very sizeable amount.

If all these investors are losing money, somebody must be gaining. But I say that no one gains and, in fact, all Canadians are losing. The taxpayers are losing. What is occurring is that investors are unable to invest money. The provisions in the National Energy Program are so unpalatable that investors are incapable of investing. As a result, explorers in natural resources are unable to explore. A number of my colleagues have mentioned that many oil rigs have left Canada, taking with them all their related jobs to the United States where the drilling climate is much more favourable.

Although I do not have the figures immediately available, Statistics Canada released figures which indicated that the outflow of capital from Canada and the rate of increase in that outflow of capital was astounding. In fact, it is up to $18 billion during the current fiscal year. The reason for this large outflow is that investors who were investing in Canada are no longer doing so and alternatively are taking their money and investing in a better climate, such as that in the United States. In order to make Canada attractive and to ensure that our balance of payments will not completely fall out of bed, the government has forced high interest rates to be paid. It is surely a symptom of the problems faced by the Government and Canada when the rates of Canada Savings Bonds, which have been gilt-edged security for most Canadians on most occasions, have soared to 19½ per cent.

While the government has not been able to resolve its dilemma, and with the 19½ per cent interest rate that has caused the highest sales of Canada Savings Bonds in years—probably decades—there has been a shortage of funds which would have been available for other areas where investment is required. One such area is housing mortgages. People are not able to obtain mortgages because of the large amount of money which has been invested in savings bonds. Why would an investor want to invest in a mortgage at 17 per cent, 18 per cent or 19 per cent when Canada Savings Bonds will give him a liquid return of 19½ per cent?

I thought the minister's remarks yesterday were about as sensible as those he made today. I was listening to the news when the minister was questioned on going into a meeting with the Alberta minister of energy. He said, after being approached by the press for a comment, "I have nothing to say at this time." He then went into the meeting. When the minister emerged from the meeting some time later he was again approached by the reporters. He said, "I have nothing to add to what I have already said." He probably did not have anything to say when he was inside the room either.

I have referred to the long term contracts into which the government induced Canadian companies to enter. As a result of these long term contracts we now have the ridiculous situation where Canadians are paying inflated prices on old contracts. While the government did not want to pay the same price for old oil as it did for new oil, it is alright for us to pay a higher price for old oil on contract while the world price for oil is falling. The situation as it exists now is that spot market oil prices are so attractive Canadian oil—principally Alberta oil, but oil in Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well—is shut-in to the extent of 300,000 barrels a day. It is no surprise, therefore, that the stock prices have been decimated. If the sales revenue of a company is removed how will it be able to cover its fixed costs, particularly its very high borrowing costs in the form of Canadian interest rates?

We know that Canadian taxpayers pay an import charge on oil. A fact which recently came to light is that New Brunswick, for example, can burn subsidized oil to produce electricity which it then exports to the United States with no recovery. Although this bill will impose a certain form of tax on exported energy, I cannot see anything in it about taxing electricity or other forms of energy which is exported after being produced with subsidized imported oil.

We have recently heard about truckers who have modified their vehicles so they can fill their tanks in Canada with subsidized oil, make their runs into the deep south of the United States and return to Canada without having to refill their tanks. This bill proposes to tax aircraft and ships leaving Canada but it makes no mention of trucks.

The transportation fuel compensation recovery charge is designed to stop aircraft in transit from obtaining subsidized fuel. However, an analysis of the bill, as I see it, would indicate that probably it will not be applied to aircraft. It is likely that some international carriers complained so much about that particular measure it was withdrawn. The compensation recovery charge will not apply to energy exported in other forms, such as electricity, as I have already mentioned.

The minister also commented that the opposition continually attacks the government's pricing system on the basis of gasoline prices at the pump. The government's spokesman never bothered to point out to the general public that the Government of Canada does not control retail gasoline prices. That is a very strange claim for a government minister to make in 1982, when his government went to great lengths during the 1980 election campaign to criticize and say what an absolutely terrible proposal was made by the conservatives to increase the cost of gasoline at the pumps by 18 cents a gallon. They said that Canadians should never have to pay that price, and all they had to do was elect a Liberal government in order to have lower prices at the gasoline pump. The minister now claims that the federal government does not control retail gasoline prices. It makes you wonder, Mr. Speaker.

My colleague, the member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) made reference to the emotional remarks of our colleague from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I agree that it is a very emotional issue, for different reasons, for different hon. members. My own emotion is that this is a terrible and a sad program because it is destroying the oil industry in Canada. Not only is it destroying the oil industry in Canada, but the destruction of that industry has led directly to the recession and the high interest rates of today.

We have already seen, through this government's policies, destruction of the work ethic of a whole generation of Canadians, with unemployment insurance payments rising to well over $4 billion. We do not know where on earth this will end during the current and future fiscal years.

We might ask, "What next", from a government which likes to attack these principles. As a chartered accountant, I look at what the government is doing to established accounting principles. It is not making a new attack on accounting principles. We have already heard this government state that a loss is not a loss. It started that attack ten years ago when it decided to pass a policy which meant that if one invested in a business such as a factory, and if there were sales revenues, one could deduct one's capital cost allowance on the factory from other income or any income. However, this government decided back in 1971 or 1972 that a loss created by capital cost allowance in housing was not deductible from other income like other losses. The result was predictable to everyone except the government opposite. The supply of investment in housing dried up. What happened? We do not have any supply of rental housing, and therefore we do not have any vacancy to speak of in rental housing now we have high rental rates, just because the government tried to buck the long established principles, in this case, accounting principles.

This is the same government that stated that an expense is not an expense. That was stated in the most recent November 12 budget in relation to interest payment. That was stated in many former budgets, but until very recently, concerning tax legislation, the government said that a spouse's wage paid by an unincorporated business was not an expense. We have accounting principles which state that if one pays out money to earn income, that is an expense. However, that is a principle which does not bother this government opposite.

Of course, the effect of the provision in the November 12 budget that interest expenses paid are not deductible from other income will almost totally cut off investment in small Canadian enterprises. How can anyone afford to borrow money to invest in a small Canadian enterprise? Let us not forget that small Canadian enterprises provide something like two-thirds of the jobs in Canada. How will anyone be able to do that when the interest paid on one's borrowings is not a deductible expense, by decree of the dictator over there?

That is the same group opposite which says that a loss is not a loss when referring to the profit or loss on sale of personal assets. If one sells a collection, or something of particular value, and makes a capital gain—a profit—that is taxable. However, if one has a loss on the very same asset, because it happens to be a personal asset, that loss is not a loss and one cannot deduct it, regardless of how it arose or whether one has any other income. The same government says that a loss is not a loss if a farmer, who is trying to build up a farm, happens to have another occupation, because then of course he is not a full-time farmer and is deemed to be a hobby farmer. Those are principles that we can afford to change.

The same government opposite, when doing its own accounts, has changed the accounting principles to say that a liability is not a liability. I see that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is here, and he knows very well that his own department states that a liability is not a liability; not when it is arising out of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and that liability is not disclosed in the financial statements of Canada.

I suppose these attacks on principle could be expected. But now, under the National Energy Program, this government has a new attack and has decided to adopt a new principle. It has decided that accountants do not know how to account. That change in principle arises out of the petroleum incentives program and the petroleum and gas revenue tax, or the PGRT, as it is known.

I have in my hand an accounting guideline dated February, 1982. It is an accounting guideline produced by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants which most people recognize as the accounting authority in this country. I cannot read the whole guideline, but the highlighted paragraphs state:

> The Petroleum Incentives are expenditure oriented and therefore should be taken into income in the same manner as the exploration and development expenditures that they support.

Further on, in relation to the PGRT, it states:

> The Accounting Research Steering Committee believes that, because the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax is a tax on revenue, it should be charged to income at the same time as the related petroleum and gas revenue is taken into income. It should be shown as a reduction of gross revenue or an operating expense or part of government levies.

I do not expect all hon. members of the House to understand what the Institute of Chartered Accountants is stating in that bulletin, but the point is that members of the profession who do the accounting for the oil industry to know what that means and they do know how it should be handled. However, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not like that idea because it would not treat those items as he wanted. As a result, he has written to the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants to say that it had better change its accounting principles and advice or he will legislate it into doing so. I have heard that from the profession, but I would like to read a little clipping from the Financial Post of April 3, 1982, which states:

> The accounting profession may have won one battle with Ottawa, but lost the war. It's understood that a letter has gone to the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants saying the government won't prescribe Petroleum Incentives Program accounting rules, as expected, but it may reconsider the CICA's power to set accounting standards for federally incorporated companies.

Therefore, what the government is telling the accounting profession is that it does not like its principles, and if the accounting profession does not change its principles, then the government will change them. I suppose, with all the changes the government has already made to principles, which I have reiterated, we should not be surprised, nor should it surprise us, I suggest, when we look at this government's performance in past election campaigns. Some of my colleagues have referred to the 1974 campaign as a blatant example. The campaign promises of no wage and price controls in 1974 translated into wage and price controls in 1975. In 1980, the lower gasoline prices promised by the then Liberal opposition translated, for the poor, gullible consuming taxpayer, into much, much higher gasoline prices.

If we analyse the increases resulting from the petroleum compensation charge alone, which have meant price increases at the pump of 24 cents per gallon, added to the Canadian ownership charge used to pay for the purchase of Petro-Canada, which comes to four cents a gallon, we find there has been an increase of 28 cents a gallon—from those two taxes alone. This particular bill is proposing that the maximum petroleum compensation charge could amount to another 24 cents a gallon, which would bring us to 52 cents a gallon as a result of only two or three taxes.

My colleague from Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) told us of the number of tax increases there have been. This is really quite startling. When we have a government led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has just put his personal view on a new Constitution of Canada ahead of all government business, I do not see how these aberrations I am talking about can be surprising.

When the Prime Minister talked during an election campaign about constitutional reform he lost a lot of votes. I refer to 1972 when the Liberal Party lost its majority. In fact, it only retained its government position with a scant two seats. That was because it was talking about constitutional reform, and people were not very much interested in it. In 1979 when he again climbed on the constitutional horse he lost his government position. When he did not talk about constitutional reform in 1974 or 1980, he won. Then he brought in his ideas on constitutional reform

After the constitutional celebrations last weekend someone asked, wasn't it wonderful that we now have our new Constitution, and are we not a lot better off? I asked the questioner whether he was better off or whether I am better off. We now have a limited number of rights because the Charter of Rights limits rights. When we did not have a Charter of Rights we did not have limited rights. We now have things missing, such as the right to own property.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Rather than address his remarks to the Constitution, which has been passed, I would ask the hon. member to address his remarks to the bill.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I have been addressing my remarks to the bill for 35 minutes. I was using this illustration to show the lack of principle displayed by the government. I will carry on. I am coming to the end of my remarks in any event. I know that the constitutional debate is over, but the National Energy Program debate goes on. I hope that my reference to other actions of the government will not disrupt the Chair again.

What is clear from all of the examples I have given about principles and the Constitution is that the Prime Minister has lost touch with the views, wishes, desires and aspirations of the people of Canada. He has talked about retiring. I do not think he will, but I wish he would, and take his government with him. If he did that, we could attempt to get Canada working again. We cannot do that under the policies of the present government and a program like the current National Energy Program. If we got rid of this government we would have a chance to restore the housing industry and the oil industry. We could stop paying out billions of dollars, and it will be tens of billions before this is over, to foreign oil producers. The government says it is reducing the price for Canadian consumers. They assume Canadian consumers are not Canadian taxpayers. You can fool all of the people some of the time, but this is ridiculous. The $3 billion comes out of the pocket of the consumer of this country and goes out of this country, to the detriment of our international standing and our economy. If it could do that, we could start giving Canadians a break instead of breaking Canadians.

The policies I have been referring to are very hard on all Canadians.

I referred to the decline in the stock market. Stock prices are the way they are because values have disappeared. These companies which have been trying to do something in Canada are stuck with an enormous debt load and enormous interest rates. These are some problems we have to get resolve before we will see any changes in the economy and in the present recession; in fact it may be the present depression.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence of a very distinguished visitor in our gallery, namely, the Hon. Mr. Griffin, Attorney General of South Australia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the House leaders who, in reaching the agreement to debate legislation on the energy question, recognized my need to speak on this matter. I also want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the constitutional debate is not over. It has hardly begun. This legislation is going to accelerate action in that area more than you think, so I intend to touch on it this evening.

May I say that during the constitutional debate I always spoke as a Canadian. On Bill C-103, I am going to speak as an Albertan and a western Canadian. I have no other choice if I am going to be true to the electoral base that has elected me over the last 14 years. I will speak generally rather than specifically to the principles and the application of this bill, as I perceive them to be.

The intent of the energy taxation measures within this bill is to economically weaken Alberta, if not the entire west. The energy agreement signed between Alberta and Ottawa in September last is a partial betrayal of the great vision of the west and its growth. The intent of this energy taxation bill, which results from this agreement, is to shift massive amounts of money from provincially-owned resources to the federal coffers, and second, to indirectly impose federal regulatory controls over provincially-owned resources, regardless of Sections 50 and 51 of the new Constitution.

The September 1 agreement, forced on Alberta, in my opinion, is good for the federal government and central Canada, but devastating in the short term for a once healthy western gas and oil industry and, correspondingly, the western provinces. It is an underhanded blow to the evolution and build-up of major financial institutions located and controlled in the west.

In my estimation, the federal energy taxation policies in this bill will skin off the top to Ottawa in excess of $1 trillion during the lifetime of Alberta's conventional oil and gas resources. This taxation is nothing less than a disguised royalty. When applied to heavy oils and oil sands, this skim-off will be many trillions of dollars over the next hundred or two hundred years.

The September, 1981, agreement is for a period of five years. It must then be terminated and renegotiated. If the agreement is extended and the tax is increased, the west will not grow as a California or a Texas in Canada, as some of us have envisioned. It will grow and mature as the institutions of central Canada dictate that it should. This is not acceptable to most westerners. The concept of equalization which is now embedded in the Constitution is a great concept, and I accept it. But over-equalization is bondage, both for the giver and the receiver, for it is better that people and capital flow together and accumulate to where there is opportunity in this vast nation. Reverse flows of people and capital in any nation, large or small, is counter-productive. That is what will happen with this legislation.

Last year, on June 20, 1981, the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) rode home on the same airplane with me. We got into a spat over "What does Alberta want"? I wrote my views on the matter, and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody responded, and both articles appeared in the Edmonton Journal. Let me state briefly what I said in my article. I said:

> 'What does Alberta want? Well, Alberta wants what all of western Canada wants—equity, leverage, some real political clout in Ottawa, economic interdependence through economic partnership. It wants to be a dynamic growing part of Canada. Some 70 per cent of Canada's land mass lies west and north of the western Ontario border. This vast area is inhabitated by approximately seven million people. Its wealth is immense. It contains vast areas of good productive land, enormous fresh water, mineral, forest and energy resources. The beauty of the landscape is unsurpassed. But this vast area is represented in Ottawa by 79 MPs out of a total of 282.

Seventy-seven from the four provinces and two from the north.

> Its political clout in Ottawa is very minimal so it must depend largely on provincial governments for its leverage at the centre. Western Canada wants a fair deal on freight rates, resources, and representation in the national institutions.
> As the political clout at the centre is minimal, western Canada then must use the clout of the Constitution itself—the clout of owning its vast resources. That is why ownership of resources and pricing of energy resources in particular is so absolutely vital to western Canada and Alberta.
> In Alberta, we are getting an influx of 80,000 people per year and this is rising quickly.

Not any more, because of the collapse of the oil industry and the mega projects.

> Alberta must build 40,000 housing units per year requiring $3.5 billion of annual capital just to house this influx. We are building a vast and complicated infrastructure, reviving old towns, building new towns, highways, bridges, airports, cities, etc. The capital required is enormous—of the order of $5 to $6 billion annually.
> This vast infrastructure is being built as we convert the Alberta society from supplying conventional oil to an infinitely more complex one, supplying heavy oils, oil sands oil, gas petrochemicals and wood and pulp materials. This supply of resources is primarily for central Canada. We can build this costly infrastructure with money recirculated from Bay Street and even Wall Street, or else we can charge enough for our oil and gas to generate a capital pool which then can be used to finance this vast infrastructure.
> That's what Alberta wants. That's what Alberta is doing. Financing infrastructure, house mortgages,—

Do members in the House know that $5 billion or $6 billion of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is invested in mortgages in Alberta?

—hospitals, complex educational institutions, research facilities, etc., with money from its own capital pool generated from its own non-renewable resources.

And why shouldn't Alberta do it? Should it mortgage its soul to the central Canadian money barons while building a superstructure to house Canadians moving to Alberta who are engaged in mega buck energy projects to feed all Canada? No, a thousand times no, the Alberta government would be accused of treason if it did not respond to the challenge. But it is not all roses—Alberta is leading the nation in rape, divorce, child abuse, alcohol and drug abuse, domestic violence, suicide, neglect and veneral disease.

Furthermore, in building these vast mega buck complexes like Syncrude, we place a severe strain, through accelerated inflation, on Alberta's conventional industries such as agriculture. Significant amounts of generated capital from oil resources must be used to effectively cope with these problems and permit other industries like agriculture to cope with the capital shortage, high interests rates, competition for services imposed on them by the mega buck projects.'

That was in June, 1981. Then the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody responded to me. What has happened since I wrote that article? Well, the Ottawa-Alberta energy agreement was signed on September 1, 1981. Then the Cold Lake heavy oil project died. The Judy Creek tertiary oil recovery project also died. Then the conventional oil industry went into sad retreat because of excessive government taxation and excessive royalties. Now the Alsands project has died and only awaits burial. I guarantee that there is no way of saving the Alsands project, because at today's rate of financing $13.5 billion, you would need $40 per barrel just to pay the interest rate on that money. It can only be financed by government financing. I do not know where the federal government is going to find $7 billion or $8 billion to finance Alsands. I do not see the Alberta government doing it. It needs every billion dollars it has to deal with its own conventional oil industry. If Alsands is to be saved, the federal government had better think of where it is going to find $7 billion or $8 billion to save Alsands. This is a sad retreat on all fronts effectively, affecting literally all aspects of the Canadian economy, increasing unemployment and deepening the recession. I say it is economic madness. Mr. Speaker, the federal government's formula for forced redistribution of the wealth of the nation has interfered massively with the Canadian process of wealth production in Canada.

We will be reaching something like a peak of all three levels of government taking 45 per cent of the gross national product this year. That is just too high. This energy agreement, manoeuvred and spawned between a single province and the federal government, sets in motion a new process for federal-provincial co-operation and accord. This is a dangerous precedent. Energy is vital to all of the nation, in every province; and the final agreement should have been ratified simultaneously by all provinces. One can ask why. Mr. Speaker, it is because every provincial government uses oil products, such as gasoline, as a massive source of taxation, as the minister indicated in the last few days. As we know, in Quebec alone the taxation on a gallon of gasoline is some 72 cents. Every government in Canada feeds massively on this industry in terms of taxation. This agreement and the energy program of the federal government has spawned a new movement of dissent and anger in the west. It is real and gathering momentum, and at times it is scary. There are other directions and moves which are fomenting at this time, and it is appropriate to ask what the west wants. What does it want? It wants unity without bondage, justice without bias and opportunity without begging. The NEP and the energy security legislation has hurt the pride, enthusiasm and optimism of the west. The west wants constitutional protection against the repetition of this type of federal government policy and increasingly will be asking for it. The energy agreement will increase western tensions and demands, and I say again constitutional changes will be demanded, as they are being demanded now.

The Constitution has been patriated. That was a magnificent accomplishment. The fundamental rights of Canadians are entrenched. That is a remarkable accomplishment. A formula for constitutional amendment is entrenched. In my estimation it is a formula which will centralize powers even more. With the patriation of the Constitution the vision of a new nation is before us all, and we can build a nation of equality, diversity and regional balance. If we do not, then the very constitutional weapons and powers we have patriated will move this nation toward regional tension and instability.

The National Energy Program has impacted on Canada at a most inopportune time because the next several years will be a difficult period of entrenching constitutional language rights and fundamental rights and freedoms.

The political perspectives and institutional structures within Canada will, and must, change and adopt increasing regional identification.

I just want to repeat very briefly what I said on March 10, 1980, while speaking on the constitutional resolution in terms of regional representation, and particularly with respect to growth in relation to resources. I said:

This nation, Canada, will increasingly evolve, and its interdependence will increasingly grow as a co-operative quasi economic and social federation of five natural regions.

Co-operative federalism is not dead. It needs revival and renewal.

Within these regions, provinces shall co-operate and compete, shall integrate transportation and energy and other systems and shall evolve somewhat different and unique social and cultural systems. And over all, all these regions shall form the umbrella of a reorganized national Parliament.

The relationship of the national umbrella and the regional well-being, aspirations and growth will be dynamic, changing and challenging. This, then, is, and will continue to be, the essence of Canada.

Constitutional change and evolution will in the future proceed under a new format different from that prevalent over the last 115 years. Patriation itself will not be bartered and used as ransom for acceptance of a package, including the division of powers, as was done in the past. Rather, constitutional reform will henceforth be identified more with single-issue campaigns on issues such as energy. At the most two or three issues will be considered at any one time, and these limited issue campaigns will take on regional colouration and perspective and will give rise to issue-oriented political movements and parties.

Yes, it will be an area of regional parties and regional politics imposed on the national scene with considerable fervour and force. In fact, I might say that Quebec and its discipline of political power and influence through almost total allegiance to a single party has established a precedent which will be followed in other regions of Canada. This format, enhanced by the National Energy Program, will see the Liberal Party move more than ever toward becoming a regional party. It does not have a role to play in the west so long as this energy legislation is in place. And the west is spawning a new regional party by drawing together a coalition of many political perspectives angered by the National Energy Program. It is and will continue to be increasingly moulded through dissatisfaction, anger, disillusionment and frustration as the ambitions of the west are thwarted, its desires tempered and its dynamics stifled by central Canadian government perspectives.

We need new national policies, new accords and revised political institutions at the centre. Unity will be strained as the west demands constitutional changes to influence policy at the centre, particularly policies such as the energy policy we are dealing with today. The west will not stand to be throttled again as it was by the National Energy Program. It will demand constitutional change to deal with matters like this.

First of all, it will surely demand a major Senate structural reform to give the west no less than 40 per cent representation in a much more meaningful and active Senate. It will demand changes to permit equitable, effective and meaningful representation by population in the House of Commons. It will demand a better regionally-balanced Supreme Court with some provincial appointments and, perhaps, sitting regionally at times. It will demand a restructured Bank of Canada with more regional policy input, and the gradual entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution through a provincial opting in-clause will be demanded. Much greater clarity of limitation of federal taxation of provincial resources while in transit provincially, interprovincially or internationally, as energy resources are, will be demanded.

I will say something else: there will begin to be a demand for a constitutional limitation of federal government taxation in each province, limited to something below 20 per cent of the gross annual provincial product in each or any province. Western Canada will be demanding more rapid evolution, sector by sector, of a free trade area with the United States, as was strongly recommended by the Senate standing committee chaired by Senator George van Roggen. Of course, we need to trade more north and south because of the vastness of this nation. No single federal policy direction has exercised and angered the west more in relation to future demands for constitutional limitations on the powers of the federal government than the National Energy Program and related legislation.

In conclusion, I will say that I do not support this energy taxation legislation which has caused so much division in my part of this nation. I was very proud to be a member of this House during a most productive period leading up to the patriation of the Constitution. I think we were all proud to be members of the House during that period. But I am not proud to be a member of the House that brought forth this type of legislation which so affects a massive industry in which one out of every four employed Albertans works, directly or indirectly. This industry has been hit very hard by this legislation.

I should like to end on a less serious note, Mr. Speaker. The government's energy policy and economic direction reminds me of a little poem by an unknown author. It makes me think of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), when they get up to answer questions in the House. It is very short and it goes like this:

There was a dashound once so long
He hadn't any notion
How long it took to notify
His tail of his emotion;
And so it happened while his eyes
Were filled with tears and sadness
His little tail kept wagging on Because of previous gladness.

So much of the federal government's economic policy relates to happier years. A very difficult time is ahead of us. The problem of the economy has to be solved by some of the most brilliant minds of the nation. It is time that the government started to look seriously at the problem of turning the economy of the country around.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, we are in a recession that should never have happened, and it looks as though it will last longer than any recession has since the last war. It is also going to hurt more than any recession since the last war. The blame for this can be laid on federal measures which have followed, one after the other, but the National Energy Program is the straw that broke the proverbial camel's back. It is the way that the National Energy Program has been handled, rather than the down slope of the business cycle, that is to blame for this disastrous recession. The deterrents of the economies of other countries and the soaring interest rates should have been offset by the provisions of a better rate of return on the production of gas and oil and would have helped employment and increased the national income.

Practically gove is the increasing development and investment in the search for these resources, thanks to the National Energy Program, with decreases in 1981 of up to 40 per cent, and the same this year. This development and investment has now gone outside Canada, except where the government has taken up the slack.

Surely it must be realized that the grasping and clutching hands of government, which are increasingly taking their pick of the private businesses, are repeating the actions of Italy in the 1920s and 1930s, action which in Canada has resulted in decline in growth of the economy and, even more, is heading our country into a corporate state.

The Canadian airlines are hurting because of the transportation fuel export recovery charge which used to be levied on all international airline traffic. Now, because of a United States challenge, these charges have been dropped. Also, the government has agreed to refund to all international airlines the total charges collected over the last year. However, the government will not refund this charge to Canadian carriers despite the fact that this charge was originally conceived to place the Canadian carriers on an equal footing with their international counterparts.

Surely it must be recognized that the government has violated every single promise that was made in this regard during the 1980 election campaign. Where now can you see the cheap gas and heating oil for Canadians that it promised during that campaign? United States citizens are paying world prices for gasoline and heating oil and they know they are paying world prices. But in Canada we pay more than they do in the United States! Can the government explain this? Certainly not by quoting the price of crude oil. This does not go into our furnaces nor into our automobiles.

The government, since October 1980, in the guise of nationalism, started taking over the Canadian petroleum industry, supposedly so that Canadians could control and benefit from the exploitation of Canadian resources. This, however, was only because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues want government ownership and thereby have given themselves a blank cheque to spend as much as $50 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money. That translates to upwards of $2,000 for every man, woman and child in the country.

What should have been done instead was to provide better incentives for companies and individuals in Canada to acquire control of foreign-owned companies or even provide more effective tax laws and industry regulations. Surely, if investment had been free to flow to where it could obtain the maximum return, the benefits to all parts of the country would have been greater than the costs since incurred.

It is certainly unfortunate that the government perceived nationalism as a force to be harnessed to political advantage. One wonders whether the government recognizes all the implications of its insistence that market forces can be subordinated to political direction.

Canada's interest rates had stopped well short of the American highs during the early run up, yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) blames high American interest rates for Canada's recession. Can he truly believe this? The National Energy Program diverted foreign investment away from Canada and domestic investment out of Canada. The budget of 1981, designed to close tax loopholes, following on the heels of the National Energy Program in 1980, strengthened the government's control over the uses to which investment would be put, that is, whatever investment remained after most had fled the country because of the National Energy Program.

The attitude of the government is that all the world is wrong not to help it in its royal right to pursue the corporate state.

The recovery of the United States from its recession used to be the springboard for Canada's recovery from its own recession. Canada's resources would be purchased by the United States—our best market, incidentally—and this would mean re-employment in forest and mining industries. But more than this is needed. High infusions of new capital are needed, but from where will it come? Certainly not from Canadian corporations; they have already invested in the United States. Those that have not invested in the United States are victims of inflation and taxes. They have no funds to invest, anywhere.

Federal intervention in the economy has brought on the recession and now, because of the state of the economy, further intervention by the government is being claimed as justified. It is a vicious circle.

The present problem is the shutdown of the Alsands project. It means the lay-off of thousands of Canadian workers; the exodus of half of the country's petroleum drilling industry south of our borders and, the bankruptcy of dozens of companies. As a consequence, $17 billion of capital has fled the country and 300,000 barrels of Canadian production per day has been shut in.

The energy program was concocted by a small group of theorists who believe state control is more important than energy production and who found a minister who shared both their philosophic bias and their profound ignorance of the way the energy industry works.

It must be realized that the tightly regulated petroleum marketing system has resulted in the federal government's subsidizing the importation of a very large volume of foreign crude oil while equivalent volumes are available but are not being produced in western Canada. This is a heavy cost to the public because the subsidies being paid go out of the country to help a foreign economy. If that money had been invested in Alsands, it would flow into the Canadian economy. Surely the government knows this could be changed to domestic production, even though it would involve drastic changes in the present regulations. By this action, which the government seems reluctant to take, money would be available for much needed job creation, which money the government claims it does not now have.

Last September, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said the energy agreement would:

—provide significant stimulus for new tar sands projects.

Then his department said:

—to ensure that new megaprojects go ahead in the oilsands . . . the agreement provides for generous prices on future oil discoveries—

Obviously, to quote an Edmonton columnist, the minister was totally wrong. Investors need income from present production or other tax incentives to undertake this enormous but essential project.

Mr. Irwin: You want the oil companies to have more tax incentives.

Mr. Fretz: Ottawa controls price and the larger part of corporate taxation. Alsands will probably die unless Ottawa allows corporations to deduct investments in Alsands from other income and gives some reasonable assurance on price. The minister should meet his national responsibility by saving Alsands. He should follow the example of Peter Lougheed. Last September's energy agreement between Edmonton and Ottawa was fatally flawed, and now Alberta is paying to fix it. Simply put, and I quote the Edmonton Journal:

> Last fall's agreement crushed Alberta's energy industry by taxing it to death.

A recent softening in world prices does not explain the problem. Canada is still raising energy prices toward world levels. No, the disaster was a fundamental miscalculations on taxes.

So Alberta has come to the rescue of our conventional oil and gas industry as it did in 1974 when Ottawa first grabbed successfully for a larger energy share. Now what? That question is for the minister. He has taken his pound of flesh, will he now give the needed blood transfusion to save unconventional oil, the Alsands project? Dwight D. Eisenhower said:

> When shallow critics denounce the profit motive inherent in our system of private enterprise, they ignore the fact that it is an economic support of every human right we possess and without it, all rights would soon disappear.

I want to refer to four parts of that quote, the first of which is the profit motive. This government believes that it should tax industry to death. The second is private enterprise, and this government believes in socialist enterprises. The third is economic support, and Canadians have had the props knocked out from under them by this government. The fourth is that all rights would soon disappear. Mr. Eisenhower was indeed a prophet.

In Bill C-103 the government is trying to catch and make legal what is illegal. This time it introduced a notice of ways and means, and so suddenly something which was not a tax is now defined as a tax. The Canadian ownership charge is another little sneaky tax which amounts to 4 cents per gallon or $800 million a year. It is being used to pay for the purchase of Petrofina, a company the shares of which were trading at about $40 until some people who were lucky, or knew somebody, bid them up to about $80. Then along came Petro-Can to pay $120 per share. I would like to know who those people were who bid the shares up from $40 to $80. In the early summer of 1980 they were worth $40, and a few other oil companies were trading around that price, but now they are around $20. We can say, therefore, that had Petro-Can not bought Petrofina for $120 per share, one could probably buy a share today for about $20 or $25. The government paid about four or five times what the market shows the company is really worth.

Mr. Taylor: With the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Fretz: That is right, but it is not declared in the Blue Books and Estimates in a way which might alert the public to what is happening so that they may make a judgment. The government does not want people looking at the record, it does not want spending to go up because it wants to claim that it is holding expenditures down. So this sharp Canadian ownership charge is created in a sharp, sneaky account, outside the regular government accounts, and the money pours in. That means the minister or his appointee at Petro-Can can have $800 million per year to play with and buy more companies.

All we know is that every time we fill our tank at the pump, four cents a gallon goes into a pot for the minister and his cronies to play with. Apparently we do not have the right to know. We are only Members of Parliament, elected by the people of Canada, and that does not give us any right to ask questions about how that money is being spent or should be spent.

We also have the petroleum compensation payments, the spending part of the petroleum compensation charge, amounting to 24 cents a gallon. That money is being used to subsidize oil imported from Mexico, Venezuela and Saudi Arabia. At the same time, non-subsidized oil produced by Canadians is shut in to the extent of 300,000 barrels a day. We subsidize Pemex and Aramco while Canadian producers—western Canadians, I admit, but Canadian producers—are closed out. It is costing one company, Oakwood Petroleums, which is 100 per cent Canadian owned, a million dollars a month.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that our party is going to vote against this bill.

Mr. Dingwall: You are kidding.

Mr. Fretz: I want to leave you with a quote from Andrew Carnegie, a great industrialist and philanthropist, who said:

> —individualism, private property, the law of accumulation of wealth, and the law of competition; these are the results of human experience. The soil in which society so far has produced the best fruit.

This is the government which took away ownership of private property in the Charter of Rights; taxes away the wealth of individual Canadians, small businesses and corporations; renders infertile the soil for investment, "the soil in which society so far has produced the best fruit".

• (2130)

Mr. Irwin: Would the hon. member answer a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fretz: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My privilege as a member of this House was impugned when the hon. member said that we took away the right of property. It was the provincial ministers, one of which—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it seems that I am having a hard time getting started on my speech tonight.

Be that as it may, just toward the end of his speech my colleague, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), said that we were going to vote against this bill and the hon. member on the other side said, "Oh, you are kidding." I must say that in the next election when he looks at his voting record during this terrible legislation that has been going through, he will be the one who will be wondering who is kidding whom. I just wanted to point that out. He had better be careful that it does not get into Hansard.

What we are talking about tonight is a catch-up bill. It is sort of a catch up, a tax grab, or whatever you want to call it. But what the government is doing is legalizing something which it has been taking from Canadians for 26 months. The Liberal government has the attitude, as the public does, of using the credit card system. In other words, charge it now and we will catch up later. The Liberals say, "We do not have to worry about it because we have a big majority. We can do whatever we want. We can run this country as we want to. We do not give a damn about the Canadian citizen."

An hon. Member: You don't.

Mr. Fennell: I am talking about you people over there.

In this bill we are talking about a made-in-Canada policy. This made-in-Canada policy is doing an amazing job of destroying the Canadian oil industry. This government has another "made-in" policy. The other "made-in" policy is the "made-in-Japan" policy for automobiles. This policy is ruining the automobile industry and it is putting 200,000 people out of work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Hon. members over there can make a lot of noise about this, but my constituents are being hurt.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What about the steel industry and all the others?

Mr. Fennell: I say to hon. members over there that they should go to Hamilton, Algoma and Oshawa and they will find out whether the people there think they are funny. Those people are unemployed because of the Liberal government and its incompetence.

An hon. Member: Get back to the bill.

Mr. Fennell: This government has also brought in a Canadian-made interest rate policy. This has destroyed the balance of industry in this country and it is also destroying every Canadian.

The legislation we are discussing tonight, which is Bill C-103, provides equalization. We are trying to talk about equalization. I would say it can better be described as total destruction of the Canadian economy through government intervention. That is precisely what Bill C-103 is. It is a clear criminal intervention by the government.

I wish the minister were here in the House. But I hope he reads what I have to say.

Mr. Fretz: Where is he?

Mr. Fennell: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has created sufficient havoc in Canada, so why does he not resign and give this country a chance? It is a wonderful country. It is a country we can do something with.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: We do not need people yelling from the other side of this House who are saying that communism is a great thing either, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Why does the hon. member not stand up and speak properly?

Mr. Fennell: If the hon. members so interested in speaking, why does he not have the guts to come to his place and give a speech?

Mr. Blaikie: Get back to your seat if you want to heckle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario has the floor.

Mr. Fennell: Let us talk about the oil export charge. This charge finally legitimizes a tax that has been imposed since October, 1980, on the Canadian people. The charge is broad enough to allow the government to raise the charge to $55 a barrel. What is left for the oil industry? There will be a negative balance. The government may increase this charge any time at its will. It can be done at the beginning of the month, the middle of the month, or the end of the month. The government does not care. It will do it any time. That is how this government operates. This export charge really eliminates the necessity of having the National Energy Board. I wish the minister of energy were here because I could ask him whether there was any purpose in continuing to have the National Energy Board keeping all those people on the payroll. Why does the minister not get rid of the National Energy Board? The reason is that the minister and Ed Clark have the whole thing in their own hands. They have eliminated the necessity of a board that would use a price, a price at which we could export without infringing upon our requirements. Why does the minister not get rid of the National Energy Board now? Why does he spend that money? The National Energy Board is just a shell. The whole thing is a shell. That is how it all turns out, Mr. Speaker. Theoretically, and I say theoretically, that 50 per cent of the oil export charge is to go back to the provinces. But nowhere specifically in that bill is the government required to give that amount back to the provinces. The provinces have no protection. The federal government can say that a product can be exported from a province, it can say how much the province can export, it can say at what price, and the federal government can impose any amount of export tax up to $55 a barrell and not give one red cent back. The government says this is fair pool. I understand the government reduced the amount under this export charge from what was originally proposed in Bill C-94. The government has reduced the amount so that it can get the bill through the House this time. But as soon as this bill is passed and everybody is happy, the government will turn around and say, "Let us put the charge up another $100." There is no reality to the economics of the oil industry in this country.

Now we come to the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. I wish I could get an answer to why there is a different amount for the east coast, which is $78.35, and for the west coast, which is $47.20. There is no logic in that. There is absolutely no logic. I wish I could get some explanation to that. I wish someone in the Liberal Party would explain why there are different amounts for different parts of the country. I note that airplanes are to be exempted and the government is going to give all the money back it charged the airlines over the past year. This government got the Americans mad enough that now this government is going to have to hand back the money. The government has done everything to insult our best neighbour. So what is the government going to do? The government is going to give the airlines their money back. It is just tokenism.

But what happened to trains? I understand the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) does not believe there will be trains in the future. He is cancelling train service all across Canada. But what about trains? Why can boats, airplanes and everything else have legislation, but not trains? Is it because the trains are government owned? The train service is such a loser because it is run by the government that it really does not matter.

Then we come to the petroleum compensation charge. This is a tax that I really cannot understand. I really cannot. This tax simply subsidizes the multinationals to import foreign crude at the expense of Canadian crude. Furthermore, it discourages multinationals from going out to find new sources of oil.

• (2140)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Hon. members opposite can criticize multinational corporations, but they have been in bed with them for a long time. In the early days of oil development in the west, who found oil in Canada? It was not Canadians who found it, it was the multinationals. I am not criticizing them because they were fairly paid, but I am saying that we should not subsidize the multinationals to import oil and discourage them from finding additional oil in Canada, so that we will have self-sufficiency in the future for our children and grandchildren. At the present time it amounts to a charge to the Canadian public of 24 cents per gallon for fuel oil and gasoline, and a further 24 cents which the government can charge through order in council. Also the amount was reduced from $20 per barrel to $12 per barrel. It really means nothing, it is absolute tokenism. The government has reduced it from $20 to $12, but next week or as soon as the bill is passed, it will probably bring in a new Ways and Means motion, with legislation following 18 months later. This is what the government does now with everything. For example, it brought in Ways and Means budget followed by legislation much later. The budget of November 12 left people in confusion; no one knows what is going on. Today I received a telephone call from a gentleman on this very point who said, "What is your gut feeling about the budget?" I said that my gut feeling was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is so intransigent that there is no chance he will back off; he will just pacify Canadians by giving them more time.

Turning to the Canadian ownership charge, let me first indicate that it is a real beauty! It was reduced from $4 per barrel to $1.15 and 15 cents per Mcf on gas. The government cuts back all these things in order to get the bill through the House quickly, but we must not kid ourselves—they will go back up. Let us look at what the Canadian ownership charge has done to Canada. We are supposedly talking about Canadianization to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada, but first I should like to refer to a Statistics Canada chart which indicates that in 1979 there was an outflow of $3,933,000 out of the country. In 1980 it went to $4,200,000 and in 1981, to $18,600,000. This is how Canadianized the oil industry has become! It is Canadianized in other countries, not in Canada. Hiram Walker is a prime example. The company spent some $500 million buying up assets in the United States. I understand that they were not the greatest assets, but the company purchased them in any event. Another example is Home Oil. Everyone thinks Home Oil is a great company, but it bought up interests in the United States. Many companies are down in the United States buying up interests there because their netback here is so bad. Last year $31 billion came back to non-residents of Canada, at the same time that the government was paying out interest to service the debt on government bonds and on money deposits, to keep interest rates high. This year that cost will amount to $6.3 billion. Not only did we lose $18 billion in Canadian capital, we have lost an additional $6.3 billion to service the debt. The ownership charge is a fraud. It is not creating Canadian ownership, it is destroying it. The outflow is not slowing, it is increasing. The government has removed any risk-taking money from Canada and shipped it elsewhere. It brought in passive money to cover high interest government debt. It is a disgraceful situation. The Canadian ownership charge is a joke; it makes a fool of Canada.

We continue to import 400,000 barrels of oil per day. We are paying $17 per barrel, which perhaps recently dropped to about $14 per barrel, in the form of compensation. There are 400,000 barrels per day locked in, in western Canada. Perhaps the government is smart to keep it locked in, because it is not allowing any companies to develop new reserves. We must remember that new reserves are being developed in the north, in the Beaufort Sea and off the east coast. Eventually we will end up with a lot of oil, but today we are importing 400,000 barrels per day from Saudi Arabia, from Mexico—"Mexico mud" as I call it—and from Venezuela. The fact of the matter is that we are paying 24 cents per gallon to import it. Every time anyone in Canada fills up his or her oil or gas tank, he or she pays 24 cents per gallon for the privilege of importing oil which is not required.

The government is actually exporting $6 billion per year out of the country. In the last few minutes I have referred to $18 billion which has left by way of investment and $6 billion on interest on bonds and so on. This total $24 billion or one fifth of our national debt, so we will see the debt rise another one fifth this year. If the $6 billion had remained in Canada, it would create jobs and help solve unemployment problems which are crippling the country.

This is a serious situation with which we must deal. To put it in another way, $16 million per day is being paid out, of which Canadian taxpayers are paying $7 million. It is a $7 million extra grab of the Liberal government. This is for a Canadian-made price. On this one item, 24 cents is being paid for a Canadian-made price. We were thrown out for 18 cents and they are getting 73 cents!

At the present time when someone pulls up to a gas pump, 80 per cent of the price paid per gallon of gasoline goes to federal and provincial taxes. There are 10,000 shut-in gas wells in the west. Can one imagine how much gas that is? They are messing around on the Q & M Pipeline on the east coast. They cannot make up their mind on how, when or where to put it in. There are 10,000 shut-in gas wells which could be supplying that demand forever. They are worried that it will not be needed because of Sable Island. Let us be realistic. If there is a surplus, would it not be more marvelous if the valves were simply changed around on the pipeline and the gas shipped back to Quebec? It would reduce the cost of gas in Quebec because it would not have so far to travel from the east coast to Quebec as it would from western Canada to Quebec. We should keep it in mind as it is a very important point. The other serious reason is that due to the government grab on this, Canada is presently giving the smallest netback for producing oil of any country in the world. This is a pathetic situation which is very difficult for Canadians to understand. Since it takes so much time to read this bill, the average Canadian will not do it and will rely on us to read it for him. It is easy to read this bill because it is so bad that it can be quickly dismissed.

I refer to the Canadian ownership charge as the Petro-Canada grab. My colleague, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) referred to the price the government would pay for Petrofina today. The most foolish thing the Liberal government did was to buy a multinational too soon. It knew how bad the National Energy Program was and the disastrous effects it would have on the industry. It knew perfectly well that $50 billion would be written off on the stock. Still, it paid 120 dollars for some stock which it could have purchased today for 20 dollars, which would have been a good deal. Not only that, it bought the wrong company. It purchased a company which would enable it to put up its service stations signs across Canada with the Liberal red maple leaf. But it did not create one job. Did it buy reserves? No. The Liberals bought service stations. They bought a distribution organization. There is not one multinational corporation in the world which makes money out of its marketing operations, and this can be clearly demonstrated in any financial statement.

The government calls Canadian ownership Canadianization. Everywhere else in the world, particularly in those countries which respect the socialist international, this program is called nationalization. It is nationalization which is achieved by taking money out of the pockets of Canadians for which they will never receive one red cent in benefit. These companies will turn into loss leaders so quickly that we will not know what happened to them.

This is not Canadianization. Canadianization means looking back to our roots to see how our country began. This country was started by private enterprise and entrepreneurs. This is not Canadianization. It is government intervention and nationalization. Nationalization has not worked in one country in the world and it will not work here. It is a disgrace. The Canadian ownership charge, which I will call a slush fund because that is how the government treats it, does not have a beginning or an end. It will just continue to be another tax grab by the Liberal government.

We on this side of the House, as well as all Canadians, were originally told by the Liberal government that Petrofina would be paid off in 18 months at a cost of 4 cents per gallon. First, if the government had bought Petrofina at the right price it would have cost one cent a gallon for 18 months. But the government had to buy at the top end of the market. What will happen is that the government will buy other corporations which will ultimately become non-profit organizations. Also, these organizations will no longer pay taxes and help support the Canadian economy. Canadian taxpayers will have to pay for these non-profit organizations in order to keep them in business. There will be no concern for the consequences because the Liberals do not care about Canadians. Canadians are now aware of this fact, and since they are hurting right now they will not forget it.

This bill was primarily established to provide revenue for the government, and the cost to Canadians is of no concern to it. If this bill is passed, this charge could be doubled or quadrupled or changed in any way the government sees fit. There are very few defences that we have in the House to stop this bill from being passed while the government has a majority.

The Canadian ownership charge could also be called a Crown corporation subsidy. One manner in which this bill could be used is to bail out Crown corporations like Canadair. For example, in February of 1981 I brought to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) the fact that Canadair was in serious financial trouble. He only ridiculed me and prevented me from continuing with my point of order. I indicated to the minister that the undercarriage the airplanes it was constructing was too heavy, the plane was not designed properly and the Lear specs were not followed properly, which forced the company into serious financial trouble. I asked the minister what he was going to do about it. What we found out was that the company went into bankruptcy. But to protect their Liberal butts, spelled b-u-t-t-s, they bailed Canadiar out for $1.5 billion. The company is not even worth $1.5 billion let alone being bailed out for that amount.

Another example relates to the energy sector and indicates what likely will happen to Petro-Canada and all other Crown corporations the government will create. Eldorado Mines commenced the Beaver Lodge mine but did not realize the small amount of uranium which existed there. Therefore, the mine had to be shut down at a loss of $500 million. That company was put into bankruptcy as well, but the Liberals solved that problem very quickly and discreetly by simply taking some stock pile from its own account—$400 million worth—and putting it into Eldorado, and then converting that to capital to prevent any interest being paid, thereby bailing out Eldorado. This is typical of what happens to Crown corporations.

This bill demonstrates the damages which could be caused by the National Energy Program. We have had enough time to see what the National Energy Program has done.

The members to my left are the ones who should be concerned about the effects of this bill. I represent union people in my riding, and my next door neighbor happens to be the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Unemployment is hurting people in our area and that unemployment was caused by too many tax grabs by the Liberal government which left too little to the industry, which therefore had to cut back and shut down its operations.

Some 253 drilling and service rigs have left Canada and 311 remain idle. Two years ago, roughly that number was being manufactured in Canada out of steel and other related products. Those products were being manufactured in Ontario and Quebec and workers in those provinces are being hurt because those rigs have left.

Furthermore, the automobile industry is being shut down because every time a job is lost in the west, two more are lost in Ontario. That is the well-known multiplier effect. The government states that it will provide great initiative through Bill C-103 and Canadian ownership to provide handouts when and if it wants. Handouts will never replace private initiative. Private initiative made this country work. Government intervention is destroying this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

Adjournment Debate

AIRPORTS—FUTURE OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago, on February 13, 1980, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) invited all hon. members to send him their comments on the Dorval-Mirabel issue. Considering the number of times I have raised this very important subject, I could be accused of abusing the minister's invitation. In fact, last Tuesday in the House I was hoping the minister would accept an invitation from me and from participants in the economic summit on Greater Montreal to publish the cost-benefit study on solution 6, with other studies relevant to the Dorval-Mirabel question, before the minister announces his decision this May.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the minister has refused this request, made not only by me but also by the Montreal Economic Promotion Committee, known as COPEM, which includes the Chambre de commerce du district de Montréal, the Montreal Board of Trade, and by the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, the Chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, the mayors of Montreal Island and the South Shore, the Quebec Federation of Labour, the Machinists and Aerospace Workers Union, the Quebec Travel Agents Association, the Montreal Convention and Visitors Bureau, eight major Canadian airlines, the Air Transport Association of Canada and the Société pour le progrès de la Rive Sud, under the chairmanship of my good friend Mr. René Delarue. All the people I just mentioned and those they represent will not be able to look at this major study before the final announcement of the minister's decision. Even the members of this House will not have a copy of the study, which, if it were immediately available, might ease the present tension and enable those with concern for this decision to remove the clouds of uncertainty that prevail today.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the ideal solution in the short term is an improved status quo, meaning that there would be no transfers of flights between Dorval and Mirabel, that the necessary improvements would be continued at Dorval and that provision will be made for improved access to Mirabel. In my opinion, any artificial channelling of traffic to Mirabel would merely discourage passengers from other regions in Canada from going to Montreal. I think it would be unwise to fragment domestic traffic by obliging part of it to go through Mirabel. According to studies by Air Canada which I support unless I get evidence to the contrary, many Montrealers travelling to the West and the United States prefer to go to Toronto by Rapidair and take advantage of the greater choice of flights offered to the Toronto market instead of making do with a limited number of departures from Montreal.

Both carriers and passengers would suffer financial losses. Passengers would have to pay more, because of the trip to Mirabel, until a satisfactory infrastructure is complete. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Mirabel is nowhere near having the rapid transit system and highway network it needs to fulfill its potential and become a world-class airport. Mr. Speaker, the customer is paying and he should have a choice in the matter. And if the customer is given a choice, he will always prefer airports with easy access, and otherwise he will always try to avoid the airport until such access is available no matter how attractive it may seem on paper. Mr. Speaker, many international carriers involved in both passenger and freight services want to come to Mirabel and Montreal. My message to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) this evening is very clear and very straightforward. I think it is obvious that the Minister of Transport should, as he did for Air India and Royal Air Maroc, concentrate on facilitating the entry of such airlines and reducing landing fees for Mirabel. Landing fees are discouraging many carriers, both Canadian and international, from coming to Mirabel, because they are the highest in Canada and also among the highest in the world. The solution must be sought in attracting new markets and not in artificial transfers of a few flights which would create more problems than it would solve.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), I want to thank the hon. member for giving this important issue the attention it warrants. The hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), as shown by his earlier comments, is very familiar with the subject Dorval-Mirabel and represents the views of his constituents in an informed and straightforward manner.

The Mirabel-Dorval solution must be one that recognizes the long-term socio-economic development of the Montreal area. There can be no doubt about the importance of proper airport facilities to the economic well being of a community. Both Mirabel and Dorval offer distinct advantages. Mirabel offers the convenience of a 24-hour operation, an efficient cargo facility and virtually unlimited room for expansion. Dorval offers proximity, an established operation and a local industrial base.

The cost of any solution to the two-airport question must also be assessed. The hon. member has correctly referred to the so-called "Option 6" on which a detailed cost-benefit study is now being finalized. In his answer, the minister confirmed that he intends to make the results public when he is in a position to announce his general approach with respect to Mirabel. He has said previously that he intends to do so by the end of May.

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for La Prairie, who is also the vice-chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, for the leadership he is showing on the Dorval-Mirabel issue and on other transportation matters.

BANKRUPTCIES—INCREASE IN NUMBER. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last week, while Members of Parliament were taking their Easter break, Statistics Canada reported that we had achieved a record in the month of March, a record of which none of us can be proud. In the month of March, for the first time in the history of Canada, there were more than 1,000 business bankruptcies, an increase of more than 40 per cent over the same month in 1981. This is a trend which has been accelerating over the last four or five months. There is no indication that that trend is going to slacken.

What we are seeing is not just greater numbers of bankruptcies, but a very significant change in the kind of companies which are declaring bankruptcy. In many cases these are not new companies with inexperienced management, but companies which have been in business for 25, 50 or more years. They have been very successful businesses. Let me put on record a few of the thousands which have gone bankrupt in recent months. This is but a very small fraction of what is happening from one end of Canada to the other.

A few days ago, in Winnipeg, the Victoria Leather Jacket Company, which had been in business for more than 50 years and which employed 300 people, a company owned by the present owner of the Winnipeg Jets Hockey team, went bankrupt.

In the city of Montreal a clothing manufacturing company which had been in business for 90 years, the Freedman Company, which employed at the time it was most productive and most profitable more than 800 workers, went bankrupt.

In Winnipeg, a few days ago, Wolch Limited, a clothing wholesale company which had been in business for 60 years, went bankrupt.

In every newspaper in this country one can see advertisements announcing bankruptcy sales. Here are two which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 10, 1982. One says "Liquidation Sale" in Winkler, Manitoba, one of the most productive farming communities in western Canada. This liquidation sale is of all the assets of the former New J Industries Ltd., auctioning off press brake shears, welders, presses and vehicles.

In the same newspaper there is another advertisement dealing with a "Receivers Sale" in Winnipeg for Baltic Industries Ltd., auctioning off lathes, milling machine, radial and vertical drills, and so on.

Why are these companies going bankrupt? One gets the same report when one reads the business pages of the Toronto Globe and Mail or the Montreal Gazette or the Vancouver Sun or the Financial Post or the Financial Times. They are going bankrupt for two reasons. First of all, it is because of the recession which is world-wide. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it is because of the inordinately high interest rates.

What is happening is that companies which manufacture or wholesale goods are finding that they cannot afford to produce the goods they formerly produced, paying for the raw materials and the labour, because to do that as they formerly did would mean going to the bank and borrowing the money at 20 per cent or more in interest. Customers are not buying in the quantities in which they used to buy, not only because sales are down but because they cannot afford to pay for the merchandise when they get it. They cannot afford the kind of interest rates which the banks are charging.

As I have indicated, we have over 1,000 companies which went bankrupt in the month of March alone. For every company that goes bankrupt there are probably two, or three or four which avoid bankruptcy by going out of business, by ending the lease for the premises which they had, and by selling off their merchandise. Tens of thousands of workers are unemployed, workers who worked for these bankrupt firms, for these companies up to the time they went bankrupt. They have gone bankrupt because of the interest rates.

What does the minister say when you tell him this? He says: "We cannot do anything about high interest rates until we bring down inflation." We have lived with the government's policy of high interest rates. We have lived with Bank of Canada Governor Bouey's high interest rates for half a dozen years, and what we have is inflation at an all-time high, well over 12.5 per cent; unemployment at the highest level, the highest percentage, the highest number that we have ever had—the highest number since before World War II. That makes one and one quarter million unemployed, according to the official figures. As we know, there are another 400,000 or 500,000 unemployed who are not counted because they have given up trying to find work.

When I say that high interest rates are responsible for most bankruptcies, I am not speaking for myself alone. I am not speaking from a very radical, unorthodox position. Let me just quote a couple of sentences from the submission given to the Ontario government—similar to the submission made to the federal government—by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. This submission was made to the Ontario government in February of this year. Let me quote as follows:

> High interest rates have had their part to play in the massive increase in bankruptcies and the decision of countless other firms to simply back up. High interest rates have become overwhelmingly the most important problem faced by our member firms.

The federation went on to say:

> When asked—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is something awe-inspiring about speaking to this very large gathering here tonight. I feel that what the hon. member has just pointed out is extremely important, and that whatever side of the House we happen to be on this evening, all hon. members agree that the economic situation is extremely difficult. We are also keenly aware of the fact that some people are being particularly affected by the depressed state of the economy. For some it may mean unemployment, for others bankruptcy. However, we must be careful, Mr. Speaker. We all know that there have been bankruptcies in this country and there will be more, not only in Canada but also in other countries. What should be stressed is the action the government is taking to assist small and medium-size businesses that are more severely affected by the economic situation and thus more vulnerable to bankruptcy. At the present time, the Ministry of State (Small Businesses) has a formula for providing loans at lower interest rates, while another formula provides that interest paid on loans is tax-deductible. Obviously, this type of assistance for small and medium-size businesses cannot change the fact that people are spending less, because with the present lack of confidence in the economy—and as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) indicated recently—if this confidence cannot be restored because prices keep rising and inflation continues to get out of hand, people tend to keep their money and salt it away in a high interest-bearing account so that there is no input at the supply and demand level of the economy.

This largely explains the present unbalanced situation being experienced by some small and medium-size businesses, and earlier, the hon. member clearly explained this phenomenon. High interest rates are obliging these businesses to keep inventories low and to be better administrators than would be the case, I suppose, when business is booming. We are certainly aware of these problems in my region, in Port-Cartier, Sept-Îles, Schefferville, Fermont, Gagnon, Havre-Saint-Pierre and Baie-Comeau. It should also be pointed out that most very strictly managed businesses can come through these problems. Even more encouraging, in spite of the present situation, which we admit is extremely difficult, is the fact that some people are succeeding in launching new businesses. It is true that there have been many bankruptcies, but on the other hand, we must not forget that the Department has programs which—

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY—TAKEOVER OF WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY BY TEXAS FIRM. (B) PATENTS FOR CANADIAN PRODUCED COMBINE. (C) POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN CONTROL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my few remarks this evening relate to a question I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) a couple of weeks ago with respect to the proposed takeover of White Farm Equipment in Brantford, Ontario, in my constituency, by TIC Corporation of Dallas, Texas.

When I first got word of this move by a minority shareholder to get total control of this Canadian firm—I was approached by an anonymous source but one who is impeccable as far as knowledge is concerned, who told me that the intention of TIC of Dallas was to take over control of the Canadian operation in Brantford, and within the next six to nine months phase it out gradually and then shut it down—I immediately went to the minister. I raised the issue in the House. I discussed the matter with the minister's officials in FIRA, in TIC, and the Enterprise Development Board. I put up quite a fight because I was afraid my information would prove correct. As I say, it came from an impeccable source, a very reliable source, but not from within the company itself. It came from a person who had worked with that company.

TIC protested and said that it was not going to shut the company down or phase it out. But at that time it refused to put anything in writing. The only weapon we had with which to fight the takeover was FIRA.

One other point is very important, Mr. Speaker. The White Farm Equipment Company in Brantford produces the 9700 Axial Flow combine. A lot of Canadian tax dollars went into producing, researching and developing it. I did not want the patents to go out of the country if the company itself was to go out of the country. Consequently, Mr. Nixon, the member of the provincial legislature for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and I, even though we belong to two different parties, put up a united front. However, at Queen's Park in Toronto the Tories were quite prepared to let TIC of Dallas take over the company regardless of what promises were made, verbally or in written form.

Fortunately the federal government was wiser. It took three weeks to hammer out a deal with TIC and force it to put some of the following conditions into print. As a result of the battle that Mr. Nixon and I fought, as a result of the minister's courage in this matter, and as a result of using FIRA and the regulations pertaining thereto, we now have a written agreement by TIC of Dallas, even though it has been given the right to take over the company. The following written guarantees in legal, contractual form have been agreed to. The work force will remain at approximately 1,200 workers; all future research and development will be carried on in Canada; the employees' pension fund will be maintained; the employees' supplementary health benefit plan will be maintained; the patents to and manufacturing of the 9,700 Axial Flow combine will remain in Canada and all future manufacture of combines and combine development and combine related products will remain in Canada.

If the federal government had not stepped in, if I had not raised the issue in the House, if Mr. Nixon, a Liberal at Queen's Park, had not raised the issue, I fear that the deal would have gone through without these guarantees. Certainly if Mr. Walker, the provincial minister of industry and trade in Toronto, had his way, TIC of Dallas would have complete control today, without these written guarantees.

I am satisfied, at this point at least, that we have done everything we possibly can to guarantee the productivity at White Farm Equipment Company in Brantford. We have done everything we can to guaranteeing jobs in Brantford, even though the workers were forced out of work for three weeks while the deal was being arranged.

Tonight, rather than being in an adversary position against the government, I am actually thanking the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for the courageous stand he took, and his departmental officials in FIRA for fighting the take-over in such a way as to make sure that, if it had to occur, these guarantees and many others I have not got time to include would be written into the contract.

The only thing that concerns me at this point, as far as the press release and the appendices are concerned, is that there is no mention that all this work that is guaranteed in the agreement will take place in Brantford. All it says in the press release is that the research and development and the jobs will be retained in Canada.

I sincerely hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to enlighten me on this, and guarantee that in this agreement where it says "Canada", it means Brantford and the White Farm Equipment Company in Brantford insofar as present productivity and present labour levels are concerned.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the comments made by the hon. member, first because he has confirmed the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is doing a great job in certain areas, and we can see that this can and often does have very positive results. I would also like to say that this shows the importance of the role of parliamentarians since the hon. member said himself this evening that the fact of having asked a question in the House may have speeded up matters in this case. I therefore think that it is interesting to see that the questions asked by the hon. member can be referred directly to the minister and to the officials involved. We should therefore be grateful to the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and those who examine foreign investment because they have done a marvelous job, as the hon. member said earlier, and this has finally brought about a happy conclusion to this matter.

I would have liked the hon. member to ask specifically whether the whole industry will indeed be concentrated in Brantford and if all the operations will be maintained in Brantford, but there is no question of relocating the whole economic activity of this industry. However, I shall check personally tomorrow with the Department to provide an official answer and be quite certain that there is no misunderstanding concerning the official location of the industry. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that the plant should normally begin operating within a few days or as soon as economic recovery can be ascertained and we can verify that the various commitments made by TIC Investments have truly been met. I therefore believe that the necessary work has been done well and that I shall be able tomorrow to confirm for the hon. member the precise location of all the operations of the company.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11.00 a.m.

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

OPPOSITION TO TOXIC CHEMICAL TRANSFER STATION IN NEPEAN, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a motion to raise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That pursuant to the resolution of the Corporation of the City of Nepean of April 13, 1982, the federal government do not proceed with the proposal to place a toxic chemical transfer station within the city of Nepean, and that before any action is taken on such a facility anywhere a study be undertaken for a location in other areas not reviewed by the feasibility report done by Reid Crowther & Partners Limited for the Department of Public Works.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. GEORGE'S DAY

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, since today is St. George's Day I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House extend to all those loyal subjects who celebrate St. George's Day tomorrow, including the Greeks and Lebanese who also claim St. George, our sincerest good wishes and continued success in their endeavours.

Madam Speaker: Perhaps the House would like to express its sentiments by applauding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED PLACEMENT OF OFFICIAL COPY IN PROVINCE HOUSE, CHARLOTTETOWN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the signing by the Queen of the proclamation bringing into force Canada's new Constitution was of profound historic significance for all Canadians. The occasion marked the completion of the work toward full Canadian sovereignty launched by the Fathers of Confederation at their first meeting in Charlottetown in 1864. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the House supports the Prime Minister's statement in the House on Wednesday that active consideration should be given to making an official copy, with original signatures of the proclamation, to be placed in Province House at Charlottetown where the Fathers of Confederation held their historic meeting that gave birth to our great country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

SUPPORT FOR GLOBAL LIMITATION—MOTION UNDER S.O 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, in light of the growing conviction of the peoples of the world that their respective governments need to know that they are concerned about the drift toward global nuclear death, and the insanity of anyone, even if he is a president, thinking that nuclear war is winnable, a concern demonstrated this week in North America by the grassroots movement Ground Zero, and by hundreds of thousands of Europeans earlier this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House instructs the Prime Minister, (1) to show that he is serious about his nuclear suffocation strategy by cancelling the Cruise missile testing in Alberta; (2) to make Canada a leader rather than an acquiescent observer in the struggle for mutual arms limitations at the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament by, among other things, calling for a global referendum on disarmament and, (3) to withdraw our nuclear team from Argentina immediately and have the wisdom to reject finally all the ways in which Canada has been contributing to the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PROPOSED CABINET MEETING AT MEACH LAKE, P.Q.—MOTION UNDER S.O 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, on June 14, 1981, the Grit cabinet holed up at Meach Lake to plot economic strategy for the forthcoming year. They gave us record high interest rates, a declining dollar, huge deficits, continuing inflation and skyrocketing unemployment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Canadian public has been milked, manipulated, manhandled and "meached" enough and insists that the Prime Minister call off his proposed repetition of the Meach Lake disaster.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

APPOINTMENT OF CO-CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. Important decisions are about to be made by the International Joint Commission on acid rain, Great Lakes water quality, the flooding of the Skagit Valley, and the Garrison diversion project. Whereas the Liberal government has failed to appoint a Canadian co-chairman of the IJC, leaving the position open for some 15 months now; whereas the IJC has refused to release the experts' report on the Skagit Valley to members of Parliament, leaving only the B.C. Social Credit government to defend Canadian interests in this dispute, and whereas the Liberals may have exhausted their list of friends in need of jobs with their recent appointments to the science council, the CBC, and the parole board in British Columbia, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House immediately provide the Prime Minister with a list of prominent Canadians who are experts in either environmental problems, international law, or Canadian-American relations, who would be willing to serve on the IJC even if they have never run as Liberal candidates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

GRANTS TO ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The government's refusal to take positive, sensible action to move the nation out of its recessive situation has resulted in the withering of our business base, and high levels of unemployment. This economic morass continues to create, particularly in regions of Ontario, a climate of apprehension and hesitancy in industry which only compounds the problem. I suggest there is one way the government could begin to get the ball rolling again. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion implement at once the long-promised expansion of regional development incentive grants in Ontario, through the creation of new boundaries, or the enlargement of existing ones.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTION THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. News reports indicate that the cabinet is to visit Ottawa this weekend to discuss the economic disaster it has created, but according to the same news reports no new action is contemplated. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the Prime Minister make a statement on motions indicating in his view how bad things have to get before action, rather than public relations gestures will be taken, action such as abandoning the budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED POWERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is ironic that while RCMP Commissioner, Robert Henry Simmonds, at a luncheon speech yesterday to the Empire Club demanded access to an individual's mail, to tax files, and to medical records, yet at the same time in a courtroom in Quebec, Inspector Kenneth Hollas admitted that the RCMP has used so-called Puma units in every major Canadian city to break in, illegally, plant electronic listening devices, and steal membership lists of several unnamed political parties. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House instruct the government to deny any RCMP requests to increase their powers through writs of assistance until they prove they are willing to "get their man" or woman, while respecting the laws of Canada—which they are supposed to enforce—and starts to demonstrate respect for the rights of individual Canadian citizens.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister in anticipation of his cabinet meeting this weekend. As the Prime Minister knows, in 1968 there were 358,000 Canadians out of work, which represented at that time 4.5 per cent of the labour force. Now 9 per cent of the labour force is out of work representing almost 1.25 million Canadians. Since the Prime Minister has been in office practically the entire time since 1968, would he explain to the House what he feels is the most significant reason why unemployment in percentage terms has doubled and, in real numbers has tripled since 1968?

• (1115)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would be difficult to point out the many economic reasons why this has happened. I believe the hon. member would be able to mount a list of his own, but it is obvious that one of the main causes is that Canada is an exporting country, a country which relies very heavily on international trade. Almost one third of our GNP depends upon international trade. Of course flowing from that is the fact that most of our markets are in as high or higher unemployment situations, which means that most purchasers of our goods, whether they be processed or raw materials, have economies which are as bad or worse than ours and therefore cannot buy our products. But because we are more dependent upon international trade than many other major countries, it affects us in a less controllable way. This is one of the reasons. There are many others.

DECLINE IN EXPORTS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who cited world conditions as one of the contributing factors to rising unemployment. As the Prime Minister knows, in the Report of The Special Committee on a National Trading Corporation in June, 1981, it was pointed out that "between 1969 and 1979 Canada suffered a 33 per cent decline in its over-all share of world exports" and that "this performance was the worst among industrialized countries during this period." In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has been in power practically the entire time since 1969, how can he explain that our share of world trade has actually deteriorated to the point that, on manufactured goods, our deficit is now $16 billion higher than it was then, which represents something like 700,000 Canadians who are not working due to this deterioration in our share of world trade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I find it difficult to understand the statistics put forward by the hon. member. I will look into them and perhaps be able to give a more precise or contradictory view of these statistics. They seem difficult to understand because in the last few years Canada has broken all previous records in its positive trade balance, in the sense that we have had larger positive trade balances in the last few years than we had at any previous time in our history. I will look into the statistical matter, but the hon. member draws attention to an important—

Mr. McDermid: Raw materials.

Mr. Trudeau: Pardon?

Mr. McDermid: Raw materials.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member draws attention to an important factor. There has been a worrisome trend in the productivity of the Canadian economy due to many factors, but this drop in productivity can explain that we are becoming less competitive in world markets and also the general disposition of Canadians not to take into account that the OPEC crisis of 1973 and its follow-up have made Canada a less fast-growing country than in the past. This is something which much of our society is not prepared to accept. In other words, we have a tendency to live beyond our means and not to take into account the fact that we are not growing as fast and as rich as we were before the OPEC crisis.

MEASUREMENT OF PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would hope he might develop his last theme a little more, in that he indicated that our deterioration in productivity is due to the fact that we are living beyond our means. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether, if that is his rationalization for the figures given by his seatmate, the Minister of Finance, in last November's budget which, at page 4, made clear in "the current economic situation" brought out at that time, that Canada's growth in productivity from 1973 through to the present was one eighth of the growth experienced by the United Kingdom and Italy, and was compounded in the case of Japan, to a growth of 3.3 per cent, and in the case of France, to 2.5 per cent; only 0.2 per cent per annum, he is willing to stand up in the House and say that the only reason we ended up at the bottom of the list as compared to those other six countries listed by the Minister of Finance on productivity growth is that this nation has a tendency to live beyond its means and that his government's lack of direction to get us back to prosperity had nothing to do with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I did not link those two as cause to effect. I just indicated that these were two elements, that we had suffered a slower growth in productivity and we also had a tendency to live beyond our means. These were two of the causes but I did not link them causally. However, the reality is there.

The figure of the hon. member confirms what I said, and what the Minister of Finance has been saying. There is a worrisome loss of productivity per worker in Canada. I think that the hon. member is well enough versed in the subject to know that many economists who have studied this problem have not yet found an explanation for it. It is not such a simple-minded one as the hon. member gives when he says that the government has failed to give direction. It concerns the state and maturity of our economy, and our inventiveness or lack of it. It has to do with many factors, and it would be no cure to the current state of affairs to say that the government can change it all, unless the hon. member thinks that a socialist government which would direct everyone's lives should be in power, which is not my view.

PRIME MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister. We now understand from department estimates that unemployment is expected to rise to 9.2 per cent in 1982. We hope that forecast is wrong. If we annualize the latest consumer price index, we see that inflation is running at 15.6 per cent. We hope that goes down. Interest rates remain unacceptably high, postal rates are rumoured to rise again, and our trade in manufactured end products—I stress "end products"—is in a massive deficit position. As well, gasoline is above two dollars a gallon and rising. We are paying 6 million dollars per day to subsidize imported oil while shutting down some of our own wells.

I ask the Prime Minister in all seriousness what people in the street are asking, and that is, does he really now what he is doing? That is what the people are asking. Is he waiting for a miracle, and would it not be better for him and the country and all concerned if he resigns?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would want to add to my previous answer where I made some remarks about intervening in peoples' lives. I think I should correct that by saying that I did not mean a socialist government because many socialist governments are social democratic governments and are not any more authoritarian than the one which exists in this country. We happen to have a very distinguished minister from the French government in the gallery—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

He is not only a minister of a friendly government that is very important to us, but also an old friend whom I am very happy to welcome to our country.

As for the question put by the hon. member, Madam Speaker, he asked whether it would not be better for me and for the country if I resigned. For me it would probably be better, and as far as the country is concerned, that would depend on the person replacing me, but if that person were the Leader of the Opposition, I am sure it would be worse for the country.

INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO RETIRE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Every Liberal finance minister, from Edgar Benson to the present minister, has said that government spending was too high and that he would reduce it. Each one has said that the level of inflation was unacceptable and that he would reduce it. The Prime Minister has had 14 years in which to do something about these matters, but they seem to be getting more out of control every day. The problem is that the people of Canada just do not believe that the Prime Minister and his ministers are competent to deal with the matters facing Canada.

I will donate $1,000 to a fund to assist the Prime Minister in his adjustment to retirement, if he will go.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: And I do not even want a tax receipt.

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Kempling: My question is, will the Prime Minister accept my invitation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think we should refer this matter to the standing committee on rules and regulations. This seems like an overt attempt at bribery.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—SHIPMENT OF NUCLEAR FUEL FROM CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday in this House I asked a question of his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. At that time I alleged that Argentina intended to divert plutonium from Canadian Candu reactors in order to make the bomb, or nuclear weapons. Now we find, according to a newspaper report today, that there is a government document in existence which states that Argentina was anything but stupid when it bought the reactor and that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources knew that fact. Can the Prime Minister confirm that an Ottawa firm has plans to ship $4.2 million worth of nuclear fuel to Argentina before the end of June, a fact which the government document states the government is anxious to hide?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as you know it is not my habit or custom to comment on so-called leaked cabinet documents. I consider that to be the best course of conduct and the only one in keeping with my oath of office.

In so far as the facts are concerned, I cannot comment on the particular ones mentioned by the hon. member, not having had enough time to read more than the headlines. However, I do know that we signed an agreement in 1976 or 1977 to build a Candu reactor in Argentina. That was done after we had obtained assurances from the Argentinians that full safeguards would be implemented in that country. That is the present situation. I imagine that we are discharging the other obligations under the contract, just as we expect them to discharge theirs.

Mr. Waddell: I think that Britain was pretty sure, at one point, that Argentina would not invade the Falkland Islands, so perhaps the Prime Minister might want to reconsider its assurances.

REQUEST THAT SHIPMENT BE HALTED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Apparently this contract for $4.2 million involves 3,000 reactor fuel bundles. Given the fact that there seems to be a Canadian economic boycott against Argentina, will he assure this House that he will give instructions to stop this shipment to Argentina of the fuel bundles to which I have referred? If he is not prepared to give that assurance to the House now, will he please explain just exactly what is this economic boycott against Argentina?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member, who shows such knowledge of the history of the Falklands and of the psychology of the British, does not even know what kind of sanctions we announced against Argentina in this House less than two weeks ago. These sanctions mean that we are not importing goods from Argentina.

• (1130)

Mr. Waddell: Apparently we are prepared to send Argentina anything, including possible nuclear fuel.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN PERSONNEL BE WITHDRAWN FROM ARGENTINA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a final supplementary for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister realize that one of the great moral issues of our time is the nuclear matter? He used to feel that when he was a little younger. In the last couple of years he has spent two thirds of his time on the Constitution and one third of his time going around the world trying to sell nuclear reactors. Perhaps he might be remembered more for the latter than the former. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill referred to Ground Zero and the demonstration this weekend in Vancouver—

Madam Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please ask his question?

Mr. Waddell: Will the Prime Minister stop being hypocritical and say in this House that he is prepared to withdraw the Canadian team of scientists who are now in Argentina helping to build the reactor from which Argentina will build a bomb?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure if the hon. member's rhetoric is in order, but it certainly is most distasteful. He knows about the Candu reactor. He knows about the efforts this country has made in order to have full-scope safeguards.

Mr. Fulton: They had full-scope safeguards.

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid the hon. member's colleague who is belching near him should realize that he too—

Mr. Fulton: There is only one pile of excrement here and it's standing up, buddy.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it is difficult to answer when hon. members do not want to listen.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

INCENTIVES FOR PRIVATE INVESTMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications, who will know that the arts and culture industries, like all sectors of our economy, are experiencing real difficulty this year. The government has hurt that sector on two fronts. First, it has reduced its year-over-year support for this sector in real dollar terms. Second, the budget seriously hurt investment in our arts and culture industries, particularly by its provisions for capital cost allowance and its attack on charitable foundations.

The minister has been travelling the country suggesting to those involved in one of our most important sectors that they can expect the new cultural initiative strategy to include serious new incentives for private investment in the arts and culture field. Can he tell this House and Canadians whether he has some foreknowledge that we are going to have a new minister of finance who will in fact respect the need for private investment in that sector, or will he admit that, when he tells Canadians there will be more private initiatives and private investment, he is kidding them?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am delighted with this opportunity to answer the hon. member's question. Part of it is purely and stupidly political in the most partisan sense of the word. As for the serious part of his question in which he requested information on government support for arts and culture, I should like to remind the hon. member that this year we actually increased the federal contribution to the Canada Council. The hon. member may recall that only two or three weeks ago, we announced that we would be continuing the publishing assistance program which means another $25 million over three years for that sector.

The hon. member mentioned the matter of taxation and tax benefits. He knows as well as I do that there have been no changes in this area for the current year, and that the Minister of Finance has decided to postpone any changes in the area of tax incentives until next year. I also wish to point out that this year, under a program launched as part of the federal government's cultural initiatives strategy with the consent of all the provinces of Canada we on the federal side have been able to inject some $40 million over three years in the cultural sector, and if we add to this the contributions expected from the provinces and the private sector, it will mean an additional contribution of over $100 million for arts and culture over the next three years.

[English]

WEEKEND CABINET MEETING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the minister has been better than some at delaying the attack by the Minister of Finance on this sector. He also knows that the estimates show that total government contributions to the arts this year, year-over-year, are 9.7 per cent over last year. The cabinet will be meeting this weekend at Meach Lake, presumably to discuss improvements to our economic circumstances. Will the minister tell this House what he is going to recommend to that minister on Sunday? For example, will we get a commitment that after five years of waiting for implementation of the Disney report, which is extremely important to the health and welfare of our artists, we will finally see its recommendations to relieve the tax burden on artists and important cultural people in this country, implemented?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I believe that the priority we give to cultural affairs is already a well-known fact, and I may add to my previous figures, which were actually too conservative, I must admit, that this year, the Government of Canada has announced it will spend a further $185 million, over four years, on the construction of a new national gallery and a new museum of man. The hon. member is well aware that a commission of inquiry is travelling across Canada, has held hearings and has even submitted a preliminary report. I am of course referring to the Applebaum-Hébert Commission. The hon. member himself has written to just about every single cultural organization in the country to complain that I was intending to take action before the report was published. Now he is asking me to divulge the recommendations that we as a department intend to make to the Minister of Finance or to other ministers in the Canadian government, and I am sure that if I gave him the answer he wanted, he would again say how awful it is that the minister responsible for cultural affairs in Parliament intends to take action before the Applebaum-Hébert report is tabled in the House. The hon. member should make up his mind what side of the fence he intends to be on during the months ahead.

[English]

Mr. Bosley: The minister will be interested in knowing that the replies coming back to that letter suggest that his process is not trusted by the community.

An hon. Member: What community?

Mr. Bosley: The arts community which the minister claims to represent.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary to the minister is this. He has had five years to deal with issues such as the Disney report, issues which are supported by the community, issues on which they asked the minister to take action before the Applebaum-Hébert commission was started. Why does the minister continue to wait to take those actions to assist the cultural community which it has pleaded for, and I think specifically of the Disney report, for five years? Why not now when they support this being done?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, on the contrary, there is a broad consensus among the cultural groups in this country which shows that they have every confidence in the Applebaum-Hébert process which is quite different from the process initiated by the previous government. It so happens that our formula, namely, to hold in-depth consultations with the arts and culture sector in all areas of the country, is preferable by far to the process initiated by the previous government.

However, having initiated this process and established a commission consisting of outstanding Canadians from all areas of arts and culture in this country, I feel that before making or proposing any changes, we should have a chance to see what general orientation the commission would like to see this country take in the cultural sector.

PROPOSALS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It was alluded to previously that the Minister of Finance will be meeting with his colleagues this weekend to discuss economic conditions in the country. As a result of his budget, economic conditions have in fact worsened. Projections for unemployment have risen dramatically since the introduction of his budget, to the point where we are now looking at probably close to 1.5 million people who will be unemployed in the coming year.

The answer the government has given has been make-work projects, makeshift projects, work sharing that has resulted in more rather than less unemployment.

Is the minister aware that there is before the government right now a number of project proposals that could create employment? For example, we could have employment in Trenton, Nova Scotia and Hamilton, Ontario if the order were placed for hopper cars to move grain. If we were to accept the proposal of the shoe industry that there ought to be reasonable quotas on imports, we could create close to 6,000 jobs in Canada. If we were to accept the proposal of Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, we could safeguard 600 jobs and perhaps create 400 more. If we were to accept the proposal of the auto industry for Canadian content regulations, we could create 30,000 jobs. Is the minister prepared to accept these proposals now and create new jobs, rather than share the existing jobs and ultimately reduce the number of available jobs in Canada?

• (1140)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member has listed at least four or five major concerns, or major proposals or major worries in various industries. I want to assure him that each of these proposals is receiving very careful consideration. He has referred to the impact of possible hopper car purchases or authorization on jobs in Nova Scotia and Ontario. I have already met with representatives from at least one of these communities and have assured them that I am paying attention to the problem, along with the Minister of Transport. If the hon. member wants assurance that each of these possibilities is being examined with diligence, I can give him that assurance this morning.

REQUEST THAT PROPOSALS BE ACCEPTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am not interested in having them "examined with diligence." Since the proposals have been before the government in almost every instance for the better part of the last year, taken together with the fact that there is a massive shortfall in the number of housing units being built, which could create a massive demand—create another 100,000 jobs, what is it that the government is waiting for? How many more people must become unemployed before the government accepts that these proposals are concrete job-creation proposals, rather than the nonsense being proposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to be living in a world that is unrelated to what is happening in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Unreal? What about the House of Commons?

Mr. MacEachen: If he knew what was happening—

An hon. Member: What about the House of Commons?

Mr. MacEachen: I can understand that attitude. If people tuned in on the hon. member in question period they would not have very much confidence in what is happening here occasionally. The hon. member mentioned the question of housing. He ought to know that in the budget there was a provision of $300 million to support rental construction and housing. He ought to know a bill was brought into the House by the minister of housing which had the potential of creating 60,000 jobs. What did his party do about that bill? How much help did you give to it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: You voted against 60,000 potential jobs. That is what you did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES REPORT ON ACID RAIN

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment or his parliamentary secretary. The United States energy department has commissioned and received a report on acid rain. The report indicates that unless there are significant reductions in both sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emission, rain 40 times more acidic will fall on the eastern United States. I suppose that also includes that portion of Canada north of the eastern states. Has the government received a copy of this report? It has been withheld from circulation, although I understand that Southam News has received a copy. Has the government received a copy and, if so, will it use that report to buttress our position on the acid rain situation?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schroder: Yes, the minister has received a copy of that report. Officials of the department received the report some time ago. It was received in an informal fashion, as are many such reports that deal with scientific and technical information.

The 1980 memorandum of intent, which was signed by both governments, provides for an open and frank discussion of matters and problems dealing with acid rain. The Canadian government supports this intent strongly. We are very pleased that in the report the Minister of the Environment is supported strongly in his attitude to reducing the emissions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EDUCATION

ESTABLISHMENT OF UNITED STATES BASED INSTITUTION IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last October the government of Prince Edward Island rejected an application from a so-called Universal Life Church in California for a charter to establish a university on Prince Edward Island. Within a month of that decision, the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs granted a self-styled bishop of the same church letters patent to run the same university on Prince Edward Island. Did the department know that the Universal Life Church of California is the focus of a major investigation by the United States Internal Revenue service? Has the department satisfied itself that the bishop's corporation on Prince Edward Island will not flood Canada with worthless degrees, thereby debasing diplomas from genuine institutions of higher learning?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, obviously I was not aware of the facts just quoted to me by the hon. member. In any event, I may remind him that according to the legislation governing incorporation as a non-profit corporation, certain procedures are prescribed, and if those procedures have been complied with, the officials of my department have no discretionary power. Anyone who complies with the regulations can obtain incorporation as a nonprofit company. I assume that is what happened in this case. In any event, I shall investigate and report back to the hon. member.

[English]

INTEGRITY OF CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is provoked because the "discretionary power" to which the minister has referred is about to be removed by Bill C-10. To protect the Canadian public, the federal government requires special procedures to be followed at present. There are regulations and procedures prescribed to be followed in the establishing of certain types of corporations—for example, banks, insurance companies and co-operatives.

Since practically anyone off the street can get a federal permit to set up a Mickey Mouse university to sell worthless degrees, will the minister undertake to work closely with the legitimate university community in Canada to devise safeguards to protect the integrity of the Canadian university community and Canadian university degrees against fly-by-night operators of the kind to which I made reference in my first question?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker. I think the suggestion of the hon. member is worth-while. Indeed, I would be ready to entertain an appropriate amendment to the legislation to clarify this situation and avoid difficulties in the future.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

TRADE

ROLE OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATORS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. Yesterday, the member for Manicouagan, parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, stated that international trade negotiators showed more concern for their own careers than for the interests of Canada. In view of this statement, which seems based on information previously checked by the parliamentary secretary, can the minister inform us whether he intends to investigate and to take the necessary corrective action, so that people who represent Canada in negotiations on foreign trade act in the interests of Canada instead of trying to protect their own careers, as alleged by the member for Manicouagan?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the parliamentary secretary's statement, but I will check the statement and have a reply for the hon. member at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Considering the minister's reply, and since the minister's parliamentary secretary is aware of the considerable self-interest demonstrated by our international negotiators, how could the minister not be aware of this attitude prevailing among his officials, and could the minister tell us whether he, too, is able to confirm that these international negotiators are more concerned with protecting their careers than with working to further the interests of Canada?

• (1150)

[English]

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, as I said, I have not seen or read the statement by the parliamentary secretary. Until such time as I have had an opportunity to do that, I do not think it would be fair to make a comment on the question of the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRENCH CLAIMS TO SAINT PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Would he agree that the stop-over made by the French Prime Minister at Saint Pierre and Miquelon before his visit to Canada was motivated primarily by the desire to strengthen the French position that the French Prime Minister is going to explain to the Canadian authorities, which concerns France's claims to a fairly extensive economic zone in the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure, Madam Speaker, but it seems to me that it could be interpreted as the perfectly normal desire of a French head of government to visit islands that are in fact a French department. He would have all the more reason to do so, because it so happens, if I remember correctly, that the municipality is headed by a socialist mayor. There is nothing unusual about this. There may be other reasons as well. The islands themselves are very beautiful, and the setting is magnificent, especially when the sun shines. Besides, anyone who has time to stay on the islands will find that the food is extremely good. So, there are some of the reasons that might justify the presence of Prime Minister Mauroy in this French territory. That being said, it is common knowledge that there is a dispute between Canada and France on the subject of the islands which has been going on for a number of years, that yesterday both sides expressed the hope that some progress would be made towards resolving the dispute, and that we are all making considerable efforts in this direction.

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER OF FRANCE TO SAINT PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, after all, this is a return trip, and the Prime Minister could have visited or stopped at Saint Pierre and Miquelon on his way back.

[English]

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will be disposed early next week to make a statement on motions relative to this question so that he may gather the views of those in this House who have a consuming interest in the outcome of the discussions which are now taking place about waters which have long been considered Canadian waters.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think it is rather incongruous to suggest that the Prime Minister would have been better advised to stop at Saint Pierre and Miquelon on his way back from a visit to Canada.

Considering the difference in time zones, this was an opportunity for the Prime Minister to have a rest before starting on his Canadian trip, and a good reason for stopping on his way to Canada instead of on the way back to France, especially since, if he had stopped on the way back, people would have said that he wanted to have a rest after the harassment to which he may well be exposed in the province of Quebec, it is not a desire to—

FINANCE

CONSEQUENCES OF DEVALUED DOLLAR

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the recent debate in Canada about devaluing the Canadian dollar as a means of stimulating the economy. I raise it today because that has been one of the policies followed by the Government of France, whose Prime Minister is the guest of the Government of Canada today.

In view of the fact that the Canadian dollar was devalued some 20 per cent from 1977 to 1979, a massive devaluation by anyone's standards, has the Department of Finance done any studies of the long-term and short-term benefits and costs of this massive devaluation so that we might have this information in the debate that is now going on?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there are, of course, departmental views, studies and documents on the question of the impact of a devaluation or depreciation of the currency. I am not sure whether these reflections are brought together in any particular document which could be made available, but I will examine that.

I will take advantage of this opportunity, inasmuch as the hon. member has raised the question of devaluation, to say that that is not a policy the Government of Canada proposes or intends to pursue. In the current circumstances we believe that would be most unwise.

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF ALCAN PROJECT AT KEMANO, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans regarding the Kemano completion project in northwestern British Columbia. I am sure the minister knows it involves an inter-basin water transfer proposal. Yesterday the vice-president of Alcan provided me with Alcan's announcement that it is doing site location studies for a smelter before it has received the go-ahead for the hydroelectric proposal. Would the minister endorse here today in the House a plan of action which would do two things? Would he put before the House his department's assessment of the impact of Alcan's Kemano project? I am sure he will recall that just over a year ago he had to take Alcan before the Supreme Court of British Columbia on this same matter. Second, would he support the implementation of a river management scheme such as has been called for by elected representatives in northern British Columbia?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as usual the hon. member confuses oranges and apples. The reason I went to court with Alcan and the reason the court sustained our appeal was that the question of low-water levels was based on a dam which was utilized to retain water in the Nechako River.

The second issue, better known as Kemano II, is a proposal or suggestion that Alcan has brought forward and appears to have pulled back. In fact the latest position of Alcan is that it will not go ahead with the project unless and until there is full public discussion. Alcan has recognized, even publicly, that although it held a licence for many years, the mood of the country has changed a great deal. I suspect our going to court may have helped Alcan to understand the issue.

ROLE OF ALCAN VICE-PRESIDENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware that the vice-president of Alcan is a former colleague of his. He is a former secretary of state, minister of state for science and technology, and minister of Indian affairs and northern development. He is none other than Mr. Hugh Faulkner, and he is responsible for environmental matters for Alcan. Would the minister tell the House what role Mr. Faulkner plays regarding the Kemano project as it relates to the minister's department, and would the minister table for the use of this House his studies on the impact of Kemano II so that the House can have some idea of what implications the Alcan proposal would have respecting fisheries matters?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the hon. member repeats his old habit of trying to smear people every time he brings their names out by somehow inventing some conspiracy. As fas as I know Mr. Faulkner is a private citizen and is exercising his freedom to work for whomever he wishes. I have not had discussions with him on this issue. If I have to, I will, and I will treat him as I would any other citizen in the country.

On the second question, obviously I will examine the hon. member's suggestion. I favour full public discussion of the Alcan issue, and I am told the company does too.

SMALL BUSINESS

SUGGESTED METHOD TO AVOID BANKRUPTCY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Finance. It deals with a letter circulated to all hon. members by the firm of Grieve, Horner and Associates in Toronto pointing out the disastrous effect the government's high interest rate policy is having on the small business community in Canada. Last year more than 8,000 small businesses went bankrupt. This year the trend is worsening, aggravated by the effects of the federal budget.

I would like to ask the minister if he has discussed with his cabinet colleagues the wisdom of adopting the U.S. Chapter Two legislation policy whereby small businesses can obtain moratoriums from their creditors and avoid bankruptcy long enough to work their way out of financial problems.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am quite concerned about the impact of high interest rates on small businesses, and it is for that reason that we have provided, through the small business development bond and the small business bond, large sums of money for small business at preferred rates of interest. There has been flowing into the small business sector, as a result of this policy, close to $3 billion, according to the latest estimate, and I believe that is probably a more beneficial solution than the one proposed by the hon. member. However, I will do him the courtesy of examining the proposal which he says is in effect in the United States.

BILINGUALISM

SPECIAL RECRUITMENT OF FRANCOPHONES FOR EMPLOYMENT IN CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is in regard to Government of Canada directive No. 2080-1 which covers francophone participation in the Ontario region. This directive establishes special recruitment teams whose sole purpose is to search out and hire francophones in Ontario and Quebec for federal civil service employment.

• (1200)

How can the Prime Minister justify this preferential treatment for one group of Canadians over another? Does he not feel that francophones are perfectly capable of finding jobs without the special assistance they are now receiving from the federal government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would have to refresh my memory on that particular circular; I cannot brag about remembering it. It does seem to me to be an answer to a situation where it was difficult to attract Francophones to Ottawa, (a) because the attractions of Quebec City were also very great, and (b) because very few qualified French Canadians knew they would be able to work in a language environment conducive to the kind of productivity of which they are capable. Perhaps the aim of the circular was to underscore that so that they would be made aware of the advantages there are in working for this great federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON ENGLISH-SPEAKING CANADIANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, these hiring and promotional practices are causing severe morale problems in many federal government departments. RCMP members have been told they will be dead-ended if they cannot learn French.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: The Human Rights Commission is currently investigating the discriminatory Anglo-Franco promotion policy within the Department of National Defence, and unilingual English students are no longer being hired in the House of Commons as tour guides, where 95 per cent of the visitors speak English.

I would like to point out to the Prime Minister that, if this trend continues, unilingual English Canadians will become second-class citizens, so will the Prime Minister retract his government's discriminatory hiring and promotion practices, and return to the merit system, instead of giving one group of Canadians preferential treatment over others? I would like to point out that these practices violate at least three sections of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member's representations will be examined, and if there is a violation of the act, justice will be given to whomever deserves to receive justice. I suspect the hon. member is not favourable to the government's policy of bilingualism. If that happens to be the case, Madam Speaker, I just want to point out to him that he is in direct contradiction to the policy of his party and his leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I would just like to point out to the hon. member that his reference to the guides is quite incorrect. Guides are required to speak both languages, or more than two languages, but we have employed some unilingual guides who may guide English-speaking groups.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, there has been correspondence from officials of the House of Commons to the effect that they will no longer be hiring unilingual English people, and I would like to bring that correspondence to your attention because there is certainly some confusion in that area.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,235, 3,245, 3,767 and 4,157.

[Text]

FEATHERBED FILE

Question No. 3,235—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Will the government apply the same policy with regard to the release of the Featherbed file as it did to the so-called Taschereau papers, namely the appointment of an independent reviewer to examine the file and to give a view as to what parts can be made public, and, if not, for what reason?

2. Is it government policy to withold important details of foreign espionage within Canada and all related matters and, if so, what factors justify isolating the Canadian people from this information?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. No. The Taschereau papers although in the possession of the security service of the RCMP were not documents generated by the security service. The so-called Featherbed file is a file of the security service. Although it has been dormant since 1975 and is dormant now, it is an operational file. Its release is not in the public interest because of some or all of the factors referred to in connection with details of foreign espionage referred to in No. 2 below.

2. It is government policy to exempt important details of foreign espionage against Canada and related security matters from disclosure if it is in Canada's national interest to do so. Factors leading to such a policy decision include:

(a) the probability and extent of injury to Canada's national security;

(b) the possibility of violation of the right of privacy of an individual;

(c) disclosure resulting in violation of any law relating to the privacy of an individual; and

(d) injury to a confidential agreement made between the Government of Canada and any other government.

Question No. 3,245—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the entire Featherbed file still in existence and, if so, under whose control is it and at what location?

2. Were any sections destroyed within the past four years and, if so, to what did they pertain?

3. Will the government guarantee that the entire Featherbed file will be kept intact (a) before (b) during (c) after its transfer from the RCMP security service to the new civilian security service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. Yes, the entire Featherbed file is still in existence. The identification of the controlling official and location of the file is not considered to be in the public interest.

2. No.

3. There is no present intention to destroy or reduce the Featherbed file. The government will guarantee the Featherbed file will not be destroyed or reduced without a public statement on the subject.

RCMP SECURITY FILES

Question No. 3,767—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,230 which stated in part that the government will not guarantee that it will not destroy, alter or change in any way RCMP security files during the changeover from the RCMP to the new civilian security service, did the government adopt a new policy of political interference with RCMP files and, if so, what are all the reasons and is one reason to remove anything politically embarrassing to the government?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): No.

FISHERIES RESEARCH OFF ATLANTIC COAST

Question No. 4,157—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. How many bids were submitted during the search in February 1981 by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for a large ice-strengthened stern trawler to undertake research and patrol work off Newfoundland?

2. To whom was the contract awarded?

3. Were there arrangements for a charter deal and, if so, what was the per diem rate agreed upon?

4. How many offers were made to the department in its search for a charter vessel to undertake hydrographic work off the west coast of British Columbia and in the western Arctic?

5. To whom was the contract awarded and for what amount?

6. (a) Which section of the department makes the selections between offers and makes recommendations to the minister with respect to the offers (b) what special qualifications do the personnel of this section possess enabling them to carry out the process?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Eleven firms submitted bids in response to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans' tender call for a medium offshore ice-strengthened stern trawler for fisheries research off the Atlantic coast.

2. Owing to the high costs involved a contract was not awarded.

3. See 2 above.

4. Four firms submitted bids in response to the department's tender call for an ice-classed ship for hydrographic surveys off the Atlantic coast and eastern Arctic in 1981 with the option for annual extensions for similar work in the Beaufort Sea and western Arctic in 1982 and 1983.

5. The contract was awarded to the M.V. Polar Circle owned by Carino Company Limited of St. John's Newfoundland at the following daily rates: 1981—$5,700; 1982—$6,156; and 1983—$6,649.

6. (a) Ship branch personnel, in concert with the program personnel who will be employing the ship, evaluate all offers received and invariably recommend the "lowest qualified" offer to the minister prior to seeking Treasury Board approval to enter into a contract.

(b) Ship branch personnel are a very experienced and thoroughly professional group representing the complete spectrum of maritime related disciplines and together with equally qualified and experienced program personnel (the end users) possess the essential experience and expertise required to participate in the chartering process. The ship branch officer responsible for charters has 37 years professional marine experience which includes eight years experience negotiating contracts and managing the department's national charter programs.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I would again draw the parliamentary secretary's attention to question No. 2,042 placed on the Order Paper on January 29, not of this year but last year. This touches on the Prime Minister's world tour in December and January of 1980-81. Would the parliamentary secretary once again explain to the House why this information is being concealed?

At a time when people wish there was more freedom of information in this House, basic facts such as what his trip cost is being denied to the Canadian taxpayer. What is the parliamentary secretary's explanation?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased the hon. member has drawn this matter to my attention and I will be delighted to make inquiries into this question on his behalf.

Mr. Stevens: You have said that 12 times.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, April 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to continue my remarks on Bill C-103. Since the adjournment of the House last evening some interesting information has come to my attention, and that is that this bill is adding additional taxes on existing taxes and increasing inflation. Today the CPI in the United States has dropped for the first time since 1965; their first quarter inflation rate is now down to 1.5 per cent.

The bill we are discussing, Mr. Speaker, is adding fuel to the fires of inflation. It is not solving the problem this country is suffering from. Our inflation rate is going up because of government expenditures and taxes, but the United States is now down to an inflation rate of 1.5 per cent in the first quarter. I think this government is incompetent and doing a great deal of damage to this country, and I am going to continue to discuss this bill which I think is a disaster for Canada.

This bill is like so many programs this government has introduced which benefit incompetent operators and force the competent and highly skilled people to move out of the country. The November 12 budget is an extension of Liberal thinking. I am relating this to Bill C-103 because it results from the 1980 budget. I am relating this to the oil industry because that industry is suffering from lack of funds. Because of this lack of funds there is no incentive to invest in Canada.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12 removed interest deductibility. He will make the argument that he is still permitting an amount up to $10,000 and people with immense investments are able to write off their total investment. But I am talking about the guts of Canada, middle Canada, the ones who take the risk. I am talking about the $18 billion I referred to last night which left Canada. That was risk money. Not only has the government removed the wealth from Canada, but it is now removing the guts from the middle of Canada, the people who are the risk takers. They are the people who had the courage in the past to believe in this country. This bill is doing the same thing again. It is discouraging people from investing.

Through this National Energy Program the government will tax savings in the life insurance industry. This money in the insurance industry is a large sum. In the past a proportion of it was invested in the Canadian west, but the government is going to tax it. All this government does is tax, tax and tax. This government has one tax laid upon another. Why does this government not get some creative programs together rather than taxing the guts out of this country?

What amazes me the most about this government is how its backbenchers always stand up and vote for every piece of legislation. If their leader stands up, they all stand up. However, in this energy legislation that we are dealing with, a peculiar situation has cropped up. It affects every member from the province of Quebec and they should consider it when they vote on this bill. I am talking about the expropriation factor.

I have had the opportunity to discuss the problem with people from Mirabel. Those people had 80,000 acres of land expropriated. They have no one on that side who will listen to them; therefore, they are now coming to me. On Thursday, April 8, some of these people came to Ottawa to talk to the minister who was supposed to be here. He told them that he would be in the House at 12:15 p.m. to meet them. He was not there. Their own Member of Parliament avoided these people all day. Eventually, my office located where their member was which enabled them to present a down payment to buy back the land.

I say to members on the other side that by voting for this bill, under which the province will have no approval regarding expropriation, they are hurting everyone in the province of Quebec. Let me tell hon. members on the other side, having dealt with those fine gentlemen from Mirabel—those poor people whose lands were expropriated, taxed for the right to be expropriated and who have not been given a chance to buy back the land—they are the ones they will be hurting and they are mad. I understand why people are not voting Liberal in the province of Quebec. It is very simple; they are not being represented. I am pointing this out to hon. members because the name of any member who votes for this bill will go to that association at Mirabel from my office. I have a responsibility to those people and the reason I have a responsibility is the same responsibility I had for the people whose land was expropriated at Pickering. At least they had a fighter, and I am going to fight hard on behalf of these people. If the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) were here, I would really attack him on this point.

I am delighted to see that President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) here today. We are talking about economic incentives in Bill C-103. The President of the Treasury Board wrote a book and in his book he talked about economic incentives. It was a sound book and a good book. It was the kind of book that could have been written by somebody on this side, but the President of the Treasury Board is an expert in his field.

On March 26, 1982, the President of the Treasury Board spoke to the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. I do not believe he wrote this speech himself; I believe it was written for him by the bureaucracy. In his speech he mentioned that one of the reasons he entered political life was because of his frustration with the bureaucracy. I have to endorse that stand because it is the reason that brought me here, too, and I acknowledge that.

In his speech he said "It is not necessary for the government to be involved in commercial business enterprises." If that is the case, how can the President of the Treasury Board vote for Bill C-103, vote for Petro-Canada and vote for the creation of more Crown corporations that always lose money? I do not know how the President of the Treasury Board can say one thing in one place and say another thing in another. In his speech we find this sentence:

> Creation of wealth is what the private sector does best: redistribution of wealth through public sector expenditures and social programs is what the government does best.

That is a non sequitur. He is saying, "You can do it, and we will take it all away". Will the President of the Treasury Board please explain what he means? I believe his basic philosophy is being destroyed by this government. Further on in his speech, the President of the Treasury Board said this:

> —I believe that government should not displace private capital in business enterprises—

Why should you not give tax incentives instead of funding the way the government does and the way it buys corporations? The President of the Treasury Board also said that he believed in supporting investment activities. Why then is the President of the Treasury Board against interest deductibility? The President of the Treasury Board also said this in his speech in Calgary:

> Canada has high interest rates because we have high inflation.

As I said at the beginning of my speech, the CPI in the United States has gone down for the first time since 1965; it is now at the rate of 1.5 per cent. There is no logic to the President of the Treasury Board's statement, and I hope he will answer all of my questions.

Toward the end of his speech he said something that really upset me. He said:

> —that the government is in business suggests to me a necessary corollary of equal importance: that of bringing business and businessmen into government and the policy-making process.

The business and the business community were not brought into Bill C-103. The people out west are destroyed. The investors in Canada have been hurt. But the ones who have been hurt the most by this energy program are the small entrepreneurs. The government's energy policy has destroyed the man who is the long-haul trucker, the service contractor, the flat-rig operators and indirectly the automobile industry, because for every job lost in the west two jobs are lost in Ontario and Quebec. But that is what the government is recommending. Would the President of the Treasury Board please put forth his own ideology and quit mimicking the ideology of his emperor?

This government works on half programs. A good way to describe Bill C-103 is half a U.S. program and half a U.S.S.R. program. The half I refer to of the United States would be the windfall profits tax. The government has to tax something so that it is not inequitable to society. But the U.S.S.R. half is the tax to be imposed for Canadian content, to nationalize the oil industry in Canada. The Liberals may call this the Canadian monetarist's dream, but the rest of Canada call it the Canadian monetarist's nightmare.

I have close contact with my constituents. I hear from them constantly. They know that I am in here fighting. They know the tough situation with which I am faced. They know that backbenchers opposite are like a flock of sheep who vote on all bills even though they do not believe in them, and this is true even for some of the cabinet ministers. The Liberal government is like a barn full of hogs stampeding to the trough. Every piece of legislation is the same—grab, grab, grab, take it away.

The government, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), provides band-aids. Let us talk about these government band-aids. For example, there is the summer employment program. In good times it is of great benefit to assist students in obtaining jobs, but this year the program is setting up daycare camps for the children of the unemployed. The unemployed have nothing else to do. I believe this is morally wrong because it breaks up the family unit. The government should try to hold families together. This is what Canada is about. In the last 14 years the Canadian family has fallen apart, the individual family has fallen apart. The minister gives a band-aid solution to create labour. It is taken away with Bill C-103 and given through another program. This is wrong.

I should like to review a few of the financial implications of Bill C-103 and how it is hurting people. We must keep in mind that every job lost in the west affects two jobs in the rest of Canada. For example, the net internal funds generated by Imperial Oil stayed flat between 1979 and 1982, but I should like to point out that taxes imposed during the same period—and some of these taxes have been imposed but not legalized—have gone from $1.254 billion to $2.712 billion. This comes very close to a 200 per cent increase in two years. This is what is happening. The government is grabbing it all, leaving little money for the little guy, not providing any funds for large multinationals, and taking away incentive for multinationals to find new oil in Canada. Instead the government implements a compensation charge which amounts to 24 cents per gallon out of the pockets of Canadians to subsidize the multinationals to purchase overseas products and to export $6 billion worth of jobs every year.

I draw the attention of hon. members opposite to an article entitled "The Energy Crisis is Over" which appeared in the November, 1981, edition of Harper's magazine. They should read this article concerning the American energy crisis. Although it is old right now, it is holding true even more now than it did when it was written. Why is the energy crisis over in the United States? It is because President Reagan expanded the philosophy of Mr. Carter, which was a basic belief in private enterprise, and removed all controls on oil. The left-wing media jumped on this and said, "Disaster, this is disgraceful; it will push up the price of fuel 10 or 12 cents." I do not need to say any more, but by May of 1981, prices had started to fall; with private development the prices started to fall in the United States. Bill C-103 is the absolute reverse and hurts the country. It is destroying initiative in the private sector and the possibility of self-sufficiency. It is doing absolutely nothing for the country other than filling the grab bag of the Liberal government.

Who are the real losers in the legislation? It is not the government. It will be the government in the long run, but today it does not realize this. When that much money is taken out of society, who are the real losers? The real losers are middle Canadians or working Canadians who are the guts of the country. I should like to relate the situation in Canada to the figures in the United States where there are lower taxes, lower CPI and lower inflation. Canadians will pay higher taxes with this bill. Also it is creating higher unemployment, higher inflation and higher rates of interest. As I mentioned last night, higher interest rates were created by the deployment of risk capital to other countries. Bill C-103 will certainly Canadianize the oil industry in the United States and drive it out of Canada.

Who will be the beneficiaries of this legislation beyond the government? It will be foreign banks and passive Canadian investors who put all their money in safe Canadian bonds. Canadians should really consider the safety of those bonds. We have great potential and assets behind us, but we are not doing anything with them. We are not producing. I have challenged the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley). I think he is an honourable gentleman who is trying his best, but what is the government doing to create productivity in the country? It brings in Bill C-103 which removes people from the employment ranks in the west and in this part of the country.

I should like to continue on this point by referring to something which I was told this morning. On April 2 I referred to an engineering company connected with Lasco Steel, a very successful corporation which was moving its offices from Whitby. I obtained the facts of the matter this morning, that this was a direct result of Bill C-103. A senior officer of the company told me that its personnel was reduced by 50 per cent since the introduction of the National Energy Program. It has dropped from 323 people to 151 people, which is actually more than 50 per cent. On April 2 I also indicated that the engineering firm was moving its office to Texas or perhaps that it was closing its office. It is not closing its office in Whitby, for the sake of clarification, but nine senior engineers are being moved to Texas. These are nine qualified Canadian engineers. The Minister of Employment and Immigration referred to the fact that his department has to bring in 20,000 to 25,000 skilled people. I believe this is so because many people are being driven out of the country. This gentleman told me, "Yes, it is true that we are cutting back seriously. We hope it is over and that we will not have to lay off any more employees, but any future expansion will take place out of the country". Also he referred to the fact that over the last 12 months the firm had been hoping that something would be resolved on the Alsands project. The Alsands project is the tragedy of Canadian industry, the tragedy of the Ontario economy.

Also I should like to refer to the fact that Ferco Engineering put together a consortium of six engineering firms called Tars which guaranteed one million man hours of work. He wants to know what will happen because his company cannot keep people employed. He does not know how it will keep them involved. What the government is doing is having disastrous and tragic effects.

I would like to illustrate how a few other industries are affected by Bill C-103; for instance, the rubber industry. Contracts for the manufacture of hundreds of millions of feet of conveyer belts have been cancelled or delayed prohibiting further expansion of the rubber industry. Fewer car tires are being produced because all our cars are being imported with the tires already on them. The government does not demand Canadian content wherein we could ship rubber tires abroad for those cars which are to be imported.

Steel works and rolling mills are being affected. I have already mentioned Lasco Steel. That company is now down to 40 per cent of capacity and it is one of the most successful Canadian steel companies. The manner in which they must operate now is to employ their workers for one week in every three. The reason for this is that they cannot afford to carry the inventory while we have high interest rates.

Another company which I contacted indicated that it had 402 tons, involving 1,500 man-years, lost. It has been dislocated because they have been forced to lay people off. The National Energy Program and Bill C-103, instead of trying to deal with problems which may arise in the future, is just attempting to grab money now without any concern for the future.

I will not dwell on the problems of the automobile industry.

Another sector which is concerned about Bill C-103 is the wire, rope and cloth industry. Just imagine the potential millions of yards of wire rope that is not being produced. We should be proud of the fact that this is a competitive Canadian industry which produced an excellent finished product in Canada.

Another industry adversely affected by this bill is the structural steel industry. Algoma was ready to sign a contract with an engineering firm in order to expand its operations and thereby employ more people in northern Ontario, which is a critical part of Canada. But this bill has forced the postponment of those plans. Algoma is in a holding position, as is the rest of Canada.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I represent the Algoma constituency and just this morning I talked to the president of Algoma Steel. He told me that indeed it was spending $240 million this year on the expansion of its tube mill. As well, it plans to spend over $1 billion in the next five years on the expansion of its facilities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If the hon. member wanted to seek the consent of the hon. member who has the floor in order to ask him a question, or if he wanted to phrase his remarks in a different manner, it might more closely approach a point of order. However, the hon. member is debating right now.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) raised that point. I agree that Algoma is planning to spend that amount of money. I acknowledge that the design engineering is proceeding. The hon. member can verify with the president of Algoma that it is Ferco who is going the design engineering. However, Ferco Engineering is concerned that this project will be postponed. Since Algoma has not given a firm commitment to go ahead, Ferco does not know where it stands. I acknowledge that Algoma is preparing for this expansion in anticipation of proceeding, but I gave this example in relationship to the fact that Algoma was in a hold position, the same as Canada is in a hold position. The hon. member should check with Algoma and its consulting engineers.

The hon. member referred to the fabricated pipe industry and said that he thought it will proceed. The provisions of Bill C-103 will make certain that it will not proceed. The compensation charge encourages the importation of oil into Canada, the export of $6 billion a year and that Canadian oil is not used or developed.

We can also look at what has happened to the boiler and pressure vessel business. That industry has almost shut down. I am sure that my colleague, the member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), can confirm this fact. He is faced with the prospect of his constituents who work in the boiler industry being unemployed. Once again it is a result of Bill C-103, which proposes to take money from the private sector and transfer it to the government trough. It is unfair and inequitable.

I am sure everyone knows what has happened to the valve manufacturers. Fortunately, since the tariff is not excessively high in this area, that industry is not able to export their product to the United States. However, some of the U.S. concerns have been told of the undesirability of importing so much from Canada. Since there is no demand, valve manufacturers cannot sell their goods in Canada. As a result, workers have been laid off with the anticipation of more severe lay-offs in the future.

The turbine manufacturers and the pump industry have also reassessed the situation. Their conclusion from reading Bill C-103 is to ask what prospect there is for success when the government takes away all hope from Canadians. Contracts for the manufacture of compressors have been cancelled virtually every day in the last year. There is no longer any compressor industry—which was a major industry—in this country.

One of my constituents is the director of the electrical association in my riding. He wanted me to tell the government what Bill C-103 is doing to the companies in his association. It is removing the incentive to expand. He told me that they had a number of contracts from the west which are now being cancelled. People in Ontario are hurting, with the exception of those people represented by the hon. member from Ottawa because his area is well protected by the civil service. There is no industry on which he has to depend. I invite him to come to my riding and talk to some of my constituents.

I could go on and cite examples of other industries in trouble, such as the transportation equipment industry. Trucks and semi-trailers which were being built to be sold in western Canada were being partially constructed in Ontario and shipped to western Canada. I can cite one example after another.

I would like to read some conclusions about the National Energy Program made by the C.D. Howe Institute. I am sure the hon. gentleman this institute was named after would be shocked and embarrassed to see what his Liberal successors are doing. The conclusion by the institute states:

> The NEP is an economic policy that is severely constrained by political factors. It represents the federal view of how Canada's energy resources can be used as a tool to orchestrate the country's economic future, with the federal government conducting and playing the leading role.

It went on to say that Ottawa has failed to realize that it is a co-operative arrangement between the provinces. The leader of the Liberal Party has stated that there must be co-operation with the west for this program to succeed. The institute went on to say:

> But the policy takes risks. If the attractiveness of competing activity in the United States has been underestimated, if reduction in oil demand has been overestimated, if the oil sands projects are delayed much longer, and if the response to frontier options is weak, Canadians may pay lower prices and own more of their industry by mid-decade, but they should also be aware that part of the price may be lineups at the gas pumps.

I am speaking in this debate on Bill C-103 because I am concerned for my children and my grandchildren. We have stopped development in Canada. We have encouraged multinationals to buy oil overseas. We have done everything to discourage the private sector of this country.

I hear the President of the Treasury Board and I do know that his philosophy was right before he became a cabinet minister in this government. I admired that gentleman; I have read his book. However, will he get his guts together and his back up and stand up for Canada and for the people he represented for so many years as a very able lawyer in Montreal?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: I also appeal to the hon. members of this government who are from Quebec to please consider what has happened and go to talk to the people at Mirabel who have been ill treated before endorsing unilateral expropriation under this bill. I ask them to go and talk to their people to see how they have suffered.

Therefore, I say that this bill will mean nothing but another disaster to Canada. I plead with the minister, withdraw it. We took 16 days in which to try to get our point across. I guess the public was with us. That has been proven. At least, we got the bill broken down. However, to my way of thinking, that is not enough: the whole of Bill C-94 should have been withdrawn and abandoned.

I appreciate the opportunity of speaking in this House and the fact that your Honour has been bearing with me and has allowed me to express my views. I tried to stay on the point as much as possible, and I think I did. However, I am concerned for Canada and I really hope the minister will take my words to heart and do something about withdrawing this entire bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have consulted both sides of the House, and I think that if you were to ask the unanimous consent of the House for reverting to routine proceedings, tabling of reports of Standing and Special Committees, you would obtain that consent, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) indicates that there may be unanimous consent to reverting to tabling of documents for the purpose of tabling a committee report. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF FOURTH REPORT

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): I wish to thank my hon. colleagues for their courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of tabling, in both official languages, the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreement has been sought and given by the House to the tabling of the report.

The House will now revert to Government Orders, and the Chair will recognize the next hon. member who wishes to speak on Bill C-103.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak once again on another item in the continuing saga of the national energy policy. This one is particularly insidious and is very onerous to the Canadian people because it will take a lot of money out of their pockets. If we look at the principles behind the national energy policy which are again incorporated into Bill C-103, we find that what the government wants to do is to impose strict control on the Canadian oil, gas and energy industries. The government wants to be able to direct where energy will come from, how it will be sold, the prices at which it will be sold and the amount of public revenues which will be generated. The government wants to regulate and tighten all aspects of the Canadian energy industry.

The members of the NDP may be a little more honest than the hon. gentlemen opposite. Their policy is to nationalize the energy industries and they are quite frank about it. They want to nationalize the oil and gas industry in the same manner they want to nationalize the steel industry, the banking industry and everything else. Pretty soon they will want to nationalize the little family farm which is presently somewhere down on the list, but its turn will come.

The hon. gentlemen opposite have a different approach to things. They are a little bit more intelligent, and I give them credit for that. They are a little bit more clever. I am not saying much, because one does not have to be too clever to be more clever than the average member of the New Democratic Party. The plan of the Liberals is to turn the energy industry into a utility where people will be able to make a certain return on investment, but there will be no real incentive to go out into the market and compete or to try to find new sources of energy as cheaply as possible, because the profit motive will no longer be there. Energy in Canada will be produced on a utility basis. The investor-owned corporations still involved in the industry, if they survive, instead of trying to maximize their profits and efficiency, consider new ideas and take new risks, will try to justify as large a cost base as possible under the new system in the same manner as many people in the gas distribution business at the present time. This is really the aim of the government. A few senior bureaucrats in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will be able to control all energy matters in Canada by diktat.

That is really what the national energy policy and Bill C-103 are all about. The government has a plan to control, not necessarily own, the Canadian oil and gas industry and other aspects of the energy system. It is not really necessary to own things in order to control them. The government envisages Petro-Canada as having much greater participation in the business than we would like on this side, but at this point in time it does not see it as encompassing the entire industry. The government found that it could control the industry without necessarily owning it or nationalizing all of it, although we have seen from the bills put before us in the last couple of weeks that it does intend radically to increase the nationalization which has been going on for some time.

I think that such a system as envisaged by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and his cabinet colleagues will be detrimental to Canada in the long run. I have some concern as they are taking over a dinosaur. They are using billions of the taxpayers' dollars to take over an industry which has reached its peak. I think that funds would be better invested, if they were to be invested by the public sector at all, on new and upcoming sources of energy. Instead of buying out the oil industry which is at or past its peak, the government should be devoting the same taxpayers' dollars to investments which will return a greater dividend in the years to come.

The policies being pursued by the government will result in higher prices in the long run. They will result in decreased efficiency of the energy industries because the incentives will no longer be there. The utilities in the business will operate on a bureaucratic basis very similar to that of government. One can see that at the present time there is very little difference between the way in which the bureaucracy of Imperial Oil operates and the way in which the bureaucracy of the government operates. There does remain one fundamental difference in that the bureaucrats, for want of a better word, who work for Imperial Oil can get fired if they screw things up too badly, whereas people in the employ of the government rarely suffer that fate. However, there is a general tendency on the part of the technocrats in the Liberal government to want to extend their existence and the way they do things to Canada in general.

I think it is important that we maintain a proper distinction between what properly comes within the purview of the government and what properly should come within the purview of the private sector of the economy. It is my opinion that the energy industries in Canada can best be developed by the private sector.

We are slipping into state control of the basic resources of the country. The analogy I like to think of is the ancient hydraulic civilizations of Egypt and Mesopotamia. The governments of the day controlled all life in those earlier civilizations by controlling the most important and basic resource, water. If the state controlled the water, they controlled everything. They had control over the individual lives of all the people. They controlled everything through control of the major resource, water.

I am sure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others in government are thinking in exactly the same terms for Canada. If they can control energy supplies, they can control everything.

It is frightening when you think about it and where a country like Canada, which heretofore has had very high regard for the freedom of its population, might end up. Look at what might result from these policies that have been consistently employed by a Liberal government for some 14 years.

The other aspect of Bill C-103 is revenue. The Government of Canada has discovered in the oil and gas business a new source of revenue. I should not say new because there have always been reasonable taxes on oil and gas at the federal and provincial levels in the past. It now looks upon energy, oil and gas in particular, in the same way we look upon whisky. It costs a couple of dollars to produce a bottle of whisky and there is $8 or $9 tax on it. The tax is out of all proportion to the value of the commodity. This may be well and good in the case of a luxury such as alcoholic beverages. We can live with that and accept it. Most people are quite prepared to pay very high taxes on alcohol and tobacco because they are strict luxuries. We do not really need them. Hopefully some of those moneys will go to use in other areas.

People do not mind paying high taxes in those areas. However, the Liberal government has adopted that way of looking at taxation on oil and gas. Unfortunately, people have become used to it. When they go to the gas pump, of every dollar they pay, 30 cents goes to the explorers, producers, refiners, distributors, marketers, retailers, wholesalers and everyone else in the business doing production work. The remaining 70 cents goes to governments, federal and provincial. People are accepting that. It is wrong that they have been led into that acceptance. When you go to the gas pump, the price per gallon or litre should specify the amount of taxes you are obliged to pay to various levels of government.

We should not treat gasoline, and especially home-heating oil, the same as whisky. Taxes and royalties on energy products should bear a reasonable relationship to the true value of those products. A rate of royalties and taxation not dissimilar from the federal sales tax would be reasonable. I am surprised the Canadian public has accepted what is going on. I guess there has been some kicking back; unfortunately, their protestations have been in vain. Those opposite have pursued them relentlessly, beaten down the Canadian public and forced them to pay these energy taxes.

This bill legitimizes the 28-cent a gallon tax that has been unlawfully collected for some time, in some instances going back two years. Canadians know those taxes were unlawful, that there had been no parliamentary approval given. What could they do about it? They could not go to court. They would have spent millions of dollars on a lawsuit to prove they had been unjustly taxed and a few weeks later the government would have turned around and brought in retroactive legislation, such as it is now doing. That is not the way taxes are supposed to be levied in a free country. It is not the way citizens of a free country should be subjected to a government that has very little else in mind except getting as much money as possible by bleeding dry the taxpayers of the country.

Remember the mandate given to the present government in the election two years ago; remember the election slogans at that time—"Vote Liberal and keep energy prices down". The 18-cent a gallon tax that had been proposed by the then minister of finance was shot down across the country. Now what do we have? We have a tax of about 70 cents a gallon. That has been in the increase in the price of a gallon of gasoline since those characters opposite found their way back into office as a result of promises to keep gasoline prices low.

The national energy policy in Bill C-103 has been sold to the Canadian public on three bases. The government said it would Canadianize the oil and gas industry. It said this would result in energy security and in fair prices. The National Energy Program and Bill C-103 fall down on all of these. Canadianization was in progress and would have continued. The excessive rate of Canadianization, especially through nationalization and ownership by government and not by individual Canadian citizens, has had an adverse effect on the level of our currency. It has chased foreign capital out of the country at a time when it is most needed. That was not done in a balanced way.

We have had example after example presented to this House of the ways in which the oil industry and capital have been chased out of this country. The rigs are leaving the country as well as technical expertise. People in the industry have been leaving the country. I do not want to recite this time and time again. I just want to bring it to the attention of the House once more. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.00 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) had the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: If I recall correctly, Mr. Speaker, before the lunch break we were discussing the follies of the Liberal Party and in particular the failures of the Liberal cabinet when it came to formulating a reasonable energy tax policy. These, unfortunately, are subjects with which many Canadians are very familiar. We were describing how the national energy policy and its tax implications have driven out capital, equipment and people from Canada. By virtue of the National Energy Program, the Alsands project and the Cold Lake project, which would have done so much for the areas in the west in which they are located and for industries right across Canada from coast to coast, have been set back and likely delayed indefinitely. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) gave a vivid description showing how these policies would affect many manufacturers in his constituency, everything from the rubber industry to valve manufacturers.

If we look at the supposed energy security aspect of the NEP, we find that this also has failed. Canada is just as dependent today, if not more so, on imports of oil from Mexico and from Saudi Arabia as it was before the implementation of this ill-founded policy. If we look at the fair prices component of this supposed policy, we see that this has not worked either. There is still disparity between one region of the country and another with respect to oil and gas and energy prices. There has been a tremendous increase in prices. We have not got security, we have not got fair prices; what we have got is higher and higher taxes, and higher taxes again under Bill C-103 which we are dealing.

The three enumerated aspects of the policy put forward by the sales pitch the government gave us—the Canadianization, the energy security, and the fair prices—have not worked.

What the national energy policy really entails is an increase in federal control, an increase in centralization. That is what they are really after. And it means also an increase in taxation. Look at the billions of dollars that are going to roll into federal coffers as a result of taxation measures associated with the national energy policy. There will be $50 billion alone as a result of the agreement between the federal government and the province of Alberta. That was the expected amount; the government has already made plans to spend that money. Now, because of the glut of world oil and the lowering of prices, their financial estimates are likely to be away out of line, resulting in even greater federal government deficits. That will lead again to inflation and to a continuation of the sorry state into which the Liberal government has allowed the Canadian economy to fall.

I have dealt with the overall policies contained in Bill C-103, and at this time I would like to go through the bill and deal with it clause by clause. I do not want to deal with the policy matters so much as with the specifics of the bill.

Mr. Deans: No. That is for committee.

Mr. Nickerson: The first item we notice is a change of name. It used to be the Petroleum Administration Act. The Petroleum Administration Act was originally brought in for a very specific purpose at a time where there had been a rapid escalation in the price of OPEC oil. It was felt necessary to shield Canadians from what was expected to be a short-term fluctuation in oil prices. That is how the government sneaked it through the House of Commons in the first place. Unfortunately, it is now becoming a permanent fixture. It will be in the statute books of Canada forever, and it no longer deals just with petroleum. The name is changed to the Energy Administration Act. That is what it will now be called, and if we look through the bill we find that it also deals with coal and coal products. We wonder where the government will go from there. Does the government want to control uranium and geothermal energy? Where will it stop? The idea in this bill—and the government has now made it known—is that it is not just a temporary thing to deal with petroleum but a statute with which the federal government will control all aspects of energy in Canada for ever and ever. We will never get rid of this thing.

Let me deal with the oil export charge. Many of the observations we could make about this particular aspect could equally be made about the other provisions in the bill. The oil export charge was originally $8 a barrel. Under this legislation it will be raised or authority is given to the minister through order in council to raise the export charge to some $350 per cubic metre. According to my figuring, that comes out to a little over $50 per barrel. We are authorizing a manyfold increase, from $8 to $50 all in one fell swoop. What we are doing is giving authority to the minister and his colleagues in cabinet to increase taxes up to that maximum at any time they want.

Surely Parliament should jealously guard its privilege to set rates of taxation. We should not give blanket permission to the government to increase taxes whenever it wishes. We should make it mandatory that whenever the government wishes to impose additional taxes on the Canadian public it come back and get authority from the representatives of the people of Canada in this House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We know what happened to Charles I.

Mr. Nickerson: I would like the same kinds of things to happen to some other people in this House with whom we are familiar.

With respect to the way this measure is to be administered, originally there was a board. I think it was called the petroleum administration board and it was charged with the administration of policy. That was something of a safeguard. I am afraid that boards and committees appointed by the Liberal government very often are composed of people who are appointed because of their party affiliations. We all know that, but at least they are outside government. They are people to whom complaints can be made. Presumably they have the time and the competence to look into the administration of affairs and come to judicious decisions not based on the political expediencies of the day. They have not always worked out in the way we would have liked, and I am sure occasionally they have done things at the persuasion of the government—things which people on their own might not have done—but these boards have served a purpose. However, under this bill the various boards which did exist in a safeguard capacity are now to be dispensed with, and it will be the minister, and the minister alone, who will decide how much tax we will have to pay, how much rebate we will get and how all the complex technical details contained in this legislation will be dealt with. There is no safeguard any longer. Previous safeguards were not as good as we might have wished, but now there are no safeguards whatsoever. The minister and his senior departmental officials will administer every last little item in this legislation, which undoubtedly will be passed into law.

If we look at Clause 10 of Bill C-103, we will see how the power and authority of the minister are being increased. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will end up as a super minister. He will be the reincarnation of C. D. Howe. In fact, C. D. Howe will look like a piker, in view of the power and authority to be granted to one individual super minister. With the powers Parliament has already been forced to grant the minister under Bill C-48, for instance, and other energy bills Parliament has dealt with in the last few weeks, this man and his colleagues will virtually control the whole Canadian energy industry. Nobody else will have a say at all.

The minister will be sloshing around in millions or billions of dollars of taxpayers' money. He will be giving it out here and taking it in there and exercising all kinds of powers and authorities which normally should go through the parliamentary system. However, because these provisions are outside the normal budgetary provisions and the normal way by which we deal with tax matters, and because these funds are isolated from the Blue Book, taken out of the budget and put into special funds about which nobody really will know what is going on, the minister will be in his glory. He will be wallowing around in billions of dollars of taxpayers' money and directing the energy industry from a central location here in Ottawa.

That is the type of situation in which we will find ourselves if this type of legislation is consistently passed by the House of Commons. Time and time again we on this side of the House have pointed out these dangers and, because of the overriding majority of hon. members opposite and the way they stand up and vote whichever way they are told, we are getting ourselves into a sad situation.

Let us look now at the second provision of the bill, the one dealing with transportation fuel and the compensation recovery charge. The effects this tax—for that is what it is—will have on the Canadian shipping industry—for example, the shipping industry on the Great Lakes—have been well described to this House by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). All we have to do is read the editorial pages in technical journals dealing with shipping and the management of seaports to find out what the effect on the Canadian transportation industry will be. Here again we are giving the government blanket authority to raise taxes up to a maximum of $350 per cubic meter. According to my reckoning, that is about $1.60 per gallon. Again we are giving this authority retroactively, in this case back to May 1, 1981.

Another clause of the bill with which I have some difficulty—I just want to mention this in passing because it is a major item, and it has been discussed many times—is Clause 13, which claims Sable Island for Her Majesty in right of Canada. We are all well aware of the dispute between Nova Scotia and the federal government over the ownership of Sable Island. In this bill we do not keep to the good faith presumably shown in the recent agreement between those two governments; the federal government claims that ownership for itself alone.

Clause 15 of Bill C-103 grants to the governor in council the authority to establish maximum prices for crude oil produced in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, where this government claims sole jurisdiction despite the wishes of the people who live there. This is a battle we fought when Bill C-48 was debated and I do not want to repeat the arguments I made then. However, I would point out that this clause will create a great deal of difficulty in the north. People do not like being governed by regulation out of Ottawa; they would like some form of consultation. They feel they have the same ownership rights as any other part of Canada. They do not feel those resources are exclusively for the benefit of Canada, although they are quite willing to share them.

The government of Ontario retains the right to say what the maximum price should be for oil produced there. I think it should be set by market conditions, but the jurisdictional authority lies with the government of Ontario, the same as in Saskatchewan or Alberta.

However, this bill indicates that the federal government is going to grab for itself alone the authority to make those decisions in the two territories. The people who live there pose the very sensible question: Why should we pay the highest price in Canada for oil and gas when the federal government sets our wellhead price and does not attempt to equalize the price between the southern areas and the northern territories where much of Canada's oil and gas will be produced in the future? This bill would be another opportunity to legislate some form of energy revenue-sharing agreement between the territories and the federal government, as has recently been done with Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. But it is another opportunity lost.

The Government of Canada is selling out the interests of northerners in order to be able to supply southerners with a slightly reduced cost of energy for a short period, thereby keeping themselves in office. I suspect that is the real reason. It seems to me grossly unfair that oil and gas produced in the north is to be sold in the south for less than the people in the northern producing areas have to pay.

Another objectionable part of the bill is Clause 18, which deals with penalties for non-payment of these taxes. Under the old legislation, for a summary conviction the penalty was $20,000 or six months in jail. Under this legislation the fine can be $100,000 and one year in jail, or five times the fine and twice the jail sentence. Under the old legislation, for a conviction by way of indictment the maximum penalty was two years in jail. Under this legislation you will be liable to a fine of $1 million and/or five years in jail. I think these penalties are vicious, cruel and unusual punishment. It seems that in this country people get off kind of lightly for many Criminal Code offences, but if you forget to pay your taxes then the government comes down hard on you with these penalties.

The same argument I used in the case of oil in the Northwest Territories applies equally to this bill's provisions concerning the pricing of domestic gas. The federal government will have the authority unilaterally to set gas prices in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. However, the provinces will come in for some of the same treatment here. They are going to find out what it is like to be ruled by Ottawa. There is a provision in there which provides that if, in the opinion of the governor in council—which really means the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in this case—the federal and provincial gas pricing agreement is deemed to be ineffective, then the federal government by order in council has the authority to regulate those prices.

That is a terrible thing in a country where we would like to see agreement between the federal and provincial authority. Surely it would be to everyone's advantage to have some measure of co-operation between the two levels of government. But here the Liberal government says "No, if we do not like your suggestions on gas pricing then we will do it ourselves; we are not going to take any notice of the provinces. If we do not like what you have to say, we have the authority to do exactly what we want." That, Mr. Speaker, is what the government gives to itself in this bill.

In the former legislation the section dealing with domestic gas prices had a built-in safeguard. If the federal government set gas prices in a province it had to file that information before Parliament within a certain time, and there had to be the opportunity for debate because this is a very unusual use of the federal government's powers. Parliament would then have the opportunity to rescind it by way of a vote, which is unlikely to happen with a majority government but at least it made Parliament cognizant of the fact that this was a major and unusual use of federal powers. In Bill C-103 that safeguard has been taken away. The government can set gas prices and they do not have to tell Parliament about it. The safe containers legislation is an example of how the government misused its authority in that it failed to bring before Parliament certain statutory instruments issued under that legislation.

Let us go now to the petroleum compensation charge. Originally in Bill C-94, the omnibus bill, that dog's breakfast we eventually got rid of by ringing the bells for two weeks, the charge was to be a maximum of $20 a barrel. I guess we can claim a victory for Parliament because under the new legislation the maximum allowed by way of governor in council authority, the way government can raise taxes, has been reduced from $20 a barrel to $12 a barrel. This is something of an accomplishment for Parliament, in my opinion. But we must remember that under this one charge authority is to be granted for an increase in taxes in the amount of 35 cents a gallon, which is still a significant increase.

Again, under Section 30, the board which administered the petroleum compensation charge in the disposition of funds raised by way of that authority has now been eliminated. Once more, the authority lies solely at the discretion of the minister.

The minister enjoys the prerogative of levying this charge and determining its amount, saying where that money will be spent and who will be granted the proceeds.

One of the worst things that has happened as a result of the petroleum compensation charge is that now refiners have found it cheaper to use imported oil than to use oil produced in Canada itself. This is an anomaly. I suppose no one could foresee this when this complex legislation was brought into effect in the first place. But so much for the designs of the national energy policy where encouragement is given to refiners by virtue of tax relief to bring in oil from Mexico, Saudi Arabia and other countries and not to use oil produced in Canada but to leave it shut in. This does nothing for Canada's balance of payments. It is an anomaly and I hope it can be rectified in the near future.

I notice that the provisions of the petroleum compensation charge which originally dealt only with petroleum, as in the title, is now being extended to coal products. If someone finds a good way to produce synthetic crude from coal, they will not be able to enjoy the benefits of that discovery because all the benefits will be taxed away. All the benefits will be taxed away the minute anyone uses initiative and expertise to come up with a better process advantageous to Canadians to reduce our dependence on foreign oil and to reduce our balance of payments. People will not be able to enjoy the benefits because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will come along and take any profit which might be made from the discovery by way of taxes.

Next I want to deal with the Canadian ownership charge. Under Bill C-94 the amount would be a maximum of $4 a barrel. Again, Parliament can claim a victory by having reduced that amount to a maximum of $1.15 a barrel, or thereabouts if you work out the numbers of dollars per cubic metre. It is still under 3.5 cents a gallon. Another little charge is tacked on there somewhere else. The Canadian ownership charge is a misnomer for the Petro-Canada tax. It is a tax levied at every gas pump in the country to help pay for the government's acquisition of Petrofina. It amounts to something well over $1 billion Canadian. This amount is proving very useful for alleviating unemployment in Belgium, but it is not doing very much at all for Canada.

That matter has been debated many times in this House, and I do not wish to be repetitive and go over the whole Petro-Canada issue again. However, I do like people to be aware that every time they go to a gas pump they are paying a few cents a gallon toward the acquisition of Petrofina. This money would have been better used in looking for new gas and oil and energy resources within Canada.

The special compensation charge in the bill could amount to 5 cents a gallon if the government uses all the taxing authority which is to be made available to it under this bill. What we can say about the special compensation charge is that it was absolutely unnecessary in the first place. It was arrived at because of the inability of the federal government to agree with the government of Alberta over oil pricing. The deal that was worked out by December, 1979, was set aside and it took two years of fighting and bickering before an agreement was reached. The Canadian people, those who buy gasoline at the pumps and who use oil and gas to heat their homes, have paid for this failure on the part of the government. Canadians have paid for the antagonistic attitude the federal government maintained during those years.

Once more, the authorities previously invested in the petroleum compensation board have been transferred to the minister and his departmental officials. Again protection has gone.

One of these days I would like to make a list of all charges—the compensation charge, the special compensation charge, the ownership charge etc. There are so many of them floating around that never show up in the blue books. People do not know the extent of the taxes they are paying. The only thing they know is that a considerable amount of tax is paid when ever they buy gasoline at the pump.

Of all the energy bills originally comprised in Bill C-94, Bill C-103 is probably the worst and the most insidious. It certainly has the greatest impact on Canadians through their pocketbooks. It will take money from every Canadian in this country. If we are at all concerned with the onerous levels of taxation in Canada, especially on energy, and if we are at all concerned with the methods of taxation and the way in which taxes should be imposed and seemed to be imposed by the people's representatives, then, Mr. Speaker, I submit that we must vote against Bill C-103.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to address a few words to Bill C-103, which will amend the Petroleum Administration Act and set up the energy administration act. This is a very important aspect of the National Energy Program. It has a number of elements to it. They relate to the oil export charge provisions; the establishment of the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge; amendments to the domestic oil and gas provisions; amendments to the petroleum compensation charge and petroleum compensation provisions; the establishment of the Canadian ownership special charge and it gives authority for the Canadian ownership account; finally, there are provisions relating to the special compensation charge.

Today I would like to talk about the Canadian oil industry as it was before the introduction of the National Energy Program in the fall of 1980. I want to talk especially about the dominance by foreign-owned oil companies and how the Canadianization program under the NEP is being implemented under this particular program.

Toward the end of 1980 we, as Canadians, were faced with an oil and gas industry that was very heavily foreign owned and controlled. A full 72 per cent of oil and gas revenues ultimately accrued to foreigners. Furthermore, some 78 per cent of these revenues were accounted for by foreign-controlled companies in Canada. This compares with levels of foreign ownership and control in the United Kingdom of some 52 per cent, and some 10 per cent to 15 per cent in the United States.

I think we must put the matter in perspective. We hear Americans complaining about the move by the government to Canadianize the oil and gas industry. We must ask ourselves, if their oil and gas industry was 72 per cent controlled by foreigners, rather than 10 per cent or 15 per cent, what would be their attitude, response or concerns, especially with the prospects over the long haul of oil and gas reserves increasing dramatically in value as they have done in the last seven or eight years? Over this period of time there has been an increase from $2 or $3 per barrel to some $40 per barrel. The long-term forecast suggests that this will probably continue. We must think about the additional revenues which will flow out of the country in terms of interest and dividends.

Not only was the level of foreign ownership and control very high, but a glance at major industry competitors clearly shows the dominance of foreign companies in the Canadian oil industry. Eleven of the 15 oil and gas producers were foreign owned and controlled, with the top eight positions being held by foreign companies. Not only was the domination by foreign companies pervasive, but it seems likely that the situation will become even worse. Future major oil supplies in Canada will not be from traditional sources in the western basin. Rather, oil and gas supplies will be increasingly derived from massive oil sands plants on exploration sites in the Arctic Islands and on the east coast offshore. These future sources of supply require vast sums of money and a great deal of technology, technology which is often beyond the financial resources of small Canadian-owned independent companies. Foreign-owned companies were and in many cases still are in the best position to take advantage of the future opportunities of oil and gas reserves.

Given this situation, the following questions must be asked. What government in the developed world would tolerate this degree of foreign participation in an industry as significant as oil and gas? What government would allow such dominance in a strategic industry which in Canada's case is responsible for 10 per cent of our gross national product? These were the types of questions which the Canadian government faced in relation to its own economy in the autumn of 1980. Its response was the Canadianization objective and the policies embodied in the National Energy Program of October 28, 1980. In the NEP we sought to establish greater Canadian control of the oil and gas industry by the establishment of, and the increase in control by, Petro-Canada, as well as by the establishment of the Canadian ownership account which is embodied in this bill.

In the year since the announcement of the National Energy Program, some strides have been made toward Canadianization. The eighth, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, the fourteenth, Aquitaine, and the eighteenth, Petrofina, largest oil and gas companies have switched from foreign ownership to Canadian ownership and control. The level of Canadian ownership measured by upstream production reserve revenues have increased by over 6 per cent as a result of some $7.5 billion in mostly private sector acquisitions. Petro-Canada, the nationally-owned oil company, now has refining and marketing facilities across Canada, after its recent acquisition of Petrofina.

Although the government is generally pleased with its progress, it realizes that there is much to be done. Before the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation this week it was rather impressive when the representatives of Petro-Canada indicated that for the $2.9 billion of investment made by the Government of Canada in Petro-Canada, the market value of the company is now estimated at $8 billion to $9 billion.

Of course, this is a nice increase in the value of that asset and an impressive capital gain. It is important for taxpayers to see a capital gain of that magnitude. If we look at the entire oil and gas industry and at the amount of capital gain we will see during the course of this decade, there is no question that we will see even greater gains than this one, which represents almost a 300 per cent increase. If we calculate the dividends and interest payments which will be made to foreign countries, principally to the United States, we see the urgency of getting on with the Canadianization program. It is for this reason that we are proposing the establishment of the Canadian ownership charge and the Canadian ownership account.

The Canadian ownership special charges, used initially to help Petro-Canada's acquisition of Petrofina Canada Incorporated, will consist of the following: a special charge on domestic petroleum received for processing or consumption in Canada and foreign petroleum amd petroleum products imported into Canada. Currently the charge is $7.25 per cubic metre, which is the ceiling set by this bill for the charge. No further increases are authorized by this legislation. Second, there will be special taxes increasing the natural gas and gas liquids tax, which is a tax on marketable natural gas, propane, ethane and butane. Increases in the natural gas tax are now 14 cents per gigajoule. The increases in the taxes on propane, ethane and butane are $3.55, $2.60 and $3.95 per cubic metre respectively. These amounts are the ceilings set in the bill for the increases. They would not be applied to exports of natural gas and gas liquids. No further increases are authorized by Bill C-103.

Revenue from these charges will be placed in the Canadian ownership account. Initially the revenues will be used to help defray the cost of the Petro-Canada acquisition. In future, the use of any funds from the Canadian ownership account for other acquisitions would have to be authorized by the governor in council, acting on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Such uses would be subject to a negative resolution in Parliament, in the Senate and the House of Commons.

It should be made clear that the direction of the Canadianization thrust has also been toward the mobilization of predominantly private Canadian investment—from existing companies, pension plans, insurance funds and individuals. To a great extent this policy has succeeded, since all but one of a dozen acquisitions to date have been by private companies. Furthermore, the government is acting as a catalyst for the establishment of a co-operative energy corporation which will bring into the oil and gas sector the savings of millions of Canadian co-operative members. Senator Argue played an important part in negotiating that arrangement with the Canadian co-operative movement.

A misconception which we have heard, particularly from abroad, is that the government is creating an unattractive environment for foreign firms which will reduce the value of these firms, thus allowing them to be purchased at fire sale prices. This is simply not true. The facts are that Canadian companies have paid prices which are above market value for foreign-owned assets. Furthermore, foreign-owned oil and gas subsidiaries trading in Canadian exchanges have done no worse than their Canadian-owned counterparts.

Another misconception involves the belief that the Canadianization policies for the energy sector will be applied in all energy sectors of the economy, specifically the minerals sector. The government has already stated that this is not the case and the evidence on the difference in the foreign ownership and control situation in the two industries is a major reason for the difference in the policies.

Finally, the objective of Canadianization does not mean that foreign investment and ownership in the oil and gas business is no longer wanted in Canada. Canada is well known for its exciting geological potential. The combined financial and fiscal incentive package offered by the government makes Canada one of the most attractive countries for investment. For example, a foreign investor operating in the north will, after tax deductions and incentive payments, be spending only 53 cents of every exploration dollar. In fact, a recent comparison made by Petro-Canada of rates of return expected by a foreign investor from a representative pool of new oil shows the following: Canada lands, 27.7 per cent; 24.4 per cent in the United Kingdom; in the United States, 21.6 per cent; and in Norway it is 18.3 per cent. I repeat that these calculations are for foreign investors.

The figures reveal that we have created an environment which will be attractive to foreign investors when compared to other locations. The government welcomes their participation and asks only that they take into account the legitimate aspirations of Canadians to own a share of this vital sector of our economy and exercise some control over decision-making in the petroleum industry.

This view is widely supported by the vast majority of Canadians. Indeed, it is one of the most popular programs established by the government in the National Energy Program. The results of a poll conducted by the Canadian Petroleum Association last year show that 84 per cent of Canadians favour the government's move to make the oil and gas industry at least 50 per cent Canadian-owned by 1990. This is a very important statistic because it is taken from a poll which was carried out by the Canadian Petroleum Association. Many of its senior members are not Canadian-owned petroleum corporations.

With respect to the Canadian ownership special charge, I would like to mention the signficant change that was made to these provisions as they appeared in Bill C-94. The legislative authority that appeared in Bill C-94 to raise the Canadian ownership special charge above the present level has been removed. Under the new amendments, the existing Canadianization charge can be decreased, but not increased beyond that level by order in council. The change is as follows: the ceiling on the Canadian ownership special charge on petroleum has been lowered from $25 to $7.25 per cubic metre. The ceiling on increases to the excise tax on natural gas has been lowered from 60 cents to 14 cents per gigajoule and the ceiling on increases to the excise tax on natural gas and gas liquids has been lowered from $17 per cubic metre to $2.60, $3.55 and $3.95 on ethane, propane and butane respectively.

Therefore, this bill which is before us today comprises an important part of the National Energy Program. It puts in place the amended price which was foreseen when the policy was adopted; that is, that we would have one price for the oil in the existing western basin which was produced at relatively lower cost and that we have a higher price for the much more expensively produced oils discovered in the high Arctic or on the offshores of the east coast or the Beaufort Sea. We would have a new oil price for the tar sands, for tertiary recovery, as well as for the discovery of new oil in the western basin.

It also provides for the compensation on imported oil which has allowed Canadian oil prices to be well below world prices wherein we have had a gradual build-up in prices during the last several years. Consequently, we have had a greater growth than many western industrialized nations.

Therefore, I would contribute my support for this Energy Administration Act which is before the House. I hope that it will receive the full consultation, discussion and detailed consideration which has already been given to the Petro-Canada bill in the standing committee. At this point, I must compliment the members of that committee who have been meeting from nine o'clock in the morning until ten o'clock at night with only a break at lunch and dinner. I can attest to the fact that the committee is working very hard. It will have a great deal more work to do in the next few weeks in considering the bills which are before us. However, I am sure we will carry it through and conduct a thorough study at the committee stage on all bills, but particularly on Bill C-103 which is one of the most important aspects of the entire National Energy Program.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to contribute to the debate on Bill C-103. This bill is an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and a measure to impose many new taxes on Canadians. This bill authorizes two taxes which are already imposed upon energy consumers. Certainly, it bears almost no resemblance to the promises which were made by the Liberal Party during the last election when they promised Canadians cheap gas.

The petroleum compensation charge is currently levied at $6.30 per barrel. This results in price increases at the pump of 24 cents per gallon. The Liberal candidate who ran against me in the last federal election stated that gas would not go up any more than 8 cents to 10 cents per gallon under a Liberal government. Obviously, he was being provided with false information by the Liberal Party with regard to cheap gas. But what is new about that? In addition, the PCC provides that the maximum would be about $12 a barrel and could thus raise prices by about 24 cents.

The Canadian ownership charge which was used to pay for Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina is levied at $1.15 a barrel and results in gasoline prices being 4 cents per gallon more expensive. As was pointed out by my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), all that money—approximately $1 billion—went to Belgium in order to buy this company and provided absolutely nothing for the Canadian economy or any Canadian.

The government earns a total of approximately 60 cents per gallon of gasoline. A sampling of some major United States and Canadian cities has shown that the price of gasoline in some U.S. cities is less expensive. For example, the price of gasoline in Seattle is almost 3 cents per litre, or 13 cents per gallon, less than that sold in Vancouver. The price of gasoline in Detroit and Windsor is virtually the same. Other regions in the United States sell gasoline at 99 cents a gallon. Of course, this has been brought about by government regulations being removed. However, in Canada we see more government regulations and interference which drives the price of energy higher.

The government has given various assurances that the price of Canadian oil will remain below prevailing world prices. The price of old oil will not exceed 75 per cent of average world oil, and the price of new oil will not exceed 100 per cent on a floating year average. However, this does not protect consumers as the bulk of the federal taxes are added after the comparison is made. Thus, while crude oil may be cheaper at the wellhead, consumers may actually be paying more than the world price at the pump. This policy of the Liberal Party to pay world price for oil has had disastrous consequences on the price of gas and heating oil and what have you. This actually goes back to about 1960 when the Diefenbaker government introduced the road to resources program to open up the north. But unfortunately, in 1963, the Liberals dumped the road to resources program and did absolutely nothing about developing our resources in the north. If they had continued with Mr. Diefenbaker's road to resources program we would be self-sufficient today and we would not be paying world price for oil.

Also, imports are much higher than needed to complement Canadian supply. Canadian crude is being shut in. The result is that the PCC is being used to pay for imported oil that we do not even need.

The Conservative Party has long maintained that the introduction of these two taxes by notice of Ways and Means was improper. Now the multiple injuries arising from the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are still being assessed. This budget is a far cry from the sensible budget brought in under the Progressive Conservatives, as theirs was not a budget which was trying to look for every conceivable, possible way to tax Canadians more and more. There is certainly a sharp contrast between the two.

Now, along comes the Liberal energy minister's National Energy Program, riddled with bullet holes which he tries to plug with all the dexterity of a one-armed paper hanger. The actions he announced last Thursday, designed to adjust his programs to the new reality of world oil glut and the shutdown of production in western Canada, managed to offend both producers and consumers in equal measure. Will these patch-up measures introduced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) result in resumed production in Canada's oil fields and the accelerated programs of exploration which the minister foresees? I ask, will they do that? The answer, almost certainly, is no. The minister himself indicated he knows it when he said that if the people who buy and sell oil do not act as he urges them, he will implement further measures if warranted. They will be warranted, all right, especially if the world glut continues and world prices keep coming down, as the minister hopes and prays they will not.

I would like to speak for a few moments about the bell ringing and about our reference for having the bill split up. We now find that the 98 cents a gallon taxing authority sought by the minister has been reduced to 52 cents a gallon. The bell ringing has saved Canadians 46 cents a gallon in possible taxes under Bill C-103. On April 4, the Conservatives voted against the 53 cents a gallon tax. The Liberals voted for the 52 cents a gallon tax. One should compare that to 18 cents a gallon tax.

Because the bill was split, this tax will be voted on three more times in the House of Commons between now and June 30. It can be stopped or reduced if the Liberal MPs can be convinced to vote against it. Concerned Canadians should write or phone their Liberal MPs and ask them to vote against the 52 cents a gallon taxing authority, as they promised in the last election that gas would not be increased over 18 cents a gallon. Public support for our bell ringing has already saved 46 cents a gallon. So let us see the Liberal hon. members getting down to business here and stopping this other huge increase.

Bill C-102, which is tied in with Bill C-103, would allow cabinet, not the elected members, to set up unlimited numbers of Crown corporations. There are 438 Crown corporations now. We do not need any more Crown corporations. Taxpayers will pay but the people they elect will not be able to vote on whether or not the taxpayer wants cabinet to run around spending money on new businesses. There will be a tax of four cents a gallon forever, to allow cabinet members to buy whatever they choose.

Bill C-101, which is also connected with Bill C-103, would allow the Liberal cabinet to give $4.9 billion of taxpayers' money to the board of directors of Petro-Canada to spend as it sees fit. The Liberals voted to decrease money for health care and post-secondary education by over $500 million. Instead, they want that money to go to the board of directors of Petro-Canada. So much for their priorities.

We all remember Bill C-94, an earlier energy bill, and Bill C-103 is a devilish offspring of Bill C-94. The Liberal government has conceded that the energy bill will be split into eight separate bills in ways suggested by the Progressive Conservative Party. In addition, the Conservatives forced the government to concede to a timetable which guarantees over three months of debate and guarantees Canadian citizens the right to come before committees. It also guarantees members of Parliament the right to vote a minimum of 24 times on the separate parts of this package. It guarantees MPs the right to move amendments and have them voted on.

It is the Canadian people who achieved a victory which will now allow taxi drivers, homeowners, farmers and small businessmen the right to come before a Parliamentary committee to explain to Members of Parliament how a 98 cents a gallon tax increase will affect the cost of food, clothing and shelter. Then Canadians will have an opportunity to judge their Members of Parliament on how they will vote on that massive tax increase.

A few things to remember about Bill C-103 and the other energy bills are that they amend 15 current pieces of legislation, they create four new taxes, they allow the government to form new energy companies at will, they include 28 cents of taxes on each gallon of gasoline, and they provide for increases of another possible 70 cents. I will certainly be using these figures in the next federal election on the campaign trail to indicate clearly to the electorate that they will not be able to believe anything they hear from any Liberal after what the Liberals said in the 1980 election. At that time, they said they would lower interest rates and would give Canadians cheap gas. They will not get away with their packaged lies in the next federal election.

The bill incorporates many parts of the National Energy Program, which has been opposed by the Conservative Party from the outset. The Conservatives were voted out of power because of an increase of 18 cents a gallon for gasoline. The Liberals have already raised gasoline prices by about 65 to 75 cents a gallon, and now they plan this further increase of 75 cents a gallon in this series of energy bills. The Trudeau government's concessions to split the omnibus energy security measure into eight separate bills to be examined by a special standing committee able to call witnesses and to assign ample time for meaningful debate in the House of Commons and at committee is exactly what the Conservative opposition requested, beginning last December. So we finally won out in that battle. The concession that a special standing committee will deal with all aspects of the energy legislation over a six week period is something we requested more than a year ago. The assigned time will effectively mean that the House of Commons will spend most of April debating second reading of various bills, that there will be six weeks of special standing committee examination with witnesses, and that most of June will be devoted to report and third reading debates in the House of Commons. The Conservative Party has brought that about.

Let me just comment on gasoline and heating oil prices. There have been 15 increases in the price of petroleum since the Liberals came into power on a promise of keeping prices down. The 1980 summary showed the last increase in 1980 brought total increases for that year to $4.70 west of the Ottawa Valley and $4.88 a barrel for eastern Canada. The Liberals promised that increases would not exceed $4 for the year. They also promised that gasoline prices would rise by no more than 14 cents a gallon. My opponents said eight cents to ten cents. Others across the country were saying 14 cents. They could not get their act together on what they were not going to give the Canadian people. In fact, increases in many centres across Canada approach twice this amount.

The 1981 summary shows that prices of gasoline rose by about 12.5 cents per litre or 56 cents a gallon, and heating oil by 7.9 cents per litre or 36 cents per gallon during the year. The Conservative Party stated we would not raise the price of heating oil. The last thing that should be increased in this country is the price of heating oil. However, that does not bother the Liberals.

In all, crude oil rose in price by $8.40 a barrel, not including special levies of $1.86 imposed and subsequently removed during the year. Federal taxes accounted for 75 per cent of this increase. In comparison, the Conservative budget would have raised crude oil prices by $4.50 a barrel. You can see the difference.

I now want to deal with oil sands. The blame for the delays with the oil sands projects, both Cold Lake and Alsands, rests squarely on the federal government. If the government had been reasonable with Alberta two years ago, both projects would have long been underway. The immediate problem with Alsands is beyond the government's control. World prices are falling. That is not the time to negotiate a rate of return.

The government's Canadianization policy is a distraction from the real task of finding oil. Since the mid-1970s, Canadianization of the oil and gas industry had been proceeding at a measured but accelerating pace. The Canadianization policy, a bastardization of the policy that we introduced while in power in order to differentiate ours from the Liberal's nationalization policy, has completely destablized the industry.

The government has completely twisted the rationale behind high energy costs. Whereas our government was prepared to accelerate the rise in the price of energy in order to encourage new supplies and only secondarily to encourage conservation and raise government revenues, the present government has raised prices, first, as a means of increasing government taxes, second to conserve oil and only third to encourage production.

While consumer prices for gasoline are only slightly more than they would have been under the Crosbie budget, heating oil is much more costly. There is no equivalent to our energy tax credit which Canadians would have been enjoying these past two years. They have lost that. The consumer is worse off under the disastrous budget of this Minister of Finance.

The larger Canadian companies have used the Canadianization incentives as a means of growing to a point where their debt load threatens their existence. They have not found any more oil as a result of their increased size, but now they can at least compete with the multinationals.

Small Canadian-owned companies have experienced the brunt of the National Energy Program's contradictory policies. The pricing and exploration policy has more than removed any benefits from Canadianization. Some of the multinational oil companies have chosen to sell out, but most have had no choice but to stay with a decreased exploration budget. They are laying off large numbers of employees at the present time.

In conclusion I will say that two years of this Liberal government has produced an increased burden on consumers and a certainty that Canada's chance at obtaining oil self-sufficency by the early 1990s has been lost forever.

The way to measure whether you have a good government, good policies or good legislation is by the investment you attract. Not one aspect of the National Energy Program or of Bill C-103 has attracted one dime of investment. The NEP was responsible for driving over $18 billion of investment money out of this country. That was the last nail in the coffin. The NEP has just about destroyed the free enterprise system in Canada. This country cannot survive economically with that amount of money leaving the country.

The New Democratic Party has spent considerable time goading the Liberal government into these nationalization policies. They will have to accept a large part of the responsibility for the implementation of the National Energy Program, Bill C-103 and all the other bills with regard to their disastrous effect on the Canadian economy. It is certainly helping economic policies in the United States. They would be a lot worse off there if it were not for our $18 billion.

Now that the NEP has got the Liberals into this disastrous nationalization policy, their leader and the premier of the province of Manitoba have called for exchange controls. Their answer to the disastrous NEP is to bring in exchange controls. When you ask for such controls to be brought in to stop the outflow of capital from Canada to the United States and other countries, you do not have an answer to anything.

If you have good government and good policies, you attract money rather than drive it out. I hope the Liberal Party will wake up and realize that it is doing absolutely nothing to attract investment and to assist the Canadian economy. If they had any sense, they would withdraw this whole energy package and start again from scratch. I advise them to get free enterprisers to assist them, those with a knowledge of the industry, rather than socialist academics who write reams of theory on these different policies. We on this side can certainly lend them some people to draft sensible policies with regard to energy. I suggest they take another look at the Crosbie budget. It would be a step in the right direction.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today we are dealing with an extremely complex piece of legislation. When it is sorted out and implemented, we will have gone a long way toward helping this country progress and participate in the great future that will be ours. It should be in place before long. Like many Canadians, I abhor the fact that every time action legislation is planned, there is a long time lag before it is implemented, due to tactics that serve no purpose other than to obstruct.

Before talking about the petroleum compensation charge and a few other items, I should refer to the interesting outlook of members opposite about the energy program in Canada. On the one hand they want the private sector to look after it all. They make interesting observations about our energy program, but they do not get their act together. A predecessor of mine, who has been mentioned in the House in two different ways by members opposite, the Hon. C. D. Howe, was responsible for helping Canada, particularly in the west, to get their product to market by pipeline. That helped to raise Canada to a new plateau and helped with our GNP. It provided revenue from outside sources through the marketing process and by bringing the opportunity to the manufacturing centre to obtain energy from an exciting new source in quantity large enough to be significant.

What we are about to do now through the National Energy Program, I believe, is another of the very important items in the building blocks of Canada. We must recognize that the country and the world is changing profoundly and changing quickly in recent years. We have had the opportunity to be flexible and do better than most countries partly because of our natural resources but more because the will of the people is to make this country work and to take advantage of our resources, share them with one another and take a responsible position in the world in which we live.

At present there is a lack of activity in the oil industry, which is having a profound economic effect, for many reasons. It seems to be a temporary situation. I honestly believe that when this bill has been passed, when a total national energy program is in place, we will have opportunities for Canadians to control their own resources, and that is of fundamental importance to the good of Canada. We will see Canadians participating in the development of the oil and gas industry as never before and reaping the profits from it. The people of Canada will more properly have their say on how the resource—which by everyone's admission is a non-renewable resource and is not infinite—will be husbanded for the future use of the country. We can make immense use of this prime energy resource at this time in history and at the same time reduce our dependence on other parts of the world. That is a key element of the National Energy Program and the legislation before us. It will put us in a position where we will not have to rely on decisons made outside our country. We can make those independent Canadian decisions that are not hidebound to what happens in the area south of us or in Europe or in the Arab states.

We want to maintain control over our destiny, we want to be able to plan our future in our own Canadian way. In order to do that, some things are absolutely essential. One of the essential elements is the opportunity to control that non-renewable resource, oil and gas and subsidiary products.

It is not only for its fuel and heating capabilities but for all of the other chemical elements that we count on oil to produce, to drive the economy and to give us a chance to trade in the world on a truly competitive basis. We will be able to make many of the rules ourselves here and will not have to depend on other people and on their resources. No other country would allow a great percentage of its prime resources to be controlled by others. The National Energy Program gives us an opportunity to regain control of our resources and put them to good use.

The process has been an interesting one. It is not admitted that there has been as much consultation as really has taken place in this area. The opposition is trying to create the impression that no one on this side of the House ever listens, that we on this side never sit down with those involved in the industry and learn from them.

At another point in my life, Mr. Speaker, I was involved very much in a body interested in the business community, namely, the chamber of commerce. I still have some private enterprise thoughts and feelings and the desire to ensure that the government listens to all segments of Canada, including the business community, particularly in things of this nature. A great deal of consultation has gone on and continues to go on.

What the hon. members opposite fail to say is that one of the big opportunities of the National Energy Program is that Canadians will be encouraged to invest in Canada and that by doing so we will gain from our investment in our own resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masters: We must recognize that we really need to have Canadians with a very strong sense of being Canadians, in position in large enterprises such as the oil and gas industry. We must have such Canadians in place so that they view things from a "Canada first" point of view. If members opposite find that a disagreeable or socialistic attitude, I am sorry. I am a proud Canadian. I feel we have the right to expect that we as Canadians will benefit most from our resources. As a trading nation we must have the investment dollars coming from other parts of the world. We must keep our doors open wide to that. The National Energy Program does not destroy that idea. It simply means that Canadians will be encouraged and will be given greater incentives to take a larger share of their future and be in a better position to direct their future.

I heard some interesting comments during this debate. Some hon. members spoke as if the National Energy Program were the cause of all our economic woes. There has to be some recognition that the current glut of oil was not anticipated. That may be the prime reason for the lack of activity in such projects as the Alsands project.

We all know we must keep searching for new oil. The petrochemical industry will be a large part of our present and future energy for the next 30 or 40 years. All of a sudden we have a downturn in our economy and in the world economy. There are other parts of the National Energy Program which have already begun to work. Conservation is beginning to have its effect. We find that we now have a glut of the product. We find we do not have the same sense of immediate urgency to look for those petroleum resources that we know are there.

We should look into this aspect of it. We know that part of the ongoing future of Canada will be in the megaprojects. One of the most important megaprojects will centre around the tar sands of Alberta and the resources of other parts of Canada as they come onstream. We have been blessed by the fact that it appears that we have more conventional sources of petroleum available to us than we expected. Those resources still exist and we must not forget that. We should realize the potential of the Alsands and other such resources. Nevertheless, the need to do so is not as immediate as it once was.

A timing dilemma was thrust upon us by a very sudden change in the world situation but, being the eternal optimist, I do not think we should be fooled by that because I expect we will see a greater need for energy in the future as the world's economy and Canada's economy turn around. The wisdom of putting in place a National Energy Program with which we can all live will be seen.

I for one am glad we now have a limit on the time for debate of the important matters before us because we really need to put into place legislation on which people can count for a period of time, and when the National Energy Program is passed and implemented, those people who will want to invest in this field—and many of them will be Canadians—will have a feeling of certainty. They will have the necessary knowledge of how to proceed and where to proceed.

However, the bottom line is that the National Energy Program will give us energy self sufficiency on schedule. It will give us the proper amount of Canadian control, and it will give Canadians the opportunity to invest more heavily in their own country and to benefit to the maximum from their prime energy resource of the day coming from petroleum.

I am pleased to have had this chance to participate briefly in this debate today. I hope we will continue to act in the proper fashion and get this legislation through so that we can carry on.

Finally, I remind all hon. members that there has been a great deal of consultation with the producing provinces and the people in the industry. They have been listened to, and I believe we have come up with the game plan Canada needs and can live with, and I believe it will help us to enjoy the prosperity which rightfully belongs to us.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my principal comments I would like to refer to some of the remarks which have been made by the two previous speakers on the other side of the House.

I find it quite distressing that there should be such a broad difference of opinion on the course this country should follow in energy matters. We seem to have a dialogue of the deaf. Perhaps it is a dialogue of the deaf, the blind and the mute. I do not know how the mute carry on a dialogue, but there seems to be no understanding whatsoever—there is a disbelief—that the National Energy Program as set down in the House in October of 1980 has so far succeeded in driving Canadian enterprise out of this country. The minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) just does not believe that. I do not know why he does not believe that because it has. Somehow he has managed to convince the "trained donkeys" behind him of his view of the degree to which that false budget, which was more properly called the "National Energy Program, of October of 1980" has, in effect, destroyed a great part of the industry in Canada.

I heard expressions of hope from the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters). We must exist only on hope. We cannot survive on the basis of the legislation which is being brought before us. All we have left is hope.

This legislation basically boils down to the question of Canadian ownership. I think that is the main thrust. But I wonder if it is. When the Liberal Party says "Canadian" and "Canadian ownership", it somehow feels that ownership through the government is the same thing as Canadian ownership. Perhaps that is our problem. I do not believe that. I believe that Canadian ownership is ownership by Canadians individually, not through their government. Hon. members opposite have talked themselves into believing that when they say "Canada" and "Canadians" they are the spokesmen for Canadians. On a majority basis they are spokesmen here, I agree, but let hon. members opposite not carry this to the point where when they say "Canadian ownership" they mean ownership by the Canadian government. That is what they intend to do through Crown corporations.

Earlier this week we dealt with one of the eight energy bills which is designed to authorize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to create as many Crown corporations in the energy field as he wishes. Presumably that will Canadianize something. It will not; it will "governmentalize", it will nationalize, but it will not encourage Canadians to invest in the energy field. We are being required to invest in Canadian enterprise through the tax system.

When the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) spoke, he said Canadian ownership could be encouraged by providing an investment climate in Canada which would induce Canadians to invest in this country. I do not believe this bill will create that kind of climate. I suppose there is a basic difference in philosophy between hon. members opposite and hon. members on this side of the House—this side to a certain point only, excluding the NDP.

The example of White Farm Equipment Company comes to my mind. White Farm Equipment Company was operating in Canada, and it got into difficulties. As a result of an application by the parent company—I think it was a 49-51 per cent proposition, the 49 per cent still being held by the parent company in Texas or somewhere in the United States—FIRA authorized the American parent to take over the White Farm Equipment Company of Canada, which manufactures not just trucks but farm implements as well. Why would an American company take on a bankrupt Canadian company? I think the answer is pretty obvious. The investment climate for Canadians to invest in Canadian companies is not nearly as good as the investment climate in Canada for Americans to invest in Canadian enterprise. That is the whole problem, and hon. members opposite consider that they are "Canadianizing" our petroleum enterprise when, in fact, they are destroying the incentive for Canadians to invest in their own country.

I have mentioned it before, and I will mention it again: whatever surpluses I have to invest I invest in Canada, and I have run into some pretty serious losses in the last couple of years as a result of the policies of this government.

Mr. Deans: That is why you are so bitter personally.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am not bitter. I am proud to have invested in Canada, but the decision to do so has been mine. That investment was not made through taxation. That is where the crazy notions come in. Why should we be required to invest in things that they choose? Why should I not have that freedom of choice? That is where the philosophical difference is, and it is high time the Canadian people realized it. In Liberal eyes Canadian ownership means government ownership; in the eyes of the Progressive Conservative Party it is ownership by Canadians through individual decisions.

• (1540)

I was speaking of taxes. We are having trouble in the extracting industries, as I think the hon. member for Algoma and the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon would be aware. However, there is one extracting industry which is flourishing, that is the Department of National Revenue, the greatest extracting industry in Canada. It extracts more money from Canadians now than it has ever done in the past, in order to create what this government claims to be a Canadianization policy. A governmentalization policy is the best name for it because that is what it is.

If it were not so disastrous and distressing one would have to admire the ingenuity with which this government's public servants can devise means of sopping up through taxation every single pool of potential investment in Canada and discouraging individual investment decisions. It is destroying the Canadian ethos. I think of my mother and father who decided before the turn of the century to head west, one from Ontario and one from Nova Scotia. I still think of that trip in about 1890 when they went by train from Truro, I guess it was—because I am sure it did not stop at Stewiacke—to High Bluff, Manitoba. They went by their own decision to open up this country, and how many are doing that today? Unfortunately, not too many.

The public servants I mentioned, who are so intent on sopping up everthing they can by way of taxes, are motivated of course by one thing, the high burden of debt this country is faced with, which was created by that side over the past 13 or 14 years. We celebrated 14 years of debt earlier this week. They are also motivated, I suggest, by the principle of socialism, in total disregard of the experience anyone can see with their eyes half open. It is beyond the doubt of any reasonable person that governments are not fitted to run industry as efficiently as the private sector which has other motivations. The comfortable security of state employment is enough to deaden initiative and incentive for all time, and it causes the public interest to be disregarded in an enterprise-oriented role.

Public servants have a role to play, I do not question that. It is a matter of service to the public. But they are not, by training or the nature of their jobs, capable of making the same sort of decisions about running an enterprise that the private sector is.

Mr. Deans: How about Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and a few others?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The public service by its nature and makeup is just not equipped to be entrepreneurial, particularly when management is loaded with political appointees. And I can think of a lot of them. That role properly belongs to the private sector.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been over-dramatizing the situation. But, unfortunately, the drama and tragedy of Canada is there for all to see. This government, in its economic, constitutional and other policies, seems bent on destroying this country, for reasons which I am at a loss to understand. It is sad to have to make that comment but I am forced to because, as I look back over just the last nine and a half years in which I have been in the House, I have seen Canada's unity, its potential being, shattered and lying there in front of us.

Last Saturday should have been a day of rejoicing, and it was because the Queen was here. It was not a day of rejoicing, let us be honest, because the Constitution was here. I think everyone, if they are honest with themselves, is prepared to admit that. I was delighted the Queen was here, but what changes did she bring with the Constitution? It should have been a day of rejoicing, but that feeling is tempered by the problems created by this government through its confrontational approach to every problem, economic, linguistic or others, and this in a federal union. It is not only nonsense, it is disastrous, sad and disgraceful.

On Wednesday of this week, Mr. Speaker, we gave second reading to a bill which would permit Canadian corporations to expropriate from non-Canadians, and which entitles them to apply for and obtain special concessions from the federal government such as write-offs, subsidies, loans and licences, which would be denied to those corporations who do not meet the requirements of Canadian ownership. I listened to that debate on Wednesday and heard some members on the other side say this will encourage foreign investment. That, Mr. Speaker, defies human logic. Why should any non-Canadian risk his money in an enterprise in Canada when he is faced with, not the likelihood or the possibility, but the certainty of having that investment taken away from him without any say in it whatsoever? I cannot imagine anything more calculated to destroy the desire of foreign investors to invest in this country. And these trained donkeys over there all voted for it.

Mr. MacBain: Well, we are not horses' asses like you are.

• (1550)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): As I have said, I cannot imagine any non-Canadian investing in Canada with such a provision on the statute books. If non-Canadian investment is being deliberately discouraged, from what source is the investment to come? That was not a very smart comment the hon. member just made, was it?

Mr. MacBain: I would not have said it if it were not true.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We have heard there is no sufficient private investment in Canada to fill the void. I have asked myself for a number of years since being in the House, and for a number of years before that, whether there has been any real encouragement to Canadians to invest in Canada. The fiscal climate is just not geared that way. It is geared to collect money from Canadians so that the Canadian government can do the investing for them. That is what this government calls Canadianization. But I do not. I do not think that is Canadianization at all. I think it is governmentalization, and that is wrong. It is a dead end. There is no light at the end of that tunnel at all.

Stemming from the fact that there is no proper encouragement for Canadians to invest in this country, there are two possible conclusions confronting us. Perhaps the government is planning to bleed Canadians through taxes so that it, the government, can do all our investing for us. That is, of course, a form of state socialism, so dear to the NDP but foreign to the real Canadian Liberalism of Laurier and St. Laurent. I do not understand how Liberalism came on such sad days. If that is not the explanation, is the government planning to drive foreign capital out of the country entirely and leave us as a resource rich country, which is not going to be developed, for some non-Canadian predatory power? Those are pretty extreme conclusions to have to reach. We could become the battleground of the latter half of the twentieth century for those who want the resources we have, which we have so badly abused, and which we have failed to encourage Canadians to reap and harvest.

What sort of real full-blooded Canadianism is this? It is not my vision of Canada, nor, as I suggested in my comments a little earlier, was it the vision of my mother and father when they went out west. Where has Canada's individual initiative gone? I suggest that it is being sapped by this government's attempts, very successful I have to admit, to cause citizens to look to government for all things; womb to tomb, if you like. It is the great Robin Hood. The Liberals are robbing and they are a bunch of hoods, there is no doubt about that. But it is not the Robin Hood of history in any proper sense.

The government has created a brand of Canadians who seem to think that whenever they are in distress or have a little problem they have to rely on government. The government has encouraged that and thereby it has robbed Canadians of their initiative. Is this being done deliberately? Do not ask me. Is it malicious, or is it just downright stupidity? I wonder if it is MacEachenomics? It could be. One thing certain is that Canada is being taxed out of its patrimony. Canada will end up without its patrimony. I wonder what sort of country it will be when that happens.

A few other elements of our problem need to be underlined. There was a time when Canadians were taxed legally by parliamentary decision. That used to happen. In this bill, as we shall discover, we are being asked to cede—and no doubt the donkeys will assemble in sufficient numbers to grant the cession—

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who used the language. We are being asked to cede to the minister of energy in conjunction with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) the decision on how taxes will be levied.

My recollection of the constitutional history of this institution, in which fortunately we can still speak freely, is that there were a number of monarchs or heads of state who decided to levy taxes on their own without consulting Parliament. In fact, it was that proclivity on the part of a number of British monarchs which brought this institution into being to be sure there were constraints placed on the monarch, that he would act within those constraints and that Parliament would determine what they were, would vote the money to the monarch and he could then do what he wanted.

Now we are seeing a reversal of that. I do hope, Mr. Speaker—because you will be out of a job—that this does not mean the end of Parliament. What we are doing is giving two ministers the power to increase taxes, and that is wrong. This bill also will make legal what has been collected illegally for over two years. The retroactive elements of this bill are really quite impressive. I do not know whether the people in the gallery are aware that they have been paying taxes for which there is no legal statute to entitle the government to collect those taxes, but they are paying them nonetheless. So am I, so is everyone here and so is every Canadian paying them, not only at the gas pump but when paying for fuel oil for furnaces. These taxes have been imposed for over two years. They will now, if this bill passes, become legal.

Finally, the unit that was once taxed—and I think this is supposed to introduce an element of confusion, and it does—namely, the $8 a barrel is now to become taxed on the cubic metre. I still have not worked out just how many barrels there are in a cubic metre or vice versa, but I gather there are more barrels than cubic metres than vice versa.

Miss Nicholson: It is 0.1637.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is 0.1637? I had better make a note of that because I will need it one day if we go into this business. But the tax limit on a barrel which was $8 will become $350 on the cubic metre. Let us not get too excited about that because it means the tax level will be about $55, up from $8. That is only eight times more than the current tax. I guess we need not worry too much.

May I call it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSAL FOR REVIEWS OF EXTERNAL, DEFENCE AND AID POLICIES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam)

That, in the opinion of this House, a full parliamentary review should be undertaken of Canada's external, defence and aid policies to redefine Canada's objectives in these areas.

She said: Mr. Speaker, as you have just said, this motion calls for a full parliamentary review of Canada's external, defence and aid policies in order to redefine Canada's objectives in these areas. Since this motion was first proposed almost two years ago today, there have been several parliamentary reviews in specific areas of foreign and defence policy. There was the parliamentary subcommittee engaged in preparations for the conference on security and co-operation in Europe. There was the parliamentary full committee discussing Canada's relationships with the United States under the NORAD agreement. There was the discussion by the committee of the Canadian Armed Forces Reserves and, of course, the very important task force on north-south relations. There is a more recent committee, which I am glad to say is still sitting, on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. Another committee was terminated just a few days ago on security and disarmament in preparation for UNSSOD II. Other committees have also been active in defence and foreign affairs matters, such as Canadian trade relations with the United States. A very important report was made in that regard.

There is no question in my mind that many of these specific parliamentary inquiries have had some influence on government policy, particularly those reports which have forged new paths, developed new concepts, re-examined past practices and proposed different ones. I am thinking particularly of the interim report of the subcommittee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. I am thinking of the full report of the Commons committee on security and disarmament, but of the minority report prepared by six members of the full committee. Also the north-south task force has had some effect upon the position of government in north-south relations. Particularly when the committees, subcommittees and task forces have differentiated themselves from the status quo and have looked at exciting new ways in which policy might be developed, they have been important and influential.

In another respect many of the specific parliamentary inquiries have been valuable because they have brought forth a host of Canadians as witnesses or as brief writers representing hundreds of thousands of Canadians and therefore have helped to increase Canadian interest, concern and involvement in international affairs. Canadians care a great deal that the Parliament of Canada should be involved and make recommendations to the government on these matters. When it looked the other day for a moment as if the Latin American committee would be sabotaged, the protest from the Canadian public was so vast that the committee's life was in fact restored and retained.

We could continue with specific parliamentary inquiries. In the last two years since I put forward this legislation, there have been more than half a dozen. We could have a specific inquiry on the Middle East. Canada's relations there are a very important matter. We could have a specific inquiry on CIDA, its objectives, how well they are being carried out, and whether they should be defined differently. We could have a specific parliamentary inquiry on the structure and operations of the Department of External Affairs. I am sure many of my colleagues and friends in the other parties feel as I do, that we still need a comprehensive parliamentary inquiry to thoroughly examine Canada's role in the world. We have not had a real study of Canadian external policy embracing defence and development policies for approximately a dozen years. A foreign poicy for Canadians came out more that a dozen years ago. Since then there has not been any comprehensive government or parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The last one was in 1968.

Miss Jewett: Yes, the last one was in 1968. Many people such as George Ignatieff, Walter Gordon and others, have suggested a royal commission. Perhaps the matter has reached such a degree of uncertainty about our foreign policy that we should have a royal commission. There are many good things to be said for it, but if we had a parliamentary inquiry with the power to travel across the country and to examine any aspects of Canadian foreign affairs, it might do as well.

There has been no effective leadership from the government in the field of foreign affairs in the last decade. I can think of only one example where Canada played an active leadership role, although it turned out to be only rhetoric, and that is at the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament in 1978 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spelled out his policy of nuclear suffocation. Professor M. J. Tucker said at York University in February of this year at a conference on Canada and UNSSOD II:

> The strategy itself seemed to hold out hope that something could be done in a tangible way about the nuclear arms race in all its dimensions, while the prime ministerial presence at the special session seemed to suggest that Canada would be actively involved in this process.

Rather than Canada being actively involved in this process, Canada has said and done almost completely contradictory things. The Prime Minister, the Secretary for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) have agreed on one matter. They have said, and indeed even boasted about the fact, that Canada is the only power which could have developed nuclear arms and did not. Canada has now said that it will no longer have nuclear arms on its land and the new fighter aircraft will not be nuclear equipped. They have made a great deal of the fact that Canada has insisted upon there being no nuclear role for Canadian forces in Europe. In other words, they have proudly said time and time again that Canada is non-nuclear. On the other hand, they have found no inconsistency whatsoever in Canada being involved in the creation of the guidance system for the new Cruise missile. It has given substantial grants to Litten Industries, for example, which is helping in the manufacture of the guidance system for the Cruise missile.

More recently, the government says that it has found no inconsistency in Canada's secretly agreeing, as we have now learned, to flight-test the air-launch Cruise missile over Canadian soil.

When we asked the Prime Minister approximately a year ago if he would make any statment on whether or not the neutron bomb should be deployed in Europe, he said that he did not have a position and that it was a matter for the Europeans to decide upon. Not only has Canada contradicted the strategy of nuclear suffocation or its spirit, it has, perhaps even more seriously, contradicted the spirit and, I believe, the letter of its own non-nuclear weapon status.

I cannot understand how the government can state that we are proud of the fact that we will not have nuclear arms on our soil, not equip our forces with nuclear arms or equip our aircraft with nuclear arms but will gladly equip every one else. I am not the only one who viewed that as illogical reasoning behind its policy. The consultative committee on disarmament, meeting with the ambassador for disarmament, recently shared much the same view.

When a number of Europeans declare that they do not want nuclear weapons on their soil, the government scoffs at them. The government scoffs at the peace movement in Europe and claims that that movement is making unilateral decisions, as if the government itself did not make them. The government scoffs at the Kennedy-Hatfield proposals in the United States and calls them unilateralist.

The government's position on the nuclear arms position, or lack of position, is so baffling that six of us who are on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence felt obliged to issue a minority report. Not only does a lack of leadership and follow-through on the part of the Canadian government become apparent in this area, it is evident in many other areas as well. There are some unbelievable contradictions in government policy. Government policy can differ, depending on whether you listen to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as was evidenced by the Canadian responses to the imposition of martial law in Poland. Its policy with respect to that crisis was vacillating and unpopular.

Another example is Canada's position on El Salvador. Its policy was ill-informed and misjudged. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said on June 17, 1980, at the hearings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence that:

—Central America is not an area of particular concentration of interest for us.

Last year in the House he said:

—it should be remembered that historically Canada has not had strong or important links with El Salvador. It is a country near our part of the world but hardly a neighbour.

In this same speech given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he said:

In light of the full circumstances, therefore, as we see them, we are prepared to contest the U.S. policy of military aid but not to protest it; we are prepared to pronounce on it but not to denouce it; we are prepared to criticize it but not to condemn it.

A senior Canadian diplomat abroad reported to me during that period that it was extremely difficult to be a diplomat and had been for some time. The reason for this is that there is no clear foreign policy direction coming from Ottawa with no clear goals and objectives to our foreign policy. There is no leadership within the foreign policy sector in Canada and no leadership displayed by Canada in the international community.

Canada could even have played a role in the Anglo-Argentinian dispute, a role which it has often played in the past, that of mediator. I was interested to read in the Toronto Star that Ottawa declined an opportunity to mediate in the crisis and kept quiet about that opportunity. The Toronto Star report, dated April 18, 1982, stated that it emerged from Washington last week, though it went unnoticed and apparently unrecorded, that Ottawa ignored a United States request to help in the mediation. Right at the start of the crisis, according to reports from Washington, U.S. officials had asked Canada to consider how it might serve an intermediary role. Canada apparently refused this request.

Another area where we thought Canada wished to play a creative role involving taking strong diplomatic stands on some occasions and playing the more traditional mediating role on others, concerns the matter of foreign aid and development programs. Aside from the fact that the amount of Canadian aid is less than 0.5 per cent of our gross national product, the quality and direction of aid must be seriously examined. A proposition of our aid which is tied to Canadian goods and services is still too high. Some 80 per cent of all CIDA bilateral dispersements are tied. In other words, 80 per cent of the money spent on bilateral aid never goes overseas. It is spent here in Canada for Canadian aid to Canadian industry. I admit that Canadian industry does need help during these times, but why is it budgeted as foreign aid? Furthermore, the goods and services provided are often of questionable value to the cultures and economies of developing countries. If these goods and services are useful, they could often be purchased much cheaper from other developing countries.

I could proceed to question the government's policies on the voting of aid funds through multilateral development banks to regimes with the most serious human rights violations. What I want to stress is that the House has never had the opportunity to discuss the terms of reference for CIDA. It is questionable whether or not CIDA has any clear terms of reference regarding development assistance, other than those set by itself or the minister. It needs a very thorough review. This should be embraced in an important aspect of the total parliamentary review which I am requesting and that many of Canada's senior officials in the various departments we are talking about are quietly requesting. This was revealed in Miss McDougall's report.

I will conclude by pleading with other members in the House that in the absence of clear direction from the government in the presence of a multitude of contradictions, some of which I have illustrated, we must have a comprehensive study by a special committee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which would have the authority to travel throughout Canada and have the time required to conduct a thorough investigation, in order to delineate more effectively where Canada's obligations now lie, what foreign policy interests are vital and what Canada's role in the international community should be.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to review some of the current policies which are of importance to Canadians. Some of these issues have been touched, others have not. Canada's foreign policy has been relatively constant. The goals set out in the foreign policy review of 1970 continue to reflect the aspirations of Canadians. Those goals are the fostering of economic growth, safeguarding sovereignty and independence, working for peace and security, promoting social justice, enhancing the quality of life, and ensuring harmonious natural environment. These goals present continuity in Canadian foreign policy.

While the strategies of attaining these goals may change according to the environment, these goals themselves remain unchanged. There must be a constant process of foreign policy adjustment to meet changing conditions in the world, but this does not require an ad hoc, fundamental review from time to time of foreign policy goals or objectives.

Canada's foreign policy has been characterized by promotion of international co-operation and the building of international institutions. We are a middle power, not a major power, and we can only operate by co-operation. This has been the hallmark of Canadian foreign policy since the Second World War.

Canada is dependent on a world of co-operation and openness. The fact is that without this international co-operation and stability, Canada's options for a diversified set of relationships and the ability to conduct a global foreign policy become very narrow, if not so minimal as to be almost non-existent. I would like to deal with some of these current foreign policy issues, and I would say that none of these issues can be resolved without international co-operation.

I would first like to refer to the disarmament and arms control, because this is an issue of vital importance to all Canadians. I would like to begin by reminding the House that Canada's security policy has three complementary thrusts. First, we seek deterrence of war through collective security arrangements of NATO and NORAD. Second, Canada is involved in promoting efforts to achieve equitable and verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements. Third, Canada seeks to support the peaceful settlement of disputes and collective efforts to resolve underlying economic and social issues of international attention. These three goals are clear and unequivocal.

The government remains fully committed to the pursuit of equitable arms control and disarmament measures. The government has advocated and will continue to advocate the negotiation of agreements between the two major nuclear powers to achieve balanced limitations and the reduction of nuclear weapons consistent with common security. This would include binding and verifiable agreements in accordance with the strategy of suffocation put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the United Nations' First Special Session on Disarmament in 1978. The government does not favour a policy of unilateral restraints on the development and deployment of the weaponry of our allies. The strategy of suffocation was never intended to promote self-strangulation.

We attach a great deal of importance to disarmanent and arms control measures. The arms spiral must be broken, and this must begin by meaningful negotiations between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. The government will take every opportunity to reaffirm the importance it attaches to the continuation of the negotiation process between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.—

Mr. Deans: Do you feel abandoned?

Mr. Irwin: —and to the realization of a verifiable, comprehensive test-ban treaty. These priorities, together with assisting in the preparation of a conventional ban on chemical weapons and the promotion of the evolution of an effective non-proliferation regime, will guide Canadian preparations for the second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament in which Canada intends to take an active part.

In the 1980s, we must look for new ways of dealing with tension and threats to peace through new forms of consultation and crisis management, including ways of dealing with regional crises.

Mr. Speaker, it is Friday afternoon, and most hon. members have gone home. It is unfortunate.

Miss Jewett: You are all alone, Ron.

Mr. Irwin: What has happened in the world in the last ten years has been a tragedy of the first order. We can be proud of certain things. Barney Danson, a former minister of national defence, pointed them out in an article in Maclean's magazine. He said that Canada was the first NATO country to relinquish its nuclear capability. He said that we virtually invented peacekeeping, we have contributed heavily to it, and that we spend less of our GNP, 1.7 per cent, on defence than any western alliance except for Luxembourg. We have the most stringent safeguards on the export of armaments and on nuclear power plants, and we have the safest nuclear power plants. But what has happened in this decade? One cannot turn one's eyes away from it. I notice that the NDP is renowned for turning its eyes away and taking specific positions. I do not know if it is for NATO or against NATO, or whether it changes from Wednesday to Wednesday. I really do not know. I hear their party leader saying one thing and I hear their members saying another thing, much like during the debate on the Constitution. I remember they had one seat and the issue was God. They sent one hon. member to support God, one hon. member to speak against God, and the third hon. member to vote on the same issue. It is much the same as what has happened here.

The reality of the world in the last decade is that there has been a Soviet arms buildup. The situation in Afghanistan has occurred. The situation in Poland has occurred. SALT II is now ratified. Our armed forces had been drastically reduced. The situation in Iraq has occurred. Why do we get into nuclear arms? It is because it is cheaper to get into nuclear than conventional arms. Since 1945, there have been 130 wars and 25 million people have died. Isn't that something? We have spoken about World War II and World War I, but there have been 130 wars and 25 million dead. I just recently saw the results of evidence which came from the parliamentary committee mentioned by the hon. member. Even though there are now six countries in the world which have the capability of making a nuclear device, within a decade there will be 44 countries which have that ability. It staggers the imagination. The parliamentary committee did a great service. I think most of its members were more active than I was on that committee, but I must say that the committee did a great service in hearing the evidence, the pros and the cons, and in coming out with balanced and reasonable suggestions. I really do not argue with the suggestions in the minority report because I know that they came from the heart. None of us want what is happening in this world to continue. In the past decade, we have spent $4 million millions on the military. When my secretary typed out my notes, she thought it was a misspelling and only typed in the first million. No one had ever seen $4 million millions, but that is how much we have spent. What are 500,000 of our scientists, 40 per cent of our scientists in the world, doing? They are carrying out R and D for the military.

In 1980, the U.S.A. launched 14 satellites and 89 were launched by the Soviets. What are they doing up there? Forty per cent of these satellites are taking reconnaissance photography. That is ridiculous in the world that we live in. Since 1945, there have been 1,271 nuclear explosions. Who uses up most of the metals and oils in the world? It is the military. Current military spending in the world is $500 million. Anyone who knows anything about spending knows how much is being spent in the world by the military. At the same time we have this going on, 154 countries cannot grow enough food to feed their people. There are 9 million people in the world who cannot buy firewood. The trees we have now are scarce. By the year 2000, half of those will be gone.

In Haiti, one in four children dies before the age of four. This U.N. definition of "absolute poverty" blows the mind. According to that definition, 800 million people in this world live in absolute poverty. Four out of ten children complete more than three years of primary school. Of each ten children born, two die within a year, another dies before five and only five survive to 40, yet around the world we continue to spend $500 million per decade, and that is rising.

I was preparing my notes because I did not know the approach which the hon. member would take. I got to the end of one report, which I think most members have read, and it gives some comparison. Numbers do not mean much if you are not in the military. Megatons or warheads do not mean much, but Hiroshima has some meaning. We have some idea of the size of Hiroshima.

John Gellner, the editor of Canadian Defence Quarterly, estimates that the United States now has 9,500 warheads, which means nothing, equal to 3,500 megatons, which means nothing, which is equal to 200,000 Hiroshima bombs. I repeat that, 200,000 Hiroshima bombs. The U.S.S.R. has 8,000 warheads, which means nothing, equal to 7,800 megatons, which means nothing, equal to 430,000 Hiroshima bombs. Even France, which I had not thought of as a major nuclear power, has 4,700 Hiroshima bombs.

Mr. Deans: It's scary. When you stop to think about it, it is stupid, isn't it?

Mr. Irwin: I agree with the hon. member. It is scary and stupid. I agree with what Mr. Danson says. He says we have much to be proud of as Canadians. I apologize for nothing, as far as our aims are concerned. But the hon. member is absolutely right. This debate, this House and this country mean nothing unless we come to grips with the problem of disarmament in this world.

I will end with this bulletin. It was very significant to me. I will not change a word. It is from the February 1980 Disarmament Bulletin. It reads:

> The world's military budget equals the annual income of 1,800,000,000 people in the 36 poorest nations.
> In two days the world spends on arms the equivalent of a year's budget for the United Nations and its specialized agencies.
> The developed nations spend 20 times more for their military programs than for economic assistance to the poorer countries.
> The developing nations import arms at the rate of more than $6 billion a year.
> The U.S. and U.S.S.R. together account for 60 per cent of the world's military expenditures and for 75 per cent of the world's arms trade; they have more military force than all other nations combined.
> Although first in military strength, the superpowers rank lower than many other nations in indicators of social well-being.
> World military expenditures average $14,800 per soldier; public expenditures for education $230 per school-age child.
> The cost of one Trident submarine equals the cost of a year's schooling for 16,000,000 children in developing countries.
> The $80 billion a year spent on arms procurement makes munitions one of the largest industries in the world.

I have to laugh when I see what is coming out of Sweden. At one time they were making grandiose statements. I had no idea of the great arms dealer Sweden has become.

Mr. Deans: Since the Tories took over.

Mr. Irwin: I say to the hon. member, it has nothing to do with socialism. It has much to do with profit and greed. I continue the quote:

> Military and space research together get more public research funds than all social needs combined.
> The cost of the existing stockpile of weapons in the world is estimated at more than twice the value of the capital stock of all manufacturing industry in the United States.

Quite frankly, I do not accept what the hon. member says about laying down everything we have because there is not much more we can lay down in Canada. The last I saw, the natural resources of Ontario involved a larger amount than the budget of the navy and air force of Canada. We do not have that much left to lay down, but I accept the hon. member's sentiment. Her sentiment is one that has to prevail in the world or there will be no more world. We cannot talk of nations anymore. With all that devastating fire power, it cannot be nation A against nation B or nations A and B against nation C. Dag Hammarskjold said correctly in 1955 at Stanford University:

> The question is not either the nation or the world it is, rather, how to serve the world by service to our nation and how to serve the nation by service to the world.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary started off well. However, he got lost in the field of nuclear or molecular and came up with all sorts of horror stories. I did not quite know where he was going. Perhaps he was just filling in time.

I take seriously the proposition put forward by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). As she said, the motion has been on the Order Paper for almost two years. I am not clear in my mind, but I think she leaned toward the notion of a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence or perhaps a special committee, maybe joint with the other place, although probably not, coming as it did from her. I suppose she may want a travelling circus driving across Canada.

She has not given full credit to some of the institutions in Canada which provide a forum for the discussion of matters of foreign policy, defence and foreign aid policies, mainly the Canadian Institute of International Affairs from which we hear from time to time. I hope all members of the standing committee are members of that institute.

Parliamentary debate would not do. I suspect there would be barely time in the period allotted to an opposition party to have a parliamentary debate on the matter in one day. Even a long day is not enough. My impression is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would be rather opposed to this because it encroaches upon the area in which he feels he is the expert. He claims to have been the expert for the 14 years plus a few days.

I recall vividly the creation of a special foreign policy division within the prime ministerial office very shortly after he assumed that office. It gradually destroyed any creative initiative. It adversely affected the creative initiative of the foreign service then in place. It was not only on foreign policy matters. He cast off the members of the Department of External Affairs by saying "I can read a much better account in The New York Times the next day. Why do we send these people abroad?" I think he was doing one of the great members of the Canadian Public Service a great disservice. This also happened in CIDA. I could tell some horror stories of CIDA when it set out to operate on its own in complete disregard of the local representatives of Canada. It was in my experience, and I am sure it happened in the experience of others.

We now get into the other areas mentioned by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam. She got into the area of disarmament and security. She avoided the term "security" and insisted on the word "disarmament".

Miss Jewett: No, I mentioned security, too, in the minority report.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The minority report which she and a number of others decided to issue was admittedly given greater attention in the press than the principal report. But that was simply because it was a minority report, not because of its content but because some members ventured to differ from the majority. That was a report on disarmament and security, with a certain amount of emphasis on security.

We were talking about the cost of a Trident submarine perhaps enabling 16 million children to be educated in a year. Has it ever occurred to you that perhaps a Trident submarine is just making it possible for 16 million children to be educated? It is just possible that in the absence of that submarine these 16 million children would not be educated in the manner in which we would like.

Let us balance this. I am glad the parliamentary secretary mentioned that we are a middle power. Some of us develop grandiose notions about the influence we as Canadians have on the international scene. When we go abroad on holidays or on missions and are greeted as great Canadians, that is because we do not have an axe to grind. We interpret that as meaning that they think we are great, influential people who can help them. That is a misleading interpretation of the obvious welcome which foreigners have for us. We do not have the clout. Let us face it and be modest about it. Let us not get a swelled head about our influence in the foreign field. With a good foreign service we should be in a position to inform the government as to what is developing in foreign countries. It has been asked why Canada did not engage in an intermediary role. How do you "intermediarize" in a situation where there is a declared aggressor who takes over someone else's territory? It is difficult to take part, because they end up in positions from which it is difficult to back down, particularly when they are in a rather delicate position at home as the Argentinians are.

Canada may have some influence in certain areas, due to the impact which certain indviduals have in particular areas such as in the Law of the Sea discussions through the influence of the Canadian delegation there. However, that should not be carried over into the whole international community with the notion that Canada is the great middleman, the fixer for all international crises. We were not very effective in doing anything about Afghanistan and we have not been able to do much about the Argentine, either.

We should have a more thorough examination than the estimates permit, in the field of external affairs, in these particular matters. For example, I tried to get the McDougall report referred to that committee so that we might examine it. The aid program is another subject which could be looked at carefully in that standing committee. We have already looked at the reserve situation on the defence side and on disrmament and security.

On external affairs generally, I feel the committee as it exists today is useless. No one even listens. We take the opportunity to ask questions of the minister in a very scattered fashion. The committee needs to be restructured, and that may be what is at the back of the hon. member's suggestion. Then what they decide will have a bearing on government policy. As committees are structured now, they have none. I can testify to that over ten years of experience in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: That is not true of the Latin-American subcommittee.

Mr. Deans: More parliamentary reform!

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it is important to inject into this debate some real facts of life about NATO and the very difficult international circumstances with which NATO is faced at the present time. The members of NATO have their own internal problems as well.

It is fair to say that in spite of all the talk, nothing has been done. Every effort has been made by the North Atlantic Assembly, the members of parliament from 15 countries who meet twice a year to try to promote disarmament and at the same time maintain security. That may seem like a two-edged sword, but it really is not. If you do not maintain security you have absolutely no bargaining power to carry out disarmanent. That is a key point which must be remembered in this debate.

With regard to nuclear force, modernization and arms control, the issue in 1979 was simply to meet the Soviet threats which had then emerged. NATO embarked on a program to modernize the nuclear forces assigned to the alliance in Europe. We have heard a lot about those forces in Europe and the forces among the population that have been opposing nuclear force.

I heard an excellent speaker on the podium in an address in Munich. It was a military person who said that many people think that the military are out to kill, to create war. He said that is absolutely not the intention of the military, because they would be the first persons in the firing line. He said he was wearing that uniform in order to retain peace in the world through a balance of power, so that foreign relations in various countries would have some bargaining power. He said that the military community was the last one that would want to go to war. He did not like being called a warmonger.

I think it is very important that the views of Canadian armed forces personnel or personnel of any other force within the NATO alliance be represented clearly in this debate. They are peacemakers. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Irwin) has just stated that there has been a number of skirmishes since 1945, but in all fairness I think it must also be said that major forces to retain peace in the world since 1945 have been the United Nations and, certainly, NATO.

After two years of study of nuclear rearmament in Europe, on December 12, 1979, NATO decided to proceed with a program to modernize the United States theatre nuclear forces assigned to the alliance in Europe, in part to counter the massive and continuing build-up of new Soviet theatre nuclear forces. The Soviet program involves principally the mobile, triple-warhead SS-20 missile of which at least 250—with a total of 750 warheads—are now operationally deployed. There have been many more since the paper to which I am referring was written. The Russian program is continuing at the rate of more than one new missile each week. The NATO program envisages the deployment, beginning in late 1983 at the earliest, of 108 Pershing 2 missiles, replacing—not adding to—an equal number of old Pershing 1 missiles now deployed in Germany, and the introduction of 464 ground-launched Cruise missiles in Britain, Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy. For each new nuclear warhead thus introduced an old one will be withdrawn, so that there will be no increase in the NATO stockpile. This is contrary to much of the thinking today.

When deciding to proceed with this program, NATO simultaneously decided to offer to engage the Soviet Union in arms control negotiations to limit the number of these new weapons on both sides. Here again I want to emphasize the role of NATO in pursuing the aim of getting the major nuclear powers in the world to sit down and talk common sense about the future of humanity, therefore playing a peaceful role rather than that of some great enemy to the public out there trying to create military problems in the world. NATO is there to solve those problems. This was a sincere and reasonable proposal NATO put forward, particularly given the fact that none of the projected new NATO weapons would become available for at least three years. Nevertheless, what did the Soviet Union say? The Soviet Union rejected the offer to sit down for consultations, maintaining that the NATO decision had "destroyed the basis for negotiations". NATO was not going to start replacing its old nuclear weapons until 1983, but the Soviets are going ahead with more than one new SS-20 triple-warhead missile per week. The Russians were saying that they would negotiate if NATO cancelled, or at least suspended, its program. Where would it place NATO if it suspended its program or delayed it altogether for five years or so while at the same time the Warsaw Pact is going ahead and continuing to rearm every week which goes by? NATO would be losing negotiating power because there would no longer be a balance of power to carry on any sensible discussions.

The final result of it all was an announcement following in Haig-Gromyko meeting in New York in September of 1981 which confirmed that the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union agreed to begin theatre nuclear force arms control talks on November 30 last year in Geneva. We now hope those talks will get underway again and continue.

In the few minutes remaining I want to say a few words about our Canadian Department of National Defence. The motion before the House calls for a full parliamentary review of Canada's external, defence and aid policies to redefine Canada's objectives in these areas. I will speak about the defence aspects of the motion.

Canada's defence objectives, like its foreign policy objectives, have been remarkably constant over the past several decades. The principal defence objectives can be simply stated as, first, the prevention of nuclear war; second, the deterring of any conflict which might lead to nuclear war; and, third, the protection of Canadian national interests.

These objectives are as valid today as they were ten years ago, and the government sees no need to review or redefine them at this time. While these objectives have not changed and are unlikely to need change in the foreseeable future, the policies adopted by the government to meet these objectives have been, and must continue to be, dynamic in nature to respond to changing threats, circumstances and priorities.

The protection of Canadian interests and all that implies for the safeguarding of our constitutional process, the protection of our territory and our right to exercise jurisdiction and our ability to enforce our laws is an objective which must be met by Canada alone. We cannot, however—nor can any other single nation in the world—achieve the objectives of preventing nuclear war and deterring conflicts which might lead to such a war strictly on our own. It has to be in co-operation with others. Nor can Canada, given its geographic position between the United States and the Soviet Union and its external interests, prudently follow a neutral or non-aligned foreign policy. Let us not kid ourselves; if there were a nuclear war between the United States and Russia, where would Canada sit geographically?

Mr. Deans: Right where the bombs drop.

Mr. Hopkins: We are right in between, so to worry about trying to persuade one of our neighbours not to test in Canada equipment—which has no nuclear weapons on it at all—is a poor way to carry on the kind of co-operation we must have within NATO and among NATO countries.

It is the view of the government that, given the economic and political constraints on a middle power such as Canada the only prudent course to achieve our defence objectives is to promote political reconciliation to ease the underlying causes of tension. We have done that with our peacekeeping missions, and the Canadian Armed Forces are well known as some of the finest diplomats we have sent abroad. We must work for equitable and verifiable arms control agreements. We have done that, we are still doing it and will continue to do it. And we must contribute to collective defence arrangements which will provide a system of stable mutual deterrence. Again I must say that without that deterrence we have no bargaining power to bring about any realistic discussions about the reduction of theatre nuclear forces in Warsaw Pact or among NATO nations. We must bargain from a position of strength, and that strength must come from a united group of NATO countries which must retain its strength so that the western powers are in a position to negotiate effectively with the Warsaw Pact to bring about future continued peace in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1). Have a good weekend.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROSECUTION OF BUSINESSMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Liberal Government of Canada seems hell bent on bankrupting small business. First, we had the national energy policy, and then the November 12 budget. One small-business man is now being prosecuted—persecuted would be a more accurate word—and other prosecutions are in the offing, for advertising in imperial measurement, a language his clients understand. This is even more totalitarian than in Moscow where a business may advertise in any language and in any measurement. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House deplores such prosecutions based on laws passed by order in council and urges the government to straighten out its tangled priorities before the patience of the people reaches the breaking point.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FALKLAND ISLANDS—RECAPTURE OF SOUTH GEORGIA BY BRITISH FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House convey to the British government an expression of our approval for the manner in which the Royal naval task force, including the Royal Marines, carried out their operation in South Georgia over the weekend with a minimum of bloodshed and casualties thereby restoring, at the least possible cost in human suffering, the situation in that area that existed prior to the Argentinian aggression in the South Atlantic.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

LOSS OF STATUS BY INDIAN WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In the four years between 1976 and 1980, 1,810 Indian women lost their Indian status under Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, which clause has been declared discriminatory by the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

Given that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is designed to do away with such discriminatory legislation, but that the allowable period to effect such a change is another three years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That the government immediately introduce legislation to remove Section 12(1)(b) from the Indian Act, so that Canada will not suffer the shame for another three years of this abuse of the human rights of Indian women who marry non-Indians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Membeèrs: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

POSITION TAKEN BY CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, this morning the Canadian Bar Association held a press conference at which it denounced the stalling of the government on freedom of information legislation and urged quick passage of this legislation, so essential for participatory democracy. In view of the fact that the paper prepared by the Canadian Bar Association lawyer, Murray Rankin, totally destroys the foundation of objections to the federal legislation, I move, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

S.O. 43

That the House commend the Canadian Bar Association for its outstanding efforts on behalf of all Canadians for effective freedom of information legislation and urge the government to stop stalling and pass this long overdue legislation, removing Crown privilege, and including the fundamental principle of independent judicial review.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO SPEAKER OF HOUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and particularly pleasant subject.

Madam Speaker, we must confess that curiosity got the better of us and we found out that today our distinguished Speaker is celebrating her thirty-second birthday. I am sure that all hon. members will join me in offering you, Madam Speaker, our best wishes for health and happiness, and, in view of your sparkling youth, a large and happy family.

Madam Speaker: I can only thank the House for such thoughtfulness.

INCLUSION OF LEATHER SHOES IN GLOBAL IMPORT QUOTA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): First of all, my very best wishes, Madam Speaker.

I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas three months ago, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce agreed to re-examine the feasibility of reintegrating leather footwear within the global quota, and whereas the survival of the footwear industry depends on a positive reply by the minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That the House unanimously invite the minister responsible to announce his decision this week, in order to put to rest the increasing anxiety of thousands of employees in the Canadian footwear industry.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, a motion of this kind requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY FOR INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, in view of the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) that in order to bring down high interest rates the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will try to persuade the President of the United States to ease up on interest rates, I move, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government of Canada accept its own responsibilities and opportunities to fight high interest rates at home, that it stop blaming others, and that it stop putting on a show of the mouse twisting the elephant's tail.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, on the weekend, in Belleville, the Leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario, David Peterson, said:

The Prime Minister is a millstone around our necks.

Since the Ontario Liberal leader's brother sits in this House as the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) and his wife has a position in the Prime Minister's office, I am sure the following motion will receive unanimous support. I move, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Prime Minister assure this House that the Peterson family feud which affects him directly will not place in jeopardy the job of Heather Peterson in the Prime Minister's office or the leadership ambitions of her husband, the hon. member for Willowdale.

GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL DEVELOPMENT PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, first of all I wish to extend my congratulation to you.

I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As hon. members of the House are aware, the British Columbia northeast coal development consortium issued a $350 million debenture to investors of this project. Among them the federal government has been placed low on the list of creditors. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That the government clearly outline what specific safeguards exist for Canadian taxpayers for this project that is having its economic viability called into question virtually daily.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that a prominent Tory member, one who has "difficulty not telling the truth", stated that his leader "will have a difficult time holding on to his job if he doesn't call a leadership convention before the scheduled review in January 1983", and that "there seems to be a consensus that he's going to have a difficult time to win that majority", I move:

That the Tory party members reconsider their desire for a leadership convention and work together in support of their dynamic leader.

I know the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) will want to second the motion.

CALL FOR SCRAPPING OF NOVEMBER BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, we in the back benches also extend our congratulations to you.

The combination of a vigorously pursued high interest rate policy by the government and a regressive anti-business budget has further weakened the industrial productivity of the country. Industrial production has fallen for the eighth consecutive month and is now at its lowest point since 1978. In view of our staggering unemployment situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Meach Lake musketeers adopt the employment priority put forward in the letter of the "Gang of Ten" by scrapping the November budget in favour of one which would allow industry to expand, grow and, above all, provide jobs for Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF SUPER CONTINENTAL PASSENGER TRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, last year I had occasion to call the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) the worst thing to happen to passenger trains since Jesse James. This has proved to be only true. Having robbed the people of Saskatoon, Edmonton and Jasper of transcontinental train service, it turns out that the minister's new intercity schedules are not living up to expectations, according to briefing notes prepared for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and that a review of the minister's disastrous and stupid cutbacks may well be in order. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That this House calls on the Minister of Transport to reinstate the Super Continental passenger train, to order new transcontinental train equipment, which he has not yet done, and to use new light rapid comfortable trains already on order to improve service between the cities in western Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, after studying the entrails of the Canadian economy, at Meach Lake, apparently could not bring himself to face the Canadian public and dispatched the Minister of Justice to announce that there would be a new budget in the fall. Considering the fact that Liberal government economic policies have created record unemployment, rising bankruptcies, the highest borrowing costs in the industrialized world, and eight consecutive months of decline in production, why wait for fall? Why does the minister not abandon his current budget and bring in a new one now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the normal time for bringing in a budget is in the fall.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That was precisely the question answered by the Minister of Justice. He was making clear what was quite obvious, that there is a period each year when a budget is brought in, and the normal cycle was what the minister was referring to in his answer.

• (1415)

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver-Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of his answer, and in view of the fact that there is to be no budget legislation before the fall, why does the minister add to the confusion by indicating that the Justice minister was making a routine statement about the budget? Will or will there not be a budget in the fall?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is no problem in replying to that question. If the hon. member had read the paper on the budget process which was recently tabled in the House, she would have learned that that is the attitude of the government. In the normal event, the budget will be introduced in the fall.

RATE OF INFLATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver-Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question again is to the Minister of Finance. His alter ego, the Secretary of State, announced that the Liberal government plans to stick by its current economic policies to fight inflation. While inflation rates are declining in the United States and the United Kingdom, they are accelerating in Canada. One of the reasons is that the government keeps increasing the price of fuel oil and continues to increase interest rates, which are two of the biggest components of the cost of living. How can Canadians lower the rate of inflation when the government itself keeps increasing prices through higher interest costs and energy costs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware that we have followed a policy which has resulted in lower energy prices than in any other country in the world. We have not agreed to go to world prices, while every industrialized country in the world has moved to world prices. We have taken a different view in order to protect Canadian consumers from international prices.

EFFECT OF INFLATION ON WORKING POOR

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the difference in Canadian and American inflation rates—Canadian rates are almost double—I will pose to the minister the situation of a Canadian family which earns $12,000 per year, one of the working poor. Were that family living in the United States its cost of living increase would be $50 per month less than it is in Canada. The Secretary of State indicated that the problems facing Canadians are wholly due to international situations. If this is so, how does the minister explain to a family such as I have mentioned why they are $50 per month worse off in Canada because of inflation than their counterparts in the United States?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, knowing the Secretary of State as well as I do, and knowing his deep understanding of the economy, I do not believe he would say that our problems were solely due to international events.

Obviously, what is happening in our traditional markets and what is happening to American interest rates are all factors which affect Canadians very adversely. That is a fact of life. But it is true that the performance of the American economy on the inflation front is better than Canada's. Not only is the cost of living index in the United States much lower than ours, the average wage settlement at the present time is from 4 percentage points to 7 percentage points lower in the United States than in Canada. That is why, if we are to remain competitive and create more jobs in Canada, as is our principle objective, we must do everything possible to reduce our inflation rate even further.

Miss MacDonald: The minister will also recognize that those income figures which he cited do not really apply to the working poor, most of whom are non-unionized and therefore have very little in the way of collective action on their behalf.

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, how does the minister explain to low income families whose job security is precarious at any time, why the number of employed has fallen more sharply in Canada during the current recession than it has in the United States? Why should these people have to face both higher prices and fewer job opportunities than their counterparts south of the border?

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member began her series of questions on comparisons between Canada and the United States and asked me to address my concerns to the working people of Canada—

Miss MacDonald: Working poor.

Mr. MacEachen: —and those in receipt of social benefits. Since taking on this job it has been my objective not to do anything to disturb the social programs which have been in existence in the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: In fact, very early in the mandate of this government, we brought in a very substantial increase—

Miss MacDonald: A cutback of $5.9 billion.

Mr. MacEachen: —to the guaranteed income supplement in an effort to help those who needed help most. That is our policy. Despite the difficulties and despite fiscal restraint, we have maintained and strengthened our social programs.

Mr. Nielsen: What restraint?

Mr. MacEachen: That cannot be said about policies in the United States. In that country, as the hon. member knows, very large cuts have been made in social entitlements. That is not a policy that I would like to follow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT INTEREST RATE POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question to ask of the Minister of Finance, as well. The Government of Canada may be content to wait until the fall to make any change in financial policy, but I want to let the minister know that Canadians who are losing their homes, their jobs and their businesses, want action now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In that light, following news reports of the session the cabinet held at Meach Lake on the weekend, I would like to ask the minister a question. Is it the case that, in spite of people losing their homes, jobs and businesses, the government has no present intention of changing its disastrous, high interest rate policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we are not following a high interest rate policy. No one in this government advocates high interest rates.

Miss MacDonald: Don't choke.

Mr. MacEachen: Every possible step is being taken to reduce the level of interest rates in Canada. Every possible step has been taken to help home owners meet—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —the very heavy burden of high interest rates. But the hon. member knows as well as I do, and maybe better because he is a graduate of the London School of Economics—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacEachen: —and I am not, that there is an inevitable relationship between the level of inflation and the level of interest rates. There will be no deep impact on bringing down interest rates unless the inflation rate is brought down. That is why I find it offensive that the hon. member is always referring to the government's high interest rate policy. There is no such animal.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I hate to upset the Deputy Prime Minister, but the Prime Minister said last Thursday that we did have a high interest rate policy in Canada.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question because I listened with care, as I always do, to the explanation of the Deputy Prime Minister of the reason for high interest rates. The Prime Minister gave a similar explanation last week to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre when he said that the reason for high interest rates in Canada "was because inflation was high and people were only lending their money at higher rates of interest".

If we dropped the prime rate in Canada by three percentage points, we would still have a prime rate which was 2.5 percentage points above the rate of inflation. Under such circumstances people would perhaps still be able to keep their businesses and more Canadians would be able to hold on to their jobs. If that would be the case, why does the government not drop the prime rate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the prime rate generally moves in line with the bank rate which is set every Thursday as the result of an auction, when individuals and financial institutions—

Mr. Broadbent: It will always be done that way, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: —bid for treasury bills. The rate that is set on every Thursday is a market response based upon what is happening in other markets, particularly in the United States. I do not believe that artificially bringing down the bank rate would do very much. It might have a very short-term impact. It would have immediate repercussions on the exchange rate.

Presence in Gallery

It would have an additional impact on inflation, which would be bound to increase. Then the rate would probably go up higher than it had been when the hon. member's not very ingenious suggestion had been implemented.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: If I had not seen the disastrous effects of the London School of Economics on the Prime Minister, I might suggest that the Deputy Prime Minister take an additional course in economics at that institution.

REASONS FOR NOT REDUCING INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. We could have a drop of three percentage points, which would mean that thousands of Canadians could keep their jobs. Canadians would not have to continue losing their homes because of higher mortgages. We could get some stimulus in the economy. Why will the Government of Canada not take such action in full recognition that exchange controls of some sort may be necessary? The Americans did not hesitate to put such controls on their economy during the past two decades to protect it. Why does the government not give us a low interest rate policy, and bring in exchange controls if necessary to protect jobs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I suppose there are people listening to the hon. member who think his policy may work. I do not know a better way to convince the hon. member than to take an illustration from the most recently elected socialist government in the world, namely, the Government of France.

In order to protect the French franc from even further devaluation, to protect its currency and protect its workers from imported increased inflation and further unemployment, that government recently allowed its short-term interest rates to go up over 20 per cent. That was not done because the Government of France was stupid or because it was hidebound by ideology, but because it took into account the best interests of the French workers, which we are doing in Canada as we develop and implement our economic policy for Canadians.

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—POSITION OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The minister will know that he initiated the uranium cartel prosecution based upon the results of the Bertrand report and upon the sworn affidavit of Mr. Orest R. Samitz, a combines investigation officer who believed that there was a conspiracy to fix the prices of uranium. On Friday afternoon last the Supreme Court of Ontario decided that Crown corporations were immune from prosecution. The shocking implication of this is that the courts of this country do not have jurisdiction over potential illegalities or criminal offences of Crown corporations. Since there is no accountability by the criminal courts of this country with respect to Crown corporations, will the minister make the Bertrand report public? Also, will he release us from the gag rule which has been an impediment to free speech since 1976?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this morning we decided to appeal the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and the case is now before a higher court. As for the Bertrand report, there were, of course, two things we could do: either take legal action, which we have done, or refer the report, as was done in the case of the oil companies, to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. In this case, which concerns the uranium question, we decided to bring the matter directly before the courts, where it is now. After the decision by the Supreme Court of Ontario on Friday, counsel for the Canadian government decided to appeal.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, in this particular prosecution the conduct of the Minister of Justice has been absolutely disgraceful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speyer: It has been absolutely disgraceful.

Mr. Clark: Like Jack Austin?

Mr. Speyer: Where is the fairness in having private corporations prosecuted in circumstances where public corporations, Crown corporations, are immune from prosecution? Secondly, prior to the prosecution being initiated, was the minister not aware that Crown corporations could not be prosecuted because they were immune, and is that why he did not charge the officers of the company?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have answered this question several times before. At the Department of Justice, on the advice of counsel who had served as such on the Bertrand Commission, we decided to take both the private sector and public sector people to court. That is what we have done. A decision was handed down by the Ontario Supreme Court Friday, and, Madam Speaker, I cannot change the laws of this country. The case is before the Ontario Court of Appeal, and we have followed the procedure prescribed by the laws of Canada. When we receive a report from the Director of Investigation and Research, either we take legal action or we refer the case to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. We have taken one of these options. The court has handed down a decision, and we are appealing that decision because, at the time, we decided that legal action had to be taken against both private and public sector companies. The entire matter is now before the courts, and it is not up to me to comment on court decisions.

INDUSTRY

INCLUSION OF LEATHER SHOES IN GLOBAL IMPORT QUOTA—INQUIRY WHEN DECISION WILL BE MADE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am sure the minister realizes that all industrial sectors are facing considerable problems, but the fact remains that one specific sector, namely the footwear industry, is not asking for government subsidies but only for a minimum of protection to be able to survive.

The minister has said several times that he intended to make a decision after a reasssessment of the feasibility of reintegrating leather footwear within the global quota. After this exercise, is the minister today in a position to give us the assurance that he will announce his decision this week?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I can assure my hon. colleague and all hon. members of this House that we have an abiding interest in the welfare of this industry and its employees. That is why cabinet is now considering the representations it has received, but I am not in a position to advise the House whether a decision will be announced this week.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, it seems that according to the information obtained from members on the government side, the minister is giving the matter serious thought. This question is extremely important because of the negative consequences involved for the industry. The footwear industry cannot wait much longer, as the minister is aware. In the interest of thousands of workers who are living in an atmosphere of almost intolerable uncertainty, could the minister at least tell us when he intends to announce his decision and explain why, after so many weeks, he is still unable to respond positively to recommendations made by the industry, which is not asking for money or subsidies but only for a decent measure of protection on the part of the government?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, quotas are a form of subsidy which is paid by all Canadian consumers. However, we have kept a quota system in order to protect our footwear industry. We announced our policy last fall, and it is because we are taking the concerns and representations of the industry seriously that we are giving very serious thought, as the hon. member just said, to these representations. I am hoping to obtain a review at the cabinet level as soon as possible.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL RECOMMEND DEVALUATION OF DOLLAR

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the soon irreparable structural damage being done to Canadian industry and workers by abnormally high interest rates, which are the direct result of the rigid monetary policy being followed in order to fight inflation, could the Minister of Finance inform the House whether he intends very shortly to make some changes in the policy being supported by the Bank of Canada and, more specifically, to recommend that the Governor of the Bank of Canada consider devaluating the Canadian dollar, which according to most independent economic analysts would have the immediate effect of drastically reducing interest rates without necessarily leading to a substantial increase in interest rates over the long term?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, similar questions were put earlier in the question period by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Clark: And by many others.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member asks about the impact of a devaluation and whether indeed it would lead to any real relief from the interest rates. Obviously all of us are concerned about the damage that high interest rates are creating. As the hon. member may recall, that subject was thoroughly considered at the First Ministers' Conference. At that time the Prime Minister indicated that in present circumstances such a policy would likely lead to even greater inflation and probably even higher interest rates if an artificial reduction in interest rates led to extreme pressure on the currency. For these reasons, Madam Speaker, I have not found it possible to adopt that policy. I believe it would be more harmful than helpful for the Canadian economy. Indeed, it would have unpredictable consequences for all of us. That is the view of the government on the hon. member's question.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In his absence I wonder if I could address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister will know, Canadians across Canada are becoming incredibly concerned about the nuclear arms spiral. Indeed, on Saturday last over 30,000 Canadians marched peacefully through Vancouver and held an enormous rally. It was really a spectacular rally, protesting the nuclear arms spiral.

Mr. Nielsen: What did you do?

Miss Jewett: Above all, they were asking for a nuclear arms freeze, to allow negotiations to catch up. Could the minister tell us if the Prime Minister—if the minister knows his mind on this—is thinking seriously of following the lead taken by a great many distinguished Americans and others, and which has been urged upon the government by the people of this country, to press as vigorously as we can, in the United Nations and elsewhere, for a mutual freeze, a global freeze, on the production, testing and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada shares the concern which the hon. member has expressed, and which the protest to which she referred has obviously expressed, about the spiralling arms race. We have just received a report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence regarding our position on UNSSOD II. We are continuing to consult and prepare for that conference. I think Canadians will be satisfied with the position we will take publicly at that conference with respect to the arms race.

I am sure what the hon. member really wants is that we take an effective position with regard to arms control and disarmament, and not go for any quick fix, which would not be successful. If it were just a freeze, it would remove the possibility of negotiations with the Soviet Union; if it were a freeze without the necessity of their making any concessions it would certainly not motivate them to further negotiations.

• (1440)

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I am glad the minister did not say what the Prime Minister is thinking, because he obviously does not know. Surely the Prime Minister is looking more seriously than the minister at the utility of a nuclear freeze now and, indeed, at why other countries are pushing for it.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, specifically on the question of testing the Cruise missile, it is not quite clear to me yet whether the government is postponing any testing of the Cruise missile until after UNSSOD II and, indeed, until after we have seen what consequences might flow from UNSSOD II.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in case I did not make it clear in my first answer, the reply I gave was a reply on behalf of the government.

The question about the Cruise 2 tests has to be answered with a distinction. There is a framework agreement under which various kinds of arms tests will be able to be established under joint Canadian-U.S. control, tests which may take place on Canadian territory. The negotiations on that agreement are going forward. An agreement may or may not be reached before UNSSOD II.

With respect to the sub-agreement under that framework agreement which would authorize tests of the Cruise missile, we will not be going forward with that agreement before UNSSOD II.

I might add that even if we did, and if there were a general disarmament agreement at UNSSOD II, that would take priority over any bilateral agreement we had with another country.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROSECUTION OF INDEPENDENT RETAILERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, government policy concerning forced metric was clearly stated at the weekend by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when he said "Nothing will be imposed on any group against their will".

Independent retailers are now receiving notices of court hearings and being threatened with fines and prison terms for printing Canadian measurements on their products, and to date all cases, to my knowledge, have been adjourned until at least August of this year. My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given the fact that all manufacturing industries can use either metric or imperial without threat of prosecution and given the fact that all newspapers and radio and television outlets can advertise in imperial measurement free of prosecution, how does the Government of Canada justify taking some independent retailers to court for printing imperial measurements on their in-store merchandise when it is clearly documented that the working group on scales in the retail food industry does not wish to go metric at this time?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this is a problem for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I will refer the question to him.

ADVERTISING ISSUED BY METRIC COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, condemnation of metric by force and the elimination of imperial measurement has been recorded by the governments of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, and by the soon-to-be-elected P.C. government of Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: —not to mention municipal governments from coast to coast. Would the Minister of Justice or his designate look into the possibility of fining or locking up the offices of the Metric Commission, or taking to court the executive director of the Metric Commission, for allowing Government of Canada printers to print false advertising in a current brochure put out by the Metric Commission which says, "Canada is joining the United States in using metric"? This propaganda is being handed out in grocery stores all across the country—

Madam Speaker: Order. It seems that the question has been asked.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I heard the question. I think it was more of an argument than a question. This problem is the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I will discuss the matter with him.

ASTRA TRUST

POSITION OF DEPOSITORS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The federal government incorporated Astra Trust Company, a trust company which operated in southern Ontario, under pressure from several Niagara and Ottawa politicians, including former members of Parliament of Liberal persuasion, and when the Astra Trust Company was in financial difficulty, that same government advanced an $8 million loan to bail it out. That bailing out did not happen. Astra Trust collapsed. The Canada Deposit Insurance Company has received and returned practically all its moneys which were placed on deposit as guarantees. The federal government got back its $8 million, but what about the hundreds of depositors who deposited their money in good faith with the Astra Trust Company, who now get zilch?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that the incident and the company to which he is referring are connected with other companies that fall under provincial jurisdiction. As far as the company under federal jurisdiction is concerned, those who suffered losses were compensated by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, as the hon. member said, and he also knows perfectly well that legal action is being taken against certain shareholders of this company and that the courts are to judge the charges brought against them.

[English]

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the minister well knows that the other related companies were companies subsidiary to the Astra Trust Company and that the Astra Trust Company was the parent corporation, which made it possible for the deposits to be taken.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, in addition to that there was a recent federal court decision to the effect that the depositors would not be allowed to sue the Superintendent of Insurance or the Minister of Finance for negligence in the operation and control of the Astra Trust Company. Is the Minister of State for Finance really saying that because he and his government have recovered all the moneys the government advanced, those depositors will be left with nothing? Is the government saying, "I'm all right, Jack, but you will have to look after yourself"?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is somewhat confused. If there are depositors who suffered losses through the subsidiary companies which fall under provincial jurisdiction, he should find out what the provincial authorities intend to do to compensate these people for their losses. As for the company which was under federal jurisdiction, as I said before, under the deposit insurance guarantees, these depositors were compensated in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Act.

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, and it is supplementary to that of my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge. Now that the minister has decided to appeal the decision of the Ontario courts on the uranium cartel with respect to immunity of prosecution of Crown corporations, I want to ask the minister why he instructed counsel to seek immunity for Crown corporations in the first instance.

Second, now that the minister has decided to appeal that, to be consistent will the minister lift the gag rule imposed on public servants, and will he release the Bertrand report?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I believe the statement made by the hon. member to be false. I have never instructed anybody and Crown corporation counsel manage their own files. They use these facts in their files which militate in favour of their case. Neither myself nor my department has been in touch with counsel for the Crown corporations involved. I have chosen the same counsel as the Bertrand Commission and appointed him government counsel in this matter, and he is the one who laid the charges before the courts.

As for the second part of the question, Madam Speaker, the proceedings before the American courts are not yet completed, and it is to safeguard Canadian interests involved in the legal action in the United States that we have put certain restrictions on the papers to be published in Canada. We have said that the papers required to lay charges in Canada would be available to our counsel, Mr. Brown, and to counsel for the defence.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT BERTRAND REPORT BE RELEASED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. If, as the minister states, Crown corporations are masters of their own destiny, why did he, as Attorney General, not lay charges against the directors of some of these Crown corporations in the first instance? Also, why does the minister insist on imposing the gag law on public servants in Canada? This has nothing at all to do with the U.S. courts. Why does he not release the Bertrand report so that people in this country can judge for themselves?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said that the prosecutions in the case of the uranium cartel had been instigated after the Bertrand report. That report recommended to the government that it prosecute the corporations and not the individuals that the hon. member would like me to prosecute. In order to make sure that I would follow the advice of the Bertrand Commission as quickly as possible, I hired the same counsel, Mr. Brown, from Toronto. He acted as counsel for Mr. Bertrand and is acting as counsel for me at this time. I do not think I could have done better than to make sure there was a lot of continuity between the Bertrand report and the prosecutions.

As far as the other part of the question is concerned, I have answered that many, many times in this House.

LEGAL ADVICE RESPECTING CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. When the government was preparing action against some of the people involved in the uranium cartel, did it receive any legal advice at that time suggesting that Crown corporations would be found to have Crown immunity from prosecution?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the legal advice I have received is the same legal advice as in the Bertrand report. In order to implement the recommendations in the best way possible, we have asked the same prosecutor, the same lawyer that Mr. Bertrand had hired, to be our prosecutor. At that time the legal advice we received from the Bertrand report and from our legal adviser was that we had to prosecute the list of people and corporations mentioned in the Bertrand report. We decided to prosecute every one of the people and corporations mentioned, not one more and not one less, but exactly those recommended by the Bertrand report.

REQUEST THAT BERTRAND REPORT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Because he refused to answer that direct question on whether or not the government knew in advance, or was warned by its legal advisers in advance that the Ontario court would grant the Crown the immunity that it has, and since he said that his advice was based upon the Bertrand report and that that report might or might not have warned that the consequence we saw on Friday would occur—all this makes it absolutely imperative that the minister stop hiding the Bertrand report. The House of Commons and the people of Canada have the right to know if the Government of Canada is trying to hide something that should not be hidden. We can begin to know by seeing the Bertrand report. Will the minister make that report available to the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I believe that the position is very clear in this regard. The Act of Parliament provides two options when we receive a report from the Director of Investigation and Research: either to lay charges as recommended by the director, which we have done in this case, and, moreover, as an additional precaution, we have hired exactly the counsel who worked for the Bertrand Commission, or else to refer the problem to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, which the director did not recommend. We have done exactly what the act provides, and the reports from the Director of Investigation and Research are not supposed to be made public under the act passed by Parliament.

[English]

LEGAL ADVICE RESPECTING CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we do not know what illegalities are being covered up. We do not know what options that were available to the government and are being covered up. We do not know why the Minister of Justice refuses to make the Bertrand report public which he admits he has the power to make public. The only reason he is not doing so is because he has decided to hold secret this document which should be a public document.

Let me return to the question he evaded earlier. At the time the Minister of Justice or anyone else in the government was deciding to bring action against some of the people involved in the uranium cartel, did they receive legal advice at that time from anyone—from the Bertrand report or anywhere else—that Crown corporations, including the shell corporation controlled by the Government of Canada, might be able to claim Crown immunity from prosecution successfully? Did he receive that warning in advance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have said that I followed exactly the legal advice that was given to the Bertrand Commission and to myself as Attorney General of Canada. It came from the same prosecutor. I am not surprised that the Leader of the Opposition does not know much about the law, because he did not stay in that faculty very long.

HEALTH

SPRAYING OF PESTICIDES AT GAGETOWN, N.B.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns a long held principle of medical science in Canada, and that is, to err on the side of caution.

I know that minister is well aware that there was no monitoring of the spraying of Agent Orange at Gagetown, New Brunswick, in 1966-67. In view of the irrefutable proof that the Department studied the wrong people recently, in that three out of the four communities studied were upwind of the spraying, would the minister tell the House why she will not support a thorough, independent medical inquiry into the Gagetown spraying and into the medical linkage of birth defects to the present spraying of fenotrothion?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, several well conducted long-term animal studies have been performed on this pesticide which demonstrate the absence of a carcinogenic hazard.

I want to repeat to the hon. member that the way he phrases his question does not help anybody. I am not aware of the facts that he tries to establish.

Mr. Fulton: I am very surprised at that, Madam Speaker.

REGISTRATION OF PESTICIDES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I will put my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment who, I know, is aware of this very serious problem. For 20 of the last 30 years the federal government has funded the bug spraying program in New Brunswick. Scientists in the minister's department know very well what the impact of this spraying has been on bird populations. It is obvious that the Department of National Health and Welfare is covering up a very serious medical problem. I wonder if the minister would comment on the recommendation given to him by Dr. Ross Hall, the consultant he hired, in a report that is unanimously supported by the minister's advisory council, which calls for the stripping of the powers of pesticide registration from the Department of Agriculture?

Since at least six further studies are required to re-register fenotrothion for this year's spraying in New Brunswick due to the IBT fraud, will the minister intervene on environmental grounds, not just medical, and stop this year's spraying in New Brunswick until the studies can be completed?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do not think there is anything I can add at the present time to the answer given by my colleague.

PENSIONS

POSITION OF SINGLE WOMEN BETWEEN AGES 60 AND 65

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Before doing so, I should like to thank her for the various greetings she sent to me a number of times while I was in hospital. I may say that many others did the same, and I should like to say a special thanks to you, Madam Speaker.

My question this afternoon relates to my concern about the unfairness of the plan respecting old age pensions under which certain women—there are some men but it is mostly women—between the ages of 60 and 65 can get a pension provided they are married to someone who is 65 or over. However, persons between the age of 60 and 65 who are single, whose husbands died before that age, are not allowed any such pension. Will the minister seriously consider a plan to change that, so that persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who are in need will get that kind of pension?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as the health minister I think I can say in the name of all of us, that I rejoice that good medical care and great courage have returned the hon. member to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: That being said, I do not like to receive his questions. I will have to answer what he underlines, which is a serious problem. I would just like to put it back into perspective, without denying the problem. The spouse's allowance was implemented a few months before the time my predecessor hoped to have a form of guaranteed annual income for all Canadians in need. In that context, spouses, under the age of 65, of pensioners would have been the first Canadians to enjoy what would have gone to all Canadians in need, whatever their age or cause of poverty. Unfortunately, we all know of the failure of the federal-provincial conferences on social security in those years.

We then, all of us in this House, remedied part of that injustice so that when the pensioner died, the spouse continued to receive the pension. However, in these economic times, we cannot extend that benefit to those in need below the age of 60. That is the dilemma we are facing. But the whole issue of housewives, particularly those younger than 65, who do not receive a pension, is addressed in the green paper on pension reform which will be out within a few weeks.

PROVISION OF PENSIONS FOR THOSE WITHOUT OTHER INCOME

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, because of the interest of the minister in this problem may I ask &ws1753;-1 if she will give her help and the best attention she can to making improvements in that plan, even if it means some money from this country, to provide pensions for those between 60 and 65 who have no other incomes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am deeply worried about the problem of the 60 to 65 age group, in particular the women. I discussed this more than a week ago with the French Minister of National Solidarity, Madam Nicole Questiaux, who just undertook to lower pensions to age 60 for some in France. I have checked this again and that is the question, if we have some more money to add to the GIS, should we not instead start lowering the eligibility requirements for those who need it most below the age of 65? I for one am not yet convinced that we can do that until we have raised everyone over 65, most of whom are women or single pensioners, above the poverty line once and for all. So the step the hon. member recommends would become the second step for the future.

PETITION

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES ON CANADIAN SOIL

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred twenty-ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on Friday, April 23, 1982 and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,639 and 3,969.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CANADA ACT, 1982

Question No. 2,639—Mr. Anguish:

1. Since October 2, 1980, what was the total cost incurred by the government as a result of its efforts in London, England to secure the passage of the proposed Canada Act, 1981 by the U.K. Parliament?

2. For the same period, did the government hire on a permanent, temporary or contract basis any person to work at or in concert with the Canadian High Commission in London and, if so, what was his/her name?

3. For the same period, were employees of the government re-deployed to work at or in concert with the Canadian High Commission and, if so, in each case (a) what was the (i) name (ii) salary (iii) amount of expenses (iv) function or job description (b) was the employee a Canadian or a non-Canadian?

4. For the same period, did the government, through the offices of the Canadian High Commission or in any other way, sponsor meetings or social functions in London with members of the U.K. Parliament, officials of the U.K. government, officials of British political parties and/or members of the British press and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the names and titles of the persons who attended (c) what was the cost to the government?

5. Was the hon. member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve asked to perform duties on behalf of the government during April and May, 1981, in London and, if so (a) what were the duties (b) at what cost?

6. Did the government retain, directly or indirectly, the services of any consultant or firm of consultants in the United Kingdom with respect to securing the passage of the proposed act and, if so, what were the names of the consultants and what amount was paid or is payable for their services and expenses?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Since many officials and ministers often combined work in London with respect to securing passage of the Canada Act 1982 with other official business, it is not possible to determine with any degree of accuracy the total cost incurred in London to secure the passage of the Canada Act 1982.

2. Yes. L. Burton, S. Burke, N. Burpee, L. Cyr-Mowers, M. Fitzhenry, L. Giroux, J. Manthorpe, A. Stacey, A. Stankovic.

3. Yes. (a)(i) Reeves Haggan; John McNee.

(ii) Mr. Haggan is classified in the public service as an EX-3. His salary is in the range of $54,700 to $64,300. In addition, the application of foreign service directives for salary equalization on foreign postings resulted in a payment of $16,200 for the period November, 1980 to April, 1982. Mr. McNee is classified in the public service as an FS-1. His salary is in the range of $21,177 to $29,204.

(iii) Mr. Haggan's expenses from November, 1980 to March, 31, 1982 were $28,338.47. Mr. McNee's expenses were $10,648.34.

(iv) Mr. Haggan was minister and special advisor to the High Commissioner and was head of the patriation task force from November, 1980 to April 8, 1982. Mr. McNee acted as second secretary from May 11—July 10, 1981 and from October 30—December 15, 1981. He was seconded from his position at the Canadian Embassy in Madrid, Spain.

(b) Both are Canadian citizens.

4. Yes. (a) During the period October 1980—March 1982.

(b) Members of Parliament, Peers, journalists and officials who accepted the hospitality offered by the High Commission did so with the full understanding that their names would not be made public.

(c) Hospitality expenses during the period October 2, 1980—March 29, 1982 totalled 19,947.70 British pounds.

5. Yes. (a) The duties included representing the Minister of Justice at a seminar on the Canadian Constitution at All Souls College in Oxford University. In addition, his duties related to his position at the time as Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board. He also assisted the High Commission in explaining the role, the work, and the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

(b) $3,750.00.

6. Yes. (a) B. Donoghue; D. Scott. (b) 12,466.62 U.K. pounds.

PORT OF LANSDOWNE, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,969—Mr. Cossitt:

1. If persons are arrested for immigration infractions at the port of Lansdowne, are such arrests made by (a) immigration officials (b) Ontario Provincial Police from Gananoque or Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville (c) officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment in Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so, what would be the merit in transferring authority to the Department of Employment and Immigration at the port of Lansdowne outside the area of Leeds-Grenville to the port of Kingston?

2. Was it customary for immigration at Lansdowne, the Ontario Provincial Police at Gananoque and Brockville and the RCMP at Brockville to maintain close liaison with the immigration centre located at Prescott in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so, what advantage could there be in placing immigration at Lansdowne, under the authority of the port of Kingston, outside the constituency of Leeds-Grenville, which has never been involved with Lansdowne?

3. Would such a move involve delays in processing and additional costs and, if so, what are all the details?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Persons arrested for immigration infractions are arrested by immigration officers; RCMP and the OPP may subsequently lay charges if a violation of the Criminal Code is involved.

2. There was and is no specific close liaison between the immigration personnel at Lansdowne with that of immigration at Prescott other than that normally experienced between all immigration points of service. Naturally, it is customary for all immigration points of service to maintain a good liaison with all enforcement agencies within their area of operation. There are several advantages in placing Lansdowne under the authority of the port of Kingston. Staff from Lansdowne will be immediately available for secondment to the Kingston inland centre during low traffic periods, affording better utilization of human resources at minimal costs and, thus, providing developmental exposure to border staff at a more complex inland office. The Ontario Provincial Police at Gananoque and Brockville and RCMP Brockville do maintain a liaison with Lansdowne. However, in most cases the OPP and RCMP contact Ottawa District office of CEIC to seek guidance on immigration cases.

3. Such a move would neither involve delays in processing normal cases nor additional costs.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Friday, April 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, when I called it four o'clock on Friday I was in the course of trying to determine the factor for converting barrels into cubic metres or vice versa. As I recall, I was being assisted by a member other than the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), but I see that she is credited on page 16578 of Hansard with having provided the conversion factor. Be that as it may, I think it is worth while knowing what that factor is.

Can I ask for order, Mr. Speaker, please? There is more than one conversation going on at that end of the House and I find it a little disconcerting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I appreciate the hon. member's point. Perhaps, since he has brought his difficulty to the attention of the House, he can now have the attention he wishes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe the curtains were put there for a purpose. However, I will endeavour to override with my strident tones the conversations taking place.

I was about to say I thought it fortunate that I am covered by parliamentary immunity when I started talking about barrels and cubic metres and so on, because the notion of converting from one to the other is a dangerous operation these days. I learned, for example, that a carpet merchant on the west coast who displayed carpets at so much per square metre, but also had the temerity to advertise them simultaneously at so much per square foot or square yard, is now appearing before a judge because he has broken the law. So it is fortunate that we in this House are covered by parliamentary immunity and can still seek the conversion factor where necessary between barrels and cubic metres.

I find it very helpful, when looking at a bill as complex as this one, to go through it extremely carefully and break it up into its various parts to determine just exactly what the thrust of the bill is. This bill now before us is in effect a copy, with certain important downward changes in tax limits, of the first 40 pages of the bill which caused the bells to ring, Bill C-94, with the exception of page 32 which has already appeared in Bill C-105. That is the iniquitous proposal which would authorize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to spawn as many Crown corporations as he and his officials see fit, independent of Parliament. Even the annex in Bill C-103 has been transcribed faithfully—in cubic metres, mark you—from the earlier bill. The main intent of this bill is described in the explanatory notes. The purpose of this bill is, we read:

• (1510)

—to impose a charge on the export of crude oil and certain petroleum products, to provide compensation for certain petroleum costs and to regulate the price of Canadian crude oil and natural gas in interprovincial and export trade.

There are two purposes of this bill, one, to raise funds and the other, to regulate. Prior to having the bells to ring, we sought in our discussions, to have Bill C-94 broken down into uniprinciple bills. Yet here we have one with two principles, to raise funds and to regulate.

One of the purposes of this bill is to raise funds, and as a result it deserves to be dealt with in a manner quite different from a regulatory bill. Because this bill has two principles, to raise funds and to regulate, I find it rather intolerable. In fact, it is an affront to Parliament to have these two particular principles in the same bill. At least though we were able to have the matter split from Bill C-94. Which in itself was an even more monstrous piece of legislation.

There are several kinds of taxes to be raised. I would like to deal with them separately if I can, not only to get them clear in my own mind, but also to keep them clear in the minds of all other canadians who will have to pay some of those taxes.

First, the explanatory notes state that there is to be an oil export tax. That tax has been in effect for almost 18 months, in fact, since the October, 1980 budget. Its collection at current levels is in the first place to be retroactively legitimized and legalized. That is one of the first things Bill C-103 will do. It will legalize taxes now in place which have been in place since October, 1980. This export tax is, of course, levied at the international border. It forces the price of Canadian oil on the foreign market to higher and higher levels. Legally this oil export charge could be assessed at $8 a barrel but at the present time it is being levied at the rate of $25 per barrel. This is the first legalization procedure through which Bill C-103 takes us. It will legalize the current surcharge up to $25 a barrel. The limit that is placed on this particular levy in the bill, the limit to which the minister can go, will be $55 a barrel with increases at the discretion of the governor in council. I leave you, Mr. Speaker, to inquire how long our offshore markets will last if we double the current export tax level from $25 a barrel to $55 a barrel.

The other comment I have on this oil export charge is that nowhere does the bill specifically require the government to set up a fund into which the tax proceeds are to be fed; nor is there any clear statement as to "the certain petroleum costs" that are to be compensated from it. I find it rather odd for the bill to say that it is in order to compensate for certain petroleum costs and then not specify what those costs may be.

I still hear conversations going on in loud voices and in a very rude manner from the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On past experience, funds collected by this government, which has so many rude members who talk loudly in this House while others are trying to have themselves heard—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. May I draw to the attention of the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) wishes to address him and he would like his attention. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On past experience, funds collected through taxes for certain purposes have all too often been funnelled off into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, there to be used for general purposes. We shall have to do everything possible in the consideration of this bill in committee to ensure that the oil export tax—sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I do wonder about the courtesy extended the members in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has no choice at this point. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has three times brought to the attention of the House and the Chair that he is unable to direct his remarks to the House because of the noise factor. I have to agree with the hon. member. If hon. members in the area where I am pointing feel it is necessary to carry on conversations, I would request them either to lower their voices or to solve the problem in some fashion in which the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich can be heard. He has brought the matter to the attention of the Chair three times.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I suppose it is because of the conformation of the House in that particular corner which causes these echoes to occur here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do hope they will heed your admonition, Mr. Speaker.

My comment about the various sections of the bill causes me at this stage to leap over one of the tax levies in the bill. I will return to it in due course because it is a highly specialized one and it applies to a particular class of user. But the more important one and the next one I wish to examine is called the petroleum compensation charge. It may be that a number of those listening—and I hope some people are listening—are wondering why I am going over this matter by laying out a series of charges this bill will bring into being. But I want to make it clear that in the end the Canadian consumer, whether he drives a car or heats his house, is the one who will be paying these various charges. I am therefore breaking the bill down in this way to demonstrate that.

This petroleum compensation charge is levied at the processing level but it eventually works its way through the system. Owners of cars eventually pay for it whenever gas is pumped into their cars or oil is put into their furnaces. Canadians in the end pay this tax. The proceeds are intended to bridge the gap between domestic oil and offshore oil.

We may ask ourselves in 1982, since we have been talking about energy for as long as I can remember in this House and seeking self-sufficiency for just as long, why we are importing offshore oil? I have wondered about this for a long time. Here we see one of the major accomplishments of the bell-ringing operation early last month. Bill C-94, about which we were protesting so dramatically, set the charges for this petroleum compensation level at a maximum of $125 per cubic metre. Bill C-103 drops that limit to $75 per cubic metre. In other words, the bells rang and the government listened. It was a good thing that the government dropped the $125 charge contained in Bill C-94 to the $75 one in Bill C-103. Again I revert to more meaningful terms when I say from $20 per barrel to $12 per barrel. I guess it was worth keeping the bells ringing after all.

My second comment on this tax and its purpose is to draw the attention of the House to the fact that today we are needlessly importing 300,000 barrels of oil per day while cheaper domestic oil is locked into the ground. I do not know what madman devised the tax to pay for the importation of something which could be produced at home more cheaply. I just do not understand that type of reasoning. I would not be surprised if some Liberal members on the other side examined the bill and had difficulty understanding it. I suspect they have not examined it.

I do not think any apology is required for repeating something that was said by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) when he spoke to the bill last Wednesday. As reported at page 16480 of Hansard, he indicated that the misguided practice of importing and locking in 300,000 barrels of oil in Canada is costing Canadians $20 million per day. I questioned him at lunchtime as to whether he was sure about the figure. It is an outrageous figure, it comes to $7 billion per year which is being collected, from Canadians who are listening as well as those who are not listening, in order to pay for oil which we already have. Of course, we have to pay in United States funds, which puts a great strain on our exchange rate and the rate of inflation. I wonder whether Canadians have thought about its particular impact on the Canadian rate of exchange. A drain of that sort in United States funds, which have to be bought at 18, 19 or 20 per cent, is certainly considerable.

Why are we spending $20 million per day to import a product which we can produce in Canada and which will create jobs in Canada, rather than creating them in Venezuela, Saudi Arabia and Mexico? In any event, jobs are not being created in Canada, either in the east or in the west. Hon. members opposite still do not understand the idea that to choke and throttle the west is to choke and throttle the east, because the pipes and trucks are manufactured here. For one job lost in the west, two jobs are lost in the east. I see my hon. friend opposite giggling and waving; he just happens to fall in between.

Another tax to which I would like to refer is a specialized one. It is called the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. It is a long title which is supposed to be self-explanatory, but it is not quite. It appeared in the previous bill in this form, but as it contained certain peculiarities in its presentation, I decided to leave my consideration of it to this point. As its title almost suggests, this charge is to be levied on marine vehicles and aircraft fuelling in Canada but consuming their fuel on offshore routes. The bill provides only an upper limit of levy but gives no hint what the levy will be as of tomorrow or what the levy is today, for that matter. I suspect it is being levied today. All of this is to be decided, as in some of the other instances, by the governor in council with the advice of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

The ceiling is set at $350 per cubic metre or $55 per barrel. Here again Parliament is being asked to turn over to two ministers of the government the power to set the levels of taxes. I think that principle is wrong. If the government wants to phase it in, it should be phased in in statute law as it indicated in other portions of the bill it is doing on the retroactive aspects of it. But I think the future aspects of it should be phased in by statute as well, and not left to the ministers or to the government to decide. Of course, these provisions like the others are retroactive. The levy has been collected since the budget of November 1980. Currently they run at $78 for marine diesel on the east coast and, peculiarly, at $47 for the same fuel on the west coast. There is no explanation here or anywhere which I have been able to discover as to why there is a differential in the charges for marine fuel on the east coast and on the west coast, with a high preference on the west coast for marine fuel being consumed in an offshore voyage. This is one matter which ought to be clarified by the minister in committee.

The charges for aircraft fuel and whether they vary across the country, I have been unable to discover. I hope there is ample opportunity in committee to inquire more closely into these matters.

There is one aspect of the bill which I think deserves some comment at this particular stage. I am wondering whether the definition of "offshore" on page 9 of Bill C-103, which is relevant to this particular levy, has been inserted in order to stake a claim for offshore jurisdiction. Clause 13(2) on page 9 reads in part as follows:

—"offshore area" means Sable Island or any area of land not within a province that belongs to Her Majesty in right of Canada or in respect of which Her Majesty in right of Canada has the right to dispose of or exploit the natural resources and that is situated in those submarine areas adjacent to the coast of Canada and extending throughout the natural prolongation of the land territory of Canada to the outer edge of the continental margin or to a distance of 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of Canada is measured, whichever is greater;

It looks as though in the course of time this definition may be used to assert a claim over these particular areas. We have heard of the claims being made by the province of Newfoundland to certain areas out to sea. This particular clause of Bill C-103 is one which I am sure members from Newfoundland will look at most carefully. The question that must be asked is whether the federal government has decided to insert this clause in order to acquire title by definition in a statute dealing primarily with other matters rather than by proceeding directly by statute to make this claim. I do not know the answer but I believe we should inquire into this matter more thoroughly in the days ahead.

On page 23 of the bill we see a new clause, in two parts, outlining Canadian ownership provisions. This includes a petroleum ownership charge, which is a levy, and a Canadian ownership account, which is a fund into which the proceeds of that levy are to go. Presumably, future and past acquisitions are financed through that account. For example, there was the purchase of the non-Canadian firm Petrofina. Petrofina was a refining and distribution system which had no petroleum resources—only outlets—but we are expected to believe that through the purchase of outlets the government was contributing toward energy self-sufficiency in this country. I believe it was a highly questionable acquisition because it was obviously done for visibility.

As well, there is the purchase of Pacific Petroleums and Merit, two refiners and distributors in the west which have visible outlets—all displaying white and red signs—and Petrofina in the east with blue and white signs which now have become red and white. Although this is visible evidence of the distribution of products, there is certainly no evidence whatsoever—and therefore no justification for these acquisitions—that they contributed, one drop of petroleum to Canada's self-sufficiency.

It is worth remarking that the bells rang for those 15 days in our favour and for the benefit of Canadians. In Bill C-94, the petroleum ownership charge was to have been as high as $25 per cubic metre, whereas the new bill, C-103, has reduced that levy to $7.25 per cubic metre. That is, from $4 a barrel to $1.15 a barrel, the current rate. Once again the bells won that concession. While other aspects of this bill deserve comment, I think I have exposed enough concerns in order to reach some conclusions.

I do not wish to take up more time of the House because other members wish to speak, but I just repeat that these are some matters which must be kept in mind and considered. I have dealt with these levies separately, remembering that these separate levies should be added to the 60 cents per gallon at the pump which we are now paying the federal government. We are now paying over $2 a barrel for our gasoline. If these extra levies reach their maximum, the cost of regular gasoline will rise from $2 per gallon to $2.96 per gallon. Presumably this is working toward energy self-sufficiency. However, in the process we are importing 300,000 barrels a day and paying $20 million a day for it.

I have not touched upon the issue of home heating oil. The Conservative government had proposed an increase of 18 cents per gallon of gasoline for our cars. We are now faced with a levy of something in the order of 52 cents a gallon, which is almost three and a half times more. With respect to heating oil, our party had made it quite clear that Canadians would be enjoying a heating tax credit. The levy which we have been discussing in this bill will apply just as heavily and onerously to heating oil as it does to automotive oil.

On the strength of that comment I can draw my remarks to a close because I believe the message I wanted to make is now clear. We will be paying almost triple the amount we are now paying for our gas and we will be paying heavily as well for our heating oil. Next winter will be a hard one for those hit with those increases, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak to Bill C-103 this afternoon. I carefully listened to the comments of the previous speaker and I share a number of his concerns. Various members of the New Democratic Party have had an opportunity to discuss a number of aspects of Bill C-103, particularly with respect to a number of clauses which we would like to see amended. Since the bill will proceed from this second reading stage into the appropriate committee for intensive study where some amendments will hopefully be made, I would like to take this opportunity to sum up a number of concerns which our party has and conclude this debate on Bill C-103 so that we may debate some other bills which form part of this over-all energy legislation.

When Bill C-103 is reviewed, it can be seen that it is not an energy bill, petroleum administration bill or an energy security bill. Although it is entitled the Energy Administration Act, it is not really that either. It is more like a tax bill and could even be described by some as a desperate tax bill. This bill which deals with the very critical, crucial and strategic energy sector will result in Canadians paying more tax than ever before.

When one considers that the Canadian taxpayer will be the loser, I believe it is a fair question to ask who the winners will be. When one reviews Bill C-103 closely we see, as is the case with other energy bills, that the major winners will be the oil companies operating in Canada, most of which are foreign controlled and owned. Those companies will be the primary beneficiaries of Bill C-103. Those Canadians who will be paying these additional taxes on gas and heating fuels are those who can least afford it. That is why these taxes are regressive. Those are the people today who are on fixed incomes and those who find themselves unemployed or about to be unemployed as a result of the policies of the federal government. Those on fixed pensions or fixed incomes of one kind or another are being pressed to the wall. We do not see legislation coming in which will give an energy tax credit to people in need. We do not see legislation coming in to give some assistance to those people who depend for so much of their livelihood on energy. I am thinking here of the farmers, the food producers of the country, when it comes to Canadians generally.

Perhaps the media is not paying much attention to bill C-103, but the people of Canada certainly should be. However, they have essentially given up in their frustration and anxiety. They have been duped by the federal government. They were duped back in 1980 during the federal election when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went from one end of the country to the other promising Canadians that the price of gasoline would be going down and that the Liberals would not tolerate increases in the prices of gasoline, diesel fuels or heating fuels. A little over two years ago, he promised Canadians that the Liberals would not tolerate significant increases in these very critical areas. We now know that that was certainly a falsehood and that, indeed, the price is now higher, I suppose, than almost anyone believed possible in two short years.

While prices at the pumps are going up and while prices are going up for home heating fuels, we sit in this House and debate bills which will give billions of dollars in the next handful of years, not to Canadian consumers but, rather, to the oil companies. We are also going out of our way to announce a number of tax concessions, not to Canadians, not to consumers and taxpayers but, rather, to the large oil companies operating in Canada which, as I said earlier, are primarily foreign controlled and foreign owned.

Mr. Deans: So they can sell us back our oil.

Mr. Riis: So they can sell us back the oil that rightfully belongs to us. We wonder why Canadians have essentially given up. We wonder why Canadians feel they have been duped by the federal government. Well, it is perfectly clear. There is certainly no question in our minds in this corner of the House as to why that attitude exists today.

Essentially, this bill can be broken down into six different components. Let me take just a moment or two in which to identify these components, and then I want specifically to refer to a number of them. First, Bill C-103 will raise the oil export charge ceiling, will confirm the charges imposed since May, 1979 and will therefore give authority to turn over 50 per cent of the resulting revenue to the producing provinces. That is one of the aspects of Bill C-103. It will establish the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. It will establish a blended price for oil. It will establish the authority for, and then the termination of, a special compensation charge relating to the cut-off of Alberta oil last year. This legislation will end the Petroleum Compensation Board and allow for the continuation of its work to be done in an expanded way by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It will also establish the Canadian ownership special charge and the Canadian ownership account.

The petroleum compensation charge will be a mechanism whereby the blended price of oil will be developed. It will be charged at the pumps so that all Canadians depending upon gasoline for transportation will pay it. As I say, that is a very regressive way of taxing people. It is intended to compensate refiners who are now forced to import expensive foreign oils while oil wells are capped out in western Canada.

I think the question we must ask is why Canada is not self-sufficient in oil today.

Mr. Deans: Lack of effort.

Mr. Riis: We are self-sufficient when it comes to energy per se. However, when it comes to this very strategic energy resource, we are continually dependent upon imports from foreign countries. Why is this? I suspect that when we answer the question we then bring into question the integrity of the major oil companies operating in Canada today. This is because back in the early 1970s we were exporting half our daily production. The oil companies told the federal government that we had enough oil in the ground in reserve to last at least 300 years. Therefore, they asked: "Why not export oil? Why not export half of what we produce on a daily basis?"

If that had been a fact, then perhaps the case could be made. But in 1973, at the outbreak of the OPEC crisis, we had to realign those particular figures, because then the oil companies told us that we did not have enough oil for 300 years; rather, we had enough for only 11 years. They said we needed to get out and explore for new oil and develop new reserves.

Mr. Deans: A "minor miscalculation".

Mr. Riis: As my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) indicates, it was a minor miscalculation—about 280 years out. However, that was because at that time this country depended, and virtually still does today, upon information from the foreign oil companies to enable us to plan for the future. What country in the world would tolerate that? What oil producing country in the world would tolerate being dependent upon foreign producers for its data base? Only Canada, once more leading the world in this rather exotic fashion.

Back in 1973, we found out that we had enough oil for only 11 years. Some of the oil companies came to the federal government and to the Canadian public and said: "We need to explore; but, of course, we will not pay for exploration ourselves as we cannot afford it. Our profits are minimal. Therefore, we need support from the Canadian taxpayers." That is what they are stating today. Hon. members have seen the commercials on television and the newspaper ads stating the concern of the oil companies, such as Gulf and Imperial Oil, for the future oil security of Canada, and that they need support in their exploration for new oil. Bill C-103 will be one more step toward giving the oil companies $6.5 billions to assist them in their exploration.

Mr. Deans: We cannot afford it.

Mr. Riis: We certainly cannot afford $6.5 billion to assist in exploration. We are saying to the oil companies that for every dollar they spend up there in the frontier areas and for every dollar they spend exploring for oil offshore, the Canadian taxpayers will pick up 93 cents of the tax, and that we will ask the companies to pick up 7 cents of the tax. We are saying to the oil companies that if oil is found, however, we want a cut of the action. We want some of the equity as a result of this investment. We are saying that we will invest 93 per cent but that we want 25 per cent equity. Can one imagine any business operator running his or her business under those conditions, 25 per cent of the action for 93 per cent of the risk? Yet that is what we are being asked to support here in the House. It is absolute madness. I suspect that if we are to be paying 93 cents on the dollar for 25 per cent of the action, we should probably add on the extra 7 cents, pay a dollar for a dollar, and get 100 per cent of the action. That would be a much more sound business arrangement.

But we know the scenario. The oil companies need support, so they will ask the taxpayers of Canada to help them out. We will find more oil, we will have a surplus of oil, and we will then be asked to give permission to export oil because of this surplus. We will then find out that our figures were incorrect and that we have another problem. We will find that we need to explore for more petroleum opportunities, the oil companies will come to the Canadian government to ask for more support by the taxpayers, and we will give it. Then there will be a surplus of oil and we will be on the old treadmill all over again.

That is the kind of madness that Canadians are no longer prepared to tolerate. They are no longer prepared to support this kind of mentality. I think the recent Gallup poll very clearly indicates that fact. In a very extensive Gallup poll, Canadians were asked, "Are you interested in having Petro-Canada as the dominant oil industry in this country? Are you interested in self-sufficiency by the year 1985, where more than 75 per cent of the oil industry would be Canadian controlled?" The answer was overwhelmingly yes. Seventy per cent of Canadians said that is what they want. That is why I suspect my friends in the Tory party are not responding very positively to the wishes of Canadian citizens. The taxpayers of Canada want this madness to stop.

Let us talk for a moment or two about the refiners who are receiving these compensation charges because they have presumably been forced to buy at excessive world prices and must therefore be compensated. If you look carefully at the figures, Mr. Speaker, you find that many of the refiners are being overcompensated between $7 and $12 a barrel. In other words, they are not able to buy cheap oil on the spot market of the world and are compensated on the average price of landed oil in the port of Montreal.

In a sense, many of the refineries in central Canada are making money to the tune of $7 to $12 per barrel. When you consider the amount of oil being moved through the central Canadian refineries, it means that some people are making virtually windfall profits. Who is paying for these windfall profits? Who is paying for this illogical compensation payment? Once again it is the taxpayers of Canada. They are paying certain refineries in central Canada more money than they require to compensate for the purchase of foreign oil. Very clearly, we need a more accurate system of calculating this compensation rate. That is one thing we will be advocating and speaking very loudly about when this bill goes to committee.

What is sad for a member of Parliament from western Canada is the fact that we are now shutting in wells in western Canada. This is because the refineries in central Canada are not required to buy western oil. This is being done to the tune of about 30,000 barrels per day of production. Each day 30,000 barrels are locked into the ground as we import expensive foreign oil. Some people say that by the end of the summer it will not be 30,000 but 300,000 barrels per day.

That is a tragic situation when you consider the economic problems facing much of the oil industry in western Canada, with special emphasis on the small operators within the industry, the service industries and so on. The big companies are able to take care of themselves, but the small independent entrepreneurs in western Canada are being pushed to the wall. This is because we have a weak federal government that is only asking eastern refiners to give preference to western Canadian oil. If we are going to be locked into this kind of compensation payment, we need to do more than ask the refiners. Indeed, we should require the use of Canadian oil wherever and whenever possible.

The issue is that this whole matter is extremely costly to Canadians. Canadians find it frustrating to know that if they cross the border they can pick up gasoline significantly cheaper than in Canada. While it might appear their prices are going to stabilize or drop a bit, ours are guaranteed to increase. Canadians wonder why they are paying more than they have to in terms of compensation rates to the refiners and why they are paying the oil companies billions of dollars per year. Why are we not prepared to change the tax structure which will result in a more equitable tax flow from the oil companies? These are questions that members opposite have not had the opportunity to respond to.

The present rate of compensation to importers of foreign oil is $17.32 per barrel. Who pays? The consumers of Canada. In 1981-82, compensation charges cost the consumers $5.16 billion in one year. This present year they cost the taxpayers close to $3 billion. It will cost the consumers of Canada $3 billion when it should not be costing them anything. We can and ought to be delivering oil to the eastern refineries, something we would be doing if we had the foresight and planning that this industry requires. The present petroleum compensation charge per barrel of crude Canadian oil is $6.30, again coming from Canadians paying their heating bills.

It is clear that based on the Gallup poll which I referred to earlier, and based on the kinds of charges that are being levied against Canadian consumers and passed along primarily to the oil companies, there is only one way to go. The people of Canada must become a more major player in this critical and strategic industry. The only real way to do that would be through public ownership of a major sector of this industry.

If we are going to pay out $6.5 billion in the next five years to the oil companies, perhaps we ought to ask ourselves what would be the price to buy Imperial oil. How much would it cost Canadian taxpayers to purchase Canadian Imperial Oil? The charge would not be $6.5 billion, but $4.5 billion for the largest oil company operating in this country. That would certainly put us in the driver's seat of this strategic industry. It would go a great distance toward returning to the people of Canada the benefits from this industry.

We do not want to be duped again by the government suggesting that PetroCan is a major player. That is the impression one gets. We know the major player in the oil industry is Imperial Oil. In terms of Canadian owned industry, it is not PetroCan that leads the pack; there are five ahead of it on the list. Dome Petroleum and others are ahead. When you see the fancy ads and the rhetoric of the federal government regarding PetroCan, Mr. Speaker, you must be very careful.

Mr. McDermid: Dome is Canadian.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate that. I said that Petro-Canada is not the largest Canadian oil company operating in this country. Dome Petroleum is the largest, and there are other Canadian owned oil companies with it. What is disappointing is that the present government apparently has no plans to make PetroCan the major player in the league.

The Canadian ownership special charge that was intended to provide the capital to purchase oil companies in order to expand the amount of Canadian ownership has been reduced from a possible maximum of $4 per barrel to $1.15 per barrel. That means the takeover money that was supposed to be coming from this special levy simply will not be available. The strategic industry to which this bill is addressed will continue to be dominated by foreign oil companies. Decisions regarding this strategic resource will continue to be made in the board rooms of foreign countries around the world. I cannot imagine why anyone would suggest that is in the best interests of Canada's future.

I want to refer to a couple of critical clauses of this bill that need to be changed. One allows the federal government to set the price of oil in the territories. Time and again the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that, in his estimation, the concept of federalism is dead in this country. Most members of this House do not feel that way. In fact, federalism is something we want to nurture, encourage and support. The way to do that is not by saying to those who live and govern in the Territories that when it comes to setting the price of oil, we have no faith in them, that we will set the price here in Ottawa because we know what is best for those living in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. It seems to me that a much more positive step, a step that will recognize the concept of federalism that will or ought to exist in this country, is to negotiate a price for oil found in the territories of Canada. This is something that we will be advocating, Mr. Speaker, when the bill gets into committee.

• (1600)

We were very disappointed to find that the draft of Bill C-103 had been altered by the time it got to the House. In the draft it was made very clear that once the pricing arrangements had been made between the federal government and the provincial governments, if there was a difficulty or an impasse, then the federal government would have the final word; they would have paramountcy in this particular matter. In the concept of federalism and recognizing the realities of Canada, we have no difficulty with that; we have to accept it. In the end, if a price has to be determined, we have to accept the responsibility for setting that price.

Nevertheless, in the draft legislation, if a number of members in the House stood up and wanted to debate that issue, so that it became a clearly understood issue in Canada, then that option would be available to them and there would be a debate, although limited in time; but at least, it would be an issue to be placed before the people of Canada. Bill C-103 eliminates that option. The Liberal government is saying: "Listen, we want the opportunity to set this rate arbitrarily or unilaterally, if necessary; we do not want to discuss it in Parliament; we do not want to have even half an hour's debate on it in Parliament". To me, Mr. Speaker, that is undemocratic; it is not operating in the spirit that Canadians have grown to love over the years and it is certainly working against the very principle of a democratic society and parliamentary government.

I am looking forward to getting into committee and asking the members opposite to explain why it is they want to stop debate on such a critical issue, why they will not allow us to debate it, and what made them change their minds on that original draft proposal.

There are some clauses one could identify, Mr. Speaker, but previous speakers in the New Democratic Party have identified the areas of major concern to us. There are some areas we feel are appropriate and there are some steps in the legislation that we feel are good, that need to be taken; but certainly a great deal of fine tuning still remains.

I suppose that my personal disappointment, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to Bill C-103, is that because of the number of points that my colleagues and I have raised, it demontrates very clearly that the people of Canada have lost faith in their political leaders. It demonstrates very clearly why the people of Canada have lost faith in the Liberal government. At a time when every single Canadian is feeling the pinch as a result of high energy prices, whether they be putting diesel fuel in tractors or in boats or simply filling up an automobile at the pump when going to and from work, or paying the heating bills at the end of the month, the people of Canada would like to see a government that has some courage and is prepared to stand up and say: "Enough of this; it is time that we got control of this very strategic industry". It is not like copper; it is not like the cedar industry; it is not like the apple industry. This particular industry provides the very framework for western culture, for our way of life. It is simply not another resource to deal with; it is the very basis of our western North American Canadian culture.

To permit foreign countries and foreign companies to have the say in how this resource is developed, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is almost unbelievable. There is virtually not a single country in the world that is a producer of this strategic resource that would allow this to occur, but we are one. It is amazing how we continue on, by duping the Canadian public, by misleading them in election campaigns, by carrying out extensive advertising campaigns, giving the people the impression that we are rushing headlong into obtaining control over this very strategic industry, when in fact we are not. In this party, Mr. Speaker, we feel that it is our role to speak out against such inappropriate legislation and attempt in whatever way possible to communicate to the people that this particular approach must change.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, like other speakers before me, I totally agree that the proposed new title of the bill before us—the Energy Administration Act—is a deceptive misnomer. Although energy and administration are involved, this is really a tax bill; or, indeed, it is a highway robery bill. The word "energy" simply indicates from which source the government plans to reap these taxes; and the word "administration" is simply a more palatable word for unlimited power to spend money.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), when speaking to the bill, made a number of astonishing statements. Perhaps even more astonishing was that he made these statements with a straight face. Even though we are nearly at the end of the month, I had half expected him to conclude his remarks by saying "April Fool"! But he did not, so he was obviously very serious when he said:

> Our oil and gas pricing schedule, as created in consultation with the provinces, reflects the sense of realism and fairness which characterizes our energy program.

In no sense whatever is the price Canadians now pay, or will be paying, for their gasoline and oil either realistic or fair. It is abominable. And because it is, I suppose in a twisted way it actually does reflect the government's energy program. So the minister was right in that sense.

The minister went on to say that the government's pricing system has three essential advantages over what was proposed by the previous Progressive Conservative government. Let us examine that statement. The Clark government, on the record, proposed that an additional tax of 18 cents a gallon be levied on gasoline only, not on home heating oil. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of his government toured the country promising Canadians—cross their little hearts—that under a Liberal government the tax increase would not exceed 14 cents a gallon.

Mr. Speaker, I know we have to be careful what we say in the House of Commons. We could say that they are "playing with the truth" there. I am reminded, and I believe I mentioned this before, that a great statesman in the British House of Commons once questioned one of the speakers there, mentioned the word "lie" and was made to retract, and justly so. However, he then said: "Mr. Speaker, I will not use that word but I will say that the speaker was guilty of a terminological inexactitude".

I suppose that this statement we are dealing with here was sent around the contry over television and radio and this was why the Prime Minister and the group across the way were returned to office in 1980 because the people believed them. First of all, the people thought that 18 cents a gallon was absolutely horrendous and the idea of 14 cents a gallon looked pretty good. Time and again I have mentioned it to people who are unhappy now and I have said: "It serves you right; you thought 18 cents was a tremendous amount and now you have a much higher tax than that." So Canadians to their sorrow have learned that Liberal promises are not written in stone and always right.

Under this government the price of gasoline has risen, as we are all well aware, to almost $2 a gallon. Of this amount nearly $1.35 is siphoned off in taxes by the federal and provincial governments—two-thirds of what we are paying. It is almost in the same category as whisky. I am one who says we can tax alcohol in that form reasonably heavily because it is a luxury pure and simple. Perhaps in some people's minds it is a medicine, but I do not buy that too often!

Through individual taxes provincial governments create their share of the burden, and for that they provide many services, including highways and so forth. However, through its tax grab at various levels the federal governments is the real oppressor and the real culprit.

When praising the federal pricing system the minister said that it ensures that prices rise gradually and predictably so that consumers and the Canadian economy in general are given time to adjust. It has been pretty hard to adjust to these prices in the time given to us. In the short time since this government was returned to office and after the government's promising lower prices, the cost of gasoline and home heating oil has risen rapidly and astronomically. I can assure the minister that not a single vehicle owner or home owner has yet adjusted to the shock, and I do not know if consumers ever will. Now throught this bill the minister and the government are seeking authority to raise these prices even higher.

The minister made much of the fact that the price of crude oil is lower in Canada than elsewhere. One of our speakers—I believe the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre)—pointed out that the Canadian consumer does not use crude oil. Canadians use the products of crude oil, and it is the taxes on those products which are crippling consumers. Perhaps we should be devising some sort of small refinery in each of our homes; then we could buy crude oil and refine it ourselves. That way we could circumvent these terrible taxes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Don't you believe it!

Mr. Darling: That is quite right; we should not believe it because the government opposite would tax it even on that basis. As I said before, the taxes already being imposed and the increase being proposed amount to nothing more then highway robbery.

If this bill is passed—and I assume it will be—and the government is allowed to impose on gasoline whatever amount of tax it wishes, there will not be anyone left in the country able to afford to drive or, probably, to heat his home.

In the bill the government is seeking authority for the Canadian ownership special charge to allow it to expand its ownership in the oil and gas industry. This charge, which amounts to four cents a gallon, or $800 million a year, is now being used to pay off the purchase of Petrofina. What do the ads say? "It's ours". We certainly paid a price for it because the government bought the company at about four or five times the market value. Anyone who watched the stock market saw the astronomical jump in the price of shares of Petrofina. Someone must have had some inside information. I suppose some were lucky guessers; it was like the Ouija board! A lot of money was made on that. Many of us are well aware of the controversy still surrounding the purchase of that company.

The government, which should have hung its head in shame at the time of the purchase because of the conditions of the purchase, once again gives an indication through this bill of its contempt for the taxpayer. First, it used tax dollars to buy the company at an inflated price in a questionable deal, and now it wants to soak the taxpayer even more to complete the deal. When the purchase is complete, the government plans to use the money collected through the special charge to finance additional purchases of some other oil companies. Again, I presume the government will pay probably two or three times what those companies are worth. If the method of buying Petrofina is any example, Canadians certainly—and understandably—are very reluctant to give the government any money for future deals of this description.

The government promises that any future purchase would only be undertaken after Parliament has had a chance to debate the matter through—and this is a lovely phrase—a negative resolution procedure. The very phrase is indicative of the nature of this government's backhanded and underhanded regard for Parliament and, by extension, for taxpayers. Under the negative resolution procedure, the time for debate in this House and in the other place is limited to three hours in each chamber. Debate would take place without reference to legislation planned, without spelling out the mandate of the new corporation to be created and without any limits being placed on government. And, in a move undoubtedly unconstitutional, if this House did not approve the move and it was approved in the other place, the government would consider the division as consent and go right ahead with its plans.

Another power play for the government in this bill is the petroleum compensation charge and related spending. The government is now collecting about 24 cents a gallon at the pump, or a total of about $3 billion. Every time a Canadian buys a gallon of gasoline, heating oil or diesel fuel, 24 cents of the price paid per gallon is used to subsidize oil imported from Venezuela, Mexico and other offshore sources. This would be understandable if we had none of our own oil here in Canada, but we do. It has been estimated that because of the government's oil import program, 300,000 barrels of non-subsidized Canadian oil is left in the ground each day. That situation is beyond belief. Canadians are paying up to $20 million a day to import the oil we do not extract from our own sources. And because we are not using our own oil, Canadian companies are losing millions of dollars. Some are reducing their operations and, yes, some are even going bankrupt. This has contributed to unemployment and adds significant stress to an already very troubled economy. The problem does not end there. The government, already deeply in debt, has to borrow funds to pay for oil imports, and this only adds to the nation's economic mess.

Is all this bothering the government? Not at all. In this bill the government wants the authority to raise the compensation charge to $7.5 billion per year without coming to Parliament for approval. This is an outrage.

The government says its underlying goal is to Canadianize our oil and gas industry. Well, if this blundering is the way this government works to achieve that goal, the word "Canadianize" may soon be synonymous with "vaporize". Label it "Canadian" and see it vanish!

The transportation fuel recovery charge is yet another form of tax contained in this bill. The government is imposing a special tax on diesel fuel used by Canadian ships engaged in international trade. If the National Energy Program was devised as a means of helping Canadians, why in the world is the government imposing a tax on fuel for Canadian ships which will raise the cost well above prevailing United States prices? The National Energy Program is a prize, all right—a booby prize!

The situation with respect to airline fuel tax is even stranger. The tax on international flights was withdrawn when it was found to be in violation of international agreements but, because the government had already collected the tax, through the bill it seeks authority to legalize the collection of that illegal tax. This is an amazing situation, one which clearly illustrates how this government operates.

Returning to the petroleum compensation charge for a moment, a method of operation this government frequently employs, the compensation charge was originally established to create a special fund to subsidize Syncrude production to domestic levels. To keep Canadian prices down we were prepared to pay producers for their loss, and the charge was to cover the subsidy. The charge was not considered a tax; it was money being collected for a special fund. However, when the federal government chose to try to bring the government of Alberta to heel and began importing costly offshore oil, the minister, through a ways and means motion, raised the price of the compensation charge. The legality of this method of increasing the charge was in dispute, but the government paid no attention.

Now, through this bill, it again seeks to legalize and expand on an illegal act. Accountability, like Canadianization, is a word whose meaning has been drastically altered under this government. In matters of energy, as indeed in many other areas affecting the lives of Canadians, the government has promised the moon and delivered instead a black hole. What matters to the people has become anti-matter to the government. Perhaps scientists seeking to make contact with alien life forms would do well to focus their efforts and attention on the other side of the House. The government, in the street vernacular, is doing its own thing, in its own space. The people of Canada should unite in an instant to send the government and this bill into a more appropriate place—into space.

As we are all well aware, the bill is going to legitimize taxes which the government has been collecting illegally. As I mentioned before, I believe that out of every dollar the consumer pays for gasoline, 30 cents goes to the producer, the service station and others and 70 cents goes to the provincial and federal governments.The federal government takes the lion's share and now it is going to avail itself, through this bill, of the opportunity to take more.

I think that most Canadians are aware of the bell ringing that went on for two weeks. There was some criticism of this party by certain people in the country but not the majority. The calls and letters that I received from my riding and adjacent riding, which is held by a Liberal cabinet minister, were from people who were screaming blue murder or patting us on the back. They were telling us to keep it up and show the government that it cannot be as autocratic and dictatorial as it wants to be. The ringing of the bells saved the taxpayers of Canada a sizeable amount of money.

Mr. Collenette: Rubbish! Absolute nonsense!

Mr. Darling: Prove it. Read the bill. That monstrosity, Bill C-94, with about 148 pages, would have empowered the government to collect up to 98 cents per gallon of gasoline. At least now the government has agreed to reduce that to 52 cents per gallon. There is no question that this party made a worthwhile effort on behalf of the Canadian people. The majority of the people are now wringing their hands and asking why they ever believed the government when it was running around at election time saying it was going to keep the price of energy down below the 18 cents per gallon that the Conservative government had advocated.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, occasionally in this House there is some value in repetition. Today all Canadians have the right to ask if Liberal members of Parliament will vote for the 52 cents per gallon tax on gasoline. They were elected because they told Canadians that 18 cents per gallon was too much. Will they vote today for a tax of 52 cents per gallon on gasoline? That is the question.

Will they stand up in the House today, and at report stage and at third reading stage, and vote to increase the gasoline tax by 52 cents per gallon when they won an election claiming that 18 cents a gallon was too much? Will they stand up in the House and vote for a tax increase of 52 cents per gallon? All Canadians have the right to watch and listen and look at their behaviour.

Today in this House, as the day goes by, as we get closer to the vote, we are going to witness one of the most hypocritical actions ever perpetrated on the Canadian people when members of the Liberal party stand in the House and vote for an increase in gasoline taxes of 52 cents per gallon. They went to the Canadian people and said that 18 cents was too much. Was 18 cents too much?

Mr. Irwin: Go on to the next paragraph.

Mr. Hawkes: Did the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) stand on a platform and tell his electors that 18 cents per gallon was too much? Is the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie going to stand in the House today and vote for an increase of 52 cents per gallon? How is the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie going to explain that to his voters?

Mr. Irwin: Go back to your French for a little variation.

Mr. Hawkes: A little French, says the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, for a little variation.

[Translation]

Are the Liberal members from Quebec today going to vote for a tax increase? An increase that is not going to be 18 cents but 52 cents per gallon, and that is the truth.

• (1630)

[English]

Later today all of those members from Quebec will stand in this House and vote for one simple tax, 52 cents a gallon. Before the bells rang it was 98 cents a gallon, and I hope Canadian taxpayers understand that 16 days of bell ringing saved them 46 cents a gallon. I hope Canadians understand that the Liberal Party of Canada later today will drive the final nail into the coffin of their integrity. When they stand in this House and vote for a single tax which will increase the price of gasoline 52 cents a gallon after promising the electors to keep it below 18 cents a gallon, their integrity goes out the window. Win an election, break your promise, and look at yourself in the mirror each morning. Ask yourself about your own personal sense of integrity. Is that what politics in Canada is all about?

I could stay on that theme, Mr. Speaker, and in some ways I would like to stay on that theme, for whatever time is allowed me, because that is the fundamental principle in Bill C-103. The integrity of democracy is being challenged by this legislation. It is not right or good for our democracy when politicians go on public platforms and make clear and consistent statements to the voters about their intentions, and then go back on their promises when they win the election. Repeated behaviour of that kind undermines the integrity of the democratic process. It makes each and every Canadian less willing to cooperate with their government. It makes the continuation of our democracy less certain in the long term. It is that kind of behaviour which lies at the heart of the feelings of alienation in western Canada, and it lies at the heart of a growing and strengthening separatist movement. If you cannot trust your government, if we do not have a system which holds politicians responsible for their promises, then the integrity of the people who live in that region of the country will produce a political system which they can trust.

As I sat in committee with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) the other day, I was bitterly and deeply disappointed at his lack of comprehension of that fact. As I stand here today to debate Bill C-103, I do so with a sense of sadness about a National Energy Program which has been an absolute unmitigated disaster for all Canadians. Not just Canadians who live in the west, but all Canadians.

We have a government which said it would keep the price of Canadian oil at a level which would never exceed 75 per cent of the world price. If you are a lawyer and read the fine print, Mr. Speaker, you might be able to argue that that promise has been kept. But if you just apply a little common sense, you know it has not. The application of that common sense begins by simply getting into your car anywhere in Canada and driving south across the American border, going to the nearest service station and buying gasoline. American gasoline is sold at world price and it is cheaper than Canadian gasoline. The minister and other Liberal members of Parliament will stand up on public platforms and say they kept our price at 75 per cent of world price, yet gasoline is more expensive in Canada than it is in the United States.

How can that be, Mr. Speaker? The simple explanation is that two-thirds of what we pay is taxes, one-third is for the gasoline. The price of gasoline in Canada is about $2 a gallon; if all taxes were dropped then the consumer could buy gasoline for somewhere between 65 and 70 cents a gallon. That is the reality of the NEP. The Liberal party was elected in February, 1980 and gasoline was about $1 a gallon; today it is $2. The price has doubled and the difference, Mr. Speaker, is taxes.

What else have they accomplished? Seventeen billion dollars has left Canada since the introduction of the NEP. Think of that! Seventeen billion dollars which could have been used to create jobs for Canadians, to keep our interest rates down and to build hospitals! The NEP has chased $17 billion out of this country. It has chased out of Canada almost half the drilling rigs, the trucks, tractors and diesel engines, all of the equipment which is needed to drill an oil well. Is it surprising, Mr. Speaker, to find that these people left with their money and equipment?

In October, 1980, we had probably the finest pool of trained talent in that industry which existed anywhere in the world. Then because of an ill considered policy and a minister who does not know what he is doing, we have chased these trained people, equipment and jobs out of this country. This nation is poorer because of it, and our unemployment rolls are growing daily.

Never in the history of this nation has an individual been so misguided and so harmful to our nation than the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What is so tragic is that so many Liberal members of Parliament have had faith in his judgment and in his statistics when they should not have. But as a consequence of that misplaced faith, their constituents are suffering.

I want to give Liberal members of Parliament an example of the consequences of that misplaced faith. One of the taxes to be found in Bill C-103 is the 48-cent a gallon levy for the petroleum compensation charge. For members of Parliament who want an explanation of some of the 12 ways in which taxpayers' money is wasted through that charge, I invite them to read the April 6 transcript of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. There are two sets of minutes for the two meetings which preceded the one of April 6 if hon. members really want to comprehend the background. By reading those minutes, hon. members will find out that in 1978 the compensation charge, which the government sought and which it obtained from Parliament, was at the rate of $1 per barrel. That was four years ago. If hon. members look at the bill that is before us today they will find that the government wants the authority to charge $12 per barrel. That is a 1,200 per cent increase in taxes in four years. It makes our inflation rate at 11 per cent or 12 per cent look insignificant when one realizes that the government itself wants to increase the tax rate 1,200 per cent over a four-year period of time.

Mr. Irwin: What about the increase in the heritage fund and the gas profits?

Mr. Hawkes: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie would like a diversion. He would like a lecture on the Alberta heritage fund.

Mr. McDermid: What is the government doing with its tax grab?

Mr. Irwin: It is being used for health services.

Mr. Hawkes: Today, of a $30 charge for a tank full of gas, the federal government takes $10. On average, for every tank full of gas sold throughout Canada, the Alberta government gets about $2. The money is used for hospitals, for education and for the training of people. But in Alberta we understand one simple fact—and we have done so since our province began. If you are going to do a good job of helping those who cannot help themselves, for instance, our senior citizens and the handicapped, first you have to have some income. Therefore, to raise money to help those in need income has to be generated. A sane and sensible public policy begins with that understanding. You cannot help anybody if you do not have the resources, the people or the facilities. There has to be a healthy economy in order to help those who need help.

The oil import compensation charge will be written up by historians as a classic mistake in government policy. The charge today is about $6.30 a barrel, which translates into 24 cents on every gallon of gasoline. It is a flat rate. The tax is the same on a barrel of light crude as on a barrel of heavy crude. How many people in this chamber, and I wonder especially how many Liberal members of Parliament, know that in Alberta alone there are 81 grades of crude, each priced differently. The light crudes are more expensive; the heavy crudes are cheaper. The reason for that is that a barrel of light crude will produce more gasoline and more aromatics, which are used in the plastics industry, and less asphalt. A barrel of heavy crude works in the opposite fashion. Aromatics and gasoline are worth more in the marketplace; asphalt is worth less. But when a flat rate tax is imposed on a barrel of crude, regardless of its quality, its value on the marketplace is distorted, and it is distorted very badly. All of a sudden, the heavy crudes are not competitive with the light crudes. It is an interesting fact that the heavy crudes require more money, more equipment and more people.

When that oil compensation charge is imposed, Canadian jobs are lost to the benefit of foreign imports. We told hon. members opposite about that but they did not believe us. The facts today indicate that we were right. An NDP member mentioned that 30,000 barrels of oil a day are shut in, but the figure is closer to 350,000 barrels a day, quickly rising to 450,000 barrels a day. That shut-in crude is of all grades, but it is the heavy oil, the low quality oil—the employment kind of oil—that is the most frequently shut in. That is partly as a result of the oil import compensation charge.

If hon. members would refer to the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee hearing in early April, hon. members would find that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources also proposed a flat rate compensation principle. A great deal of the oil that is imported from Mexico is called Mayan crude. When a barrel of Mayan crude is brought into Canada, the oil company receives a subsidy from tax dollars of $17.30 a barrel. When that amount is deducted from what is actually paid for the Mayan crude, hon. members will find the refiner, whether it is Imperial Oil or Petro-Canada in Montreal, can buy Mexican crude at 40 per cent less than what Canadian crude of equivalent quality would cost.

The government is using your tax dollars and mine, Mr. Speaker, to encourage oil companies to buy crude oil from Mexico, Venezuela and Nigeria, while leaving Canadian oil in the ground and Canadians out of work. If the oil is not pumped and no one is searching for it, who will buy cars and trucks?

When we stop and think about the petroleum compensation fund and put it in our own context, how would tobacco growers in the Niagara Peninsula, for example, feel if the federal government said that it would put a tax on their tobacco, that it would collect the money and give it to tobacco growers from Virginia? How would they feel if the federal government said that it would tax their tobacco and give the money to American tobacco growers, so that their tobacco could be sold in Canada at a price lower than tobacco grown in Canada? How would they feel if the government said that they could leave their tobacco in the sheds to rot?

On the other side, how would Canadian car manufacturers feel if the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) came forward and said that the government would put a tax on all cars produced in Canada amounting to $2,000 per car? How would they feel if the government said that it would take the money and give it to dealers who import Volvos and cars from Britain and Italy, so that foreign cars will cost consumers less than Canadians cars? Would hon. members opposite rise and vote for such a piece of legislation affecting tobacco farmers or car manufacturers? What if it were done with the shoe industry? The government could put a special tax on Canadian made shoes and make them more expensive. It could take the proceeds and give them to those who import shoes from Italy or Spain, which would make Italian and Spanish shoes cheaper than Canadian ones. How many hon. members opposite would rise to support the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on such a policy? Yet this is what they intend to do some time this day with Canadian produced oil. They will rise in the House and support the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on a piece of legislation which has that principle built into it.

Mr. Irwin: Explain why the oil companies are buying offshore steel.

Mr. Hawkes: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie might be interested in knowing that oil companies in Canada are laying off staff across the nation. Also he might be interested in knowing that they are not buying pipe from the steel mills in Hamilton or cars from the manufacturing centre in Windsor. They are not buying diesel engines, fan belts or spark plugs because they are reducing the size of their staff and their activities. They have taken their money and put it in the United States. They are buying fan belts, spark plugs, cars and trucks in the United States of America. In Canada we are buying oil from Saudi Arabia, Venezuela and Mexico. We are buying lots of it because the federal government in its wisdom decided to tax Canadians from coast to coast. It decided to take the money and make the oil from Mexico, Venezuela and so on cheaper than Canadian oil, so that oil companies will buy abroad and consumers will pay the price. If hon. members opposite would vote for such legislation in terms of tobacco farmers, shoe manufacturers or automobile manufacturers, then they should rise in the House and vote for it on the oil side as well. But if they would not, they should think twice about standing in the House and voting in such a way when it comes to the commodity called oil.

I heard much talk by members of the New Democratic Party today about public ownership of the oil and gas industry, not private ownership. I should like to talk about hospitals and medical care and public ownership. When hon. members of the NDP rise in the House or in committee and say that $5.5 billion for Petro-Canada is not enough, then Canadians should be asked whether they want their tax dollars used to buy service stations or hospital beds. That is the reality of the choice. If they seek permission to tax, then they should have the courage to lay out the choices for spending. The choice which the Liberal government is making, and the choice which the NDP is supporting, is to take tax dollars from Canadians to buy service stations rather than hospital beds. Anyone who reads the daily newspapers will know that the medical system in the country is facing day by day an increasing sense of crisis. The trained people who make it go—the nurses, the doctors and the technicians—are unhappy because the amount of money for the system is inadequate. But Liberal members rose and voted to cut $5.7 billion worth of spending for that purpose; they stood the other day in the House and said: "Take that money and give it to the board of directors of Petro-Canada to buy service stations and oil wells". They have not asked Canadians if that is the choice they would like the government to make. Do Canadians want to be taxed to buy service stations or to provide medical care? That is the essence of the choice.

The NDP want the ownership charge in the bill to be used to make Petro-Canada larger and larger, but the reality is that the exploration end of the oil and gas industry requires money, people and equipment. All those commodities are in short supply in the world, but all those commodities in the industry are movable. Money and trained people can move to any nation; the equipment is mobile and it can be moved to any nation. It is not a great deal different in the health care system. The equipment is stationary but the trained people can move. They can want Petro-Canada to be as big as they want, they can take money from Canadians in the form of taxation and put money into it, but they are wasting money unless people will work for the company. We are not talking about untrained people. We are talking about geophysicists, tool pushers and people who have spent years obtaining the necessary experience to perform in the industry. When they are in short supply around the world, they choose to work for private sector companies. If we put our money into Petro-Canada we will not be able to hire enough skilled people; we will waste our dollars on unskilled people.

When we remove that money from our health care system, we will lose our trained medical people; they will leave Canada to go to other countries. At the same time as we will have an inefficient and costly oil and gas industry which will not work, we will have created an unworkable health care system. That is the nature of these Liberal government policies which it has proposed over and over again in the House. It is time for the government to begin thinking and learning. It is time for those Liberal members to tell the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to come to his senses before it is too late.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Pipelines—Delay in construction of TQM natural gas pipeline. (b) Prime guarantee; the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Committees of the House—Appearance of Minister of Finance before Standing Committee. (b) Request for verification of rumour; the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers)—Agriculture—Beef stabilization program. (b) Request payments not dealing with supply management.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me when I listen to debates in the House to see how quickly times change. It was only a year ago that we heard members opposite asking us why we were not raising our oil prices to world levels in order to commence development and to achieve an agreement with Alberta. Now that they recognize that we have an agreement which was made after more than a year of negotiations—an agreement which the Conservatives were not able to arrive at—they are the first to criticize it. They are criticizing an agreement which is not only a benefit to the petroleum industry but to Canada as a whole.

The Conservative party wants to know what we are doing with the taxes which were raised as a result of that agreement. I should explain initially that 67 per cent of the cost of hospitalization insurance comes from federal coffers. The government provided for 59 per cent of medicare and 35 per cent of extended health care, and when you consider that in Ontario the federal government pays part of the cost of Grade 13 in the secondary schools and research in the universities, the amount rises to more than 62 per cent.

The government pays 50 per cent of the cost of crop insurance; the other 50 per cent is paid by the producers themselves while the provinces administer this plan. The government pays 50 per cent of the cost under the Canada Assistance Plan. Is the Conservative party suggesting that we should do away with these programs? Do they suggest, as one member did this afternoon, that the provinces should build the highways and make all the material improvements and that the federal government should neglect the welfare of Canadians? Should we neglect our senior citizens who helped build this country?

I feel I must comment on a point which was made about gasoline prices being cheaper in some areas of the United States than in Canada. The Conservatives conveniently forget to point out that our dollar is valued at approximately 18 cents below the American dollar and that the American gallon is approximately 20 per cent less than ours. Conservatives members forget to mention these facts when making their speeches.

Another assertion made by Conservative members is that Canadian drilling rigs have moved south. However, these rigs began to leave in September of 1981, before the National Energy Program was announced. The reason they moved south was that we had literally thousands of gas wells in western Canada shut-in with no markets or pipelines to hook on to those wells. As a matter of fact, there are gas wells in my own constitutency which were discovered in 1977 and only this year have they been able to be hooked up to the main transmission lines which are less than five miles away.

When the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke in this debate on April 22, he made reference to fertilizer and the fact that the price of natural gas has a direct impact on the price of fertilizer. I should remind him that fertilizer prices this spring, especially in my area, are less than they were a year ago. Prices a year ago, as indicated in one particular analysis, were $250 per tonne; at 8-32-16. Those various components reflect the percentage of nitrogen, phosphorous and potash in each tonne. That particular analysis a year ago was $250 cash per tonne, picked up at the local warehouse. This year I have received quotes of $236 per tonne. Today, nitrogen prills containing 45 per cent urea costs $296 per tonne. Our invoices show that we paid $310 per tonne a year ago. These certainly are not increases by any stretch of the imagination. They are, rather, adjustments in the price reflecting the demand and supply situation in Canada and reflecting the surplus of many raw material products which we have.

The hon. member for Vegreville also mentioned that these products could be bought cheaper in the United States. He indicated that it was $30 to $60 per tonne less in the United States. I must remind him that the currency exchange for that particular analysis priced at $236 per tonne which I mentioned earlier would amount to $47 per tonne on exchange alone. Obviously, it would be cheaper in the United States.

I would also point out that the federal government does not set retail prices of gasoline or diesel fuel. The federal government establishes the price paid by refiners for their crude, and it should also be borne in mind that the federal government has no jurisdiction over resources in a province but only over interprovincial and international trade.

The blended price at the beginning of this year is 70.6 per cent of the world price. The old price was 54.4 per cent of world price. The newly discovered oil, tar sands oil and imported oil are blended with that old price to arrive at the blended price. This is a price which we negotiated for more than two years and it is one in which we intend to continue.

When we compare our price per barrel, it is still lower than that which was proposed by the opposition. We are still lower in our wellhead natural gas price than the opposition would have been had they continued with their proposed price structure as contained in their 1979 budget.

We achieved an agreement with the provinces whereby the percentage share for the Government of Canada rose from 11 per cent to 25.5 per cent. The province receives slightly over 30 per cent while the oil companies get 44.3 per cent of the wellhead price. Certainly this is an achievement. Our government recognized that we were faced with an oil and gas industry which was very heavily foreign owned and controlled at the end of 1980. Fully 72 per cent of oil and gas revenues ultimately accrued to foreign owned companies or foreigners. Furthermore, 78 per cent of these revenues were accounted for by foreign controlled companies in Canada. This compares to a level of 52 per cent in the United Kingdom and 10 per cent to 15 per cent in the United States.

There have been many comments with respect to the present level of the petroleum compensation charge. I would remind hon. members opposite that one year ago the Alberta government was cutting production. This necessitated the rise in the petroleum compensation charge. Now, at a time when the market demand has slowed, the Conservatives are complaining about the cutbacks. Not only is the level of foreign ownership and control very high but a review of the major oil industry competitors clearly indicates the dominance of foreign companies in Canada's oil industry. Eleven of the 15 largest oil and gas producers are foreign owned and controlled, with the top eight positions being held by foreign companies. Not only was the domination of foreign companies pervasive, but it seemed likely that the situation would become almost worse.

• (1710)

Future major oil supply in Canada would not be from traditional sources in the western Canadian basin but, rather, oil supplies would be increasingly diverted from massive oil sands plants on exploration sites in the Arctic and on lands well offshore. These future sources of energy supply required vast sums of money and a great deal of technical know-how. Foreign companies were, and in many cases still are, in the best position to take advantage of these future opportunities. However, it is only with the participation of the Government of Canada, along with that of the provinces, that development of our resources can continue, particularly in the area of the heavy tar sands, where we see that the companies are backing off, not because of any actions by either the provincial or federal levels of government, but because of the glut of oil on the world markets and because the return that they expect from their money is not there.

Given this situation, the following questions must be asked: What government in the developed world would tolerate the large degree of foreign participation in an industry as significant as we have here in Canada? Have we Canadians an obligation to ensure that this industry stays under Canadian control?

Mr. McDermid: Where were you when they asked you for help in the first place?

Mr. Ferguson: I submit that we have an obligation and that this bill provides the basis of fulfilling that obligation. Certainly, what government would have allowed such dominance in its strategic industry which, in Canada's case, is responsible for about 10 per cent of the country's gross national product?

These are the types of questions which the Canadian government had to face in relation to its own economy in the fall of 1980. Its response to the Canadianization objectives and policies was embodied in the National Energy Program of October, 1980. The government stated that it believed that:

> —a larger national public sector presence in oil and gas is the only equitable way to meet quickly our goal of increased Canadian ownership. Judging from the results achieved to date by Petro-Canada, it is also an effective way of encouraging the rapid energy development necessary to meet our security needs.
> For these reasons, the Government of Canada intends to acquire several of the large oil and gas firms.

This would ensure that the firms stay within the control of the Canadian people, which would be in their best interests. The National Energy Program also stated:

> In adopting a program of enlarging the public sector, the government is anxious to ensure that the program is self-financing, and imposes no additional burden on general government revenues. Therefore, the government will establish a Canadian Ownership Account, to be financed by special charges on all oil and gas consumption in Canada, to be used solely to finance an increase of public ownership in the energy sector. The charges will be set at levels that make this program totally self-financing. The actual rates and the dates of implementation will be determined by the progress of the acquisition program. The charges will be kept at moderate levels in the early years, to limit the impact on consumers.
> While the Goverment of Canada is determined to increase Canadian ownership and control, it does not wish the result to be increased concentration of power in the hands of a few large Canadian companies. Competition is the lifeblood of the industry, and the consumer's best protection. A concentrated Canadian industry is an unsatisfactory replacement for a concentrated foreign-owned industry. The intent of the program is to increase the number of Canadian participants. Therefore, the government will be vigilant about ownership trends in the industry. The Petroleum Monitoring Agency will play a key role, through its function of advising Parliament on the size, financial position and ownership of the oil companies.

In slightly more than a year since the announcement of the National Energy Program, great strides have been made toward Canadianization. The eighth, fourteenth and eighteenth largest oil and gas companies have been switched from foreign to Canadian control. The level of Canadian ownership, measured by upstream production revenues, has increased by over 6 per cent as a result of some $7.5 billion in mostly private sector acquisitions. We have been able to make this achievement. Petro-Canada, the nationally-owned oil company, now has refining and marketing facilities across Canada, after its recent acquisition of Petrofina which, incidentally, will be paid for later this year.

While we are generally pleased with the progress to date, we realize that there is a great deal yet to be accomplished. It is for this reason that we are proposing the establishment of a Canadian ownership charge and Canadian ownership account. The Canadian ownership special charges, used initially to help finance Petro-Canada's acquisition of Petrofina, would provide for a special charge on domestic petroleum received for processing or consumption in Canada, and foreign petroleum and petroleum products imported into Canada. The charge is currently $7.25 per cubic metre, or approximately $1.16 per barrel, which is the ceiling set by this bill. No greater increases are even authorized by this legislation.

The Canadian ownership special charges would also provide for special taxes increasing the natural gas and gas liquids tax, which is a tax on marketable natural gas, propane, ethane and butane. Increases on the natural gas tax are now 14 cents per gigajoule. Increases on the tax on propane, ethane and butane are $3.55, $2.60 and $3.95 per cubic metre respectively. These amounts are the ceilings set in the bill for the increases. They will not be applied to exports of natural gas or gas liquids. No further increases are authorized by this legislation.

I should also like to point out that under the incremental oil revenue tax, an agreement was reached with the provinces last January which decreases the tax paid by smaller producing wells by 5 per cent for every barrel less than 20 barrels per day. Therefore, a small, very shallow stripper well which produces one barrel per day would, in effect, pay a 5 per cent incremental oil revenue tax. This has a tremendous impact in putting drilling rigs back to work in Alberta, where approximately 40 per cent of the wells fall into this category and account for approximately 10 per cent of the production.

In addition to that, the petroleum gas revenue tax, as raised earlier in the year, is the really ineffective tax of 12 per cent, a reduction from the 16 per cent, a reduction related to a resource allowance. However, in the future, the use of any funds from the Canadian ownership account for other acquisitions would have to be authorized by the governor in council, acting on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance. Such uses will be subject to a negative resolution of Parliament.

However, it should be made clear that the direction of the Canadianization thrust has been toward the mobilization of predominantly private Canadian investment by existing companies, pension plans, insurance funds and from individuals. To a great extent, this policy has succeeded since all but one of a dozen acquisitions to date have been by private companies. I should make a small correction, because the Ontario government took part in the acquisition of a private company when it bought 25 per cent control of Suncor. Therefore, really all but two of the acquisitions to date have been by private companies. Furthermore, the federal government is acting as a catalyst for the establishment of a co-operative energy corporation which will bring into the oil and gas sector the savings of millions of Canadian co-op members.

A misconception which we have heard, particularly from abroad, is that the government is creating an unattractive environment for foreign firms which will reduce the value of these firms, allowing them to be purchased at "fire sale" prices. This is an absurd allegation. Canadian companies have paid prices well above market value for foreign-owned assets. Furthermore, foreign-owned oil and gas subsidiaries trading on Canadian exchanges have done no worse than their Canadian-owned counterparts.

Another misconception was the belief that Canadianization policies for the energy sector will be applied in other sectors of the economy, specifically, in the minerals sector. The government has already stated that this will not be the case, and the evidence on the difference in the foreign ownership and control situation in the two industries is a major reason for the difference in policies.

Finally, the objective of Canadianization does not mean that foreign investment and ownership in the oil and gas business is no longer wanted in Canada. Canada is well known for its exciting geological potential. The combined financial and fiscal incentive package offered by the government makes Canada one of the most attractive countries in which to invest. For example, a foreign investor operating in the north or offshore will, after tax deductions and incentive payments, be spending only 53 cents of every exploration dollar.

In fact, a recent comparison made by Petro-Canada of rates of return expected by a foreign investor from a representative pool of new oil shows the following: Canada lands 27.7 per cent, United Kingdom 24.4 per cent, United States 21.6 per cent and Norway 18.3 per cent. I repeat, these calculations are for foreign investors. The figures show that we have created an environment which, when compared to other locations, will be attractive for foreign investors. The government welcomes their participation and asks only that they take into account the legitimate aspirations of Canadian investors and other Canadians to own a share of this vital sector and to exercise some control over decision-making in their own petroleum industry.

This view is widely supported by the vast majority of Canadians. Indeed, it is one of the most popular programs established by the Canadian government in many years. The results of a poll done by the Canadian Petroleum Association last year indicates that 84 per cent favour the government's move to make the oil and gas industry in Canada at least 50 per cent Canadian owned. This is a remarkable figure. It indicates the desire and the determination of Canadians to achieve that control so that we are no longer at the mercy of the foreign-owned companies.

With respect to the Canadian ownership special charge, I would like to mention the significant change that was made to these provisions as they appeared in Bill C-94. The legislative authority that appeared in Bill C-94 to raise the Canadian ownership special charge above the present level has been removed. Under the new amendments, the existing Canadianization charge can be decreased but not increased beyond that level by order in council.

The change is as follows. The ceiling on the Canadian ownership special charge on petroleum has been lowered from $25 to $7.25 per cubic metre. The ceiling on increases to the excise tas on natural gas has been lowered from 60 cents to 14 cents per gigajoule, and the ceiling on increases to the excise tax on natural gas liquids has been lowered from $17 per cubic metre to $2.60, $3.55 and $3.95 on ethane, propane and butane respectively.

I would like to leave hon. members with one thought. The government believes that it has created a framework which will both allow significant participation by Canadians in their own oil and gas industry and encourage continued active involvement of those foreign companies which have contributed to the development of this important industry. I am confident that this can be done.

In closing, it should be very clear that in its program to date the Government of Canada has shown it has a flexibility to negotiate, compromise and arrive at an agreement with the oil-producing provinces of this country. It is willing to negotiate with the oil-producing wells to ensure that the incremental oil revenue tax is not an overbearing burden and will not make the production of oil from such wells uneconomic. It has shown the flexibility to make adjustments in many areas. I am confident that as the world energy scene changes, the minister and this government will adapt to those changes in a way that is beneficial, not only to all Canadians and the provinces, but to the industry as a whole.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us seeks to amend a 1975 act of Parliament which imposed a charge on exports of crude oil and petroleum products to raise revenue to support the one-price oil policy, which I feel was a good policy, and to attain energy goals.

The measure now before us legalizes the petroleum compensation charge which is currently levied at $6.30 a barrel and which has resulted in an increase in the price of gasoline at the pumps by about 24 cent a gallon. About $1 a barrel or four cents a gallon of that amount has received legal authority. In this bill, the government seeks to give itself the right to increase the tax to $12 a barrel, or another 24 cents a gallon at the pump.

The second major tax contemplated in the bill is the Canadian ownership charge. It was instituted to raise money to enable Petro-Canada to purchase Petrofina. In this case the levy is $1.15 a barrel or about four cents a gallon at the pump.

Since February, 1980 we have experienced a 99-cent increase in the price of a gallon of gasoline, of which 60 cents is directly attributable to federal energy taxes. Home heating oil, which incidentally was exempted from the Crosbie 18-cent a gallon tax, has increased about 66 cents and, while there are undoubtedly other factors involved, the principal thrust of this increase is federal taxes.

As we all know, during the past year there has been a world overproduction of oil and this has caused world prices to fall sharply. The taxes which the government has been adding to the price of gasoline at the pumps during the past two years is supposed to pay for the increasing subsidy the government has been paying on the one-fifth of our oil requirements which could not be supplied by Canadian sources and which must be bought offshore, generally supplying the oil needs of eastern Canada.

The subsidy was necessary so that all Canadians could enjoy the Canadian price. However, if the cost of foreign oil we are subsidizing is falling, the taxes needed to pay for the subsidy should also be decreasing, not increasing. In other words, the price we pay for gasoline at the pump should be coming down, as it has been doing in the United States and in most other countries, not going up.

Indeed, at many points along the Canadian-American border the price of gasoline charged at the pumps in the United States is lower. In many cases so is home heating oil. I suggest that the difference in the value of the dollar does not fully compensate for the magnitude of this difference. The Americans significantly are paying the world price, and I have to ask what we are paying. Increasing energy costs are percolating through our economy, causing serious dislocations.

The inflation rate has risen from 9.3 per cent in March, 1980 to 11.6 per cent in March, 1982. In the past year alone, fuel oil costs have risen by 29.6 per cent, transportation costs by 16.4 per cent, fresh fruit by 28.7 per cent, processed vegetables by 18.8 per cent, communications by 18.7 per cent and owned accommodation by 16.6 per cent.

The purchasing power of the 1971 dollar in March, 1982 was 39 cents. In the past 11 years, the consumer price index has risen by 156 per cent. Food prices have risen by 204 per cent and housing costs by 148 per cent. The 1981 average annual inflation rate of 12.5 per cent was the highest in 33 years. Wages are not keeping pace with inflation. The average wage earner in Canada has lost $285 in annual purchasing power since the February, 1980 election and $635 since the fall of 1977. As we have all been reminded by recent events, short periods of time can cause great changes in political fortunes and in political perceptions. This bill reminds me that just over 26 months ago the Liberal party was elected nationally on the platform that higher energy prices were unnecessary and that they could manage the economy better than the Clark government.

• (1730)

Now, 99 cents a gallon later, people are beginning to recall that during the term of office of the Clark government, inflation remained stable, jobs were being created at the rate of 30,000 a month, and the purchasing power of wages rose. Under the self-proclaimed economic miracle workers now in office, we have seen 33-year record levels of unemployment and inflation, declining real wages, the biggest tax burden since the war, the gutting of the passenger rail system, and proposals to reduce the financial commitment to equalizaton, health and post-secondary education.

The 18-cent election issue has come home to roost and it is costing Canadians their economic well-being.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dingwall: I have a few remarks on the particular piece of legislation before us. My colleague for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and I had an understanding that certain speakers would follow one another and I guess there was a mix-up. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I can allow my colleague to speak now and then regain the floor, if I have the unanimous consent of the members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the House consent to the hon. parliamentary secretary ceding his place, without loss of his right to speak again later, to the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-103, which is now before the House, is a piece of legislation about which I would like to say a few words. I address my remarks today particularly to the question of oil export charges, this being the subject of Clauses 4 through 11 of the bill.

First of all, I would like to review briefly the historical background to these oil export charges. In doing so I hope to be able to point out how these oil export charges fit into the framework of longstanding Canadian oil export policy, how the federal government has responded to the needs and interests of the provincial governments, has responded to the regions of Canada as well as to the needs of the oil product industry, in terms of introducing, negotiating and administering those oil export charges. Oil export charges are big business. I understand that in the fiscal year 1981-82 the National Energy Board collected charges amounting to $700 million—big business indeed.

Members of the House will note from Clause 7 of the bill before us that the National Energy Board, on behalf of the minister, actually administers and enforces the part of the Petroleum Administration Act that I am dealing with. I would like the House to note that the board has carried out this task since 1974 and has done so with great efficiency, using a minimum of human and financial resources in the process. The 1981 National Energy Board report will give some details concerning the board's involvement in the administration of this part of the act.

Members of the House will recall that the taxing of domestic source oil exports started back in October, 1973. Shortly before that, the Government of Canada had requested the Canadian oil industry not to increase further crude oil prices, which had been rising for about a year as prices in the United States and overseas increased. However, the opportunity-price in export markets continued to rise as a result of international events. The National Energy Board required and still requires that export prices should be just and reasonable in the Canadian public interest.

The board set an export price for October, 1973 which exceeded the domestic price. The government therefore acted to obtain for Canada, to obtain for Canadians, the difference between the domestic price and the available export price by means of a tax. The authority for this tax from October, 1973 to March, 1974 was the Oil Export Tax Act. Incidentally, this particular act was administered by the Department of National Revenue. The National Energy Board became responsible for administration of oil export charges as of April, 1974.

Understandably, the producing provinces were seriously concerned that the federal government should be appropriating revenue, part of which they thought should properly accrue to them, the producing provinces, in the form of royalty on higher export prices. This is something to which the opposition has frequently drawn attention in the past, arguing that the federal government was insensitive to provincial interests.

I want to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to remind the House that all of the revenue collected by the federal government under the oil export tax in respect of exports from October, 1973 to January, 1974 was paid to the governments of the provinces from which the oil was deemed to have come. This meant that the provincial government benefited not just to the tune of a deemed royalty, perhaps one-fifth of the value of the oil export, but rather they enjoyed 100 per cent of the revenue from those export sales.

The circumstance for February and March of 1974 was different. As a result of the agreement reached at the first ministers' conference in January, 1974, the federal government had by early 1974 undertaken an obligation to shield the import-dependent eastern part of the country from dramatically rising international prices, a policy that has worked very much to the benefit of the people in my riding of Burin-St George's and the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada generally. The government provided this shield against dramatically rising international oil prices, by means of the oil import compensation program which continues in effect as a means to achieve a single oil price across Canada at levels much below those prevailing internationally.

Because of this large new financial obligation undertaken by the Government of Canada—undertaken, by the way, with the full agreement of all provinces—the producing provinces agreed that the federal government could keep half of the royalty from export tax revenue accruing from exports made in February and March, 1974. The other half, like the revenues from the period October, 1973 to January, 1974, was to be paid to the governments of the provinces from which the oil was deemed to have come. Again, these governments, it goes without saying, benefited to a much greater extent than would have been the case under then prevailing royalty regimes.

The authority to apply a charge on oil exports from April, 1974 until now stems from the Petroleum Administration Act, Part I. This is the portion of the legislation which Bill C-103, the bill we are dealing with here, seeks to amend in some important respects. All of these revenues from April, 1974 until October, 1980 accrued to the federal government.

I think it is worth while to remind ourselves again that it was by agreement with the producing provinces that all of the revenues between April, 1974 and October, 1980 would accrue to the Government of Canada. The agreement was secured at the March, 1974 first ministers' conference when it was also agreed to increase Canadian crude oil prices by what was then the very large amount of $2.70 a barrel effective April 1, 1974. I believe it is worth stressing that the federal government's access to those revenues was not achieved by a unilateral act of the Government of Canada but, rather, by agreement with the provincial governments concerned. That was the situation prevailing up until the announcement of the National Energy Program on October 28, 1980.

That briefly is the history of the oil export charge during part of which time all the revenues accrued to the federal government and during part of which time the revenues were split between the federal government and the governments of the producing provinces from which the oil was deemed to have come.

The National Energy Program documents noted that virtually all of the crude oil now exported from Canada is heavy crude oil. This oil is surplus to Canadian needs simply because Canada does not have the refinery capacity to use it. The National Energy Program includes measures to build an upgrader in Saskatchewan to turn this heavy crude oil into a product which can be processed in Canadian refineries. Incidentally, progress toward achievement of this objective of building a heavy crude oil upgrader in Saskatchewan has, according to the project's proponents, been somewhat hampered by the absence of definition of the fiscal regime which will apply to the enhanced oil recovery required to provide a stable, long-term feedstock supply for the heavy crude upgrader.

The National Energy Program went on to express the expectation that other upgraders would be built in either Saskatchewan or Alberta and that existing refineries would be modified so that they can use an increasing proportion of this heavy oil. Therefore, it was expected that there would be a progressive diversion of these export volumes into the domestic market. In the meantime, in the view of the government and as expressed in the National Energy Program, it seemed only fair to examine how the revenues from crude oil export charges should be shared among governments.

As I have noted, between April, 1974 and October, 1980 neither the Alberta government nor the government of Saskatchewan gained any benefit from the higher earnings which were available on crude oil exports as opposed to those on crude oil sold in the domestic Canadian market. The Government of Canada therefore indicated its intention to share with these two producing provinces 50 per cent of the export charge revenue on crude oil exports found by the National Energy Board to be surplus to Canada's needs and which are now subject to oil export charges. The program proposed that sharing would begin effective November 1, 1980.

Perhaps there are those in the House who would like to pursue that aspect of the National Energy Program in more detail. If so, I refer them to the program, and particularly to pages 36 and 37 of it which outline the proposal of the Government of Canada to share the oil export charge revenues with the two producing provinces of heavy crude, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

It is worth noting, especially for the benefit of detractors of this legislation or people who are detractors of the National Energy Program, that here is an example of an important initiative taken by the Government of Canada as part of its National Energy Program to share the revenues on a 50-50 basis with the producing provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The government has now presented the House with legislation intended to put this provision of the National Energy Program into effect. That, in essence, is what Bill C-103 is all about. It is to give effect to this important revenue-sharing provision. Clause 10 of the bill before us provides that the minister may make expenditures out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for payment of such amounts as are authorized by the governor in council to be paid to a province or its agent in respect of exports of oil from that province during the year. I am sure the House welcomes the provision that the federal government is making, despite its own heavy fiscal burdens and responsibilities. It is a provision to divide crude oil export charge revenues in this way with the governments of the provinces from which the exported oil comes in the first instance.

Having spent just a little time on the history of this oil export charge and having spent just a little time outlining the objective of the legislation before us, I want to comment on the way in which the oil export charge is set. The charge is fixed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, taking into account, among other things, the advice of the National Energy Board.

Essentially export charges reflect the difference between the Canadian price for particular grades of crude oil and oil products and the export market price prevailing at the time. The charges which have eventuated from this procedure are set out in Schedule I to the bill for the period from May, 1979 onward. It was, of course, from that date, May, 1979, that the charge necessary in order to capture for Canada the difference between the available export price and the domestic price exceeded the maximum amount of the charge authorized by Parliament in the Petroleum Administration Act. The original maximum was $8 a barrel, or just over $50 a cubic metre. The government of the day, which was not this particular administration but the one which preceded it, found that the necessary level of these charges exceeded the amount authorized by Parliament. The exporting companies were notified by the government of the day, the administration led by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), that parliamentary authority would be sought at the earliest opportunity for such a higher level of charge, and meanwhile the companies were asked to remit—and they did, of course—at the higher level pending the setting in place of the appropriate legislation.

As I have just said, these charges from May, 1979 are set out in the schedule which is on page 39 of the bill before us. I want to point out that the administration of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in 1979 followed exactly the same practice as the Liberal government before it in respect of the item before us now.

The level of the crude oil export charge has an obvious impact on the ability of producers to sell their oil in export markets. In setting the export charge the government has to achieve two basic objectives. First, it has to establish an export charge so that the export charge in total is just and reasonable in the Canadian public interest. That means putting it as high as is reasonably possible.

Second, it has to ensure that the export price is competitive and that oil surplus to Canadian requirements is fully taken up in the export market and is not shut in in order that the development of Canadian heavy crude oil reserves is not impeded. There is currently a problem of shut-in heavy oil production in western Canada and this is a matter of serious concern to the government.

• (1750)

As hon. members know, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) acted vigorously to deal with the problem of shut-in heavy oil production in western Canada. At the beginning of April he announced an action program which included measures intended to secure an export market for as much heavy crude oil as the National Energy Board found to be surplus to our own refinery requirements. The action program included a clear declaration that the Canadian export price would continue to be strongly competitive, that Canadian supply would be reliable, and that the National Energy Board would be prepared to receive applications for longer term export licences.

In an effort to ensure full dialogue and information on this very important subject and this very important bill, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced an action program on April 1. I presume hon. members already have copies of this and, if not, they are readily available. The document is entitled "Securing Markets for Western Canadian Crude Oil—Program of Action." Among other things, the program includes the assurance that Canadian heavy crude oil exports to the United States will continue to be competitively priced by adjusting the export charge as required. It makes the provision that applications to the National Energy Board for the export of crude oil for terms of up to one year would be welcome. The policy remains to export heavy crude oil that is surplus to our domestic needs. In short, that particular program addresses in a very tangible way the problem of shut-in heavy oil production in western Canada.

I have gone into this matter of the purpose of the export charge, the way in which it is set and the objectives which the government follows in some detail because of the importance of the export charge in aggregate terms and because it has been the focus fo some attention relative to the problem of shut-in heavy western Canadian crude oil. I am satisfied that the government has shown the right degree of sensitivity to industry and producing province interests in dealing with this aspect of our national energy policy. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I believe the government has to show, and shows, a great deal of sensitivity in dealing with these difficult on going policy and operational problems.

Members will be aware that Part I of the Petroleum Administration Act provides for charges which are applicable also to refined oil products derived from Canadian crude oil. The purpose is to ensure that the people of Canada, rather than the exporting company, generally an oil refiner, benefit from the difference between Canadian and international oil prices when the product is refined from low-priced domestic crude oil and sold into a high-priced export market. This aspect of the oil export charge program has been successfully implemented for a number of years.

Members may be wondering how exports of oil products derived from imported crude oil are treated. So far, the oil export charge has been applicable only to domestic crude origin oil products. The government has, however, fully safeguarded the Canadian public interest by requiring companies which import foreign crude oil, and receive import compensation for it, to refund the full amount of the import compensation embodied in any products which are derived from such foreign crude oil and are subsequently exported. I can assure the House that the Canadian public and fiscal interest is fully safeguarded by this procedure.

Members will, however, have noted that Clause 5 of Bill C-103 makes provisions that a tariff of charges in respect of any or all of the various kinds or qualities of oil be set, regardless of the source of that oil, meaning whether that oil is of domestic or imported origin. This would give the government the flexibility, should the need arise, to provide for an export charge for all oils crossing the border to export, rather than having two systems, one of export charging and one of import compensation refunding as at present. I for one welcome this provision as giving the government a sensible degree of flexibility.

It is, of course, understood that, if oil products are exported from foreign crude oil, then if an export charge is levied the exporter would not also have to refund the import compensation. One way in which this flexibility could be employed would be to enable a third party—an independent oil company, for example—to export foreign origin oil products to the United States without having to identify the original importer of the crude oil and pay back the compensation through that original recipient of compensation, as is presently the case.

The House has a complex piece of energy legislation before it. This is undeniable. However, I think the House should note that the Petroleum Administration Act has been in effect since 1974, with some relatively minor amendments made in 1978. The powers it provides have been used by the Progressive Conservative party when in office as well as by successive Liberal governments. The Petroleum Administration Act under governments of two different party stripes has served the taxpayers of this country very well. It has stood the test of time.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I am sure my hon. friend would find it convenient to take issue with that particular statement. I would remind him that in doing so he takes issue with the actions of the administration of which he was a member. The Progressive Conservative administration used without any change at all the Petroleum Administration Act which had been implemented by the former Liberal administration of 1974.

Mr. McDermid: You did not give us a chance to change it.

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member is still fighting the election.

Mr. McDermid: Who brings it up all the time?

Mr. Simmons: The people of Canada spoke very clearly in February, 1980.

Mr. McDermid: Tell them that today in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. Simmons: If anyone did not give the Tory administration a chance, I submit it was that administration itself. It had just about a year to do something. That is the plea; that is the mea culpa we hear now—that they never had time. They know full well—and they would be more appreciated by the Canadian people if they owned up to it—that they did not change this piece of legislation because it has served this country well since 1974 and will continue to serve it well with some refinements as proposed in Bill C-103. This act, Mr. Speaker, has stood well the test of time. My hon. friend may not like that, but it is true.

• (1800)

The changes in Part I of the Bill before us, to which my comments have been directed, seem to me to be both sensible and very desirable. They legislate charges beyond the scope of the original bill which started with the Progressive Conservative government in May, 1979. They provide for appropriate use of metric units and add some flexibility in terms of adjustments to the charge even for part of a month. They enable the charge to apply to foreign crude products, and provide that a government can make payments out of oil export charge revenues to provinces or their agents. All of these changes are necessary and in the public interest.

So there it is, an eminently sensible bill. A bit complicated, perhaps, but out of necessity because of the nature of the subject it deals with. It is sensible legislation based on fairness and the principle of sharing, a principle which we on this side not only espouse but do something about in our legislation. The sharing in this case is between the Government of Canada on behalf of all the people and the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta on behalf of their people. This legislation preserves the essential spirit of the Petroleum Administration Act of 1974, which enjoyed the active support not only of the government which brought it in in 1974 and of the current government, but which also enjoyed the active support of the short-lived Tory administration in 1979.

There is nothing sinister, underhanded or conniving about this particular bill, Mr. Speaker. That must disappoint my hon. friend but it is true. It is just a straightforward bill which sets about bringing the legislation in line with reality. It sets about updating a mechanism which has served us well since 1974 and now, with some refinement, can continue to serve us well. What we have in Bill C-103 is of considerable benefit to the taxpayers of Canada, and those taxpayers of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Can there really be anyone in this House who opposes such sharing? Can there really be anyone here who would dare to oppose such fairness in revenue sharing?

The argument was that the government's omnibus bill, which was earlier before the House, had lumped together too many things. They said it included measures which members would want to support with those which they might want to oppose. This bill presents no such dilemma, Mr. Speaker. No one is caught here in the conundrum of saying: "Well, I want to vote for this part but I cannot vote for that part". Here, Mr. Speaker, the issue is very clear-cut and simple, and it is this: Do we as members of this House support sharing oil export revenues with the producing provinces? That is the essential issue. Members either support that or they do not. Members can come up with all kinds of reasons, excuses or canards as to why they would like to support it, but, however, they are going to be clearly on the record on this one.

The challenge is to put your money where your mouth is. Either you support the initiative taken by this government to share on a 50-50 basis these revenues with the producing provinces, or you do not support it. Do members of this House believe the people of Canada should benefit financially from oil exports? If members believe that, it is clear where their vote will be when the question is called on this particular piece of legislation.

This is a good piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, because it seeks to embody a principle, as this government has so often done in legislation, which is the cornerstone of the Liberal party and of this particular government—sharing among Canadians the benefits we reap from the extraction of our resources. That, when all the i's have been dotted and the t's have been crossed, is the clear issue which remains. Let no one try to befuddle that. The issue is not whether we should have an export charge, which we have had since 1974; anyone who opposes that concept is about eight years too late. The issue is whether some members of this House can put aside their partisanship, their natural propensity to give it to the government every time they have a chance, their natural temptation to exercise the opposition mentality which says: if the government proposes it, I am "agin" it. It is time to put all that aside and answer two basic questions: do I as a member of this House believe that the people of Canada should benefit financially from oil exports? The answer to that is an unequivocal yes. I am sure I speak for every member of this House; the answer must be an unequivocal yes or that member has no business being here. The second question is: do I support the concept of sharing export oil revenues with the producing provinces? The answer to that question is also an unequivocal yes. I believe it ought to be and is an unequivocal yes for every member in this chamber. If it is not, then that hon. member has no business being here. The entire Canadian experience has no meaning if we do not believe in the concept of sharing, sharing the benefits which derive from the extraction of resources across this country.

For those reasons, and for so many other good reasons that I could state if time were available to me, I want to say that I am going to support this bill with a heart and a half and I would expect that every other member in the House will do likewise.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the address of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) I had difficulty deciding in which country he was living and which bill he is discussing. The issue, as I see it, is entirely different from the one he outlined to the House a few moments ago.

The issue in this bill is whether or not the people of Canada are going to pay more than 50 cents a gallon extra for their gasoline and whether the government will do this without reference to the Parliament of Canada. That is one of the reasons why the bells rang. These things should be decided by the Parliament of Canada and not by the cabinet of the country. The issue in the mind of the hon. member for Burin-St. George's is very confused. Either he has the wrong bill or the wrong country.

For a few moments I want to deal with some of the points that he made concerning the benefits that the people of Canada from coast to coast are receiving from the National Energy Program and the energy legislation. Instead of just talking theory, I will try for a few moments to describe to hon. members the situation out west where the oil is produced. Over the last two years there has been a tremendous change in the oil industry. It has gone from being a buoyant industry to an industry that is now sliding down, down and down. First is the matter of investment money. People are not prepared to invest their money in the oil industry given the uncertain terms resulting from the policies being followed by the administration in Ottawa. For example, all hon. members have to do is to look at the type of legislation that is being brought forward. One piece of legislation enabled Petro-Canada on behalf of the government on behalf of Petro-Canada to expropriate part of the oil findings of another company after it had spent money finding oil, and at the same time paying nothing at all to a company that had spent a couple of million dollars only to come up with a dry hole.

The oil industry was buoyant two years ago. It is now depressed. Things are as bad now as they were at any period in our history. Rig after rig, many employees and pieces of equipment have left the country. People have not left the country because they were rich or because they could not do well here. The multinationals can look after themselves. But the independent companies are the ones suffering. The independent operators have left the country because they could not make a profit. The oil industry is slowly dying. Money is drying up and there is no incentive to find oil or gas. The policies of the government have driven out the independents. The energy program and federal legislation are the main culprit in this gigantic exodus of industry, expertise, equipment and people from Canada to the United States. We had a tremendous network of expertise, equipment and men which had been built up by the small companies starting from scratch and developed into network of large companies. A tremendous group of people were developing the industry and making a profit. But when the profit disappeared, the small independents were unable to stay in business and had to leave.

The policies which the hon. member for Burin-St. George's mentioned and which he praised so highly, have driven these people out of the country. Our expertise has left. Our rigs have left. Do not kid yourself by saying that they were the rich or the stingy who wanted to hog more and more. All they wanted to do was what they did for several years, namely, make a living and contribute to the country. They are just as anxious to contribute to the country as is any other person in this land of ours. The suggestion that this is a wonderful program just does not bear examination when one takes time to look at the results of it. People should look at the results of a program and the legislation, not just the administration of it. The results show a sad picture indeed.

If hon. members visited almost any town in Alberta or Saskatchewan, they would be able to find out how the people feel. The industry is drying up. There is no incentive to drill. In fact, there is no incentive at all. Hon. members can quote all the figures they like, but I tell them to look at the lists of unemployed. This energy program not only affects the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan but it affects all Canadians. Eastern Canadians and central Canadians went out west, got jobs and then found their jobs gone as a result of the National Energy Program. This has greatly increased the unemployment lists and the applications for unemployment insurance in the city of Calgary. The increase in applications for unemployment caused the government to send more and more administrative people from eastern Canada to Calgary. I can speak about the situation in Calgary, but I suppose the same is true for the city of Edmonton. There are masses of applications for unemployment insurance. If nothing else tells this government what is wrong, surely that tells the government things are not buoyant any more. People are not investing any more and they are leaving the country.

People who have never before been unemployed in their lives before who are now unemployed. The effects of this energy policy are being felt in small towns by restaurant owners and by hotel owners. Everyone is being affected. The National Energy Program and the energy legislation have created a depression. If that is the kind of result which the hon. member for Burin-St. George's was talking about, the result of a program which was supposed to benefit the people from coast to coast, he had better tell me who it is benefiting in Alberta, Saskatchewan, or the maritimes. It is benefiting very few people in central Canada.

The situation became so bad that the government of Alberta decided to do something about it because the agreement and a number of other things had resulted in havoc, depression, unemployment, a lack of investment, and people leaving the country. This is not theory, this is reality. People are still leaving the country. The government of Alberta decided that it would have to do something to keep the industry from deteriorating any further. During the last two years under the Liberal administration of the federal government the industry was sliding, so the Alberta government came up with a program. It said that it would contribute 8 per cent of the government's cash flow over the next five years and that it would cut down the profit of government to see if it could get the industry moving, get jobs created, get people working and increase the net worth of production. The government of Alberta also said that it would raise the basic price to cover exploration, investment and development costs and that it would increase that amount by reducing the amount of royalties. The amount was $1.7 billion over five years, or an average of $340 million per year, which the government of Alberta would put into the industry to help it keep its head above water. This is what the Alberta government did.

When we talk about sharing, we must remember that the Alberta government is giving up some of its revenues to keep the industry moving and to provide jobs so that wives and children will not have to depend upon welfare. It will provide $1.7 billion over a five-year period. It plans to do the same for the gas producing industry, which will cost $2 billion. It extended the holiday for royalty payments for new wells, costing $1.5 billion, and set up $250,000 in grants for service and maintenance work this summer. It is putting money into the pockets of people now, not months ahead or five years from now. The government of Alberta has taken a positive step. In the meantime, world prices of oil have declined and world demand for oil has reduced. These factors must be looked at as well.

The Alberta program will not solve the problem of the sharp cutback in Alberta production because of federal government subsidies which make it cheaper for eastern refineries to buy foreign crude. That is another matter about which people are not happy. I do not think people in Ontario either or in Quebec can understand why we are importing crude from Mexico while wells are closed up in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Men have been laid off, the industry is depressed, but we put money into the pockets of those who keep people in jobs in other countries.

It is difficult to understand the thinking of a government which does that type of thing. It talks about importing crude and keeping our own wells tied up and our industry depressed. It will not even allow the export of Alberta light crude which would put people to work. The $1.7 billion over a five-year period will help get industry moving again, as long as the federal government does not try to hog some of it. This point is very important in the minds of industrial people in Alberta today. While Premier Lougheed was doing something positive to revive the oil industry, to create jobs and to provide some profit, the federal government has decided to take it away.

What is the federal government doing? It is providing $4.9 billion in additional capital to Petro-Canada and another $5 billion in compensation payments related to world price. The Alberta government amends the damage of the National Energy Program and the agreement, but the Government of Canada continues to fill its coffers under the leadership of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Had the government been sincere when the Alberta government made its offer, it would have said, "We will do the same thing. We will also give up some of our profits and some of our excess money so that it can be put into the industry to keep jobs". This is what the Government of Canada should have done. Now the people of western Canada are afraid that the federal government will hungrily grab from the industry part of what the Alberta government put out to help it survive and keep its head above water.

Certainly the Government of Canada is looking for trouble. The people of western Canada are reaching the breaking point. Their own government has gone the second mile in trying to keep the industry in business and to stop bankruptcies. Heaven knows, there have been enough bankruptcies already! The Alberta government is attempting to stop them, but if the federal government steps in and starts grabbing some of the money there will be trouble.

Ottawa's priorities seem to lie in other areas. A few days ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the total additional capital provided by this bill, that is the Petro-Canada amendments, would be $4.9 billion. He went on to say that the new capital ceiling it authorized was $5.5 billion, but that because $500 million had been subscribed under the present act, and since a further $100 million had been provided with respect to the interest in Panarctic Oils, the total of new capital funds available was $4.9 billion.

Then on April 6 the same minister said that they wanted to strengthen and expand Petro-Canada and increase its activities. He should not have much trouble when he is using public moneys as he is. The value to Petro-Canada of the Petrofina levy is $800 million a year out of the pockets of people, not out of the pockets of any government. It is coming out of the pockets of people who are depressed, people who are unemployed, people who are wondering from where they will get enough to feed their children. When the government grabs $800 million per year, it does not take long before it turns to billions. It will be taken from the car drivers of the country, not to produce or to create jobs, but to pay for Petrofina which was bought at a ridiculously high price. The shifting of ownership and control of the industry to Ottawa is only part of the game. It appears to the people of Canada who look at this that there is a shifting. Conventional people in Alberta could not find work and had to leave the country. Now it is being shifted to Petro-Canada. I am not opposed to Petro-Canada, but I am opposed to the centralization of power in the hands of this government. The primary objective of the national energy policy has always been to transfer the benefits from Alberta oil and gas to the politically powerful regions which maintain the central government in power. It does nothing for producers or the producing regions.

The transfer of this $5 billion in benefits from Alberta to a single central province was made specific in a speech which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources delivered to the Langelier Liberal Riding Association in Quebec City on June 1 of last year. The minister said something which the people of Canada and the people of Quebec should know about. When discussing the oil import compensation program, he said:

> Under this program we have paid oil importers in the East—most of whom, as you know, are centred in Montreal—a subsidy which they will continue to receive and which is equal to the difference between the cost of a barrel of imported oil and the cost of the same barrel of oil when it is produced in Canada.

In other words, he is taking money from the rest of Canada and paying it to the importers in the city of Montreal. It is true that by this simple mechanism he has contributed generously to locking in 400,000 barrels a day of Alberta crude oil and robbing the people, government and corporations of the province of the jobs, revenues and opportunities that would result from the production of this crude oil. But the dollar losses in Alberta have popped up as dollar benefits elsewhere, such as to the people around Montreal. I wonder how that sounds to the people of Ontario, Manitoba, the Maritimes and the rest of Quebecers. I do not think it will suit them very well. These are the minister's own words, when he talks about taking this money and continuing to put it into this particular area. He said further to the same group:

> We have made a considerable financial investment in this program—

They certainly have.

> —one which, over the course of the years, has amounted to several billion dollars and which represents a direct subsidy to the consumers of Eastern Canada, the majority of whom are Quebecers. It is not difficult to imagine the additional burden which would have to be borne by the budget of every citizen and every family in Quebec, were it not for this subsidy.

Those were the words of the minister of energy who is supposed to be representing Canada. He is taking money from one part of Canada and concentrating it in another specific part of Canada. It is true that the minister is Robin Hood; he is robbing the people of one part of Canada and giving it to—or what he calls sharing it with—people in another part of a province. The minister went on to say:

> Thus, between 1973 and 1980, Quebecers have received five billion dollars in payments under this program, or $835 per capita.

Those were the words of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This means that the two million people of Alberta donate to the six million in Quebec what amounts to some $3,000 to an average family there.

We in our province do not object to sharing. We have shared from the beginning. What other Canadian province has sold its non-renewable energy products, its oil, for less than it could get in other markets? Albertans have lost $18 billion in order to provide a better price for Canadians. They have shared as much, or more, than anyone else in Canada. When Albertans hear the minister making these comments and see those programs being implemented, it is no surprise that there is bitterness in our country. It is no wonder that Western Canada Concept is making progress. This government has the audacity to say that western members of Parliament are creating separatism. It is policies such as these which are creating separatism. Anyone who will be affected by these policies will not like them. While Quebecers will certainly accept the money if the government pours it into their province, they do not appreciate a policy such as this any more than anyone else. Quebecers want to contribute the same as the rest of Canada.

The Alberta government has released $5 billion of urgently needed stimulus for the benefit of all Canadians. The Government of Canada is doing its utmost to commit twice that amount of money for its own political purposes. What a shame!

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, make a few preliminary remarks concerning the parliamentary events that made it possible for the House to examine Bill C-103 at 6.35 p.m. today, although normally, the House would have adjourned at 6 p.m., to resume sitting at 8 p.m. This goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that Parliament works when parliamentarians want it to work.

I had an opportunity to speak in the debate on a motion by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the day after the parliamentary impasse ended. We were discussing plans for parliamentary reform in terms that showed that hon. members who spoke in the debate felt a real urgency that the work of the House should be as relevant as possible.

Today, I would like to take this opportunity to express once more the hope that very soon, Parliament, either through referral to the Committee on Procedure and Organization or in some other way, will be able to formulate concrete proposals to ensure that, in the future, the House of Commons will not be reduced to the pitiful exercise that paralysed it for more than two weeks.

At the time, I also said that some good would come out of all this, and today, an agreement made by the three House Leaders has made it possible to reach a consensus on a package of extremely complex legislation—which sparked the deadlock in the first place—and split the original bill into eight separate bills, so that each party and each member of the House could make a real contribution to the legislative process, which is the responsibility of this House, and in turn, allow the government which, we presume, is here to govern, to apply time allocation, a system not frequently used in this House but common practice in other countries and in other jurisdictions, especially at Westminster, the model for our Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be speaking in the debate today, because I find these parliamentary events extremely important, and because I hope that in the future, without resorting to dilatory tactics like those used originally to split the bill, we will be able to work together in the same spirit and reconcile parliamentary responsibilities with the role of government, which is to govern. I now conclude these marginal notes on the events that have taken place in Parliament, which are, I feel, important because since this agreement we have been working in an orderly fashion, bills have been subjected to thorough debate, they have been voted on sincerely and conscientiously by members on both sides of this House, and finally, they have been the subject of a debate the public had a right to expect in the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, it is often said that money is the life-blood of wars. I think it is probably a truism to say that energy is the motor of society as we know it today. Whether it is used to run our factories or our cars, during this century, cheap energy has enabled so-called industrial societies to prosper, to develop and to enable its citizens to live richer if not better lives, and has made it possible to achieve during this century a rate of growth hitherto unknown in the history of man.

Cheap energy—there you have a paradox, Mr. Speaker. The debate on Bill C-103 is an opportunity to point out how extraordinary it is that, today, people are complaining because the price of energy or perhaps I should say energies, is at the centre of public attention, while for 50 years we ignored the entire question and were using resources which are, by definition, mankind's capital reserves, namely, our non-renewable resources. In 1973, the first energy crisis occurred when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries decided—I may add that it probably had every reason to do so—to draw the best possible benefits from the income constituted by the price paid for oil, especially since most of these countries had no other resources. Oil is taken from the desert or the ocean floor and may come from developing countries that must use this resource windfall to promote the development of their own society. Is it therefore so surprising that, after this psychological and economic shock, Canada, so richly endowed but also dependent on foreign sources of oil and gas, should want to develop its own national energy policy? The cynics among us would claim that an energy policy is long overdue. But, and I say it once again, before 1973 energy was cheap and in abundant supply, and we took advantage of it, in an almost orgiastic consumption of oil and gas, without worrying about who was going to pay the bill and where the energy was coming from.

At the end of the sixties, I remember reading in the papers about the most far-fetched projections that Canada would be self-sufficient in oil and gas for at least 100 or even 150 years. The fact that known reserves were diminishing proved nothing, since in any case, there was an arbitrariness about the whole issue, and the oil companies with their vast monopolies could, in fact, say what they chose to whom they chose. What a shock, after 1973, when we realized that Canada did, in fact, have the capability of being self-sufficient in energy but that we would have to pay a high price to attain that self-sufficiency. Why have a national energy policy? Because I think that Canadians realized at a certain point in their history that it was important and even imperative for us as a society to be able to exercise some control over our own destiny. That is more or less the philosophy underlying the national energy policy, and I support it. I do not think any members in this House could be opposed to this concept.

We want to achieve energy self-sufficiency in Canada and we have the means to do so, even where oil is concerned, but we still have to implement a consistent policy to deal with all the problems which this goal raises with respect to supply, compensation, prices, taxes, charges, allowances, research and development, as well as frontier production. So, we have a national energy policy, and it was announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde); but now, several months later, a year and a half to be exact, we are still discussing in this House how to implement this policy. Implementing a national energy policy is not an easy exercise because you essentially have to rely on unpredictable factors over which you have no control. While it is true that 18 months ago we could forecast, because of events which have occurred since 1973, a regular increase in the cost of hydrocarbons, while we could expect OPEC to go on controlling supplies and the industrialized countries to take some time to adapt to the higher cost and the relative scarcity of these energy supplies, while we could forecast that these same countries would need some time to make the necessary changes to their energy structure, especially at the industrial level, unfortunately, the situation and the projections which we had made did not quite follow the expected pattern. Are we to blame anyone or any government for the fact that fuel prices, and especially oil prices, have dropped in the past year? I do not think so. This occurred because of a combination of circumstances. However, the fact remains that in view of the national energy policy, this drop in black gold prices, if I may use this expression, has lent support to those who still believe that we are living in an area where the development of frontier resources must be left in the hands of entrepreneurs, even though the Canadian people may now want these resources to be developed through a national oil corporation.

I would like to say a few words about this national oil corporation, about Petro-Canada. There are those who say that we did not need it. They may be right in a certain context, but the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that a modern state like Canada, which wants to have the means to implement a consistent energy policy and to achieve self-sufficiency, which, as everyone must admit, will require tremendous investments and sacrifices if we want to meet this objective by 1990 as projected in the National Energy Program, must necessarily have some levers. And Petro-Canada is nothing else but a lever to allow Canadians to play an active role in applying the principles contained in the National Energy Program. Some might retort that Petro-Canada will use public funds to compete with companies that must go to the financial markets in order to explore, develop, produce the oil and gas needed. That is true. But is there anything wrong, Mr. Speaker, with the reason why we proposed the establishment of Petro-Canada, that Canadians should be directly involved in oil exploration and production? A joint rather than an exclusive interest. Personally, I see nothing wrong, Mr. Speaker, with the fact that through a tax levied on a litre of gas Canadians are involved in the purchase of Petrofina and the establishment of an entity capable of participating with other members of the industry in the implementation of our energy objectives. I see no reason why I should object and I do not think Canadians generally see anything wrong with that. If we can rely on surveys, because we have to use some reference standard, a majority of Canadians feel that Petro-Canada is an asset to our society.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not burden you with the detail of the proposals in Bill C-103, a near-labyrinth, nor with arguments about figures of royalties, charges, rebates and fiscal incentives. All that language, Mr. Speaker, is for experts, it is beyond my comprehension, and it would be presumptuous on my part to propose changes to any provision of the legislation. Again, Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to indicate as a Canadian and a legislator that the principles behind our National Energy Program are worthwhile. The proof of this is the fact that certain oil and gas producing provinces, current or potential, as Nova Scotia, after long negotiations entered into agreements, and those agreements as always are beneficial to both parties. Presumably, in this case parties of either side represent a segment of the interests involved. We signed an agreement with Alberta, something our colleagues opposite cannot claim to have done. We signed an agreement of benefit to Canadians. There is no doubt about that. Again, some circumstances somewhat hampered the smooth progress of discussions and negotiations that already had been going on for a very long time. However, at a meeting I was privileged to attend in Paris at the International Energy Agency, non-Canadian—Canadians were present but in this case they were not Canadians—energy experts urged us as members of Parliament not to be lulled into complacency, because although they have now plummeted, oil prices will inevitably go up again. They will have to, because it is a non-renewable resource, each additional drop of which is a little more costly, since the means used to develop this resource are becoming increasingly costly, nature having unequally distributed its wealth.

We began our exploration in locations of easier access, but now we have to explore deeper offshore and develop heavy oils, oil sands and shales. Therefore the costs will increase, the costs per barrel will necessarily go up. Therefore, there is no room for complacency, since present conditions are cyclical. I admit that our life has become more complicated, that some of the premises on which we established our projections for our National Energy Program are undermined, but I do not think that they are inconsistent with that cyclical consideration of the principles underlying the National Energy Program whose philosophy is to provide Canada with a concerted policy for the development of those energy resources.

I am particularly interested in one aspect of the bill and was rather anxious to hear the previous speaker, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) deal with the compensation for petroleum imports which, as things stand at present, are more costly than Canadian petroleum. This is a basic decision, Mr. Speaker, which each of us must make to the best of our knowledge and which does not merely apply to energy resources but to many sectors of our community. And those considerations are based on the fact that the Canadian economy, geography and community are diversified. Sometimes, beef producers walk on the inside and all other Canadians subsidize them through export or consumer prices so that they can produce at a reasonable price. Sometimes, industrialists take advantage of the situation through subsidies, tax allowances, and a particular area of Canada benefits by it. On another day, it is energy which is somehow to be shared. And one day it could be electrical power in Quebec and I swear to you that the debate will be a fierce one.

As my hon. colleague from Newfoundland was saying a while ago, if Canada is to survive, it is essential that we should set national standards, and if we accept the need for national standards, this holds true for the energy industry as well. I admit that we could carry on a very long controversy over this. Some could ask: Why should one litre of gas cost 40 cents in Montreal and why not 25 cents in Calgary? Why not? I suppose this point could be argued. Why not 18 cents in British Columbia and why not 27 cents in Newfoundland when the offshore oil starts flowing? I, for one, claim that all Canadians should as much as possible be treated on the same footing in this respect; hon. members certainly realize that I am eluding even the issue of oil and gas as a contributing factor to industrial production, for here again a region of the country should not be favoured at the expense of another just because geography has given the former a head start. I believe that, as a matter of principle or given national standards, all Canadians should pay the same price for hydrocarbons, whether they live west or east of the so-called Borden line, and the principle is so self-evident that I unreservedly support the proposal for a financial compensation which the hon. member for Bow River opposed so forcefully a while ago. Surely he will say: "But, of course, the interest of the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) is clear: being from Quebec, he will benefit from this compensation." And he would be right. I come from Quebec, and my province is among those which have benefited greatly from this very real, and I repeat, very real generosity of the people of Alberta in sharing the great wealth they have under their feet. In fact, I believe that it is part of the Canadian genius to find the means of sharing among Canadians in spite of the ups and downs brought about by a policy focusing on past events. Sharing is a characteristic of Canada and must remain so if we are to continue to live as Canadians for a while, in spite of marginal movements such as the Western Canada Concept, and I can testify that if one province is familiar with marginal movements, it is certainly Quebec, because we who believe in Canada, in sharing, in generosity, have had to fight—I was going to say since 1967, but this goes back much further—against a kind of narrow approach, a restricted vision of human potential, an unfavourable perspective of Canada as a whole, an egotistic and egocentric view. We have lived this experience and we still live it in Quebec. No one should blame us for such a movement, which is entitled to exist and which I respect as such, but which I believe to be marginal, and my colleagues will correct me if I am wrong, but I do not believe I am. However, that some people would believe that the national energy policy and the compensation it provides is too much of a sacrifice for Alberta makes me wonder.

I ask myself these questions because I infer from the agreement signed by the Alberta premier and the Canadian government—and I repeat that I am not an energy expert—that both parties find it mutually beneficial. I repeat that if event-related and therefore temporary factors cause implementation problems, it is always possible for intelligent people to make adjustments. As evidence of this, I understand that Alberta has just introduced a reduction in its royalties to give some breathing spell to the oil and gas companies, and I also understand that the Canadian government has undertaken negotiations to promote the sales of accumulated stocks since Canada, being a producing country like all the others, is finding it more difficult than usual to sell its production. As a result, the government is attempting to dispose of the surplus production, which amounts to tens of thousands of barrels—I shall let adepts in this matter determine the exact figure—but I do not see how such technical considerations, which only require minor adjustments, and this issue is brought up every day in the newspapers, how such adjustments, which are a characteristic of a mature and sophisticated society, would run counter to the principle underlying the National Energy Program, which is to concentrate and focus our resources toward an objective which all the hon. members and presumably all Canadians support, that of energy self-sufficiency. Some may say that we shall never reach self-sufficiency, but that point can be debated some other time, in another place.

The fact remains that we have provided ourselves with a number of tools, whether through a national petroleum board, tax incentives to research, agreements signed with producing provinces or compensation which makes it possible for refiners to pay for imported oil a price equivalent to the price they would pay if they got their oil from Canadian producers. All these tools are worth while. The fact that last year was not a good year as far as exploration is concerned had certainly something to do with the National Energy Program. But I think nobody would suggest that it had nothing to do with current factors such as a falling price for oil and the U.S. government's policy of deregulating the industry which may appear attractive in the short run, but which may prove in the long run detrimental to Canadian interests. Mr. Speaker, all this bill is doing is to establish and integrate our objectives. And as such, as my hon. colleague from Newfoundland said, I can find nothing odious about this bill unless one does not accept its underlying premise.

Clearly, if we refuse to accept, as implied by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—although I would not like to put words in his mouth—the principle that the same basic price should be paid in Montreal as in Edmonton, certainly we cannot approve this legislation. If, on the other hand, we have another concept of Canada, if we accept the principle of providing ourselves with the means, the tools needed, not as a government but as a society, as a people, to have our say in the development of those resources—because they do not belong to Shell but to the Canadian people, they do belong not to the government of Canada but to every Canadian. Therefore, let us have our say in the development of those resources! Of course, we can suggest certain amendments to the implementation of those objectives. But as far as principles are concerned, who can object to Canada no longer having to depend on OPEC or Mexico or Venezuela or any other country that might some day dictate to us not only the price to pay for oil, but the quantity to buy as well?

True, we now have a surplus. But who knows what will happen two years from now? Maybe we will have another shortage. This is a volatile market, Mr. Speaker, and the message I got from those meetings in Paris with the International Energy Agency, is that every country, especially those who have the extraordinary good fortune of having ample reserves, must have as a first priority to ensure that those resources are available to the people, to the most productive among them and that those resources are not used to the benefit of this or that group, but to the benefit of all. And I feel that such is the thrust of the National Energy Program. And this is why the bill in my view deserves our support. And I shall support it, not as an expert, not as a member from the West but from Quebec who admittedly benefits from this situation but first and foremost as a Canadian.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) feels that the concept and philosophy of this bill are to ensure security of supply. I suggest to him that the philosophy of this bill is to give those in the ivory towers here in Ottawa control of an industry so that they can use that industry as a source of taxation. We now have a great milch cow for the country; it is called the oil industry. In the hon. member's province 70 cents of every dollar paid at the pumps is taxation. I suggest to him that more is paid in taxation on this liquid product than on the liquid products normally found in bottles—wine and alcohol—and I suggest to him that the real philosophy behind this bill is a philosophy of tax and tax more and more. The philosophy is to make sure we have more government to put up with in our lives, more bureaucrats and more people suggesting how we should do our thing.

The hon. member for Rosemont mentioned polls with respect to Petro-Canada. I suggest to the hon. member that he look at the polls, even in his province, which indicate the hon. member should be more concerned about the economy of the country than he is. Those polls indicate that the government of which he is a supporter would not be the government if we had a proper poll in the country.

To read this bill is to read the clause at the bottom of page 21. To put this bill in its proper perspective I think I should read into the record Clause 35(4) as follows:

> Where it is shown to the Governor in Council by the Minister that it is in the public interest to do so, the Governor in Council may, by order, conditionally or unconditionally, retroactively or prospectively, and either generally or in respect of a single transaction,
> (a) exempt any petroleum or petroleum product from the charge imposed thereon in respect of a month or part of a month under this Part; or
> (b) reduce any charge imposed in respect of any month or part of a month under this Part.

That is this bill. The government can, retroactively or prospectively—

Mr. McDermid: Or seductively.

Mr. Blenkarn: —or seductively, my friend says—and either generally or in respect of a single transaction, exempt in respect of a month or part of a month or reduce in respect of a month or part of a month. Just that one clause alone should indicate to everyone that this is a bad bill.

Let me get to the question of the whole idea of a Canadian oil price. That idea was first presented by the Hon. Bob Stanfield when the first increase in oil prices took place. He suggested that somewhere along the line we ought to try to minimize the shock of going to world prices. For a period of time bit by bit we worked our Canadian price up very close to the world price. That was the situation until 1978 or 1979. The OPEC people then again decided to go on a rampage, and world prices advanced dramatically. This government went to the country with the concept of a Canadian price. At that point the price of oil in Canada was controlled under the Petroleum Administration Act and was considerably less than the price of oil in other parts of the world. This government said it would continue to keep the price of oil and oil products significantly lower than the price in other parts of the world. As long as that was the case we in Canada had an advantage because we had petroleum and petroleum products available for our industry, to heat our homes and to drive our transportation vehicles at a price lower than that which prevailed in other parts of the world. In a sense we were using our resources sensibly to give our country a competitive advantage.

The national energy policy and the philosophy expressed in this bill ceased to do that. Instead of providing an advantage to Canadians it became the policy to tax Canadian resources and to see if the Ottawa government could get as much money in tax dollars as conceivably possible from the oil industry on oil from the ground or on oil which passed through the refining and processing systems. The provincial governments saw what was happening, and certainly the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the eastern provinces decided they might as well join in the game because no longer was it the policy of the Government of Canada to produce petroleum products in Canada at a price which would give Canadian industry and Canadian transportation a price advantage over the rest of the world. The policy was clearly a policy to tax, tax and tax. Last year the revenues of the Government of Canada increased 22 per cent in one year. They have increased 40 per cent over two years, and that revenue increase is largely the result of the monster taxes imposed on the oil industry by this bill and related statutes.

This bill deals with two principal forms of taxation and a third form of taxation in terms of transportation fuel. First, it deals with what is called the petroleum compensation fund, which is a tax on petroleum products in Canada. Presumably it is to tax oil in order to collect enough to pay for the cost of bringing down the price of imported oil and to bring about some sort of average Canadian price.

The second tax in the bill deals with some concept which has absolutely nothing to do with energy security but everything to do with socialism, nationalization and seizure of private property. It is a tax on every gallon or barrel—or cubic metre now—of fuel to enable the purchase of new oil companies or to make new oil investments by the Government of Canada. These investments are not to be made by individual Canadians but by the Government of Canada through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) so that the minister and his advisers, who certainly have no love for private enterprise or the free entreprise system, can become the largest owners and controllers of the oil industry.

If the policy were to produce oil and oil products as cheaply as possible for Canadians—bearing in mind the problem of security—and to average the price down so that Canadians would have a competitive advantage in the world and so that Canadian industry and business and the jobs which could be created would have a competitive advantage, then we could support it, but that is not the policy. This is a policy of taxation to bring in more and more revenue, and it is being sold as a policy of energy security. It is being sold as a policy of Canadianization. It is really a policy of control, a taxation policy, and it ought to be viewed by my friends on the government side as exactly that.

If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had come into the House and said,"We feel that gasoline is the same as liquor and we are going to tax it in the same way; we feel that gasoline and home heating oil are the same as wine and we are going to tax them in the same way—get all we can from them and then reduce other taxes", he might not have found an argument. But this has been presented to us as energy security which is good for the country and will make us self-sufficient. We all know that the policy has not made us self-sufficient, has not encouraged drilling, has not encouraged production, has not encouraged jobs—it is a policy designed solely to get as much out of the industry as possible and to put it in the hands of the spenders in government and thus give government control over what goes on.

Early in March when my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) moved the adjournment of the House and the bells rang for 16 days, some people in the country were concerned. You, Mr. Speaker, and those who were able to help you, sat in the chair and maintained the dignity of this House.

People across the country expressed concern that the Progressive Conservative Party might have foisted an unfair method of debate on the country. It was a significant debate, however, a silent debate, if one ignored the noise of the bell. During that debate Bill C-94 was apparently abandoned and the petroleum compensation charge that had been envivisaged in the original bill was reduced from $125 per cubic meter to $75 per cubic meter or from $20 per barrel to $12 per barrel. That was a pretty sizeable adjustment won by the Progressive Conservative Party toward reducing energy prices for the people of this country. If 16 days of bell ringing could produce an $8 per barrel reduction in taxes, that is significant. Billions of dollars were saved for the taxpayers of this country.

Bill C-94 provided for a Canadian ownership charge of $25 per cubic meter or $4 per barrel. The bill before the House now reduces that to $7.25 per cubic meter or $1.15 per barrel. We saved the people of Canada an additional $2.85 per barrel, and we reduced the charge to less than one third of what had been intended. So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the bell ringing was a good exercise in democracy and in keeping taxes down.

My constituents elected me to do what I can to cut down on the cost of government. This is also the case with my colleagues. With this bill we have accomplished that and we hope to accomplish more. But this is a bad bill, Mr. Speaker, because it levies more taxes than it should.

Bill C-93 deals with the PGRT and excise taxes. This bill has the same principle, that is, that the tax limits are upper limits and taxes can be raised to those limits or reduced. They can be fiddled around in any way that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) suggests to the governor in council. For the first time in our history, in Bill C-93 and in Bill C-103, there comes a time when the Minister of Finance—or in this case the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—has the right to raise or lower taxes. Through this bill the minister reserves to himself, not to parliament but to himself, the right to levy taxes.

The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) jokingly said that the Magna Carta was sent to four corners of the realm. We should remember what the Magan Carta was all about, Mr. Speaker. It was about the right of the Crown to impose taxes without parliament. The Magan Carta determined that taxes shall not be levied except by the people, represented in their parliament. The whole purpose of parliament, dating back to 1215, is to determine how and by whom taxes may be levied.

On that basis this bill and these provisions are wrong, as it is left to the minister to determine and to present, with a Crown reference, what the taxes should be. They should be presented by ways and means motions and the bill should specify what taxes will be imposed.

If there is to be a further increase in taxes there should be a further bill, which would be voted upon by this House. The idea that a minister of the Crown can advise the governor in council that a tax should be increased and that it would then be done automatically is wrong. It is unparliamentary and it is against the concepts that have governed us since the Magna Carta. These features must be deleted from this bill and from Bill C-93 because they are against the principles on which you, Sir, and I were elected. They are bad law.

If it is the government's intention to impose the maximum amount of tax provided for in these bills, then it should be voted upon by parliament. The people of Canada would then find that 18 cents per gallon was a pretty low increase. The maximum levy provided for in this bill is 70 cents per gallon, with 28 cents being imposed right away and the rest later. If that is what the minister wants to do, then let us find out about it. Let the people of Canada know where they stand. When we pass this bill we ought to know exactly what the levy is. We have no right to vote for taxes in the abstract; taxes that can be increased or decreased and changed at the minister's whim. To impose a ceiling and then say, "No more than that ceiling" is not voting on taxes; it is voting on some sort of crazy discretion that no minister of the Crown has the right to retain to himself.

Let us deal with these taxes further, Mr. Speaker. The question really is whether these petroleum compensation taxes already being collected are needed. The fact is that the government has been collecting more in petroleum compensation taxes than it needs to pay petroleum compensation, well over $1 million more. The truth of the matter is that, buried under the concept of petroleum compensation, is an effort by the Government of Canada to say it is for compensation for foreign oil but to put it in its pocket and use it for some other purpose. So on that very point, Sir, this bill is deceitful and dishonest because the present level of the compensation tax has produced a huge surplus which has been converted to the government's ordinary revenue account. Sir, if it were truly a compensation levy, then it should only be the amount required to cover the import compensation payments and no more.

It has become clear, Mr. Speaker, that the effect of the government's interference in petroleum marketing, particularly with imports and the compensation charge, has been that certain importers of oil have preferred to purchase on the spot market where it is alleged they can buy the oil they want at $25 of $26 a barrel and then receive $17 a barrel or so in compensation and be much better off using foreign oil rather than Canadian. The truth of the matter is, Sir, that in western Canada today between 300,000 and 400,000 barrels of oil a day are shut in through the brilliance of the people in the minister's office, his ivory tower guys who would bring in foreign oil rather than use our own. For that very reason alone the people who concocted this legislation should be fired.

Let us look at the true economics of the situation. Here we are bringing in nearly 500,000 barrels of foreign oil a day while we leave our own product bottled up in the ground. We charge compensation levies and increase the price to every transport driver and home owner, and then compensate Iraq, Venezuela and Mexico. If we were able to sell a nuclear reactor there, perhaps, we might be able to justify this charge. The fact of the matter is they cannot and will not, and all we are doing is paying for the Prime Minister's trips to see the President of Mexico, and paying a pretty penny at that.

Looking at the question of the Canadianization fund, Mr. Speaker, that fund bothers me as it ought to bother you. Under this bill we are not paying just for Petrofina, we are allowing the minister to continue forever building up a fund so he can buy shares in other oil companies. The fund is called a Canadianization fund, but that is not what it is. It is not a situation where Canadians as individuals are buying shares in oil companies. It is not a situation where small Canadian companies get a benefit. No. In fact, what happens is that Canadians are being taxed at the pump when they heat their homes or buy fertilizer. For what? So the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can own another oil company.

Some people have said this money was going to go directly into oil exploration or building a pipeline to Halifax; some said it was going to go directly into creating new jobs somewhere. But what did the minister do with the money so far? He went out in the market and bought a bunch of whited-out service stations and got himself some new neon signs—

Mr. McDermid: Designed by a guy from Bermuda.

Mr. Blenkarn: As my friend says, designed by a guy from Bermuda who probably does not pay any income tax. Well, it is a good place to go. But what did the minister do? He decided he was going to become the new oil entrepreneur. He made sure his company sold gas at the same price as everyone else, but now at least he has service stations right across the country. There is nothing wrong with them, of course, it is local people selling oil and gas and so on, but did we as a nation really need to have a whole new fleet of service stations? Was that a national priority? Was that the kind of thing that Canadians wanted to pay 4 cents or 5 cents a gallon for, so that the minister could have his own gas stations? I say, Sir, they did not. That has nothing to do with energy security; it has to do with propaganda and the government's "visibility", if you want to call it that.

It was back in September, Mr. Speaker, when we finally entered into an agreement with the province of Alberta which provides that the price of Canadian oil was to rise $4.50 a barrel in 1981 and 1982, and $8 a barrel from 1983 to 1986.

At no point, however, was the price to exceed 75 per cent of the world price. Well, at that time the people making this agreement had stars in their eyes as to where they thought the world price of oil would go. They thought the world price in 1982 would be $49.22 a barrel, and $57.06 in 1983. Well, Sir, we are well into 1982 and the price is about $39 a barrel and going down. They were out only $10 a barrel. That was how bright they were when they made that deal back in September, only about seven months ago. How much will the government be out by 1983? Will the world oil price be $57.06? It is suggested that some time this year the 75 per cent agreement will come into effect. Some time this year our Canadian oil price will be the world price. That begs the question, where will these taxes take us? Do these taxes take us above world price because there is nothing in this bill which in any way limits the price, the tax or the compensation fund? Old oil will be 75 per cent of world price. However, this bill does not limit any of those taxes. It presumed, and it was wrong, that last year when prices were going up and up. Somewhere along the line the minister and his high-faluting advisers thought they knew it all, that they did not need to worry about the price coming down. Where does this bill take us with its present pricing structure? It breaks the 75 per cent concept. Very soon under this bill Canadians will be paying several times more than people in the United States pay for gasoline and home heating oil and everything else. We are already paying more for gasoline at the pumps than Americans do.

Over Easter I was fortunate to be able to visit Texas. The price of gasoline in Texas is considerably less than it is here in Ontario. My father reports that gasoline in Florida is cheaper than it is in my city of Mississauga. I say to you, Sir, that it was not very long ago when people from Buffalo were swarming over the bridge at Fort Erie to buy gasoline. Very soon Canadians will be the ones swarming over the bridge at Fort Erie to buy gasoline. Where will that take our tourist industry? Where will that take the efficiency of our factories, our plants and our transportation industry?

The bill in terms of the tax policy has not been thought out. The bill has no de-escalation of price in it. It has only upper limits and the great wonderful world in which the government gets more, more and more. Perhaps the oil companies get a little more? Do they? The price is going down for sure, but the taxes do not go down; therefore, the netback to the industry must go down, and that is where we stand.

With respect to the national energy policy and I am reading from a news release appearing on the minister's own stationery, dated September 1, 1981, which stated that for Canadian consumers the bottom line is that they have fair oil and gas prices. Already Canadian consumers are getting fair prices? They are getting "fairly hooked" more than anybody else, certainly more than anybody else in North America. The industry does not get the money to get on with the job. I thought we would go on to that right now, Mr. Speaker, because you and I know that as a result of this policy, drilling in Canada in 1981 over 1980 is down 25 per cent. Compare that with the 25 per cent increase in the United States. Well completions in 1981 amounted to 7,183 compared with 9,481 in 1980. That is another 25 per cent drop. Exploratory drilling is down 19 per cent. Developing drilling is down 28 per cent. In terms of metres drilled, the decline was from 10.27 million metres in 1980 to 7.64 million metres in 1981. That is another 25 per cent drop.

Two hundred and twenty six drilling rigs left Canada. This was all for the "security of supply," to make sure that we have more expensive oil. It made sure that the industry was less efficient, and the advantage that Canadians had up until 1979 and into the early part of 1980 has dissipated and gone. The advantage which Canadians had over the Europeans has gone. The advantage which Canadians had over Americans in terms of energy, energy prices and energy availability has gone. What do we have instead? We have a tax regime that increased taxes last year by 22 per cent. This regime will increase taxes 40 per cent over the two-year period. Do we see any lessening of other taxes? Not on your life. Income taxes are increased by the November budget for most people earning under $30,000 ayear. Fifty four per cent of people earning under $50,000 a year will pay more taxes. What about corporations? Corporate taxes are up dramatically. I say to you, Sir, that this is a bad bill and it must be defeated.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to add in this debate. I was quite taken by my colleague's comments on the acquisition of Petrofina. He expressed views that I find are being expressed across the country.

This bill, as mentioned by others, will establish a new ceiling for the petroleum compensation charge; a new oil export ceiling of $350 per cubic metre; the Canadian ownership special charge; and the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge.

The main concern I have is the amount of taxation being added on to oil and petroleum products generally. I recall, and I am sure you remember the time a few years ago, when the then minister of energy, the Hon. Alastair Gillespie, stood in the House and announced that as part of the conservation program of the government $100 would be added to the cost of air conditioning installed in an automobile. Most Canadians have forgotten about that, I am sure. As a matter of fact, in compiling an automobile price today, I do not believe the dealer even mentions this item. That $100 is added automatically. Any car a person buys with air conditioning in it costs an extra $100 in tax, and that tax goes directly to the government. That $100 was supposedly added for conservation purposes.

I want to go through the various charges that have been added on to oil, but at this point I want to tell hon. members what happens after a tax is added and is forgotten about.

Many people, particularly in the automobile industry, engineers and those who know about these things, laughed that the $100 charge would be a conservation measure. They pointed out, quite rightly, that if you drove your automobile with the windows open it would cost more in energy than air conditioning would. Also, if you drove a car with soft tires, it would cost more in energy than a car installed with air conditioning would. But there is a final irony to that particular tax. Some Canadians were so angry at the thought of paying this extra $100 that those who lived near the border went across to the United States into Buffalo, Detroit and other areas where service stations would install air conditioning. They bought it there and they did not have to pay the $100. Then another thing happened—the RCMP became involved. The RCMP made a deal with the guys across the border who were installing air conditioning. They paid them $20 for every Canadian license number which they could give them. Consequently, the fellow heard a knock on his door, and there would be an RCMP officer with a writ of assistance. His automobile was seized, he had to pay a fine plus the cost of the air conditioning, and he suffered much anguish. This went on for quite some time after the tax was put in place.

I should like to look at the various taxes on petroleum products. There is an export charge, a special levy, a Syncrude levy, a petroleum compensation charge, a Canadian ownership charge, a fuel compensation recovery charge, an import charge and a transportation charge. On top of all these are the federal excise tax and the provincial sales tax, except in the province of Alberta. If that is not overloading a product with taxation, I do not know what is. As far as I am concerned, it is part of the cause of the decline in our industry in the past 18 to 24 months.

There were people in the industry who thought that energy prices had to rise. They expected it. They recognized the world price and so on, but they had the feeling that regardless of this they still had it made because we had a great resource and somehow the government would arrange it so that we would always have a competitive advantage in the international field. The reality today, or part of the malaise in the economy today, is that they now realize that they are paying more. They look at the resource we have and see that heavy oil is on the shelf and, that the tar sands development has been put back. They hear the mythical talk about self-sufficiency by 1990. Along with them I do not believe we will achieve self-sufficiency by 1990. Part of the problem is the taxes and what is done with the money.

I want to talk about what happens to tax money, which is an important point. I recall three or four years ago a program called "Enersave" which was put in place by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I welcomed three young people into my constituency who were heading up the Enersave program. They told the people of my constituency that they worked for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, but in reality they did not. They had obtained a grant of $90,000 to go out into the community to advise people on how to conserve energy. This is what it was all about. They were equipped to go into the schools to advise students on how to save energy. They could talk with representatives of school boards and municipal officials on how to save energy. They could talk to architects, engineers and owners of construction companies on the same subject. This is what they were telling me. I inquired as to their qualifications because I felt that if they were advising people on how to do things, they should have some basic knowledge.

This is what I discovered. The young lady heading the project was a professional program conductor. She had operated several LIPs, youth programs and so on. She had operated so many that I assumed she was looked upon by various government departments as a professional program director. She had as her assistants a third year history student from university and a fourth year high school student. I began to talk with them about how they felt when they talked with the man, for example, who designed the building in which their offices were located. I asked them whether they felt qualified to advise this man, who was an architect, on energy conservation matters. They said that they would take a crack at it. I asked them whether they felt confident talking with city engineers and advising them on saving energy for the city and so on. Then we got down to the final point—"What do you really know about the subject?" They held up a handful of pamphlets written by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. They had read the pamphlets, and that is all they knew about energy.

Also I talked to them about different kinds of oil such as heavy oil, light distilate, sweet oil, sour oil and gas. They did not have a clue. I am not being critical of those students. They were nice, keen, energetic, honest young people who really thought they were out doing something, but as far as I was concerned they wasted $90,000 of taxpayers' money in my constituency. In fact, after returning from a series of meetings at three o'clock in the morning on one occasion, at two o'clock in the morning on another occasion, and at four o'clock on another morning, I telephoned them because I saw that the lights in their office were on. I called them up and said, "If you are talking about conservation, at least turn off the lights in your own office".

The people who pay the taxes collected by the government and dispensed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are the ones who are asking questions which I am at a loss to answer. I should like to refer to a typical letter from a constituent who wrote in reply to an article which he read in the April 15 edition of The Spectator in Hamilton. It was a story about Michael Phelps, executive assistant to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). The story was that Mr. Phelps had just made approximately $64,000 from the sale of a home he bought less than two years before with the help of an interest-free loan from the Petro-Canada Crown corporation; it gave all the financial details. A spin-off of that was the letter I received from Mr. R. I. Gowland of Burlington who wrote:

Dear Mr. Kempling:

I am inquiring as to my chances of obtaining a $35,000 interestfree loan from Petro-Canada (a Crown corporation). I would be willing to make payments of $31.25 a month for the first year and payments of $62.75 a month for the remainder of the loan.

Those were the terms which Mr. Phelps received in his agreement. The letter continued:

The figures I am quoting are from an article in The Hamilton Spectator April 15, 1982, that Mr. Michael Phelps (executive assistant to Energy Minister Marc Lalonde) received this type of loan in September 1980 and December 1980 from Petro-Canada.

As the mortgage on my home comes due the end of July 1982, the interest rates will increase from the present 10 per cent to 19.25 per cent, on a three year mortgage.

This will almost double my mortgage payments from $400 a month to $800 a month. My remaining mortgage at the present time is about $36,000, this loan would enable me to pay off my mortgage instead of losing my home. I do not want to make a profit from this transaction as Mr. Phelps did, I just don't want to lose my home.

Eagerly awaiting your reply.

Yours truly,

Ronald I. Gowland.

I read that story and wondered how I could answer this gentleman, because as far as I was concerned it was poor business to proceed in the manner of the minister and of Petro-Canada. If this is what is happening to the energy tax dollars which are being contributed by the people of Canada, I think it is wrong and we have a duty to point this out and rectify it wherever possible.

• (2000)

Aside from the Enersave program which I mentioned, where these three young people received a $90,000 grant, there is another Enersave operation in my constituency. Although I had difficulty finding out the background of this operation, I discovered there was a group of people who, supposedly, were representing Energy, Mines and Resources and who advised home owners on how to insulate their homes. They were funded through taxation derived from petroleum. I talked to these people in my constituency, as I usually do, and questioned them as to their competence, background and expertise in this field. I asked the person in charge what knowledge he had about energy and insulation. He did not know anything. He said, "I have a construction man on my staff who is my expert. I am an administrative expert." I then met the accountant and asked him the same question. He said that he was only in to set up the accounts and knew nothing about energy and insulation. I then met the construction expert. I have a great reverence for age and I respect elderly people but this gentleman could barely walk. He had a cane and had lost an eye. I honestly do not believe that he could climb a ladder to inspect an attic in order to determine what kind of insulation was needed. That was the staff of this organization.

I was quite intrigued by this operation since I come from the private sector where you must be very conscious of any conflict of interest which may arise as a result of which you may be charged with favouritism or fraud. I asked the leader of this operation how he conducted his business. He indicated that they put advertisements in the paper to which senior citizens and others would respond. He said, "These people want to have their homes insulated, and we advise them." I asked him how he gives this advice if he does not know anything about it. He indicated that he takes their names and addresses and sends the construction expert to inspect their homes. I told this person that his expert can hardly get in and out of a car, let alone climb a ladder to look in the attic. He said that they advised these people and told them what type of insulation they should buy. He said, for instance, "We tell them to buy fiberglass insulation." I asked him in what manner he gave this advice, and he said that he tells them which company to buy it from.

I said, "Let me give you some advice before you go any further. Do not tell people where to buy their insulation. If you want to give them an alphabetical list of insulation suppliers, that is fine." I indicated that these people should make their own choice so that he will not put himself in the position of indicating the company from which to buy insulation. Otherwise, he will discover many other companies accusing him of taking kickbacks and showing favouritism.

He accepted my advice but not before all the insulation contractors in the Burlington area had surrounded his business one day with all their vans and trucks to force a confrontation. That office closed down shortly after that incident. I understand that that operation had a budget of more than $150,000.

These two examples which I have cited represent $240,000 for projects which really have accomplished nothing. Therefore, when I see another bill which proposes to legitimize an ongoing tax or introduce more taxes, I sense that there is something wrong, or at least that there is a potential for questionable activities taking place. That is my concern.

When I review the CHIP program, which is still in existence in some manner, I believe we can honestly say that it was probably the most fraudulent program ever introduced by the government. Although this is unconfirmed, I am told there are approximately 8,000 pending charges under that CHIP program. These charges arise from a variety of circumstances. For example, there are contractors who did not perform the job but charged for it. There are people who said they insulated their homes but did not actually do so. There are other examples as well.

When this CHIP program was at its peak, I recall distraught insulation contractors asking me for help because they were unable to collect thousands of dollars in accounts receivable. This was due to the fact that people who had their homes insulated would then apply to CMHC to receive money from Ottawa in order to pay the contractor. What happened was that they either did not receive the money or did not pay the contractors. Some home owners would tell the contractors that they had not yet received their money from the government, thus leaving the contractor with nothing. There are also incidents of counterfeit forms being printed. A used car dealer in Toronto would sell CHIP application forms for $5. A contractor would buy a $5 application form from this particular used car dealer, fill it out with his customer and process it in anticipation of receiving his money.

Another printing operation in Montreal sold bogus application forms, but only by the thousand. These forms cost $1 each. Those are only some examples from one of the most fraudulent programs ever introduced by the government.

There is not much left to be said about the UFFI situation. The way in which this program has been handled is an absolute disgrace. The minister has promised to rectify the problem, but it has merely been tossed over to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). He is releasing statements, one of which was a report released last Friday. But people who have their homes insulated with UFFI still do not know what will happen to them.

Like many of my colleagues and many Canadians, I have become most upset about the way in which the affairs of the nation are being conducted. This is particularly true with respect to energy. When the first OPEC increases came upon us, I do not believe that there was any concerned Canadian who would not have agreed that drastic steps had to be taken. I am sure they would have agreed that our objective should have been to become self-sufficient as soon as possible. If the government had come forward at that time and indicated that it would work closely with those oil producing provinces to help them develop the tar sands and their heavy oil and to attempt to make Canada self-sufficient not just by 1990 but as soon as possible, it would have had support. If this were to happen we would not be held at ransom by an offshore country. We should never allow that to happen again. Yet energy self-sufficiency, in spite of these added taxes, is still a myth to many of us. These policies will just continue and I doubt if you will ever see energy self-sufficiency. I doubt if we will see self-sufficiency by the turn of the century. We can look at what is going on in the Beaufort Sea and in Hibernia, off the Atlantic coast. I have no sense of conviction, from what I have read and from what I have been told by people who are knowledgeable in the industry, that we will have anywhere near sufficient energy from that part of Canada by the turn of the century. Perhaps we will be lucky and technology will be developed to give us that oil off Hibernia.

We have become a little hardened to this whole matter. We have seen bills come forward, such as the omnibus bill, and we saw the massive power it would give to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to do all manner of things, such as power to raise taxes without consultation with Parliament and power to put new Crown corporations in place without consultation with the provinces, while most of the ones already in place are not operating on a profitable or even break-even basis today. Of course, we rebelled, and there was the incident which has become known as "the bells". While we have been criticized for that incident by hon. members opposite, I think hon. members on this side of the House feel that what we did was for the people of Canada.

We have the serious problem of unemployment in this country. What is happening to the oil industry is happening to almost all industries in Canada. Most of the people in the oil industry thought they had a sort of hidden economic advantage with the oil reserves and resources, and that a government with some common sense would help the provinces develop the resources, bringing them to Canadian industry to help get us out of our terrible balance of payments situation, reducing our unemployment and inflation, and curing all the ills which still seem to be upon us right now. However, the reality is that massive taxes are being taken from industry and from the people in general.

This is a vast country. We are a mobile people. When the source of the mobility is taken away; that is, the energy, and it is heavily taxed, then the people are isolated. They simply cannot travel that extra 40 or 50 miles to search out jobs, as they did a few years ago. It is not that long ago that people would travel a couple of hundred miles every day to and from their work. It might be easy to say that they should have moved nearer to their place of work, but they stayed where they were, for various reasons. However, today people say that they cannot afford $2 a gallon for gasoline to drive back and forth from Toronto to Hamilton or Kitchener to Toronto or from Niagara Falls to Toronto. Consequently, they just go on unemployment and look for employment within the area close to home. If they cannot find it, then they become part of the 1,200,000 unemployed in this country. I think that is a tragedy, as is the failure of the government to realize that this is weighing very heavily on all the people at this time.

With the amount of money which has gone into energy, it is almost impossible today to find venture capital of any kind. There is a very negative attitude in the country, because we do not feel that the government has put programs forward which will ensure self-sufficiency in the foreseeable future. Therefore, people who generally have money available for venture companies are simply not investing it, at least not in Canada. They are finding places to invest it outside Canada.

I will conclude my remarks here by saying I am sorry I cannot support this bill. I wish I could. I wish I could say this is a great bill and that it would help us become self-sufficient by 1987, 1986 or 1988. However, on the basis of this bill and the ones which have gone before it, I really cannot see that we will ever be self-sufficient until we have a complete change of thinking on the part of the people in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in the government itself.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, like hon. members who have previously spoken, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. I believe it is critical that we act swiftly on the important measures contained in the bill and get on with the task of providing energy security, opportunity and fairness for all Canadians, which, in essence, are the major goals of the National Energy Program. This particular piece of legislation really touches on a number of items, five in particular, and I would very briefly like to describe each one.

First, the bill will establish a new ceiling of $75 per cubic metre for the petroleum compensation charge for the refiners and importers, and will broaden the scope for payment compensation to include new domestic oil.

Second, the bill will establish a new export charge ceiling of $350 per cubic metre and will provide us with authority to share one half of the revenue from this charge with the producing provinces. I am certain hon. members will appreciate that particular aspect of the amendment, in that 50 per cent of the revenue of the oil export charge would indeed go to the producing provinces. I do not believe hon. members, whether the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) or an hon. member from the province of Saskatchewan, would want to see those provinces denied 50 per cent of the revenues generated from that particular amendment.

Mr. Andre: They should get 100 per cent.

Mr. Dingwall: Third, it will establish the Canadian ownership special charge and the Canadian ownership account, and will ensure that the charge cannot be raised above its current level without additional legislation.

This bill will also establish the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge on marine and aviation fuel used by carriers in international transportation, with a ceiling of approximately $350 per cubic metre.

Finally, this piece of legislation will give authority for terminating the special compensation charge which was established at the time of the breakdown in negotiations with the government of Alberta.

We have heard a great deal from hon. members opposite, particularly those of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada who have spoken about the pricing of fuel oils here in Canada. However, our pricing system has three essential advantages over the regime proposed by the previous Conservative government in 1980.

First, it ensures that the prices will gradually and predictably rise so that consumers in the Canadian economy in general will have time to adjust. Second, it will ensure oil pricing fairness on a national level by providing a blended price to all regions of the country. Third, it will result in a consumer price which has, and will continue to be lower than that paid by people of most other countries. Those are the three succinct advantages of our pricing system over those offered by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

The National Energy Program was drafted with certain inescapable facts in mind. Canada is a country rich in energy, yet we currently import approximately 20 per cent of our oil needs. Conventional oil reserves in western Canada, the mainstay of this country for years, have shown a steady and marked decline in recent years. However, important new reserves of oil and gas are being found. For example, reserves of natural gas have grown from 1.7 billion cubic metres in 1970 to 2.6 trillion cubic metres in 1980. In addition to the oil sands of Alberta, with an estimated 48 billion cubic metres which may be technically recoverable, exploration and development in the frontier regions have turned up promising reserves of oil and natural gas.

Since the National Energy Program was introduced in this House on October 28, 1980, much has been accomplished by this government on energy policy. We even built an important part of the foundation for a more secure energy future based upon a rich endowment in natural resources, independent of the erratic prices and supplies on the international oil market. The energy legislation completes the building of that strong foundation and provides Canadians with the means to take control of their energy destiny.

Canadians from all walks of life can feel a growing sense of optimism and a sense of certainty about their energy in gas-producing provinces. The federal government now has energy agreements that provide fair prices for consumers and businesses and attractive incentives for Canada's petroleum companies to find more oil for Canada.

Those federal-provincial agreements were followed last December with the approval by this Parliament of the Canada Oil and Gas Act, a major and long overdue legislative initiative to manage development of the Canada lands in the frontier and offshore areas. Not only does the Canada Oil and Gas Act provide the federal government with a greater degree of control over the timing, direction and greater development in the northern and offshore lands, it also ensures that the people of Canada are given their rightful and equitable share in the building of their frontier energy industry.

I intend to deal at some length with the petroleum administration act and, in particular, the petroleum compensation charge. First, let me deal with some of the wild accusations made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. That hon. member has for several weeks now hurled remarks about energy-related matters at whoever would listen, beginning particularly with the Tory strike of Parliament. While he was receiving his salary from the Canadian taxpayer, he was throwing innuendoes all over the place. The hon. member for Calgary Centre has, without question, on many occasions misunderstood the various aspects of energy legislation, or inadvertently confused many aspects of the National Energy Program with every problem Canadians and other countries must face. Unfortunately the hon. member for Calgary Centre has not taken the time to thoroughly study the energy policy or the legislation of this government. On more than one occasion he has made public letters that he has written to various officials concerning government energy laws. For example, Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act; the hon. member for Calgary Centre completely misunderstood the purpose of the legislation regarding renegotiation of the exploration rights on Canada lands.

Unfortunately the hon. member continues in the same old ways by throwing all kinds of rhetoric about the energy legislation before the House, Bill C-103. His speeches in the House lacked any kind of positive approach to the development of Canada's energy resources. The only contribution to serve our energy needs has been with natural wind power. It appears that the energy critic for the Conservative party and his colleagues have nothing to contribute to this very necessary debate, other than to throw wild accusations at the minister and attempt to fool the Canadian people, as they tried under the Crosbie budget, and we know what happened there—they failed.

This government has a plan of action for energy security in this country. It is outlined in the National Energy Program, and the various pieces of energy legislation now before the House will put our plan into action. This is one more sign of our commitment to our 1980 election promises, unlike the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary Centre who said in this House "the Liberals have violated every single promise they made during the 1980 election campaign". That is totally untrue.

Let me say to that hon. member that he has a golden opportunity, not only in this House, but within his party, to take the subject matters of energy and energy legislation before other members of his party in May of this year, discuss them at length and formulate resolutions of all sorts on all aspects of energy policy. I challenge the hon. member for Calgary Centre to go to that Conservative party policy convention in May and put forward resolutions, both on the leadership of his leader and on energy policies, and have them voted on. I challenge the hon. member to do that.

Mr. Andre: I challenge you to the same.

Mr. Dingwall: I would now like to make a few remarks about the petroleum compensation charge. Our pricing system is both realistic and fair. It takes into account the inescapable facts I mentioned earlier, particularly the need to provide an attractive incentive to encourage the development of new oil. Our blended pricing system differentiates between the varying developing costs of different types of oil.

Producers of what is commonly called old oil, oil discovered before December 31, 1980, faced comparatively lower costs than those of new oil producers. Therefore, they will get a price that will rise gradually and predictably at a fixed schedule to no more than 75 per cent of the international price.

Producers of new oil, oil discovered after December 31, 1981, synthetic oil and new frontier production, will get a higher price than that at the world level, but which will never rise above those levels. This price will provide a powerful incentive to producers to develop new oil supplies. These prices will in turn be blended into one made-in-Canada price that will apply in all regions of the country, regardless of what kind of oil is used, whether it is domestic or imported.

The petroleum compensation charge, which forms a major part of the bill before us, is extremely important. The program has played a vital role in protecting Atlantic Canada from the sudden shocks of international oil price increases that have characterized the past ten years. Members of the Conservative party may disagree with some aspects of that piece of legislation, but the bold fact remains, it has protected, and rightly protected, those people in Atlantic Canada.

As we know, all of Atlantic Canada's oil is imported. By compensating refiners for the difference between the international price they pay and the lower domestic price paid by refiners in other parts of Canada who have access to domestic production, the compensation program has provided untold economic benefits for Atlantic Canada.

Since the import compensation program was started by this government in 1974, it has paid out nationally a total of $13.7 billion in compensation. Atlantic Canada compensation to date has amounted to approximately $6.5 billion. This is a huge sum of money, but it is money wisely spent. If the compensation program did not exist, $6.5 billion would have been drained from the economy of Atlantic Canada. Instead, this money has stayed in the pockets of Atlantic Canadians to work for them.

• (2030)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: The Conservative party in all parts of the country has shunned the petroleum compensation charge. It has closed its eyes to the concerns of Atlantic Canadians, and through its chief energy spokesmen has rejected development of offshore resources in my region of the country. I object very strongly to that type of viewpoint, and that type of attitude.

The offshore resources will offer a significant contribution to Canada's energy security and to the economic development and prosperity of Canadians living in Nova Scotia and throughout the Atlantic area. For Nova Scotians, development of offshore energy resources offers a unique opportunity to build the lasting social and economic structures that can help to shape a prosperous future.

The agreement reached between the Government of Canada and the province of Nova Scotia established a strong, co-operative management regime capable of pursuing and harmonizing these energy and development objects in a manner consistent with the interests and responsibilities of each government and of industry, as well as of Nova Scotians and all Canadians.

In Nova Scotia many onshore opportunities will be provided as a result of offshore oil and gas resource activity. These opportunities will include new jobs and training in new skills, new business opportunities for industry and entrepreneurs, and significant new government revenues.

The Government of Canada's pricing and compensation system will play a major role in stimulating oil and natural gas development off the coast of my province. The compensation system will be the mechanism to ensure that producers of new oil in Atlantic Canada receive the new oil reference price for their production. This price will provide producers with returns that are competitive with returns offered anywhere else in the world. As such, the new oil reference price offers a powerful incentive to producers to explore aggressively for new supplies and develop significant new supplies of petroleum.

The petroleum compensation charge will remove an inequity that characterized the previous compensation system. Import compensation used to be funded from the government's general revenues, which were collected from the taxpayers. This meant that the amount of compensation effectively paid by Canadians bore no direct relationship to the amount of oil they consumed. The petroleum compensation charge eliminates this inequity, because it is a charge placed at the refinery level, which is then passed on to the consumers. Therefore, those who consume the most will contribute the most to offsetting the cost of compensation. However, the government will not, in spite of the innuendo of the Conservative Party of Canada, collect more from the petroleum compensation charge than is needed to cover the import subsidization and the new oil reference price supplements I have already mentioned. Mr. Speaker, this is only fair and it is only right.

It was very interesting to hear the Conservative party's energy critic speak in the House on the petroleum compensation charge. On the one hand he tried to have his party under its former leader, Mr. Stanfield, take credit for this program to assist Canadians using imported oil. On the other hand he blamed the government today for assisting Atlantic Canadians through the same program. So typical of the Conservative members, to speak out of both sides of their mouth, to give one position in one part of the country and yet give another position in another. You have to wonder who is fueling the separatist causes, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: How about the Minister of Energy?

Mr. Dingwall: With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, may I deal for a few minutes with a major concern regarding shut-in oil.

An hon. Member: You're speaking out of both sides of your mouth.

Mr. Dingwall: Lately, there has been serious concern in western Canada that the oil import compensation program unintentionally encourages refiners to buy crude on the world spot market, resulting in large shut-ins of domestic light and heavy oil. The argument is that the combination of soft international prices and the compensation paid to refiners using imported oil has effectively subsidized the price of international oil below the price of domestic consumption, resulting in a surge of imports and reduced utilization of domestic crude oil.

Although there have been calls for a major restructuring of our import compensation program, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has stated he does not believe it is an important cause of the shut-in situation. Nor is he convinced that a change to the flat rate system of compensation would resolve the problem. Furthermore, current information does not indicate that there has been any surge in heavy or light crude imports. The compensation rates are reviewed regularly and adjusted to take into account fluctuations in the difference between the domestice price and the world price.

This situation has been discussed with the government of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the minister has issued a statement on measures the government is prepared to take. They include reducing the oil export charge on heavy oil exports to the United States; providing longer term export licences to improve heavy oil marketability; ensuring that heavy oil exports are competitively priced; and asking the National Energy Board to make several important adjustments in its export regulations.

The minister has also made it clear to refiners in Quebec and Atlantic Canada that low-cost spot market oil should not be imported if this reduces the use of Canadian crude oil. He has asked them to limit imports of crude to minimum levels allowed under current contracts and, when renewing contracts, to take into account the likely availability of domestic crude, and to establish import volumes accordingly.

These are the steps, Mr. Speaker, the government is prepared to take at this time. However, our officials will continue to monitor the situation with provincial officials. If these measures do not produce the results we expect, the minister has indicated the Government of Canada is prepared to take further action.

Who are Canada's producers of oil and gas, Mr. Speaker? As of today, 65.5 per cent of all oil and gas production revenues accrue to foreigners, a figure not likely matched anywhere in the world, let alone in the developed world. Most of the largest oil and gas producers in Canada are foreign-owned and controlled. Before the introduction of the National Energy Program there was concern that with the development of expensive and technically difficult offshore and tar sands projects, the degree of foreign control would worsen. What national government, responsible for the well-being of all its citizens, could allow such a situation to continue?

The Canadian ownership special charge is the mechanism that will allow the government to participate more vigorously on behalf of all Canadians in the oil and gas industry. Certainly, this is not the sum total of our Canadianization program. In fact, the greater part of the program is designed to encourage the growth of Canadian private sector involvement in the industry.

The public sector role has been played with extraordinary success by Petro-Canada, the national oil company created by our government in 1976. I will not dwell at length about its achievements, because that is a subject matter for debate on another bill. Suffice to say, however, that since its inception in 1976 Petro-Canada has been the driving force behind 76 of the 128 wells that were drilled in the frontier regions. It was the first large Canadian landholder in the eastern offshore, the first Canadian-owned and controlled operator there, and has been a major participant in every major oil and gas field off the east coast. In its role as head of the Labrador project it is encouraging Canadian companies to get involved in east coast drilling. Despite the claims of some of the more extreme energy spokesmen, Petro-Canada's success rate for discovering oil and natural gas has been every bit as good as that of most companies, and better than many.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it is very easy for members of the official opposition to criticize and tear down; to allow innuendo to circulate throughout the country; to say one thing in one part of Canada and to say another in a different region, but it is another thing to confront very serious issues, to provide an alternative, a commitment, and an answer to those wrongs, those inequities, and those inequalities. That is what we have attempted to do with the National Energy Program. This bill is part of this package and will implement a program which, I believe, is in the best interests of all the regions and all the people of Canada. I therefore urge all members of the House to support the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. It is not my intention to answer all the statements made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. It would take too long to straighten him out. I think he should find some technique other then the over worked strawman technique, where he says that the opposition stands for such and such a thing—although that is not so—and then tears apart the argument. That is a useful debating technique from time to time but, if it is used all the time, credibility suffers.

I should like to straighten the hon. member out on one particular point, and that is the import subsidy. It was the hon. Robert Stanfield who said in November, 1973, that we need a one-price system in this country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that it could not be done; this is reported in Hansard. A month later he found out that he could, and needed to do just that. I would remind the House that it was the Hon. Robert Stanfield who put forward the one-price system for which the hon. member is now taking credit.

The hon. member has told us not to worry, that the petroleum compensation charge will only be collected in amounts sufficient to pay for import compensation. I would ask him to examine the remarks made by the Hon. Donald Macdonald when he was minister of energy and imposed the export charge on crude oil. The funds were to be devoted to providing import compensation; to subsidize imports, so we would have a one-price system in Canada. Where are those funds today, Mr. Speaker? They go into general revenues.

In the budget of September, 1975, the Hon. John Turner imposed a seven cents per gallon excise tax on gasoline and told us that the money would go toward import compensation only. Where is that money going today? It goes into general revenues. It has disappeared. Now we have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and his parliamentary secretary, telling us not to worry, that the petroleum compensation charge is going toward import compensation. When two former ministers of the Liberal government made similar statements and their intentions have not been carried out, why should we take at face value the statement of the present minister?

My friend, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) tells us that if you are lied to once, the liar is at fault; if you get lied to twice then you are at fault. If you are lied to three times, then you are even more at fault. We just do not believe the minister, and we have good reason for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PIPELINES—DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF TQM NATURAL GAS PIPELINE. (B) PRICE GUARANTEE

Hon. Robert J. Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my question on April 20 to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was to ascertain when natural gas will be delivered by pipeline to the maritimes, and what the government is going to do to ensure that it will be a competitive energy form.

The minister indicated that the price to the consumer in the maritimes will be maintained at the same level as the price in Toronto. I would like the minister to give the House an indication of what the Toronto city gate price, generally speaking, will be in relation to other energy forms. Can it fluctuate widely after the expiration of the Ottawa-Alberta energy agreement in 1986 or 1987, and are any safeguards built in with respect to the price change which might take place at that time? Is the minister satisfied that the price of natural gas will compete with oil or electricity in the maritimes, and, for industrial users, will natural gas be able to compete with heavy fuel oils? I would appreciate it if the minister would elaborate on what the government is prepared to do to make natural gas competitive with electricity and oil? If the cost of the pipeline exceeds expectations will it be subsidized?

Finally, is it the policy of the government to use local workers, suppliers and trades people whenever possible, and thereby use this pipeline as a development tool in the Atlantic provinces?

In conclusion, will the minister confirm whether or not there is provision for mandatory review of the pipeline project by the National Energy Board once it is completed to Quebec City, and what if anything is the significance of this provision? I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the parliamentary secretary, for coming here tonight to respond to my question.

• (2210)

Mr. David Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on many occasions the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has stated that the extension of the natural gas distribution system to the maritimes is one of the top priorities of the federal government as it is committed to the reduction of oil dependence in the Atlantic region and it believes that a gas pipeline affords one of the best approaches to this objective.

With specific regard to the price of natural gas to maritime consumers, I might direct hon. members to the National Energy Program report. There it is clearly stated:

> The gas prices in the National Energy Program should provide a basis for commercial viability of the line and associated distribution systems. The pricing system should establish prices at the city gate in Halifax at the same level as those in southern Ontario and Québec.

On January 13, 1982 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources issued a policy statement on natural gas pricing subsequent to the September 1, 1981 Canada-Alberta agreement on energy pricing and taxation and the National Energy Board's recommendations on developmental prices.

This January policy announcement stated in part that for the purpose of pricing, the existing TransCanada pipelines eastern zone will be extended to include the areas of Quebec and the maritimes which will be served by the trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline. City gate prices in markets east of Toronto will be the same as the Toronto city gate price for the same type of gas service. It stated also that to encourage rapid expansion and build-up of new natural gas markets in Quebec and the maritimes, beginning November 1, 1982 developmental prices will be prescribed.

With regard to this second point, the energy minister has stated that this pricing regime, which will be implemented on November 1, 1982, will provide distributors with a limited holiday from payment of certain transmission costs, thereby encouraging eligible distributors to expand gas markets in Quebec and the maritimes quickly and aggressively.

Last month the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced the implementation of the distribution system expansion program, another major off-oil initiative under the National Energy Program.

In summary it can be noted that the government has implemented a number of measures to ensure the viability of natural gas marketing into the maritimes. The Toronto price zone is to be extended through to the east coast so that consumers in the maritimes will have access to gas at prices comparable with consumers in Ontario who, in turn, will get their natural gas supplies at a price equivalent to 65 per cent of the oil price. The developmental price will provide an additional incentive for new customers. The distribution system expansion program will assist distributors in financing facilities into new marketing areas. And the Canada oil substitution program will provide the home owner with a significant part of the cost of converting his oil heating unit to natural gas.

All of these measures are directed toward energy supply security for maritimers at prices on a par with those throughout the rest of Canada.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE—(A) APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE. (B) REQUEST FOR VERIFICATION OF RUMOUR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my concern tonight arises from a question I asked last Wednesday of the chairman of the House committee on finance, and economic affairs. I asked a question with respect to the attendance of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) at finance committee hearings. At that time I wanted a commitment from the chairman that the minister would appear on April 29 and April 30 and once more in the first week of May.

It appears that, as a result of a steering committee hearing tonight, the minister will appear on April 29 and April 30 but he will not make any commitment with respect to May at all. He wants to continue his practice of being "absent Allan".

We have a committee system in this House whereby ministers are required to appear before committees to justify their estimates. The minister in this Parliament, that is this Parliament commencing as a result of the February, 1980 election, has appeared before the committee to justify his estimates once. That was December 4, 1980 when he appeared on supplementary estimates B for an hour and a half.

The minister has done everything in his power to avoid his estimates or his department being scrutinized, and to ensure that he never has to answer, or say what his policy is, or justify a thing to the committee. If other ministers acted in the same manner as this minister, the committee system would totally break down. I understand the position of the minister, that the committee system is not worth much the way it is organized. We certainly need a change in the system, but no system can work if the minister refuses, with one excuse after another, to appear.

The minister was supposed to appear before committee on April 20. He promised to be there on that date. But, just before the meeting, he found a reason to go to Toronto, it was alleged, to inquire of businessmen concerning his iniquitous budget of November 12. There were no meetings with businessmen on April 20. The minister ducked the committee, as he has been ducking the people of Canada. He is a duck of a minister. He is a minister who refuses to account, refuses to explain, refuses to come clean. He files green papers with respect to disclosure and how the budget should be forthcoming. He files other documents in the House but refuses to come to committee and refuses to explain his position.

He is a minister who would like to remain silent. He likes to have his selected few around him so that he can make a press release and say things, such as he said in the House on December 18, that he would take certain questions on the budget to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. But he never bothered making a reference because he knew there were hon. members on this side of the House who would ask some pretty penetrating questions. The Minister of Finance does not want to explain, does not want to come clean; he wants to hide.

We expect him to appear before the committee on April 29 and April 30. We expect him to come forth the first week in May. Unless we see that, we will have to take action in the House other than the action I have taken tonight.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) are totally incorrect. Far from ducking his responsibilities, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) offered an alternative date to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs as soon as it became apparent that he would have to postpone his appearance before the committee on the main estimates because of his commitments in another city. Indeed, the minister responded favourably to the committee's suggestion that he appear twice. Prior to the hon. member's question in the House, he conveyed to the committee his agreement to appear on April 29 and April 30, 1982. Contrary to the implication in the statement of the hon. member for Mississauga South, the minister has not refused to appear before the committee with respect to his policy, but has appeared when asked. He recently testified before the committee on Bill C-97 to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

As has already been indicated, the minister went to Toronto on the evening of April 20 because he and other ministers were to meet early the next day with representatives of the business community. In fact, there were two meetings, morning and afternoon discussions, with a total of some 40 private sector representatives. The Toronto meetings were the eighth, and ninth in an ongoing set of consultations on the economy with representatives of the private sector.

The Minister of Finance and other participating ministers have found that these meetings provided an excellent opportunity for an exchange of views with the private sector on the current economic situation. The meetings have covered the difficulties encountered due to the current recession and inflation, with consequential high interest rates. The discussions dealt with how to tackle these problems, with support being given to the broad direction of the current stance on monetary and fiscal policy. If is the government's intention, of course, to continue with consultations on economic matters in the weeks and months ahead.

This commitment to consultation on economic development matters was set out in the budget paper entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", as well as being reiterated at meetings currently being held. Additional evidence of the government's intentions in this regard has been provided through the just recently published green paper on the budget process.

I repeat that the remarks made by the hon. member for Mississauga South are totally incorrect and, at best, despicable.

AGRICULTURE—BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST PAYMENTS NOT BE LINKED WITH SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the beef producers of Canada have been going through a very strenuous economic time in the last several months. It was my hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would perhaps have stayed tonight to give some answers to some very pertinent questions. Instead, he has left the parliamentary secretary, who is an hon. gentleman, to answer the questions. I presume I will probably get nothing more than a canned speech.

The beef producers in western Canada are very disturbed. The minister promised eight or nine weeks ago that he would be making an announcement within two or three weeks. He made the same statement four or five weeks ago in Calgary.

On April 2, I attempted to get an announcement from the minister as to what government policy was with regard to stabilization payments and what his plans were. The minister stated that he believed he would make a statement in three weeks. That was on April 2, which is three weeks and three days ago. Although the minister has had three weeks, plus three days of grace, we still do not seem to be receiving any answers. Calls are still coming in every day.

The minister has confirmed that the stabilization pay-out has no connection whatsoever to the apparent proposals the minister has in mind for the beef industry. Therefore, there is no reason whatsoever for the minister to withhold any announcement on the pay-out. Furthermore, after he makes the announcement, I presume he will have to go to Cabinet to get approval.

The minister has the industry in a real quandary. Prior to the end of last year, he sent out a questionnaire. It turned out to be a fiasco. The questionnaire was delivered to only 87,000 beef producers; we recognize that the dairy industry contributes approximately 15 per cent to the beef industry. Nevertheless, he sent the questionnaire to only 15,000 dairymen. According to the 1976 census, there are 165,000 beef producers in Canada. This means that a great number of beef producers were overlooked entirely by this questionnaire. This certainly left a question in the minds of beef producers in my province where there are 47,000. Some of them did not receive a questionnaire, while others received two or three. This was nothing short of a farce. Of course, some of the feedlots where large numbers of beef are produced were overlooked entirely. Why has the minister not released the figures on his questionnaire, incorrect as they may be?

I also understand that he conducted a private poll of his own; there has been no answer to that. Why has he not given us those figures? Why has he not released the Anderson-Vandermeulen report? Why has he not agreed to work with the cattlemen and the industry on future programs? He should take them into his confidence and negotiate a plan with them.

Why does the minister have such a mistrust of Canadian cattlemen? Why does he not accept any of the new proposals that beef producers make? The main question which must be asked is, why; why does he not give cattlemen some answers? They are becoming very disturbed and time is running out.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) will nonetheless accept a reply from the Parliamentary Secretary, considering that the minister has had to leave the House to attend to other business.

The 1981 beef sales stabilization year ended on December 31, 1981. Provisional estimates indicate that no payment is required at the 90 per cent statutory level provided for under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The market price for beef sold in 1981, valued at $75.03 per hundredweight, is lower than the price established in 1980, that is, $74.37 per hundredweight. In figuring out the support price, the following elements must be included in the cash costs of production: feed grains, feeder calves, interest on operating capital, and other costs related to veterinary services, public services, insurance, hired labour, litter, and repairs to buildings and equipment.

In 1981, the cost of feed increased 20 per cent because of high prices for grain, interest rates increased 14 per cent and miscellaneous costs, 9 per cent. However, the price of feeder calves, the most important factor for feed lot operators, dropped 7 per cent in 1981, compared with 1980. The drop in price was sufficient to compensate for increases in the cash cost of other aspects of production. As a result, preliminary figures indicate that cash costs for raising slaughter cattle in 1981 are similar to those in 1980.

As the minister indicated in the House on April 2, he met with representatives of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association on February 26, 1982, to discuss possibilities for assistance under the Act. Although final figures were not available at that time, the representatives realized that assistance at the 90 per cent level was not justified, and that is why they subsequently requested assistance at the 95 per cent level.

Market prices have remained more or less unchanged during the last three years: $76.44 per cwt in 1979, $76.37 in 1980 and $75.03 in 1981, thus causing producers to exhaust their reserves in order to survive during this difficult period. The minister and his colleagues are examining the feasibility of offering support payments for cattle sold in 1981, and an announcement will be made shortly in this respect. Mr. Speaker, I may conclude by saying that the minister has always worked in close co-operation with Canadian beef producer associations across the country, and I believe he will continue to do so in the best interests of cattlemen in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

The House adjourned at 10.28 p.m., without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EMPLOYMENT OF VIETNAMESE IN SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Reports are circulating that Vietnamese workers have been sent to work at industrial compounds south of Moscow as a means of covering a deficit in the Hanoi government's foreign currency reserves and Canadian government officials estimate that as many as 500,000 individuals may be involved in this manpower transaction. In view of the fact that they cannot obtain any information from the Soviet Union which would dispel these reports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House deplore such blatant disrespect for human rights, demand that both the Moscow and Hanoi governments cease this practice of slave labour, and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to refer this matter immediately to the International Labour Organization and Human Rights Commission of the United Nations for an investigation to ensure that human rights are upheld and the dignity of the person is respected.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

IMPORT QUOTAS AFFECTING SHOE MANUFACTURING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canadian leather shoe manufacturing industry has been thrown to the wolves by the government's lifting of its protection just when the industry was reaching a healthy stage of modernization and competitiveness. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the minister admit he made a mistake and announce a change in the shoe quotas so that some of the thousands laid off from the Canadian shoe industry can get back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

MISREPRESENTATION OF INUIT POSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that on April 18, 1982, the Toronto Star stated that the Inuit had boycotted the patriation ceremony on Parliament Hill, and in its April 26 issue Maclean's magazine declared that the native people, including the Inuit, were "strikingly" absent from the patriation ceremony because they felt betrayed by the new Constitution, and given the fact that the Inuit were very much in attendance as an indication of our ongoing commitment to the patriation process, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen):

That this House reprimand the Toronto Star and Maclean's magazine for their careless reporting and irresponsible misrepresentation of the Inuit position on the Constitution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—NEGOTIATIONS OVER EXPROPRIATED LANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Communications, together with the hon. member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd), have been avoiding and delaying discussions with farmers about the surplus land surrounding the Mirabel airport, in spite of the fact that the farmers came to Ottawa to present their cheque for rent arrears in return for an opportunity to discuss and negotiate the repurchase of expropriated lands. I move, seconded by the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Minister of Public Works contact the president of the Union of Agricultural Producers and the president of the Community for Information and Action Committee, accept their cheque for $105,000 and start negotiations concerning these lands to permit the expropriated farmers to live in their own homes, not in homes owned by the state.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE ELECTION VICTORY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the maturity and wisdom of the Saskatchewan electorate are to be congratulated for demonstrating to all Canadians that individual voters control government and not the other way around, and whereas the political universe is now unfolding as it should, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That this House sincerely congratulate Mr. Grant Devine and the people of Saskatchewan for achieving a well deserved victory yesterday and that we extend to Mr. Devine and his colleagues our heartfelt best wishes for a successful term of office.

"Happy Days are here again,
Saskatchewan has turned blue again.
Look out you Grits and NDP.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL AND NDP RELATIONSHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in 1967-68 when the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power, the Liberals were a free enterprise party and the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and the NDP were the socialists of Canada. During the years, the Prime Minister and the leader of the NDP and their parties have cuddled up to each other. They embraced when the Prime Minister proposed unilateral patriation of the Constitution, and got right into bed with each other to keep property rights out of the Charter, and they have been existing common-law ever since. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House deplores this shacking up by the Liberals and the NDP in a totalitarian brothel—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for St. John's West.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

LIBERAL VOTE IN SASKATCHEWAN ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and in view of the results of the Saskatchewan election yesterday, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House congratulates the Saskatchewan Liberal Party on achieving 5 per cent of the votes cast, despite the prime ministerial albatross hanging about the necks of all Liberals in Canada, and notes the wisdom of their not having the Prime Minister present in the province during that election, particularly when this House compares those results with the results achieved by the NDP in Newfoundland who were more broadly bent on April 6 by gaining only 3.7 per cent of the votes cast despite or because of the campaign presence of the MP for Oshawa, and that this House requests the Prime Minister to announce who will have priority in future Saskatchewan judicial, senatorial or more elevated appointments between those 64 defeated candidates of the Liberal Party or the 57 defeated members of the NDP of Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—RECAPTURE OF SOUTH GEORGIA BY BRITISH FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House convey to the British government an expression of our approval for the manner in which the Royal naval task force, including the Royal Marines, carried out their operation in South Georgia last weekend with a minimum of bloodshed and casualties, thereby restoring the situation in that area that existed prior to the Argentinian aggression in the south Atlantic.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

LICENSING OF PAY-TV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This morning the Canadian Council of the Arts appealed to cabinet to send the issue of Pay-TV licensing back the CRTC for reconsideration on the grounds that the fragmented, multi-licence system okayed by the CRTC will restrict the amount of money which will be made available to Canadian film producers and will result in the loss of this great opportunity to raise our film production standards through the generation of Pay-TV revenues. Since the appeal of the CCA also points out the government's failure to provide the CRTC with any policy direction concerning this new revolutionary television service, which is the major reason we have this problem in the first place, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the government now accept its responsibility for the licensing of this inappropriate system, and that it send the Pay-TV question back to the CRTC, this time with the concrete policy directives that it should have given to the commission in the first place.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CABINET MEETING AT MEACH LAKE, P.Q.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Could the minister advise the House if, when he and his colleagues who were sunning themselves at the Meach Lake resort last weekend, they had any meaningful discussions, or whether the report on that conference given by the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice that Canadians will just have to hang in with unemployment, high interest, high taxes and more government, was correct? Were there any meaningful discussions and would the minister report same to the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that discussions among members of the government are normally kept confidential. The cabinet never meets without taking part in meaningful discussions.

SITUATION IN CANADA VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, that being the case, would the minister confirm the statement made by the Minister of State for Small Business, as reported in Montreal recently, "We are fearful that if there is a recovery in the United States we would not be able to join the band wagon"? Is it the government's view that the depression that he and his colleagues have caused in Canada is so entrenched that we are not capable of responding to any recovery in the United States?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I noticed the comments made by the minister and I must say that his observations are very valid. I believe that the point he had in mind concerned the difference in cost and price performance between Canada and the United States.

If there is a recovery, and we have not succeeded in making progress in reducing inflation in the meantime, then our non-competitiveness in other markets will, of course, prevent us from participating or would affect our ability to participate fully in any recovery that would take place. That is why I am constantly making the point that in order to get more jobs, achieve better incomes, and to sell more abroad, we have to pay much attention to costs and prices in our own Canadian economy.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister correctly pointed out that our inflation rate last month was about 15 per cent on a monthly basis and the Americans had no inflation—as a matter of fact, negative inflation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, since the minister has been travelling around the country meeting businessmen, does he find the same situation as reported in the Toronto Star, where 55 per cent believe that the Canadian dollar is overpriced, and 60 per cent believe that profits and investments are going down? Does the minister have a new plan for recovery, or must we wait for fall to have a new budget and a new economic statement? Has the government abandoned 1982 and decided it will have to try again in 1983?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker; we are putting forward policy options all the time in an effort to meet the problems of the economy. We have not decided, like the Conservative Party, to defer the presentation of policy options until close to the next election.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who has now told the House that he has no alternative but to remain inept, inactive and incompetent. His destructive policies make Attila the Hun look like an amateur.

If the government can intervene in the economy to choke off investment, strangle the energy industry and force Canadians out of their homes, jobs and businesses, why can the government not intervene in a more positive way? Why is he so unwilling to introduce budget measures which will reduce expenditures, bring down interest rates and restore incentives for growth and for jobs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member decides to ask some non-rhetorical questions, I will attempt to answer them. But if she continues to fill her questions with all kinds of personal references and political rhetoric, then I see no point in dealing with them.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF GROWTH PROGRAMS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. May I remind him that we hear from Canadians who tell us that the hardest thing they have ever done has been to lay off their employees, who tell us that their families are separated because they cannot cope with economic conditions, and who say they are fifth generation Canadians who are closing the doors of businesses started in this country by pioneers. I hope that is specific enough for the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: When will the minister show Canadians leadership? When will he help to restore confidence in the Canadian economy? When will he bring in new incentives and new programs for growth?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to tell the hon. member that at the present time the government is following a policy which is attempting to meet the main requirements of the Canadian economy. It is very easy, as hon. members of the opposition do every day, to get up and ask for new programs, as the hon. member has done today, and new incentives, and new expenditures. That is one face, one side of the double face on the opposition side. Then other hon. members will get up the following day to ask for measures to reduce inflation, to cut the deficit, and to take all sorts of steps in the direction of restraint.

May I depart from normal custom and ask the hon. member a rhetorical question? When will the Conservative Party get together and decide what its economic policy is in the country at the present time?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Just remember what happened to Blakeney: You guys are next.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I would like to answer the question of the Minister of Finance. The Conservative Party is ready to take our economic policies to the voters at any time, as we did in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—INQUIRY WHETHER FAVOURABLE GOVERNMENT DECISION WILL BE MADE THIS WEEK

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, once more, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the subject of the footwear industry.

I was informed today that the minister had personally received some very interesting comments from the Shoe Manufacturers Association and union members to the effect that the minister's procrastination would be fatal to the industry, and surely the minister realizes that delaying an urgently needed decision will also delay the industry's recovery during the next 12 months. Could the minister tell the House, in the light of the questions I put to him yesterday, whether he intends to announce a favourable decision this week?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, any decision based on our views of the information we have received from the industry will be a cabinet decision. I am therefore not in a position to indicate to my hon. friend that we shall be able to make an announcement this week. However, we feel this is a very important matter, and that is why the cabinet is giving very serious consideration to the latest information it has received.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker.

The minister said, if I understood correctly, that the question is now in cabinet but that no decision has been made. Since the industry provided employment for 30,000 workers in 1974, and those figures dropped to 14,500 in 1982; considering that many Liberals and opposition members, especially from Ontario and Quebec, because 50 per cent and 46 per cent, respectively, of the workers in these two provinces are affected, and that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Resources has admitted that he supports the request made by the footwear industry, is there sufficient pressure on the minister and does the minister have sufficient information to be able to make a decision and at least tell the House today, when, if not this week, the decision will be announced, before it is too late for this industry, which is simply asking for some of the fairness so widely touted by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, the matter is being reviewed at the cabinet level, and we intend to announce the results of this review as soon as possible.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SALVADORAN JOURNALIST VICTOR REGALADO—INQUIRY WHETHER SECURITY CERTIFICATE WILL BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In releasing the Salvadoran journalist, Victor Regalado, after nine weeks' imprisonment, the immigration adjudicator implicitly accused the minister of having jailed the journalist without sufficient reason.

In response to this accusation, the minister published a press release containing malicious and entirely false allegations regarding Mr. Regalado.

Would the minister now be willing to withdraw the security certificate issued under Section 39 of the Immigration Act, a section that contravenes this country's basic principles of justice, since the certificate was clearly based on false information and lies?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is not justified in characterizing the grounds I put forward to justify the certificate as being complete lies. There are real grounds on which I did it. If the evidence cannot be made public, it is for the very reason that Parliament provided Section 39 of the Immigration Act, recognizing circumstances in which it would not be in the national interest to make grounds public for decisions that had to be taken in the public interest.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, once again we see that the Solicitor General is no more than a dummy for the RCMP Security Service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The lawyers for Victor Regalado have urged the minister to suspend all deportation proceedings against Regalado for a period of at least one year to give him an opportunity to demonstrate clearly that the information obtained by the RCMP from the CIA and elsewhere is a tissue of lies. Will the minister agree to this very reasonable demand, or will he at the very least assure the House that Regalado will not be deported to any Latin American dictatorship in which his branding as a security risk in Canada will effectively be his death warrant?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that that step has already been taken. I indicated six or seven weeks ago that, in the case of Regalado, the fact that he was granted refugee status meant that we would not ask that he be returned to his country of origin, but that he would have an opportunity to find a third country. We have given him that choice and offer. It is up to him to take advantage of it whenever he wants. I think we are being as reasonable as we can possibly be.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LOSS OF JOBS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. One of the major contributors to the record unemployment level in Canada, as the minister knows, is the Canadian auto industry, as a result of the government's lack of policies. It is presently operating in a vacuum. As the minister knows, 30 per cent of the assemblers in Canada are unemployed. Nearly 40 per cent of the auto parts manufacturers are unemployed as well. Will the minister tell us whether this very important matter was raised at Meach Lake this past weekend? If not, why not, considering the very important consequences it has on the economy as a whole? If it was, can the minister and his government now tell the industry, which has to know, what specific policies and positions he is prepared to take before further jobs are lost in that very important sector of our economy?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, while I cannot talk about subjects raised in discussions between ministers, I can confirm that the policy regarding the auto industry remains among our priority concerns and considerations.

I reject completely the premise of my hon. friend about lack of policy. Our policy has been to strengthen opportunities for further production and increases of activity in the industry, as exemplified by our arrangements with Chrysler and Ford, our special auto parts fund, and our arrangements with Volkswagen to have major activities here with 85 per cent Canadian content. Certainly this approach of expanding production, and strengthening opportunities for production and employment will continue to be at the forefront of our concerns and considerations for this very key industry.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, if that is the policy of the government, I suggest that ministers change it because that policy has contributed to 50,000 unemployed in that sector alone.

Oral Questions

NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPANESE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of State for International Trade. As he knows, he has failed in every part as far as negotiations with the Japanese and the Japanese auto industry are concerned. The result, of course, is further unemployment in Canada. Next month he will be meeting in Paris with his counterpart from Japan. Has he received a mandate from his cabinet regarding the negotiations with his Japanese counterpart? If so, what positive steps is he prepared to take, without delaying the situation any further; and does that mandate include Canadian content regulations?

• (1430)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is fully aware of the representations that I made on behalf of our government to my counterpart when I was in Japan six weeks ago. Negotiations are ongoing at the official level. As I said to the hon. member on previous occasions, he will be one of the first to know if and when we receive the positive results to these negotiations.

BANKS AND BANKING

FINANCING OF ENERGY PROJECTS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the past the minister has expressed concern at the pressure the Canadianization program has caused our financial system and our balance of payments. Is he satisfied that the Canadian chartered banks are in a position to finance further Canadianization and the energy projects necessary for energy self-sufficiency?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member correctly recalls that I was concerned last summer at the impact of financing by the banks of take-overs which particularly flow through the exchange markets. As a result of consultations with the banks, there was a conclusion that such take-overs generally would not be financed through the banks. To the best of my knowledge, the understanding reached at that time has been observed in the main. I have not had evidence of major take-overs since that time.

INTERNATIONAL COMMITMENTS OF CANADIAN BANKS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, in light of the present global conditions of banks and world credit, is the Minister of Finance satisfied that Canadian banks are not disproportionately extended or over-exposed in their international lendings?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have kept in close touch with the Inspector General of Banks and I have no reason to believe that any of the banks operating within the Canadian banking system are not in a viable position. I believe that each of them is viable, in the circumstances.

HEALTH

OPHTHALMOLOGICAL SERVICES IN NORTHWEST BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, regarding the same medical principle that I raised yesterday, which is always to err on the side of caution. I wrote on November 3, 1981, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, regarding allegations that an ophthalmologist examined 16 children in 17 minutes at a school in my constituency. On December 11, 1981, the minister wrote back to me and said the following:

'. . . being the only resident eye specialist in northwest British Columbia he extends his services to the people of that area by visiting all cities, towns and villages in accordance with his schedule.

It is our understanding that his primary interest is limited to detection and treatment of the eye diseases amongst the entire population of northwest British Columbia.'

Perhaps the minister could explain to this House how it is possible for one physician to detect and treat eye disease amongst 80,000 Canadians, and whether in her view a physician's schedule is sufficient grounds to allow 16 children to be examined in 17 minutes?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would have liked to have received notice of this question, because of its scientific dimension. I do not like that we play games, such as the one the member played yesterday. I often observe that he links—to serve his ideology—facts that are unrelated. Yesterday he said, in relation to the spraying of Agent Orange at Gagetown, New Brunswick, that we investigated people outside the military camp.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Miss Bégin: We did that deliberately. We took a broader context, to analyse all the human beings who live there. If he makes another false assertion like this today, I would prefer to receive notice. That seems to me to be elementary common sense. Then I can give the exact answer, because of the scientific components.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXAMINATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I do not think that answer will instil much confidence across Canada. On the same occasion last year, the same doctor examined over 100 native Canadians in less than an hour. Now, that is not a scientific quibble that I am taking up with the minister. That is over 100 native patients in less than an hour. That same doctor then spent the same amount of time transferring the medical numbers for his records. It may be appropriate for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to quibble with my facts, but she has had five and one half months to look into this, and she has done nothing. It may be in the interest of her Social Credit or Conservative colleagues to do something. I wonder if she would tell this House just one thing, whether or not in her view 35 seconds is an appropriate amount of time for an ophthalmologist to look at a native patient's eyes.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I repeat to the member that I do not know the answer to that question. I have to go and check the facts. I cannot act like him and do away with the facts. Yesterday he also said that—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Miss Bégin: Yesterday he also said that outside—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: Write a letter. Send it to the newspapers.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, there are really only two principles involved on which I would like the minister to comment. One is that it is pretty clear that the doctor is grossly ripping off the medical system in Canada. The second is that native Canadians are not getting proper health care. My final supplementary is this. The physician in question, as the minister knows, is Dr. W. Jory, the President of the British Columbia Medical Association. That may be why the minister has waited five months and has done nothing. Would she tell us what she is going to do, and when?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, if one wants to have principles, I suppose they are much stronger if you have the basic knowledge behind them in the first place. I said I was going to look into the facts, and this is what I am going to do. The hon. member will have to wait because he forgot to use elementary common sense and give me notice of the question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF DIEPPE RAID—REQUEST FOR INCREASED BASIC PENSION

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I must say in passing that I was very pleased yesterday to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asking a question and doing it so beautifully. I can assure the Minister of Veterans Affairs that if he were asking this question, he would be a lot tougher.

In any event, this year is the fortieth anniversary of the Dieppe Raid. I know that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has met with the President of the Dieppe Veterans Prisoners of War Association and I know the representations they made. Will the minister give some consideration to increasing the amount of the basic pension for the Dieppe POWs?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is true, I did meet with the President of the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association. As the hon. member realizes, the question of the level of compensation for prisoners of war was the subject of the Hermann Report published in 1973. In accordance with that report, four levels of compensation were established for various prisoners of war, depending on the length of time they were imprisoned as well as the foreign power involved. As I said, I met with the president of the association and, as a result, I am prepared to give consideration to a review of the levels of pension that have been given to this group.

INCOME TAX

SEIZURE OF WINNIPEG COUPLE'S LIFE SAVINGS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, if I may. Is the minister aware of the situation in Winnipeg concerning a Kenneth and Victoria Hayes? Revenue Canada tax collectors, have seized all their life savings which amount to $116,000, and are demanding another $84,000 on top of that. They have done all this in a very short period of time and under circumstances, Madam Speaker, which are highly questionable, to say the least.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I want him to know, first of all, that I share his concern about this particular case. As he can appreciate, it is difficult for me to talk about the details of any case in Parliament and public even if I had the legal authority to do so. I have asked for a complete investigation into this case. I can assure him that I intend, first of all, to see that these people are treated entirely fairly under the law. I would further say to him that if he, or other members connected with this particular case, would like to sit down with me privately, I will be glad to go into further details with them.

• (1440)

DEPARTMENTAL POWERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it is a common practice for deputy ministers or senior officials in his department to act in this way, apparently without any concern for the people involved. I think this can rightly and objectively be said to be what happened in this case. These are almost Gestapo-like tactics that the people involved used on this Winnipeg couple. It is totally unfair. I should like to ask the minister whether this has happened very often. Does the department literally have the power to move in and seize records and bank statements as officials have done in this particular case?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the department does have the power to do that, but I believe that the law should be applied with sensitivity. In this particular case I intend to see that it is applied with sensitivity. I do not know all the facts of the case and I do not think it would be proper for me to discuss them here, if I did. However, if the hon. member would like to discuss this with me further I would be glad to do that in order that he and I may both be assured that fairness was done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT ON SAINT PIERRE AND MIQUELON ISLANDS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will realize that negotiations have been proceeding between France and Canada on the question of the boundaries between France and Canada surrounding Saint Pierre and Miquelon, which are most important for fishery items and mineral resources on the continental shelf, for some 11 years now.

Is it correct that a treaty was signed between France and Canada on May 26, 1972, by the ambassadors of the two countries, wherein the then Government of Canada agreed to a major and large area going to France with respect to the continental shelf off the south coast of Newfoundland? Was it also agreed that in a further large area France would have the right to decide what oil companies would have the rights to explore and develop, and where oil would go from that area if it was discovered there? Is that correct? If it is, and I am informed that it is, will the minister table or make public that agreement? Is that the reason we have not got anywhere in our negotiations with France in the past nine years, and is the government now afraid to push the matter, having conceded so much in the agreement of May 26, 1972?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the agreement to which my hon. friend refers. To the best of my knowledge the only agreements we have had with France have been with respect to fishing rights in the region and with respect to the delineation of the boundary on the landward side of Saint Pierre and Newfoundland, between those islands and Newfoundland, where the water boundary has been agreed upon. The matter was raised at the meeting here with Premier Mauroy. It was also raised by Foreign Minister Cheysson in my talks with him. We agreed that we should proceed as quickly as possible with an attempt to delineate the boundaries of those islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Canadian position is that we accept the territorial sea for those islands but not the kind of economic zone which France is claiming for them.

With reference to the claim that these negotiations have been going on for eleven years, I would point out that it was only in 1976 that both Canada and France claimed the extended economic zones which gave rise to the problem, so even the problem itself, let alone the negotiations, has existed for only half the time that the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister to do some home work. I can assure him that there was such an agreement signed by the ambassadors.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Does he realize that in the arbitration case between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and the French Republic on the delimitation of their continental shelf that the International Court of Justice accepted that document as an agreement between France and Canada on the continental shelf?

Assuming that the minister will do his home work, would he then report to the House and make public this agreement? Would he also advise the House or the public what we are now claiming and exactly where the matter stands? Why did the Government of Canada betray east coast Canadians and the whole of Canada by signing such an agreement in May, 1972, without disclosing it to the world, and why did it keep it secret until this time?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, any betrayal is in the mind of the hon. member. The facts are as I have stated them. We recognize a 12-mile territorial sea for Saint Pierre and Miquelon as emerging international law requires us to do. We do not recognize the claim of 200 miles beyond that of an economic zone which they are claiming. It is precisely that dispute which is now under consideration by the two governments. I can assure the hon. member that we have vigorously supported the claims of the Canadian people in these negotiations.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

GRANTS FOR ONTARIO

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister should know that over the past two to three years there have been repeated promises from government that new, enlarged boundaries and guidelines should be created with respect to regional development incentive grants. In all that time, and despite all the promises, nothing has changed.

The minister must know that expansion of the grant program would provide incentives to industry either to locate in new areas or enlarge their existing facilities. This would help to solve the problems of job creation and regional disparity in many areas, particularly in Ontario, which are not now included in this program. Is the minister prepared to act on these many promises and announce changes involving the grant program which would result in the establishment of new and enlarged boundaries, which are especially necessary in Ontario?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the questions raised by my hon. friend are among those that are being looked at in the context of the re-organization of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the re-organization of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with a view to putting them together in one major, new department. We will have more to say about this in coming weeks and months.

REQUEST THAT NEW BOUNDARIES BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister's predecessor was acutely aware of problems connected with the existing boundaries in Ontario and had promised on many occasions that solutions were forthcoming. I see him nodding his head. Will the minister give his assurance that the endless departmental examination of the issue will now cease and that plans to create new boundaries or enlarge existing ones in Ontario will be implemented at once?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, this is something we are working on and I hope to have some things to say about it in coming weeks.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ONTARIO APPLICATION TO INCREASE EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY TO NEW JERSEY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Ontario Hydro has applied to the National Energy Board to export massive amounts of electricity to New Jersey over the next ten years. The federal department of the environment has argued strenuously that Ontario Hydro's plans will greatly increase acid rain-causing emissions. Will the minister confirm that the National Energy Board has now approved Ontario Hydro's application despite the dire warnings of the department of the environment in that connection?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I understand that the National Energy Board is due to release its report some time today. I suggest we wait for that report.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. He will know the details of the National Energy Board decision because he has prepared a press release on the subject for issuance at four o'clock this afternoon. Does he intend to appeal the decision of the National Energy Board to cabinet? If cabinet confirms the National Energy Board decision in light of any appeal the Minister of the Environment might launch, will he tender his resignation, since such an outcome from cabinet would totally undermine his moral authority on the important and urgent subject of acid rain?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, there are several questions contained within that single question. As my colleague said, I believe that the National Energy Board will release its report today and I expect that I shall have some comment to make when it does so. In any case, the question will automatically come to cabinet because of its importance.

PIPELINES

FINANCING OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who in July, 1980, approved the pre-build of the Alaska highway gas pipeline when he was warned financial guarantees were not in place which would enable the building of the entire line. In view of the fact there is an announcement imminent of a significant delay, two to four years, which really means this project is on its deathbed, is the minister still prepared to give this House his assurances, ironclad or otherwise, that the entire line can be financed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I understand that financing arrangements have been made, to the tune of some $24 billion, in the United States. I understand that at present there are some problems between the partners which are being discussed and negotiated. I suggest we should wait for the reports about those discussions.

ENERGY

FUTURE OF ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the government's whole economic strategy appears to be based on jobs from energy megaproject spin-offs. Clearly the Alaska highway gas pipeline is having financing problems, and Alsands is on the ropes. Can the minister confirm that Shell has pulled out of the Alsands consortium, and can he tell us what will happen to the government's economic strategy in view of the potential collapse of these megaprojects?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I hope the NDP will make up its mind; some days it is against the Alaska gas pipeline and Alsands, and some days it is for them. I am not asking them for the impossible, that is, to make up their minds on anything, but I would like to tell my hon. friend that the reports he has referred to appear to be unfounded. The Alberta Minister of Energy and myself met with the companies last night. We had discussions. The companies are considering a number of possibilities, and we expect to get news very shortly.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—APPLICABILITY TO UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION VICTIMS

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Last Saturday, in an advertisement in the Montreal press, the corporation invited people to renovate their homes and take advantage of a forgivable loan of up to 10 per cent of the costs, up to a maximum of $3,000. Could the minister inform the House whether people who have already used urea formaldehyde foam and have certain problems would also be eligible for this program and be able to take advantage of this generous scheme?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question because it has been asked by other members of the House and obviously other people are interested. The $30-million program, designed to assist in renovation, was in essence a job-creation program. The government therefore thought, in order to get this program operative as soon as possible, that it would be designated to items of renovation in homes other than under the urea formaldehyde program which, as you know, is a separate program under the leadership of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

THE ECONOMY

ASSURANCES GIVEN BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As the assurances given by President Reagan at last summer's economic conference, that the United States government expected to make very important reductions in its interest rates by the end of last year, have proved to be no more soundly founded than the assurance given by the American President to our Prime Minister a year ago that they intended to co-operate closely with Canada in controlling emissions which create acid rain, does the Prime Minister intend at this summer's economic conference not to be misled by any of these bland assurances, and intends now with his government to start working out a Canadian program for lowering interest rates and stimulating the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I regret the hon. member's use of words indicating that I was misled by bland assurances.

Mr. Hees: Those were the kindest I could use.

Mr. Trudeau: The President of the United States was voicing his view of the way the economy of his country would develop over the coming months. It is true he gave assurances tending in the direction the hon. member stated, but I think this is an occasion to remind the hon. member that even the great United States cannot always implement the economic policies they would like.

As strong as they are in the world, Madam Speaker, and their economy is of course much more self-reliant than ours, they are still faced with very difficult economic problems, and even such a strong president as President Reagan—of a conservative philosophy which I am sure basically is admired by the hon. member—cannot bring his country out of the dire straits it is in.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF CANADIAN DESIGNED PROGRAM

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as a Conservative government in the early 1960s pulled the country out of very severe recession by a plan of its own making, does the Prime Minister not think it is incumbent upon him to try to show the Canadian people that his government is made of equal fibre and can undertake such a Canadian program, instead of relying on "Big Brother" to pull us out of our present serious recession, something which "Big Brother" has made very clear he has no intention of doing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is making an historical omission when he talks about that period. He realizes, of course, that there was a world-wide recovery at that point and that the then Canadian government naturally went along with the over-all trend. If the government of that time had been so impeccable, it is hard to explain why the hon. member would have departed from that government. I am sure he must have disagreed with its basic policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—PROSECUTION OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Minister of Justice tell us, when he decided to lay charges against Crown corporations in the uranium cartel matter, whether he knew those Crown corporations could claim immunity?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, it is evidently a problem which existed at that time as it exists at this time. In fact, at that time there was a decision of the court not to grant the corporation immunity, in the case of the CBC. The position we are taking in this case is that we can prosecute Crown corporations like private corporations.

CLAIM OF CROWN IMMUNITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, when the minister brought charges against those Crown corporations did he know that they could claim Crown immunity?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, there are many defences which any citizen or Crown corporation can take. This is one which existed at that time. It is not sure that they will win or lose in court, but the advice I received from the commission, and from the lawyers who advised the commission, was that it was absolutely proper to prosecute Crown corporations, so I did.

Mr. Clark: It is obviously proper, according to this Minister of Justice, to lay charges against a Crown corporation when he knows in advance they will be protected against the consequences of those charges, as ordinary Canadians would not be. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Chrétien: Oh, come on, ask another one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice has declined four times to answer that question. I would now like to give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources an opportunity to answer the question.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL FOR URANIUM CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): My question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relates to Uranium Canada, which he knows is a "shell" corporation with no assets, no offices, no employees, and no directors except the minister. Will the minister tell this House who is instructing counsel on behalf of Uranium Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the more the Leader of the Opposition speaks, the more clearly he shows why he failed in his law studies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The Minister of Justice has stated quite clearly that when he laid the charges they were laid upon the advice of counsel from the Department of Justice. The advice he had at the time was that he could lay those charges, established on a case that had been decided. The Minister of Justice stated that quite clearly, and the Leader of the Opposition completely misrepresented and distorted what the Minister of Justice said. Then he did not even have the courage to come back to the Minister of Justice again but diverted the question to me, which I am most happy to answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer it then.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Give it a try.

Mr. Lalonde: Uranium Canada Limited has a board of directors. That is something else which my hon. friend, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, does not appear to know. Counsel for Uranium Canada is acting on the instructions of the board of directors of Uranium Canada, which is not me. I am the shareholder. I am not the board of directors.

QUERY RESPECTING IDENTITY OF INSTRUCTOR OF COUNSEL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if I might read from the decision of the relevant Ontario court, it reads:

> On May 1, 1981, all the qualifying shares of the directors of Uranium Canada Limited were transferred to, and are now presently held by, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in trust for Her Majesty, the Queen, in right of Canada.

There is one director. It is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the minister, who is the only director of this "shell" corporation, now tell the House of Commons who instructed that Crown corporation to plead Crown immunity against the charges brought by his colleague in cabinet who knew at the time he brought the charges that that defence could be invoked to protect Crown corporations from the kind of treatment which ordinary Canadian companies have to face in courts? Who instructed counsel for Uranium Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is demonstrating that he would flunk his law exam today even more than at the time of his studies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The Leader of the Opposition does not appear to know the difference between a shareholder and a director of a corporation. I will be very happy to give him that free advice after question period.

Second, the Leader of the Opposition does not appear to know that under the Canada Business Corporations Act, which has been amended by this Parliament, directors are no longer required to own shares in order to be directors.

Mr. Nielsen: You are the only shareholder.

Mr. Lalonde: Therefore, you can be a director of a Crown corporation established under the Canada Business Corporations Act and not have a single share. That is part of the act passed by this Parliament which the Leader of the Opposition has not bothered to read.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—REMARKS OF MR. ANDRE UNPARLIAMENTARY

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege or a point of order concerning unparliamentary language used in this House on April 21 against myself. I have already written to you, Madam Speaker, to give you notice of the fact that I wanted to raise this point of order today because my schedule has not permitted me to stay in the House after question period to speak on this point until today. I am sorry for the delay between the time of the infraction of the rules of the House and the time of this discussion, but I find it more regrettable that this type of disrespect for the rules of the House of Commons should arise at all.

I would like to thank the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) for having raised the issue immediately at the time when the incident occurred and for reserving my right to raise a question of privilege.

I spoke in support of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. The member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) spoke against it. I addressed this House first and explained the content and intent of Bill C-103, a piece of legislation founded like so many other aspects of this government's energy policy upon principles of equity and fairness—

Mr. Clark: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: —founded on the simple notion that the rich should share with the poor; that is those blessed with abundant natural resources should aid those who have less.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lalonde: When I concluded my remarks, Madam Speaker, the member opposite from Calgary Centre rose in his place. I remained in the House as long as I could to hear his remarks. I would characterize that part of his speech which I heard as confused, but at least it was delivered in parliamentary language. The hon. member for Calgary Centre was wrong but he was not disrespectful of the traditions of this House.

Part of the way through his lengthy remarks, I was forced by other business to leave this House. When I did so the hon. member from Calgary Centre adopted a far different speaking style and word usage than I had heard. The record of this House of that day is found on pages 16476 to 16481 of Hansard. They reveal that the Mr. Hyde mentality of the Dr. Jekyll for Calgary Centre once more got the better of him.

After I left the House on April 21 the language of the hon. member for Calgary Centre appeared to degenerate into words and expressions some of which were unparliamentary, some of which were unfortunate and most of which were uninformed. In at least three different places the record of this House of April 21, 1982, clearly demonstrates that the hon. member for Calgary Centre used language which beyond any shadow of a doubt violates my privileges as a member of this House.

First, on page 16477 the hon. member speaks of the "downright dishonesty of the minister".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are not helping the Chair by applauding when words like this are invoked. This particular instance happened at least a week ago and it will be difficult for the Chair to rule on it. It would be helpful if the House listened to the point of order or the question of privilege. The notice given to me said the matter was a question of privilege but the hon. member has referred to it also as a point of order. In any event, I am taking the matter as being a question of privilege unless the minister tells me otherwise. I would like hon. members to assist me by listening to this question of privilege so that I can decide whether there is any reason to intervene.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply want to remind the Chair that you have many times stated that if an hon. member cannot lay his question of privilege or point of order before you within the space of five lines of Hansard, then there is something wrong.

Madam Speaker: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege, and I remind hon. members on the other side that sometimes they have occupied up to one and a half hours of time on a single question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But they had some substance to them.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have outlined the first occurrence. Second, on the same page Hansard records the member as accusing me of falsehoods. Third, further down on the same page the hon. member for Calgary Centre accuses me of uttering deceits, dishonesty and statements that are known to be untrue.

There can be no doubt that the three quotations I have just read are no more than gratuitous and slanderous attacks on a fellow hon. member of this House and, as such, are a breach of parliamentary privilege. They violate the basic principles of parliamentary language and proceedings which lie at the very foundation of orderly debate in a parliamentary democracy. The rules and the precedents are unanimous in their condemnation of this sort of language.

• (1510)

On April 24, 1978, Mr. Speaker Jerome made this assessment of how debate should be conducted in Parliament:

> We must adhere to a certain standard of language and a certain standard of conduct in the House, in order to maintain a proper standard of dignity in respect to the debates here. Inevitably, every time we get away from the substance of debate and cross over into the area of personal reflection, on the one side or the other, we always run a very high risk of putting that whole sense of dignity and decorum in jeopardy.

As soon as I left the House on April 21, the hon. member for Calgary Centre clearly crossed that line so well described in the passage I have just quoted. Because he could not understand and cannot yet understand the substance of the energy program of the government, he turned to ad hominem rhetoric of the worst kind.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I have the gist of the hon. minister's question of privilege and I will interrupt him at this point. He referred to language which was used by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), as reported in Hansard of April 21. Since the hon. minister gave me some idea of what his question of privilege was all about I referred to Hansard of that date. I must say that I have one particular problem with this question of privilege. It is not that the language used cannot be qualified as unparliamentary, because I believe it was unparliamentary. No member can accuse another member of "absolute falsehood" or say that an hon. member is "downright dishonest". As I read this, it is not accusing the minister obliquely of downright dishonesty but quite directly.

My problem with this particular question of privilege is that it was not dealt with at the time it occurred. Unparliamentary language should be dealt with when it occurs because it is only at that point that one can assess the tone or the atmosphere of the House and especially the kind of disturbance which that kind of language might create in the House. I remind hon. members that there are two elements in dealing with the matter of unparliamentary language. It is the language itself, whether it derogates from what is considered to be parliamentary or from the spirit of what is considered to be parliamentary. I urge hon. members not only to think of the actual list—because I think it needs to be updated—but to think of the spirit of decorum which is required by hon. members in the House.

Because the matter was not dealt with immediately, it is very difficult for me to ask the hon. member to withdraw a week later, although if he wished to do so, I would find it completely within the spirit of parliamentary behaviour. But I remind hon. members that I deplore excessive uses of language, and I do not feel they are conducive to orderly debate in the House.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, in his specious question of privilege the minister made a number of comments about the National Energy Program.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that I am not being too hard on him by asking him to withdraw his words now, but I will certainly not allow any comment on what I have just said or on the question of privilege.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I was not commenting upon your judgment or upon what you have just said. In raising his question of privilege, the minister made a number of editorial statements regarding general policy upon which I will not comment now.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This is not the time to debate those statements.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, you will recall, on reading Hansard of April 21, that I raised the point of order when I heard the hon. member opposite voice the allegations to which the minister is referring. At the time, I indicated that I had clearly heard what the minister is now referring to, namely, the allegations made by the hon. member. The hon. member then denied the fact he had said anything unparliamentary. He said, and I quote from page 16477:

> MR. ANDRE: I will have to examine the blues. I certainly do not want to use any unparliamentary language . . .

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I merely wish to point out to the minister that I had considered the comments he made at the time he himself raised the point of order. Hansard, which I have in front of me, clearly indicates that the minister then called upon the Speaker to straighten out the situation. The Speaker gave a ruling to the best of his knowledge. He ruled on the situation as he understood it. I do not wish to reconsider that ruling. If the point of order had been raised much sooner, and if the minister had then persisted in requesting a revision of the Speaker's ruling I believe it would have been possible to settle the matter then and there. But since a week has passed, I do not think it would be in the best interests of the House to reconsider this matter.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, may I remind you that I wrote to you at the first opportunity after reading Hansard—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I thought I had made myself clear. If the minister felt that the matter was so urgent, he should have come to the House the following day and raised his question of privilege or have it raised by someone else. I would therefore ask hon. members to refrain from commenting further on this matter, since I have now given a ruling.

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): On this question of raising it at the earliest opportunity, I refer Madam Speaker to page 348 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May.

Some hon. Members: Madam Speaker has ruled!

Mr. Smith: It reads:

A matter which is postponed to suit the convenience of the House or to secure the attendance of a member implicated, or to give the Speaker an opportunity to consider it fully—

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I am very sorry, but I have given a ruling on the matter. I would like to have the hon. members' co-operation.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, without wishing to reflect on the ruling you just made, I believe it is important that the House should get some clarification on whether the ruling you have given in this very specific case or the citation just quoted by my parliamentary secretary should apply in a case where a member or a minister raises a question of privilege. I do not want to dispute your ruling or refer to it in any way, but we have here a ruling by the Speaker and a statement by Erskine May, and I should like to know which of the two should apply.

Madam Speaker: I can provide the minister with some clarification by quoting a case I have here in English, which entirely supports the ruling I have just made, namely—

[English]

The proper time to raise such a point of order, that is about unparliamentary language, is when the words are used and not afterwards.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on another subject. After consultation with the Clerk of the House, I believe this would be the appropriate time to seek unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion to refer the question of prostitution, a very difficult—

Madam Speaker: Order. The proper time would be when motions are called.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING STREET SOLICITING FOR THE PURPOSE OF PROSTITUTION

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this motion arises out of a proposal that was made in this chamber last Thursday by the government and which we believe had been agreed to by the official opposition.

It is a question of referring the whole issue of solicitation to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration in conjunction with Bill C-53 which is presently before the committee. I understood that at that time we had the consent of the official opposition to this proposal. We did not obtain the consent of the third party in the House, but they have now had four days and they had requested a certain amount of time to consider it. I hope that we would have unanimous consent of the House at this time to proceed with this matter so that we can get on with the very important business of dealing with solicitation.

The motion, Madam Speaker, moves:

That it be an introduction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that during its consideration of Bill C-53, it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution and including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently in force in this regard, and include the hearing and consideration of the views of the interested persons and organizations.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I had given your Honour notice that I had intended to seek unanimous consent to move a motion very much in similar terms to those which have been discussed earlier.

Madam Speaker: We will deal with this motion first. We must deal with one motion at a time. Does the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson) have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I believe this motion is debatable. I woud like to propose the following.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It has not been proposed yet. It would be debatable after it has been proposed.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I move the adoption by unanimous consent of the motion previously posed, without debate.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, we are prepared to give that consent.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, certainly the motion is before the House and my understanding is that it is debatable pursuant to the rules. I wish to speak to it.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson) to indicate very clearly that we were willing to move the motion and give it unanimous consent provided there is no debate. If there is debate, there is no consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, surely the important matter is to get the issue properly before the Standing Committee. The government is prepared to do that in keeping with an undertaking given by the Minister of Justice, pursuant to the repeated requests of the member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) because of the pressing nature of the problem. Surely the New Democratic Party would be prepared to have that reference go to committee as quickly as possible. We are prepared to give unanimous consent to have that reference immediately so that that committee can commence work as quickly as possible on this very pressing subject.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I want to draw to your attention that at the time the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice asked for unanimous consent to proceed with the motion, he made no reference to that unanimous consent being given subject to the matter being dealt with without debate. The record will clearly show that the only time that the parliamentary secretary mentioned "without debate" was after he had, in fact, moved the motion for the second time.

I want to make it clear that we want to deal with the matter and we want to refer a motion to the committee to deal with prostitution. However, we do not propose to have the matter shunted off without any consideration by the House of Commons. We therefore intend to debate it.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I respect what my hon. friend said but it is clear that the intent in what was said, and the spirit of the whole discussion, was that this motion was to be put, provided there is no debate and there is unanimous consent. There being no unanimous consent, we cannot agree to the motion being discussed or put. It was a condition for moving the motion.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the Chair may be now confronted with a problem. Of course, we have been willing to see the matter consented to without debate, but if I heard accurately, the motion was put and is now before the House. For the New Democratic Party to be denied the right to debate it now, it would mean that the motion had not been put at all. However, it was put and it is now before the House. I think the Chair may have a problem in that regard.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to join with the House leader for the official opposition in saying quite clearly that when unanimous consent was sought there was no indication that this would be dealt with without debate. The motion is now before the House. The only way in which it can be withdrawn would be with unanimous consent, which we are not prepared to give. We intend to debate it. The matter is now before the House and we ask you to proceed with that order.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you have not yet read the motion and consequently there is no problem. We shall not present the motion because there is no unanimous consent for a debate. I believe that solves the problem.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I want to make it clear to the House that yes, the motion was proposed by the hon. parliamentary secretary and I believe that he read it. I understood that he was reading it so that hon. members would be aware of what it contained. I assume that hon. members could not give their unanimous consent without knowing what it contained.

I have no knowledge of any negotiations that might have taken place before hon. members came to this House. The hon. parliamentary secretary has given the House an idea of what the motion contained, but it had not been put to the House by the Chair. That now requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Does the House give the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice unanimous consent to put his motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The hon. parliamentary secretary does not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I want it to be very clearly understood that we are prepared to have this matter debated in the House today and referred to the committee today.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The motion is not before the House. There has been no unanimous consent.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,748, 3,161, 3,310 and 3,765.

[Text]

MR. MAURICE MacDONALD

Question No. 2,748—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the RCMP, in company with Calgary City Police, at any time raid the home of Mr. Maurice MacDonald, a shooting instructor and gun collector, and, if so (a) was his home ransacked (b) were his firearms seized by the RCMP (c) what was the purpose of the exercise and who authorized it?

2. Was Mr. MacDonald suspected of a crime and (a) if so, what was it (b) if not, for what reason was he treated in that fashion?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. A member of the RCMP in company with the Calgary City Police attended the home of Mr. Maurice MacDonald. (a) His home was not ransacked. (b) His firearms were not seized by the RCMP. (c) The purpose of the exercise was to obtain evidence that a crime had been committed acting under the authority of a search warrant obtained by Calgary City Police.

2. Yes. (a) Theft—Section 292 of the Criminal Code. (b) Not applicable.

PROMOTION OF TELEPOST

Question No. 3,161—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. R. Michael Warren, president of the Canada Post Corporation, send out CNCP communications to various people headed "A message from Canada Post Corporation" and, if so (a) what was the cost to the taxpayer (b) how many persons received the message dated October 15, 1981, and in what categories did they fall (c) for what reason was the message not sent by regular mail and was one reason that Mr. Warren believed regular mail to be too slow (d) does the message fall into the category of a propaganda exercise for the benefit of the corporation and in what way could it possibly contribute to improving the postal service?

2. Was it essential that the message be sent with haste and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes, a message was sent via Telepost. (a) Costs were underwritten as a joint project of Canada Post and CNCP Telecommunications.

(b) It was addressed to about 1,000 mayors and reeves of Ontario communities as well as members of the provincial legislature and Ontario members of the House of Commons.

(c) and (d) The message, as a joint project of Canada Post and CNCP Telecommunications, was sent as a low profile promotion of the product "Telepost" which is a co-operative business venture of the two corporate bodies.

2. Not applicable.

POLICING AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Question No. 3,310—Mr. Herbert:

1. For the fiscal year 1981-82, what is the estimated number of person-years to be allocated to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for duties paid in whole or in part by provinces and municipalities?

2. What is the estimated cost to the government for the provision of this service and what amount is expected to be received from the provinces and municipalities who request and obtain such service from the RCMP?

3. What is the duration of the agreement covering this service?

4. Were estimates prepared of the expenses and revenues for the period of the agreement and, if so, what were the amounts?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. Provincial, 6,953; municipal, 2,824.

2. Estimated Total Cost: $412,383,000
Estimated Revenues from provinces and municipalities: $285,831,000

This covers a 15-month period (October 1, 1980 to December 31, 1981) due to a change in billing procedure and is a one-time occurrence in 1981-82.

3. Ten years.

4. Estimates of expenditures and revenues for the ten-year duration of the Policing Agreements with the Provinces and Municipalities have not been completed.

RCMP SECURITY FILES

Question No. 3,765—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is there an RCMP security file on the Prime Minister and, if so, during the transfer from RCMP security to the new civilian Security Service, will it be destroyed, altered or changed in any way?

2. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,230 which declares that the government will not guarantee that security files will not be destroyed, altered or changed in any way, is the reason for this policy because of the existence of a file on the Prime Minister?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. The Security Service properly maintains files on a number of persons which it must do in order to carry out its responsibilities to national security. The mere existence of a file does not, however, necessarily connote improper activity on the part of a file subject. In effect, Security Service files are held without prejudice and in the strictest confidence. To do otherwise would be a disservice to many local law-abiding Canadians and, for this reason, it has been the long-standing policy of the Security Service to neither confirm nor deny the existence of a file on any individual.

The McDonald commission of inquiry recommended that the individual file holdings of the Security Service be reduced. I have instructed a review of the current Security Service file retention policy with this objective in mind but not at the expense of affecting Canada's ability to conduct proper national security investigations. I can assure this House that no Security Service file will be destroyed, altered or changed in any way simply because of the prominence or otherwise of the individual involved.

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-108, to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak today to hon. members of this House on a few important aspects of Bill C-108, to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), which we are currently debating. As you know, the National Energy Board is one of the main instruments that the Government of Canada has for bringing influence to bear on energy development in our country. The board, in fact, regulates certain activities and operations of companies or individuals wanting to promote that development. Your Honour also knows that this bill to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3) is one of the necessary legislative measures for implementing the essential elements of the National Energy Program, which is the framework on which our whole energy future will be built.

The aim of the National Energy Program is to provide a new impetus, a vital thrust, to Canadian energy development as a whole. Its objectives are fairness, security and participation, which are essential to Canada for its economic development and for its freedom of action on the international scene. It is therefore to be expected that the act which serves as the vehicle for achieving some of these objectives will improve and fine tune the federal government's principal instrument in the energy field, namely, the jurisdiction and powers of the National Energy Board.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to deal more specifically with Clauses 12 and 30 of Bill C-108 which give additional powers to the National Energy Board with respect to international and interprovincial power lines. In doing so, I am thinking especially of the citizens of my own province, the province of Quebec, for whom these provisions have raised a number of questions, leading to an often stormy debate. There have been many erroneous statements on this subject, and today I wish to take this opportunity in the House to clarify the situation. Before explaining the nature of the bill, I would like to spend a few minutes on some technical explanations. Up to about ten years ago, transmission of electricity over long distances was very difficult. Alternating current was used, and to keep the voltage in the lines constant, many relays were needed along the entire transmission route. Since construction and operation of these relays was expensive, it was often found preferable to build power lines over short distances, either between two points in the same province or between two points in neighbouring provinces that were close enough. At the time there was no particular urgency for having special regulations for long international or interprovincial power lines.

In the last ten or 15 years, however, power transmission technology has made tremendous progress. It became possible to transmit very high voltage electricity using direct current instead of alternating current, so that relays were no longer necessary. Some of the most important technological advances in this area took place here in Canada and more specifically in Quebec and Manitoba, two provinces that have developed highly advanced technology for the transmission of electric power over long distances. It is now feasible to transmit electric power over very long distances and, today electric power can be transmitted over 1,500 or even 2,000 kilometres, something that was absolutely impossible a few decades ago. Consequently, problems are now arising that did not exist before. In fact, transmission lines have now become quite similar to pipelines. Oil and gas are transported across Canada over long distances; for instance, oil is brought from Alberta to Montreal across the provinces, thanks to a pipeline that is regulated by the National Energy Board. The same applies to natural gas. The natural gas pipeline runs from Alberta across the provinces, bringing the gas to Montreal, and soon to Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. This pipeline crosses the provinces under the provisions of national, federal legislation, and expropriation authority is conferred on oil and gas companies pursuant to a provision of a federal act, subject to authorization by the National Energy Board. So that is the situation with respect to oil and gas carried across Canada, and now, thanks to technological progress, we have a situation where electric power can be transmitted across the country, over rivers, across the plains and the mountains, across regions and provinces.

The main objective of the amendments we are proposing to the National Energy Board Act is to give the board the same powers and jurisdiction over power transmission lines it now has with respect to pipelines. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the powers we are conferring under the proposed legislation are not even as extensive as those that apply to pipelines. At the present time, the National Energy Board has certain powers with respect to international power lines. The act in question prescribes that the board must hold public hearings when an applicant wishes to export electric power or construct international power lines. For instance, today the National Energy Board is to publish its decision whether or not to authorize the exportation of electric power by Ontario Hydro from Ontario to the United States in fact, to one specific state. The decision the National Energy Board is to hand down today is based on public hearings and is made pursuant to the provisions of the National Energy Board Act.

If we examine present practice and the present act, it is clear that Parliament has for some time been legislating with respect to electric power lines, and it is entirely erroneous to say what some people have implied in Quebec, that this was an entirely new step, something that had never existed before and that would constitute, as it were, an exceptional decision in the area of electric power, as though we had never passed any legislation on power transmission. In fact, the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction over international or interprovincial electric power transmission, and Parliament has many times had occasion to exercise this jurisdiction.

The board has authority not only over the transmission of power from Canada to the United States, but it may also authorize construction of a power line for this purpose, by regulating its route, judging whether the line is in the public interest both present and future by hearing any objections raised to the construction of the line and finally, by establishing the conditions deemed necessary for the implementation of the entire undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, these powers are already included in the National Energy Board Act. It is not a matter of inventing new powers or trying to attribute new powers to the National Energy Board Act, since these powers already exist in the Act and are specifically defined in Section 20 and Sections 40 to 46.

However, the act does fall short in one area. I shall explain. Where pipelines are concerned, the National Energy Board Act contains provisions conferring certain general powers and imposing certain obligations on a company operating a pipeline, but there are no similar provisions to cover the case of a power transmission line. Some of these general powers and duties concern the acquisition, including acquisition by expropriation, and the transfer of property required for the construction and operation of the pipeline. These provisions are set forth in Part V of the National Energy Board Act. One of the proposed amendments is meant to compensate for the shortcoming I mentioned earlier, so that the provisions of Part V, namely, the sections conferring general powers or imposing general duties on pipeline companies, will also apply to persons operating international power lines.

Mr. Speaker, in this bill to amend the National Energy Board Act, we are simply proposing, as I said before, a system, similar to the present one for pipelines, which regulates the acquisition, including acquisition by expropriation, and transfer of property for the construction of electric power lines. We are not proposing a single power or jurisdiction more than those existing at the present time with respect to oil and gas pipelines, and I would remind the House again that this power is not exercised by the Government of Canada nor by the National Energy Board because they are not the ones that proceed with expropriation.

If we look at what is now happening in Quebec with respect to the gas pipeline, for instance, we find that the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes gas pipeline now under construction, which should reach Trois-Rivières before the end of this year and Quebec City, I hope, some time next year, we find that what is happening is that TQM, the company building the gas pipeline under the licence it was given by the National Energy Board, is proceeding with the expropriation of the land it needs to build the gas pipeline, meanwhile complying with the provincial legislation in effect in Quebec, including environmental legislation and provisions for the protection of farmland, and so forth. It has been clear during the past months and the past year that TQM has had to comply with the provincial laws in effect which govern certain aspects of activities within the province. And the same thing happens when a pipeline is built, whether in Quebec or elsewhere. When a line is extended, the company involved is subject not only to federal legislation, but also to whatever provincial legislation is applicable. What is proposed in this bill, where it is provided that the same powers be granted for power lines as those already given to the National Energy Board for oil and gas pipelines, is simply that the practice followed, for instance, by TQM in Quebec when building the gas pipeline, as I mentioned earlier, should also apply to an international or interprovincial power line. Once again, what we are proposing is simply a system similar to the one already in place for pipelines, especially as concerns the expropriation or disposal of land. That is the purpose of Clause 12, which simply states that Part V of the National Energy Board Act applies to international power lines. It will also apply to interprovincial power lines designated by the governor in council.

As for the construction of interprovincial lines, the situation at this time is quite different from that which applies to international lines. For the moment, the Board has virtually no jurisdiction in this regard. Clause 30 of the bill now under consideration will change this situation by effectively considering an interprovincial line designated by the governor in council as an international line. In other words, once a power line has been designated, the Board will be empowered to issue or cancel the certificate authorizing construction, to set specific conditions for the certificate, to hold public hearings and to approve the expropriation of land. To summarize, once an interprovincial line has been designated, the provisions concerning international power lines will also apply to this line. The designation of interprovincial power lines seems to have caused difficulties to some people. I would like to make it quite clear that the government will only make a decision concerning such lines after taking into account the interests of the provinces involved and having judged that the national interest requires that these lines be designated. The federal government does not intend to take unilateral action in this regard and, under normal conditions, the government would eventually proceed to designate a line only at the request of one or more than one province. In addition, it is important to note that this power of designation will apply only to future lines, to lines still to be built, and cannot apply to any existing interprovincial power line.

The extension of Part V to international power lines, which I mentioned earlier, has, however, given rise to ridiculous charges. We have been accused of interfering with the powers of certain provincial governments, of wanting to sell out the energy resources of some provinces and of interfering with their territorial integrity. Mr. Speaker, there is no need for me to point out that such accusations are completely false and demagogic. The decision to give the operators of international power lines the same powers and the same duties as those given to pipeline companies was made following a request by an Alberta company, now called TransAlta Utilities and formerly Calgary Power. This company wanted to sell electricity to the United States and to make sure that the construction of the high tension line between Alberta and the neighbouring American states would not meet with any undue difficulty. We examined the matter carefully and discovered that the federal legislation did not provide the necessary powers to make such sales possible. That trade, Mr. Speaker, as I said, can, on occasion, prove vital for the economy of a region and beneficial to the over-all Canadian trade balance. We simply wanted to establish a principle. These new legislative provisions are not made for or against anybody, be it Alberta, British Columbia, Quebec or Newfoundland. They can apply today in Alberta, tomorrow in Quebec, the day after in British Columbia or Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that because of these amendments we have been accused specifically of interference in the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute over the Labrador power transmission. As a member from Quebec, I must state I have been following the debate with much attention, much interest and on a number of occasions with much regret, seeing how some points were being made and how the demagogic approach often prevailed. I would like to take this opportunity on second reading to explain the situation in greater detail to this House and the Canadian people. With regard to the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute, there can be no doubt the soundest solution economically speaking is the transmission of Labrador power southward through the existing Hydro Quebec network. There should be no doubt in anyone's mind about that, either in Quebec, in Newfoundland or anywhere else.

The most sensible, reasonable, intelligent, economical solution is the transmission of the Labrador power through the Hydro-Quebec network. However, the dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland goes far beyond the issue of such possible power transmission. It is an old, deep, very complex problem with major political ramifications provincially, either in Quebec or, perhaps more so, in Newfoundland.

Some aspects of the problem have to do with the transmission of hydroelectric power, namely. Could Newfoundland make sure that its power could be freely transmitted to potential clients other than Quebec? Other aspects involve other debates, other disputes between Newfoundland and Quebec concerning the kilowatt rate of power sold to Quebec, especially under the existing Quebec-Newfoundland agreement dealing with the power generated from the Churchill Falls dam.

Other debates, they deal with the matter of whether or not the Quebec-Newfoundland agreement should be adhered to, or perhaps renegotiated. Finally, a number of other technical and financial questions with far-reaching implications stem in various degrees from that dispute. There is no need to remind this House that the problems between Quebec and Newfoundland have been there for a number of years, nearly a decade; matters have been referred to the courts, certain cases are now before the Supreme Court of Canada. Others are still before lower courts, and there is no solution in sight between the two governments. As I said, there are currently two cases before the courts in Newfoundland and Quebec, dealing with some aspect or other of that dispute, and each party, each provincial government uses every means available to either delay or rush the case before the courts. At any rate, these cases have been before the courts for quite a number of years.

The Newfoundland Court of Appeal has just ruled in favour of that province in a third action but an appeal has been lodged against it before the Supreme Court of Canada.

I wish to emphasize that the federal government does not wish to intervene or take sides in that conflict. We did not attempt to mediate. We have left both provincial governments fight it out in court and did nothing to support one party rather than the other. In fact, we feel that both parties have much to lose in carrying on that confrontation. After ten years of legal proceedings the problem is still not resolved and in the meantime there has been no other development on the Quebec North Shore or on the Churchill River. Every year over the past ten years, the people of Newfoundland and Quebec have been losing hundreds of million dollars in revenue because their governments have been unable to come to an agreement.

Each year, thousands of construction jobs in Quebec or Newfoundland have been lost or have not been created, because the provincial governments could not agree about the development of the Churchill River or other rivers on the Quebec North Shore and for ten years the governments and people of Newfoundland and Quebec have been the real losers. God knows that right now they would be very pleased with the few thousands jobs the construction of dams on either the North Shore or on the Churchill River could create for them. Unfortunately, both provincial governments have wasted the last two years over legal proceedings and squabbles, which have doubtless helped a number of lawyers earn a living but has done little to provide jobs for construction workers.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that whatever the verdict may be in the actions in abeyance, nobody will be the winner. In the medium term, I would say that the apparent victory of either government may eventually turn against its best interests. I say this with full knowledge of the facts and as sincerely as possible. If the federal government were to intervene in that matter, it would only be to try to bring both parties together because we firmly believe that negotiation is the best answer.

A negotiated agreement involving mutually acceptable compromises would certainly prove more beneficial to the citizens of both Newfoundland and Quebec than any legal victory that could only result in bitterness and frustration. A negotiated agreement would result in many long-lasting advantages. The consequences of a confrontation would poison the atmosphere.

We have contacted both provincial governments and offered to help them resume negotiations on an agreed-upon basis. Here and now, Mr. Speaker, we repeat our offer. We do not want to interfere or intervene in any way, but we suggest again to both governments that if they feel that the Government of Canada can play a useful role towards reaching a negotiated agreement between them, we would do the utmost to help the governments of these neighbouring provinces get together again. I should like to emphasize that these two clauses of Bill C-108 apparently have been received very favourably by a majority of the House. In fact, during this most unfortunate break in our proceedings caused by the Progressive Conservative Party, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), the energy critic of the Progressive Conservative Party, confirmed the relevance of these two clauses on an open line program. I should like to repeat here the statement which was made by the energy critic of the Progressive Conservative Party. Here is what the member for Calgary West said, and I quote:

Yes—

—sorry, from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre)—

The energy critic of the Progressive Conservative Party made the following statement:

Yes, that's a part of the bill that I would recommend to my caucus. I am ready to recommend to my party caucus not to delay for any length of time this part of the bill, but on the contrary to deal with it as expeditiously as possible.

I should like to repeat that those are the very words he used:

• (1600)

Yes, that's a part of the bill that I would recommend to my caucus.

This statement by the hon. member who is the energy critic of the Progressive Conservative Party is perfectly clear and we hope that our consideration of these clauses will not last forever. Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make our position clear on this issue, if I may. In my previous remarks, I have tried to show the situation as it really is in this bill which is now before the House, a situation which I should like to summarize again. First of all, I want to insist that the provisions of the bill which is now before the House are consistent with the powers vested in the Parliament of Canada in the area of international and interprovincial trade. Nobody has yet suggested that the Parliament of Canada lacked the authority to legislate in this respect. As a matter of fact, it is one of the responsibilities of Parliament to ensure that free international and interprovincial trade exists in Canada. Parliament must see to it that there is no impediment to international and interprovincial trade and that there is no barrier, actual or symbolic, to the free flow of goods between our provinces. If the Parliament of Canada did not have that power, it might be inferred that, to all intents and purposes, the country does not exist. That power is a basic and fundamental element of the very existence of a country worthy of the name. Therefore, the authority, the jurisdiction and the responsibility of the Parliament of Canada to ensure the freedom of international and interprovincial trade are clear and undisputable.

Second, I want to emphasize once again that those provisions are identical to the ones Parliament has been applying for decades with respect to oil and gas pipelines and if I may say, for the greater good of Quebec, without the government of that province ever raising any objection. The same can be said about the powers the Canadian government has been exercising for more than a century over railway construction. And to come back again to oil and gas pipelines, the companies that build them also abide by the relevant provincial legislation.

Third, those provisions go even further than those that already apply to the pipelines, in two respects. One, they cannot apply to any existing pipeline, and two, they could apply to any future pipeline only after specific designation by the governor in council when the line involves interprovincial transport.

Fourth, the act will in no way affect the Hydro-Quebec network. I want to make that point clear because once again all kinds of irresponsible statements were made when the matter was brought up. The Hydro-Quebec network is not and will not be in any way affected by this provision. The existing and future Hydro-Quebec network is and will remain completely under the jurisdiction of the Quebec government. When the Newfoundland government asked us to legislate in that regard, it asked two things of us: First, to amend the act so that an autonomous power transmission line may be built and second, to take on the responsibility of compelling Hydro-Quebec or any other provincial hydro company to transport any hydro power which Newfoundland, for instance, might generate. We indicated at that time that we were willing to act on the first request which is in keeping with present practices with regard to pipeline construction. Our response to the second request, was first, that we did not think we could have jurisdictional authority over a provincial agency for the transportation of power over its own network and, second, that such a practice could only be successful in so far as the provincial body would be willing to co-operate and that it would be utterly unrealistic to expect the Parliament of Canada to impose such an obligation on a reluctant provincial agency. Consequently, we rejected the second request and went along with the first. This is extremely important and the people of Quebec are reminded that this provision cannot affect the integrity of the Hydro-Quebec network; it constitutes a guarantee for the present and the future.

Fifth, this act can in no way jeopardize the existing contract between Hydro-Quebec and Newfoundland with regard to Churchill Falls. All this controversy now existing between Newfoundland and Quebec as regards the Churchill Falls contract is a civil law affair between the two provinces; the point is whether this contract is valid, whether it can be changed or not, but the bill now before us does not affect it in any way. The actual dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland in this regard remains unsettled and it will be ruled upon by the courts unless some agreement is reached between the two provinces in the meantime. The purpose of this legislation would be the prospective development of new hydro resources that are not subjected, at the present time, to the contract between Quebec and Newfoundland. Therefore, there is no reason to worry or get excited, because the bill before us does not in the least affect the matter of the existing contract for power transmission between Quebec and Newfoundland.

Sixth, as I said before, these provisions are not specific to those two provinces. They have a wider scope and can apply to any province in Canada; as a matter of fact, these provisions have been brought forward in the House following a request from Calgary Power some time ago in connection with the export of power to the United States through British Columbia.

Seventh, it has been argued that there was a big difference between pipelines and power lines. In particular, I heard it said in Quebec that this difference comes from the fact that power lines were paid for by Hydro-Quebec, by the province, by the provincial taxpayers, and that the federal government has no financial input in the construction of power lines. On the other hand, it is argued that the federal government does contribute to the financing of pipelines. I must say that this argument is groundless for a very simple reason: in most cases, the government of Canada does not contribute any more to the cost of pipeline, designed to carry gas or oil, than to the cost of power lines. We are going to help to a large extent building the Quebec pipeline in order to ensure that Quebecers and Maritimers will get natural gas at the same price as people in Toronto. We have decided to support this proposed natural gas pipeline. However, all the pipelines which have been built throughout Canada were built without any financial contribution from the Canadian government. Once again, this argument does not hold water. It is truly impossible to differentiate between electric power lines and pipelines on the basis of the financial contribution or non-contribution of the Canadian government.

My eighth point is that some have suggested that the situation is different with regard to electricity on the one hand and oil and gas on the other. It is as though electricity has a certain magical quality not to be found in oil or natural gas. It is obvious to any fair-minded observer that electricity is just another of the many forms of energy. In fact, as we all know, in many cases, one type can be substituted for another, for instance to heat buildings and homes, oil, gas or electricity can be used, and all we have here are three different forms of energy which are very common in Canada and which most citizens use at one time or another in their daily lives.

Some seem to be suggesting that because electricity is involved, it is not good enough that the Parliament of Canada be able to guarantee that the transmission of power from one province to another country or another province can be governed or regulated by the Canadian Parliament, when for over 50 years, Parliament has governed the movement of gas and oil from coast to coast and from one province to another. According to them, it is unthinkable that the province of Newfoundland, for instance, if it had a customer such as New York State that was interested in buying a lot of electricity, could sign a contract with this customer to transmit the power of the Lower Churchill, which is not yet developed, from Newfoundland to New York State by a power line through Quebec, without the Quebec government being entitled to say: I am sorry, but I forbid you to pass through my territory unless you sell me all your hydroelectric power so that I can then use what I need and sell the rest to someone else.

I have heard this argument from many Quebecers to whom I have spoken and I have asked them one question, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that they generally could not reply because they have not thought about it that way. I asked them what they would say about a situation such as the following. We, in Quebec, need natural gas. As everyone knows, the gas pipeline will soon be extended from Montreal to Trois-Rivières, to Quebec City and to various other regions in Quebec. We clearly need this natural gas. It has to come from Alberta where there is a surplus, and we, in Quebec, want to have access to this natural gas. What happens at the present time is quite simple. There is a gas distribution company, a pipeline company, which takes the gas in Alberta and brings it through the various provinces to Quebec where consumers can get it because it comes under federal legislation and federal jurisdiction. What would be our reaction in Quebec if the premier of Saskatchewan were to say: "I am sorry, Mr. Lougheed, but you are going through my territory, you are violating my territorial integrity, and I cannot allow you to go through here. What I shall do is to purchase your natural gas, then I shall take what I need myself and sell the surplus to Manitoba, and the price I obtain is no business of yours, Mr. Lougheed. I shall buy your gas at a set price, but what happens afterwards is none of your business."

Then, the same thing would happen in Manitoba. Mr. Pawley, the new Manitoba premier would say: "I shall buy all your natural gas, Mr. Devine, take what I need and sell the surplus at a small profit to Mr. Davis." And Mr. Davis would do the same thing: "I buy all your gas, Mr. Pawley, I take what I need, I go to Mr. Lévesque and say: Mr. Lévesque, I have quite a lot of natural gas to sell you, but I shall make a small profit since it goes over my territory and affects my territorial integrity. I am therefore entitled to some compensation because you are going through my territory." You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, the price that Quebec would have to pay for oil and natural gas if each province were in some way to veto the transmission through its territory of a form of energy on its way to another province. I submit that no one in Canada could seriously suggest that we could accept as a country—and exist as a country—a system under which each province could practically have a right of veto on power transmission through its province to another province, or even become the sole buyer of that form of energy and resell the surplus to another province at a profit.

Clearly, this has been rejected by the Canadian people as a whole, it would be so far-fetched that nobody will argue or submit that such a system could be acceptable. However, let us realize that the end result is much the same if we accept the argument that power could not be transmitted through a province to another province or country, without the producing provinces having to sell all of its product to the neighbouring province, the province in between client and producer. But again in practice, what happens is that there are agreements. As I said, the most sensible, normal, decent and economical way is to have a contract between two provincial hydros, at a reasonable price, the power being taken in by the power grid and a certain quantity resold to another country or province. This, in my view, is what should be hoped for at this point in the case of the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute. It is an unfortunate dispute, and as I said, a dispute the cost of which has been borne by Quebecers and Newfoundlanders, and a very high cost at that.

I would urge once again, as I have done privately, the two energy ministers to reopen negotiations on a broad basis. I personally indicated to the Newfoundland government that I viewed as excessive the position taken by that government to refuse to discuss the development of the Lower Churchill River and North Shore rivers unless the existing Churchill Falls contract between Quebec and Newfoundland is reopened, and that I viewed as deserving favourable consideration by the Newfoundland government the proposal made by the Quebec government, under which that government, especially over the last few months and even the last few weeks, showed its readiness to improve the Newfoundland-Quebec contract concerning Churchill Falls within the framework of a general agreement on the Churchill river and North Shore rivers development. I will pursue my efforts to try and convince both governments to sit at the table and realize it is in their mutual interest to reach an agreement not only on the famous Upper Churchill contract but also on over-all hydroelectric development in eastern Quebec, northeastern Quebec and Labrador.

I feel that such an agreement between the two provinces would have positive economic benefits in the order of hundreds of millions and even billions for Quebec and Newfoundland, not to mention the tens of thousands of construction jobs that would be created for citizens in Quebec, Newfoundland and also Ontario and many other provinces, because such developments have spin-offs across Canada, with turbines and all kinds of made-in-Canada items having to be ordered, since such a development would have a probable Canadian content of approximately 90 per cent.

It is truly a political and economic disaster for our country that after almost ten years of legal proceedings between the two provinces, the stalemate is complete. God knows that both provinces suffer from a high level of unemployment at present. God knows that both provinces could gain from the economic activity brought about by those developments. I am thinking at any rate of Quebec where the James Bay development project is somewhat idling, where there are fewer workers than in the past, while many of them could undoubtedly find employment on North Shore rivers or even on the Churchill River. I am thinking, of course, of the large number of unemployed in Newfoundland who could also benefit from jobs created under an agreement between both governments and the carrying out of those huge hydroelectric development projects.

• (1620)

I will conclude by saying that I hope and pray the two governments will agree to get together and go back to the negotiating table to try and arrive at a deal which would cover the whole question of the existing contract between Newfoundland and Quebec about the Upper Churchill development, the Lower Churchill development as well as the development of the North Shore rivers. I believe the citizens of Newfoundland and Quebec would greatly benefit by such an agreement.

Bill C-108 does not deal only with these specific powers that we want to grant to the National Energy Board; it amends a number of other sections of the National Energy Board Act. One of my colleagues will explain those amendments in greater detail to the House, or I will do so in committee or at third reading. However, I would like to go over some of them quickly.

The amendment which removes from the board's jurisdiction the power to determine oil and natural gas export prices and gives it to the governor in council is quite understandable. The almost constant fluctuation in prices on the international scene has made this question a highly political one. It is, therefore, up to the political authority of this country to assume responsibility for it and not leave it with a quasi-judicial body.

Another amendment gives authority to the board to allocate oil and gas supplies to the various regions of the country. The objective, which is very simple, is to provide for future situations where Canadian oil demand might slightly exceed available supplies. Of course, the situation need not be a crisis. However, simple fairness demands that the board have the power to enable it to deal with an equitable allocation of the available resources between shippers, between provinces and among producers or producing areas.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the principal amendments we are proposing to the National Energy Board Act. I would like to repeat that the amendments we are asking this House to approve will help accelerate the implementation of certain elements of the National Energy Program, which is essential if we are to achieve energy security. This objective is vital to the wellbeing and future prosperity of Canadians, and I am certain that with the help of all Canadians there will be no let up in our pursuit of it. I will be very happy to appear before the special committee of this House which has been set up to hear the views of hon. members and to discuss the content of this particular bill with them.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois)—Energy—Inquiry whether Quebec percentage of gasoline tax is greater than percentage collected by Alberta; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—Finance—Processing of income tax returns. (b) Delay in payment of refunds; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Emergency Measures—Limits of Crown prerogative. (b) Avenues of redress.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-108, to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, after the many speeches and bills on energy resources, I could not remain silent with respect to this bill which is so important to a province like Quebec and, of course, to the rest of Canada as well.

I listened very attentively to the minister's presentation, which I found both very straightforward and very interesting. However, there is one comment I must make right away. The minister was comparing electric power to natural gas, and he implied that carrying natural gas or oil or whatever by pipeline is similar to the transmission of electric power. If I remember correctly, the procedures for establishing this method of supply from west to east were determined with the agreement of the provinces concerned. In the case of the bill being considered in the House today, there is a definite lack of similarity. Normally, I think, the National Energy Board has a very important role to play in developing our resources, and I feel that it should respond to, assist and even supplement the objectives and priorities that have been set by provinces, persons or companies. Here, the federal government has created a tool for the exploration and management of our natural resources for the benefit of the Canadian people.

I also heard the minister explain earlier in very simple terms what might happen if each province were allowed to purchase natural gas from a neighbouring province, take a profit and route it to Quebec City. However, the minister forgot a very basic factor, and this is inexcusable because he knows perfectly well that the objections raised by his own province are based on the fact that it has almost unlimited hydroelectric resources. And the minister failed to mention the consequences of this bill if it were to be ratified without the consent of both provinces. I think that this was a voluntary oversight which is extremely important if not essential for the people of Quebec. He is aware of the conditions in Quebec. He knows why Quebec objects but I should thank him and even congratulate him for emphasizing that the best solution would surely be that both provinces should come to an agreement. There is no doubt then that we would applaud a bill resulting from a negotiated agreement between Quebec and Newfoundland. Like the minister, we regret the dispute existing between Newfoundland and Quebec and both my Quebec and Newfoundland colleagues should be quite interested in a settlement and in a bill which would fulfil the aspirations of both provinces and which would be consistent, of course, with national legislation. The minister has carefully avoided saying that he does not want to intervene in provincial matters but nevertheless, it remains that if he decides to answer Newfoundland's call, he will not be fulfilling the wishes of Quebec. The minister should honestly and objectively try to pursue that possibility and arrange a settlement between the two provinces. But it is not by provoking one of the reluctant provinces with an Ottawa-imposed bill. The minister is certainly well aware that from the psychological point of view, this bill will be regarded by thousands of Quebecers as utterly unacceptable, and that the best solution would be the one he said he hoped for, namely, a negotiated settlement between the two provinces. But I have felt that under the present system, I certainly could not ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for an understanding government and co-operative federalism. There are probably a number of ministers who are more open to and eager for true federalism.

I think that the minister representing Quebec should take this opportunity to prevail upon those two provinces to come to an agreement; there is no doubt that under a federal system such as ours, the federal government has both the duty and responsibility to help them carry out such a great project as the development of our natural resources in the interest of all the provincial partners within this country. Because the minister stated that this bill is important and because it seems he introduced it halfheartedly, I feel, both as a Quebecer and as an elected Member of this Parliament, that I should urge all hon. members to make a special effort and in view of the bill which is now before the House, give the minister the time and the opportunity to make his proposal work. His intentions are most honourable, I am sure, for he has recognized that the best solution would be a negotiated settlement between Newfoundland and Quebec, and that the Quebec government has shown a degree of flexibility both on the possible reexamination of a contract which was entered into quite a long time ago and on the shared development of other hydroelectric projects.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I beg my hon. colleagues from Quebec and the other provinces for a six-month hoist on this bill. We are aware of the dilemma a number of hon. members are in because at the same time they must defend the interests of their respective provinces while defending those of all Canadians. We want to represent the interests of the provinces and try to adjust them to a national objective that would allow the ten provinces of this country to feel at home in Canada and want to be a part of this wonderful country.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel that it we rush the passing of this bill, we will antagonize one of the two provinces and possibly others, but one in particular that is represented here by 74 out of 75 hon. members, and whose people make up 25 per cent of the total Canadian population. I think I am being fair and equally mindful of the interests of Quebec, Newfoundland and Canada in requesting hon. members in this House for a hoist on the present bill with an amendment which I am about to read, Mr. Speaker; here it is:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-108, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

• (1640)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) would have noticed that I have just taken the Chair. Consequently, I only began to pay attention a moment ago. I believe he has put a motion for a six-month hoist on the present bill, seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I will read the motion.

[Translation]

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-108, An Act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

[English]

The Chair wishes to consult for a moment with one of the Table officers to determine whether this is consistent with the fact that we have a House order before us. As soon as I have completed that consultation, I will determine whether the motion is in order or not.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted my position to be known and I am sure it is shared by the Opposition members as well, because I think that by asking the government for a six-month postponement, I am also going along with the comments made earlier by the minister when he again asked Quebec and Newfoundland to return to the negotiation table. As the minister is well aware, if his bill were to be passed quickly, it would place his own province in a difficult position with respect to the development of its hydro-electric resources and sales abroad. Of course, this should not be interpreted as meaning that I am opposed to Newfoundland developing its resources, quite the opposite. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and in the hope that all the members of this House will realize the relevancy and also the dangers of this bill, and I know that my Quebec colleagues are aware of the original objection, not only of the provincial government but also of thousands of Quebecers concerning the interpretation of this bill, and also of the position Quebec would be in if this bill were approved before an agreement is negotiated with the province of Newfoundland—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), but the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order and apologize to my colleague for Joliette for interrupting him, but this is not at all my purpose. I simply want a clarification, Mr. Speaker. Have we now gone on to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Joliette or are we still discussing the bill now under consideration in accordance with the House order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I shall inform the House presently of the decision made concerning the motion introduced by the hon. member for Joliette. For the time being, I am accepting generally that the hon. member should deal both with the bill and the motion. However, the hon. member for Longueuil is quite right. Until the Chair has decided whether or not the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Joliette is in order or not, technically, it cannot be discussed. With the understanding of the House, I shall continue to recognize the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, to help you out, I shall go on asking my friends opposite to realize the need for a postponement instead of provoking an obstinate stance and even a kind of revolt in our own province concerning legislation which would not be shared by the Quebec government or the government of Newfoundland. The same could also apply to any other province. The minister in charge stressed that the Newfoundland-Quebec problem does not date back to 1976 but goes back several years earlier. It is therefore my view that it can be referred to quite objectively, Mr. Speaker, and I have no intention of branding anyone as a traitor on the occasion of this debate. But I would like my Quebec colleagues to take this opportunity to accept a six-month hoist on second reading, because of the consequences it could have on a province such as mine. And it is my hope that if such a proposal was accepted, and this goes for Newfoundland as much as Quebec, with the awareness of the governments' intentions, I feel there could be a resumption of negotiations and there might be a new urgency to negotiate and agree on the importance of a mutual settlement.

If I understood right, you are nodding that my amendment is accepted—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I regret that I persist in interrupting the hon. member. Perhaps we may deal with the motion now before us. I have read the motion to hon. members and have indicated that it is, in fact, a six-month hoist on the present bill.

Hon. members will notice that I have had an opportunity to consult with the Table officers. The motion is found to be in order. Accordingly, I think it is worth commenting briefly on the procedures which will take place shortly so that hon. members will feel comfortable about how we proceed.

The motion will come up for a vote at the same time as the present bill under debate comes up for a vote. According to the terms of the House order, that could be no later than 8.07 o'clock tonight. It could, of course, be earlier if no hon. members seek to have the floor in order to continue debate I would first have to put the question on the six-month hoist motion. Depending on whether that motion fails or succeeds, we would either proceed or not proceed with putting the motion on the second reading of the bill.

I am making some comment because the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) has quite validly pointed out on a point of order that once a motion is before the House it ought to be debated. Indeed, that is technically correct. The six-month hoist motion which is now before the House is the subject matter of debate.

However, the tradition of the House has been that because it is a technical motion, nonetheless, in the debate on such a motion the Chair has not called hon. members out of order if, at the same time, they want to continue discussing the bill which was under debate as well. Unless otherwise instructed by hon. members, the Chair will be very flexible in permitting debate, whether on the motion or on the bill itself.

I trust, then, that hon. members are now fully informed as to the procedures we will be following.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, there is no intention on this side of the House to interrupt the honorable member for Joliette

(Mr. La Salle), let alone restricting him in this debate. We simply wanted a clarification. We did not wish the order of this House amended and the hon. member for Joliette can go on.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, clearly my amendment changes nothing to the legislation, aside from deferring the bill for six months. I would not like to waste the time of the House of course, because I know other members have comments to make on this, but I shall never prevail enough upon my colleagues from both sides of the House to accept my invitation because this proposal is in keeping with our responsibilities and objective of finding an acceptable compromise so that any legislation we pass may meet with the approval of the provinces. It should and could.

I think that we could then show that we fully realize the problem which Quebec and Newfoundland are facing and we will urge the minister concerned as well as the government of Canada to come to an arrangement and reach their objective. I do not think that I will make further comment on that legislation today but I hope that the amendment which I tabled will be favourably received by a majority in this House because such amendment provides an opportunity to avoid serious problems and we know that if it were negatived it could be interpreted in my province as a provocation directed against thousands of Quebecers to avoid those problems. If I am to take the words of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who stated this afternoon that at no time would he intervene in a provincial issue, I hope he will hear my appeal and agree to a six-month hoist which should be put to good use for the benefit of both provinces involved and all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to make some comments on Bill C-108. I am glad to have had the opportunity of listening to the speech of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). I did not hear all that he said, but I certainly heard the last part and I want to comment on that later on.

First, I want to trace the involvement of the federal government in this important hydro development in Labrador. This bill does not deal, of course, with the present Upper Churchill Falls development, the megawatts flowing through the Hydro-Quebec grid to the New York market and elsewhere.

There is a contract between two hydro bodies, and it has been alleged that that contract is certainly unfair to my province. I support that position. I do feel that a re-examination of that contract is in order. There is no question but that Newfoundland is not extracting from the sale of that resource its fair share as the owner of the hydro resource. That contract must be re-examined and changed in favour of Newfoundland, however it is done. The present contract is unfair to the province. It must be re-examined and changed to give the owners of that resource a fairer share of the return from that resource.

However, the contract was negotiated, not with the federal government but between two governments and, indeed, two hydroelectric distributors. To talk about that is to talk about history.

From the point of view of the national government, I would like to refer back several years to a federal-provincial conference. I believe it was held in western Canada. Out of that federal-provincial conference came the agreement on the part of the Government of Canada to become a partner in the Lower Churchill Development Corporation. The Lower Churchill Development Corporation is a partnership between the Government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland. We are equal partners in that enterprise even though we do not own that resource. The claim has been made from time to time that ownership of resources is very important. However, in this particular case, even though we do not own the resource, it is quite clear that the rivers are owned by the provinces and that the produce from those rivers is owned by those provinces within whose boundaries the rivers flow.

Canada became a partner in that enterprise because we saw that the development of that resource was important, not only to Newfoundland and to Quebec but, indeed, to the entire country, as an alternate source of clean and perpetual energy and that it was a good investment for the people of Canada. Therefore, we became partners in order to develop possibly 10,000 megawatts of hydroelectricity in the entire Labrador area. Thus far Canada has put between $6 million and $8 million into that Lower Churchill Development Corporation, basically in order to upgrade engineering studies and marketing surveys because we felt that was important. Of course, this had to be done before a package could be put together. So there has been an investment of that amount of money by this government.

Similarly, in the budget before the budget of last November, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) put aside $200 million as the share of the Government of Canada in the equity of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation for that Lower Churchill project. Again, that was a financial contribution by the Government of Canada to that very important project. Now, today, we have this legislation before us which is further evidence of the commitment of this government to pushing forward that hydroelectric development.

This legislation was placed before us by a minister from the province of Quebec. I want to congratulate him for bringing forward the legislation and to give him all the support I can concerning this legislation. He recognizes, coming from the province of Quebec, that the interests of Newfoundland, Quebec and, indeed, the country, as he said in his speech, can be served by pushing forward this hydroelectric development by all possible means.

What we have here is legislation which would permit a power corridor across Quebec for hydroelectric development in Newfoundland. We all agree, as I believe I heard the hon. member for Joliette agree, that this is not the optimum solution either, from a practical point of view. Although I do not have the exact, up-to-date figures from an economics point of view, I suspect that the figures would show that a separate transmission line across Quebec for Labrador power is marginally economical and that the most economical method would be to pipe the hydroelectric power through the Quebec-Hydro grid to market at a cost which would ensure a fair and reasonable return to Newfoundland. That certainly must be established. I believe that can be done and that it would be the optimum and most economical solution. I hope it can be done by bringing the three governments together.

Today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) offered his offices to bring together Newfoundland, Quebec and Canada in order to see if an agreement can be worked out which would be beneficial to Newfoundland, Quebec and Canada in the development of the total hydroelectric resource which is so important to all of us. I hope that that can be done. I urge all governments involved to come together co-operatively to seek a common solution.

We are behind this effort as the Government of Canada, financially and otherwise, because we believe it would be a good deal for this country. The Minister of Finance has said that he is prepared to invest money and capital in this project. I hope that the governments can come together to seek that co-operative solution. But if that cannot happen, what we have on the books as of today is legislation which gives equality to Newfoundland. That is the real importance of this legislation. What we are talking about here is a matter of principle that all Canadians hold to be important, the right of a province to develop and sell a resource, the right of equality.

• (1700)

In his speech the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources laid out how he sees the principle of equality applying here. He asked how the people of Quebec would feel with regard to natural gas coming across another province if that province did not agree to have it pass through that province to be received in the province of Quebec. I believe the people of Quebec understand that argument.

Putting aside the present government of Quebec, I believe the people of Quebec are fair and reasonable people. They want equality in this country. They have fought, and rightly so, for equality. My colleagues on this side of the House have fought for equality in language rights. We now have that equality. The language of the two founding peoples of this country are equal. That is the issue here. The people of Quebec appreciate that principle.

The hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) and I share territory in that great area of the Canadian shield which encompasses both Labrador and Quebec. His people in Fermont and my people in Labrador City visit frequently. They talk together and share sports and social activities. There are no barriers there. Sometimes they speak in French, sometimes in English. The point is they understand and there is no barrier between them. They understand the principle embodied in this bill, and that is equality.

That is all Newfoundland asks. It asks to be equal in law with other provinces which have the right to develop and export a natural resource. We are talking about rights, equality and a chance. What is involved in this bill may not be the optimum solution, but it is important that it be established because it is a matter of rights and equality.

I would not want to delay the establishment of that important principle by this House. Far too long we have put off establishing the principle that hydroelectric development should be equal to natural gas, oil or any other natural resource. I am in favour of this bill being read and voted on as quickly as possible.

We cannot delay this principle or delay equality. We must have it now. In a sense, there has already been a delay. Draft legislation was before this House last spring. Throughout the summer, fall and winter, people and governments had the chance to study what the Government of Canada intended and wanted. That draft legislation was put forward and examined. It could have been commented on. In a sense, there was a delay in the period during which the legislation was examined.

I do not think the people of Quebec would see this as a provocation but rather as a chance to establish equal rights. They understand that principle. From my point of view and that of the people of my province, this bill is very important. It should be debated quickly and voted on without delay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before recognizing the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), perhaps I can make a correction. Earlier I indicated that under the House order covering the energy bills, debate would not continue past 8.07. I have subsequently been advised that is incorrect. In fact, the time will be 7.57.

Also, from recollection I believe, and I will verify it now, that the hon. member who is about to take the floor on behalf of the New Democratic Party will not have more than 29 minutes to speak. I see a nod at the Table. This is the extent of time remaining available to the hon. member's party.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when you said that I would only have 29 minutes, I noted muted applause in the chamber. I want to speak on Bill C-108 and say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we are opposed to this bill for three reasons. In the course of my remarks, I will also address some remarks to the adjournment motion.

First, the bill drops the provision which was in the draft bill and the National Energy Program which promised that the degree of Canadian ownership of energy companies wishing to export oil and gas would be a factor in deciding whether an export licence was issued. This is backtracking by the government on the promise to promote Canadianization of the oil industry that was set out in the National Energy Program. I will come back to that in a moment.

Second, the bill still allows export licences for oil and gas to run for 25 years. In view of what can only be called the dismal record of the National Energy Board in its supply projections, we believe that maximum is too high. Ten years would be more appropriate. We will therefore be introducing the appropriate amendment at the proper time.

Third, the bill allows the federal government, through the National Energy Board, to expropriate provincial land to construct an electric power corridor. As has already been said, this power now exists for oil and gas pipelines. However, this power could be invoked by the federal government to take sides in the current dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland over the Churchill Falls power agreement. We on this side want to see a negotiated settlement rather than the possibility of this new power being applied in the dispute.

We believe this bill is premature. I will go into the reasons for that in a few minutes. We believe it will be perceived as an interference in the affairs of Newfoundland and Quebec. Accordingly, we will support the Conservative amendment introduced a few moments ago by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

Let me deal with these points in detail and as succinctly as I can. Clause 24, which is found on page 13 of the bill, amends Section 83. It drops the provision which gave the National Energy Board the authority to consider the degree of Canadian participation in oil and gas to be exported. Again, this is backtracking from the original commitment of Canadianization in the National Energy Program. That program was brought down in October, 1980. I quote from page 50 of the program:

> The National Energy Board will be asked to take Canadian ownership levels into account, from now on, in considering export applications. The Government of Canada would prefer that in granting such licences, the Board would give preference to Canadian-owned and Canadian-controlled firms.

There was a commitment to Canadianize, that is, a commitment to look at those Canadian companies which wanted to export gas in particular. A number of small Canadian companies have shut-in gas. They should have the same chance to export as the big boys. The original draft of this bill was prepared to give that chance. That measure should be reinstated in this bill. This is one of the fundamental reasons why we oppose this bill.

Clause 26 on page 13 amends Section 85. It still allows an export licence for gas to run for a maximum of 25 years. Clause 22 also brings oil under this provision. Under Section 83, the National Energy Board is supposed to allow exports only after assuring itself they are surplus to our future requirements.

• (1710)

Now, Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board has a dismal record on this. This is the same board that recommended to the minister that we had over 300 years' supply of oil. Now we have an oil shortage. That is part of the reason why we have this energy problem in Canada. Oil is the only substance of which we are energy short. We exported in the early 1970s, at one time, half of our daily production. We were misled into doing that. The board did not project properly and we were stuck with some long-term export contracts. We literally exported away all our surplus oil, at tremendous and incredible cost to the Canadian consumer. Mr. Speaker, I would like to warn that the same thing may happen with natural gas. We say we have a surplus of gas, but that surplus may be gone sooner than we expect.

Let me just give you chapter and verse, Mr. Speaker. In June, 1971 the then minister of energy predicted that we had 900 years' worth of natural gas and 400 years' worth of oil. Massive exports were authorized in the late 1970s by the National Energy Board and the cabinet. Mr. Eric Kierans, who served in the cabinet at that time, wrote a very interesting article entitled "The Day the Cabinet was Misled". He said:

> The NEB based its conclusion on figures supplied by the petroleum industry which was, and still is, dominated by the multinational oil companies.

That is what we have been arguing in this House for so long, that Petro-Canada must be in the driver's seat so that this domination will never happen again.

In the 1970s, Canada was exporting nearly one-half its daily oil production to the United States. In 1974 the NEB revised its position and stated there would be an oil shortfall by 1982. In 1974-75 the NEB revised its position and stated that we would need Arctic gas in 1983, that we would be running short of gas by 1985. In 1975 the NEB said oil exports would have to be eliminated by the end of 1981. In 1977 the NEB said we would have an oil shortfall by 1985.

In 1979 the NEB recommended, and the Conservative government approved, additional natural gas exports based on the conclusion that there was one-third more in natural gas reserves than was previously estimated. In 1981 the NEB supply and demand report stated that we have a ten-year supply of conventional oil from established reserves and that for gas, supplies from current reserves would be adequate to meet domestic and export requirements for the next ten years. I quote from that report:

> There does not appear to be any surplus available at this time to support new export.

These are just a few examples of the bad forecasting shown by the National Energy Board. What we would propose, on what we say is a weakness in this bill, is that these long-term contracts should be shortened.

I want to say a few words, with respect to the third reason we are against this bill, a matter to which much of the debate has been addressed this afternoon.

[Translation]

The other reason why the New Democratic Party is against Bill C-108, to amend the National Energy Board Act, is that it will make it possible for the federal government to get involved in a strictly provincial dispute and to favour one province to the detriment of another. Under this bill, the federal government will have the authority, through the National Energy Board, to expropriate part of the Quebec territory for the purpose of constructing an electrical power corridor to export electricity elsewhere in Canada or in the United States. We feel that this new authority of the Board will result in a direct intervention of the Liberal federal government in the Churchill Falls dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland. The federal government could use its new powers for constructing a corridor on Quebec territory, at the request of the Newfoundland government. But without Quebec's consent, such a unilateral action would be a denial of co-operative federalism. The NDP, therefore, stands firm in its conviction that this dispute should be settled through negotiations between the parties, even if arbitration is necessary. My party cannot accept that the federal government should impose unilaterally its own solution one way or another. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to understand how hon. members from the Liberal Party representing Quebec can support a bill which challenges the territorial integrity of their province. How can they still pretend to be the legitimate protectors of their fellow Quebecers' interests?

[English]

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in his speech said that he did not want to get involved in this dispute. But he also said that he was asked by the government of Newfoundland to bring in this bill. There are obvious reasons why the government of Newfoundland wanted this bill, that is, as a club in its dispute with Quebec.

Clearly, the most contentious part of this bill is the power that will be granted to the National Energy Board to expropriate land for the purpose of constructing an electrical power corridor. It is true that the NEB already has this power over oil and gas pipelines. The minister said that, and I agree. The problem is that if Quebec does not give Newfoundland a better deal on the Churchill Falls contract, the NEB could step in and give Newfoundland a hydro corridor through Quebec for the export of Labrador power. The power is there in the bill and it could be used. The federal government has jumped into a snake pit, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, because both Newfoundland and Quebec, to put it very mildly, have very strong views on this issue.

Two principles are involved, Mr. Speaker. In our view, there is the principle that the federal government must have an overriding right to legislate on energy, for the national good. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources put it well, Mr. Speaker. For example, if Saskatchewan had blocked the oil pipeline from Alberta to Manitoba and Ontario, the federal government would have had the right at some point to step in and ensure that Canadian oil flowed to eastern consumers. Therefore, this power that has been put in the bill, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, is constitutionally within the federal domain. We agree with that and we think he is right.

There is another principle involved, one that is equally important, Mr. Speaker, in a federal state. The federal government should not favour one side or the other in a dispute between two provinces. Unfortunately, in this case the two principles clash. We in the New Democratic Party believe that this bill is premature. We wonder why the Liberal Party is proceeding with it when Newfoundland and Quebec are presently negotiating the Churchill Falls contract. Is this, Mr. Speaker, part of the Trudeau-Lévesque blood feud? I hope not. We prefer negotiation and the principles of co-operative federalism that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) apparently has thrown out of the window.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, so shortly after Quebec was isolated in the Constitution agreement, we need to offer to Quebec an olive branch rather than—if I may mix my metaphors—waving a red flag to a bull. We need to offer an olive branch; this surely is not the time for anything else. That is why I differ fundamentally with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Let us be clear then, Mr. Speaker. Under this 65-year contract which was negotiated in 1969—I think it commenced about 1976—Hydro-Quebec purchased Churchill Falls power from Newfoundland. It purchased it at 3.6 mills per kilowatt hour. That power is presently being sold by Quebec to the United States for 30 mills to 40 mills per kilowatt hour. That is a very bad deal for Newfoundlanders.

I understand the Quebec argument, Mr. Speaker. Quebec argues that Hydro-Quebec took all the capital risks involved in the project. They did. Quebec completed a bad deal contract, for example, by exporting over a long period of time cheap energy to Ontario. That is true. Also, the 1927 court decision to give Labrador to Newfoundland is disputed by Quebec. I understand that. But let us, however, call a spade a spade. This is a bad deal and it needs renegotiation.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the negotiations are going on. We should give them a chance, it seems to me, before bringing in this controversial measure. That is we support the amendment proposing a six-month hoist.

• (1720)

It is extremely unlikely that the bill would bring a speedy resolution of the problem. Instead, the issue could be tied up in the courts for years. I wish the minister were here as I would put the argument to him that the bill is counterproductive and will not lead to a settlement. Rather, it raises a lot of problems. Furthermore, the legislation does not deal with the real problems, which for people living in Labrador are high unemployment, poor social services, alienation from the power base of St. John's and people having no say over their own lives. I suspect that people on the Quebec side of the border have the same problems.

We must ask ourselves if the economic problems will be solved as a result of this bill. I believe that they will not and that people will be put against each other on the grounds of which side of the border they live on. St. John's and Quebec City share the same problems. They need similar regional development plans to get away from the boom and bust economies of their hinterlands in Labrador and northeastern Quebec. Both provinces should share in the development of that region. As Newfoundland needs Quebec's agreement on its equitable arrangements for the transmission of electricity, so Quebec needs Newfoundland's approval for the development of generating capacity on the five rivers whose head waters lie in Labrador. They have mutual interests.

The fundamental fault in the legislation is that it attempts to provide a legal solution to a political question. As a consequence of this, we are asked to choose between two alternatives, neither of which addresses the real problem or will provide practical solutions. This is not the time to bring in a bill of this nature. We need co-operative federalism now more than ever.

This party wants to see the dispute settled by negotiation between the two provinces. I have said that I think the contract should be renegotiated. If these negotiations fail then the issue should be put to a board of arbitration. Only after the total breakdown of negotiations should we even consider the exercise of federal power. In other words, the exercise of federal power, which I support in principle, should only be used as a condition precedent after the breakdown of the negotiations.

I should like to conclude by quoting a great Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The same quotation was used by Mackenzie King, speaking in the House of Commons on the conscription crisis. I wish I had the quotation in French but I do not. I think it was made in English. It pertains to the situation today, Mr. Speaker. I would ask hon. members opposite, especially those from Quebec, to think about this. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that if there is anything to which he had devoted his political life, it was to try to promote unity, harmony and amity between the diverse elements of this country. That is what we should be doing in this Newfoundland-Quebec dispute. We should not take any steps that would not promote unity, harmony and amity. This is where I disagree with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We should not take any steps that could even be perceived to promote disunity, disharmony and bad relations between two provinces that have much to do together.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks will be in connection with the motion for a six-month hoist moved by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). I support the motion wholeheartedly for several reasons, some of which have already been discussed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who put them very cogently.

I should like to remind the House that the function of the federal government in a federal system is not to get mixed up in disputes between two provinces and to take one side or the other. The minister is well aware of this, as he has shown by twice repeating his argument on the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute.

One of the reasons for giving the bill a six-month hoist is that every member of the Conservative Party was behind the National Energy Board legislation. It is this party's legislation, put on the books in 1959 in an effort to head off the very problems that have arisen. The problems have arisen because the original legislation was not enforced.

The whole development concept held by this party in 1957-58-59 was that we should bring this country together by tying up the energy sources of all parts of the country. Then we should give Canadians the first chance to have access to those resources and we should devote all our technical knowledge to assessing the resources of the country and getting the maximum benefit from them.

In general, the legislation of 1959 gave the National Energy Board two duties. First of all, it was to be a court of record on questions of adjudicating the technical details of certificates of convenience and so on. Over the last 25 years the National Energy Board has done a fairly good job in this respect, although at times it has seemed a little slow.

For the first ten years of the board's life it did not exercise its advisory function even though the act is very clear on this. In the relevant section the word "shall" is repeated six times and the duties of the board are outlined.

If my memory serves me correctly, the Department of Justice took a very active part in drafting the legislation. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was then attached to the Department of Justice, so I am sure he will remember how hard the politicians fought to get clear-cut instructions for this independent board. There is a weakness in the act, however, because the word "may" was left in. The word "shall" appears six times but then the word "may" appears. Section 23 of the National Energy Board Act reads as follows:

> Studies and reports of the board made under this part may be made public with the approval of the Minister.

I support the motion for a six-month hoist because when an amendment is proposed to such a strategic act in the history of resource development in Canada, it should be enforced. When I inquired in 1972 why this was not being done, I was told that the people on the energy board were not competent enough. The truth was that some civil servants in the department decided that they wanted the right to make these decisions and to advise the government about the future of energy. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made reference to this.

I do not particularly blame the board. It is tough to work under a group of civil servants or mandarins that do not insist upon the requirements of the act being carried out and, of course, there is no future in the civil service for those who do not bow their heads to this small group of mandarins. The amendment which is dealt with by Bill C-108 should address the question of the fundamental powers of the board. If those powers are allocated to the board, then we must make sure that it exercises them.

Before I come to the main thrust of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the amendment ignores international law. On page 2, at lines 17 and 18, the bill gives jurisdiction to the board for the development of oil resources at the bottom of the sea for a distance of 200 nautical miles. In God's name, who put 200 nautical miles into the National Energy Board Act? Under international law the resources at the bottom of the sea belong to the people who live beside the sea, as far out as they can physically develop them. That remains the law and it has been ratified by all nations. Sure enough, a few civil servants in several countries have conspired for the last 20 years to get that changed and to limit it. These amendments to the law of the sea which are being put forward to the United Nations are stealing the property of the Canadian people off our shores. Here we have a group of so-called lawyers drafting legislation like this which puts in words like "two hundred nautical miles" in Clause 1. That phrase appears again in Clause 28.

• (1730)

I say with all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, that if this government does not stand up and take control of these nitwits who call themselves lawyers and who write into regulations something which is not right, then this government deserves to go down to defeat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: The sooner the better.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): We fought hard to get control of these undersea resources, and a group which was not elected and never advised their ministers accurately, conspired with their colleagues in other countries to give it away without even telling their innocent ministers what the truth is. The offshore belongs to us under international law, as the offshore of the United States belongs to them, and where we meet halfway we will draw a line. It is all in the terms here. So once again I say to members of the House: stand up and do your duty here and do not let these drafters get away with that type of nonsense.

We drafted this bill 25 years ago to lay the framework for a great development program in Canada. We wanted to put in the means of moving all types of energy back and forth across Canada, and we went to the various regions of the country to lay out these programs, which were accepted. If you look at the record, in the fall of 1957, a few months after the government changed, we put through the House the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. It laid down that the people of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island had to have some form of concerted energy development. They agreed, both Liberal and Conservative provinces, to that act. We got agreement from all provinces, including Quebec, that we should work together and have a national power grid from one end of the country to the other, from the Yukon River in the northwest to the Churchill in the east. They called it the Hamilton line. That power grid is the key to the dilemma in which the government finds itself today in relation to the dispute between Newfoundland and Quebec.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) was quite sincere when he said, let us try and put this thing forward and hope that Quebec will not see it as an insult or as taking sides. But the truth is that Quebec already sees it as an insult, already sees it as the federal government's interfering with them. How can we get away from that? Give this bill a six-month hoist and bring back amendments which will have the NEB playing an active part in putting into effect across Canada a national power grid, and the principle on which it will operate is that of a common carrier. That, to the uninitiated, means that once you build that great power grid in cooperation with all the provinces, every person will have the right to use that grid, whether it be a power line or a pipeline.

When you look at this bill carefully you find that an oil or natural gas carrier must be a common carrier; there is no monopoly held by one company or one province. But when we go into the amendment we have before us we see a technical and legal device whereby an interprovincial power line is called an international power line, which would give the federal government jurisdiction, giving it the right to come into a province and do certain things. That was not in the original bill because of the fact, as the minister stated, that we did not have the technical expertise or knowledge at that time and we were trying hard to get it before we added powers to the NEB under the act. This amendment adds that power but does it by the trick of calling it an international power line as opposed to "interprovincial". However, they missed out on the essential which makes legislation like this work. Once you go into a monopoly for the carrying of anything, you create in effect a great danger to this country. To prevent that, we should accept the principle of the common carrier. And if we could just get this legislation out of the House for a little while, then maybe the minister, who is very intelligent, could go back and look at these debates we had 25 years ago. Perhaps he could get from the government files a report which was submitted in 1963, and have a look at it. That report was done on behalf of the ten provinces, including Quebec, with the full support of the Duplessis administration and later on the Lesage administration. All that information lies in government vaults, and it lays down the economic alternatives in building a national power grid.

By doing this through the national power grid you would not be interfering with Newfoundland and Quebec; by using this principle you would not be isolating Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick from access to this power. You can see the realization of what many people have hoped and dreamed for, the full development of the Churchill River, the Fundy tides, utilization of coal, and access to low-cost liquified natural fuels, all pooled into one great power grid moving energy up and down the country. It would make the job of building this nation so much easier. We should look at the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act as a framework for solving the differences between Newfoundland and Quebec, and then extend that all across the country. Without doing anything to hurt future generations, we would have an efficient method of moving energy across the country, and it would go a tremendous distance toward giving us energy independence. There has never been an energy crisis in Canada. There has always been and there will always be enough energy if we do not muck it up. It is just a question of building the machinery to move it around at low cost to give Canadians the big advantage their future demands they should have.

I hope the minister will go back to the drawing board and consider the concept of a national power grid with the principle of a common carrier. There is much law on that topic. If he is going to amend the original act, let him at the same time make sure members of the National Energy Board do their duty by carrying out the provisions of the act, building up the expertise and making projections. There will then be some sort of advice in the hands of the government on which to make decisions.

Finally, Canadians fought hard to win jurisdiction over the bottom of the sea. Canadians fought for this right. We brought the great powers to our support, reluctant though they were. Eighty-six nations in Geneva voted unanimously for the resolution in 1958 which was later approved by the United Nations. What we proposed and fought for is now the international law of the world. And any time anyone infringes on that law we have the right to take them to court at The Hague. We have a right to impose our will because what is off our shores is ours.

I hope this knowledge will get into the hands of the drafters of legislation in the Department of Justice and in other departments. I hope they will get away from this business of assuming that because there is a bunch of nitwits trying to reform something that it is law. It is only law when legislation is passed. Meanwhile, we own our offshore property and no one touches it. The British fleet off the Falkland Islands is teaching that lesson to one country in the southern hemisphere which was caught carrying out a little bit of imperialistic aggression just a month ago.

I think we in Canada can do no less. What is ours is ours unless we give it up by agreement.

I hope these views will be taken seriously by hon. members and that the government will give us a six-month hoist on this legislation in order to make a better bill out of it.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not take too much time, but I have a few remarks to address on Bill C-108. It is typical of too many bills drafted by this minister and his officials in the department. Bill C-108 is one of the eight divisions of Bill C-94 which in itself is almost an omnibus bill in the sense of mixing apples and oranges and confusing the issue.

The minister spent most of his time dealing with the provisions having to do with putting power lines under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board in the same way that gas and oil pipelines are. I do not think anybody in the House, wherever they are or wherever they sit, would argue against the notion that we should, in fact, be a common market in Canada. What applies to pipelines applies to power utilities, and the minister covered all of those points very eloquently. I will not repeat them other than to say there is a fundamental, bottom line equity to that element, and certainly no reasonable person could oppose that.

In terms of the situation between Quebec and Newfoundland at this time, the real source of contention is that awful contract which was signed by a Liberal premier of Newfoundland, which really does shortchange Newfoundland. There is no question that contract shortchanges Newfoundland and it shortchanges Newfoundland badly. This bill does not deal with that, nor does it address the real sore in the circumstances.

One would think, over the last eight and a half years, that if we have learned anything about energy in this country we should have learned that unilateralism does not work. Big Brother in Ottawa cannot unilaterally impose its will. Every time it tries, whether it is by putting a price freeze on crude oil in western Canada or by trying to impose a taxation regime in opposition to the province of British Columbia, Alberta or Saskatchewan, it fails. When that is done, it causes bickering, retaliation and uncertainty. Lay-offs and loss of jobs result. There are no winners as a result of unilateral action. In Canada, a federal state, there is no alternative to negotiation, painful as it is, and especially if you happen to be a federal bureaucrat and believe that you have the right answers, to negotiate is painful. It is much better to have the power and to be able to say, "We can do it." But Canada does not work that way. Until the drafters of legislation recognize that, we will carry on with this interminable debating, arguing, fighting, loss of national will and purpose, which further weaken the fabric of this country and cause more and more Canadians to look at extreme options, such as the Western Canada Concept etc. We have had enough of that. We do not need any more of that. What we need is a government to take its responsibilities seriously and to start negotiating. But the real crunch in this bill is not the electricity portion, which really has nothing to do with the National Energy Program, but it is the parts that deal with oil and gas. Clause 26(2) of this bill will provide to the governor in council—in other words, to the same officials who brought us that disastrous National Energy Program which has caused the departure from this country of $17 billion at least and which has caused thousands and thousands of people to be put out of work and has put off our energy self-sufficiency for a decade or two—the control over the price of exported gas and oil.

The minister said in the House that the reason for the government's wanting to do it was that the question is political. He said it is a political question. The price of gas and oil is determined by a marketplace, not a perfect marketplace, but a marketplace that is being influenced by OPEC and others, but a marketplace nonetheless.

We export oil and gas to the United States, basically. Some time in the future maybe we will export some liquefied products to other countries. But we have one customer, and that customer, the U.S. has a deregulated market. There is the mixing of supply and demand and thereby a market price. If we want to sell into that market, we have to satisfy that market price. To say the pricing of gas and oil for export is a political question, and therefore is to be put in the hands of those officials who drafted the Nationl Energy Program, is absurd. More power is what the officials are seeking. It is power so they can go to the government of British Columbia and say, "I know you have some natural gas you want to export, but we think this is the price." The producers in British Columbia might want to say, "That is not what the market says," but the official will say, "That is too bad. We have the power. We are deciding the price." They could go to the producers of shut-in heavy oil in Saskatchewan and say, "We are going to allow you to export that heavy oil but only at this price." But the producers, who know more about the market and who have forgotten more about marketing than those officials will ever learn, will say, "But that is not the market price." But this bill will state, "Give the power to those officials to do whatever they want".

No responsible parliamentarian could vote for that delegation of authority to those people, when there is a clear admission that what is involved is politics. The minister said that it was a political question to keep Premier Bennett, Premier Lougheed and now Premier-elect Devine in place. This is what this absurd provision is all about.

What is even worse is that on page 16 the same officials are allowed to allocate gas and oil in the country. They shall decide who shall get it. The minister said that this would be done in the event of shortages, but the bill does not say anything about shortages. The bill indicates that the governor in council shall allocate gas and oil. What happens when a province has a dispute with the federal government about taxes, as occurred recently? We will be asked to put authority in the hands of the minister. We will be asked to put a club in his hands which says, "Look, folks, you will have to see it my way or else under the authority granted by this provision we will allocate gas and oil in the way which will do your province a great deal of damage." This provision will affect consumers, utilities, companies, provinces, regions and cities. The city of Medicine Hat is currently suing the government over the natural gas and gas liquids tax. Under this provision the minister could say, "Look, Medicine Hat, stop your suit or we will not allocate gas to you. We now have the power to allocate who shall use gas and oil in the country."

We are being asked to put this power in the hands of the people who introduced the National Energy Program which brought the country's economy to its knees. No self-respecting Member of Parliament should be asked to vote for the provision, especially no self-respecting Member of Parliament who is concerned about the country.

Finally, Clause 30 on page 19 reads in part:

> The governor in council may by regulation exempt any oil or gas or any kind, quality or class thereof . . . from the operation . . . of this act.

This means that the National Energy Board may in fact have all its authority taken away if it does not behave itself. Then we will have a body which purports to be a semi-judicial body. It will have that visage or claim to be that, but in fact it will have no such power because of this provision. It will mean a total politicization of the National Energy Board—it will pretend to be one thing for the benefit of the public but will be nothing more than an instrument of government.

Even worse is Section 89(1) on page 19 which reads:

> The governor in council may make regulations for carrying the purposes and provisions of this act into effect and may . . . designate any product resulting from the processing or refining of oil or coal as an oil product; and . . . any product resulting from the processing of gas as a gas product.

I have just described any product resulting from the processing of oil or gas. I have described 90 per cent of the products in any department store. I think my shirt is cotton, but if it were polyester I have described it. I have described rubber heels of shoes, automobile tires, nylons, plastic combs, everything based on oil and natural gas. A huge array of products can be designated by the governor in council as falling within the ambit of the act.

I should like to refer to what was said by the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association. They are negotiating with the Japanese because they want to sell some petrochemicals to them. It will be of benefit to the Canadian economy; it will generate jobs and foreign exchange. In other words, it is very beneficial to Canada. The Japanese are not fools. They have read this provision. They could say, "How can we sign a contract with you for polyethylene, polystyrene, polypropylene and polyvinyl chloride when it says in the act that the same people who brought in the national energy policy with its 25 per cent confiscation on behalf of Petro-Canada can, without parliamentary approval or without asking anyone, put those products under the direct control of the act? We could find our supplies cut off." This is what the potential purchasers in Japan are saying to the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association. It would be nice to give them some comfort, but how can we, given the track record?

The minister talked a long time about electricity. The reality is that the bill neuters the National Energy Board. This bill puts in the hands of officials the power to set price and to allocate quantities for oil and gas in a way which I believe may well be unconstitutional and will certainly lead to more friction between producing and consuming provinces. It will not contribute to tranquil relationships in the energy sector. Although the minister talked about electricity, he did not include it in the items he would take under the power of the federal government. Why was electricity not included under these powers? Many people who are WCC members know exactly why. This is the sad thing about what is happening here. This is why any self-respecting Canadian who is concerned about what is happening and knows a little about the energy situation and the responsibilities of the National Energy Board has to vote against the bill. This is why we put forth the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Out of courtesy to the Chair, some hon. members have called for the question to be put. If it is the will of the House that the question now be put, it will be put on the motion for the six-month hoist of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I see the parliamentary secretary is seeking the floor, but if there is a proposal with respect to deferring the vote and the bells, the Chair would serve the House well by putting the question, dealing with the yeas and nays, and if at that point there was a motion to defer the vote until eight o'clock, perhaps it could be entertained. If that is an agreeable way to proceed, I will put the motion now.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was not party to consultations on this question, but I understand that it was agreed we would adjourn now, return at eight o'clock, and put the question at that time. If unanmimous consent could be sought, I believe Your Honour would find it forthcoming.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I believe there is disposition on all sides of the House to an order which would permit us to adjourn for the supper break and deal with all matters at eight o'clock.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, that is the result of the discussions which we have had. We will adjourn now, ring the bells at eight o'clock, and the question will be put then.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make it clear that in my normal co-operative way, I intend to agree with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then we will consider that the motion has been put in that fashion by the hon. parliamentary secretary. If there is unanimous consent, I will now leave the chair until eight o'clock. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then at eight o'clock we will put all questions necessary.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.00 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to order made earlier this day, it is my duty to put every question necessary to dispose of second reading stage of Bill C-108, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), now before the House.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. La Salle) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Taxation

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Government bills (Commons):

Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of State (Finance) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-93, an act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am having difficulty speaking over the din on the other side. If I did not get any seats in Saskatchewan, I would be worried, too.

Mr. Clark: Or British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have a question with respect to my status in rising at this time, and it is a matter I want to have cleared up. You will recall that on March 31, 1982, when we had a few moments while waiting for the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, I rose in the course of the debate on a grievance—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am speaking on a point of order. After some insults, taunts and noises from the other side, which is not unusual, you indicated that I had the floor and could proceed with respect to that grievance. Somehow, somewhere in the middle of the matter, the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) rose in his place and was recognized for some purpose or other. He then, without his minister anywhere in the House, attempted, I think surreptitiously, to bring on a government order to intervene and interrupt me on the floor during the course of that grievance. Following that I was asked whether I was speaking to this matter and I answered yes. At that time my feeling was I was speaking to the grievance on which I had the floor and on which I had been interrupted. The debate then went on and on and on. I have to say to you, Madam Speaker, that in the course of that debate and through all of the interruptions which finally ended with the announcement that the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was here, it was and still is my understanding that, notwithstanding the intervention by the government in an attempt to cut off debate, I was still speaking on that grievance. I was not, as you will note on page 16030 of Hansard and the following pages, doing anything else but carrying on with the matter which I first raised in order to fill that hiatus in time between the end of the vote and the arrival of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. We knew that was happening because the tables had been moved and it was in fact general knowledge.

That is the position, Madam Speaker, that I left that night, that my grievance ended when we had to take the call of the hon. Deputy to the Governor General. It ended then but it carried on all through that period of time. I would hope that my understanding would be upheld by the Chair in any ruling, and I think before we enter into the debate I would like to have that matter cleared up by the Chair.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it surprises me that the hon. member does not know on what he was speaking.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense! You know better than that.

Mr. Pinard: It is clear from the record that the hon. member should know he was speaking on Bill C-93.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was not even clear to the government.

Mr. Pinard: On page 16030 of Hansard, after a point of order was raised by my parliamentary secretary, you asked for order. You said:

Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) has asked me to call the following order:

Then the Order was called as follows:

On the Order: Government bills (Commons):

Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of State (Finance) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-93, an act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

That is in the record. Then you say, Madam Speaker:

Is the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) seeking the floor to speak on this matter?

You were referring to Bill C-93, Madam Speaker. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said:

Yes, Madam Speaker.

Then some hon. members said:

Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: And then the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said:

It is very interesting that the government should attempt to cut off debate on the economy—

• (2100)

Madam Speaker, to remind the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, as he has already said himself, he was speaking on the economy. He was speaking on Bill C-93 which had just been called, and you had given him the floor to speak in the debate. Therefore, I would like to reassure the hon. member that he was speaking on Bill C-93, and we are very anxious to hear from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: If he has any doubt about what he was debating, we are willing to give him consent that what he was saying be considered as being said on Bill C-93.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quite right. I was speaking about the economy.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the subject of the grievance.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But what he has forgotten about is that the subject matter of the bill relates to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. It would be helpful if the hon. member could remember the subject matter of the bill which, incidentally, ministers were not here to introduce on that evening.

Naturally, I am in the hands of the Chair. But I believe the matter is open to the interpretation that I have asked the Chair to put on it, that is, that it was a grievance relating to the general economy. Not once did I talk in that debate about the statute law relating to certain taxes or to provide other authority for the raising of funds. Not once did I do that. And the parliamentary secretary took great pains to omit telling the Chair that that was the case.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I just want to reinforce two points. First, that the subject matter of the grievance raised in the initial instance by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was the economy. There is no doubt about that. The second point is more important. He had proceeded with his grievance for some time in the House during very roisterous circumstances, to say the least. As the Chair will recall, there were various specious points of order raised and questions of privilege. Roughly halfway between the time when the grievance was first raised and The Gentlemen Usher of the Black Rod arrived, the parliamentary secretary rose.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that it is not possible to interrupt a grievance which the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton was speaking to at the time by using a point of order for the purpose of slicing the grievance at that stage by introducing a government order. I make that submission to you. In our practice you cannot interrupt that process. The grievance procedure process itself has been in disuse since 1968, except upon extremely rare occasions. That is what was done here. The parliamentary secretary, after about five or ten minutes of the grievance discussion, intervened on a point of order to have the government order read.

I suggest there have been oversights in the past which the Chair itself has drawn to the attention of the House, For instance, the exchange between a member on our side and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) when the Chair allowed certain questions to be asked and then prevented subsequent questions on the same subject. The Chair will recognize that.

I suggest that in the confusion of the discussion of that grievance the Order was called on a point that was not in keeping with our customary practices in this place. In fact, what I am suggesting to you, Madam Speaker, is that the Order should not have been called and it should not be on the record as such. There was no opportunity to raise it at that time because the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod arrived and the vote was taken. The Order has not been called again until today.

In my final submission, may I suggest to you that it would be a very bad precedent to allow the government's position to be adopted and placed on the records of this place. It will mean that this remnant of past procedures prior to 1968 when grievances were allowed in very rare circumstances will be completely wiped out if the Chair finds that it was proper to put the Order, Bill C-93, to the House on that occasion.

I strongly submit that the matter under discussion was a grievance and that it was incapable of being interrupted by a point of order for the purpose of calling a government order, and I suggest the Chair should so find and thus avoid the very undesirable precedent of eliminating completely the grievance procedure. That is precisely what a contrary ruling would mean. Once again, the opposition would be seriously weakened by another tool of the opposition being denied to it.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I just want to speak very briefly on this point. It might be very helpful to you and to the House if we read the rest of the record of that date as recorded in Hansard, part of which was read by the government House leader (Mr. Pinard). Your Honour will find on page 16031 that the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) intervened to say:

> Many of us would like to be involved in the debate, if I only knew at which point I could have the floor. Certainly members on all sides welcome the opportunity to speak in this House.

I should point out that this was well after the intervention made by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader. Order was called and Your Honour then said:

> If I may give the hon. member clarification in this period when we are awaiting a message from the other place, it is a time when grievances may be expressed.
>
> MADAM SPEAKER: That process had begun when the parliamentary secretary asked me to put a certain motion to the House, which I have. Debate has begun on that motion I think, although I am not sure whether that is the motion being debated. But the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did get up and he has the floor.

Down at the bottom of page 16031, Madam Speaker, you were forced to intervene again after some attempts to get attention from the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier).

After that, Madam Speaker, you said:

> I wish that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) would be allowed to explain the grievance that he wishes to raise in the House. I understand that hon. members are perhaps not willing to hear this grievance, but as Speaker of this House, I must hear it. This is a time when grievances can be brought before the House. I have recognized the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and I wish that hon. members would respect that.

At that point it seems clear that you had found we were in the middle of a grievance procedure. That grievance procedure was ended only by the appearance of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

That reading from the record of your own remarks and findings of that night may well help you to resolve the question raised by my colleague from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Madam Speaker: We can all recognize that was a very confusing period in the House during a hiatus created because the House Order had not been transmitted to all officers of the House. Of course, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr.

Baker) took advantage of the situation to air a grievance, a procedure which has not been used very often but is quite legitimate. The discussions went on with several interruptions. But at one point the government did call a government order. During the course of the proceedings which followed some members still spoke on the grievance. At one point I did recognize that debate had started on the government order, although I was not sure the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton realized that he was to speak on it. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) quoted that part of Hansard wherein the Chair felt the House was on the government order but was not sure whether the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton was really debating it. It was a very confused situation, with many hon. members yelling back and forth. As I often say, this is not the best way of conducting debate in the House of Commons, but of course those situations occur. Perhaps the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton might be heard at a later time or now, if he should like to continue and speak on the Order which was just called; I could still recognize him. If he wanted to resume debate now, I would recognize him for that purpose.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to thank you very much. I think you indicated clearly in what you said that things are not always in the House as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) may think they are. Indeed there is some doubt about it. The matter of grievance is an old process. It was one used by me prior to 1978 in a matter dealing with the hon. Mr. Judd Buchanan. I do not want to proceed with the grievance; I should like to exercise the right Madam Speaker has given me to take part in the debate.

I think it is most unusual to have the opportunity of beginning a debate like this on a bill which is most unusual. I thank Madam Speaker for giving me the opportunity. The government may regret arguing, as it has done, that it is a grievance because we are in a very interesting time in Canadian public life. Approximately 25 hours ago all of us were sitting with bated breath wondering what would happen in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would invite the hon. member to speak to Bill C-93.

Mr. Nielsen: He is doing just that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. gentleman cannot go back on his word. He forgets, of course, that there is more to Canada than just central Canada when we are talking about borrowing authority. There is western Canada about which some people forget. There is great concern about this unusual bill in all parts of the country. Whether or not hon. members on the back benches of the party opposite realize it, this is the first time in Canadian legislative history when there has been put together a borrowing bill on the one hand and a tax bill on the other in the same bill. This is the first time. It is just that kind of thing which has caused the Liberal Party of Canada to be eroded in public confidence province by province by province. This is why last night in Saskatchewan it got zilch; that is why it received zilch in that vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It got 4 per cent of the vote, that is one more percentage of the vote than the separatists. That is some record in Saskatchewan! Let us not be mystified about the intentions of Canadians with respect to economic matters as they relate to tax bills, the budget and the general economic circumstances of the government which make them see fit somehow or other to take this unprecedented step.

I am very happy to have the opportunity of speaking in the debate tonight and I am happy that that point is clear. As the President of the Privy Council said, I believe this bill deals with taxation, the right of the government to extract money, the right of the government to borrow money to put Canadian people further and further in debt, to pile debt upon debt and increase the deficit. All these matters indicate the facts that the country is out of control and that the government is out of control.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is asleep. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is walking around in a Cape Breton fog. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has nothing better to do than to raise specious points of privilege today when the national energy policy is driving drilling rigs out of Canada. That is what we are talking about. If hon. members opposite have their perspective so centred on central Canada that they forget there are regions of the country which are suffering from their economic policy, they do not deserve to be in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is what the people of Canada are facing. "Economic Gloom Deepens" was the title of a story which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on April 22, 1982. There is not an hon. member opposite who has not returned to his or her riding, gone out in public in the sunshine and talked with people. There is not one of them who has not met small business people, farmers, workers, owners of companies, investors and even bankers who are not concerned about what is happening in the country. What do these mugs of Meach Lake do about it? They went up to the retreat in the Gatineau Hills, probably in the riding of the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau). He should have gone. He could have sorted them out. He is an ordinary guy. He does not live the high life. He does not live on that great mountain at Meach Lake from where he can look, in grandeur, like a duke over his kingdom. He gets the devil from his constituents. He is not really responsible for it, although I believe he is in part because he supports the government vote after vote after vote, just as the New Democratic Party has supported the government vote after vote after vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is why the Liberals lost in Saskatchewan. This is why they are down to a corporal's guard in Saskatchewan. They do not like common-law marriages in Saskatchewan. This is why, this is why.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What did the Prime Minister and this planning and priorities committee, that great mystery group of the Liberal cabinet, do up in Meach Lake on the weekend? They might as well have drilled a hole in the ice and fished. The Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) was the spokesman for the government. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) spoke for the government. It was not the Minister of Finance who spoke for the government. It was not the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) who spoke for the government. It was not even the Prime Minister who spoke for the government. They sent the Secretary of State. What did he say?

Mr. Epp: Not much.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): First of all he has no credit to say anything about the economy; he almost wrecked the economy of Nova Scotia when he was there as premier. What did he say? He said that there would be no change in their policy. Hon. members on the back benches of the Liberal Party and the ten members who sent the courageous letter to the Minister of Finance should remember that there will be no change. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), wherever he might be, should remember that there will be no change in economic policy. I will tell them why they should remember it. It is because the people of Canada will not forget. Small businessmen in central Canada, in western Canada and in eastern Canada will not forget. They will learn how to curse the government in both official languages for its economic policy.

Mr. Nielsen: And a few others too.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And a few others as well. I travel in my riding to speak with the farmers there. For the first time farms, which have been in the same families for four and five generations, farms with centennial signs on them that have been there since Confederation, are having a tough time. They cannot operate, build or grow, if there is not money at reasonable rates; they cannot buy equipment or compete with others. What does the small businessman or woman say—the entrepreneur, the cutting edge of employment opportunities, investment, development and building? If he were able to stand here and speak for himself, he would say to you, Mr. Speaker, and all members that this government is bankrupt in ideas. He said to me, "Surely with all the promises that it made about getting its economic house together it cannot stand and let this happen to me and let me lose my investment." That is what is happening. Every time the slippery Minister of Finance oils his way through that fog and fails to answer a question in the House of Commons, it is another nail in the Liberals' coffin.

• (2120)

I want to say to those Liberal backbenchers that there is a limit to the amount of snake oil which will be bought by the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Canadians have had their fill of snake oil. In February of 1980, the Liberals were elected to office on a number of promises. The Liberals said, "Elect us and we will keep the oil and gas prices down." The member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who is now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, was denuded of a great deal of his power for good reason. He said that if interest rates went above the rate that they were at that time—13 per cent, I believe—and he was minister, he would resign. Well, he still sits there.

The Liberals said to trust them and not to believe the budget which was introduced by the then minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). The Liberals told Canadians not to believe what the Conservatives had to say about the tax credit for the high and rising cost of fuel. They said not to believe the Conservatives when they proposed to bring in property tax legislation to help home owners. They urged Canadians to support them in their filibuster of that Conservative legislation. They travelled throughout the country telling Canadians this.

Interest rates have risen from 13 per cent to 19 per cent today and in some areas it has gone to 24 per cent. Interest rates go through the roof if you try to secure secondary financing. That is the economic situation today, and it is a challenge to any government which really cares, but this government is beyond caring. This government is beyond seeing and beyond credibility. In fact, this government is incredible. It has no right to govern a country like this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If you want to hear about economic matters in this debate, I will tell you about economic matters because I live with those taxpayers. I go to my riding. I do not hide out at Meach Lake. I feel for the farmers and small-business men. I visit the apartment buildings in Bayshore and Parkwood Hills in my riding and see how rents are going up and up for people who would only like a choice in housing but do not have that choice.

I ask those Liberal backbenchers, "When will you stand up and speak for the people who sent you here? Why do you not stand up for the Canadians who voted for you in good faith? They did that in other parts of Canada. Why are you so blind, stupid and voiceless in the House of Commons?" Those are questions I must ask them. I realize it is difficult for them but every so often they must put cabinet opportunities behind them to stand up and speak the truth. They would not be the first group of parliamentarians to do that.

There are other parliaments in the world. When the President of the Privy Council finds it convenient, he will say that we must think about the Mother of Parliament. The difference between our Parliament and the Mother of Parliament at Westminster is that the government there must pay attention to its parliament because it has purpose and tradition. In the United Kingdom, the backbenchers of the Conservative Party, Labour Party and the Social Democratic Party as well have a tradition of speaking up when the government is not functioning in its people's best interest. They do not hide in the caucus room. They come out of the closet and speak on the floor of their House of Commons.

That is the purpose of this place. I invite those backbenchers, the ten who wrote the letter, to stand up, gather their courage and discuss problems that affect their country and the people who sent them here. Although ministers cannot speak out in that manner while they are members of the ministry, there must be some who care and are concerned about our situation. There must be some who do not believe the stories spread in this House every day by the Minister of Finance. They ought not to be in the government if they believe that.

There is no gratification to being in government if you must sell out your principles and sell out your electors to stay there. There is no reward in being a parliamentary secretary if it means remaining silent in the back benches. There is nothing about this place that is not representative.

There are some members opposite, who are no longer parliamentary secretaries, who should speak up. But silence seems to prevail on that side of the House.

I wish I were able to quote from a letter which was written to me by one of my constituents. He said that he was a Liberal but not a "Trudeau Liberal", if I may use that label in accordance with the rules of the House. He told me that he was in the Liberal Party years ago and was lamenting, as much as criticizing, that he followed the Right Hon. Lester Pearson because he loved and understood what confederation was all about. He said that he followed the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent because of his great sensitivity and his understanding of Parliament. However, in his letter he described how he despaired about what had happened to his party. Although he has not joined our party, he has surely left the Liberal Party. He will find no refuge in the New Democratic Party because they are, in fact, a facsimile of the Liberal Party, once you look a little closer at them. The people of Saskatchewan discovered that.

He despairs and wonders what has happened to his party and its sense of independence. He wonders what has happened to its principles because, as I have read the history of the Parliament of Canada at the time of Laurier, St. Laurent and Pearson, I find that those were men who sincerely cared about Canada. They stood for the average people, not for government intervention. They stood for the principles which some members state. According to my constituent, it is not the same party which he is still asked to support but now refuses to support. If a party is going to govern, it must deserve to be the government. In order to do this, it must respond to the conditions in the country and it must be believed.

Let us review what has happened in Canada since the present Prime Minister became leader. The Liberal Party of Canada allowed itself to fall under the thumb of Liberal Party philosophies which did not exist during the time of St. Laurent and Pearson. Let us look at what has happened to the country as a result of this government's policies. In 1968, when the seeds were planted at the beginning of the golden years of the present Prime Minister, and took root in the minds of the gullible, the total number of unemployed Canadians was 351,000. The most recent 1982 figures show the total number of people unemployed in Canada has risen to 1,069,000. That is an increase from 4.5 per cent unemployed, which was considered high at that time, to an absolutely incredible and unacceptable 9 per cent. Those are figures supplied by Statistics Canada. That is an incredible record. Everyone on the other side and every thoughtful person knows the figures. Not only do they refer to human misery, not only do they refer to uncertainty, not only do they refer to loss of opportunity, the failure to live up to promises—

• (2130)

Mr. Riis: It is the Liberal platform.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well, the Liberal platform, such as it is, is made of balsa wood. Not only do they refer to all of that, but they also refer to a record. It is a record for which they will have to answer, and from time to time they have been answering for it across the country. They are answering for it now across the country. I do not believe Dr. Gallup, but I do not suspect that we would be seeing the present trends evidenced by the Gallup polls if there were a believable government. I do not believe it at all. However, in the face of that trend which has meant social disaster for many families, the Liberals go to Meach Lake in those luxurious surroundings. It was there twice. They met in those luxurious surroundings—

An hon. Member: How was it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well, the hon. member will never get there, so I will tell him later. The Liberals discussed the economy and, in the face of statistics which reflect human misery, the Secretary of State said, "We will not do anything. We will stick to our course." We do not yet know how many people must go bankrupt, how many people or how many farmers must go down the drain before they will stop it. Is that believable from a government which really cares? Does the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) really believe that it is a caring government across the way which he blindly supports? I like the hon. member for London-Middlesex but I fear for his vision. I know a good optician downtown who could fix his eyes.

When one considers youth unemployment, one finds that the figures are even worse. The youth unemployment rate in 1968 was 7.4 per cent. It was 3 per cent higher than the rate for adults in 1968. Today, the youth unemployment rate stands at an astounding 15.8 per cent, which is twice the rate for others.

Mr. Riis: And they do nothing.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Those are the people to whom we said, "Get your education. Go to school. Learn a trade. Take your degree. Become apprenticed to someone. Work on a farm. Do these things and work, and the world is your oyster." However, what do we give them? We give them a grand opportunity to enjoy unemployment insurance as long as it lasts. When one speaks in terms of percentages, one does not think of people, but there are people behind the percentages. Then, after UIC has run out, we give them another marvelous privilege. We put them on the municipal welfare rolls.

If I find fault with the Minister of Finance, it is not that he is the Minister of Finance, because I get along well with him on a personal basis; rather, it is because he is such an out-of-touch Minister of Finance. I rather like the guy and my heart goes out to him, but he is very out of touch with the real world. He has never met a payroll in his life. He never held a job outside of the university or the government. However, the government put that man in charge of finance in combination with Ian Stewart, the deputy minister of Finance, and this combination has proven to be lethal to the business sector of Canada. That is the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There are some brains in the Ministry of Finance and some good public servants who understand the ways of the world. However, when the government wanted to find a minister who would work together with such a deputy minister in order to trot out all the little pet theories which have gone on and on, someone who would soak it up like a sponge, they found him in the man from Cape Breton who never met a payroll in his life.

I will tell Your Honour that I am learning, you are learning, Mr. Speaker, your friends are learning and my people are learning that that combination is lethal for the country, and that is the problem. It is only pride. I know many of the backbenchers in the Liberal Party well. I cannot believe that those people have not urged the minister and pleaded with him to withdraw that budget. I see them smiling. They are recalling their conversations with the minister, their letters and their prayers to the minister. Candles have been lit in every cathedral in the country so that he would withdraw the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They still want that.

Mr. Nielsen: They do it every Wednesday in their caucus.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They should continue to urge him to withdraw the budget. However, it would be very effective if some of them were to get on their hind legs and speak in this debate in the House of Commons and say, "Withdraw the budget, Mr. Minister of Finance". That is what we must hear. That would make it happen. I want the people who elected my friends in the Liberal Party to understand that their silence, their blind support, maintains in effect the worst budget since confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the situation we are in. Equally, I want them to know that if those same people in the back benches of the Liberal Party who showed courage and a streak of independence when it came to the Constitution debate would show that same streak of independence now, we could rewrite the history of this country. We could give some new hope to some of the people to whom I have referred. It is important, as we reopen this debate, that we remember that.

Some people in the United States say that their inflation rate is coming down. I do not know if any hon. members have accompanied their wives to—

Mr. Blenkarn: The negative rate.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My hon. friend says, "The negative rate".

Mr. Blenkarn: It is 15 per cent in Canada.

An hon. Member: It is the same interest rate, Don.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I take it from a source in the cabinet that the inflation rate is making quite a difference in the United States, but I will illustrate the situation in Canada. In 1968, when the Prime Minister took office, the inflation rate was 4.2 per cent. It is now 11.6 per cent. Our current account deficit is growing. Our interest rates have doubled in that period of time. Tell me, Mr. Speaker, is there one good inscription in economic terms that we can carve on the political headstone of the Prime Minister? There is not one. That is the history through which my friends in the Liberal Party are living and which they are blindly supporting. Some of them may survive, but many will not.

I do not support the Western Canada Concept, but hon. members should speak to the people of western Canada as I have done. I was in the city of Lethbridge not too long ago and I spoke to some of the people there. What do they say? They say that the government has no respect for them, that no one listens in Ottawa and that no one seems to understand their problems. They want to build their provinces. The cutting edge of the development of Canada is out there. They want to build. They want policies which will induce investment. They do not want the drilling rigs to leave. They also say that no one in Ottawa will listen to them in economic terms. That is why that political phenomenon is developing in western Canada. I hope it has been nipped in the bud in Saskatchewan. I say that I sincerely hope that what has happened in Saskatchewan will nip it in the bud in Alberta, British Columbia and wherever it is occurring.

This country is much greater than any person in the House of Commons, no matter what kind of halo he or she has around his or her head. This country is better than its government. This country deserves a better government. The backbenchers of the Liberal Party deserve better leadership than the economic ministers and the present Prime Minister. That is what is happening and that is why there was a change in Saskatchewan. That is why there are no Liberal votes west of the Manitoba-Ontario border except in a couple of areas.

Mr. Blenkarn: And there will not be any after the next election either.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It will not be any better out there. I want to say to the Liberal Party that unless it changes course, there will be dammed few in Ontario either. I am a little worried about the Liberal Party in terms of the province of Quebec as well.

Mr. Riis: Why worry?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well, I am worried because, quite frankly, I do not want to see the alternative of Members of Parliament who are devoted to breaking up the country running federally. I do not want to see that. I would rather see a misguided Grit than a separatist, although they may be equally damaging to the country, because we might be able to get some sense into the backbench members. However, that could very well happen. In eastern Canada, the Liberal Party is dying. Why? It is because it has become irrelevant. When the mudlarks from Meach Lake come down out of the hills and say, "We will do nothing about what is wrong with this country, we will not address the economic problems, we have nailed our colours to the mast and we will sail with the ship until it goes beneath the waves", that government has become irrelevant. The only thing it has is power. It does not have the principles to use that power correctly in the country's best interests.

• (2140)

I have a document in my hand which I am prepared to put in the time I have and to the extent I can. It contains some alarming statistics. They are such that there can be no justification for a government asking for the unprecedented right to borrow such large sums of money at one time and impose excise taxes all at the same time. There is no justification for it.

I have dealt with interest rates, inflation and unemployment. I will now turn to the energy policy. I feel badly for some Canadians. When they voted on the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) those people in the gallery thought, "My God, that fellow Crosbie will nail us for 18 cents". Those people in the gallery never believed this government would get them for 90 cents. A man from my constituency came into the House of Commons. He turned his pockets out as a gesture toward the government. A person was hauled out of the House of Commons the other day because he voiced some dispute with the government.

Honesty is a marvelous thing. There were a lot of things in the budget of my friend, the hon. member for St. John's West, that some members have forgotten. There was help for small business, a small business development bond that meant something, that was not a parachute to catch the stricken and the disabled but really meant something for small business, the energy tax credit which would have cushioned the energy cost to home owners, and mortgage interest. In addition, there was help with municipal taxes, capital gains relief for farmers, and northern tax benefits that had been neglected.

There was a whole host of things in that budget that would have helped certain beleaguered endangered sectors of the economy. It was not perfect. However, more and more Canadians are saying that that budget, at least in terms of its approach, was a lot better and more honest than the Cape Breton disaster of November 12, 1981. That is the worst budget. One does not need a Ph.D. in economics or be a Member of Parliament or a tax expert to realize the country in hurting. It is hurting because the government has not had sense enough to see what it needs.

What does this country need? It needs encouragement for Canadian entrepreneurs. You do not have to kick the little people in the seat of their pants. You do not have to tax the benefits they receive on their life insurance. Those benefits are an encouragement to save. You do not have to hit the medical or dental premiums that are paid by employers. At the same time, you use the tax system to create incentives where you want those incentives to be.

It is not the role of government to have its fingers in every pie. It need not intervene in every place of business. The role of government is to create an atmosphere where hard-working, entrepreneurial Canadians can do some things for themselves. That is the role of government.

Everywhere this government has put its finger, it has messed things up. Why? Not because of ill will. It just does not understand. How can you expect public servants to understand business in the same way as business people understand business? If I were a public servant, I would not understand it either. It is like asking a doctor to practise law or a lawyer to practise medicine.

The business sector has its role. Labour has its part to play. How can you inspire a sense of partnership in the country if you run around the country and say that co-operative federalism is dead and our history means nothing, if you assail the interests of organized labour and make the business sector, not the big corporations but the small businessmen, distrust government? If you so conduct yourself, the other two sectors, and everyone else will distrust government. That is where we are.

I am not in power now. I am not now a member of a government, but I was once and with the grace of God I will some day be a member of a good government once again. What this country needs is a responsive government that is prepared to match its rhetoric with reality and policies. I ask the fugitives from Meach Lake, where is that matching of rhetoric with policies? Where are the new things that are needed?

The Minister of Finance brought in a package that he said would open up the budget process. Read it and you will see that the clam still stays pretty closed. There is even some opportunity for a little skulduggery. I am not accusing the minister of that, but there is that opportunity.

If the economic and tax committee of this House of Commons had first had an opportunity to hear the forecast for the economy that was released on budget night, do you believe it would have approved the National Energy Program? Do you believe that if the members of this House of Commons, experienced in the ways of this place and some experienced in business, had been allowed through an open budget process to give advice to the government on what economic policies should be followed; they would have approved a National Energy Program such as we have? Do you believe the members of this House of Commons are as stupid as the government and would accept a recommendation the likes of which was reproduced in the budget of November 12?

Is there anyone in the House of Commons who believes that the members of the House would advise the Minister of Finance to take such a stance from which he would have to retract and suffer the humiliation of having to withdraw at one crack 17 sections of a budget which had been touted as the best thing since sliced bread just a month before? Day after day, as surely as every day passes on the calendar, one little thing is withdrawn. My friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) told me that 30 items have been withdrawn from that budget. Does that show confidence in the Minister of Finance, the Department of Finance, and the government?

If we had an open budget process, do you honestly think the House of Commons would have given that kind of advice to the Minister of Finance? No. That would not have happened. That is what happens when you play your cards close to your vest. The Minister of Finance played his cards so close to his vest that he got ingrown cards. That is the problem.

I know my time is coming to a finish. However, let me say that this government is so undeserving of the double whammy on the Canadian taxpayer that is contained in Bill C-93 that it is not the intention of this party to allow this to occur. I hope, before this debate is finished, that some backbenchers on the other side will have the guts, courage and concern as well as a feeling for the people who sent them here, to stand up on their hind legs and say to the Minister of Finance, "Enough, withdraw this abomination. Rethink it for the good of this country."

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly glad to have an opportunity to speak in this debate. I want to begin by saying that it is very difficult at this point in 1982 to consider giving the government borrowing authority. It is very difficult for me, as a representative of an industrial area that is suffering untold miseries, primarily as a result of this government's economic policy, to consider seriously granting to the government the right to borrow even more money, more money that they will spend, undoubtedly in the same way that they have spent much of the taxpayers' dollars that have been raised over the course of the past few years, and many of the dollars that they have borrowed over the course of the last few years.

I spent four days in Hamilton last week, Mr. Speaker, and I must confess that they were four days of immense educational value. I met with people from almost every walk of life. I set up meetings from early in the morning on Monday last through until late on Thursday evening of that same week. I met with young people in high schools. They asked me where they were going to find a job when they graduated at the end of this winter, where they were going to go to find employment, employment they had to have in order to begin to realize the dream that most of us have considered until now to be a reality—that dream that if you work hard in Canada you can provide for yourself and look forward to a reasonable future.

I went from there and I sat down with manufacturers of shoes, to discuss with them the problems they were having, problems of trying to maintain a viable industry in the face of low-grade, cheap imports. These people were asking, not that the government stop the imports, but simply that there be a reasonable quota allowance of imports into Canada. Why? Because they wanted to protect those jobs in that community. They wanted to try to roll back the lay-offs that had become the order of the day in the shoe industry. They wanted to try to find a way to avoid the problems that had overtaken almost half of the entire industry across the country, much of it in the province of Quebec. They were asking for government assistance at this point, but not in the form of dollars, they were not looking for handouts. They were looking for understanding, they were looking for an opportunity to do what they do well, in the country that they have chosen to operate in, provide jobs for Canadians, top grade footwear for Canadians, and guarantee that there would be some stability in the industry.

I say this to you, Mr. Speaker, that they made the point: "Oh, yes, it may be true today that you can get a cheaper shoe or a cheaper piece of footwear from offshore" but they said to me, and they are right: "On the day there ceases to be a domestic manufacturing sector, the price of the footwear from offshore will automatically go up. The only thing keeping that price down at the moment is the fact that they are trying to undercut the Canadian manufacturers and put them out of business." That is true. And the government, for reasons I do not quite understand, are prepared to allow this to happen.

I left Susan Shoes, but I will come back to them later. I left and went to sit down with the chief executive officer, the president of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company and we talked about the problems of rationalizing the rubber industry. We had a discussion about their efforts in international markets all over the world. We talked about the rationalization process that they had undertaken. They pointed out to me—something that I already knew—that they had been able to increase the level of employment in the Hamilton plant from 1,100 about a year ago to almost 1,700 now. That was done on the basis that they were going to rationalize their productive capacity in such a way as to cut costs. They were going to be more productive, they were going to meet world markets.

Again they needed the government to do something for them. They needed a quid pro quo, so to speak, they needed an opportunity to import from their plant in another part of the world, on an equivalent basis for what they were exporting out of the country, so that they could get rationalization in both areas. And they wanted the government to assist them in achieving that end. They have waited nine months, nearly a year by now, and nothing has happened.

I want to make a point about this. The people I was speaking to were, in this case, the chief executive officer of the company, and in the case of the footwear company, the vice president. I also met with the unions who represented the workers in the plant in both cases, and in each case they were in full support of the effort put forward to get the government to recognize the economic problem of that particular industry and of that particular industry sector.

I then went and sat down with the employee representatives of National Steel Car, the manufacturers of hopper cars. They have been closed down virtually for the last year, as the member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) knows. They are awaiting for what the government has clearly indicated for some time, its intention to purchase approximately 1,200 hopper cars to cover the movement of grain in every year for the next five years. They were saying to me: "If it really is the government's intention to do that, if the government really intends to purchase those cars, would it not make sense, since we are in such economic chaos at the moment, and since we are in such a downturn, for the government to move up its program of purchase and begin the purchase this year and provide some employment in this plant?" Such a decision by the government would also mean employment in the plant in Trenton, Nova Scotia. Then there would be an opportunity for people to go to work.

In every single one of the instances that I came into contact with, Mr. Speaker, during the course of those four days, those people were talking to me about their desire to find a job, their desire to have a a job they could go to every day, a job that would be productive, a job that would be good for Canada, a job that would enable them to pay their own way, to plan their own future. When I proposed to the government that perhaps the government could consider these measures, and other measures that I intend to talk about as this debate goes on, the government said: "Well, we will think about it, we will think about it."

The government then went on its merry way, following its high interest rate policy, following its high unemployment policy, following its high unemployment policy, following its high bankruptcy policy, following it right down the path to ruination. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is very frustrating. What we in the NDP are proposing, at least on this side of the House and, I imagine, supported by a number of members on other sides of the House, in the Conservative Party and in the Liberal Party, too are proposals that I think are reasonable, sensible and workable. They are suggestions as to how we can improve Canada's economy, how we can get that turn-around, how we can provide those job opportunities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I notice, Mr. Speaker, that it is ten o'clock. I wonder if I might adjourn the debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC PERCENTAGE OF GASOLINE TAX IS GREATER THAN PERCENTAGE COLLECTED BY ALBERTA

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on April 7 last, I had the opportunity to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in the House. The gasoline war was then raging in Quebec and many Quebecers were asking themselves many questions about the distribution of taxes collected by various governments in connection with gas prices. It was then obvious that many gas retailers in Quebec who had gone on the so-called gas strike were specifically demanding to oil companies that are not necessarily Canadian to reduce their profits and give them more money, and were also asking the Quebec government to cancel the notorious tax it has been levying on Quebecers since November 17, 1981.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances, and more specifically in connection with the price paid by Quebecers for gas, except in a few towns bordering on other Canadian provinces, such as Ontario and New Brunswick, where Quebecers were allowed to pay less for their gas after that notorious tax of 30 cents a gallon or 6 cents a litre, if you like, was cancelled, it was perhaps advisable at that time to determine what price was actually being paid by Quebecers, a price set by the separatist Quebec government which claims to be acting in the best interests of Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to remind Quebecers that the budget of November 12, 1981, granted certain tax exemptions to Quebecers with a family by exempting from tax those in certain income groups, by increasing basic deductions and also by increasing the child tax credit for subsequent years. What happened to Quebecers a few days later, on November 17, 1981? Their own government asked them to pay an additional tax of 30 cents a gallon on gasoline, and within the next few days, tabled a bill to increase the rates of Hydro-Quebec by about 16 per cent.

On the one hand, Quebec men and women got tax cuts in the federal budget, and on the other hand, their own government, which is supposed to protect their interests and help them in this difficult period, imposed a higher tax on gasoline, which means that we hold the record for personal income tax because Quebecers now pay 20 per cent more than the residents of certain provinces, such as Ontario, and we even pay more than the people of Prince Edward Island. We really are the champions as far as income tax is concerned, and with this surtax introduced by the province of Quebec on November 17, we became once more the over-all champions when it comes to paying taxes.

What was important at the time, and that is why I asked my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, was that throughout the energy negotiations, the present Quebec government had never objected to prices at the gas pumps being the same as world prices. The question we can ask and the explanation we can give Quebecers is very simple. The Quebec energy minister has never objected to this situation because, in view of the provincial tax on gasoline, the higher the price, the more taxes can be collected. They are the champions of indirect taxation. Of course, everyone will recall that since they came to power in 1976, they have held the record in this regard. This is why, when the Canadian government talks of keeping gasoline prices at 75 per cent of world prices, the Quebec government does not complain too loudly, but it would still prefer . . . and as for supporting Alberta when it was asking for world prices, the Quebec government did not object too much because it meant that its own tax on gasoline would increase. According to these figures, Quebecers must all pay over and above what their fellow Canadians are paying. We are champions. We hold the record for indirect taxation, and when gas retailers went on strike in early April, more specifically on April 7th, we wondered just how much the Quebec government was collecting from Quebecers by means of this additional tax which was implemented on November 17, 1981, and which caused Quebecers to pay more than other Canadians. In spite of the National Energy Policy which aimed at keeping Canadian prices below world prices, Quebecers were penalized by their own government, the separatist PQ government in Quebec, and became the champions of high gas prices. It was not good enough for them to hold the record for income tax, they were made the champions of record high prices for gas; that is the reason why gas retailers in Témiscouata were right on April 7th to pressure the Quebec government into reducing and cutting this unfair tax and make all other Quebecers aware of their true situation compared to that of other Canadians. That is also the reason why I asked on April 7, 1982, what the cut was the Quebec government was taking at the pumps compared with that of the federal government and even the Alberta government.

That is the reason why the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources provided these figures and why, returning tonight to this issue, I should like to ask the minister to provide the House with more detailed information on the share collected by each of the provinces. Are Quebecers really favoured by their provincial government, especially since the introduction of that notorious tax on November 17, 1981? That is my question, Mr. Speaker?

• (2205)

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, let me first explain why car owners in the province of Quebec are at a disadvantage, as far as the price of gas is concerned, compared with car owners in other provinces. That situation is due to the fact that the provincial tax on gas, also called road tax, is an ad valorem tax, a tax in relation to value. This means that the Quebec government increases taxes without saying so. Because, in November 1981, the Quebec government imposed a 40 per cent ad valorem tax on gas, twice as much exactly as the previous rate. It should be noted that the ad valorem tax on gas in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario remained at the 20 per cent rate, while that in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island was slightly higher at 22 per cent, but only 16 per cent in New Brunswick. Better still, there is no such tax in Alberta, and the tax in Nova Scotia is levied at a fixed rate and is generally one of the lowest in Canada. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, gas prices in Quebec are the highest in Canada. For example, at the end of March, regular leaded gas in Montreal was selling on average at 45.2 cents per litre as opposed to 41.9 in Vancouver, 40.8 in Winnipeg, 40.9 in Toronto and 41.6 in St. John, New Brunswick. Therefore, the price gap between Toronto and Montreal was more than 20 cents per gallon. Concerning revenues derived by both levels of government and industry, what is the meaning of that price gap on the very high ad valorem tax on gas? In order to answer the question, one only has to refer to the following example. Based on a 47 cents per litre retail price in Montreal and 41.3 cents in Toronto, the Ontario government would levy 6.3 cents per litre, while the Quebec government would levy 13 cents. At the same time, the producing province would levy 5.4 cents per litre sold in either provinces. In other words, the producing provinces, Alberta in this case, would receive 13 per cent of revenues derived from sales in Ontario, and 11.4 per cent from sales in Quebec. The federal government's share of tax revenues on sales in Ontario would be 19 per cent, while it would be lower than 17 per cent of sales in Quebec. In summary, percentage-wise, the share levied by Quebec on revenues would be almost as high as the combined shares of the federal and Alberta governments levied on gas sold in Quebec.

Worse still, by reason of the high levy taken by the Quebec government on revenues, gas dealers did not even get a sufficient profit margin on sales, and that is why they went on strike early this month. This flies in the face of common sense and good government, but it is signed Charron, Parizeau and Lévesque. What else can we wait for if not for an opportunity to prove to them that Quebecers are tired of being the most highly taxed in order to pay for independence.

FINANCE—PROCESSING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS. (B) DELAY IN PAYMENT OF REFUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on April 5, 1982, I posed two questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey). My questions concerned the fact that Revenue Canada had issued a bulletin in which it instructed Canadians to file their 1981 income tax returns as though the November, 1981 budget were in fact law.

The reason for taking that action was that several major provisions in the budget of November 12, 1981, were retroactive to the 1981 tax year. I am thinking, in particular, of provisions related to income-averaging annuity contracts, capital cost allowance, registered retirement savings plans, etc.

Yet, having instructed Canadians to file their 1981 income tax returns on the basis of the November budget, Revenue Canada then ordered its own officials in regional tax offices right across the country to stockpile any returns affected by the budget until it was legislated into law. Revenue Canada's motivation for wishing to set aside such returns for later processing was the confusion surrounding the November budget. The Minister of Finance has been making so many retreats on, and changes to, his budget that not even Revenue Canada officials know where the budget stands at any given time.

Revenue Canada's instructions, however, meant that thousands of Canadians whose 1981 income tax returns were affected by the budget would have to wait unduly for any tax refunds owed them. Indeed, reliable estimates indicate that the Minister of Finance may not be able to get his act together on the budget until as late as next fall. Some Canadians might have to wait until then for their returns.

The Minister of Finance, in reply to my two questions, totally denied that there was any confusion about his budget and, therefore, that any tax refunds were being delayed by the budget. But, sir, nothing could be further from the truth.

In response to the public interest aroused by my own statements in the House of Commons, and statements made by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), Revenue Canada was pressed into reversing itself on the matter of tax refunds. Instead of stockpiling returns affected by the budget, the department replaced its earlier bulletin with instructions to its regional offices to follow the following procedure. Henceforth, those taxpayers would be expected to file their 1981 tax returns on the basis of the November, 1981 budget, but their returns would not be stockpiled, as planned earlier. Rather, Revenue Canada will process their returns no less than three times; once under the pre-budget tax rules, and a second time on the basis of the November budget. A refund will then be paid to the taxpayers on the basis of the lesser amount. The same returns will be processed a third time after the budget becomes law. If a further refund is due it would be paid by Revenue Canada at that time.

• (2215)

I followed up my questions on April 5 to the Minister of Finance with questions to the Minister of National Revenue on April 7. In reply he stated that there has been no "hold-up" in refunds, no "stockpiling". He was wrong, dead wrong. There had been stockpiling of tax refunds until we in the Official Opposition protested the practice.

The fact that there is no longer any stockpiling of returns is because the federal government and the Minister of National Revenue, in particular, changed their minds. In the face of parliamentary pressure from us in the official opposition, Revenue Canada is now following a new procedure in order to get people's refunds out with less delay than otherwise would have been the case.

While welcoming that favourable outcome, I remain convinced that a much simpler procedure would be to change the effective date of the budget so that no taxpayers' returns would be affected by it in the 1981 tax year. In that fashion all tax returns could be processed in the most expeditious way possible.

In conclusion, the government says that only a handful of Canadian taxpayers need be concerned about the budget impacting on their 1981 tax returns. The figure of 200,000 is frequently bandied about. I believe it is actually higher, because more than 200,000 taxpayers borrow money to pay premiums for their registered retirement savings plans. In any event, whether the figure is 200,000 or many more, the number is not so large that the government would lose a lot of revenue should it decide to change the effective date of the November 12, 1981 budget in order to simplify the process of adjudicating 1981 tax returns and getting out refunds to people who qualify for them. Therefore, I continue to urge that wise course of action and hope the government will be enlightened, wise, reasonable and flexible enough to take that worthy suggestion.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, may I say first of all that I should like to rely as well on the understanding and co-operation of the hon. member as on the usual and real understanding and co-operation of Canadian taxpayers.

Before answering the question of the hon. member, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, I should like to remind hon. members that our tax system is a self-assessing system under which specific deadlines must be strictly met. That, indeed, is one of the keys to the success of Revenue Canada. In addition, I must congratulate the civil servants of that department on their performance in surpassing themselves every year, that is, in collecting more money while reducing costs. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member is concerned about the impact the provisions of the last budget might have on the processing of income tax returns for 1981. It is all the more regrettable that as a result of his concern many Canadians might ask themselves unnecessary questions about the matter. I must say I find his assessment of the number of taxpayers involved at 200,000 a little bold in view of the fact that it has no valid basis. I think he should start dealing with facts and stop worrying and causing concern. Here are the facts: No tax refund will be delayed because of the budget. None whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the mailing of income tax refunds is moving along pretty well. To this date, there has been a greater number of refunds than last year. Those taxpayers who would be affected by the November 1981 budget are urged to fill out their tax returns according to the changes relating to 1981. They should attach to their income tax return a letter specifying the budgetary proposals which affect them. As I said earlier, it is explained in the information material published before—and today it is confirmed by facts—that the changes affect a mere handful of taxpayers as far as the 1981 tax returns are concerned. Where budgetary proposals impose new limitations to certain deductions the department will consider them according to the proposed legislation.

On the other hand, where budgetary proposals are more lenient, the returns will be subject to the provisions of the existing legislation. Those returns will be identified and treated in the same manner. Once the budget is adopted by Parliament, the Department will make all the necessary adjustments for all those returns.

The normal procedure will be followed and, as far as possible, we will try to keep to a minimum any delay in the mailing of refunds to Canadian taxpayers. This information is clear and it defines a course of action which all Canadians, including the hon. member, can and must understand.

EMERGENCY MEASURES—LIMITS OF CROWN PREROGATIVE (B) AVENUES OF REDRESS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, Order in Council 1981—1305 is the order in council which empowers the government under the emergency planning legislation, or council order to establish internment camps. The order is dangerous and Draconian, not because of the subject matter or that it is not necessary to plan for emergencies, but because that particular order in council, and its provisions, is so open-ended in its scope of powers and so subtle and devious in its terms of reference. It is dangerous and Draconian.

Let me just illustrate by reading the heading at the beginning of the order in council. It reads, "Other than statutory authority". What does that mean to a layman? Does that mean a power or authority other than law? That means nothing to a layman. One must turn to other sources to derive the meaning.

In this case, we can turn to a letter from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. There we find that the power comes from Crown prerogative, or what Mr. Nixon used to call "executive privilege". In a letter to that committee, the President of the Privy Council said:

> The Civil Emergency Measures Planning Order C.R.C. c. 1334, was made pursuant to the Crown prerogative—

Crown Prerogative simply means that it is the power by which the Prime Minister can do what he thinks necessary in what is deemed to be an emergency. I realize that the customs and statutes have somewhat limited those particular powers of the Crown prerogative, but it is a very loose and easily misunderstood term. That is why I rose in my place in the House on March 31 to ask the Prime Minister, as reported in Hansard on page 16005:

> —what the limits of Crown prerogatives are in this context. Does he have a legal opinion regarding the limits of this power under the new constitution?

The Prime Minister said, among other things:

> Certainly I am on sound ground in saying that any prerogative, royal or otherwise, can be limited by statute. That would be the position I would take.

He said, "can be limited by statute". At the outset, it is ominous for him to say, "can be limited by statute". I have to ask why he did not say, "will be, should be" or even "may be".

The letter from the President of the Privy Council is much more specific. That letter, dated March 19, reads as follows:

> If Parliament were dissolved, or if the pace of the prices at hand did not allow the time to assemble Parliament, the government would be forced to act in reliance on the Crown prerogative to the extent that it provided a legal basis for authority to act.

What is the legal basis for the power to act? I was concerned about that particular provision and, therefore, went to the government research branch of the Library of Parliament to ask them to conduct a study of that provision. I would like to read a short segment of that study. Page four of the study indicates:

• (2225)

> By far the majority of crises in British history were met by parliamentary action; with strong cabinet and a majority government, necessary legislation to delegate powers can be quickly passed without resort to arbitrary action without the authority of Parliament. However, the possibility of independent executive action always exists. As noted, such actions may be found to be legal as an exercise of the royal prerogative or by virtue of a common law duty to protect the realm. The courts would determine the legality of such actions.
> In other circumstances, there may be no legal basis for executive action, and yet the courts may be prevented from considering the issue. Under the British constitutional system in which Parliament is supreme, executive acts can be rendered legal ex post facto, by passage of an indemnity act. Such a statute protects officials from prosecution or civil proceedings, and this precludes judicial determination of the legality of the actions.

It then refers to invocation of the law of necessity. I know that this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) loves to invoke the law of necessity; but the point is that in such circumstances the courts may be prevented from considering the issue.

That led me to the supplementary question I asked the Prime Minister at that time. He has repeatedly said that the new charter would always contain provision for resort to the courts. However, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) has indicated in this House that the procedure in relation to this emergency planning order eliminates due process in the court, because the government has already worked out a five-step process which does not include court procedure. That bothers me.

Then I find that, according to the tradition or the convention of the Royal prerogative, it is possible to provide retroactive legality to hitherto illegal action, and that by invocation of the law of necessity the courts can be prevented from looking into a matter which would otherwise be considered illegal. This is what worries me about the Crown prerogative. I think the people of Canada deserve a clear indication as to what the limits of the Crown prerogative would be if the government invoked these emergency planning measures.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that in his opening statement he again misstated the facts, although unintentionally, I am sure. He said that Planning Order 1981-1305 empowered the government to establish civilian internment camps. That is not correct. If the government has this authority, and it would only use it in wartime, it is certainly not because of this planning order. It may be as a result of the War Measures Act which would come into play in a wartime situation.

However, what this planning order does is to allocate to various ministers the responsibility for drawing up plans. It does not give the government any authority it does not already possess. It could well be that after drawing up those plans the ministers may come to the conclusion that legislation is required and would have to be passed. However, the government is not given any authority by this order in council it did not have before.

The hon. member noted that the emergency planning order was made pursuant to the Crown prerogative. He asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what the limits of the Crown prerogative are in this context. The Prime Minister replied that he would have to examine the order to determine the prerogative which is involved.

We have reviewed this matter and I can inform hon. members that the prerogative authority for the emergency planning order is that which is commonly known as the prime ministerial prerogative. It is a settled convention of government that the Prime Minister may from time to time allocate, amend or clarify working responsibilities of ministers of the Crown by virtue of this prerogative. This same principle underlies the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, the act on whose authority the previous civil emergency measures Planning Order PC-1965-1041 was revoked.

I might also say that I requested the research branch of the Library of Parliament to compile a paper on the validity of the emergency planning order. I would be happy to show my friend a copy if he has not already seen it. It quite clearly confirmed that this was a legitimate order within that prerogative.

The hon. member went on to ask the Prime Minister about the recourse to the courts of those who may be interned in wartime. He noted that the anticipated internal safeguards and procedures I outlined in my statement to this House on December 17 did not make explicit reference to the right to appeal to the courts. I did not include this right because it goes, almost without saying, that an individual in such circumstances may make representations to the appropriate judicial tribunal. Since I spoke on that occasion, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been approved to give constitutional expression to this right.

The Prime Minister has himself undertaken to reassure the hon. member of the primacy of the charter in relation to any emergency act, regulation, or order. I know of no broader guarantee that anyone could offer on this subject.

The charter takes precedence not only over statutory authority but also over the emergency authority remaining in the prerogative of the Crown. I hope the hon. member will be reassured to know that this government is not in the business of planning to undertake measures plainly inconsistent with the charter. As I indicated earlier, the government intends that the security of the state be preserved by measures that also allow the maximum possible liberty of individual Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.32 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED ADVANCE PAYMENT BY FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In the November 12 budget the government served notice that it intends to confiscate a portion of fishermen's catches as an advance payment of income tax when they sell their catch. This Saturday, May 1, the lobster season opens on Prince Edward Island, and fishermen are still very upset with the idea of having a portion of their catch confiscated. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House instructs the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance to withdraw this mandatory measure immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the evidence is clear. The startling facts from the Conference Board of Canada today should put an end to the myth that government economic policies are working—75 per cent of business executives say that it is a bad time to invest; 32 per cent are not proceeding with previously-announced investments; working people who get a meagre $200 tax cut are paying four times that amount with new hidden taxes on health and dental plans and energy taxes; and there are countless other real life examples. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

That the Minister of Finance immediately announce a withdrawal of his disastrous November 12, 1981 budget and not wait until fall for his new budget as announced by the Minister of Justice, but introduce one immediately, one which will be positive, promote development of Canada, and encourage full-time meaningful jobs for the 1,200,000 unemployed and those thousands of students presently coming into the work force.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FUNDING OF PROPOSED METROPOLITAN TORONTO CONVENTION CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the federal government's commitment of some $19 million toward the construction of a proposed Metropolitan Toronto Convention Centre, about which many serious questions have been raised concerning its design, its operating costs, and the irregular manner in which it was processed through local government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House direct the government to withhold the payment of any moneys toward the development of the Metropolitan Toronto Convention Centre until such times as a full financial cost benefit and impact analysis is undertaken and full public hearings have been held to determine the advisability of this particular structure.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL MEAT MARKETING PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that red meat industry producers in Canada are still experiencing an ever-increasing life and death struggle for survival with no meaningful relief in sight, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Agriculture now take the necessary steps to introduce for the short term a meaningful national stabilization program, to be followed in the long term by a national marketing and supply management program which would bring the stability needed for the betterment of producers and the industry as a whole.

REQUEST THAT HOUSE CONGRATULATE NEW PRESIDENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas Mr. Pierre Samson has been elected President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois):

That the House congratulate Mr. Samson, particularly since he is the first francophone to be elected president of a union where nearly 30 per cent of the membership consists of francophones. I also move, Madam Speaker, that the House support Mr. Samson when he puts the union's demands before the Treasury Board, in the hope that negotiations on collective agreements will proceed as smoothly as our simultaneous translation.

INCOME TAX

REGULATIONS AFFECTING EXCHANGE TEACHERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas a significant number of teachers undertake exchange assignments each year with selected teachers from other countries, and whereas the relocation costs, which often involve family dependants, and adverse costs of living and exchange rates, are absorbed personally by the individual exchange teacher, and whereas Section 8(10) of the Income Tax Act permits Canadians assigned to offshore employment in the energy resources industry or the developmental construction industry special remuneration from taxable income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That the Minister of National Revenue be directed by this House to initiate changes in the income tax regulations so that Canadian exchange teachers may also be included in Section 8(10) of the Income Tax Act to alleviate the financial burden facing the exchange teachers of Canada.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CONDEMNATION OF MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion concerning the status of working women. Today's Globe and Mail quotes Ontario studies which prove that the largest single factor in the 40 per cent lower wage rates for women is occupational discrimination and that affirmative action programs have the most potential for reducing the wage gap between men and women. Inasmuch as the minister purportedly responsible for the status of women indicated in committee last night that she has back tracked on mandatory affirmative action in favour of a go-slow policy, even on voluntary affirmative action in the Public Service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the minister purportedly responsible for the Status of Women be condemned strongly for relegating hundreds of thousands of working women to low paying, low status, dead-end jobs for the rest of their working lives.

Because essential services to the community cannot be provided by the Council due to this bureaucratic log jam between the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government move immediately to release the first quarter of funding for 1982 to the Conne River Indian Band Council so that the necessary services and programs to the community can be continued.

THE ECONOMY

BUSINESSMEN'S VIEWS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who undoubtedly noted the Conference Board report which was issued today in which the Board now finds that 75 per cent of the senior executives in this country believe that our economy will get even worse than it is at the present time. It points out, for example, that the main concerns of people in this country are the high interest rates, the weak market demand, and then government policies. Would the Prime Minister finally concede that his economic direction has been on the wrong course and that he should start paying attention to some Canadians who know what the reality is out there from coast to coast?

• (1415)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I may remind the hon. member that the document to which he is referring also reflects an aspect he did not point out, namely the optimism expressed by the same persons with respect to the possibility of a drop in inflation in this country. I would also remind the hon. member that as soon as we are able to bring down inflation, we shall eliminate the climate of uncertainty that is holding back investors and preventing economic recovery. Their optimism as to a possible drop in inflation indicates that these businessmen agree with the government's policy to reduce inflationary pressures.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, that is straight balderdash.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REVIEW OF ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Perhaps my follow-up question can be asked of the Prime Minister, if he would have the courtesy to respond to it. The inflation rate in this country, after high interest rates since 1975, is actually higher than it was in 1975.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Stevens: If the Prime Minister chooses to blame international conditions for the sad plight of our economy, would he explain the research study released yesterday at Rutger's University in New Jersey, which points out that, of the seven countries under review, it is Canada which is last among the group of seven as far as economic performance is concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sorry I have not seen this review from the United States; but referring to the previous review to which the hon. member referred, the Conference Board news release, I fail to see why the hon. member describes as balderdash the perfectly correct answer given by the minister a moment ago. If the hon. member enjoins me to show courtesy, I would enjoin him to look at the facts.

I will read the statistics given concerning the question on inflation over the near term. Forty-five per cent of the respondents said that it would be lower and only eight per cent said it would be higher, which was the exact point made by the minister. Therefore, the hon. member should get his facts straight before suggesting courtesy from others.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, at least the Prime Minister has said that he is willing to deal with facts.

Mr. Crosbie: For the first time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INFLATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my follow-up question is based on the fact that the Prime Minister will agree that we have had a tight interest policy since 1975. In 1975 the inflation level in this country was actually lower than the current level. Would the Prime Minister tell us when his tight money policy will finally wrestle inflation to the ground as he has promised year after year?

Mr. Crosbie: Whipper Billy Trudeau!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has a tendency to confuse cause and effect, since he omitted to relate high interest rates to their cause which is the high rate of inflation. He has also neglected to situate within a broader context the various causes that have led to this high rate of inflation. Instead of trying to draw attention to a question that is already heavily criticized by everyone, he should join the government in inviting all economic partners to continue the fight against inflation and thus help restore a climate that is favourable to investment.

LAY-OFFS IN MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the acting Prime Minister, whoever that may be. The escalating collapse of Canada's industrial economy is not only reflected by the many thousands of newly unemployed in our manufacturing industry but in the shutdowns, massive financial losses, and lay-offs in Canada's primary mineral producing sector. For example, shutdowns at the Adams, Sherman and Griffiths mines in the Timiskaming region of northern Ontario will affect some 1,400 iron workers. Production from these mines is dedicated exclusively to the Dofasco and Stelco steel mills at Hamilton, Ontario. I ask the Prime Minister what concrete action the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recommended to cabinet at Meach Lake in order to reverse this alarming crisis. What specific proposals were offered to restore economic confidence and jobs to Canadians? What is the Prime Minister going to do about it?

Some hon. Members: No answer!

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

AWARDING OF RIDLEY ISLAND, B.C. CONTRACT TO JAPANESE FIRMS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): It is obvious that we need a Prime Minister to take charge of this country because the one opposite has no sense of concern for the Canadian people who are losing their jobs. The Conference Board statistics recently released confirm that many corporations will no longer invest in Canada, leading to substantial additional cutbacks in production and jobs. This is confirmed by the documented outflow of more than $20 billion of investment capital from Canada in the past 12 months compared with only $4 billion in the previous year. At the same time, we learn that Ridley Island Terminals—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that preambles are not required for questions, and his is lengthy. He has to go to his question.

Mr. Siddon: Now that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is here, I hope he will answer why it is that Ridley Island Terminals has awarded another $7 million contract to a Japanese consortium at the same time that investment capital is flowing out of Canada. Where is the minister's elusive industrial development plan that we have heard so much about? Why do we continue to export investment capital and Canadian jobs to foreign countries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: This is the expert at losing to the Japanese.

Mr. Pepin: You are an expert at losing.

The question on the Ridley Island project has to do with the purchase of nearly $8 million of steel pipe. The answer is very clear. Maximum efforts were made to procure this pipe in Canada. Five Canadian firms, among others, were asked to bid on that. For one reason or another, every one of them declared themselves incapable of providing the special pipe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I will provide a detailed blow-by-blow account of all the efforts that were made by the National Harbours Board and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to procuring this pipe. If the hon. member wants to challenge me on that, he can write me a note and I will provide him with a full answer.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE INDEPENDENT CANADIAN ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, with the Minister of Finance, has time and again indicated how our problems in Canada are related to those around the world. I refer to the study mentioned earlier, by the Centre for International Business Cycle Research at Rutgers University. The study indicated that Canada is now in last place. While other countries have taken action independent from the Americans and have been successful in slowing the recessionary trends in their countries, we do not take action. With this evidence before us today, when can we exepct independent action to be taken, or do we have to wait until the fall budget is introduced?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the study to which the hon. member is referring requires some consideration. The hon. member concluded from this study that all countries should have their economic recoveries or recessions at the same time; I think he should remember that this is not the way things work. There has been a recovery in some countries, while in others the process is somewhat slower. What is, in fact, encouraging in this study is the fact that economies are interdependent and that there are symptoms of recovery in certain countries. We can therefore be optimistic and assume that, very soon, our economy will also be on the way to recovery.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, while I do not necessarily agree with the response, I appreciate a response—which is more than I can say for the Prime Minister.

I do have a question for the Prime Minister. His Minister of Finance has been going around the country, apparently very interested in the views of businessmen, business leaders and investment leaders. Interestingly enough, a survey by the Conference Board of Canada, just released—and these are leaders who are very knowledgeable and very susceptive of the economy—indicates that wage settlements are not a serious problem facing Canadians today. Yet the Minister of Finance has repeatedly indicated that wage settlements are his No. 1 preoccupation. Will the government now drop its preoccupation with wage controls and instead drop interest rates as a step toward economic recovery?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should realize that the government's concern embraces several causes and not only one cause of inflation, as the hon. member seems to be saying. The government has said on many occasions that the various economic partners each have their influence and that they should act with discipline and restraint in their respective sectors and spheres. The government itself has shown the way by very substantially reducing its financial requirements, as set forth in the budget plan, and it intends to continue to show the same discipline and restraint, in order to set an example and persuade all economic partners to join the government in fighting inflationary pressures.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance, in the hope that the Prime Minister will rise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: On Monday of this week the minister responsible for co-ordinating economic development in Canada tentatively stated what a number of Liberal backbenchers have been stating over the last number of days, as well as, of course, some members of the cabinet—one being the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism—that is, that if present policies continue in this country major action will be required much different from that being presently introduced by the government. The minister responsible for economic development indicated that because of the position of our economy today extraordinary measures will likely be required. In line with the—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is a rather long question.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I will ask the question now. In line with the proposal of the minister responsible for economic development, is the Prime Minister or the Minister of State for Finance prepared to indicate to this House that because of conditions extraordinary steps are required and action is required now, not in the fall of 1982?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is so well informed on the activities of this government, he will realize that in many sectors, important and indeed extraordinary measures have been taken to help businesses to adjust, and to assist the recovery of certain industrial sectors. Therefore, the hon. member should realize that government programs already contain special measures designed to help businesses to adjust and to promote economic recovery.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—QUERY RESPECTING RECOGNITION OF BRITISH SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and deals with the very serious situation that exists in reference to the Falkland Islands. Does the Canadian government recognize the United Kingdom as having sovereignty over the Falkland Islands? Secondly, could the Prime Minister tell us what steps the government has taken since April 2 to support the United Kingdom in reversing the present aggression that has taken place in the Falkland Islands? What steps have we taken in addition to the pious expressions of support that we have given to date? What actual steps have we taken, and what might be contemplated in view of the present very serious situation?

• (1430)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of sovereignty over the Falkland Islands is not for Canada to decide; it is a matter to be decided either by an international tribunal, whether it be an arbitration tribunal or the International Court of Justice, or by negotiation between the parties.

What is of great concern to Canada and to other peace abiding countries is that Argentina has chosen to try to settle a dispute over territory by recourse to force of arms and that the United Kingdom has had to have recourse to self-defence in order to regain those islands. That is the position that Canada has taken. It is in pursuance of that position that we have banned the export of war material to Argentina and that we have, like the members of the Common Market, imposed similar kinds of restrictions with respect to the entry of Argentinian imports to Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister does not see this question as being important enough for him to answer. Let me tell the Secretary of State for External Affairs that what he has done to date is not sufficient. Apparently the Canadian government does not recognize the United Kingdom as having sovereignty over the Falkland Islands. That is an interesting admission.

REQUEST THAT ALL EXPORTS TO ARGENTINA BE BANNED

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): May I ask a supplementary question, Madam Speaker? The Secretary of State for External Affairs says that the action we have taken to date is to ban imports from Argentina and to ban the export of military supplies to that country. Will the government go further and ban any exports to Argentina during the period of this emergency in order to demonstrate or try to exert some pressure on Argentina? I refer specifically to the 3,000 nuclear fuel bundles that are supposed to be exported to Argentina by June 30. Has the government already or will it now ban any further exports to Argentina?

In addition to these expressions of support that we have heard, would the minister tell us what actual steps the Canadian government has been requested to take by the United Kingdom government, or what steps have been taken? Specifically, will we now ban all exports until this emergency is resolved?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member believes his question is important enough to be answered by the Prime Minister, but obviously his own leader does not believe that the question is important enough to be asked by him.

We have taken similar actions to those taken by members of the European Community with respect to Argentina. We are giving the identical kind of support to the United Kingdom that our other friends are giving, and more than some countries in the world are doing.

With respect to contracts, we are not inhibiting any contracts which were pre-existing at the time we took that course of action. The contract to which the hon. member refers with respect to the remaining nuclear material is in this category.

Beyond that, we have a signed agreement with Argentina that it will not use the nuclear material or nuclear technology that we supply, for any non-peaceful purpose. We would not want to depart from any aspect of the terms of that contract because we would not want to provide any opportunity for the other party to say that the contract was now null and void. We want to make sure that Canadian technology is only used for peaceful purposes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM CONTRACT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister inform the House if one of the two consortia competing in the contract definition phase of the patrol frigate program is experiencing difficulties? Could he tell the House whether these difficulties may result in that consortium not being able to meet the October, 1982, deadline for submission of its proposal?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as far as the frigate program is concerned, everything is on schedule. I have had some communication with both consortia, scan-marine and Saint John Dry Dock Ltd. I am not aware of any difficulties experienced by either in meeting the deadline that will enable us to get the frigate program going.

QUERY RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO COMPETING CONTRACTORS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence who should be interested enough in the subject to know the answer. Could the minister tell the House whether the government has withheld, or is considering withholding, any milestone payment to one of the consortia in the Canadian patrol frigate program due to its not being able to meet the progress deadlines imposed by contract?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as of last week, when I received the monthly report on the frigate program, I am not aware of any such occurrence.

Last Friday, the minister announced that similar agreements had been signed with British Columbia. Could the minister inform the House how negotiations with Quebec are progressing and whether Quebecers in the forestry industry who are interested in participating in the program will be able to do so in the near future?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can confirm to the hon. member that we have received a proposal concerning a development and employment program in the forestry industry in Quebec which is similar to what we have undertaken in signing agreements with the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario. I can assure the hon. member that we will give it very prompt, and sympathetic consideration. I hope we will be able to make an announcement on an agreement by next week. I want to thank the hon. member and some of her colleagues for the work they put into developing this proposal.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

APPROVAL OF SALE OF ONTARIO GENERATED ELECTRICITY TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the National Energy Board decision, made public yesterday, to allow Ontario Hydro to go ahead with the sale of electricity to the United States. I put it to the Prime Minister that, if the government allows this to happen, it will completely destroy the credibility of all the work done by the special committee on acid rain, by the House of Commons, by the government, by the Department of External Affairs, and our steady but slowly successful attempt to get support in Washington.

I put this question to the Prime Minister because the Minister of the Environment made a statement yesterday. What is the Prime Minister prepared to do, as leader of this country, as far as that agreement or decision by the National Energy Board with respect to Ontario Hydro is concerned, when it comes to cabinet for discussion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will take the steps advised by the minister responsible for the environment and review the decision of the National Energy Board, along with my colleagues, and the recommendations of the ministers involved.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for answering the first question put to him today in the House.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES RESPECTING EMISSION CONTROL DEVICES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent by the special committee on acid rain, in view of the petition that was circulated in this House, in view of the incredible work that the Department of External Affairs has been trying to do in Washington, and in view of the fact that we have been making steady progress in getting friends in the U.S. House and Senate, will the minister assure the House that before Ontario Hydro is allowed to enter into any agreement with the New Jersey Power Corporation he will make sure that Ontario Hydro guarantees, in writing, to put scrubbers in place on all stacks at Nanticoke generating station, or equivalent technology, that will reduce and, we hope, eliminate the sulphur coming out of the smoke stacks?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the recommendation of the National Energy Board will come before cabinet for discussion. Clearly, I cannot tell him what the decision of cabinet will be before it has been taken. The views of the Department of the Environment were presented to the National Energy Board and are well known. I know of no reason to change them at the present time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—PROSECUTION OF URANIUM CANADA LIMITED

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. If one of the main purposes of criminal law is to punish individuals or corporations when, after due process, they are found guilty of an offence, how can the minister justify the prosecution and possible punishment of a shell corporation such as Uranium Canada, which has absolutely no assets, and which, for all practical purposes, is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the senior staff?

In addition, the maximum fine in the event of a finding of guilt is $1 million. Who would pay that fine? Would it be a new form of transfer payment from the President of the Treasury Board to the province of Ontario which collects fines?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, in this matter, I followed the recommendations I was given by Commissioner Bertrand and his legal advisers who decided in favour of prosecuting the companies that allegedly conspired to fix the price of uranium in Canada. So I took Mr. Bertrand's report and accepted his recommendations, and we put the Crown corporations and the private companies on the same footing. We were entirely justified in doing so because, a few weeks or months before that, the Ontario Court of Appeal handed down a decision that Crown corporations could be prosecuted before the courts in Canada in matters of this kind.

[English]

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROSECUTION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): The minister is insulting the intelligence of everyone in this room today. He is the chief law officer of the Crown, so how can a prosecution possibly be initiated against a corporation with absolutely no assets and no way of paying a fine? It would be nothing more than a book entry between the federal and provincial governments, so how do you justify it? Don't cop-out.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, there was a corporation involved. When the Bertrand report said we should prosecute private and public corporations, we did not look in the books of every corporation before prosecuting. If that were the case, Madam Speaker, the hon. member would have said, "why didn't you prosecute?" We cannot presume there will be a fine because we do not know the result. If the court decides they should be fined, it will be a problem that the corporation will have to face at that time. As Minister of Justice I have done my duty, which is to prosecute—

Mr. Clark: And hide everything you can.

Mr. Chrétien: —the corporation according to the recommendations of the Bertrand report. That is exactly what I have done. On top of that, to make sure that the views of the Bertrand report would be seen in the best light possible in front of the court, I decided to hire the same lawyer that Mr. Bertrand had selected.

CROWN CORPORATION DOCUMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and deals with the situation where the other four corporate defendants in this uranium cartel case have requested that Uranium Canada and Eldorado Nuclear turn over to them documents in their possession for purposes of a full and fair defence. This request has been refused by the Crown corporations, which will mean that the corporate defendants' defence is going to be prejudiced. Will the Prime Minister direct the Crown corporations to make available to these private firms the documents in their possession to assist them in a full and proper defence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to take note of the question and discuss it with the Minister of Justice who is here today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister may not understand this, but the Minister of Justice is involved in the prosecution of these companies. The other arm of government is involved in the defence. The Prime Minister should consult with members of his cabinet because he has more men of conviction in his cabinet than any other Prime Minister in the history of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS BE DECLASSIFIED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Crown corporations are immune from prosecution and the remaining defendants are at a clear disadvantage in obtaining the evidence they require for a full defence. Therefore, will the Minister of Justice, or the Prime Minister, agree not to invoke the provisions of Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act which will prevent the introduction of government documents as evidence in court? In addition, will the minister agree to declassify all government documents in this case so that the private corporations can have access to them for a proper defence?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I do not think I want to debate these questions which are in front of the court at this time. The argument the hon. member makes is in relation to a case which is in front of the courts at this very moment. It is for the lawyers there to put their arguments to the court.

Mr. Clark: It is not sub judice.

Mr. Chrétien: If there is some ruling by the judge in this case we will advise accordingly, but at this moment the question is between lawyers in front of the court. It is up to the court to decide; it is not for the Minister of Justice to pass judgment at this moment.

STATUS OF FUTURE ENERGY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the President of the Treasury Board who is responsible for drawing up a comprehensive Crown corporation policy. In light of the fact that the decision in the Uranium Canada and Eldorado case is that they are agents of Her Majesty and therefore immune from criminal prosecution, is it the policy of the government, supported by the minister, that all new energy Crown corporations should automatically be made agents of Her Majesty and thereby be given immunity from criminal prosecution?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, that question is rather unrelated to the direct responsibilities—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Johnston: —I have had in terms of comprehensive Crown corporation policies. The issues I have addressed and discussed with the hon. member on a number of occasions are control, direction, and accountability of these corporations.

Mr. Clark: Except before the courts.

Mr. Johnston: With respect to the specific question he raises, I suggest he take it up with the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

BANKS AND BANKING

STATUS AND POWERS OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will address my question to the Minister of State (Finance). In his reply to my question yesterday the Minister of Finance said he was in close touch with the Inspector General of Banks and that he had no reason to believe that any of the banks operating within the Canadian system are not in a viable position, and he believed that each of them is viable in the circumstances, whatever that means. If that statement were true, why would the chief executive officer of the Bank of Montreal describe many banks in the Canadian banking system as beached whales, and say that Canadians may have to turn to foreign banks to finance Canadian projects?

I ask the minister is he or the Minister of Finance satisfied that the Inspector General of Banks has the status, resources and authority to give the necessary attention and supervision to the Canadian banking system?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in the preamble to this question, the hon. member referred to comments by an officer of the Bank of Montreal. If the hon. member is seeking clarification of these comments, I would recommend that he put his question to the author and not to the Minister of Finance.

As for the hon. member's principal question, namely, does the office of the Inspector General of Banks have enough staff and expertise to perform its duties under the provisions of the Bank Act. As far as I know the answer is yes, and I am not aware that the Inspector General of Banks has asked for more resources to do the office's work.

[English]

FOREIGN CURRENCY ASSETS OF BANKS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Is the minister aware that 40 per cent of the total assets of Canadian banks is in foreign currency assets, and that this growing practice is because they are not required to set aside reserves against foreign currency assets as they must do with their domestic assets? This weakness is now becoming a serious inhibiting factor to Canadian development; that is the issue. The Minister of Finance's answer to me yesterday is at odds with the statement of the chief executive officer of the Bank of Montreal.

What is the point of Canadianization policies if we have to borrow from foreign banks to develop our own country, and is this minister, or the Minister of Finance, prepared to correct this unstable situation by separating foreign and domestic lending, and ensuring that proper reserves are set up at home for Canadian banks creating foreign currency assets?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that when we revised the Bank Act, changes were made in the requirements for bank reserves. The member should also recall that on the same occasion, certain foreign financial institutions operating in Canada were given the possibility of obtaining the status of Canadian banking institutions. As far as any effects on the reserves as a result of these changes are concerned, I am willing to ask the Inspector General of Banks what the consequences have been and whether the hon. member's assessment is correct.

CRIMINAL CODE

REFERRAL OF SUBJECT OF PROSTITUTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. As he knows, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and the National Association of Women and the Law have both urged the government not to refer the important question of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs unless witnesses could be heard in a way that would not delay or kill Bill C-53, the long overdue legislation reforming Canada's rape laws. The terms of reference proposed yesterday by the minister require consideration of soliciting "during hearings on Bill C-53".

Does the minister agree with the position of these women's organizations on this important question and, if so, will he support a reference on this subject which would specify hearings in the last three weeks in May when Bill C-53 is not before the committee?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, first we should refer the problem to the committee and unanimous consent has not been given by the hon. member to do that. After that, when the matter is before the committee it can decide about its own procedure. I want to accommodate hon. members as best I can. But if the hon. member is very keen to have Bill C-53 passed very quickly, I think judging by past experience the hon. member would have helped a lot if he had learned to shut up in committees once in a while.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the women of Canada will want to hear the minister's position on this important question. He has been silent too long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): If the minister wants to play games with the women of Canada with respect to rape laws, that is his problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TERMS OF REFERRAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): At the conclusion of question period, Madam Speaker, I intend to seek consent to move without debate a reference in identical terms to those proposed yesterday by the minister, with one addition, that witnesses on soliciting be heard in the last two weeks in May—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. When the time for motions comes, I will call the hon. member if he rises on motions. But it is the time for questions now.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I know the official opposition will support this particular reference. Is the minister prepared to support it?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, there is a motion that has been agreed to by the official opposition, by the members of my party and I guess the majority of the members of the New Democratic Party. We do not see why we should give the hon. member for Burnaby special status in this House to propose some special conditions, especially when the hon. member is always keen to get up on questions of rights yet he is one who voted against the equality of men and women in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MARINE TRANSPORT

PROTECTION SAFEGUARDS FOR FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a very important question to the Minister of Transport. At the present time fishing quotas that are established by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans literally direct most of Atlantic Canada's deep sea fishing effort into the frigid iceberg prone waters of Hamilton Bank, off the coast of Labrador, where at any given time some one half of the fleet operating in that area comes from the province of Nova Scotia. They are required to fish through ice packs which are five or six feet thick. As these men face almost certain loss of life in times of disaster because foreign hospital ships, freezer trawlers and support ships are no longer operating in the area, what does the minister propose to do in order to protect the lives of Canadian mariners beyond the present inadequate rescue facilities that are in place?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The question is rather a general one, is it not, Madam Speaker? I can only answer with a cliché that we intend to do the best we can with the equipment and the money we have. My hon. friend has a particular preoccupation. If he feels that a certain area is not sufficiently taken into account by the coast guard, I would be grateful if he would indicate which one it is and I will be pleased to provide him with whatever information I can find on the particular item.

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

I see the member for South Shore is rising. His supplementary question should be very short.

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, the minister has asked me for a suggestion and that is why I rise on a supplementary question. In February, 1982—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It should not a suggestion even if the minister has asked the hon. member for a suggestion. The hon. member should ask a question.

REQUEST THAT COAST GUARD SHIP BE STATIONED AT ST. ANTHONY, NFLD.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that there has been a tremendous loss of life in the area within the past year and a half. Since there are many tragic examples that I could give to the minister of this loss of life, will he consider establishing a coast guard ship on station at St. Anthony, Newfoundland, equipped with a helicopter pad, in order to provide more adequate protection for our mariners who are forced at the present time to operate in this rather rough environment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we will certainly take that suggestion into account. I will bring it to my officials and have it debated. The department's view on this matter will be provided to the hon. member by me, to which he can object and give me his reason for the objection.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OPTIONS BEFORE CABINET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has indicated that Canada's policy toward Argentina is to speak loudly and send nuclear bundles. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm that the choice which was before the cabinet of Canada in relation to Argentina was, on the one hand, to suspend all commercial relations until the Argentinian forces were out of the Falkland Islands, and on the other hand to proceed with "business as usual", and the Government of Canada chose the option of business as usual?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, as often happens, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has completely distorted the position of the government. The choice before the government was, as the European community decided, whether to render impossible any future contracts between Canadians and Argentinians. We took that step, which was exactly the same kind of step the European community had taken in support of Britain. It would not be sensible to go beyond that in a general way because these contracts in the past were entered into in good faith. This is particularly true in the case of the nuclear industry. It would not be a good idea to engage in any such abrogation of past contracts because in this instance it would leave the Argentinians the option of declaring that, if the contract were not fulfilled on our part they, for their part, would not be bound by the undertaking which they gave to use Canadian technology only for peaceful purposes.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, these contracts were entered into before Argentina undertook an act of aggression against Great Britain and put occupying forces on the Falkland Islands. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister, if he is interested, tell us how Canada expects to be taken seriously on this question when, on the one hand, we condemn and, on the other hand, we send and export 3,000 nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina?

• (1500)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the right hon. member appears to be rather badly informed on this case. The uranium which is involved in the fuel bundles is not even Canadian uranium. It is Argentinian uranium which we are upgrading in Canada according to the contract into which we solemnly entered.

Mr. Crosbie: Why?

Mr. MacGuigan: Britain is very pleased with the kind of support it has been receiving from its allies.

Mr. Crosbie: What support?

Mr. MacGuigan: Our actions are exactly parallel to those of the European community.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO SEND CANADIAN AEROBATIC TEAM TO EUROPE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the Canadian Aerobatic Association which wishes to send a team to Austria for the world championships in August, 1982. Has the minister received a letter of request for assistance from the Canadian Aerobatic Association, asking for assistance either in terms of money or in terms of getting the airplanes over to Europe?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have received such a letter. We do not have a great amount of funds for sending Canadians abroad to participate in functions of this kind. We will certainly give fair consideration to the request of the hon. member.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I merely wish to confirm, for the information of hon. members on both sides of the House, that tomorrow will be an opposition day.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PELLETIER—REFERRING TO MEMBERS BY NAME DURING DEBATE

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to a practice that, I feel, is becoming a dangerous habit. I should like to refer you, Madam Speaker, to Beauchesne, fifth edition, Citation 319 on page 104, and I quote:

(1) It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member raising a point of order?

Mr. Pelletier: No, Madam Speaker, I am raising a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Does this question of privilege arise from today's proceedings?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Sherbrooke has the floor.

Mr. Pelletier: Madam Speaker, during the past months, certain opposition members have referred to ministers and the Right Hon. Prime Minister by name, which is forbidden under the Standing Orders of the House.

I must also point out today that on Monday and Tuesday, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), yesterday, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), last week, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must not go beyond his point of order. In fact, it is certainly not a question of privilege, and the hon. member should not persist in treating it as such. If he wishes to speak on a point of order, I shall listen to him.

Mr. Pelletier: Madam Speaker, that is all right with me. I am quite willing to call this a point of order, but it seems to me that if all hon. members' privileges may be affected, it is more like a question of privilege. In any case, Madam Speaker, it seems to me you should be somewhat stricter on this point, because in my humble opinion, it is a practice that could well—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member disagrees with the manner in which the Chair conducts the proceedings of the House, he has various options from which to choose, which do not include making remarks of this kind and reprimanding the Chair. It is not a personal matter but concerns my role in the House.

The hon. member may have noticed that when some members use the name of the right hon. Prime Minister or another minister as an adjective, for instance in the case of the Trudeau era or the Trudeau administration, this is entirely acceptable. On the whole, hon. members do not make a habit of referring to other members or ministers by name, but in the very few instances that they do, and considering the time that goes into matters of this kind, I do not intervene if I feel that it was merely an oversight on the part of the hon. member. I cannot really interrupt proceedings every so often, if such infringements of the Standing Orders do not have quite extraordinary consequences for the proceedings of the House.

However, I have noted the hon. member's comments and I shall try to watch this aspect more closely. Sometimes my attention wanders, because I must also watch other members who wish to have the floor, and I do not always hear it when an hon. member happens to use the name of the Prime Minister or another member in the manner referred to by the hon. member.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING STREET SOLICITING FOR THE PURPOSE OF PROSTITUTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

Motions

That, with unanimous consent and without debate, it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that during its consideration of Bill C-53, it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution and including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently in force in this regard, and include—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am in a bit of difficulty because motions of this nature should be introduced by the government House leader; this kind of Government business should be introduced by the government. I could cite May and Beauchesne who stated very clearly that government House leaders must put all these matters to the House themselves and that government House leaders also move housekeeping motions, allot supply days and generally ensure that the House is kept busy. Of course, with unanimous consent this can be done in another manner, but it is usual for such a motion to be presented by the government.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Normally that is the case, Madam Speaker. I am sure the Chair is aware that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) is trying to obtain unanimous consent of the House in order to put a motion which is precisely in the same words as the one the government has endeavoured to have the House accept on two occasions. On both occasions it was thwarted by members of the New Democratic Party.

I suggest that there is nothing wrong. Indeed, it is perfect keeping with our practices for any member on either side of the House to rise, seeking unanimous consent of the House on motions, to put a particular motion. Of course it is another matter if the House does not give consent. I am certain that the government and the Conservative opposition are prepared to give that kind of consent. It remains to be seen whether the motion is acceptable to the members of the New Democratic Party now after they had refused it twice before.

• (1510)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, as I explained yesterday, we were quite prepared to give unanimous consent to have the motion moved. I do not believe there was ever any doubt in anyone's mind that not only were we prepared to give unanimous consent to allow the motion to be put, we did in fact give unanimous consent yesterday to allow the motion to be put. There was no attempt on our part to stop it.

However, I would like to make it quite clear that we are prepared to allow that motion to be put with unanimous consent subject to the withdrawal of that part which denies debate, there being no predisposition on the part of the House to deny an hon. member an opportunity to express his or her opinion on any motion put before the House.

I suggest that it is a denial of the rights of hon. members to ask that any member be asked to forgo that opportunity. I suggest that, provided the "without debate" provision is withdrawn, we will be happy to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, perhaps to assist the Chair before it rules on the point made by the Chair, you may wish to consider Standing Order 32(1)(p) which deals with the business of the House and which, I submit, provides any hon. member with the opportunity that is being sought by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney).

Madam Speaker: First, I wish to reply to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). This morning again I went through the proceedings which took place yesterday. Indeed, once the motion was proposed I did ask for unanimous consent. But as soon as I asked for unanimous consent, some hon. members did give it, but not all of them. The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) was on his feet and I therefore recognized him. Consequently, that procedure by which I was seeking unanimous consent was interrupted by his seeking the floor—which is perfectly legitimate—and I gave him the floor. Subsequently there was an exchange on both sides of the House. Again I asked for unanimous consent in order to complete that procedure, and unanimous consent was not given. That must be made quite clear.

In my estimation there was not unanimous consent. As far as today is concerned, even without having looked at the reference, I think the point made by the hon. member is well taken. The House can do just about anything it wishes as long as it receives unanimous consent.

Therefore, I believe we have heard part of the motion, but if the House is ready to give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to propose her motion to the House, I can ask the House whether it will give that unanimous consent.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to yesterday's proceedings in the House, I want the record to be very clear that it was absolutely the case that unanimous consent was granted by all parties to the putting of this motion yesterday. The only issue was whether or not there could be debate on it. Certainly, we gave unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: Not at all. There was no unanimous consent. I must make that quite clear for the record. The Chair would know by looking at the whole House whether there was unanimous consent.

It was the distinct and clear impression of the Chair that the proceeding to seek unanimous consent was interrupted by the hon. member for Burnaby rising to be recognized. As I say, that is perfectly legitimate. I did recognize the hon. member and, after the exchange, the Chair came back to complete the procedure. At that point the House did not give its consent.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, does your ruling mean that I may proceed with this motion?

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent for the motion to be put by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I ask leave of the House to propose the following motion:

That it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that during its consideration of Bill C-53, it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting with the purpose of prostitution, and including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently in force in this regard, and include the hearing and consideration of the views of the interested persons and organizations, provided that all witnesses on this issue be heard by the justice committee, or a sub-committee thereof, between May 10 and May 31, 1982.

I seek unanimous consent of the House to propose this motion which would have exactly the same effect as the motion which was moved yesterday by the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson) and as the motion moved today by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) with the one proviso that the dates in question be May 10 to May 31 so that the consideration of Bill C-53 would not be jeopardized in any way.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give the hon. member its unanimous consent to put this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member does not have unanimous consent of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,431, 2,547, 2,548, 3,696, 3,733, 3,754 and 3,755.

[Text]

POLICY ON TRAVEL OUTSIDE NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 1,431—Mr. Crosby:

1. Is there a policy applicable to the officers in the Prime Minister's office and in the Privy Council office respecting payment for travel to their homes outside the National Capital Region and for time off for such travel and, if so, what is the policy?

2. Are such officers permitted to travel first class on Air Canada and other airlines at public expense and, if so, what are their names?

3. Are such officers permitted to receive income and other benefits from sources other than the government and, if so, what are the limits?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1 and 2. Yes, Chapter 370, Sections. 8.3 and .3.2.2 of the Treasury Board Canada Administrative Policy Manual.

3. Yes. There are no amount limits. Officers in such situations, under the terms of the Public Servants Conflict of Interest Guidelines, must ensure that such pecuniary interests do not conflict with the discharge of their official duties.

MR. MICHAEL PITFIELD

Question No. 2,547—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 1,217 which stated in part that after his reappointment as Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet Mr. Michael Pitfield made regular trips to and from Boston to visit his family and that first class air travel was permitted by the government, is it the policy of the government to provide payment for Mr. Pitfield to visit his family or for other senior public servants to visit relatives who happen to live in a location other than Ottawa and, if so, how is such expenditure of public funds warranted?

2. What was the total amount spent by the government on trips to and from Boston made by Mr. Pitfield, including the date and amount in each case?

3. Was there an agreement between the government and Harvard University and/or Mr. Pitfield that he should perform certain duties for the university after his reappointment in Ottawa and, if so, what are the details of the agreement and for what reason was it approved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Answers 1,217 and 1,217 (revised) stated in part that following his reappointment as Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr. Pitfield made regular visits to Boston until the end of the 1979-80 academic year to visit his family and complete his teaching obligations to Harvard University.

It is the policy of the government when recruiting an individual into the public service to negotiate appropriate transitional arrangements with the individual concerned and, where necessary, with his employer. See also question 2,386, parts 3 and 4, answered May 25, 1981.

2. In relation to part 1 above the cost of the following travel between Ottawa and Boston by Mr. Pitfield was paid by the government:

March 10/14, 1980	$300.80
March 18/21, 1980	291.80
March 27/31, 1980	294.30
April 3/7, 1980	352.21
April 10/14, 1980	354.11
April 17/21, 1980	272.30
April 24/28, 1980	268.30
May 1/5, 1980	378.91
May 11/12, 1980	347.72
May 18/19, 1980	412.17
May 22/23, 1980	420.86
June 1/2, 1980	438.06
June 17, 1980	259.87

3. See 1 above; see also questions 1,217 and 2,386, answered May 25, 1981; and 1,217 (revised) answered May 27, 1981.

Order Paper Questions

Question No. 2,548—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,217 which stated in part that after his reappointment as Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet Mr. Michael Pitfield carried on with the completion of certain duties for Harvard University (a) was he on full salary with the government at the time and, if so, what was the salary per year (b) was any amount deducted from his government salary to compensate taxpayers for the time that he was performing duties for the university and (i) if so, what amount (ii) if not, for what reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): (a) For the period after April 1, 1980, see question 1,883, part 1, answered April 10, 1981. For the period before April 1, 1980, Mr. Pitfield was also paid in the salary range for the DM-3 level, which was $62,900—$78,300.

(b) See question No. 2,386, answered May 25, 1981; see also question No. 2,547 answered today.

MR. MICHAEL KIRBY

Question No. 3,696—Mr. Crosby:

1. What position was held by Mr. Michael Kirby prior to December, 1981 and what remuneration was paid to him?

2. Did he receive any benefits other than dollar remuneration and did the benefits include payments or allowances for regular weekly or more frequent trips between Ottawa, Ontario and Halifax, Nova Scotia for personal reasons?

3. Was the remuneration paid on the basis of the regular public service workday and work week and, if so, how did he account for any time spent in personal travel between Ottawa and Halifax?

4. (a) What is his position at present (b) what is the remuneration and does it include allowances for personal travel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations on exchange from the Institute for Research on Public Policy (IRPP). Remuneration—DM-2, $73,400—$86,000.

2. In addition to dollar remuneration, the exchange agreement with the IRPP provided for the payment of expenses for a weekly trip on the average by air (economy class) for Mr. Kirby to and from Halifax, including expenses for ground transportation.

3. The remuneration was paid on the basis of the regular public service work week, although it is recognized that deputy heads work many hours of overtime for which no extra remuneration is paid. Time spent in personal travel did not infringe on official business time.

4. (a) Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations. The exchange agreement with the Institute for Research on Public Policy was terminated as of December 31, 1981. (b) See 1 and 2 above.

MR. MICHAEL PITFIELD

Question No. 3,733—Mr. Crosby:

1. Were any payments made to Mr. Peter Michael Pitfield in the past five years, other than instalment payments on his annual salary, and, if so, what was the amount?

2. Did Mr. Pitfield furnish an office and, if so, what was the cost of each item of furniture?

3. Did Mr. Pitfield order, or cause to be constructed, a custom desk for his office and, if so, what was the amount paid for the desk and was any tender called?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. The only payments made to Mr. Pitfield were instalments on his annual salary; separation pay (see question No. 674 answered May 22, 1981); payments for work done on a part-time basis when Mr. Pitfield was not a member of the public service, amounting to $17,600 in fiscal year 1979-80; and reimbursement in accordance with Treasury Board directives of official travel, relocation, and hospitality expenses incurred by Mr. Pitfield in the performance of his responsibilities. The amounts of those reimbursements over the past five fiscal years are as follows:

1977-78	$ 6,813.83
1978-79	4,618.91
1979-80	3,786.83
1980-81	3,900.73
1981-82	9,852.32
(as of January 31, 1982)

2. No.

3. No. At no time during his career in the public service has Mr. Pitfield requested the refurnishing of his office. In 1980, however, Public Works Canada required the desk used by Mr. Pitfield and his predecessors since Confederation so that it might be put in the historic cabinet chambers in the East Block that are now open to public view. The original Clerk's desk has been replaced by Public Works Canada with a reproduction costing $4,850 in order to retain the traditional character and furnishings of the office of the Clerk of the Privy Council, now in the Langevin Block, and to discourage future incumbents from changing the decor of that office simply to suit personal tastes. Public Works Canada, in due course, will be replacing two other pieces that have traditionally been used by Clerks of the Privy Council with replicas at a cost of $4,400.

PRESS INTERVIEW BY GOVERNOR GENERAL

Question No. 3,754—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was anyone in government, particularly the Prime Minister, aware in advance that the Governor General was giving a press interview on January 21, 1982 or thereabouts and of the content of the Governor General's statements and, if so, what are all the details and the names of the persons involved?

2. Is it customary for the Governor General to advise the Prime Minister in advance of his intention to hold a press conference or to give a press interview?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citations 171(gg), (ii) and (nn).

Question No. 3,755—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Governor General in an interview on or about January 21, 1982 declare that it was his opinion that Canadians may drift away from the monarchy after the end of this century and, if so, was such a statement made on the recommendation of the government or with government approval?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See reply to question No. 3,754 answered this day.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I was making some comment on this government order last evening when we reached the adjournment hour. I would briefly sum up today what I believe is wrong with this bill. I find it very difficult to grant to this government the authority to borrow further. The reason I find it difficult is that it has mismanaged the finances of this country and mismanaged its economy to such an extent that it has created a sense of despair in Canadians about their personal future and that of their families.

If the government were to have a further borrowing capacity it would be used in exactly the same manner as it has used its existing borrowing capacity. The government would use its tax revenues from individuals and groups in exactly the same way. I believe that if I agreed to grant the government a further borrowing power I would be neglecting my responsibility to my constituents.

I firmly believe that if this economy had been properly managed we would not have the high interest rates which we are currently faced with. If we did not have the high rates of interest that we are currently facing, there would be more job opportunities in this country. One million of the million and a half people who are currently unemployed would be employed. If those one million people were employed and earning a living, and if they were producing products in their places of employment which would be sold both in Canada and around the world, we would be generating sufficient tax revenues to make it unnecessary for this government to go further into the money marketplaces to borrow at exorbitantly high interest rates.

The reason this government is required continually to come back to the House of Commons to ask for additional borrowing power is that this nation has such an unused productive capacity, primarily as a result of this government's fiscal and monetary policies. These policies have further reduced the tax flow and revenues which could have been used and should have been used to meet the ongoing economic and social programs that the government wants to put before the public of Canada. I want to say, quite frankly, that there could be no doubt in the mind of anyone that the responsibility for the economic chaos which exists in almost every single municipality from one coast to the other rests entirely with the Government of Canada at the federal level.

I say to the minister that I have never felt the necessity to worry about interim borrowing on the part of government. I have always felt there would be times when governments might have to borrow money. As in the case of individuals and corporations, it is necessary from time to time to borrow money in order to proceed with long-term projects.

Mr. Blenkarn: Long-term projects, of course.

Mr. Deans: However, I suggest to this government that, as a result of its high interest policy and as a result of its determination to pursue the Reagan theories—

Mr. Blenkarn: Not Reagan theories.

Mr. Deans: —it has raised the cost of borrowing, both for private individuals and for government, to a level which makes it virtually impossible to contemplate allowing that opportunity to this government, at least at this time.

I want to know what the money will be used for. I suppose that I could be convinced in my mind of the necessity of the borrowing if the minister were to rise in his place and explain the long-term projects and the proposed schedule of payments. We should be satisfied that we would derive sufficient cash flow from the proposed projects to enable us to pay off the indebtedness. I would not even mind if the government were speaking about borrowing in conjunction with a series of other proposals, one of which would have to be the reduction of interest rates. I would even not mind if, in conjunction with the borrowing and the reduction of interest rates, the government were to state that it sees the necessity of stimulating the economy at this time in order to put a million and a half people to work and to provide job opportunities for Canadians who so desperately want to find employment but cannot. I would be prepared to consider granting to the government the opportunity to borrow at a reasonable rate of interest in order to stimulate the economy in certain areas. This would guarantee that a sense of economic growth is being developed across this country and that people are able to find a place to work and earn a decent living, allowing them to buy goods in the consumer marketplace and provide homes for their families. That would make sense to me.

However, why is the government borrowing? Is it borrowing to build homes? No, it is not. Is it borrowing to ensure new economic growth? No, it is not. It is borrowing simply in order to pay for the debt that it incurred from borrowing some years ago. It is borrowing to pay off old debts. There is not sufficient growth in this economy to justify that kind of action.

As I said last night, I spent four days last week in my constituency. I met with many people, from high school students to old age pensioners. I met with representatives from the unions of workers. I met with the chief executive officers of various companies. I met with small business people. We discussed the problems which had suddenly become apparent, "suddenly" meaning over the course of the last couple of years.

These problems had become apparent in what had been the industrial heartland of the country for years, but primarily of the Ontario milieu. In Hamilton we had in place a series of different sized industries dealing with diverse commodities, all the way from the basic steel industry through to the manufacture of appliances. We made shoes, as I said last night. We had every conceivable kind of industry which, by virtue of the structure of the municipality, seemed to guarantee, at least to the extent that one could guarantee it, a degree of economic stability. We had diversified industry. We had the rubber industry, we made hopper cars and we had the basic steel industry. We made fridges and stoves, shoes and clothes. We built homes and made the bricks. We had a port for shipping. We had a glass company which made all kinds of glassware. In other words, there could be no more diversified economy than the economy of the area I represent.

However, today, what do we find? I find that without exception, in every single sector of the economy, in every single company, there have been lay-offs at a level comparable to that of the 1930s. In some companies, 80 per cent of their employees have become unemployed. Companies which had been seen to be the major movers and shakers in the economy of Canada are looking ahead and seeing virtually nothing in terms of the opportunity for economic recovery.

I want Your Honour to know that when I listened to my constituents, I could not help but sense their frustration. I spoke to young people in high schools. I guess I met nearly 2,000 students over the course of four days. I spoke to them individually in the auditorium and answered their questions. I discussed the policy of the government and what we would offer as an alternative. Almost without exception, their main concern was about what would happen to them after they left school. They asked, "Where will the job opportunities be? Where will I go to work?" In one case I spoke to a student whose father had worked in the glass industry for 28 years, but who had become unemployed. His son asked me, "Where will I look? What would you suggest, Mr. Deans?" To be honest, I had nothing to suggest. This government has so undermined the economic fabric of the country and has so depressed the natural optimism of Canadians, that I could not really point to one industrial sector where there was buoyancy, a sense of optimism and an opportunity for growth.

I spoke with senior citizens in my constituency and they said to me, "Ian, I remember what it was like in the thirties. I was there. The symptoms are here again today." Those with money are extracting more and more from the economy but are putting less and less back in. There has been an undermining of the sense of co-operation which must exist in a country. They said to me that they are simply glad they are not facing the kinds of problems that their sons, daughters and grandchildren are facing. They do not think that this government has the will to solve those problems.

I do not want to suggest for one minute that the solution lies only with the government. I recognize that the solution requires action on the part of this government, the provincial governments and municipal governments to ensure that we do not waste any more money. However, we must also put the available capital to good use so that there will be an opportunity for those who are now seeking it.

• (1530)

The primary responsibility for the problem rests four-square with this government. The solution may require a multifaceted approach. It will undoubtedly require a redevelopment of that sense of what it is to be a Canadian amoung Canadians. It will require us again to instil in Canadians the need to buy the things their neighbours make. It must be clear that when there is the option of buying something manufactured by your neighbour or friend or buying something manufactured in another part of the world, where they are of comparable quality, good economic common sense tells you that you would be better off in the long run to buy what is made in your own country.

That is what we must tell people if we want to see economic survival. They will participate. Why is this not being done now? Because they do not think the government knows what it is doing. They honestly do not believe the government knows. There is a sense of frustration, a feeling among people that they have a government that does not really care. The government has left the impression that it does not care about the effects of its policies on the average people. It gives them the right to create a further indebtedness. It gives them the right to borrow even more without any consideration for the effect it will have on working people from coast to coast. That is a miscarriage of responsibility. It is improper.

You, Mr. Speaker, are not in the position of voting. If you were, I am sure you would want to join with me in voting against the proposal put forward by this government. I feel confident that would be true.

The steel industry in Hamilton suffered a terrible blow. The government led it to believe a pipeline would be built. How well I remember just a year ago telling the government that the chance of that pipeline ever being built with private funds, given the many billions of dollars necessary, the economic conditions of the day and the high interest rates that had to be charged as well as the long period of time between the original investment and return on that investment, was pretty slim, at least during the last part of this century. Nevertheless the government went full steam ahead. It raised optimism without producing the goods. Then it heard that Alsands will not go ahead, or if it does it will be so diminished in size it will not produce the kind of economic recovery opportunity that everyone had anticipated.

The steel industry looks around and asks where it will go. In addition to those three major projects that would have provided some economic stimulus, we find that the automobile industry, to which the steel industry is closely tied, is in a recession because of imports and, to some extent, their own mismanagement. Nevertheless, it is seriously undermined. People will not buy automobiles because they cannot afford to pay 22 per cent interest at the bank or wherever they do their financing.

I turn from there to the International Harvester Company that looks as if it were on its last legs. How well I remember International Harvester! One of the main growth points of this country is the agricultural community, yet we discover that Massey Ferguson and International Harvester have no demand for their product. Why is the demand down? Is it because we do not require as much? No, it is because people in the farm community cannot afford to carry the high interest rates. They cannot afford to invest in combines, tractors and other farm implements they require because the interest rate charges are just too heavy. Even with subsidies, they are still way beyond what they can reasonably carry on the return they get from the sale of their produce, whatever it may be.

Mr. Darling: Don't forget the reduced write-off.

Mr. Deans: True. There are two industry sectors that are being undermined for the same basic reason, namely, high interest rates.

There has been a dramatic downturn in the glass industry. I met a man who for 28 years had worked in the glass industry. He was standing on his front lawn raking dead grass. He stopped me and said, "Ian, I have never been on unemployment insurance. I do not even know how to apply. One thing I feel confident about is that the company I worked for is not likely to open its doors again". It closed because it could not afford the high interest rates to carry the inventory necessary to be competitive. It was a small company. The interest rates charged today, added to the cost of production, resulted in too high a cost for their product to be competitive. Therefore they closed their doors, and are not likely ever to open again.

I have spoken to retailers. They told me quite frankly that they cannot carry a wide enough range of products in their store to compete with the major department stores. Why? Because of high interest rates. There is no way they can afford to go to the bank, and they must pay for their products up front. They must pay within a very short time whether or not the product is sold. Therefore, they have to borrow money at 20 per cent or more, and that is added to the cost.

There is no internal financing arrangement for them. The indebtedness they have taken on is substantially more than they, looking at their financing position year by year, can afford. Most smaller retailers do not make that much money. They are not in the upper one tenth of the population's earners. Their earnings generally are in the lower half. The reason they are in business for themselves is that they like the independence. However, the cost of independence these days is very high. It is 20 per cent at the bank as well as a loss of revenue they can ill afford, all because of this government's high interest rate policy.

This government comes to me and asks me, as an act of faith, to approve further borrowing. I say, no. I cannot approve further borrowing because I do not have any faith in this government. I cannot remember when last I did, it is so many years ago.

It has always amazed me how the Conservatives can have so much faith in the Liberal government. Since coming here four years ago, I have wondered why it is that the Tories consistently vote with the government. Here we are, 33 of us, battling daily to hold this government down, and every time a vote comes up in the House of Commons, up stand the Tories alongside the Liberals against the people of Canada. I know you keep notes, Mr. Speaker, and you are aware that between October and February, the Tories and Liberals voted the same way, shoulder to shoulder against Canada, 26 different times.

• (1540)

An hon. Member: They don't like the truth.

Mr. Deans: On the other hand, we in the New Democratic Party, even recognizing that once in a while the government does bring forward an enlightened measure, have supported the government on only 13 occasions during the same period. That is enough to show who gets into bed with whom, enough to show where the soul brothers are.

There is no difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals. Out of 39 times that votes were taken in the House of Commons—votes which in many instances were diametrically opposed to what the people of Canada wanted—the Tories stood up with the Liberals 26 different times. Shame, shame! No wonder your faces are red. No wonder you are embarrassed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if ever again I should hear a whisper from the Conservative party about an NDP-Liberal coalition—that they should have such nerve—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Would you believe it, the government has been virtually robbing the country of its opportunity to produce for itself? Here we have a government introducing the highest interest rates imaginable. Here we have a government that is following almost exactly the position of the previous minister of finance in the Conservative government, the present finance critic in the Conservative Party, and supporting Gerald Bouey right down the line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I remember—it is on the record—the minister of finance in the Conservative government saying; "Well, if I were still in government, I would be supporting Gerald Bouey's high interest rate policy." I remember the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) going to Montreal and saying: "We do think the high interest rate policy of the Minister of Finance really is the appropriate policy to follow."

Lest there be any mistake in anyone's mind, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that we do not believe in the high interest rate policy being followed by the Liberal Party in office today, supported at every turn by the Conservative Party in opposition today. We do not believe that that high interest rate policy is in the best interest of Canada. We do not believe it is in the best interest of Canadians as individuals. We believe it will further undermine the industrial core that is so necessary for the future of the country. We believe quite frankly that this coalition of Liberals and Tories against Canadians has to stop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if there is anything you can imagine in your power that you can do to stop this coalition from undermining Canadian wealth, then I ask you to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I would like to wind up my comments by putting to you, Mr. Speaker, that I would be interested in hearing from the government where they think the jobs are going to come from for the 1.5 million or 1.8 million—depending on whom you include in the statistics—of Canadians currently unemployed. Where will those jobs come from, if people in Canada who are working cannot afford to buy the products that those unemployed people could be manufacturing?

Where will the tax dollars come from to pay off the indebtedness this government is asking us today to vote on. Where will the tax dollars come from in an ever-shrinking economy? Where will the tax dollars come from when fewer and fewer Canadians are working? The unemployed obviously cannot pay taxes, and since the unemployed are becoming a significantly larger percentage of the total working population, does it mean that the rest who are still employed will have to carry that additional burden, in order that this government may squander more and more dollars? Is that the only alternative? Is that all there is? Where is the other way?

How are we going to pay it off? I ask the minister, what are you going to use? Where will you get the money? You can get it only from taxes. If fewer people are working and more industries are closing down due to bankruptcy and there are fewer dollars being generated in the over-all, where are you going to get the money to pay this off?

I put it to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that these policies the government is following are totally unacceptable. These government policies are, almost without exception, based on false premises, false premises of a sudden economic change in North America from which Canada will derive great benefit.

This is a myth. It is a myth. I ask the minister to answer me; What are you going to do to change the situation, to allow the people of Canada once again to get work? What are you going to do to make it possible for Canadian consumers to purchase the things that Canadians manufacture? What are you going to do to make it possible for our auto industry to hold its own during this period of siege? What are you going to do to ensure that there will in fact be a shoe industry after this government is gone? What are you going to do to try to guarantee that the rail transportation system will in fact meet our needs as the country grows? What are you going to do to re-instil in Canadians the kind of confidence that we have to have if we are to survive as a nation? When are you going to stop denying Canadians the opportunity to build Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have the opportunity to speak on this borrowing bill, Bill C-93, an omnibus bill in itself because it is also a taxing bill. I am pleased to speak on behalf of my constituents of Parry Sound-Muskoka and, of course, on behalf of Canadians across this land, and I welcome the opportunity to do so here this afternoon.

It is indeed an outrage that this government has the gall to seek permission to borrow $6.6 billion to spend on its programs, at a time when it asks all other Canadians to reduce their own personal spending. In other words, they are the ones to make sacrifices. This government should be well aware of the sacrifices Canadians are making, most of them forced and unnecessary. Because this government has badly bungled its management of the economy, because this government remains committed to its disastrous policies, because this government exhibits aloofness and disdain toward the plight of Canadians, and because this government has shattered the confidence of all Canadians, the government is the one that should be making the sacrifices, and not the Canadians. The government should be reducing its own wanton spending, much of it obviously wasteful, spending which is the single important root of the problem. This government wants an additional $6.6 billion, with little regard to the fact that the money it now has has been poorly managed. It is asking Parliament for a blank cheque—just sign the cheque and we will spend it as we want.

No Canadian, either those at the personal level or those in business, would be allowed to borrow money under similar circumstances. No one else would be allowed to conduct affairs in such a scandalous manner. It is simply a matter of sound, practical economics, obviously something that the government fails to comprehend. By asking the House to condone this throwing of good money after bad, it appears that the arrogance of the government knows no bounds. And, if permission is granted, who will repay the loan, and at what cost? We know that is has to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada and, as the previous speaker mentioned, in all probability the money that is being sought will be used to pay off debts we owe and will not pump anything into the economy where it is so badly needed.

• (1550)

The government knows that borrowing in this manner simply amounts to a deferral of taxes. What is borrowed today will have to be repaid in greater amounts at a later date. As the government deliberately marches deeper and deeper into debt it forces further sacrifices on Canadians. This is a sad and shameful legacy for future generations. Across this land one senses a growing and pervasive insecurity. It is something which is very real and which the government chooses to ignore.

The November budget provides a perfect example of this attitude of indifference. The budget presentation was an opportunity for the government to redress its past wrongs. It was an opportunity, through sound policies and programs, to provide short-term assistance and long-term plans which would restore our faith in the future.

The budget was an opportunity for this government to take the helm and steer the country to safer and saner economic shores. Unfortunately, it did nothing of the kind. Submerged in producing costly advertisements, which glorify and extol its existence, the government merely peered over the waves and waves of discontent and announced it would continue to fill its own tanks with more of the taxpayers' money. The government is not piloting a ship of state; it is operating a decrepit and leaky submarine. It is a submarine whose skipper and officer mates have spent more time and effort plotting a constitutional course across the Atlantic than they have in concerning themselves with the many depth charges being lobbed in their vicinity. Depth charges, in this instance, may be a misnomer. One only has to glance through the log book of the voyage of this government to realize quickly it has not depth. The budget it presented gives ample evidence of this.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), when presenting his budget, said it had three main themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal. He then proceeded to outline measures whereby everyone but government itself would have to adhere to these goals. Government spending is a prime example.

This fiscal year the government, through tax changes announced in the budget, will increase its revenues by 31 per cent. But government spending, during the same time, will rise an additional 22 per cent. The government spends money at the rate of $187 million per day, $8 million per hour and $130,000 per minute. And on what? On assistance to people losing their homes because of excessively high rates for mortgage renewals? On aid to Canadians struggling under the oppressive burden of escalating prices for food and shelter? Is the money being spent on programs to reduce the cost of gasoline and home heating fuel, or to help small-business men and business women and farmers avoid bankruptcy? Is that $187 million per day being spent to provide much needed relief to senior citizens and those on low or fixed incomes, or on generating employment for the over one million Canadians out of work? Not that you would notice, Mr. Speaker.

Throughout the budget, the government was telling Canadians that they will have to keep treading water. The government was prepared to offer assistance, and scant help at that, only to those who are going down for the third time.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that people living in the little village of New Dundee renamed it Dire Straits. Since then a great many residents of the country have changed their mailing address to Dire Straits in order to qualify for assistance. But even that has not helped.

Small wonder that Canadians universally condemned the budget and the government. There is a distinct lack of credibility in both when what is being offered is tantamount to launching a two-seat lifeboat from a submerged submarine. The outcry and the outrage over the budget ultimately forced the Minister of Finance to rescind some measures and send some others to committee for review. No one knows when they will come back to the House for debate in Committee of the Whole. Legislation comes before the House all the time but I feel that nothing is more important than bringing in a new budget. I see no sign of it on the timetable of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), however.

I feel as I think a great many others do—and if they had the nerve a good many on the government benches would agree—that the entire budget should be scrapped and a new one brought in which would realistically reflect and address the needs of the nation.

I notice newspaper accounts, whether they be fact or not, to the effect that the Minister of Finance intimated that a new budget will be brought down in the fall. If it is necessary in the fall, Mr. Speaker, it is probably needed much more right now.

I would like to reflect for a moment, Mr. Speaker, on the three themes in the budget. The first of these was restraint. This government, having all but destroyed the economy of the nation, now asks Canadians to adjust to living amidst the rubble. We are being told we must cut back on both our style of living and our expectations. There are thousands and thousands of Canadians whose manner of living has anything but style, and whose expectations faded long ago. There is a growing number of Canadians who are thankful they somehow manage to survive, and who are angry that mere survival has become an accomplishment for which to be thankful. The government is urging restraint on a population already reeling under the pressures of inflation.

I think it would make a great deal more sense, and be more acceptable if the government would practice what it preaches. As I mentioned previously, government spending is going to increase by 22 per cent. Although the finance minister promised to reduce the federal deficit, the difference between what the government collects and what it spends will remain as high as $13 billion. That is probably on the low side.

No one should mistake the promise of a reduced deficit as an indication that the government has repented and is about to abandon its wasteful ways. The Minister of Finance announced government restraint in November. Now the government is asking for authority to borrow $6.6 billion. A very large part of the government's already rising revenues will be the direct result of the oil pricing agreement it made with the province of Alberta.

The government, having applied special levies and taxes during the protracted negotiations, allowed the increased consumer cost to remain and pocketed the profits from the deal. Despite the fact that it would have had these additional funds to work with, the government chose not to apply them to a true reduction in taxes. It chose, instead, to look upon increased revenues as a means of justifying increased spending. The only thing this government is restraining is its glee.

Mr. Speaker, the second of the minister's budget themes was so-called equity. The finance minister was especially proud of his claimed overhaul of the tax system as a method of achieving this goal. Equity, to the government, consisted of closing supposed loopholes in the tax system. This, the government pointed out, would prevent the wealthy from taking unfair advantage. Yet, at the time these measures were being touted, the government changed the tax structure so that the tax percentage on those in the highest level was reduced to 50 per cent from 67 per cent. One of these marvellous "equity loophole closures", which is supposed to strike at the rich, will hit hard at low and middle-income earners.

I am speaking now of the removal of tax deductions on interest or borrowing to buy RRSPs and other saving investment plans. This measure has had the effect of discouraging many Canadians from saving for their retirement. Many people will now have to rely on pension plans they have with their employers. It will be an even greater burden for those who are self-employed.

• (1600)

Then there is the problem of tax measures relating to insurance policies. I hope the Minister of Finance is now prepared to reverse his decision for regarding the new regulations for taxing the cash value and proceeds of insurance policies. I am aware that he made a statement with respect to whole-life insurance policies which would be exempt, but there are other policies, and the amount of money they will be able to collect on this very unfair and stupid tax will be peanuts compared to what they could collect in other ways.

There are, I believe, some eight or nine million policyholders across Canada, the majority of whom are not wealthy. They are in the middle class and, yes, in the low-income bracket. They are providing protection for their families and of course they have been fortunate enough to live a considerable length of time so that the cash values are increasing from year to year. The majority of these people are not cashing their policies in; they are leaving the proceeds in there to purchase paid-up additional life insurance, or letting the dividends accumulate so there will be that much more for their retirement or their estate.

I think the minister should go the second mile and forget all about this iniquitous tax. His predecessor, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), listened, shall we say halfheartedly, to his braintrust when he was Minister of Finance. Then all hell broke loose across the country, Mr. Speaker, and I give the minister full marks in that he withdrew it. It is too bad that the present Minister of Finance would not take that same advice.

Another tax measure designed to create a nation of the universally poor is that which will tax the benefits people receive from their employers as part of their income. With an escalating consumer price index, record prices for food, shelter and fuel, many Canadians have negotiated benefits in lieu of salary increases as a means of coping. The elimination of these tax-free benefits is sure to add significantly to the numbers of the working poor and add pressure to future salary negotiations throughout the work force. This, the government says, is equity. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is stupidity. I see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) looking this way. I am not sure whether the minister was handed the budget at seven o'clock or so on November 13, I believe it was, and did not read the contents in detail until eight o'clock that night. He must have had a haemorrhage along with a great many of the members of his government and backbenchers, when he started to extol the many provisions of what in all probability everyone agrees is the worst budget in Canadian history. That is proven because many members of the government had the guts to get up and talk about it. They did not vote that way, and for a very good reason; they would have been voting themselves out of a job. But some of them did make their feelings known in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); some of them spoke very vociferously in their ridings against the budget. Granted, time and space allows people to say one thing in one place and another thing in another place, and I guess that applies to members of Parliament as well.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, and with these things in the budget concerning dental care and hospitalization and so on, is it any wonder that the people are worried sick? The budget quite simply means that the government, through increased taxation, will collect even more money to spend. I guess that is the name of the game. But not to spend on the Canadian people. No, we are supposed to be practising restraint. Our money will be spent on development, which means studies, reviews, assessments and consultations to decide where the rest of it will be spent in the future. The key phrase there is "in the future". What the government, as evidenced by the budget, has failed to realize is that if we do not take immediate action to assist Canadians with today's problems, all the money in the world will not buy sucess in the future.

Small business is in many ways the backbone of this nation, yet the budget all but dismissed the real needs of small businessmen and women. A record number of small businesses have either gone bankrupt or are on the verge; government-condoned high interest rates have seen to that. The small business development bond was of considerable value to small business and incorporated farmers who wanted to expand, and that instrument has now been extended and expanded to include the unincorporated. However—and here is the kicker—it will be available only to those in serious financial trouble, on the verge of bankruptcy, and those living in the municipality of dire straits.

The problem with this approach is that by the time you are in serious trouble, approval might not be forthcoming because there would be some difficulty in establishing your ability to repay. So there is a good chance many more businesses will close their doors and many more people will be out of work. This is hardly the way to promote economic renewal.

The Minister of Finance suggested that, with the budget as a guide, the government would get its house in order. Well, thousands of Canadians are just as concerned about their own houses and saving them. The minister and other members of the government do not seem to realize that Canadians who are losing their homes, farms and jobs are now beginning to lose their tempers as well. The attitude of the government to the plight of home owners was clearly revealed last year when a convoy of angry Canadians arrived on Parliament Hill to demonstrate their frustrations. Cabinet was in session that day, but the only government member to meet with these people was the minister responsible for housing who promised to prod the government into action on their behalf. We all know that his prod was a mere pin prick if what was contained in the budget was the result of his efforts.

I am also well aware, Mr. Speaker, that the minister only met with a few selected representatives of that great crowd on Parliament Hill. I was here on that day and made it a point to go out and walk through the crowd, read the signs and talk to a great many of those people. One of the questions I asked was: "How did you vote in February, 1980?" Needless to say, the majority said they voted for the Trudeau government. I said: "Well, it serves you"—and I used another adjective—"right." They said, "Yes, but never again." Of course, we do not know when they will have an opportunity to vote again.

The Minister of Finance set aside $38 million under the jurisdiction of the minister responsible for the CMHC to provide mortgage assistance for a short time, but not for everyone. It was to be used to guarantee interest deferred on mortgage payments which exceeded 30 per cent of a family's gross income. Thousands of other home owners were left out in the cold. Those who were able to take advantage of the scheme were simply prolonging their period of indebtedness. For those unable to afford the luxury of owning a mortgaged home, the budget prescribes measures to assist in the rental area. Again, a drop in the bucket. The government magnanimously offered to provide interest-free loans up to $7,500 per unit for the construction of 15,000 units in major cities across Canada, when 200,000 are needed.

I will admit that the minister was able to go to the Minister of Finance and have the amount increased to 30,000 units. While this is a significant increase, it will still fall far short of the needs of Canadians for adequate housing. Therefore, thousands more will be left out in the cold.

Those who are fortunate enough to have a roof over their heads will also have to do some adjusting to the cold. Every Canadian family will be paying an additional $1,400 a year for energy costs over the next few years. The minister did say there was an insignificant saving on income tax to those in the lower and middle-income brackets. But when that is compared with what people will be paying for other items to keep alive, the government would have been further ahead to have left things the way they were. The minister said this was all in the name of economic renewal.

I have mentioned and enunciated a few reasons why the government's budget is in such contempt. Yet the government in this bill is demanding—because there is a majority government—the authority to spend another $6.6 billion on whatever it wants.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) says, many millions of dollars are being spent by this government on advertising telling Canadians just how wonderful it is, as well as using Canadian taxpayers' money to promote the government.

Rather than continuing to spend taxpayers' money and seeking to borrow more and rather than continuing its promotion of ill-advised and inopportune programs, the government should recognize it has the means at its disposal to reverse the nation's misfortunes.

Some methods for economic recovery have been suggested by those who sit in the opposition. I think it is incumbent upon the government to consider carefully these proposals and to act with some measure of reasoned decency. I want to put a few comparisons on the record. I will admit that many people say that comparisons are odious. But let us look at unemployment. The number of unemployed people has risen to 1.1 million from 350,000. That is an increase of 718,000 since the Prime Minister and his government took over about 14 years ago. The unemployment rate has risen to 9 per cent from 4.5 per cent. That is double the rate it was about 14 years ago. In these unemployment figures, the government has not taken into consideration the probably half a million people who are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance and who have given up all hope of a job, many living and eking out an existence on their life savings. A good many more are probably having to resort to welfare. Let us take a look at inflation. This rate is up 7.6 per cent. It was 4.2 per cent in 1968, but now it is 11.6 per cent.

The consumer price index has increased 186 per cent. In 1968 our dollar was worth $1.12. Today it is worth 39 cents. This is a decrease in value of 65.2 per cent. In 1968 we had a trade deficit of $97 million. Today the deficit is over $6.5 billion. In 1968 the bank rate was 7.5 per cent. Today our interest rates are at 15.34 per cent. That is an increase of 7.84 per cent. Some months ago the interest rate was considerably higher than that. In 1968 the conventional mortgage rate was 9.25 per cent. Today is 18.5 per cent and higher in many cases.

I have some examples to cite. One constituent of mine from the town of Gravenhurst telephoned me almost in tears. He had a $38,000 mortgage coming due. At the new interest rate of 19 per cent his payments have increased to $646 a month. He was wondering what kind of relief the government would be able to provide for him. I asked him how much he earned. He works at a plant. The work week had been reduced for a time to three days a week. It is now back to four days a week. His income is in the neighbourhood of $1200 a month, and of that he will be paying over 50 percent to keep a roof over his head.

I have also had a distress call from a farmer in my area. I will admit that he thought things would remain the same when he decided a year or so ago to expand. At that time he bought an additional farm and built an additional barn. He did this on the basis of the old interest rates which did not worry him too much. But now he is faced with astronomical interest rates. He applied to the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan. I will give the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) full marks for pleading the case of the farmers. But unfortunately the minister has not had too much success in twisting the arms of the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) to get additional funds. Farmers are supposed to be able to qualify in certain circumstances for special farm credit rates. I believe these rates are 11.75 per cent. I believe the going rate for the Farm Credit Corporation is 16.75 per cent. But this farmer has not received approval for his loan. As a last resort he telephoned me this morning and told me that he had been in touch with the Federal Business Development Bank. The bank is looking at a loan for him in the amount of $230,000. I hope he gets it. But the interest rate for this loan is 21 per cent, which is the current rate at the Federal Business Development Bank.

Surely there are some ways we can assist people. The government is borrowing $6 billion. If there was some way whereby the government could subsidize interest rates for the farmers and businessmen, those of us in the opposition and in other parts of the House would probably say that the government has a good plan. I am sure members would say, "Certainly you deserve this additional money." But there is nothing like that in the offing. The government has stood firm that interest rates must remain high in order to bring down inflation and, whether we like it or not, it will remain that way come hell or high water.

Another thing comes to mind. This additional money the government is borrowing could be used to help those women in need who are between the ages of 60 and 65. I have mentioned this on several occasions. I know it is one of the burning ambitions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I suppose it is discrimination, but women between the ages of 60 and 65 in many cases are the ones who are most destitute. They are in an age bracket which prevents them from getting a job. Many would not be physically able to take on a job for which they may be qualified. These women are living in absolute poverty, many of them too proud to apply for welfare. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, and members from all sides of the House are aware that there are women in these particular circumstances. A good many of them are on welfare. I have pleaded with the government about this. I am sure that a great majority of members from all sides of the House feel this is one area where the government should spend a little more money. The government should use some of its borrowed money. It is not a case of spending the whole amount. If those women were made eligible at age 60—of course there are men who are in just as difficult circumstances, but to me women have a much harder job to survive—they would qualify for old age pension, the general assistance subsidy and of course provincial gains and could live in reasonable security and comfort from the age of 60 to 65. The only ones who qualify at present are the spouses of husbands or wives who are drawing old age pension. Also it should be emphasized to the government that a good many are receiving welfare. These funds are provided by the federal government and the provincial government on a cost-sharing basis. It would not be a case of the Federal government having to fund the entire amount.

• (1620)

The government should give immediate attention to this matter. I am sure it would have the endorsement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). In fact, I see many distinguished members across the way nodding their heads in agreement. I say to the Minister of Finance and those on the treasury benches that when they obtain this $6.6 billion, they should ensure it is spent in a manner which will improve the economy and the lot of citizens who are almost destitute.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to listen earlier to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) in full flight. I must say to those of us who believe that the House is a house of debate that he is a very welcome addition. If he were still in his seat, I would remind him, however, that the New Democratic Party does not have a monopoly on concern for the unfortunate or the underprivileged.

Mr. Darling: Right on.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) made that point when he drew to our attention the unfortunate circumstances of many people between the ages of 60 and 65.

This is a bill to grant the government the authority to borrow a considerable sum of money. My first impression was to debate in the style I enjoy as a member of the House, but having listened to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain and my close friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka, I could not help but think of the strains on society at this particular moment in Canadian history. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain referred to the depression years. Some of us, not many of us, remember the hungry thirties. I know I do. As a youngster, more by accident than by good fortune, I lived in a family which was not particularly bothered by the recession or the depression. But almost half a century later I can still recall people knocking on doors and asking for charity. This is the word they used to say. They asked for food, for a nickel, a dime or a quarter to survive in the thirties. It was pathetic, it left a deep impression on me. I remember the hunger camps in Val Cartier, men from broken homes, people who had to find solace in each other's company and people who had to depend upon handouts to survive. Whenever I found myself becoming too comfortable in my office as minister of labour, I used to read or reread a book, which should be required reading for Members of Parliament, entitled, "Ten Lost Years, 1929-39". It was a very graphic description of the hungry thirties, particularly how the west and the maritimes were affected.

The other night I was asked by a university group for my views on the success of the Liberal Party of Canada as measured—and I do not want to be controversial—by its years in office. I think it is because we have been able to fashion an economic system which reflects our view and that of the Conservative Party of free enterprise, unlike the socialists. At the same time it also reflects the concern of the Liberal Party for people which, in fairness is the priority and concern of social democrats. In essence we have in Canada an economic system which reflects the ability of a party—and it happened to be ours—that has been able to bridge the philosophy of both parties. Our so-called free enterprise system is really a model of compromise. It is a mix in part of a privately-run production system, free enterprise, and in part a publicly-run distribution system by government intervention, which people like to call it, to ensure that the less fortunate share in some of the benefits of the free enterprise system.

In case anyone listening wonders why I support free enterprise, let me point out that history shows it is the most successful economic system ever devised, probably since history was first recorded. Name me one in the world today which is more successful in generating capital than the free enterprise system. Certainly it is not socialism, communism or even social democracy. Free enterprise, that efficient breadwinner, has been able, to date, to provide the moneys needed for social distribution, which is one of the hallmarks of Canadian society as opposed to that of other countries. As a result, until recently—and certainly since the great war—we have had a relatively content people who, as a general rule, are secure to some degree from the fear of illness, thanks to medicare, and from extreme poverty, thanks to welfare and unemployment insurance. The free enterprise system and the social mix which our party represents have been able as a general rule, from the fruits of free enterprise, to generate sufficient capital to keep the free enterprise system growing and expanding and at the same time to provide a contented, well-educated, healthy Canadian population.

In all marriages—and I call ours a marriage of convenience between free enterprise and social reform—the greatest strain is usually money, especially when we reach one of those infrequent periods of time in our history when proponents of social reform, who know the free enterprise system, look concerned and worried as to whether or not the necessary pool of capital is sufficiently large to retain or maintain our normal standard of living in the country.

We hear from the opposition as spokesmen for free enterprise, not necessarily as endorsers of our social program, decrying the welfare state. On one hand they are calling for cuts and reduced spending, although they do not usually say where. But, when prodded, the strong proponents of free enterprise usually suggest cutbacks in medicare, transfer payments and unemployment insurance. They want to cutback on welfare and make people work by the sweat of their brow. They rationalize that people tend to be lazy, when we know the opposite.

On the other hand, there are those who view only the welfare aspect and constantly criticize free enterprise, and suggest that the enormous profits of the banks be additionally taxed. They propose to raise the taxes of private enterprise in order to pay for social programs while blatantly ignoring the fact that there must be a balance on both sides if we are to survive and if that marriage of convenience is to continue.

The government should be concerned that at this time there is growing hostility in Canada. If that hostility grows between the supporters of free enterprise and those who push for social reform, to the point where they will not accommodate each other, we will then run the risk of destroying a system which has provided Canadians with one of the greatest standards of living in the world.

In other words, conflict reinforces our natural destructive tendencies. Due to this constant reminder that the government must somehow cut back, we are witnessing a challenge to growth at the very time we need it most. We are seeing an anti-science backlash when only science can save us. We find a condemnation of profits when profits pay for everything. There is unfair criticism of the free enterprise system when only that system can provide the growth we need in the 1980s.

I would say to those who condemn social reform as a necessary evil that it is social reform in Canada which has prevented a major depression of the stature and depth which was experienced in the hungry thirties. The carrying out of social policies at all levels in Canada has created jobs in government, education and social services. This has kept millions of people off the welfare rolls at one time or another and has provided incomes and temporary employment. It has helped reduce the misery index and has kept the work ethic alive for thousands of people.

The Economic Council of Canada has said that our social policies in this country have gone a long way towards eliminating poverty. I am not for one moment suggesting that poverty does not exist at this time or that there are no problems with welfare. I am simply saying that what is basically a valid and excellent social system, which is tailored for Canadian needs, is being strained.

It is a myth that social reform checks economic growth. When people advocate government cutbacks in spending—that is real spending, not a few dollars on advertising—on areas such as research, unemployment insurance and pensions, and that we must postpone our social programs, they tend to forget that social reform in many parts of Canada has fuelled economic recovery. Money for pensions, family allowances and welfare provides the purchasing power that keeps many of our smaller communities alive. Free education and subsidized university education has built a reserve of professional knowledge and technical skill in Canada which forms the foundation for advancement on every front. Our expanded health care is insurance against loss of productivity.

Even Ron Anderson, who is hardly a left-winger, made this statement in one of his columns in The Globe and Mail:

> Regional redistribution of incomes through the unemployment insurance program, for example, is two to three times as important to the Maritimes as expenditures by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. For the country as a whole, the UI program is one of the most powerful and sensitive of the automatic stabilizers built into the economy.

I repeat that the standard of living we have flows from the ability of free enterprise to generate the needed capital. It is the fruit of the free enterprise system which pays for medical programs, schools, the educational system and welfare. It makes transfer payments possible. The free enterprise system has always met the challenge imposed on it by free society.

It is significant that countries like Sweden, the United States and Canada have the highest degree of freedom in production, not state-directed production. We also have the highest consumption and highest standard of socialized consumption. The point I am making is that at this very crucial moment in our history when we are worried about money, high interest rates, inflation and whether or not we can continue to maintain our standard of living, we must realize that in each of those countries I have mentioned the free enterprise system I have described and the social programs are interdependent. They underwrite, support and make each other viable. Members of Parliament, the business community and social reformers must not sabotage each other.

As I have mentioned, any marriage usually survives through compromise. Each system which I have described has limits and cannot be expected to do more than it is capable of doing.

Today's limits on free enterprise are being set by society itself in terms of ethics and accountability while limits on social reform are being set by what we can afford. This is an important point. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) suggested that we cut spending while at the same time spending more for a particular group of Canadians—women aged 60 to 65. The paradoxis there and the limits to social reform are set to what we can afford. We cannot afford total justice or a totally clean environment at this moment, but we can afford to give everyone equality of opportunity, even if not equality of income.

The problems facing Canada during the challenge of the eighties are enormous. But they are stimulating and they make me envious of those young enough to participate in meeting those challenges in the future. We must replace outdated factories and worn out machinery. The capital needs in the 1980s will probably surpass $1,000 billion. It is only natural for people to suggest that cutbacks take place in the interval in welfare, medicare, transfer payments or other programs which form part of the Canadian mosaic.

I simply want to say that I respect the free enterprise system. Its productivity comes from leaders with drive, from builders, creators, innovators and initiators. However, it also comes from willing workers who want the reward of sweat and skill. It comes from motivation, perks and penalties that structure behaviour. Free enterprise has been maturing for more than 200 years, whereas our social programs, for the most part, began in this century.

I therefore say that it is time for us to take off our blinkers because words which describe ideology no longer mean what they did. Corporations move toward monopoly in the name of individualism while individuals move toward democracy in the name of collectivism. It is a time for social reformers in the New Democratic Party to drop their anti-business bias unless they want to see reform cut back. It is time for those of us who believe in free enterprise to stop seeing reform as a giant political pork barrel unless we want the new society to be a post-business society.

I am confident that the policies of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are the right policies. It takes courage for a minister to remain basically dedicated to a policy which is not politically popular. It is obvious that it is a spin-off from the dramatic and adverse impact of high interest rates. However, the policy reflects the intertwining of our economy with that of the United States. Perhaps the lesson to be learned is that in future, over the next decade, we can develop a greater independence in our economic policies and in our approach to problems. However, as long as inflation remains the number one enemy in this country—and it does in the eyes of Canadians, if one reads today's Gallup polls—the Minister of Finance has little alternative but to ask all of us to practice voluntary restraint in order to avoid compulsory restraint. The future of this country is a great one and economic recovery will come sooner than most people expect.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, our beloved colleague from the Niagara Peninsula—

Mr. Mackasey: Lincoln.

Mr. Lambert: Lincoln?

Mr. Whelan: Abe Lincoln.

Mr. Lambert: Hardly. Neither he nor I can qualify in physical respects, shall we say, as Abe Lincoln. However, I had to smile a little during his peroration when he said we should follow the request of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) by showing some restraint. In his last budget, the Minister of Finance provided for a 22 per cent increase in expenditures. Is that restraint? I invite our colleague, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), to read the speech given on February 16 by my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson)—

Mr. Mackasey: I read it.

Mr. Lambert: —there to put to rest the doubt which appeared on the face of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) concerning that increase. He said that the increase was perhaps only 16 per cent. It depends on whether one handles it on a national accounts or on a budgetary accounts basis. However, very definitely, the true increase is 22 per cent.

I consider Bill C-93 to be one of the most repulsive, dog's breakfast sort of bills we could ever see. This House ultimately refused to accept Bill C-94 even though the procedures were perhaps somewhat out of the ordinary. The point is, Bill C-94 no longer exists. It was divided into eight or nine bills, as it should have been in the first place. I object to this bill and I will vote against it, not because of its subject matter, but because of its form.

I find it passing strange that this House should be dealing with this bill in its present form after the House had subsequently decided that such should not be the case. Standing Order 60(11) states:

The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

That is to be cleanly interpreted. The bill is to be based upon the provisions of a motion. I look at the budgetary papers and the notices of Ways and Means motions filed by the minister with regard to this particular budget. There is a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act (No. 1) and a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Application Rules (1971). Then there is a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act; a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act (No. 2); a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act (No. 1); a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act (No. 2); and also a notice of Ways and Means motion with regard to the Customs Tariff. There is not a single word about borrowing authority.

This Bill C-93 is wrong. I know the Speaker has ruled differently and I must accept the ruling, but I do not have to agree with it. It is very wrong. We changed it with regard to Bill C-94 and there will never be another repetition. However, this bill takes us down a bifurcation in the road of procedure at the next stage. A Ways and Means motion based upon the budget takes us into Committee of the Whole, but there is no Ways and Means motion with regard to borrowing authority. Borrowing authority bills take us down into the standing committee. Therefore, any ragamuffin Ways and Means motion tacked on to a standard procedural motion at second reading should not keep it in the House. There is a schizophrenic direction given as a result of this combination. It is for that reason that the blessed thing is nonsense.

Let us see what Bill C-93 contains. First of all, Part I is entitled Borrowing Authority, 1982-83. Part II is entitled Excise Tax Act. There are some changes with regard to wine. There is a great relationship in the bill between the Excise Tax Act with respect to wine and the borrowing authority.

Under Part II, Clause 4(2), with regard to the Excise Tax Act, there are provisions concerning pipeline gas and the operation of the pipeline. Then there are provisions respecting the level of taxation on ethane and propane.

• (1650)

Then we go to Part III. This is an entirely new tax which had been provided for on a previous occasion. It was known as the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. Frankly, this is a wellhead revenue tax. There is a division, first dealing with revenue tax and secondly a royalties tax.

Can someone, preferably the Minister of State for Finance, advise me what is the principle of this bill? It stretches from increasing the excise tax on wine and on pipeline gas through wellhead revenues, royalties to a borrowing authority. There is absolutely no relationship. Those on the government side cannot insist that a second reading motion shall be adoption in principle. They will come up against a blank wall because there is no principle to the bill. It is as unprincipled as the government that put it forward.

On this occasion, are we to discuss the borrowing authority, the measurement of and the changes in the tax on natural gas, or are we going to consider the heinous tax on wellhead revenues which has caused so much grief in the petroleum industry and to Canadians?

With its unprincipled desires and greed, this government seized all it could from the petroleum industry and laid it on the backs of Canadians. It has an unceasing, ever-growing greed and hunger for revenue. The other day when the government of the province of Alberta announced a $5.4 billion plan of remission of royalties and assistance to the domestic oil industry, the minister's colleague, the minister of energy, reportedly said that the federal government had every right to move into that field and acquire those funds.

In the last few years the Government of Canada has been guilty of fashioning not one udder but two udders and taking all teats from it so that it can take the whole of the revenues from the oil industry which rightfully belong to the industry and the provinces.

Government members will say the Government of Canada has a right to revenues from the petroleum industry. Government has no right to tax. It has the power to tax, but no right to a particular revenue. That is the difference. There is no ordained principle of government, certainly not with the type of government we have in Canada, to certain revenues. The government can raise revenues to discharge its responsibilities; that is so. It has limited powers which it shares with other levels of government. Some people assert that as soon as an individual earns a dollar, the government has the right to a certain percentage of that dollar and to claim it immediately. I have seen that in writings by some income tax officials. I deny that that is a right. We have not yet reached that stage, unless we accept the principle that the citizens and corporations of Canada exist for the benefit of the state.

We have gone through the Constitution debate in the past year. There was one fundamental quarrel I had with the government, and that was that government could impose a Constitution on the people. By what right? A Constitution is a body of rules and laws given by the people to government for its governance. It flows from the people to government, not the other way around.

We now see those in power, the administrative bureaucracy, looking upon people and good corporate bodies as though they exist for the benefit and exercise of the authority of that administrative bureaucracy and its captive government. That is what it is. Many of these provisions are nothing but the thinking of the administrative bureaucracy. First they acquire and then hold on to as much of the revenue in this country as they can get without the authority of this House. It is a pro forma.

Estimates in this House are discussed and passed under guillotine. Ministers are not held accountable. In many instances they are not able to discharge their responsibilities or know what the estimates are, or have not put forward the programs themselves. They came up through the administration. We are hagridden with administration in this country. We are not the only ones. I have just returned from Australia. The former leader of the opposition there, who is now the Speaker, clearly indicated to me something in conversation. I am not disclosing any secret. Thank goodness in this House it is provided by statute that the estimates do not go through the administration or Treasury Board. They go from the Speaker to the Minister of Finance and are to be accepted. That is the way it should be. This House must be independent of the administration.

• (1700)

I find it extraordinary that there are so many ministers who either are not conscious of that principle or who agree with the administration that this House must be just another tool in the hands of government. Even the form of Bill C-93 in regard to borrowing authority is indefensible in this House. The minister said that he needed $6.6 billion borrowing authority, failing to disclose that Bill C-59, passed earlier in this session, provided for a permanent unexpended portion of borrowing authority, up to $3 billion, which need not be renewed formally by any other bill. In other words, there is a $3 billion cushion, to which is to be added $6.6 billion in this coming year. So the government has authority to borrow $9.6 billion in 1982-83.

Why does it do it that way? On a previous occasion this House had some control over both government and administration, because the borrowing authority was running out and the House was not giving that authority unless certain conditions were met. So what went through in Bill C-59? Mr. Speaker, I will read the section into Hansard for the edification of hon. members. Subclause (2) of Clause 2 of Bill C-59 reads as follows:

> All borrowing authority conferred by subsection (1) that remains unused and in respect of which no action has been taken by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 37 of the Financial Administration Act shall expire on March 31, 1982 to the extent that the unused authority exceeds three billion dollars.

It so happened that there was $3.7 billion left over, so there was only $700 million that expired on March 31; and there was sitting, before the passage of this bill, a cushion of $3 billion. That has not been affected by the passage of any section of Bill C-93. So Clause 2 of Bill C-59 is still in force. Unless it is changed in the future, it will always provide that up to $3 billion of any borrowing authority, if unexpended, shall remain authorized and therefore the administration has been cushioned.

In the same way, it developed procedures in the mid-1960s to get around the control that the House used to have on the administration through the granting of interim supply. Once that was breached, the authority of this House was lost. This House now has no more control on government expenditures than any individual member has control of the wind outside this building. That is something that many people wonder about. That is one of the things that has to be reformed. If calling for reform of Parliament means anything, in this type of government that we have or allegedly have, a responsible government, there has to be authority in this chamber to hold the cabinet accountable. At the present time, cabinet sets the pace; cabinet rides roughshod. The members of this House behave like so many marionettes. We have timetables, we have guillotines, we have all sorts of procedures, all introduced under the guise of efficiency.

This House must be efficient and this House is efficient, Mr. Speaker. The way bills go through, the procedure for the handling by the Chair of the rules, the operations of the officers of the Table, all of this is very efficient. But that does not mean that we have to sacrifice our authority to cabinet in the name of so-called efficiency. That is a snare and a delusion.

To reform this House, among those things that have to happen is a return of authority to the House, with control over expenditures. The minister proposed a borrowing authority of billions and billions of dollars, a 22 per cent increase in expenditures, in effect. I do not mean comparing the principal, the figures in the main estimates, as against the final estimates of the previous year. That is another favourite government trick, comparing apples and oranges.

Let us line up the final estimates for 1982-83 against the final estimates for 1981-82. And even these are not yet in; they will be available to us only for guillotine consideration and passage in June. The money is spent; there are no two ways about it. And that expenditure will exceed the proposed expenditures by thousands of millions of dollars. It is an old trick. Piously the minister comes in this year and says that he has not got the same requirements, that he needs only $6.6 billion. It is really $9.65 billion that the minister will have available in borrowing authority this year, a reduction from the previous year when the money was not all spent. So there has been very little reduction in the borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker.

We have come up against some real problems with regard to borrowing. Last year in September and October the interest rate for Canada Savings Bonds was fixed at 19.5 per cent. Of course, a supplementary premium had to be paid on all outstanding Canada Savings Bonds in order for them to effectively reach 19.5 per cent; otherwise there would have been a massive conversion from old issues to new issues, notwithstanding the cumulative coupon that was affixed to a number of previous issues.

I should like to see the schedule of the Minister of Finance for new bond issues or for conversions in this fiscal year. If there are any 15-year bonds that mature in this fiscal year and which are to be renewed, what sort of interest coupon will they bear, so that there is not an immediate and almost dramatic drop in their face value, in order to reflect the true market value? Those are the measures of confidence that the market and the ordinary citizen have in government.

Last night and again today I heard the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) speak at great length about the level of interest rates. There is nothing about interest rates in this bill, Mr. Speaker; not a direct or indirect reference. The government is powerless to set interest rates lower than the market decrees. The hon. member for Hamilton Moutain did not speak about the consequential foreign exchange controls that would have to be imposed if the government tried to set interest rates.

Last week I listened to a very instructive interview with the minister of finance of Australia where, incidentally, interest rates are as high as they are here. Of course, Australia is an ocean away from the United States whereas we are the next door neighbour and are directly affected by market conditions there and by the actions of its government with regard to interest rates. We should also consider the position in Germany, France, Great Britain—

Mr. Whelan: And Japan.

Mr. Lambert: The Japanese rates are somewhat different, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will know, because their economy is different. Even the German economy is beginning to show the effects now. As a matter of fact, all of the European Economic Community countries are in the same position as we are, with high interest rates, inflation and growing unemployment. Some have higher unemployment than we have. I do not take any comfort in that as it would mean that we should assume that some of the unemployment in Canada today is not self-inflicted.

Through the national energy policy the government has put hundreds of thousands of people on the street. It takes the position of the ostrich with regard to the effect of its policies on the energy programs of the producing provinces. Many members of the government have no knowledge of what has happened to towns in Saskatchewan and Alberta or to small farms with half a dozen water trucks, mud trucks, three or four front-end loaders, or backhoes. They do not realize the effect of this program on people in the construction industry, in research, exploration and development of the petroleum industry. There have been many bankruptcies and auction sales of equipment because people are trying to protect the investment they have.

It is a crying shame, Mr. Speaker, yet the minister responsible for small business does not seem to be concerned about it, nor does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). The Minister of Finance, however, will see one of the best tax paying segments of the economy go down the drain and, as a result, no tax will be forthcoming from it this year. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), whose primary interest is in Windsor, should take note of the reduction in the number of cars and trucks ordered by the oil industry in 1981-82. Thousands of orders were lost and therefore the vehicles were not produced. We can see the effect on Ford, GM, Chrysler and the other companies that manufacture bulldozers, front-end loaders, pumps and other equipment in Ontario and Quebec.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) laid his heavy hand on the industry with his misplaced policies. Government supporters supinely accepted their government's policies concerning interest rates.

There is another area in which the borrowing authority is affected. We have lost some megaprojects and we are losing more. We are told we are not going to build Alsands. They did not build Cold Lake because the world price of oil had softened and was going down. The costs are so high. Of course, interest rates, which are the responsibility of government, are so high.

• (1720)

Mr. Kelly: You were not saying that in 1979.

Mr. Siddon: They were a lot lower in 1979.

Mr. Lambert: Things were a lot different in 1979, and the hon. member, who is just a new boy here—

Mr. Kelly: Sure they were.

Mr. Lambert: Well, I invite him to go and spend four or five months out in western Canada—or even four or five weeks—and learn a little bit about it.

Mr. Siddon: He would not last that long.

Mr. Lambert: I want to tell the hon. member that from 1973 onwards the former minister of energy, Donald Macdonald, laid his hands on the oil industry to skim off for the government what he called windfall profits resulting from an increasing world price for oil. Then there was the fight with Alberta to the point of disallowing royalties as an expense; a shameful performance.

It was interesting to listen to the ministers discussing these points in committee. Now that the price is dropping the government keeps insisting that it is up to the oil companies and Alberta to adjust their returns downwards.

Mr. Kelly: On new oil.

Mr. Lambert: On new oil and on old oil. I think, Mr. Speaker, both governments have laid on too heavy a hand. The industry is best able to cope with changing oil prices, and if you gave them a chance to adjust we would not see this nonsense with Alsands and Exxon. They would know how to adjust.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. LeBlanc: If he lowers his voice!

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans finds it a little loud, it is because I am talking to his somewhat deaf colleagues down at the other end. I do not need this machine. I want to make that clear to the minister.

In any event, I thank hon. members for their consent to continue but I will not inflict any more of my remarks on them. However, I invite my colleagues on both sides of the House to vote against this bill, first of all because it is an omnibus bill and, secondly, because its contents are bad. On those two counts we should vote against the bill.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I rise to speak on Bill C-93. I hope the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) will remain in the House and not pull his usual trick of leaving for coffee or whatever.

As you and all members know, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. This from a government which just recently issued bonds for 20 years at 15.5 per cent interest, thereby telling the world that for two decades we are going to have high interest rates and inflation above 12 per cent. That is basically what the government is telling the world—that Canada does not have its economic house in order.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members really have taken the time to read through the bill and understand what it contains. Clause 1 of Part I of this bill provides:

> The Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by any Act of Parliament heretofore passed, borrow, under the Financial Administration Act, by the issue and sale of securities of Canada, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole, six billion six hundred million dollars, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

In other words, we are writing a blank cheque to the government for $6.6 billion at a time when our capital outflow is at an all-time high, and when Canadian investors do not have the confidence to invest in our economy. They are taking an estimated $4.5 billion to the United States. Foreign investors, who once saw a secure investment climate in this country, have now taken out an estimated $10 billion over the past year. Clause 3(1) of Part I provides:

> For greater certainty, any amount borrowed under this section or any other authority conferred by Parliament before the coming into force of this section may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada and may be repaid in the currency in which it was borrowed.

We are authorizing this government, Mr. Speaker, to borrow money anywhere in the world at a time when the Canadian dollar could drop significantly. Let me paint an example. Let us say this government, in its wisdom, decides to go to the U.S. to borrow money and they pay 15 per cent. They would be lucky to get 15 per cent because I do not think they are rated as a class "A" borrower any more. Our currency drops against the American dollar by 5 per cent, we repay the loan in American funds, and the loan costs us 20 per cent. That is the kind of blanket authority we are giving the government under this bill. We have seen it happen in the past and there is no reason whatsoever to think for a moment that it is not going to happen again.

I am going to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to read a section here. I would like you to see what the implications are of adding another section; it is not just a straight borrowing bill, it has to do with the excise tax. Clause 47.2(2) reads:

> Where any qualifying goods have been purchased or imported by a person of a class prescribed pursuant to subsection (3) for the sole use of that person and not for resale and the tax imposed by Part V has been paid in respect of such goods, the Minister may, on application by that person in such form and manner as the Minister prescribes, made to the Minister within four years from the time the goods were purchased or imported, pay to that person an amount equal to that tax.

• (1730)

Can you imagine the number of applications that the minister will receive, Mr. Speaker? Of course, we know the minister will not receive them; we know they will go to the bureaucracy. We know that the government will have to hire 20, 30, 40 or 400 civil servants to look after that one small section. Do hon. members not see what we are doing in Canada day after day by increasing the size of government and the bureaucracy? We are strangling the Canadian economy and the Canadian people in the process.

The people in my riding and across Canada are sick and tired of this government and of any government that imposes restrictions on them, that strangles them and puts its hands in their pockets. We must allow the spirit of Canada to continue, the spirit that brought my great-grandfather to Ontario and my grandfather to Alberta. We have to get back that spirit. That spirit was free of government interference. Minimum government allowed maximum growth in this country. It is not the other way around. We have a government committed totally to government control in every sector of the economy. It is a shame because it is killing the initiative that exists in this country.

Most of my remarks will be addressed to Part III of Bill C-93. These are amendments to the petroleum and gas revenue tax which implements the Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. For short, we refer to the tax as the PGRT. This tax has been the most monumental grab on industry cash flow that was ever perpetrated on the business sector in Canada. It is a monumental grab. The scenario was that of a government saying:"We have firms across Canada in the oil industry, the golden goose, which has laid a golden egg, that are making too much money, so we will grab it". What has happened is that the government has not grabbed the egg, but it has grabbed the goose's neck because the government is slowly choking that golden goose to death.

We hear of projects waiting to go onstream immediately. We have heard this for two years. I refer specifically to the Imperial Oil project at Cold Lake which would produce in Canada 140,000 barrels a day of sweet crude. This is sweet synthetic crude, the finest crude there is. We do not need oil. We have lots of oil. We are self-reliant in oil. "Self reliant" means, of course, that we buy our oil from the Middle East, from Brazil and from other places. We buy plenty from offshore, to the tune of 400,000 barrels a day. We do not pay for it in Canadian currency; we pay for it in American currency, and we wonder why the Canadian dollar is weak. We wonder why inflation is high when we have an outflow of capital paying for those 400,000 barrels of oil a day. Canada has technology, engineering, people and natural resources. But what are we doing? We are going to the same companies, which were asked to develop these oil deposits and through this petroleum and gas revenue tax, the government is grabbing the golden goose by the neck and choking it.

Let me give an example. I do not think all members understand when a company says: "You have killed our cash flow; therefore, we cannot develop our project." Let me put it this way. If I were to offer a house for sale at $500,000, if I were to say: "Walk into that house tomorrow and I will give you a month's free rent and I do not want a downpayment, I will sign it over to you.", what would you think, Mr. Speaker? Does that not sound good, Mr. Speaker? It does not sound so good when I tell you that it will cost you $10,000 a month to pay the principal and interest. So what you do then is look at your cash flow to see if your salary will cover it. You find that it will not.

That situation is no different from expecting a company like Imperial Oil to invest $13 billion in a project. Imperial Oil is not taking $13 billion from its cash flow; Imperial Oil is saying that it has to borrow that amount on the market. But immediately the money is used, the repayments must start. That borrowed money is not lent interest free until the plant is finished and then is repaid. The interest accumulates. The interest and the repayment have to be covered from the cash flow of the company. But the company will not have a cash flow from the production of the plant for at least five years because it takes that long to build.

Companies like this say very clearly: "Sure, we would like to build these plants." Imperial Oil would like to build the plant in Cold Lake. These companies want to build plants for the security of the country. The boards of directors are Canadians. The engineers working on the plants are Canadians and the managers are Canadians. The ownership would be through shares on the marketplace. Many of the shares would be owned by Canadians and by pension funds. It is absolutely mind boggling to me that we have a company ready to invest $13 billion in Canada, to work up a technology and extract oil from the tar sands at a rate of 140,000 barrels a day, and another plant in Fort McMurray called Alsands ready to invest another $13 billion to extract through a mining process another 140,000 barrels a day. That totals close to ed2227;-1 300,000 barrels of oil a day coming onstream in four years which would replace the oil we are importing from Venezuela and Mexico. But what are we doing? We are shipping our money and jobs out of the country. It is a staggering situation.

Alsands has stated repeatedly that it wants a return on its investment, just as though it were putting the money into government bonds with a guaranteed 19 per cent return or a return through long-term investment of 15.5 per cent, which is what this government pays when it floats a bond issue on the marketplace. The Alsands group are saying they need a return on their investment but they do not have the cash flow to proceed with the plant because, during the four years the plant is under construction, principal and interest must be paid on the loan. That debt must be serviced. No institution, no government anywhere, will lend money and say: "Forget about the interest; we will not start calculating the interest until the plant is built". Everyone knows that does not happen.

Are the companies telling the truth? Of course they are telling the truth. All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is look at the annual statements of earnings of the major companies across Canada. Everyone can see what happened to them last year. Some of the earnings of these companies have gone down by 75 per cent. They do not have the cash flow to service the debt; therefore, these companies cannot proceed with their projects. Government members are choking the goose; it is gasping.

• (1740)

Now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is meeting with oil companies in a last-ditch effort to save the Alsands project in Fort McMurray. We can forget about the Cold Lake plant; it is down the tube. It will not be started for at least three more years. The government put up $40 million to hold Imperial Oil in line for a few months so that it could do some negotiating, to be repaid to the government only if the plant went ahead in a year. The year will be up in June. I have it marked on my calendar; we will see.

The petroleum gas revenue tax has been devastating to the oil industry, the only viable and strong industry in Canada. The Economic Council of Canada indicated very clearly and emphatically that it was the only industry which would lead Canada to economic recovery. But the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources came into the House with his National Energy Program and took aim at it. He is reaching out his hand and choking industry. He is killing the goose that laid the golden egg. As a result we are feeling it right across Canada, even in the manufacturing sector in Ontario because oil companies are not buying heavy equipment, trucks, steel, tires or rope; I could go on and on.

Let me look at the number of wells drilled in Canada. In 1981 the number of oil wells drilled in the western basin fell to 6,500, from 9,000 in 1980. We have questioned the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) as to why this happened. We have asked why the government has driven out oil wells, oil drillers and oil rigs to the United States. He admits that this has occurred, but says that there has been a downplay in the market and that we are not using as much oil any more. Why has drilling in the United States, where consumption has also gone down, increased by 20 per cent in 1981 over 1980? It is because the United States has a policy in place which encourages the industry to come in. It has taken a stand for the security of the United States. It will find the oil and become self-sufficient. It will not rely on anyone, including Canada.

We are living in dangerous times. We are on the knife's edge right now. We are saying that we will become self-reliant, but we will buy some of that cheap crap from Mexico which is being pawned off on Montreal refineries. We will even pay Montreal refiners a subsidy if they purchase Mexican crude. Montreal refiners are taking the subsidy and making windfall profits. This is displacing oil which is now shut in in the Lloydminster area and in some of the fields in Alberta.

Taxpayers across Canada are paying 4 cents to 5 cents per gallon at the pump, which goes into a fund to subsidize offshore oil. We have a two-tier system in Canada which was tried and abandoned in the United States because it did harm to the United States economy. We always learn from the United States ten years later. We are shutting down wells in western Canada.

Recently I returned from my riding where I learned that there has been a 1,300 per cent increase in unemployment in the oil industry. Roughnecks who worked on oil rigs, in the derrick, on the floor and in the pit are now lining up at welfare offices because they have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. I invite hon. members opposite to come with me to Grande Prairie to visit the welfare offices and watch these once proud and fine men line up and say they need welfare because they do not have jobs. This is because of the national energy policy of the government. They should come with me to visit Bonnyville and Grand Centre to look at the number of young people who are lining up at the welfare offices. These young people saved up their money in order to start small businesses. They thought that Canada was a place of opportunity and that they would build plants because Canada needed oil. We still need oil. Hon. members opposite should come with me to talk with some of these people. I wish they could answer my telephone calls and hear what they have to say. They do not understand. We have the natural resources, the trained people and the technology. All we lack is the will of government to make the country self-sufficient.

I wish hon. members opposite could come with me to talk with a farmer in Athabasca who told me last week that he took his pride herd to slaughter. He will not even maintain his herd; he took it to slaughter. Unfortunately the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has left the House. I was hoping that he would have heard that comment.

I wish hon. members opposite could have spoken with another chap in Newbrook who telephoned me and said: "What the hell is the use; I will not even bother planting a crop this year". He broke the land with his own hands and farmed in the community for the last 40 years, and now he asks "What the hell is the use?"

This is the type of despair the government is causing with its taxes, the National Energy Program and its budget. It has created a feeling of total despair across the country. People are asking what will happen. I will tell them what will happen. It will continue and get worse, until the government admits to Canadians that it made mistakes with the National Energy Program and with the budget. It should do the honourable thing—it should reverse many of the ill-conceived ideas pushed by socialistic bureaucrats in government departments.

Where is the backbone of hon. members opposite? Where is the backbone of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly)? He should rise and tell his caucus colleagues that he will not stand for it any longer. He knows as well as I that policies of government in the National Energy Program and in the budget are killing the economy of the country.

• (1750)

The hon. member for Charlesbourg (Mr. Bussières) is busy talking but perhaps he will read my speech. When will he stand up and tell the members of his caucus, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance that enough is enough and that they are killing the initiative of Canadians? While the government is killing the economy of this country, it is destroying our initiative. Unemployed people all across Canada are sick with fear because they do not know what their future will be.

Can you imagine the government introducing a 20-year bond issue at 15½ per cent while the Minister of Finance at the same time repeats in the House every day that the government will fight inflation with its high interest rate policy. Although the high interest rate policy is there because of high inflation, the minister says they will beat it. Yet the government issues a 20-year bond issue at 15½ per cent! Members of the Liberal government must think Canadians are stupid if the government issues a 20-year bond at 15½ per cent while saying at the same time that inflation will come down. That irresponsible action will guarantee to the rest of the world that Canada is expecting double digit inflation for at least two decades; otherwise the government would not have issued those bonds.

I invite Liberal members to visit people in senior citizen homes. I wonder if they ever talk to senior citizens in their ridings. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) should talk to them and find out what has happened to their purchasing power. Just watch the tears running down an old lady's cheek because she cannot afford to buy her son and daugher-in-law a wedding present.

Mr. Irwin: It is all indexed.

Mr. Shields: We know that the hon. member's salary is indexed. He does not have to worry. I invite him to visit the fishermen in my area. He might be surprised that I am talking about fishermen but we have a freshwater fishing industry in northeastern Alberta. Ask those fishermen what is happening to them. The government has introduced a proposal whereby it will now withhold their taxes. These fishermen are also small businessmen. They buy trucks and nets and fish through the ice in the winter. Like other small businessmen, they sell their produce in the marketplace. Incidentally, the government also controls the market.

Prior to this budget, those fishermen were treated like any other small businessmen. They did their taxes at the end of the year; they deducted all their expenses and submitted their tax. However, what has happened now is that the finance minister, in his wisdom, has said that the fishermen cannot do that any more. The government will now withhold taxes at the wholesale level where the fisherman sells his fish. This irresponsible, terrible and sick government is now attacking small fishermen in northeastern Alberta and using their money for the full year while giving them a refund at the end of the year without interest. That is an example of how desperate this government is for funds in order to continue its growth pattern. Only God knows what their grandiose scheme is.

I would like those hon. members to talk to some of the young people who have graduated from universities, technical colleges and community colleges. I only wish that all those members in the government backbenches could come with me to Fort McMurray, Grand Centre, Athabasca and High Prairie to talk to some of those people the government encouraged by saying that the future is theirs. The government told these people to go to university to receive an education because the world is their oyster. Well, those young people did do that. I had 14 graduate engineers come to me in my area asking what they would do because they could not find employment. Most of them had job offers last year but due to the cutbacks by the oil companies they are unemployed today.

Mr. Irwin: Oil companies obviously need more money.

Mr. Shields: I hope that hon. member is in his proper seat. They do not sit in their proper seats, Mr. Speaker, so they cannot be identified. If the hon. member had been in the House when I began my remarks, he might understand what cash flow is and why it is needed to service debt. However, I understand that is beyond their capability.

Mr. Irwin: Explain profit from investment.

Mr. Shields: I would like to explain it to the hon. member if he is prepared to listen. I could offer him a house for $500,000. It is available at no downpayment and he can move in today. I suggest that he would look at the situation and determine if he would have the cash flow to cover it. He would find that if he had to pay $10,000 or $20,000 a month to maintain the mortgage on that house, he would not have the cash flow.

I will explain to hon. members opposite once again that the Alsands consortium at Fort McMurray is attempting to put together a $13 billion effort. They will not receive any cash flow from that operation until the $13 billion is spent. In other words, they need cash flow from other sources to maintain the debt. That is not unrealistic.

Mr. Irwin: Explain profit from investment.

Mr. Shields: Those Liberal members do not understand simple economics, and we expect them to have the backbone to stand up to their colleagues in the frontbenches and say that enough is enough! The government is killing the economy and this is evidenced by the number of unemployed across Canada. I suggest to the hon. member that he visit the unemployment lines and go to this riding to talk to small businessmen to find out what is happening. He may then have the nerve and backbone to stand up to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to say "Enough is enough; resign and leave this place to let some other members take your place and run the country."

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED REFERRAL OF SUBJECT OF PROSTITUTION TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I am sure has the support of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson). In light of the growing problems associated with prostitution in Vancouver's West End and other cities across Canada, and in light of the pressing need to identify solutions to these problems, and bearing in mind that specific details about how to study and report on this issue will be worked out at the committee level, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that, during its consideration of Bill C-53, it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada, as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently enforced in this regard, and include the hearing and consideration of the views of the interested persons and organizations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF LEATHER SHOES IN IMPORT QUOTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) has indicated to this House on several occasions that, following serious thought, he will make an announcement on whether or not leather footwear will be re-integrated within the global quota. In light of the intolerable uncertainty being suffered by thousands of workers in the Canadian footwear industry whose economic survival hangs on the minister's decision to safeguard Canadian jobs, at a time when the policies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are costing thousands of jobs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist):

That the minister make known immediately his decision to reinstate leather footwear and show concern for the people whose jobs are in serious jeopardy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Despite the fact that the state of our economy is at its lowest ebb in decades, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), during question period in the House yesterday, refused to respond to all questions of an economic nature. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the Prime Minister make a statement on motions to present his economic recovery solutions to the people of Canada, or failing that, he admit his disinterest or his incompetency and take the ultimate step toward economic recovery by submitting his resignation post haste.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

POSTAGE RATES FOR NON-CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House instruct the government to take responsibility for and to establish postage free rates for non-profit charitable organizations in Canada as a direct acknowledgement of the services they provide and in recognition of the significant contribution that volunteers make to the community, to the country and to the quality of life.

FINANCE

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN PETROLEUM AND NATURAL GAS TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The government's policy of massive taxation of the oil and gas industry to nationalize, Canadianize, and rapidly transfer exploration and development from provincial lands to Canada Lands is regressive to the entire industry and the total Canadian economy. Therefore I move:

That the government immediately (1) cut significantly the petroleum and gas revenue tax; (2) provide exactly the same incentives for exploration and development on provincial lands as is provided for Canada Lands under the petroleum incentive program; (3) drop immediately the retroactive 25 per cent ownership requirement on all Canada Lands:

I feel certain that, on reflection, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) will be pleased to second this motion.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED REFERRAL OF SUBJECT OF PROSTITUTION TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which hopefully will receive the unanimous consent of the House. In view of the serious problem of street soliciting in the West End of Vancouver in particular, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that, during its consideration of Bill C-53, it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, and including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently in force in this regard, and include the hearing and consideration of the views of the interested persons and organizations, provided that all witnesses on this issue be heard by the justice committee, or a sub-committee thereof, between May 10 and May 31, 1982.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS BE PRINTED IN BRAILLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, in the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped entitled "Obstacles", which was presented to the government during the International Year of the Disabled, 1981, one of the recommendations was that all government departmental publications, studies and reading material now available to the general public should also be made available to the blind and other disabled persons of this country in braille, large print, or on cassette tape. Even though the government claims it has accepted the above recommendation in principle, there has been nothing done thus far to meet the needs of the disabled as far as government publications are concerned. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House direct the government to take action immediately in this regard and prove that these special committees are not just a waste of time, money and effort, by commencing publication of essential government information in braille, large print and on cassette tapes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ROLE OF ADMINISTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, Frank Lamont, a highly respected Winnipegger, who also is or was a lifelong western Liberal—this latter is a contradiction on its face, I appreciate—has joined every other Canadian not blinded by political ideology in critizing the National Energy Program. He said in part the other day, "It is impossible to understand how Draconian tax levels, suppressed prices and subsidized consumption of foreign oil are consistent with the strategic importance of Canada's oil industry, conservation or self-sufficiency." I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That this House, recognizing that our current economic descent began with the NEP, recommend that each cabinet minister in this regime be given an economic saliva test.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FORESTRY

CLOSURE OF MacMILLAN BLOEDEL LUMBER MILL AT CHEMAINUS, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, MacMillan Bloedel in British Columbia has just announced the indefinite closure of its lumber mill at Chemainus as of May 14, 1982, with the loss of over 600 jobs. The word "indefinite" means only that the company can avoid severance payment to long-term employees. MacMillan Bloedel has made several fortunes from the resources of that area and the work of its employees. Instead of maintaining a modern plant at Chemainus, it has allowed it to deteriorate into a gunnysack operation while ploughing its profits into new operations in other parts of the world. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House condemn the irresponsible pillage of resources and disregard for its employees and their community shown by MacMillan Bloedel and that we condemn Liberal, Conservative and Social Credit governments which have adopted policies which encourage this cut and cut out philosophy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF SINGLE PENSIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) recently gave a speech on pension reform in which she repeated again that it was nothing short of outrageous that, in 1982, being old, single and female is synonymous with being poor. Since she has stated in the past that it would cost $730 million to bring single pensioners above the poverty line, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House regard the statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare as being totally outrageous in view of the fact that the government intends to allocate the $819 million it no longer will spend on medicare and post-secondary education toward reducing the federal deficit instead of using this money to alleviate the condition of Canada's senior citizens.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

QUERY RESPECTING DECISION ON ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. According to press stories, the remaining members, or the last three members of the Alsands consortium were to make a decision today at a board meeting held in Calgary this morning. Can the minister tell the House whether that decision has been announced or whether this project is to join the long list of casualties in the National Energy Program?

• (1415)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have not been informed of any decision by any members of the consortium.

FUTURE OF MAJOR PROJECTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, on page 94 of the National Energy Program there are listed eight major oil development programs which, over the next decade, are supposed to generate some 500,000 barrels of oil and tens and tens of thousands of jobs. With the exception of the first project, which started before the National Energy Program, everyone of those projects has either been cancelled, postponed, or is in serious jeopardy. Can the minister tell the House what he is going to do to make up for this terrible loss of crude oil production for Canada, and even worse loss of the tens and tens of thousands of jobs that would have been generated if these projects had gone ahead, and they would have gone ahead without the National Energy Program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that in the United States there is no such thing as the National Energy Program, but they have cancelled and postponed a large number of megaprojects, particularly the Synfuels program, which is very similar to our tar sands projects. The hon. member knows that those decisions have been influenced very considerably by the situation of high interest rates in the western world, the relative glut in the supply of oil, and concern about the evolution of prices. The United States projects I have indicated have been delayed. I hope that the various projects that were considered, Cold Lake, for example, will be brought to realization once the environment with regard to the evolution of prices for oil is clarified.

Mr. Andre: What the minister neglected to mention, or has forgotten, is that these projects, particularly Alsands, would have been half completed now if they had been allowed to start in February, 1980, when they were ready to start construction of that plant.

Oral Questions

PREDICTED LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada in its 1980 review predicted that failure to go ahead with the large energy projects would mean, and I quote: "A cumulative total of 753,000 jobs would be lost over that period", referring to the 1980-1990 period. Given that the worst fears of the Economic Council of Canada appear to be true, what action does the minister plan to make up for these 753,000 jobs lost to Canada in the next decade as a result of his energy program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have two comments and maybe three to make to my hon. friend. First, this government has always been supportive of the tar sands projects. In February, 1980, September, 1980, January, 1981, February, 1981 and all the months in between we have been supportive of those projects. I invite him to reflect upon some other decisions made not by this government but which had an impact on the decision to proceed. Second, I remind him that those projects are far from being shelved. Some may be delayed. Some are proceeding. Some will proceed quicker, such as development of the Beaufort and development off the east coast. They appear to be proceeding quicker than had been anticipated because of discoveries. Third, I remind my hon. friend that the Economic Council of Canada has very often been proven wrong, even in the last year, with its forecasts.

ALSANDS PROJECT—TAX AND ROYALTY STRUCTURES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister knows full well that the delay in the Alsands project and the Imperial project was because there were not royalty structures in place and the tax structure set by the federal government was not in place. The minister also knows that the dry-up in the cash flow of the companies has stopped them from proceeding. In his offer to the industry, has the minister cut back on the PGRT to increase the cash flows to the company, and has he altered the tax and royalty structures offered to the companies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada during the last few months have worked hand in hand to develop a proposal that would be fair to the companies and to the taxpayers and consumers of the country. These have been the objectives, and these objectives have been shared between the government of Alberta and ourselves. We have worked, as I said, extremely closely together. We have put forward joint proposals that, for the time being, are confidential. Once the companies have made their decision we will be very pleased to reveal the content of our proposals.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Despite vague assurances given to us by him in the past that there is nothing to worry about, and the seven years delay already experienced with the Alaska gas line project, the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his letter of April 23 to his counterpart, Mr. Alexander Haig in the United States, stated that we have now come to a "critical impasse". I wonder if the government and the minister can explain what is meant by a "critical impasse." And, also, could he explain the nature of the veiled threats contained in that letter? Is the Government of Canada threatening to withdraw Canadian support for this project?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the support for this project is part of the legislation that has been endorsed by Parliament and passed by Parliament under this government several years ago. So the support for the project is clear, is there, and it has been continuous. As far as the impasse to which my hon. friend refers is concerned, it is not an impasse that has anything to do with the two governments. There appears to be some difficulty at the present time in the United States among the promoters of that project. The Secretary of State for External Affairs wanted to draw this situation to the attention of the Secretary of State in the United States, to see if the United States administration would not use its good offices to try to resolve any of the outstanding issues there might be between the producers and the distributors in the Alaska gas pipeline project.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the ironclad guarantee?

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE ON STARTING OF PROJECT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that thousands and thousands of jobs have been lost already, jobs in the steel, the construction and other industries, can the minister now give this House his ironclad guarantee—

Mr. Nielsen: Once again.

Mr. Nickerson: —that the project will start within the next six months? Does he still believe that the project can be completed solely by private financing? Can he advise us what were the results of the meeting in New York last night between the Hon. Mitchell Sharp and the pipeline proponents?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to report on the result of the visit by Mr. Sharp in New York yesterday. I have not been informed of the results of that visit. I might tell the hon. member—he is aware, no doubt—that the Government of Canada had already authorized the pre-build of the line, which resulted in several hundred million dollars of work, of orders, and several thousand person years, in terms of the completion of that particular section of the line. It is hoped that the rest will be completed.

Mr. Nielsen: Now it is called "hope" and there are no more ironclad guarantees.

UNITED STATES COMMITMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I also wish to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister will recall that, in his own words in the House of Commons in 1979, he said quite clearly that an ironclad commitment regarding the building of the whole Alaska gas pipeline would have to be obtained before the pre-build was commenced. Quite obviously, that position was changed considerably.

I want to ask the minister a further question now, in light of the most recent statements coming from Washington, that the United States administration is having considerable difficulty in trying to convince the private sector that they ought to go ahead, and in light of the fact that Mr. Haig has indicated quite clearly that there will be, at the very least, a delay, and that there is a distinct possibility that the project will not proceed. Will the minister tell the House whether he still believes he has an ironclad commitment from the U.S. to build the Alaska gas pipeline, and on which day will Canadians begin to see the benefits he said in the House of Commons would flow to Canadian manufacturers and workers from the building of the Alaska gas pipeline?

• (1425)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I note that in his statement my hon. friend pointed out that the governments of various countries have some difficulty getting the private sector to do certain things. That seems to be the case with respect to the U.S. administration at the present time.

I remind my hon. friend that the U.S. Congress and the U.S. administration, under the previous President and under the present President, have indicated that the Alaska gas pipeline is a question of the highest priority for the U.S. government. We have no reason to believe this is not still the case. There may indeed be difficulties at the present time between the private partners, but we have no reason to believe there is any less commitment on the part of the U.S. administration to the realization of the project. This is why we have urged that government to make representations and to use its good offices to try to resolve the difficulties which exist at the present time between the private partners in the United States.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, surely the minister recognizes that the commitment by the U.S. administration means absolutely nothing. There is not one single dollar committed by the U.S. administration to the building of the Alaska gas pipeline.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us about the Mackenzie Valley and land claims settlements.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. U.S. Secretary of State Haig has made it quite clear that this entire matter now rests with the private sector, and there is no guarantee that the private sector will go ahead. Will the Prime Minister arrange to meet and speak with the President of the United States to impress upon him that there was a commitment made by the U.S. that it would build the Alaska gas pipeline if we would proceed with the pre-build? We have lived up to our end of the bargain. When will they live up to theirs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Stelco and the people of Hamilton are not going to appreciate what the NDP did.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, do the rules allow for members of the opposition to ask each other questions? If so, I will cede to the hon. member for Edmonton North.

Mr. Blackburn: That is just a cop-out.

Mr. Deans: Don't you want to answer? I wish you would.

DEMPSTER LATERAL LINK—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DISCUSS PROJECT WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, let me ask another question of the Prime Minister. Bearing in mind the question I have just asked, does the Prime Minister recognize that without the building of the pipeline we will not be able to provide the Dempster lateral pipeline link and that that will make it extremely difficult and very costly for us to gain access to our northern resources? Part of the deal was that we would be able to gain access to our resources in return for building the pre-build and in return for the Americans living up to their commitment. Will the Prime Minister sit down with the President of the United States, iron out the problem, and require from the President of the United States that he take whatever action is necessary to have his administration fulfil its end of the bargain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is accurate about the Dempster link. It was part of the negotiation that we would leave ourselves open to be able to link Beaufort Sea gas into the pipeline south.

Mr. Nielsen: It was part of the agreement.

Mr. Trudeau: In so far as that is concerned, the hon. member is correct. I do not believe he is correct when he suggests that in some way the United States government undertook to build the line. He is correct in indicating that it was a priority for the Americans back in President Carter's time. We were begged—indeed, implored—to pass special legislation quickly because the Americans wanted that pipeline to be built, but I do not recall that in any of those circumstances the United States administration undertook to finance or to build the pipeline itself. It was something that was in the hands of the private sector both in Canada and in the United States.

• (1430)

I have discussed this matter with the President of the United States and I hope to seek occasions to do that again.

An hon. Member: They won't let you into the country.

Mr. Trudeau: I plan to meet the President in another country, Madam Speaker, but I am not sure if the hon. member who interjected would be allowed into that country.

I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has dealt with the matter. We have an undertaking from successive United States administrations that the pipeline was a priority. We still take it to be their priority.

I understand there are supplementary questions, Madam Speaker.

POSITION OF EXXON CORPORATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister will recall that the Reagan administration removed the prohibition against multinationals assuming an equity position in this project, leaving it open now for them to do so. Will the minister inform us whether there is any validity or substance to the suggestion that Exxon will now replace the American component, Northwest Alaska Pipeline Company, in holding the equity position that is available to Northwest Alaska Pipeline Company now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is right in suggesting that there had been some difficulties among the producers with regard to the distributors. That was the subject of discussion in the last couple of weeks. However, I do not have specific information as to what specific plans there are in regard to Exxon and its share in the project. I have not been informed of any specific proposal in that particular regard.

EFFECT OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT ON DEMPSTER LATERAL LINK

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister would undertake to inform himself on that subject and either reply in the House or inform me accordingly.

In view of his ironclad hopes that the whole line will be proceeded with, will the minister please advise us whether, in his view, the Dempster lateral will be proceeded with as the international agreement which forms part of the legislation, calls for?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will be pleased to inquire and transmit to my hon. friend the information that can be made available to me at the present time. I would remind him, however, that some of that information may be considered confidential between the partners and I might not have access to it. I will be very happy to communicate to him anything I can get.

As far as the Dempster extension is concerned, if I remember the agreement with the United States, it provided for the possibility of tying the Dempster line to the Alaska gas pipeline. There was not an obligation to build that line and it was a right that Canada had, and would continue to have if the project proceeds as we hope.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONTRACT FOR DESIGN OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON D.C.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His office announced on February 25 that Mr. Arthur Erickson and his firm had been awarded the contract to design the new Canadian embassy in a very prestigious area of Washington. This was after a special selection committee of seven civil servants and architects had invited submissions. In response, 318 people made requests and 71 put in detailed submissions. Four firms were recommended for that $30 million job, none of which was the Erickson firm.

Why did the government select the Erickson firm—Mr. Erickson is reputed to be a friend of the Prime Minister—when the selection committee had recommended four other firms and had ranked them in order of selection after the architectural firms involved had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in making their submissions? Why was the request of the committee and its recommendations ignored and the Prime Minister's friend appointed? Should they not just have said, "Only Trudeau friends need apply?"

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I took the view that there were 11 finalists and that they were persons or firms which obviously had been assessed as competent to be considered by the selection process for building the embassy. I thought it was correct for the federal cabinet to choose from among that 11 the one that we wanted to ask to make a proposal for that embassy.

I have taken the view, and I admit it is somewhat a change of policy, that the final decision should be made by the elected representatives of the people and that, within a small number of firms submitted by the selection process, it seemed to be normal that the government would make the decision rather than some government officials or some outside representatives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASONS FOR SELECTION PROCESS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has made a strong argument for doing away with the public tender system entirely so that the few favourites of the government can have all the jobs that are going across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Why did the government have four civil servants, two architects and one retired diplomat circulate the architectural profession in Canada, then have 11 semi-finalists selected who had to spend tens of thousands of dollars each in order to go to Washington and make submissions, and then have the panel recommend four firms? Those four did not include the Prime Minister's favourite. Why did they then ignore all that and go through the process so that the genuises in the cabinet were going to decide on their own who was best suited to do the planning?

The last time I heard something like this was when the Roman Emperor Caligula made his horse a god. Is that the principle that the Prime Minister of Canada is proceeding on—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: —that he knows better than anyone else who should be the architect?

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Nielsen: Come on, Caligula.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is a little bit mistaken in his Roman history. I could tell him that if I had the power of Caligula I would not even have to turn him into a monkey. I think he is one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Convince the architects of that. Only Trudeau pets need apply. The great sun god, the sun king will decide.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has his facts all wrong. In the earlier part of his question he said that there were several hundred applicants and that 11 were chosen from that—

Mr. Crosbie: Semi-finalists.

Mr. Trudeau: —from that several hundred number.

Mr. Crosbie: Four were recommended.

Mr. Trudeau: All those 11 were involved in the spending process that the hon. member refers to, with trips to Washington and so on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): So it is even more unfair than we thought it was.

Mr. Trudeau: It was certain that only one would be chosen.

Mr. Crosbie: Four were recommended.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore it is certain that ten of them were taking the chance that their spending would not result in a contract to them.

The question is, once that elimination had been made we came down to a small group of 11—

Mr. Crosbie: Four.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Get your facts right, Prime Minister.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has used the figure of 11 himself. Does he object to me using that figure now?

Mr. Crosbie: I want you to be truthful. Four were recommended, not 11.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Crosbie: Four were recommended and you could not—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Crosbie: Just try to be truthful.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

LAY-OFFS IMPLEMENTED BY CROWS NEST FOREST PRODUCTS LIMITED, OF FERNIE, B.C.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who is responsible for FIRA. On November 23, 1978, the Foreign Investment Review Agency announced that Shell Canada Resources was given permission to take over Crows Nest Forest Products Limited of Fernie. At that time, FIRA gave assurances that Shell would maintain Crows Nest Forest Products Limited at not less than its 1978 level. Recently the foreign owner has violated that statement and laid off an entire shift of 200 workers. What steps is the government prepared to take to ensure that Shell lives up to the commitments given both by the company and the government to protect levels of employment?

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will have this situation looked into, and if the undertakings are not being lived up to I will ask that the enforcement provisions of the law are vigorously employed.

HIRING PRIORITY SOUGHT FOR LAID OFF WORKERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that right across Canada FIRA is a pretty toothless tiger when it comes to protecting Canadian workers. When Shell took over Crows Nest Industries the first thing it did was split it into two companies, a forest company and a resource company. Now they have even refused to hire the men they are laying off from the forest company for their resource company, which is hiring. Will the government at least take steps to ensure that the men laid off by the forest company are given first priority for hiring with the resource company?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we will first want to see whether the situation described by my hon. friend is covered in the undertakings given as a condition of the allowance. If that is the case, then I will certainly do what I can to ensure that the act is being properly respected.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—INQUIRY WHETHER EXPROPRIATED FARMS WILL BE RESOLD TO FORMER OWNERS

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Limited.

Yesterday, the minister met with a group of expropriated farmers from Mirabel, a meeting that was mentioned on the news and in today's newspapers. Could the minister inform the House about yesterday's meeting, and could he confirm that his recommendation to cabinet will be to sell back some of the expropriated land at Mirabel?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question inasmuch as the newspaper reports I saw of the meeting I had with representatives of citizens of the area were inaccurate.

To begin with, as I indicated in response to a question in the last few days, the government has taken the position that the matter of rents is entirely separate from the long-range planning issues involved in the Mirabel land corporation. Indeed, we did not accept the proffer of rent yesterday and suggested that was a matter for the courts if they could not settle the matter between lawyers. As far as the long-range plan is concerned, as hon. members know the Mirabel land corporation has advised me, and I have advised my cabinet colleagues. I think it is fair to say that because the objective of the study to begin with is to investigate the possibility of returning some of the land under certain conditions, yes, generally speaking, under certain conditions, that will be one of my recommendations.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

APPLICATION FOR GRANT MADE BY FIRM IN SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware that approval is being sought for a DREE grant to a consortium for the establishment of a mining equipment manufacturing firm in Sudbury known as Meco, and that such firm will be in direct competition with an established firm in North Bay called Jarvis Clark, which, because of the terrible state of the economy, has announced its intention to lay off 167 of its approximately 400 employees?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not think it has been the custom to confirm DREE program applications because of commercial confidentiality, unless and until there is an approval. However, I assure my hon. friend that I will certainly bear in mind very carefully what he has to say on this subject.

CONSEQUENCE OF GRANT BEING MADE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is to the same minister. I assume that the Minister of Supply and Services has been in touch with the minister on this matter, and I would be interested in knowing the minister's position and whether he is willing to look into it. I understand the proposed grant is $2.2 million, and I hope he will have it denied because the awarding of these funds will mean the death of a very successful firm in North Bay.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is in close touch with me on all matters pertaining to the industrial development of his riding. He does a very good job in that regard.

Mr. Clark: Maybe you could call Arthur Erickson.

Mr. Gray: We will certainly keep in mind the views of my hon. friend, the views of the Minister of Supply and Services, and others on matters of this sort. Perhaps the hon. member's concerns should be expressed to the province of Ontario which has already announced its willingness to support financially the very project he opposes.

THE CONSTITUTION

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONFERENCE ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will know that under the Constitution he must call a conference within one year to decide the question of aboriginal rights. Has he decided which groups will be invited, when they will be invited, and what role he sees the federal government playing in this constitutional conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the first step would be to consult with the provinces and see what their views are on the date for such a meeting, and what groups they would advise be invited to it. We could then have a discussion and try and reach final agreement on the date, agenda, and the participants.

POSSIBILITY OF HOLDING PRELIMINARY CONFERENCES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, since the conference is to be called to decide on the definition of aboriginal rights, can the Prime Minister tell me whether he will be in touch with his responsible minister to ask whether preliminary conferences can be called so that there are no surprises, or does he feel one conference is sufficient to decide the question of aboriginal rights?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I certainly will be acting in consultation with the minister in this matter. However, the hon. member obviously knows that the minister and the Secretary of State have been funding many native groups in order that they can pursue their legitimate claims and definition of their rights. This is not a new suggestion; we have been doing it for years and it has cost many millions of dollars.

CANADA POST

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INCREASES IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has Canada Post, made representations to the government for an increase in first-class postal rates?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Madam Speaker.

[English]

TIMING OF FUTURE RATE INCREASE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, will the minister assure the people of Canada that there will not be another postal increase until service is demonstrably improved, or for a year and a half, whichever comes first?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is a decision that is primarily the responsibility of the board of directors of the corporation, but as we all know, any decision must ultimately be submitted for approval to cabinet. I feel the question is purely speculative and that it is not really an issue at this time. I am confident that the main objective of the new Canada Post Corporation is not to increase postage rates but to improve postal services in Canada.

HEALTH

PRACTICE OF VACCINATING AGAINST SMALLPOX

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Despite the spectacular results achieved by the World Health Organization in completely eliminating smallpox, that dreaded virus disease, from the face of the earth, can the minister tell me why some government institutions still persist in vaccinating people against smallpox? This practice is redundant, uncomfortable, and can induce complications.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, from what I know of the background of that question, and considering the personal case which was referred to, concerning one of our colleagues in this House, I do not think there is any reason to be worried about the vaccinations being carried on in some federal government departments.

SHIPBUILDING

SUBSIDY RATE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DOMESTIC-USE VESSELS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It concerns unfair foreign competition for Canadian shipbuilders. The Canadian Shipbuilding & Ship Repairing Association reported:

> During the past 20 months Canadian shipping and petroleum companies have ordered over $1 billion worth of ships and floating equipment from abroad for Canadian use.

This is compared with only $400 million from Canadian shipyards. The minister well knows the reason for this—much higher subsidies and interest free financing which foreign shipping companies enjoy. For example, British shipbuilders receive subsidies valued at close to 40 per cent, whereas Canadian government subsidies were cut down to 9 per cent, and 19 per cent financing rates were added. Since the minister provides much higher subsidies through the Export Development Corporation for Canadian companies to build ships for export, will he change this irrational policy and implement an equivalent subsidy rate for vessels built in Canada for domestic use? It is only common sense.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, this issue is one which is being actively worked on by the government. We hope to have some policy decisions in this area before too long. Certainly it is one which has to be taken very seriously. I am glad my hon. friend confirmed that $400 million of purchasing has been placed with Canadian shipyards because of offshore exploration activities.

ABSENCE OF CUSTOMS DUTY ON FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the unfair customs policies which favour foreign-built ships over Canadian industries. Since no customs duties are now charged on foreign-built vessels purchased by Canadian companies which operate between our 12-mile limit and our 200-mile limit offshore, in fairness to the Canadian shipbuilding industry will the minister, through the Privy Council, implement customs rate changes for those deep sea foreign-built ships that operate within the 200-mile limit? Will he also increase the existing 10 per cent tariff which favours foreign-built oil exploration vessels over Canadian-built vessels?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the suggestion of the hon. member will be given careful consideration by cabinet.

EMPLOYMENT

WORK-SHARING AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA PROVINCIAL CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration on behalf of the residents of the riding of Churchill, seeing their member does not ask questions about employment in that area. In view of the work-sharing agrement which was signed between the Government of Canada and a provincial government Crown corporation—I understand that work-sharing project has now lapsed and that there have been lay-offs despite the assurances of the Manitoba government that no one would lose his job or his business—could the minister give us an update on whether or not those jobs will be saved, whether the work-sharing projects are in fact still in place, or have they ended as the reports state?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, a provincial minister in the Manitoba government announced that lay-offs would take place even though the work-sharing agreement was in effect. Therefore, it suspends the work-sharing agreement.

I should point out that I wrote to the premier of the province on Monday indicating that we were quite open to any proposals for job-creation schemes for forestry workers in northern Manitoba. I made that offer to provincial ministers as early as February, indicating that under Section 38 we could provide alternative employment in that area. I am hoping the Manitoba government will now respond with some degree of clarity to that particular offer, so that we can help the workers of ManFor to gain alternative employment in an area where there is a tremendous demand for forest management because of the fires which occurred a year and a half ago. I hope to enlist the support of the hon. member and other Members of Parliament from Manitoba to see if we can persuade the Manitoba government to enter into a job-creation program.

WORK SHARING IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. I regret that those jobs now appear to be in jeopardy. The minister has appeared before cabinet asking for not only an extension but also for an increase in terms of work sharing. Could he report whether or not that has been approved and whether there are additional work-sharing arrangements being made in Canada's north?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, at the present time we have signed over 900 work-sharing agreements covering close to 50,000 workers. Many of them are in northern parts of Canada, particularly in resource industries such as lumber and other areas. I could not give the precise numbers if the hon. member is speaking about the Territories, but I could get that information for him.

As far as future considerations are concerned, we met with the users of work sharing a few weeks ago. We are now analyzing the results of that. I spent last week consulting with business and labour groups to determine what were their responses. I am now preparing proposals for cabinet. It has not yet had a chance to review them, but I hope that the proposals will be considered by cabinet before the end of May when we will make an announcement. Obviously the very demand for work sharing by business and labour demonstrates that it is providing a very important support during the downturn in the economy and that they are highly supportive of us continuing our measure to provide them with assistance.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR PLACEMENT OF ORDERS WITH COMPANIES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He knows that many people in Nova Scotia have been waiting for a very long time for some concrete action by the minister to allocate some badly needed orders for railway rolling stock to Hawker Siddeley and some additional orders for rail to the Sydney Steel Corporation. The Minister indicated in the past that he considers his role to be an advocate among his cabinet colleagues to ensure that disadvantaged regions of the country and their key industries receive work. So far we have seen the antithesis of economic development under the minister. While I can see that the entire country is now an economic basket case, surely some consideration should be given to those areas which used to be noticeably economically disadvantaged before the entire country caught up with them?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have been working on this with my colleague, the Minister of Transport. I hope the Minister of Transport, on behalf of the government, will have some announcements in this regard before too long.

At the same time I should point out to my hon. friend that just today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on behalf of the government, announced a co-operative $5.5 million project to use Cape Breton coal, in combination with water as fuel for electricity generation plant boilers, the coal coming from the Cape Breton Development Corporation, a company for which I report to Parliament. There will be a new demonstration plant for this new technology. It is just one example of my efforts not only with respect to industrial development but also with respect to advanced technology in the interests of the Cape Breton and Nova Scotia economy.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, any news such as this is certainly welcome. I congratulate the minister for it, but he must realize that it is a pitifully small contribution when the Sydney Steel Corporation needs, since he mentioned Cape Breton, additional work which the Minister of Transport could allocate to that very important industry. We cannot have any stability, or improvement for the work force or justify the money spent, if there is not some work for the corporation to do. It is within his power as a cabinet minister to secure that kind of work, and I hope he will get to it.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we do not need to allocate or force CN to buy from SYSCO. CN has been buying rail from SYSCO for many years. As a matter of fact, 83 per cent of CN's purchase of rail has been from SYSCO over a period of ten years. However, as the hon. member certainly knows, in the last year or so technical difficulties have arisen. For this reason CN had to look elsewhere in Canada—for example to Algoma—for the purchase of some of its rail.

In this coming year CN will be able to purchase 88,000 tonnes of rail from SYSCO, but SYSCO believes in the present circumstances that this is not enough. SYSCO asked CN to buy by anticipation and to stockpile rail. This is being looked at now. The cost of it would be $1.4 million, and we are looking around to see who could take care of that extra expenditure. The company would normally take care of it. CN, of course, prefers not to do so. A number of us are now looking to see if we can find a recommendation for this particular circumstance. But saying that CN is not doing its best to purchase rails from SYSCO is obviously not true.

• (1500)

Mr. MacKay: I am disappointed to think that the minister believes that CN cannot purchase additional rails from SYSCO. I would also want to straighten something out on the record. If he is saying that the quality of rails produced by SYSCO—in the Deputy Prime Minister's bailiwick—is not sufficient, it is interesting to note that a recent train derailment in the west, as I understand it, was not caused by a SYSCO rail but rather by an Algoma rail. Perhaps he had better reconsider the allocation of those particular orders.

Madam Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that that was not a question. He should not seek the floor to comment on answers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader to confirm the business of the House for tomorrow and to inform us what he plans for next week?

Parliament Hill

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the business of the House for tomorrow will be Bills S-19, C-58, in that order, and Bill C-91 if we have time.

[Translation]

Next week, unless otherwise specified, Monday and Thursday will be opposition days, and Tuesday and Thursday the House will resume consideration of Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it came over the translation that we would be discussing Bill C-93 on Tuesday and Friday, but Wednesday did not come over the translation. Would the government House leader repeat what the business is for Wednesday?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what I said in French was that on Tuesday and Wednesday next week we will be resuming debate on Bill C-93. Monday and Thursday, unless otherwise notified, should be allotted days.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CROSBIE—CORRECTION OF REFERENCE TO CALIGULA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During question period I made a mistake of fact. I said that the Emperor Caligula made his horse a god. As a matter of fact, he made his horse a senator and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made one end of the horse a senator on many occasions.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members do not facilitate the task of the Chair when they rise on a matter on the pretence of a point of order and simply continue to debate.

PARLIAMENT HILL

RECRUITMENT OF TOUR GUIDES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I wish to get some clarification on some information that your Honour provided the House in question period last Friday. The reason I am raising it today is that I have just received some background information which is contradictory to the information your Honour provided the House last Friday.

I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to the special recruitment policies of the government for hiring francophones in the civil service. I also pointed out that no more unilingual English students were being hired as tour guides on the Hill, even though 95 per cent of the visitors speak English. Madam Speaker pointed out that my statement was quite incorrect.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. In any event, the hon. member should have brought that question to me. We can discuss it in my chambers. This being a matter of administration of the House of Commons, as the hon. member knows, it should be discussed with me or with the members' services committee. Certainly the Speaker is in no position to elaborate or make comments on the matter or answer questions in the House.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, the reason I bring it up in the House is that you became involved in the answering of my question. What I would like you to clarify is that in the parliamentary guide for hiring students as tour guides, it clearly states under language requirements "fluency in both official languages". I seek clarification on how many unilingual English students you will be hiring and why there is not a percentage figure in the parliamentary guide as to how many unilingual English students we can hire because two-thirds of Canadian students cannot speak French and this is a highly discriminatory directive. I would like clarification.

Madam Speaker: I can provide those figures to the hon. member. However, if I erred by getting involved in the question at that time, I shall not err a second time. We have those figures and I will gladly give them to the hon. member and even make them public, if that is at all helpful to the hon. member.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,126 and 4,221.

[Text]

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Question No. 4,126—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the date the answer to question No. 53 of the first session of the thirty-second Parliament was prepared, how many additional orders in council were issued by the government and how many were in any way classified?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The number of orders in council is 6,897. None were classified.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Question No. 4,221—Mr. Gilchrist:

For each year 1976 to 1981 (a) what was the cost of unemployment insurance benefits (b) how many persons received the benefits?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration):

	(a) Cost of Unemployment Insurance Benefits ($ Million)	(b) Number of Persons Receiving Benefits (000's)
1976	3,361.6	2,429
1977	3,928.2	2,515
1978	4,538.2	2,526
1979	4,009.1	2,322
1980	4,393.8	2,249
1981	4,828.3	2,354

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING STREET SOLICITING FOR THE PURPOSE OF PROSTITUTION

Hon. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I wonder if you would seek the unanimous consent of the House, which it might be disposed to give, in order that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), or the government, might once again put the motion which would refer the question of prostitution to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Madam Speaker: I am in the hands of the House but no one rose on motions to solicit—or ask for that!

• (1510)

Mr. Nielsen: I am now asking the Chair to solicit the unanimous consent—

An hon. Member: Careful!

Mr. Nielsen: —of the House to enable that to be done by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, if the parliamentary secretary does not wish to do so himself.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in a situation where the business of the House or referral to committee is concerned, it is customary to negotiate with the party House leaders, and when there is good reason to believe there is unanimous consent, we rise in the House and ask the Chair to ask the House whether there is unanimous consent for a specific motion. This approach was tried at least twice this week, and it did not work. In the circumstances, I would prefer to have further indications as to agreement by the New Democratic Party before we use any more of the time of the House to obtain concurrence in a motion of referral to committee. As things are now, I do not believe the hon. member will get the unanimous consent he suggests there is, because further consultations will have to be held, and if we think there is good reason to believe that unanimous consent can be obtained, we shall act accordingly and present the motion again.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the government House leader knows the motion which would gain the unanimous consent of the House. We would be delighted to give unanimous consent to a motion which stated that it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that it take into consideration all legal methods of dealing with street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution and including Sections 195.1 and 171 of the Criminal Code of Canada as well as the various provincial and municipal laws presently in force in this regard and include the hearing and consideration of the views of the interested persons and organizations. We would be happy to give unanimous consent to that motion if the government House leader would care to move it.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this is a matter which I am willing to discuss in the normal way and under normal circumstances. I do not see much difference. I see that the NDP has attached conditions. That is subject to negotiation. We had a very simple motion referring the subject to the committee while it debates a certain bill, but the NDP denied consent. Now it wants to attach conditions. We are willing to discuss that, but in the meantime there is no way that we will agree to a motion that the NDP moves on the subject. We will move the motion we moved earlier, and if the members of the NDP do not agree to that reference, it is too bad.

Mr. Deans: Speaking on the point of order, Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear, lest I was perhaps misunderstood, that we are not attempting to attach any condition. We are attempting to remove a condition.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, finally changed your mind, eh?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REPORT ON SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House supports the minority report on security and disarmament signed by six members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in April, 1982, calling for, inter alia, a world-wide nuclear freeze, no Cruise missile testing in Canada and a world-wide pledge against first use of nuclear weapons.

He said: Madam Speaker, we have never confronted anything in the past remotely approaching the scale of human disaster toward which the world now seems to be heading. The carnage of the two great wars would be as nothing by comparison if we do not reverse the disastrous competition in the creation of the instruments of nuclear death. The two great power blocs, engaged in a world-wide struggle with one another, locking themselves in, push us closer and closer to triggering off a Hobbesian world of uncontrolled violence. This time, however, the consequences are almost beyond historical imagination. We must now contemplate the possible destruction of mankind.

[Translation]

While so many are being threatened with increasing poverty, over $500 billion annually is being spent on arms; while there is a shortage of doctors, teachers and engineers, the arms industry is employing more than 50 million men and women, either directly or indirectly. Our system of values is being attacked on all sides. There is no religion or philosophy, whether western or eastern that condones taking this option.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: It is not in keeping with our practice to permit cameras behind the curtain, and to set the Chair up and the hon. member for—

An hon. Member: Prud'homme.

Mr. Nielsen: —Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), which is the practice which was just going on now. I do not know what the purpose was, whether they are for mailings or whatever, but that should not happen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the matter will be considered at the appropriate time. The hon. member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I will keep getting up until I am heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has made his point.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They are still there.

Mr. McDermid: Order them out of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To the best information of the present incumbent of the chair, there is an understanding between the House leaders with regard to the presence of the cameramen. If there is some disagreement with regard to that understanding, conversations directed through the appropriate channels will take place and the appropriate measures will be taken.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the understanding between the Speaker and the House leaders was to permit still cameras. Now, hear me out, please. The understanding was to permit still cameras behind the curtains during question period, but no longer than that. The photographers are still there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has made his point.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if I might be heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, he has made his point. The cameras are not there. The hon. member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon has been recognized and has made his point of order. The practice of which he has complained has ceased and the Chair has indicated there will be further discussions and the appropriate remedy taken if there has been an infraction of the understanding of the rules of practice of the House. Does the hon. member have anything to add to that?

Mr. Nielsen: If you would hear me out, I would let you know, Mr. Speaker. What I am asking for is a direction from the Chair that the practice, as understood between the Speaker and the House leaders, of allowing photographers behind the curtains during question periods only, not only be adhered to but be enforced as well. That is what I am requesting the Chair to direct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has heard the point of the hon. member. The hon. member has made his point. The hon. member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have a point of order. Your Honour must hear my point of order.

With my usual due kindness to the hon. member for Yukon, I do not know why he has dragged me into the debate. I was only speaking very privately with you, Mr. Speaker, asking for the list of Speakers for today.

Mr. Nielsen: And, by coincidence, the cameraman was there.

Mr. Prud'homme: I was just speaking to Your Honour privately, very silently, if possible, to find out who will be the next speaker, because I will be speaking today. I wanted to know when I will speak. It is a long practice—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made the point that he is not involved in any subterfuge whatsoever with the Chair, which the present incumbent is quite prepared to substantiate. The hon. member for Oshawa has the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that it certainly reflects the sense of priorities among some people to have an interruption of this kind on this topic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Worst of all in this development is the spread and development of nuclear weapons in particular. Now more than ten nations are believed to have a nuclear weapons capability and another half dozen are very close to having it. There is in existence enough nuclear capacity for the United States and the Soviet Union to destroy each other's population several times over. It is therefore a moral obligation of the highest priority for politicians to think about the consequences of nuclear war and to act with realism and intelligence to avoid it.

• (1520)

We cannot look for a better guide than to the minority report prepared by members representing all parties of the House of Commons which studied the related questions of security and disarmament. I want to take this opportunity at this point in my comments to compliment all the members on that committee representing the Liberal and Conservative parties. I want to single out in particular, and I am sure it will be understandable, the very significant contribution made by three members of my party, the hon. members for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant). All members are to be commended for their serious moral and practical concerns about this question.

The sparse and precise prose of the minority report presents a grim but accurate portrayal of the consequences of nuclear war. I quote:

> People not immediately burned to death, blown apart or asphyxiated in shelters would find themselves in a nightmare world, populated by the dying, dead, and insane. Food, crops, and land would be contaminated, water undrinkable. The survivors would envy the dead. In an all-out attack, who would survive, as radiation sweeps across the oceans and into the atmosphere, depleting the ozone layer, and releasing lethal ultraviolet rays? The collapse of the ecosystem would leave a global wasteland.

Many people have been deeply moved in recent weeks by a similar description found in the important analysis of nuclear armament and warfare provided by Jonathan Schell in his series of articles in The New Yorker magazine. I urge members of all parties in the House to read that series with great care.

The nuclear arms race has become a vicious circle. The accumulation of new arms by one side increases the feelings of insecurity in the other. This in turn leads to a further demand in the name of self-defence for more nuclear weaponry. In the past few years, the momentum of this circular motion has increased, I regret to say. It has reached what can only be described as alarming proportions. Rather than producing tranquility based on security, new arms spending is only increasing feelings of worldwide insecurity. This circle must be broken. Hence the timeliness and practical wisdom of the minority committee's report. What lies behind the report is a profound understanding of the world armament situation and the realization that Canada can and should show leadership in this field.

In this context, it is particularly worth noting that we in this country were the first nation on earth with the capacity to develop nuclear weapons to refuse to do so. That was a noble beginning. It is time we returned to the principles which gave it birth.

It is also worth noting that following World War II, as a middle power, Canada acquired a good reputation among the nations of the world as an activist nation, a nation willing more than once to move beyond the confines of the status quo. It is time that we returned to this tradition also. It is time for the Government of Canada to cease being a follower in the deadly armaments game. It is time to step out and speak up at long last for disarmament.

This can and must be done in practical terms. The nuclear minority report shows us how. What does it recommend? First, it recommends a nuclear freeze. It calls for a global freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles. This is the same as the resolution proposed by Senators Hatfield and Kennedy in the United States and which up to yesterday had the support of almost 200 United States congressmen and senators, and the numbers are growing daily.

Such a mutually binding freeze, accompanied by international inspection and monitoring mechanisms, is realistic. First, it would head off a new round of first-strike and related counter-force weapons development. Second, it is not unilateral disarmament; it would be binding on both of the great power blocs.

In this context it is important to note that agreement would entail as an early consequence the cessation of the development of the Cruise missile, which is clearly a first-strike nuclear weapon. In terms of the existing balance of nuclear power, this weapon is simply not needed. Although the Soviet Union has a clear advantage in intermediate-range missiles, the United States and its allies have an advantage in long-range missiles. As the subcommittee notes, there is now overall parity between the two sides, a parity which many existing military experts in the United States in particular are in agreement with.

To attempt to obtain nuclear superiority on the part of the United States is faulty, first because the Soviets have said that such American action will simply cause them to expand on their nuclear programs. Hence the cycle will once again move into motion. Second, as Admiral Noel Gayler, former chief of the United States forces in the Pacific, pointed out in last Sunday's New York Times, in the real world such so-called superiority has no meaning. I quote this former director:

> We and Russia are like two riverboat gamblers sitting across a green table, each with a gun pointed at the other's belly and each gun on hair trigger. The size of the guns doesn't make much difference; if either weapon is used, both gamblers are dead. In the same way, the size of the nuclear forces makes little difference.

It is more than redundant, therefore, to proceed with the Cruise missile. It will set in motion even more spending on armaments on both sides. It will simply increase the already excessive balance of terror in the world.

The proposal for a nuclear freeze is practical. It gives no advantage to either side. The Canadian government should use its influence in the world community at the United Nations special session to get a freeze and effective international mechanisms for enforcement accepted. It is clear from recent talks that the United States will have to be prepared to change its views on the Cruise missile. On the other hand, the Soviet Union will have to change its views on the important question of inspection. The message for Canada is clear as to what our role should be. We must be working to convince both of the superpowers to show this kind of flexibility.

• (1530)

The second recommendation in the committee's report is that there should be no Cruise testing. Mr. Speaker, it must be very clear that this follows the first point. As the subcommittee points out, we should not be party to tests aimed at improving the technological capacity for nuclear war. It is only be denying the use of space in Alberta or Saskatchewan or anywhere else in our country that we will be clearly seen to be taking a step against the arms race. To participate in such testing would be to make a mockery of any claim to favour a halt in the nuclear arms race. The Cruise test question is, then, a specific test for Canada. We must now take a stand against the irrational and inhumane nuclear weapons race and we must begin by not permitting the testing of the Cruise missile here on our soil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The third recommendation, Mr. Speaker, is one which in my view does not have the same rigorous and verifiable force in the real world as the first two. It is, nonetheless, very important. It simply is that Canada pledge itself never to be the first to use nuclear weapons. To me it is a profoundly important moral commitment which should be the first step to urge other nations with a nuclear capacity to join in. Surely, I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), on this point as well as on the others, the Government of Canada should not hesitate to make such a commitment and to follow through with such appropriate subsequent action.

The fourth and final recommendation in the minority report is that we spend in Canada one tenth of 1 per cent, which is $7 million, of our defence budget on disarmament efforts. That amount could go to strengthen disarmament education, provide information and develop research activities in this field. Surely this proposal is precisely in line with the thinking of the vast majority of Canadians. Canadians, no matter where they reside, no matter what political party they support, are interested in peace. Canadians wherever they reside, whatever political party they support, would be more than willing to see this kind of allocation of government funds devoted to the development of peace and the means of achieving that, rather than put all of our emphasis on spending in the armaments field. The more than 30,000 people who assembled in Vancouver, in a demonstration that was clearly spontaneous, I am sure in this regard were speaking for Canadians from coast to coast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The unspeakable horrors of a nuclear war cannot be exaggerated. Only madmen contend that they can be. I describe as madmen those who are in the armed services, whether of the Soviet Union or of the United States or of their respective allies, who talk glibly about being able to survive a nuclear strike, being able to have a so-called limited nuclear war.

However, Mr. Speaker, if I take it as fundamental that men and women of good will and reasonable intelligence in all parties would agree that any form of nuclear war will constitute a nuclear holocaust, in the real world of politics it is not enough to point out these consequences, no matter how horrific. It is the fundamental responsibility of the politician to present a workable solution and then to work for its implementation.

It is rare in political life that the ideal and the possible perfectly coincide. In my view, we now have precisely that situation. The goal is to begin mankind's march back from the nuclear precipice. The practical means are the proposals, supported by many people in many lands, that I have just described. All that we now need is the political will to carry them forward. Let us get on with this important human job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) allow me a question?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I was a member of this committee that studied the disarmament question and I can say in all truthfulness—

An hon. Member: What is your question?

Mrs. Appolloni: If the hon. member would keep his colleagues in check, at least a minimum of courtesy and free speech will be allowed us.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mrs. Appolloni: Thank you. The committee did work, I am very happy to say this, in a situation of non-partisanship and sincerity. It is along those lines that I ask this question very sincerely, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has just spoken. I fully respect his views, even though I do not share them. In his opening remarks, he paid particular reference to the members of the minority, who signed the minority report. That, too, is permissible; partisan bouquets may be given from one side or the other.

What I am referring to now is the specific reference the hon. member made to the moral stance of those who signed the minority report. This is my question, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the member for Oshawa is not implying that those who did not sign the minority report, or rather those who concurred in the majority report, are less than moral. My contention is that there are many of us who feel that the protection of our own and other Canadians' sons and daughters is also a very sincere moral imperative.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question very much. It gives me a chance to clarify that point. I agree entirely with what the hon. member has just said, that the majority as well as the minority are to be seen to be in fully equivalent moral terms. I would never suggest the contrary, nor did I suggest it. But it was a possible implication. I agree that one might have inferred something I did not intend, because I did not elaborate on the point. I welcome the opportunity now.

This issue in this country, as well as in the United States and in other countries, is something that does not divide people in terms of moral commitment. Most importantly, it divides us in judgment about the ways of achieving those goals.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the last year we have seen a growing worldwide concern over the arms race. More and more people are alarmed at the prospect of an increasing escalation of armaments which they believe may well result in a nuclear holocaust. I agree with the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) that the reality of a nuclear holocaust would be such that the description which he gave is certainly not excessive. Here in Canada there is also rising impatience with the failure of governments throughout the world to negotiate some of the most effective elements of effective disarmament.

Mr. Speaker, the government shares these concerns of the people of Canada, concerns which people all over the world have expressed. There is, alas, no magic formula to bring about the result we all wish. I believe that as a government we have been and continue to be able to put forward a responsible, coherent and effective policy to help achieve the ideal of disarmament and arms control to which we are all dedicated.

Canada's position is not identical with that of the superpowers. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are nuclear weapons powers. We are not. Both are engaged in the development of new nuclear weapons systems. We are not. Both have large expansions in defence expenditure underway. We have not. Both are involved in large-scale trade in armaments. We are not. Canada's position is that of a western middle power.

• (1540)

To say that we do not share the perspective of the two superpowers is not to say that we are either a neutralist or a non-aligned nation. We are a western middle power which supports western values and advocates the western alliance. In fact, we participated in the founding of that North Atlantic alliance.

I would like to quote, as applicable to our situation as well, the words last week of that great German socialist, Chancellor Schmidt, at the annual meeting of his party. He said:

> German policy may not and can never be made from a position equidistant between Washington and Moscow. We stand on this side, on the side of free and equal peoples.

It seems to many of us that it is because the Canadian socialists do not share this position morally, politically or militarily that they can come to a different conclusion.

Mr. Broadbent: Back to the trivial and petty again, Mark.

Mr. MacGuigan: I would be very pleased to entertain questions when I have finished. The New Democratic Party obviously does not like to hear the truth. Members of the New Democratic Party do not like to hear what they could easily conclude if it were not for the fact that they do not favour belonging to the North Atlantic Alliance. Obviously for them a solution can be found on the basis of only one kind of approach.

Mr. Broadbent: What about Senators Hatfield and Kennedy?

Mr. MacGuigan: We are talking about the NDP; we are not talking about American senators.

Mr. Broadbent: Just deal with the issue.

Mr. MacGuigan: The American senators to whom the leader of the New Democratic Party is referring are supporters of the North Atlantic Alliance. His party is not. I sympathize with him because I believe he is a closet supporter of NATO but cannot come out of the closet because of his party. I sympathize with him.

Miss Jewett: That is pretty sick, Mark.

Mr. MacGuigan: Arms control and disarmament policy has been and is a priority of the government. It was the subject of intensive hearings in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence earlier this year. Before preparing its report the committee examined the spectrum of views on security and disarmanent. Whereas we are being invited today to support the views of six members of that committee who issued a minority press release, we should in fact be commending the committee for its efforts.

The committee's report, tabled on April 8, contains a number of positive recommendations. The government has been giving serious consideration to the recommendations in the formulation of Canadian positions for the second United Nations Special Session on Disarmanent.

This important international meeting begins in just over one month. Our preparations have been in progress for over a year. They have included a review of the strategy of suffocation proposed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the first special session in 1978, the validity of which was reaffirmed in the foreign policy debate last June. Preparations have also included extensive consultations with other countries undertaken by the Ambassador for Disarmament. Today I had the pleasure of welcoming and talking with Dr. Eugene Rostow, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency of the United States, who is in Ottawa for consultations with our government as to the position his government and western governments in general should adopt in the forthcoming months. I might also add that at the request of the former premier of Sweden, who is heading an international study of disarmament, our former ambassador, Mr. Ford, was made available to the study group which, I believe, is in the process of completing its report.

In my statement to the standing committee on February 25 I set out the Canadian objective at UNSSOD II, which is to chart the way ahead and give a further impetus to arms control and disarmament negotiations. It is in fact the period beyond UNSSOD II that is at the centre of our concern and that of our NATO allies. I was pleased that the standing committee also looked ahead in underlining the need to resolve the key decisive issues and to establish conditions which will permit a relaxation of tension, rapid movement toward a new rapprochement and the mutual and balanced reduction of global armaments.

States must press ahead in negotiating verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements not only on existing weapons systems—nuclear, chemical and conventional—but also on weapons systems around the corner. States must not allow arms control and disarmament negotiations to lag too far behind technological developments. The need for further qualitative limitation becomes greater with each passing year. The joint statement of principles negotiated as part of SALT II called for the further qualitative limitation as well as reduction in the number of strategic nuclear weapons. Canada's geographical position means that there is no more important negotiation for Canada than the U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. talks on strategic arms, which we hope will be resumed at a very early date.

In looking to the future we must also be concerned about the development of weapons systems for use in outer space. Existing international agreements are no longer sufficient. Canada has spoken out on this subject at the United Nations and co-sponsored a resolution at the last general assembly which requested the Committee on Disarmament, the multilateral negotiating body in Geneva, to consider the question of negotiating effective and verifiable agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in outer space. Canada looks to that body to pursue this issue when it resumes in the summer. We will be one of the active participants.

The Committee on Disarmament has in the past few weeks established a working group on a comprehensive test ban to deal with issues relating to verification and compliance with a view to making further progress toward a comprehensive test ban. CTB has been and continues to be a Canadian priority precisely because a CTB is a key element in limiting future generations of nuclear weapons. With our expertise Canada can and will play an active role in this new working group.

In negotiating forums like the Committee on Disarmament and the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna, as well as in deliberative bodies such as UNSSOD II, Canada will take effective positions which will further encourage negotiations.

To recapitulate, our fundamental position is as follows: it is a position of balanced deterrence by radical reduction. This is not something which can be defined exactly. It is a description. It is a principle, and ideal and a goal, but the goal of balanced deterrence is to be achieved not by accretion but by radical reduction of armaments of all kinds. It seems to me that this points to a goal which is not only the right one but also one which is capable of achievement.

By way of specifying that more general principle, I might say that we advocate, first, the radical reduction of present systems and especially the most destabilizing elements in the present systems and, second, we advocate that there should be no substitution of future destabilizing elements for the ones we succeed in eliminating by way of reduction.

• (1550)

In developing and articulating effective positions, the government will do so on the basis of a balanced security policy which takes into account the need for both nuclear and conventional forces. As I stated in the standing committee, the maintenance of forces sufficient to deter aggression and defend the North Atlantic treaty area is entirely consistent with our commitment to a vigorous arms control and disarmament policy. The two complement and support each other, forming a coherent whole. They serve the same goal of enhancing security and preserving peace. At UNSSOD II we intend to highlight the need for progress in both nuclear and conventional disarmament.

The point is that disarmament cannot be considered as a goal distinct from security. Disarmament can be attained only to the extent that the security concerns of states are met, and beyond that, that states abjure the attempt to resolve grievances, even valid ones, by force of arms.

During much of the seventies we had a state that was most often described as one of detente. That state was one which was taken advantage of by the Soviet Union to develop further their nuclear capacity and in particular their intermediate-range nuclear capacity. That was the situation which confronted the NATO governments in December, 1979 when they decided on a two-track policy, on the one hand moving towards further disarmament and, on the other hand, providing us with adequate security.

In the context of the decision on security, which involved the modernization of nuclear arms, they agreed at that time that they would start deploying in Europe in late 1983, 464 ground launched Cruise missiles and 108 Pershing II missiles. When fully deployed the intermediate-range forces would represent a total of 572 warheads against the 900 SS-20 warheads—which is 300 missiles each with three warheads—plus 300 single warhead SS-4s and SS-5s for a total of 1,200 Soviet warheads. That is roughly the present state of the Soviet readiness, some 1,200 Soviet warheads. At the moment in NATO we have no intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

That is a measure of the gap which still exists. Even when these 572 warheads are deployed they will be many fewer than the number of Soviet missiles. Because we will have some defensive capacity, however, we believe that at least in the short run that will prove to be an adequate factor of safety.

That decision was arrived at on behalf of Canada by the predecessor government to this one. We were pleased to adopt it as our own when we took office. Because of the doubletrack concept it involved at the same time the movement toward disarmament negotiations which, in fact, become possible only if there is this kind of western capacity which can be bargained off against the existing Soviet capacity.

Following the decision of 1979, President Carter requested some 18 months ago that we allow one of the proposed missile systems, the Cruise missile system, to be tested in Canada. It is the Carter request, which was subsequently adopted by the Reagan administration, which has been accepted by the Canadian cabinet.

I have explained in the House that we propose to do two things. First of all, we propose a framework agreement that will possibly provide for the testing of large numbers of weapons systems in Canada in the future and which provides for the joint control of those operations and every other aspect of the testing, including any compensation which may become necessary for minor damage. In the case of each weapons system there will be a sub-agreement under which the testing of that particular weapon or weapons system will be legitimized.

We are proceeding with the negotiation of the framework agreement with the United States, as I have announced. At this time we are not proceeding with the negotiation of the sub-agreement dealing with the Cruise missile but there has been some misunderstanding about this. The decision to go ahead with that has been taken. What is being held up is the implementation of the decision which has already been taken. We are holding this up in deference to the request made by a number of Members of Parliament. In fact, I may say that in any event, if there were a general agreement either on testing or on disarmament and arms control which made such tests either illegal or unnecessary, we would obviously not be proceeding with them. The fact that we will not be proceeding to negotiate the sub-agreement on the Cruise missile in the interval does provide an additional guarantee that we will await the results of the UNSSOD II meeting.

I might also explain that the reason Canada is the logical site for such testing is that I believe it is the only really effective site within the NATO alliance with not only the northern conditions but, more particularly, with the amount of space that is required. The width of the corridor which the United States could provide for such tests would be only five miles, whereas we are able to provide a 30-mile wide corridor.

Mr. Benjamin: Why don't they use Alaska? Why don't they use their own land?

Mr. MacGuigan: Some hon. members are asking why they do not use Alaska. I guess they know that Alaska does not go as far south as Canada, so the full range of the weapon could not be tested. That is the easy answer to that question, which I think was intended rather flippantly.

It should also be understood, contrary to what has so often been asserted in recent days in this country, that the Cruise is not a first-strike weapon and cannot be a first-strike weapon because of its slow speed. First-strike weapons are those which go quickly. First-strike weapons in Europe, such as the Pershing missiles, would reach their target in something like five or six minutes, whereas the Cruise is a slow-moving missile and can fly only at the speed of an airplane, some four or five hundred miles an hour. Although it is extremely accurate, it is also extremely vulnerable to defensive measures. It is true that it can probably fly under most present radar networks, but it is also easily detectable by AWAC planes. Its value is not for its first-strike capacity, which it does not possess as it is too slow, but for its accuracy. In that sense it is a responsive weapon.

On the subject of the Cruise missile, I have to say that when I listened to the leader of the New Democratic Party I was reminded of the famous remark of Clement Attlee, one-time leader of the British Labour Party. He said that some socialists seem to labour under the illusion that an ineffective defence is morally superior to an effective one.

• (1600)

The focal point of the Cruise decision is that it is only by possessing this kind of capacity, which matches the Soviet Union's existing capacity, that the Europeans can feel adequately protected.

The NATO decision of 1979 was made at the request of the Europeans, in particular the socialist government of West Germany, and is supported by the socialist government in France. The head of the Socialist International, Willie Brandt, said recently that it has a peculiar value even beyond that of security, and that is, and I quote Mr. Brandt:

> A move away from the NATO decision could supply the Soviet Union with an excuse for not negotiating seriously.

It is especially important, Mr. Speaker, that this point be clearly understood. The Soviet Union could have had negotiations on intermediate-range missiles with the West at any time since the NATO decision in 1979. They had no interest in negotiating until last fall at the time when it began to appear to the Soviet Union that the western countries were actually serious about deploying the Cruise and the Pershing. It was only at that time that they even condescended to open negotiations, which began late last year and are now proceeding.

An hon. Member: What about SALT II?

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member asks about SALT II. Of course, the Soviets had an incentive to proceed to negotiate SALT II because both sides possessed the same kind of intercontinental ballistic missile. However, the Soviet Union in fact has no incentive to negotiate here because there is nothing on our side that we can give up.

An hon. Member: Trident submarines.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am interested in how the perception of the Canadian socialist is so different from that of the head of the Socialist International, whom they regard as a great authority on most issues of the day. I am interested to know that the NDP rejects the authority of distinguished socialists like Willie Brandt, Chancellor Schmidt and President Mitterrand; they prefer to rely on several Americans who, unlike them, support NATO. Perhaps if they could go along with the fundamental principle of those American senators, then they might be able to present positions which are more readily acceptable to the people of Canada.

Miss Jewett: Why don't you talk about the minority report? You are avoiding it.

An hon. Member: Your logic is wonderful.

Mr. MacGuigan: My logic is irrefutable; that is why they are getting so excited, Mr. Speaker. Noise is the refuge of those with an inability to deal with logic.

An hon. Member: Is that why you are making so much noise?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the strategy of suffocation not only remains as a general strategy, but also is consistent with Cruise missile testing, although it has been alleged by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) on various occasions that there is some fancied incompatibility between the strategy of suffocation and the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada. Mr. Speaker, if we succeeded in having the strategy of suffocation implemented following an international agreement, then we would not need the Cruise missile testing because, of course, there would then be an incompatibility; the right to do it, even the need for it, would be taken away by the international agreement. But what we have done is to make a standing offer, which we continue to hold out to the world and in particular to the superpowers, where we urge them to take the necessary steps to suffocate the development of new missile systems.

As we said at the time, it is not a strategy of unilateral disarmament. If it were, we would have quite a different kind of policy and government; we would be a government of the kind that the NDP might be. But that is not our policy. Our policy is that we do our best to provide ideals to the world, to work towards those ideals. If those ideals are spurned by other countries, we have to make the best of the real situation which exists. Chancellor Schmidt has this to say at the recent conference of his party in Munich:

> I want to say this to those who want to offer unilateral disarmament in the place of mutually binding disarmament agreements. Historical experience shows that one-sided powerlessness never stopped aggression by a force possessing power. This is the experience of neighbours of the Soviet Union, and the case of Afghanistan is still fresh in our minds.

An hon. Member: I agree with the whole thing.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am glad to hear that the hon. member agrees with something his socialist brethren say. Mr. Speaker, it is because the Soviet Union took advantage of détente to invade Afghanistan, create problems in Poland, and build up its intermediate-missile force in the Soviet Union—as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) points out, there are many more examples I could use—it is because the Soviet Union has engaged in this provocative behaviour that this present crisis has arisen. The Soviet Union has not taken seriously what we thought in this country was the spirit of détente. They have used it as a breathing space to further increase their armaments, and to engage in aggressive activities in the world. It is this danger we are responding to.

The difference, I suggest, between these socialists here and the ones in Europe like Brandt, Schmidt and Mitterrand is that those socialists know what it is to live in the woods with the bear. They have to face reality, they have to adopt responsible policies and not just rhetoric. It is because of that, Mr. Speaker, that they came to present us as fellow members of NATO with conclusions which we were glad to accept in 1979, which we are prepared to accept now, and I want to assure the House and the country we will continue to accept. The worst step we could possibly take in the search for peace is to attempt to undermine the confidence of those in Western Europe who stand with us against the dangers from the East.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the important point is not only that we have adequate defence; we must have that, of course. But even more important is that we move towards disarmament with a realistic policy which will provide an incentive to the other side to negotiate. Without that incentive there is no possibility whatsoever of moving towards peace. The goal of the limited strength and radical reductions which we advocate is movement towards world peace.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation for the lack of hyperbole indulged in by the two previous speakers. It is quite a relief compared to some of what we have heard in committee from members of the NDP. I would also like to compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) on being here for this debate. It is a very important motion that is before the House today and I think it is fitting and proper that he participate.I appreciate the care that was taken in preparing his remarks.

We are here today, Mr. Speaker, with a motion on the Order Paper which refers to a self-styled minority report. It is with some regret that I note the adoption by the NDP of an American legislative process as if it were part of ours. There is no such thing as a minority report in our processes, for a very good reason. Canadians generally prefer committees of the House of Commons to operate on the basis of consensus. Indeed, throughout our deliberations on this matter, the committee promised time after time to enable a report to be rendered which would reflect the recommendations of the majority, while leaving room for the expression of opinions of those who did not agree with the consensus. This spirit of co-operation and compromise was to prove unfruitful, I regret to say. I suppose it was an even more bitter pill for the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), to swallow. Six of the 30 members of the committee, having had full expression of their views and opinions, at the end decided to issue a press release which claimed to be some kind of a minority report, whatever that is.

I feel a useful purpose has been served by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It has been beneficial for Parliament and for the country to be involved in what is one of the most important matters being discussed in the world today.

In the time available to me today I should like to review the work done by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on this referral, to note some of the evidence provided by witnesses, and to report some of the recommendations made by the committee. I want to cover some of the history of the last 37 years since the first nuclear weapons were detonated; and, finally, I should like to look at some of the recommendations of the so-called minority report.

The House gave a reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on December 18, 1981, which read:

ORDERED—That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to examine security and disarmament issues with specific attention to Canada's participation in the second Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly devoted to Disarmament scheduled for June/July 1982, and report to the House not later than Friday, April 2nd, 1982;—

This led to a meeting of the Standing Committee and its steering committee, at which time we discussed how much time we had, how much evidence we should hear and who should appear. As a result two letters were sent to the chairman of the committee. One was from the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) who offered the names of 24 suggested witnesses, of which 10 were accepted. It was a very interesting list, and I am glad for the imagination the hon. member used inviting some of these people. I will mention Mr. Arbatov a bit later; he was one of the people included in the hon. member's list. I regret that his fellow worker in Moscow, General Mikal Milstein, was unable to attend. It added considerably to the excitement at committee.

I suggested 12 members, generally from universities and some retired military people who have taken up work with various Canadian institutes of strategic studies, etc. Of that 12, seven were accepted or managed to attend the meetings. I appreciate very much the work which was done by the committee staff in finding several others who were able to participate.

Due to the short time available, we were somewhat hamstrung. Many organizations on their own asked permission to appear, but due to the shortage of time not all could be accepted. The committee set an unenviable record for sitting frequently and for long hours. We started on February 3 and submitted the final report on April 8, having heard evidence by then from 56 witnesses and briefs and letters from 106 other organizations and individuals.

The evidence represented extremely divergent views. No one opposed arms control itself—the differences were in the methods favoured to bring it about. The key points seemed to be those dealing with verification of arms reduction and on-site inspections. Our first witness was Ambassador Menzies, Canada's ambassador for disarmament, who pointed out some of the difficulties facing the world. Before the committee he said:

A major cause of instability today is the strain in East-West relations, which has resulted in an erosion of that climate of confidence defined as "détente" in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed by 35 heads of state or of government in Helsinki in 1975, of which Canada was a member. The Soviet arms build-up, the invasion of Afghanistan, the failure of the United States to ratify the SALT II Treaty, and the excesses of martial law in Poland have all been contributory factors.

He was referring to contributory factors to the instability in the world today. He continued:

A significant source of instability lies in the irregularity of the cycle of armaments modernization in the major military powers.

A later witness, Dr. G. R. Lindsey, the chief of operational research and analysis in the Department of National Defence, gave us a very professional view of the stabilizing and destabilizing effects of nuclear weapons. He said:

In judging an armaments plan or an arms-control proposal, careful attention should be paid to the influence it will have on both crisis and arms-control stability. It is not by any means an automatic conclusion that more of some weapons would be destabilizing. In general, weapons-enhancing capabilities for a counterforce first strike are destabilizing, while those invulnerable to a first strike are stabilizing.

In general, one could say that adding to an inferior force or reducing a superior force tends to be stabilizing, but the types and functions of the weapons need to be examined. My message to this committee is that the best test of a proposal for arms control is to see whether it is stabilizing or destabilizing.

Dr. Lindsey also gave us an estimate on nuclear costs. We have heard quite a bit of talk about the tremendous cost of the nuclear arms race. He pointed out rather clearly—and it was supported by other witnesses—that it was not the nuclear part of armament which was expensive. He said:

It is also important for those of us who spend a lot of our attention trying to reduce the cost of defence systems to remember that the total expenditure on strategic systems represents somewhere between 10 and 20 per cent of the defence budgets of the nuclear weapons states and no per cent at all for all the others.

This is something we should bear in mind when we hear some of the claims made about what could be done in the way of helping to solve all the other problems in the world with the money which we would save if we reduced the nuclear stockpile.

Ambassador Ford was another distinguished witness. He has had more experience in Moscow than any other witness, with the exception of Mr. Arbatov, I suppose. He gave us his opinion of the Russian psyche; he knew the Russians very well after spending something like 20 or 30 years in Moscow. He said:

Economics, therefore, provide a good reason for the Soviets to try to seek a slowdown in the armament contest. The other good reason is that they are genuinely worried that the Americans, given their present mood of determination to close the nuclear gap, can, and will, produce a very formidable military machine. They are, for example, seriously worried by the technical excellence of the Pershing II and Cruise missiles.

Hence, I am sure that the Soviets are prepared to negotiate seriously on intermediate-range missiles—sometimes called TNF—at Geneva, and to recommence the negotiations on strategic nuclear forces, SALT II or START. It should be noted, however, that the Geneva talks could have begun two and a half years ago if the Soviets had been prepared to do so. They have only agreed to begin negotiations after it became apparent to them that the new American administration was determined to build up its forces without an agreement—

The Soviet threat consists, in short, of its undoubted ability to destroy the west if it so wanted. Since this would also mean its own destruction, it is not likely to happen, but the possibility exists. Circumstances could certainly arise under which both sides would stumble into conflict, but the real threat lies in the political power the Soviet military strength represents, one they are not shy about using.

• (1620)

Mr. Arbatov was a very interesting witness. He assumed a totally uncharacteristic role of being an ordinary person and a layman. The role suffered somewhat when he displayed a great deal of technical knowledge about the weaponry on both sides. Some deviousness by this self-styled ordinary layman was evident in one exchange, which I would like to read. The first few words from this committee hearing are mine. I said:

For many years they had the trip-wire theory for use of nuclear weapons in western Europe; that is, if somebody put his foot across the line of the other side, a nuclear war would start. This was a NATO policy and well known, I believe. They have gone toward a flexible response which would not mean that they were going to fire everything at once, but would select among nuclear weapons if they could.

I was saying this to Mr. Arbatov. I said:

But I was rather alarmed when we were given to understand that it is Russia's avowed intention to respond with strategic ICBMs against the continental United States if any nuclear weapon, no matter how small, is used by the United States' servicemen against Russians in Europe, which is a kind of trip-wire in reverse. I wonder if that is really Russian policy.

Mr. Arbatov replied:

Actually, such wording was never said by anybody in the Soviet Union and it is, I would say, a very inaccurate and frivolous deduction from some of the points made in connection with the concept of limited nuclear war.

To which I replied:

Actually, it is a misquote of a quotation of yours, sir, in Bonn on, 15 March, 1981 where you said when discussing tactical nuclear weapons: "Should these missiles—I repeat, American missiles—strike Soviet territory, the retaliatory blow will be directed not only against those countries in which they were fired but also against the United States exactly as if they had been launched in Montana." Now, that is a quote that is attributed to you.

To which Mr. Arbatov said:

Yes, yes, I said it.

As I said, it was very interesting to have a witness who had this deviousness of playing a simple country squire which he liked to pass himself off as.

Later I would like to say a few words about what might happen with conventional war as an alternative, but I think it might be appropriate to quote some of Dr. W. Harriet Critchley's evidence. Dr. Critchley is a well known political scientist, lecturer and university professor who, surprisingly, takes a particular interest in northern warfare. Her reputation is well established. She said:

One of the things I would like to see more emphasis on in the forthcoming special session on disarmament has to do with the control of conventional weapons. At the first special session, the neutral and non-aligned states, contended that nuclear weapons were the greatest danger to world peace and, therefore, we had to have disarmament or arms control of nuclear weapons first, before we discussed conventional weapons.

Yet, as I mentioned a little bit earlier, in the 37 years we have had nuclear weapons, we have not used them. In that same 37 years, according to the IISS, we have had about 133 wars and killed 25 million people. The wars involved 80 different countries, at one time or another, and they were all conventional weapons wars. The neutral and non-aligned do not want to discuss conventional weapons arms control, not to mention disarmament. What also bothers me in that regard is that they have a marked reluctance to sign the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

I agree entirely with Dr. Critchley when she says that she would like us to be sure not to forget conventional warfare and the devastation it wreaks throughout the world.

This brings me to the area of nuclear weapons, the area that attracts the most attention from disarmament and arms control advocates.

There have only been two instances of nuclear warfare since the development of the atomic bomb 37 years ago. Both of these uses were in the Second World War and they occurred within three days of each other. They were directed against one country, Japan. The bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki resulted in 287, 669 dead and injured and the destruction wrought by these nuclear weapons is commonly cited by nuclear disarmament groups.

However, I think something has been lost over the years. In 1945, the Allies made the decision to drop a nuclear bomb on Japan in order to bring an end to the war that had dragged on for over four years at the cost of hundreds of thousands of lives. It is interesting to note the actual world wide casualty figures for the Second World War: battle deaths, 14,904,000; battle wounded, 25,218,000; civilian casualties, 38,573,000.

An invasion of the Japanese homeland would have resulted in the loss of hundreds of thousands more lives and did not even carry with it the certainty of success. In order to prevent further death and destruction, the Allies dropped the atomic bomb. Whether or not this resulted in more deaths than would have occurred in a conventional conflict is an open question. It is something that we will never know. However, we would do well to remember that the dropping of the atomic bomb achieved the then desired result. The war ended and peace between East and West has reigned for 37 years.

The use of the atomic bomb demonstrated to the world the awesome power contained in these weapons and underlined the need for control. In the 1950s, the United States advocated international control over atomic weapons, but this was rejected by the Soviet Union. In the 1960s and 1970s, the United States and the U.S.S.R. were involved in bilateral talks to establish limits on their strategic arms. Unfortunately, while these talks were to a degree successful in placing limits on specific systems, they left it open to each superpower to build up to the limits where it was behind, and they also left many loopholes whereby the treaties could be circumvented. The Soviet Union has taken advantage of the defects in these agreements. Consequently, the Soviets have now attained parity with the United States in the area of intercontinental strategic missiles and have attained superiority in the area of intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

After the Soviet Union achieved parity in strategic nuclear weapons, the advantage in intermediate-range missiles and the development of a more accurate, mobile and longer-range missile—the SS-20—added a new dimension to the NATO-Warsaw Pact relationship. Accordingly, in December, 1979 the NATO allies decided to deploy 572 single warhead Pershing II and ground launch Cruise missiles in western Europe beginning in 1983. The Russians continued to deploy SS-20s and these now number 300. The Pershing II missile has a range of 1,100 miles; the Pershing I-A, which it will replace, has a range of 400 miles. The Cruise missile has a range of 1,500 miles. The new SS-20 missile has a range of 3,100 miles, and even if moved east of the Ural mountains, could still reach every part of western Europe. Such a launching location would be safe from all NATO theatre weapons.

The 1979 decision to deploy IRBMs in western Europe was coupled with a call for arms-control talks between the two superpowers. These talks are now in progress. In November, 1981, President Reagan offered to cancel deployment plans of the 572 Pershing II and Cruise missiles if President Brezhnev agreed to dismantle a total of 600 SS-20, SS-5 and SS-4 missiles. The Russians will not do this. Instead, they made a counter-offer to cut by two thirds the U.S. and Soviet arsenals of medium-range missiles in Europe by 1990. The proposal included the British and French nuclear forces. The key word in this proposal is "Europe". If an agreement were to be reached on this basis, the Soviets could still deploy SS-20s in Russia east of the Urals and, as I have mentioned, these would still pose a nuclear threat to Europe.

In light of this current international situation, which was clearly defined at our committee meetings, it seems incredible to me that six members of the standing committee should deem it advisable to publish a report such as is now being discussed. I would like to comment on that report.

• (1630)

The first recommendation in the minority report is for a global freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles. The naivete apparent in this recommendation is astonishing. There is absolutely no way in which to verify a ban on missile production without on-site inspection, which the Soviets have said they will not allow. In addition, a nuclear freeze at this time would cement the Soviet advantage in medium-range nuclear missiles aimed at Europe and would leave the Europeans completely vulnerable to a Soviet attack.

The second recommendation is that there be no Cruise missile testing in Canada. I have many reasons as to why we cannot and should not support such a recommendation. However, I will limit myself in this short and gratis time to saying that we agreed to the modernization of nuclear weapons in 1979. The present government has concurred in the decision which was taken. We would fail in our commitment in the worst possible fashion if we were now to decide that we would not allow this vehicle to be tested in our skies.

I would like to consider the fourth recommendation next because the third recommendation warrants a longer response. The fourth recommendation is that Canada should pledge about one tenth of 1 per cent of its defence budget to disarmament efforts. Let us look at how these people wanted the money to be spent. Some of the money was to be spent in dissemination of disarmament information. Some of the propaganda put out by disarmament groups is very well meaning, but this effort could stand some additional funds in order to publish information which is a little more accurate than any I have seen to date. I have also seen what happens when well meaning schoolteachers attempt to explain nuclear warfare to their students without balancing their description with any hint of historical perspective, and I regret that very much. I also agree with Mr. Gregory Wirick, the executive director of the United Nations Association in Canada, when he told the committee, concerning the recommendation for a referendum, that in some ways it would do more harm and more damage than good.

The third recommendation is that Canada should press all nations to pledge never to be the first to use nuclear weapons. I was rather surprised when the leader of the New Democratic Party seemed to amend this recommendation slightly during his speech by suggesting that it should refer to Canada only. However, in my copy of what is called a minority report under the heading of the House of Commons—

Mr. Prud'homme: It is not the same.

Mr. McKinnon: —it states that Canada should press all nations to pledge never to be the first to use nuclear weapons. Therefore, I cannot see that that should apply.

I think that at the present time the Warsaw Pact conventional forces outnumber those of NATO in the general order of three to one. That means that in the event of war, NATO could either surrender or risk total devastation of its territories and the loss of millions of lives. To avoid either of these unsavoury ends, the western allies would have to devote a great deal more of their resources to conventional defence. When one looks at the scale of the difference, it would frankly mean tripling the military defence budgets of those nations which form NATO to enable them to pay for and sustain, in conventional sizes, the equipment of the Russian forces opposing them.

I understand that the NDP wants us to get out of NATO and NORAD and sometimes points out that Sweden gets along well without being in NATO or NORAD, as does Switzerland. I would simply like to comment that whereas Canada contributes 1.7 per cent of our gross national product to defence, the contribution from Switzerland amounts to 20.2 per cent of government spending. I believe that Sweden's defence budget works out to 3.2 per cent in terms of its GNP.

Therefore, I see no way out other than through the continued surveillance of what is going on in the world in order to try and convince the opponents of NATO that there is a serious debate going on about how we are to reach this happy land in which there would be a verifiable reduction in arms. However, it must be verifiable. The real problem today is that the Russians are unwilling to have on-site inspection or any system of verification which is satisfactory to the western world.

I thank Your Honour very much for the extension of my allotted time.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to participate in this debate because it is indeed a momentous one, particularly in view of the current situation. We are not sure whether or not another war will break out tomorrow morning in the Falkland Islands and whether or not it will escalate. It is the atmosphere in which we are discussing disarmament today.

We are also discussing it at a time when Poland is still overrun. It is still under martial law. We think Mr. Walesa is still alive, but he is certainly not free. We are also discussing it at a time when Afghanistan is overrun and totally unfree. This is the situation today.

However, I am indeed grateful to the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who opened this debate. I repeat what other hon. members have said in saying that I am grateful to him for making a speech which was not too emotional. I am particularly grateful to him for having been very careful, following my question, to point out that this is not an exercise of pointing a finger at one person or another, saying that this one wears a black hat and the other one wears a white hat. It is not a question of who is moral and who is immoral.

I believe I speak for all hon. members of this House in saying that what we are discussing today involves a very serious difference of opinion and a difference in judgment. However, in all good conscience, I do not think that anyone in this House who holds different views from mine can be accused of insincerity. I think that is important to point out.

Unfortunately, this whole debate on disarmament has been obfuscated by dreadful tactics which I personally deplore. For example, let me read a cutting from the London Free Press dated March 30, 1982, in reference to a recent visit by our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) to Vancouver. We are told that the minister was lucky to have escaped relatively unscathed from a mob of militant nuclear protesters in Vancouver. The point I am trying to make is that it is counterproductive in this debate, to say the least, for one side or the other to be militant, all in the name of "brotherly love", or to resort to the kind of tactics that we should not if we are being sincere in our quest for disarmament. Unfortunately, this has already happened. We are not only told that in the news clipping, but we are also told that the minister was roughed up and spat upon. The whole situation was disgraceful. Worse still is the fact that the incident stemmed from a large meeting organized by the United Nations Association of Vancouver and the B.C. Coalition for Disarmament. Does disarmament mean that we stop arms build-up against the Soviets and knock up our own minister? To my way of thinking, that is not disarmament.

However, what I wanted to discuss is the real need for disarmament. I do not think we can even do that unless we also discuss the need for security. As I said earlier today in this House, I was a member of the committee and it was a very interesting experience. I am glad that we did agree to discuss security before tackling the subject of disarmament. It was amazing and almost ironical that Canadians should be speaking of either security or disarmament. The irony was that because of our historic and geographic situation it had never been necessary to worry about security. We have never been invaded since 1814 and even then we won the war, for goodness sake. We have not been threatened as other countries have been threatened and overrun every decade in their history. I very sincerely say that we, thank God, have not been threatened.

Mr. Manly: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Manly: Would the hon. member permit a question at this time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. member for York South-Weston accept a question?

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I was good enough to wait until his leader had finished before I interrupted him. I would hope that the hon. member could reciprocate my courtesy by waiting until I had completed my remarks.

• (1640)

We were talking about security and the apparent irony of Canadians discussing security in the context of countries that have been overrun every decade of their history. We were also talking about geography. Thanks to geography we have been free. Here again I thank the good Lord—and I mean that seriously—that we have been free from many of the conflicts that have shattered the world, particularly in this century. We do not—and I might add in parenthesis that I regret this—have a big standing force. As a former parliamentary secretary to the minister of national defence, I deplore the very small size of our regular force. It is inadequate. Their equipment is inadequate. I said that openly before. In this context, for Canadians to talk about security and disarmament seemed ironic, but it was very important that we did so.

During those hearings it became increasingly apparent to us that our security is perhaps ephemeral. It is no longer something we can take for granted. Where geography may have helped us in the past, perhaps geography in this context will be our worst enemy in the future because we are near the big force. I am not sure we can be lucky enough, even if we wished, to avoid what happens to the United States. That is, whether we wish to or not. If I have time, I will talk about our agreements with NATO and NORAD. We no longer have the luxury of feeling immune from what is happening in the world today. The biggest service that we as parliamentarians can do for our constituents is to tell them that we are not as safe as we thought we were. The world is not as safe as most of us wish it were. What are we going to do about it? The argument has been made by several people that the arms race will lead to higher tensions.

As I said, we had experts on both sides debating this point. This is why there was a majority report that I signed. The majority of us listening to those experts thought back to the days in 1939 when the Prime Minister of Britain came back from Munich and told us there was no problem, that we could afford to disarm. I remember in those days Winston Churchill was called a warmonger because he had the nerve and the audacity to shake the British out of their complacency and tell them that he did not believe there was going to be peace. He was a "warmonger". He was despised by many. Too late we listened to him. I am not saying that is the situation today, but it could be.

The situation today is perilous inasmuch as those who describe the reality of the situation are now too being called warmongers. That is totally counterproductive. I do not want to repeat what has already been said in this debate. One of the futilities of the House of Commons is that we tend to repeat what was said by our colleagues. I do not want to do that. I want to take another perspective because we are going to be asked what Canadians want in the future with regard to arms control and a nuclear freeze.

I want to give my perspective not only as a Member of Parliament representing 91,000 constituents, but as a Member of Parliament who happens to have two sons of military age and two daughters, if they wish to join. Am I going to urge that we disarm, that we put a freeze on nuclear weapons, that we stop the Cruise missile testing in Alberta so that I can save not only my kids but all Canadian kids from that? If I were to do that, I am convinced that I would be foolish, to say the least, and perhaps reprehensible. I would not be living up to my obligations. What we need to do is to be extremely realistic. If, God forbid, Canadian men and women have to go to war again, I want to make darn sure that they are properly equipped.

What does properly equipped mean in the Canadian context? I said a few moments ago that to my regret we have a very small standing force. I am not at all convinced that they are adequately equipped. I do not point any fingers; it is a sign of the times. It is a sign of economic restraint and many other things, but it is a fact.

We cannot defend ourselves. We cannot do so if the adversary is the Soviet Union. Therefore, whether we like it or not, we will depend very heavily on our allies. What do we give them in return? The first thing we have to do is give them our will. That is important. We must give them our political will if we cannot afford too much of an economic will. We have to give them the political will to help them. If necessary, give them the few miles they want in Alberta to test their missiles, which by the way, and let us be very clear, are dummy missiles. There are no nuclear warheads on them. What we are thinking of doing, and only thinking, is to allow our best ally to check the mechanism of a weapon which could very well be the salvation not just of the United States, but of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: The only dummy around here is yourself.

Mrs. Appolloni: Is it immoral to try and defend Canada as best we can? As I said at the beginning, the hon. member for Oshawa was good enough to put away these red herrings in the interest of a good, productive debate.

Mr. Blaikie: I wish you were.

Mrs. Appolloni: The one thing about this committee, despite the fact we had three different parties represented on it, was that there was no rudeness, no catcalling, no garbage coming from any side, as I hear this afternoon in the House. Too bad we do not have that atmosphere in the House of Commons.

Coming back to disarmament, the answer to disarmament is brotherly love. If we had brotherly love, for goodness sake, we would not need any kinds of weapons at all. Unfortunately, that does not exist. It does not exist in this House of Commons. Can you imagine if this existed in the arena of nations and they were at each other's throats, if not at other parts of their anatomy? This is the reality of the situation. We may not like it, but we have to live with it.

We were talking about security. That, too, was a very interesting debate. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr.

McKinnon) mentioned Mr. Arbatov. Mr. Arbatov is a Soviet citizen. He is an interesting person, in fact extremely interesting. He was more interesting to people like me who have not had too much experience with the Soviets. We have read about them and seen them on television, but we have not met them face to face. On that occasion in committee, we were able to talk to Mr. Arbatov, who, by the way, is cited as being one of the top people of the Soviet Union. He is somebody to whom we should listen. It was fascinating to hear his testimony. If anyone is following this debate, he should ask for the minutes of that particular meeting at which Mr. Arbatov was present.

• (1650)

Mr. Arbatov, for instance, had no answers to my colleagues who specifically asked him: "If the Soviet Union is so interested in peace and disarmament and brotherly love, what are you doing in Afghanistan?" Mr. Arbatov told us: "Oh well, the Soviet authorities had to fight the bandits." The bandits—in Afghanistan! Since when does Mother Russia have to send in tanks and a lot of people just to fight a few bandits, ill-paid, ill-clad, ill-equipped? Is that the Soviet idea of security?

We talked about Poland. Some of my colleagues were very intimately concerned with Poland, they themselves being of Polish ancestry. What did Mr. Arbatov have to say about that? Why are the Russians in Poland? Is this security? If so, whose security? Russia's security? Do they really need to invade an innocent country just to keep some bandits in check? Do they really need to invade Poland? I do not think the Polish army was a big threat to Soviet security. I do not think the Polish people are, who, if we understand them and agree with the reports we have, are not very well paid at the moment. So what do they want in Poland?

That is what is happening today. People who cannot defend themselves, like the Poles and Afghans, are being put under the bloody boot of Russia. What are we going to do? We will freeze our nuclear armaments? It is almost funny to think of this in Canada. We do not have nuclear weapons. But now, even if we do not have them, there are those among us who will say that we should not even let the Americans, our best allies and perhaps ultimately our only defence against the big boot of Russia, even attempt to test the mechanism of one of their weapons. I wonder how irresponsible we can afford to be—unless, of course, we do believe in the good will of the Soviet Union.

Having listened carefully to Mr. Arbatov's testimony, having read many, many papers on the whole situation, having served for two years—perhaps the finest two years of my life—with the Department of National Defence, I am not convinced, Mr. Speaker, that peace is uppermost in the minds of the Soviet Union. No one can convince me to that effect.

The hon. member for Victoria mentioned Sweden. Sweden does not belong to NATO, nor to NORAD. Sweden spends much more of its GNP on defence than we do, very much more. Do hon. members know what happened in Sweden not so long ago? A Soviet submarine got into one of the bays in Sweden. It was not just an ordinary submarine, it was a nuclear one. I did not hear any protest. I did not see any protest marches in Toronto or in Vancouver or in Winnipeg or anywhere else in Canada. I did not see any marches of protest against the invasion, which it was, by a Soviet nuclear submarine into Swedish waters. No, no, we were very quiet. I did not see any demonstrators going to Litton Systems in Toronto because a Soviet submarine had been in Swedish waters. No, no, we did not do that.

I think we have to be extremely consistent, Mr. Speaker, in our approach to what is happening. No one, especially those of us who are interested in defence in this Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, wants war. Many of us know what war is. We do not have to read textbooks, we do not have to watch war movies, whether from the American point of view, the British point of view, the Japanese or the German point of view. We do not need that sort of propaganda because we ourselves know what war is and we do not want to repeat it for ourselves or much less for coming generations.

However, it is because we know what war means—

Mr. Blaikie: You don't know what nuclear war means.

Mrs. Appolloni: —that we are more concerned than ever to make sure war does not happen again.

Mr. Blaikie: Do you know what nuclear war is?

Mrs. Appolloni: If war can be stopped, it is by deterrent. If the hon. member across the floor can give me a proper deterrent which will not be just idle words, I will accept that deterrent.

Mr. Blaikie: Have you ever been in a nuclear war?

Mrs. Appolloni: Other than nuclear. In the absence of a deterrent, I will take the nuclear any time. We have to stop war. That is what we are talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: That is the point. She has not been through a nuclear war.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This is a very important debate, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad we are having this opportunity to examine a matter which has been altogether neglected here for too long. I regret it is being brought forward under the misapprehension that we are discussing a minority report. There is no such thing, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, in Canadian parliamentary practice as a minority report.

I regret and deplore that a document such as this, bearing the Coat of Arms of Canada and the heading "House of Commons of Canada", should be circulated throughout Canada in this form, or in this other form, also carrying the Coat of Arms of Canada, suggesting that the House of Commons has approved this particular package of words.

I do not know whose paper was used for this particular operation, or who authorized the use of the words "House of Commons" on this cover of the so-called report. This other one is in a better form and should have been a press release. As a press release, that can be done. It was a very happy thought that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) had in describing it as a press release.

With respect to the actual status of minority reports, it is worth recalling Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition. I would like to put this on the record, Mr. Speaker, because it is important that the status of this report be recognized across this land for what it is: it is a press release.

Section 641 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 202, reads:

(1) If a member disagrees with certain paragraphs in the report—

And we were preparing a report, Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

—or with the entire report, he can record his disapproval by dividing the committee against those paragraphs to which he objects, or against the entire report, as the circumstances of the case require; and he can put on record his observations and conclusions, as opposed to those of the majority, by proposing an alternative draft report.

The second paragraph of this particular section reads as follows:

(2) While the opinions of dissenting members may be included in a committee report, no separate minority report may be tabled in the House.

None has. There is no such thing as a minority report. Yet we hear the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) describing it as "the minority report", which it is not.

Mr. Blaikie: It is, whether you like it or not. You just held it in your hand.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Or as the "minority committee's report", which it is not either, Mr. Speaker. Beauchesne describes very clearly that when a report is being prepared, those who object to paragraphs or to the whole report may have their views expressed in that report before it is tabled.

• (1700)

A very wide spectrum of views was expressed in that committee. As has been mentioned, there was a wide spectrum of views ranging from those of Arbatov on the left through to views from the right. In order to accommodate that spectrum we compromised throughout, until the last two or three days. Then those who dissented and did not feel they had received enough concessions no longer showed up. They went off to prepare their press release and had the audacity to present it to the Canadian public as a minority report.

Mr. Sargeant: That is a lie.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They used House of Commons stationery, and I think that is absolutely inexcusable. I will therefore continue to call it the "press release by the dissenting rump".

There is one other aspect of the report which I find regrettable. Three weeks ago the chairman of the committee tabled—in both official languages, as is the practice—the full report in this House. I have a copy of it. It is on legal-size typewritten paper. There is not yet a bound report. Today, three weeks later, there is no bound report for distribution to those concerned. However, meanwhile this press release has been distributed far and wide. Even with the Post Office conditions we have in this country, there has been time for it to come back from the extremities of the land to Ottawa with the request that we subscribe to it. There is no regular report ready for distribution, and I find that rather regrettable.

The reports of the special committee on the disabled, the special committee on reserves and the special committee on alternate energy sources and a number of other committee reports were bound. I think it was done in the case of the special committee on federal programs financing. That was done quickly. Why we should have had to wait three weeks for the final edition of this full report I do not know. In fact, during question period I tried to ask the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) if he could explain why we have had to wait three weeks for that full report. Perhaps when he makes his contribution to this debate he will be able to tell us why there has been no final version of that report so that we might send it to those who contributed to the hearings and are interested in the outcome of our report.

I also find it curious that six members out of the 30 should consider themselves anything more than just 20 per cent of the committee. They have elevated themselves to a prestigious position and circulated misleading advertising.

I want to refer briefly to this press release since it is actually before us. I think one might even say the motion before us could be ruled out of order because the words used are improper. The words should be: "That this House supports the press release on security and disarmament signed by six members of the standing committee." Nonetheless, it has been widely circulated and there are some interesting observations in it, one of which I would like to examine a little more closely. It has to do with a nuclear freeze.

There is a notion today that rough parity exists between the superpowers. That is referred to somewhere in this press release, and I think it is worth while to ask ourselves just how the conclusion that there is a rough parity was reached. At page four of this particular version, the press release says:

Because the Soviet Union has a significant advantage in intermediate-range missiles currently aimed at western Europe, NATO feels it necessary to deploy new single-warhead missiles in European sites.

Then the next paragraph states:

There is, in short, rough parity today between the superpowers.

I do not know where these hon. members were when Dr. Lindsey was speaking to us. "Rough parity" is a strange way to describe the missile situation in Europe at this particular time. Not many people were privileged to receive copies of the report of the hearings of this committee, and I therefore feel it very important that one, or perhaps two, paragraphs from one particular day's testimony be put on the record of Hansard so that this might be available to anyone who is interested. I refer to the testimony presented by Dr. George Lindsey, who was mentioned earlier as being the chief of the operational research and analysis establishment of the Department of National Defence. My colleague, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), mentioned earlier the matters of stability, crisis and so forth, but I want to show that the view expressed by the dissidents that there is rough parity between the superpowers is not in accordance with the facts.

On February 17, 1982, on the fifty-eighth day of testimony, as recorded at page 10 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for that day, Dr. Lindsey had this to say:

If we lump long and medium-range systems together and include British, French and United States systems under NATO, then according to this book—

He was referring to "The Military Balance 1980-81," which is a reputable study prepared in Britain.

—the Warsaw Pact leads NATO by 4,400 to 1,300 land-based vehicles, and 2,000 to 650 nuclear warheads available.

Is that rough parity?

Now if you add in sea-based systems, you have to decide whether or not to include the 400 American Poseidon submarine-launched warheads. These are normally declared available to the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, but they have already been counted in the central strategic balance. Let us put them in too—

Just for good measure, in order to be sure we know what we are talking about.

—and then the total score is 4,400 to 1,550 for nuclear carriers in favour of the Warsaw Pact;—

That is a pretty big advantage. It is not rough parity, nor is it even rough justice.

Mr. Fretz: Three to one.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Three to one.

Mr. Sargeant: That is not true.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Someone said that is not true.

Mr. Sargeant: It is not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If the hon. member can produce more reliable figures, not from Arbatov, but from someone else on whom I can rely, I would be glad to have them when I am finished.

Mr. Sargeant: The only guy you rely on is "Ronnie Raygun".

• (1710)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

—and in available warheads, Warsaw Pact leads by 2,000 to 1,150. That is a pretty big advantage. But one might wish to break it down into some of the subsystems. In doing that, in land-based vehicles, Warsaw Pact leads 1,250 to 200; aircraft, Warsaw Pact leads 3,100 to 1,100. If you break it down into long-range land-based carriers, Warsaw Pact leads 600 to 18 in missiles, and 1,000 to 250 in aircraft; medium-range, Warsaw Pact leads 650 to 200 in missiles, and 2,100 to 850 in aircraft.

There is no rough parity that I can see there, and how hon. members opposite can see rough parity in these figures, I do not know. The only rough parity I have been able to discover is in the book entitled "The Balance of Military Power" which has a foreword by Dr. Luns, Secretary General of NATO. Mr. Arbatov might not want to rely on this document, but I am prepared to rely on it. The only rough parity occurs in the armed forces, and for the Warsaw Pact they stand at 4,758,000 and for NATO at 4,875,000. So NATO has a slight edge.

I find it strange that from the conclusion that there is rough parity, so-called, it is possible to jump immediately to the question of the freeze. Before I do that, however, I should like to refer to some figures published by the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. These show the growth of forces from 1970 to 1980 to be just as important historically as the present situation and certain important conclusions may be drawn from this.

In 1970 the U.S.A. had 1,054 ICBMs and in 1980 it had 1,052; in 1970 the U.S.S.R. had 1,487 and in 1980 1,398. In 1970 the U.S.A. had 656 submarine launched ballistic missiles and in 1980 it had 576; in 1970 the U.S.S.R. had 248 and in 1980 it had 950. Is that representative of a move toward rough parity, Mr. Speaker? In long-range bombers the U.S.A. had 512 in 1970 and 348 in 1980; the U.S.S.R. remained steady at 156. The number of total warheads in the U.S.A. went from 4,000 in 1970 to 9,200 in 1980; in the U.S.S.R. from 1,800 in 1970 to 6,000 in 1980.

That disparity in 1970 was not exploited by our allies to the south who are our colleagues in NATO in the way that the head of the Warsaw Pact is trying to exploit the disparity that exists today in order to get a freeze which this group, in its press release, is trying to obtain so that there will be no negotiations. Why should the Soviet Union want to negotiate when these figures show that they are ahead? There is no reason why we should decide on a freeze at this time, Mr. Speaker.

On that subject I should like to refer to what Helmut Schmidt said recently when addressing a Social Democratic Party meeting in Munich.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Just one quotation, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last evening when I first learned the contents of the motion for today, I reread the minority report on security and disarmament of April, 1982. In large part, my original impression of the report was confirmed. It is a humane report. It sets out the extent of the world's build-up in armaments. It expresses most people's desires, namely, a retreat from potential nuclear holocaust.

If it has a serious flaw, it would be that it lacks a modus operandi to accomplish world disarmament or world arms control while at the same time not jeopardizing security. But then, most disarmament reports seem to have this flaw.

Life would be so much more sane if we could have the Warsaw Pact members sign and adhere to the minority report, or, for that matter, the majority report. The minority report calls for a "global freeze on the testing, production and development of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles". The report goes on to say that a "freeze is relatively easy to verify".

It would be more accurate to state that without mutual consent it is relatively easy to verify testing, but not production and deployment. Most people would agree that we have enough nuclear bombs. Most people would agree that we do not need any testing of nuclear bombs per se.

From 1945 to 1980 there have been 1,271 nuclear explosions. In warheads, the United States now has the equivalent of 200,000 Hiroshima-type bombs; the U.S.S.R. has the equivalent 430,000; and France, which we do not really consider a nuclear power in the same category as the Soviet Union and the United States, now has 4,700.

The majority report points out that six countries now have the capability of detonating a nuclear device and that within ten years 44 countries will have that ability. That is frightening, Mr. Speaker. The number of bombs does not seem to be the contentious point between nations but the delivery system is.

We are concerned with proximity of weapons and the ability of those weapons to penetrate. This is the case whether we are discussing the SS-20 missile, the Pershing II, the Trident submarine or Soviet submarines.

In a few short years the Soviets have deployed 180 nuclear-armed SS-20 missiles against Europe and China. There is a total of 300 SS-20 missiles in place and approximately 900 warheads deployed.

Incidentally, I notice that since France withdrew from NATO the Soviet Union has not pointed fewer missiles in that direction. This might be something for the NDP to remember—withdrawal from NATO would not make this country any less a target. There are at least 10,000 nuclear weapons deployed for use against Europe and they all point the same way—away from the Soviet Union. As a result, NATO has become quite concerned.

The ratio of military balance between the Soviet Union and the U.S.A. is about 1.3 to 1. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) gave some figures but I think they show the military balance between the Warsaw Pact countries and NATO in Europe. It is important to look at world parity, however, and that is about 1.3 to 1 in favour of the Soviet Union. We can live with that.

Right in the middle of this, we have to look at intermediate-range nuclear missiles such as the Cruise missile. The ratio there is 600 to zero in favour of the Soviets, and that is our concern. What the allies want the Soviets to do is dismantle those missiles and go to the zero option. In return the allies will not place the Pershing II and Cruise missile in Europe; sort of disarmament in reverse. We support that zero option policy.

In December, 1979, NATO decided to deploy 464 Cruise missiles and 108 Pershing missiles in five West European countries, the U.K., Italy, Germany, Belgium and The Netherlands. NATO felt that since the Russians would not agree to remove their 600-odd missiles, this move was needed for western security. The zero option still exists and is open to the Soviet Union; we have not put those missiles in place yet. But even the sponsors of this resolution will agree that there was no serious debate about the removal of SS-20 missiles until we made a firm decision to deploy the Cruise and Pershing missiles by 1983.

That logically brings me to the next point on the testing of Cruise missiles: Are we to break our agreement with the U.S. on testing of the Cruise missile in Canada? It is a developed missile; it has had at least a dozen successful flights.

Miss Jewett: Have we made the agreement?

Mr. Irwin: The decision was made in 1979. It is a low-flying missile guided by terrain observation. The guidance system needs more testing, and we have an existing firing range at Cold Lake. I was in Calgary last weekend on the disarmament panel, and there was a presentation by Dr. Cynthia Canizzo. She pointed out that on this range we have devices which will monitor the Cruise missile as it is being tested, along with planes monitoring the missile in flight. The missile can be shut down at any time and, most importantly, there are no nuclear warheads in the missile. They will be dummy warheads. It is a relatively safe situation.

We voted over two years ago to deploy 464 armed missiles in Europe. But the minority report advocates now say: "Let's not even test the guidance system in Canada." At the same time we are quite prepared to let the arms system be installed in allied countries in Europe. This logic is so cynical as to be almost amusing. I heard one remark to the effect of "let it be done in Alaska". The minority report suggests that because we honour our obligations to our NATO partners, we are not honouring our obligation to humanity—and that it the exact wording in the report. I find that to be the most pontifical statement in the whole minority report. NATO is analogous to a family arrangement. If anyone aims a gun at your family, that person must know it cannot be aimed with impunity. If someone tries to break down your door, you do not wait until the door comes tumbling down before you prepare yourself. You prepare yourself as soon as you hear the noise, and the noise of the SS-20 installation preparation in Europe by the Russians, east and west of the Urals, is thunderous.

The minority report suggests that our testing the Cruise missile will "only stimulate the Soviets". That is the exact wording. In my humble opinion the Soviets need little stimulation to fuel their expansionist appetite. The thief who breaks down my door may be stimulated to work faster by the noise of my preparations on the other side, but I suggest he will be even more stimulated to discontinue his work. If the SS-20s are dismantled, the Cruise missiles will not be deployed; that is clear. If not, the Cruise missiles will be deployed; that is even clearer.

I wholeheartedly support the objective of bringing the arms race to a halt. Only an insane person would think otherwise. However, I think we should take the time to study these various proposals for a freeze or moratorium on production and deployment of nuclear weapons by the United States and the Soviet Union. It is particularly important to consider, Mr. Speaker, any freeze proposal with caution in the context I have just described to you in order to establish what one is being asked to freeze. While a freeze may be a simple and clean solution with a lot of appeal, some superficially attractive variants—in particular the idea of an immediate global freeze on the deployment of nuclear weapons—would be seriously harmful not only for western security, which is the overriding objective, but also to the case for verifiable arms control, which is the only realistic means to achieve this objective. The task which is in the forefront of the western agenda is the negotiation of a real and balanced reduction in nuclear weapons.

The Soviet president announced that he had decided to suspend further deployment of SS-20 missiles on the European territory of the Soviet Union. This apparent self-restraint is deceptive for two reasons. Deployment of SS-20 missiles continues east of the Urals within striking distance of most of Western Europe, and approximately 300 of these missiles with a total of 900 warheads have already been deployed. NATO's combined intelligence is that that is all Russia originally intended to deploy. So it is not much of a concession.

Moreover, the continuation of this partial moratorium after the fact is conditional on the abandonment by NATO of their nuclear modernization plans. A more acceptable freeze proposal, a version of which was tabled in the U.S. Senate and House, would seek, through negotiations, to establish a balance at the lowest possible level, and then freeze it. As I indicated, disarmament in reverse.

Chancellor Schmidt recently said "the unbelievable Soviet armada is aimed at us." He was right. Last week he said that he strongly opposed an immediate nuclear weapons freeze which would institutionalize the Soviet advantage in Europe, and he reaffirmed his support for NATO deployment of Pershing and Cruise missiles starting late in 1983. Canada has given its support to NATO as of December, 1979. We continue to give that support and we still look at the zero option. And we will still be in Europe if that option is not accepted.

We have also agreed with our NATO allies that a freeze on implementation of the deployment aspect of the December, 1979, decision will remove any hope for the future success of the Geneva negotiations, and that an immediate global freeze on nuclear weapons would detract from the goal of negotiated and verifiable reductions and limitations.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let anyone in this House think that I support a global build-up of arms. The last ten years have been an arms disaster. We have had a Soviet arms build-up, we have had Afghanistan and Poland, and SALT II was not ratified. That was because of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. We have had the Middle East, Iran, Iraq, and countries going nuclear. Why? Because it is cheaper to go nuclear than to buy conventional arms. At the same time, since 1945 we have had 130 wars in which 25 million people have been killed with conventional arms. Fifty of those wars have been in the last ten years.

We had this debate last week, Mr. Speaker; it continued in Calgary, and we are having it today. If nothing else, the minority report is stimulating debate. There is an arms madness in this world. We spend $500 billion per year on arms. That is just madness. We have 500,000 of our best scientists working for the military. That represents 40 per cent of all scientists in the world. The military is the greatest user of the world's natural resources. The annual military budget of the world equals the annual incomes of 1,800,000 people in the 36 poorest countries. When I said on Friday that for the cost of one Trident submarine we could school 16 million children for one year, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) said that without Trident submarines there would be no schools. I would rather have the schools. I agree with him logically, but I would rather have the schools. In two days the world spends 20 times more for military programs than for economic assistance to the poorest countries—it spends $14,800 per soldier in the world on military expenditures but only $230 per child on education. We are wasting our resources, our scientists and our money.

• (1730)

Canada has a good record. Last week when the hon. member for Victoria said that we tend to overemphasize our influence, he made a good point. Because we are liked in the world, we tend to think that we have a certain influence. We are liked because we are not colonialists; we are liked because we do not have aspirations. I do not think we should underestimate our importance, but I think we can only operate in the world as long as we belong to societies and groups such as NATO or NORAD where we can exert some influence over this madness.

Miss Jewett: But you do not exert any.

Mr. Irwin: The NDP exerts none. I still do not know the policy of the New Democratic Party; on Monday it is for NATO and on Tuesday it is against NATO. The NDP in Calgary does not even know. I would be pleased to know whether the NDP wants Canada to be in or out of NATO, so that I will at least know what to debate.

Canada was the first NATO country to relinquish nuclear capability. We virtually invented peacemaking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Irwin: Members of the NDP can harp. It is the truth, and the truth makes anyone harp. Canada has the most stringent safeguards on the export of armaments and the safest nuclear plants in the world. The NDP wants us to spend less on armaments. I think it was the hon. member for Victoria who mentioned that we spend 1.7 per cent of our gross national product on armament, which puts us in the second lowest place to Luxembourg in the NATO alliance. We have gone a long way toward peace.

I support the five or six recommendations of the majority report and I sympathize with the minority report. In many ways they fit together. They are looking for strategic arms reduction talks, decisions on anti-ballistic missile treaties, comprehensive multilateral test bans, nuclear weapons free zones, non-proliferation and, an end to chemical and biological weapons. We all want this. On the whole the minority report has been a genuine effort of concerned members of the committee to ease world tensions. It has stimulated debate on the points of view which vary in the majority report. I think we can live with them, I think they are important. But how can we vote for them when it is a vote of non-confidence?

Miss Jewett: What do you mean?

Mr. Irwin: If I vote for the minority report today, the Government of Canada falls. I do not think it would serve any useful purpose or contribute to controlling world armament if I voted for the minority report. To accept it for discussion is one thing; to bring down the government is another. Therefore, it is unlikely that the minority report will be supported by this side of the House.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Consultations have taken place with representatives of the opposition parties. We have agreed to seek unanimous consent of the House to revert to tabling of documents for the purpose of tabling the offer made by the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada to the Alsands consortium.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REPORT ON SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House supports the minority report on security and disarmament signed by six members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in April, 1982, calling for, inter alia, a worldwide nuclear freeze, no Cruise missile testing in Canada and a world-wide pledge against first use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today deals with an issue which through the years has grown in importance and, by consequence, has become visibly and vocally controversial. Because people throughout the world rightfully seek to live in peace, concern over the change in nature and weapons of death and destruction of war is more than justified.

As a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which conducted an exhaustive in-depth review of the issues of security and disarmament, I along with my colleagues had the opportunity to examine these concerns and the reasons behind them.

Prior to the presentation of our reports the committee spent long hours over many days listening to and reading comments from a great many individuals and groups from diverse areas of the Canadian and international community. One of the reports represents the views of a majority of committee members; the other, as has been pointed out very well, was a press release. I will address this split later. Each group, each individual and each report, while varying in approach to the problem at hand, revealed quite clearly an abhorrence of war and a deep-rooted horror that the consequences of another major war would be the destruction of mankind. The immediate and obvious focus of concern is the possibility of and the escalation toward a nuclear war.

Since the dawn of the nuclear age some 37 years ago, mankind has had to live with what has been described as the terrible burden of nuclear weapons and the havoc they may wreak. In a recent address, the United States Secretary of State Alexander Haig, commenting on the issue, said:

No one has ever advocated nuclear war. No responsible voice has ever sought to minimize its horrors.

If there is any comfort or slight encouragement to be derived from the current situation, it is that this view is being expressed by a representative of the administration of one of the two super powers which have the capability to engage in such a war.

The contradiction in the minds of many people is that while the avoidance of war and the desire for peace are being espoused, the arms build-up throughout the world continues to escalate in numbers and in potency. In its simplest form, people are saying: "If you really want to live in peace, why do you carry a gun?"

The answer, in theory as well as in reality, is that those of us who want peace and security live in a world in which we are surrounded by those who carry guns and have demonstrated their desire to use them. Thus, the establishment of a competent and capable military force by a nation with an underlying wish for peace cannot be considered a contradiction. In its true sense the military force of a nation is its vehicle for security at a national level.

It may be appropriate to draw an analogy to security on more personal and better understandable levels. Police and fire departments are established to protect the individual and the community as a whole from unwanted intrusion, aggression and destruction. Businesses and homes are equipped with safety devices for the same reason. We wish to live undisturbed in peace but we equip ourselves against others who do not share our desire.

• (1740)

To live in a world where peace is a universally attained goal is certainly the ideal. Unfortunately, ideals are seldom achieved. Because of this and of the very obvious territorial and ideological ambitions of aggressor nations and individuals in the world today, to pretend that a threat to our security does not exist is pure folly.

It has been well documented that, with variations, history repeats itself, and history has clearly shown that those who, however well meaning, blindly avoid either comprehending or responding to reality are quickly and decisively destroyed by those who have the power to take advantage of the weak, weak-willed and weakly equipped.

Obviously, the solution is to remain attuned to the reality of world events and to demonstrate both the will and the capability necessary to deter the opportunistic aggressor.

A solution which is less obvious, indeed seemingly elusive, is that which would halt this senseless state of mistrust between the major superpowers, which has resulted in the alarming situation in which we find ourselves today. In their effort to establish equality of capability, each remains deeply suspicious of the other's intentions, with the result that the parity desired with respect to weapons is in continual dispute.

In simple terms, if one side has two guns and the other has three guns, the side with one gun less wants the extra gun in order to feel equal. However, the side with the extra gun objects on the grounds that the two guns possessed by its opponent can shoot a bullet farther and with more destructive force, thereby making them equal.

This simple example, when expanded to encompass the vast array and complexity of weapons and inventory of weapons by both superpowers, gives some idea of the nature of the major difficulties surrounding disarmament. While disarmament remains under discussion, the cost of continuing the arms race has reached astounding levels. An estimated $600 billion will be spent throughout the world for arms and equipment related to the armed forces. The state of the economies of the world nations today adds greatly to the pressures.

Nations which are fighting merely to survive have difficulty to justify moneys being spent on weapons and armies dedicated to a possible fight to survive as a nation.

We are well aware of the burden placed on the American economy due to its massive defence spending. What may be less obvious, however, is the problem such spending is creating for the Soviet Union, the other superpower.

During an appearance before the standing committee, Dr. Georgi Arbatov, a director from the embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Canada, and a very high profile member of the Soviet parliament, eloquently outlined the stress that the arms race is felt even in his own country. Although there was criticism when he was invited to appear before the committee as a witness, what he said was certainly interesting and quite stimulating. I had the privilege of questioning this eminent Russian, and it is interesting to note that some of his comments appear in the committee proceedings. It would be of interest to many members in the House and to many others to read the proceedings of that particular day.

Although I do not take every word he says as gospel and may question some of his statements, I recall pointing out to him what an important person he was in the U.S.S.R. Of course, he denied this and said that he was just an ordinary citizen of the U.S.S.R.

I inquired whether he would be present at the disarmament talks which are to take place in June and July in New York. He said that he would be there but that the Soviet ambassador to the United States and the foreign minister of the U.S.S.R. would be present to state their government's policy. However, I told Mr. Arbatov that I was quite sure he would be more influential than many others due to his vast knowledge of the subject. I said, "Even though you are not saying it, you will be at the right hand of those eminent citizens of the U.S.S.R. and will certainly be coaching them". I also mentioned to him that Canada was very fortunate in its long record of never having being invaded since 1814 when we won the Canada-United States war. Mr. Arbatov replied, "Yes, you are fortunate because you have two very good neighbors." I thought that statement rather ironic.

Another interesting comment made by Mr. Arbatov was that he agreed that the arms race was a tremendous drain on the Soviet economy. I pointed out to him the amount of money being spent by the United States—some $200 billion—as well as the fact that these figures are known worldwide, especially by the U.S.S.R., but when we try to pin point the exact figure from Russia, we only get an evasive answer. I believe he indicated it was 25 per cent of their gross national product which, of course, we also do not know.

As I mentioned previously, we in the committee heard from many witnesses and while their concern was obviously genuine, I felt that in some instances they were seeking a dangerous path to peace, that of unqualified, unilateral disarmament.

Canadians have already witnessed this government's attitude toward disarmament. I am pleased to see that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) is here because I suggest to him that our Canadian armed forces, which is our vehicle for national security, our contribution to the maintenance of world peace, has been disarmed to the brink of dissolution under this government. Under this government, our military has been decimated and neglected for over a decade.

As a member of two international military alliances, NORAD and NATO, Canada is supposed to be assisting our allies in the defence of the free world. It is common knowledge and a matter of shame to many Canadians—particularly those men and women who serve in uniform—that our contribution is merely token.

Although our people are of the highest professional calibre, and what service they do provide is of value, this nation's minuscule contribution to the alliances in manpower, equipment and spending percentages is far less than it should rightfully be. Of the 15 NATO nations, only the small country of Luxembourg pays less per capita for defence than does Canada. Furthermore, what we have for the little we spend is nothing to brag about. Although we may have the best people, the equipment and the funds they have to work with certainly are not the best.

Let us look at our navy. We may call it a navy but that would be stretching the imagination. Our navy presently consists of 20 ships which, to say the least, are not of 1982 vintage. Although we have a new program to build six new patrol frigates, they are still in the design phase. Even this program is in difficulty and is incurring rising costs, as usual. When I first came on the committee for national defence, I heard stories about the great frigate program. I believe the cost of building those six frigates some years back was $1,000,400,000, but the latest figure is now $4 billion, and the Lord knows what the figure will be by the time the first frigate is on the water and delivered to the hon. minister, whoever he may be at the time. By then it will be even higher.

• (1750)

Miss Jewett: Yes, he or she.

Mr. Darling: Sure, he or she. I am well aware that the day may come when we could have a woman minister of national defence, and she may be a woman of the calibre of the present prime minister of Great Britain.

Miss Jewett: Oh, perish the thought.

Mr. Darling: She would certainly carry her weight.

Some hon. Members: Ursula.

Mr. Darling: If the government had understood the necessity of our military and had provided sufficient funds for a sensible, smooth-flowing program of equipment replacement, we would be spending far less than we now do to try to catch up to where we were before.

This nation has one of the longest coastlines in the world. I believe it is 37,000 miles long. It stands to reason that a viable, up to date and strong navy is of great importance to us. Following the Second World War, Canada had the third largest navy in the world. People watching the serious situation in the Falkland Islands with concern were probably laughing and discussing the fact that Argentina only had one aircraft carrier. However, that is one more than we have.

Our air force and our army are in equal disarray. We are slowly re-equipping these two elements of our military as well. It has also become a case of too little too late, and now at too high a cost. Yet, despite the state of our military today, there are people who feel we should reduce its size even more. There are those who would like to see Canada sit back and let the United States assume full responsibility for our security. What they perhaps do not know is that our great neighbour to the south now spends a significant portion of his defence budget to what could be considered to be in our defence as well. I believe that our defence budget, which has increased this year, is in the $7 billion bracket, up considerably from a while ago. However, when compared with the budget of $200 billion of the United States, we find that its budget is ten times higher. If the United States spends $200 billion on arms, our equivalent would be $20 billion. Is that not right, Mr. Minister? The Minister of National Defence is shaking his head. I am not suggesting that we are in any financial position to spend that amount, but it is worth while to compare the budgets.

The U.S. assumes most of the cost of NORAD, which is our continental defence and is the major spending partner in our NATO alliance. Can we take pride as a nation? Indeed, do we have any right to call ourselves a nation if we turn to another to defend our very existence as a nation? If we do not have the national will and the gumption to assume more of our own defence requirements, can we shame ourselves even more by refusing to assist our defender with our joint requirements?

The United States seeks permission to conduct testing of a number of items of military equipment on and over Canadian soil. One of these is the Cruise missile. The motion before this House in support of this press release demands, among other things, that no Cruise missile testing be allowed in Canada. The U.S. has stated that it would like to test a missile from our facilities at the Canadian Forces Base at Cold Lake in northern Alberta because the terrain and climate is similar to that on the Russian front where it might be used. As soon as the request was revealed in the media, a hue and cry went up exhorting the government not to grant permission. Critics berated the government for its potential involvement in a nuclear weapons system, many of them not realizing that testing would in no way involve the use of the nuclear warheads themselves.

In light of the fact that we have passed much of our defence on to the shoulders of the Americans, I very strongly feel that we should at least have the decency to assist them with our defence where possible. I want to commend the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) for their favourable position on this issue. I say to them that I hope the agreement for testing will be approved.

The other two points in the motion which call for a worldwide nuclear freeze and a worldwide pledge against the first use of nuclear weapons are commendable concepts. However, as I outlined previously, they have questionable application. If any one of us had a magic wand and could wave it with certain assured results, we would instantly cause to disappear all weapons, nuclear and otherwise. At this point I must underscore the fact that I do not belittle any expression of the desire for peace. I, too, wish with all my heart that the words "conflict" and "conquest" would become an archaic part of our language, the use and meaning of which were forgotten in the mists of time. I do believe that everyone throughout the world must continue to speak out on behalf of peace in the hope that one day it will become reality.

Therefore, I understand and applaud the motives of those who make their voices heard. Throughout the country, in many municipalities, a referendum will be held on the issue of nuclear disarmament. It should come as no surprise to anyone when the results of those votes are an overwhelming support for the disarmament position. In my view, the votes which will be recorded in the referenda at the time of municipal elections will, in all probability, show the support of more than 98 per cent. Canadians will naturally raise their voices throughout the world in a call for peace, but the voice of the people must come from the mind of reason. We must reasonably assume that the path to world peace contains many difficult obstacles, although they are not insurmountable. However, they are ones which require that we be ready for the challenge. These obstacles will be vividly presented in New York in June when Canada joins with the other members of the United Nations for the second special session on disarmament.

In its majority report, our committee presented 32 detailed recommendations for the Canadian policy on arms control and disarmament as guides for the upcoming UN meeting. Among the recommendations, all worthy of consideration and support, are a few I would like to highlight. While suggesting that Canada encourage the superpowers to resume talks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired, unless he can obtain unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is agreed.

Mr. Darling: While suggesting that Canada encourage the superpowers to resume talks and reach early agreement both on strategic arms limitation and mutual balanced force reductions, we also recommend that the UN devote special attention to ways of encouraging peaceful relations between the two. We suggest this could be achieved through the use of confidence-building measures and confidence-restoring techniques, such as good offices, mediation, arbitration and peace-keeping. It was also our recommendation that Canada should support in principle, where appropriate, nuclear weapon free zones and support in principle the concept of zones of peace. We also felt it imperative that Canada take a strong stand on the need to establish a comprehensive prohibition of chemical weapons. It was our view that one of the most critical and crucial fields for arms control and disarmament is nuclear non-proliferation. We suggest that the Canadian delegation do everything possible to highlight its importance for the future of world peace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Darling: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) had the floor.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I thank the members of the House for allowing me to finish my remarks.

It was our view that one of the most crucial fields for arms control and disarmament is nuclear non-proliferation and we suggested the Canadian delegation do everything possible to highlight its importance for the future of world peace.

Canadian participation in these meetings on disarmament is that of a concerned partner, one willing to help resolve the grave and serious problem. We in Canada have been fortunate in that our nation has been spared as a theatre of battle in the two major world wars. This may not be the case in the future.

During past wars, many thousands of Canadians fought and died in defence of freedom. The freedom we now enjoy and the future we anticipate exists only because we cared enough to keep them secure. It is not unreasonable to hope we will never again be called upon to fight in defence of what we hold dear, but it would be folly not to be prepared to do so if need be, and if we can help build a sense of mutual confidence and co-operation between the nations of the world, the need may never arise.

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to follow up on some of the comments made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) who spoke before me, I would like to say that the disadvantage we may have owing to the obsolescence of our equipment is largely compensated by the ability and professionalism of the men and women in our Armed Forces.

[English]

I would like to congratulate the members of the committee. Despite some divergent views, they displayed a good example of democracy in the hearing of witnesses and worked as hard as possible.

I decided to speak on this motion because I feel directly implicated in it, not because of the content or the repercussion that such a resolution could well have on the future of this country, and I would say the future of this planet, if it were adopted, but because I care for the survival of my children and of future generations.

I will try to put forward my view in a most objective way and with the greatest possible understanding for those who do not share my views. I am one of the lucky ones who managed to live through the last war. As you know, I was a bomber pilot. I served in England for nearly two years. Then I was shot down and spent two years in concentration camps in Germany, Russia and Poland. I know from bitter experience all the reasons for hating war and I know all the horrors of war.

When I heard the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) talking about the horrors of a nuclear war, I assure you I was not scared. At the same time, I know the other side of the coin. I hope, however, that we will never again have to experience the horrors of any kind of war.

I do not say that for my personal benefit for there are many thousands of Canadians who have done the same and even more than I have done. I am thinking of the ones who have given their lives because of the naivete of some well-meaning politicians like Mr. Daladier, certainly a good socialist, as well as Mr. Chamberlain in 1938.

They succumbed to the temptation of wishing to evade the aggressor, by giving up or making concessions. It is what I would call submission. In recent history, it was called the spirit of Munich. Daladier and Chamberlain were not betraying their people. They were only doing that which any good democrat would do, that is abide by what they thought was the wish of their people.

Today these demonstrators who parade in the streets singing the same slogan are the successors, or les héritiers, of those who were frenetically applauding Chamberlain's return from Munich.

It was a pity at the time to see these gullible people thinking that that kind of disarmament was reassuring, not knowing that it was condemning them. These poor leaders who, to preserve still several short months of confidence from their people, were in fact hiding the reality and their concerns. It was accepted with ease that some friendly country had to be sacrificed to appease the appetite of that dictator at the time.

Then they were reassured by the declarations of specialists or by telegrams from ambassadors affirming in chorus that Mr. Hitler would be thrown out of power because of the bankruptcy of the German economy. They were showing to the dictator their unarmed hands to reassure their aggressor and take away, they were hoping, all of its reflexes of fear and aggression. What a farce when we know what followed! I feel, however, that there are some who are following this same process these days using the same words and with the same intentions to make the same error.

[Translation]

In 1938 in Munich, Chamberlain and Daladier wanted peace at any cost. By advocating disarmament, they condemned the nations of the world to a war that was postponed only one year. They were hiding the facts. We must not fall in the same trap. That is why NATO has a bipolar policy, which aims at strengthening our defence and making every effort to negotiate bilateral disarmament. It is reassuring to speak about world disarmament, but it must occur on both sides. Unilateral disarmament without reasonable parity would be equivalent to nothing but surrender and capitulation. While our sociocapitalistic system is not perfect, I still prefer it to the sociocommunist regime because we have much greater freedoms and rights than any other country. The temptation of wanting to escape the aggressor by yielding to him denotes a spirit of submission that I do not accept.

[English]

Following those remarks, I should thank the leader of the New Democratic Party for presenting this motion to the House for debate today. It underlines to the Canadian people the distinct lack of realism possessed by that party on all these matters, their lack of realism in spite of all the facts.

• (2010)

This debate provides us, on the government side, with an opportunity to present to the Canadian people the realistic facts upon which our current defence posture and that of our allies in the western alliance rests.

The NDP members appear to be united in their support of this motion, this motion that reflects a minority of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. If this is indeed the case, then I am puzzled; I hope that we will hear clearly, one day soon, their full policy with respect to NATO, North American defence, and even the defence of their own country.

It is important to point out that we are debating today a motion based on the minority report of the SCEAND Committee which examined Canada's security and disarmament policy. Fully 80 per cent of the members of that committee agreed with the final report, a report that was prepared after a month and a half of extensive hearings—hearings at which numerous, well-known witnesses, representing a wide spectrum of views, were heard. This motion suggests that the NDP is not pleased with the report of their peers. Since this is the case, it is important to recall for them some of the evidence presented therein.

Last week, every member of the House of Commons, as well as every member of the other place, received a copy of the letter that I sent to the hundreds of Canadians who had expressed an interest in the subject of the proposed flight testing of unarmed Cruise missiles in Canada. Hon. members opposite also received a copy of this letter and by now have had an opportunity to weigh its contents. Regardless of one's political or philosophical underpinnings, I can assure everyone that the facts presented therein are not in dispute. Defence is not a matter for philosophers; defence questions are questions of stark reality and, therefore, I think that it will benefit this debate if parts of this letter are read into the record.

[Translation]

I must clarify certain other points concerning the present state of the negotiations with a view to signing an agreement with the United States on tests of weapon systems in Canada. In addition to unarmed Cruise missiles, the United States might want to test other systems, such as helicopters, surveillance and identification systems and aircraft navigation systems. Canada would have full and continuous control over all testing, which would be subject to the environmental and security requirements of our country. The Cruise missile would not be more dangerous than a small plane because there would be no impact and the use of a parachute would make the missile recoverable. Each test proposed by the United States would first have to be authorized by Canada and could even be forbidden later on. Biological and chemical nuclear testing would not be authorized. Finally, the negotiation of such an agreement with the United States could prove a strong incentive for the two superpowers to conduct fruitful negotiations with a view to concluding a monitoring agreement on weapons control and a balanced and mutual disarmament. The government will proceed normally with the negotiation of the master agreement. It is not expected that any agreement on Cruise missile testing will come about before the end of the year, and certainly not before the United Nations Second Special Session on Disarmement. Of course, any agreement on arms testing in existence or being negotiated would be subject to the provisions of any new agreement made during UNSSOD II. However, in the meantime, Canada will continue to ensure the strength and efficiency of the Alliance.

[English]

Clearly, the Canadian government, and myself as Minister of National Defence, would dearly love to halt the production and testing of any weapons system, and to live in a world that is free of aggression and free of any threat to peace. Sadly, today's international scene does not present us with such a picture. Unfortunately, history, as I said at the beginning of my speech, provides us with overwhelming evidence that such a naive approach to the world is both irresponsible and dangerous. Certainly, the history of the Soviet Union's expansionism since World War II and of their blatant disregard for basic human rights—even as we speak, in Poland and Afghanistan—is evidence enough of the danger inherent in such an approach. Intentions are all very well but clearly one's actions and the actual facts of history will demonstrate one's sincerity. The U.S.S.R. has clearly demonstrated its sincerity in this regard.

It is all very well for the members of the NDP to travel across this land, preaching an end to war and peace for the world. Mr. Speaker, we as a government simply cannot take that chance. We are positively bound to protect our people's right to peace and freedom by something more substantial than the pursuit of an ideal and a "pie in the sky" approach to matters of such importance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: As I have stated, Mr. Speaker, the security of the western alliance is based on the concept of credible deterrence. This motion proposes a worldwide nuclear freeze, a freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems. Put quite simply, a freeze at this time is unacceptable because it would freeze an unstable and unequal military balance, thus entrapping the West in a position of dangerous inferiority.

We must remember that a global freeze would apply not only to strategic nuclear weapons, where a rough parity might exist between the Soviet Union and the United States, but also to intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe, where the balance has been seriously upset by the Soviet deployment since 1976 of 300 SS-20s. It is unfortunate that this clear imbalance in favour of the Soviet Union, which has brought about NATO's modernization program, is not recognized by members opposite.

Mr. Ogle: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will finish what I have to say and if there is time then, I will be ready to answer the question.

Clearly, Canada does not favour proposals for a U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. nuclear weapons freeze at existing levels. Rather, we hold the view that the two major nuclear powers should first negotiate substantial and verifiable reductions, both quantitative and qualitative, in their nuclear arsenals.

We believe that the U.S.A. is committed to arms control and to the achievement of equitable and verifiable agreements aimed at substantial reductions in nuclear forces. While freeze proposals reflect the desire of people everywhere to reduce the threat of nuclear war, proposals in themselves do not promote reductions, equality or verifiability. Rather, it will result in a locking-in of existing inequalities, while making further progress difficult, if not impossible. For these reasons, the goal in arms control must continue to be the negotiation of substantial reductions in the nuclear arsenals of both sides. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that we can do better than a freeze, and we want to do more than a freeze.

It is for similar reasons that I cannot support the final proposal presented in this motion, that calls for a worldwide pledge against first use of nuclear weapons. There is considerable confusion in the public debate about the terms "first use" and "first strike". It may be helpful to members and to our discussion if I attempt to define the terms.

A first strike, often qualified by the adjectives "preemptive" or "disarming" is generally taken to mean a major premeditated attempt by one side to destroy the offensive nuclear systems of the other effectively, to the point that the country concerned could not effectively respond. It is, of course, a principal reason why both the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union have seen fit to maintain what is described as a triad of strategic forces—land-based, sea-based in submarines and heavy bombers. This is in order that their eggs are not all at one time in the same basket. It is our judgment that neither side has the capacity to undertake a disarming first-strike at this time, and that neither looks to achieve such a capability.

• (2020)

The first use of nuclear weapons, on the other hand, is quite a different matter. It is also at the very heart of NATO's doctrine of flexible response, which is that any aggression would be responded to at a level and by the means necessary to halt it. Fundamental to the strategy is the need to maintain all options open to the western alliance. To foreclose any option—for example, by declaring that NATO would not be the first to use nuclear weapons—would convey quite the wrong signal to the other side at this time. More directly, such a declaration would be seen by our European allies as a withdrawal of the American nuclear guarantee from Europe, a guarantee which has played a major role in keeping the peace there for over 30 years.

This motion, while similar to the recent proposal put forward by the former U.S. secretary of defence, Robert McNamara, has conveniently refused to recognize a fundamental condition upon which McNamara's renouncement of first-use was based; that is, that the only responsible way in which the allied governments could adopt a no-first-use policy would be on the basis of an improvement in western conventional forces in Europe. Not unnaturally, this crucial condition has attracted a good deal less attention than has the no-first-use proposal.

Hon. members opposite, unfortunately, have not learned from the past, or the present. In committee yesterday I was questioned on what I meant when I referred to Pax Sovietica. I ask them not to ask me but to ask those who have strayed in some way from the Soviet path and from the strict Soviet line. The Hungarians in 1956, the Czechs in 1968, the Poles in 1981 and the Afghans know full well what the term "Pax Sovietica" means. Soviet actions in these instances indicate clearly that the western alliance must remain very vigilant.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell the House when he really believes a freeze would be possible? I understood he was indicating there could be a freeze.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I thought the hon. member was rising on a point of order. If he is rising for the purpose of asking a question, that could be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated he believes a freeze would be possible at a certain level of weaponry. That is what I understood, in any event. When does the minister think it would be possible for that to take place?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that at the moment a freeze would be very unequal. If a football game is stopped in the middle of the game and the score is three to nothing, that would not be very equal.

Mr. Deans: This is not quite the same.

Mr. Lamontagne: I know that is not the point. I will get to the point. We want to do something better than a freeze. Our aim is to reduce to the lowest level possible the nuclear strength, the nuclear force of both sides. For example, the U.S.A. has asked the U.S.S.R. to remove the SS-20, the SS-4 and the SS-5. If the Soviets did that, we would have a certain equality as far as this type of armament is concerned.

What I cannot understand is that everyone seems to be scared of a weapon, the Cruise missile, which is not yet in a position to hit anybody. It is just in the testing stage. On the other hand, no one is afraid of the huge nuclear arsenal of the SS-4, the SS-5 and the SS-20.

Mr. Deans: I am petrified.

Mr. Lamontagne: Why is the hon. member so afraid and why does he want disarmament right away, before we achieve a certain parity so that we are able to have a credible deterrence so that the U.S.S.R. can be given the incentive to sit down with us and seriously negotiate peace and disarmament?

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the evidence before the subcommittee on security and disarmament was always interesting and often contradictory. One of the areas in which it was contradictory was the very one about which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has just been talking, namely, is there or is there not rough global parity between the two sides? This has also been the subject of a great deal of discussion in the United States and Europe. I find it very misleading to be told by the minister that there is no such global parity. In his capacity as Minister of National Defence it seems to me the minister should be providing us with the best estimate which can possibly be made on the question of global parity, but the minister is not doing so. We all know about the SS-20. We also know about the submarines which can demolish every city in the Soviet Union. We know about those. We also know—and a great many authorities have said exactly the same thing over the past many months, including many to the committee—that if we look at this matter in a global fashion, we see that there is now rough parity. I agree with the minister that it is better to move toward a nuclear freeze in a position of rough parity than in any other. Because there is rough parity now, the movement for a global freeze has attained large dimensions.

I am sure the minister reads and respects Paul C. Warnke, who was the arms control and disarmament adviser in the previous U.S. administration. Paul Warnke has stated quite clearly and flatly that there is now rough parity. He says:

> —in the over-all strategic balance there is certainly no Soviet advantage. In the most significant respects, such as survivability, the edge is ours. If an immediate freeze could . . . be achieved, the existing situation of mutual deterrence would be preserved. Neither side could possibly anticipate profiting from the initiation of a nuclear war. The country attacked would retain the capability to inflict comparable devastation on its attacker . . . A freeze is the necessary partner of reductions.

In that connection I was very happy to see a ray of hope this afternoon, one to which the Minister of National Defence has not seen fit to adhere tonight. It came principally from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), although I should add that the parliamentary secretary perhaps gave us even a greater reason to hope that the minority report on security and disarmament, the report we are asking the House to adopt, had made a real impact on this House and on the Canadian public. The parliamentary secretary said that it has stimulated debate on the points of view which vary from the majority report. He said he thinks we can live with these points of view and that they are important. That was terrific. I thought, "There we are; we have a majority in favour of our recommendations." The parliamentary secretary went on to ask how he could vote for them when it would be a vote of non-confidence. I plead with all hon. members of the House not to regard this as a vote of non-confidence but to regard it as a free vote so that every member, with his knowledge and conscience, will vote freely. I will return to that later in my remarks.

• (2030)

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, perhaps most unexpectedly, shed some hope on the acceptance, although maybe not today, of the four major recommendations made in the minority report on security and disarmament. Of course he is very annoyed that members of the NDP on that committee were among the six who signed the minority report. I cannot understand why he was so petulant about the NDP and its support of the recommendations today. He did not refer to the fact that there was a Liberal member and two Conservatives who also signed the report. I cannot quite explain his petulance unless he is perhaps a closet NDP, to paraphrase him.

I was unhappy that he focused on half of the signatories to this report. None of us wants this to be simply an NDP move. It is not in this Parliament and it is not in this country. There are people from all walks of life and of all political beliefs who believe in the very things we advocate in this report. I regret very much that he wanted to have it as something that only the NDP was pursuing. That simply is not the case.

As I understood the minister's remarks—and I have not seen all the "blues"—he implicitly gave a great deal of support to the minority report on security and disarmament. I would draw your attention to his reaction to our first proposal for a nuclear freeze, that:

> Canada should put its full strength into the campaign now gathering strength in many parts of the world: a global freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles.

It is true that he did not mention this first proposal specifically but it seems to me that implicitly he supported it. Some people might even argue that he went further. The reason I say he supported it is that by far the most important thing he said this afternoon, in my view, was that the goal of the government in UNSSOD II would be balanced deterrence through radical reduction in nuclear weapons.

As has often been pointed out, Mr. Speaker, if a freight train is coming down the track you cannot throw it into reverse until you first stop it. In other words, you cannot have radical reduction until you first have a change of direction—until you have first halted the arms race.

In our recommendation on the nuclear freeze in the minority report that section reads:

> Rather, a practical policy is to promote mutual, balanced and verifiable disarmament by first of all freezing further growth.

In other words, you will not get radical reductions until you have created a freeze to get a change in direction. You have to stop the arms race so that it can be reversed. This was also a very important part of the House-Senate joint resolution in the United States. It was the second of two points and reads as follows:

> Proceeding from this freeze, the United States and the Soviet Union should pursue major, mutual and verifiable reductions in nuclear warheads, missiles, and other delivery systems, through annual percentages, or equally effective means, in a manner that enhances stability.

When the minister said that our goal in UNSSOD II and elsewhere will be balanced deterrence through radical reduction it seems to me he is implicitly agreeing; otherwise there is no logic to a nuclear freeze. It is the first step to radical reductions.

At the moment, the wonder of the world is why people of conservative thought are rejecting the idea of a nuclear freeze, particularly those who know and understand that there is rough global parity and that this is the moment for the freeze.

The syndicated columnist James J. Kilpatrick writing in the Los Angeles Times of March 22, 1982, had this to say:

> Where are my brother conservatives? What are they doing about the most awesomely important political issue in the world? Alas, the answer is, not much.

He identifies this as follows:

> —an issue of life-or-death meaning to the whole planet, and there is not a sentence in their resolution that thoughtful conservatives could not support.

He was referring to the Kennedy-Hatfield resolution. He continues quoting the resolution:

> "The greatest challenge facing the Earth is to prevent the occurrence of nuclear war by accident or design." What is wrong with that? "The nuclear arms race is dangerously increasing the risk of a holocaust that would be humanity's final war." Can anyone deny this? "A freeze followed by reductions in nuclear warheads, missiles and other delivery systems is needed to halt the nuclear arms race and to reduce the risk of nuclear war." Isn't this an idea worthy of exploration?

He goes on to say:

> The resolution urges that the United States and the Soviet Union jointly "pursue" a complete halt to the arms race, that the two nations "decide" how such a mutual and verifiable freeze could be arranged, and that, proceeding from such a freeze, the two nations "should pursue major, mutual and verifiable reductions in nuclear warheads, missiles and other delivery systems."

The article continues:

> Otherwise, unless words have lost their meaning, the Kennedy-Hatfield liberals are proposing exactly what Reagan's START proposed in November.

I think that is the direction the government is going, if I take the remarks of the minister this afternoon to mean that there must be a freeze before there can be radical reductions.

I thought the minister was moving a little on the second recommendation of the minority report, that there not be any Cruise testing in Canada. He has already moved to some extent because I assume that originally the plan was to have the agreement signed by this time. When it became public, then, of course, he moved toward not having it signed, at least until we have had the second special session on disarmament at the United Nations.

I think he may be moving a little further and coming closer to our second recommendation, because this afternoon he said, as I understood it, that Canada is not involved in development of nuclear weapons systems. I take this to be a promise that we will no longer be involved in development of nuclear weapons systems. Of course, we are now involved, as we all well know. Not only are we possibly going to draw up an agreement for the testing of the Cruise missile but we have also been involved for some time in giving support to industries that are helping to provide the guidance system for the Cruise missile and other nuclear weaponry, particularly Litton Systems Canada Limited. Vickers Canada and Litton Industries are providing the hulls for the Trident submarine. When the minister says we are not involved in the development of nuclear weapons systems, of course that is not true. We are involved through testing, if we do test, and by encouraging the manufacturers of the Trident and Cruise missiles through grants and loans. The reason I have some hope is that I take it he is moving toward a position that, just as we are not going to have nuclear weapons on our soil once they are pulled out of Comox, so also we are not going to be involved in the future in the development of nuclear weapons systems. For this reason I believe it is possible that the minister and many members will follow, in a sense, the lead which the Canadian public is already giving; that is, no Cruise testing and no further manufacture, although the latter is not in the minority report.

• (2040)

The minister made no comment at all on the third recommendation in the minority report that all nations should pledge never to be the first to use nuclear weapons. I take it that is because he would be in fundamental agreement with the no-first-use pledge. I expect he has read the article in the spring issue of Foreign Affairs written by Robert McNamara, the former U.S. Defence Secretary; George Kennan, former Ambassador to Moscow; McGeorge Bundy, a former adviser on national security; and Gerard Smith, the chief arms control negotiator in recent Democratic and Republican administrations. Nothing in that article confirms what the Minister of National Defence just said, that the authors had made the no-first-use pledge conditional upon an increase of conventional armaments. Certainly Robert McNamara and the others have pointed out the great importance of conventional armaments which they would like to see accompany the adoption of the non-first-use pledge. However, to the best of my knowledge, that is the most they have said. For lack of time I cannot give hon. members the details of this article. However, I urge the minister and all members of the House to read it. I would just like to emphasize the last few words of the article:

> There has been no first use of nuclear weapons since 1945, and no one in any country regrets that fact. The right way to maintain this record is to recognize that in the age of massive thermonuclear over kill it no longer makes sense—if it ever did—to hold these weapons for any other purpose than the prevention of their use.

As I say, because the minister did not comment on the no-first-use pledge—although I am confident he has read most of the material surrounding this proposal—I assume he would support it.

Finally, in the fourth general category of recommendations in the minority report on security and disarmament is what one could broadly call Canadian efforts at disarmament education, efforts that we might make to encourage greater public knowledge and understanding of the whole question of security and disarmament. This would include the desirability of a global referendum on disarmament which, as we point out, is being taken up by more and more municipalities in this country. Again, it may be that the minister did not refer to that recommendation because he was in agreement with it. He is a universitaire and no doubt puts a good deal of hope in public illumination and education. However, it also may be that he feels there has been a tremendous awakening of public interest in and knowledge about these important life and death issues. It certainly has not been referred to as much today as I think it ought to have been, this enormous upsurge in public interest and concern. We of course had evidence of that only last Saturday in Vancouver when a march to end the nuclear arms race, followed by a rally, was attended by 30,000 to 35,000 people, according to a police estimate. I expect it was one of the largest marches and rallies ever held in Canadian history, representing a cross-section of people in British Columbia and therefore in Canada.

I am sure all of us here are aware of the tremendous popular movements in most European countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to her has expired. Nevertheless, she may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Jewett: I thank my colleagues. Some people have said that surely these movements are communist-inspired. Most, if not all, of the witnesses before the subcommittee on security and disarmament said that was not true. They said the only one which might have been communist-inspired was the one in Paris; otherwise, they are popular movements. When the minister spoke earlier about some of the bigger powers in NATO and NORAD wanting the two-track decision, I wish he had also mentioned how many of the smaller powers do not want the Cruise missile. Belgium has not even discussed the matter yet, that is how badly they want it; the Netherlands has come as close as they can to refusing the stationing of the Cruise missile on their soil. We must not confuse the wishes of the larger powers with those of the smaller powers on these matters. It is irrelevant whether they are socialists, Christian Democrats or whatever. We should not make a big deal of these political labels, anymore than we should of the kind of people who go to these marches.

As I say, there has been a growth of public concern, and I believe it is our responsibility as parliamentarians to try to meet that concern. Therefore, I ask every member of the House to regard this, as we do, as a free vote. Certainly, it is not going to bring down the government, although I suppose it might help us to get the Tories to vote for it if it did.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Miss Jewett: We are simply asking for support of this minority report and its four major recommendations on security and disarmament. Thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the committee which did not submit a majority report but rather the Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, a report that gave rise to a press release issued by six members, irrespective of the position of each member, I would like to congratulate sincerely and warmly the members of all three political parties who sat on that committee. I think that they have given special consideration to that concern.

Second, they followed their schedule and I think that no parliamentary committee has shown more devotion during all the years I have sat as a member. I should say that the atmosphere which prevailed within the committee was outstanding. I often suggest to members of this House to have a close look at the proceedings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Despite totally divergent views on some issues, we have successfully maintained an atmosphere of complete co-operation and understanding. My one regret, because I do have one, and I wish to tell my colleagues and friends of the New Democratic Party about it, is that very early in our proceedings, I had tried to set up a new system to include any minority views in the committee's final report.

• (2050)

[English]

I am the kind of person who believes that minority views could have been expressed and attached to majority views. I have worked, accordingly, for three or four months, with the feeling and understanding that that would be the case. On very divided issues, we would say that the committee recommends them, even though many members feel very strongly that they are impossible. I do not know who is responsible, but I regret that we could not add these views. If we could have, we would not have had to go through the inssuance of a press release by six members of the standing committee.

Also I express my deepest thanks to the staff. Sometimes we forget about them, but I like to follow the lead of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), my very good friend, who always makes a point of thanking the staff. The research staff worked very hard, for which I thank them. For example, I could name Roger Hill and the clerk who worked with us. I am never afraid to share in the experience of others who did a very good job and succeeded in producing an enormous amount of work. It is unfortunate that the press release was issued, but by next Monday we will have the final edition so that members of the public and members of political parties will be able to read the report rather than the press release issued by six members of the committee.

An hon. Member: Boring.

Mr. Prud'homme: I may be, I may be. Defence and disarmament are certainly not unfamiliar subjects. As I said, we worked together for quite a while on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Hon. members have already mentioned that over 50 witnesses appeared before the committee and that there were over 50 meetings.

Recently I returned with an NDP colleague and some Conservative colleagues from a meeting of the Inter Parliamentary Union in Lagos, Nigeria, where I had the privilege and honour of working with an important drafting group. I draw the attention of hon. members to the resolution which was produced by consensus in Lagos. It is now being submitted to the second Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly devoted to disarmament. This was the unanimous view. Perhaps it was not as much as the Soviet Union or my friend from Cuba wanted; perhaps it was not as much as our neighbours to the south, the United States, wanted. It was a unanimous report contained in a resolution which will be submitted to the special session. Since we were all parliamentarians, I felt we should report to our respective parliaments on our activities. Therefore, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to have this resolution of parliamentarians appended to today's Hansard. I have copies of the resolution which I will distribute to all parties. It will be presented on behalf of all parliamentarians in the world at the second Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly in New York. I request permission to table the resolution and to distribute copies of it.

Miss Jewett: What is it?

Mr. Prud'homme: It was a resolution which was adopted unanimously by the Committee on Political Questions, International Security and Disarmament, entitled:

The Contribution of Parliaments to the Adoption of Concrete Measures by the Second Special Session of the UN General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament and Their Implementation, in Particular, the Reduction of Military Budgets and Its Effect on World Economy and Employment and on the Economic and Social Development of the Third World

We all agreed to it in Lagos. If hon. members would like to obtain a copy of it—

Mr. Broadbent: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, of course, but I would like to have this tabled this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Before entertaining discussion on this document, I understand the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is seeking unanimous consent to have the resolution appended to today's Hansard.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we would be in agreement on the condition that the hon. member agrees that the entire minority report, which he has argued very persuasively should have been included, be attached to today's Hansard as well.

Mr. Prud'homme: For the benefit of the hon. member, I think we are talking about two different subjects.

Mr. Broadbent: We are debating the minority report.

Mr. Prud'homme: I see that I will not obtain unanimous consent. It is unfortunate that the House will be deprived of a motion which parliamentarians unanimously accepted in Lagos. I see my reverend friend the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) nodding his head in agreement. If hon. members of the NDP want to be partisan—

Mr. Broadbent: Who is being partisan?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member could explain to the leader of the New Democratic Party what he is talking about. It is not the majority report or the minority report of the subcommittee; it is a resolution from Nigeria. We would like to have it attached to Hansard; surely he does not object to that.

Mr. Broadbent: Wonderful, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member is so shocked by what happened in Saskatchewan that he does not have all his marbles tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead, go ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Therefore, the Chair understands that there is no unanimous consent to attach the resolution as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will try to resist the wonderful and peaceful appeal of my good friend, the official critic of the NDP, who said that we should use our knowledge and conscience to vote tonight and that we should not consider it a non-confidence vote. This is what she said.

Mr. Ogle: Would you be good enough to ask the House to table the subcommittee report?

Mr. Prud'homme: It is too bad the hon. member did not ask. I am always willing to agree. It is too bad, it is too bad. I read the minority report and I should like to deal with it now. I would prefer to talk about the views expressed by the committee, but unfortunately not enough was said about the report itself. A considerable amount of work was done by my hon. colleagues to which the official opposition referred this afternoon. They referred to some of the resolutions but not to all of them. In fact, 21 resolutions were put forward. I see some members of the New Democratic Party agreeing because they themselves said in their minority report that they agree with much that was said. Unfortunately, they could not agree with the majority report, and consequently added their minority views to the report.

• (2100)

I can find most of what is contained in the 11 pages of the first issue of the minority report in the full report, except for the four points which were made as well as some other points.

I will start with the last point. Hon. members may be surprised, and I hope the official opposition will not be shocked, when I say that we should provide more resources for the study of disarmament. I, personally, am quite sympathetic to this view. I know the committee will forgive me for saying so, and I suggest that it is a small bonus I get for having abided by their wishes so well when I shared in that concession by not putting my views forward. I am disappointed that the committee did not accept the proposal that we create five or six chairs of peace in universities similar to the strategic studies which have been taking place across Canada and which are paid for by the Department of National Defence. I urge hon. members to allow the three parties to work together in order to reassess our views on this proposal because I am confident that we can come to an agreement on this particular point.

I must say that I do not doubt the credibility or the sincerity of the New Democratic Party. However, I would ask them, in return, to give us credit for the same credibility and sincerity. I was going to argue with what the leader of the New Democratic Party had said, but my colleague, the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) already asked him to correct his statement about the high degree of morality of the members who signed the report. I find his answers totally acceptable and I now know that he does not doubt the sincerity of government members.

I would like to comment on a proposition which is often raised, that of non-first-use of nuclear weapons. All members should realize that those who advocate a pledge by NATO countries of non-first use of nuclear weapons are suggesting two things: first, the United States should withdraw its nuclear umbrella which presently aids in deterring a conventional attack on our NATO allies in Europe; and second, that our European allies should agree to the withdrawal of that protective nuclear umbrella. I would tell members of the New Democratic Party, and any others who advocate such a policy, that it is not looked upon as being favourable or acceptable to the governments of Europe. I discovered, when I spoke to some members of the social democratic party in Lagos, Nigeria when asking their assessment of NATO, that they were very strongly in favour of NATO. I expected that they would have had the same view as my friend, the hon. members for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) and that socialists would share the same view internationally. But since they were so much in favour of NATO, I had to reassess my own understanding. If my hon. friend from New Westminster-Coquitlam said that her views were in my best interests, I would suggest to her and members of her party to reassess their thinking about NATO. I realize that there is division in their party about NORAD and NATO. Obviously, if it is good enough for socialists in Europe to be strongly devoted to NORAD and NATO since it demonstrates an air of solidarity in the western world, it should be good enough for the NDP and for all Members of Parliament. As well, the foreign minister for the Republic of Germany has rejected the nuclear no-first-use proposal and has reiterated his country's support for NATO's doctrine of flexible response as the only plausible deterrent against aggression and political pressure at any level.

It is interesting to note that those who propose the no-first-use of nuclear weapons to counter a conventional attack, in my opinion, ignore the fact that such a renunciation would require the NATO countries to increase their conventional forces considerably. I wonder if the supporters of that resolution are advocating that kind of build up. If they are not, I suggest that their view is full of inconsistencies and would weaken the security of our European allies.

An hon. Member: What is security?

Mr. Prud'homme: I am asked what security is. In my opinion, security does not mean naiveté. I believe that it is absolute madness to be spending over $5 billion for armaments in the world when that money could be used for development in other areas. Security also means being sure about your sincerity about disarming and using that vast amount of money to combat ignorance and poverty and to help people throughout the world. Security means to be able to believe that the other side is equally sincere and that it is not trying to take advantage of my sincerity to build up better armaments and force me into a position where I have no choice but to give in to their demands and conquests. To me, this would be security.

I will say in the House that I have absolute understanding for the views expressed in the minority report by those six members. My difficulty is reconciliation and finding a way to harmonize the views of those groups who are well intentioned. I predict that the question of nuclear armament will be the question of the 1980s. It will be the issue which will animate the students and all concerned people. It is my hope that the other side will be equally concerned. I do not like to say "the other side" but it is those groups who do not share the same sincerity. I hope the hon. member who is about to interrupt me will be quiet. I will not say who he is, but he was very rude this afternoon to the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) when he called her speech stupid. I call that intolerance, when we all agreed this afternoon to extend the time allocated to any member and he refused to give that courtesy to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). I ask, in all sincerity, why there are so many people, when we begin to debate the question of disarmament, who fight each other in the name of disarmament. It is similar to people killing each other in the name of God, be it in Iran or in Northern Ireland. I saw the same intolerance when a colleague of mine went to speak at a university. He was violently attacked by ministers or members of the clergy. They were discussing disarmament with as much sincerity and as much desire to arrive at a conclusion. I do not understand that. I always try to see not what divides people, but what could happen there. Accordingly, I will conclude by saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, following the speech of the chairman of the committee on external affairs, I think it would be appropriate for me to say on behalf of members of the committee that we did appreciate the chairing job that he did. He did it with appropriateness and competence, and for that I commend and thank him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: I would like to preface my remarks tonight with a theme which I think should be kept constantly in mind throughout my presentation. There is a consensus in the House. The Progressive Conservative Party agrees, the security and disarmament committee agrees and I agree that there are no winners in a nuclear war, or any other kind of war for that matter. Therefore, the maintenance of peace is the highest priority for all rational thinking men and women in this country and of this world. That consensus is, in fact, the consensus which created this debate, which created this committee, which created this report and which propels this debate forward in the House today.

In the next 20 minutes before I end this speech, it could begin and it could be all over at the same time. If a one megaton bomb were dropped 20 minutes from now on the centre of downtown Toronto or downtown Vancouver, within a two-mile epicircle of blast there would be instantaneous incineration into millions of pieces of what were 200,000 or 300,000 Canadians. In a two mile to six-mile circle from the centre, there would be instant blindness for those who turned to look at a fireball many times brighter than the sun. There would be instant deafness as eardrums shattered. Lungs would collapse and there would be fatal third-degree burns which medics could not treat, even if they had the capacity and competence to do so. Within that circle, everything combustible would instantly burst into flames. Even beyond that six-mile distance from the centre, flying objects would blast through windows and walls. Within a 12-mile circle there would be continuing damage and, above all, a mass of charred, irradiated bodies fleeing, dying, struggling their way from the epicentre of the blast. Conditions would be intolerable as a result for those beyond the 12-mile centre of the blast. Some people would survive.

In the lower mainland of British Columbia there are one and a half million people. If 500,000 were killed, there would still be one million left who would survive in some capacity. If there were an all-out nuclear war, it has been estimated by witnesses before the committee that 500 million people out of the four billion on the face of the earth would be eradicated. We usually speak in terms of five million or ten million in conventional wars. The price is too high. The price of one million is too high. The price of 100,000 is too high. The price of a thousand, of a hundred, of one, is too high. Even if these unspeakable weapons were never unleashed, who in the House could really justify the billions of wasted dollars and the resources which could have helped a world so full of human suffering and deprivation?

I, too, campaign for peace. I, too, will march for peace. I, too, will stand and preach for peace. Military expansion must stop. Peace must begin. Peace must be given a chance. How can we prevent the unspeakable? How can we prevent this terrible Armageddon that I have just described? Is the answer to be found in pacificism, or is it to be found in nuclear bullying by superiority of either the East or the West, or in deterrence? The motivation for bullying nations varies from ideological reasons, which may or may not be expansionary, to insecurity. If nations were not expansionary in their ideology and felt sure of their own sovereignty, war would cease to be the factor of major concern that it is today.

Human beings, regardless of ideology, naturally seek security, both personally and collectively. We have not had nuclear disarmament or even reductions in nuclear arms because the essential element of negotiations is mutual trust between nations. There is a need to develop a political will to establish the motivation for concrete measures to reduce the level of risk. Confidence-building measures must be developed to lessen the mutual distrust which pervades the relationship between east and west. The pursuit of peace can realistically be achieved through mutual respect for one's capability through the balance of power.

Ideally, however, and we must also strive for the ideal, peace can only be maintained indefinitely if it is in fact based on good will and the spirit of peace. That spirit of peace does not start between nations. That spirit of peace starts inside the individual parts of all mankind. It starts in us as individuals, in you and me, in our determination to participate and seek solutions tonight. Whatever our solution may be, while some of us may be right and some of us may be wrong, the desire starts here for all of us. If we cannot find that desire and if we cannot find the internal peace, we will never ever find peace in this world. We must expand that sense of peace and commitment through our own personal lives to our community and to the larger community of man.

The way to build the political will for peace in today's world is through recognized and respected adoption of specific spheres of influence. This must be joined to an arms control policy which will work toward achieving mutual, balanced and verifiable reduction of nuclear arms at all levels, from the highest denominator to the lowest possible denominator. This statement of mutual reduction of nuclear arms at all levels, from the highest to the lowest levels possible, is another consensus that we have here today. The only dispute is over the means of achieving the end.

The catastrophic consequences of another world war, with or without nuclear weapons, make deterrence of conflict the highest objective. It is imperative that we prevent deterrence from turning into coercion in order to prevent coercion from becoming conflict. The deterrence of conflict is dependent upon the perception of the nature and source of the threat to peace. That threat to peace differs depending on the position from which one sees it. However, for the western democracies, the threat that we are conditioned to or that we believe in, that we are in fact preparing for, because that is what NORAD and NATO are all about, is from the Soviet Union.

Soviet military spending is impossible to calculate exactly, but the most impeccable sources place it conservatively, and our committee was told it was even higher, at 13 per cent of gross national product. The United States and its allies spend approximately 3 per cent of their gross national product. Soviet arms spending has risen steadily in real terms over the last 12 years, while western arms spending has fallen and is only now attempting to match Soviet increases. No one likes that attempt. No one is pleased at the attempt to waste more money for the building of arms.

As the Soviet Union moves closer to rough parity in nuclear weapons, and that is generally accepted today, and to the overall narrow margin of superiority in both conventional and nuclear power that they now possess, we have to look at their position in the world. Unfortunately we see their intent expressed more aggressively in their attempts to forcefully expand at least their influence around the globe.

They backed Cuban proxies in Angola in 1975, backed Ethiopia in the Ogaden in 1977, supported Vietnam, the fifth largest standing army in the world, in various excursions into Kampuchea, and invaded Afghanistan. More recently we have seen the Soviet Union-inspired imposition of martial law in Poland and the destabilization of Central America. That is the concern. The concern is the intent.

Some people might say the British in their development period established colonies throughout the world. Also, we worked through a period of the United Nations of decolonization, and Britain finding its own place in space and time. The United States could perhaps at this stage be accused of the same thing. That does not mean we should now tolerate a new wave of expansionism in the name of the Soviet Union.

Determining the intent of the Soviet Union, therefore, has become more and more important as they move toward the window of opportunity. It is in that window of opportunity in 1984-85 when the clarity of this superiority will in fact reveal the clear reality or lack of reality of the threat which may exist to this part of the world.

While the United States practised the theory of detente during the 1970s by transferring high technology to the Soviets and unilaterally freezing the deployment of land-based missiles, the Soviet Union has continued to build up both conventional and nuclear forces on a massive scale based on the Soviet doctrine of quantitative superiority.

This includes the development and deployment of the SS-20 in the European land mass and the creation of a global blue-water fleet, one of the most if not the most superior in the world. Soviet quiet renunciation of detente can be seen in a 1976 article in Pravda which defines detente as the expansion of Soviet influence throughout the world by all means short of super-power confrontation.

The Soviets, by virtue of their Marxist ideological precepts do not necessarily respect the same definition of terms that is generally accepted in the western world. This is a classic example of the crucial difference that the failure to understand the Soviet mind-set can make. Based on this, it is not surprising that some scholars contend that detente in fact never existed.

While the Soviet Union believes that nuclear war and its debilitating results must be avoided, they see the development of superior capabilities wedded to a strategy designed to achieve military victory and a dominant post-war position as the only rational approach to nuclear forces. Too often the Soviets are opportunists who will seize any attempt or initiative to fill any vacuum they perceive to be forming, and attempt to expand their influence throughout the globe by all methods short of war.

The Soviet buildup of military forces has been, as James Schlesinger notes, "the like of which the world has never seen." The West has suddenly wakened up and said "What has happened?" The public on all sides are not only asking what has happened but are saying, "help". That is what those 30,000 marchers are saying. They are asking somebody to do something about it because they do not want to be incinerated in an international nuclear global war. That is what we are discussing here. How do we help? How do we answer? How do we do something? What is that something that we do?

The basic thrust of the minority report is unfortunately based on well-intentioned but somewhat naive premises, and therefore arrives at conclusions that could well increase rather than decrease the risk of war.

The report concludes that "we condemn the continued arms race." Who in this House of Commons does not condemn it? Idealism is the wellspring of new initiatives and progressive hope. The minority report, the pacifists, the hawks, all are a part of a balance of a very delicate equation that may make world peace. We cannot live without any of them. It is a matter of determining what that balance will be.

If in fact this minority report were to be implemented with all of its provisions, it would appear to the majority on the committee that the possibility and probability of a nuclear war would not be decreased but in fact increased. If the possibility of nuclear war is increased, tell me where the morality stands then? If it is increased and this minority report is implemented, and there was a world war, who would be morally wrong? Not the side that advocated balance and deterrents, but the side that suggested we take unilateral disarmament decisions. That is a position we cannot afford to take, a risk we cannot take for the moral purpose of maintaining peace in the world.

Rejecting the argument that a freeze is impractical due to the imbalance in tactical nuclear weapons in Europe, as this report does, is unrealistic and simplistic. The Soviet Union, with its tactical superiority, could launch a conventional war in Europe. This would be extremely destabilizing as the United States would have to respond with strategic nuclear weapons to deter or else be faced with the unacceptable fait accompli of Soviet hegemony in Europe.

There has been recently much ado about the Kennedy-Hatfield proposal for a nuclear freeze. We have seen the recent demonstrations; 30,000 in Vancouver, 800 in Ottawa, Ground Zero week in the United States and earlier massive European protests, all warning about the danger of having nuclear weapons. What about the danger of not having nuclear weapons? That is equally dangerous to having nuclear weapons.

I have been talking about the danger of nuclear war for years in this House, questioning ministers for several years, and nothing has been done. I have been talking about a civil defence program in Canada, and nothing has been done. To advocate the unilateral abolition of nuclear weapons, as many groups do, would make us susceptible to coercion.

A nuclear freeze at this time would perpetuate the deficiencies in allied forces which would increase rather than decrease the risk of war. A freeze at current levels is too pat, too simple, too naive and inadequate because it is only one part of that equation which throws off the balance.

If the Soviet Union and the United States were frozen at current levels, the Soviets would have little reason to negotiate for reductions as they would be frozen in an advantageous position. This can clearly be seen in the fact that intermediate nuclear force negotiations could only be instituted over Soviet recalcitrance after NATO decided to deploy the Pershing II and Cruise missile to counter the SS-20 in Europe. A freeze will not encourage reductions because there would be no incentive for the Soviet Union to negotiate from a superior position. The concept of a freeze at current levels ignores the strategic imperatives implicit in the concept of nuclear forces. Finally, a freeze on all aspects of production, testing and deployment of nuclear weapons would be extremely difficult to verify.

• (2130)

The report's proposal to institute a no-first-use policy would be unacceptable for two reasons. First, NATOs flexible response doctrine encompasses first-use, not first attack—and, Mr. Speaker, there is a big difference between first use and first attack—to counter an impending conventional rout in Europe by overwhelmingly superior Soviet forces.

Second, the treaty would not be an effective deterrent, but rather a useless scrap of paper if a nuclear scenario should ever arise as a contingency. A no-first-use treaty would not in any way, as the report contends, contribute to "a great increase in global security". If a nation perceives the need to use nuclear weapons, a treaty in face of that perception will become meaningless.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that his time has expired. I call upon the hon. member for Lac Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), but the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) may continue if there is unanimous consent. Are hon. members agreed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Wenman: I will conclude very quickly, Mr. Speaker. In discussing strategic nuclear weapons, it is important not to be obsessed by their undoubted power of destruction, so obsessed that one neglects to realize their power to deter major war. The world has had great cause to be gratified that all wars since 1945 have been well below the scale of global war. For most countries, including Canada, they have been quite small and far away. If we have strategic nuclear deterrence to thank for that, let us give that deterrent its proper due, notwithstanding the potential power for destruction if the deterrence should ever fail.

We have not had global conflict in the past 37 years, since the advent of nuclear weapons. Nuclear weapons have been invented and they cannot now be uninvented. It is exactly because nuclear war would be so terrible that the most important responsibility of government is to adopt policies which will prevent it. There are no simple answers, however,, to these complex and intricate problems. One should also, however, not limit the scope of possible solutions. Politics is the art of the possible; and we must reconcile the art of the possible with the ideal, and strive for it.

One practical alternative to disarmament is arms control. Arms control can reinforce deterrence and stabilize the military balance at lower levels of risk and effort. The overriding objective for arms control is reducing the risk of war. The most concrete hope for achieving this goal is through the negotiated mutual, balanced and verifiable reduction of nuclear arms at all levels to the lowest possible levels. This would encompass the successful completion of START, include the zero option for Europe, and would also, hopefully, be linked to a just and speedy conclusion to the negotiations for mutual balanced forces reductions, MBFR, in Europe. Bilateral negotiations, based on the mutual self-interest in the continued survival of one's national way of life, is a practical and legitimate solution to one of the most vital concerns facing humanity today.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me say that there is again a consensus in this House of Commons. There is a consensus that the objective we seek here tonight is a way to peace, to stability and to a better way for this world. Let not one of us put down the other point of view. Let us examine all of these points of view, let us establish a balanced, verifiable, mutual reduction in arms in the world, keeping these objectives before us and, above all, hold forth the objective of peace for ourselves, our country, our nation and our globe.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have a few minutes left, about ten I believe, to try to express what I felt during the sittings of this committee on disarmament and more specifically what I feel reading the motion now under consideration. The Chairman of the committee has asked me to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, in my opinion, he did an excellent job as chairman. In fact, he did an excellent job in general.

I now come back to the motion under consideration. I would like to quote the last lines of this motion, which read as follows:

—signed by six members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in April, 1982, calling for, inter alia, a world-wide nuclear freeze, no cruise missile testing in Canada and a worldwide pledge against first use of nuclear weapons.

That is signed by Mr. Broadbent.

Of course, the man in the street who would get to read such a resolution could not object to such pious wishes. No one could. It is obvious that no one wants a world war, that no one would want us to build missiles here, or anywhere else, that no one wants to be the first to attack. Everyone wants peace. I can understand such thinking on the part of Members of Parliament because they have to reflect the views of their constituents. When we meet with people, they tell us that they do not want war. However, we should always keep in mind that our constituents, first and foremost, want security. They do not want anyone to come around and take away their property, their homes, their country or their territory, and Members of Parliament may sometimes forget that fact. However, when someone who shows off in front of the people of Canada and the rest of the world as a candidate to the office of Prime Minister of Canada is seen moving such a motion in the House of Commons, I find it impossible to understand or justify, and even dangerous. I consider it dangerous that one of the three men now in full time competition to become one day Prime Minister of Canada should believe that such pious wishes can be approved by an assembly such as this one without endangering all Canadians.

Either this man completely fails to understand what Canada is all about and even less what the Soviet regime stands for and what the dangers are which now exist in the world, or he does not care what he does as long as he is gaining political advantages. There is no other answer, Mr. Speaker. If at the age of 32, after two years in this House, I can understand that a motion like this one, approved by such an assembly as ours, could open the door to the Russians, open up whole territories and place us in a situation where we would be unable to go anywhere, where we would no longer have any weapons, I do not see how someone who has been a Member of Parliament for as long as the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who is a party leader and who wants to become Prime Minister of Canada, can fail to do so.

It boils down to this, as I often say when referring to that party, is it the no-decision party. They do not know where they are going, and they will never know it, Mr. Speaker. They cannot know it and what better proof do you need. It is an aberration! Surely I would be the first to want to go and say tomorrow, listen, constituents from Lac-Saint-Jean, there will be no more wars. There are some people from Lac-Saint-Jean in the galleries this evening, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to greet them. There will be no more wars, no more nuclear weapons. That is all over. We are now all brothers. We will all love each other. We must not delude ourselves. We have responsibilities as a member country of NATO, one of many countries which have ensured their own defence for years and have never done otherwise, especially Canada. Everywhere Canada went as a member of NATO or the United Nations, it brought peace. I must say this because, as you know, this occurred under Liberal governments.

Of course, we had a Conservative government for nine months, but things were not going too well and it was not defeated too soon. The Canadian embassy was being moved from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. The Arab countries were all hopping mad at us. When the Russians invaded Afghanistan, we were declaring war against them even before the Americans. We were showing the way to everyone, swords held high. There we go! Canada is coming. Here we are! That was the policy of Joe Clark, the policy of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Fortunately, that lasted only nine months, but it was quite incoherent.

On the one hand, we have the fellow who tells us: There are no atom bombs left on earth, let us disarm Canada completely, let everyone disarm around the world because, even if the Russians rearm themselves, it cannot be a serious matter. On the other hand, we have the other group telling us: Let's go everybody, with fixed bayonets; let's go fight the Russians. Thank goodness there is a happy medium, and that medium is the Liberal Party of Canada. It happens to be there. If we did not have it, there would be problems, not only in Canada but elsewhere in the world. Things would be difficult. This matter is put to us and we are asked to vote on it. Let me tell you right now that I will vote against it for two main reasons. First, because under the cover of good intentions and with a view to tripping up the government, I would never give any authority to that party which cannot make up its mind about anything at all. And also because behind all these good intentions, the threat of a nuclear war remains. The day when we vote on and implement this proposal, the Russians will pounce on us. We would look smart. Listen, there are two very good reasons for that, and I ask my hon. colleagues of any party to be just as reasonable as we are. We are past the stage of pious wishes, we are reasonable people. We must consider not words but deeds. Canada is the country which reduced its Armed Forces from 120,000 to 80,000 troops over the past ten years. Canada is the country which had over 250 fighter planes and which will have fewer than 150 within two years. Canada is the country which is carrying out its disarmament in a sensible fashion, to be able to defend itself and assume its responsibilities within NATO, while keeping abreast of the very advanced new developments in new and defensive weaponry. And this is how things should be, Mr. Speaker.

About this hope of peace on earth, I said at one point when Mr. Arbatov, from the supreme Soviet, came to testify before the committee about disarmament, that the SALT II comprehensive discussions, the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament, all strike me as sheer hypocrisy. I will give you an example: suppose you placed two individuals one in front of the other and told them: You two guys are going to kill each other, but we are going to decide what sort of weapons you will use. Maybe you will use nuclear weapons, and maybe not. Maybe you will use shotguns, and maybe not. But you have to be enemies and fire at each other. I feel that this motion proposes something like that: no more nuclear arms or tests. But people will continue to get killed, because since World War II, some 25 million men, women and children have been killed in wars, Mr. Speaker. Although Lebanon, my father's native country, has been occupied by Syria for the past six years, I have not seen a single one of those holier-than-thou doves rise and say that foreigners should get out of Lebanon. No. Thousands of Lebanese have died these last ten years, but it matters not. We see them die and we do not even bother. Go ahead and die! In the meantime we, the sanctimonious, want no nuclear bombs. We are afraid they will explode over our heads.

Mr. Speaker, one conclusion is to be drawn from a motion such as this: those people want no more nuclear arms because they are more concerned with their own safety than with global peace. Truly, global peace is certainly much more than that. As I was saying, the day someone wants to introduce a motion here dealing seriously with peace, he will have to come here and ask whether there is in this world a table at which we could have one representative from the United States stating that we are capitalists and want peace, sitting with a representatives from the Soviet bloc stating that he is communist and wants to discuss peace, a table at which representatives from our countries would sit to deal with peace. Mr. Speaker, I have an anecdote to tell.

I stated in here some months ago, in a very emotional speech, that a Liberal could even be a communist. I know honorable members opposite, Mr. Speaker, members from the Progressive Conservative Party, from the constipated party, made use of this statement as far away as in their constituencies, in mailers, in partisan publicity to collect moneys. I know some of them who went as low as that. Do you know what that means? Narrow-mindedness. That is the kind of people who are responsible for wars, who say that the other fellow over there, the Russian who is stuck with a communist government, is somehow different from you, that you must shoot at him simply because he is a Russian. And the other fellow, like Brezhnev, who is at the other end and tells his Russians: "You are going to shoot at Canadians because Canadians are capitalists." They are the ones who are truly responsible for wars, not the arms. What is lacking is the leadership, the fact that 300 million Russians are told: "You are communists, you are going to invade Afghanistan. You are communists, your enemies are the Americans." It is the fact that on the other side Americans are told: "Beware, if there is a Russian here, shoot him."

When you play around with people's feelings, you become fascists, fanatics about ideas, flags and states. True peace is there, Mr. Speaker, when people can rise, travel around the globe, without shouting that they want no more nuclear arms because on that day nuclear arms will no longer be needed. But let us start from the inside, let us stop misleading Canadians into believing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9).

The question is on the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

PUBLIC SERVICE

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF HIGHER SALARIED EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the annual report of the Public Service Commission released yesterday showed that the number of federal public servants has significantly risen in the past year. There are now four times the number of government employees earning over $50,000 than there were in 1981, and double the number earning between $40,000 and $50,000. This growth has been condoned by the government for its own questionable purposes at a time when it has been strongly urging everyone else to practise restraint. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the government launch an immediate investigation into why such growth at the high salaried level of the public service was allowed and promise that, when he is finished his work in Washington, Arthur Erickson not be hired to come to Ottawa and begin designing new, palatial government buildings to house this increasingly affluent multitude.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ARTS

REQUEST THAT HOUSE CONGRATULATE CANADA COUNCIL ON ITS WORK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, 25 years ago Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent tabled in Parliament a bill for the establishment of a Canada Council for the arts, humanities and social sciences, which received royal assent on March 28, 1957. On April 30 of that year, the first meeting of the Canada Council was held in the prime minister's own office.

Considering the tremendous development of Canadian artistic expression in subsequent years, for which the Canada Council is largely responsible, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the House congratulate the Canada Council on its magnificent performance past and present, and that the House offer its best wishes for the continuation of the Council's success in the future.

Madam Speaker: The House may wish to demonstrate its admiration in the form of applause.

METRIC CONVERSION

LABELLING OF CHEMICALS AND SPRAYS USED IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a very important matter with regard to the welfare of farmers. Metric conversion has caused a great deal of confusion to Canadians, but particularly to farmers. The farmers are beginning their planting season and are handling chemicals and sprays which are very important to the outcome of the crop but which could be hazardous to the well-being of the farmers if not properly handled. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House ask the government to place on the labelling of chemicals and sprays instructions requiring amounts in imperial measurements.

FISHERIES

LACK OF CONSULTATION WITH SPORTS FISHING ADVISORY COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great importance to the B.C. fishing industry. Recent regulations affecting the sports fishing industry have been made without consultation with the minister's sports fishing advisory committee, causing members of that committee to wonder if their role is simply one of rubber-stamping questionable ministerial decisions. Considering the importance of public and industry understanding and support of new fishing regulations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to recognize the importance of prior consultation with the advisory committee, to seek and to heed their advice and, failing this, that this House ask the minister to inform his advisory committees of their true role so that members can determine how they can best contribute their time and effort in protecting their fishing industry.

FALKLAND ISLANDS—CONDEMNATION OF ARGENTINE ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this House condemn the Argentine government for failing to respond to the demand in the UN resolution of April 3 that all Argentine forces be withdrawn from the Falkland Islands, and urge the government of that country to respond positively now to that UN resolution so as to avoid needless conflict and loss of life.

INTERNATIONAL HOCKEY

OUTCOME OF HELSINKI GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, yesterday afternoon in Helsinki the Soviet and Czech hockey teams played to a zero-zero tie, thereby depriving Canada of a deserved silver medal. It was obvious to most observers that neither team was trying to win, which would either have cost the Czechs the silver medal or the Soviets their unbeaten record. In other words, the fix was in. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House express its deep disappointment with the hockey federations of both the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia for this unsportsmanlike display and that we call upon the International Ice Hockey Federation to change the play-off structure so that such a mockery cannot happen again.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

POLITICAL PARTIES

VACATING OF SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT OFFICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party is often the subject of widespread ridicule and scorn, but it apparently has at least one redeeming feature—purgation. During this week of the spring season, members of the New Democratic Party have cleaned out, shredded, and burned every piece of paper in the ministerial offices of Saskatchewan. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

• (1110)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED UPGRADING OF FRASER RIVER DIKES AT DELTA, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas dikes on Westham Island in Delta, British Columbia, are in imminent danger of being breached with this winter's heavy snowfall now melting and a resulting high freshett predicted for later this spring, and whereas the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has refused a request from the municipality of Delta to reallocate funds already designated under the Fraser River flood control program in order to upgrade the Westham Island dikes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House direct the Minister of the Environment to accept the recommendations of the Delta council to divert the $1.5 million presently designated for less urgent diking problems in Delta and redirect these funds to make urgently needed repairs to the dikes on Westham Island.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FINANCE

BUDGET PROVISIONS AFFECTING HEALTH AND DENTAL CARE PLANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), under pressure from the people of Canada, has made a number of amendments to his November 12 budget and has stated on a number of occasions his concern for fairness and equity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to reconsider the budget where it affects the taxing of health and dental care plans and the taxing of income not yet received in life insurance plans.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that a group of university professors have said that the recent budget did not provide equity in income distribution as claimed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), but rather was a document of "creative fiction with figures", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House calls on the Minister of Finance to bring forward a new budget that will be equitable to all Canadians, and that for once he depart from the Liberals' political and tactical tendency not to redistribute income to low-income Canadians except when an election is to be called.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

CALL FOR DECLARATION OF DAY OF MOURNING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas on Wednesday, in appearing before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his senior bureaucrats indicated that freedom of information legislation would be put on the backburner for this session, and whereas the Prime Minister indicated that he and his bureaucrats were having second thoughts about the fundamental principle of removal of Crown privilege and the need for independent judicial review, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House express its displeasure at this denial of the fundamental right of all Canadians by declaring a day of mourning for freedom of information legislation in Canada, and presenting a copy of the bill wrapped in black ribbon to the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he should not display any objects in the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSING

CANADA HOME RENOVATION PLAN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The minister is in the process of announcing—whether he has announced or not it is hard to say, it leaks out—a program called the Canada Home Renovation Plan. It is a program that perhaps will do something for our ailing construction industry, but is as yet just another plan with another series of initials, managed by his department. Could the minister advise the House whether the plan will be available to people generally across Canada? Will people be able in fact to borrow up to one third of the cost of renovations, provided it is within the ceiling of $3,000, for work done on their homes? Could the minister enlighten us with regard to the plan?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the opportunity of talking about the plan. I could not, in the time allocated in question period, give all of the details. The hon. member indeed has touched on the main elements of the plan. The top limit is $3,000, available to each successful applicant.

The program will be available through the CMHC office in those areas where unemployment in the trade is most severe. I would invite hon. members to check with their own offices to see whether an allocation has been made in those areas. That will assist them in responding to people who probably will contact their offices, as some indeed have contacted my local constituency office this morning. It is a program involving $30 million, distributed across the country, to generate employment in the construction trades. It requires an individual participating to spend $2 for $1 of the grant, which is forgivable and non-taxable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, is the minister telling us that this is available only to selected Canadians in selected areas, and that the brochure produced by the minister—which says nothing about designated areas and represents that the plan is generally available to all Canadians—is in fact a plan available only to those Canadians who happen to live in those areas of Canada that the minister wants to favour?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when the plan was announced approximatively a month ago, it was done in conjunction with the announcement of two other initiatives of the government directed especially to those areas in which there was high unemployment in the construction trades. There is no question about it, the plan is designed to assist employment in the trades in the construction industry in those areas in Canada where there is the highest surplus of people unemployed. I do not dispute the position of my hon. friend. This program is an additional $30 million directed to generate employment. It is directed specifically to those areas where that type of employment is in most serious difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING APPLICATION TO DESIGNATED AREAS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that there is tremendous unemployment in the building industry generally across the country, and in view of the fact that the materials for the building industry are almost all Canadian, why is the minister penalizing certain people, giving advantage to other people? Will the minister tell us if his riding of Scarborough is a designated area, and if Mississauga is a designated area?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the program for this additional $30 million was announced in conjunction with two other announcements at the same time. The first was an increase of 30,000 units available this year under the Canada Rental Supply Plan. That plan is available across the country and is directed to those areas where there are low vacancy rates. We believe that that plan will generate at least an additional 60,000 man-years of employment in the construction trades.

Secondly, it was announced in conjunction with a change in the CHIP program, the home insulation program, where eligible home dwellings date from 1961 to 1971.

The combination of the three programs, Madam Speaker, was designed to assist those trades in the construction industry. We think that the combination of these plans across the country generally will have the beneficial effect of providing an incentive of jobs, at least an additional 100,000 jobs across the country. I cannot answer the specifics of the last part of the question.

REQUEST THAT PLAN COVER HOMES INSULATED WITH UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, with your permission I would direct a question to the same minister. The new Canada Home Renovation Plan, CHRP, does not apply to those thousands of Canadian homes which contain urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The government's so-called generous UFFI plan, which the minister announced not too long ago, covers only about 5 per cent of homes with UFFI, leaving thousands of other houses with this insulation absolutely valueless because nobody wants to buy them. Why does the minister not apply the Canada Home Renovation Plan to those wishing to remove the foam, thereby creating jobs—that is the sole motivating drive for this aid plan—and help solve a major Canadian problem at the same time?

• (1120)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member should realize that the program we are offering home owners who insulated their homes with UFFI is actually far more generous than the other program to which he is referring here in the House.

The program for owners of homes insulated with UFFI provides for grants of up to $5,000, which are tax-free. The other program offers to pay up to 30 per cent of the cost of repairs, up to a maximum amount of $3,000. Therefore, it should be obvious to the hon. member that our program is the more generous of the two, because the amount offered may be as much as $5,000 and does not pay just a portion, but all of the repair costs involved.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, the interesting thing about that plan is that it applies to only 5 per cent of the homes which have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in them. The minister knows that, and his statement is misleading.

TAX FREE NATURE OF GRANTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I want to ask a final supplementary question of the minister responsible for CMHC. The minister said today the grant is non-taxable. Is the minister now saying to the people of Canada that he is providing grants to households earning up to $48,000, tax free?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the plan is designed in major part to serve families with incomes of up to $30,000.

Mr. McDermid: Tax free.

Mr. Cosgrove: Tax free, and for families earning over $30,000 the amount of the subsidy drops off on a declining basis. Yes, the program is designed to be tax free. If it were otherwise, I am sure the question I would be asked by the hon. gentleman would be on why we are taxing a benefit and why we are slowing down a job-generation program. Hon. members opposite cannot have it both ways. Are they in favour of employment? Are they in favour of our assisting Canadians? Are they in favour of our generating jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

ALSANDS PROJECT—GUARANTEES OFFERED TO PARTICIPATING COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question, directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, concerns the Alsands project. In its attempt to bribe Gulf and Shell to maintain their position as partners, the government is offering to these advocates of competitive free enterprise a guaranteed market, guaranteed price, guaranteed financing and, finally, a guaranteed profit of 20 per cent. Where is the risk in this package for these companies which really believe in the spirit of competition? Where is the enterprise?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is right in pointing out that the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada together have put forward a very attractive proposal to the private sector, but I want to remind him, on the other hand, that he is wrong in some of the points he has made. First, there is no guaranteed price in this offer. Second, there is no guaranteed return in this offer either, since there is no guaranteed price.

The hon. member asked what the risks are. Obviously the risks are mainly in terms of being able to build a plant on time which would produce the quantity of oil it is planned to produce. The experience with the two existing plants, Suncor and Syncrude, has demonstrated that those plants are having some difficulties regularly in terms of production and that all the technological problems have not yet been solved, although many of them have. There are risks involved, and they are not insignificant.

• (1125)

REQUEST THAT ENERGY PROJECTS BE MADE PUBLIC ENTERPRISES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the home owners who are losing homes all across Canada would like to have the so-called risks that the oil companies are being offered by the government in this deal, I can tell you. I stand by my earlier question.

Considering the whole range of concessions that the government has offered, particularly when it comes to financing, including the fact that the government is getting only 50 per cent of the equity and is putting up 85 per cent of the financing, why does the government not do what the vast majority of Canadians think is desirable, namely, that we should really be operating energy resources as public utilities and not as profit maximizing entities? Why does the Government of Canada not be courageous and straightforward when it comes to putting up this kind of money and, jointly with the Government of Alberta, make them into public enterprises?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I want to remind the Leader of the New Democratic Party again that under this proposal there is no guaranteed price. If the price of oil were to decline or not increase as much as inflation, for instance, over the next ten to 20 years, the rate of return to the industry would be much lower than the one that is otherwise anticipated. There is a significant risk involved there. On the other hand, if there is a profit to be made, if there are significant benefits to be gained, then my hon. friend has partly answered the question himself by pointing out that the governments are equity participants for 50 per cent of the deal.

The people of Canada and the people of Alberta are going to benefit from the project in terms of return on their investment, not only in terms of getting oil. The Governments of Alberta and of Canada, contrary to the position of the New Democratic Party, still believe that it is better to have joint public-private partnership in this regard. We do not believe that the economy of Canada is necessarily going to be better just because it is run by the government, as the NDP would like us to do.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT HAVE HIGHER SHARE OF EQUITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows very well that the people of Canada, as taxpayers, are putting up a disproportionate amount of money and they are not getting equity for that. The multinational companies are once again taking the Liberal government to the cleaners and holding the Government of Canada up to blackmail, and the government is backing down. I repeat, if we are putting up the dollars for risk investment in the energy sector, surely the Government of Canada should be saying that the people of Canada ought to get equity for every cent they put up. I ask the minister why this is not so.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, under this offer, Canadians will receive profits in proportion to their investments, if any profits are made. We shall have a 50 per cent equity in the project, and we shall be getting 50 per cent of any profits, in addition to the taxes, royalties, etc., that will be paid by the private sector partners in this specific project.

The hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party believes that the offer made by both governments was too generous. If, for some reason, participants in the consortium were to announce this afternoon that they were not going ahead with the project, I am sure the hon. member would rise in the House and accuse us of not having been generous enough.

INCOME TAX

QUERY RESPECTING PROPOSAL TO COLLECT TAX FROM FISHERMEN AT SOURCE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and concerns the announcement made by the Minister of Finance in the November budget regarding the mandatory income tax deduction at source for fishermen. Does the government still plan to implement this policy, and when is it going to announce to the fishermen what percentage it will take from them when they land their catch at the buyer's wharf?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for this question. First of all there is no deduction at source in 1982. No requirement for that has gone out from the department because we have no legal authority until such time as the act is amended.

• (1130)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Allan MacEachen doesn't think so.

Mr. Rompkey: What the Minister of Finance did in a very responsive and responsible way, Madam Speaker, was to accede to the request of myself and other members of Parliament, and indeed fishermen and of at least one fishermen's union, to provide the legal authority for deducting fishermen's taxes at source. How that authority is administered is up to my department, and we are in the process of deciding how that is to be done.

I might say that on Wednesday morning the Atlantic Liberal caucus had a full discussion on this matter, some eminently reasonable suggestions were put forward, we are looking at them, and my department will announce shortly how we intend to administer the law after 1982. I can assure the hon. member and the fishermen that it will be administered in the best interests of the fishermen.

Mr. Gass: Madam Speaker, I am really glad to hear that it is not going ahead in 1982. However, my question would be: does this apply to the freshwater and west coast fishermen as well?

COLLECTION OF TAX ARREARS FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, a fisherman in Prince Edward Island who owns a boat and has a helper pays 20 per cent of his catch to the helper. Fishermen who are behind in their taxes are being charged 25 per cent of their catch this year to pay for their tax arrears. So, if the government went ahead with this 20 per cent advance payment of taxes, it would force fishermen out of business; there is no doubt in my mind about that. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has said repeatedly there are too many fishermen in the business. Therefore, is this a policy by the government to force fishermen out of the business deliberately, thereby reducing the number of fishermen?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, it is because of the policies of this government, particularly the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, that fishermen are—

Mr. Epp: In the mess they are in.

Mr. Rompkey: —in the very improved situation they are in today where they can make suggestions and recommendations like this, and we can change the law on their behalf. I think I answered part of that question previously; it will apply to all fishermen all across Canada at such time as the law is changed and implemented.

I repeat that no instructions have gone out from my department for 1982. When the law is changed, then my department will implement it in the best interests of the fishermen.

PIPELINES

FUTURE OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday he was unable to give us satisfactory answers regarding the Alaska gas pipeline, so today I will give him the opportunity to give us a little better performance.

The minister knows that we on this side are very concerned about the possibility of 250,000 man-years of work being lost if this project does not go ahead. Thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in spin-offs right across the country will be lost. The question I would really like answered is on what date will this project commence. If we cannot be given that answer, what action does the government plan to take if the Americans do not keep to their end of the bargain? There have been veiled threats by the pipeline commissioner and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government considering refusing permission to build a pipeline across Canadian territory, which would be self-defeating? Is it threatening to reduce Canadian exports of natural gas?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday on the subject.

THE CANADA COUNCIL

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO REVISE COPYRIGHT ACT

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications responsible for the Canada Council. Could the minister inform the House whether he intends to mark the Council's birthday by seeing to it that the Copyright Act is revised to include mechanisms that will protect authors and composers who are making a very substantial contribution to the culture of this country?

[English]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his question, and I note that we are indeed celebrating today the twenty-fifth anniversary of the first meeting of the board of the Canada Council. That meeting was held in the offices of Prime Minister St. Laurent who introduced the legislation. Perhaps Madam Speaker would allow me to say how honoured we all are to have with us today a distinguished group of artists and performers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: —from every province of the country, led by the very distinguished chairman of the Canada Council, Mr. Mavor Moore.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, there is obviously no other institution, public or private, in Canada which has done more to encourage artistic—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I would ask the hon. minister to answer the question.

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, I was just about to answer the question. I simply wanted to add that the Canada Council has brought artistic expression to a level of unprecedented excellence in this country.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member is, of course, an important one for all artists, composers and authors in Canada, and I am very pleased to be able to inform the hon. member that a review of the Copyright Act is a priority issue for both the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and myself as well as for the other government members, and that we intend to continue to make it one of our priorities during the coming months.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, thank you for recognizing me again. I do not know that the answer of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a few moments ago was an improvement at all. I suspect that it was not. His iron cladding is getting rather rusty. I have two specific questions which he should be able to answer, at least partially.

Can the pipeline still be financed entirely privately, or is the minister aware of any suggestion for public financial involvement? Secondly, arising out of the question asked by the hon. member for Yukon yesterday concerning Exxon becoming a major equity partner, can the minister today confirm or deny the rumours of Exxon's major equity participation in the pipeline, as promised yesterday?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, regarding the first part of the question, private financing in Canada was possible and still is, so far as I know. The Foothills representatives did not mention any problems to me related to financing the project in Canada. As far as financing the American section is concerned, I was told that private financing for an amount of about $24 billion had been arranged, and as far as I know, there has been no particilar difficulty in this respect. I do understand that there are some problems among the various partners, and I may add that I do not have any more information than the hon. member with respect to the rumour about Exxon.

AGRICULTURE

REDMEAT INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, it has been very difficult to know whether or not the Minister of Agriculture has been aware of the continuing deterioration in the agricultural financial situation because of the way he has been making promises and talking about things which might happen. The last time he made a promise was about three or four weeks ago when he said that he would announce his plan soon.

Can the minister tell us when this plan, which he has been talking about really for months, will be announced, and will it include for the red meat industry stabilization for 1981 which specifically could result in payments of up to $40 per head? When can we see the action he has been talking about for a long time, or else his resignation which he promised last fall?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the plan which I am about to submit will be ready very shortly. We promised to call the provincial ministers and farm organizations as soon as it was ready. However, some organizations have changed their minds several times on what kind of plan they wanted. They have now submitted a plan, for instance, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, similar to what I offered them in 1977. They said mine was too good, too great in 1977. Now they have created a plan which they think is their own, but it has about nine of the 12 points I proposed in 1977-78. So there is nothing new in what they are proposing, and it is also very costly. What we are proposing will be the kind of plan which will be good for the entire red meat industry.

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN STABILIZATION PROGRAMS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture, and it is a very specific question. It has to do with stabilization and the way the federal government might come forward with stabilization programs. The minister will know that one of the major difficulties has been that provinces have been encouraged to get into stabilization programs and have been encouraged to provide support in a number of ways. Then in the stabilization process, the federal government would deduct provincial contributions from whatever involvement the federal government had. Does the minister intend to deduct any contributions which the provincial governments may have already made or intend to make to these plans, from federal contributions? Will the minister ask the minister of agriculture of Ontario to meet with himself and all the other ministers of agriculture across the country—this question was asked yesterday—so they can discuss this question of stabilization and the promises which the minister has made for $1 billion to the Farm Credit Corporation and so on, instead of waiting for July 11?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, July 11 is a very good day. That is my birthday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I don't know why the hon. member thought about that, because it is a vintage day for sure.

Miss MacDonald: And a vintage year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I will be 57 years old then and I have never felt younger in my life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: In 1977-1978 I offered the provinces 100 per cent of income assurance for the farmers, and not one province picked it up at that time. They said it was too rich, etc. They are not suggesting anything like that now. I am suggesting that if the provinces want to go ahead with programs on their own, let them pay for them, because we told them before that we did not intend to piggy-back any of their programs at all. We made that clear again the other day, and they know that damn well. Some of them are hoping that I will come forward with money and relieve them of promises which they have made to their producers, some of which were made to producers without consultation with us at all. I promised them consultation on an over-all plan that we intend to submit, one which will not cost their treasuries or our treasuries millions of dollars either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

STATISTICS OF FEMALE EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the status of women. The minister was reported yesterday as saying that she thinks the affirmative action program in the public service is doing quite nicely, yet the annual report of the Public Service Commission, which was tabled yesterday, revealed that female public servants accounted for only 4.3 per cent of the top group in that work force. There were no women in the EX-5 category during 1981. This category is a stepping stone to the deputy minister level. Would the minister explain to the House how she can define these deplorable statistics as "quite nice progress for women in the public service"?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): I would be very happy to, Madam Speaker. I appeared before the committee the other night. At that time I made it perfectly clear that I was not happy with the progress in the civil service, but I was a lot happier with what was happening in the civil service as opposed to what was happening to women in the private sector. A study done in the province of Ontario confirmed that, namely, that women in the public sector are doing much better than women in the private sector. I feel that as minister responsible for the status of women I should be most concerned about those who need help most, namely, women in the private sector.

POSITIONS HELD BY WOMEN IN DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. If she is not too happy about what is going on in the private sector and perhaps the public sector, could she explain to the House why, within her own Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, only 5 per cent of the management category of positions are held by women, and that women account for 80 per cent of the lower ranked administrative support category positions?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member obviously does not understand affirmative action as do most people in this country. Affirmative action is not the application of arbitrary quotas. Affirmative action is the kind of plan that attacks systematic discrimination, and because it attacks systematic discrimination it will take some time before we will see women getting to the top. I suggest to the hon. member that he take a look at affirmative action and how it is applied. Then, perhaps, he will be able to support us properly.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PROGRESS OF BILL C-43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. The minister has talked about openness in terms of arts and culture, but his record with regard to freedom of information is absolutely deplorable, and so is the record of his governement. Has the minister so misled the Prime Minister and his colleagues that the Prime Minister would say the government at this stage is worried about bringing in a bill because cabinet documents ought to be withheld, when he knows that there is now a specific exemption dealing with cabinet documents contained in Clause 21? Given that situation, what attitude is the Minister of Communications taking with his colleagues and the Prime Minister?

When can this House and the country see, at long last, life breathed into the commitment which the minister made when he almost broke his arm patting himself on the back because he brought in Bill C-43?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the hon. member likes to indulge in histrionics. All of us in this House know that very well.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Facts, not histrionics, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fox: As a matter of fact, the hon. member is a well known performer as far as the people in this House are concerned. The facts of the matter have not changed one bit since I answered the hon. member in this House a week or two ago. He knows that the common front of the provinces, which was led by the Conservative attorney general of the province of Ontario, and which was highly supported by the former NDP attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan, has now dissolved.

I have indicated quite clearly that there is now no longer a question of going with the uniform bill approach in the field of access to information since there is no longer a desire on the part of the provinces to do so.

However, the same letter advising me of the dissolution of this provincial common front, which originated with the Conservative attorney general of Ontario, reiterates on behalf of the attorneys general of the provinces a number of concerns about the wording of the bill. Since that has happened, we on this side have also had the benefit of advice from the Canadian Bar Association, which has been added to the documentation going to my cabinet colleagues who will have to decide whether or not the bill comes back to the House in its present form or whether it will be in order to make some amendments to the bill to ensure that it is both a practical and a credible bill which gives us as much access to information as is humanly possible.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Those amendments are usually brought before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The minister has been trying to elude that committee for weeks now.

Mr. Crosbie: And delude it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why does the minister not come before the committee now, and get on with it?

PRESENTATION OF AMENDMENTS IN COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that we are almost finished consideration of the freedom of information bill. The minister knows that if we can avoid some NDP nit-picking—

An hon. Member: They have a lot of nits.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —three or four substantial hearings on the subject would complete the matter. The minister knows we have given him a commitment to have third reading completed in one day. In other words, Madam Speaker, there is no excuse why this bill cannot be passed by June 30, unless there is no commitment from the government. Will the minister advise his colleagues of this? Will he advise them to move quickly? Will he advise them to come before the committee with whatever amendments they may have, so that we can at long last have a freedom of information law in this country? We are awfully close. The only thing that can hold it up now is either nit-picking by the New Democratic Party or loss of commitment on the part of the Government of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This is the second time that particular wording has been used. The question has been asked, and that should be it. Would the minister answer briefly, please?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, at least ten or 12 questions have been raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Answer one of them.

Mr. Fox: One is why I do not return to the committee immediately. Unlike the hon. member, I do not think there is any purpose in going before the committee until there is a decision by cabinet—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have had two years.

Mr. Fox: —as to whether or not amendments are in order. Once this has been decided upon, the government will make a statement as to its intentions concerning the access to information bill and we will be returning it from committee in due course.

I indicated to the hon. member last week that the matter was presently before cabinet. There is no point in going back before the committee until there is a decison on what amendments ought to be brought before the committee; otherwise we will simply be wasting the time of the committee.

HOUSING

CMHC ROLE IN RENEWING MORTGAGES ON UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATED HOUSES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. I would like to get a clarification of policy. Is it the policy of the minister responsible for Housing that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation should guarantee all applications for renewal of mortgages for UFFI homes. If it is the policy of the government, has CMHC been so instructed and are they so behaving?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

REQUEST THAT BANKS BE INSTRUCTED TO RENEW MORTGAGES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it has been reported by those applying for renewal of mortgages on UFFI homes that the banks have hesitated, if not refused, to renew any mortgage on any UFFI home, regardless of the guarantor. Therefore my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for banking. Has he asked, or will he ask the inspector general responsible for banking to advise the banks that they are morally and, I hope, legally and govermentally instructed and obligated, with a guarantee from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to renew every application for mortgage renewal for those who have had the misfortune of purchasing a home which contains UFFI?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member's views and I will discuss the matter with the Inspector General of Banks to determine what is approriate in the circumstances.

THE CONSTITUTION

ATTENDANCE AT FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in his response to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, the Prime Minister indicated that the provinces will play a role in deciding who will represent aboriginal peoples at next year's constitutional conference. The Prime Minister stated to me in a letter dated March 8, 1982, that the NIB, ICNI and the NCC would be the national representatives of aboriginal peoples at the conference. What right do the provinces have to decide who will represent aboriginal peoples at the conference? Also, which organizations is the government planning to invite to the conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as the federal government is concerned, it is still our intention to want those three national organizations present to argue the case for constitutional change. The hon. member asked further what right the provinces have. The hon. member knows that an amendment to the Constitution can only be obtained with a certain degree of provincial support. Therefore it would be natural in any constitutional conference to consult with the provinces to ascertain their views with respect to timing—as I indicated yesterday—participants, and items on the agenda.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister and all Canadians know that beneath the rhetoric from Indian leaders there is a great sense of hurt and feeling of betrayal. I believe that it is important for the Prime Minister to show some leadership by meeting with them and helping to restore a sense of belonging to Canada.

The Prime Minster has indicated that he was willing to meet with representatives of the national organizations in advance of the constitutional conference in order to discuss the format. Will he hold this meeting at an early date, and will he drop this requirement that there be some form of consensus among the three national organizations since they do represent different people and have different points of view?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks of the desirability of this government providing leadership. I would point out to him that it was this government which entrenched aboriginal rights in the Constitution for the first time in our history. The further step of defining the exact limits of those constitutional rights is one which we hope will be taken at the federal-provincial conference which has been made obligatory under the Constitution, again through the initiative of this government.

With respect to the content of that discussion and as to whether there will be a need for similarity of views between the three native groups, I do not consider that as a priority which is necessary, but I will have to have further information as to what kind of distinction the hon. member has in mind. We do not think that there are different categories of Canadians. We believe that all Canadians should be equal and it would be desirable to attempt to define rights in a way which does not distinguish between ethnic groups.

Mr. Crosbie: Some are more equal than others. What about Arthur Erickson?

Mr. Trudeau: Now we have the hon. member for Caligula who wants to participate, Madam Speaker. You may want to recognize him on a supplementary question. His interest for native people is well known since he commented on the Minister of Finance's return from Gabon and described that as a country of monkeys. I do not think that fits him very well as a critic for external affairs.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ABSENCE OF WOMEN FROM PUBLIC SERVICE SENIOR EXECUTIVE CATEGORY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. He will know that yesterday the Public Service Commission presented its annual report which showed an increase of female employees in the public service last year of some 6,000. Of those, over 5,000 were in the lower and insecure categories of employment, namely, clerical, stenographic, and indeterminate. Not a single woman made it into the senior executive category. This is just a continuation of the status quo, where women in the public service get locked into low-paying and support positions. I would ask the President of the Treasury Board why the government is satisfied to perpetuate the role of women in the public service as little more than a reserve pool of labour.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that that is why we have the Affirmative Action Program and the equal opportunities programs. As my colleague, the Minister of State for mines indicated, that is why we regard it as a matter of great concern. But, in fact, the report demonstrates that steady progress is being made. I hope that steady progress is accelerated by the affirmative action plans we have introduced. I might add that we plan on briefing all interested members, particularly the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, on the progress which is being made through the affirmative action programs which were introduced when this government returned to power in 1980.

Miss MacDonald: I am sure that even the President of the Treasury Board should understand that those programs are simply not working. In the management and executive category some 310 male employees were added last year and only 14 women. That is the difference and that is why it is not working. Not a single woman made it into the senior executive category.

REPORTED COMMENT BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONER

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister about the comment of one of the Public Service Commissioners who said, "It may be that women are not ready or that they do not have the right kind of experience for the top jobs." I deeply resent that kind of comment coming from the Public Service Commission. Is that the opinion of the government, and, if not, will the President of the Treasury Board convey to the members of the Public Service Commission that the change of attitude should begin with them?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am sure whoever made the comment will take due note of the hon. member's remark. I am not the minister responsible for the Public Service Commission; the Secretary of State is. Nevertheless, I would welcome any suggestions the hon. member may have. She will have ample opportunity to put them forward at the time of the briefing, to indicate how she thinks we can make further improvements. I can assure hon. members that we are taking advantage of every opportunity, exploring every possibility—short of establishing some kind of strait-jacket quota system, which is perhaps what the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands wants. We do not believe that is necessary. We believe that there are qualified women to take senior responsibility in the public service and that is happening. Progress is not as rapid as we would like to see it; that is why we have the Affirmative Action Program. I dearly hope the hon. member will show up for the briefing which I hope will take place in the next several weeks.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PRICES CHARGED TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance will know that under the National Energy Program the Canadian consumer is faced with an artificial marketplace with artificially high priced gasoline at $2 a gallon as opposed to the prices in the United States, the lowest of which I heard is 99 cents. The other case involves the artificially low price of oil at $24 a barrel at Estevan as opposed to $36 a barrel at Williston. In his capacity as Minister of Finance, is he not concerned about the economic problems of this country because he has placed the consumers in this climate of artificially high costs while, at Estevan, he taxes the people between the two levels of government, which will shortly be changed in that province, at $1.36 a gallon—

• (1200)

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gustafson: That was the end.

Madam Speaker: Well, I thought so.

Some hon. Members: Where is the Minister of Finance?

An hon. Member: Stonewall.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, was there a question?

Mr. Nielsen: There was a question but you were not listening.

Mr. Gustafson: I ask the Minister of Finance is he not concerned about the consumers of Canada in this artificial situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Bosley: The real Minister of Finance!

Mr. Epp: You did write the budget two times back.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, may I remind the hon. member that if we compare Canada's prices at the refinery gate with those of the United States, they are lower in Canada than in the United States, even today. The difference varies from province to province and state to state according to as the hon. member indicated, provincial and state sales tax. If, the government of Saskatchewan will remove the sales tax in Saskatchewan, he will find that the price in Estevan will be cheaper than the prices in neighbouring states.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This is where the big difference lies. The best evidence with regard to this matter is that if one considers home heating oil, for instance, one will find that the price in Canada is as much as 7 cents to 10 cents a litre cheaper than in the United States today.

Some hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Lalonde: In Boston, New York, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Portland, compared to St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Calgary. Is that enough cities for hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MRS. APPOLLONI—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker. Just one hour ago it came to my attention that an editorial in the Toronto Sun has totally inaccurately quoted me out of context, as a result of which—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Appolloni: —motives have been imputed to my recent intervention during a hearing before the standing committee on this—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that things written in articles about members of Parliament do not necessarily constitute a question of privilege; but if the hon. member feels that she has a question of privilege, she may give me notice. The hon. member did come to the Chair to tell me that she wanted to be heard on a question of privilege and said that the matter had occurred today. I thought she meant it had occurred during the course of the deliberations this morning. However, if the hon. member feels she has a question of privilege, she might send a notice to my office and it will be dealt with in due course.

Mrs. Appolloni: Madam Speaker, may I request that I speak on my question of privilege this coming Tuesday.

TAXATION

TABLING OF TWO PAPERS RESPECTING FEDERAL SALES TAX SHIFT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): In response to some suggestions made earlier today in the standing committee by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I would like to table, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), two papers in both official languages relating to the shift in the federal sales tax to the wholesale level.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. TOUSIGNANT—PRACTICE RESPECTING TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I just want to know to what extent hon. members are allowed to bring all kinds of unusual documents into the House, and what guidelines we should follow, because if all kinds of documents may be brought into the House ad infinitum, to table them as the hon. member did just now, perhaps I too could use my imagination and bring gifts along for these people next week.

Madam Speaker: I would urge the hon. member not to use his imagination, because it is absolutely forbidden to bring documents into the House as was done by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and the hon. member must have noticed that I said it was not allowed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE OF PHOTOGRAPHERS IN CHAMBER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, on that point and on a related point, your Honour has no doubt had an opportunity by now to examine yesterday's Hansard concerning the point of order I raised with respect to the presence of still photographers behind the curtains, obviously for the purpose of taking set up photographs of the incumbent in the Chair and another hon. member. At that time I asked that that practice be rigidly prohibited and that the agreement between House leaders be enforced by the Chair. Otherwise, attitudes of hon. members might alter with respect to the continuation of allowing still photographers behind the curtains.

I hope that that kind of incident does not occur again, particularly involving, as it did, the Chair and the hon. member from the government side.

Madam Speaker: It is not clear that the Chair was involved. However, I take the remarks of the hon. member in good note, because, yes, it is true that photographers have been allowed to photograph during the question period and the permission has been extended to important debates. But the importance of debates would only be determined by the Chair itself and there would then be consultation with the leaders of the different parties.

I can assure the hon. member that the agreement between House leaders will be very strictly enforced. The permission was given because hon. members generally agreed. However, they generally agreed to the photographs being taken under certain conditions, and I am doing my best to ensure that those conditions are observed. I can assure the hon. member that the incident yesterday to which he referred will not occur again.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you indicated just now that photographers were given permission to take photographs in the House. I realize this is still at the experimental stage, that you have consulted with the House leaders and that we will have an opportunity to discuss the matter again in the near future. I feel that incidents such as those that have occurred within the last two days should be taken seriously, and I hope that if and when we should decide to accept photography in the House, you will be authorized to impose a minimum of decorum so as to prevent occurrences of the kind we have seen here today.

Madam Speaker: What happened today happened in the normal course of the question period. I think the minister will recognize that I did what I could to prevent the hon. member from tabling the documents. I believe the rules of the House were observed today. As for cameras, that is an entirely different matter, and I can assure the minister that I shall try to enforce the rules and conditions we have set on the presence of cameras in the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,759 and 4,081.

[Text]

TRANSFER OF DISTRIBUTION UNIT OF TOURISM OFFICE

Question No. 3,759—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

With reference to the proposal to transfer the distribution unit of the Canadian Government Tourism Office to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, does the government intend to table all correspondence and interoffice memoranda which flowed between and among the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism), the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Public Works and all relevant correspondence and interoffice memoranda from the assistant deputy minister of tourism, T. R. G. Fletcher, to the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) for the calendar year 1981?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism is concerned: No.

LEAR JET

Question No. 4,081—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did Canadair Ltd. engage in a financial transaction with the late William Lear, prominent U.S. aircraft inventor and designer, for the acquisition of airframe design rights for the aircraft known as the "Lear" jet and, if so, what were the considerations for the acquisition of the rights?

2. Did Mr. Lear, upon informing himself of the results of the modifications proposed by Canadair, insist that his name no longer be associated with the aircraft and, if so, on what date did this occur and what are all the details?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes. Canadair, in exercising its option to purchase the rights to the LearStar 600 design, entered into a royalty agreement with Mr. Lear in October, 1976 whereby a sliding scale royalty was to be paid on each aircraft sold.

2. No. Mr. Lear did not agree with Canadair's modifications to his original design, particularly the wide body which has since become a strong selling feature of the aircraft. However, he did not insist that his name be removed from association with Canadair or the aircraft. The name change from the LearStar 600 to the Canadair Challenger was principally to avoid confusion in the marketplace with the significantly smaller Gates LearJet family of business jets and the Lockheed JetStar I and JetStar II aircraft; and to properly identify Canadair as the developer and manufacturer of the aircraft, not LearAvia Corp. A working relationship continued with Mr. Lear until his death in May, 1978 and with Mrs. Lear and LearAvia Corp., after his death with the prospect that Canadair might participate in the development and production of his turboprop Learfan 2100 design.

*CITIZENSHIP ACT

Question No. 3,694—Mr. Cullen:

How many applications were received under subsection 5(4) of the Citizenship Act "to reward services of an exceptional value to Canada"?

[English]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows. From the commencement of the Citizenship Act on February 15, 1977, there have been two applications received for the grant of citizenship under subsection 5(4) of the Citizenship Act as a reward for services of an exceptional value to Canada. One applicant was granted citizenship by direction of the governor in council and the other application was finalized by the withdrawal of the application by the applicant.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining quetions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could have permission to revert to bills with respect to introduction and first reading of an act to amend the Export Development Act.

Madam Speaker: I do not think the minister heard the translation. Does the House give permission to revert to bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lumley moved for leave to introduce Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

OFFICIAL REPORT

PRACTICE RESPECTING APPENDING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, for better understanding, I will proceed in this official language of Canada.

Last night during a very lively exchange, and it was probably very noisy at this end of the chamber, between the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and myself, and we at this end of the chamber are absolutely certain about this, unanimous consent was given to table as an appendix to yesterday's proceedings—and this could be done today—the draft resolution adopted unanimously by the Committee on Political Questions, International Security and Disarmament in Lagos. This resolution was accepted by all parliamentarians of the world. It was part of the debate last night. It was agreed to by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and all Conservative and Liberal members who participated.

There was a lively exchange between the New Democratic Party and myself. I find this so important that I am willing to say I may not have been as gracious as I should have been by not accepting that the full text of the minority report would also be tabled. I admit that, but I am in agreement.

I spoke with the leader of the New Democratic Party. He is willing to agree that he gave his consent last night to append to yesterday's proceeding what took place last night, even though Your Honour may read otherwise. If you read attentively page 16763 of Hansard, you will see in that exchange we proceeded gradually toward the acceptance, and the hon. member for Oshawa said "go ahead, go ahead". That was on the understanding that we were not debating it. I admit we could have appended all the document, but I was referring to it then in the debate.

The motion to have that tabled was accepted after a very lively and probably noisy exchange. I will ask those members who have the official responsibility to acknowledge that there was indeed unanimous consent at the end of the debate. There was no dissent on this side or in the Conservative party. There was a difficulty with the New Democratic Party which was resolved. I understand they are now willing to attest to the fact that what I am saying is true.

Madam Speaker: I am really in the hands of the House. I have a little reservation because the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is not in the House at this time. Possibly someone could speak in his name. I am in the hands of the House.

Official Report

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I discussed this matter with the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He agrees entirely with the comments made by the hon. member who has just spoken. We did in fact wish to give unanimous consent last night. The hon. member for Oshawa thought he had given it. We would be happy to have the report appended to yesterday's Hansard.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the Standing Orders now provide that a minister of the Crown can table any document any time he pleases. This matter has arisen on many occasions in the past. When it has arisen, the position of the Chair has always been that it would be creating an undesirable precedent to append documents used in debate to the daily Hansard. I think you will find it has not happened in the past except in debates such as the throne speech debate, the budget debate and debates of that nature.

I suggest you will want to consider this matter very, very carefully before opening the door to a practice that could see myriads of documents used in debate, consent once having been given by the House, appended to the daily debate. You would find that Hansard could be literally inches thick.

While there might be a consensus as to the desirability of having that material used in debate, it would establish a very questionable practice for the future. I suggest that we follow past practices and confine Hansard to the recording of the daily debates and only the daily debates.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is accepted practice that in exceptional circumstances or by unanimous consent, certain documents may be printed as an appendix to Hansard. I have no intention of doing away with this practice, but I assume that if there is no unanimous consent in a given case, that is the end of it. However, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says there is a rule allowing ministers to table documents, and that is true, but tabling documents does not mean the documents may be printed as an appendix to Hansard. So that is not the solution. In any case, if there is unanimous consent, of course the document may be printed as an appendix to the official report, but from the comments of the hon. member for Yukon, I conclude that they are not prepared to give that consent.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: May I suggest, Madam Speaker, that you take the matter under advisement and that you and your officers at the Table look carefully into past practices. If we establish this kind of precedent, then every member who takes part in any debate in this House would likely be accorded the same privilege, because we are all equal here. You will burden Hansard to the point where it becomes a totally unmanageable document.

Mr. Pinard: If we give unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: The House leader says if we give unanimous consent. There is no question as to where our sympathies lie here. At the same time, think of the consequences of opening that door. If we give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), surely every other member will be entitled to be treated in the same fashion. No matter what the volume or how thick the document might be, every other member would be entitled to have such appendages made to Hansard during a daily debate. We could end up with a Hansard that would be a foot thick. Think of the consequences of opening that door.

Because the point has arisen, I suggest that the Chair take it under advisement and perhaps some time next week indicate to the House what the past practice has been, and perhaps even express a view as to whether or not the Chair, which in the long run is responsible for the administration of this place, thinks it is a desirable practice to establish when it certainly has not been done in the past.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would like to add a comment. I can appreciate what the House leader for the official opposition is saying. I can imagine the possibilities. However, I would like to suggest on this occasion, given the nature of the document, the nature of the debate and the fact that this debate is not likely to repeat itself frequently, that we give unanimous consent to do this, and that we then ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider whether that is an advisable practice to follow and give us a ruling on it with the understanding that this unanimous consent does not set a precedent.

• (1220)

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the beauty of debate in this House, as I was taught by the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, is that at least some people are listening to each other. I would submit to you and to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that I do not see why in this case we should punish some retroactivity. I am asking a correction to what happened last night, to what was agreed to. I understand very well the precedent. That may be, but this is an exceptional resolution, accepted by the parliamentary union of the world. Exceptionally, agreed to unanimously for the first time ever, this motion was accepted by parliamentarians—and we are parliamentarians.

There was no question of my using that last night in the debate; not at all, because then, of course, some members could rise in the debate—I submit this to you—and say: "I only have 20 minutes but I would ask permission to table the following document". Of course, I would side with the hon. member for Yukon in saying that we have to be very careful on that account. That is true, of course, there is no doubt that there would be abuse over the years. I am asking, Madam Speaker, not to be punished retroactively for something that happened last night.

Last night the Conservative official opposition—it is in Hansard—gave consent. There was an exchange between the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the hon. member who is now a member of the Privy Council, the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party. After that exchange this was agreed. Because of the very special nature of this parliamentary group, we are asked at the International Parliamentary Union to have some kind of follow-up some time with our resolutions. We can, at very great expense. I submit to you, and to members who want to listen to the debate, that there is never any follow-up with the international convention except through the House and members of Parliament. We are all asked once in a while to have some follow-up on our resolutions. I thought last night, because of the very special nature of the debate, that that was the most appropriate thing that could be appended, exceptionally, because it was unanimous, either by the Soviet Union on the one side and the United States and Great Britain and all the others.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Prud'homme: Again I submit to you, Madam Speaker, because of the very lively and noisy but far away from the Chair exchange that took place last night, that there was an agreement and that is why we proceeded with the debate, as reported on page 16763 of Hansard. You will see that the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) is quoted in it. I am in your hands, and I am in the general hands of the official opposition, not to do anything retroactively.

I can understand that in regard to participating in debate in the future we should really give all our attention to the precedent that may have been created. But I would not like the International Parliamentary Union resolution, or what took place last night, to be punished retroactively and today I am asking for a correction. That is all I am asking today, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I think it is relatively clear to the Chair that yesterday the matter was dealt with by the Speaker who was occupying the chair. The Acting Speaker did not find there was unanimous consent. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked me please not to open any doors that would create precedents that might change completely the nature of Hansard. I do not intend to open up any doors that I should not open; I am completely in the hands of the House. It is quite clear to me that if there is no unanimous consent for appending this document to Hansard, then it will not be appended. That is quite clear to me. I notice that there was no unanimous consent and therefore it will not be appended to Hansard.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, I have ruled on the question. There is no unanimous consent; that is quite clear.

Mr. Prud'homme: But there was, what took place at that time.

An hon. Member: It is not on that side.

Madam Speaker: I am quite clear that I have to read Hansard as it is. Yesterday the question was dealt with, though not to the hon. member's satisfaction, I realize that; but this matter has been brought up again today under the circumstances of which we are all aware, and in view of the debate that has just taken place, it is quite obvious to the Chair that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I am asking advice from the Chair. When, then, is it possible to make corrections to events that did take place? Last night around 12 o'clock I received the blues and I corrected the blues. To my astonishment, to my great surprise, I discovered the words of Mr. Speaker that you quoted very rightly. I said that is impossible. So I took the first opportunity today. I am in your hands, but when is it, then, that something can be corrected?

Madam Speaker: If the hon. member is in my hands, I would like him to sit down.

Mr. Prud'homme: So far, you do not see me—

Madam Speaker: I see the hon. member very well. I understand the hon. member's disappointment, but I think the hon. member knows the rules. The ruling was made last night. The hon. member is not pleased with that ruling, He has had a second chance to try to obtain what he wished the House to do. The House does not give unanimous consent; therefore, the matter is closed for the time being.

STATE IMMUNITY ACT

IMMUNITY OF FOREIGN STATES IN CANADIAN COURTS

Hon. Yvon Pinard moved, on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development, that Bill S-19, to provide for State Immunity in Canadian Courts, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard moved, on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development, that Bill S-19 be read the third time and do pass.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I am going to make a few brief remarks today with respect to this legislation. I open my remarks by observing that once again we have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) nowhere to be seen. He is not involved in the debate with respect to his own legislation, and he is not involved on the floor of the House with respect to matters under his general jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker, if one looks back at the record of the House since the present incumbent, as Minister of Justice, has taken over his responsibility and his portfolio, I think you will find, and I have been here to point it out, that he has not been present in the House for legislation for which he is responsible.

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if I am correct in this, but I am under the impression that the rules of the House provide that one member cannot comment on the presence or absence of another member in the House. We all know we have responsibilities not only in the chamber but also outside the House of Commons. It does seem to me, if I remember, that there is a ruling that commenting on a member's presence or absence is not appropriate.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not right.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I understand, Mr. Speaker, the point that has been made by the hon. member with respect to reflecting on attendance in the House. But I think it is fair to make reference to the fact that a minister sitting on the treasury benches of the government of the country—

Mr. Nielsen: He should be here for his own bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has not been present at all in this session to introduce legislation for which he has taken responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: He is wrong in that, too.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say to you, Sir, that that is not a reflection on his attendance in the House. Everyone knows, and those who are able to watch television know, that he is here quite regularly in question period.

The point I am trying to make is simply that the Minister of Justice has no interest in his responsibility to the extent that he does not even come forward to speak on legislation, but sends in a parliamentary secretary or some other functionary on the government side to deal with the legislation for which he has responsibility. I know that over the course of the last two years the Minister of Justice has been preoccupied with constitutional matters, but he has no interest in his responsibilities as Minister of Justice. He has no knowledge of the legislation before the House. He comes grudgingly before parliamentary committees. The man should be replaced. He is waiting with anticipation to get into another portfolio.

• (1230)

Mr. Nielsen: He is waiting for the Prime Minister's job.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister has done less in relation to his responsibilities than any other minister of justice in my recollection. I venture to say he has done less in relation to his departmental responsibilities than any minister of justice in Canadian history. He has simply been absent. He has never been around to discuss the issues which come before his committee, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I realize that this is not the most earth-shaking and earth-shattering bill in the world, but why is the minister not here to introduce it at third reading and to indicate the position of the government after committee consideration? Why must I stand and deal with the important issues contained in this legislation? Is no one on the government side prepared to discuss this matter, or will hon. members opposite sit there, collect their pay and say nothing? I want to make that point firmly.

The bill dealing with sexual assault is a very important piece of legislation. It was touted as being an important priority of the government. I was offended that that bill was not introduced by the Minister of Justice and that he was not here in the House to address that matter. His remarks at second reading lasted some five minutes and amounted to a winding up of the debate. The minister said he would see us all in committee. In relation to major amendments to the Criminal Code the minister has demonstrated so little interest in his responsibilities that he neglected or refused to be present, although he was here for question period on the days when that bill was under consideration at second reading stage.

We on this side of the House have been pressing the government to bring forward legislation on matters of justice and legal affairs. We have been beseeching the government House leader to bring forward important matters of priority in relation to justice and legal affairs. I can understand why the government House leader has been embarrassed. He has not been able to bring forward legislation because he has not had the support of the Minister of Justice. That clearly must be the reason this matter has not been brought before the House as a matter of priority.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I notice the hon. member is delighted that he was able to make me rise on a point of order. He reminds me of a lawyer who goes to plead a divorce case before the Superior Court and is actually pleading his case before a criminal court. I get the impression the hon. member does not know what he is talking about, he is entirely out of order, and he is not discussing the bill now before the House. He has made a vicious attack on a minister of the Crown who is respected across this country, he is talking arrant nonsense, and I would ask the Chair to call him to order and ask him to address Bill S-19. According to law, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has an excellent parliamentary secretary (Mr. Peterson) who is responsible for assisting the minister in his parliamentary activities. I would remind the House that the parliamentary secretary is present and that the Minister of Justice is doing excellent work, since he is more often in the House than otherwise. In the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to show a minimum of respect for this institution and to speak to the bill now before the House, Bill S-19, and to refrain from making such base attacks on a minister of the Crown who has done his duty for his country, and done it very well.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Because of the remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), the Chair has been considering the issue of whether the absence or presence of an hon. member or minister can be the subject of comment. I have not been able to find anything in the Standing Orders which gives me clear direction in that regard. Furthermore, I am aware—as are all hon. members—that it is a common practice to comment.

However, there is a matter to which the Chair can address itself. It is not the matter of presence or absence of a minister but, rather, the matter of relevancy. I was waiting and hoping the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) would direct his remarks to Bill S-19 in due course. The comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) related more to relevancy than they did to the matter of absence or presence.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am glad your ruling supports my position.

I like the Minister of Justice as an individual. He is a very nice fellow. He is a first-rate fellow, and it may be that he is doing government business out in Burlington or wherever he is today. I do not dispute that, but I thought he at least would have the courtesy to be in the House to deal with his own legislation. I made reference to other responsibilities of the minister only to show that he is never in the House when anything in relation to justice and legal affairs, which are his responsibility, is brought forward.

An hon. Member: What about the bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bill S-19 is an important bill in terms of the ability of Canadians to recover damages and compensation from representatives in Canada of foreign governments, but I just want to point out that, according to my recollection, this is the first bill which has come out of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs by way of report since this session began. I do not want to be irrelevant, but I think it is relevant that there has been no priority given by this government to matters respecting justice and legal affairs. These matters are of secondary importance. I think it is fair to say—and I make no reflection—that the minds of government members are on other matters, and amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with the rights of Canadians to pursue legitimate claims against defendants are secondary in importance.

We hear much about this government's lack of commitment with respect to economic matters. I say that applies equally to matters of justice and legal affairs, the liberties and rights of Canadians to have their rights protected as they should be.

This is the first bill to come out of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I congratulate the government for this great victory; we now have before us Bill S-19 dealing with diplomatic immunity. This is the extent of the government's accomplishment in the area of the rights of Canadians, and I suppose we should all be grateful. This weekend we will all go home feeling a glow of pride in our hearts because the government has moved so dramatically in the important area of protecting the rights of Canadians! I intend to go back to my constituents in Saskatoon West and tell them how proud I am of this government!

What other things are being dragged out in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs because of lack of commitment on the part of this government? My colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), very appropriately pointed out today in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that with respect to Bill C-43, which has been dealt with by the committee and almost completed, we now see the sad spectacle of this government's retreating from its commitment to freedom of information. The government very rightly is subject to the serious criticism of public opinion across the country. The government has no commitment to freedom of information and no commitment to civil liberties. The only commitment of the government is to make sure the people of Canada can sue, in certain limited circumstances, foreign diplomats in cases of civil liability. What a great record this government has! I think it should be commended. I say that, of course, without any seriousness at all.

What about Bill C-61, the proposed Young Offenders Act? We dealt with that expeditiously. Why is that not on the floor of the House of Commons to be dealt with?

Mr. Pinard: Bill S-19.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bill S-19 is before us, and we say Bill S-19 is a light at the end of the tunnel. After a great deal of effort on the part of the official opposition to put pressure on the government to take action, it has finaly moved.

If one looks at Bill S-19, one might get the impression from the title that it is a bill which extends diplomatic immunity to representatives of foreign countries operating in Canada. However, that is not the case; quite the contrary. It is an attempt to codify and set forth in statutory form the provisions, rights and limitations on diplomatic immunity, the rights of foreign countries to carry on so-called commercial activities in our country and the extent to which they are going to be held responsible with respect to contracts, loss, liability or damages suffered by Canadian citizens in the course of carrying on that commercial activity. There is an attempt here to specify the limitations placed on foreign countries represented in Canada and their agents.

• (1240)

Mr. Peterson: Author!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) is one of my favourite members. Not only is he a natty dresser, not only does he wear the latest Toronto clothes, but he is outstanding in his ability to speak from the seat of his pants. He is rarely able to articulate the hopes and aspirations of the people of Willowdale while on his feet, however. I am glad that he is at least in the House today, unlike the Minister of Justice. I hope that we will hear from him—

Mr. Deans: Don't start that again!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I just want the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to understand that I am sometimes encouraged to deal with the presence or absence of the Minister of Justice, who is rarely here to deal with the affairs of his department.

Mr. Deans: What about anybody else who is not here today?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, we win some and we lose some. Indeed, in some cases I wish that some of the members that are here were not, and I only have to look down to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain when I say that, without referring to him.

Mr. Deans: You are here so infrequently it is a wonder that you recognize me!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was in my riding when an election was called for April 26. In my riding the result was unanimous, though I take no personal pride in that and no responsibility for it; I just happened to be there doing the government's work, carrying out my responsibilities as a member of Parliament. I admit that I was not here regularly in the last two weeks, but I believe that my constituents desire personal attention occasionally and so I go to my riding to help them. If an election should happen to coincide, that is something over which I have no control.

I have been diverted, Mr. Speaker, when I have been trying to deal with this important legislation and rush it through the House on a Friday afternoon. As we know, this important legislation has to be dealt with, as has the government's record of commitment to civil liberties and the ability of Canadians to protect their interests in the courts of our land.

In the world today there are many governments—including our own—which are getting involved in what are called centrally controlled economies. This involves the creation of so-called Crown corporations. It is an involvement by government in commercial activity which normally has been confined to the area of private endeavour. This legislation is important in that it gives us an opportunity to review circumstances where we have not only the normal diplomatic representation in our country and the normal immunity that is given to such representatives—which is right and proper—but we are facing a situation where governments, agencies of governments and representatives of governments have become involved in commercial endeavours.

Petro-Canada is an example, for which representatives of the People's Republic of China are doing some work on the offshore. We also have representatives of Canadian commercial enterprises in other countries, and, of course, other countries have representatives in this country who deal commercially with private citizens and with corporations.

In terms of international law it is important for us to review the rights that Canadians have vis-à-vis representatives of foreign governments, whether they be diplomatic representatives or representatives of agencies that carry on commercial activities. We must consider the right of Canadians to collect compensation for wrongful acts.

The legislation was considered in committee and some concerns were expressed in the course of those hearings. I commend the parliamentary secretary for his conduct of the legislation through the committee. It is too bad that the Minister of Justice was not available at that time but the parliamentary secretary is one Liberal who attended committee.

There is a story going around the Hill that the Minister of Justice has been seen at the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs. I have not had that story confirmed but I am prepared to put the resources of the research staff of this party to work this weekend to see whether it can be verified.

Mr. Paproski: He is out on a leadership campaign!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague from Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) suggests that he is out on a leadership campaign. I do not want to be diverted from discussing this legislation, Mr. Speaker, but I must say that under its present leadership, I think all Liberals should be out on a leadership campaign, trying to replace the present leader.

Mr. Chénier: You should know. That is what all of you are doing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will deal expeditiously with this legislation if I can get the attention of hon. members on the Liberal side, who insist on trying to interrupt a serious discussion. If I could get their attention I would point out some of the concerns that have been expressed by this party and by witnesses before the committee about the vagueness of the term "commercial activity" which appears in the bill. As presently defined, it means "any particular transaction, act or conduct or any regular course of conduct that by reason of its nature is of a commercial character".

To me that sounds like a definition that commercial activity means commercial activity. It does not elaborate on what kind of activity will be covered by legislation in this country and that would allow individual citizens to pursue to their remedy.

The British law in this area is far more specific. It enumerates the three headings that are included in the term "commercial transaction" as follows:

1) any contract for supply of goods or services

2) any loan or other transaction for the provision of finance and any guarantee or indemnity in respect of any such transaction or of any other financial obligation; and

3) any other transaction or activity (whether of a commercial, industrial, financial, professional or other similar character) into which a state enters or in which it engages otherwise than in the exercise of sovereign authority.

The British law is specific and indicates to the litigant interested in pursuing his or her rights the areas in which this may be done. In this country it will be necessary to develop a body of jurisprudence through the courts. The courts will have the opportunity to define the term "commercial activity" and specify what activities will be available for legal recourse and what activities will not.

A witness who came before the committee, Mr. J. M. Robinson, a lawyer who works in the area of lending to foreign sovereign countries, was most concerned that these arrangements for lending would be protected by the bill, particularly in light of the Polish and now the Argentine monetary crisis. Officials of the department assured us, on the basis of their legal advice, that the situation would be covered. They also assured us that it would be better to leave the definition as broad as possible. Their point of view was that by using very specific definitions, the range of applicability of a section narrows.

I am not totally satisfied with their response, but I am prepared to let this bill go through. I know the Department of Justice will monitor the situation to make sure that the definition is reasonably broad and that we will not be restricting the rights of Canadians vis-à-vis foreign representatives. I would have preferred the other system of definition for more precision and guidance to the courts, and the litigants themselves would have had a better idea of their rights under the legislation.

When I spoke on second reading of this bill I indicated my concerns with respect to enforcement, by execution or otherwise, of civil judgments. Remedies under this legislation are still restricted. Specific performance, injunctive relief, and an order for recovery of land unless the foreign state itself consents, are not available.

I understand the official's argument that these remedies are not available against the Crown in Canada. On the basis of some activities which have been taking place on behalf of Crown corporations in the courts of this land, I think it is fair to say that any commercial enterprise operated by the Government of Canada now apparently has the right to claim immunity from prosecution, and that puts the government in a very strong position. We can see that it is difficult to expect that Canadians will be able to collect against agents of foreign governments when criminal prosecution of government agencies, Crown corporations and ministers is virtually impossible, at least on the basis of the ruling in the uranium cartel case. However, I think that is an area which we must continue to monitor because of the fact that foreign governments are involved through state agencies, whether it be the Soviet Union or countries in the free world. There has been a movement toward centrally controlled economies and commercial activities through government agencies, and I think those agencies should do business in Canada according to the rules that apply to every other citizen of Canada. I think we should keep an eye on the situation with a view to bringing in amendments to this legislation if there has been any serious abuse.

I said I would be brief, Mr. Speaker, and I have been. I was moved to observe the lack of commitment of this government and the Minister of Justice with respect to matters before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I was egged on by members of the Liberal party to go perhaps a little longer on that topic than I had originally intended. However, I just want to serve public notice on the Minister of Justice, as I did on Bill C-53, that if he is not happy in carrying out his responsibilities, then he should ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to relieve him of those responsibilities. I say that in the interest of having the proper attention given to these issues on the floor of the House of Commons. I know I have an ally in the government House leader, who would like to see a higher profile for these issues.

Mr. Pinard: The hon. member seems to be having a hard time trying to kill time. We might call it one o'clock if he promises not to speak this afternoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I had not noticed the time. That intervention, Mr. Speaker, has brought me to the reality that I have spoken maybe a little longer than I intended. However, I remember when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) used to plead in the small claims courts of Quebec, where he took a lot of time, too. So I take advice from an expert.

I do want to make the serious point that there are people across this country who are concerned with important issues of social justice. I know this government has been preoccupied with other things. It is floundering in its attempt to deal with economic matters. I do not know if it is trying to deal with them or not, but it seems to be incapable of action. However, there are important issues in legislation which is before us and can be before us, such as freedom of information, sexual assault, prostitution and matters dealing with young offenders. We have tried to push these through.

I think the government House leader will understand that we have not abused the time of the House in getting this legislation through. We have spoken on a very limited basis, spending perhaps two and a half days on this very important bill. What concerns me is that matters are dragging and we are going to have to prorogue, because this session cannot go on indefinitely. We have to have an election every five years, and the way this session is going we are going to be—

Mr. Deans: You will still be on your feet in five years.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —here for five years. I do not know if we can possibly stand that. Perhaps the government can think in terms of proroguing this session and coming back with some new ideas and fresh initiatives, if they are capable of it. On the other hand, we have legislation which is languishing in committee. Some of the ministers do not appear to be looking after these matters and they are letting—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is having difficulty with the matter of relevancy again. Would the hon. member like me to ask whether the House is ready for the question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: One final remark, Mr. Speaker, because I think the Liberal members look lean and hungry and are about ready for lunch. I simply want to advise the government to give some priority to this area, and that we intend to let this bill go through. For the reasons indicated we will be monitoring it, and I hope the government will as well.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of making these few brief remarks.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps we were going to let it go in a moment, and I was just going to comment that the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) certainly did tell us what was in the bill. It might be difficult for anyone reading Hansard to find out exactly where he told us, but nevertheless I know it is contained within that long dissertation.

We are prepared to see the bill pass today. It was dealt with in some considerable detail in committee, and it reflects a general consensus. If I thought the vote could be taken right now, I would be happy to sit down and allow that to happen.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a contribution to make to this discussion and I would like to call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Provided the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is present at two o'clock, the Chair will recognize him to continue debate on Bill S-19.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) had the floor.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to impose unduly on the House this afternoon in discussing the provisions of Bill S-19. There are, however, a couple of matters which I think deserve mention, even if the time has passed for introducing appropriate amendments to bridge a gap between this particular bill and an act which is now on the statute books.

Obviously, Bill S-19 has been brought forward—although it is slightly misnamed, if I might say so—because of the growth of state enterprises of one kind or another operating both domestically and abroad. We all know about Crown enterprises in this country. We do not know how many of them we have as Crown corporations; I gather that figure is still in dispute. A good many operate in Canada, but that should not worry law makers except that we do not know how many Crown corporations there are.

This bill is directed toward state enterprises overseas and their operations in this country, particularly when they are involved in a commercial enterprise of one kind or another. The normal function of a state, the traditional, historic function when it is operating abroad, made it possible for receiving states to accord immunity to the operations of a sending state when it had a representative in the country. This, of course, was the origin of diplomatic immunity. Clause 3 of the bill provides:

> Except as provided by this Act, a foreign state is immune from the jurisdiction of any court in Canada.

We remember the old saying "Don't shoot the messenger". If a messenger brought a message from a foreign state that the foreign state is at war with the receiving state, we would hear: "Don't shoot the messenger; look to someone else to attack". This, in very simple form, is the origin of diplomatic immunity.

There is another act on the statute books, Chapter 31 of the Statutes of Canada, 1976-1977, which gives substance in law to the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations. There we find what the standard functions of a diplomatic mission are. If we were dealing only with diplomatic missions, it would be simple. But because of the growth of state activities beyond their diplomatic activities in foreign countries, a bill such as S-19 was required.

• (1410)

Article 3 of the Vienna convention, which is a schedule to the Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities Act which I have already cited as Chapter 31 of the Statutes of Canada 1976-77, provides that:

> The functions of a diplomatic mission consist inter alia in: (a) representing the sending State in the receiving State; (b) protecting in the receiving State the interests of the sending State and of its nationals, within the limits permitted by international law; (c) negotiating with the Government of the receiving State: (d) ascertaining by all lawful means conditions and developments in the receiving State, and reporting thereon to the Government of the sending State: (e) promoting friendly relations between the sending State and the receiving State, and developing their economic, cultural and scientific relations.

Those are standard diplomatic functions. Generally speaking, in the performance and execution of the duties related to those functions there is traditionally an immunity accorded to the agents of the sending state in the receiving state. When the sending state embarks on activities beyond the diplomatic and becomes involved in matters of commercial enterprise—whether selling grain, oil, buying Candus or grain—this bill makes it clear that the foreign state is not immune from the jurisdiction of a court in any proceedings that relate to "—any damage to or loss of property that occurs in Canada". This would also be true in the area of shipping or transporting material. I suspect that one of the reasons this bill is before us is that there was a state-owned ship which managed to leave behind it in a Canadian port a mountain of debt which the host company had to assume, with no recourse against the offending state to collect damages. I think that this state immunity bill has been introduced for this and other reasons. As I said, Clause 6(b) of this bill makes it clear that the foreign state is not immune from the jurisdiction of a court in any proceedings relating to damage or loss of property that occurs in Canada.

This brings me to the core of the problem I would like to address. Up until now the statute on the books has dealt with state organisms, not individuals. I feel there must be some protection for individual Canadians. I merely say this because I believe it is important to know that damages suffered by Canadian citizens who enter into contracts in good faith with foreign government agents, particularly in rental situations, and who discover at the termination of the lease that they can be left with a large number of bills for the restoration of damaged leased property, are not taken into account in this Bill. It has happened to me and many others on more than one occasion. There are individuals who are being missed by these two pieces of legislation. There should be some way to protect individual Canadians, either through this bill or the act, from damage which might occur to the property which they rent in good faith to the representative of a foreign state.

I noted in this bill that the foreign state is not immune, but we seem to be missing the individual in this legislation. I hope that the government could at least introduce some small piece of legislation which would take into account what may occur to individuals.

Article 30 of the privileges and immunities convention states that:

> The private residence of a diplomatic agent—

Presumably that is a diplomatic officer who has been sent to any foreign country:

> —shall enjoy the inviolability and protection of the premises of the mission.

If we return to Article 22 of the convention, we find that:

> The premises of the mission shall be inviolable.

Presumably because of that inviolability, the immunity is extended to the premises occupied by a diplomatic agent living abroad. This is an instance where Canadians can suffer. I believe there is a case before the courts—I do not know its status—concerning an individual who rented a premises to a foreign state. For reasons unknown to me, the premises were vacated in mid-winter, without notice, and the pipes froze. A great deal of damage was done to this property and when the owner discovered that the pipes were broken after his tenants had left, he tried to get redress through the courts for the losses he incurred in restoring his house to its proper state. The courts found that the state which had leased the property could claim immunity. This immunity applies even when a diplomatic agent is renting the property, because it is usually the state which signs the lease on behalf of that agent, thereby allowing it to claim immunity from any damages which might occur to that property.

Therefore, I believe that neither Bill S-19 or Chapter 31 of the Statutes of Canada, 1976-77, really extend to individual Canadians the protection they need when dealing with foreign powers.

I merely put this on the record now and urge that this gap be closed. I am sure that it is in the interest of this Parliament to realize that one of its duties is to protect Canadian citizens.

I found it strange to learn this morning that one of the inverted pieces of logic in Bill S-19 is that foreign commercial enterprises operating in Canada have their immunity removed but Canadian Crown corporations are still able to claim immunity. That is an anomaly which this particular bill does not address and does nothing to remove.

A second anomaly which I would like to point out is that not only are individual Canadians inadequately protected from the activities of a foreign state, but they are also not protected from the activities of a Crown corporation in their own country, against whom they will have the greatest difficulty to bring suit.

Having put those two matters on the record, I close and thank the House for its indulgence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kilgour: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO SHORTEN PERIOD REQUIRED TO HOLD ELECTIONS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-58, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago I thought this bill would be passed quickly, and that was mainly because of the fact that Bill C-58 was almost identical to Bill C-21, tabled on November 5, 1979 by the Progressive Conservative Party in power at the time, and more specifically, by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). In addition, as early as in 1976, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections had recommended shortening the election period. In 1975, the Chief Electoral Officer submitted a report under the title, "An Examination of Possible Ways of Reducing the Election Period." In his report, the Chief Electoral Officer made a thorough study of permanent lists and continuous voter files. He estimated at the time that it would cost about $30 million per year to maintain a voter filing system that could be updated on a continuing basis up to the time an election was held.

After weighing the pros and cons of permanent voter lists, the Chief Electoral Officer found that it would be possible to substantially shorten the election period by eliminating the printing of preliminary lists and their distribution to voters to inform them that their names were on the list. Early in 1976, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections discussed the report by the Chief Electoral Officer at several meetings. It became clear that committee members did not, at the time, find it desirable to introduce a permanent list or a continuous voter file. The committee did, however, announce that it was in favour of shortening the election period by eliminating the printing of preliminary lists. On March 23, 1976, it passed a motion to that effect.

[English]

So, Mr. Speaker, it is plain to see that support for the two major changes proposed by this bill has a fairly long history. Furthermore, we have taken into account some members' fears that we might be shortening the election period too much, especially in parts of the country where communication and travel are difficult. As a result, we proposed an amendment to the bill, at Clause 2, to change the latest day on which the writ of an election would be issued, from the forty-seventh day to the fiftieth day before polling day. This change was received positively by the Conservative members on the standing committee when it was presented by my parliamentary secretary, and it appears in the amended version of the bill we now have before us.

The second change in Bill C-58 which was brought about in the standing committee concerns the length of the period for enumeration. In the original version of Bill C-58, enumeration was to begin on the thirty-fifth day before polling day and end on the thirty-second day. In other words, enumeration was to take place during a four-day period. Members on both sides of the committee expressed reservations about having only four days for enumeration. The government, after listening to their views on this matter, agreed to change the bill.

Since the first change to the bill which I have just described added three days to the minimum election period, it was a simple matter to add three more days to the enumeration period without disturbing the dates for carrying out the other activities that are required for the preparation and conduct of an election. This change in the enumeration period required amendments to the text of the bill in several places, namely, Clauses 3, 5, 6 and 7. All these minor changes in wording were approved unanimously by the standing committee.

I feel that this new seven-day minimum period for enumeration is an improvement over the present practice, which allows six days for enumeration to be carried out. As a result of these amendments, we can feel confident that there will be enough time for the enumerators to do as thorough a job as possible. I believe we owe this to all Canadians, who expect that we should make it as easy as possible for them to exercise their democratic franchise.

Much credit must be given to the standing committee members for their role in coming to agreement on this bill and for improving its text. All members of Parliament and Canadians in general should be grateful for their thorough review of the text of Bill C-58.

In closing, I should like to express my gratitude, and that of all members, to the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, and his staff. Their very professional and courteous assistance played an important role in helping members of the committee understand and improve the text of this bill.

Finally, I would express my personal wish that after eight hours of debate at second reading and six meetings of the standing committee, we could complete our study of this bill very shortly. The committee members looked at the bill in detail and all parties agreed to the amendments that were put. I see no reason for much more discussion of Bill C-58, and I hope that my friends opposide will allow its passage before four o'clock today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, to listen to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), one would think he has just presented us with the Declaration of Independence or some other very important piece of legislation. I would remind you Honour that what the bill does, as has been mentioned, is to change two very minor things. It shortens an election writ period by a few days and it increases the enumeration period by a few days. Considered in the light of the problems we have with parliamentary and representative democracy in Canada, I hope to show that it is an awfully small piece of legislation. It has been overworked. It is similar to the idea of using a band-aid for appendicitis. However, speaking for my part of Canada, western Canada, this bill will not make anyone happier about our federal institutions. It will make some of them unhappy.

Concerning the first point I want to make, I stress that I am speaking only for myself and not for the party at all. My first point concerns the question of rural ridings. Your Honour is from a suburban riding. I assure your Honour that you cannot imagine, nor can any of us who are from urban ridings, the problem involved in rural ridings in getting people to come out for nomination meetings, perhaps from several communities. There are problems involved in getting ads into newspapers which are published weekly, perhaps on a monthly basis in some cases. There are problems involved in travelling around ridings to visit people. Parties have problems in trying to get candidates to come forward.

From my limited knowledge of the subject, it would appear that the reason we reduced the number of days for the writ period is that some people in central Canada, those in urban ridings, think election campaigns are too long. However, I can assure your Honour that, as I understand it, people in the rural ridings across Canada, including those in your Honour's province, are in favour of longer campaigns.

I think many of these people would feel that a better title for the bill would be "an act to ensure the re-election of incumbents to the maximum feasible extent", and I am only being half facetious. To that extent, I would express disagreement with the unstated principle, which is to try to re-elect incumbents. We have enough advantages now as incumbents that I think reducing the election period would be just one more advantage, and would not necessarily ensure that the best people are elected to sit in this House. This is not a good principle on which to embark. Why not reduce the period to two weeks? I bet even the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) would be re-elected if we had a two-week election period.

• (1430)

Another problem with shortening the election period is that it is difficult for a public servant, and I am an example, to decide whether he wishes to run. It is also difficult for people in business. This may not apply to professionals, but for those in many occupations the longer the writ period, the better. The bill makes it harder for people such as federal public servants to run in an election. We will also be heading in the direction of denying ourselves the best people for public office.

My next point is to ask why two very small matters have been blown up into a bill. There have been all kinds of hearings and debate. At the same time we have ignored some of the major recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer, Jean-Marc Hamel, in the 1979 and 1980 elections.

I will give two examples. The first is the question of posting voters' lists on telephone poles in the ridings. I have just returned from Saskatchewan where voters' lists are posted on telephone poles in every community. For example, it lists Mary Smith, her address and the fact that she lives alone. It is outrageous that in urban communities where there is a lot of crime everyone should be advised that Mary Smith lives in a house on such and such a street in such and such a place. One of the recommendations of Mr. Hamel and of many women's groups is that this no longer be allowed. They recommend that each voter be sent a notice to show that he or she is on the voters' list. This information should not be posted. If it will prevent one woman from being raped or one widow from being mugged or having her house broken into, it is infinitely important that that be written into the bill. It should be done. In the very least such a meaningful amendment should be made to our Elections Act. I feel very strongly about this.

Coming from Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you could possibly appreciate my next point. Election results in most parts of eastern Canada are known to British Columbians when they go to vote. They know how the rest of the country in the different time zones has voted. We have moved into the electronic age and during an election, radio stations in Seattle broadcast information on how many Liberals have been elected in Ontario and Quebec. People in Vancouver have full knowledge that the election has already been decided before they cast their votes.

This is why a number of people, including the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) and myself, have proposed a very simple process of juggling the hours. Maybe the people of Newfoundland would not have as many hours in which to vote. However, all votes will be counted at the same time. It would not inconvenience the people in your riding, Mr. Speaker, to wait an hour or two until the people in Vancouver were finished voting before the votes in the riding of Lachine were counted. From the standpoint of our institutions, I cannot stress too strongly that it creates all kinds of problems for our democracy when voters in large chunks of Canada know how voters in other parts of Canada have voted.

During the 1880s or 1890s, elections took place over a one or two-week period. That was the reason we moved to having elections all at the same time, hopefully at the same hour. But we forgot that we cannot control the electronic media outside Canada. I am not talking about someone in Ontario calling someone in British Columbia; it is the radio and television stations outside Canada that we cannot control. This is something else that should have been taken care of in this bill. Votes should not be counted in one part of Canada before being cast in another part. There are many other recommendations which should have been written into this bill.

I now want to deal with the question of redistribution. Coming from a province which is supposed to get additional seats under the new formula, naturally you, Mr. Speaker, are in favour of redistribution. I appreciate that no province will have less seats under the existing formula and that your province will get an additional four seats.

My point is that there are probably too many of us in this House now. I do not think we have to reduce the number of seats in any province; we are capable of coming up with a formula that ensures that no province loses any seats and that provinces which grow very quickly will have more seats.

Members may ask, what is my formula. I have not been able to come up with one. I do not think our caucus can accommodate me either. However, that is the direction in which we should be going. There should be a clause in the bill which contains a formula whereby no province shall lose any seats, but provinces which grow shall have the number of its seats increased. That would be a significant offer of hope to people in my region of Canada who know that they are vastly underrepresented in terms of our growing population.

It is no secret that the people of Canada have a lot of criticism respecting members of Parliament. They do not think we should add 28 members to this House at a cost of $140,000 each, including personal and staff salaries, as they do not believe Parliament is functioning properly at this moment. Partly on the basis of cost, and partly because we should come up with a formula to give us a few more seats without depriving any province of its present number of seats, I believe that point should have been dealt with in this bill.

I understand the President of the Privy Council sent letters to all elections commissions across Canada advising them to get on with the revision of the electoral boundaries to increase the representation by 28 seats. The problem is that the same thing may happen that happened in 1972 and 1974. The commissions came up with new boundaries and we looked at the maps which contained the new boundaries. I believe in about 1983 or 1984 there will be a suspension act saying that everything that has been done will be scrapped. I urge the government not to do that; it would not be healthy for this country. Once again, all this should have been included in Bill C-68.

• (1440)

That brings me to the question: What are our federal institutions doing at the moment, and how do Canadians look at them? For interest, Mr. Speaker, I did a survey in my own riding, a somewhat random survey, and you may be interested in some of the comments. One question was: "Do you favour continuing the existing size of the House of Commons?" In one sample 50 per cent said yes; in another sample, 53 per cent said yes. As to no, it was 13 per cent and 26 per cent. Obviously the majority of people who pay taxes in my riding do not want to see the House changed.

Another question related to another institution, the Supreme Court, was: "Do you consider that the Supreme Court of Canada tends to favour the federal or provincial government in its constitutional decisions?" In the answer one sample had 50 per cent favouring the federal government and another had 28 per cent. To the question as to how many favoured the provinces, I had two results. One was zero per cent and one was 1 per cent. There was a large number undecided.

Question 3 was: "Would you favour any change in the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada?" How many said yes? In one sample it was 47 per cent; in the other sample it was 55 per cent; the noes were 25 per cent and 11 per cent. Again, this only makes the point that a lot of people in my riding feel that the Supreme Court of Canada should become an institution in which we can all have more confidence.

Another question was: "Would you favour giving the provinces as a group a role in making, say, half the appointments to a restructured Supreme Court?" Listen to this. One sample: yes, 72 per cent; no, 14 per cent.

Coming to the Senate, the question was: "Do you think the present Senate should be altered?" The answer was: yes, one sample, 66 per cent; 9 per cent said no. In the other sample 85 per cent said yes, but only 6 per cent said no.

The next question was: "Do you think there is a meaningful role for any form of upper chamber in an updated Constitution?" The number who said yes in the first sample was 50 per cent, with 22 per cent saying no. In the second sample, for yes it was 61 per cent, and no, 29 per cent.

The next question may be an interesting one: "If yes, what basic model would you favour?" Elected: the answer was 47 per cent in the first sample, whereas 53 per cent said senators appointed by provincial governments only. In the second sample it was 58 per cent for an elected Senate and 36 per cent favouring the provinces to elect the Senate.

The next one—I think this should be put on the record—had regard to federal agencies. The question was: "Should the provincial governments as a group have a right to appoint, say, half the members of the board of the Bank of Canada, the CRTC, the CBC, the CTC, the NEB, etc?" In the first sample the yes response was 53 per cent and the no was 31 per cent. In the second sample the yes response was 65 per cent and the no was 26 per cent.

Another question: "Should our lieutenant governors be nominated by Ottawa as they are now?" Some 45 per cent said yes while 55 per cent said the provincial governments should appoint them.

The next question was: "Should our Queen's Bench judges be appointed in future by Ottawa as they are now?" The answer was, 42 per cent for Ottawa and 57 per cent for appointment by the provincial governments. I guess that is enough of that, Mr. Speaker.

What I am trying to say is that respect for institutions in Canada and I think the Gallup polls show it too—is not what you and I would like it to be, Mr. Speaker, though perhaps for different reasons. The institution that has the least respect, I suggest, is the Senate of Canada.

Someone once said of the House of Lords in Britain that the cure for admiring the House of Lords was to go and look at it. There is a quote from Walter Bagot:

> The whole history of civilization is strewn with creeds and institutions which were invaluable at first, and deadly afterwards.

I took up the list of senators today, and I would respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that if you or any of our colleagues look over the list, it would be very interesting. Without getting into personalities, I would respectfully suggest that any former premier of a province should be entitled to be a senator. A mayor of a large city should be entitled also, under our present system, as should a member of a CRT, a trade union, an association or institution in the service sector, or a church. All of these, including university leaders, professors, professional people, should be entitled to be senators. But by any independent criteria such as that, considering a lot of our senators—and I exclude many of them because obviously some are doing good work and working hard—our Senate is not, to put it this way, acceptable in its present form to most Canadians.

What is the answer? I suggest an elected Senate. I have recently, over the last while, changed the view that it should be one appointed by the province, like the Bundesrat in West Germany. It should be an elected Senate with an equal number of senators from each province. That is perhaps the surest and best reform we can make of the parliamentary institution.

I understand that every federal system of government—someone will correct me if I am wrong—in the world has an upper chamber. I am convinced that our Senate could become a more meaningful and acceptable institution if it were elected. One can ask, should it be elected every time there is a general election, or should it be elected by rotations, with one-third retiring every four years? I think any Canadian of goodwill is open to discussion on that. I wish that subject had been looked at by the committee which was considering the bill before us today. If we had eight senators from every provnce in Canada—I do not say for a moment that some of the present senators would not be in that group—we would have an institution that everybody in this House and in Canada could be proud of.

One might ask, what powers would you give them? Again, I do not have any firm views on that. Perhaps they should not be entitled to present money bills. We do know that our elected Senate is working in Australia, in the United States and in the Republic of Ireland. It is working in many places.

I find it interesting that Senator Roblin, a former premier of Manitoba, made a speech not long ago, in June, 1980, in which he called for an elected Senate. I think he accepted, as I read the notes here, that the Senate in its present form will not do. I should add that a number of senators seem to have accepted that as well. He pointed out that Bill C-60 of your government, Mr. Speaker, tried to introduce a House of the Federation. The Pepin-Robarts commission suggested a Council of the Federation. The Ryan report in Quebec wanted a federal council. The Canada West Foundation called for a House of the Provinces. The Canadian Bar Association and others had other ideas. He goes on to point out that the fact that none of these has proposed an elected Senate he considers to be an error, and I join in that view.

How could we not have a better Senate if it were elected? Senators would then have to go back to their electors and account for their acts. Senators could then do the excellent committee work they are doing now, but as elected men and women. As hon. members perhaps know, people in the west are seriously under-represented in the Senate in terms of population. Some might ask how we can give Prince Edward Island eight senators when there are only 120,000 people there, and how we could give Ontario only eight senators when there are eight million people in Ontario? There would be a million people per senator. However, I submit that the people in central Canada are sufficiently concerned—as are those of us who do not live in central Canada—about what is happening to our respect for parliamentary institutions that they would probably be the first to recommend an elected Senate. Eight senators from Quebec, for instance, would fight tooth and nail for the interests of Quebec. Eight senators from Prince Edward Island would also fight tooth and nail for Prince Edward Island. What person in this House would deny Prince Edward Island the opportunity to have eight senators? I do not think anyone of goodwill would.

It is too easy for a person to say that the trouble with the Senate is that the appointments have not been of premiers of provinces, that there have not been enough people of independent stature in their communities and that the answer is simply to appoint, for lack of a better word, more qualified people to the Senate. However, in my submission it is too late for that. We cannot go back. We are in such a position now that we must go ahead and elect senators from all the regions of Canada. According to the poll, the people of my region of Canada would like that. I know many people in this chamber and in central Canada are concerned about the enormous antipathy building against the government, which is elected from two provinces. This would be one way of providing an outlet for western Canadians and, hopefully, for maritimers, Quebecers and Ontarians.

There are other institutions I could mention which are well beyond the bounds of this bill. I suppose I should not talk about courts and boards except to say that I believe strongly that we should give the provinces a chance to appoint, say, half the directors of the CBC and half the commissioners of CRTC, or at least give them a chance to confirm appointments such as one recently to the head of the CBC. Perhaps we could work out a system which would give members of Parliament a chance to have at least an advisory capacity or consent capacity in relation to these order in council appointments which, as hon. members know, take effect the minute they are signed.

I remember a time when I was in court with another lawyer; at the lunch hour his appointment was signed and he could not continue with the case in the afternoon. Is that proper? Would it not be better that a lawyer should at least pass before a committee of the Senate or a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons before he is confirmed in the position?

I am told there are 650 federal judges in Canada. While perhaps a third of them are outstanding and a third satisfactory, in my view a third of the judges in superior courts in Canada should not be sitting in those courts.

Mr. Pepin: The same as in any other profession.

Mr. Kilgour: One way of weeding out palpably bad appointments would be to have a confirmation procedure whereby appointments would have to be ratified by some democratic institution beyond the whim of one or two ministers.

Your Honour will say I have moved a long way from Bill C-58. It is hard to speak about a bill which covers so little. I have tried to make some points and suggestions which I think would improve the Canada Elections Act and redistribution, and I thank hon. members for listening so patiently.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member did not invite the Chair to comment as to whether he was observing the rules of relevancy, but I think perhaps it would be appropriate if I did. I paid considerable attention to the remarks of the hon. member. Some of his remarks were directed to what is in the bill, and some were directed to what is not in the bill. I think that is fair. I think both types of remarks are relevant, but I ask other hon. members who intend to address themselves to the bill that they try to put a bit more emphasis on what is in the bill or on what they might find to be inappropriate, and refrain from remarks which range into far-reaching connotations.

I waited until the hon. member was finished because I thought his remarks were appropriate, but the question is relevant.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted you recognized me because I am hoping to get to a meeting with the government House leader shortly. If I had to wait for another turn, the meeting might not take place and perhaps no more business would ever be done! I want to take a moment or two to speak about the bill. I will not take more than ten minutes, but I think the bill is important enough that I make at least some comments.

The bill has received a great deal of consideration. Each and every caucus probably agonized over whether the reduction in the minimum election period is an appropriate reduction. I think the compromise worked out is acceptable, but I want to say, partly in answer to other people's comments and partly in answer to the thoughts of certain people across the country who may be interested in a matter such as the period for elections, that I do not really think it matters too much whether we reduce the election period to 50 days or not.

When I was in the legislative assembly in Ontario the period was 37 days. It seemed to me at the time to be an adequate length of time. The period for the recent Saskatchewan election was even shorter, but that did not inhibit the electors from making the choice to defeat a very large number of incumbents.

I suggest that sometimes we get wrapped up in the idea that the shorter the election period the easier it is for incumbents to be re-elected. I suppose theoretically—and even in practice—that could be true if we were to shorten the period so dramatically as to make it impossible for anyone else to get into the race, but I think anything in excess of a month and a half is probably long enough to allow any candidate or political party to represent individual or collective views adequately and in sufficient time for the people of the country who, in my personal judgment after 15 years in politics, pay much more attention to the platforms and the quality of candidates than we perhaps give them credit for. A month and a half does afford a sufficiently long period of time. This does not preclude in any way the kind of electioneering that goes on by people seeking office, whether they are incumbents or otherwise, for years on end. People can canvass door to door regardless of whether it is a year before, two years before or ten years before the election in which they intend to run, and they can become very, very well known. They can in fact get to the point where they can call almost everyone on every street in every constituency by name. The actual official period of time is probably of lesser importance than some of us who are more involved directly in politics might believe.

• (1500)

If there is a deficiency in the bill it is that it deals with a very narrow aspect of the elections, and if it had not come up for discussion for another year it would have made very little difference. I do not expect the changes in this legislation to alter dramatically the outcome of the next or of any other election. It may be inappropriate but I would venture the opinion that if an election were held today or tomorrow we would find that the vast majority of Canadians had already made up their minds at least about who they are not going to vote for. I think the majority of people have decided "out with the Liberals". That is my personal view, and of course it may not be shared by everyone in the House.

Mr. Pepin: Your prediction for Saskatchewan was not too good.

Mr. Deans: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) says that our record in Saskatchewan was not too good—

Mr. Pepin: I said prediction.

Mr. Deans: I did not make any predictions. If I were a member of any government today the message I would get from any election would be that governments are an endangered species. The political colour really makes no difference; government is in disfavour and the majority of people in the country are looking to change any government. I think that was true in Manitoba and in Saskatchewan and I suspect it is true through most of western Canada, at least. It is the message I get from the people I have met across the country who look at the federal system. No one can say, of course, what will happen two years from now.

Mr. Pepin: We will wait two years.

Mr. Deans: The minister says he will wait for two years to find out. Although the majority of people would not agree with that, I cannot blame him. I do not think if I were in government I would want to test these policies at the ballot box any more than he would.

The changes proposed in this legislation are acceptable. The reduction in the length of time may make it easier for candidates to campaign. The changes made at committee in the enumeration period were certainly necessary. In some of the larger constituencies it is very difficult to get the enumeration done in four days. It is going to become more and more difficult to find people to do the enumeration. We just do not pay enough so that we can find people on short notice. And with the increase in two-parent-working families it is difficult to find people at home. Although seven days have been allotted, I dare say we will find that there are only three or at the most four hours per day when people can be found at home and have their eligibility to vote checked. That provision might even have to be reviewed before an election to see if the length of time is adequate.

Nomination day is set at 28 days before the election, and that is fine. Examining and sealing the ballot box in the returning office 21 days before the vote could be of value if it is used properly.

We have to look at the whole process, Mr. Speaker. Although the current process is unwieldly and cumbersome, that is not the problem now. The period of time involved in all the other attendant factors is not going to make for a better government or a better Parliament or a more responsible representative process. The major changes must take place in the House. To afford people an opportunity to cast a ballot is the single most important part of the democratic process but after the ballot is cast and the election is over, the follow-up is the measure of the success of the process.

Regardless of what changes we make to the Canada Elections Act, unless we come to grips with the archaic system in which Parliament must work—and today was a good example of it—and deal with the relevance of any change to the election process, we will not have a better representative Parliament than we have now.

I do not think you were in the chair this morning Mr. Speaker. I listened to one hon. member debate a bill which came up for debate before this one. Without being uncharitable let me say that I could not help but feel that much of the 35 or 40 minutes was used up on extraneous matters and not on dealing with the content of the bill. This happens because the opportunity for members to gain the floor is limited and when they do, they speak for far too long. The tendency is to use up the time.

We must address ourselves to the question of follow-up. If these changes to the Canada Elections Act are to have any meaning we have to address ourselves to the changes in the day to day operations of the House of Commons and its committees. There is no purpose in going through this exercise today if we continue with the archaic system that does not allow for meaningful debate and gives little opportunity for a proper exchange of views. The present rules almost require members to speak twice as long as they need to, just to take up the time that is available to them. That is not to say that every time a member speaks for 40 minutes the time is wasted. Of course there are times when 20, 30 and 40-minute speeches are justified because of the content of the matter under discussion.

This bill is only a first step, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it may even be said to be the last step. I do not think the changes need to take place right away. The world will not change one iota because of this series of amendments. Indeed, it might have been better had we taken on first the chore of reforming the parliamentary process and, by showing the public that Parliament can work, in that way encouraged its participation. We must encourage people to feel that casting a ballot is an important function in a democratic process. They must feel that when they send someone to Parliament that person has an opportunity to express the views of the constituents and put forward different point of view about how the country should evolve.

I will stop at this point because I realize I am straying ever so slightly from the bill itself, but I am saying this because I think that if we were ever to get the impression that by doing this we have done anything meaningful, then we would be fooling ourselves. If we were to get the impression that we can now sit back because we have made some reforms to the Canada Elections Act, then we would be deluding ourselves. If we were ever to think that by virtue of having done this we might encourage a great deal more participation by the average citizen, who today looks with a jaundiced eye at the goings on in Parliament, then we are living in a fool's paradise. We have so much more to do, and the direction in which we are heading is not encouraging.

We are great technicians and can make things more technical or less technical, but we do not seem to be making them more relevant. I think relevance is a lot more important in the parliamentary process than whether it is set out in a way which will allow it to operate effectively. I think Parliament is irrelevant, not because I wish it to be that way—therefore I do not sound like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in that regard. I want it to be more relevant. In all fairness, it is irrelevant for most Canadians; Parliament never deals with the things they believe to be important. I do not think they doubt our willingness, but I think they doubt our capacity and opportunity to deal with the important social and economic problems which confront them. With that in mind, I would urge the House that we not stop there, but that we also get on with the job of making this place function properly.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, for once I am completely in agreement with the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I think his comments are important, and I am delighted he made them.

This bill, the purpose of which is simply to shorten the election period, does not even approach the election process in the manner it should. I also agree that there are larger reforms of this House to be made, but there are no signs that the government is going to convene the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization where we could address ourselves to the reforms needed to make this a more meaningful institution and restore the credibility it once had. This credibility is sadly lacking as a result of the inability of members to come to grips with the important issues of the day by virtue of the government's bringing forward what is sometimes rather negligible legislation.

I think in the eyes of many, this House is irrelevant because we have shown ourselves unable to deal with the major issues confronting the nation. I think this House could deal with the issues of inflation, unemployment and excessive interest rates, but it is not being given the opportunity because of the government's attitude towards these very problems.

To narrow the focus of my remarks, this bill does not attempt to deal in any broad way with the Canada Elections Act. To start with, Clause 5 of the bill amends Section 18(9) of the act whereby:

> Each returning officer shall send a notice of enumeration in the prescribed form, not later than Wednesday, the twenty-sixth day before polling day, to each elector residing in a polling division in his electoral district whose name appeared on the preliminary list of electors for that polling division.

I am sure that was written before the 30-cent stamp came out. I would suggest that instead of calling this "an act to amend the Canada Elections Act", we might call it the "Canada Post relief act" because with some 12 million to 15 million voters this will mean a subsidy to the post office of around $4 million for the privilege of carrying these individual notices to the voters. I am sure there is no provision that where the names appear under the same address, they be mailed together.

I say that somewhat facetiously, but it is necessary to draw attention to that very important aspect of this bill. In addition to the expense of enumeration, printing the roll and so on, we are going to incur this extra cost.

That brings me to the matter of the enumerated roll. Although I attend a fair number of House committees, obviously I cannot get to them all, and I was unable to attend the Committee on Privileges and Elections which considered this bill. I have not followed the proceedings so I do not know whether an attempt was made to consider the possibility of a permanent voters' roll, which is maintained in many provinces including my own. The argument that we always get is that a permanent roll costs too much. However, Mr. Speaker, I suspect that if we could persuade the bureaucracy and one another that a permanent roll was a feasible proposition, we would save at least this $4-million subsidy to Canada Post because it would be the voters' obligation to check. Let us say that on the second day of January and the second day of July of each year voters should go to the municipal office nearest to them, for example, to make sure their names are on the list. If they do not, and an election is called, I say it is just tough. The first duty of an elector is to make sure that he or she is in a position to cast a ballot. The second duty, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that he cast it in accordance with the law. I see no problem at all with a permanent voters' list. I regret that there is no consideration of that subject in the bill before us.

There are a number of other matters that a bill amending the Canada Elections Act ought to have considered, matters which have been brought to the attention of the committee, to members, to the federal government and to other governments.

A number of other matters become clearly outlined to us in the course of an election but as the election recedes in our memories, some of them disappear. I do not want them to disappear. I want them to be remembered and incorporated in a bill. One of the most important ones for my money is that of mobile polls. They have mobile polls provincially. They have vans manned with polling officers, scrutineers and ballot boxes. These vans go from hospital to hospital, to homes for the elderly or to those at home in bed who cannot get out to vote. What about those people who did not think it necessary to go to the advance poll but were stricken by an illness or some other misfortune between the end of the advance poll and voting day? They are entitled to vote just the same. The polling officer should have a means to get the ballot box to them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is that an innovation?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not an innovation, Mr. Speaker. I have brought that suggestion forward and I am sure others have done so too. The principle was taken to the committee, but it was ruled out as being impractical. It is not impractical. The bureaucracy would find it cumbersome perhaps. But there is a difference between its being cumbersome for the bureaucracy and its practicality. Not only is it practical, but I think it is essential in a democratic community. There must be some provision to enable those who are prevented because of illness, age, frailty or whatever to cast their vote. I regret that this bill, which claims to be dealing with amendments to the Canada Elections Act, has failed to take that into account.

Another matter I remember distinctly, which I have mentioned before and will go on mentioning, is the ability to vote at polling stations from the very earliest moment. This would be facilitated if we had a permanent voters' list. The voters' list would be in the hands of the returning officer in the polling station on the first day after the writ was issued. These days people have to make long-range plans for holidays so as to take advantage of air fares. They may have booked three or four months ahead. They may have had to leave the day before an election is held or the day before the advance poll opens or even the day before they can go to the returning office to cast their ballots. Therefore, there ought to be full provision for electors to go to the returning office to cast their ballots from the earliest possible moment. The returning officer, of course, must be given a day or two to get organized. But from then on until the advance poll, properly speaking, is organized, electors should be able to go to the returning office and vote and have their names removed from the roll. When the polls are eventually opened on election day those who have voted will be taken off the electoral rolls.

The matter of proxy vote is another matter. My recollection about that, and it is getting a little dim after the number of months which have now elapsed since the last election, is that there is provision in the law for only one person to become a proxy for an elector who may be disabled or otherwise unable to get out to vote. But in a very cumbersome manner a proxy can vote on behalf of only one other person. But the situation may very well be that of an elderly couple both of whom are on the electoral roll. Why should the proxy not be able to vote for both of them instead of having two proxies? I see the unreasonableness of having the single proxy, but I do not see why it should be beyond the scope of human intelligence or trust—it may be a matter of trust in an electoral situation for one person to become the proxy for two, three or four people—but what about a home for the elderly? There may be four people who cannot get out to vote. One individual should be able to become a proxy for all of them.

There is another extraordinary situation. I cannot understand the rationale behind it nor have I been able to get the situation changed. If you live in the rural part of a constituency and your name is on a rural poll, you can have a neighbour go with you to the polling office and that neighbour can swear you are who you are if your name is not on the roll. When that is done, your name is included on the roll. But in an urban situation, that cannot be done. That is nonsense. It is sheer nonsense. Why should there not be someone able to swear who you are? If you do not want a neighbour to do it, perhaps someone with notary power or a justice of the peace can do it. Maybe for the purposes of the act, we could make the polling officer a justice of the peace for the day. Then a person could swear he is who he says he is. He would, of course, have to produce identification. The situation I am talking about is that of the enumerator's roll. I would much prefer to see a permanent roll. Nevertheless, in the case of an enumerator's roll, the person could swear that he is who he says he is and that he has lived for the prescribed time in the riding, is therefore entitled to vote and can vote. People can do this if they live in the rural part of the constituency but not if they live in the urban part of the constituency. In my opinion, that is sheer nonsence. Why does this bill not deal with that problem? This bill deals simply with reducing the number of days in an election campaign.

There is another circumstance that comes to mind, which I have seen take place many times. I am sure every member in this House who does his constituency duty on election day by visiting the polls to see if there is anything that can be done finds many people showing up at the wrong poll. The polling officer is not always sure where these people ought to be. People ask where they can go to cast their ballots if they are at the wrong place. First, I would suggest there ought to be a full voters' list, either enumerated or a permanent one in each polling station in the hands of the polling clerk. In addition, there should be a map of the entire riding, properly marked off so that a person having found his name can look at the map and say "I thought I voted here because I live on the boundary, but I see that I should be voting over there." For instance, let us say a person lives in Sidney, but should be in the North Saanich area and finds that he should be voting in McTavish. It is then a very simple matter. But sometimes people come from work to vote. It may be 6.30 p.m. or 7 p.m. before they arrive to vote. When they find they are in the wrong place, they realize they may miss the vote because they will never make it to the other polling station which might be some distance away. It may happen that it takes too long to find out where they should be voting. I suggest, therefore, that a full map of the riding be put in every polling station along with a complete roll of the voters in a constituency. Either the polling officer or someone else at the polling station can then help them.

Although I do not want to hold this bill up, I am quite upset that it does so little. I suppose what limited provisions there are in it should be passed on to the Senate for consideration.

However, I do not believe that we should be required to debate a bill which has such a narrow purpose, which is to simply shorten the length of an election period, when there are so many other equally important matters in the Canada Elections Act which require reform.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my remarks and will indicate that I would like to register my support for this bill.

I recall, during second reading of this bill, that I went into some detail on matters pertaining to electoral reform and pointed out some provisions which should have been included. I will not repeat those today. One of the arguments made by some members of the opposition in favour of longer election periods was that a shorter period would tend to favour the incumbents. Since the government of the day would have more incumbents than the opposition, they would get the vote.

The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has demonstrated this afternoon that this was not the case in Saskatchewan or Manitoba. I believe that as long as the campaign lasts for a least 25 days, a shorter period will have no bearing on an election outcome. Although we saw the government of two provinces change, it was not typical of a shorter election campaign. This can be evidenced by the Newfoundland experience.

Longer election periods in excess of two months were necessary in the early days of confederation when politicians were required to travel across the country by train and to the outlying areas by horsedrawn vehicles. However, with today's instant electronic communication via television and radio, it is not necessary. Even the printed word can be produced very quickly. For example, I recently visited a printing plant in my constiuency and was shown a machine which could print 2,000 copies of anything a customer wanted in ten minutes. Therefore, it does not require long periods of time in order to produce hand bills and other election material.

The primary reason why I suport a reduction in the election period is that it appears to be the wish of the voters and those who have to suffer us politicians through long election campaigns.

During elections in which I was a candidate, people would tell me two weeks before voting day that they were sick and tired of listening to politicians repeating their arguments and hearing them once again every time they would turn on their televisions. They had either made up their mind several days before or they had no intention of making up their mind until they walked into the polling booth. We should show some mercy to the voting public of Canada by not bombarding them with these electoral messages day in and day out, ad nauseam. We should give them a rest and reduce the period of the election campaign to at least the 50 days suggested in this bill.

Another problem concerns enumeration, one which has been pointed out by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and other members who have spoken to this bill this afternoon. There are probably more complaints with regard to enumeration than any other electoral process. People complain because they are either not on the voting list or are on the wrong one and end up in the wrong polling station. Since people are frequently not at home when the enumerator calls, they fail to be properly enumerated. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain pointed out that this is particularly true because both parents are working and the children are at school.

There could be two approaches taken to the problem of enumeration. One solution was suggested by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) which was to establish a permanent voters' list. This system has worked successfully in some jurisdictions and it may be appropriate to adopt that procedure in Canada. At least it warrants more careful study.

Another system would involve eliminating a voters' list entirely. In a number of countries, as is the case in some rural areas of Canada, voters just attend the polling station, identify themselves and are then allowed to vote. In some countries after being sworn in, are stamped with indelible ink so that they cannot vote again. Perhaps we could use a system similar to that. It is similar to having your hand stamped when you go to a social function, thus allowing you to leave the room and then return to it. The election system would perhaps be more sophisticated but the notion of enabling everyone to vote only once is workable.

My last point concerns the appointment of election officials. I am not in favour of the existing system whereby the government in power may appoint the returning officers and deputy returning officers. Its smacks too much of patronage.

As an illustration, just this morning I read a volume of correspondence written by Sir John A. Macdonald. One of the letters in that file was to one of his supporters who was running for office. The gist of the letter indicated that Sir John A. Macdonald had been fortunate enough, in his opinion, to secure the services of a certain returning officer who, he thought, would be favourable towards this particular candidate. This happened approximately 100 years ago. I do not know whether it happens as blatantly today, but I would not put it past some of our friends on the other side of the House.

I have another story about Sir John A. Macdonald and elections. In the old Northwest Territories, before the government stole Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba from us, the lieutenant governor of the day sent a wire to Sir John A. Macdonald concerning the fact that one of the requirements for a voter was that he should be a householder. This was before universal enfranchisement when women were given the right to vote. The question asked by the lieutenant governor was whether people living in teepees should be considered as householders for voting purposes. Of course, the reply was; yes, if they were Conservatives.

In any event, it is my contention that the appointment of electoral officials, returning officers, deputy returning officers and all those officials required to conduct an election should be appointed by and be under the direct control of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. I believe that he has made that recommendation himself on several occasions, and he has my support for it and, I would think, the support of many other members as well.

Let me say in conclusion that I will be pleased to support this proposed legislation.

• (1540)

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say that I listened to the last speech, which was given by my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and I enjoyed it very much. The people in the north have a peculiar problem which you and I do not face, as

Your Honour, lives in an urban area and I live in a suburban area of the national capital. This problem is not present in Toronto, but I suppose something akin to it can be found in some western ridings, and especially the northern parts of Saskatchean, Alberta and British Columbia. If one were to review the minutes of the committees, one would find that those questions and differences have all been addressed. We all hope that the short period set forth in this bill is a reasonable compromise. Therefore, I join with my friends from all over the country to say that I hope this new compromise works.

Speaking personally for a moment as a candidate in four elections, I want to say that the previous election period seemed to be very long indeed. It must be murder for party leaders who travel the country by airplane, going through time changes, time zones, hours of darkness and hours of light, adjusting eating schedules and doing all of the things they must do in order to maintain some semblance of strength and mental order so that they can carry on from place to place. The problems are tremendous. In a period of time when we seem to have the advantages, if they can be called that, of almost instantaneous communication, it is well that we consider this bill and the propositions it sets forth.

As I say, I believe the bill is a reasonable compromise. I do not think we should end our consideration of elections and representation in the House of Commons by saying that we can deal only with time, that we can merely deal with the posting of notices and the shortening of election periods. There are some other matters which are crucial to all of us who are interested in the House of Commons. I regret that some of the problems which have occurred and are likely to occur are problems which have come about by neglect, or perhaps by allowing this House to grow like Topsy. Perhaps this has created problems for members of Parliament in many ways. However, I want to deal with some of the relevant problems when we consider any change in the electoral process. The result of the present electoral process means that at least 282 men and women are sent here to represent Canadians from various parts of the country. This Parliament is a very complex institution. Its wellbeing is affected by many factors beyond the internal rules it sets for itself or the different personalities of which it is composed.

During my period of office as president of the Privy Council, I proposed many changes to the rules of the House of Commons. In the present session of Parliament, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has promised rules reforms, but none have yet seemed to materialize. I say that regretfully. Strangely enough, an important change is about to be made in the House. It has really been unannounced and it is unwanted by many hon. members in the House. By the next election, there will be an additional 28 members of Parliament to be elected to the House, bringing it to a total of 310 seats. By the year 2001, which is only 20 years ahead, no matter how exotic it may sound, the membership of this House could leap up to the ludicrous total of 374 or 375.

These changes may very well be made without any discussion in the House because a loophole in the legislation required a committee to look into it. This situation had its origins in the review of representation following the census in 1981. Keep it in mind that the British North America Act requires a new apportionment of seats after each decennial census. Under the law enforced to govern representation under which the size of the House of Commons was basically kept stable, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Manitoba and Newfoundland were to lose seats. This was considered to be unacceptable by members of Parliament from those provinces. Furthermore, it was unacceptable to certain MPs who were to lose their own seats under the terms of the new redistribution. One of those unahppy individuals was the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), then the president of the Privy Council and the minister responsible for electoral reform.

So what happened? The boundary readjustment was suspended and the whole issue was referred to a committee. Eventually, a new representation act was passed, embodying what came to be called the amalgam method. It was called that because it combined three different formulae for apportioning seats to small, medium and large provinces. More important, in connection with our present problem, it legislated that in the decennial readjustment of representation, no province was to lose seats. The province of Quebec was to become the basis of calculations for all the provinces. Quebec would have 75 seats, and four more seats would be added after every decennial census. The House would therefore grow very substantially every ten years.

In the federal election of 1979, the first under the new system, 18 new seats were added. The big winners were Quebec, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. Despite growth in Canada's population, the population of individual ridings had been held relatively constant as a result. The members of Parliament and the minority parliament of 1972-1974 knew very well that what they were doing was temporary and that they were dealing only with their own situations and were passing the general question as to whether provinces should see their representation eroded on to a new parliament. This is a new Parliament. In fact, this specific provision was included in the new Representation Act, 1974, requiring the House of Commons of 1979 to review the whole formula for setting the number of seats and distributing them among the provinces. I would like to quote the section of the act which calls for that review. Section 7 of the said act states:

> The President of the Privy Council shall,
> (a) on a day not later than the twentieth sitting day of the House of Commons after the 30th day of June, 1979, if there is then an existing Parliament, or
> (b) if there is not then an existing Parliament, on a day not later than the twenty-fifth sitting day of the House of Commons after Parliament has been summoned, > propose to the House of Commons that an order be made and referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons for the review by that committee of the Rules provided by subsection 51(1) of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1974, as amended by the British North America Act (No. 2), 1974, and for the recommendations of such committee with respect to any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that appear to the committee then to be necessary or desirable, and upon such order being referred to it the committee shall consider the matter of the order and report to the House its recommendations with respect thereto.

That is delightful draftsman's language. If Your Honour could decipher it, you would realize that the review was to be commenced in the early fall of 1979, even if an election came before the reference could be proposed to the House. I emphasize the word "proposed". A committee was then to hold a thorough review and report to the House. In other words, Parliament in 1974 wanted the House in 1979 to catch the hot potato it was passing on and figure out whether or not it was wise to let the House go on growing.

Unfortunately, the draftsman provided for every contingency but the one which occurred. In the fall of 1979 I, as president of the Privy Council, did propose such a motion to the House. Debate on this committee reference was indeed begun before the twenty-fifth sitting day had elapsed, on November 12, 1979. A detailed discussion paper was being prepared by my officials to assist at committee. That paper set out a number of alternatives to the unrestrained growth of the House of Commons.

Before the reference could be debated further, the House fell and the government changed. No more has been heard of a review of the 1974 Representation Act. The 1981 census has now come and gone. The redistribution that I have spoken about and the number of seats that the process commenced is pretty well fixed in stone, unless there is some other sculptor to change the etching on that stone.

In the most technical sense the requirements of the act have been met. A reference was proposed and called for debate. If the reference lapses, so do all the provisions for the committee review based on that reference. The nullification of the review provisions by a new election was not foreseen by the original draftsman of the Representation Act. Nor did they foresee that a government would happily let this House become a bloated monstrosity without any comment from its members. Rather than address the difficult questions faced and then avoided in 1974 for the reasons I have given, the government has decided to avoid them again. I hear nothing about this question now. Worse still, there is no further review of this reckless growth scheduled under the act. All the brakes now seem to be off.

The potential exists, not only for the House to grow after a few decades to the size of the British House of Commons at 635 members but to ultimately surpass it, because there is no end in sight to this growth under the formula at the moment.

What will happen to the Canadian House of Commons if every ten years it grows by about 30 members of Parliament? We are already at our physical limit. To accommodate the new 18 members in 1979, the Speaker's chair was moved right back to the press gallery wall and all the aisles between the seats were made narrower. If we have 30 more members in this House, we will have to replace the desks with benches, knock out the walls or eliminate the aisles altogether and use cranes to lower members of Parliament into their benches.

The cost would be incredible. In 1979 my officials estimated that each additional MP resulted directly in an expenditure of $140,000 in personal and staff salaries. That would be between $170,000 and $190,000 today. The indirect costs are probably more frightening. In the last 20 years the House has taken over the West Block, the Confederation Building, the Metropolitan Life Building, the East Block, and has rented floor space in a few other buildings. By the time the new Royal Bank building on Sparks Street is ready, we will have to take it as well if there are more members added to the House.

I believe the impact on the operation of the House will be devastating. It is already difficult for many backbenchers to be recognized during question period or during a major debate. More and more members of considerable talent feel that the line-up for a cabinet position or some other key role is already too long. It is too easy to waste years as an MP in waiting. It is incredible to think that a major expansion of the House with all its physical, economic and even its psychological implications will be allowed to take place without a word from those most affected.

There are very serious questions to be addressed by the House of Commons and by the government. Do we want to let the House continue to grow and, if so, by how much? Is it reasonable to try to keep constituencies at the same population level or should we expand staff and technical resources instead of the House itself? Can we allow provinces to lose seats if they lag behind in population growth?

Is Quebec, as the home of most of Canada's French-speaking population a special case? Should there be a floor below which no province can fall, and how should that floor be set? Do provinces gain much if instead of actually losing seats they merely retain a fixed representation while other provinces gain more and more seats?

The answer so far has been to solve this problem by negligence. The House will grow and the people will pay more politicians and the frustrations of parliamentary life will grow as well. I believe the government must honour the spirit of the law and refer this matter to a committee. It should stay referred there so that we can hear from the members of the House of Commons who are interested in the operation of this place. Those cabinet papers that I had should be put there so this whole matter can be considered. It has already wasted time. The census has passed. Unless this Parliament acts, we are going to start this mathematical progression to monstrous proportions in terms of the House.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence in allowing me to speak to this matter. I feel it is important. It is just as important for the operation of this House of Commons that we consider how we are, how many there should be, what resources we should have, what service should be available to us in our representational capacity and how we can function, as it is to consider how many days we should take to get here. That is the contribution I want to make to this debate. I thank hon. members. I hope they will consider what I have said because it is very important to our wellbeing in the House.

May I call it four o'clock Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, someone across the aisle says he thought we had an agreement.

Mr. Cullen: I guess I was wrong.

Mr. Crouse: It would appear you are wrong.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Crouse: In rising to participate in this debate, I wish to echo some of the views put on the record by the previous speaker. The question of enlarging the membership of this House is of great concern not only to the people of my constituency but to all the people of Canada. I have been here since June 10, 1957. On June 10 of this year, I will celebrate 25 years as a member of the Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: During that period I witnessed many changes in the House. The previous speaker referred to changes which were recently made, including moving the front desks closer to each other. Since the prime purpose is to keep them at least the distance of two swords apart, I was beginning to wonder just where the space would be found if we added 25 or more members to the House.

An hon. Member: Shorten the swords.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all orders preceding No. 97 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT—PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING POLITICAL RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-297, to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: I thank the House for the opportunity to present this bill. I have had it on the order paper for a number of years and I have been lucky in the draw, or the session of Parliament has lasted long enough, that we have reached Bill C-297. It is always appropriate to debate this kind of subject, but it is more appropriate now, since tomorrow is May Day. Around the world, workers celebrate May Day.

All of us have good intentions about the rights of people generally but these good intentions do not go for much if they are not backed up by actions. The best current example we have at the moment is the situation in Poland where people are denied the fundamental freedom of expression. Members of all parties in the House have spoken passionately and sincerely in support of those kinds of rights—for El Salvador, for Argentina—wherever human rights are denied. The Canadian situation is not as extreme but I hope members will recognize the need for political rights for federal public servants of the same kind that all other citizens of Canada have.

The Civil Service Act of 1913 contained a provision, virtually unchanged to this day, severely limiting the civil rights of federal employees. Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act is headed "Political Partisanship". My bill changes this offensive heading to read "Political Rights".

Clause 1 of the bill would prevent discrimination in employment for political allegiance or activity.

Clause 2 of the bill sets out the political rights of employees who, under existing legislation, can be fired for political activities for or against candidates or parties seeking office. This bill would allow employees to engage in political activity on their own time, when they are off duty, or if they take holidays with pay or get leave of absence without pay. It would allow an employee to take leave of absence to be a candidate in an election—federal, provincial or municipal. An employee elected in such an election would automatically be on leave of absence for up to five years. I am talking about those who come under the Public Service Commission.

I agree that employees who are employed under orders in council or on contract are in an entirely different category. I do not expect a Liberal government to hire a Conservative or a member of the New Democratic Party to be a deputy minister or a branch head or the head of a Crown corporation. I do not expect the government in power to hire somebody to be in a position either to draft or be responsible for implementing a policy with which he does not agree. It is perfectly legitimate, in my opinion, when governments change, for the new administration to bring in people it wants to hold the highest office in the Public Service to draft and to implement the policies of the government of that day. So I am not talking about those who are order in council employees or who work for the government under contract.

Under the existing Public Service Staff Relations Act, public service unions—even the unions—are not allowed to use membership money for political purposes, even if the membership votes overwhelmingly or unanimously to spend some of their money for political purposes. The union itself is barred from doing that. Yet all other unions can do it at any time they want, for any political party. Any organization or association can do it at any time they wish. There is a legislative prohibition against the Public Service unions. Even if they unanimously vote to spend some of their money for political purposes of whatever nature, they can be decertified. Surely that is not fair.

My bill would give Public Service unions the same rights and privileges as have all other unions in Canada—or for that matter all other organizations and associations who choose to spend money for political purposes.

Civil servants, those who are appointed by orders in council or are under contract, can still exercise their political rights; but they will have to take their chances. There will always be people in positions of high responsibility, and the secrecy of government discussions and so forth must be maintained. All the others should have the same rights as other Canadians, the same political freedom to decide whether or not they want to donate money individually or through their unions to a political party or to a candidate.

I would like to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that when a person takes employment in the Public Service each employee takes an oath of office and secrecy which says:

> I will faithfully and honestly fulfil the duties that devolve upon me by reason of my employment in the Public Service and that I will not, without due authority in that behalf, disclose or make known any matter that comes to my knowledge by reason of such employment.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is a sufficient safeguard for any legislative body or government. Why, then, with the requirement that that kind of an oath be taken, would any government want to restrict the political rights of its own employees? Surely that safeguard is in place and it is sufficient?

Political rights for civil service employees have worked in practice, although five provinces in this country still deny political rights, they being Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. The other five allow various larger degrees of freedom than we presently have in the federal statutes. The experiences have been good. In Saskatchewan an employee cannot be forced to engage in political work nor can he be discriminated against for taking part in political activity. British Columbia probably has the best legislation. Employees can be granted leave without pay to serve in an elective position for up to five years and can be granted leave without pay to be a candidate. There are no restrictions, other than the oath of office, for employees of the B.C. government who engage in political activities in their own time. I say that the experience has been good, Mr. Speaker.

I have worked in, or run in, about 25 elections, federal and provincial, since 1952. I have seen public servants be candidates or campaign managers or organizers or canvassers. They could just put up a sign on the lawn. They were from all political parties, no matter what government was in power in my province.

I would like to illustrate that. When Mr. Douglas brought in legislation in 1945 guaranteeing political rights for public servants, there was a great deal of worry. But the experience was good. There were civil servants who wanted leave to work on behalf of the Liberals, the Tories, the NDP, the CCF or Social Credit. They returned to their jobs and they carried out their duties conscientiously.

I do not know of a single instance where a public servant who took part in political party activity in his own time, who was not of the persuasion of the party in power in Saskatchewan, who would ever in any way either betray or work against the duties that he was required to do in his employment.

• (1610)

After we were defeated in 1964 and there were five former CCF MLAs working for Crown corporations or government departments, the new premier, Mr. Thatcher, did not fire them. He kept them working. He told them quite frankly that as long as they did their jobs conscientiously and did not do any CCFing while they were on duty, there would be no problem. Similarly, when Mr. Blakeney took power in 1971, two former Liberal candidates in the employ of the provincial government were not fired. Both of them kept working for a number of years. In fact, I think one of them is still working in a government department. They did their jobs conscientiously and properly and retained their political rights. For all I know, one or both of them might end up being candidates for the Liberal party again, although that would not be a good idea in Saskatchewan at the moment. At any event, the experience has been good.

Bill C-297 might not be the perfect solution. Even if hon. members on all sides do not agree entirely with the details of my bill, I ask the House to pass it—preferably—let it go at second reading and let it go to the appropriate committee of Parliament so that a committee of the House can examine it and come back with a recommendation. If the bill does not pass now at second reading I hope hon. members will at least let the subject matter of the bill be referred to the appropriate standing committee of Parliament because this is putting action where our words are. This is following up on what is being done in other places and what is in our Constitution. In fact, it is very possible that a federal government or a provincial government could find itself in court because of a denial of the rights and freedoms contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our new Constitution, and I do not think even this government wants to work that hard at causing trouble for itself.

Surely, what I ask for is nothing more than simple justice and propriety on the part of this Parliament and the government to ensure that the political rights within the framework defined in my bill are enshrined in the law of this land for our public servants. I am confident that no matter what party is in power the experience will be like that which we have had in Saskatchewan and British Columbia. The experience will be good. In fact, I suspect we will get even better work and performance out of our public servants.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about this matter for just a few moments because it is something which has troubled me a great deal and occupied some time in the House of Commons.

I will not suggest—the hon. member who has just spoken also noted this—that we might agree with every clause, every comma and every jot in his bill, but I think the bill raises some very important questions which are quite pertinent at the moment and which, I believe, should be addressed by the House of Commons. We are talking about something which is quite fundamental. As my friend, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has just mentioned, we dealt with the Constitution a few days ago. It was proclaimed by Her Majesty the Queen on April 17 when she was here in Ottawa, and the question of the rights of public servants has engaged the House, but it is likely to engage us in a new sense, a constitutional sense, as we go on to consider political rights, democratic rights, equality rights and the application of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We will have to find out what the Charter means, and I do not think it would hurt to begin that examination in a parliamentary committee. If the House saw fit today to refer this bill to a House committee to deal with it, I would cheer. I would cheer even if my friend were to propose—as he did—that the subject matter of the bill go to a committee. I would be quite prepared to move that kind of motion if that were acceptable to him—

Mr. Benjamin: Please do.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —because I think it is important.

Mr. Benjamin: I will second it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not propose to speak at length about the bill, and I do not propose to refer to it in relation to a case which has just now been heard under the law with respect to one particular public servant. However, that case has disturbed me because it has raised some real questions in my mind about the state of the law at the moment.

Political rights of public servants are governed by Section 32 of their statute, and that section has caused me to write to the chairman of the Public Service Commission on one occasion. I wrote to him and asked him about how that section might apply. Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act deals with the political rights of people and says that a person does not contravene the limitations by reason only of his attending a political meeting or contributing money for the funds of a candidate for election as a member or money for the funds of a political party. Then it goes on to talk about the rights of public servants to make applications. What it says, interestingly enough, is that a person can belong to a political party, he can go to a meeting, he can give money and he can do everything else everyone else in the country can do, but he does not have the right to speak. According to the chairman of the Public Service Commission, he does not have the right to speak by putting a sign on his lawn or to speak in the course of a political discussion.

Neil Fraser and another public servant in eastern Canada who headed a committee dealing with the compensation to be paid UFFI victims were told they could not speak even about matters which did not deal directly with their departments but which were political to the extent that they were programs of the government. I think we have a real problem on our hands, and I do not think the second reading stage of debate in the House of Commons is the time to consider that problem. However, I do believe it is time we faced up to things and had this subject matter before a committee of the House of Commons.

With respect to political rights, I am a member of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and that committee had before it one night Mr. Edgar Gallant, the chairman of the Public Service Commission, and the next day the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) appeared to discuss this matter. We were discussing it in terms of the fact that in Canada there is no comprehensive codified system yet developed which would apply to all situations for all public servants and employees of Crown corporations, ministers, members of Parliament and so forth. There is nothing. There is no code of ethics. There is no code of conduct. There are some old oaths around relating to one's duties to the programs in one's department, but there is nothing general.

I put a question to the chairman of the Public Service Commission when he was there. Knowing his view that codification may not be the best way, I asked him whether he thought the time had now come when we should review this matter. I asked him if he thought it is an appropriate time for this whole question to go to a parliamentary committee. The chairman, quite honestly and forthrightly, as is usual for him when he is asked questions by members in committee, said, "Yes, I do think it is time this matter was discussed". It was raised in the context of the Neil Fraser case because that was on everyone's mind. It was not pursued in that context because it goes far beyond the elements of that case.

• (1620)

Next day the President of the Treasury Board appeared before the committee and I put the same general question to him and asked how he felt about it. He said he had no objection to the parliamentary committee dealing with the question and that he would consult his colleagues. I gave him a reasonable amount of time to do that. I gather from his answer in the House a few days ago that he is still consulting them or, if he has consulted them, they have not responded yet. I think the government should respond. It could do so today if it wished.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that with respect to matters political, civil servants can only talk philosophy. You know, Mr. Speaker, how profitable a discussion on matters of philosophy can be. Sometimes we think the problem with the government is that it discusses philosophy rather than practical matters.

There is no statute law that prohibits the conduct that has given rise to the debate before the committee. I wonder if in the Fraser case or perhaps the case of the employees of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the government would have moved so swiftly if the issue being criticized on those occasions was not metric, bilingualism, the Constitution and a few other things but had been criticism of the slowness of the government to act on the freedom of information policy. If Neil Fraser had been criticizing the government on that, I wonder if they would have thought him an ally and done nothing about what he said.

After I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board on February 24 in the House, he admitted to reporters outside the House that the situation of public servants might not be so clear. In fact, he called it a "grey area". Yet he refused to intervene against the dismissal of one public servant who had to be left to his own devices.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) has said that it is quite permissible for a public servant to speak out and advocate and market programs, even though such programs may be the subject of partisan political debate in the country. That is permissible. A public servant can speak in favour of partisan issues that the government likes but cannot speak against partisan issues that the government does not like. There is a double standard there that should be examined.

The public service of 1982 is not the public service of 1918. It may have escaped the notice of the government, but in the intervening years unions have been allowed in the public service sector, public servants can belong to political parties, and they can stand as candidates in an election. So the evolution in Canada, as in the rest of the world until this case came up, has been in favour of freedom and openness rather than restriction.

Of course a public servant cannot openly criticize the policy of his department, but is he prohibited from expressing himself in other areas of public policy which affect him personally? For instance, if his house is insulated with urea formaldehyde, can he join a group that is intent on attacking the policy of compensation of the government, with impunity? If he feels abused by the government's high interest rate policy, can he march on Parliament Hill with other Canadians, when his unions and affiliates have arranged such a march, as they did?

The example of the senior officer in a firm in the private sector that was used by the President of the Treasury Board when he answered my question on February 24 in the House, was not very helpful. Of course, if that senior person was publicly critical of his firm's policy, then I think this dismissal might be justified. But is there a reasonable case for dismissal if such a man or woman said nothing about the policy of his firm—let us assume it was a law firm—but was critical of the Law Society of Upper Canada? Or if an employee of Mitel was not critical of Mitel but had something to say about the Canadian Association of Advanced Technology?

The practice of government has changed as well. The Liberal government spends millions of dollars advertising programs and policies even before they are passed by Parliament. In 1982, then, are public servants risking dismissal if they write to their MP and urge him not to support, say, a proposal in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) which deals with pensions? I do not think so.

Clearly, then, the case that is engaging the attention of the public, the Fraser case and the other cases that have been referred to, illustrate just how dangerous it is to accept without question the views of the government on the matter. They also illustrate just how important it is that there be some way that this issue can be examined by a parliamentary committee and how important it is that this bill receive the appropriate approval of the House and that the subject matter go to committee.

As the rules stand now, they are unclear and their enforcement is uneven. I believe it is within the capability of Parliament to at least attempt to clear up some of the confusion.

If this bill is helpful, and I believe it can be, to clear up matters that deal with the rights of unions, which are of concern to the hon. member and myself, because that atmosphere is changing as well, then it is equally important that it be used as a vehicle to deal with questions regarding employees of the government and their rights.

In today's mail I received a copy of a letter from a Mr. John L. Fryer, President of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, which was directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

A month has passed since it was reported in the Ottawa Citizen that you had endorsed the proposal to give a Parliamentary Committee the job of trying to clarify the political rights of public servants.

I wrote to you on March 30th commending you on this decision and on April 7th I received acknowledgement of my letter from your Correspondence Co-ordinator.

Upon enquiring of your office and others it would appear that there is still no Committee and still no terms of reference respecting this very important issue.

Again I wish to advise you that this matter is of major importance to public service employees both in the Federal and Provincial jurisdictions. We deem it a most worth-while exercise to have these political rights clarified for the benefit of the employees themselves as well as the politicians and the public generally.

I urge you to press forward with the formation of this Parliamentary Committee so that it can get on with this most important task.

Today is the day, Mr. Speaker. If the President of the Treasury Board meant what he said, if the words and views of the Chairman of the Public Service Commission are to have life breathed into them, then the time has come for study. Today is the day. Today is the day when a former minister of this government, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), or the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), can get on their feet on behalf of this government and say: "ready, aye ready; let us examine the program and use the bill of the hon. member for Regina as a vehicle to do it."

• (1630)

Mr. Benjamin: Don't talk this bill out.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I promise I will not talk the bill out, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) or the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) will not either. They would certainly be doing their constituents a disfavour were they to attempt to do so.

I am pleased that the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has brought this matter to our attention. I will not speak very long on this bill, but I would like to say that in principle I support the idea of having this subject referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates so that it can be looked at in detail. I find a little difficulty with some of the wording, but the thought and the principle behind this bill are good. It is a matter worthy of detailed consideration and serious study in committee.

Like the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I represent an area where there are many public servants, both at the federal and at the more junior levels. You run up against some very funny things in areas like this. In some areas where almost all the population works directly for the public service, or they have family members who do, it is very hard to get any kind of a political discussion going. It is pretty hard to get assistance for any political party in an election because people are afraid of losing their jobs. They themselves do not know what their rights are. I ran up against an example of that a couple of elections ago when we wished to hire a band to play at an election rally. I am sure the other political parties were trying to do precisely the same thing and probably would have been quite willing to hire the same band, but band members felt that, because their full-time job was in the public service, they could not even do that. They could not play music at a political meeting because in some way their supervisor might not like what happened and they feared for their jobs. An extreme example, I am sure, but a very common problem.

In every election campaign in the area which I represent, whether it be federal, territorial or even municipal, this question always comes up. At all political meetings people want to know what the candidates feel about the matter of political rights for public servants. It has been an issue for many years. I understand that at the territorial level in the Yukon they have come up with some pretty good legislation granting certain political rights to certain classes of public servants. If this matter gets to committee I would suggest the Yukon legislation dealing with this matter be looked at because it appears to have worked reasonably well in that jurisdiction.

I have been requested by many of my constituents to have this matter discussed openly in Parliament so that they will know where they stand. By and large the opinion of public servants is that they would like more political rights. Some people who are not public servants are worried about going too far in that direction. Although they support public servants having a certain amount of political rights, they see a line across which you should not go. One of the difficulties we face in this subject is defining where public servants may get really involved in the political process and where they should not become at all involved. Obviously if you are a deputy minister you should stay away from partisan activities. In no way should he be seen as an outright supporter of one political party or another. On the other hand, take a person who happens to be a bricklayer or drives a grader for the highways department. Obviously, there is no reason why that person should not be the president of a local political organization. There is no harm done there. But where do you draw the line?

If someone is dealing continuously on important topics with members of the general public and is known to be a strong supporter of a particular party, someone of another political stripe is going to be leery of dealing with that person. People in that kind of position should control what they do. Very often it is a question of a public servant determining in his own mind how far he can or should go in his overt political activities.

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton cited changes in the public service since confederation. At one time only a small percentage of the working population was employed in the public service. It was something of an elite group, and in those times it was understood that if you got into this type of work you were prepared to give up some of the political rights that other people enjoyed. People could understand and live with that. But now, if you take public servants at the federal, provincial and municipal levels, and include Crown corporations, you probably end up with 35 per cent or 40 per cent of the working population employed by the government in one way or another. The situation is now entirely different because government makes up so much of the modern economy and it is almost impossible not to have someone in a family working for government one way or another. Therefore, we have to change our ideas as to the propriety of people being involved in political activity when they or their relatives are employed by the government. I would not like to see some 35 per cent or 40 per cent of the population excluded from exercising political rights which other people accept as being common.

I enjoyed listening to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton because he broadened the question somewhat. He cited some recent occurrences which make it very important that these questions be addressed and resolved in the near future. It is not something we should let slip by. We should pursue it with diligence. There is a wider case than just partisan activity that has to be examined. I hope it can be looked at simultaneously when we look at this aspect in committee.

I am now turning over the floor to the hon. member for Gatineau and the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton so they can have ample opportunity to make representations without having to resort to talking out this bill. If they do not talk it out, I am sure we will have some very interesting discussions in committee.
