extended to Judith for a crime she had never committed, and on the morning

she was set free a curious and pretty scene was enacted outside the goal gate as I gladly assisted. For neither was she probably proud of her little and youths, little children with chubby hands quite full of flowers, and even old gaffers and gossamers leaning on their sticks, eager to swell the tide of welcome that was ready to burst forth at sight of the woman whom one and all had so cruselly misjudged. Not a matron there girls had been decked out in all the available white clothes of the community, and carried in their aprons the flowers of

BLIND JUSTICE.

THE BRITISH DEFEAT THE MATABELES.

CAPETOWN, August 7.—Details have just been received here of the decisive victory won on Wednesday by the 700 British troops commanded by Col. Plummer's column, over a native force estimated to have numbered from 5,000 to 7,000 men.

The latter fought most desperately and bravely, charging up within a few yards of the British rifle fire. About 500 of the Matabele warriors were slain during the engagement, which lasted several hours and the loss of the British included Major Kershaw, Lieut. Hervey, four sergeants and about 40 men killed, and six officers, several non-commissioned officers and about 50 men wounded according to the official figures.

The Matabeles and their allies were commanded by the big chiefs Skombeko and Unkululus and were divided into five impi or regiments, each of over 1,000 men, well supplied with arms and ammunition.

At six o'clock on Wednesday morning a force of about 700 men, whites and natives, cavalry, infantry and artillery, all under British officers, marched to the Unkululus valley. The white infantry commanded by Captain Barendse, with two screw guns and a Maxim rapid fire gun, was detached to make a detour behind some hills and then take up a position from which the valley could be shelled. It had previously been reported by the scouts that the enemy, in strong force, was encamped in the valley preparing for a forward movement of importance upon the British position.

The main body of the British troops was halted while Captain Barendse's 18 detachment, with the guns referred to was making its way to the position designated for the artillery to occupy and while this movement was being executed, the guns being moved over a small, isolated kopje, the Matabeles made a sudden and determined rush at Captain Barendse's command.

There was no strategy or concealment. The natives rushed forward like a living tidal wave, and in spite of the hot fire which was promptly poured into their ranks, displayed the most remarkable gallantry; succeeded in getting within 40 yards of the screw guns and reached a spot 15 yards from the Maxim rapid fire gun before any of these pieces could be brought into action.

In fact another minute's delay in opening fire with the guns might have proved fatal to the Barendse detachment, as the white infantry was apparently unable to check the reckless wild charge of the tribesmen who seemed to count death in their fierce attack upon the column.

But, when the screw guns began crashing case shot into the enemy, tearing wide, bloody gaps in the ranks, and the deadly Maxim rattled its hail of lead into the leading masses of the rapidly moving impi, the natives wavered in their charge, and a moment later, the rush was stopped and began to give way, leaving heaps of dead and wounded on the field. But, rallied by the chiefs who bravely rushed to the front, encouraging their followers by a display of magnificent dash, the native warriors returned to the charge in the face of the fierce and awful fire of the British guns, and Captain Barendse's force was, for a few moments completely surrounded by surging waves of warriors who seemed to have no fear.

The position of the Barendse force was the most critical and their commander hurriedly ordered his signal men to ask Col. Plummer to lose no time in advancing with the main body to their rescue.

While the signaling was in progress, a hot and determined fight raged around the guns and several British officers and men fell.

In the distance could be seen two more impi rushing forward to join in the attack upon Barendse's position and there was no time to be lost if the guns were to be saved.

Consequently, Colonel Plummer ordered the main body of the British troops to advance. The mounted men were sent forward at a gallop to stem the hills on the left of Barendse's position, from which the natives were delivering a desperate, dropping fire, upon the kopje occupied by the guns. The cavalry was gallantly led by Major Kershaw, who charged up to within 15 yards of the enemy's position, when he was shot through the heart by a native who almost immediately afterwards fell, literally riddled with carbine and revolver bullets.

The advance of the main body of Plummer's force was quickly noticed by the natives who were pressing around the Barendse detachment and it caused them to take steps to retreat in order to escape being caught between three fires. The guns were thus able to do better execution and a well directed fire of case shot, followed by a well placed fire of shrapnel soon changed the native attack into a retreat and when the full reinforcements came into action, the enemy broke and fled. The guns and war rockets played upon the natives so long as the latter were in range; but, the main loss of the enemy was inflicted while they were so bravely charging almost up to the muzzle of the British pieces and one can't help speculating upon what would have been the result had the gallant but ill-armored Matabeles been able to reply in kind to the fearful fire of the Maxim and screw guns. The natives displayed bravery to a fault, earning the admiration of the British; but, there was no resisting the leaden stream thrown into the native ranks by the Maxims, it would have demoralized well

Merit

Made and Merit maintains the confidence of the people in Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cures every skin disease, it makes wonderful cures everywhere, then beyond all question that medicine possesses merit.

Made

That is just the truth about Hood's Sarsaparilla. We know it possesses merit because it cures, not once or twice or a hundred times, but in thousands and thousands of cases. We know it cures, absolutely, permanently, when all others fail to do any good whatever. It is the only medicine that cures.

trained and properly officered picked European troops, under similar circumstances, much less hordes of nearly naked badly armed savages, for while rifles and ammunition were not wanting among the natives, the supply was very far short of the demand and the shooting of the warriors was of the most desultory description.

DOCTORS GAVE HER UP.

REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE OF MRS. SALOIS, OF ST. PIER.

LaGrippe, followed by inflammation of the lungs. Left Her on the Verge of the Grave—Her Whole Body Racked with Pain—Her Husband Brought Her Home to Die, But She is Again in Good Health.

In the pretty little town of St. Pier, Me., about 10 miles from the coast, is one of the happiest homes in the whole province of Quebec, and the cause of much of this happiness is the inestimable boon of health conferred through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mrs. Eva Salois is the person thus restored, and she tells her story as follows:—Like a great many other Canadians, my husband and myself left Canada for the States, in hope that we might better our condition, and located in Lowell, Mass. About a year ago I gave birth to a bright little boy, but while yet on my sick bed I was attacked with la grippe, which developed into inflammation of the lungs. I had the very best of care, and the best of medical treatment, and although the inflammation left me I did not get better, but continually grew weaker and weaker. I could not sleep at night, and I became so nervous that the least noise would make me tremble and cry. I could not eat, and was reduced almost to a skeleton. My whole body seemed racked with pain to such an extent that it is impossible for me to describe it. I got so low that the doctor who was attending me lost hope, but suggested calling in another doctor for consultation. I begged them to give me something to deaden the terrible pain I endured, but all things done for me seemed unavailing. After the consultation was ended my doctor said to me, you are a great sufferer, but it will not be for long. We have tried everything; we can do no more. I had therefore to prepare myself for death, and would have welcomed it as a relief to my suffering, were it not for the thought of leaving my husband and child. When my husband heard what the doctors said, he begged them to give me a trial of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and my husband procured them. After taking them for some weeks I rallied, and from that time I constantly improved in health. I am now entirely free from pain. I can eat well and sleep well, and am almost as strong as ever. I was in my life, and the renewed health and strength I owe to the marvellous powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in gratitude I urge all sick people to try them.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills create new blood, build up the nerves, and thus drive disease from the system. In hundreds of cases they have cured after all other medicines had failed, thus establishing the claim that they are a marvel among the triumphs of modern medical science. The genuine Pink Pills are sold only in boxes, bearing the full trade mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Protect yourself from impostors by getting only the full trade mark, and in gratitude I urge all sick people to try them.

Free Silver.

Free silver coinage in the United States would, among other things, very soon put the business of the United States entirely on a silver basis—that is a basis in which the people would pay about two silver dollars for an article which they now buy with one gold dollar or its paper representative. After the period of disturbance was over, domestic business would go on quietly in the silver basis, just as it now does in Mexico and other silver countries. But people who have fixed claims which might be paid off in silver dollars, would be great sufferers, and judging from the following from the New York Mail and Express, this loss would extend to a great many people all over the country: "American banks, trust companies, savings associations, building and loan societies and similar institutions owe the people $5,353,138,511, most of this vast sum representing money actually deposited by their creditors. The people insist when the money is repaid it shall be in currency worth just as much on the dollar as the money they paid in. Free silver would mean that they would be repaid in money worth only half as much as they had deposited. Against any such wholesale plundering every holder of a savings bank book, every holder of building and loan shares, and every person carrying a policy of life insurance is sternly opposed by self-interest and common honesty." Foreign claims would, of course, have to be paid on a gold basis; but if domestic claims would be settled on a silver basis, as seems probable, then these people having claims against savings banks and similar institutions would find themselves very much worse off than they expected—they would have each dollar of their claim paid off with a silver dollar, which would be worth little more than half what a gold dollar now is in buying food clothing, etc.—H. Herald.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS VOTE DOWN THE LANDLORD AMENDMENTS.

LONDON, August 7.—The various land-lord amendments to the Irish Land Bill, were voted down by the lords to-day without division. The first division occurred on the Earl of Belmore's amendment to clause 33, relating to assessments. This division resulted in a government victory by a vote of 30 to 44.

Baron M'Naughton then moved an addition to clause 30, providing that where a person is aggrieved by the sale of an estate in the encumbered estates court he shall have the right to appeal to the court of appeals. The Marquis of Lansdowne and Baron Ashburne, supporting this motion, but it was carried by a vote of 61 to 46, thus defeating the government.

The other clauses were then passed and the bill emerged from the committee stage and was reported to the house. The vote on both the report stage and the third reading will be taken on Monday.

It is believed in well-informed quarters that the Irish Land Bill is now safe, and that the opposition to it by the landlords has been broken. This change is due to a threat which Lord Salisbury privately conveyed that if the government was again defeated on an important point it should be necessary for him to seriously consider his position.

It is known the cabinet to-day decided to adhere to their original proposals to the bill returns to the house of commons. No objections to the bill to Vicount Templeton's amendment adopted by the house of lords yesterday, asking that the several clauses of the bill should be amended and that the fair rent should be based on the assumption that all the improvements were made or acquired by the landlord. But the town park clause, omitted yesterday on motion of Viscount Templeton, will be restored and the limit of exclusion of pastoral land from the operation of the bill will be raised again to 2100 instead of £20, as provided in Baron Glencory's amendment adopted yesterday.

The result of the several conferences between the two houses, and the consideration of the bill in the commons, is a satisfactory and in return for some concessions on the purchase clauses, the representatives of the landlords have undertaken not to press the amendments.

CANADIAN INVESTMENTS.

(Boston Herald.)

Apart from the outcome of the next national election the condition the uncertainty that must prevail until the issue has been met and the dread which many must entertain concerning the value of investments, should a Democratic victory be won, will tend to encourage the disposition to seek foreign investments for American capital.

Staunchly will make the following trip, leaving New York at 7 p. m. on Monday, and returning at 10 p. m. on Tuesday. The weather was sunny.

Miscellaneous.

A stranger was about to register in a New York hotel when he took off his hat, disclosing the fact that he was as bald as a watermelon.

'From the West?' asked the clerk.

The man nodded. Then the clerk pointed to the guest's bald head and inquired:

'Indiana?'

'No,' replied the stranger.

'Mother-in-law?'

'No.'

'Barber's preventive?'

'No.'

'Cyclone?'

'Yes, by gosh! Pard, yer the first chap what ever struck it right. Let's liquor.'

'My dear sir, you have made a mistake,' replied the occupant of the universe. 'This is a dental office, while the photographer is next door.'

'Oh, you pull teeth.'

'Yes, sir.'

'How much?'

'Fifty cents a piece.'

'Well, go ahead and yank out one or two. It's about the same to me.'

One Honest Man

DEAR EDITOR—Please inform your readers, that if written to confidentially I will mail in a sealed letter, particulars of a genuine, honest home cure, by which I was permanently restored to health and vigor, after years of suffering from nervous debility, sexual weakness, night losses, etc. I was rubbed and enfolded by the quack until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but thank heaven, I am now well, vigorous and strong, and wish to make this certain means of cure known to all sufferers. I have nothing to sell, and want no money, but being a firm believer in the universal brotherhood of man, I am desirous of helping the unfortunate to regain their health and happiness. I promise you perfect secrecy and as I do not wish to expose myself either, please address, simply: P. O. Box 388, London, Ont.

Selected Literature.

MALIBA'S ADVENTURE.

Madame Maliba, the famous tragic actress, sat in a private room of a hotel, studying a drama in which she was to play the leading role.

Floral offerings from her many admirers decked the superbly furnished apartments; while she, with her golden hair arranged with artistic carelessness, her picturesque pompadour tea gown, looked what the world everywhere acknowledged—queen of her art.

This hour before dinner was perhaps the only one in the day she could call her own, and she usually spent it luxuriating in a lounge before the fire; but something in the act she had just finished brought to memory her brief married life with its misunderstandings and fatal end; also the vision of a curly-haired lad who called her mother—on her rare visits to her northern home, and for whose sake she has striven so successfully for the world's goodwill.

The grand blue eyes, as renowned as her art, grew misty with tears that glistened and fell in the firelight. Again she rehearsed the scene in which the heroine, finding herself at the mercy of a vengeance-seeking husband—who wrongly imagines himself betrayed—wildly implores him to spare her life for the sake of her innocent child.

It will need all the power and passion of which she is mistress, and as she closes the book her eyes sparkle, and her cheeks glow with the prophetic sense of success.

The door suddenly opened and a voice raised apologetically announced: 'Le Docteur de Vigry.' Enraged she declined to receive him in this unwelcome hour, her visitor pushed lightly by the astonished waiter and entered her presence.

Tall, dark and sallow, with eyes of peculiar brightness, and with remarkably sunken cheeks, he yet presented a distinguished appearance, though his coat was by no means of a conventional cut. Breaking into a thousand apologies he explained the cause of his visit.

'Madame, I have made the science of medicine a life long study, and have discovered a variety of remedies for all affections arising from exhaustion of the brain power.

'You, Madame, I believe, are suffering at present from this cause.' He drew a paper from his pocket, and turned it down at a paragraph in which the press announced the glad arrival of Mme. Maliba in the French capital, whither she had come to consult a specialist respecting the impaired state of her nervous system, the result of the long and marvellously successful run of the late play.'

She smiled rather coily as she returned the paper.

He was evidently some infatuated quack who, after a lengthy preamble concerning his impoverished circumstances, would conclude by begging a subscription toward the intended publication of a medical treatise, which of course, would never appear.

'I am afraid this paper overrates my exertions; but what of your cure?'

He drew a shabby morocco case from his pocket, and laid two dark, sinewy hands across it before answering. Then she noticed for the first time his wildly bright eyes, reflecting some hidden fire.

'A baffled genius,' decided the successful actress, and she addressed him more kindly.

'I shall be very pleased to try your remedy and recommend it to others if it prove successful.'

'For this very reason have I sought so distinguished a patient, knowing that when I had effected a cure, your fame might herald my own. The chief merit of my treatment,' he continued, 'is its simplicity.' Then lowering his voice he went on, 'it mainly consists in amputating the affected member and thoroughly cleansing the seat of disease. In your case, Madame, it will necessitate the removal of the head, so as to regulate the activity of the cerebral organs.' He opened the case and revealed a glittering, highly tempered dissecting knife.

In an instant the truth flashed upon her. She was in the presence and virtually in the power of a monomaniac. For a minute only, the elaborately furnished room swam giddily around her, but summoning the sang froid of which she had more than an ordinary share and which had borne her so successfully through the varied experiences of her early chequered career, she said as calmly as possible:

'I had better then summon my maid to assist me.'

Hastily intercepting her action, he planted himself between her and the door.

'Madame,' he replied, with a profound bow, and deeply respectful manner, 'It is not my rule to allow a third person to assist at an operation, as they invariably excite the patient, nor is there occasion for any unnecessary preliminary preparation.'

Concealing her apprehension she looked around for means of escape. Not one presented itself.

The sole entrance to the room was guarded by her unwelcome guest. Her maid had leave of absence for at least an hour.

The apartment was situated in the more private part of the hotel, so that to deliberately ring or call for assistance would perhaps had expedite matters before help could arrive, and her fear rendered her incapable of offering direct bodily resistance. She must temporize so as to gain time and opportunity.

'Have you effected many cures?'

she asked pleasantly, resuming her seat with the peculiarly graceful manner that was so well known.

Disarmed by her composure, he seated himself, too, though within touch of the door.

'Very many,' he replied, 'and so expeditiously that they were scarcely aware of it themselves. In one instance the face wore a smile, even after the head had been replaced.'

A wilder light leaped from his eyes.

'But the world is ignorant. Never as yet have I been allowed to witness the result of my remedy. In your case it shall not be so.'

Her breath came and went hurriedly, as she watched the nervous, dark fingers delicately touch and try the edge of the instrument.

'The life of knowledge condemned by the ignorant; shirking and hiding away by day, wandering solitary, starving and haunted by night, because I would enlighten the world. But they ever pursue me. Hark, do you not hear a step?'

He started, half rose, and listened, one hand tightly grasping the glittering knife, the hungry, haunted eyes fixed on the calm, fair woman before him.

'It is no use; I shall not be interrupted for some time,' she returned as composedly as ever. Recovering himself, his face assumed a look of cunning that had been a stranger to it hitherto.

Often and often had her incomparable acting and presence of mind favorably decided the fate of a play trembling in the balance of the first night's decision. Her very face was a study. She was a woman of many parts, and she was a woman of many parts.

You want Scott's Emulsion.

If you ask your druggist for it and get it—you can trust that man. But if he offers you "something just as good," he will do the same when your doctor writes a prescription for which he wants to get a special effect—play the game of life and death for the sake of a penny or two more profit. You can't trust that man. Get what you ask for, and pay for, whether it is Scott's Emulsion or anything else.
