Uses Which Show That There Is a Reason for Their Shape and Size.

Even the most cursory observer of vegetable life must have been often struck with the various forms of leaves. Why they should be so variously formed does not, however, often suggest itself, though there is a reason for the special shape and texture of almost every leaf in existence. Plants, such as grasses, daffodils, and others which usually grow in clusters, have generally narrow leaves growing upright, so as not to overshadow one another. Other plants, of isolated habits, have an arrangement of foliage which secures to themselves the space of ground necessary for their development. The daisy, dandelion or shepherd's purse—which may mostly be seen in pastures—are examples of this. A circle of broad leaves pressed against the ground, forming what is known as a rosette growth, effectually bars the approach of any other plant and keeps clear from all other roots the space of ground necessary to its own nutriment. Floating leaves, and leaves of marsh plants are usually of simple outline, for, having few competitors, they are not liable to get in one another's light. Submerged plants have mostly leaves of narrow segments—the reason for which is not very well understood, though it is assumed by naturalists that it is for the purpose of exposing as large a surface as possible, in order to extract the minute proportion of carbonic acid dissolved in a vast bulk of water.

Leaves on the boughs of trees are often much divided, so as to fold easily, to prevent their being rent and torn by high winds, while the glossy surface of evergreens is intended to throw off rain and dew, which might freeze on them, and so cause injury to the tissues within. But the hairs on the surface of leaves are perhaps the most interesting study of all. With the aid of a microscope, the beautiful and systematic arrangement of these can be easily discerned, and their uses understood. On many plants there are glandular hairs to catch or deter small creeping insects; on others the Strychnia and Snakes.

Dr. Mueller, an Australian physician, has successfully treated a number of cases of snake bite with strychnia. This he has done on the hypothesis that the poison affects the nerves, wakening and paralyzing them in fact, that the venom is not, after all, a poison in the common sense, and does not directly cause any change of tissue. Its effect is simply moduced by the operation of dynamic force—that is, it suspends the action of the nerve cells for a longer or shorter period. Hitherto all antidotes have been administered on the theory that the virus affected the blood, and the most successful results have come from the administration of alcohol, which seemed to maintain the strength of the sufferer until the poison was eliminated by natural means.

Dr. Mueller's theory affirst sight is at variance with the fact that the blood in case of snake bite does actually change, but his explanation of this change is that the pulmonary capillaries, through which the blood in case of snake bite does actually change, but his explanation of this change is that the pulmonary capillaries, through which the blood in case of snake bite does not convendes pass when going to the lungs to exchange the carbonic acid of effete blood for fresh and life giving oxygen, have lost their power. They owe the tension—the healthy contracting power—to the influence of the vaso-motor nerves, and when the latter are paralyzed the corpuscles pass through the lungs unchanged, carrying back to the heart blood as fluence of the vaso-motor nerves, and when the latter are paralyzed the corpuscles pass through the lungs unchanged, carrying the lungs unchanged, carrying back to the heart blood as full of carbonic acid as they brought from it, and they themselves abouttely die, bursting in consequence of this load of carbonic acid as they brought from it, and they themselves abouttely die, bursting in consequence of this load of carbonic acid as they brought from it, and they themselves abouttely die, bursting in consequence of this man was very courteous and said he was sorry he did not reduce the former bill.

"Reduce a bill" exclaimed Girard; "had you done it I would never trade with you again. I merely meant to see if you had cheated me."—New York Telegram. The Learned Blacksmith.

The Biddeford (Me.) Journal has an interesting sketch of a learned blacksmith, who used to live in Kennebunk. One winter a course of lectures by a number of the "leading lights" in Kennebunk was arranged, and after much solicitation the blacksmith consented to speak and to deliver his lecture first. It created so great an impression that the other orators refused to speak after him, and the learned blacksmith's address constituted the whole "course."

THE FEAST OF CRICKETS.

ANTIPUTURE Man and some and the property of the first and the prop "I cannot do it," said the young merchant.

"But you must do it," roared Girard.

"I cannot and will not," was the final reply.

Girard bolted out, apparently in rage, but soon after sent a check for the whole bill. The young man began to relent and say to himself:

"Perhaps he was offered them at that price, but it is all over now. I am sorry I did not reduce the bill and get it out of him on something else. His trade would be worth a good deal to me."

By and by Girard came again and gave him another order. The young man was very courteous and said he was sorry he did not reduce the former bill.

"Reduce a bill!" exclaimed Girard; "had you done it I would never trade with you again. I merely meant to see if you had cheated me."—New York Telegram.

No Englishman can quite rid nimself of the traditional idea of grandeur which attaches to the word Persia; but the King of that historic empire now rules over a land vast indeed, and with ill-defined boundaries, but reduced by misgovernment and misfortune almost to ruin. It is doubtful if the population of Persia, which ought to be thirty millions, now exceeds that of Belgium; and year by year everything in the country, except the palace, decays. Persia is perishing for want of Persians, and her total inability to protect her independence, if the Car ever ordered an occupation, constitutes one of the most dangerous features in the great Asiatic problem. Curious Transmittal of Searlet Fever.

In 1846 a boy of 8 years, the brother of the narrator's wife, was taken down with scarlet fever and died. One of the principal amusements of his illness had been looking over a large picture book. After his fleath this, with several other useful playthings, was packed away in a trunk. Twenty-six years later, in 1872, the sister-in-law of the editor took this, trunk with her on a journey which, site made to England, where he was then residing. The trunk was opened the second day after its arrival and the picture book was taken out and presented to the editor's 2-year-old zon. During the next fortnight the Rtile fellow was attacked by scarlet fever. It was a wonder to the doctors who were called in consultation how the disease, and the medical men in consultation how the disease had been no scarlet fever in the town for years. At last it occurred to the editor that the picture book might have transmitted the disease, and the medical men in attendance, on being told the facts connected with it, agreed that it had
