FREDERICTON, N. B., AUG 6, 1892.

A BARBARIAN.

It appears that the volunteer trooper Innes, under the command of Colonel Streator at the late Homestead troubles, is about bringing an action against his Colonel for having ordered the young man to be tied up by the thumbs and have his head shaved for having foolishly raised a cry on the side of the rioters, which in itself amounted to nothing, deserving more than a reprimand—he was a mere boy of 17 and full of enthusiasm. We read of such barbarities happening in Russia, but in the great and free United States of America to treat a soldier, a citizen soldier at that, never. But what could have put such a devilish notion in the head of a Christian soldier as much as a pagan as that such a refined monster of cruelty should exist in North America even in time of war when the execution of discipline in the army, however severe, no such cruelty as that just perpetrated would be regarded lightly by the public. If the law of reprisals according to the old Indian customs prevailed at the present day, this man called a "colony" should not only be tied up in the same way, but have fifty lashes laid upon his bare back, and then have the expanets torn from his shoulders and drummed out of the army which he has so disgraced. The father of the young man also brings a suit against the commander—so that between the two it is hoped that Colonel Streator will receive his deserts.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Parliament was opened (pro forma) on Thursday last and will meet for the dispatch of business which will mean this time for the "despatch" of the present government and the substitution of a new one. Some people appear to be in great perplexity lest the grand old man will be tripped up on the threshold by the wire pullers, and have no chance for a Ministry but Salisbury and Balfour know a thing or two and are not going to surrender without hard kicking. They have the sympathy of the Queen who never was overfriendly to Gladstone. This is all chaff. The Queen has too much good sense, at the end of her days to interfere as George and William the fourth frequently did, with the arrangements of a Ministry, having the confidence of the House of Commons; no matter what her disposition or wishes. She knows when to give way as in the case of the assumption of office by Sir Robert Peel some 38 years ago, when the new Premier insisted upon the dismissal of a lady of the bedchamber and who Her Majesty wished to retain. She had either to part with the lady or her Minister, and there is no knowing what might have happened if the advice was disregarded. However, few persons believe that the Queen has any prejudices to gratify in the present instance. These stories are only Tory devices. Then again Mr. Gladstone's materials he has to work with are not only incongruous out of themselves, made up of a mass of Parrellites, McCarthys, Laborites and extreme Radicals. Therefore he will only be kept in office by a rope of sand. Not so fast. The Malcontents of his party—should such show themselves at any time—know full well that it is not an easy thing to overturn a majority of 40. It would require 20 of a combination of offshoots to upset the government, and upon what known or supposed ground could they act? If it were possible to turn out the government what would be the chances of re-election in case of being sent back to their constituents? There will be no split, though there may be some pointing. But once the "Home Rule" question is out of the way—blocked if you like in the House of Lords for the time being—where then after that will be the "disidents," the old time Liberals? Surely they must support Mr. Gladstone in all well understood Liberal measures, such as one man one vote, shorter parliaments, reformed franchise etc. The only division between the disidents and the Gladstonians is on the Irish question. After that is disposed of they can no longer hold, unless they identify themselves with the Tory party after fighting against that party all their political life time, or set up in business for themselves as a destructive party. In either case the country will be against them. Mr. Gladstone will (if he lives through the crisis) have a majority of nearly one hundred so soon as the disidents fall into line, and that will be after the Irish question is settled in the House of Commons.

ERECTION AS A SUMMER RESORT.

The Reporter of the Gleaner had an interview with Governor Russell of Massachusetts when in Fredericton a few days ago on his way homeward from his fishing trip to the Miramichi. According to the reporter the governor is quite enthusiastic over the beauties of Fredericton and its fine balmy climate, and suggests the formation of a company to build summer cottages on the bank of the river or any part of Fredericton, for the benefit of summer visitors from the large American cities who are tired of the hotel life they experience in the United States by the seaside. He says hundreds of families would spend three or four months in the year, and pay a whole year's rent for the use of a cottage, where they could have home life and quietness in a fine atmosphere. He says the place has only got to be made known and hundreds of families would come down, and he suggests the formation of a company to build cottages of the required kind, and also another furniture company to make light, suitable, inexpensive furniture for the use of such cottages. The whole thing seems very fine as far as words go and practicable. We know, however, at least a dozen houses, cottages, etc., in Fredericton that have been standing idle for some time, some of them finely situated, at moderate rents too—in fact where such a family as can afford to travel, pays $2,000 a year rent in Boston, may get as good a house in Fredericton for $200 or less. As our Board of Trade is supposed to take an interest in the welfare and progress of the city, let them call a meeting and consider the report of Governor Russell's views in the Gleaner of the 2nd inst. We believe if a plan were worked and a proper company formed capital may be raised among the rich men and business men of Fredericton, in the way of stock. There is Bar Harbor a foggish place containing numerous such cottages which are crowded every summer by American houses. Also Campobello (contains first-class houses) the last place made after the world was created.

Under the late taxing inheritance, the New York authorities have assessed the estate of the late Daniel Fayerweather $188,389 on account of the bequest made by him to colleges outside the state of New York. The counsel for the estate says this assessment on the ground that the beneficiaries are educational institutions within the law, the same as colleges in New York, whose beneficiaries are not taxed. No decision has yet been made by the courts, but it is intimated that educational institutions outside of New York cannot get the benefit of an exemption.

Cyrus W. Field lost all his money before he died, but he left a goodly heritage nevertheless. The fame of the man who laid the first Atlantic cable is something rarely misfortune and the weeks of time.

The experience of the manufacturers of the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco is a valuable lesson in political economy. Previous to their coming to this land, the tobacco made at the finest Virginia Leaf, was always held at fancy prices, and put up in some fancy style of manufacture. It was thought as regards the risk would be such tobacco, and at the old prices one but the risk could buy it. The makers of the "Myrtle Navy" resolved to try the manufacture of the tobacco of George Fordham, and put their profit at so low a rate that no competitor could possibly undersell them with the same quality of article. From the very first, until now, their rate of profit has been a uniform percentage upon the cost. It is their enormous sales which make their low rate of profit a satisfactory one in the aggregate, and also gives them their firm hold upon the market. Their success is an excellent lesson for manufacturers to study over.

On Friday last week Frank Sisk, the driver of the Tremble mail, presented an order to Mr. Snowball, in favor of Mr. Murray, and purporting to be signed by Mr. Graham's signature is familiar to Mr. Snowball's clerk, and was not paid. On Monday, after it had been ascertained that no such order had been issued by Mr. Graham, Sisk was arrested and lodged in the lock-up. He was released on Tuesday, at the instance of Mr. Snowball, on his own recognizance, to appear when wanted for examination. Sisk says he got the order from John McMahon, postmaster at Tremble, who asked him to get it cashed for him. It is for $25.02.—Clatham World.

Photographer: Now, then, Mr. Croser if you please, look pleasant for a minute—that's it—a moment longer—there. You may now resume your natural expression.

Sundry Ebulitions in Prose and Verse.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Waxing.

Bicycle Dealer: This machine will be better for your boy than a pony. It doesn't eat anything.
Frustrated Parent (not entirely convinced): No, it won't eat anything; but I'm afraid it'll give the boy a thundering big appetite.
He: The worst thing about me is my nose; I've got such a beastly one.
She: You shouldn't say such things about a girl!
He: A girl? I—al—don't understand.
She: I wasn't a birthday present?
Mrs. Gadd: Wouldn't it be grand if science should discover the moon to be inhabited, and he on some way to talk with our lunar neighbors?
Mrs. Gabb: Indeed it would. They would be near enough to talk to, yet not near enough to be running in at all hours of the day.
The subject for conversation at an evening entertainment was the intelligence of animals, particularly dogs.
Said Robinson: "These dogs are a little more than we give them credit for. They have more sense than their masters."
"Just so," responded young Jones. "I've got that kind of dog myself!"

Famous Derby Winners.

Enthusiasm in connection with our classic races is now somewhat out of date. Very few sportsmen nowadays would arrive at such a pitch of excitement as the inhabitants of Richmond, in Yorkshire, who, according to "The Druids," refused to go to bed on the night of the day which saw the Derby winner, Voltigeur, win the Doncaster Cup in 1850. "What ails you 'o' going to bed," he inquired, angrily, "when Voltigeur's won 't Leger and 't Coope's?"

Among famous Derby winners the first must perforce have a place. Diomed, the victor in 1780, when the race was established, enjoyed a long life, for on the other side of the Atlantic this horse was in full health and vigor when more than thirty years old. Epagone races have made a big stride forward since that time, although it is just possible that the Summer meeting would have collapsed altogether had not Lord George Bentinck come to the rescue some fifty years since, by lending a sum of five thousand pounds to save the Derby and Oaks from extinction.

Among the hundred and odd winners of "the blue ribbon of the turf," we must notice Champlain, the winner in 1800, who was the first to win the "double event" of the Derby and St. Leger, a feat which was not again accomplished until 1887. From 1801 to Mananaka's Derby in 1827 we find such well-known names as sportsmen, at any rate as Tyrant, Hamal, Fan, Whalton, Smeolock, Blucher, Odo, and Laping among the victors.
After Mananaka won the Derby for Lord Jersey in 1827, he travelled from Doncaster on horseback in company with the Earl of Scarborough, to see the race, and in his opinion, there was only one other event in his time to be compared with it, viz., the race for the Gold Cup at Richmond, in 1815, won by Filio de Fata.

Caillard, in 1828, was only returned a Derby winner after a dead-heat with The Colonel, who afterwards won the St. Leger. From 1801 to Mananaka's Derby in 1827, was a very high-spirited, fractious and thin-skinned animal, and cut many a shine during his training.
A few years ago three lived at a little wayside inn at Mickleham, near Dorking, an ostler who proudly boasted that he was the first to hit "the Duke of George Fordham, into a saddle. Upon the hill overlooking this hostelry there may be seen, under the wooden palings of Juniper Park, what is still called "Day Middleton's Gallop," and here, for a fortnight or so previous to the Derby, did Bay Middleton kick up his heels and make things hum generally for the stable lads.
Respecting our next notable winner—Little Wonder, in 1840—there was a base insinuation that he was more than three years old at the time of his victory. This rumor, however, was satisfactorily proved to be false, a remark which also applies to the somewhat similar contemporary respecting the Hungarian-bred Kisher, the Derby winner of 1870.

For Colchester's victory in 1843, Mr. Bower, the owner, was undoubtedly indebted to the skill and nerve of his jockey, Bill Scott. In fact, John Kent has told us, through the Duke of Beaufort's interesting volume, that had Caper (whom Lord George Bentinck, the owner, had backed to win one hundred and thirty-five thousand pounds) been ridden by George Abdale in place of Sam Rogers, he would, in the opinion of his trainer, have been returned the winner. Not the only instance by many in which victory has rested more on the ability of the rider than that of the horse.
Surplus, the winner of 1848, was also winner of the St. Leger. The latter race will always be remembered by sportsmen. Flatcatcher, Cannon, and Surplus might have been covered by a sheet as, with Flatcatcher leading, they closed for the final struggle. The first to cry "enough" was Flatcatcher, and then terrific was the fight between Surplus and Cannon. The lurching action of the former, however would not be denied and the double event which had previously been only accomplished by Mr.

Wilson's bay colt Champion) was repeated. In 1852, the riding of Frank Butler on Daniel O'Rourke undoubtedly won the race. It was a victory to be mentioned in the same breath as that of Colchester, of that of Maidmont on Cremona in 1872, and those of Fred Archer on Bend Or and Melton in 1880 and 1885. In West Australia's year grand riding again carried the day, although it was not until Johnny Osborne, upon Honeywood's hack, had frightened Colonel Assen out of his wits by getting so close, that the first hero of the triple crown was allowed to win the Derby.

6TH HALF-YEARLY COMPETITION.

The Most Interesting Contest Ever Offered by the Canadian Agriculturist.

One Thousand Dollars in Cash, a pair of handsome Saddle Poles, Carriage and Harness, and over two thousand other valuable prizes, are offered in the contest. Who will have them? According to the usual custom for some years past the great contest of the Agriculturalist was their Sixth Half-yearly Literary Competition. Five Hundred Dollars in cash will be given to the second placed list.
A Handsome Pair of Saddle Poles, Carriage and Harness, will be given for the third.

Over one thousand additional prizes awarded in order of merit. One Grand Prize, $2000; organ; $400 piano; Dinner Set; Ladies' Gold Watch; Silk Dress; Pattern; Forties; Cane; Silver Tea Service; Tennyson's Poem; and many other valuable prizes.
As there are more than 1,000 prizes, any one who takes the trouble to prepare an ordinary good list will not fail to receive a valuable prize. It is the biggest thing in the competition list that we have ever placed before the public, and all who do not take part will miss an opportunity of a life time.
Rule—1. A letter cannot be used unless it bears the name of the writer. The name of the writer must be written in full on the envelope. 2. Words having more than one meaning should be spelled out in full. 3. Names of places can be used but once. 4. Errors will not invalidate a list—the wrong word will simply not be counted.
Each list must contain one dollar to pay for six months' subscription to "The Agriculturalist." If two or more lists are entered, the list which bears the earliest postmark will take the first prize, and the others will receive prizes in order of merit. United States money and stamps taken at par.
The subject of the contest is: How magnificent is the power of the human mind in every part of the American continent.
Every competitor enclosing 30 cents in stamps extra, will receive free by mail, post paid, one of "The Canadian Agriculturist's" Eighth Quarter-Spices of Canada.
Prize awarded to persons residing in the United States will be shipped from our New York office free of duty. All money lists should be registered.

THOUSANDS IN REWARDS

The Great Weekly Competition of the Ladies Home Magazine.
Which word in this advertisement spells the same Backwards as Forward? This is a rare opportunity for every Madam and Miss, every Father and Son, to secure a splendid Prize.
WEEKLY PRIZES.—Every week throughout this great competition prizes will be distributed as follows: The first correct answer received (the postmark date on each letter to be taken as the date received) at the office of THE LADIES HOME MAGAZINE (and each every week during 1892) will get $200; the second correct answer $100; third $50; fourth, a beautiful silver service; fifth, five o'clock silver service, and the next 50 correct answers will get prizes ranging from $25 down to $2. Every correct answer, irrespective of whether a prize winner or not, will get a special prize, competitors residing in the southern states, as well as other distant parts, have an equal chance with those nearer home, as the postmark will be their authority in every case.

Men Wanted.

Mr. Joseph Walker, the popular West End tailor, wants one hundred men to supply with pants, suits, overcoats, bargains in spring and summer garments to clear out the stock and make room for fall and winter goods to arrive. Call and see goods and prices.

Married at the Cathedral.

Mr. Belmont Carr, a native of Redoubt, and now a prosperous citizen of Monmouth, Mich., and Miss Selma McKnight, of New Maryland, were married in the Cathedral Wednesday. The Rev. F. Alexander performed the ceremony. The happy couple left by the morning train for their future home in Monmouth.

Reigning.

Prof. Murray has resigned the Professorship of Philosophy in the University and accepted the position tendered him by Dalhousie College, Halifax, at a salary of $2,000. It is understood Prof. Murray gave the senate to understand that he would continue in the University provided a salary of $1,400 were assured, but that body by the casting vote of the president, Dr. Innes, declined to give any increase.

A Large Funeral.

The funeral of the late Jas. F. Steadman, who was murdered in Moncton, took place Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in St. John's church. Deacons Nos. 39 and 63, L. O. A., numbering fifty-three members, led a band, took part in the procession, which was the largest seen in Moncton for some time. The casket was beautifully decorated with flowers.

Improvements.

Mr. Geo. T. Wilkes, who purchased the confectioary business of Mr. H. Taber, has given the place a thorough cleaning and improved it in many ways. Mr. Wilkes proposes to run the establishment in the very best style and will carry only the best of stock. His ice cream and ice cream soda is equal to anything made in the province. Watch for his advertisement next week.

Officers Installed.

Our Premier.

At half-past six last night a number of cartridges filled with representative citizens, formed in procession in front of the Queen Hotel and headed by the Fredrickson Brass Band, proceeded to the depot to meet Attorney General Blair, who was en route to the city on the evening train. After a cordial reception had been given the hon. gentleman the procession, in which the friends also took part, took up its line of march coming in York to Queen and down Queen to Parliament square where an address was presented to his honor, to which Mr. Blair made a suitable and feeling reply.

A Pretty Wedding.

Wednesday morning at half-past six a very interesting event took place in the Methodist church, being the marriage of Mr. C. Fred Chestnut, the popular young druggist, and Miss Mary M. Hogg, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Hogg. The bride looked sweet in a brown travelling suit, the bridesmaid, Miss Jennie Hogg, sister of the bride, looked very pretty in a suit of grey. Mr. F. St. J. Bliss supported the groom. Rev. R. W. Wedall performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Chestnut took the morning train for St. John, Boston and other cities, on their bridal tour, followed by the best wishes of their numerous friends. The Globe extends congratulations.

Nelson, thinking of stalling on a regulation track, was worked three miles at Maplewood this week. The first was an easy one in 2:29; the second was in 2:52 and the third in 2:19, the last quarter in 34 seconds, a 2:15 slip. The croaker who say Nelson lost his speed ought to be quiet after this. He was at no time forced to stop, and he had gone every foot of the mile at a much faster gait. Quite a large crowd was present to witness the great stallion work, and only praise for the famous St. John.

The Prohibition Commissioners are expected to arrive in St. John to-day, and will be in this city next week. They will go through their little fare and pass on to the next town.

Some parties have been agitating an excursion to leave here to-night for St. John, by steamer Florenceville and return Sunday night. It seems to have been a difficult job as it failed to materialize.

A game of ball between the C. E. I. team and the St. John Shamrocks will take place on the grounds at Pine Park, on Monday next. The C. E. I. team will be strengthened as much as possible by taking on two or three of our best local players, and with steady work they should have no difficulty in getting the best of the Shamrocks here put the management of the Park to considerable expense, but being fully convinced that the citizens would patronize the game liberally, and by so doing, encourage our boys in such sport, the outcome of which will be a good ball team and also cricket and lacrosse teams.

Arrangements are being made to bring the Moncton Y. M. C. A. team here, but it depends entirely upon how Monday's game is patronized. Just so long as the people are willing to turn out in sufficient numbers to guarantee the gate receipts covering expenses, just so long the management of the Park to considerable expense, but being fully convinced that the citizens would patronize the game liberally, and by so doing, encourage our boys in such sport, the outcome of which will be a good ball team and also cricket and lacrosse teams.

OF THE LABORER.

Amelia Recorder, Halifax, N. S.

Prof. W. M. Reid, J. D. Schaeffer, Lyle Vincent and W. D. Vincent, arrived by the Halifax last night. They are some of the party who go to Labrador in the schooner Equinox in the interests of the World's Fair to secure an Equinox village with some fifty inhabitants and all apparatus thereto belonging. The schooner left Cunningham and Currier's wharf to-day on her mission.

A Recorder reporter was talking to-day to Capt. Wm. McConnell, of Fort Hillier, Guysboro, who is in charge of the vessel. An interesting incident was mentioned (but which it would be a "puff" of a patent medicine to say that it was a "puff" of a patent medicine) that he had seen a man on the Equinox who was going after Equinox. He has known him for years, and he said that he was on board the Equinox several times to help up on board. "He is a real man," he said, "he was a real man in a word measure to take on board." "He is a real man," he said, "he was a real man in a word measure to take on board."

Out of curiosity, the reporter secured an introduction to the captain, and after some talk about the expedition, remarked: "I, that correspondent, Captain, about your recovery from sickness, and that you attribute it to these pills."

"Well, I don't know anything else. I recovered after taking them."

"And haven't been troubled since?"

"No, of course we will see what this winter may bring forth; I haven't said anything about it."

"But last winter?"

"I began taking them in December, and found the change brought about in my condition. The schoolmaster is a handsome model, 26 years, and is a fast sailor. John Silver & Co. furnished the supplies."

"Agreeing," he said, dramatically, "is a man after my own heart."

"No, he isn't," my dear," replied her practical father, "he's after your money."

THE FLOWER GIRLS

Marseilles!

"Do not say that, Philippe," responded Blanche. "I weep because I am an unhappy girl. See, I can scarcely walk. We would have done better to kneel before my uncle and pray to him with clasped hands."
She made an effort and arose, and they continued their walk through that terrible region. It was not the wild and gay escapade of a couple of lovers; it was a sombre fight, full of anxiety and suffering, the fight of two trembling and silent culprits.

They traversed the territory of Gardanne, and stumbled for nearly five hours over the obstacles of the path. They finally decided to descend to the Aix highway, and there they advanced with less difficulty.
When they were at the top of the rising ground of the Arc, they dismissed Victor. Blanche had traveled six leagues on foot, among the rocks, in less than six hours; she seated herself upon a stone bench at the gate of the town, and declared that she could go no further. Philippe, who was afraid of being arrested if he remained at Aix, went in quest of a carriage; he found a woman seated in a cart, who consented to take Blanche and himself and conduct them to Lambesc, where she was going.

Blanche, despite the jolts, was soon in a deep slumber and did not wake until they reached the gate of Lambesc. This sleep calmed her blood; she felt rested and stronger. The two lovers quitted the vehicle. The dawn, came, a fresh and radiant dawn which filled them with hope. All the phantoms of the night were gone; the fugitives had forgotten the rocks of Septemes, and walked side by side in the wet grass, intoxicated with their youth and their love.

Not having found M. de Gironouse, whom Philippe had resolved to ask hospitality, they went to the inn, and at last enjoyed a day of peace and quietude. The inn-keeper, thinking his guests were brother and sister, proposed to prepare two apartments, Blanche smiled; she had now the courage inspired by tenderness.

"One room will do," said she. Monsieur de Gironouse, who had returned. He told him everything and asked his advice. "The deuce!" cried the old noble, "your case is grave. You know that you are a clown; a century ago, M. de Casalis would have had you hanged for having dared to touch his niece; to-day, he can only have you cast in prison. Be assured that he will not fail to do it."

"What must I do?"
"What must you do? Send back the young girl to her uncle and gain the frontier as soon as possible."
"You are well aware that I will never do that."
Then, quietly awaiting your arrest, I have no other counsel to give you."

M. de Gironouse had a friendly bluntness which hid the best heart in the world. As Philippe, confounded by the roughness of his reception, was about to depart, he recalled him, and taking his hand:

"My duty," resumed he, with a slight bitterness, "is to have you arrested. Listen: I have on the other side of Lambesc, a small, unoccupied house, the key of which I will give you. Go conceal yourselves there, but say nothing to me about it; otherwise, I'll send the gendarmes after you."

The lovers remained over a week at Lambesc. They lived there in retirement in the enjoyment of peace which was at times broken by sudden fears. Philippe had received the thousand francs from Marius. Blanche became a little house-keeper, and the town ate with delight from the same plate.

This new existence seemed like a dream to the young girl. Occasionally she grew dissatisfied, and longed to return to her uncle's home; but she was afraid to speak of this, she felt that she was weak and alone; but she accepted the flight and lacked the courage to retrace her steps.

It was the octave of the Fete Dieu. One afternoon, as Blanche stood at the window, she saw a procession pass. She knelt and clasped her hands. The young maidens, clad in white, sang in joyous tones, bearing in their midst the banner of the Virgin. At this sight the poor child began to sob; she imagined herself in a snowy robe, among the singers, and her heart bled when she realized that she was a fugitive.

That evening, Philippe received an anonymous note. It warned him that he would be arrested on the following day. He thought he recognized M. de Gironouse's handwriting. Then the flight was renewed; it was harder to hear and more wretched than before.

CHAPTER VI

HEARD DOWN.

It was a bewildering confusion, a flight without intermission or repose, an incessant terror. Driven right and left by their fright, constantly thinking they heard behind them the gallop of horses, passing the nights running about the highways and the days trembling in the filthy chambers of inns, the fugitives traversed Provence many times, hurrying forward and retracing their steps, not knowing where to find an unknown retreat, hidden in the midst of some desert.

They quitted Lambesc on a terribly windy night and went towards Avignon. They had hired a little cart; the blast blinded the horse, and Blanche shivered in her miserable calico dress. At the climax of misfortune, they thought they saw in the distance, at one of the gates of the town, some gendarmes who were scanning the faces of the passers. Terrirified, they turned about and went back to Lambesc, through which they merely passed.

They reached Aix, but were afraid to remain there; they resolved to gain the frontier, cost what it might. There they would procure a passport and find safety. Philippe, who was acquainted with a druggist at Tonon, decided that they would go by way of that city; he hoped that his friend would facilitate their flight.

The druggist, a burly, jovial fellow named Jourdan, gave them a hearty welcome. He concealed them in his own chamber, and said he would at once endeavor to get them a passport.
Jourdan had barely left the house when two gendarmes presented themselves. Blanche nearly fainted; pale, seated in a corner, she restrained her sobs. Philippe, in a choking voice, asked the gendarmes what they wanted.

"Are you the Sieur Jourdan?" demanded one of them, with ill-omened harshness.
"No," answered the young man. "M. Jourdan has gone out, but he will soon return."
"Very good," said the gendarmes, coldly.

And he sat down, heavily. The poor fugitives were afraid to look at each other; they were full of terror; they felt unspeakable uneasiness in the presence of those men who had without effort become to seek them. Their torture lasted half an hour. At length Jourdan returned; he grew pale on seeing the gendarmes and answered their questions with inexpressible confusion.

"You must come with us," said one of the men to him.
"Why?" asked Jourdan. "What have I done?"
"You are accused of having cheated at cards, last evening, at a club. You will have to explain matters to the Judge of instruction."

A shiver of terror shook Jourdan. His face looked like that of a corpse. He seemed utterly overwhelmed, and, with the incapacity of a child, fled to the garden, who withdrew without even noticing the flight of Blanche and Philippe.

The Jourdan case, at that time, caused a great sensation in Tonon; but no one knew of the private and poignant scene which had taken place at the druggist's house on the day of arrest.

This scene discouraged Philippe. He realized that he was too weak to escape from that human justice which was tracking him. Besides, he no longer hoped to procure a passport and could not cross the frontier. Further, it was plain to him that Blanche had begun to be weary. He resolved, therefore, to approach Marseilles and wait, in the vicinity of that city until M. de Casalis' anger had somewhat abated. Like all other men, he had moments of hope and moments of despair.

The lovers had passed the night amid the fifts of the Pyricard country house. They were there, upon the terrace, among the roses, when they were separated from the world. Around them fell the grand silence of the slumbering heavens. They could hear each other in peace; they no longer trembled; they were alone. Philippe would not have exchanged the equal but for a royal palace; he said to himself, with transports of pride, that he was a nobleman; he felt that he was married to him and was with him in a stable. And on the morrow and the following days, what keen enjoyment he had in the company of his dearest of Jeanne! He bore away his beloved with all the gentleness of a father and the violence of a wild beast.

He could not sleep; he felt the strong odor of the thyme, upon which he lay drove him mad. He dreamed, wild awake, that M. de Casalis had received him with tenderness and that he had been named deputy as the successor of his uncle. At times he heard the dolorous sighs of Blanche, who was dozing at his side, feverish and agitated. The young girl had come to consider her flight with Philippe as a nightmare, full of dolorous terrors. She remained longer troubled; they slept alone, smiling sadly, but never complained. Her inexperience had made her accept the departure, and her weak character prevented her from demanding that they should return. She belonged body and soul to this man, who was carrying her in his arms; she would have preferred not to walk so much, but she had no idea of quitting Philippe; she continued innocently to believe that her uncle would sanction their marriage; and that it was only necessary to run about among the rocks for a few days longer. She was a big baby, who had had the misfortune to be a woman before the proper age.

At sunrise the fugitives quitted their retreat. Their garments began to be terribly torn, and poor Blanche's shoes had holes in them. In the coolness of the morning, amid the sharp perfume of the plateau which the new-born sunbeams flooded with yellow and pink light, the lovers forgot for an hour their misery and their abandonment. They laughingly declared that they were frantically hungry.

Then Philippe made Blanche enter the station, and hastened to Tholonet for provisions. He was gone half an hour. When he returned, he found the young girl frightened; she asserted that she had seen a white pass.

A bread stone also served as the breakfast table. Blanche and Philippe looked like a couple of Gypsy lovers breakfasting in the open air. After breakfast, the two, walked to the middle of the plain where they remained all day. They passed there, perhaps, the happiest hours of their love-life.

But, when twilight came on, they were afraid; they did not wish to spend another night in that solitude. The warmth and pure air of the hill had given them hopes and milder thoughts.

"Are you weary, my child?" asked Philippe of Blanche.
"Oh yes," answered the young girl. "Listen: we will make a last journey. Let us go to the country house which I own in the Trois-bons Dieux district, and remain there until your uncle pardons us or causes my arrest."

"My uncle will pardon us."
"I dare not believe you. At any rate I desire to flee no longer; you have need of rest. Come; we will walk slowly."

They crossed the plateau, going away from the Infirmeries, leaving to the right the Chateau de Saint Marc, which they saw upon the height. In an hour they reached their destination.

Isnard's country house was on the hill which stretches to the left of the Varrenargues highway, when one has passed the Vallon de Repentance. It was a little, two-story cabin; on the first floor there was but one apartment, in which stood a rickety table and three seats.

A wooden ladder led to the chamber above, a sort of garret entirely bare, where the lovers found as the only furniture a wretched mattress placed upon a pile of hay. Isnard had characteristically put a white sheet at the foot of the mattress.

Philippe's intention was to go to Aix on the morrow, and obtain information as to M. de Casalis' designs in regard to himself. He knew that he could not conceal himself much longer; he retired almost in peace, calmed by the soothing words of Blanche, who judged events with a young girl's boldness.

For twenty days the fugitives had been running about the fields. For twenty days the gendarmes had been scouring the country, following in their tracks, sometimes taking the wrong road but always brought back to the scent by some "drilling" circumstance. M. de Casalis' anger had increased at all these delays; his pride was irritated by each fresh obstacle. At Lambesc the gendarmes had presented themselves a few hours too late; at Tonon the passage of the fugitives had been signaled only the day after their return to Aix; everywhere, Philippe and Blanche escaped as by a miracle. At Aix the deputy accused the police of bad faith.

Finally, he was assured that the lovers were in the neighborhood of Aix and started for France. He hurried to Aix; he wished to assist in the search. The woman of the Cours Sextius, who had harbored Blanche and Philippe for so long, had been arrested with her; that she might not be accused of complicity, she told all; she said that the young folks had been concealed in one of Isnard's properties.

On being questioned, Isnard calmly denied everything. He declared that he had not seen his relative for several months; he had been in the city since Philippe and Blanche were entering the country house of the Trois-bons Dieux district. The mercur could not warn the lovers during the night. At five o'clock the next morning, a commissaire de police knocked at his door and informed him that a search was about to be made at his house and at his three properties.

M. de Casalis remained at Aix, declaring that he feared he might kill Philippe if he met him face to face. The agents who were directed to visit the Pyricard country house found the nest empty. Isnard obligingly offered to conduct two gendarmes to his Tholonet property, suspecting that it would be a useless errand. The commissaire de police, accompanied also by two gendarmes, started for the interior. The commissaire took a locksmith with him, Isnard having stated vaguely that the key of the house was hidden under a stone to the left of the door.

It was about six o'clock when the commissaire reached the country house. All the openings were closed; no sound came from the interior. The commissaire advanced and cried, in a loud voice, pounding upon the door with his fist:

"In the name of the law, open!"
No one answered. Nothing stirred. After several minutes, the commissaire turned to the locksmith and said:

"Kick the lock!"
The locksmith went to the work. The scraping of the iron broke the silence. Then the shutter of a window opened violently, and, amid the golden brightness of the rising sun, his neck and arms bare, appeared Philippe Cayrol, disdainful and angry.

"What do you want?" said he, leaning his elbows heavily on the window sill. At the first blow dealt upon the door by the commissaire, Philippe and Blanche suddenly awoke. Seated on the mattress, amid the tremors of awakening she heard with anxiety the sound of voices.

The cry, "In the name of the law" that terrible cry which bursts upon the ears of the guilty like a clap of thunder, nearly deprived the young man of breath. He started up, trembling, dismayed, not knowing what to do. The young girl, her eyes yet heavy with sleep, wrapped herself in the sheet and wept with shame and despair.

Philippe comprehended that all was over, and that he could do nothing but surrender. A million revolt stirred in him. So his dreams of wealth were dead; he never would be acknowledged as Blanche's husband; he had carried off an heiress to be cast into prison; at the denunciation, instead of the lovely dwelling of which he had dreamed, he would find a dungeon. Then a cowardly thought came to him; he entertained the idea of leaving his beloved there and fleeing in the direction of Varrenargues to the gorges of Saint Victor; perhaps he might escape through a window at the back of the country house. He leaped towards Blanche, and, hesitatingly told her his plan in a low voice. The young girl, who was choking with sobs, did not understand him, did not hear him. He saw with anguish that, monthly, she was not in a condition to cover his flight.

At that moment, he heard the sharp rattle of the locks which the locksmith had inserted in the lock. The secret and poignant drama, which was in progress in that bare chamber, had lasted at most two or three minutes.
