The floating ice of early winter takes a turn westward from the mouth of the St. Lawrence and comes down heavy on the northers, the concave, side of the island. After piling up there it drifts into the straits, and they are often so well frozen over that iceboats cross to the mainland of New Brunswick. Navigation, therefore, closes in December, while the harbor of St. John's, but a few miles south, is open all winter, and for the same reason the southern prong of this island has a much milder climate than the northern.

There were a few Prince Edward's Islanders going bome from the Halifax midsummer carnival, smilling gravely in the manner of the provincials at Yankee opinions, but reserving their own. There were half a dozen Americans of the west and south, at least one journalist, and occurse, two or three "drummers."

And it was now evident that the whind was a blowing a small gale; the spray dashed over the bow, and we formed a social party on the after deck for jokes, laughter and politics. First it was Camada va. the United States, then Indians vs. Massachusetts, North va. South and Democrat vs. Republican. Our spirits swelled high—there was unbounded hilarity—we even essayed a little melody—and allow, and all that sort of thing, while every minute the waves mounted higher.

For a little brain with many deep folds may really when spread out have a larger surface than a large brain with few shallow folds, and a so called bump or elevation on the apparent surface of the organ, even if it produces a corresponding elevation on the head, which it frequently falls to do, will indicate nothing regarding the number of the folds or the depth in the form the size or shape of the head no conclusion whatever can be made as to the extent of surface of the brain, and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the folds and a separent surface of the ptrain surface of the organ, even if it produces a corresponding elevation on the size or shape of the head no conclusion whatever can be made as to the extent of surface of the brain, and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the specific in fever cases, and when a surface of the brain, and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the specific or gravers and surface or the surface of the brain, and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the brain and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the brain and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the brain and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the brain and consequently no conclusion can be reached regarding the surface of th

The Iron Crown of Lombardy.

When Napoleon I was crowned King of Italy at Milan in 1805, he placed the iron crown of the Kings of Lombardy upon his head with his own hands, exclaiming, "Dieu me l'edonne, gare a qui la touche" ("God has given it to me, beware who touches"). This, according to Scott, was the motto attached to the crown by its ancient owners.

The erown takes its name from the narrow iron band within it, which is about three-eighths of an inch broad and one-tenth of an inch in thickness. Tradition says that it was made out of one of the nails used at the crucifixion, and given to Constantine by his mother, Helena, the discoverer of the cross, to protect him in battle. Afterwards it was used in the coronations of the Lombard kurgs—primarily at that of Agilulfus, at Milan, in the year 591. The crown is kept in the cathedral of Monza. The outer circuit is composed of six equal pieces of beaten gold, joined together by hinges, and set with large rubies, emeralds and sapphires, on a ground of blue gold enamel. Within the circuit is "the iron crown," said to have no speck of rust upon it, although it has been expassed for over iffecen hundred were a constanted by the second Cloud—You do look dissipated—leaved the possible position to avait the bites, when my wife, in hes accustomed fishing ground, I said: "Now, wat the bites, when my wife, in hes accustomed energetic manner, succeeded in landing a two pound white bass. A Change. guides. In this book the great mountain gets the name "Tacoma." Winthrop professes to have obtained the name from his Indian guides, and he gives his imagination play in a supernatural legend of the mountain. It is probable that the name "Tacoma" was a result of his effort to reproduce or imitate a word given him by his guides, who were Yakima Indians, and that the word was a common one used by these Indians as a term for all snow white mountain peaks. The name of the city of Tacoma was taken by its founders from Winthrop's book. Winthrop was killed at Big Bethel, Va., early in the war of the Rebellion, and "The Canoe and Saddle," with other books he had written, and which evidently had lain some time in his desk, was published immediately after his death.—Seattle Journal. the strength of men as the day was very wet and the people did not turn out.

How It Can Be Improved When Not Possible to Entirely Avoid It.

Not one person in fifty realizes how important a bearing the cellar has upon the health of those who live over it. The consequence is that part of the house is generally more or less neglected, being either damp by reason of ill construction, or otherwise unhealthy from lack of care and cleanliness. Here in Boston damp cellars are the rule, especially in certain localities, and, yet, in hiring a house, if that grave defect exists, it has comparatively little influence so long as the location is satisfactory. And, besides that, in the section in which, considering the character of the soil, an underground cellar is sure to be damp, builders go on putting them under houses just as was done half a century ago, when less was known of the dangers of such defects than there is now.

In Dorchester district, for instance, the subsoil is clay, and it is doubtful if any one knows to what depth that extends. Old masons in that region say there is scarcely a dry cellar there, and that it is practically impossible to make one underground which will be dry; and still almost all new houses there have them under them. Of course, where the soil is clay, one can by a system of drainage keep a cellar free from water, but there is no sure way of perfectly drying it; and if it is at all damp, then it is absolutely unhealthy, and no one can live long over it without suffering evil consequences.

Baron Stockmar relates that the palace was in the charge of thus charge of unity or prearrangement. It was not decided which parts of the palace belonged respectively to their courtol. The housekeepers, pages there from water, but there is no sure way of perfectly drying it; and if it is at all damp, then it is absolutely unterly of the lord chamberlain; the cooks and the porters were under the coth of the master of the house, while the clerk of the kitchen, it is absolutely underly of the lord stewart. It was the duty of the lord stewart to lay the fires and the lord chamberlain had to provide the lamps and the lord stewart to keep them in order. If a pane of glass in the scullery wanted mending a requisition had to be written and signed by the chief cook; it was then countersigned by the chief of the kitchen, then taken to be signed by the master of the house hold, thence taken to the lord chamberlain had to provide the lamps and the lord stewart to keep them in order. "The first thing is to look to his drain. In former times stone drains were used almost wholly, and, although drain pipes have, to a great extent, displaced them, yet in draining cellars the old style of drain is the best, being much less likely to choke up. But in making drains of stone our forefathers did not always show the best judgment and build them properly, but oftentimes they were so imperfectly constructed they soon filled up.

properly, but oftentimes they were so imperfectly constructed they soon filled up.

Soevery cellardrain ought to be carefully examined and, of course, relaid if defective. It is next to impossible to make water tight an old cellar wall, which is banked up with earth, without going to considerable expense. Really, about the only way would be to lay an inside wall of brick, raising it about two feet at a time, and filling the space with cement, "tamping" the same in solid. But something may be gained by "pointing" well an old wall.

If the floor is not cemented, of course it must be so, and besides pitching toward the opening in the drain it would be well to make a shallow gutter in the cement floor all around the walls, the same to end in the drain. Then any water which came in would quickly run off. At the point where it is to run into the drain there must be a trap. These are the provisions for keeping an old cellar clear of water. But they do not insure freedom from dampness, which, as said before, is sure to exist in a cellar with a clay bottom.

The best means which suggests itself to obviate the dampness and foul air under these conditions is to build a fireplace in the cellar and connect it by a drain pipe with the chimney, entering the same above the kitchen stove. Dampers must, of coure, be put in. There will need to be a little fire kept in the fire place—two cords of wood might lest the year round. By that means all the bad air would be drawn from the cellar up the chimney, entering the same above the kitchen stove. Dampers must, of coure, be put in. Squint and Spectacles.

A recent writer on opthalmic surgery calls attention to the fact that many cases of "squint" in children, which, if left to themselves, become so pronounced that only a surgical operation can be of service to them, would be easily cured by the use of proper spectacles if seen by a competent specialist in the earlier stages of the affection. The present generation, he says, has witnessed many improvements in the operation for squint. The objects to be aimed at by operations have become well understood. But it is stated that board schools and others educational establishments are still busily engaged in manufacturing fresh cases, though, thanks to improved spectacles, there are now fewer squints requiring operation than formerly. Age is hardly a bar to the wearing of spectacles, quite young children soon becoming accustomed to their use. It is possible that enthusiastic specialists may sometimes carry their principles too far. The sight of so many boys and girls in streets and schools and offices with "spectacles on nose" is not encouraging. Still, if many of the youthful patients are merely undergoing a temporary treatment for squint, there is less reason for regret. Undoubtedly it is better for a child to wear spectacles for a few years, and thus be cured, than to have to run the risk of tendon section in later life.—

In France their own wares.—Exchange.

In France there are no public funds for the relief of the poor, and private charity is almost wholly relied upon. It appears, however, that French laws are very much opposed to private associations or individuals distributing charitable funds, and require that this should be done by officials. The machinery provided for the purpose are bureaus composed of persons two-thirds of whom are nominated by the prefect of the district and one-third by the communal authorities. No person can found a charitable institution and support it with his own money without express authority from the state, nor can his leave by will a sum of money for any private individual to distribute in charity; that duty must be performed by an of-fictial.—Chicago Herald.

A Brave Girl and a Mouse.

Roaring Branch has a young lady of nerve. The other evening, while en joying a visit with some friends, a correspondent asserts a mouse came from under the sofa where she was sitting and found shelter in her skirt, where he soom made his presence known by becoming too ambitious. Did she scream or faint? No; she did nothing of the kind. Just firmly tightened her hand over a portion of her clothing and quietly left the room. When she removed her hand a dead mouse fell to the ground.—Wellsboro Gazette.

I stooped, she also stooped, and lot Our heads together came; I felt my face begin to glow— Her cheeks were all aflame. I took the kerchief from the sand And handed it to her, That broke the ice and for a while She stood and chatted there; I thought she had the sweetest smile The most bewitching air! Along the silvery sands we walked Beside a silvery sea; Of yachts and sailing boats we talked And seaside scenery.

We left the shore at half past one And dined at the cafe, I thought myself in clover on That glorious summer day. I seemed in a delicious dream When out again we strayed; I bought her caramels, ice cream, And cold, pink lemonade. When evening came, I said, may I Escort you home to-night? The two sons of the two leaders of English political life are both good parish priests, the one at Hawarden and the other at Hatfield. Mr. Stephen E. Gladstone has to supervise six or seven district churches, and has a double daily service at the parish church. His ecclesiastical training was obtained in the purlieus of the Lambeth potteries, while Lord William Gascoyne Cscil, the rector of Bishop Hatfield, served under the vicar of Great Yarmouth. The tall figure of the prime minister's son was well known in the narrow and peculiar courts where real bloaters receive their final smoking. Now he has a daily service at Hatfield house to perform, and to provide ministrations twice a day at the magnificent parish church, while on Sunday, with the aid of only two curates, he also finds services at two or three district churches, a mission church and a cemetary channel. Young pullets batched in March and April the all to be laying this month. Later cohed ones if not laying by November, will bably if left to themselves not lay before ought all to be laying this month. Late hatched ones if not laying by November, wil probably if left to themselves not lay befor spring when eggs are down to fifteen cent per dosen. A well known poultry farme showed us recently his account for last Dec with 125 pullets. The net profit for that month from eggs alone was $39.39; from the same pullets in April following, the profit was $14.97, and he got 50 dozen more eggs in April than in December. Now this is a striking lesson to all who keep hens for profit. Get all the eggs you can this dull year when other crops are short, as eggs always bring cash. Probably 45 cents per dozen by Ohristmas. Therefore get the pullets to laying early when prices are highest. Rev. S. W. Squires, of Franklin, Mass., says: "For the purpose of seeing how many eggs I could obtain last winter from twelve hers, I used four large cans of Sheridan's Oondition Powder. I believe it is the best preparation known to increase egg production. I saved part of the eggs for hatching after forcing the hens four months for all they were worth with Sheridan's Powder, and I never had a greater per cent. of fertile eggs or more vigorous chickens. In brief, I do not believe I can afford to be without the Powder to give health and vigor to young hens." Six cans of Sheridan's Powder, and I never had a greater per cent. of fertile eggs or more vigorous chickens. In brief, I do not believe I can afford to be without the Powder to give health and vigor to young hens." Six cans of Sheridan's Powder will pay a good dividend in eggs if you commence early.
