Raspberry vinegar is a luxury that may be indulged in by families living in the country who have an abundance of fruit. Put four quarts of berries in a stone jar, with one quart of the best cider vinegar, and mash to a paste with a wooden pestle. Set in the sun twelve hours and then place all night in a cool place. Strain off the juice the next day and pour it over four quarts of fresh berries. The second day strain, and to each quart of the juice allow one pint of water and five pounds of granulated sugar. Heat over a slow fire until the sugar is dissolved. Bring to a boil slowly, skimming off the scum. As soon as it reaches the boiling point, strain and bottle while warm, sealing the corks with wax. This syrup, or cordial, although too expensive for ordinary use, is a delightful drink for summer-evening gatherings. Put two tablespoonfuls in a glass of ice-water and embellish with any fruit in season.

The ENTERPRISE would like to hear from the people on questions of public interest. Make your communications short and avoid personalities, politics and church matters and we will always be glad to receive them.

Part of a scaffold at A. J. Leitch's new stable fell yesterday morning just after work had been commenced. Fortunately the part on which the workmen were standing did not fall or the result might have been serious.

D. Clay's spirited horse ran away with him on Sunday evening throwing Mr. Clay and Jno. McIntyre, who was with him, out on the road and smashing the rig slightly. Both gentlemen escaped with slight bruises.

Two new members were received into fellowship with the Dutton Baptist church on Sunday evening last. The church has had a steady growth ever since Mr. Mann has settled as pastor over it, and its prospects are at present brighter than ever before.

At a meeting of the creditors of W. J. Wallis, of Shedden, the assignee, C. B. Armstrong, of London, was authorized to wind up the estate. The liabilities are not so heavy as at first supposed, and will not, it is thought, exceed $12,000.

It is a good policy to mention, when you are buying goods from an advertiser in the ENTERPRISE, that you saw his advertisement in this paper. It pleases the merchant, influences him to give you better bargains, and does your local paper a good turn. Be sure and try it.

A Middlesex farmer, who boasted that "he had not taken a newspaper in his house for the last forty years," was visited the other day by two confidence men and swindled out of $2,000 in the way often exposed by newspapers. He would have saved money by reading a newspaper.

Philip Kendall's team ran away from the M. C. R. station on Saturday, and pulled up in front of Urlin's store, where they smashed a few crocks which were on the sidewalk. They would no doubt have crashed into the window of the crockery store had not a large box obstructed their progress.

It is an easy thing to get your name and the names of your friends on the Dominion voters' list before August 1. After that it will certainly involve an immense amount of trouble and it may be impossible. Everyone who is entitled to vote should, therefore, make his declaration at once.

Alfred Cross, of San Pedro, California, was married on Tuesday of last week to Miss Maria Riddle, daughter of Jas. Riddle, of Ekfrid. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. Currie, B. D., in the presence of about 125 friends. The happy couple leave for their future home in San Pedro this week.

The hay crop is immense this season, A. J. Leitch took over 90 loads off a 24-acre field. 27 tons were taken off four acres of this field—an average of 6¾ tons to the acre. The test load weighed appeared to be smaller than most of the other loads taken from the same field. Who can beat this?

At the gun club shoot Tuesday evening W. Hollingshead, who has carried the medal two successive weeks, gave it up to Wm. James, who won it in shooting off the tie with C. E. Doyle. Following is the score :—W. Hollingshead 5, D. McPherson 1, C. E. Doyle 6, Wm. James 6, C. St. C. Leitch 3, E. S. Sifton 2.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church held a lawn social Thursday evening on the handsome grounds of R. S. McMillan. The attendance was not as large as expected owing to the slight rain which fell early in the evening. Those present, however, had a lively time, the I. O. F. band contributing not a little to the pleasure of the evening. The receipts were large for the number present, amounting to over $26.

The directors of the Featherbone Co. will apply for a mandamus compelling G. R. Holden, President of the Company, to assign the patent of the manufacture of featherbone over to the company. The patent became the property of the company at the time of its organization, but the transfer failed to be actually made, and the directors now claim that Mr. Holden refuses to hand it over, hence the action.

Alex. McWilliam's team ran away from the roller mills on Friday evening and made a lively racket for a few minutes. They turned down the street opposite the public school and when opposite Mr. Rothwell's residence the tongue of the wagon ran into the ground, upsetting the wagon and throwing Mrs. McWilliam out on the hard ground. Mrs. McWilliam was carried into Mr. Rothwell's and Dr. McKillop called to attend to her injuries, which were found to be serious, all of her teeth being loosened, and she was also badly bruised about the body. She is doing as well as can be expected. McWilliam himself escaped without injury having jumped out of the rig when the team started.

Subscribers will do well to take note of the fact that all subscriptions to the ENTERPRISE must positively be paid in advace after October 1st, 1889, and that no exceptions to the rule will be made under any circumstances. This rule has been made necessary by the rapid increase in the circulation of the ENTERPRISE and consequent increase in running expenses. The newspaper is made to sell, just the same as goods of any kind which are purchased at the stores and unless every subscriber pays promptly it is impossible to furnish a good paper. The amount of each person's subscription may seem small to him, as indeed it is, and it is often neglected on this account. But suppose that 900 or 1,000 of our subscribers should neglect sending their dollar, it would mean $900 or $1,000 of a shortage in the receipts for the year. We trust all those who are in arrears will settle their accounts as soon as possible, and save the extra charge of 50 cents per year which will be added if not paid soon.

Inspector Atkin writes to D. McPherson, secretary of the Dutton school board, stating that the arbitrators appointed to settle the case between S. S. No. 11 (Dutton) and S. S. No. 16 have made their award, the substance of which is as follows:—"The award provides that No. 11 (Dutton) shall by December 24th next, pay to No. 16 the money raised on property transferred from No. 11 to No. 16, to pay the debentures due in 1887 and 1888, and that each year No. 11 shall pay No. 16 money raised on above property to pay debentures as they become due." The arbitrators also considered that the interest ratepayers transferred from No. 11 to No. 16 had in the site and other property in No. 11, would be a fair offset for the use they had of the new school house in No. 11.

Monday afternoon a horrible accident occurred in the Michigan Central yards, St. Thomas, by which Samuel Palmer, assistant yardmaster, was almost instantly killed. He was standing on one of the tracks waiting for a yard engine, and when it came up attempted to jump on the footboard, but, slipping, fell across the rails. The ponderous wheels passed over his body, cutting it in two, and cutting off both arms. Deceased was a married man and had been in the employ of the company twelve years. He resided at 175 Wellington street, St. Thomas. He was a member of Antiquity Lodge, A. O. U. W., also of the A. O. F., and carried $4,000 insurance on his life. The habit of switchmen and other employes of jumping on a board in front of an engine is a dangerous one, and it is a wonder that there are not more serious accidents.

THE BRAIN (from a photograph.)
In Healthy Condition. With Paresis Lesions.

There are many well known men confined in our Asylums who but a short time ago were prominent among our business and social circles.

Why are they there?

Paresis!

Did it come on at once?

Not at all. It was a gradual but positive growth. They overtaxed nature. The drain on their vitality, their nerve powers, their brain tissue, was too great, and they gradually but surely sank under it. The things they did to bring this sad end about are precisely the same things that are being done by thousands of men and women to-day. It is not necessary to name them. They all end disastrously unless checked or regulated.

Prof. Phelps, of Dartmouth College, knew this fully when he began his experiments which resulted in the discovery of the wonderful Paine's Celery Compound. He realized that paresis (consumption of the brain) was our great National weakness. He knew that the brain and nervous system must be fortified to meet the great strains which modern life bring upon it. He saw that men were becoming debilitated and women weakened by the pressure and demands of life, and he sought and discovered the remedy Paine's Celery Compound, if rightly taken, will renew the brain and build up nerve tissues as fast as they become exhausted. It is not a narcotic. It contains no drugs, no nostrums. It is perfectly pure. It is absolutely harmless. The high character of its discoverer guarantees this, and the indorsement of the medical and chemical professions prove it.

The music that he pines for is the songs he used to sing.

FIDELITY AND LOVE.

"Oh," Maude cried. "Eight dollars a week and a home at the Cedars, instead of four dollars a week and boarding around. Of course I will go, though not until my present engagement expires. This will not be until sometime in March," and she began to wonder if she could endure it so long and, now that the pressure was lifting, how she had ever borne it at all.

But whatever may be the nature of our surroundings time passes quickly, and leaves behind a sense of nearly as much pleasure as pain, and when at last the closing days of school came, it was with genuine feelings of regret that Maude said good-bye to the pupils she had learned to love and the patrons who had been so kind to her.

CHAPTER VII.

AT THE CEDARS.

It had cost Grace a struggle before she decided to take Maude as her companion, and she had been driven past the little log house among the hills and through the Bush district, that she might judge for herself of the girl's surroundings. The day was raw and blustering and great banks of snow were piled against the fences and lay heaped up in the road unbroken save by a footpath made by children's feet.

"And it is through this she walks in the morning and then sits all day in that dingy room. I don't believe I should like it," Grace thought, and that night she wrote to Maude, offering her a situation with herself.

And now, on a lovely morning in April, when the crocuses and snowdrops were just beginning to blossom, she sat waiting for her, wondering if she had done well or ill for herself. She had seen Maude and talked with her, for the latter had called at the Cedars and spent an hour or more, and Grace had learned much from her of her former life and of Spring Farm, which she was going to buy back. Max's name, however, was not mentioned, although he was constantly in the minds of both, and Grace was wondering if he would come oftener to the Cedars if Maude were there. She could not be jealous of the girl, and yet the idea had taken possession of her that she was bringing her to the Cedars for Max rather than for herself, and this detracted a little from her pleasure when she began to fit up the room her companion was to occupy. Such a pretty room it was, just over her own, with a bow window looking across the valley where the lake lay sleeping, and on to the hills and the log schoolhouse, which, had it been higher, might have been discerned above the hills which surrounded it. A room all pink and white, with roses and lilies everywhere, and a bright fire in the grate before which a willow chair was standing and a Maltese kitten sleeping, when Maude was ushered into it by Jane, Miss Raynor's maid.

"Oh, it is so lovely," Maude thought, as she looked about her, wondering if it were not a dream from which she should presently awake.

But it was no dream and as the days went on it came to be real to her and she was conscious of a deep and growing affection for the woman who was so kind to her and who treated her like an equal rather than a hired companion. Together they read and talked of the books which Maude liked best, and gradually Grace learned of the dream-life Maude had led before coming to Richland and of the people who had deserted her among the hills, but who in this more congenial atmosphere came trooping back, legions of them, and crowding her brain until she had to tell of the them, and of the two lives she was living, the ideal and the real. She was sitting on a stool at Grace's feet, with her face flushed with excitement as she talked of the Kimbarks and Websters, and Angeline Mason, who were all with her now as they had been at home, and all as real to her as Miss Raynor was herself. Laying her hand upon the girl's brown curls, Grace said, half laughingly, "And so you are going to write a book. Well, I believe all girls have some such aspirations. I had it once but it was swallowed up by some stronger, deeper feeling, which absorbed my whole being."

Here, Grace's voice trembled a little as she leaned back in her chair and seemed to be thinking. Then rousing herself, she asked suddenly, "How old are you, Maude?"

"Nineteen this month," was Maude's reply, and Grace went on: "Just my age when the great sorrow came. That was 14 years ago next June. I am 33, and Max is 37."

She said this last more to herself than to Maude, who started slightly, for this was the first time his name had been mentioned since she came to the Cedars.

After a moment Grace continued: I have never spoken to you of Mr. Gordon although I know you have met him You were with him on the train from Albany to Canandaigua; he told me of you."

"He did!" Maude exclaimed with a ring in her voice which made Grace's heart beat a little faster, but she went calmly on: "Yes he was greatly interested in you, although he did not then know who you were; but he knows now. He is coming here soon. We have been engaged ever since I was 17 and he was 21; 14 years ago the 20th of June we were to have been married. Everything was ready; my bridal dress and veil had been been brought home, and I tried them on one morning to see how I looked in them. I was beautiful, Max said, and I think he told the truth; for a woman may certainly know whether the face she sees in the mirror be pretty or not, and the picture I saw was very fair, while he, who stood beside me, was splendid in his young manhood. How I loved him; more, I fear, than I loved God, and for that I was punished,—oh, so dreadfully punished. We rode together that afternoon, Max and I, and I was wondering if there were ever a girl as happy as myself and pitying women I met because they had no Max beside them, when suddenly my horse reared, frightened by a dog, and I was thrown upon a sharp curb-stone. Of the months of agony which followed I cannot tell you, except that I prayed to die and so be rid of pain. The injury was in my spine, and I have never walked in all the 14 years since. But Max has been true to me and would have married me had I allowed it. But I cannot burden him with a cripple, and sometimes I wish, or think I do, that he would find someone younger, fairer than I am, on whom to lavish his love. He would make a wife so happy. And yet it would be hard for me, I love him so much. Oh, Max; I don't believe he knows how dear he is to me."

She was crying softly now, and Maude was crying, too; and as she smoothed the snow white hair and kissed the brow on which lines were beginning to show, she said, "He will never find a sweeter face than yours."

To her Max Gordon now was only the betrothed husband of her mistress; and still she found herself looking forward to his visit with a keen interest, wondering what he would say to her, and if his eyes would kindle at the sight of her as they had done when she saw him in the church at Laurel hill. He was to come the 20th, the anniversary of the day which was to have been his bridal day, and when the morning came Grace said to Maude, "I'd like to wear my wedding gown; do you think it would be too much like Dickens', Miss Havershaw?"

"Yes, yes," Maude answered quickly, feeling that faded satin and lace of 14 years standing would be sadly out of place. "You are lovely in those light gowns you wear so much," she said.

So Grace wore the dress which Maude selected for her; a soft woollen fabric of a creamy tint with a blue shawl, the color of her eyes, thrown around her and a bunch of June pinks, Max's favorite flowers at her belt. Then, when she was ready, Maude wheeled her out on to the piazza, where they waited for their visitor.

CHAPTER VIII.

MAX AT THE CEDARS.

The train was late that morning and lunch was nearly ready before they saw the open carriage turn into the grounds with Max standing up in it and waving his hat to them.

"Oh, Maude," Grace said, "I would give all I am worth to go and meet him. Isn't he handsome and grand, my Max," she continued, as if she would assert her right to him and hold it against the world.

But Maude did not hear her, for as Max lighted from the carriage and came eagerly forward, she stole away, feeling that it was not for her to witness the meeting of the lovers.

"Dear Max, you are not changed are you?" Grace cried, extending her arms toward him, with the effort to rise which she involuntarily made so often, and which was pitiful to see.

"Changed, darling? How could I change in less than a year?" Max answered, as he drew her face down to his bosom and stroked her snowy hair.

Grace was not thinking of a physical change. Indeed, she scarcely knew what she did mean, for she was not herself conscious how strong an idea had taken possession of her that she was losing Max. But with him there beside her morbid fears vanished, and letting her head rest upon his arm, she said, "I don't know, Max; only things come back to me to-day and I am thinking of 14 years ago and that I am 14 years older than I was then, and crippled and helpless and faded, while you are as young as ever. Oh, Max, stay by me till the last. It will not be for long. I am growing so tired and sad."

Grace hardly knew what she was saying, or why as she said it, Maude Graham's face, young and fair and fresh, seemed to come between herself and Max, any more than he could have told why he was so vaguely wondering what had become of the girl in black, whom he had seen in the distance quite as soon as he had seen the woman in the chair. During his journey Grace and Maude had beeen equally in his mind, and he was conscious of a feeling that the Cedars held an added attraction for him because the latter was there; and now, when he began to have a faint perception of Grace's meaning, though he did not associate it with Maude, he felt half guilty because he had for a moment thought any place where Grace was could be made pleasanter than she could make it. Taking her face between his hands he looked at it more closely, noticing with a pang that it had grown thinner and paler and that there were lines about the eyes and mouth, while the blue veins stood out full and distinct upon the forehead shaded by the silvery hair. Was she slowly fading? he asked himself, resolving that nothing should be lacking on his part to prove that she was just as dear to him as in the days when they were young and the future bright before them. He did not even speak of Maud until he saw her in the distance, trying to train a refactory honeysuckle over a tall frame. Then he said, "Is that Miss Graham, and do you like her as well as ever?"

"Yes, better and better every day," was Grace's reply. It was a little awkward at first to have a stranger with me continually, but I am accustomed to her now, and couldn't part with her. She is very dear to me," she continued, while Max listened and watched the girl, moving about so gracefully, and once showing her round white arms to the elbows as her wide sleeves fell back in her efforts to reach the top of the frame.

'She oughtn't to do that," Grace said. "She is not tall enough. Go and help her Max," and nothing loth Max went along the terrace to where Maude was standing, her face flushed with exercise and her eyes shining like stars as she gave him her hand, and said, "Good morning, Mr. Gordon. I am Maude Graham. Perhaps you remember me."

"How could I forget you," sprang to Max's lips, but he said instead, "Good morning Miss Graham. I have come to help you. Miss Raynor thinks it bad for your heart to reach so high."

Maude could have told him that her heart had not beaten one half as fast while reaching up as it was beating now, with him there beside her holding the vine while she tied it to its place, his hands touching hers and his arm once thrown out to keep her from falling as she stumbled backward. It took a long time to fix that honeysuckle, and Max had leisure to tell Maude of a call made upon her mother only a week before.

"Spring Farm is looking its loveliest, with the roses and lillies in bloom," he said. "and Angie, my sister, is enjoying it immensely. She has filled the house with her city friends, and has made some changes, of which I think you would approve. Your mother does, but when she wanted to cut down that apple tree in the corner I would not let her do it. You remember it, don't you?"

"Oh, Mr. Gordon," Maude exclaimed, "Don't let her touch that tree. My playhouse was under it, and there the people used to come to see me."

He did not know who the people were, for he had never heard of Maude's brain children—the Kimbricks and the Websters—and could hardly have understood, if he had; but Maude's voice was very pathetic and the eyes which looked at him were full of tears, moving him strangely and making him very earnest in his manner as he assured her that every tree and shrub should be kept intact for her.

"You know you are going to buy it back," he continued, laughingly, as they walked slowly toward the house where Grace was waiting to be taken in to lunch.

"Yes, and I shall do it, too. You will see; it may be many years, but I trust you to keep it for me," Maude said, and he replied, "You may trust me with anything, and I shall not disappoint you." The talk by the honeysuckle was one of the many which took place while Max was at the Cedars, for Grace was too unselfish to keep him chained to her side, and insisted that he should enjoy what there was to enjoy in the way of rides and drives in the neighborhood, and as she could not go with him she sent Maude in her stead, even though she knew the danger there was in it, for she was not insensible to Max's admiration for the girl, or Maude's interest in him.

"If Max is true to me to the last, and he will be, it is all I ask," she thought and gave no sign of the ache in her heart, when she saw him going from her with Maude and felt that it was in more senses than one. "If he is happy I am happy too," she would say to herself, as she sat alone hour after hour, while Max and Maude explored the country in every direction.

Sometimes they drove together, but oftner rode, for Maude was a fine horsewoman and never looked better than when on horseback, in the becoming habit which Grace had given her and which fitted her admirably. Together they went through the pleasant Richland woods, where the grass was like a mossy carpet beneath their horses hoofs, and the singing of the birds and the brook was the only sound which broke the summer stillness; then again they galloped over the hills and round the lake, and once through the Bush district, up to the little log house which Max expressed a wish to see. It was past the hour for for school. Teacher and scholars had gone home, and tying their horses to the fence they went into the dingy room and sat down side by side upon one of the wooden benches and just where a ray of sunlight fell upon Maude's face and hair, for she had removed her hat and was fanning herself with it. She was very beautiful, with that halo around her head, Max thought, as he sat watching and listening to her as in answer to his question, "How could you endure it here?" she told him of her terrible homesickness during the first weeks of her life as a school teacher.

"I longed so for mother and Johnnie," she said, "and was always thinking of them and the dear old home, and—and sometimes—of you, too, before I received your letter."

"Of me," Max said, moving a little nearer while she went on, "Yes I've wanted to tell you how angry I was because you bought our home. I wrote you something about it, you remember, but I did not tell you half how bitter I felt. I know now you were not to blame, but I did not think so then, and said some harsh things of you to Archie; perhaps he told you. I said he might. Did he?"

"No," Max answered, playing idly with the riding whip Maude held in her hand. "No, Archie has only told me pleasant things of you. I think he is very fond of you," and he looked straight into Maude's face, waiting for her reply.

It was surely nothing to him whether Archie were fond of Maude, or she were fond of Archie, and yet her answer was very reassuring, and lifted from his heart a little shadow resting there.

"Yes," Maude said, without the slightest change in voice or expression, "Archie and I are good friends. I have known him and played with him and quarrelled with him ever since I was a child, so that he seems more like a brother than anything else."

"Oh, ye-es," Max resumed, with a feeling of relief, as he let his arm rest on the high desk behind her, so that if she moved ever so little it would touch her.

There was in Max's mind no thought of love-making. Indeed, he did not know that he was thinking of anything except the lovely picture the young girl made, with the sunlight playing on her hair and the shy look in her eyes as, in a pretty apologetic way, she told how she had disliked him and credited him with all the trouble which had come upon them since her father's death.

"Why I thought I hated you," she said with energy.

"Hated me! Oh, Maude, you don't hate me now, I hope—I could not bear that," Max said, letting the whip fall and taking Maude's hand in his, as he said again, "You don't hate me now?"

"No, no; oh no. I—oh, Mr. Gordon," Maude began but stopped abruptly, startled by something in the eyes of the man who had never called her Maude before, and whose voice had never sounded as it did now, making every nerve thrill with a sudden joy, all the sweeter perhaps because she knew it must not be.

Wrenching her hand from his and springing to her feet she said, "It is growing late, and Miss Raynor is waiting for us. Have you forgotten her?"

He had forgotten her for one delirious moment, but she came back to him with a throb of pain and self-reproach that he had allowed himself to swerve in the slightest degree from his loyalty to her.

"I am not a man but a traitor," he said to himself, as he helped Maude into her saddle and then vaulted into his own.

The ride home was a comparatively silent one, for both knew that they had not been quite true to the woman who welcomed them so sweetly and asked so many questions about their ride and what they had seen. Poor Grace; she did not in the least understand why Maude lavished so much attention upon her that evening, or why Max lingered longer than usual at her side, or why his voice was so tender and loving, when he at last said good-night and went to his own room and the self-castigation which he knew awaited him there.

"I was a villan," he said, as he recalled that little episode in the school-house when to have put his around Maude Graham and hold her for a moment would have been like heaven to him.

"I was false to Grace, although I did not mean it, and God helping me I will never be so again."

Then, as he remembered the expression of the eyes which had looked up so shyly at him, he said aloud, "Could I win her, were I free? But that is impossible. May God forgive me for the thought. Oh, why has Grace thrown her so much in my way? She surely is to blame for that, while I—; well, I am a fool and a knave and a sneak ——."

He called himself a great many hard names that night, and registered a vow that so long as Grace lived, and he said he hoped she would live forever he would be true to her no matter how strong the temptation placed in his way. It was a fierce battle Max fought, but he came off conqueror, and the meeting between himself and Maude next morning was as natural as if to neither of them had ever come a moment when they had a glimpse of the happiness which, under other circumstances, might perhaps have been theirs. Maude, too, had had her hours of remorse and contrition and close questioning to as the cause of the strange joy which had thrilled every nerve when Max Gordon called her Maude, and asked her if she hated him.

"Hate him! Never!" she thought; "but I have been false to the truest, best woman that ever lived. She trusted her lover to me, and——."

She did not quite know what she had done, but whatever it was it should not be repeated. There were to be no more rides or drives, or talks alone with Max. And when next day Grace suggested that she go with him to an adjoining town where a fair was to be held, she took refuge in a headache and insisted that Grace should go herself, while Max, too, encouraged it, and tried to believe that he was just as happy with her beside him as he would have been with the young girl who brought a cushion for her mistress' back and adjusted her shawl about her shoulders and arranged her bonnet strings, and then, kissing her fondly, said, "I am so glad that you are going instead of myself."

This was for the benefit of Max, at whom she nodded a little defiantly, and who understood her meaning as well as if she had put it into words. Everything was over between them and he accepted the situation, and during the remainder of his stay at the Cedars devoted himself to Grace with an assiduity worthy of the most ardent lover. He even remained longer than he had intended doing, for Grace was loth to let him go, and the soft haze of early September was beginning to show on the Richland hills when he at last said good bye, promising to come at Christmas if it were possible to do so.

CHAPTER IX.

GOOD-BYE, MAX; GOOD BYE.

It was a cold, stormy afternoon in March. The thermometer marked six below zero, and the snow which had fallen the day before was tossed by the wind in great white clouds, which sifted through every crevice of the house at the Cedars, and beat against the window from which Maude Graham was looking anxiously out into the storm for the carriage which had been sent to meet the train in which Max Gordon was expected. He had not kept his promise to be with Grace at Christmas. An important law-suit had detained him, and it as would be necessary for him to go to London immediately after its close; he could not tell just when he would be at the Cedars again.

All through the autumn Grace had been failing, while a cold taken in November, had left her with a cough, which clung to her persistently. Still she kept up, looking forward to the holidays when Max would be with her. But when she found he was not coming she lost all courage, and Maude was alarmed to see how rapidly she failed. Nearly all the day she lay upon the couch in her bedroom, while Grace read or sang to her or talked with her of the book which had actually been commenced, and in which Grace was almost as much interested as Maude herself. Grace was a careful and discriminating critic, and if Maude were a success she would owe much of it to the kind friend whose sympathy and advice were so invaluable. A portion of every day she wrote, and every evening read what she had written to Grace, who smiled as she recognized Max Gordon in the hero and knew that Maude was weaving the tale mostly from her own experience. Even the Bush district and its people furnished material for the plot, and more than one boy who had called Maud schoolma'am figured in its pages, while Grace was everywhere, permeating the whole with her sweetness and purity.

"I shall dedciate it to you," Maude said to her one day, and Grace replied: "That will be kind; but I shall not be here to see it, for before your book is published I shall be lying under the flowers in Mt. Auburn. I want you to take me there, if Max is not here to do it."

"Oh, Miss Raynor," Maud cried, dropping her MS. and sinking upon her knees beside the couch where Grace was lying, "you must not talk that way. I can't lose you, the dearest friend I ever had. What should I do without you, and what would Max Gordon do?"

At the mention of Max's name a faint smile played around Grace's white lips, and lifting her thin hand she laid it caressingly upon the girl's brown hair as she said: "Max will be sorry for a while, but after a time there will be a change, and I shall be only a memory. Tell him I was willing, and that although it was hard at first, it was easy at the last."

What did she mean? Maude asked herself, while her thoughts went back to that summer afternoon in the log school-house on the hill, when Max Gordon's eyes and voice had in them a tone and look born of more than mere friendship. Did Grace know? Had she guessed the truth? Maude wondered, as, conscience-stricken, she laid her burning cheek against the pale one upon the pillow. There was silence a moment, and when Grace spoke again she said: "It is nearly time for Max to be starting for Europe, or I should send for him to come, I wish so much to see him once more before I die."

Telegraphing to a Moving Train.

The idea of telegraphing to moving trains had its inception as early as 1853; but of the many forms suggested all were impracticable in that they involved a mechanical contact between the train and the stationary conductor. Obviously, it is not feasible to make a circuit, either through a sliding arm projecting from a car or by so modifying the track of a railroad that its rails may be utilized as electric conductors. But that this may be done by induction there can be no doubt, for its feasibility has been shown in daily practice upon the lines of the Lehigh Valley Railroad for the past two years. A moving train may now receive messages passing along a neighboring wire almost as readily as New York communicates with Philadelphia by ordinary methods. Nor does the great speed of the train interfere with successful communication. If it could attain the velocity of a meteor, signals upon the wire would fly across the intervening space, inductively impressing themselves upon the metal roofs of the cars with the same certainty as if the cars were motionless upon the side track; and it is not even essential that the train and the line be separated by a clear air space, for non-conducting or non-magnetic substances may be interposed without impeding transmission. During the memorable blizzard of March, 1888, the capacity of the system, in this particular, was subjected to an instructive test on the Lehigh road.—Charles L. Buckingham in Scribner.

Open Your Windows at Night.

An extraordinary fallacy is the dread of night air. What air can we breathe at night but night air? The choice is between pure night air from without and foul air from within. Most people prefer the latter—an unaccountable choice. What will they say if it is proved to be true that fully one-half of all the diseases we suffer from are occasioned by people sleeping with their windows shut? An open window most nights in the year can never hurt any one. In great cities night air is often the best and purest to be had in twenty-four hours. One could better understand shutting the windows in town during the day than during the night for the sake of the sick. The absence of smoke, the quiet, all tend to make the night the best time for airing the patient. One of our highest medical authorities on consumption and climate has told me that the air of London is never so good as after 10 o'clock at night. Always air your room, then, from the outside air, if possible. Windows are made to open, doors are made to shut—a truth which seems extremely difficult of apprehension. Every room must be aired from without, every passage from within. Sanitary World.

A Model Republic.

The smallest republic in the world is not San Marino, nor Andorra, nor Moresnet, but the tiny Republic of Goust, in the Pyrenees, which contains less than one hundred inhabitants, all of which are Romanists. The sole occupation of these people is the weaving of wool and silk. Their government consists of an assembly of old men, called the Council. They pay no taxes nor imposts of any kind, and therefore have need of no collectors. They have neither mayor, priest, nor physician. They baptize their children, bury their dead, and perform their marriage ceremonies all beyond the boundaries of the town or in the neighboring village of Laruns. If any one wishes to espouse a wife he must go away from home to find her. Among the peaceful residents of this miscroscopic republic are several centenarians. No one is really poor, and none is rich. The language which they speak is a mixture of French and Spanish, and their numbers, manners, and customs have remained unchanged for several centuries.

An Asylum Horror.

The United States will not be a civilized nation as long as such scenes occur as are said to be witnessed at the insane asylum at Rochester, Minn. The saddest phase of the affair is that this is not a private sanitarium, but the State Insane Hospital of Minnesota. Weak girls and women have been thrown to the floor and stamped upon and pounded with brutal fists. They have been shut up in a cell naked, with no bedding, and food refused to them till they were almost famished. Such ferocious brutality seems incredible. The insane require in their treatment the utmost patience and kindness that human nature is capable of. They oftentimes, it is true, seem so perverse and ugly that it is hard to realize that they are at no time responsible. But only those who can constantly realize this and act on it are fit to be trusted with the care of the insane.—Olean Herald.

Vivid Description of the Localities and People

WHERE MURDER REIGNS.

Whitechapel Described in All Its Squalor and Vice.

(New York Herald.)

How does the Whitechapel district appear to a stranger in London? That is what I went to see recently, says a reporter of the London edition of the Herald. In company with a member of the government and a special detective I took a "four wheeler" and drove down by St. Paul's, past the Bank of England and on through Cornhill, where, turning to the left, we followed up Bishopsgate to the famous underground drinking dive known in history as "Dirty Dick's." The detective thought it would be interesting to begin the evening with a visit to this celebrated place. It dates back nearly a century, and seventy years ago Dirty Dick was one of the characters of London. Charles Dickens' Household Words devoted a sketch and a poem to Dirty Dick's life and peculiarities. The rules that govern his establishment were that no person is to be served twice. No person to be served if intoxicated. No error admitted or money exchanged after leaving the counter. No improper language permitted. No gambling allowed.

AT DIRTY DICK'S.

Into this historical cellar we entered. Every foot of space was occupied. Men, women and children were packed together like fish, all drinking, smoking and swearing, at intervals telling "loud" stories, while in the corners, sitting on benches or staggering against the walls, were women, old and young, in various degrees of intoxication. One miserable creature, evidently in the last stages of sanity, grinned hideously as she leaned over the bar with a wee babe in her arms begging for another drink, as she had already spent her last penny. Along the walls above the bottles of the bar were the skeletons of rats and mice and other household vermin, including several cats and dogs. They were found in the hollow walls when the old building occupied by Dirty Dick was demolished several years ago to make room for the present structure. To a stranger the dive seemed a filthy den of vice and disease, but on our return from Whitechapel it seemed a very respectable place.

WHERE PRIZE FIGHTERS ARE TRAINED.

The next stop was made at the Blue Anchor tavern, further down toward Whitechapel. To sporting men it is one of the most celebrated places in England, for it is the headquarters of the professional prize ring. The landlord, Tom Symonds, was at home and showed us over the place. He is the treasurer of the London prize ring, is an ex-champion boxer, and for many years his house has been the training school for the most noted pugilists of the world. It was here that Jem Smith and dozens of other celebrities took their first lessons in the manly art of professional boxing. Jem Goode, another ex-champion, who once fought in the United States, dropped into the big billiard hall, which is used for boxing once or twice a week. The rooms are decorated with full length portraits of the principal prize fighters and sports of the world. A buxom young woman, with a motherly smile, stood behind the bar and served out drinks in the old fashioned English style of fifty years ago. It was an interesting place for any one to visit—a sort of an appetizer for a stranger about to explore the mysteries of Whitechapel.

A COLONY OF THIEVES.

From Tom Symonds' Blue Anchor tavern it is but a short ride into the slums of Whitechapel. It should be explained for the benefit of those unfamiliar with the geography of London that the Whitechapel district is a colony of thieves situated nearly north of the Tower of London on the Thames. A few blocks further down the river are the famous London Docks. Many of the lower classes of men employed along the river and the numerous water thieves of the wharves live up in Whitechapel. A hundred years ago, in the time of George III., Whitechapel Road was just outside the eastern walls of London—a sort of suburb for the poorer classes, who had little money to pay for rent. Now it is in the centre of a vast and populous district, with well paved streets and alleys (thanks to modern improvements) cutting the district in every direction, with horse railway and 'bus lines following the principal streets, which in olden times were the King's highways. Vast warehouses, private and bonded, and manufacturing establishments rise darkly and silently in the night on the borders of these slums. Then there are big breweries, hospitals, cemeteries, almshouses and other institutions not far away. A surprising feature of the neighborhood is that well lighted streets with tramways and bus lines are but a few squares away from where these murders were committed. The Whitechapel district may be likened to certain localities in the country where dark and gloomy swamps filled with pestilential vapors lie between the great highways. A visitor walking up Whitechapel road would little dream of the horrible dens within a stone's throw of the brilliantly lighted shops. Only the policemen on duty there recognize the flashily dressed men and women who hurry along the pavement as the worst types of London thieves and murderers. Their restless eyes and scarred faces long haunt one after he takes a second look into their villanous countenances.

PETTICOAT LANE.

It was but a few minutes after the detective turned off the Algate Road that we found ourselves in a dark crevice like lane, with the darkest and most forbidding buildings of the slums rising on every side of us. The streets are as well paved as Broadway in New York, but some of them are not more than five feet wide, and when we entered this Petticoat lane of history, celebrated among thieves from Cheyenne to Australia, all the world seemed cut off. A feeling of indescribable loathing and horror came over one as he got a sight of the scenes within the tenements. The lane is the headquarters of the most dangerous thieves in Europe. Every class and nation is represented. Low Jews, Gentiles, convicts and prison birds of every grade swarm the place like vermin. "As a Saturday night scene the region about Petticoat lane has no equal on the globe," said the detective. At every few steps were passageways leading out of the lane, like tunnels in a mine. No cave could be more gloomy or more forbidding. As we walked up the long, black alley called Petticoat lane one of the Government officials said, "You see Dickens did not exaggerate." People unfamiliar with these districts think that Dickens drew his characters from his imagination. The man was right, the Smikes and Oliver Twists, the Fagins and the Dick Swivellers were as thick as flies. An ordinary American child would live about three days in such a place, yet there were hundreds of children hardly able to toddle that darted in and out of the passageways like rats. They were the little thieves, soon to become the big thieves of London. The atmosphere was thick and fetid, the fog hung over the alleys like lead, and the few scattering jets of gas burning along the lane were hardly visible ten steps away. After walking through the neighborhood for five minutes it seemed as if we had been in the place a month. The world and its green fields and beautiful cities seem blotted from creation. As we walked along heads were poked out of the little holes leading into dark courts, and then they flitted back again; children vanished through the walls. Dark faced, scowling men always planted themselves in our way just ahead, but disappeared like shadows at a sign from the detectives. Behind us came beggars and thieves.

SOMEBODY S CHILDREN.

Women with streaming hair and babies in their arms followed, with piteous tales and cries for money. They, too, were thieves and beggars, and the detective said the worst of the lot. We made a quick turn round a corner, doubled on our course, and entered one of the thousands of lodging houses of the Whitechapel district. There sat the same women with somebody's babies, blaspheming and drinking spirits with the bullet headed infants hanging over their shoulders like bundles of rags. Others were singing ribald songs in hoarse, drunken voices, while the men laughed and joined them in the night's carousal. There is a little spot in New York called the Five Points, and a few streets leading away from it inhabited by Italians and Chinamen. It is said that those Sixth ward tenement houses are inhabited at the rate of 290,000 to the square mile. But this Whitechapel district is a vast city of vice and poverty compared with that small plague spot. London, with its three millions of inhabitants and its colonies of criminals, representing the most vicious classes of Europe, is a monstrous problem for any government to solve. As I walked down those gloomy lanes and crawled through the dark underground passageways among the depots of stolen goods, where fortunes disappear in a moment, where men's lives go out like a candle, I exclaimed aloud, "No wonder it requires 15,000 policemen in London."

The Government official said: "We have only half enough police. We ought to have twenty-five or thirty thousand."

In the presence of all the intricacies of the Whitechapel slums, the thousands of winding passage ways, the tiers of bedrooms no larger than cells in a prison, the scene gave one an idea why the Whitechapel assassins have not been discovered. One might as well look along the docks of London for the rat that stole his cheese as to hunt for a criminal in this place.

MURDER NO. 7.

Turning out of a lane through a dark passage way into a little area, and standing beside a small addition built back of the other houses, and pointing to the boarded windows the detective said, "In there is where murder number seven was committed." This is Miller's court. While we were looking at the place and wondering which way the assassin ran after he had killed the poor woman, little yellow haired children came dancing into the court and listened with a curious boldness, as if we were about to open a box of valuables and there would be a chance for them to steal.

In Osborne street, where the first of all the murders was committed, and the victim unknown, the Whitechapel which stands in the very middle of Whitechapel road is almost in sight. A walk of a few steps from the horrible place leads one to the open thoroughfare where the jingling bells of the horse cars are heard and the chimes of Whitechapel ring out on the night air as they do in Christian lands where thieves and murderers are not so near civilization.

At George's Yard, Commercial street (not Commercial road), the buildings are thick and heavy walled, entirely fireproof, with arched floors and iron joists. Yet they are but tenements for the lowest of humanity, and let as lodgings for men and women indiscriminately, it is said. In all these places there is no attempt to separate the children from the full grown thieves and abandoned women. As I stood in George's Yard, looking up at the balcony where the poor woman was found with strips of her remains tied around her neck, I turned and saw lights gleaming in a large building separated from the court by a high fence. On inquiry I found it was a large hall where a much talked about black and white art exhibition was being held. It seemed incredible that an institution reflecting the light and genius of the nineteenth century, could actually exist and be filled with cultivated men and women with its windows looking down into the very purlieus of London.

Whitechapel is made up of paradoxes. The innocence of youth is destroyed by robbers and professional beggars under the very eaves of Christian institutions on one side and breweries and almshouses on the other.

ANNIE CHAPMAN'S DEATH PLACE.

In Hanbury street, in a brick yard, with dry goods boxes piled up far above the fence, is where Annie Chapman was found with her throat cut and body mutilated on September 8th. A word from the detective secured permission to go through the house. The character of it may be imagined when it is said that the price for a single bed is but a penny or two, and that two persons of the lowest of all God's creation may drink, shout and blaspheme all night for only twopence. Little children with pale faces, scarcely old enough to lisp the name of mother, lay in dark corners on vermin-covered beds with withered hags, who drank beer and sang snatches of songs half awake and half drunken, apparently in a stupor; and as we passed through the long alleyways between the bunks they stretched out their shaking hands and bawled piteously for a penny to help the poor darling. We looked into other chambers that were empty, where a dozen cots, covered with filthy rags, were awaiting the return of some assassin to lie down and drink and riot in the early Sabbath morning. The boys and girls of these loathsome dens were as bright as crickets, and the detective said they could pick a pocket more artistically than the old 'uns.

THEORIES OF THE MURDERS.

Many theories regarding the Whitechapel murders have been advanced by detectives, criminal philosophers, court experts, newspaper men and experts on insanity. The theory that most generally prevails is that the murderer is a religious crank who imagines he has a mission to perform, and like the fanatics of Mahommed's time, the more atrocious the butcheries he performs the greater the saint he thinks himself. It is a fact that all the Whitechapel murders have occurred about the 8th of the month or on the very last days of each month, and it is claimed that every fresh outbreak has occurred with the change of the moon. This, it is thought, indicates that the murderer is a maniac and has periodical fits of insanity.

"Who is he?" and "What is he?" is a problem to be answered. Many officials in the detective service hold to the theory that the murderer is a crazy butcher.

WHO IS HE?

The fact that the victims of this horrible fiend have been selected from the lowest class of women is considered proof by many that the murderer is a religious fanatic. Others are sure that the assassin is an escaped lunatic. At one time it was believed that he was the Russian maniac who had committed several murders in Paris and other parts of Europe. At still another time it was said that a certain American quack doctor was the culprit, and the detectives of England and America shadowed him for months. Early in the autumn it was believed that a Malay outlaw was the man who was running amuck in Whitechapel. A careful investigation of the district certainly leads a stranger to believe that no mere visitor or outside person ever committed these crimes. The murderer must not only have been well acquainted with the locality and its inhabitants, but he was without doubt an old settler in the slums of that region and as familiar with its dark cellars and underground passage ways as the rats of the sewers. A person who has spent weeks in that locality in studying its geography would not venture to lose himself in the intricacies of its gloomy and dangerous labyrinths, especially when on a mission of murder. The assassin is probably a man or woman prefectly familiar with Whitechapel, and his motive is revenge or an insane desire to commit wanton butchery.

Intelligent Cows.

The other morning, a very sultry one, two cows came to our gate, evidently on the lookout for something, and after being at first somewhat puzzled by their pleading looks, I bethought myself that they might be in want of water. No sooner had this idea occurred to me than I had some water brought in a large vessel, which they took with the greatest eagerness. The pair then sauntered contentedly away to a field near at hand. In about half an hour or so we were surprised and not a little amused, by seeing our two friends marching up to the gate, accompanied by three other cows. The water tap was again called into requisition, and the new comers were in like manner helped liberally. Then, with gratified and repeated "boo-oos"—a unanimous vote of thanks—our visitors slowly marched off to their pasturage. It was quite clear to us that the first two callers, pleased with the friendly reception, had strolled down to their sister gossips and dairy companions and had informed them—how, I can not say, can you?—of their liberal entertainment, and then had taken the pardonable liberty of inviting them up to our cottage.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Among the Icebergs.

Reports by all the ocean steamers agree as to the continued prevalence of icebergs in the Straits of Belle Isle, although the passage is getting gradually clearer and the bergs are being carried into the Atlantic. The Beaver liner Lake Huron, on her last outward trip from Montreal to Liverpool, appears to have fallen in with an immense field of icebergs, which were watched for two whole days with much interest by the passengers. No less than forty-two were counted at one time, all within a radius of ten miles. One of these, sighted 170 miles east of Belle Isle, was declared by the captain and officers to be the largest they had ever seen. Its length was estimated at 1,000 feet, and it stood some 250 feet out of water. It was about two miles distant from the ship.

The First Duty of a Girl Graduate.

"So your daughter joins the ranks of the sweet girl graduates this year, Mrs. De Johns?" said Fitzroy in a patronizing sort of way. "Yes, Arabella graduates this year, and will immediately begin her life work." "What profession is she to enter?" "Oh, I don't know, but I presume she will teach her mother society manners for a year or so. That's what all girls do after they come home from school.—Hartford Post.

SURGEONS CUT HIS THROAT.

The Operation of Œsophagotomy Successfully Performed by Dr. Deaver.

Thousands of instances are on record where a man's throat has been cut to kill him, but only three cases are known in the United States where that operation has been performed to save life. Indeed, there are but two instances which are authenticated. The first occurred in 1844 in this city and the other in Philadelphia yesterday. There came into the "drunk" ward of the Philadelphia Almshouse a much-befuddled and suicidally inclined individual, John Cavanaugh by name. There appeared to be some obstruction in his throat which prevented him from swallowing solid food, and the passage of liquids, such as milk or beef tea, gave him much pain. The pain distracted the man and he would tear at his throat, and the attendants feared he would succeed in destroying himself. Cavanaugh could not tell what obstacle had lodged in his gullet, or, in his daze from whiskey, would not. After he had become somewhat sobered, however, it was discoved that he had swallowed his false teeth, plate and all. Dr. Deaver, surgeon at the Philadelphia Hospital, was summoned. He endeavored to "extract" the teeth through the mouth, but failed. Then he tried to push them down into the stomach, but with no better results. There was but one course reserved to surgical science—the operation of œsophagotomy, or taking the teeth out through an incision from the outside of the throat. This operation has always been attended with a high percentage of mortality. The danger was set forth to Cavanaugh, but he decided to submit to it. He first thought he could stand the pain without ether, but the surgeon thought best to administer the anæsthetic. About six inches down the throat was fixed as the point for opening. It took the doctor an hour to get at the teeth, but he got there. The plate had a general circular shape about one and a half inches in diameter. It hung vertically in the œsophagus and so permitted the passage of milk, but no solid matter could pass. The plate was successfully removed and the wound stiched up. Cavanaugh is now in the hospital in good condition, and Dr. Deaver thinks he will survive, but two or three days will elapse before he will be pronounced out of danager.

THE FUSE WAS BURNING.

Bravery of Captain Peel in the Crimea Once More Recalled.

There occurred on this day—October 18th, 1854—one of those incidents of war which show how instantaneous in heroic natures is the process of both the thought and the resolve from which brave actions spring. The horses which were drawing an ammunition waggon for the Diamond battery having refused to face the fire some volunteers went to the waggon to clear it, and they succeeded in bringing in their loads; but before the powder could be stored away in the magazine a shell came into the midst of it, while the volunteers were still gathered close to the heap. A voice cried out, "The fuse is burning!" Then, instantly, and, as the narrator says, "with one spring," Captain Peel darted upon the live shell and threw it upon the parapet. The shell burst about four yards from his hand without hurting anyone. The official list, in commemorating the services for which Captain Peel obtains the cross, adds to this feat: "On November 5, 1854, at the Battle of Inkerman, for joining the officers of the Grenadier Guards, and assisting in defending the colors of that regiment, when hard pressed at the Sandbag Battery. On the 18th of June, 1855, for volunteering to lead the ladder party at the assault on the Redan and carrying the first ladder until wounded."—World of Adventure.

Nad's Big Contract.

A London cable of Thursday says: In the House of Commons this evening Hon. Edward Stanhope, Secretary of State for War, read a communication from Gen. Grenfell, who is with the troops in Egypt. The communication contained the reply of Nad el-Jumi, the leader of the dervishes, to the General's demands for his surrender. The reply says: "Your force is nothing to me. I am sent to conquer the world, and I cannot stop. Now I call upon you to surrender. If you will do so I will protect you. Remember Hicks Pasha and Gordon Pasha." Gen. Grenfell adds that Nad-el-Jumi's fighting men are well fed and in good condition.

A PICKED BATTALION.

Chosen Men from the Whole German Army.

The "Schrippenfest" is an annual treat given to the Lehr-Infanteri-Batailion, quartered at Schloss Friedrichs-Kron, says a Berlin letter. This battalion, brought into being by Frederick William III., is composed of men chosen from every regiment in the German army—with the exception of the Bavarian—who remain together with the permanent company from April 15th till Oct. 15th in each year, in order that the whole army may be impregnated with the same ideas and modes of looking at things; for when they return to their several regiments they are supposed to instruct their comrades with what they have learned. The annual treat takes place on Whit Monday, in the presence of the King of Prussia and the whole royal family—for it was originally a "royal" ceremony. Its name is taken from the "schrippe," the commonest kind of roll of white bread that is baked in Prussia. This "schrippe" was given to the soldiers at the dinner served on this occasion, in place of the ordinary "commis-brod," which is very black and coarse. On this day divine service is held for the battalion in the open air. It was originally intended that the Shah should witness this part of the ceremony from the windows of the Schloss—out of regard to his religion—but His Majesty preferred to be among the worshippers, and at the hour appointed he offered his arm to the Kaiserin, and, conducting her to her place, remained between Her Majesty and the Kaiser. It was a solemn sight to see these soldiers drawn up for divine service, as if they were on the field of battle, while the pacific surroundings drove away from the mind of the spectator all thought of war. Their Majesties were accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Alfred and a number of German princes, and were attended by a host of court officials. Of foreign diplomats, only Sir Edward Malet was present in attendance on the Duke of Edinburgh. After service the men sat down to dinner, the tables being covered with more sumptuous fare than usual, to wit, roast pork and stewed beef—the delight of the Prussian soldier, when he can get it—wine and beer and plenty of "schrippen." A royal procession proceeded up and down the tables, the food was tasted by the Kaiser and his imperial guest, who also took a sip from the moselle cup, and the Kaiser spoke a few appropriate words to the men.

LET THE GIRLS ROMP.

They Require It Even More Than do the Boys.

So many mothers lecture the girls daily on the proprieties, and exhort them to be little ladies. They like to see them very quiet and gentle and as prim as possible. The lot of such children is pitiable, for they are deprived of the fun and frolic which they are entitled to. Children—boys and girls—must have exercise to keep them healthy. Deprive them of it and they will fade away like flowers without sunshine. Running, racing, skipping, climbing—these are the things that strengthen the muscles, expand the chest and build up the nerves. The mild dose of exercise taken in the nursery with calisthenics or gymnastics will not invigorate the system like a good romp in the open air.

Better the laughing, rosy-cheeked, romping girl than the pale, lily-faced one who is called every inch a lady. The latter rarely breaks things, or tears her dresses or tires her mother's patience, as the former does; but after all, what does the tearing and breaking amount to? It is not a wise policy to put an old head on young shoulders. Childhood is the time for childish pranks and plays. The girls will grow into womanhood soon enough. Let them be children as long as they can. Give them plenty of fresh air and sunlight, and let them run and romp as much as they please. By all means give us hearty, healthy, romping girls rather than pale-faced little ladies, condemned from their very cradles to nervousness, headache and similar ailments.—New York Mail and Express.

A Railroad to Alaska.

Alaska now seems to be the ultima thule of our continent and the suggestion of reaching it by rail serves to excite ridicule. Horse Flies.

The horse fly is the most cruel and bloodthirsty of the entire family. He is armed with a most formidable weapon, which consists of four lancets, so sharp and strong they will penetrate leather. He makes his appearance in June. The female is armed with six lancets, with which she bleeds both cattle and horses, and even human beings.—Colman's Rural World.

Notes for Cheesemakers for August.

BY JAMES W. ROBERTSON, PROFESSOR OF DAIRYING.

A cheese factory's reputation is largely determined by the quality of its August, September and October output. The beginning of August is a fit time for every cheesemaker who has only partial success during the hot weather to redeem his reputation and that of his factory. A comparison of the prices realised for the summer cheese of Ontario with the figures reported from the United States markets shows that Canadian cheese are in demand at higher rates than American cheese will sell for. That we have gained in reputation and in market favor with British importers and consumers is evident. That this advance and advantage are the result of the applied skill of less than half of our cheesemakers is well known to those who visit the factories and handle their products. To reach and to speedily help those who work in cheese factories without any ambition or aspiration for improvement is well-nigh impracticable.

However, we desire to make helpful information not only attainable, but unavoidable to such.

In a short time there will be numerous orders from England calling for "cool August cheese." That brief description implies a mild, rich flavor that may be preserved for the winter trade, a firm, solid body "full of meatiness," a fine outside finish with clean bright rinds free from cracks, and bandages fresh-looking and not likely to appear mouldy.

To help the cheese-makers in manufacturing a class of goods that may be satisfactorily shipped on such orders, I call attention to some things, both outside and inside the factories, which need their immediate and special personal care.

Insufficient and inefficient drainage facilities, unless enlarged or remedied, will show their worst effects during this month. At the cost of a few hours labor and a few dollars of expense the immediate vicinity of every factory can be kept free from the noxious odors that arise from stagnant slop pools. The frequency and foulness of these about the factories is not only a menace to the permanent prosperity of our cheese manufacturing industry, but a disgrace to the men in charge of the factories.

At factories from which whey is drawn to the patrons' farms in wagons, the leaking and spilling near the whey tank too often leaves its vicinity in an almost impassable condition. A few loads of gravel will abate the nuisance and leave the place fit for approach during the succeeding months when the roads become bad.

The shrinking in the milk supply will leave a shortage in the whey tank. In order that the whey may have more feeding value the tank should be thoroughly cleaned and washed at least once a week.

At factories where hogs are fed provision should be made for supplying them with one feed of green fodder, such as clover, oats and vetches, oats and pease, or cornstalks. Salt should be fed liberally during this month.

This month seems the one when flies become most numerous and troublesome. Some afternoon after the cheese are in the hoops, it will be a good plan to close up the making-room windows and doors, and to burn a small quantity of sulphur for the purpose of fumigating the place. If a tablespoonful of alcohol be mixed with the sulphur it will burn more freely. Care must be taken to prevent the fumes from getting into the curing-room. The tins of the milk vats and the insides of the sinks should also be washed afterwards before they are used. All vats, presses and utensils should get a thorough quarterly-cleaning-up early this month. Every cheese-maker should persistently fight untidiness and filth in every form, and he ought to have a woman's passion for cleanliness and a similar antagonism to dirt.

There will be a difficulty in curing the cheese made during July at a sufficiently low temperature. Ventilation of the room during the early morning and nights will be of benefit. Floors should be sprinkled with cold water morning, noon and evening. While the cheese are being turned on the shelves there should be an abundant admission of light. August is the month when the "skippers" are apt to do damage. A plentiful shaking of fly powder in the room before the room is shut up for the day will destroy the cheese flies. Cheese boxes should not be stored in the curing-room. The odor from the elm wood penetrates the cheese and affect their flavor.

Since the milk is richer and less in quantity there will be an increased temptation to "even up" by the addition of water, or to "even down" by the removal of cream. You will be doing the community moral service, as well as the cheese trade some good, by reminding the patrons that the Dominion Act of last session is in force and will be enforced against all discovered delinquents.

Patrons are more likely during this month than at any other time to forget to provide salt for their cows, and to neglect to supply an abundance of pure cold water. Cool evenings are no excuse for the neglect of æration. All milk should be most thoroughly aired immediately after it is strained.

The making of cheese for exhibition is usually undertaken during the first two weeks in this month. Send a circular to every patron, making mention of those matters that are referred to in this bulletin and inviting their co-operation, in order to aid you in the manufacture of cheese fine enough for exhibition and prize-taking. If some of your patrons pay no heed and no improvements results don't get discouraged. Keep right on insisting on a better state of things in their practice.

When the evenings are cool and the milk needs ripening, don't fail to leave it in the vat until it reaches the proper state of maturity before the rennet is added. Use enough rennet to coagulate mature milk, to a state fit for cutting, in forty minutes when set at 88 degrees Fahr. Dilute the extract to the extent of one pailful of water to every vatful of milk, and then mix it thoroughly by vigorous, rapid stirring.

When you are troubled with gassy curds allow a development of acids, such as will be indicated by threads from the hot iron test a quarter of an inch long, before the removal of the whey. It is a good plan to run most of the whey off at an early stage, and to only leave enough whey on the curd to admit of a free stirring of it. After the whey is drawn, air the curd thoroughly and make provision for keeping it warm. When a curd sink is used, if need be to retain the heat, put the curd back in the vat, but let the temperature be kept above 94 degrees. Frequent turning and æration will facilitate the development of acid, providing the temperature is maintained. After the curd cutter has been used the curd should be stirred and aired for fifteen or twenty minutes before the application of salt. From 2½ to 2¾ pounds of salt per thousand pounds of milk should be added to the curds that are thoroughly well dried by the previous stirring. They should be put in the hoops within twenty minutes after the salt has been mixed in.

Pressure should be applied very gradually. The cheese should be bandaged neatly when they are turned in the hoops within two hours after they are put in the presses. They should again be turned in the hoops some time in the following morning. Where practical, cheese should be pressed for at least twenty-four hours.

Endeavor to get everyone who sends milk to your factory, or who is concerned in its management, to try to bring it to the very front in point of reputation for the excellent quantity of its product. Work conscientiously for that end, then talk your factory up always and wherever you go, and get patrons to do likewise. In short, think and work to make your factory and its product worthy of a higher reputation, especially for August cheese.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

Rodney.

Misses A. Laing and T. Mowbray were visiting in town last week.

D. Patterson has rebought the livery business from his brother Stewart, and will remove it to his new barn.

Miss Lizzie Brown is visiting in London.

Miss Robinson is visiting her sister, Mrs. Boyce, in town.

F. Colter was married to Miss Alice Purcell last week. They returned from a wedding trip last Friday and are living in town.

George Watson is visiting in town.

Service will be held as usual every four weeks in the Catholic church, West Lorne.

An addition will be built to Kerr's school house next week.

Mr. Boyce, station agent, has moved to Mr. H. Mistele's residence.

There is some talk of the Methodist putting up a steeple with a fine bell in it, costing about $300.

Some visitors in Rodney are pretty, like a new wagon—lots of paint.

Eagle.

Misses Lucy and Kate Ash, of London, are the guests of Miss Mary Buchanan, of this place.

Miss Clara Anderson is home from Detroit at present.

Mr. Stewart Anderson is home for a few weeks vacation from Port Elma.

The owners of the fisheries here are having their nets taken up and retarred, to be ready for the fall fishing.

Rev. Mr. Baker, lately of Kentucky, who has taken charge of the Disciples congregations of Rodney and West Lorne will preach here every other Sunday evening at 7.30.

Miss Tena Mowbray left yesterday for a week's visit in Iona.

Mr. Fraser, of Brantford, is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Thomas Ripley, of this place.

Misses Mary, Flora and Master Wilson Lang will spend the week with Miss Irene Lindop, of St. Thomas.

Miss Jennie Mowbray, of this place, is visiting with her sister, Mrs. A. O. O'Brien, of Clearville.

Misses Mary Bell and Sarah Black spent Sunday with relatives here.

Miss Annie Murray and Miss Morgan, of Blenheim, spent Sunday here.

Muncey.

July 24—The Munceys held a school picnic last Saturday in Mr. Jones' grove. There was a fair turnout and everything went off smoothly until the evening when two youngsters getting excited over a dispute gave a pugilistic exhibition which reflected no credit upon their parents. The Indian brass band was in attendance. The children greatly enjoyed the games and all appeared to have a good time. A base ball match between the Middlemiss boys and our own Indian team ended in favor of the dusky warriors, who nearly scalped the pale faces in runs.

It is whispered that too much firewater prevented some of our dusky warriors reuurning from the St. Thomas excursion last Friday.

Shedden.

The Iona base ball club played the return match with the Shedden team here on Saturday. It was a terrible slugging game. At the end of the ninth innings the score stood 19 to 40 in favor of Shedden.

George Norman has returned from New York, where he has been attending a cutting school.

Miss Page, of Welland, is the guest of Mrs. Dr. Howell.

Miss Hamm, of Sanilac Co., Mich., is visiting friends in this locality.

The wheat has been cut and mostly drawn in and is a very good crop.

A large number of the natives are employed about here harvesting flax, which is a splendid crop this year.

Thos. Olver has purchased the farm of the late Judson Burwell.

Correspondents are requested not to give advance notices of picnics and entertainments for which entrance money is asked. These are advertisements, and if the entertainments have merited a notice the matter is invariably attended to in the business office. Entertainments of a free and public character and church services and meetings are noticed with pleasure.

A Slight Mistake.

The Port Hope Guide says: As the ticket agent at the G. T. R. station stood at his post the other day a most beautiful lady came up and asked for a ticket to Peterborough. He stamped and laid it down, and the lady fumbled in her purse for the change. All at once she exclaimed in a petulant voice: "Darling, can't you be patient? What does my pet want?" The agent turned so red that his eyes fairly blazed, and stammered out: "Madam, I—I—I—I assure you that there is no hurry at all. Take your (ahem) —take your time, madam." With a look that froze the blood in his veins and made him feel as if icicles were hanging all over his body, she replied: "Sir-r-r! I was speaking to my little girl," and peeping through the ticket window he saw a wee bit of a cherub tugging at the lady's dress. When she had gone Tom sank down in a chair as pale as a corpse, and told Conductor Boundy that if his family were better provided for he didn't care to live an hour longer.

A Sermon for the Sisters.

I never breaks a colt afore he's old enough to trabble;
I never digs my taters til dey plenty big to grabble;
An' when you sees me risin' up to structify in meetin',
I just clumb up de knowledge tree and do some apple eatin'.

I sees some sisters pruzint, mighty proud o'
what dey wearin',
It's well you isn't apples, now, you better be declairin'!
For when you heard yo' markit-price, 't 'd hurt yo' little feelins':
You wouldn't fetch a dime a peck, for all your fancy peelin's.

O, sisters—little apples (for you're mighty like 'em)—
I lubs the ol'-time russets, dough it's sul-dom that I kin strike 'em,
An' so I lubs you, sisters, for yo' grace, and not your graces—
I don't care how my apple looks, but on'y how it tas'es.

Is dey Sabbaf-schular heah? Don't let him 'form his mudder
How Jacob-in-de Bible's boys played off upon dey brudder!
Dey sol' him to a trader—an' at las' he struck the prison;
Dat comed ob Joseph's struttin' in dat streaked coat ob his'n.

My Christian friends, dis story proobs dat eben men is human—
He'd had a dozen fancy coats ef he'd 'a'
'ooman!
De cussedness of showing off, he found out
all about it:
An yet he was a Christian man, as good as ever shouted.

It larned him! An' I bet you when he come to git his riches
Dey did't go for stylish clothes or Philadelphy breeches;
He didn't was'e his money when experience taught him better,
But went aroun' a-lookin' like he's waiting for a letter!

Now, sisters, won't you copy him? Say, won't you take a lesson,
An' mind this sollum warnin' 'boutside sin
ob fancy dressin'?
How much yo' spend upon yo'self! I wish you would remember
Yo' preacher ain't been paid a cent sence somewhar in November.

I better close. I sees some gals dis sah-mon's kinder hittin'
A whisperin' and 'sturbin' all dat's near whar dey's a-sitin';
To look at dem, and listen to dey onrespec'-
ful jabber,
It turns the milk ob human kindness mighty nigh to clabber.

THE WHITECHAPEL MURDER.

Particulars of Jack the Ripper's Latest Crime.

A Last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: The body of the latest Whitechapel victim was taken to the mortuary. The examination developed an unusual feature—Jack has done his work with a dull knife. Heretofore the slashes were clean. Alice Mackenzie's body bore marks of Jack's terrible methods, but there was no execution. The clothes were drawn over the head after the knife had been driven into the neck. A cut of four inches long, running towards the groin, had not served the abdominal wall. On both sides of this cut and along the lateral line below the breast bone there were twenty scratches, which wouldhave been slashes had a keen knife been used. Every scratch was an attempt to rip the woman up. She was evidently taken unawares, as she was strongly built, and weighed 140 pounds. She could not have uttered a cry without being heard by the police. Jack adopted his old plan, except that in this case his right hand was placed over his victim's mouth, and the left hand drove the knife into the neck, instead of vice versa.

The murder threw Whitechapel into a condition of fearful excitement. Castle alley was crowded all day. People from all quarters flocked to the scene, and stories of the crime were on every tongue.

At 10 o'clock the woman was identified. John McCormack, a porter, said he lived with the woman for six years. She was 40 years of age. She was born at Peterborough, and her family lived there until a month ago, when they moved into furnished rooms in Whitechapel. The victim did charing work. She never got a living on the streets. Sometimes she drank too much. She left the house at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. They had had a tiff. He gave her a shilling and advised her not to spend it in drink. He was told that she returned to the house at 10 o'clock last night and took a blind boy, George Dixon, for a walk. McCormack knew no more. The woman and the boy went to the Cambridge Music Hall. There they met a man and she asked him to treat. She then went home to the lodging house, and left after saying she was going to meet a man at the Cambridge Hall. Whether or not she met him is not known, for the blind boy had no means to identify him except by his voice.

Nothing could more clearly indicate the cunning of the murderer than the selection of the locality. The alley is 100 yards long, dark, and encumbered by a mass of waggons and barrows, which formerly were stored in a yard in which excavations were going on a few feet above. At the bottom of the alley, is a network of streets, courts and alleys. Castle alley has no residents likely to go through it at night, the baths being the only tenanted house in the upper part of it. The others on the left side are small factories and workshops. On the right side is a high board fence, shutting off the back yards. A row of small houses, facing on New Castle street, runs parallel with Castle alley, and just below the scene of the murder they are connected by a narrow court. If he approached, therefore, from the Whitechapel road the murderer could escape down Castle alley into Old Castle street, through this to Wentworth street, and thence to Commercial street or the lane. If he approached from Old Castle street, he could escape through Castle alley court into Whitechapel road. This way he did escape. If hemmed in on both sides he could still escape through the connecting court to New ast e street and thence to Whitechapel road or Wentworth street as he chose. There was further cunning and evidence of intimate knowledge of the locality in the fact that he was just on the boundary line of two police districts. Whitechapel road is patrolled by constables from Leman street station, and no street constable comes from the road down the alley, because that is in the district belonging to another division. He must have known that an officer could come toward him only from the bottom of the alley, and his intimate knowledge of the locality and police rules made his escape as easy as ever, when it is remembered that in all the eight murders committed he has never once been seen by anybody. The fear of him in Whitechapel can be understood, and the superstition in some of the slums that he is invisible does not seem surprising.

A Thursday's London cable says: The inquest was resumed this morning at 10 and lasted till 1, when it was adjourned until August 14. The only witness who gave any information that has not been published was Dr. Phillips, divisional surgeon. He said that as he was going to the scene of the murder it was raining hard, and he was struck with the fact of the unusual scarcity of the people on the streets. Several jurors smiled at this. He found the body in the position already described. Her clothes were raised well up on the chest. They were all bloody on the side next the wall. He made a complete post-mortem examination to-day at the mortuary. In his examination he found below the woman's left collar bone that there was a well-defined bruise about the size of a shilling, and on the other side was a larger well-defined recent bruise. Both bruises were the result of injury during life. Seven inches below the right nipple began an external wound. It was seven inches long and deepest at its middle part. It divided only the skin and tissue underneath, leaving the muscular structure undivided. Then there were seven smaller wounds, only dividing the skin, running from the inner side of the large wound towards the navel, and from the middle of the larger wound were several small wounds reaching only through the skin, and running downward. The top of the right thumb had been cut off, but that was apparently a former injury. It was clear that the woman had suffered from an old disease. He thought the throat was cut from behind. The first incision seemed to have been interrupted by the prominence of the woman's lower jaw. It was the second incision, joining the first at its deepest part, which was immediately over the carotid vessels. These were entirely severed. He had not the slighest doubt that the cause of death was syncope arising from the loss of blood consequent upon the division of these vessels, and such a death was probably almost instantaneous. The air passage was not divided. At Dr. Phillips' request, he was permitted to defer testifying further pending the investigations of the police.

THE NEXT POPE.

Bishop Kean's Views on the Papal Succession—No Chance for an American.

A Nashville despatch says: The American publishes an interview with Bishop Kean, rector of the Catholic University at Washington, who is here in attendance on the National Education Association. Speaking of the health of the Pope, Bishop Kean said: So far as the health of Leo XIII. is concerned there is little likelihood of his dying very soon. I saw him the day before I left Rome, March 19th, and he was then the picture of health, stout, robust and active. It is true he is a very old man, 82 years old, but he does not stand alone as the only man of advanced age performing the active duties of a high and responsible poeition. Bismarck, Gladstone, Manning as well an Leo. XIII. are far advanced in life, and yet these men are moving the world. Cardinal Newman is 92 years old, and he has only just retired from the active performance of his duties. When Leo XIII. became the chief bishop of the Church, some 12 years ago, he himself regarded his health so poor that he said it was useless to make him Pope, for he had scarcely six months to live. His health now, however, is very good, and I assure you he has no notion of dying to please anyone. In the event of the death of the Pope where will his successor probably come from? I should say Italy beyond a doubt. Then all this talk about an American Cardinal succeeding is without any foundation at all? Entirely so. There are many reasons why an American will not be elevated to the Papacy. To begin with, an American, no matter how learned he may be, how well posted on European affairs, is thoroughly unfitted to fill the Papal See. The Pope must be a thorough cosmopolitan. He must be au fait with European affairs, conversant with the political and spiritual conditions of France, Germany and Spain, in fact the whole world. No American can grasp the situation in all its details. His educational surroundings and life are totally different from that of the man who is fitted to fill the Papacy. Europe is becomming Americanized, the people are gradually taking up our theories and systems of life and government, but it will be a hundred years before the conditions are such that it would be possible for an American Cardinal to become the head of the Catholic Church.

A GREAT CLOUD BURST

Sweeps Away Many Lives and Destroys Much Property.

A last (Friday) night's Parkersburg, W Va., despatch says: The greatest disaster which ever befell Little Kanawha valley came last night in the shape of a cloud burst, which has completely flooded the county, destroying many lives, carrying off thousands of dollars' worth of property and ruining crops for many miles. Mrs. Isaac H. Tucker, Martin Lawless and an unknown man were drowned in the lower part. Above the destruction is still greater. At Chesterville, a small town about ten miles above, half the residences were carried off bodily and left in the cornfields. Big Tygart valley is completely ruined. In Clay district a fine church and three dwellings were wrecked. The steamer Oneida is reported wrecked and sunk at Enterprise, and the steamer C. C. Martin is sunk at Burning Springs. Little Tygart valley is also reported ruined, but no lives are reported lost there as yet. The worst story of all comes from Morristown, a small village near the head of Tucker Creek, where the cloud burst concentrated all its fury. It struck the village about midnight and completely destroyed it, with many people.

The first report gave the loss of life eleven, but later news seems to increase it. The houses are said to have been picked up and hurled against each other in such a short space of time that no chance to escape was given. It is impossible now to estimate the loss even in this city, as the river is still rising and tearing everything loose. A family boat containing three or four persons went out during the night and it is believed the occupants were drowned. A freight train went through a trestle which was washed out at Harris' ferry, wrecking the train and killing a man. It is reported that Lock No. 1, above the city, on the Little Kanawha, has given way before the flood.

A Fatal Runaway Accident.

An Adrian, Mich., despatch of Thursday says A heartrending accident occurred yesterday. While Mrs. Robert Moreland and Miss Louise Stephenson were being driven through the city in a landau, the horse became frightened and ran, and fearing it would not be controlled by the driver, Miss Stephenson jumped from the carriage and fell, striking her head upon a stone. Her head was bruised and death ensued in a few moments. She is the eldest daughter of Dr. Robert Stephenson, and a young lady universally esteemed for her high character. Her father was at the lake at the time, but Dr. Abe Stephenson, her brother, was present at her death. The city is in mourning over the sad event. Mrs. Moreland was not injured and the driver soon had the horse under control.

Married His First Wife Again.

A New York despatch says: Charles J. Turner, superintendent of the Cleveland Iron Works, Cleveland, O., ten years ago was divorced from his wife, whom he had married 20 years before in Danbury, Ct. His wife secured the divorce, and Mr. Turner married the woman who had won his affections from his wife. Two weeks ago last Saturday he was remarried to his first wife. For ten years Mrs. Turner heard nothing from her divorced husband. A month or so ago she received a newspaper containing a marked death notice. This was followed by a letter from Mr. Turner. The letter was answered and the marriage the other night was the sequel.

"Several first-class death notices were crowded out this week to make room for the circus ad.," says a Missouri paper of late date, "but they can be confidently looked for after the rush has passed."

—A poultry trust has been organized, and thus the fowl business goes on.

HAD A SENSITIVE NATURE.

Morgan Graves Killed Himself Because He Was Charged With Stealing a Small Sum—The Pathetic Notes He Left Behind.

A Chicago despatch says: Out in the hearse-house of the undertaker's establishment at 628 North Wells street, on the cooling-board, lay the body of Morgan Graham Graves. He was only 28 years old when he shot himself. It is one of those tragedies which bubble to the surface of the river of life in Chicago. The bubble burst and the coroner's inquest this morning was the vanishing circle which told that it had been. Graves was his mother's support, his father having left the family. He was slightly deformed with that protruding chest known as a pigeon-breast. He worked for James Wilde & Co. Last Saturday, he told his mother when he came home so early yesterday afternoon, he had sent out a boy to collect $6 50 on a suit of clothes. Graves forgot to ask the boy for the money when the lad returned, and when Graves thought of it yesterday morning the messenger declared that the money had been paid to Graves. Mr. Reed, the manager, concluded, after hearing both sides, that the boy's story was true. Graves left the store, went home, told his mother about it, and said he was going out into the park for a walk. Then he wrote a letter to his mother and sent it to her by a neighbor. It is written in clerkly script and is pathetic in its simplicity. Here it is:

July 15, 1889.—Dearest mother, I have telegraphed Mark and Edith, so you will not have the trouble. I am now going to take my life, as I am in so much trouble that I cannot try any longer. I could not let you know of it, for it will break your heart. I did not send pa any word, for he doesn't care for me or else he would never have left me this great burden. So forgive me for this awful sin I have committed. Good-bye forever. Your son,

MORGAN GRAHAM GRAVES.

Then the suicide wrote another note to his friend Eddie Schupp. This he left in his coat pocket:

Dearest friend, it(reads), you will, no doubt be much surprised to hear that your best friend has left you. I am sorry, but can't help it. I am in much trouble. You know I said to you the other night that Mr. Reed had blamed Mr. Springer and I with taking the small amount of cash. I can't stand this charge, so will not try to any longer. My last promise is that I am innocent of the last charge. I want you to always encourage my mother, God knows that I loved her dearly, and she did me, too. I am so nervous now. You must remind me to all my many friends, so good-bye to all. I cannot be with you again, so good-bye.

Then he started off to the park. Meantime his mother had sent word to the captain of the park police, and he in turn had warned all the men to keep a sharp lookout. Officer Wickert saw Graves near the main entrance and started toward him. Graves fired one shot in the air and then bending his head shot again, the ball gashing the flesh and entering the skull right in the middle of the forehead just above the root of tae nose. He toppled forward and when the officer reached him he was dying. In four minutes he was no longer Morgan Graves, but a thing which must be put away out of the sight of man. Graves had pinned his card, on which he had written his address, on the lapel of his coat. In his pocket was 45 cents in money, a pocket-book and a bunch of keys.

The coroner's verdict was that Graves had shot himself while despondent.

To-day a streamer of crape floated from the bell-handle of 751 North Wells street and a mother sat in darkness and mourned.

THAT MISERABLE WAR.

Hippolyte and Legitime Driving the People Delirious.—A Lively Time Expected.

A letter to the New York Times dated Port Au Prince, July 17, says the city is in a state bordering on frenzy. Hippolyte has assaulted the outer works. Legitime is impressing into the ranks every man capable of carrying a rifle. The people having been delirious with excitement, the Minister of War has executed some of the prisoners with his own hands. Hippolyte is burning farm houses and villages in sight of the city. All foreigners have been threatened with extermination, but the United States naval force on hand are prepared to take the city if necessary.

The Kearsarge and Ossiple are here. The British cruiser Forward has come in under a full head of steam. She left Jamaica on six hours' notice. The Spanish cruisers Comba and Sauchez have arrived. They report a French man-of-war on the way. The combined forces of the foreign warships are prepared to effect a landing at a moment's notice. A system of signals has been established with the American Consul, and the moment the danger flag is exhibited picked infantry companies from the Kearsarge and Ossiple will jump for the boats. The captain of the British cruiser declares if one Englishman is touched he will open every gun in his batteries. Hippolyte is within a mile of the city, and his force is reported to number 10,000 men. It is a question of but a few days before the end is at hand. Port au Prince knows it, and men, women and children are prepared to die with Legitime. The feeling against foreigners is one of bitter hatred, and it needs but a spark to turn the whole native population into a frenzied mob.

Suffocated by Sewer Gas.

A Lincoln, Neb., despatch of Wednesday says: This afternoon a watch was dropped in a cesspool here and several men endeavored to recover it. They dug a large hole at the side of the pool. This hole was filled with water by the rain. One man stood on a ladder above the water and made an opening into the cesspool. The foul air and gas rushed out and overcame him, and he fell into the water. A friend went to give aid and was likewise overcome. Others came to help, and one by one seven men fell into the water, which by this time was full of muck and slime from the vault. Three were rescued by the men who afterwards perished in attempting to save the others.

Dr. R. A. Gunn, M. D., Dean and Professor of Surgery of the United States Medical College, editor of Medical Tribune, author of "Gunn's New Improved Handbook of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," in speaking of advanced kidney disease, and the effect of the use of Warner's Safe Cure, says: "I find that in Bright's Disease it seems to act as a solvent of albumen; to soothe and heal inflamed membranes, and wash out epithelial debris, which blocks up the tubuli uriniferi (urine-bearing tubes), and to prevent the destructive metamorphosis of tissue."

A NEW MESSIAH DOWN SOUTH.

A Man who has Turned the Negroes Wild with a Promise to Turn Them White.

A Savannah, Ga., despatch says: Liberty county is greatly excited over the proceedings of a man calling himself Dupont Bell, who claims to be the New Messiah. He hails from Circleville, O. He is tall and sallow, with long black hair. He has succeeded in working the negroes of that section up to such a point that the white people are afraid of serious trouble.

"This man Bell," Senator Bradwell said to-day, "appeared suddenly in Liberty county six weeks ago. He proclaimed himself to be the Son of God, and the negroes at once went mad over him. They deserted their fields to follow him and listen to his rantings, and now things are so bad that it is impossible to get hands on the plantations near Riceborough, and some of the crops are being ruined. The negroes kneel before him and struggle with each other for the privilege of kissing his feet. He has told them that the judgment day will be here August 16th. He says that the white people have enjoyed their paradise on earth for the last eighteen centuries, and now it will be the black man's turn. On the eagerly-looked-for 16th every white man will be turned black and every black man will become white.

"This prospect cannot be cheering to Bell, whose skin is white. He says his body was born thirty years ago in Ohio, but his soul has lived since the world began. On the 38th of June he was arrested on a charge of vagrancy, but it was impossible to hold him on such a charge, as he had a quantity of money in his possession. I think a good application of the whip would be the best thing for him, but the negroes far outnumber the whites, and there would be a fearful and bloody riot if anything were done to him. His schemes for raising money are varied and peculiar. The last effort of his genius was to declare that he had sent to his august Father for a consignment of wings which the negroes will need on and after the 16th of August. There was a corner on wings when his requisition reached heaven, and the Almighty was only able to send him 360 pairs. These, he claimed, would be delivered on the Judgment Day, and in the meantime he would sell them at $5 a pair. Every pair has been bought and paid for, and now the lucky ones are practicing the flying motions. He thinks his Father may be able to send him a few more pairs before the great day.

"There is a scheme on foot to get Bell away from his followers, arrest him quietly and have him sent on the fast train to Savannah to be locked up. That is, as far as I can see, the only way to get rid of the man. He may cause serious trouble any day."

THE MISSING AIR SHIP.

Hogan May be Safe Yet, but His Chances are Poor.

A New York despatch says: Prof. Hogan, the missing æronaut, may be alive after all. The pilot boat Robert Carll sighted the air ship yesterday at 2 p.m. out at sea, floating a short distance above the water. The Carll was about a mile distant from the air ship. The pilots intended to pick up the balloon and stood toward the air ship. Just as they were going to launch their yawl the man in the balloon threw ballast overboard, waved a white flag, as if to say he was all right, and ascended again very quickly. The balloon remained in sight about an hour and was sailing well. Two schooners within signalling distance were sailing east in the same direction as the air ship. When at 5.30 o'clock Capt. Phelan, of the pilot boat Caprice, saw the air ship dragging in the water there was no man in it. There were two large schooners in sight and it is thought Hogan may have been picked up by one of them.

Prof. Edward D. Hogan, the æronaut supposed to have been lost near New York, was born at Mooretown, Ont., a few miles below Sarnia. He was 37 years of age. Hogan was a man without fear and made more successful balloon ascensions than any living man. He made his first trip to the clouds in 1866, and since that time has devoted his whole life to the profession and has taken over 600 upward journeys. He was among the first to dispense with the basket and ascend to the heavens upon a frail trapeze bar. Two years ago he began jumping from his balloon with a closed parachute.

The Gladstone Golden Wedding.

Arrangements are now complete for the reception of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone in the National Liberal Club on the evening of the 26th inst., in celebration of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone. The members of Mr. Gladstone's last administration and representatives of Liberalism from all parts of the country will be present. Mr. Marcus Stone, R. A., has designed the allegorical figure of "Freedom" prefacing the commemoration album which is to be presented to Mr. Gladstone. The presentation address is a short one, the work of Mr. Wemyss Reid, and is an eloquent tribute to Mr. Gladstone's great personal gifts. The body of the album consists of five pages, three of which are decorative in character and support the intermingled address. Of these, one, designed by Mr. Lewis F. Day, refers to the domestic life and political career generally of Mr. Gladstone; another, Mr. Henry Holiday's design, refers to Mr. Gladstone as a scholar and statesman, his debt to Greece and Italy, and their indebtedness to him in return. On the third page, Mr. Walter Crane refers more particularly to Mr. Gladstone's later career, and to Home Rule in particular. A page of water-color drawings by Alfred Parsons, R. I., represents country life at Hawarden, whilst J. MacWhirter, A. R. A., and Arthur Severn, R. I., portray Edinburgh and London respectively.

Babies in California.

"At one time a woman could hardly walk through the streets of San Francisco without having every one pause to gaze on her, and a child was so rare that once in a theatre in the same city where a woman had taken her infant, when it began to cry, just as the orchestra began to play, a man in the pit cried out, 'Stop those fiddles and let the baby cry. I haven't heard such a sound for ten years.' The audience applauded this sentiment, the orchestra stopped and the baby continued its performance amid unbounded enthusiasm."

NORTHWEST NOTES.

The Northern Pacific & Manitoba Portage branch will be open for business on the 1st of August.

Two brothers named Western made a serious assault upon Geo. W. Robinson at Portage la Prairie. The Westerns rented rooms from Robinson and the quarrel resulted over the rent.

The contract for the new Lansdowne College at Portage la Praire has been let and permanent officers chosen.

Angus McNaughton, Calgary, livery stable keeper, was seriously injured by a horse falling on him, pinning him to the ground for several minutes.

A young French-Canadian, nephew of a Mr. Licotte, was drowned to-day at Rat River. The name of the deceased is unknown.

Blood Indians recently interfered with Mounted Police officers in seeking the arrest of Colt Robe and Prairie Chicken, two of their number, for horse-stealing. Early next morning several Indians arrived at the barracks and reported that the police were intoxicated and drew their arms, and to prevent their firing they interfered. Supt. Steel then sent out Inspector Wood to investigate and bring in the Indians. He found that there was not a particle of truth in the charge of intoxication; that their men had not drawn their arms, nothwithstanding provocation. After waiting a considerable time Red Crow handed over Prairie Chicken and Colt Robe to Inspector Wood, together with four others who had obstructed the police. Prairie Chicken received a lecture for running away and was released. Colt Robe was held on a charge of levelling a rifle at Constable Sinckmont. He had his preliminary examination and was committed for trial. Superintendent Steel and Inspector Wood held a preliminary investigation on the four Indians' who had obstructed the police, and they are to stand their trial. Indian Agent Pocklington and Red Crow went security for their appearance.

The Pope has sent his Apostolic benediction to the Catholic Council at St. Boniface.

In the notice published in regard to the sale of the anthracite coal mining property, only the names of the American stockholders who had received direct benefit from the sale are given. In addition to these a number of Canadians were heavy stockholders, and will receive equal benefit from the magnificent sale of the property for $1,500,000. Among the Canadians interested are Mr. McLeod Stewart, Major Jack Stewart, Mr. Sandford Fleming, Mr. James O'Connor, of the Queen's, and Mr. W. B. Scarth, M P. Mr. O'Connor will receive between $50,000 and $60,000 for his share, as he was a pretty heavy holder of stocks. Mr. Scarth will also get a good slice, as will also the others named. The old company was stocked for half a million, so that the stock sells for three times its face value. It is understood that Sir Charles Tupper assisted Mr. Stewart in England in making the sale.

The sensation of the day at St. Boniface is a land sink which occurred in that village the night before last. The slide is the largest any old resident has even seen. It occurred immediately opposite St. Boniface Convent and takes in a stretch of the river bank about two hundreds long and twenty-five feet wide. It took away about half the roadway in front of the convent. The land does not appear to have slid into the river; it seems just to have dropped straight down about fifteen feet as if to fill in a shrinkage in the bowels of the earth. The ground from which the fallen portion was severed presents a perpendicular wall, fifteen feet high, which looks as if the land had been sliced off with a knife. The phenomenon drew hundreds of curious people to examine the locality and speculate upon the cause.

Kiss Her and Tell Her So.

You've a neat little wife at home, John,
As sweet as you'd wish to see;
As faithful and gentle-hearted,
As fond as a wife can be;
A genuine, home-loving woman,
Not caring for fuss and show;
She's dearer to you than life, John;
Then kiss her and tell her so.

Your dinners are promptly served, John,
As, likewise, your breakfast and tea;
Your wardrobe is always in order,
With buttons where buttons should be,
Her house is a cosy home-nest, John,
A heaven of rest below;
You think she's a rare little treasure;
Then kiss her and tell her so.

She's a good wife and true to you, John,
Let fortune be foul or fair;
Of whatever comes to you, John,
She cheerfully bears her share;
You feel she's a brave, true helper,
And perhaps far more than you know,
'Twill lighten her end of the load, John,
Just to kiss her and tell her so.

There's a cross-road somewhere in life, John,
Where a hand on a guiding stone
Will signal one "over the river,"
And the other must go on alone.
Should she reach the last milestone first John,
'Twill be comfort amid your woe
To know that while loving her here, John,
You kissed her and told her so.

The Girl in a Calico Dress.

Though Queens of Society try as they will
To dazzle and charm us by dressing to kill
They cannot look ever, we have to confess,
As sweet as the girl in a calico dress.

No framework of satin, silk, jewels and lace
Can set off her picture of beauty and grace
Like a calico dress of neat pattern and shade
That her own willing hands have so tastefully made.

There's something so welcome, so homelike, so clean,
So honest and useful, so modest of mien
In a calico dress that its wearer, we know,
Partakes of its virtues and in them will grow.

No tailor-made girl, be she ever so smart,
And decked in the fashion of dressmaking art,
Can hold up a candle with any success
To the sensible girl in the calico dress.

And none, when it comes to the duties of life,
Can make for a man such a helpmate and wife
And build him a home that he proudly will bless
Like the brave little girl in a calico dress.

All praise to the girl in a calico dress;
A marriage with her is a certain success.
A kitchen or parlor—each one in its place—
She, like Cinderella, will equally grace.

My Ships.

If all the ships I have at sea
Should come a sailing home to me—
Ah! well, the harbor could not hold
One-half the sails that there would be
If all my ships came home from sea.

If half the ships I have at sea
Should come a sailing home to me—
Ah! well, I should have wealth as great
As any king who sits in state,
So rich the treasures there would be
In half my ships now out at sea.

If just one ship I have at sea
Should come a sailing home to me—
Ah! well, the storm-cloud then might frown,
For if the others all went down,
So rich, so proud, so glad I'd be,
If that one ship came home to me.

If that one ship went down at sea
And all the others came to me,
Weighted with wealth untold,
The poorest soul on earth I'd be
If that one ship came not to me.

Oh, skies be calm, oh, winds blow free,
Blow all my ships safe home to me:
But if thou sendest home a wreck,
To never more come sailing back,
Send any, all that skim the sea,
But send my love ship home to me.

No Prayer To-Night.

No prayer to-night! No golden head
To lie in my lap with glittering light;
But a broken heart, and a sigh instead—
Ah me! ah me! no prayer to-night.

No lisping tongue, no dimpled hands,
To sing and strike in keen delight;
No hair to plait in glistening strands—
Ah me! ah me! no prayer to-night.

No prayer to-night—no bright eyes shine;
No cradled head to catch my sight;
No rosy lips pressed close to mine—
Ah me! ah me! no prayer to-night.

No trusting love; no pearly tears;
No smile; no laughter loud and bright;
No little voice to tell its fears—
Ah me! ah me! no prayer to-night.

No prayer to-night; an aching heart,
A life that is full of care and blight,
A life that has sorrow in every part—
Ah me! ah me! no prayer to-night.

Content.

Happy the man that, when his day is done,
Lies down to sleep with nothing of regret;
The battle he has fought may not be won,
The fame he sought be just as fleeting yet.
Folding at last his hands upon his breast,
Happy is he, if hoary and forespent,
He sinks into the last, eternal rest,
Breathing these only words: "I am content."

But happier he, that, while his blood is warm,
Sees hopes and friendships dead about him lie,
Bares his brave breast to envy's bitter storm,
Nor shuns the poison barbs of calumny;
And 'mid it all, stands sturdy and elate,
Girt only in the armor God hath meant
For him who 'neath the buffetings of fate
Can say to God and man: "I am content."

A Royal Epitaph.

Here is an epitaph composed for Frederick Louis, Prince of Wales, and Prince of Gamblers:

"Here lies Fred,
Who was alive and is dead
Had it been his father,
I had much rather;
Had it been his brother,
Much better than another;
Had it been his sister,
No one would have missed her;
Had it been the whole generation,
Still better for the nation.
But since 'tis only Fred,
Who was alive and is dead,
There's no more to be said."

"GOOD-BY."

We say it for an hour or for years;
We say it smiling, say it choked with tears;
We say it coldly, say it with a kiss;
And yet we have no other word than this—
"Good-by."

We have no dearer word for our heart's friend,
To him who journeys to the world's far end
And scars our soul with going; thus we say,
As unto him who steps but o'er the way—
"Good-by."

Alike to those we love and those we hate,
We say no more in parting. At life's gate,
To him who passes out beyond earth's sight,
We cry, as to the wanderer for a night—
"Good-by."

WHAT A CLOUDBURST IS.

A Lake of Water Actually Suspended in Mid-Air.

The phenomena of a cloudburst, which can only occur in a tornado or whirlwind, are not generally understood, says the New York Herald. The whirl in which it forms is not a very broad and shallow disk, but a tall, columnar mass of rotating air, similar to that in which the Atlantic waterspout or the famous pillar-like dust storm of India is generated. While this travelling aerial pillar, perhaps a few hundred yards in diameter, is rapidly gyrating, the centrifugal force, as Prof. Ferrel has shown, acts as a barrier to prevent the flow of external air from all sides into its interior, except at and near the base of the pillar. Their friction with the earth retards the gyrations and allows the air to rush in below and escape upward through the flue-like interior as powerful ascending currents.

The phenomenon, however, will not be attended by terrific floods unless the atmosphere is densely stored with water vapor, as it was on Tuesday in the Cayadutta valley, and as it was on May 31st in the Conemaugh valley. When such is the case the violent ascending currents suddenly lift the vapor laden clouds several thousand feet above the level at which they were previously floating, and hurl them aloft into rarified and cold regions of the atmosphere, where their vapor is instantly condensed into many tons of water. Could the water fall as fast as condensed it would be comparatively harmless. But the continuous uprushing currents support this mass of water at the high level, and as their own vast volumes of vapor rising are condensed they add to the water already accumulated thousands of feet above the earth's surface—making, so to speak, a lake in high air.

As the whirlwind weakens or passes from beneath this vast body of water, which its ascending currents have generated and upheld in the upper story of the atmosphere, the aqueous mass, no longer supported, drops with ever increasing gravitational force to the earth. In severe cloud bursts the water does not fall as rain, but in sheets and streams, sometimes unbroken for many seconds. The cloud burst of 1838 at Holidaysburg, Pa., excavated many holes in the ground, varying from 25 to 30 feet in diameter, and from 3 to 6 feet deep. In a similar but milder storm, which visited Boulogne last May, fissures were cut in the streets eight feet deep and openings made large enough to engulf a horse and cart.

Temperance Notes.

A STRANGE, SAD, TRUE TALE.

In his speech at the Presbyterian Synod, the Rev. John McNeil, of London, the "Scottish Spurgeon," created quite a sensation by telling the following tale: He was speaking of temperance, and said that last Sunday (when he preached a temperance sermon at the Tabernacle) he received a letter that had been written by a lady on the danger of the use at communion of fermented wine. The lady in her letter told a sad story of an inherited passion for drink. There were four or five of them, several brothers and two sisters, and the children of intemperate parents. The sister had, unfortunately, inherited the craving, and before she was fourteen had taken to drink. The others became converted, and did all in their power to cure their sister; but it was of no use. The sister at length married comfortably, and children were born. But the craving for drink grew greater and greater, and at length she was sent to a home for inebriates, where she stayed a year. She left apparently, said the sister, a changed woman. Soon after, however, her husband caught a severe cold, and before going out one morning drank a glass of hot whiskey—taking care, however, not to do so in the presence of his wife. Then, as was his custom, before leaving, he kissed his wife. At once the fumes of alcohol passed into her, and in an hour she was a drunk and roaring woman. She went from worse to worse, and at last left her husband and her children, one of them a cripple, through her drunkenness. The husband died two years ago, a white-haired and broken-hearted man, though only 45 years old. "Need I add," said the sister in her letter, "what became of her? Her story is that of Annie Chapman, one of the recent Whitechapel victims. That was my sister!"

"AFTER YOUR BOY."

During the Christian Endeavor Convention at Chicago, one of the delgates, a young business man, dressed in a natty rough-and-ready suit, every movement alert and eager and telling of bottled energy within, came suddenly upon a red faced citizen who evidently had been patronizing the hotel bar. Buttonholing the delegate a trifle unceremoniously, the latter said:

"What are you fellows trying to do down at the battery? You are hot on temperance, I see by the papers. Do you think you could make a temperance man of me?

"No," replied the delegate, looking him over from head to foot with a keen glance, slightly contemptuous, "we evidently couldn't do much with you, but we are after your boy."

At this unexpected retort the man dropped his jocular tone and said seriously, "Well, I guess you have got the right of it there. If somebody had been after me when I was a boy I should be a better man to-day."

The young man gave in a nutshell the sum and substance of the Christian Endeavor movement.

Mr. Simmons, Governor of Canterbury Prison, is authority for the following: 'The number of prisoners who have been committed to the prison with which I have been connected during the last ten years amounts to 22,000. Among them I have come in contact with ministers of the gospel, numbers of persons who were once members of Christian churches, as also children of pious parents; but, I never met with a prisoner who was a teetotaler.

Had Had Experience.

Applicant—"Yes, sir."

"Ever worked in a store before?"

"Yes, sir."

"I'd send her to the next counter."

"I guess you've had experience."

HE STICKS TO IT.

Dr. McGlynn Tells His Friends He Has Nothing to Recant.

The third annual excursion of the Anti-Poverty Society, like its predecessors, according to the New York Mail and Express, was a big success. Dr. McGlynn spoke to 3,000 of the faithful on his favorite theme. Among other things he said: "We have nothing to be ashamed of. We have nothing to explain away; and, least of all, have we anything to take back. If at this late day there is some benighted, belated person, some one who has never read the newspapers or forgets all he reads, or some one perhaps who cannot read at all, I care not who he be, who will ask the musty, the stale, the moth-eaten, the chestnutty old question, 'Why didn't Dr. McGlynn go to Rome?' a sufficiently adequate answer to that is in the fact that with the command to go to Rome was a command to condemn in writing the doctrines that I have maintained. So help me God, whom I venerate as present here, in this, one of His first temples, since the groves were God's first temples, whence men looked up to the clear sky beyond and said 'our Father'—so help me God, I would, this or any other moment, sooner be burned alive by slow fires than retract what I know to be the very truth of God. (Applause.) For me under such circumstances to retract or go to Rome were to be guilty of an infamy. To retract under such circumstances, to condemn the truth that was God's, would have been not merely a blasphemy and sacrilege and perjury, a monstrous crime against God, against my own soul, and against the precious rights of humanity, but, to speak merely from a worldly point of view, it were a blunder worse than a crime. If I had the rare good fortune to be led out amid thousands of jeering, mocking, insulting, cursing, howling enemies, alone, unfriended and naked, to be burned at a stake for this truth, I should go smiling as to victory. I should mount the scaffold as if it were a royal throne. I should feel that from such a scaffold I saw the heavens open and that was the best ladder by which I could mount to God. And if I could permit, as I should not care to do, any mere worldly thought of personal glory to enter into my mind, I should feel that I was not so much making a prophecy as applying the teaching of all history, when I should say the very spot that you would make infamous by the ashes of a man whom you would burn to death for the truth shall be made memorable by this day's scene, and some after generation, better minded, shall come and consecrate the spot to liberty forever."

Statue of Wallace in Ballarat.

On May 24th a magnificent statue of Sir William Wallace, the great Scottish patriot, was unveiled in the Public Gardens, Ballarat, Australia. The statue was a gift to the city from the estate of the late Russell Thomson, a native of Scotland, who was long identified with the place. The sculptor was Mr. Percival Ball, of Melbourne. Wallace is represented as standing upon the Abbey Craig, watching for the precise moment when a blast upon the horn hanging at his side will give the signal for his forces to fall upon the English as they cross Stirling Bridge. The figure is of heroic size, standing over eight feet in height. His powerful frame is clad in a close-fitting suit of chain armor, which well displays the muscular development of the stalwart frame. The arms are bare to just above the elbow, and the large muscles stand out in cords through the armor. Both hands are grasping a representation of the immense sword that in Wallace's hands wrought such havoc among his foes. Over the figure is a light surcoat, with lion of Scotland emblazoned on the breast, and on the head is a simple morion, so that the features are not hidden by a vizor. These are most expressive, representing a stern resolve to do or die, not unmixed by anxiety, and full of vigilance and observation. The pose is natural and effective and the tout ensemble is pleasing to the eye. As might be imagined, the unveiling ceremonies were attended by the Scottish residents for a great distance around Ballarat, and prolonged and enthusiastic cheers greeted the figure when it was unveiled by Hon. J. Nimmo.

Hot Milk a Substitute for Liquor.

Mrs. Hayes always declared that a perfectly adequate substitute for liquor when needed as a stimulant could be found in hot milk, and after any cold or wetting she gave them this in place of the wine or whiskey which others would have considered necessary. This is, by the way, a custom of Mrs. Cleveland's also, who discovered after the fatigues of the many long and wearisome receptions she was obliged to go through, standing for hours on her feet and shaking hands with hundreds of people, that nothing would restore her so quickly as a cupful of boiling milk brought to her by her maid, and which she drank in little sips as hot as it possibly could be taken. The Washington girls caught the idea from her, and finding how quickly it helped them after a hard day of calls and social duties they began to substitute it for the various malt preparations they had been in the habit of taking, or the hot wine and water which their maids usually administered when they came in too tired out to dress for their next engagement.—New York World.

Apoplexy, pneumonia, rheumatism are prevented and removed by Warner's Safe Cure. Why? Dr. Geo. Johnson, of King's College, London, England, says: "There is wide-spread enlargement of the muscular walls of the small arteries in chronic Bright's Disease, not only in the arteries of the kidneys, but also in those of the pia-mater (investing membrane of the brain), the skin, the intestines and the muscles, as a result of a morbidly changed condition of the blood due to kidney disase." If the kidney disease is not cured, apoplexy, pneumonia or rheumatism will result. Warner's Safe Cure does cure kidney disease, thus enabling them to take out of the blood the morbid or unhealthy matters.

A DUTIFUL SENTRY.

Coolness and Bravery of a Private Soldier in the Crimea.

The true soldier esteems it a privilege to serve his country in word and deed. His resolve is to do his duty, come what may, and to do it even in the dark, where his self-devotion can meet with no recognition, much less with reward. How such a determination ennobles a man and lifts him out of the slough of selfishness is illustrated by a story told by Lord Wolseley in his "Fortnightly Review" article, "Is a Soldier's Life Worth Living?" The place was in the Crimea, the time during the dismal winter of 1854-5 and the hero a British private. One night the Russians forced their way into the English second parallel, drove out the men on guard and for a short time held the position. Then the English troops drove back the Russians to their own lines and reoccupied the parallel. On the extreme left of the parallel, where it dipped down into a ravine, an English sentry was found at his post, where he had remained during the Russian assault and occupation. They had not spread out so as to reach his post, though they had come very near it. His comrades had fled in a panic and he knew that he was in danger of being surrounded and taken prisoner. But he stood there waiting to be attacked before he retreated. When discovered by his comrades he was coolly looking over the parapet toward the Redan, he having been ordered to watch that Russian work. On being asked why he had not run when the others did, he answered that he had been posted there by his officer and could not leave his post until relieved or driven away by the enemy.

"His coolness and high sense of duty," writes Lord Wolseley, "made a deep impression upon my mind at the time. No marshal's baton was in his knapsack, he expected nothing, he got nothing. It was by accident only that his gallant conduct on that dark winter s night was ever known to any one; but he must have had the satisfactory consciousness in his heart that he had done his duty. How many are the heroic deeds which are never heard of."

A Ghost Story.

The late Dr. Fowler, Bishop of Gloucester, and Justice Powell had frequent altercations on the subject of ghosts. The bishop was a zealous defender of the reality of them; the justice was somewhat sceptical. The bishop one day met his friend, and the justice told him that since their last conference on the subject he had had ocular demonstrations which had convinced him of the existence of ghosts. "I rejoice at your conversion," replied the bishop; "give me the circumstances which produced it, with the particulars. Ocular demonstration, you say?" "Yes, my lord. As I lay last night in my bed, about the twelfth hour I was awakened by an uncommon noise, and heard something coming upstairs." "Go on, sir." "Fearfully alarmed at the noise, I drew my curtain ——." "Proceed." "And saw a faint glimmering light enter my chamber." "Of a blue color was it not?" interrogated the doctor. "Of a pale blue, and this pale blue light was followed by a tall meagre, stern figure who appeared as an old man of 70 years of age arrayed in a long light-colored rug gown bound with leather girdle; beard thick; hair scant and straight; face of a dark sable hue; upon his head a large fur cap; and in his hand a long staff. Terror seized my whole frame. I trembled till the bed verily shook, and cold drops hung upon every limb. The figure advanced with slow and solemn step." "Did you not speak to it? There was money hid or murder committed without a doubt," said the bishop. "My lord, I did speak to it; I adjured it by all that was holy to tell me whence, and for what purpose he thus appeared." "And in Heaven's name what was the reply?" "Before he deigned to reply he lifted up his staff three times, my lord, and smote the floor even so loudly that verily the stroke caused the room to reverberate the thundering sound. He then waved the pale blue light which he bore in what is called a lantern. He waved it even to my eyes; and he told me, my lord, he told me that he was—Yes, my lord, that he was no more nor less than—the watchman! who had come to give me notice that my street door was open, and that I might be robbed before morning." The justice had no sooner concluded than the bishop disappeared.

The Best Time to Bathe.

It is best to bathe just before going to bed, as any danger of catching cold is thus avoided, and the complexion is improved by keeping warm for several hours after leaving the bath. A couple of pounds of bran put into a thin bag and then into the bath-tub is excellent for softening the skin. It should be left to soak in a small quantity of water several hours before being used. The internal aids to a clear complexion are most of them well known, and the present season is the best for a thorough cleansing and purifying of the blood. The old-fashioned remedy of sulphur and molasses is considered among the best. Charcoal, powdered and taken with water, is said to be excellent, but it is most difficult to take. A strictly vegetable and fruit diet is followed by many for one or two weeks.—The London Lancet.

A Library Without a Novel.

One would scarcely believe it possible for a circulating library to exist without works of fiction on its shelves. Yet, the Friends' Library, Germantown, Philadelphia, contains no novels whatsoever and loans out fourteen thousand and some volumes yearly and about twenty-five thousand people annually use its reading room.—De Menil, St. Louis Magazine.

WORLD'S TOBACCO YIELD.

It is Increasing More Rapidly Than That of Either Wheat or Corn.

The world's annual output of tobacco is increasing, perhaps more rapidly than that of either wheat or corn. Kentucky is the greatest factor in the tobacco market, and her product steadily grows. That of Virginia does likewise, and several of the Northern States are cultivating it successfully. Cuba has long been famous for her cigar wrappers, and in many parts of the island the planters are abandoning sugar and turning their attention to tobacco, finding the latter much more profitable. Even Germany is endeavoring to raise it. But the greatest efforts to extend cultivation of tobacco are being made in the East Indies. Both the soil and the climate of the great islands near the Asiatic coast are admirably adapted to the weed, and it has long been successfully grown there, but not until recently have attempts been made to produce it on such a large scale. Both the Dutch and the English are heavily interested, and the industry is not conducted by small farmers, as here in Kentucky, but by great companies on immense plantations, working a thousand or more coolies and Malays.

Sioux Eye Sighed.

Sioux is pronounced Soos, therefore Sioux would be "Soo." Eye is pronounced "I," and sighed is pronounced as though spelt "side." Yet S-i-o-u-e-y-e-s-i-g-h-e-d would be regarded as a most peculiar way of spelling suicide. It is an ugly thing however you spell it, yet thousands of women are practically guilty of it. Day after day, week after week, they endure that dull pain in the back, that terrible "dragging-down" sensation that tells of weakness and functional disorder, and do absolutely nothing to effect a cure. In a few years a broken-hearted husband and motherless children will follow her to the grave. False delicacy prevents consulting a physician, but even this is not necessary. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has cured thousands of such women. To suffer and to die when this would cure is plain, unmistakable Suicide. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money paid for it refunded.

Electric Light on the Eyes.

Within the past ten years thirty people, suffering from a peculiar disease of the eyes, have come under the observation of a Cronstadt oculist. The symptoms were the same in each case, and all the patients had, owing to their employment, been accustomed to remain for hours at a time near electric light apparatus. The new disease is called photo-electric ophthalmia. The patient is apt to be awakened in the night by great pain about the orbits, accompanied with profuse lachrymation. Intense photobhobia is another characteristic of the malady.—Journal American Medical Association.

Successful Business Men.

Who are our most successful business men? Go out on the street and look them over. You won't find them men who have pale cheeks. They are not thin, emaciated men. They are not nervous, irritable men. They are men whose faces indicate robust health. Men with good blood, and plenty of it. That's the secret of their success. A man whose blood is thin and weak and poisoned with impurities, is never successful like his healthy neighbor. You cannot expect him to be, for without rich, strong, nourishing blood he will lack the "vim" and "push" which the man must have who would succeed. Such men should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to restore their impoverished blood to its normal condition. By the use of this great blood purifier and builder-up of the system, they may put themselves in a condition which will enable them to win the success they are anxious to achieve.

Lord Wolseley on the German Army.

The German nation may be thankful to the German army for other reasons than simply the defense of the fatherland, according to Gen. Lord Wolseley. He writes: "I take the German army as the highest existing type of the military system and organization, which the changes effected in armies by the French revolution have led up to; and much as I admire that army as a soldier I admire it still more as a citizen. Great as it is for war, it is infinitely greater as a national school for the moral, mental and physical training of the people. Designed exclusively for war, it has become the most important of peace institutions. In it all Germans are trained to strength and taught the first principles of personal cleanliness and of health. There they learn to be honest and manly, and are taught the excellence of those virtues which serve to make men good subjects and law abiding citizens. It is the school of the nation, in which deep love of fatherland is fostered and cherished, and where all classes learn that there is honor in obedience and nobility in self sacrifice.

DUTTON AND VICINITY.

Emancipation Day.

Choice pineapples at McGill's.

Wheat threshing has commenced.

Choice cigars and tobaccos at McGill's.

When is Dutton to have a civic holiday?

Choice sweet Florida oranges at McGill's.

Fine lemons, cranberries and bananas at McGill's.

A number of our town boys are camping at Tyrconnel.

The fire at the Ruthven gas well has been extinguished.

Try McGill's 25c. tea and coffee. The best value in town.

There was no service in the Presbyterian church on Sunday last.

Read the mortgage sale advertisement in this week's ENTERPRISE.

Rev. E. Middleton and family are camping on the Lake Shore.

The brickwork on Leitch's new hotel was commenced on Tuesday.

D. McCallum and family, of Dunwich, have removed to St. Thomas.

Dr. Ruthven is having a stable erected on his lot on Shackleton street.

Division court will be held in Brown's hall, Dutton, on Thursday next.

Norman Robertson, of Fresno, Cal., paid us a flying visit on Tuesday.

A tarantula was discovered in a bunch of bananas at Glencoe the other day.

The Dutton corps of the Salvation Army picnicked at Tyrconnel on Monday.

Thos. Watson, south of Cowal, had his leg broken by a kick from a horse on Saturday.

Glencoe will have its civic holiday tomorrow and will run an excursion to Port Stanley.

W. R. Phillimore, representing McColl Bros. & Co., Toronto, was in town on Tuesday.

Jno. Farley, of St. Thomas, is spending a few days in town, the guest of A. M. McIntyre.

Two candidates were received into feliowship with the Dutton Baptist church Sunday evening last.

The "Maple Leafs," of Iona, will play ball against the "Atlantics," of St. Thomas, at the latter place on Saturday.

L. J. Willson has sold 28,000 lbs. of this season's wool to Rob't Burman, of Hamilton, and will ship this week.

An incipient fire at the house of Mr. McCallum, shoemaker, Tuesday morning caused some excitement for a time.

Mr. and Mrs. James Pool and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. White left on Monday for a trip down the St. Lawrence to Quebec city.

J. N. Duthie, travelling freight agent of the G.T.R., was in town on Monday, looking up freight business for the company.

Dan. McKee has purchased a half interest in P. D. McCallum's threshing outfit and will travel with the machine this season.

Iona second nine base ball club visited Shedden on Saturday and were defeated by the first nine of that place by a score of 19 to 40.

In the Crowley vs. McFee wages case, tried at West Lorne last week, a verdict has been rendered for the plaintiff for $35 and costs.

R. C. Scott, of the Cumberland Mills, Highgate, was in town on Monday. Mr. Scott leaves to-day on a trip to the Maritime provinces.

Rev. Thos. Wilson, pastor of Knox church, who has been spending his vacation Presque Isle, will return home tomorrow, and will occupy his own pulpit on Sunday next.

Two hotel and no less than six shop licenses have been applied for in Dutton. The commissioners for West Elgin meet at St. Thomas on Monday next to consider the applications.

We have received from Wm. Edgar, general passenger agent of the G. T. R., a neat and convenient handbook giving routes and fares to all summer resorts reached by that great popular railway.

NOTICE.—The cricket club will meet to-day (Thursday) at 4 p. m. for practice and the transaction of specially important business. All members are requested to be present.—R. SUTHERLAND, Secretary.

It would be better for the peace of the town if a few of the obstreperous individuals who persist in creating a disturbance every time they come to town were incarcerated in the lock-up over night to cool off.

Rev. J. G. Brown, missionary-elect to India, will preach in the Baptist church, Dutton, on Sunday, August 11th. Mr. Brown is a well educated and fluent speaker and no doubt will draw a large congregation.

Misses Maggie and Kate McPherson and brothers left last evening for their future home in Toronto. Mrs. McPherson will remain in Dutton for a short time with John, who is too ill to travel at present.

C. E. Doyle won the medal in shooting off the tie with Wm. Eustes at the gun club shoot Tuesday evening. Score—W. James 4, Wm. Eustes 6, E. S. Sifton 2, C. St. C. Leitch 3, C. E. Doyle 6, Wm. Hollingshead 3, J. T. Sifton 3.

An extraordinary event happpened on Mr. S. S. Lawrason's farm, near St. George, last week. A sow belonging to Mr. Lawrason gave birth to a litter of twenty pigs. What is still more strange is the fact that they are all living. This is said to beat the record.

While waiting for the mail train Wednesday evening the horse driven by F. A. Humpidge became frightened and started to kick, smashing the front of the buggy to pieces and completely upsetting it. Mr. Humpidge was in the rig at the time and received some severe injuries, the extent of which cannot be ascertained at present.

While Jno. McGill and family were driving to church at Crinan on Sunday the boy who was driving struck one of the horses a severe cut with the whip, causing them to start forward suddenly, upsetting the back seat of the carriage on were seated Mrs. McGill and two or three children. All fell out on the hard road and were seriously injured.

A member of the board of health wishes us to state that if any person feels aggrieved at any nuisance he must make complaint to the board before any action can be taken. It is not the duty of the members of the board to look after the condition of the yards, etc., in town. Such a proceeding would entail too much expense on the municipality.

The tramp crop appears to have been unusually large the past few weeks and numerous depredations are reported to have been committed by the lazy vagrants. There is no excuse for an honest able-bodied man being out of work at the present time, and all tramps of this class who ask for aid when they have no idea of working should be treated to a liberal application of solid shoe leather, applied where it will do the most good. This class would become very scarce in a short time under such treatment.

During Wednesday night of last week some scamps entered the office of the Dutton roller mills by means of one of the windows, and after searching the place for valuables, tore the combination till, which they could not open, from its place under the counter and carried it off. The thieves, however, only got a microscope and a scarf pin for their pains as all the cash and other valuables were in the safe, which was not molested. The till was found next morning in a fence corner near the cooper shop, with the top torn off.

In January last the store of J. C. Macdonald, at Duart, was burglarized. Fred. Dorseman, a half-demented German, was arrested and lodged in Elgin jail and pleaded guilty to having been associated with a well-known thief in the burglary. Dorseman was discharged on suspended sentence, and the police are still looking for his companion. Detective Heenan has recovered about eighty yards of tweed which the man sold at Fargo for $100. He is described as being 35 years of age, 5 feet 9 inches in height, sandy moustache, thin face, with high cheek bones. Never looks a man in the face.

The Methodist church at West Lorne, which has been thoroughly and handsomely rebuilt and refurnished, will be reopened on Sunday and Monday, August 11th and 12th. Rev. Wm. McDonagh, president of the conference, will preach at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m., and Rev. W. W. Shepherd, of Muncey, chairman of the district, at 2 p. m. On Monday evening Rev. Jas. Graham, of Ridgetown, ex-president of conference, will deliver his celebrated lecture on "Edmund Burke—a model for politicians" in the church, accompanied by a select programme of music. Amasa Wood, Esq., of St. Thomas, is expected to occupy the chair at the Monday evening entertainment. Admission, adults 25c.; children 15c.

On Monday of this week the board of license commissioners for East Kent met at the Benton House to reconsider the applications for licenses at Highgate. Those opposed to granting of licenses were represented by Mr. T. B. Shoebotham and the applicants by Mr. N. Mills. Objection was taken by Mr. Shoebotham to the reopening of the matter at this date, he contending that having once refused to grant the licenses the commissioners could not reopen or rehear the matter again without a unamimous resolution of the board and due notice to the parties interested. The objection was over-ruled, the matter reopened and we understand certificates for licenses granted to both applicants, Messrs. J. H. Leitch and J. Patterson. The question as to the regularity of Monday's proceedings by the Board will, we understand, be tested in the courts.—Standard.

Mr. Dugald M. Leitch, a prominent resident of Alvinston, died the other day. Deceased was born in Brooke, adjoining the village of Alvinston, on May 15, 1856, and has resided in that section continually from that time. After acquiring a good education he taught school for some time in Mosa, and about seven years ago started in business at Alvinston, in which he was very successful, but was compelled to retire about three years ago on account of ill health. He leaves to mourn his loss a widow and two children.

Just before evening service in the Methodist church Sunday last, and while the people were being seated, some mischievous or foolhardy person threw a stone through one of the windows, though, fortunately, not striking any person. The stone was a large one and would have inflicted a severe injury had it struck anyone. There is altogether too much of this practice indulged in by the youths of the town, and the first person caught in the act should be severely punished, as a warning to others.

Hugh Daly, formerly train despatcher on the M. C. R., died at El Paso, Texas, on Monday morning. The deceased, who was 39 years of age, had acted as train despatcher on the M.C.R. at St. Thomas for some fifteen years, and was esteemed by all his acquaintances. He leaves no family, his wife, a Hamilton lady, having died some years ago and his only son being killed in Hamilton a year ago. The remains will be buried at Hamilton on Thursday. His many friends along the line have prepared a handsome floral offering for the coffin.

We regret this week to announce the sudden death of Jas. Buchanan, which sad event took place on Monday night at his residence near Largie. Deceased had not been feeling well for some time, but was not confined to his bed, and his sudden demise was not altogether unexpected. Death was caused by paralysis of the heart. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock and was largely attended by the residents of Dutton and vicinity, deceased being well-known and widely connected throughout the township. His family have the entire sympathy of the neighborhood in their sad affliction.

It will be gratifying to our readers to know that the History of British Columbia, by Hubert Howe Bancroft, until recently sold only with the complete set of this author's works in 39 volumes, can now be obtained separately, complete in one volume. It is perhaps one of the most difficult fields in literature, to take what was so lately a vast wilderness, with only the crudest material to work with and make of it a complete and finished narrative, as Mr. Bancroft has done, interweaving with the more substantial political and industrial developments those pleasing incidents and romantic episodes connected with the wild and roving life here encountered. Mr. Bancroft's pictures, in this volume, are drawn largely from life. Visiting the country in person he came into close contact with the old retired officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, most of whom have now passed away. From their experiences he not only obtained a large mass of information which otherwise would have passed out of existence, but he was enabled to fill his work with vivid life and detail which in no other way could have been possible. Besides being a masterpiece of historical investigation, it is full of that thrilling interest which attaches to the subjugation and settlement of wild countries, which here have not their parallel in history. See advertisement in another column for agents, to whom very liberal terms are offered.

A REAL NECESSITY.—We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine, expects some day to become the owner of one. But after the mind has been fully made up to purchase one of these indispensible articles, the question arises as to what kind of a machine to buy. It should be simply constructed that the most inexperienced can successfully operate it. The other points mainly to be considered, and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work, ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension, and silence while in operation. The "Light-running New Home" fills the above requirements, and is said to combine the good points of all sewing machines with the addition of many new improvements and labor-saving devices. The price is no higher than that of other machines, and every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has indeed a treasure. See advertisement.

THE LATE PROF. PHELPS.

The above is a portrait of the late Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth College, He was a strong, able man, who stood high in the literary and scientific worlds. It is not generally known, but it is, nevertheless, the truth, that Prof. Phelps was the discoverer of what is known to the Medical Profession and Chemists universally as Paine's Celery Compound, unquestionably one of the most valuable discoveries of this century. This remarkable compound is not a nervine, an essence, a sarsaparilla or any devised article, but a discovery, and it marks a distinct step in medical practice and the treatment of nervous complications. It has been freely admitted by the best medical talent in the land, and also by the leading chemists and scientists, that for nerve troubles, nervous exhaustion, insomnia, debility, senility and even the dreaded and terrible Paresis, nothing has ever been discovered which reaches the disorder and restores health equal to this discovery of Prof. Phelps

Paine's Celery Compound is now being prepared in quantities, and can be procured at any reputable druggist. An attractive bunch of celery is to be found on every wrapper. It has become specially popular among professional men, mind workers, ladies burdened with exciting social duties and frequenters of the leading clubs.

The London Leper.

Good gracious me!" cried Smith and Jones,
" Good gracious me!" cried Brown;
" A London leper in our midst! For God's sake, hunt him down!
Our Prince, whom no one would deceive, declares this leper stands
In that great mart whence comes our meat.
That meat goes through his hands!"

The awful rumor ran the round, like wildfire fast
it spread;
Men gazed upon their steaks and chops in doubt,
dismay and dread.
With fear they eyed the tender joint; the thought perhaps it might Have come from where the leper worked destroyed their appetite.

In panic London salesmen met; the retail dealer cried,
" O find this leper butcher out—search, search on every side!
The hue and cry rang clear and shrill from east,
west, south and north,
And every day the London press in leading type held forth.

They ran the man to earth at last, and found—
O, thank the fates—
He only vended odds and ends outside the market gates;
The leper's hands were never laid on Dives' A 1 meat,
He only touched the common stuff that Lazarus must eat.

Then died the sudden panic down, the nine days
waxed and waned,
And with them ceased the sudden fame " our only leper" gained;
Society was satisfied, as soon as it felt sure
The only meat the leper touched was eaten by the poor.

Lizzie.

I wonder of all wimmin air
Like Lizzie is when we go out
To theatres an' concerts where
Is things the papers talk about.
Do other wimmin fret an' stew
Like they wuz bein' crucified—
Frettin' a show or concert through,
With wonderin' ef the baby cried?

Now Lizzie knows that gran'ma's there
To see that everything is right,
Yet Lizzie thinks that gran'ma's care
Ain't good enuff fr baby, quite;
Yet what am I to answer when
She kind uv fidgets at my side,
An' asks me every now and then:
" I wonder if the baby cried?"

Seems like she seen two little eyes
A-pinin' fr their mother's smile—
Seems like she heern the pleadin' cries
Uv one she thinks uv all the while;
An' so she's sorry that she come,
An' though she allus tries to hide
The truth, she'd ruther stay to hum
Than wonder ef the baby cried.

Yes, wimmin folks is all alike—
By Lizzie you kin jedge the rest;
There never wuz a little tyke
But that his mother loved him best,
And nex' to bein' what I be—
The husband uv my gentle bride—
I'd wisht I wuz that croodlin' wee,
With Lizzie wonderin' ef I cried.

The Temple of Fame.

Three riders set out for the Temple of Fame,
Each booted and spurred and equipped the same.
The first rode forth at a rattling pace,
Like a jockey who wins an exciting race.
The second set out with caution, slow,
That, when need was, he might faster go.
The third rode steadily, quietly on,
At a quick jog-trot he could reckon upon.

And which do you think the winner be;
The hare, the tortoise—or number three?

The first one soon broke down, of course;
He saved his saddle, but lost his horse!
The second met the regular fate—
Dallied too long, and was just too late
The third, I grieve and regret to say,
Did not get there—for he lost his way.
He thought so much of his regular trot,
To look at signboards he quite forgot.

See how strangely things befall!
Another—not thinking of Fame at all—
Who was on his way to the breadfruit tree,
To provide for a wife and children three,
Went straightway into the Temple of Fame,
And innocently asked its name!
They answered him. With a quizzical face,
He remarked, " It's a most uncomfortable place!"
Then on he went to the breadfruit tree,
And home to his wife and children three.

The moral?—Well, if you can't find it,
Write it out—for I shan't mind it!

Bargains.

He pressed a ruby on her lips, whose burning blood shone through;
Twin sapphires bound above her eyes, to match their fiery blue;
And, where her hair was parted back, an opal gem he set—
Type of her changing countenance, where all delights were met.

" Will you surrender now," he said, " the ancient grudge you keep Untiring and unuttered, like murder in the deep?"
" I thank you for the word," she said; your gems are fair of form,
But when did jewels bind the depths, or splendors still the storm?

" There is no diamond in the mine, nor pearl
beneath the wave,
There is no fretted coronet that soothes a princely grave,
There is no fate nor empire in the wide infinity,
Can stand in grace and virtue with the gift you had from me."

The Old House.

In through the porch and up the silent stair;
Little is changed, I know so well the ways—
Here, the dead came to meet me; it was there
The dream was dreamed in unforgotten days.

But who is this who hurries on before,
A flitting shade the brooding shades among?
She turned—I saw her face—O, God! it wore
The face I used to wear when I was young!

I thought my spirit and my heart were tamed
To deadness; dead the pangs that agonize,
The old grief springs to choke me—I am ashamed
Before that little ghost with eager eyes,

O, turn away, let her not see, not know!
How should she bear it, how should understand?
O, hasten down the stairway, hasten and go,
And leave her dreaming in the silent land.

The Boy in Love With His Mother.

He went up the pathway singing:
I saw the woman's eyes
Grow bright with a wordless welcome,
As sunshine warms the skies.
" Back again, sweet-heart mother,"
He cried, and bent to kiss
The loving face that was uplifted
For what some mothers miss.

That boy will do to depend on;
I hold that this is true.
From lads in love with their mothers
Our bravest heroes grew.
Earth's grandest hearts have been loving hearts
Since time and earth began;
And the boy who kisses his mother
Is every inch a man.

FIDELITY AND LOVE.

" Do you think a hundred trips to Europe would keep him from you if he knew you wanted him?" Maude asked, and Grace replied: " Perhaps not. I don't know. I only wish he were here."

This was the last of February, and after that Grace failed so fast that with the hope that it might reach him before he sailed, Maude wrote to Max, telling him to come at once, if he would see Grace before she died. She knew about how long it would take the letter to reach him and how long for him to come, allowing for no delays, and on the morning of the first day she could by any chance expect him she sent the carriage to the Canandaigua station, and then all through the hours of the long, dreary day she sat by Grace's bedside, watching with a sinking heart the pallor on her lips and brow and the look she could not mistake deepening on her face.

" What if she should die before he gets here, or what if he should not come at all?" she thought as the hours went by.

She was more afraid of the latter, and when she saw the carriage coming up the avenue she strained her eyes through the blinding snow to see if he were in it. When he came before, he had stood up and waved his hat to them, but there was no token now to tell if he were there, and she waited breathlessly until the carriage stopped before the side entrance, knowing then for sure that he had come."

" Thank God!" she cried as she went out to meet him, bursting into tears as she said to him, " I am so glad, and so will Miss Raynor be. She does not know that I wrote you. I didn't tell her for fear you wouldn't come.

She had given him her hand and he was holding it fast as she led him into the hall. She did not ask him when or where he received her letter. She only helped him off with his coat, and made him sit down by the fire while she told how rapidly Grace had failed and how little hope there was that she would recover.

" You will help her if anything can. I am going to prepare her now," she said, and, going out, she left him there alone.

He had been very sorry that he could not keep his promise at Christmas, and tried to find a few days in which to visit the Cedars between the close of the suit and his departure for England. But he could not, and his passage was taken and his luggage on the ship, which was to sail early in the morning, when about 6 o'clock in the evening Maude's letter was brought to him, changing his plans at once. Grace was dying—the woman he had loved so long, and although thousands of dollars depended upon his keeping his appointment in London, he must lose it all, and go to her. Sending for his luggage, and writing a few letters of explanation, the next morning found him on his way to the Cedars, which he reached on the day when Maude expected him.

She had left Grace asleep when she went to meet Max, but on re-entering her room found her awake and leaning on her elbow in the attitude of intense listening.

" Oh, Maude," she said, " was it a dream, or did I hear Max speaking to you in the hall? Tell me, is he here?"

" Yes, he is here. I sent for him and he came," Maude replied, while Grace fell back upon her pillow, whispering faintly: " Bring him at once."

" Come," Maud said to Max, who followed her to the sick room, where she left him alone with Grace.

He stayed by her all that night and the day following, in order to give Maude the rest she needed, but when the second night came they kept the watch together, he on one side of the bed, and she upon the other, with their eyes fixed upon the white, pinched face where the shadow of death was settling. For several hours Grace slept quietly. Then, just as the gray-daylight was beginning to show itself in the corners of the room she awoke and asked, " Where is Max?"

" Here, darling!" was his response, as he bent over her and kissed her pallid lips.

" I think it has grown cold and dark, for I can't see you," she said, groping for his hand, which she held tightly between her own as she went on: " I have been dreaming, Max—such a pleasant dream, for I was young again—young as Maude, and wore my bridal dress, just as I did that day when you said I was so pretty. Do you remember it? That was years ago—oh! so many—and I am getting old; we both are growing old. You said so in your letter. But Maude is young, and in my dream she wore the bridal dress at the last, and I saw my own grave, with you beside it and Maude, and both so sorry because I was dead. But it is better so, and I am glad to die and be at rest. If I could be what I once was, oh! how I should cling to life! For I love you so much! Oh, Max, do you know, can you guess how I have loved you all these years, and what it has cost me to give you up?"

Max's only answer was the hot tears he dropped upon her face as she went on: " You will not forget me; that I know; but sometime—yes sometime—and when it comes, remember—I was willing. I told Maude so. Where is she?"

" Here!" and Maude knelt, sobbing, by the dying woman, who went on: " She has been everything to me, Max, and I love her next to you. God bless you both! And if, in the heaven I am going to, I can watch over you, I will do it, and be often, often with you, when you think I am far away. Who was it said that? I read it long ago. But things are going from me, and Heaven is very near, and the Saviour is with me—closer, nearer than you are, Max; and the other world is just in sight, where I soon shall be, free from pain, with my poor, crippled feet all strong and well, like Maude's. Dear Maude! tell her how I loved her; tell her —."

Here her voice grew indistinct, and for a few moments she seemed to be sleeping; then suddenly opening her eyes wide, she exclaimed, as an expression of joy broke over her face: " It is here—the glory which shineth as the noonday. In another moment I shall be walking the golden streets. Good-bye, Max; good-bye."

Grace was dead, and Maude made her ready for the coffin, her tears falling like rain upon the shrivelled feet and on the waxen hands which she folded over the pulseless bosom, placing in them the flowers her mistress had loved best in life. She was to be buried in Mt. Auburn, and Maude went with the remains to Boston, as Grace had requested her to do, caring nothing because Mrs. Marshall-More hinted broadly at the impropriety of the act, wondering how she could have done it.

" She did it at Grace's request, and to please me," Max said; and that silenced the lady, who was afraid of her brother, and a little afraid of Maude, who did not seem quite the girl she had last seen in Merrivale.

" What will you do now? Go back to your teaching?" she asked, after the funeral was over.

" I shall go home to mother," Maude replied, and that afternoon she took the train for Merrivale, accompanied by Max, who was going on to New York, and thence to keep his appointment in London.

Few where the words spoken between them during the journey, and those mostly of the dead woman lying under the snow at Mt. Auburn; but when Merrivale was reached Max took the girl's hands in his own and pressed them hard as he called her a second time by her name.

" God bless you, Maude, for all you were to Grace. When I can I will write to you. Good-bye.

Only for a moment the train stopped at the station, and then it moved swiftly on, leaving Maude standing upon the platform with her mother and John, while Max resumed his seat, and, pulling his hat over his eyes, never spoke again until New York was reached. A week later and a ship of the Cunard line was plowing the ocean to the eastward, and Max Gordon was among the passengers, silent and abstracted, with a bitter sense of loneliness and pain in his heart as he thought of the living and the dead he was leaving behind—Grace, who was to have been his bride, dead in all her sweetness and beauty, and Maude, who was nothing to him but a delicious memory, alive in all her freshness and youthful bloom. He could hardly tell of which he thought the more, Grace or Maude. Both seemed ever present with him, and it was many a day before he could rid himself of the fancy that two faces were close against his own, one cold and dead, as he had seen it last, with the snowy hair about the brow and a smile of perfect peace upon the lips love to him—the other glowing with life and which had never said aught but words of girlish beauty, as it had looked at him in the gathering darkness when he stood upon the car step and waved it his good-bye.

CHAPTER X.

AT LAST.

Five years had passed since Grace was laid in her grave in Mt. Auburn, and Max was still abroad, leading that kind of Bohemian life which many Americans lead in Europe, when there is nothing to call them home. And to himself Max often said there was nothing to call him home, but as often as he said it a throb of pain belied his words, for he knew that across the sea was a face and voice he was longing to hear and and see again, a face which now visited him in his dreams quite as often as that of his dead love, and which he always saw as it had looked at him that summer afternoon in the log house among the Richland hills, with the sunlight falling upon the rings of hair and lending a warmer tint to the glowing cheeks. Delicious as was the memory of that afternoon, it had been the means of keeping Max abroad during all these years, for, in the morbid state of mind into which he had fallen after Grace's death he felt he must do penance for having allowed himself for a moment to forget her who had believed in him so fully.

" Grace trusted me, and I was false to her and will punish myself for it, even if by that means I lose all that makes life desireable," he thought; and so he stayed on and on, year after year, knowing always just where Maude was and what she was doing, for Archie kept him informed. Occasionally he wrote to her himself—pleasant, chatty letters, which had in them a great deal of Grace—his lost darling, he called her—and a little of the places he was visiting. Occasionally, too, Maude wrote to him, her letters full of Grace, with a little of her life in Merrivale, for she was with her mother now, and had been since Miss Raynor's death. A codicil to Grace's will, bequeathing her a few thousand dollars, made it unnecessary for her to earn her own livelihood. Indeed, she might have bought Spring Farm, if she had liked; but this she would not do. The money given for that must be earned by herself, paid by the book she was writing, and which, after it was finished and published, and after a few savage criticisms by some dyspeptic critics, who saw no good in it, began to be read, then to be talked about, then to sell—until finally it became the rage and was found in every bookstore and railway car and on almost every parlor table in New England, while the young authoress was spoken of " as a star which at one flight had soared to the zenith of literary fame," and this from the very pens which had at first denounced " Sunny Bank," as a milk-and-watery effort, not worth the paper on which it was written. All Mrs. Marshall-More's guests at Spring Farm read it, and Mrs. Marshall-More and Archie read it, too, and both went down to congratulate the author upon her success, the latter saying to her, as he beat his boot with his cane, and looked admiringly at her through the glasses he now wore, " I say, Maude, your prophecy came true. You told me you'd write a book which everyone would read, and which would make mother proud to say she knew you, and, by Jove, you have done it. You ought to hear her talk to some Boston people about Miss Graham, the authoress. You'd suppose you'd been her dearest friend. I wonder what Uncle Max will say. I told you you would make him your hero, and you have. I recognized him at once; but the heroine is more like Grace than you. I am going to send it to him."

And the next steamer which sailed from New York for Europe carried with it Maude's book directed to Max Gordon, who read it at one sitting in a sunny nook of the Colossem, where he spent a great part of his time. Grace was in it, and he was in it, too, he was sure, and, reading between the lines what a stranger could not read, he felt when he had finished it that in the passionate love of the heroine for the hero he heard Maude calling to him to come back to the happiness there was still for him.

" And I will go," he said. " Five years of penance have atoned for five minutes of forgetfulness, and Grace would bid me go, if she could, for she foresaw what would be, and told me she was willing."

With Max to will was to do, and among the list of passengers who sailed from Liverpool, March 20th, 18——, was the name of Maxwell Gordon, Boston, Mass.

It was the 2nd of April, and a lovely morning, with skies as blue and air as soft and warm as in the later days of May. And Spring Farm, for the season, was looking its loveliest, for Mrs. Marshall-More had lavished fabulous sums of money upon it, until she had very nearly transformed it into what she meant it should be, an English Park. She knew that Maude had once expressed her intention to buy it back some day, but this she was sure she could never do, and if she could, Max would never sell it, and if he would she would never let him. So, with all these nevers to reassure her, she went on year after year improving and beautifying the place until it was worth far more than when it came into her hands, and she was contemplating still greater improvements during the coming summer when Max suddenly walked in upon her, and announced his intention of going to Merrivale the next day.

" But where will you stay? Both houses are closed—only the one at Spring Farm has in it an old couple—Mr. and Mrs. Martin—who look after it in the winter," she said, and Max replied, " I will stay at Spring Farm with the Martins. I want to see the place." And the next day found him there, occupying the room which, by a little skilful questioning of Mrs. Martin, he learned had been Maude's when her father owned the farm.

Miss Graham was home, she said, and at once launched out into praises of the young authoress of whom Merrivale was so proud.

" And to think," she said, " that she was born here in this very house! It seems so queer."

" And is the house more honored now than went she was simple Maude Graham?" Max asked; and the old lady replied, " To be sure it is. Any house can have a baby born in it, but not every one an authoress!" and with that she bustled off to see about supper for her guest.

Max was up early the next morning, wondering how soon it would be proper for him to call upon Maude. He had no thought that she would come to him, and was somewhat surprised when just after breakfast her card was brought by Mrs. Martin, who said she was in the parlor. Maude had heard of his arrival from Mr. Martin, who had stopped at the cottage the previous night on his way to the village.

" Mr. Gordon in town! I supposed he was in Europe!" she exclaimed, feeling herself grow hot and cold and faint as she thought of Max Gordon being so near to her.

That very afternoon she had received the first check from her publisher, and been delighted with the amount, so much more than she had expected. There was enough to buy Spring Farm, if Max did not ask too much, and she resolved to write to him at once and ask his price. But that was not necessary now, for he was here and she should see him face to face, and the next morning she started for Spring Farm immediately after their breakfast, which was never served very early.

" Will he find me greatly changed, I wonder," she thought, as she sat waiting for him, her heart beating so rapidly that she could scarcely speak when at last he came and stood before her, the same man she had parted from five years before save that he seemed a little older, with a look of weariness in his eyes.

But that lifted the moment they rested upon her.

" Oh, Maude," was all he could say as he held her hands in his and looked into the face he had seen so often in his dreams, though never as beautiful as it was now. " Maude," he began at last, " I cannot tell you how glad I am to see you again, or how glad I am for your success. I read the book in Rome. Archie sent it to me, and I have come to congratulate you."

He was talking so fast and pressing her hands so hard that he almost took her breath away. But she released herself from him, determining to have the business off her mind as soon as possible, and began abruptly:

" I was surprised to hear of your arrival, and glad, too, as it saves me the trouble of writing you. I can buy Spring Farm now. You know you promised to keep it for me. What is your price?"

" How much can you give?" Max asked; and without stopping to consider the strangeness of the question, Maude told him frankly the size of the check she had received, and asked if it were enough.

" No, Maude," Max said, and over the face looking so anxiously at him there fell a cloud of disappointment as Maude replied, " Is it much more you ask?"

" Yes, a great deal more," and Max seated himself beside her upon the sofa, for she was now sitting down; " but I think you can arrange it. Don't look so sorry. It is you I want, not your money. Will you give me yourself in return for Spring Farm?"

He had her hands again, but she drew them from him, and, covering her face with them, began to cry, while he went on:

" Five years is a long time to wait for one we love, and I have waited that length of time, with thoughts of you in my heart, almost as much as thoughts of Grace, whom I loved dearly while she lived. But she is dead, and could she speak she would bid you grant me the happiness I have been denied so many years. I think she knew it would come some day. I am sure she did, and she told me she was willing. I did not mean to ask you quite so soon, but the sight of you, so beautiful and sweet, and the belief that you care for me as I care for you, has made me forget all the proprieties, and I cannot recall my words, so I ask you again to be my wife, to give yourself as the price of Spring Farm, which shall be your home as long as you choose to make it so. Will you Maude? I have come thousands of miles for your answer, which must not be no."

What else he said, or what she said, it is unnecessary for the reader to know; only this, that when the two walked back to the cottage, Maude said to her mother, " I am to marry Mr. Gordon in June, and you will spend the summer in our old home, and John will go to college in the fall."

It was very bad taste in Max to select the 20th of June for his wedding-day, and she should suppose he would remember 20 years ago when Grace Raynor was to have been his bride, Mrs. Marshall-More said to Archie, when commenting upon her brother's approaching marriage, which did not altogether please her. She would far rather that he should remain single, for Archie's sake and her own. And still it was some comfort that she was to have for her sister one so famous as Maude was getting to be. So she went up to Merrivale early in June and opened her own house, and patronized Maude and Mrs. Graham, and made many suggestions with regard to the wedding, which she would have had very fine and elaborate had they allowed it. But Maude's perference was for a quiet affair with only a few of her more intimate friends present. And she had her way. Archie was there, of course, and made himself master of ceremonies. He had received the news of Maude's engagement with a keener pang of regret than he had thought it possible for him to feel, and suddenly woke up to a consciousness that he had always had a greater liking for Maude than he supposed. But it was too late now, and casting his regrets to the winds he made the best of it, and was apparently the gayest of all the guests who, on the morning of the 20th of June assembled in Mrs. Graham's parlor, where Max and Maude were made one.

Aunt Maude, Archie called her, as he kissed her two or three times and asked if she remembered the time she cried on the neck of the brown ox, and declared her hatred of Max and all relations.

" But I did not know him then; did I, Maux?" Maude said; and the bright face lifted to her husband told that she was far from hating him now.

There was a short trip to the west, and a flying visit to Richland and the Cedars, so fraught with memories of the past and of Grace, whose grave on the wedding-day had been one mass of flowers which Max had ordered put there. " Her wedding-garment," he said to Maude, to whom he told what he had done. " She seems very near to me now, and I am sure she is glad."

* * * * *

It was a lovely July day, when Max and Maude returned from their bridal journey and took possession of the old home at Spring Farm, where Mrs. Graham met them with a very different expression upon her face from what it wore when we first saw her there years ago. The place was hers again, to enjoy as long as she lived; and if it had been beautiful when she left it, she found it far more so now, for Mrs. Marshall-More's improvements, for which Max's money had paid, were mostly in good taste, and never had the grounds looked better than when Max and Maude drove into them on this July afternoon. Although a little past their prime there were roses everywhere, and the grassy walks, which Mrs. Marshall-More had substituted in place of gravel, where freshly cut, and smooth and soft as velvet, while the old-fashioned flowers Maude loved so well were filling the air with their perfume and the birds in the maple tree seemed carolling a welcome to the bride, so full were they of song.

And here we shall leave her, happy in her old home and in her husband's love, which is more to her than all the world beside. Whether she will ever write another book we do not know. Probably she will, for where the brain seeds have taken root it is hard to dislodge them, and Maude oftens hears around her the voices of new ideal friends, to whom she may sometime be compelled to give shape and name, as she did to the friends of her childhood.

THE END.

How to Change the Color of Canary Birds

The following is from the proceedings of the Berlin Physiological Society: Starting with the observed fact that canaries fed with Cayenne pepper acquire a ruddy plumage, Dr. Sauermann has based upon it a scientific investigation of canaries, fowls, pigeons, and other birds. From these he has obtained the following results. Feeding with pepper only produces an effect when given to young birds before they moult; the color of the feathers of older birds cannot be affected. Moisture facilitates the change of color to a ruddy hue, which is again discharged under the influence of sunlight and cold. A portion of the constituents of Cayenne pepper is quite inactive as, for instance, piperin and several extractives, similarly the red coloring matter alone of the pepper has no effect on the color of the feathers. It is rather the triolein, which occurs in the pepper in large quantities, together with the characteristic pigment, which brings about the change of color by holding the red pigment of the pepper in solution. Glycerine may be used instead of triolein to bring about the same result. The same statement holds good with regard to the feeding of birds with aniline colors. The red pigment of the pepper is also stored in the egg yolk as well as in the feathers. The first appearance of the pigment in the yolk may be observed as a colored ring four days after the commencement of feeding with the pigment dissolved in fat; after a further two days' feeding the whole yolk is colored. Dr. Sauermann is still engaged in carrying on his researches.

Dr. Wm. H. Thompson, of the city of New York, says: " More adults are carried off in this country by chronic kidney disease than by any other one malady except consumption." CHOLERA INFANTUM.

The Bread Disease May be Prevented and Cured by Proper Treatment.

IMPROPER FOOD ITS PRIME CAUSE.

The "Mechanical Process" Practised by One of New York's Leading Physicians.

"With proper treatment and care taken in time, there is no reason why the most severe case of cholera infantum or summer complaint in young children should not be speedily and effectively cured."

This statement was made by a prominent physician of this city, who is at the head of the department of children's diseases in one of New York's largest medical institutions, to a reporter of the Evening World.

For ten years in charge of the children's department of the largest dispensary in town, and later as an instructor and professor, he has made the subject a profound study, and an account of some of the results of his wide experience and research, which he gave to the reporter, are as full of interest to the public as to the medical profession, in which he is regarded as an authority in his specialty.

As every one knows, cholera infantum is the source of great mortality among children, greater even than from all other causes combined, especially in the large cities. Unless the disease can be arrested by medicinal treatment before it has reached a certain stage, children attacked by it were generally given up as hopeless cases. Nothing could save them, it was said.

This is the result of failing to treat the disease in the right manner, and of erroneous views that have prevailed as to its immediate cause. It has commonly been supposed that because the greatest mortality from the disease occurred during the hot months of July and August the prostrating effect of the heat upon the feeble infants was the direct cause. For that reason they have been wrapped in red flannel bandages and dosed with medicines until it is a wonder that any of them ever got well. This theory, however, has been pretty thoroughly exploded by the authority which has been quoted.

By a series of elaborate charts, showing the variations in temperature for the summer months for a period of ten years from 1878 to 1888 compared with the death rate from cholera infantum compiled by himself from the records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics for the same period, he proves that while the death rate follows the temperature to a large extent it has frequently been much larger than the average in very cool seasons, and, vice versa, in the hottest weather a lower death rate is found.

The heat is, therefore, only an indirect cause of the disease. The real cause is the decomposition in the child's stomach of the food which it is given, the great majority of the victims being brought up on the bottle.

Scientists know that milk will absorb germs and bacteria floating in the air much more readily than water, and that by the time milk reaches the city and is given to the babies it is filled with these destructive germs of disease.

That is what causes all the trouble. The entire digestive apparatus gets out of order. Food remains in the stomach sometimes for days without being digested, and whatever is given to the child to nourish it only aggravates the trouble. Drugs are given to kill these germs, but it takes more medicine to destroy them than it does to kill the child, and as for chalk mixtures bacteria enjoy no better diet. They grow and flourish on it.

What, then, is the remedy for what has formerly, in nine cases out of ten, proved a fatal disease?

It is what the professor calls the mechanical treatment. He simply washes out the children's stomachs with lukewarm water, which at once gets rid of the cause of the illness by removing the decomposed and indigestible matter.

It is a sort of laundrying process that is simple but effective, as the result of a single year's experience at the clinic will show. Of nearly five hundred cases treated during the last year and a half by this method only three deaths occurred, and since the beginning of the hot season this year in not a single case has it been unsuccessful.

Children have been brought to the clinic in the very last stages of the disease, where the eyes were fixed and glassy, the nose pinched, the face drawn, and every indication of the near approach of coma. After the brain is affected and coma is complete there is no way of saving life.

The most remarkable thing about the treatment is that as soon as the washing begins the child at once revives, and when it is over in falls into a natural sleep, and then it is only a question of proper care when it will completely recover.

The process is applied on the syphon principle. The apparatus consists of a metal receptacle for the warm water, with a graduated glass tube in front, showing how much water it contains, and a long rubber tube attached to the lower side. In the end of the rubber tube is inserted a short glass tube, with a stop-cock that works by pressure of the thumb in one end. To the other end is attached a soft, velvet-eye rubber catheter, which forms the termination of the tube.

The catheter is passed easily down the throat of the child to the stomach, when the stop-cock is pressed and the warm water from the receptable above flows through until the stomach is full. Then the tube is detached and the outer end held down, when the water will flow in the opposite direction.

The operation has been performed for many years as a remedy for dyspepsia, but not until a comparatively recent date for cholera infantum, especially in this country. Prof. Epstein, of Prague, Austria, was the first to recommend it, in 1880.

For the past few years the disinfection of the stomach and intestines and their contents has been attempted by means of drugs. Naphtholin, benzoate and salicylate of soda have been tried and recommended. All of these remedies may be well enough, but they often fail, if they are retained, which generally does not occur as long as nausea is present.

These drugs do not check the vomiting. They can only destroy a very small portion of the germs of decomposition, as they are hardly strong enough and as they only reach the lower pyloric end of the stomach; while the germs and the tyrotoxicon may adhere in safety to the upper and lateral walls of the organ without ever coming in contact with the antiseptics sent after them.

It is very different with stomach washing. The whole stomach is filled with warm water; the latter is churned and splashed all over its walls by the movements of the child (if necessary brought about by shaking the baby), and every particle of obnoxious material, whether solid or fluid, whether microbe or chemical poison, is immediately drowned in the fluid and within a few seconds carried out of the body, where it can do no more harm. Vomiting and nausea have ceased once and for all.

The Professor, however, is a firm believer in preventive measures, and thinks that the real way to diminish the terrible mortality among the children from this cause is by the spread of information among the parents as to the hygienic treatment of the children and the preparation of their food.

Cleanliness, of course, comes first. Bottle-fed babies should never be given cow's milk without previously preparing it. The germs that it contains are the chief cause of the disease. There is a process called sterilizing milk, which is nothing more nor less than boiling it and then keeping it air-tight. Boiling will destroy all the germs.

Among ignorant people not even the boiling of the milk is thought of by the mother, but the child is permitted to drink the milk just as it comes from the can.

Children are also given all sorts of things which are not good for them by ignorant parents, which will contribute to bring on summer complaint, but the milk difficulty is the chief one.

A curious fact has been brought out by the charts and tables, already mentioned, prepared by the professor, which he used in his demonstrations in the clinic. It is that warm weather (not hot), either dry or moist, showing a minimum daily temperature of not less than 60 degrees F., brings on the epidemic appearance of cholera infantum invariably in every year, irrespective of the height of the maximum temperature, as in the latter part of June of nearly every year.

Again, summer complaint loses its epidemic character as soon as the maximum daily temperature remains below 60 degrees F., as in the latter half of October of nearly every year.

It has been ascertained by chemists and analysts that it requires a continuous temperature of at least 60 degrees F. to produce germs and bacteria in cow's milk and to develop organisms of decomposition.

Here is the real explanation of the apparent effect of hot weaher upon children in developing summer complaint. The heat is really responsible for the disease, but only indirectly, in affecting the only food which very young children and infants can take. Nothing could be plainer or simpler than this.

Another very curious fact is that in the mortality tables prepared the death rate from cholera infantum in New York city has for every year been shown to be just twice as great in July as in August.

Not long ago when this fact was placed before a large body of medical men, it excited a great deal of surprise, for every one supposed that the disease was more prevalent in August than in July, as the weather then was usually more oppressive.

Even Dr. John T. Nagle, Register of Vital Statistics, was under the impression that this was the case until he was shown the figures which had been compiled from the records of his own office. No one could explain why this should be so, though several very profound opinions were advanced by members of the profession present.

When it was suggested by the compiler of the figures that so many children died in July that there were not enough left to keep up the same death rate in August, several of the scientists present recalled the time-honored chestnut about Columbus and the egg.—N.Y. World.

"Lady-Bug, Lady-Bug."

Those people in this vicinity who are in any way interested in the cultivation of flowers or fruit, and who, to protect the same, are in the habit of destroying that little member of the entomological family known as the lady-bug, vedolia cardinalis, make a serious mistake. This gaily decorated little insect is one of man's best friends in that its sole mission is to destroy a destroyer. The little green lice that have been such a pest to vegetation this year that have prevented thousands of bushels of wheat from ripening, that have infested the rose bush and the apple tree, the tender house plant and the sturdy oak, is the lady-bug's special prey. This little insect has become so valuable to the horticulturists of California in consuming the cottony cushion scale that they have gone to cultivating them. One man in Los Angeles covered five of his orange trees suffering from the scale with tents, and turned in among them some 7,000 lady-bugs that he had obtained from the lady-bug breeding grounds. The effect was almost magical. The scales disappeared like frost under a warm spring sun. Horticulturists in the Ohio Valley have not hitherto appreciated the services of the little summer visitor.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

The "Reference Handbood of the Medical Science," speaking of kidney diseases, says: "Often symptons on the part of other organs, palpitation, dyspepsia, difficult breathing, headaches, or weak vision first impel the patient to seek advice." The symptons mislead both the physician and patient. The only safe method of treatment is a faithful use of Warner's Safe Cure. It not only secures healthy action of the kidneys, but cures the symptons of disease.

LADY DOCTORS IN INDIA.

Their Great Value Now Fully Appreciated by Natives.

In India lady doctors are now familiar to us, and although at first they may have been somewhat ridiculed by those who could not appreciate their value, they are fast making their presence felt for good in almost every corner of the land. So far as the native women of the country are concerned it is gratifying to note that their success in all branches of college education is progressing to the entire satisfaction of their professors. Not only have they proved themselves to be generally well fitted for the arduous duties attendant on medical studies, but they have in some cases succeeded beyond all ordinary expectation. Bombay, Madras, the North-west Provinces and the Punjaub all return flattering reports on the subject, and when we say that a class of female students can average over 700 marks out of 1,000 in a surgical examination, as we hear has recently been the case, little can be said against their power or skill or aptitude for gaining knowledge in one of the most important branches in the medical profession. Indeed, it appears not unlikely that women in India may prove themselves by no means inferior to men in most branches of the practice of medicine, if the progress made by native females in hospital work may be taken as a criterion. In many cases they have proven themselves superior to the male students in college examinations, and in no way behind them in application, power of reasoning and resource. The fact that much of their success is due to the great interest taken in their studies by their lecturers and professors is not without a certain special significance.—Englishman's Overland Mail.

The Canal of Joseph.

How many of the engineering works of the nineteenth century, remarks Engineering, will there be in existence in the year 6000? Very few, we fear, and still less those that will continue in the far-off age to serve a useful purpose. Yet there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer which during the space of four thousand years has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends to-day. We refer to the Bahr Joussuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the years of his prosperous rule. This canal took its rise from the Nile at Asiut, and ran nearly parallel with it for nearly 250 miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained an eminence, as compared with the river bed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends.

Novelties in Parisian Sunshades.

Some of the Paris parasols are startling in the novelty of their styles. One is of white feathers with plumes half a yard long. Another is made of buttercups, the flowers appearing to climb upward from the edge toward the ferule. The designs upon some of them are of the eccentric order, consisting of what looks like forked lightning, or Catharine wheels, or the trees in Dore's illustrations of Dante's poems.

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP.

Something About Archbishop Lynch's Successor.

The Right Rev. John Walsh, Bishop of London, who has been elected Archbishop of Toronto in place of the late Archbishop Lynch, was born in the parish of Mooncoin, county Kilkenny, on the 24th of May, 1830. From an early age he felt a great desire to enter the ministry. Accordingly, after having completed an extensive preliminary course of science and classics, he entered St. John's College, Waterford, where he studied philosophy and a portion of his theology with success and distinction. In the fall of 1852 Bishop Walsh carried out his intention of serving God on a foreign mission and left home and friends and native land. Arriving in Canada he entered the Seminary of St. Sulpice, Montreal, and, together with the late Father Synnott, Father Hobin, of Toronto, and several other ecclesiastics of Irish birth, finished his divinity course with credit to himself and satisfaction to his superiors.

He received tonsure at the hands of Archbishop Baillargeon, who also consecrated him bishop. On the first of November, 1854, he was ordained priest by Bishop de Charbonnel. Brock was his first mission, in which he spent nearly two years. In 1857 he was appointed to the pastoral charge of St. Mary's parish. For a short time he discharged the same duty at St. Paul's. After the consecration of Bishop Lynch he was appointed rector of the cathedral, and was again reinstated as pastor of St. Mary's, where he remained until November, 1867, when he surrendered up his charge to enter upon his retreat for consecration.

Father Walsh enjoyed the reputation among the clergy of being a sound and deeply-read theologian, well versed in the sacred Scriptures and canon law, and an eloquent speaker. He was consecrated Bishop of Sandwich in St. Michael's Cathedral on the 10th of November, 1867, and was installed in the cathedral of Sandwich four days later. In January, 1868, Bishop Walsh, by consent of the Holy See, removed the Episcopal residence to London, and since the following year has maintained the title of Bishop of London. Bishop Walsh visited Rome in 1876, and since that time has quietly superintended his charge.

HICCOUGHS AND SPASMS.

Means by Which Two Unpleasant Things Can be Stopped.

As a cure for hiccoughs a correspondent of the New York Medical Record writes: "Drinking water, as slowly as it can be possibly swallowed, for ten or fifteen minutes continuously, seldom fails to relieve the paroxysms in the otherwise healthy person. In a recent severe case of pneumonia in an adult alarming symptons of prostration, with a feeble irregular pulse and almost constant hiccough, on the seventh day yielded to two subcutaneous injections of one fourth grain of morphine and one one hundred and fiftieth grain of atropine, at an interval of 12 hours, after ammonia, whiskey and digitalis had been faithfully given for 48 hours without avail."

Dr. Amos Sawyer of Hillsborough, Illinois, writes: "In two cases where every other remedy has been tried, including the continuous electrical current, without avail, the administration of a fresh infusion of pæonia root—I presume that the fluid extract would answer the same purpose—given every two hours, afforded relief in eight and twelve hours respectively. That this remedy possesses anti-spasmodic properties the above-named cases seem to indicate, but from one or two instances we cannot safely infer the whole, and further trial will be necessary before its value in this complication can be established."

Whetting the Divorce Shears.

A Wednesday's Chicago despatch says: It has been the practice of the courts here to hold that an applicant for divorce must be a resident of this State and must appear in person. Both these requirements were waived to-day in the case of Mary Gottschalk, a resident of Pennsylvania. She was never in Chicago, and on her affidavit that her husband had deserted her for two years, during which time he had lived in Chicago. She was granted a divorce. Her attorney secured this result by fishing up a former forgotten decision by the State Superior court rendered twenty years ago, in which the court held that in the contemplation of the law the residence of the wife follows that of the husband, and desertion for the period of two years by the husband residing in the State, although commenced in a foreign jurisdiction will enable a wife to obtain a divorce.

Speed of Thought.

It takes about two-fifths of a second to call to mind a country in which a well-known town is situated, or the language in which a familiar author wrote, says the New York Commercial. We can think of the name of the next month in half the time we need to think of the name of the last month. It takes on the average one-third of a second to add numbers consisting of one digit, and half a second to multiply them. A letter can be seen more quickly than a word, but we are so used to reading aloud that the process has become automatic, and a word can be read with greater ease and in less time than a letter can be named. Mental processes, however, take place more slowly in children, in the aged and in the uneducated.

COMMON SENSE IN DIET.

You May Survive Youthful Gorging, but Beware in Your Old Age.

There is in human nature infinite diversity of power and endurance in the general and nervous energy, and in digestion and assimilation; and a man of high-strung nervous temperament, hearing a temperance orator describing the effects of alcohol, might cap it all by similar effects of tea, "the cup that cheers and not inebriates." Even the faculty seldom appear to recognize the injurious results of this refreshing beverage. The poet Cowper seems to have been its slave and victim. Coleridge abused its use and took to laudanum. The "English Opium-eater," well describes its bad result. The Chinese as a nation are tea-drinkers and addicted to the other subtle drug. The alternation of excitement and depression in the votaries of tea is evidence of its unsuitability for many people as a stimulant. Melancholia and religious mania are often to be traced to its habitual use. The question of the use of any kind of food, stimulating or otherwise, is entirely personal. To say that because one man is injured by excess another man should perfectly abstain is most absurd. Probably more men are injured by excessive eating than by excess in alcohol; and are we therefore bound, for the encouragement and aid of those who need conversion from excess, to cease to eat at all of things well flavored? To say that those who are not injured should abstain is but to make a law without the due preamble. Men vary, not from one another only, but they differ from themselves in different circumstances and at various periods of life. There is no absolute rule, respecting any food or drink, for all men; one man is not to be controlled by other men in his entirely and strictly personal affairs, but each man is to be "fully persuaded in his own mind." Each mind, however, should be open to persuasion; and persuasion in the question of habitual food should be distinctly of an experimental sort. Each man is provided with intelligence for his own preservation; but the pity is that men neglect this precious gift of individual mind in their peculiar concerns. They do as others do. They eat and drink with freedom, while they are so young and active that the system overcomes the injurious attack; but as men advance a little further into life, and are not quite so agile, then begin the troubles that tea, coffee, alcohol and many kinds of even simple food and stimulants and condiments inflict upon the careless and the inconsiderate, as well as on the intemperate and immoderate consumer. Each man should discover for himself what, and how much, and when to eat and drink, at several periods, and in the varied conditions of his life; his organism must be recognized by its possessor as a healthy, life-long study and a happy care. —Quarterly Review.

Sheep Killing Dogs a Great Hindrance to Agricultural Progress.

BY D. NICOL.

To account for the present depressed state of agriculture in Ontario, there are some causes for which the farmers have no remedies within their power. They cannot make the rains come just when most needed, neither can they avert a deluge; but that this very serious hindrance to the progress of agriculture has been so long endured is almost entirely the fault of the farmers themselves. There are comparatively few farmers in Ontario who have not in some measure suffered loss by other people's dogs.

Mr. Dryden, in his article on sheep, in the last number of the Farmer's Advocate, speaks of a large area of country north and east of Kingston as being remarkably suited for sheep husbandry, and wonders what is the reason that so few sheep are raised there. I know that part of the country and what its capabilities are. I also know the people, and somewhat how most of them are circumstanced. In many cases there may be, as Mr. Dryden supposes, a deplorable lack of enterprise; but the majority of the most enterprising farmers of that country are quite well aware that sheep-raising would be the most profitable business they could engage on their farms were it not for the fact that it is unsafe. If Mr. Dryden were to ask each individual farmer in the districts mentioned, "Why do you not raise sheep?" I venture to say that in nine cases out of ten the reply would be, "Because of sheep-killing dogs."

Two years ago an enterprising young farmer, who was desirous of investing his capital exclusively to sheep-raising in the county of Frontenac, with a view of being convenient to the American market, asked my advice on the matter. I told him that unless protection from dogs could be obtained he would find it an unsafe speculation, and the many ravages on flocks since that time more than justified the conclusion. Three weeks ago one flock of Southdowns was one night left out of the fold. The result was six sheep killed and several others badly worried. Since then four other flocks in this neighborhood have been attacked, and a great deal of damage done. In only one instance has the sufferer been able to collect anything for damages. In another instance the guilty dog was discovered, but as the dog was the owner's only personal property, remuneration was simply out of the question.

Frontenac County is not by any means an exception in regard to this evil. All the counties to the east, and many to the west of us are infested, and suffer nearly equal from the same cause.

Now, this is an evil which the farmers can, if they wish, have remedied by legislative enactment; the more easily, because there can be no ground for introducing party politics into the question. The Ontario farmers are very nearly united in opinion regarding the threatened Jesuit aggression. Will they not unite to dispell this existing torment, which can be done without making any one the worse off? I do not mean that every dog in the Province should at once be killed, for it may be that in some instances dogs are of some use, although I am not aware of any such. I know that the butchers and drovers are now generally agreed that dogs for their purposes do more harm than good, because of the difficulty of getting assistants who can prevent the dogs from harassing and annoying the animals being driven.

I would not try to deprive the city lady of the pleasure of leading around with a string her blanketed little pure-bred poodle. Sheep raisers have no need to fear that class of dogs. The great majority of dogs kept in Canadian cities, towns and villages are despicable mongrels, large enough to worry sheep, and are utterly worthless for any good purpose. They lie around home during the day time, and prowl around the country during the night. They are now more to be dreaded than formerly was the wolf, the lynx or the bear. On many farms, dogs of this class are kept, and although they are seldom known to attack their owner's sheep, they will travel many miles to get a favorable opportunity on some other farm, and should be dealt with as wild animals.

Every farmer is now required to take care of his bulls, boars, and rams, and to see that they do not injure or destroy their neighbor's property, or in any way hinder their neighbors' progress in their chosen husbandry, yet in some districts if they were altogether allowed their own freedom, the evil would not be so great as that of dogs under the existing laws. It is hardly probable that every farmer in Ontario would engage in sheep husbandry even if they were protected from the ravages of depredating dogs; but many whose farms are better adapted for sheep-raising than for anything else, would then be enabled to make a livlihood. It is very unfair that they should be prevented from making the best of their farms by others who have no interest in such matters.

It is contrary to the golden rule:—"Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you." It is high time for the Government to amend the laws regarding dogs. At farmers' institute meetings many subjects of far less importance have been freely discussed; therefore I would recommend the following text for deliberate consideration at every Farmers' Institute meeting to be held next fall and winter throughout the Province:—

"Would legislative enactment requiring every dog owner to take care that his dog or dogs do not kill or injure his neighbors' sheep, be for the best interests of the farming community?"

If the tax on dogs were made compulsory, it would mitigate the evil in some degree, but it would not by any means be an efficient remedy.

Every dog should be chained, kenneled or otherwise confined during the night time, and every unmuzzled dog found at any time away from his home, not in charge of some person, should be taken dead or alive, and the owner prosecuted for allowing his dog or dogs to go at large. This would be on the principal of equal rights. It is the law in all large cities in Europe. It is a law that can be justly demanded by the sheep raisers of Ontario.

Clean Milk.

When we look upon the beautiful whiteness of milk we are led to believe it is absolutely clean. It seems so natural to believe that anything so white and pure-looking must be clean. When we remember, however, that water that seems perfectly clear and sparkling to the naked eye may contain the worst impurities, we are prepared to hear and understand that apparently clean white milk may be impure. We recently had exhibited to us the residum cleaned out of apparently pure milk by an ingenious system of centrifugal cleansing employed by one of our condensed milk companies. This residum consists of blood, putrescent matter, hair, dust and other impurities taken from the bottom of one of these centrifugal cleansers. The question suggests itself, may not the continued use of milk containing such impurities be the source of typhoid and other fevers just as much as impure water? And if this is so, why should not the same prophylactic care be exercised in cleansing milk as in distilling water? Here is a fresh opportunity for microscopical and bacteriological investigation, to which we shall again refer.—American Anatyco.

WEEDS.

In any given locality, new weeds, like new insect pests, are from time to time making their appearance. Were the farmers to recognize these vegetable foes, and realize their possible troublesomeness, they would spare no pains to check their progress at the start. In most cases noxious weeds can be easily kept out if the effort is made before they get well established.

The methods of introduction are various. The thistle, milk-weed, fleabane and dandelion are wind-distributed. In seed oats it is hard to detect the grains of their wild congeners that may be present. Bugloss, ragweed and sorrel occupy waysides and waste corners, and therefrom make excursions into the grain fields and meadows. Some weeds, like the clot-bur, follow the courses of streams or ditches, and that, as well as the burdock, stickseed and common bur, gets a ride to many a station on a sheep's back. But the most common method of introduction is sowing along with grass seed and clover. In this manner many a field has been stocked with false flax, wild mustard, wheat-thief or ox-eye daisy.

As a rule these weeds are exhaustive of the fertility of the soil. Some of them, when thick, impoverishing it as much as a crop of grain. In this respect the thistle, troublesome as it is, is far from being the worst offender.

CHOW-CHOW.

Milburn's Aromatic Quinine Wine is distinctly superior to any other as an appetising tonic and fortifier.

The potato is said to be deteriorating, but it made made many a mash in its better days.

As a healing, soothing application for cuts, wounds, bruises and sores, there is nothing better than Victoria Carbolic Salve.

New Yorkers devour a million quarts of ice cream on a Sunday. They remember the Sabbath day to keep it coldly.

Help Wanted.

BY all who suffer from dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, jaundice, liver complaint, rheumatism, dropsy, etc. Lose no time in procuring Burdock Blood Bitters, nature's regulator and tonic. It is prompt and permanent cure for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys, bowels and stomach.

In the opinion of Mr. Edison, a man could be carbonized by 1,500 horse power of electrical energy. The body would not be burned, its temperature would rise three or four degrees, and it would be mummified in time. A row of criminals turned into mummies, and laid away on a shelf, would be viewed with interest by future generations. Such an exhibition would put Madame Tussaud's nose quite out of joint.

An Old Favorite

THAT has been popular with the people thirty years is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for all varieties of summer complaints of children or adults. It seldom if ever fails to cure cholera morbus, diarrhœa and dysentery.

It is a pity that people do not know who invented the hand-organ. Many modern sufferers would like to erect a high monument over that man's grave, making sure to keep him down, so as to [illegible]

Others.

Excels a[ll] [illegible] Bitters for constipation and loss of appetite. I used one bottle of BurdockBlo[od] and it cured me. I would not be without it at six times the price, for it excels all others. William Walton, Galt, Ont.

Regulate the liver and bowels by the judicious use of National Pills, they are purely vegetable.

"Oh, will he bite?" exclaimed one of St. Louis' sweetest girls with a look of alarm when she saw the Italian with one of his dancing bears on the street lately. "No," said her escort, "he cannot bite; he is muzzled; he can only hug." "Oh," said the angel with a distracting smile, "I don't mind that a bit."

On the Increase.

SO increasingly prevalent have scrofulous diseases become thatwe call the attention of our readers to the best blood purifier and alterative known, viz., Burdock Blood Bitters, which unlocks all clogged secretions and removes all blood diseases from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

The little housekeeper.—"Why my dear child, what is $3,000 a year. It wouldn't more than pay for your breakfasts and lunches. The engagement is out of the question." "Well, I am sure mother, that is enough. I never care for more than two meals a day, and if we are particularly hungry we can dine with our friends."

If you wish long life keep your Stomach and Bowels regular. Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters will do it. Safe. A baby may take them. Try one bottle, 50 cents, all druggists.

THE FAMILY EDUCATOR.—Webster's Unabridged Dictionary is a great family educator, and no family of children ought to be brought up without having ready access to this grand volume. It will answer hundreds of questions of each wide-awake chid. It is an ever-present and reliable schoolmaster to the whole family.

Your druggist is authorized to refund you the money if Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters do not benefit any case of Dyspepsia, Kidney or Liver Complaint. All Druggists. 50 cents.

Mrs. Harpy.—How did you manage to acquire such a fortune from that little pamphlet, "How to Make Dynamite?" Mr. Sharpy—I used to offer the book, then pull out a foot section of two-inch gas pipe loaded with paper and a rope in one end for a fuse, and tell them that was how a bomb looked when finished. Everybody thought it was genuine and subscribed to get rid of me.

A Baby in Danger.

MY baby was taken very bad with diarrhœa, nothing did any good until I tried Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I am certain nothing equals it, and could not do without it in time of summer complaints and diarrhœa. Mrs. A. L. Buie Shell River, Man.

A Two-Edged Son.—Young Widow (with over-grown son)—Manley, my dear, filial affection is, without a doubt, a most admirable quality, but while here you must manage to be seen with me as little as possible, or you will ruin both of us. These people will either imagine you are my husband, which means ruin for you, or they will learn that you are my son, which means ruin for me.

Mystic Words.

I can recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for chronic diarrhœa, as I have used it for two years and can get nothing else that helps me like it. Jane Taylor, Mystic, P. Q. This medicine cures all summer complaints.

Grounds for a horrible suspicion.—He—And you are sure that I'm the first and only man who ever kissed you? She—Of course I am sure. You do not doubt my word, do you? He—Of course I do not doubt you, my darling. I love you too badly, too devotedly for that. But why, oh, why did you reach for the reins the very instant I ventured to put one arm around you if you had never been there before.

Bordering on the Miraculous—Mr. W. A. Sherwood, of Stanwood, Michigan, was a sufferer from Kidney Complaints for four years, he was totally unfit for work, tried all the local doctors, took "cures" by the dozen, two bottles of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters made a new man of him,

'Tis wrong to cheat the baker out of his honest dues,
'Tis worse to cheat the cobbler who mends
your boots and shoes,
There may be pardon for the wretch who steals your wood and coal;
But the man who cheats the printer will most surely lose his soul.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

CORRESPONDENCE.

Civic Holiday.

Editor of the ENTERPRISE:

Why cannot our citizens make arrangements for a civic holiday for some time in August and run an excursion to Detroit or some other western point? If a cheap trip could be arranged for some near date there would be no trouble whatever in getting a large crowd to go. Somebody should make a start in that direction at once.

WEARY ONE.

Our Train Service.

Editor of the ENTERPRISE:

Dear Sir,—I think it is about time something was done in regard to the miserable train accommodation furnished us by the M. C. R. There are really only two passenger trains each way per day which Dutton people can avail themselves of, and it gives no chance to do business in other places and make proper connections at all. The company might at least stop one more train each way per day and the benefit to commercial men and others would be immense. The two most suitable for us would be the Pacific express going west at 7 p. m. and No. 20 going east at 11.28 p. m. If the town authorities would only bring a little pressure to bear on the M. C. R. officials no doubt they could easily have the matter attended to.

Q. O. X.

A Mule that Objected to Being Borrowed.

"Speaking of hoss thieves," said the old farmer, as he leaned back with a chuckle, "but I have had two or three funny experiences with them. About five years ago I had a valuable hoss, and I had to work all kinds of tricks to prevent his being stolen. One day a feller came along in a buggy, pretending he wanted to buy a farm, and he made two or three moves around the stable which satisfied me that he was spotting the hoss. I wasn't feeling well and couldn't stay up all night to act as guard, and so I put my hoss in a neighbor's barn and brought his mule over to my stable. That mule was the worst kicker on top o' the earth, and I knew there'd be fun if a visitor appeared. On the fourth morning I went to find the would-be purchaser of my farm lying under a shed in the barnyard with a broken leg and a scalp wound.

"'Hello!' says I; 'what's happened?'

"'Robbers,' says he. 'They attacked me just at your gate, and I think I'm badly hurt.'

"'But you didn't holler.'

"'Oh, no, I didn't want to disturb your rest.'

"'Did they hit you?'

"'Yes. They struck me with a sand club.'

"'Was that club stuffed with hair?' says I, as I plucked tuft of mule's hair off his shirt front.

"'I think not,' says he, cool as a cowcumber. 'I think I got that off the beast in there.'

"'But what were you doing in my stable?'

"'I thought I'd borrow your horse and try to get a surgeon's without disturbing you, but as he objected to being borrowed I gave up the idea. Now, my friend, here's $40 for the trouble I'm going to be to you. Please hitch up and drive me to town, where I can be taken care of.'"

"And you did it?"

"Sartinly. I allus like to oblige, and them $40 jist paid all my taxes."

"What became of the man?"

"Lay on his back in town for a couple of months, and was then shipped off East. I saw him the day before he went, and asked him if he calkerated on hunting down the highwayman who had attacked him that night in front of my house.

"'I'm afeared I couldn't identify 'em, even if we got the guilty parties,' he answered, as he handed over another ten, and sort o' dodged as if expectin' that ole mule to let fly again."

TWO VIEWS OF MATRIMONY.

By reading these verses right along, as printed, you get one view; by reading the lines alternately, in the order 1, 3, 2, 4, you will get the other view:

The man must lead a happy life
Who is directed by his wife;
Who's freed from matrimonial chains
Is sure to suffer from his pains.

Adam of old could find no peace
Until he saw a woman's face;
When Eve was given for a mate,
Adam was in a happy state.

In all the females' hearts appear
Truth, darling of a heart sincere;
Hypocrisy, deceit and pride
Ne'er known in woman to reside.

What tongue is able to unfold
The worth in woman we behold?
The falsehood that in woman dwells
Is almost imperceptible.

Fooled be the foolish man, I say,
Who will not yield to woman's sway;
Who changes from his singleness
Is sure of perfect blessedness.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

SLAIN AS A SACRIFICE.

Fanatical Followers of a Negro "Messiah" Kill a Child as an Offering.

BEATING DEVILS OUT OF A WOMAN

A Savanna, Ga., despatch says: A lamentable state of affairs exists in that section of Liberty county where the lunatic Orth, or Bell, preached for a month. He is in the insane asylum at Milledgeville, but the effect of his ravings is still felt. Hundreds of negroes are totally demoralized through religious frenzy. Orth has a successor in a negro named Edward James, who claims that the spirit of the Messiah has passed into his body. Some of his actions and words are amusing. Other acts and language are revolting. He tells his listeners to throw their money away. Near his rude pulpit is a box into which the silver coins are thrown. Yesterday David James, a brother of the preacher, and Carter, a friend, went to the camp ground to try to persuade Edward James to give up his calling. The negroes who were there denied that their acting Lord was about. However, the two men lingered and at length discovered Edward James asleep in a waggon. They woke him up and began arguing with him. He got mad and threatened to strike them dead. That did not frighten them. Carter put his hand on James' shoulder and the pretended Messiah struck him in the face. Carter grabbed the false Lord by the throat and choked him until his tongue stuck out. At that the other negroes mobbed Carter and beat him terribly with their fists and clubs. Carter is likely to die. Dr. Henry is attending him. His skull is crushed and his thigh is badly cut. James is a Justice of the Peace. On Thursday last he announced his divine mission. He urges his followers to make financial sacrifices to the Lord. On Sunday as much as $400 was offered as a sacrifice. James tore up the paper money and scattered the silver broadcast through the woods. Whether he secreted some of the coin and paper on his person does not appear in the evidence, but it is thought extremely likely that he did. The crowds that follow James increase daily and their violence is becoming a terror to the law-abiding element of both races. The idea of sacrifice has spread to a horrible extent. The offer of money no longer satisfies these violent and misguided persons. Human blood is demanded. The story of Abraham offering up Isaac is told with awful effect. On Sunday a boy, 4 years old, was left with his aunt, Laura Roberts, at home several miles from Walthamville plantation by his parents. On the return of the wretched father and mother the child was missing. On Monday the body was found floating in a railroad ditch. On the forehead a cross had been cut, and on the breast the same symbol was stabbed deeply. The throat was cut and the ears split. The woman was arrested, but refused to divulge what she had done with her other child. A vigilant search has been instituted, but without avail. The Coroner's jury returned a verdict finding Laura Roberts guilty of murder. The woman was out of her mind at one time, but had recovered and was apparently perfectly sound until Bell began his meetings. She was one of his most devoted followers and, after his removal, transferred her attachment to James. Like many of the others, she accepted all of his words as of divine origin, and, acting upon them, killed the child. James, while a Justice of the Peace, had in his office Tony Lecount, a negro constable. Tony had developed the mania to as great an extent as the ex-magistrate, and is posing as the Holy Ghost. "We are three in one," he announced at the meeting in the swamp on the Baker plantation yesterday to a crowd of several hundred, and then went on to explain that Bell was God, who has gone back to heaven to make arrangements for their reception. James is the Son and he is the Spirit. His theory is swallowed with as much gullibility as all the other statements made to the ignorant rabble. Both men yesterday appeared together, naked.

At the meeting on Saturday afternoon the wife of Charles Baker was badly injured. She is a large woman and was in the crowd near James, who was preaching. Stopping suddenly he pointed to her and exclaimed, "She has devils in her; pound them out! pound them out!" A dozen men seized her, threw her on a rough table, and began to beat her with clubs. Her jaw was broken and her body was badly bruised before the evil demons were persuaded to leave her.

On Monday James saw devils moving in Eugene Richards, a sober, industrious colored man, who had gone to the meeting from curiosity. He resisted, when the disciples set upon him and he was beaten almost into insensibility. He received internal injuries, and will probably die.

Sheriff Smith has arrested seven ringleaders of the mob that put Carter's life in jeopardy. As the 16th of August approaches, the date prophesied for the world's ending, fears of increased violence are entertained. A band of several hundred is expected to march out of the county towards the north and at the same time to beat back all but the chosen seed. The farming interests of Liberty are partially prostrated, and the serious state of affairs taxes the wisdom and ingenuity of the conservative citizens of the county. The people are becoming more and more excited and the whites are dreading that James will influence his followers to attack them. This afternoon Sheriff Smith, of Liberty county, with a posse of fifteen well-armed and determined men, went to make an effort to put a stop to the scandalous proceedings that have disgraced that section for some time past, and relieve the peaceable citizens of the fear they now entertain of violent proceedings on the part of the followers of James. Yesterday a number of the leaders of the new sect were arrested, making fifteen in all that have been taken into custody. If to-day's movement does not succeed a vigilance committee will be organized at once and hemp brought into requisition to rid the county of the nuisance.

CATTLE KATE.

The Famous Female Cowboy Hanged to a Limb for Cattle Stealing—Makes a Speech With a Rope Around Her Neck—"Game" to the Last.

A Cheyenne despatch gives the following fuller particulars of the lynching: James Averill and the notorious cattle queen, Kate Maxwell, were lynched by cowboys Sunday night. The bodies of the "rustler" and "range queen" dangled from the same limb of a big cottonwood yesterday morning. The scene of the lawless but justifiable deed of the midnight riders was Castle Rock, on the Sweetwater River, in Carbon county, near Independence. Castle Rock is a place which became historical during the rush overland to the California gold fields. Averill was postmaster at Sweetwater. Kate Maxwell was the heroine of a sensational story which appeared in the newspapers throughout the country three months ago, when she raided a gambling house and recovered a large sum of money won from her employees. Stockmen of the Sweetwater region have been the victims of cattle thieves for years. On account of prejudice against the large outfits it has been impossible to convict for these offences, and the rustlers have become very bold. Averill and his remarkable partner have been very active in thieving. The woman could hold her own on the range, riding like a demon, shooting on the slightest pretext, and handling the lariat and branding iron with the skill of the most expert vaquero.

Fifty freshly branded yearling steers were counted in the Averill and Maxwell herds Saturday morning. A stock detective whose suspicions were aroused was driven from the place when he was noticed viewing the stolen property. This circumstance was reported to the ranchemen, who determined to rid the country of the desperate pair. Averill and the woman have several times been ordered to emigrate or cease appropriating mavericks, but had disregarded all warnings. After her celebrated gambling house escapade, Mrs. Maxwell degenerated from a picturesque character into a reckless prairie virago of loose morals, and lost most of her following, but continued partnership with the postmaster. Word was passed along the river, and fifteen to twenty men gathered at a designated place and galloped to the cabin of Averill and Cattle Kate without unnecessary noise. The rustlers were at home, and a peep through the window disclosed the thieves and a boy in their employ, sitting beside a rude fire place smoking cigarettes.

As half a dozen men rushed into the room, a Winchester was poked through each window and a command to throw up their hands was given with unmistakable earnestness. The trio sprang for their weapons but were quickly overpowered. Averill begged and whined, protesting his innocence. Kate cursed. Her execration of the lynchers was something terrible in its way. She cursed everything and everybody, challenging the Deity to harm her if He had the power. An attempt was made to gag her, but her struggling was so violent that this was abandoned. She called for her own horse to ride to the tree selected for a scaffold, and vaulted astride the animal's back from the ground. Averill did not resist, and the boy, who had been told that he would not be harmed, followed. Either end of the same rope was fastened about the necks of the rustlers as they sat in their saddles. The boy made a pass with a knife at the man who was preparing Kate for hanging. He was knocked insensible by a blow with the butt of a revolver. The lad was a nephew of the bandit queen.

When preparations for the execution had been completed, Averill and the woman were asked to speak. The man spoke only of his office, saying that he did not wish a certain man to be his successor. He was promised the influence of the party for another candidate. Kate made quite an address. She wished the affair kept as quiet as possible, desiring that her mother be kept in ignorance of her disgrace and tragic death. It was useless to deny that their herd had been stolen from the ranchmen of that section, but if they did not wish to divide it among themselves she would like to have it sold and the money given to a home for homeless girls. Kate bade her nephew good bye, and commenced to deliver a blasphemous harangue. The horses were led from under the pair, while Kate was still cursing. Both kicked in lively style for ten or fifteen minutes. A few bullets were fired into Averill's body, and the lynchers rode away.

It is doubtless if an inquest will be held, and the executioners have no fear of being punished. The cattlemen have been forced to this, and more hangings will follow unless there is less thieving.

European War Rumors.

A Thursday's London cable says: An undercurrent of uneasiness continues to pervade the continent, notwithstanding strenuous efforts to smooth matters over. Servia still remains the object on which all eyes are fixedly gazing. The powers that be never know what Servia will do next. To-day agents of the Sultan in Belgrade report to the Turkish government that Russia, as well as France, has prepared to furnish war material to the Servians on long credit. Neither Carnot's Government nor the Czar will make demand for payment, according to the Turkish agents, and Servia can purchase weapons, ammunition, etc., without fearing any pressure whatever.

Von Vollmar, the German Socialist leader, in a recent interview, expressed a decided opinion that the triumph of Boulanger would mean a new disturbing feature to Enrope. The general's name, Von Vollmar thought, would be an excellent platform cry for another military vote, and although no war might follow, the ill-feeling between France and Germany could only be increased by the success of Boulangism.

THE GRANTS TO ROYALTY.

Mr. Bradlaugh and Lord Churchill Deliver Speeches For and Against.

A last Friday night's London cable says: When the debate was resumed in the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Bradlaugh said he found difficulty in discussing the question calmly when Mr. Balfour outside of the House denounced the objections as disgusting and sordid. The opponents of the grants meant nothing personally discourteous to the members of the royal family, but were simply acting within their rights when they met the demands of the Crown on a question of finance with a direct negative. Much of the argument in favor of the grants was based on the erroneous idea that the Crown, under the Civil List Acts from George I. onwards, surrendered its private property in exchange for a civil list. Neither George I. nor his successors, Mr. Bradlaugh declared, surrendered anything. The present royal family never surrendered anything of a farthing's value to the country. The Committee of Inquiry had elicited the fact that during the present reign the savings upon certain classes under the Civil List Act, instead of being applied to defray the charges of other classes, had been handed to the Queen without the authority of Parliament, and in breach of the statute. (Cries of Hear, hear.) Mr. W. H. Smith, the Government leader, had denied that the alleged savings of the Queen were over three millions of pounds, but he declined to show how much money had either been saved by the Queen or drawn by the other members of the Royal family from all sources. Mr. Bradlaugh said there ought to be nothing to conceal. The fact of the concealing had led to exaggerated ideas. The refusal of the Government to disclose the wealth amassed by royalties justified the aversion of the country to Royal grants. (Cheers.)

Lord Randolph Churchill argued that the original demands of the Government were just, besides being in conformity with precedent. If burdens were thrown upon the Crown, not intended under the Civil List, it would impair the credit of the nation and of Parliament. Mr. Bradlaugh had questioned the title of the Crown to its estates, but successive Parliaments had recognized it, and none of the greatest lawyers had ever yet challenged the Crown's title. He reminded the House that Sir Henry F. Ponsonby, Her Majesty's Private Secretary, a few years ago denied the reports that the Queen was making immense investments in ground rents and stated that she had not £1,000,000 to invest in anything. Lord Randolph saw that the Radicals' over-estimate of the Queen's wealth was designed to excite popular feeling against Royalty. He objected to the adoption of methods whose purpose was to foment a clamor against the throne, which in spite of them would remain steadfast in the affections of the people.

THREW THEM IN THE CANAL.

A Montclair Father's Heroic Act to Save His Boys.

A Montclair (N.J.) despatch says: The residents of this town are pretty thoroughly frightened over an epidemic of madness which seems to possess all the dogs in town. Several people have had narrow escapes from being bitten by infuriated animals, and every one now puts the greatest possible distance between himself and any stray dog that may come along. A thrilling incident in connection with a mad dog happened here on Monday afternoon. Capt. Michaels, of the Morris Canal, was the owner of a pet dog which he valued highly. During the morning he noticed that the dog was acting queerly, but he thought nothing of it. Shortly after noon, however, the dog, which had been lying apparently asleep on the deck of the boat, suddenly jumped up and with hoarse, yelping cries began whirling around madly. Capt. Michaels realized instantly that the animal was mad. His two little sons were playing together only a short distance away. With a bound the captain reached them and at the same time the dog ceased his whirling about and his bloodshot eyes rested on the captain and his children. Then, with wide open, foam-flecked mouth, he dashed at the captain. The latter dodged and made for the shore, but the dog headed him off. Again the captain dodged the infuriated animal, and running to the side of the canal dropped both his children in. Then he sprang in himself just as the dog made a snap at his legs. The captain rescued both his boys, and the dog crept under a box, where he was despatched with a revolver later. The next afternoon a small yellow dog came dashing along one of the streets snapping and biting at everything within his reach. He attacked two ladies on Bloomfield avenue, but they bravely beat him off with their umbrellas. Then he ran down the avenue, biting two other dogs on the way. All three animals were finally killed by officer Duncan after a long chase. No one cares to fondle a dog just at present, and every one is on the lookout for suspicious symptoms.

The Naphtha Supply Failing.

A Berlin cable to the Herald says: Intelligence has been received here from Baku to the effect that a permanent decrease is showing itself in the production of naphtha in that region, and that there is a probability of a very serious crisis shortly coming on. The naphtha basins of the Apsteron Peninsula and Bibicibat are no doubt still very productive, but the yield is no longer to be relied on. Almost all the factories at Baku are suffering for want of raw product. The price has risen from under two kopecks to five or six per pound. Messrs. Rothschilds' representative, manager of the Caspian & Black Sea Naphtha Company, has received orders to proceed to Paris after a thorough investigation has been made of the state of affairs by the company's engineer at Balachona.

DARING AERONAUT HOGAN,

The Hero of the Campbell Air-Ship Adventure.

Long List of Successful Balloon Ascensions—Perilous Feats With the Parachute—A Number of Very Narrow Escapes.

The hero of the recent air-ship adventure, Prof. Edward D. Hogan, lives at Jackson, Mich., when he has been at home, which hasn't been very often. He has had a fondness for atmospheric exploration that has kept him most of the time at various points several hundred feet above the earth. When Prof. Hogan made his memorable leap from a balloon to a parachute when 9,000 feet from earth, last April, the newspapers of the city of Jackson chronicled the startling feat with proper prominence, but one paper remarked sadly: "We fully expect to be called upon to chronicle his death while making a descent with the parachute." Nevertheless, the man of the clouds doesn't seem to have been deterred by the solicitude of his friends and neighbors.

It was in 1866 that Prof. Hogan made his first trip to the region above the earth. He was then a young man, or rather a boy, of 14, having been born at Moretown, Canada, in 1852. On September 4th he ascended from Michigan, and the taste for adventure which the success of this ascension developed has manifested itself in a longer list of successful balloon ascensions than can be credited to any living man. Since 1866 he has devoted his winters quite exclusively to the construction of new air ships and to the arrangement of details for new experiments. He has resided all this time at Jackson, Mich., and he has come to be well-known to the residents of that city and adjacent towns. Prof. Hogan labored assiduously to improve the facilities for aeronautic exploration, and the efficiency of his methods in any one of his experiments after the first initial ascension has shown a decided advance over that of his methods in previous trials. In 1866, when he made his debut as an aeronaut, the art was in rather a primitive stage of development. The balloon of that time differed in many important respects from the balloon of to-day. It was a cumberous machine, and it carried a boat, life-preservers, food, axes, saws, etc. It was not made of silk and linen, as the modern balloon is made of, and it was altogether a rougher, coarser and less manageable ship. Prof. Hogan was not only an aeronaut, but an acrobat of rare skill, and in his first ascensions he added to the attractions of the occasions by performing on a traepeze bar in mid-air. He acquired a reputation as much for feats of strength and agility as for the courage and dexterity with which he handled a balloon. He was the first to introduce the acrobatic feature into aerial exhibitions of this kind, and his remarkable performances on the trapeze bar, hundreds of feet above the earth, excited the curiosity and admiration of thousands.

Prof. Hogan was constantly devising new and startling expressions of the art to which he was so devoted, and his recent trip in the air ship—a trip that seems just now to have had a fatal character—is the culmination of his ingenuity, skill and daring. In 1888, when he introduced the perilous parachute descent in a trip that was attended with many hazardous incidents, his exploit was chronicled as a genuine sensation by the local press. He had long meditated such an undertaking, but there were many obstacles that had to be removed by patience and industry. He was 36 years old when he finally made the dangerous experiment, and his great familiarity with everything connected with balloon ascensions inspired him with a confidence that the dumbfounded reporters and spectators could only consider daredeviltry of the most pronounced type. The details of this remarkable feat were telegraphed all over the country and published broadcast. It served to assure the permanent reputation of Prof. Hogan as an æronaut. In August, 1887, Prof. Baldwin had ascended by means of an open parachute and a balloon held to the earth by a 5,000-foot rope. A large basket was attached to this balloon, but when Prof. Hogan, fired with new zeal by the feat of Prof. Baldwin, undertook to emulate his predecessor, he discarded the large basket and made his ascension with a horizontal bar beneath the gas bag.

On the morning of April 4th, 1888, Prof. Hogan had completed preparations for his experiment with the parachute. The first trial was unsuccessful, the balloon landing on a farm outside the city limits. But the second trial, which was made immediately afterward, was entirely successful, except that the æronaut was badly shaken up. The success of this experiment led him to repeat it with additional details, and during the season of 1888 he made 29 parachute drops, each drop being performed with greater ease and attended with less hazard and inconvenience. Since 1866 he had made more than 500 ascensions, when his famous feat of dropping with the parachute was performed. Immediately after his successful experiment with the parachute he received several offers of $1,000 to drop for exhibition purposes.

Hogan was an extremely modest man, and he always took particular pains to maintain as much privacy about his aeronautic adventures and plans as was consistent with pleasant feeling. His air ship trip he intended to be very secret, and the plan of his first parachute drop was known only to about 50 persons. At the same time he was very energetic and sometimes impulsive, and he went up in the air ship this time because a previously advertised and arranged trip had proved a fizzle, through no fault of his, and he was anxious to sustain his reputation. He was married, and his wife lives in a cozy home at Jackson. Hogan had an elder brother named William, who was widely known as an aeronaut throughout the West. It was William who taught young Edward how to handle a balloon, and it was William to whom young Edward looked for inspiration and confidence when he made his initial trip at Jackson. On this trip he was lost for three days, and then he was finally discovered by his friends asleep in a barn. He had many narrow escapes in his after career, and several times his rescue from death seemed simply miraculous. He always had the faculty of landing on his feet, and though he fell into the ocean once with no life preserver on, and was precipitated once from his balloon at the height of 100 feet, and on another occasion dropped 2,500 feet before his parachute opened, just as he was nearing the roof of a house, yet he always escaped with slight injuries. When he fell into the ocean he was rescued by an expert swimmer who happened to be in the water at the time; when he fell from the balloon he landed in soft mud on a meadow, and when he had fallen 2,500 feet with an unmanageable parachute, the parachute opened in the nick of time to save his life; so that, altogether, fortune seemed to favor the bold young æronaut. He had an indomitable will and no end of courage. In appearance he was a man of medium height, and he had dark hair and brown eyes. His weight was 171 pounds, and he was strong and agile.

The "Musa Cavendishi."

In these days when the banana has become so favorite an article of diet, it may not be uninteresting to the general reader to peruse the following extract from the High Peak News of 13th inst., a North Derbyshire newspaper. The writer is Rev. George Turner, LL.D., one of the most eminent missionaries of the London Missionary Society, who was the immediate successor of the martyr missionary of Eromanga, the lamented John Williams, and for over forty years labored with great success in Samoa. He is now residing in Birkenhead:

Before leaving England in 1838, John Williams, the martyr of Eromanga, received many expressions of kindly interest in his mission work from His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, and among these were some cases of plants, carefully selected and packed at Chatsworth, to be taken in the missionary ship to the islands of the Pacific. It is not generally known the large extent to which missionaries have introduced new plants, and additions to the food of native tribes in the Pacific and elsewhere. Before leaving the Samoan Islands, a week or two before he was killed on Eromanga, in 1839, Mr. Williams put on shore at the harbor of Apia one of the cases from Chatsworth, the contents of which were apparently dead from long exposure on board ship. When I reached Samoa in 1841 I saw that case, and close by it a fine banana plant growing. This was from a bulb which was found at the bottom of the box, still containing the germ of life. This plant was watched in the garden of Mr. Mills, the missionary, with no small interest by the natives, and soon their curiosity rose to amazement, when they saw that it commenced to bear while yet only about five feet high, and that the very first bunch weighed close upon 100 lbs. The Samoans had already upwards of thirty species of banana, but this new one far excelled them all. The neighboring chiefs begged Mr. Mills for some of the young shoots, and soon they spread from village to village.

On my second voyage to our out stations in Western Polynesia in 1845, and in our missionary barque, "John Williams," I got a number of plants of this rare banana packed in a large iron pot, and fastened up on the crosstrees away from the waves and spray. At each of the larger islands visited on our cruise, I sent on shore one or more of the plants. When I visited these places again in 1848 the new banana was greatly prized, and fast spreading; and again, when I was there in 1859, '63 and '82, there was hardly any other banana brought on board ship, or to be seen on shore. When I was last in Sydney, I saw a cart passing along laden with great bunches of this very banana from a Fiji steamer just arrived. They are now spread over Eastern, Central and Western Polynesia, and all have come from that one bulb which went out from Chatsworth in 1838. It is called the Chinese banana, and is known in botany as the "Musa Cavendishi," having been introduced to Chatsworth from China by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire in 1829, and can be seen in the conservatory there, as I had the pleasure of being yesterday, by the kind courtesy of Mr. Chester.

The great value and rapid spread of this banana in the Pacific has become quite proverbial. I have heard native orators, for instance, in speaking of the rapid spread of Christianity, comparing it to that wonderful plant, and well they may do so. In the early part of the century the Gospel first took root on Tahiti, and now it covers and gladdens Eastern, Central, and, to a large extent Western Polynesia as well, with an aggregate of 600,000 converts from heathenism, and of these 60,000 at least in full communion with the mission churches. It is destined still to spread through the Papuan and Malayian Archipelago, until, in the not far distant future, the missionaries of Polynesia shall unite stations and shake hands with their brethren in India, China and Japan.

Is Hogan Playing 'Possum?

A despatch of Wednesday from Jackson, Mich., says: Joseph Flowers, a reputable man of this city, who has known E. D. Hogan, the æronaut, since boyhood, says Hogan certainly did not lose his life in the New York air ship affair, for he saw him in this city last Thursday and spoke with him. He is sure of this, and says, furthermore, that Hogan told him to "keep his mouth shut for a while yet," and he has kept still about it until now. Two other men, one of them the expressman who took the ballon that was used at St. Thomas, Ont., to the station, says it was E. D. Hogan himself who made the St. Thomas ascension and that he has been lying low since he hurt himself there. These reports greatly mystify Hogan's friends.

R. A. Gunn, M. D., Dean and Professor of Surgery of the United States Medical College, Editor of "Medical Tribune," Author of "Gunn's New Improved Hand-book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," says over his own signature, in speaking of a severe case of kidney disease: "A chemical and microscopical examination of the patient's urine revealed quantities of albumen and granular tube casts, confirming Bright's disease. After trying all of the other remedies in vain, I directed him to use Warner's Safe Cure. I was greatly surprised to observe a decided improvement within a month. Within four months no tube casts could be found, and only a trace of albumen, and as he expressed it, he felt perfectly well."

A NEW NAVAL TERROR.

England's Latest Supply Ship—A Quick Fighter and a Fast Sailor.

A new acquisition to England's navy was launched recently and christened the Vulcan. She is designed as a twin-screw torpedo-boat ship, but is a fast protected cruiser and a formidable fighting craft as well and represents an entirely novel type. The construction of the Vulcan was begun on June 16th, 1888. She is of 6,200 tons displacement—larger, in short, than any of the large Indian troop-ships and three times as large as many a cruiser. She is built of steel, her hull alone weighing 3,170 tons, and her principal measurements are as follows: Length, 350 feet; beam, 68 feet; mean draught, 22 feet. The vertical keel is of an unusually heavy and substantial character and is 3 feet 6 inches high. The cast-steel U-shaped sternpost is extra strong, weighing five tons. The vessel is divided into numerous water-tight compartments, and is protected by a continuous steel deck six inches deep in the slope and 2½ inches elsewhere. The engines are of the triple expansion type, and will give a collective indicated horse power under forced draught of 12,000. They will drive the ship at a speed of 30 knots (23 miles) and 18 knots (20.7 miles) at sea. There will be storage for 1,000 tons of coal, an amount sufficient for 3,000 miles steaming at 18 knots an hour. She will have a balance rudder that will enable the new war ship to turn a complete circle of not more than 400 yards in diameter in little over three minutes. As a torpedo depot ship she will be admirably adapted for the work. She will be a floating factory, full of forges and workshops for the repair of torpedo boats and torpedoes, submarine mines and all the necessary gear for submarine work on a large scale, and she will also have upon her decks a small flotilla, probably eight in number of second-class torpedo boats of the largest size. These she will be able to hoist overboard and dispatch in all directions at a few minutes' notice. The vulcan will also have a torpedo armament of her own, consisting of six launching tubes, some of which are to be under water. Regarded more particularly as a cruiser, she will possess qualities which will entitle her to rank among the most formidable unarmored cruisers in the world. She will have weapons which at close range will be capable of penetrating armor up to nearly sixteen inchess thick. The quick firing arrangement will be the most powerful of any ship in the world. It will enable her to discharge on each broadside a storm of from eighty to one hundred and fifty projectiles a minute; and should she ever be attacked by unarmored cruisers or topedo boats, she would be able to give them a warm reception.—New York World.

The Death Roll of the Forth Bridge.

In an article under the above heading a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette says he has learned from Dr. Hunter, of South Queensferry, that, including five drowning cases, the fatal accidents from all causes in connection with the Forth Bridge amount to fifth-three. As regards those killed in the actual construction of the bridge there have been forty-four lives lost, death taking place either at the time of the accident or soon after. One man trusted himself to work at a height of 120 feet over the waters of the Firth, simply grasping a rope. His hands got numbed with cold, his grasp relaxed, he fell backwards down and down into the water, and he was fished up alive. In another instance a spanner fell 300 feet, knocked off a man's cap and fell on the wooden stage at his feet, and went clean through a four inch plank. In another case somewhat similar, a spanner which fell from a great height actually tore a man's clothes from his waistcoat to his ankle, and left him uninjured. One of the most thrilling incidents was that in which the "staging," or scaffolding on which the men work high up in mid-air, gave way, carrying a number of poor fellows in its fall. Two of these men, striking some portion of the work in their descent, were killed before they reached the water; one or two others who fell clear of the girders were rescued from the Firth little the worse for their fall and immersion. Two others, however, managed as they fell to grasp at one of the struts high up above the water, and there they clung for dear life; to effect their rescue was itself an undertaking of no slight danger. But efforts were promptly made, and before long the man who happened to be nearest the rescuers was reached. And this brave fellow, hanging there to the ironwork, actually dissuaded the rescuers from delaying to take him off before they saved his companion. "Never mind me," he said, "I can hold on a bit longer; go and see to my mate, for he's getting dazed, and he'll drop." Happily this hero and his mate, too, were saved.

Willie Was Quite Right.

Mrs. Dumpsey—"For shame, Willie! You've been fighting again. Your clothes are torn and your face is scratched. Dear me, what a trial you are! I wish you were a girl—girl's don't fight." Willie Dumpsey—"Yes, ma, but don't you think it's better to have a good square fight and get all the mad out of you, than to carry it around, the way girls do, for months?"—Lawrence American.

THE VALUABLE MECHANIC.

Some Good Advice to the Young Man Learning His Trade.

When a young man starts out to learn his trade, says the Stationary Engineer, and goes into a shop totally unschooled in the manual performance of his duties in the new field of life on which he is entering, it is important that he should bear in mind this fact, viz.: That his position, so far as it relates to himself, is intrinsically an educational one, as much so as in the school or college from which he may have recently graduated. The simple performance of so many hours' work per day, while it has a certain financial measure of value to the employer, has a value to himself when properly considered that is greater than can be measured in currency. As his progress and standing in the school depended on the thorough mental understanding of each progressive step he took, so, only in a more material sense, his advance in mechanical skill and knowledge is dependent on his thoroughly understanding not only the routine details of his work, but the why and wherefore of each operation. There always has been, and probably always will be, two classes of mechanics—those who stand at their bench and go through the manual motions of their work like automatic machines, with little more conception of why the results are as they are, and the other that class of men who make no moves without knowing why and how results are obtained and the relative importance of each step. This is the mechanical education that counts, the education that schools the mind to a clear comprehension of the principles equally with details, and leads unfailingly to that higher field where skill, diligence and marked ability find their natural level. The young man who, on beginning his mechanical education, realizes and acts upon these truths, will develop that ability which is not gauged by mere manual dexterity, but rather that which, when in later years he may be called to design, lay out and superintend the work of others, will enable him to creditably fill the position. Such positions come to those who bring thought and brains, as well as manual dexterity, to assist them in their work. To such men we owe the improvements of the age in every branch of mechanics. It is a fact that too many mechanics work along day after day accomplishing their work by "main strength and foolishness," which is the direct and legitimate result of a lack of proper and thorough application in their earlier mechanical life. The point emphasized is that the mind that is able, through careful training and application to bring to bear a knowledge of the principles involved, as well as execution of detail in the work, is one that approaches that standard of ability which should be the aim of every young man who is beginning his mechanical education—his work in the shop. When he has attained this no question of wages will ever trouble him. Such men are always wanted. The supply is not equal to the demand.

The Favorite Times for Suicide.

Statistics show that the months in which the fewest suicides occur are October and November, while the greatest number occur in April, May and June. July and September also have a goodly share, the latter possessing a peculiar fascination for women. This refutes the old idea that suicides occur more frequently in damp and gloomy weather, for the months just mentioned as being the most prolific are certainly those in which the skies look brightest and the earth is fairest. Another remarkable fact in this connection is that the progressive increase and decrease in the number of suicides coincide with the lengthening and shortening of the days, and, as M. Guerry has shown, not only the seasons of the year, but the days of the month and the week, and even the hours of the day, exert an influence, the constancy of which cannot be mistaken. As a result of his elaborate research he found that the greatest number of suicides among men occurred during the first ten days of the month, and from Monday to Thursday of the week. This is accounted for by remembering that the majority of workingmen receive their wages either on the 1st of the month or the last of the week, and that "pay day" is often followed by dissipation, debauchery and remorse. Oettingen completed this interesting observation by showing that the larger number of suicides among women take place during the last half of the week, when they are most apt to feel the effects of man's prodigality and wrong-doing. In regard to the hours of the day, we know, from Brierre de Boismont's examination of 1,993 cases of suicide in Paris, that the maximum number occurred between 6 a.m. and noon, and thereafter regularly declined, reaching the minimum at the hour before sunrise.—Popular Science Monthly.

The First American Shoemaker.

Among the Pilgrim Fathers who came to Salem, Mass., in the second cargo brought by the Mayflower, in 1629, was Thomas Beard, "The Shoemaker." Boston was not settled, or known even as St. Botolph's Town. Beard brought a letter to Governor Endicott, stating that he was sent by the Massachusetts Bay Company in London, and was to be maintained by them, and commending him to the care and helpful favor of the Governor. From their knowledge of the few cattle here, and the needs of the people, the company wisely shipped some "hides" in the Mayflower's cargo; these probably being tanned sides of leather. The little colony of Naumkeag gave a warm welcome to their new fellow-citizen, and his address and credentials moved them to present him wity fifty acres of land. After this pleasant event he seems to have lived so peacefully that he had no further history; but he is the first one of whom our records tell as being an American shoemaker.

SPEED OF INSECTS.

Many of Them Able to Outstrip Birds of Great Swiftness.

High speed is attained by insects in their flight, many of them being able to outstrip swift birds. It has been computed that the common house fly, in ordinary flight, makes 600 strokes per second and advances 25 feet, but that rate of speed, if the insect be alarmed, may be increased six or seven fold, so that under certain circumstances it can outstrip the fleetest racehorse. It is no uncommon thing to see a bee or a wasp endeavoring to get in at the window of a railway train in full speed, and it is calculated that if a small insect can fly faster than a racehorse can run, an insect as large as a horse would be able to travel as fast as a cannon ball. Leunwenholk relates an exciting chase, which he beheld in a menagerie, about one hundred feet long, between a swallow and a dragon-fly—among the swiftest of insects. The insect flew with incredible speed and wheeled with such address that the swallow, in spite of its utmost efforts, completely failed to overtake and capture it. A pigeon fancier of Hamme, in Westphalia, recently made a wager that a dozen bees liberated three miles from their hive would reach it in better time than a dozen pigeons would reach their cote from the same distance. The competitors were given wing at Rhyhern, a village nearly a league from Hamme, and the first bee reached home a quarter of a minute in advance of the first pigeon. Three other bees reached the goal before the second pigeon, the main body of both detachments finishing almost simultaneously an instant or two later. The bees, it may be mentioned, had been handicapped in the race, having been rolled in flour before starting for purposes of identification. According to Chabrier the male of the silkworm moth travels upward of 100 miles in one day, and there are many British moths, as entomologists well know, which can cover long distances in an incredibly short space of time.—Chicago Mail.

The Governor's Chase.

The Governor sat in his easy chair, a spy-glass at his eye—"Has any one seen three thousand men and a train of cars go by? A pilot train with the bad men on, one more, and another one still; with rattle of wheels and clank of bell, and shriek of the whistle shrill? They travel not as the flying ship, in silence and in fear; they whoop and holler and howl and yell for all the world to hear. They have advertised the place of the fight, for six long weeks or more, and I fear that I cannot find the place, 'till the brutal fight is o'er. Oh, rally and squander, my men-at-arms, and look if you can see where three railway trains and three thousand men have hidden away from me."

They rallied and squandered, those men at arms, they searched the country through; and another Governor came along, and joined the searchers, too. They looked in the clock and under the stairs, and under the bed they peered, and out in the kitchen and everywhere, but the trains had disappeared. They felt in their pockets and looked in their hats, and lowered a man down the well, but where all those sluggers had disappeared to, there wasn't nobody could tell. They asked a boy at Lowery's store, and the blind man down by the hall, and the woman who keeps the candy shop, but they hadn't seen nothin' at all. They dragged the pond at Sawyer's mill, and they questioned the toll-gate man, and all through the lot at the back of his house, the Governor raced and ran. But all in vain, for wherever he looked, the people he sought were gone, and the only place he didn't look was where the fight was on. And he never knew there had been a fight until a week and a day, then he sent a constable after the men, four thousand miles away.

Long live the State of Massasip! The Governor, long live he! If ever the moon should run away may he there to see! Should hostile powers invade his land at some far distant day, may he find the foe that wastes his State before it goes away. And great good medicine had it been, for the land of the sunny South, had the Governor closed his smooth-bore eyes and looked with his long-range mouth.—Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle.

Noise and Nerves.

The most sensitive, delicate and easily injured parts of the human system are the nerves. These can never become so accustomed to incessant strain as to escape injury. That which is unpleasant to the senses is always—and, so far as the sense of hearing is concerned, discordant noises always are—injurious to the nerves. The yelling of steam whistles, the hiss of steam pipes, the rattle and clash of wheels on stone-covered streets, the rumble of street cars, the clangor of bells, the howling of hucksters, keep up a condition in which a healthful nervous system of natural strength and sensitiveness is impossible. And there is not one of these agencies that is not suppressed more or less completely in most of the great cities of the world. In Berlin heavy waggons cannot run on certain streets. In Paris any carload of rattling material must be fastened until it cannot rattle. Munich allows no bells on street cars. In Philadelphia, church bells have been held a nuisance in certain neighborhoods by judicial ruling. Steam whistles are forbidden in nearly all of the larger cities of this country, and most of these noises in our advanced stage of civilization are utterly unnecessary. Clocks and watches are now so cheap and plentiful that steam whistles and bells to denote the time are useless. Why should not all useless noises, and nearly all are useless, be suppressed?—American Analyst.

Warner's Safe Cure cures the Diarrhœa by first removing the cause.

BRITISH SERVING PEOPLE.

Retainers of the Old Nobility and Their Peculiarities.

The best domestic servants in the world are undoubtedly to be found in England, writes a New York Sun correspondent. Nowhere else can such thorough, trustworthy and willing service be had. The servants of the aristocracy in the middle ages were a class apart, and they have remained so ever since. To-day a servant in Great Britain considers himself of a lower order of mankind than his master, and brings up his children in the same belief. Humility is the creed. The master—perhaps a drunken, sottish and poverty-stricken gambler, graced by neither birth nor position—curses his servant like mad and flings his boot-jack at him. The servant, who is as likely as not an intelligent, honest, frugal and temperate man, dodges the boot-jack, bows respectfully and murmurs the perennial "Thank you, sir." The domestic servants of England are creatures of remarkable foibles and conceits. Thackeray immortalized the flunkey's speech and manner, but it is doubtful whether the ridicule he poured upon them has had any effect toward correcting their extravagance, as it would upon that of any other class. These servants still speak atrocious English, but with an unmistakably aristocratic accent, and although their pay is seldom high, they look down with lofty contempt upon workingmen, or, in deed, upon any one not holding the social rank which entitles him to treat them with insolence. In England the law assigns to every one, from the ranks of "gentleman," or "esquire" upward, a distinct rank or precedence on the social ladder. The servants, of course, are not included in this, but among themselves they give every man or woman his or her place in the strictest manner according to the rank of the master. A duke's servant takes precedence over that of a marquis' and the servant of either of these nobilities looks down upon a man who is the servant of merely a "gentleman." A thing which helps them greatly in maintaining these distinctions is that under no circumstances do they ever do work outside that appertaining to their particular offices. A butler, for instance, would be much less likely to put a hand to work which should be done by a footman than a duke himself. The upper men servants have usually acquired, as a result frequently of hereditary transmissions, an air of aristocratic vacuity or supercilliousness. They are not allowed to grow mustaches, but that only serves to make more prominent the aquiline nose and half scornful lip. It also makes one think that they must be relatives or friends of the great men of the earlier Victorian period, such as Sir Robert Peel, Lord Palmerston, or the Duke of Wellington, and that they are survivals of that period. They are almost incomprehensible to the majority of Americans in their intense arrogance.

Those who are wise, and who love the truth, will believe what we say when we tell them that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has done more to relieve the sufferings of women, than all other medicines now known to science. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out or many years.

A Sad Case.

Two children belonging to Duncan Hartelle, of Cornwall Centre, died this week from diphtheria. The mother has been suffering from the same disease, and the case is made all the more sad by the fact that poor Hartelle himself does not know anything about the hand of death cutting down two of his bright little children, he being an inmate of the Rockwood Asylum. He was sent to that institution only a few months ago. The deeply afflicted mother has the sympathy of all in her bereavement.—Cornwall Freeholder.

RAILWAY RACING TO SCOTLAND.

Five Hundred and Forty Miles in Twelve Hours and Fifty Minutes.

This season the railway companies have again begun to "race" each other, with this difference, as compared with last year, that the fastest speed is attained by trains running between Aberdeen and London, instead of by trains from London to Edinburgh. It is now possible for passengers from the "Granite City" of Aberdeen to make the journey to London by the G. N. W. Railway in the course of the same day, for the traveller who leaves that city at 6.15 in the morning will reach London at 7 o'clock in the evening. This is a marvellously quick run for a distance of nearly 600 miles, the quickest, indeed, that has ever been attempted between Scotland and England. This train is declared to be the quickest in the Kingdom. Besides being a great boon to travellers from Aberdeen, the new train will enable letters that leave that place in the morning to be delivered the same evening by the last post in London. On the return trip you may travel the 540 miles to Aberdeen in 12 hours 50 minutes leaving at 10.30 a. m. and arriving 11.20 p.m. By the Great Northern the time taken is 13 hours, or slightly more than by the rival route—10 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Greek Boxing in Classic Times.

The boxing to-day is almost as much more humane and presentable than the Grecian sort as a bout at modern Græco-Roman wrestling than the Roman gladiatorial shows. The Greek boxers wore a fearfully hurtful contrivance called a cestus, which consisted of bands of bull's hide fastened around the knuckles, and studded with knobs of lead and iron. These were very like the brass knuckles or "knuckle dusters" that are now used by burglars and criminals only. They must have made the old-time boxing matches both gory and horrible to an extent that would have shocked even the toughest of the tough citizens that attend the modern contests. The old fellows used often to wear a protecting cover over their ears, in order to keep them unmutilated, just as the German students guard their eyes against thrusts with the schlaeger. Boxing, moreover, was one of the most important features of the Olympian games, the great athletic meetings of Greece's hey-day, wherein the historically perfect runners and wrestlers and archers and chariot drivers, and all the young men lived and studied to excel. All had to box and go through a bloody and brutal performance that wouldn't be practised by any modern pugilist and wouldn't be tolerated now by anybody. The only thing comparable for beastliness to Greek boxing in these days is a form of contest called purring, in which a man heavily shod tries to disable his antagonist by kicking his shins, but that never excited any popular interest, and it is almost never heard of more. As regards the science in boxing we imagine that the improvement in that respect has been equal to its mollification. The Greeks, we believe, were right-handed fighters, using the left chiefly as a guard, while the accepted theory now is that if but one hand is used for offensive purposes it should be the left. If the Athenian Pet should venture within the ropes to-day without his abominable cestus, and face a first-class man, it would be a talent to an obolos that his sponge would eventually be the one to go up. Johannes Sullivanus could probably whip Castor and Pollux in the same ring.—New York Sun.

Logic is Logic.

Now there was the case of our friend McKay:
He said to himself, in his resolute way,
That a cough which was growing from bad worse

And as sound as a nut is his health to-day—
"Logic is logic, that's all I say."

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only medicine for the diseases it is recommended to cure, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that if it don't either benefit or cure in every case, the money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

The Mexican Wasp.

The Mexican wasp is built entirely for business. He is over two inches long when he is of age and is about the color of a bay horse. His plunger is fully an inch long and as fine as a spider's web. Unlike the stinger of the common bee, the stinger of the Mexican wasp is non-forfeitable. He doesn't give it up after one lunge, but has it always in readiness for an all-day job if necessary. The mission of the Mexican wasp seems to be merely to hunt up people and run that stinger of his into them. The natives say he will go ten miles out of his way to get a whack at a person. The natives seem to get fat on snake bites, centipede bites and scorpion stings, but if they discover one of these wasps in the neighborhood they hunt for cover without delay. —Tombstone Epitaph.

W. Fletcher's team ran away with a load of lumber on Shackleton street on Tuesday. The driver, W. James, held on till the lines broke. The lumber was scattered along the street for two blocks. No damage done.

NOTICE.—All parties indebted to me must settle at once either with me or at McIntyre's bank, as I will leave Dutton and put my books in court for collection, on or before August 15th. All my chattles are for sale.—JAS. BAKE.

Five additional freight crews have recently been added to the force of conductors and brakemen on the M.C.R., which now number 42 crews, the largest employed during the summer months in the history of the road. Freight traffic is unusually brisk at the present time.

Large congregations welcomed Rev. T. Wilson home on Sunday last and listened attentively to the two excellent sermons which the rev. gentleman delivered. His morning text was "Charity shall cover a multitude of sins," 1 Peter 4, 8, and in the evening "Two wagons and two oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their services," Numbers 7, 7.

American express agents located at points on the M.C.R. will hereafter be obliged to report direct to headquarters. Heretofore non-reporting offices have reported to messengers on the trains, but owing to increased business, and the resultant increased labors of the messengers, Superintendent Vickers has decided to have no non-reporting offices along the entire line.

What might have proved a serious fire started in the roof of the Dutton Iron Works Saturday afternoon. Fortunately the fire was noticed when but little of the roof was burned and by prompt and energetic action the building was saved. But for the timely discovery the whole building would have been destroyed and possibly others in its vicinity, the roof being dry and burning like tinder.

By the provisions of the Franchise Act the revising barrister in any county cannot return the roll before August 1st, but the return of the list may be delayed beyond that date. Elgin's revising barrister has signified his intention of receiving names until the lists are ready, which, it is expected, will be the middle or latter part of the month. Very few names have yet been handed in by either party.

A medical gentleman suggests that all the wells should be pumped out in order to avoid the epidemic of typhoid fever. Many of the wells are now filled for the most part with surface water, and consequently impregnated more or less with vegetable matter. If this water is allowed to remain in the wells, the warm weather of July and August will breed in it the germs of disease, and its use by the people will be almost certain to spread typhoid fever.

The following is the list of Grand Jurors selected for the Elgin Fall Assizes;—Henry Hill, Aldboro'; Alonzo Burns, St. Thomas; Robt. Draper, Bayham; Moses Leeson, Aylmer; Josiah Burton, Southwold; J. D. Gunn, Springfield; Arch. Duncan, Dunwich; Geo. Emery, Pt. Stanley; A. McKillop, jr., Aldboro'; Chas. Brown, Malahide; Chas. Saywell, Yarmouth; Adam Fulton, Southwold; Donald Campbell, Southwold; Truman Burgess, St. Thomas; Lot Saxton, Vienna; Wm. Hunter, M. C. Leitch, Daniel Black, John R. Gow, Dunwich; A. W. Mann, St. Thomas; Ansel Bray, Albert White, Yarmouth.

About 9 o'clock Thursday night a man called at the house of W. Rawson on Woodworth avenue, St. Thomas. Mrs. Rawson, who was alone, her husband being employed on the Michigan Central coal dock at night, was sitting on the stoop, when the burglar caught her by the throat and dragged her inside and locked the door. He then brutally kicked her on the head and face and ransacked the house. Failing to force a trunk he tied a clothesline around the woman's neck and dragged her into the kitchen, where he again kicked her into insensibility after tying her hands and feet. Her husband found her lying on the floor tied up on returning from work in the morning. She is seriously injured. Little plunder was obtained.

The West Elgin Fair, to be held at Wallacetown on October 2nd and 3rd promises this year to eclipse any fair yet held by the Society. Extensive preparations are being made by the management and a good list of attractions has been already procured. The grand stand, which is being erected by Schleihauf Bros., will add greatly to the appearance of the grounds. A large number of special prizes will be offered, among which may be mentioned that of McGregor & McCallum, who offer a prize of $25 for the best six colts sired by Western Wilkes, allowing any other owners of road stallions to compete with them by paying $25 and making a sweepstakes prize.

Wm. Burwell, of Southwold, was arrested by Constable Fairbrother Monday morning on a charge of having been the party who burglarized the house of Mr. Angus Campbell, Union road, and carried off a quantity of jewelry. Burwell was arrested in bed. He was one of those attacked with smallpox during the epidemic last spring, and when Constable Fairbrother proceeded to search the bed Burwell's mother called out to him to look out that that was the bed on which prisoner lay when he had the smallpox and some of the germs of the disease were still there. The officer failed to scare, however, and his search resulted in the discovery of a stud which Campbell recognized as his property. Burwell was lodged in jail and remanded by Police Magistrate Leonard until Thursday. He has already served one term for theft.

Here is the way Bob Ingersoll puts it:—Here is a shoe shop. One man in the shop is always busy through the day—always industrious. In the evening he goes courting some nice girl. There are five other men in the shop that don't do any such thing. They spend half of their working evenings in dissipation. The first young man by-and-by cuts out these others and gets a boot and shoe store of his own. Then he marries the girl. Soon he is able to take his wife out riding of an evening. The five laborers, his former companions, who see him indulging in this luxury, retire to the neighboring saloon and pass resolutions that there is an eternal struggle between labor and capital.

He Didn't Find It.

About 11 o'clock the other night a boy appeared on Michigan avenue, near Third street, with a lantern and began to search the pavement. Several men at once accosted him and asked the object of his search, but he fought shy of a reply. In ten minutes fifteen men were searching. In fifteen minutes there were four lanterns flashing around. When the crowd had increased to thirty the boy extinguished his light and slid off up Third street and entered a house. The others continued to search until an officer came along and asked what they were looking for. No one could tell, and just then it seemed to strike everybody that April fools sometimes blossomed in August, and the entire crowd stampeded like a drove of steers.

It Makes You Hungry

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Primus, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheefully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. Dow, Burlington, Vt.

Paine's Celery Compound

is a unique tonic and appetizer. Pleasant to the taste, quick in its action, and without any injurious effect, it gives that rugged health which makes everything taste good. It cures dyspepsia and kindred disorders. Physicians prescribe it. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

If the coal cinders, when taken from the stove, are put in an old tin and cold water poured over them, in an hour you will have nice clean cinders that will burn clear and good without the disagreeable trouble of sifting them.

There is a Cossack girl in Berlin just now who is attracting a good deal of attention. This is not to be wondered at, seeing that she is only eleven years of age and she is nearly "three yards high, weighs twenty stone, and is still growing very rapidly.

A Boston physician, being called upon to treat a wealthy woman who had a lot of guests at her country house, prescribed shutting up her house and boarding out as the most effective remedies for the nervous derangement caused by the social pressure.

An emergency cabinet should contain a roll of old linen and one of soft flannel, a graduated glass of medicines, court plaster and a bottle of ammonia, one of camphor, turpentine and one of sweet oil, a china jar of mixed mustard for poultices, and any other medicines prescribed by a physician.

Mr. Downey, the great London photographer, was recently summoned to serve on a jury, and at the very same time was summoned by the Queen to go to Buckingham Palace and photograph the Shah. He obeyed the latter call, and his lawyer had hard work to save him from being fined for contempt of court. "A jury summons," said the judge, "takes precedence of everything else, even the Shah."

The Mortgage.

We worked through spring and winter through summer and through fall,
But the mortgage worked the hardest and the steadiest of them all;
It worked on nights and Sundays, it worked each holiday,
It settled down amongst us and it never went away.

Whatever we kept from it seemed almost as bad as theft;
It watched us every minute and it ruled us right and left,
The rust and blight were with us sometimes,
and sometimes not;
The dark-browed scowling mortgage was forever on the spot.

The weevil and the cutworm, they went as well as came;
The mortgage stayed forever, eating hearty all the same,
It nailed up every window stood guard at every door,
And happiness and sunshine made their place with us no more.

Till, with failing crops and sickness, we got stalled upon the grade,
And there came a dark day upon us when the interest wasn't paid.
And there came a sharp foreclosure, and I kind
o' lost my hold,
And grew weary and discouraged, and the farm was cheaply sold.

And the children left and scattered, when they hardly yet were grown;
My wife she pined and perished and I found myself alone.
What she died of was a "mystery," and the doctors never knew;
But I knew she died of mortgage—just as well as I wanted to.

If to trace a hidden sorrow were within the doctor's art,
They'd a found a mortgage lying on that poor woman's heart.
Worm or beetle, drought or tempest, on a farmer's land may fall,
But for first-class ruination, trust a mortgage
'gainst them all.

Take Me, I'm All Thine Own.

BY FRANCIS S. SMITH.

This hand is free, this heart is pure
It beats for thee and only thee.
Until I saw thy winning face
I loved not, and was fancy free.
I loved thee, and if thou canst say
You live for me, and me alone—
That I dwell in your heart of hearts—
Then take me, I'm all thine own.

I love thee! deeply, truly love;
For thee my life I would resign!
But I require in exchange
A passion that will equal mine.
A queen I'd in thy bosom reign,
Without a rival near my throne—
If thou canst this condition meet,
Then take me, I'm all thine own.

'Tis heaven when two are joined in love
So deeply that 'twere death to part;
But, oh, 'twere death if I were doomed
To live on a divided heart!
If thou shouldst ever slight my love,
The crime thou never couldst atone—
But perish thought so base as this!
Take, take me! I am all thine own!

The Dying Barber.

The dying barber's hands were crossed,
He moved his lips in prayer,
And muttered as he lay and tossed,
"There'll be no parting there!"

His work was done, his weary mind
No longer was perplexed
With visions of the man who whined
Because he wasn't "next."

Across his face so worn with care,
There stole a peaceful hush;
He stood once more beside his chair
And feebly murmured "Brush!"

Then all was still; his tired soul
From earthly cares had flown,
And sped towards that blissful goal
Where partings are unknown.

The Hameless Laddie.

Be kind to the bairnie that stands at the door;
The laddie is hameless and friendless and poor;
There's few hearts to pity the wee cowering form
That seeks at your haddin a beild frae the storm.
Your hame may be humble, your haddin but bare,
For the poor and the lowly hae little to spare;
But ye'll ne'er miss a morsel, though sma' be your store,
To the wee friendless laddie that stands at the door.

When the cauld wind is soughin' sae eerie and chill,
And the snaw-flakes o' winter lie white on the hill;
When we meet in the gloamin' around the hearthstane,
Be thankfu' for haddins and hames o' your ain,
And think what the feckless and friendless maun
dree,
Wi' nae heart to pity and nae hand to gie;
That wee guileless bosom might freeze to the core
Gin ye turn'd the bit laddie awa' frae the door.

The bird seeks a beild o'er the wide ocean wave;
In the depth of the covert the fox has a cave;
And the hare has a den 'neath the wild winter's snaw;
But the wee friendless laddie has nae hame ava!
Then pity the bairnie sae helpless and lone;
Ilka gift to the poor is recorded aboon;
For the warm heart o' kindness there's blessin's in store,
Sae be kind to the laddie that stands at the door!

How Would You Answer?

What would you do if you had a wee tease,
Asking you daily such questions as these:
"Mamma, does God simply turn down the light
Just when He guesses it's time to be night?"
"Are flowers made out of a butterfly's wing?"
"Why do the trees put their clothes on in spring,
And then when cold winter comes get all un-dressed?"
"How does the robin get blood on its breast?"
"Will Santa Claus answer that letter of Zeb's?"
"Are bicycles made out of big spider-webs?"
"Does the man in the moon smoke while looking about?
And are the blue clouds just the smoke he puffs out?
And the stars, are they just the wee sparks he lets drop?"
"Do cat-tails grow up from——" But here I will stop
And ask you again, Will you tell, if you please,
How you would answer such questions as these?

CHOOSING.

She sat by his side in the corner nook,
In the bloom and blush of youth,
And the maiden frankness of her open brow
Was lit by the light of truth.
Can the world condemn if her heart beat fast,
As the words she longed to hear,
With a sound like the sweep of Love's silken wing,
Broke softly on her ear?

But why in her eyes is that far-away glance?
And why is that catch in her voice?
Ah, who can tell all that may be hid—
All that lies in a woman's choice?
Then her face is raised, with a look, to his,
And a smile like the graces wore:
"Why, of course I will. Vanilla!" she said,
So he ordered two plates more.

WARNER'S Safe Cure removes headache, deafness, nausea and convulsions. Why? Because the troubles are symptoms of malaria (uric acid poisoning). "Reynold's System of Medicine" says of the symptoms of uræmia: "They generally begin insidiously, with headache and vomiting, followed by heaviness, indifference and somnolence, succeeded by general convulsions and coma."

THE HOME CIRCLE.

Things About the Household that Every Woman Ought to Know.

THE DRESS OF TO-DAY.

Hints to Housekeepers.

To give stoves a good lustre add either sugar or alum to the lead.

Remove stains from cups and saucers by scouring with fine coal ashes.

Vinegar improves by keeping, therefore it is best to lay in a large supply.

A raw cranberry, cut in two, and half of it bound over a corn, is recommended as a relief.

Individual plates for vegetables are not used much now. Only salads are separately served.

Cold tea is the best thing with which to clean grained wood. Never use ammonia for this work.

After washing a wooden bowl dry it at a distance from the stove, so that it may not warp or crack.

Lime free from grit mixed with alcohol applied with leather will give a beautiful polish to steel.

When recipes call for a cupful it means just half a pint; this amount in granulated sugar weighs just half a pound.

Chamois can be washed in warm water without soap; rinse well, and pull and stretch to soften while drying.

Salt will curdle new milk; so in preparing custards or porridges the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

Binding a piece of lemon around the toe, rubbing the corn with green peach tree leaves, are both very good remedies.

Meat and vegetables are much better if served when they are done than if left to get cold before they are eaten.

To remove tar, rub well with clean lard, afterward wash well with soap and water. Apply this to either hands or clothing.

To take ink out of linen, dip the ink spot in pure melted tallow, then wash out the tallow and the ink will come out with it.

A silver spoon put into a glass jar will temper it so that it can at once be filled with anything hot, even to the boiling point.

How many have tried sunflowers for bean poles? Plant them very early, and when one foot high plant two beans to a stalk.

To break up a bad cold bathe the feet, or the whole body, in very hot water, and drink a cup of hot ginger tea and go immediately to bed.

Be very particular about disinfecting the kitchen sink. Washing soda, two tablespoonfuls to a gallon of boiling water makes a good disinfectant.

Red pepper pods or a few pieces of charcoal thrown into the pot in which onions, cabbages, etc., are being boiled will prevent the unpleasant odor.

Starch polish.—A piece of stearine, candle spermaceti, or white wax as large as a robin's egg will give a nice gloss. A teaspoonful of salt to each pint of starch will prevent sticking.

If the coal cinders, when taken from the stove, are put in an old tin and cold water poured over them, in an hour you will have nice clean cinders that will burn clear and good, without the disagreeable trouble of sifting them.

An emergency cabinet should contain a roll of old linen and one of soft flannel, a graduated glass for medicines, court plaster, a bottle of ammonia, one of camphor, turpentine, and one of sweet oil, a china jar of mixed mustard for poultices, and any medicines prescribed by a physician.

Silverware, to keep bright, should never be washed in soapsuds. Clear water is best. To prevent articles from tarnishing warm them and apply with a soft brush a thin solution of collodion in alcohol. The ware can be brightened by rubbing with a flannel or chamois skin dipped in whiting or chalk, then with a newspaper.

Hints About Dress.

The newest blouses are made of washing silk, trimmed with stripes of a figured border.

Silk shoes and stockings of the same color as the gown accompany ball and evening toilets.

Hosiery worn with low walking shoes should be the color of the shoes, usually, of course, black.

A cloth mantle for children is made with a yoke, the skirt portion gathered to it, and pinked all round. It is inexpensive and picturesque.

Lace and embroidered skirts of last summer may be worn this year by arranging them as tunics, mounted at the top with a casing with colored ribbon run through.

Many ladies have their travelling dresses made with contrasting waistcoats, which may be changed at will, thus allowing a variation of costume when trunks are not available.

A pretty empire poke for country wears of green straw, the brim faced with green velvet, three or four shades of green ribbon being bunched on the crown, holding a cluster of large white daisies.

Very ladylike and dainty costumes for summer are shown, made of a handsome quality of Bengaline or surah, figured with small devices over grounds of gray, amber, terra cotta, strawberry, reseda, pale olive and old rose.

Watteau draperies, as well as the straight styles, are employed for India and Burmese silks, and they are trimmed, according to the use for which they are indicated, with velvet revers, etc., or with quantities, more or less, of creamy lace.

The revolution in sleeves is being accepted, and some of the newest are very wide at the top, and either lace or button inside the arm. French women allow them to droop over the hand, carrying out the mediæval mode in its entirety.

The new fancy straw head-coverings show all sorts of fancy designs. In many of the bonnets and round hats they are arranged in what is known as "row and row" braids, these showing very chic and pretty effects in color and device.

Princesse dresses of "oyster-shell" white satin are favorite gowns with wealthy dowagers. These are draped with crepe de chine, also in oyster-shell white, which new shade has a gleaming silvery-gray tint with no cream whatever in its reflections.

Corduroy is to be the material of the autumn and winter, and it is now being made up into evening cloaks which completely envelope the figure, reach to the hem of the dress, and fit in the back, the collars rounded and standing up about the throat.

There is certainly nothing in the jewel or floral kingdom which can quite take the place of lace as a personal adornment. All do not look well in either jewellery, or ribbons, or flowers, but the softening and beautifying power of lace is almost magical.

A Story About Carlotta Patti.

The Birmingham Mail tells a local anecdote of the late Mdme. Carlotta Patti. She was to sing in the Town Hall one evening in 1874. With the laudable desire to induce all Birmingham to come and hear their nightingale Messrs. Harrison, the concert managers, announced the cantatrice as a "sister of Adelina Patti." If this latter famous name was writ very fine and large upon the bills, it may have been the printer's accident; it may have been the compiler's design. What, indeed, does it matter now that nearly fifteen years have passed? The concert did not promise very well, all the same. When, however, the hour for its commencent drew near, there were not many seats vacant, for the entrepreneurs had resorted to an expedient not unknown in their business. They had distributed complimentary tickets rather freely, and Carlotta was assured at any rate of a large audience when she came. But Carlotta, like Mariana's lover, tarried long. She tarried so long that Mr. Percy Harrison thought it might be as well to walk round to her hotel and jog her memory. He had but time to exchange a few brief, burning sentences with her before an express bore her away to London. She had come and seen the bills, and proper pride had conquered her. Was she, Carlotta Patti, to sing under the ægis of her happier sister's name? Indeed not; and there was an end on't. Not for Mr. Percy Harrison. He had to explain to his audience, to proffer them their money back. Some loyal patrons stayed and heard the were dead heads, to their eternal shame be it recorded, who drew money from the check-takers on their complimentary tickets. One gentleman claimed for a cab in from the distant country, and got it. With much magnanimity he refrained from claiming for his wife's bouquet. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. Edwin and Angelina had received complimentary tickets. In the heat of the moment he drew 10s. on them; and bought her some gloves. Edwin's second thoughts were honest; and he returned the money. But Angelina kept the gloves. And the lovers were estranged. This is authentic.

Here are a Few Things that it Will Pay to Remember.

Here are a few miscellaneous hints, rules and facts worth remembering:

A cord of stone, three bushels of lime and a cubic yard of sand will lay 100 cubic feet of wall.

One thousand shingles, laid four inches to the weather, will cover 100 square feet of surface, and five pounds of shingle nails will fasten them on.

A box 16 inches square and 8 2-5 inches deep will contain one bushel.

One cent saved each day and put out at 6 per cent. interest will accumulate to $950 in fifty years.

Eight bushels of good lime, 16 bushels of sand and one bushel of hair will make enough good mortar to plaster 100 square yards.

A stone, used by grocers, is equal to 14 pounds.

It takes from 1½ to 2 bushels of wheat to sow one acre of ground.

To find the amount of hay in a mow allow 512 cubic feet for a ton.

A thousand laths will cover 70 yards of surface, and 11 pounds of lath nails will nail them on.

How Women Have Corrupted Men.

The gum-chewing habit is certainly on the increase throughout the country. An epidemic has fastened itself upon the best and fairest of America's daughters from Maine to California, and from 5 years of age up to those uncertain days that lie beyond the hope of matrimony. And from the daughters and wives and sweethearts this form of maxillary calisthenics has been communicated to fathers, husbands, sons and lovers until America has become a nation of gum-chewers. The sales of chewing gum in Minneapolis have nearly doubled in the last year.—Pioneer Press.

More Than He Fished For.

Miss Dovecote (hostess)—Why don't you come into the parlor and dance, Mr. Orkwood?

Mr. Orkwood (who loves flattery)—Ah, deah me, you know, I darnce so beastly, don'tcherknow, that I'm sure I'd make a fool of myself.

Miss Dovecote (reassuringly)—You couldn't do that, I'm sure, Mr. Orkwood. You know it takes a wise man to play the fool.

What Disturbed Him.

"I always sleep with my watch under my pillow," said a travelling man to a friend during a conversation concerning train robberies.

"I used to do that, but I've quit it."

"Why?"

"Because I never could tell which was keeping me awake, the watch or the bed ticking."

Qualified.

"Hello, Lamb, are you still striking it rich in Wall street?"

"No; in fact, I lost all I had there!"

"I'm sorry for that. What are you doing now?"

"Just now I'm writing 'Tips for Speculators' for the daily press."

A Necessary Delay.

Mrs. Willowly—Have you ordered your new dress yet?

Mrs. Gushington—Not yet. I am waiting to see what Bridget is going to wear.

HEART FAILURE

Is Too Frequently Given by Physicians as Cause of Death.

The American Analyst thinks it would be an excellent idea if physicians of the present day would vent some other reason for about all the deaths which occur nowadays than the heart failure. It is difficult for any one conversant with the organs of the human body to understand how any human being can die without heart failure, while the causes of the failure of the heart at death may be very numerous. This might not be of serious moment where it not for the fact that hundreds of people are being nearly frightened to death by the constant use of the cause for sudden deaths, and many people who are sick, and necessarily have some heart symptoms, are kept in constant terror by reading or hearing in other ways of death after death by heart failure. It would be well if physicians who are too indolent or too ignorant to search out the disease lying back of the heart failure to consider how much harm they are doing the community, and if they cannot correct the habit, newspapers and the public should avoid giving currency to this unfounded and dangerous phrase. There are probably no more deaths from heart failure in these times than heretofore, but a new cause for death has been coined, and the nervous and timid are being severely injured by it.

Sale of Southdowns at West Wickham.

The world-famed flock of pure bred Southdowns sheep, which, as was aptly remarked, has taken Mr. Henry Webb, of Streetly Hall, Linton, Cambs., a lifetime of labor and love to bring to their present state of almost absolute perfection, was brought to the hammer on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. John Thornton, the eminent auctioneer, as he had done on the previous day at Sandringham, conducting the sale with that ability, geniality and courtesy which characterize all his dealings. When the Babraham flock, belonging to Mr. Jonas Webb, was dispersed, realizing an average of £11 15s 9d for 927 head, Mr. Henry Webb increased and improved his flock by the addition of about seventy of his father's best old ewes from the sale, as well as several rams of different ages. The Babraham flock has a world-wide reputation; it was descended from the best Sussex flocks, the blood of the sheep of Mr. John Ellman (who may be called the father of the breed) being its mainstay. The principle has been to raise a flock having purity of blood with hardy constitutions, that any farmer might breed from, and from which exhibitors might select show yard winners. The sheep are on a large scale, being very short-legged with deep carcases, with grand heads, fine sloping shoulders, and good thick legs of mutton; whilst the wool, which has been an especial study, is thick and close, and of remarkably fine quality. The sheep are folded throughout the year on the land, for out of about 550 acres only about 30 are pasture. It may be mentioned that the highest price for sheep of any breed last year was realized by a Southdown ram, which was by a son of one of Mr. Henry Webb's sheep. There was a large gathering from all parts of the country, the company present including the Duke of Richmond, Mr. Clarke Goodwood (his Grace's agent), Mr. Beck (H. R. H. the Prince of Wales' agent), Mr. E. W. Beck (agent to Lord Hastings), Mr. Smith (Duke of Hamilton's agent), Mr. Turner (agent to the Marquis of Bristol), Mr. B. D. Cook (Kimbolton, agent to the Duke of Manchester) Mr. Blair (agent to Mr. F. J. S. Foljambe), Mr. Prentice (Stowmarket, Secretary to the Suffolk Sheep Society) Mr. Alfred Heasman (editor of the Sussex Herd Book), Messrs. R. A. Houblon, T. Drake, T. Chalk, H. J. Cheffins, Grimwood Cook (Horseheath), Martin and George Slater, J. Clayden, F. G. and S. Jonas, S. Leverett and others. A recherche luncheon, supplied by Mr. Meeks, of the Crown Hotel, Linton, was set out in a spacious barn, tastefully decorated for the occasion. Accommodation was provided for between 300 and 400 guests. The Duke of Richmond, who presided, in proposing the health of Her Majesty and the Royal Family, referred to the great predilection show by the Queen for everything connected with agriculture, to the interest Her Majesty had shown in the Windsor Show, and to the forthcoming marriage of the Princess Louise of Wales. (Cheers.) His Grace next gave what he termed the toast of the afternoon. He was extremely flattered when some months ago his friend Mr. Webb honored him by asking him to preside on the present occasion. (Applause.) He entertained the liveliest recollection of his excellent father, whom he had held in the warmest regard; he was a man who was well known amongst agriculturists, and respected by all classes. (Cheers.) They had before them a candelabra, presented to the late Mr. Webb by the Emperor of the French, in recognition of the gift of a ram. (Applause.) He (His Grace) almost thought if his friend would give him the choice of one of his rams that day he would imitate the example of the Emperor of the French. (Applause and laughter.) There was no pleasure without alloy, and their pleasure was somewhat marred by the thought that they were assembled to witness the dispersion of one of the most famous herds of Southdowns which had ever existed in the country. He He had an hereditary interest in the Southdowns. (Applause.) They had been handed down to him, and he was endeavoring to maintain the honor and credit of the breed. They would all admit that the sheep about to be sold were the best specimens of any Southdown ewes produced at any sale. (Applause.) Mr. Webb suitably responded. Mr. Charles Howard submitted "The health of the Duke of Richmond," who was one of the most popular and respected noblemen in the country, and who had been aptly described by the Prince of Wales as the farmer's friend. (Cheers.) The Chairman said he was always delighted to find himself at a meeting of agriculturists, for he felt he was amongst a body of friends. They had passed through many years of agricultural depression, which had been felt by all classes—owners, occupiers and laborers—but he now trusted there was a gleam of hope for the future, and he concluded by giving them the sentiment, "Live and let live." (Cheers.) Mr. Seymour, of Preston, Kent, proposed the health of Mr. Thornton. Mr. Thornton felicitously remarked upon that truly English scene, and the occasion which had brought them together. (Cheers and laughter.) The party now made their way to the sale ring, and after a few apropos observations by Mr. Thornten, the real business of the day commenced. The result was considerably in advance of general expectations. Eighty-three rams realized £2,696 8s., an average with a fraction, of £32 9s. 9d. The highest price was fetched by lot 12, and the Duke of Richmond was loudly cheered as Mr. Thornton declared it sold to His Grace for 210 gs. (the top price for a ram at Mr. Webb's father's sale was, we are informed, 260 gs.) Mr. Harry Brassey secured another fine animal for 190 gs.; Mr. Lucas, a couple, which fetched respectively 150 gs. and 100 gs.: Mr. Murietta also had to bid 150 gs. for a yearling, and Mr. Edwin Ellis 140 gs. The ewes, 415 in number, made £3,043 5s., averaging nearly £7 11s. 6d. The grand total of the 489 sheep catalogued was £5,739 13., with an all round average of close upon £11 10s. 6d. Mr. Thornton congratulated Mr. Webb at the close, and said the sale would be recorded in history as one of the most remarkable in sheep-breeding.—Southwest Suffolk Echo, July 6th.

STRANGLED BY A DOG.

A Baby Killed by a Playful Puppy.

By a most singular accident a baby lost its life in Kentucky yesterday. John Howard, a farmer, lives about two miles below Ludlow, opposite Riverside. Yesterday his wife, while engaged in her household duties, sat her 13-months-old child on the floor. The little one began playing with a puppy that happened to be in the room at the time. Fastened around the puppy's neck was a long, light chain that dragged on the floor. The baby and puppy were having a lively time when Mrs. Howard heard a bump. She looked around and saw the little playmates tangled up in a heap, the puppy having pulled the baby over. The mother started to pick the child up, when she was horrified to find that its face was distorted and its body limp. She also found that during the play the loose end of the chain had in some way become wrapped around the baby's neck, choking it to death in the presence of its mother. Every effort was made to restore respiration, but it was too late.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

New Stationer's Fancies.

An eagle's claw in exquisitely wrought brass makes an unique and handsome clip.

An eagle's feather in bronze, perfect in color and plume, makes a beautiful pen-tray.

A silver lute, with a sheet of music resting lightly upon it, makes a very ornamental ash tray.

A cute little bronze paperweight consists of a bright-eyed, fluffy, yellow chick standing on a feather.

A small, circular, black leather inkstand, with oxydized silver fittings, has on the cover a tiny, russet leather wallet for stamps.

A tiny cucumber, as green and fresh-looking as if plucked before sunrise, is one of the latest conceits for pocket match safes.

Dufferin and Temperance.

Canada's most popular Governor-General, Lord Dufferin, was among the notable men whom the late T. H. Parker successfully sought to influence on the temperance question. A friend who visited Turkey, and spent a week at Constantinople with Mr. Barker, paid a complimentary visit to Lord Dufferin, who was then Britain's representative there. "Mr. Barker was always true to the temperance question, and lost no opportunity of advancing it. With admirable tact he took occasion to lay before his lordship (interspersed with general conversation) some striking remarks on his favorite question, and I fancy they made an impression on his lordship which will not soon be forgotten by him."—Citizen.

Women of Note.

There are 275 women preachers in the United States.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, the most famous of women journalists, has lived in Paris for more than thirty years.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson-Burnett has been engaged to edit the children's department of a syndicate of English and American newspapers, for which she is to receive $7,500 a year.

Mrs. George H. Corliss will erect a fine building for the Young Men's Christian Association at Newburyport, Mass., as a memorial of her late husband, the famous engine-builder.

Land in the Argentine Republic.

Some idea of the enormous extent of undeveloped area in the Argentine Republic may be inferred from a recent government report on the agriculture of the province of Santa Fe. Its area is nearly twenty-five million acres, but 1,500,000 acres are under cultivation, and these are owned by 18,000 individuals, of whom half are immigrants from abroad. The total population is 220,000, and the province contains 2,600,000 head of cattle, 500,000 horses and mules and about 3,000,000 sheep.

Undoubtedly True.

"The bigger a man is the greater are his chances for success," observed the Judge.

"How do you make that out?" asked the Major.

"He always has his weigh."

AS COOL AS A CUCUMBER.

I am a level-headed man
In spite of Fashion's rule,
I'm dressing in the happy plan
Of keeping nicely cool.

I wear a nobby flannel shirt
Beneath a "blazer" coat;
No stuck-up collar, starched to hurt,
Is scraping at my throat.

A helmet hat protects my head
From aching with the heat,
And shoes undressed and very red
"Refrigerate" my feet.

Blue serge or linen trousers wide
That no suspenders need,
Held by a pretty sash outside,
Give comfort, Oh, indeed!

A CHAPTER OF HORRORS.

How Heads Are Chopped Off in the Flowery Kingdom.

EXECUTION OF FIFTEEN MEN IN CHINA.

Reader, be warned. I have looked upon men being cruelly tortured; I have stood in the shambles where human beings are slaughtered like pigs; my boots have dripped with the blood of my fellow-creatures; I must exorcise memory with my pen. Therefore, gentle reader, unless your nerves are fairly strong and your taste healthily gory, pass this letter by.

It was in Canton, a city like no other Chinese city I have seen, a colossal human ant hill, an endless labyrinth of streets a dozen feet wide and a score high, crowded from daylight to dark with a double stream of men and women, exactly like the double stream between an ant hill and a carcase. All this mass of humanity is presided over by the most foreigner-hating Viceroy in China, and, therefore, it may be imagined what is the temper of the populace, especially as the Cantonese are the most turbulent people of the Flowery Kingdom. During the day the streets of Canton are in semi-obscurity, as they are closed in at the top by broad strips of cloth and long advertising streamers, but at night they are as black as Tartarus. Public safety and order are supposed to be preserved by occasional posts of soldiers, with a collection of weapons and instruments of torture hung up outside to strike terror into the evilly disposed. But, as may be imagined, crime of every kind is rife in Canton, and so bad is the reputation of the place that very often a servant from another part of China, travelling with his master, will rather forfeit his situation than accompany him there. And where the crime is, there is the punishment, too. It by no means follows in China that the person punished is the criminal, but there is enough cruelty in Canton to glut an Alva. Respect for the presence of an occasional foreigner causes a good deal of it to be hid, and the spectacle of a man hung up in a cage to starve to death in public is not a common one there as it is in other parts. But I think I can describe enough to satisfy you.

It is, however, the last act of the drama of Chinese justice that is the great revelation. I am inclined to think that nobody can claim to have an adequate and accurate appreciation of Chinese character who has not witnessed a Chinese execution. This is not difficult to do at Canton, for the Canton River swarms with pirates, and when these gentry are caught they generally get short shrift. A few bamboolngs to begin with, then several months in prison—and it is not necessary to explain what a Chinese prison is—with little to eat and a stiff course of torture, and then one fine morning a "short, sharp shock" at the execution ground. If you care to accompany me there I will try to place the scene before you.

THE EXECUTION

is fixed for 4.30, so at 4 the guide comes for us at Shameen, the foreign quarter of Canton, and our chairs carry us rapidly through the noisy alleys of the native city. Until we get close to the spot there is no sign of anything unusual. There, suddenly we run into a jammed crowd at the end of a long and particularly narrow street. The chair coolies, however, plunge straight into it and it gives way before us till we are brought up by a huge pair of wooden gates guarded by a little group of soldiers. To hear these men talk you would suppose that they would die then and there rather than let us pass, but the production of a couple of tencent pieces works a miracle and they open the gates for us, vainly trying to stop the rush of natives that follows us in and carries us before it right into the middle of the open space. It is a bare piece of ground, 50 yards long by a dozen wide, between two houses, whose blank walls hem it in on three sides. To-day it is the execution ground; yesterday and to-morrow the drying ground of a potter who lives there. There is no platform, no roped-off space, nothing but this bare bit of dirty ground so crowded with Chinese that we are forced into the middle, not more than four feet from whatever is to take place. It is no use to try to get further off—here we are and here we must stop. Suddenly the gates are thrown open again, and, welcomed by a howl of delight from the crowd, comes tumbling in. First, a few ragamuffin soldiers, making a fine pretence of clearing the way. Then a file of coolies carrying the victims in small shallow baskets slung to bamboo poles. As soon as each pair reach the middle of the space they stoop and pitch their living burden out and run off. The prisoners are chained hand and foot an are perfectly helpless. The executioner stands by and points out where each load is to be dumped. He is dressed exactly like any other coolie present, without any badge of office whatever. The condemned men have each a long folded piece of paper in a split bamboo, stuck into their pigtails; upon which is written their crime and the warrant of execution. One after another they arv and are slung out. Will the procession never end? How many can there be? This is more than we bargained for. At last over the heads of the crowd we see the hats of two pretty mandarins, and behind them the gates are shut. The number of men is fifteen, and the executioner has arranged them in two rows, about two yards apart, and all facing one way. All except one seem perfectly callous, and he had probably been drugged with opium, a last privilege which the prisoner's friends can always obtain by bribery. They exchange remarks, some of them evidently chaff, with the spectators, and one man was carried in singing and kept up his strain almost to the last. The executioners—there are now two of them—step forward. The younger tucks up his trousers and sleeves and deliberately selects a sword from several lying close by, while the other, an older man, collects the strips of paper into a sheaf and lays them on one side. Then he places himself behind the front man of the nearest row and takes him by the shoulders. The younger man walks forward and stands at the left of the kneeling man. The fatal moment has come. There is an instant's hush and every one of the two rows of condemned men behind, twists his head round and

A STRANGE AND GHASTLY PROCESSION

CRANES HIS NECK TO SEE.

I will not attempt to describe the emotions of such a moment—the horror, the awful repulsion, the wish that you had never come, the sickening fear that you will be splashed with the blood, and yet the helpless fascination that keeps your eyes glued to every detail. The knife is raised. It is a short, broad-bladed, two-handled sword, weighted at the back and evidently as sharp as a razor.

For a second it is poised in the air, as the executioner takes aim. Then it falls. There is no great apparent effort. It simply falls, and moreover seems to fall slowly. But when it comes to the man's neck it does not stop; it keeps falling. With ghastly slowness it passes right through the flesh and you are only recalled from your momentary stupor when the head springs forward and rolls over and over, while for a fraction of a second two dazzling jets of scarlet blood burst out and fall in a graceful curve to the ground. Then the great rush of blood comes and floods the spot. As soon as the blow has fallen the second executioner pitches the body forward with a "Hough," it tumbles in a shapeless heap, and from every throat goes up a loud "Ho!" expressive of pleasure and approval of the stroke.

But there is no pause; the executioner steps over the corpse to the front man in the second rank, the knife rises again, it falls, another head rolls away, another double burst of blood follows it, the headless body is shoved forward, the assistant shouts "Hough!" and the crowd shouts "Ho!" Two men are dead. Then the headsman steps back to the second man of the front row, and the operation is repeated.

Two things strike you; the brutal matter-of-factness of the whole performance, and the extraordinary ease with which a human head can be chopped off. As a whole it is precisely like a drove of pigs driven into the shambles and stuck; and in detail it is—or seems—no more difficult than splitting a turnip with a carving knife or lopping off a thistle with a cane.

CHOP, CHOP, CHOP, THE HEADS ROLL OFF

one after the other in as many seconds. When the seventh man is reached, either because the knife is blunted or the executioner misses his blow, the neck is only cut half through. But still he does not stop. He comes quickly back, takes another knife, passes on to the next man, and only comes back to finish the wretched seventh when all the other heads are lying in bloody pools in front of the shoulders which carried them a few moments before. And every man has watched the death of all those in front of him with a horrid animal like curiosity, and then bent his own neck to the knife. The place is ankle deep in blood, the spectators are yelling with delight and frenzy, the heads are like bowls on a green, the horrible headless bodies are lying all about in ghastly grotesque attitudes, the executioner is scarlet to the knees and his hands are dripping. Take my word for it that by this time you are feeling very sick.

Fortunately you are not detained long. The moment the last head is off the crowd is gone with a rush, except a score of urchins who begin skylarking with the bodies and pushing each other into the blood. The bodies are thrown into a pond and the heads are plastered up in big earthenware jars and stacked up with those already round the wall of this potter's field. I had a few minutes' conversation with the executioner afterward. Decapitation, he told me, was not the occupation of his family; it is only a perquisite. But the business is not what it was. Formerly he used to get $2 a head for all he cut off; now he only gets 50 cents. It is hardly worth while chopping men's heads off at that rate. But then it doesn't take very long. Would I buy his sword? Certainly. Nine dollars.

HENRY NORMAN.

A Sinking City.

Real estate appears to have a downward tendency in Northwich, a town of England, wherein a small excitement is always prevalent as to whose house will sink or topple over next. The footpath on both sides of the road opposite the old Wheatsheaf Inn has begun to crack and sink rapidly. The Local Board officials are keenly watching the footpath, which has already sunk a foot. It is estimated that Northwich loses £1,400 yearly from this dislocation of gas and water-mains alone, and keen disappointment is felt at the refusal of the Goverment to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the subsidences, perhaps to learn their cause, which is not stated, though the phenomena may be due to the salt mines and brine springs in the neighborhood.

Quaint Advertisements.

Here are some advertisements which have recently appeared in the London papers: "A young lady most earnestly wishes to become acquainted with thorough believers in spiritualism. No trifler need answer." "A smart young novelist wanted at once. Salary about £4, increase to £6. Good hours. Good connection." "Agents wanted to sell beautiful portrait of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, printed upon wood cut down by himself." "Young man wants secretarial engagements with literary man. Qualifications: Considerable ignorance, fair capacity for labor, some literary enthusiasm and ability to write shorthand."

FREDERICK T. ROBERTS, M. D., Physician to the Royal College of Surgeons, University of London, Eng., says: "Loss of appetite, loss of eyesight, dyspeptic symptoms, irregularities of the bowels, are some of the symptoms of the advanced kidney disease. Warner's Safe Cure cures these troubles, because it removes the cause, and putting the kidneys in a healthy condition, enables them to expel the poisonous or waste matter from the system. This is why Warner's Safe Cure cures so many symptoms that are called diseases.

An All-Around Favorite.

Mrs. Butts—What a delightful conversationalist Mr. Jabberbox is! It just does me good to hear him talk.

Miss Minnie Ball—Yes, indeed; but how restful it is to hear the silence while he listens to somebody else!

Nobody There.

Dudy (insinuating himself into a railroad seat alongside a pretty Miss)—Nobody occupying the seat with you, Miss?

Miss (looking at him disdainfully)—Nobody yet!

TREATMENT OF COUGHS.

Hints for the Allaying of a Very Unpleasant Habit.

In a recent discussion concerning coughs and their treatment by the Clinical Society of the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital, Dr. W. A. Shufelt said that he would like to say a word in regard to the habit of coughing which he thought had been lost sight of. He believed that a cough was in every case a reflex paroxysm, and that the more one coughed the more likely it was to be repeated. After the patient had had a cough for several days it required much less irritation to bring on this paroxysm than at first. He thought many patients got this habit, and by exciting the nerves irritated the cough. He had seen many cases in which the patients, having been directed to refrain from coughing as much as possible, had improved rapidly. It was a subject worthy of a great deal of investigation. It was well known that whiskey or brandy or a similar stimulant would relieve a cough, and the speaker thought that could only be explained on the theory that the stimulant excited the nerve centres in the brain, and in that way the paroxysm was reduced. He had seen some cases in which a galvanic battery, using the positive pole below the angle of the jaw, would also relieve a cough. The theory of counter-irritants accorded with this view; that was, he stated, that counter-irritants, blisters upon the chest, acted more upon the central nervous system than by relieving the arterial pressure by drawing blood to the surface. In regard to the treatment of cough, of recent years he had given up cough medicines of all kinds. He believed we could do more with such remedies as cresote and alum and turpentine. Turpentine and iodoform combined were excellent. Two drams of creosote, two drams of terebene and two drams of tincture of iodine in an ounce of refined spirits; 15 drops of this, to be inhaled whenever the paroxysm came on, he considered far superior to the nauseous mixtures that were often given. In acute bronchitis, instead of using medicines he was in the habit of using a tablespoonful of terebene in a pint of boiling water, and directing the patient to inhale this three or four times during the day.

RABBLE AT PARIS.

Police Unable to Handle the Crowd of Criminals at the Exposition.

The recent terrible murders reported at Paris are the natural outcome of assemblance of a horde of criminals gathered there from all parts of France attracted by the exposition. The Paris correspondent of the London World writes: "The crowds that you see wandering about the exposition seem happy and peaceful enough, but look at the crowd outside the exhibition. Take your seat at a table at the Cafe de la Paix, for instance, and watch the crowd. Go to the law courts and listen to the remarks of the heroes of the crime of Auteuil. Go to the races and examine the formidable army of petty book-makers and adventurers of both sexes, who have no regular means of existence. Talk with the chief of the police. All these sources of information will convince you that Paris, at the present moment, swarms with dangerous characters, whose audacity is increasing all the time. The police are even powerless to keep the boulevards in decent order, and to preserve the public from the annoyance and importunity of the hideous voyons who howl their wares from morning until night in front of the cafes, ready with insult and foul grimaces. As for the waiters and inspectors of the cafes, they dare not interfere with these scoundrels for fear of their vengeance; the police do not molest them, except in extreme cases, because the prisons are not big enough to hold them, or the laws practical enough to punish them; hence the ever-growing strength of an army of scoundrels, prostitutes, thieves and assassins."

Killed by a Bee.

A remarkable fatality from the sting of a bee is reported from Dorsetshire, England. A farmer who was attempting to hive a swarm of bees was so careless as to allow his mouth to stand wide open. Into this more or less inviting retreat a bee flew in search of a new home. The insect lodged in the farmer's throat, and being unable to go further it used the weapon provided by nature. The man's throat immediately began to swell, and despite all efforts at assistance, in a very short time he died from suffocation.

The Princess' Thimble.

The thimble presented to the Princess Louise at the wedding last week by the Rt. Rev. Lord Arthur Charles Hervey is described as one of the most exquisite demonstrations of the goldsmith's art. It is of gold enamelled with rosebuds and thistles, and the top is composed of a huge diamond. It is pleasant to feel that if the Princess should ever have to apply for a job in an overall factory she would have something to begin work with.—Washington Post.

Not the Cat She Knew.

Uncle George was asking little Florence if she knew how to spell. "Can you spell cat" he said.

"Oh, yes, I can spell that," she replied.

"Well, why don't you spell it, then?"

She looked very wise, but shook her head—"I don't know what kind of a cat you mean."

His Shocking Taste.

Miss Caustique—I suppose I'll have to congratulate you, Harriet, on your engagement to Harry, but—

Harriet—But! But what?

Miss Caustique—Well, I must say Harry has shocking taste in everything. I never knew him to show good taste in the selection of a single thing.

A bachelor of forty he,
A man of culture, pride and wealth;
A maid of twenty summers she,
With sparkling eyes and glowing health

He wooed, but not as others have,
With loving words more sweet than true.
He laid his bank-book in her hand,
And merely turned to "Balance due."

—A Western newspaper recently contained this advertisement: "A middle-aged woman who is capable, honest and industrious, but as homely as a stone-fence wants work.

DUKE AND DUCHESS OF FIFE.

The Royal Wedding Feast—The Dresses Worn—The Trousseau—The Honeymoon.

A London cable, describing the Royal wedding, says: Soon after 11 o'clock the State coach and liveries of the newly-created Duke of Fife were seen coming up the Royal Mews towards the "entre" portico of the Palace. His handsome figure and well-favored face was set off to perfection by his full Highland costume, with a kilt of the famous Duff tartan and the broad green ribbon of the Thistle across his breast. In addition to the Star of the latter Order he also wore that of the Order of Albert of Saxony, conferred upon him when he visited Dresden as the chief of the special embassy sent to convey the Order of the Garter to King Albert. The Duke was accompanied by his friend, factotum and alter ego, Horace Farquhar, one of the most popular men in London, and who was to act as his groomsman during the ceremony.

DRESSES.

The bridal dress of the Princess was of the richest white satin Duchesse, very long, and with a flowing train fastened to the corsage. The skirt was entirely draped with volants of the most magnificent fine point De Gaze, intermixed with garlands of orange flowers. The bodice was of the same kind of satin, cut open in V shape, with a high Medici collar and elbow sleeves of lace. Volants of the latter were also arranged on either side of the V to the waist so as to entirely cover the satin, and were carried over the shoulder, forming a V behind. A train of orange flowers was arranged to fall from the left shoulder to below the right side of the waist. On her head she wore a wreath of orange flowers, with a point DeGaze veil, her coiffure and dress being sprinkled with a quantity of magnificent diamonds. Supporting the bride were eight bridesmaids, the Princesses Victoria and Maud of Wales, the Princesses Victoria and Louise of Schleswig-Holstein, the Princess Victoria of Teck, the Countesses Feodore and Victoria, and Helene of Gleichen. They were all dressed in a lovely shade of blush pink faille, with demi trains of draped crepe de chine, over which were arranged broad moire sashes. The bodices were cut V-shaped, with elbow sleeves, and trimmed with crepe de chine, with bouquets of pink roses at the throat. Each bridesmaid also wore pink roses in her hair. The bridesmaids' eight bracelets were designed by the Princess Louise herself, and consisted of narrow gold bands not much more than a quarter of an inch wide, set with the monogram "L. F." in diamonds, surmounted by a royal crown and an earl's coronet. These are in diamonds, too.

THE WEDDING FEAST.

The guests took luncheon in the supper-room. This spacious apartment, with its dark, highly-polished floor, with the outer wall a glowing mass of solid gold plate, had an entirely royal appearance. A table was arranged around three sides, at which the guests took a champagne luncheon, standing. The bridal party sat down to a wedding breakfast in the main dining-room. The long table had seats for forty. In accordance with custom, two toasts were offered: "Her Majesty the Queen," and the "Bride and Bridegroom." In the absence of the Earl of Latham, the Lord Chamberlain, this duty fell on the Lord Steward, Lord Mount Edgecombe. There were no speeches, but when the second toast was proposed Her Majesty, to the surprise of everybody, rose in her seat at the head of the table, and under the magnificent ceiling of gray and gold, with the portraits of her kingly and queenly predecessors gazing down at her from the north wall, lifted her glass to join in honoring the toast. Her Majesty seemed in a remarkably happy humor throughout all the ceremonies.

GONE TO SHEEN HOUSE.

Between the heavy showers which marked the afternoon the Duke and Duchess of Fife, for so they are gazetted to-day, got into a close carriage and were driven to Sheen House. The Duchess wore a travelling dress white sicilienne of bold outstanding cord, the sides of the skirt very flat and straight, simulating somewhat the directoire coat and trimmed with lace and ostrich feathers. Over this was thrown a magnificent mantle of cream cloth, lined with pink surah. This had a high Medici collar of white and gold passementerie. The bride wore a bonnet of orange blossoms. The newly-wedded couple had an ovation all along the route to their house, near Richmond. On arriving they were enthusiastically welcomed. They passed between files of Venetian masts, decorated with floral festoons. The path was covered with carpet, upon which wild flowers were strewn by girls dressed in white. To-night Mortlake and Richmond, in the vicinity of the Earl of Fife's house, were brilliantly illuminated.

THE TROUSSEAU.

Much parade is made of the claim that this is a very simple wedding, for the reason that both the Queen and the bride wished to avoid ostentation, yet the cost of the bride's trousseau is estimated at $30,000. To make a possible political point this had been ordered from London, Dublin and Edinburgh impartially. Ireland is said to have sent the finest lace ever made in Ireland, while the manufacturers of Scotland laid themselves out to send some of the daintiest of underwear imaginable.

Death of An Admiral.

A London cable says: Admiral Thomas Bailie, of Wyburgh, died yesterday morning at Kelso. The Admiral joined the naval service shortly before the battle of Navarino, in which he took part, being then a lad of 16 years, and for which he received the Navarino medal. During the Crimean war the Admiral commanded the British fleet in the White Sea, and successfully blocaded the Russian fleet. He was an uncle of the present Earl of Haddington, and of Lord Polwarth.

Mrs. Wabash—Did you read about the Stimson scandal in the Bugle this morning? Mrs Lakefront—No; I never read such things. But Mr. Lakefront told me about it. Mrs. Wabash—Some of it was pretty bad, wasn't it? Mrs. Lakefront—Yes, indeed; especially that at the bottom of the third column on the first page.

Dr. McGlynn.

"Base ye call us," cry the people,
Worshippers of ease and gold,
Sordid need, and gross ambition,
Like the base-born slaves of old;
But our hearts have thrilled within us
Hearing of the great and free
Of past ages—holy, just ones—
Sons of light and liberty.

"Give us back Savonarola,
Italy's great priest who died—
Saviour of a slavish people—
He who tyranny defied!
O the flames that wrapped his body
Lightens up the night of Time!
One more herald of the sunrise
In the darkness glows sublime."

"Give them back, those sons of freedom,
Baseness from our midst will flee,
Give Mazzini, Gracchus, Danton,—
We will hear, rise up, be free.
But now is the reign of Mammon,
Only gold is gain:
And we sigh for life's past greatness,
Sigh for it in vain."

O ye deaf ones, O ye blind ones!
Like your sires of old.
Dreamers crying Light has perished,
Freedom's fires grown cold.
Rouse ye from your heavy slumbers,
See! the dawn is here,
Heralds of the coming sunrise
On all sides appear.

Look around you, see the great ones
Throng on every side;
Martyrs in your midst have perished,
Whom ye scorn—deride.
Heroes in your midst have suffered,
Champions of the truth,
Scorning scorn, and hating hatred—
Mammon's reign forsooth.

Hear the great Savonarola,
He has come to earth once more,
And his thrilling voice has echoed
Round the world from shore to shore.
Stronger than all superstitious
Titans in the darkness born—
Strong as life and death, he withers
Baseness with his holy scorn.

Though they hate him, tyrants fear him,
Cower beneath his grave, calm gaze;
From his eyes looks forth undaunted
The great soul of olden days.
Hebrew Daniel and Isaiah,
Sons of God, of Light and Truth;
Rome's unconquerable Gracchi,
Dying for her in their youth;

Earth's strong heroes earth's pure martyrs,
Born to suffer and to save,
Champions ever of the helpless
Sons of toil or hopeless slave;
Leaders in the van of progress—
(Greatness ever is akin),
Room ye giant sons of freedom
For our priest McGlynn!

Picton, Ont.

The Festive Fly.

How are you, friends and fellows, all!
I'm back again, you see;
Come back to pay my summer call,
And frisk awhile with glee.

The music of my vibrant wing
Is heard on every side,
From morn till dewy eve I sing,
And round about I glide.

I love to take my morning stroll
On some bald-headed pate;
I love to jump from mole to mole,
And round and round to skate.

But if perchance my drowsy friend
Has hair upon his head
It makes no matter, I attend
Upon his ear instead.

Oh, what a joy profound it
Is to hear you toss and swear,
While around your head I softly flit
And buzz with not a care.

I love to perch upon your toes,
Half peeping from the sheet;
Upon your nose I love to pose
And fiddle with my feet.

I love to kiss the nectar lips
Of every maiden meek;
I love, between those honeyed sips,
To dally on her cheek.

I love—but I shall have to go,
A furtive hand is nigh.
I'll see you later, as you know,
Until that time good-by!

CURRENT TOPICS

An average of five feet of water is estimated to fall annually over the whole earth, and, assuming that condensation takes place at an average of 3,000 feet, scientists conclude that the force of evaporation to supply such rainfall must equal the lifting of 332,000,000 pounds of water 3,000 feet in every minute, or about 300,000,000 horse-power constantly exerted. Of this prodigious amount of energy thus created, a very small proportion is transferred to the waters that run back through rivers to the sea, and a still smaller fraction is utilized by man; the remainder is dissipated in space.

In an interesting letter to Science H. A. Hasen, of Washington, gives some interesting and valuable particulars respecting the properties and nature of fog. He says it is admitted that fog is simply cloud composed of water, dust or solid minute spheres of water from 1-7000 to 1-1000 of an inch in diameter. Many have supposed that a dust particle must be a nucleus for each sphere, but an examination under the microscope of evaporated fog has proved that such is not the case. Briefly stated, the cause of fog is as follows: It is essential that there be no wind. The sky must be saturated, or nearly so. The formation of fog is a purely mechanical process, unaccompanied by heat.

The journalists who feed the English end of the Atlantic cable have put in a particularly busy week or so. Ordinary gossip has been switched off the wires and nothing below a golden wedding or Royal nuptials has been good enough for these young men to handle. They have fed the public with angel cake and lady fingers until they are getting tired of it. But a rather pretty story about the newly-wedded Princess and her sweetheart will bear repeating. It is said this shy Royal maiden had been soft on the Earl for years; in fact, even before she came out, but she had never told her love. And during these five years the Princess always bought a birthday present for the man she loved, but as she never dared give it to him, the little gift was laid away in a drawer and carefully locked up. This was only a bit of girlish sentiment, but it shows that love—like death—levels all, and shows the Princess is a woman with a heart.

The Dutton Enterprise.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1889.

RAMBLER'S REMARKS.

It is a wonder to me that Dutton is such a lively, go-ahead place as it is. It must be because it is bound to go ahead anyway and nothing can stop it, for a great many of her citizens are slower than molasses in winter time, in everything they do. They are slow in the matter of incorporation, slow in securing fire protection, slow in having the streets sprinkled, slow in all manner of public improvements, slow in going to church and even to their meals, slow at work and in amusements, slow in marrying, slow in dying, and I even venture to say that some will fail to respond on time when the last trump is sounded. But though they may be inclined to move slowly when they do start they get there in earnest, and it would be hard to find a village in Ontario showing more evidences of prosperity at the present day than Dutton.

Rambler has heard considerable talk about the two new crossings which have just been laid on Main street, some being of the impression that it was too bad to put so much money in two crossings so close together—others, of course, arguing differently. Seriously speaking, however, the money might have been spent to far better advantage in improving the streets than in putting in two expensive crossings where one would have answered all the requirements. Gravel is needed on our streets badly, and there are other street crossings which needed repairs just as bad as those. However the crossings are now in—and good, substantial ones they are—and if things are not as they should be the pathmasters and council will have to fight it out.

During my absence from town I have quite lost track of the questions lately under discussion, but I presume that nothing has been done towards securing a system of fire protection, as I heard of another dwelling being burned down for the lack of means of saving it. Some of these days Dutton will have another big fire and our citizens will wake up to the necessity of securing some protection against the ravages of the fire fiend.

Chancing to stray along the shady avenues of our southern suburb, Odorville—sometimes improperly designated S——ktown—I was much surprised to note the many improvements which have been lately made and now under way in that promising burg. It is holding its own with the north side in the number of new dwellings erected this year and bids fair to become the favorite spot for residences in the near future.

It is a pity that the business men on Main street did not make arrangements early in the year to have the street sprinkled during the summer months. Many dollars worth of damage has been done to goods this season and much inconvenience caused to everyone by the clouds of stifling dust which have been continually arising.

The New York Evening World will present the mother who has the greatest number of living children with a $100 gold certificate, while those mothers who come second and third in the list will receive respectively $50 and a double eagle. The offer is not open to Canadian mothers, but the parents of average-sized families may content themselves with the reflection that it is quality, not quantity, that is going to tell in the next generation.

Reactionaries in China are likely to gain a victory for old-established custom and Mongolian Conservatism unless Viceroy Li recovers very rapidly from his illness and manages to successfully counteract their machinations. A strong party of influential noblemen has succeeded in forcing the young Emperor to forbid further operations on the Tien-tsin-Kaiping railroad to Pekin. Proposals sent in for rails and cross ties have been rejected and the loan offered by the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank has been refused. The reactionary combination is said to possess more strength, organization and respectability than anything of the kind which has been known in China for many years.

The widow of a commercial traveller who was lost in the Johnstown flood has entered suit for $50,000 against the South Forks Hunting and Fishing Club. All success attend her. With reverence be it spoken, here is an object of prayer to the Almighty to which all believers in the efficacy of earnest petitions may very well devote themselves. Jehovah has proclaimed himself as the God of the widow and the orphan. Will He not then be likely to hear prayers uttered in earnest faith on behalf of a widow who is seeking justice against the selfish plutocrats who despoiled her of her home and wrecked her happiness. The prayers of men and women everywhere, we say, attend this suit, and may the God of Righteousness who judges in this earth give the widow the desire of her heart in this matter. And may her success encourage others to follow her example with results to themselves that are equally satisfactory.

O na speuraibh teachd dlu oirn,
Clacha-meallain 's gaoth thuathach,
Mar luaidhe is mar fhudar.

'N uair sheideas e anail,
Cha 'n fhag anam am fluran;
Tha 'bheillin mar shiosar,
Lomadh lios do gach ur-ros:
Cha bhi sgeadach air coille,
No doire nach ruisg e;
No sruthan nach tachd e,
Fuidh' leachdanna du'-ghorm.

Fead reota a chleibhe,
Tha seideadh na doinionn,
A chuir beirm ann san fhairge,
'S a dh' at' garbh i na tonnaibh;
S a bhinntich an clamhuin,
Air airde gach monaidh,
'S ghlan sgur e na reultan,
D' ar peile le'n solus.

Tha gach beathach is duine,
Nach d' ullaich 'na sheasain,
Ga 'n sgiursa' le gaillinn
Gun talla' gun eudach:
'S an dream a bha gniomhach,
'Fas iorgolt mi-dheirceil:
Nach d'thoir iasad do'n leisgean,
Ann san t-sneachda ged eug e.

Tha 'n seillein 's an seangan,
A bha tional an storais,
Le gliocas gun mhearchd,
A'toirt aire do'n doruinn:
'G ithe bidh 's ag ol meala,
Gun ghainne air lon ac,
Fuidh' dhion ann san talamh,
O anail an reota.

Na cuileaga ciatach,
'Bha diomhain san t samhradh,
'S na gathanaibh greine.
Gu h-eibhinn a dannsa;
Gun deasach 'gun churam,
Roi' dhuldachd a gheamhraidh:
Tha 'd a nise a' basuch',
Ann sgach aite le teanntachd.

Ach eisd rium a shean-duin'
'S tuig an samhladh tha 'm stori',
Tha 'm bas a teachd teann ort,
Sud an geamhradh tha 'm oran:
'S ma gheibh e thu d' leisgein,
Gun deasach' fa' chomhail,
Cha dean aithreachas criche,
Do dhionadh o'n doruinn.

Gur mithidh fas diaghidh,
'S do chiabhan air glasadh,
'Na bearnaibh do dheudach,
Is d' eudan air casadh;
Do bhathais air rusgahd,
'S do shuilean air prabadh,
Agus croit ort air lubadh,
Chum na h-uire do leaba'.

Tha na sruthana craobhach,
'Bha sgaoileadh a' d' bhallaibh.
Gu mireagach buailteach,
Clis gluasadach tana;
A nise air traoghadh
O n' taomachadh thairis,
O'n a ragaich 'sa dh' fhuaraich
Teas uabhair na fala.

Balgseididh na beatha,
Tha air caitheadh gun fheum ann,
'S o chrup ann a' d' chliabh e,
Gur h-e phian bhi 'ga sheideadh:
Tha 'n corp a chruit chiuil ud,
Air diulta' dhuit gleusadh;
'S comhar cinnt' air a thasgaidh,
Bhi lasach' a theudan.

Theich maduinn na h-oige,
Is treoir mheadhon latha
Tha 'm feasgar air ciaradh,
'S tha ghrian ort a luidhe:
'S mu bha thusa diomhain,
Gun ghniomh is gun mhaitheas;
Gu h-ealamh bi d' dhusgadh,
Mu'n duinear ort flaitheas.

Reir caithe na beatha,
'S tric leatha gun crioch i;
Bidh an cleachda fas laidir,
Do-fashach o'n inntinn:
Na labhair an sean-fhocal,
'S deimhin leam 's fior e,
"An car theid san t-sean-mhaid'
"Gur h-ainmic leis direadh."

Ach oganaich threibhich
Thoirs' eisdeachd dom' oran,
S leig dhiot bhi mi-cheillidh,
Ann an ceitein na h-oige:
Tha aois agus ea-slaint,
Air do dheidh ann an toir ort;
'S mu ni n-aon aca greim ort,
Pillidh d' aiobhneas gu bron duit.

An aois a ta 'n toir ort;
Bheir i leon ort nach saoil thu;
Air do shuilibh bheir ceathach,
Is treabhuidh i d' aodan:
Bheir i crith reo'dh mu d, ghruaig,
Is neul uaine an aoig leis,
'S cha d' thig aiteamh na grian ort,
'Bheir an liath-reo'dh a chaoidh' dhiot.

Bheir na's measa na sud ort,
Failinn tuigs' agus reusain;
Dith leirsinn a' d' inntinn;
Dith cuimhn' agus geire;
Dith gliocais chum gnothaich;
Dith mothaich a'd' cheufai'n:
'S gu'm fas thu mar leanabh,
Dhith spionnaidh is ceille.

Fasnidh 'n cridhe neo-aithreach,
'S neo-ealamh chum tionndadh,
Aon tagra' cha druigh air,
'S cha lub e d'a ionnsuidh:
Ceart mar tha 'n talamh.
'N am gaillin is teanndachd;
Ged robh miltean 'dol thairis,
Cha dean aile sa' chausair.

Faic seasain na bliadhna,
'S dean ciall uaith a tharuing:
'S mas aill leat gu'm buain thu,
Dean ruadhar 'san earrach;
Dean connadh san t-samhradh,
Ni sa' gheamhradh do gharadh;
'S ma dhibreas tu 'n seasain,
Dhuit 's eigin bhi falamh.

'S mar cuir thu siol fallain,
Ann an earrach, na h-oige,
Co chinnte 's am bas duit,
Cuiridh Satan droch phor ann;
A dh' fhasas 'ra dhubhailc,
'S 'na luidheanna feolmhor:
'S bidh do bhuain mar a chuir thu,
Ma's subhailc no do-bheirt.

Ma bhios d' oige gun riaghladh,
'S d' anamianna gun taod riu,
Gum fas iad co fiadhaich,
S nach srian thu ri d' aois iad:
Am meangan nach sniomh thu,
Cha spion thu 'na chraoibh e;
Mar shineas e gheugan,
Bidh a fhreumhan a' sgaoileadh.

Tha do bheatha neo-chinnteach
O 'n teinn a bheir bas ort,
Uime sin bi ri dichioll
Do shith dheanamh trathail:
'S e milleadh gach cuise
Bhi gun churam cur dail innt';
'Sionann aithreachas criche,
'S bhi cur sil mu Fheill-martuinn.

Tha ghrian ann sna speuraibh
A' ruith reise gach latha;
'S i 'giorrach' do shaoghail,
Gach oidhche a luidheas:
'S dlu ruitheas an spala,
Troi' shnath'naibh do bheatha:
Tha' fitheadh dhuit leine,
'Ni beisdean a chaitheamh.

S' ma ghoideas e dlu ort,
Gun do dhuil bhi r'a thigheachd;
'N sin fosglaidh do shuilean,
'S chi thu chuis thar a naithidh;
Bidh do choguis 'ga d' phianadh,
Mar scian ann a d' chridhe;
'S co-ionann a giulan,
'S luidhe ruisgt' ann an scitheach.

Faic a chuileag 'ga diteadh
Le sionntaibh an naduir,
'S o dhibir i 'n seasain,
Gur h-eigin di basuich':
Faic gliocas an t seangain,
Na thional co trathail,
'S dean eseimpleir leanailt,
Chum d' anam a shabhal'.

CHOW-CHOW.

Tramps are much like cheap calicoes. They wont wash, but will run.

Milburn's Aromatic Quinine Wine is distinctly superior to any other as an appetising tonic and fortifier.

You can't bring up a child in the right way unless you happen to be travelling that way yourself.

Regulate the liver and bowels by the judicious use of National Pills, they are purely vegetable.

Rev. Primrose—Do you know where you will go if you do these naughty things? Yes, sir—go to bed.

CROWNED OR UNCROWNED.

THE head of anyone suffering from constipation, biliousness or dyspepsia will harbor a sick headache. By regulating the bowels, arousing the torpid liver, improving digestion and purifying the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters banishes sick headache no matter how severe or obstinate it may be.

A number of Washington reporters are going to engage in a walking match. After they get on the track they won't be able to remember whether they are going to a fire or after their salaries.

If you wish long life keep your Stomach and Bowels regular. Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters will do it. Safe. A baby may take them. Try one bottle, 50 cents, all druggists.

In the intelligence office.—I am afraid that I shall not be willing to trust my baby to so small a girl." Clerk.—"Oh, madam, her size is her best recommendation! If she drops the baby, it won't have so far to fall.

Your druggist is authorized to refund you the money if Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters do not benefit any case of Dyspepsia, Kidney or Liver Complaint. All Druggists. 50 cents.

The crow-bar may feel a pardonable pryed in its work.

SAFE AND RELIABLE.

I HIGHLY recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for curing cholera, cholera morbus, colic, cramps, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all summer complaints. It is safe and reliable for children and older persons.

MISS HILEY BNECKENRIDGE,
Heyworth, Que.

Bordering on the Miraculous—Mr. W. A. Sherwood, of Stanwood, Michigan, was a sufferer from Kidney Complaints for four years, he was totally unfit for work, tried all the local doctors, took "cures" by the dozen, two bottles of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters made a new man of him.

"Blood is thicker than water," merrily hummed a mosquito as he rose from a pond and made a bee line for a fair maiden's face.

Freeman's Worm Powders destroy and remove worms without injury to adult or infant.

When real estate gets a boom a sail is naturally suggested.

THE OKLAHAMA BOOM

FORMS an instance of a rush for an uncertainty, which is just the opposite of the steady boom enjoyed by Burdock Blood Bitters. Buyers of this medicine get a certainty—an unequalled remedy for all diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and the blood.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

Farm Accounts.

It becomes more and more apparent to a thoughtful person that one great reason for the disastrous result of many a farmer's calculations is that he keeps no account of his daily receipts and expenses. He slips along in an easy hap-hazard sort of way year after year, never knowing how much he owns or how much he owes till the officer of the law figures it out—nothing. The farmer has a business as much as the grocer or merchant with whom he trades, and there is no good reason why it should not be conducted with the same care.

No good business man would risk living a year without being able at some time to tell the exact financial position of his affairs; but how many of our farmers can do it?

One says he hasn't enough to pay to do anything about it. We would like to have him tell why if a farm is small why it shouldn't be made to pay as much as possible; and it certainly can be made to pay better if accounts are kept of all that is expended on it and returned from it, so that comparisons can be made to determine what he has done that is most profitable and what is most hazardous and uncertain. Perhaps he has been guessing at it for years. let him now keep an accurate account one year, and see how near the truth he has been in his guesses. Our word for it, he will be surprised at the facts in some instances.

No matter if the transactions are few they cannot be correctly kept in the mind, and it is necessary for the smallest farmer to keep strict account of his business as for the wholesale merchant.

Some men think they will not care to see in the future just how they got their money or for what they spent it; but in this case there is clearly something wrong with the man. They must "prefer darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Let them get their money honestly and spend it honorably, and their account books will be the least of their troubles. But far the greatest number think they have no time for bookkeeping, and that is one of the fine arts of which they know nothing. There is nothing complicated or mysterious about it if one can write and reckon, and most men can.

Commence each year with a general statement of the value of all property, the amount due from others and the amount of cash on hand. Then a few minutes each evening are all that are needed to record the receipt or expenditure of every cent that is represented in the day's business. Then by comparing inventories year by year one can readily see which was the most profitable year and why; which was the most profitable crop, and why; what expenses can be increased or diminished, and regulate accordingly.

If those who have never done so would keep an account for a few years they would never count the time lost when compared with their losses when they change their butter, apples, potatoes and eggs at the store for flour, sugar, soda and spices, without any knowledge of the prices entered by the grocer on his books—no knowledge until the long bill (that he had not time to look over), with the balance on the wrong side, is carried home receipted, and his wife discovers, too late, that he has been charged with various articles that he never bought, and that the credit total is a marvellously small amount. He will have rectified many of his old mistakes when other affairs of the farm were carried on in the same loose, careless way, and so thoughtlessly that he never knew why his plans failed so often. He will have begun to think, and that is what he ought to do. He will keep his accounts in self defence if for no other reason.

"That man," said a grocer to me one day, designating a customer just driving away from the store, "has scales at home and he will weigh everything he has bought, from the bags of meal to the pound of tea." It is needless to add that that man never got short weight or small measure. This was only one of the benefits derived from the influence of his account book on others. Men with whom he had dealings knew he had it, that he would know the quantity that he bought and the prices, and they respected him for it.

This is not close or small dealing, it is simply honesty; and a man shows as much lack of principle in allowing himself to be cheated when he can prevent it as well as not, as he does in cheating others. What would be thought of the man who, wishing to plant a straight furrow of corn, trusted to his ability to do so without any guide and with half-closed eyes? About as straight as that row of corn is a man's track through life who keeps no accounts, and he comes as near the goal—competence—as the other did to the opposite side of the field from which he started. It may be easier to say to keep out of debt than to do so, but keeping the farm account is one of the surest means to that end.

Postoffice Rules.

1. If you ask for mail and are told there is none, say there ought to be; then go home and send the rest of the family at different times through the day.

2. Don't bring your letters to the office until the mail closes, then curse the postmaster for not opening the bag and putting your letters in.

3. When you want a stamp on your letter, tell the postmaster to put it on, if he don't do it thrash him; in case you put it on yourself, hold it to your mouth long enough to remove the mucilage; it will then stop on until its dry.

4. If you have a box, stand and drum on it until the postmaster hands out your mail; it makes him feel good, especially when he is waiting on somebody.

5. Start for your mail when you hear the train whistle; you will then have a good time waiting for it, and can say:—"How slow that postmaster is."

TIMELY WISDOM.

TIMELY wisdom is shown by those who keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry on hand. It has no equal for cholera, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, dysentery, colic, cramps and all other summer complaints or loosening of the bowels.

A drunken north countryman, returning from a fair, fell asleep by the roadside, where a pig found him and began licking his mouth. Sawney roared out, "Wha's kissin' me noo? Ye see what it is to be weel liket amang the lassies."

THREE YEARS IN BED.

GENTLEMEN, I tried your Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and was perfectly cured from sickness. I was sick in bed for three years and after taking six bottles was perfectly cured, and now I would not be without the medicine in the house. MISS EDMYRA FULLER,

Re-Opening of the West Lorne Methodist Church.

The re-opening services in connection with the above church were held on Sunday, Aug. 11th. Rev. Wm. McDonagh, of London, President of the Conference, preached two eloquent and appropriate sermons at 11 a. m. and 7. p. m., and Rev. W. W. Shepherd, of Muncey, chairman of the district, delivered an excellent sermon at 2.30 p. m. The services were largely attended and the collections were magnificient, amounting to $87. On Monday evening a large crowd assembled in the church to hear the Rev. Jas. Graham, of Ridgetown, deliver his celebrated lecture on "Edmund Burke—a Model for Politicians." In the absence of Amasa Wood, Esq., of St. Thomas, who was announced to take the chair, the pastor, Rev. C. T. Scott, filled the position admirably. After calling the rev. gentlemen present—Revs. Francis, of Rodney; Scott, of Belmont; Bristol, of Rodney, and Carey, of West Lorne—to the platform, Rev. Mr. Francis led in prayer and a short programme of music, etc., was given. Rev. E. E. Scott, of Belmont, brother of the pastor, rendered "Calvary's Stream is Flowing," with guitar accompaniment, also an instrumental selection on the guitar most acceptably; Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Tremeer, of Dutton, rendered two duets, "Rock of Ages," and "The Golden Gate," in their usual excellent style; Miss Maggie Spencer's two solos, "The Old Pastor's Story" and "The Model Church," were exceedingly well rendered. The chairman in a few remarks introduced the lecturer of the evening, and for an hour and a half the audience listened to one of the best prepared and delivered lectures ever given in the vicinity. Edmund Burke seemed to be a hobby of the rev. gentleman, and he did the subject justice, fully meriting the praise given by the chairman. At the conclusion the lecturer was tendered a hearty vote of thanks. The financial statement in connection with the improvements on the church was then read, showing the work to have cost about $1,200, of which sum there still remained $400 to be paid. Rev. Mr. Scott thought this amount might easily be raised and called for contributions, the sum of $175 being subscribed in a few minutes and the most of it paid in. The Methodists of West Lorne are to be congratulated upon the success of the re-opening services and on the fine church which they have, at a moderate cost, fitted up for their use. The church has been veneered vith brick, new stained glass windows put in, a new tower put on and the edifice handsomely papered and painted. Amasa Wood, Esq., has signified his intention of adding to his subscription of $200 by furnishing a 400 lb. bell, to be placed in the tower at an early date.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began takirg Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

THE MAYBRICK TRIAL

Plenty of Arsenic Discovered in the Wife's Room.

WHAT THE AUTOPSY SHOWED.

Arsenic in the Liver and Kidneys—Bottles Full of it—Handkerchiefs Soaked with it.

A London cable says: The trial of Mrs. Florence Maybrick began at Liverpool to-day. The case attracts considerable attention here. The first witness was Michael Maybrick, brother of the deceased. His testimony was of little account against the prisoner. Edwin Maybrick, another brother, said his brother had never taken arsenic as a medicine. Mrs. Briggs, a friend of the Maybrick family, testified to finding several bottles in Maybrick's room. These she gave to the police. Two chemists said they sold arsenic fly paper to Mrs. Maybrick. The general impression is that Mrs. Maybrick has an even chance of acquittal. Her lawyer is Sir Charles Russell.

A Liverpool cable of Friday night says Two days of fixed attention through long hours of intense anxiety and scorching atmospheric heat have not been without their effect upon all concerned in the Maybrick trial. Generally a jaded air was apparent when the court sat again at the usual hour this morning. The experiences of the last few days have told heavily upon the prisoner, who as she wearily ascended the steps of the dock this morning was observed to be extremely pale and thin. The female warder, who hitherto had sat at some distance at the side of the dock, this morning drew her chair nearer to the prisoner, as though to be in readiness should her assistance be required by the unhappy woman. The court-room was crowded, and many fashionably dressed women were present. It was noticeable that the opera glasses, which on the first two days of the trial were somewhat disagreeably prominent, were conspicuously absent.

The first incident to excite animated interest was a rather startling admission of Dr. Richard Humphrey, the family medical man, who attended the deceased throughout his last illness, and with whose cross-examination by Sir Charles Russell the day's proceedings began, that had the deceased died on Wednesday, May 8th, he would have been prepared to give a certificate to the effect that death had been caused by acute congestion of the stomach, either gastritis or gastromenteritis.

The testimony given by Dr. Carter was also important. Dr. Carter is a physician of high standing in Liverpool. He declared without hesitation that the cause of death was arsenical poison, and no effort of Sir Charles Russell could induce him to admit that the death and subsequent appearance could be due to anything else.

Soon after noon the prisoner showed signs that the severe trial she was undergoing was producing symptoms of exhaustion. A glass of water, however, served to revive her, and she subsequently appeared to take more interest in the proceedings. Dr. Carter's emphatic assurance that the cause of death was arsenical poisoning and nothing else evidently produced a great impression upon all in the court, and it was noticeable that Sir Charles Russell treated this witness with more than ordinary consideration, and did not attempt to challenge his dictum otherwise than by suggesting that acute inflammation might have been caused by impure food.

What may be termed the sensation of the day was reserved for the analyst, Mr. Edward Davies, to contribute. Mr. Davies produced a lady's dressing gown and apron, said to belong to Mrs. Maybrick, and to have been found in her dressing-room. Upon it were stains, which Mr. Davies unhesitatingly pronounced to be arsenic. and he stated that the pockets were similarly stained. This piece of evidence, which was completely new, served to directly connect the prisoner in a personal manner with the use of arsenic in some form. This created intense excitement in the court. It was noticed that beyond a slight twitching of the hands the prisoner betrayed no perceptible emotion at the revelation. Amongst the various articles in which Mr. Davies stated that he discovered arsenic were the meat juice handed to him by Dr. Carter, the lady's handkerchief, three bottles, one almost full of arsenic, found in a chocolate box; a glass containing a handkerchief soaked in milk, in which was altogether upwards of 450 grains of arsenic; a sealed packet labelled poison for cats, which contained arsenic; a jug which had contained food taken to the office, and a bottle containing glycerine found in the lavatory. He had also found arsenic in some deposits from the lavatory, drain and sinks. Mr. Davies said he found arsenic in the liver and intestines of the deceased, but not in stomach or spleen. Passing to some fly papers which had been supplied to him, and which were of the same kind as those already referred to as being found in the washstand, he said they contained between two and three grains of arsenic each in the form of arsenite of potassium and arsenious acid. In the kidney he found about a hundredth part of a grain of arsenic; in the liver the equivalent of one-eighth of a grain at least, probably more. He could detect no arsenic in the pelvis nor in the lungs and heart. In cross-examination Sir Charles Russell took the witness carefully through the results of his various analyses, and in the course of the proceedings Mr. Davies produced the test tubes containing the preparations from the viscera, in which the arsenic was visible in the form of microscopic crystals adhering like film to the sides of the tubes. The case looks black for Mrs. Maybrick.

Art of Smiling.

Lessons in the art of smiling have been recorded of ancient times, and as an elegant accomplishment the art of smiling gracefully in just the right degree deserves consideration. Many persons open the mouth too widely, and the process recommended by a writer on beauty is "a sweet and gentle smile, where the mouth hardly opens, the cheek dimples slightly and the lower lip just conceals the ends of the upper teeth."

—The man who ought to listen and learn usually does most of the talking.

A GRIM RECEPTION.

Britain's Naval Display in Honor of Emperor William.

HE MEETS HER MAJESTY.

A last Friday night's Portsmouth cable gives the following graphic account of the reception of Emperor William in England that day:

Out in the channel lay thirty of England's warships, in three long parallel lines, streaching down the reach. Seaward were ranged 112 vessels of war, carrying 23,000 men. They were a most imposing sight collectively, a most impressive sight individually. For hours before the big ships of Germany arrived to greet and pass them they were the objects of great interest to all kinds of craft approaching as near to them as the black-lipped scowls of heavy cannon made them feel inclined. They were perfectly harmless, of course, and not the safest things in the world to go to sea in, some of them. But they had to-day a surly, don't-come-too-near-me-look that kept the cheapest excursion steamers at a distance. Inspected closely these great castles of floating metal, with black hulls and yellow upper works, really looked all the millions they have cost. They were in all the styles of naval architecture which have resulted from constant changes of the last thirty years. They were shapeless and shapely, symmetrical and the reverse. Some of them were decked in and others displayed an amount of complex hamper in the upper works that would disappear into shoe strings early in an engagement. There were iron hulls and steel hulls, simple, compound and triple expansion engines, single screws and twin screws, steel faced armour and compound armour broadside and central battery ships, barbettes and monitors. Every vessel represented a lot of new facts in plating, propulsion and armament that required a liberal education to comprehend, and a close study of several sciences to grasp. But they all looked excessively injurious to a foreign power, and had a capacity to do harm that was intelligible to the worst info med amateur at sea. Long, lean, black cannons peeped from the portholes, stuck out of grey iron sponsons, projected from turrets, or lay prone upon the barbettes. Lines of marines in red coats stood with their rifles perpendicular on the decks; solitary sentries in red coats paced the sides and walked the bridges. Brilliantly dressed officers in gold-laced caps, dark blue coats, gold braid, white trousers and patent leather shoes were on every deck. With them were lady guests in dresses of white, pink and pale blue, perched among the cannon like canaries in a gun shop, lending to the picture a touch of feminine frivolity in strong contrast with the deadly portent of their surroundings.

THE GERMAN SQUADRON.

At a quarter to 4 the little German band of ironclads were descried, hull down on the horizon, but rapidly came into complete view under a full head of steam. As they came nearer and nearer it was seen that the Hohenzollern, a black screw yacht seemingly about the size of the Osborne, but looking like a pigmy in front of the big black warships behind it, was flying the German royal standard at the main and the white English ensign at the fore. The German royal standard is a beautiful flag, with a black iron cross in the centre and four black eagles on gold ground.

As the Hohenzollern passed the lightship the German ensign of blue bars on white ground broke out at the fore of the Osborne, and the English ensign came fluttering down. Instantly the same thing took place all along the line of the fleet, the red and white of England giving place to the blue and white of Prussia. On the bridge of the Hohenzollern stood Emperor William in a cocked hat and the uniform of an admiral of the German navy. Beside him were Count Herbert Bismarck and Prince Henry of Prussia, also in cocked hats and dark blue uniforms, all three being heavily ornamented with gold braid and bullion fringe. The Hohenzollern came up abreast of the Osborne, the bridge of the latter being occupied by the Royal party. There was much fluttering of hands and nodding of heads between the Royal reception party and the Royal guest, and then the German fleet thundered out a salute of 21 guns, their salute to the Royal English standard. The effect, though small in comparison with the noise that followed, was a very striking one. Flashes of light and columns of smoke broke from the sides of the big floating batteries, and the smoke rose in clouds to envelop them, big white wreaths of it curling away up into the sky. The German fleet included the Baden, Sachsen, Oldenburg, Irene, Wacht, Kaiser, Deutschland, Friedrich der-Grosse, the Preussen Zeiten, and the despatch boat Grief. They were joined at Cowes by the German training ship Niobe. By the Emperor's order each of the big black iron-clads, as it came up to enter the long waterway of ships, had its sides dressed with sailors in white, a human decoration of the neatest and most ship-shape character. As the two royal yachts came abreast of the Anson and Rodney, the former flying the flag of Rear-Admiral D'Arcy Irvine, C.B., and the latter the flag of Rear-Admiral Tracy, the fleet saluted. There was such a roar of powder, such a thunder of noise, such clouds of smoke and such flashes of fire, that it is no wonder that the peaceful Shah of Persia grew ill over the experience. Bang mingled with bang, and salvo toppled over sonorously upon salvo, until it seemed as if the whole channel was being blown up with seventy ships firing 21 guns each as fast as the regulations permitted. The spectacle was one that no real battle could match. The ships were half concealed in clouds of smoke, and there was one mass of blue wreaths and rings. The smoke cleared and the manning of the ships became visible. Every ironclad that had no yards to man manned the sides. Those with yards presented a solid human rigging of blue jackets in the shrouds, on the yards and at the mast heads. It was a beautiful sight. On ship after ship, down the long line, on either side, the blue jackets were as immobile as if they felt to the full the importance of the occasion and the whole responsibility of the welcome was upon them.

THE ROYAL MEETING.

Almost immediately a launch put out from the Osborne, bearing the Prince of Wales and his suite. They were received on the quarter deck of the Hohenzollern by the German Emperor, and the Prince of Wales and the Emperor shook hands. Just as the Emperor landed the German squadron, at anchor between Ryde Bank and Mother Bank, saluted the Royal Standard floating from the palace at Osborne. The thunder of twenty-one guns from each announced to Her Majesty that her guest had arrived—rather a royal way of knocking at the door. Carriages awaited the party. The Emperor and Prince and Princess of Wales took the first. As night was falling over the waters and the lights were coming out on the warships, the Emperor of Germany and King of Prussia was received and greeted in the doorway of the palace by his royal grandmother, Her Majesty the Queen.

VANITY OF VANITIES.

Suicide of a Brooklyn Belle at a Summer Resort.

A Syracuse, N.Y., despatch says: Miss Lillian Dumont, of No. 284 St. James place, Brooklyn, committed suicide Tuesday night by hanging herself with her corset laces in a toilet-room of the hotel at Glenhaven, a summer resort on Skaneateles lake. She had attended a ball at the Glen that night and seemed in the best of spirits. Leaving the ball room about midnight, she went to the place where she was found dead some hours later. No cause is assigned for the deed, but it is hinted that she had been disappointed in love.

Miss Dumont was between 20 and 21 years of age, a girl of loveliness of person and of charming manners. Her father and mother are said to be people of prominence in Brooklyn, where Mr. Dumont at one time was rated a very wealthy man. At present the family occupy one of the handsomest residences in that city. Charles Dumont, a brother of the suicide, has been a well-known visitor to Glenhaven, and a leader in its summer festivities. Miss Dumont, has always been especially gay, was exceedingly popular with the young people there, and was seemingly extracting all the pleasure possible out of her life when she elected to end it.

Notes from Scotland.

The Duke of Portland has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Caithness, in room of the late Earl of Caithness.

The First Lord of the Treasury has declined to place the widow of Mr. James Grant, the Scotch novelist and historical writer, on the civil list. She is 62 years of age and totally unprovided for.

The library of the Writers to the Signet in Edinburgh is about to undergo internal alterations so as to make room for about 20,000 additional volumes. There are at present about 82,000 volumes in the library.

The Queen has appointed Rev. Henry Cowan, D.D., minister of New Greyfriars, Edinburgh, to be Professor of Divinity and Church History in the University of Aberdeen, in room of the late Professor Christie.

Mr. John Hutchison, sculptor, Edinburgh, has completed the memorial ordered by the Queen to commemorate the Royal Stewarts who lie buried in the grounds of Paisley Abbey. The memorial is in the form of a recumbent sculptured cross, in style similar to those which are to be met with in the Western Isles. It will have a base 8 feet by 4 feet, of polished Peterhead granite.

The British Government, while the Local Government Bills for Scotland were in committee, practically conceded free education to Scotland, as it agreed to increase the grant to about a quarter of a million sterling, which will be nearly, if not quite, sufficient to meet the school fees for education in all the five standards. It has therefore been resolved that after October 1st no School Board in Scotland will charge school fees.

The Late Dr. J. G. Holland, he eminent writer and physician, wrote and published in Scribner's Magazine: "It is a fact that many of the best proprietary medicines of the day are more successful than many physicians, and most of them are first discovered, and used in actual medical practice. When, however, any shrewd person knowing their virtue, forseeing their popularity, secures and advertises them, then, in the opinion of the bigoted, all virtue went out of them.' The late Dr. Dio Lewis, in speaking of Warner's Safe Cure, says: "If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble, I would use your preparation." Dr. R. A. Gunn, M.D., author of "Gunn's New Improved Handbook of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," says: "I am willing to acknowledge and commend thus frankly the value of Warner's Safe Cure." The celebrated Dr. Thompson of the University of the city of New York, says: "More adults are carried off by chronic kidney disease than by any other one malady except consumption."

Accommodating on Both Sides.

Voice from up-stairs—Tell the burglar to go away, Mr. Jenkins, there's nothing for him to get in this house.

Mr. Jenkins (with a revolver at his head)—Yes, my dear. I did tell him so, and he says he is going in a minute.

The Old, Old Story.

"Did you know that McLysander had become a resurrectionist?"

"What for, some medical college?"

"No; he is compiling jokes for an almanac."

Editor Stead, of Pall Mall Gazette fame, will soon set sail for the United States in order to get a few ideas on the American style of journalism. On his return he is to take charge of a new Radical halfpenny morning paper for London. The money for the enterprise was all raised last week.

NOT A FAIR CRITERION.

Is marriage, then, I said to her,
A failure, do you think?
A warm, sweet smile was in her eyes,
Which flashed a cunning wink.
She answered as she gave my arm
A delicate caress:
"If it's like courtship, don't you think,
'Twould be a grand success?"

—"False won!" cried the young man who bet that his girl's teeth were her own and lost.

—There is a good deal of difference between the scum and the upper crust, though both are at the top.

TERROR AT CHICAGO.

A Mad Horse Runs Amuck Through the Crowded Streets.

A Chicago despatch says: A horse with all the symptoms of hydrophobia ran amuck on Robie street yesterday afternoon and was finally killed beneath the shadow of the Moody tent at Milwaukee avenue. No tiger of the jungle could have created more of a sensation or shown a more serious desire to exterminate man and beast. Two men were bitten and eight horses torn by the teeth of the maddened animal. A thousand people joined in the hunt to destroy the brute. For two hours they chased up and down the streets and alleys, pursuing and pursued. Four policemen with Lieut. Penzen joined the crowd. Shortly after noon Mr. Erickson attempted to hitch his horse to his meatmarket waggon in front of his store. The animal was of gentle disposition, small, and without a trick or vicious habit. When the horse was led from the barn he showed signs of anger. Suddenly, throwing back his ears, he sunk his teeth in Erickson's arm, and, rearing, struck at his master with his fore feet. Erickson dropped the halter and the horse chased his master into the shop. The beast put men, women and children to flight. He charged at everyone he chanced to meet or overtake. In rushing after three women and several children he ran over two little girls, knocking them down, but only slightly bruising them. The others escaped, one of the women climbing a fence, and the others with the screaming children, ran up the steps and into the door of a house. When nearing North avenue, Conductor Duffy, of the North avenue line, stepped off his car and caught hold of the animal's halter. He supposed he was simply a runaway horse. The animal made a vicious snap at him, catching his right hand with his teeth and taking out skin and flesh. The conductor left go of the halter and jumped on the car, the horse biting and striking at him. As the horse went down Milwaukee avenue he ran at everything he saw, and took a fancy for attacking his own kind. Every horse he passed, and there were eight of them, he nipped in the sides, and tore large pieces of hide from the ribs of some. Others he caught where he could, but always left the mark of his teeth. The animals thus injured in turn became demoralized and added to the excitement. The police finally drove the horse from the street into a vacant lot where he was lassoed and shot. Conductor Duffy's hand, which was terribly torn, was immediately cauterized. He and his family are in an agony of fright as to the results that may follow. He is in great pain. Mr. Erickson called in a physician and had his wound dressed. He thinks the horse was bitten by a mad dog two weeks ago.

Threatened Trouble in Zanzibar.

A London cable of Thursday says: Bushiri has sent a threatening message to the inhabitants of Bagamoyo and the neighborhood, forbidding them to supply the Germans with provisions. He is believed to be coming down with one quick firing gun, which is supposed to have been captured from the German station at Opwapwa, and he announces his intention to attack Bagamoyo. Fever is prevalent there, and among the fleet. The English are apparently suffering the most. On the Agamemnon alone 80 are sick, including 7 officers, out of a total complement of 400. The deck has been transformed into a hospital, and hammocks have been slung everywhere.

—A Jersey City policeman having offered his hand to a young lady, which was refused, he arrested her. "What is the charge?" asked the sergeant at the station house. "Resisting an offer, sir," was the reply.

A sign-post in the Highlands of Scotland reads: "Persons wishing to use this road will give notice to the gamekeeper in case they may be shot."

She raised her eyes; his cause was won—
A maid of sterling sense was she.
He clasped her to his manly breast,
And now a married man is he.

"What's the matter, driver?" said a passenger in a herdic, "why doesn't this coach go?" "'Cause you ain't put a nickel in the slot, that's why." And all the other passengers tittered.

ALE OF THE GAS.

How sweet to roam by the sad sea waves,
While no cares your mind harass,
And what joy to think, as you watch the stars
That you're paying no bill for gas!

But, oh, what grief when you travel home
And the meter your sad eyes meet!
You find that the cook has been holding "soirees"
And has burned ten million feet!

—The Shah, on meeting the Chief Secretary the other day, asked plumply: "Are you going to give Ireland Home Rule?" and Mr. Balfour, every whit as plumply, replied: "Certainly not!"

MANITOBA MATTERS.

Improving Crop Prospects—A Northwest Jack-the-Ripper—A Mock Marriage.

The body of an unknown man has been found, murdered after Jack-the-Ripper fashion, in the Louise River.

Frank Moritz, a farmer, living a few miles from Gretna, spent Monday in town and imbibed freely. When he returned home in the evening he turned his hired men, four in number—Germans lately from the old country—out of doors. Later on the men returned to the house, Moritz promising to allow them peaceful admittance. The last man was coming in when Moritz drew a revolver and fired. The man saw his intention, but not soon enough to prevent his shooting. He put his hand forward to catch the revolver, and received the bullet in his hand, which probably saved his life. Moritz is under arrest. The wound is a bad one.

Martin McDonald, ex-Registrar of Brandon, has been arrested, charged with falsifying the books of the office.

A young man named Tutman is charged with seducing a young lady from Salt Coats by means of a mock marriage. Tutman has fled the country.

James Thompson, Liberal M.P.P. for Emerson, was married to-day to Miss Ritchie, daughter of a well-known Winnipeger.

The 6-year-old child of Jerry Robinson, of St. Peter's, was fatally burned by her clothes catching fire.

The Sun says it is understood that a measure will be introduced at the next session of the Legislature to abolish the jury system in civil cases in Manitoba, also that the Government will submit a measure abolishing the dual language system, that is, the use of the French language in Manitoba, Government documents to be printed only in one language. The Board of Education will be wiped out and a portfolio of Minister of Education created.

A young girl living at Beulah, Man., hanged herself from a tree last Tuesday, and was quite dead when discovered. The cause of the act was that her mother, against the girl's wishes, had married an Indian living at Brandon.

A despatch from Moosomin to-day says: Intelligence has been received from Carnduff Point, in Assiniboia, 70 miles south of here, that the body of a man horribly mutilated has been discovered on the banks of the Souris River. It was apparent that thd man had been dead for some time, as his features were discolored. The entrails of the victim had been torn out and scattered about on the ground. There is great excitement over the event. No clue seems to have been discovered as to the perpetrator.

The Winnipeg physicians have formed a committee to entertain and banquet the eastern physicians on their arrival here on the 9th.

At a Liberal picnic at Clearwater to-day Hon. Mr. Smart announced that the Government would wipe out the Separate School system. It was the intention of the Government to overhaul the whole educational machine. The double-barrelled system, with two superintendents, two Boards and two sets of inspectors must go and a Minister of Education appointed, one of the present Ministers taking the portfolio. The Government would administer the Education Department and be responsible to the people.

Work on the Winnipeg Transfer Railway on the banks of the Red River is progressing satisfactorily.

Burke leaves for Chicago on Sunday morning.

Fresh Fruit Syrups.

Fresh syrups of the grape, cherry, pine-apple, strawberry, tamarind, or of any of the home fruits, make refreshing and healthful beverages. The fruit is best crushed by hand in a wooden squeezer, metal being liable to impair the flavor of the juice. Skins and pulps are then mixed with the juice and plenty of sugar, and are covered with pounded ice. By the time the ice has melted the full strength of the juice is extracted, and the mass should then be strained through cheese-cloth and the syrup kept on ice till wanted. The juice of pressed fruit is a most grateful and beneficial drink at this season, refreshing and stimulating one, while it assists in renewing the wasted tissues of the body.

Discussing Dr. Tanner's Sentence.

A Thursday's London cable says: In the House of Commons this evening Mr. Sexton moved an adjournment in order to consider the sentence passed upon Dr. Tanner under the Crimes Act. He argued that the charge against Dr. Tanner was not assault with violence, that it did not come under the Crimes Act, and therefore the sentence was illegal. Mr. Madden, Solicitor-General for Ireland, replied that there was a method of testing the legality of the sentence without adjourning the House. After a lengthy debate Mr. Sexton's motion was rejected by 174 to 118.

Killing His Pride.

Ethel—Do you think he loves you, Nellie?

Nellie—Oh, I'm certain of it. Why, he wants to marry me so much that he has borrowed money of papa for us to get married on—a thing his proud, sensitive soul could not brook if he did not love me.

—It is rather remarkable that at seasons when throat diseases are prevalent doctors so often look down in the mouth.

—Mrs. De Splaye—I think you are too stingy, John. I have worn this bathing suit two seasons already, and I am positively ashamed to wear it any longer. Mr. De Splaye—I should think you would be superlatively ashamed to wear it any shorter.

I asked a bachelor why he
In singleness had tarried,
He answered thus: "Because, you see,
I've friends who've long been married."

Araminta—You put your arm around my waist so gracefully, George. George—I have had lots of practice, I was a street car conductor five years.

—If you want to find out all about women and their ways ask some young man who has never been married.

Emma—So you're engaged to young George Halby Sadie—Yes; George and I came to an understanding some weeks ago. You remember the wheat corner in Chicago? Emma—To be sure I do. Sadie—Well, that's the time I got caught on the squeeze.

THREE OLD MAIDS.

Joseph Howard Speaks of Misses Beecher, Dix and Anthony.

I have in my mind three old maids, and the moment I mention their names they will be recognized the world around as the names of three great women. They are Catharine Beecher, Dorothy Dix, Susan B. Anthony. There are others who have attained notoriety, such as Kate Field, the wine agent, Anna Dickinson, the stump speaker. But I am not speaking of notoriety. I am dealing with forces, vital, effective. Dorothy Dix will never be forgotten so long as the word hospital endures, or so long as cold type preserves the records of humanitarian effort on the battlefield and in the sick wards during our late civil war. She was a nervous sisterly left hand to the great war secretary, her brother, John A. Dix. Catharine Beecher will have her memory perpetuated so long as life endures and children are to be taught, while Susan B Anthony, who has survived taunts and outlived slander, might well die to-day content with the record she has made in an endeavor to uplift the women of the world from the slough of dependence, upon the solid substantiality of self-support.

Catharine Beecher was not a pretty thing to look at, but mentally she was the peer of any of her family.

Dorothy Dix, for reasons of her own, preferred the life of spinster, a sweet-faced, happy-hearted old lady when she died.

Miss Anthony, filled with a bitter gall of prejudice, is not in every way to be commended nor in every leading to be followed, put the man who derides her honest intention and seeks to despoil her of the crown of glory and of honor that fits her brow as a pioneer along the very choicest lines of thought in the best interests of her fellow women is a coward and a dastard.

How to Keep Milk.

A summer bulletin has just been issued by the Ontario Board of Health, to spread information regarding contagious diseases, and especially diphtheria—"that slayer of its thousands in Ontario" and elsewhere. The care of food and the best modes of disinfection are dwelt upon. The following advice is given as to the care of milk, "that most important of all articles of food:"

The cows should be healthy, and should not be fed upon swill, or the refuse of breweries or glucose factories, or upon any other fermented food. The pasture must be free from noxious weeds, and the barn and yard must be kept clean. Cows must not be allowed to drink stagnant water, but only pure, fresh water, and they must not be heated or worried before being milked. The udders should be washed, and then wiped dry before each milking. The milk must be at once thoroughly cooled. After the milk has been received by the consumer, it should be kept in a perfectly clean place, free from dust, and at a temperature not exceeding 60° F. Milk should not be allowed to stand uncovered, even for a short time, in the living or sleeping rooms. In many of the better houses in the country and villages, and occasionally in the cities, the drain from the refrigerator leads into a cesspool or kitchen drain. This is highly dangerous; there should be no connection whatever between the refrigerator and any receptacle of filth. The only vessels in which milk should be kept are tin, glass or porcelain. After using the vessel, it should be scalded, and then, if possible, exposed to the air.

Instances are given of febrile diseases and outbreaks of sickness caused by bacteria and a great quantity of hygienic instruction may be found in the twelve pages. Disinfection is spoken of thus:

It is a great pity that in the matter of disinfection of rooms we should in this region still be going through with the inefficient mummery of burning sulphur with closed doors under the impression that it will destroy contagion. Sulphurous acid, as it is usually applied in house disinfection, has been shown to be very inefficient and unreliable. It may be better than nothing, but in disinfectants—which are often our sole weapons in fighting epidemics—the best is none too good. The efficiency of sulphurous acid may be increased by securing the thorough wetting of every article to be disinfected, but even then it is not great. The disinfection of the room and its contents at the close of the illness will be more easy and efficient, if care has been exercised in removing all unnecessary articles of furniture, hangings, pictures, etc., from it at the commencement of the disease. All clothing which cannot be washed, bedding, mattresses, pillows, etc., carpets, cushions and all such furniture as has not exposed wooden frames, should be tied up in sheets saturated with 2 per cent. carbolic solution, and sent away to be steamed at the public disinfecting station. All valueless articles should be burned at the disinfecting station. If this is impossible they may be disposed of in the house furnace or range at such times as cooking is not going on. Polished and metallic articles should be firmly rubbed off on all their surfaces with cloths wet with five pes cent carbolic acid. The clothes used should be immediately burned. Walls, doors, windows and woodwork should be thoroughly washed, as should, finally, the floor, with five per cent. carbolic solution. If walls are papered or frescoed, the floors should be thoroughly flushed with five per cent. carbolic solution and then all the walls should be thoroughly and firmly rubbed down in every part with lumps of bread, the crumbs being allowed to fall on the arbolzed floor. Then the woodwork should be washed with carbolic solution, the crumbs gathered up and burned and the floors washed with water.

The room should be finally exposed as fully as possible to the air for at least twenty-four hours, and longer if it is practicable.

This pamphlet should be widely circulated and be kept for reference.

FOUR ONES,

Used to Designate the Hour on Watch Faces—How It Originated.

"Mark down the figures on the face of a watch," said a Summit street jeweller.

"1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6"—began the reporter, as he put pencil to paper.

"No, I mean the Roman numerals."

Then this was produced:

"I., II., III., IV., V., VI., VII., VII., IX., X., XI., XII."

"You are wrong," said the jeweller.

"I guess not," said the reporter.

"Try again," said the jeweller.

"Perhaps I don't know how to count in Roman figures," said the reporter.

"You know that well enough, but the watchmakers use different ones. Look at your watch."

"Haven't got one."

"Well, look at mine. See the figure which stands for 4 o'clock."

The reporter looked and was surprised. It was IIII. and not IV.

"Are all the clocks and watches that way?" he asked.

"Every one which has Roman figures on its dial."

"Why?"

"Well, I'll tell you the story. It is nothing but a tradition among watchmakers, but the custom has always been preserved. You may or you may not know that the first clock that in any way resembled those now in use was make by Henri Vick in 1370. He made it for Charles V. of France, who has been called 'the wise.'

"Now Charles was wise in a good many ways. He was wise enough to recover from England most of the land which Edward III. had conquered, and he did a good many other things which benefited France; but his early education had been somewhat neglected and he probably would have had trouble in passing a civil service examination in these enlightened ages. Still he had a reputation for wisdom and thought it was necessary, in order to keep it up, that he should also be supposed to possess book learning. The latter was a subject he was extremely touchy about.

"So the story runs in this fashion, although I will not vouch for the language, but put it in that of the present day:

"'Yes, the clock works well,' said Charles, 'but,' being anxious to find some fault with a thing he did not understand, 'you have got the figures on the dial wrong.'

"'Wherein, your majesty,' asked Vick.

"'That four should be four ones,' said the king.

"'You are wrong, your majesty,' said Vick.

"'I am never wrong,' thundered the king. 'Take it away and correct the mistake.' And corrected it was; and from that day to this 4 o'clock on a watch or clock dial has been IIII. instead of IV. The tradition has been faithfully followed."—Toledo Blade.

United States Ammunition.

At the Schuylkill United States arsenal, near Philadelphia, there is manufactured each year 8,000,000 rounds of ammunition and 15,000,000 of rifle balls. Three millions are used for target practice by the rank and file of the army. The other is kept for reserve or used in testing arms. So much each day is used to test the character of the work produced. The pressure, carrying power and the quality of the arms used are tested every day. New guns are being sent out to be tested and thousands of rounds of ammunition are used in these experiments for war. The arsenal at Philadelphia is the only one where ammunition is made in large quantities for the government. Its operations are peculiar and its machinery a study. The different processes represent the triumph of mechanical ingenuity. In these hours of peace few people can comprehend how much is being done in the way of testing the implements of defense.—New York Times.

Blind Fish.

Professor Ray Lankester, in a recent lecture at the Royal institution, thus attempted to account for the absence of eyes in the fishes in the famous underground Kentucky caves in the following way: A great flood carries to the bottom of the Kentucky caves, some 30 miles below the surface, a number of fish among whose very numerous offspring will be some defective in sight, as some babies are born blind, or without any eyes at all. The fish who can see some faint glimmerings of light will swim away toward that light, while those will remain that cannot perceive the gleams. This with every succeeding generation would occur, the stronger in sight swimming away and the weaker remaining, and as the breeding would therefore occur between those of the worst sight, fish would be born with weaker eyes and weaker until born blind.

The Minister Gets Accurate Information.

"What pretty children you have!" said the new minister to the proud mother of three little ones. "Tell me, my dear"—taking a little girl of 5 upon his lap—"are you the oldest of the family?"

"No, sir," responded the little miss, with the usual accuracy of childhood; "my pa's older'n me."

They are telling a very good story of Toole just now. Once, in Dundee, he offered to give a short sketch as a side show at a charity bazaar, and crowds paid their shilling to get into the room. When Toole came up, and assured the doorkeeper that he was the showman, the canny Scot stuck to his orders, and said, "May be ye are, and may be no, but ye canna get in here till ye pay a shilling." Toole paid.

WHEN PEOPLE MARRY.

Curious Things Shown by Records of Pennsylvania.

Thirteen per cent. of all the men married in Pennsylvania last year married women older than themselves. Seven per cent. took wives of their own age, and the remaining 80 per cent. married women younger than themselves. The average age of the men was 27 years and of the women 23 years. These interesting facts are found in the annual report for 1888 of Secretary of Internal Affairs Thomas J. Stewart, which contains much other curious information about the matrimonial propensities of Pennsylvanians. Thus it appears that more men are married at the age of 23 than at any other, and that among women 21 is the favorite age. The youngest wife of 1888 was only 13 years old, and the oldest was aged 71. Two boys of 16 were married, and two old graybeards of 86 ventured into matrimony, probably not for the first time. Of 14,726 women married, and whose ages were given, 4,065, or 27.5 per cent. were less than 20 years old. Among the men there were only 493 who were so young. There were 23 girls of 14 years married, 105 of 15, 353 of 16, 816 of 17, 1,333 of 18, 1,434 of 19, 1,322 of 20, 2,041 of 21, 1,517 of 22, and 1,140 of 23. After the latter age the number of those who found husbands rapidly decline. These figures show that if a Pennsylvania girl is not married by the time she is 23 years old the chances are that she will become an old maid. Men proceed more leisurely about matrimony. Besides the two 16-year-old husbands in 1888 there were 38 aged 17, 128 18 years old, and 325 19 years old. The figures then take a jump to 637 at 20, and reach the maximum in 1,565 at 23. They decrease slowly after that. There were 437 men married after they were 50 years old, but only 171 women. There was a remarkable disparity in the ages of some of the couples. A woman of 59 years married a man of 31, and an old man of 74 wedded a maiden of 24. The youngest couple were a 17-year-old husband and a 15-year-old wife. The girl of 13 wedded a man 19 years older than herself. A man of 54 married a girl of 18, his age being just three times hers, and a man of 48 did nearly as well, taking a 17-year-old wife.

In the marriages where the women were older than the men the differences in ages rarely exceeded five years. There were 83 marriages where one of the parties had previously been divorced.

It is estimated that there were 6,000 marriages of couples from this State in Camden alone, and, of course, there must have been very many more in cities and towns in other States bordering on Pennsylvania.—Philadelphia Record.

LAND TENURE IN CHINA.

The Laws all Favor the Tenant, who Pays no Taxes.

In a paper lately read before the Shanghai Asiatic Society by Mr. Jamieson it was stated that, although the Emperor theoretically owns everything under the sun, the private owner of land in China has as absolute a property in it as he can have under any Government. Waste or abandoned lands, as well as those for which there are not heirs, revert to the Crown, which can also annex private land for public purposes. Land tax is in all cases paid direct to the Government, and there are no zemindars and no "farmers-general" in China. There are two main tenures, military and common, the former applying only to certain military colonies and to grants made to his followers by the Manchu conqueror of the country in 1644.

Ninety-nine hundredths of the land is held under common tenure, which has three conditions attached to it, viz.: The payment of the land tax, the supply on demand of statute labor to the authorities and the payment of a fine in alienation. For the land tax the hsien, or district, is the unit, and is assessed at a fixed sum by the Government, which the district magistrate has to pay whether he receives it or not. But as a rule he has a surplus. In the event of some great calamity, such as a dearth or inundation, he may get a remission, the benefit of which reaches the people. The supplying of statute labor has almost fallen into disuse, which perhaps accounts for the bad state of public works in China. The fees are payable on the transfer of land by sale or mortgage, succession or inheritance. Probably half the soil of China is owned by the peasants who till it. Large tracts are owned by retired officials and their families, usually called the "literati and gentry," who lease it to small farmers on a kind of customary tenancy at will, the rent, which is paid in kind, amounting to half the crop in the best soil and diminishing as the land is poorer. The rent is paid as soon as the crop is harvested, so that rents are seldom in arrears and evictions are very rare. The laws are all in favor of the tenant, who pays no taxes or rates of any kind, and when he leaves takes everything with him, including his house. The soil is so rich that the farms are generally very small, and indeed it is estimated that a square mile is capable of supporting a population of 3,840 persons. Within these broad lines there is every variety of arrangement respecting the ownership of land; there are absolute sales and sales in which the vendor has a right to claim something more if the land rises in value; some sales are revocable, some irrevocable, the former being apparently in the nature of mortgages, the limitation period being 30 years.

Again, there is a dual ownership in land, one man owning the surface, the other being regarded as the owner of the soil and liable for all the taxes; and there seems to be a good deal of Chinese law in the respective rights of the two owners as to house-building and laying coffins in the common ground. The ownership is established in the usual way by title deeds, registered in the district offices.—Philadelphia North American.

"What's In a Name?"

Shakspeare said there was nothing, but there is. Would Caesar have had such notoriety if his name had been Caleb W. Pickerskill? Think of Patti drawing $7,000 a night if the bill-boards announced her as Jane Brown! The idea is absurd. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets is a name that has made a record. These tiny, sugar-coated pills cure sick and bilious headache, bowel complaints, internal fever and costiveness.

America, as the land of big things, will never be able to submit without an effort of rivalry to the record achieved in Paris the other Sunday in the way of a big concert. We think an orchestra of two or three hundred performers large, but in the gardens of the Tuileries there was a concert given by a band of 28,000 performers, "representing the musical element of 72 departments of France." The simultaneous playing of the "Marseillaise" was most impressive.

MUSIC ON THE FIELD.

It Is Seldom Heard, but the Players Are Often There.

The majority of people imagine that every band accompanies its regiment wherever it goes for the purpose of keeping up the good spirits of the soldiers, of supplying tolerable harmony for the better digesting of the officers' dinners, and in the case of actual conflict to inspire the men with enthusiasm and incite them to acts of heroism compared with which Tyrtæus—with his flutes and verses inflaming the ardor of the Spartans, so that they cut in pieces the whole army of the hitherto unconquerable Messinians—is quite outrivaled. Nothing of the sort, says a writer in the National Review. Our fine regimental bands are not taken to the battlefield, and to suppose that Tommy Atkins expires to the strains of "Men of Harlech," or "Bonnie Dundee," is to perpetuate a fallacy which many an old widow with a scapegrace son could dispel.

What real fighting would be to orchestral accompaniment I cannot judge, but it would certainly be no inglorious end to blare a tuba in the face of the enemy until an abstruent ball choked its funnel or created a vacuum in the neighboring bass drum! It is the trumpeters and buglers of the cavalry and the buglers, drummers and fifers of the infantry only who go on active service in a musical capacity, and then the bandsmen and band sergeant are deputed to the ranks, their instruments being returned into stores for safe custody until the piping times of peace. The trumpet major and trumpeters of the cavalry, and the drummers, buglers and fifers of the infantry join their respective troops, retaining their instrumental duties in the field, but the other bandsmen are trained as stretcher bearers and to assist the medical staff generally in the care of the wounded. If circumstances warrant it, both cavalry and infantry musicians are liable to be called upon for ordinary soldiers' duties, and they are so trained when at home.

Occasionally even the bandmaster goes on active service (though more often he has to remain at home instructing backward men and boys unable to bear arms), and the case of the bandmaster of the Twenty-fourth South Wales Borderers, who was killed at Isandula, as well as the promotion of the bandmaster of the Sixty-fifth (York and Lancaster) Regiment, are recent instances of this. The latter, F. H. Mahony, was appointed quartermaster in this regiment, and was mentioned in the despatches and promoted honorary captain for his distinguished conduct at the battles of El Teb and Tamai. The bands of the Guards and other stationary regiments are never ordered away for active service, either in the ranks or as bandsmen, which may, or may not, be a reason why men are so anxious to get into these particular bands.

A feeling of dullness and languor, is often the first indication of incipient disease. In such cases the famous "ounce of prevention" is the highest wisdom, and may be found in its most potent form in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which, by its wonderful blood-purifying and invigorating tonic properties, will quickly restore the ebbing vitality, repair and strengthen the system, and thus ward off threatening sickness. Its saving influence reaches every organ of the body. The "Discovery" is guaranteed to cure in all cases of diseases for which it is recommended, or money refunded.

Entertaining for Swells.

In many of the smoking or coffee rooms of the English hotels, especially in the large cities, there is on the mantel a box for contributions to some charity. It pleases the half-befuddled cheap swells immensely.—Daily Hotel Register.

They are financially responsible, and abundantly able, to make good their guarantee if they fail, as any one can learn by making proper enquiry. Remedy sold by all druggists, at 50 cents.

Ladies' Bars.

The New York Star in a recent issue gave an appalling account of women's drinking places in New York city. How many Christian women would be utterly schocked to read of the "ladies' bar" at Maillard's, of six tables full of women ordering drinks, "absinthe cocktail," a "pony of brandy," champagne and sherry; or to hear of the women's bric-a-brac store, where young girls and matrons indulge in all sorts of liquor from beer and milk punch to whiskey and brandy.—Ex.

What might have resulted in fearful loss of life as well as loss of property was narrowly averted Friday morning. As No. 6 M.C.R. express, which reaches Dutton from Detroit at 2 o'clock in the morning, was being put on the ferry boat, in the shunting of the cars the front end of a Pullman dropped over the end of the boat, the truck falling into the river and causing a delay of nearly four hours. Everything was got into shape as quickly as possible without any further injury to property, and the passengers on the other cars experienced no inconvenience save the delay in transit.

Judson Milligan & Son threshed on Friday for Duncan McLean 505 bushels of wheat, heavy straw, and 150 bushels of barley, finishing at 5 o'clock, and want to know who can beat the record for money. The engine used had run 10 seasons and the separator 5 seasons.

This has been a great season for campers at Port Stanley, and it is said there have been more "dwellers in tents" than ever before known there. The campers are mostly made up of parties, each crowd having a title, and the monotony of camp life is enlivened by parades through the village, and entertainments in front of the Fraser house.

J. H. Marsh, of Marsh & Kiefer, yesterday showed us the model of a new pump sucker invented and manufactured by this well-known firm, which is specially adapted to porcelain pumps, being constructed with a view of overcoming the swelling and shrinking of the old fashioned sucker. The improvement will still further increase the popularity of these pumps.

The contract for the erection of Eustes' new hotel was let on Friday to Angus McWilliam. The contract calls for the completion of the work by November 9th. The building when finished will be a great addition to the already solid appearance of this side of Main street, having a frontage of 66 feet and a depth of 72 feet. The cost of the whole work, including furnishing, etc., will not be far short of $8,000.

The Methodists Sunday Schools of Dutton, Wallacetown and Tyrconnel held their annual picnic at Tyrconnel on Thursday last. A large crowd was present from the different schools. After dinner Rev. E. Middleton was called to the chair, and with a few well chosen remarks presented an interesting programme, consisting of short addresses by the different superintendents, and singing by the separate choirs. Swings, croquet and boat riding occupied the balance of the day, and although some disappointment was felt at the "Ruby" not coming over according to arrangement, yet thoroughly enjoyable time was spent by all.

Mrs. Luke Brown, of Iona, died very suddenly Friday night at 10 o'clock of heart disease. Mr. Brown noticed something unusual in his wife's breathing and raised her head off the pillow, but she expired in a few minutes. She had not been ill, but was not feeling so well as usual. She leaves beside her husband a large family to mourn her loss, consisting of four sons and eight daughters Three of her sons are prosperous farmers in this vicinity and one a blacksmith in Iona. Three of her daughters are married, two residing in St. Thomas and Mrs. Warner at Shedden. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been married forty-six years, and have lived on their farm here the most of the time. She was highly respected by all the neighborhood, and was a member of the Methodist church. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon.

It Made Mother Strong

"My mother has been using PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND for nervous prostration, accompanied by melancholia, etc., and it has done her a world of good. It is the only medicine that strengthens the nerves.'
G. H. BEERS,
Orbisonia, Pa.

"I am in my 64th year. Have been afflicted in several ways—could not sleep, had no appetite, no courage, low spirits. I commenced using Paine's Celery Compound, and felt relief from the third day after using it. I now have a good appetite and can sleep well. My spirits and courage are almost like those of a young man."
S. C. KINKAID, D. D., Gonzales, La.

Paine's Celery Compound

Strengthens and builds up the old, and cures their infirmities. Rheumatism, indigestion and nervousness yield quickly to the curative power of Paine's Celery Compound.

A Perfect Tonic and Invigorator, It GIVES NEW LIFE.

"I am now 69 years old and have tried several remedies, but none had any effect until I used Paine's Celery Compound. I feel entirely different for the short time I have used it. I can walk nearly straight, sleep sound and well, and feel as though there was new life and energy coming into my whole system."
H. MYLIUS, Cleveland, Tenn.

Paine's Celery Compound is of unequaled value to women. It strengthens the nerves, regulates the kidneys, and has wonderful power in curing the painful diseases with which women so often silently suffer.

Modern Love.

'Twas only a week ago to-night,
You said "good-bye" at the garden gate.
The wind breathed a laugh to the poplar leaves,
And a nightingale sang of love to its mate.

The fireflies gleamed through the meadow dark,
Where the river ran gaily to meet the sea,
And every word was a sweet caress,
Ere you said "good night" at the gate to me.

You spoke of life "as a problem dread,"
And breathed a sigh for your lonely lot;
Then begged a pansy from my hair,
And a sprig of blue forget-me-not.

You said, 'twas so bad to live unloved—
That love was love, forever and aye!
And implied, you never could love but one;
Your heart would break if I said you nay.

You spoke so long of men and books,
That mine eyes grew dim, and brain did reel
As you quoted of Tennyson many a page,
And asked "if I didn't dote on 'Lucille?'"

'Twas only a week, and yet to-night
I sit alone in the shadows drear,
As the moon creeps over the poplar trees,
And list for a step which I seldom hear.

But soon a voice—and two shadows pass;
When I hear once more an old refrain—
He is quoting "Lucille" and "Locksley Hall,"
To my pretty neighbor down in the lane.

The City of David To-day.

The town is as compact to-day as it was when David thrummed upon his harp and the tribes not only of Palestine but of all the world came here to worship. There are magnificent monasteries scattered throughout the city, and on the very top of the Mount of Olives a great Russian church lifts its bulbous domes toward heaven. In the Garden of Gethsemane, where Christ spent the night before he was crucified, there is a resting place for pilgrims, and the Roman Catholics have 1,500 brothers and sisters in their monasteries and convents, while the old Armenian Church has a big monastery near the gate of Zion which contains 180 monks and which can accommodate 2,000 pilgrims. There are Greek Christians here by the thousands and there are Syrians and Copts by the hundreds. There are Abyssinian priests with faces as black as your hat, and you may see every costume and hear every language in the worshippers who gather around the holy sepulchre. The Jerusalem of to-day is the Mecca of millions of souls. It is to hundreds of millions the holiest spot on the face of the earth. And among the others whom I have met in Palestine is the party of American Roman Catholics, the first pilgrimage which has ever been made to the holy city by a band from the United States. It is, above all, a religious city, and, stranger than all, it is again becoming a city of the Jews. The Jews are fast coming back into Palestine, and the Jews of Jerusalem, who now make up a large part of the city, are far different from their brothers in any other part of the world. Their movement toward the holy land is strange, and their life here is so interesting that I have made it the subject of investigation.—F. G. Carpenter's Jerusalem Letter in the Post-Dispatch.

Night Terrors in Children.

Mentally active children of high strung nervous system occasionally suffer from what are termed "night terrors." These paroxysms come on suddenly during sleep, the victim starting up, crying or screaming, and exhibiting other signs of great terror. Such attacks are often quite obstinate, and it generally takes some time to fully awaken the sufferer and bring him to the realization of where he is, and that he is in no danger. The paroxysms in some cases come every few nights for quite a long time, and naturally occasion the parents much annoyance, if not intense disgust, after they know their character. They treat the unfortunate with consideration at first, but are extremely likely before long to show a good deal of temper and impatience if, as they term them, the "crazy spells" are of frequent occurrence. The victim of such attacks is in no wise to blame, and to use harsh measures would be simply inhuman, and add to his terror. Kind and reasoning words are what is needed at such times. If several attacks have occurred it is safe to assume that medical treatment is necessary, and a physician should be consulted. —Ex.

A Polish Election Dodge.

At an election in Poland the other day a smart young candidate tried a manœuvre which almost deserved to succeed for its ingenuity. Nearly all the peasants were against him, and the problem was how to prevent them from voting. The interval is very short between the time when they leave off work and the closing of the polls, so that at the last half hour a great crowd was waiting. Suddenly there was a cry of "Fire" and a rattling of engines. But the ruse did not succeed, the stolid countrymen first waiting to record their vote, and then hurrying off to discuss the conflagration.—London Globe.

Desecration of Sunday in England.

The battle against desecration of Sunday continues to rage furiously in England. The Sunday observance societies have attacked the cheap excursion systems of the Brighton Railways, which allows the poorer classes to spend Sunday at the seaside. They have even got a large number of the shareholders of the road to sign a petition against the system.

R. A. GUNN, M.D., Dean and Professor of Surgery, of the United States Medical College; Editor of "Medical Tribune," Author of "Gunn's New and Improved Hand-book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," referring to Warner's Safe Cure, said: "I find that in Bright's disease it seems to act as a solvent of albumen; to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes, and wash out epithelial debris which blocks up the tubuli uriniferi (urine bearing tubes); and to prevent the destructive meamorpeosis of tissue. * * * I am willing to acknowledge and commend thus frankly the value of Warner's Safe Cure.

A Real Necessity.

Committeeman—Before engaging you for our pastorate we should like to know if you can preach without notes.

Pastor—No, sir. Bank notes are a necessity with me.

Ada—So you have been to see your husband's friends, have you, Lulu? And how did you like his mother? Lulu—Oh! ever so much, Ada; she made me feel so much at home. Why, in less than 24 hours after I arrived there she had me in the kitchen wiping dishes.

THE FACILE PENCIL.

Shorthand as a Profession Very Much Overcrowded.

FEW REMUNERATIVE POSITIONS.

Some Well Paid Writers—The Various Systems—Lady Stenographers—Some Advice to Students.

In this age of hurry and rush it is but natural that shorthand should receive considerable attention. The saving in time which it effects for those whose time is very valuable, to say nothing of the facilities it affords for securing the words of public speakers or the evidence of witnesses, justifies placing it high up in the educational curriculum. But just now, I fancy, it is being rather run into the ground. When men are found who actually advertise over their own signatures for "competent stenographers" at a salary of nine dollars a week, there is required no further evidence of a glut in the stenographer market than the fact that such positions are regarded as "snaps." Not, of course, by "competent" stenographers, in the correct sense; but as they go they fill the places and cut down the figures paid really expert men (who are not plentiful) and drive them out of the business.

Perhaps you are thinking of studying some system of shorthand, and if so I would not discourage you. There are very few people now-a-days to whom a knowledge of shorthand—even if not very thorough—would not prove useful, if practice be maintained. But if you purpose depending on the use of the knowledge of shorthand you expect to gain to make a living a few friendly hints to enable you to take stock of the prospect, uninfluenced by some school prospectus, may be much to your advantage.

The "fat" situations for shorthand writers are confined chiefly to the official reporters of the Houses of Parliament, the courts, a few leading railway offices, and fewer of the larger newspaper offices. Inside of this charmed circle the remuneration is good. Murphy, chief of staff at the United States Capitol, is the best paid United States officer below the President, and receives the somewhat princely salary of $25,000 a year and perquisites. On his shoulders rests the entire responsibility of the work of the Congressional Record and the Senatorial Debates. He has under him a staff of 20 to 25 of the best reporters he can find; and he can size up a pencil pusher very quickly. He is a phenomenal man and an expert writer of the Graham modification of Pitman's system, known as Standard Phonography. Some very large sized stories are told of his work and, as all stenographers of experience know, many of them will stand being very heavily discounted. At Ottawa the Hansard reporters receive $1,500 a year; and there are some of our reporters of the High Court of Justice who receive as much and augment that figure considerably by transcripts. They receive either a stated salary per annum or a per diem allowance for attendance, with ten cents per folio of 100 words for copies of the evidence when required. When they get a long case where two to four copies are required, and can be manifolded on the typewriter, they have a soft snap. Two of our best known and most competent court reporters in Ontario are Mr. Nelson Butcher and Mr. A. J. Henderson, Toronto, to either of whom an all-day take offers no terrors.

Outside of the positions above referred to, and which require not only rapidity on the part of the writer but also a broad education and general acquaintance with the particular line of work entered upon, there are other openings for the aspirant to stenography, chiefly as amanuenses. The salaries are not usually large, and the rapid influx of women into the field has tended to still lower rates, until to-day she is practically master, or rather mistress, of the situation. It is an occupation for which women are well adapted, and when with fair education and moderate speed she combines the use of the typewriter, such a situation affords a young woman a clean, dignified and pleasant means of livelihood. The field of amanuensis work promises to become, as a rule, more and more a woman's preserve. If you are going to study with the view to entering that field you must expect her to fix your salary.

But there are many ways in which the accomplishment will prove beneficial to you indirectly, that is, other than as a main reliance. If you enter the ministry it will bless you daily; if you study law it will be your junior counsel always and aid you in a hundred ways; if you follow medicine it will save you much valuable time and be the means of preserving full and interesting notes which would, did you lack it, never be taken. If you are a newspaper man it will prove daily useful. If you are in business at all it will save you time, and time is money. But what I am trying to impress upon you is that as a means of livelihood—as a profession—it is a bruised reed.

What system should you learn? Well, that is a question upon which there is, naturally, much divergence of opinion, and I do not feel called upon to become arbiter. I have had some experience, and while I feel quite convinced that I write (indifferently, of course) the best system I must admit I have met writers of other systems who did good work. In general, practical reporters in Canada write either Pitman's system or Graham's, which is known as Standard Phonography and which is based on the same general principles as Pitman's. In Washington I found the great majority of those who occupied official positions wrote the Standard, while not one, during my term there, wrote other than Pitman's or Graham's. With either great speed is attainable. On August 22nd of last year a great speed test took place at Lake George, N. Y., before a committee of judges and under stringent rules. Three of the parties entering for the $500 in prizes wrote the Graham system and one the Munson system. The test was a five-minute "take" of strange matter, read by a copy-holder to each contestant, after a synopsis of the matter had been previously read to him. Each had three tests. The most favorable in each was then copied, counted, errors deducted and the prizes awarded. The committee awarded Mr. I. S. Dement, Chicago, 1st, (1,252 words) and Mr. Fred. Ireland, Detroit, 2nd, (1,202 words). Both gentlemen are official stenographers in constant practice, and both write the Graham system. Mr. Nicholes, who wrote the Munson system, failed to decipher his notes. I understand Mr. Ireland has since beaten his performance. This is, however, not ordinary work; it is phenomonal. Few write over 150 words per minute, and a speed of 120 is more common, even among fair shorthanders. The amount of matter taken down in a few hours at that speed would astonish the uninitiated.

And don't be misled by promises to turn you out a skilled shorthand reporter in three months. That is pure deception. You can no more be turned out a reporter in that time than you could be turned out a chemist, a physician or a lawyer. True, you can learn the principles of the art, but the acquisition of speed, the thousand and one things necessary to qualify you as an expert all-round, or even special, reporter must be a matter of much patient study and cultivation. You may set it down as a basic principle that you can only report what you know. Perhaps you have read some of the tall stories with which waggish fellows stuff the credulous, such as that whopper about the stenographer taking a verbatim report of a speech in a foreign tongue, of which he knew not a word; about Murphy reporting ambidexterously and taking two, or even three, speakers at a time. That is all very picturesque fiction. But to report you must comprehend. It is related of a member of the English Commons that he almost had a fit when he read his speech as taken by a rapid (but not expert) reporter, in which his

In heaven yclept Euphrosyne

was rendered:

In heaven she crept and froze her knee.

The merely mechanical reporter will never become expert. To be a success the reporter must be an omniverous reader, a close student of men and things, a man of good reasoning powers and above all of instant and unerring decision. Possessed of these qualifications, with a special aptness for the particular branch in which his services are engaged, unremitting study and devotion to his work should win for him the not too munificent remuneration good positions in this overcrowded profession yield. MASQUETTE.

The People Like It.

The precedent set by the marriage of the Princess Louise to the Marquis of Lorne scarcely stirred the same feelings, for it was not so important. The illustrious lady at the time of her wedding, if our memory does not mislead us, stood only twenty-sixth in the order of succession. But the death of the venerable Queen and the accession of the Prince of Wales to the throne elevate the Duchess of Fife to a distinct civic status in the eyes of the law as Princess Royal of England. At this very moment, indeed, she stands third after the heir-apparent in the succession to the throne. That she has, in such circumstances, been permitted to wed out of the royal caste, and to select a husband, not from a minor Tertonic "dukery," if we may venture to appropriate a favorite phrase of Lord Beaconsfield's, but from the ranks of the English nobility, is to the English people a fact of no ordinary significance. It is a sign that in the highest quarters there is some desire to break the tradition perpetuated since the time of George II., that it is necessary to keep the Royal Family of England, or rather those of them who are near the succession, exclusively German. The outburst of popular congratulation with which Her Royal Highness' marriage was hailed on Saturday all over the Empire may be taken as showing that Englishmen are well pleased to find that this tradition is no longer to be held as sacrosanct. Perhaps it may be even taken as confirming the view of the shrewd historian, who held that Englishmen always in their heart of hearts hated the Royal Marriage Act as a thing offensive to their insular pride and prejudices, and that they only tolerated it when it was passed because they did not want to see Mrs. Fitzherbert Queen of England.—London Daily Chronicle.

A Surplus of Widows.

It appears from the last statistical returns that there are about 1,000,000 more women than men in England, and many of these are widows. This is a very surprising discovery. It may be explained, however. In England, as in all old settled countries, women predominate numerically over men, partly in consequence of the superior vitality of girl babies over boy babies; partly because of the large number of young men who go abroad. In England, widows are addicted to the practice of marrying again. How, then, does it come that the number of widows so largely predominates over that of widowers? The explanation is that there are more old men who marry young women than there are young men who marry old women. A large class of men postpone matrimony until late in life. They enjoy the desolate freedom of the bachelor; they are afraid of marrying on scanty means; they dread the loss of their freedom; they have never met the right girl. Thus they only resort to matrimony when they find they absolutely need female companionship. Such middle-aged men usually marry women of 25, or, at any rate, women under 30. It is obvious that, all other things being equal, the chances are that a woman of 25 will outlive a man of 45. The average life of men in easy circumstances is not over 60 years. If the husband dies at 60, the wife, if she is married at 25, will be 40 at the time of his death, and she will have a fair prospect of twenty years' more life. Hence the surplus of widows.

THUMB AUTOGRAPHS.

A Novel Method of Identifying Criminals.

Two men of science in two different countries—Francis Galton in England and M. Bertillon in France—have lately recommended a means of identification which policemen and detectives, with all their ingenuity, seem never to have employed. These gentlemen have observed that the human thumb dipped in ink, in blood, in black lead or in any other loose, adhering substance, and pressed upon a sheet of paper, leaves a mark which is perfectly characteristic of the individual. Mr. Galton has remarked that no two persons' thumbs make the same mark; the lines and depressions in the skin, which make a series of wave lines when pressed upon paper, are never the same in two different individuals. It is urged that this fact would be of very great value in the administration of justice, because a criminal's thumb mark would be a sure means of identifying him, no matter what disguise he might assume. If a business man wishes to make use of a signature which is quite impossible to forge or counterfeit, he has only to dip his thumb in his ink bottle and make a mark with it in connection with his written name. No other thumb will make the same mark, and it would be practically impossible for anyone to imitate this new kind of "autograph" with a pen or other mechanical means.

"In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and thumb," the new form of subscription may some time in the future, run, the seal having by that time perhaps completely gone out of use, as it has now except on official documents and with fashionable letter writers. The experiment with the thumb mark may be made by any one who will take a knife blade, hold it over a lamp until it is black with smoke, allow it to cool, apply the thumb to the black surface, and then press it lightly upon a slightly sticky bit of paper, such as the back of a postage stamp. Examined with a magnifying glass, the differences in the thumb marks of different individuals come out very strongly. According to Mr. Galton, thumbs run in family groups, dividing themselves, as it were, into seven or eight distinct types or grand divisions; but within these divisions the differences are so marked as to leave no chance for confusion.—New York Press.

The Homeless in France.

No such institution as our English workhouse exists in France, the only shelter offered those unfortunate members of the human family who find themselves houseless and penniless being the night asylums, which, though admirable institutions in their way, are kept up by private charity, and can receive but a very limited number of the applicants who crowd round the doors both winter and summer. That the absence of workhouses in France does not, however, imply much greater prosperity or thrift than in England is proved by a statement recently made in the Chamber of Deputies by the member for Indre-et-Loire, who informed the Minister of the Interior that in one commune of his department reckoning 6,000 inhabitants, no fewer than 1,400 vagrants had been known to present themselves for alms in a single day. This instance was adduced as an example of the great increase in the number of vagabonds, due presumably, as M. Constans observed, to the hard times experienced by many of the working classes during the past few years. It may be added that to put down vagabondage in France is not easy, offenders of this class only being liable to prosecution in the event of their having neither domicile, nor profession, nor recognized trade—three conditions that are rarely met with together. —London Standard.

What is Beauty?

A young gentleman, describing a young girl to some of his friends, said that she was beautiful. They naturally expected to see some radiant creature with whom they would be instantly charmed. This, however, was not the case, for they found the girl extremely plain, and a laugh was indulged in at the young man's expense. But in a very short time his friends found that they had laughed too soon. The young lady was one of a large pleasure party which went off on a week's outing; and when the party returned, there was not one among them who did not think her beautiful. It was she who had responded most quickly to the requests of her elders, rendering sweet service in a charming way which can be better understood by the delighted recipient than by any pen-picture, however vivid. It was she who had run with gentle helpfulness to the rescue of every troubled child, she who had given up her seat to an older and a more wearied person, with a tact not always shown even by kindly disposed persons. In fact, she had unostentatiously done the countless loving little acts which stamp the doer as a follower of the "One altogether lovely." —Presbyterian.

HIS MISTAKE.

There was music in the parlor,
Sweet airs were softly played,
And a lurking lover whispered,
"It is my own dear maid."

Then he stealthily approached her,
With one arm around her waist,
A kiss of long drawn sweetness
Upon her lips he placed.

And a voice in smothered accents
Remarked with humor vicious;
"My daughter is in the kitchen Washing the supper dishes."

BEACONSFIELD'S PRIMROSE.

How the Modest Blossom Became His Favorite Flower.

Lord Beaconsfield's fondness for the primrose originated when he was living in Highbury, London. Here he was much attached to a young lady residing in the same locality, who was the daughter of a gentleman of good property. At a ball given at that gentleman's house the young lady in question wore a wreath of primroses. A discussion arose between Mr. Disraeli and another gentleman as to whether the primroses were real or not. A bet of a pair of gloves was made, and on the young lady being consulted, and the primroses being examined, the bet was won by Mr. Disraeli. The primroses were real primroses and the young lady gave two of them to the future Prime Minister, which he put in his buttonhole and kept and used to show long afterward. Some have thought that because the Queen sent a wreath of primroses to Lord Beaconsfield's funeral the flower became his badge in that way. This is a mere invention. The Queen did not know at the time that the primrose was Lord Beaconsfield's favorite flower, and she did not, consequently, send a wreath of primroses to his funeral at all. Others have entertained the opinion that the noble lord appreciated the flower because he says in one of his novels that the primrose makes an excellent salad. This is incorrect again, and the true history of the way the primrose became the noble lord's favorite flower is recorded above.—Washington Press.

The Belles of Bethlehem.

There is a market inside the Jaffa gate and I can see it just under me as I write. Great piles of oranges and lemons lie upon the flag sidewalk, and there are scores of women with baskets of vegetables before them. Many of these are from Bethlehem, and the Bethlehem girls are the prettiest you see in Jerusalem. They have straight, well-rounded forms, which they clothe in a long linen dress of white, beautifully embroidered in silk, so that a single gown requires many months of work. This dress is much like an American woman's night gown without the frills and laces. It falls from the neck to the feet and is open at the front of the neck in a narrow slit as far down as a modest decollete fashionable dress. Over this they have sleeveless cloaks of dark red stripes and their heads are covered with long shawls of linen beautifully embroidered. Just above her forehead each girl carries her dowry in the shape of a wreath-like strip of silver coins which stand on end fastened to a string, and crown the forehead with money. Some of the girls have several rows of these coins and some have crowns of gold. Not a few have coins of silver and gold the size of our $20 gold pieces hung to strings about their necks, and none of the women hide their pretty faces, as do those Mohammedan girls near by, who, in shapeless white gowns with flowery white and red veils covering the whole of their faces, look like girls playing ghosts in white sheets. Beside these are Russian girls in the peasant costumes of modern Europe and Jewish maidens in gowns and flowered shawls. There are Greek priests with high black caps, and monks of all kinds, such as you see under the black cowls of Europe. The Syrian, the Turk, the Bedouin, the African, the Armenian and the Greek are all in that crowd below me, and among them all is the form of the obiquitous American traveller, who, in pith helmet hat and green sun umbrella, has conquered the east as well as the west.—F. G. Carpenter's Jerusalem Letter in the Post-Dispatch.

Irish Industries Successful.

Irishmen in the United States will be glad to learn the association started by Micheal Davitt a couple of years ago to encourage the industries of their native land, has been a great success, and that the shares of the company are now held at a premium in Dublin. Several good dividends have been declared and there are excellent prospects for the future. It is a patriotic and philanthropic enterprise, and not a money-making scheme. Mr. Davitt has long been convinced that a larger demand for Irish homespun woollens would arise if they were properly introduced in the United States and England, and the result of the experiment has justified this opinion. The difficulty at the outset was to meet the long credits given by English manufacturers, the Irish cottage weavers needing cash for their goods as soon as they were finished. This was paid by the Dublin company, which gave the credit required by the trade, and the weavers were thus enabled to go on with their work. The demand is now said to be larger than they can supply, and the goods are wanted as much in England as in the United States, where the Irish homespuns were at first taken for patriotic reasons, which led to the discovery of their sterling worth.—Correspondence New York World.

He Killed It.

Doctor Talmage, while engaged in delivering a discourse on a very warm day in his Tabernacle recently, was closely watched by a little girl. A fly seemed to bother him very much. He brushed it away several times. It finally lit upon a bald spot on his head. He kept on with his sermon, gesticulating in his peculiar angular way with one hand while he raised the other devoutly over the fly and finally came down on it slowly drawing his hand down and looking at it. The little girl suddenly called out: "Did 'oo till it?" It is unnecessary to say that the audience smiled audibly while the doctor answered, "Yes, I killed it."

Horses In Russia.

Recent statistics show the stock of horses in Russia to be 21,000,000, exclusive of the Caucasus, Finland, and the Asiatic territory. There are six government studs, beside a large number of private ones. The sum of 100,000 roubles is devoted annually by the Russian government to the purchase of stallions. Much has been done in Russia of late years to improve the breeding of horses. Races, trotting matches and "shows" have been multiplied all over the country.

MANITOBA AND THE NORTHWEST

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Oddfellows met this morning, when Grand Master Raymer delivered his annual address. A gain of 204 in membership is reported during the year. Committees were appointed for various purposes.

Crop reports from all parts of the Province indicate that harvesting is well advanced, and probably 50 per cent. of the cut crops seems to be turning out better than had been anticipated. A second Government bulletin, which will be issued tomorrow, will estimate the average yield throughout the Province at 14 bushels to the acre ; on this estimate the total crop will be between eight and nine million bushels.

John Joslyn, an old and respected citizen of Broadview, was struck by a passing engine to-day and instantly killed.

James Cotter, a bachelor farmer, aged 65, living near Deloraine, hanged himself yesterday morning between 5 and 6 o'clock on a beef scaffold. He had been mentally deranged for some time.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association closed at Banff last night. There was a large attendance and the meetings were very satisfactory. Toronto was chosen as the next place of meeting. Over fifty of the party left to-day for the Pacific Coast.

Commissioner Herchmer, of the Northwest Mounted Police, is in the city on official business. He says the stock is looking exceptionally well, and in fact he never saw range cattle in such fine condition at this time of the year. The calf crop has been large.

It is reported that thirty-five miles of track will be added to the Manitoba & Northwestern railway this summer. Construction operations are to begin at once.

The Government will not at present fill the vacant Provincial Secretaryship, and it is likely that the French representation will be ignored. It is not improbable that a constituency will be made by which Mr. Martin will assume the new portfolio of Minister of Education, and some new man will be called in for one of the existing portfolios.

At a large meeting of citizens to-night it was decided to erect a public monument in memory of the late ex-Premier, John Norquay.

William Clougher's grain elevator at Otterburne was destroyed by fire last night, with 3,000 bushels of wheat; partially insured. The loss on the building is $3,000.

Mr. H. J. Clarke, Q. C., to-day withdrew the charge of criminal libel against Mr. Cyr, ex-M.P., for circulating libelous posters respecting complainant during the Provincial election. The charge against Mr. Acton Burrows for printing the posters in question was dismissed with costs. There is another case against one Robinson, who will be heard on Saturday.

Dr. Gilbert Carberry has been elected Grand Master of the Odd-fellows of Manitoba.

A second crop bulletin of the Manitoba Government, issued to-day, referring to the spring wheat crop, says: "Correspondents invariably gave what in their opinion was as correct an estimate as possible of the average over their respective townships, and a careful compilation of these show that a yield of 10.8 bushels to the acre will be realized over the Province. The reports vary from 3 bushels in some townships to 35 and 40 in others. Taken by groups the eastern show an average of 14.5 bushels per acre, the southwestern 11.7, the central 15.2, and the northwestern 17.3. The counties of Souris River, Rock Lake, Turtle Mountain and Dennis show how great has been the destruction by gophers. Shoal Lake has also suffered largely, but the loss has not been as general as in other places named. The average yield of oats is placed at 21.5 bushels, barley 19.3 and peas 12.5. The total number of farmers in the Province is placed at 13,320, and the average amount put under crop by each 59.2 acres."

Hon. Mr. Dewdney, Minister of the Interior, arrived here to-day by the Pacific express, accompanied by Mrs. Dewdney, Senator McInnes and his secretaries, Messrs. McGirr and Chisholm. A deputation representing the old settlers waited on the minister and presented him with a largely signed petition asserting their claims, which have been published several times, and urging the early settlement thereof. The petition was presented by Mr. LaRiviere, M.P. for Provencher. In reply Mr. Dewdney said he could say nothing in reference to the general claims set forth in the petition until he had consulted his colleagues.

The Sun to-night says: Whatever may have been the intention of the Government three weeks ago in regard to remodelling the educational system, recent events, more especially the resignation of Mr. Prendergast, have sealed the fate of the Separate Schools, and the decision now is to make a clean sweep of them and settle the question once and for all. The French language will also be wiped out. The statement that Mr. Prendergast's resignation was accepted was an error, as he attended a meeting of the Council yesterday. It will be accepted, however, on Mr. Greenway's return, as it would be impossible for Mr. Prendergast to remain under the circumstances. It is stated upon good authority that Mr. Prendergast will continue to support the Government in its general policy.

Several thousand dollars have been subscribed by Baptists for the purpose of erecting a Baptist College in Brandon. An effort will be made to raise money in the east.

One hundred and forty teams went west to-day to work on the Regina and Long Lake road.

Pilgrims to Knock.

A Thursday's Dublin cable says: About 40,000 persons visited the celebrated Shrine of Knock to-day. The vast throng participated in the customary devotions. Several masses were celebrated, followed by a procession, the spectacle being most impressive. Archdeacon Kavanagh, the central figure, was assisted by several clergymen, including two American priests. In the evening a benediction was given to a large number of pilgrims from England, Scotland and America.

"Love me little; love me long,
Ran the words of an ancient song
Which sought to decrease sorrow.
But that is not the modern way;
It's "Love me fiercely for a day,
I'll be divorced to-morrow."

A SOUTHERN DUEL.

Williamson Faced Four Bullets Without Weakening—No Blood.

Details concerning the bloodless duel between Calhoun and Williamson, of Atlanta, Saturday evening show that the affair, though terminating harmlessly, really had exciting and realistic features. When the contestants and seconds reached a battle-ground undisturbed by officers it was quite dark. All around stretched a dense forest, and, while the men's figures were clearly defined, faces could not be recognized at 10 paces. The men were soon in position, apparently as cool as though the affair was merely a midnight picnic. Capt. Jackson, Calhoun's second, and Mr. King, Williamson's second, met just between the two men.

King took one pistol and Jackson the other. King placed his in Williamson's hand. Jackson walked over and handed his to Calhoun. The two seconds took their positions. The principals and seconds formed the four corners of a square. Col. John Seay rushed in and begged the seconds to settle the matter and not allow the fight. "It is a shame," he said, "to have two such fine men stand up here and shoot at one another." The seconds could not agree upon a settlement, and so announced. It had been arranged that each principal was to empty his pistol—shoot five times. Suddenly King's voice rang out:

"Are you ready, gentlemen?"

"Yes," answered both.

"Then fire."

The first shots were simultaneous. Williamson emptied his revolver, the five shots being fired very rapidly. Calhoun fired only once, and then slowly lowered his pistol as Williamson's bullets were whistling past his head.

"Are you hurt, Pat?" some one cried.

"No, sir," Calhoun cooly replied.

"Williamson, did he hit you?" asked King.

"I was not touched."

Both gentlemen, with smoking pistols in their hands, stood as calm as statues. The silence was broken by the ringing voice of Calhoun.

"Mr. Williamson," he said, "I have four remaining balls which I have the right to fire at you. I now ask if you will withdraw the statement you made before the Legislative Committee?"

"I will," replied Williamson, in a clear voice, "provided you will say that you intended no personal reflection on me."

The spectators drew a little nearer to hear and see better. Calhoun then said: "When I made those statements I did it to impress upon the Legislature that your railroad had been offered the Central; will you withdraw your statement? I say this holding four balls in my pistol which I have the right to fire. I have no desire to take Williamson's life."

"I will withdraw it," replied Williamson, "when you say that you meant no personal reflection."

"What I say," Calhoun replied, "is that I wanted the Legislature to understand that your road was offered the Central in 1887. You came to the Kimball House to see me. Do you remember that? All I want before firing my remaining balls is for you to say that you came to my office in 1887."

"I will do so," replied Williamson, "provided you say you meant no personal reflection."

Capt. Jackson interrupted with:

"Mr. Williamson, have you any respect for me as a gentleman of honor?"

"I have," replied Williamson.

"Well," said Capt. Jackson, "I say as a gentleman that I would withdraw the statement."

Williamson's response was: "If Mr. Calhoun will say that he intended no personal reflection."

"Will you withdraw?" demanded Calhoun.

"If you say it."

"Will you withdraw?" again asked Calhoun. "I hold four balls."

"I am ready for you to fire," was Williamson's firm reply. "Then we will load and fire again."

"Allow me to speak to Mr. Williamson," said King, his second.

King approached Williamson and, while talking, began to examine his revolver. Capt. Jackson approached quickly and asked what that meant. "I am simply examining Mr. Williamson's revolver," replied Mr. King, "to see if it fired all five balls."

"You may come up and see. That's all right," said Capt. Jackson. Calhoun had remained quiet during this talk, but as soon as it ended, and King was withdrawing, his voice rang out clearly: "In my remarks before the Legislative Committee Mr. Williamson personally did not enter my mind." Then raising his pistol he said: "With the understanding that you withdraw your remarks after my statement, I fire the remaining shots in the air. I expressly reserved my shots to do this." With these remarks four shots rang out and four balls went skyward. Then Calhoun approached and the two principals shook hands, and the party started quickly for the car. Entering the car, Calhoun said: "Mr. Williamson, we will let this matter end here."

"We will," replied Williamson, giving his late antagonist's hand a hearty shake.

The Big Tunnel Scheme.

A New York despatch says: On Monday last, after an interval of two years, actual work was resumed on the submarine tunnel to connect New York with Jersey City. For the first time the financial part of the undertaking has been placed on a firm basis, and it is claimed the tunnel will be completed before 1892. It will be walled in, so as to make two independent tunnels, each 5,900 feet long. There will be an approach of three-fourths of a mile on each side, making a total length of over two and a half miles for each tunnel. About 2,000 feet of the north section of the tunnel has already been completed.

Anarchy in Zanzibar.

A yesterday's cable from Zanzibar has the following: Last night a party of natives entered the Indian bazaar and commenced thrashing the Indian men and women without distinction until they were ultimately stopped by the soldiers. Eighteen arrests only have been made and these men are in the fort. To-day they were flogged. The police arrangements here are infamous.

CURRENT TOPICS.

French physicians who are studying the matter are confident that hypnotism will in time succeed the use of chloroform in the practice of painful surgical operations. Many most remarkable experiments in this direction have proved successful. Patients have been hypnotized, and while in that condition undergone operations of the most painful and delicate nature without evincing sensibility in the slightest degree.

King Ja Ja, of West Africa, who is imprisoned on one of the islands of the West Indies by the English Government, has become a prey to melancholia. He refuses to eat and has grown extremely thin. He would have died months ago if he had not kept up on wine and tobacco. One of his wives is with him, but he will not speak to her and spends his time roaming about puffing cigars and sunk in gloomy reverie.

Denmark is rapidly developing into a sort of poultry yard annex to Great Britain—that is to say, a large portion of the eggs consumed in the latter country are the product of the Danish hens. This trade began some twenty years ago, at which time there were annually shipped from Denmark to England something like 900,000 eggs. The business has expanded steadily until the export now amounts to over 111,000,000 annually.

The amount of human blood spilled in bringing the Paris Exposition to completion is something enormous. The records show that during the erection of the buildings no less than 6,350 men were treated for injuries of one kind or another received while at work on them; 300 workmen were injured as to their legs, 200 were badly injured in their eyes, 114 were scalded or badly burned, 50 had fingers cut off. The death roll from falls foots up 24, though this is said to be far below the actuality.

The four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Mr. C. Columbus falls in the year 1892, and New York and Chicago are the two leading cities struggling for the site of the world's fair with which it is proposed to mark the event. Both cities are going ahead with the preliminaries, as if the matter had been finally settled in their favor, and playing what might be called a bluff game. Congress has the privilege of settling the matter of a site for the fair.

Mr. Raikes, the British Postmaster-General, has introduced a threepenny post-card, intended principally for the Australian service. The stamp which appears upon the card is an entirely new design. For the usual head of the Queen which has hitherto formed the main feature of the British stamp, Mr. Raikes has substituted a full-length figure of Her Majesty in her jubilee robes. The stamp and superscription are printed in red.

The connection of the Red Sea with the Mediterranean by the Suez Canal has had one effect which is as disagreeable as it was unexpected. Before the canal was opened all the watering places on the Mediterranean enjoyed a complete immunity from the presence of sharks, these fish being practically unknown then. But the canal has been utilized by the objectionable creatures to such an extent that sharks which have come from the Red Sea are now so numerous in the Mediterranean that it has become necessary to warn bathers in many places to be on their guard continually.

Following the example of St. Paul, who was all things to all men, the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association has adopted a rather novel plan to inveigle young men into its rooms. The free reading room, gymnasium, open meetings, social entertainments, etc., have been insufficient to draw the crowds it desired, and it has fallen back upon the dodge adopted by the saloons, cigar stores, billiard rooms, etc., to entice the unsuspecting youth within their doors, that of bulletining the baseball games. The association will thus be able to mingle good advice and Christian precepts with the stealing of bases, put outs and errors.

The food consumed on one of the large steamships from New York to Liverpool was as follows: Nine thousand five hundred pounds of beef, 4,000 pounds of mutton, 900 pounds of lamb, 256 pounds of veal, 150 pounds of pork, 140 pounds of pickled legs of pork, 600 pounds of corned tongues, 700 pounds of corned beef, 2,000 pounds of fresh fish, 20 pounds of calves' feet, 18 pounds of calves' heads, 450 fowls, 240 spring chickens, 120 ducks, 50 turkeys, 50 geese, 600 squabs, 300 tins sardines, 300 plovers, 175 pounds sausage, 1,200 pounds of ham, 500 pounds of bacon, 10,000 eggs, 2,000 quarts of milk, 700 pounds of butter, 410 pounds of coffee, 87 pounds of tea, 900 pounds of sugar, 100 pounds of rice, 200 pounds of barley, 100 jars of jam and jelly, 50 bottles of pickles, 50 bottles of sauces, 20 barrels of apples, 14 boxes of lemons, 18 boxes of oranges, 6 tons of potatoes, 24 barrels of flour.

Yankees Paying Us Back.

A Boston despatch of yesterday says The Nova Scotia schooners Francis Arthenius and Aurora Borealis, arrived in port to-day and were held by the Customs officials in libel for $1,000 fine on a charge made by Captain Fengar, of the revenue cutter Woodbury, of having been in American waters over 24 hours and not reporting at the nearest custom house. It seems the two vessels were on August 1st in Passamaquoddy Bay, near Quoddy roads, during very thick weather, and both captains claim they were becalmed in the fog and could not tell whether they were in American or Canadian waters until after the prescribed time. They have both appealed to Washington to have the fines remitted, but will be held until the national authorities have been heard from.

THE MIKADO'S SON.

Japan's Future Sovereign Being Educated According to Western Notions.

His Imperial Highness Prince Haru, heir apparent to the throne of Japan, is now in his tenth year. A delicate child in his early days, he has happily acquired health and strength as years went by. No imperial prince in this empire has ever been similarly brought up. The prince's mode of life is modelled almost entirely upon western lines. He attends the nobles' school daily, and studies precisely as do his fellow-students. The Choya Shimbun says that in both literature and military science he has made extraordinary progress, but of what this bugei (military science) consists we cannot precisely say. In olden times a noble Japanese began, at a very early age, to study the use of the bow, the sword and the lance, but even in the case of an imperial prince skill in managing such weapons scarcely continues to be included among essential accomplishments. Doubtless Prince Haru takes lessons in fencing and equestrianism as a part of his school course, and in archery as a pastime. The Choya tells us that he has a cold bath every morning; that his diet is chiefly meat; that he has shaken himself entirely free from petticoat government; that his constant companions are officers and tutors; that he is fond of visiting beautiful scenery as at Enoshima and Atami; that he plays on the seashore and in the woods like any ordinary boy, and that in consequence he is lusty and active. Our contemporary quotes Mr. Takasaki, Vice-Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies, as saying that if such an education had always been given to the youthful Diamyo, the present representatives of that body would occupy a very different place in the national polity, and that the history of Japan during the past two thousand years contains no instance of the heir to the throne being brought up in such a manner. We learn on the same authority that Prince Haru treats everybody, even to the lowest of those about him, with the greatest courtesy; that he takes a keen interest in his fellow-students at the nobles' school, making minute inquiries whenever any one of them is prevented by sickness from attending, and that his conduct is in every respect exemplary.—San Francisco Examiner.

MR. VANDERBILT'S NEW HOME.

It Will be Made of White Marble and Modelled After Ancient Grecian Buildings.

The colossal size of Mr. Frederick Vanderbilt's new house, and especially of his entrance hall, is still a topic of conversation at Newport, says the Boston Times. Sidney Smith once said of an abnormally stout woman: "One might take one's morning walk around her, alwas supposing that one is in rude health and good physical training." And the remark would apply equally well to Mr. Vanderbilt's house, the inmates of which must get all the exercise they want within its walls. The entrance hall, notwithstanding its great size, is admirably proportioned, and the marble porch which opens out of it gives a fine view of the ocean and rocks, and of the pretty stone archway at the foot of the lawn through which the water breaks and ripples and then rushes back again to the sea. The charm of the great houses of Newport is their individuality. Each one is the outcome of an enormous expenditure of money, but of money laid out under totally different conditions and directed by individual taste and preferences. Hence sameness and monotony are unknown. The mansion only just begun by Mr. William K. Vanderbilt will, it is said, be absolutely unique in its style of architecture and decoration. It is to be of white marble and modelled after the buildings and temples of ancient Greece. Marble will also enter largely into the finish of its interior, and it is rumored that exquisite carvings and sculpture have been ordered for the ornamentation of its lower floors.

JUMPED THE TRACK.

Smash-up on the W. P. R.—Three Killed, Many Injured.

A Pittsburg despatch of last Friday night says: The south bound passenger train on the Butler branch of the Western Pennsylvania Railroad, which left Butler, Pa., at 2.35 o'clock this afternoon, jumped the track at Sarvers station, and the entire train, consisting of two passenger coaches and a combination smoking and baggage car, went over an embankment and was totally wrecked. Three persons were killed outright and 25 others injured, a number of whom will die. The accident was caused by the spreading of the rails on a small bridge. The rails were on stringers, which had rotted with time and long service. The engine passed over the bridge safely, but the first car was derailed and plunged down into the abyss some thirty feet below. The rails ploughed through the second car, and the escapes were miraculous.

A bootless attempt—To get upstairs without being heard by your wife.

There's something attractive about her;
It isn't her beauty of face.
It isn't her ribbons or lace,
But there's something attractive about her,
And I swear that I can't live without her,
And that is the state of the case.

There's something attractive about her;
It isn't her glance or her smile,
It isn't her elegant style;
But I'm poor and I can't live without her,
For that something attractive about her,
You know, is the size of her pile.

—The following words were set to tune as an anthem by Mr. Joseph Barnby, Precentor at Eton, for the recent Royal wedding:

O Perfect Love, all human thought transcending,
Lowly we kneel in prayer before Thy Throne.
That their's may be the love that knows no ending
Whom Thou for evermore dost join in one.

O Perfect Life, be Thou their full assurance
Of tender charity and steadfast faith.
Of patient hope, and quiet, brave endurance,
With childlike trust that fears no pain or death.

Grant them the joy which brightens earthly sorrow;
Grant them the peace which calms all worldly strife,
And to life's day the glorious unknown morrow
That dawns upon eternal love and life.

EPITAPH FOR A GOSSIP.

Here lies an ancient dame whose tongue
Could never rest, so loose it hung.
She talked so constant and so fast
That when Azrael came at last
To quench in her the vital flame
He hesitated, for the dame
Was such a talker, the record saith,
He feared she'd break the silence of death.

The Reason.

HE.

It isn't that she's young,
It isn't that she's fair,
It isn't that she has a charming grace,
It isn't that her gown
Is the wonder of the town,
Or that every one admires her pretty face.
It is simply that in life
Every man must have a wife
The duties of his household to attend;
Else his dinner will be cold,
And his cook a saucy scold,
And his sorry tribulations without end.

SHE.

It isn't that he's rich,
It isn't that he's tall,
It isn't that he drives a coach and four;
It isn't that he's wise,
Or has very handsome eyes,
And virtues to be counted by the score.
It is simply that in life
Every girl must be a wife
(Unless, forsooth, she's one that's not afraid);
As for me, I'd die outright,
With dread horror and affright,
If I ever thought I'd be an old maid.

THE FORCE OF HABIT.

Firemen Whose Sleep Cannot be Broken Except by the Sound of the Gong.

A great many people wonder how it is that firemen are so easily aroused from their slumbers at night by the sound of the gong, and not being able to see through it clearly conclude that their sleep must be a very nervous one, says Fireman John Callahan in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. This is a wrong impression. When a man first joins the department he is wakeful and nervous, but a few weeks' acquaintance with the method of being awakened banishes all this, and no matter how tired or weary a fireman may be when he retires, or how soundly he sleeps, he is wide awake at the first tap of the bell. Long service in the department makes this method of being awakened so habitual that the sound of even the bell of an alarm clock will awaken the fire laddie when he could not be aroused by calling or tugging at him. I have become so accustomed to the habit of being awakened by the sound of a bell that when I go home on my day off and lay down to sleep I have to set the alarm clock at the hour I intend to leave. I was on the department nearly a month before I got my first recreation day, and I remember that when I went home and fell asleep my folks tried to awaken me at midnight to go to work. They tugged and pulled at me, but I did not awaken. They became alarmed and called in a neighbor, who was also a member of the department. He saw at once what was the matter, and brought in a dishpan to my bedside and hammered on it with a stick. I was up at the first stroke and threw my arms around him, thinking it was the pole. It caused a great laugh, of course, but fully illustrated the force of habit.

OUR YOUNGEST SISTER.

A New British Colony Formed at Old Calabar.

The question of the future government of the West African oil rivers from Benin to Old Calabar is being investigated by Her Majesty's Commissioner (Major Claude Maxwell McDonald), who is now on the coast, and has held a "palaver" with the kings and chiefs at Old Calabar. From a recent report it would seem that two proposals were placed before the natives for their consideration. The first was that the oil rivers should be governed by a royal chartered trading company, and the second was that the rivers should be made into a Crown colony. The candid opinion of the natives was asked by the Commissioner, who gave the natives time to consider the matter before replying. They were also requested to ask any question they wished, but they were not to ask the probable amount of taxation, as that question could not then be answered, though for their information they could get particulars of the duties which are now levied at Lagos and in the Royal Niger Company's territories. The natives retired, and next day they one and all decided to accept a Crown colony, preferring to be under the direct rule of Her Majesty's Government. It is further stated that the missionaries were also in favor of a Crown colony.

The Dundee Town Council have resolved to present the Marquis of Lorne with the freedom of the city, on the occasion of his visit in October to open the Victoria Art Galleries.

The Shah told Sir Algernon Borthwick—so a London paper assures us—that he liked Scotland immensely. He had never seen such beauty among the women anywhere else.

At the welcome meeting to Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, in Melbourne, the usually sedate Presbyters went the length of calling for three cheers for the Principal when he rose to speak. It is understood that Dr. Rainy will return home by way of the United States.

The death is announced of Admiral the Hon. Thomas Baillie, of Dryburgh Abbey. The Admiral died rather suddenly at the Cross Keys Hotel, Kelso, on the 31st ult. Deceased, who was an uncle of the present Earl of Haddington, saw a good deal of service in the British navy, having been present at the battle of Navarino, and held command of the British fleet in the White Sea during the Crimean war.

His Youthful Guard.

When the Shah arrived at Berlin a small boy, dressed in gorgeous garments of gold and purple, was noticed at one of the windows of the train. Nobody knew who he was, and many stories were current, but it is now stated that the little lad, who is only 5 or 6 years old, and who accompanies the Shah everywhere, is a sorcerer from Teheran, whose presence is supposed to guard Nasr-ed-Deen from all ills and all misfortunes during his journey.—Once a Week.

Winter Wheat.

Save seed of the very best quality; if you are in doubt as to its quality test it.

If the soil is hard or dry use the roller or drag. On sod land the disc harrow will be a good implement to use. If not too lumpy, or on old stubble ground, the spring tooth harrow will do good work. In using both of these, go the first time the way it was plowed and crossways the second.

In many cases it will pay to arrange to keep the harrowing close up to the plowing.

It will not always do to delay harrowing until after there has been a soaking rain.

By keeping the surface thoroughly clean the chinch bug and Hessian fly will be deprived of part of their shelter and food.

Manure can be hauled out and applied after plowing.

If a clover sod is to be plowed under for wheat, an application of lime before plowing would be found beneficial.

If salt is to be applied wait until spring, and then sow broadcast as evenly as possible.

If commercial fertilizers are to be used, sow with a drill when sowing the seed or sow broadcast just before seeding.

One of the advantages in using wood ashes as a fertilizer for wheat is that it helps materially to stiffen the straw.

Prepare to give thorough drainage. Tile drainage is best, but surface drainage will answer. Arrange to avoid washing as much as possible.

There is no advantage in sowing the seed unless there is sufficient moisture in the soil to induce a quick germination.

Be sure that the seed wheat does not contain cheat, rye, cockle or other fine seeds. There is usually a sufficient quantity of them in the soil without sowing.

Corn land that has been well cultivated during the growing season can often be properly fitted for wheat without plowing, if care be taken to harrow thoroughly.

The quantity of seed should be gauged by the time of sowing, the fertility and condition of the soil and the quality of the seed used, as well as the way it is sown.

A seed bed three inches deep, made thoroughly fine, will be much better than six inches of loose soil not thoroughly prepared.

The time for sowing must be determined by the season, the condition of the soil, and the danger from grasshoppers, flies and chinch bugs.

District Millers.

At a general meeting of the millers of this district of Ontario held at London lately the following buying and exchange schedules were adopted:

BUYING.

For 60 lb wheat, standard price.
For 64 lb wheat, 4 cents more.

For 53 lb wheat, 23 lbs straight roller flour.
—and 13 lbs offal.

Think of the momentum of the sun, weighing as much as 330,000 earths, and darting through space at the rate of a million miles a day. But there are a hundred million other suns visible in the heavens, each weighing at least as much as our sun, and all in motion, with a velocity in some cases far exceeding his. Add up the sum of their combined energy of motion, and the imagination staggers before the living force of the universe. The power stored up in an express train is sufficient to shatter the train to pieces if its motion is suddenly arrested. But stop these smooth running suns and universal space would return to chaos with the shock.

DITTON HERSEL'.

O," the little town o' Ditton has an unco' lot o' names,
What wi' a' the Macs an' ither Macs, the Mathesons an' Grahams,
Thae Campbells, Humphrey, Humpidge, Smith an' Haines,
Sifton, Lugsdin, Sutton, Hertel, an' ance they had their Lanes.

An' gin ye want tae bake an' hae the best o' bread
Ye'll gang tae our miller, they ay ca' him Hollingshead,
Where ye can see a Porter who'll introduce ye to a Knox;
Sae far ye see, in church an state, the toon is orthodox.

An' noo that ye're on the March get on ye'er steeds their shoon,
An' buy a carriage o' a Glance ere ye gang in tae toon,
Ay, an' if ye're wantin' braws, mair gay yeresel' tae make,
Ye'll get them here tae suit yere taste, a' measured by a Drake.

An' gin ye want choice groceries before the verra toon ye reach,
They are even tae be had frae a mon ca'ed Malcolm Leitch;
Then see yon bonny lassie, wha in the easiest chair exults,
Ever singing as she rocks, I bocht it frae Ben Schultz.

An' just across the street there is anither sings the same
In what she ca's a daisy that was purchased frae a Graham;
The flight o' time they note on twa gran' watches that were bought
Ane just frae Willie Nelson an' the ither ane frae Vogt.

Gude sake, hae I forgot—noo ma cobs look ay sae sleek an silky—
Tae get a gran' new set o' harness a' made by Geordie Wilkie;
Noo yere auld heid is in a ferment wi' a' the heat an' toil,
An' there is naething noo can help ye like a turn wi' Charlie Doyle.

Here's noo a fine array o' hardware, tins an' a' things bright,
An' ye'll be duly waited on by a Brown mon or a White;
Haud, here are bukes an toys, ye ken, they are lookin' nice,
Dinna staun ootside starin', gae in an' find the Price.

But sit doon an' rest a wee, we'll laugh at will,
Get gude ice cream an' lemomade frae oor auld freen, McGill;
Noo tae croon a' things we meet an' find in fortune's school,
'Tis gettan crockery, groceries, ay and dry goods frae a Pool.

Noo dinna faint my story isna just sae verra shockin'
When a'll whisper ye'll great bargains get frae Tammie Hockin;
But brogues tae wear, ye see the matter noo we broach,
Ye'll get them made or mended at the shop o' Edward Roche.

Is there cash tae be invested, tae get wi' interest back,
There are twa thriving bankers caed McIntyre and Black.
If wanting seeds or machinery when the Enterprise ye are liftin',
Just every kind, ye ken, is found wi' a wee mon named Sifton.

An' noo ma freens if ye in gettin' a' things wad be frugal
Tak tent tae me an' gang tae see that mon they ca' McDougall;
An' noo for teas an' coffees tae e'en fit for us frae Sterlin',
Pu' up the cobs, gang been the store an' buy frae A. D. Urlin.

Drugs, did ye say, tae Kirkland we maun gang,
Gude measure an' gude weight, wi' prices no so wrang.
Ye'd like tae cut a shadow ? then awa tae Maister Brush,
He'll touch yere ugly face till wi' honest pride ye blush.

For dinna be sae vain, for gang as high as ye may Ye maun come doon, min yere naething here but Clay,
But we're no afraid o' bogles, ghaists or ghouls,
For we're always in gude patience, and faith just keep oor Soules.

Get a buggy frae a Lilly, and new pump frae a Marsh,
An' in finding a Hill ye may be Quick but no be harsh,
An' ilka day be Wise, tho' ye tak tae Bake a Wren;
For ane may be a Fitchit an' yet the verra best o' men.

Ye need a suit o' braw new cloes, fit for Royal, Knight or pagan,
Awa tae Willson's, Johnnie Hertel or just tae Jamie Dagan;
We hae Fowlers, Barnes and Hodders in hooses thick as thistles,
While McMillan maks ye harness, get frae Jackson, kists o' whistles.

Wait, noo, an' see a Peck o' Love Lett doon among the Cranes,
A wholesome sight an' ane that ay rewards ye for yere pains.
Be Bright, my Mann, gie soond advice tae baith son and daughter,
Just thing o' Ditton's vet., an' bid them tae Drinkwater.

Nae news! ye loon, we're in Advance o' a' sma' toons that rise,
An' drivan on tae sure success, we're fu' o' Enterprise.
Oor three gude Drs. ready stan' wi' powder, purgatives and pills,
To wait upon ye day or night an' sooth away your ills.

Noo, just min' if ye're inclined tae laugh or sneer at Ditton,
We'll no be fashed or sat upon, ye always hae a Mitton.

Noo fare ye weel, keep cool and richt an' no get in a Swither,
An bear in mind a boat may sink if rowers ficht each ither.

AULD DOOGLAS.

Robert Marvel, the octogenarian of Pike township, has passed the 67th day of his fast. During the past week the hard, bony substance which appeared in his veins when he was first attacked by paralysis, has increased, and is now felt at intervals of two or three inches all over his body. He is a veritable living skeleton. He has not spoken a word since June 14, and during the past two weeks has been almost motionless. In that time he has drank probably three pints of water, but nothing else has passed into his stomach.

CHOW-CHOW.

Milburn's Aromatic Quinine Wine is distinctly superior to any other as an appetising tonic and fortifier.

Regulate the liver and bowels by the judicious use of National Pills, they are purely vegetable.

They have flannel bathing suits at the seaside resorts that do not shrink. They are ashamed to, probably.

CROWNED OR UNCROWNED.

THE head of anyone suffering from constipation, biliousness or dyspepsia will harbor a sick headache. By regulating the bowels, arousing the torpid liver, improving digestion and purifying the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters banishes sick headache no matter how severe or obstinate it may be.

That's enough to try anybody's patients as the doctor exclaimed when he found his bottles all mixed and without labels.

If you wish long life keep your Stomach and Bowels regular. Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters will do it. Safe. A baby may take them. Try one bottle, 50 cents, all druggists.

Your druggist is authorized to refund you the money if Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters do not benefit any case of Dyspepsia, Kidney or Liver Complaint. All Druggists, 50 cents.

A virtuous man who has passed through the temptations of the world may be compared to the fish who lives all the time in salt water, yet is still fresh.

SAFE AND RELIABLE.

I HIGHLY recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for curing cholera, cholera morbus, colic, cramps, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all summer complaints. It is safe and reliable for children and older persons.

MISS HILEY BNECKENBRIDGE,
Heyworth, Que.

The devil is often referred to as "The Old Boy." Notwithstanding this fact, it is not uncommon for friends to greet each other with the salutation, "how are you, old boy?"

Bordering on the Miraculous—Mr. W. A. Sherwood, of Stanwood, Michigan, was a sufferer from Kidney Complaints for four years, he was totally unfit for work, tried all the local doctors, took "cures" by the dozen, two bottles of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters made a new man of him.

It's only natural—Amateur baseballer—"Why is it you fellows always play for money while we play for honor?" Professional—"Well, I suppose that each play for what they most lack."

As a healing, soothing application for cuts, wounds, bruises and sores, there is nothing better than Victoria Carbolic Salve.

Freeman's Worm Powders destroy and remove worms without injury to adult or infant.

Johnny had been carefully brought up; anybody could see that. One day he sat upon his father's knee in a crowded tramcar. A lady entered. "Madam," he said as he rose to his feet, "take my seat."

TIMELY WISDOM.

TIMELY wisdom is shown by those who keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry on hand. It has no equal for cholera, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, dysentery, colic, cramps and all other summer complaints or loosening of the bowels.

London Free Press: The nine "blocky" young women who gave an exhibition of base ball at Springbank on Saturday afternoon certainly played the game with lots of vim, and their sliding into bases was particularly admired. They have some athletes amongst their number, and one of the girls gave an exhibition at a London West hotel after the game, performing various tricks with skill and dexterity, and winding up by standing on her head for the edification of the spectators.

THE OKLAHAMA BOOM

FORMS an instance of a rush for an uncertainty, which is just the opposite of the steady boom enjoyed by Burdock Blood Bitters. Buyers of this medicine get a certainty—an unequalled remedy for all diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and the blood.

A gentleman meeting one of his friends who was insolvent expressed great concern for his embarrassment. "You are mistaken, my dear sir," was the reply, "'tis not I, 'tis my creditors who are embarrassed."

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth ? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers ; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

THE FOUR CARDINAL POINTS.

THE stomach, the liver, the bowels and the blood are the four cardinal points of health. These Burdock Blood Bitters acts upon to strengthen, regulate, cleanse, and purify, thus restoring and maintaining perfect health. B. B. B. is nature's true tonic and renovator.

Flossie (after the feast of melons)—"Mamma," she said, pressing her hands wearily upon her stomach, "my sash is just like a window sash, isn't it?" "In what way, dear?" asked the mother, smiling. "Because its around the pains," she replied, demurely.

THREE YEARS IN BED.

GENTLEMEN, I tried your Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and was perfectly cured from sickness. I was sick in bed for three years and after taking six bottles was perfectly cured, and now I would not be without the medicine in the house. MISS EDMYRA FULLER,
Vereker P. O., Ont.

A church in the north country which needed a pastor had a beadle who took an active interest in all proceedings taken to fill up the vacancy. One of the candidates, after the afternoon service was over, put off the cloak in the vestry and stepped into the church, in which our worthy was just putting things to right. "I was just taking a look at the church," said the minister. "Ay' tak' a guid look at it," said the beadle, "for it's no likely ye'll ever see't again."—At a country church, a young minister from the West, and a great swell, came to do duty one Sabbath. Entering the vestry, he doffed his coat and vest previous to donning the cassock and cloak, and looked round for the looking-glass which generally forms a part of the vestry furniture. He searched, however, in vain. At last, losing patience, he cried out, "Church offisaw, church offisaw !" After calling for some time, the head of a gray-haired man peered in at the door, and a stentorian voice demanded, "What's yer wull?" Where's the mirraw?" demanded the minister. "Sir?" said the other. "The mirraw—the looking-glass," said the minister impatiently. "Oh, the lookin glass. Ye see, oor minister's sic a handsum man naterally, that he doesna need a lookin'-glass; but i'll bring ye a pail o' water if you like."

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

Rodney.

Aug. 21.—Service in the Catholic Church, West Lorne, next Sabbath.

W. Schneckenburger's new residence on Silver st. is about completed.

Mrs. Zimmerman and daughter have returned from a visit to Woodstock and Stratford.

E. Smith is improving his house by building a large addition to it.

Public school re-opened last Monday.

Quite a number went to Detroit yesterday.

The remains of the wife of C. Zoller, who was married here a year ago, were brought to the residence of her parents, New Hamburg, last week. Rev. Mr. Stabler, Evangelical minister, formerly of this place, conducted the funeral service. Mr. Zoller removed to Buffalo a short time ago, where his wife died.

J. Stinson, of Ridgetown, was visiting in town.

Last Friday a man came to Mr. Chase's, at Taylor, in the morning for his breakfast, and after getting it Mr. Chase asked him to work an hour for his meal. A dispute arose between them and Mr. Chase assaulted the man and ran him about a mile to a neighbor's house, where he beat the man badly and, it is said, kicked him in the mouth.

The re-opening of the Presbyterian church was a grand success. Service was held in the morning at 11, in the afternoon at 3 and in the evening at 7, the church being well filled every time. The collections on Sunday were $45. The tea-meeting receipts were about the same. The cost of the repairing of the church was about $400. The tea-meeting was held on the church lawn, and was well attended, the large crowd doing full justice to the abundance of good things provided. Music was furnished by the brass band and choir, of Rodney, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Messrs. Gray, of Windsor; Currie, of Kintyre; Wilson, Bristol and Francis, of Rodney.

While D. McNaughton and two sisters were going home Monday night the horses backed into the ditch, smashing the rig and throwing the ladies out, injuring one of them badly. The horses were, fortunately, caught and the ladies picked out of the ditch before any further damage was done.

Aug. 27—Mrs. E. C. Harvey is visiting her parents in St. Clair.

While N. Lundy was employed on the addition to E. Smith's hotel the scaffold on which he was standing broke throwing him to the ground, breaking his arm near the wrist.

About 100 persons were waiting at the Moore dock for the boat to take them to Cleveland. The excursion was postponed until the 4th of September on account of the storm.

Rodney fall fair October 12th.

The Rodney German class met at the usual hour, 8 o'clock. The following officers were elected:—President, L. Mistele; vice-president, L. Schmidt; principal teacher, Mr. Whittich; assistant teacher, L. Schmidt. Quite a number of new members joined at the usual fee of 25 cents.

A few nights ago two of our citizens were out coon hunting. After a two-mile walk they met a well perfumed coon, which gave them satisfaction for the remainder of the evening, especially one of them.

Miss Rossman, of Detroit, is visiting in town.

T. Mellon is home and is ill.

The Presbyterians of New Glasgow will give a "harvest home" on the church lawn of that place on the 6th of Sept. Admission, 25 cents.

Eagle.

Aug. 27—Alex. McColl, who had been ailing for some time, passed away last Thursday morning at 45 years of age. The funeral took place on Saturday morning at ten o'clock, the remains being interred in the McColl cemetery. Rev. Mr. Francis, of Rodney, conducted the funeral services. The bereaved wife and family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

Miss Annie Mowbray has returned home from a three weeks' visit with friends in Clearville and Ridgetown.

The Misses Paterson, of Detroit, who have been spending some weeks with relatives here, have returned home accompanied by their cousin, Miss Tena Mowbray, of this place, who intends attending a music school in that city.

Rev. Mr. Irwin, who preached here six years ago, conducted Methodist service here last Sunday.

West Lorne.

Miss Annie McColl has returned from visiting her brother, Dr. McColl, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Rodney Thomas left last week for Pontiac Mich., where he has secured a situation.

Alf. Partridge has returned from Windsor, where he been visiting friends for the past few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McPherson and Wm. Actworth have returned from Hamilton, where they have been attending the summer carnival.

Quite a number took in the excursion to Detroit last week, and all report a good time. Those who intended going to Cleveland were very much disappointed as the boat did not come for them.

Owing to the continued dry weather quite a number of wells have gone dry in town and vicinity.

Word reached here Monday of the death at Port Dover of Mrs. A. E. Vanloon. Mr. Vanloon, who has the sympathy of the entire neighborhood in his sad bereavement, left that afternoon to attend the funeral.

J. H. Greer has moved and is now refitting his store on Main street, and when finished it will be occupied by the millinery department of F. J. Lindenman & Co.'s store. F. Daly has the contract.

The Baptist church, having been thoroughly renovated, will be re-opened next Sunday by special services. All are cordially invited to attend and help swell the collections, which will be taken up to defray the debt which has been contracted.

F. J. Lindenman, having removed his store from the Elgin House block to the Beaton block, is now engaged in fitting up a dining-room and a barber shop, to be run in connection with the hotel. When finished it will be one of the best hotels in West Elgin.

Last Monday evening some evil disposed person entered the Argyle House and ransacked some of the rooms, securing some money and other articles belong to inmates of the house. This makes the third time this house has been robbed in two weeks and things are beginning to look as if a bad gang is working in town. Other residents report that their houses have been tampered with, and the guilty parties, if caught, will be dealt with summarily.

A very successful picnic was held in Mr. Rose's grove, about a mile from town, on Friday last. After the bounteous repast, provided by the ladies, had been disposed of the afternoon's performances commenced. The programme, consisting of vocal and instrumental music and speeches by well known local speakers, was well received by the audience present as the numerous bursts of applause amply testified. One of the prominent features was a contest for a cake between two popular young ladies, which was finally won by Miss Barbour after a spirited battle, she being adjudged to be the most fitting candidate for the honors.

Iona.

The Melbourne baseball club visited Iona on Saturday last. They said that they expected to play all around the home team as they had no trouble in defeating the strongest teams in Middlesex. The visiting club took the lead in the start but this did not last long. Our team seeing that it was necessary to settle down to work pounded the leather for nine runs in one innings, thus getting a big lead. The game from this out was certainly a pitchers' battle. The game was called at the end of the seventh innings. Score 6 to 19 in favor of the home team. Batteries—Iona, Knight and Humpidge; Melbourne, Lucas and Norsworthy.

Mrs. Liddell and daughter, of West Lorne, are the guests of John Liddell.

Miss Stark is slowly recovering.

Martha McIntyre left on Monday to attend high school at Dutton.

Middlemiss

Miss Jessie Fletcher, of Cowal, has been visiting relatives in Alvinston for the last few weeks.

John Watson, of Pleasant Valley, who had his leg broken a few weeks ago, is slowly recovering under the skilful care of Dr. Leitch.

Mrs. McLachlin, of Glencoe, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. R. Fletcher left for home on Monday to see her son who is going to seek his fortune in Manitoba.

The anniversary services in connection with the Methodist church of this place will be held on Sunday, Sept. 8th, followed by a tea-meeting on Monday evening.

Farmers in this vicinity are nearly all through with their harvest. Some who have threshed report the wheat crop very light while oats are yielding from 30 to 50 bushels per acre.

THROUGH THE HEART.

A California Marshal Shoots Down an ex-Judge.

A DINING CAR TRAGEDY.

A Lathrop, Cal., despatch of Wednesday says: Upon the arrival of the southern overland train at 7.20 this morning, U. S. Supreme Court Judge Stephen J. Field and Deputy U. S. Marshal David Nagle walked into the depot dining-room for breakfast and sat down side by side. Soon afterwards Judge David S. Terry and wife came in. They were proceeding to another table when Mrs. Terry, evidently recognizing Justice Field, did not sit down, but retired to the train for some unknown purpose. Before she reached it, however, and as soon as she had left the dining-room, Judge Terry approached Justice Field and stooping over him slapped his face. At this juncture Deputy Marshal Nagle arose from his seat and shot Judge Terry through the heart. As he was falling the Deputy Marshal shot again, but missed him, the bullet going through the floor. The Judge did not utter a sound. He had hardly fallen when Mrs. Terry rushed to the side of her husband's body and threw herself upon it.

Then ensued a scene of the wildest excitement. People rushed from the dining-room and others rushed in. During this time Justice Field and Deputy Marshal Nagle retreated to a sleeping car, where they were securely locked within. At times Mrs. Terry would call upon the citizens to arrest them. Before the train pulled out Constable Walker entered the sleeper and was carried away on board. He informed the spectators that he knew his duty and would perform it.

During the time the train was standing at the depot Mrs. Terry was running wildly alternately from the body of her husband to the sleeper, demanding admittance, that she might slap Justice Field's face, and at the same time begging that they be detained and have their examination here.

Previous to the entrance of Constable Walker into the car Sheriff Purvis and his deputy, of Stanislaus County, had already taken charge of Nagle.

After the shooting Deputy U. S. Marshal Nagle backed up against the wall of the dining-room and warned everyone not to arrest him, saying he was a United States officer in the discharge of his duty. There was no semblance of any attempt to arrest him. Constable Walker took Deputy Nagle from the train at Tracy and proceeded with him to Stockton, where he is in jail. District Attorney White has ordered the arrest of Justice Field upon his arrival is San Francisco.

The announcement that Judge Terry had been killed caused extraordinary excitement here. The scene of the tragedy is 83 miles from this city. The possibility of an encounter between Terry and Justice Field has been recognized ever since the imprisonment of Terry for contempt of court ten months ago. Terry was at one time Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California and has always been a prominent figure in the political history of the State. He was married to Sarah Althea Hill, who claimed to be the wife of ex-Senator Sharon, while prosecuting her claim against the Sharon estate. Justice Field last year rendered a decision denying her claim to be the wife of Sharon. Mrs. Terry created a scene in court, charging Justice Field with being corrupt. The woman resisted a deputy-marshal who tried to remove her. Terry interfered, drawing a dagger. He was disarmed, and Terry and his wife were adjudged in contempt and committed to jail. Justice Field went to Washington, returning to this city six weeks ago. Newspaper articles were printed intimating it would be dangerous for Justice Field and Terry to meet personally, as it was thought the latter might insult the former, while the fact was also recognized that Justice Feld would be quick to resent an attack from Terry, knowing it could only result fatally to one or the other in view of Terry's record. Terry was born in Kentucky in 1823. He served in the Texan army under Sam Houston. He came to California in 1849, and in 1855 was elected Justice of the Supreme Court of California on the Native American ticket. Upon the death of Chief Justice Murray in 1857, Terry became Chief Justice. He opposed the Vigilance Committee of 1856 and stabbed one of the members who attempted to arrest his friend Maloney. Terry killed Senator Broderick in 1859 in a duel as the result of political differences.

A Stockton despatch says: The coroner arrived here at 11.40 to-day with Judge Terry's body in a box covered with white cloth. Mrs. Terry rode in the express car with the remains. Deputy-Marshal Nagle was brought here from Tracy in a buggy. He refused to be interviewed, but said, "I am a Deputy United States Marshal and simply did my duty as an officer." He was locked up alone and soon after sent for the local attorney. Nagle was very cool and determined, but looked pale.

A warrant of arrest was served upon Justice Field at 1 o'clock this afternoon at the latter's chambers. A writ of habeas corpus was at once sworn out before Judge Sawyer, of the Circuit Court, and heard by him in Chambers.

The Supreme Court of the State of California, of which the late David S. Terry was formerly Chief Justice, this morning refused to adjourn out of respect to Terry's memory. This decision was announced from the bench, and the reasons given were that Terry resigned his judicial position to fight a duel, and that he was killed while in the act of assaulting a justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Not His Usual Way.

Mrs. Blotterwick (reading)—"Among those who paid their respects to the President was Hon. John Doubleface, of Buncombe." Can that be old Doubleface, our neighbor?

Blotterwick (who keeps a large store) dubiously—Hardly possible. I never knew of his paying anything before.

—A Great Injury Done: "I've been injured by a statement in your paper." "I am sorry, sir. What did I say?" "You stated that I had compromised with my creditors for 70 cents on the dollar." "Well?" "Well, I haven't done anything of the kind; it was 40 cents."

THE MAYBRICK CASE.

Petitions Being Numerously Signed—Mrs. Briggs' Contradictory Story.

A Wednesday's London cable says: There are no new developments of importance in the Maybrick case. The army of letter writers are still filling the newspaper offices with waste paper. Home Secretary Matthews, in spite of the deluge of letters and petitions, keeps his own counsel. Fifty-two members of Parliament have signed the memorial asking for a commutation of Mrs. Maybrick's sentence. The signers of the petitions in Liverpool number 46,000.

Mrs. Briggs was about the only interesting feature of the case to-day. Goaded by the interview with Baroness Von Roque, Mrs. Briggs came to the front and denied that she had worked up the case against Mrs. Maybrick, of whom she was a friend, she affirmed. Mrs. Briggs contradicted herself curiously. In the first part of the interview she said she had first heard of the poison when the woman Yapp told her that her mistress was poisoning the master. Towards the finish of the interview she said the idea of poison never entered her head until the doctor refused the death certificate.

All sorts of rumors touching Mrs. Maybrick's health are afloat. Her latest ailment is quick consumption.

A Thursday's London cable says: The Maybrick case found its way into the House of Lords to-day and ruffled the temper of the Lord Chancellor to an extent absolutely dangerous to his health. In language mild and choice Lord Fitzgerald asked if during the coming recess the question of constituting an effective Court of Appeal in criminal cases would be considered, and if it were deemed expedient would the measure to effect such an object be presented.

The face of the Lord Chancellor became covered with a hue that betokened a rapid approach of apoplexy. He could only imperfectly express his regret, he said, that such a question should be raised. It was a matter he preferred not to discuss at such a time.

Lord Herschel coolly stated that it was impossible to obtain attention to the necessity of any particular reform except when the public mind was excited on the subject. He trusted the matter would be seriously considered by the Government at the coming recess, as there was undoubtedly a wide-spread feeling that such a tribunal would give additional security against injustice and against such an agitation as the suspicion of injustice created.

To-morrow's Lancet, after a thorough review of the medical testimony, will say: "We can have no desire that the royal prerogative of mercy should not be exercised in this case, but as a duty to the living relatives of the deceased, to a painstaking, fearless and honest jury, and to one of the greatest ornaments of the English bench, we solemnly assert as our unbiased opinion that the verdict arrived at in Mrs. Maybrick's trial was warranted by the evidence."

A last Friday night's London cable says: The Press Association states that Home Secretary Matthews will recommend to the Queen the commutation of the death sentence of Mrs. Maybrick to penal servitude for life, and that the commutation of sentence will be announced after the Queen has given her formal assent. The Home Secretary and the experts assumed that Mrs. Maybrick was not guilty, and acting upon this assumption sifted every scrap of the testimony given, especially that in relation to the husband's craze for arsenic, which is of great weight, and will, it is believed, turn the scale in the prisoner's favor. It is a noteworthy fact that the Lord Chancellor is seldom consulted in such cases except when a reprieve is meditated.

A despatch from Norfolk, Va., says a well-known woman of this city, Mme. Mary Hogwood, yesterday went before a notary and made oath to some startling statements concerning the late James Maybrick, whose wife is now under sentence of death in Liverpool, charged with her husband's murder. Despite the bad character of the woman, she bears a fair reputation for truth and veracity, and her affidavit will be accompanied by letters from several of the most respectable men of Norfolk attesting that fact. Her statement is as follows:

Know all men by these presents. That I, Mary Hogwood, residing in the city of Norfolk, Va., do unhesitatingly say that I knew the late James Maybrick for several years, and that up to the time of his marriage he called at my house, when in Norfolk, at least two or three times a week, and that I saw him frequently in his different moods and fancies. It was a common thing for him to take arsenic two or three times during an evening. He would always say before taking it, "Well, I am going to take my evening dose." He would pull from his pocket a small vial in which he carried his arsenic, and putting a small quantity on his tongue would wash it down with a sip of wine. In fact so often did he repeat this that I became afraid that he would die suddenly in my house, and then some of us would be suspected of his murder. When drunk Mr. James Maybrick would pour the powder into the palm of his hand and lick it up with his tongue. I often cautioned him, but he answered: "Oh, I am used to it; it will not harm me." One of the vials used by Mr. Maybrick to carry arsenic was left by him in my care during his last visit here; and I shall be glad to turn it over to the authorities if it can be of any use. I have been quite ill for a long time—so sick that I have paid little attention to the newspapers, and therefore I knew hardly anything about the facts concerning the alleged murder; but knowing Mr. Maybrick as I do and his habits, I am not surprised in the least at hearing of his death, and do not believe that his wife had any more to do with causing his death than I had. I have always believed that his habit of arsenic eating would carry him off.

The press is still filled with communications from people who claim Mrs. Maybrick is innocent. Mrs. Maybrick may be possessed of many desires, but one is pre-eminent. From morning till night she entreats to be permitted to write to the Queen. She has not been allowed to do so. She is but a wreck of her former self. Her attire is blue home-spun, her food is regular prison fare. To-day her mail consisted of eleven hundred letters. None containing a reference to the case are given to her, so that she is not allowed to read many. Baroness von Roque wanted to give her a peach to-day, but was not permitted to do so.

ZANZIBAR DISTURBANCES.

Rioters Arrested and Flogged—Fears of Another Outbreak.

A Zanzibar despatch of Thursday says: Of the eighteen prisoners arrested yesterday for a raid on the Indian bazaar sixteen were in the employ of the Sultan, one was in the employ of the Germans, and the other, an Arab, had no employer. Each received fifty blows with a stick yesterday, and they are lying confined in the barracks. The riot occurred between 6 and 7 in the evening, but as no police are ever on duty in the streets in the daytime, soldiers had to be brought from a distant part of the town, and these, after restoring order, patrolled the quarter until 3 in the morning. To-day there was another slight riot in the bazaar between Arabs and Banyans, and two of the latter were beaten. There is still much talk of disturbance brewing for Saturday or Sunday. The authorities should be compelled to have the streets guarded by the police by day as well as by night. The Sultan was absent at his country house when the riot occurred, and drove into town early this morning. There are only two German ships here. The Pifael and Carola have left their moorings and anchored off the German Consulate as a measure of precaution. It is reported that the German Consul has telegraphed to the German commander at Mozambique to return with the Leipzig.

A Zanzibar cable of Friday says The Sultan's principal adviser Mohammed Bakashmal, to whom I recently referred, since the deportation of Leesperadewjee, his predecessor, has been conducting public affairs and exercising a most nefarious influence upon the Sultan, has been exiled, and leaves by the French mail at the end of the month. The British war vessel Mariner left for Seychelles this morning. The Cossack is expected from the opposite coast to replace her. The men-of-war now in harbor are the British Agamemnon and Griffon, the German Pfest and Cariola, the American Swatara, and also one French and one Italian. The Griffon is now moored just below the palace on the north-west side of the town, so as to be able to shell any party coming from the district called Melinde, which is inhabited by Hindees and Arabs and their slaves. If an outbreak should occur, it is there it will commence, and then after the rioters have plundered the Hindees they will repair to the German Custom-house and wreck it. The Agamemnon is moored off the consulate. Everything is ready on board the British and German ships to assist in maintaining order. To-day the place is unusually quiet. Although it is Friday, there has been no selambik or parade of troops, the Sultan having shut himself up in his country house. Some soldiers are on guard in the streets, chiefly in the Hindee quarter. There is almost a panic among the well-to-do Arabs, who fear an occupation. The fall of the Sultan's chief adviser has completely set aside all idea of a rising, and Zanzibar is now quiet.

FATAL EXPERIMENTS.

Patients on Whom the Elixir is Tried Die—Was It or the Doctors to Blame?

A Friday night's Cincinnati dispatch says: Last Saturday Dr. George K. Taylor, one of the best physicians here, invited Chas. S. Steele, who was almost helpless from paralysis, to enter his office, and the doctor injected a quantity of the Brown-Sequard elixir in each of his hips without Steele knowing what it was. The man suffered intense agony, but was told that he would soon get well. The agony was so great that on Monday he called on Dr. Taylor, who told him the more pain he had the more complete would be his final recovery. Yesterday Steele sent for Dr. Watson, who found the inside of Steele's thighs terribly inflammed, swollen, and in a mottled condition, as if gangrene had set in, though it may prove only blood poisoning. Steele has a high fever and is out of his mind. He has a large family, which he supported by taking orders for coal. His friends have retained a lawyer to sue Dr. Taylor for heavy damages.

Sham Battle with Smokeless Powder.

A Berlin cable says: Emperor William and the Emperor of Austria left Berlin at 7.45 o'clock this morning for Spandau, where a sham fight took place. Four battalions of troops crossed the Havel River, which at this point is 450 metres wide, on a bridge constructed of ninety pontoons. The building of the bridge and the passage of the troops were accomplished in a remarkably short time. The battle took place on the heights south of Spandau. One division of the battalions used the new smokeless powder, while their opponents used the old style of powder. The contrast between the effects of the explosives was striking, the troops using the old powder being completely enveloped in smoke. The action ended in the western force being thrown back on Spandau. After the battle Emperor William called the officers together and criticised the operations. The two Emperors lunched in a tent on the field. They returned to Berlin this afternoon. In the afternoon Emperor William and his guest visited the Friedenskirche, where the Austrian Emperor laid a wreath upon the coffin of Emperor Frederick.

Jack-the-Ripper Will Laugh.

A last Wednesday night's cable from London says: The coroner's jury to-day returned a verdict that Alice Mackenzie, the latest victim of Jack-the-Ripper, was murdered. The verdict is on a par with much of the matter in the summing up by the coroner. He said there were grave doubts of her respectability, though it was proven she had lived for six years with a man not her husband, and was open to inducements from anybody else. The Ripper is almost due for another murder.

FREDERDICK T. ROBERTS, M. D., Professor of Clinical Medicine at University College Hospital, London, England, says; "Bright's disease has no symptom's of its own and may long exist without the knowledge of the patient or practicioner and no pain will be felt in the kidneys or their vicinity." Ordinary common kidney diseases, many times unreognized as such, will become chronic and terminate in Bright's (organic) disease of the kidney's, unless taken in hand. Warner's Safe Cure is the only recognized specific that has ever been discovered for this disease. The late Dr. Dio Lewis said, over his own signature: "If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble, I would use Warner's Safe Cure."

REJUVENATING CRIMINALS.

Testing the Brown-Sequard Elixir on Convicts.

A Nashville, Tenn., despatch says: The interest in the Brown-Sequard elixir of life is increasing in this city. Dr. George S. Glenn, State prison physician, encouraged by the success attending an experiment made by him, has decided to begin to-morrow a series of experiments among inmates of the penitentiary, who are anxious to subject themselves to the new treatment.

About three weeks ago Dr. Glenn and his partner, Dr. Schultz, began to experiment, Dr. Schultz himself being the subject chosen. At the time the experiments began Dr. Schultz had partially recovered from an attack of malarial fever, and was suffering from asthmatic troubles, which had reduced him about thirty pounds in weight. He presented a pale, emaciated appearance, his face being almost colorless. His pulse was frequent, small and compressible, and his nervous system much prostrated.

One dram of the fluid was injected into the cellular tissues of the abdomen; the pale face became flushed and the eyes assumed a brilliancy and sparkle as from an intoxicant. The feeling of lassitude disappeared, and a nervous energy began to thrill the whole body. The effect of the treatment is still plainly felt. From that day the patient's general health has greatly improved. Dr. Schultz is gaining his avoirdupois. He has no pains or aches and feels better than he has for years.

HEARTLESS RELATIVES.

They Disown the Dead Body of a Husband and Father.

A Buffalo despatch says: The unknown stonemason who was killed by the Michigan Central train Saturday morning has been identified in a singular manner. In the first place a man from the Chippawa market visited the Morgue and at once identified the body as that of John Myers, who lived at No. 249 Genesee street. Other men who had known him, twelve or fifteen in number, were brought in and identified the body.

Members of his family were then sent for, but they professed to see nothing in the dead man's features that resembled their relative. His wife, his brother-in-law, and a daughter 22 years old said it was not he, but when the dead man's little 14-year-old daughter visited the place alone the story was told.

"That's my papa," she sobbed, in her childish innocence, as she stood by the side of the rigid corpse and looked down into the face of him whom others of the family had refused to recognize.

"This seems like a strange situation," said Morgue-Keeper DeRyder, "but I have had several cases of this kind. One can see by watching the faces of these people that the dead man is their relative, but they are just that heartless that they will deny their own dead father rather than pay his funeral expenses. We shall bury him in Potter's Field."

A Glutton's Death.

A Thursday's Halifax despatch says: While the warship Tourmaline was lying in Barbadoes about two years ago, a colored seaman named Richard McAndrews made application to join the ship and play in the band. His terms were acceptable and his services were retained. The musician enlisted for a period of two years. McAndrews was looked upon as an enormous eater. The manner in which he ate and the quantity he devoured at a meal were astonishing. The Tourmaline was in readiness to proceed to sea with the flagship on Saturday last, but McAndrews was taken very ill through eating too much meat. His sufferings were of the most excruciating kind. He was taken from the ship and conveyed to the marine hospital at the dockyard, and died in terrible agony yesterday afternoon. McAndrews ate so much that it strained him inside, causing a partial paralysis of the rectum. Those sleeping in the same ward with McAndrews say his groans were terrible. The deceased, who was a man of 45 years of age, leaves a wife and family at Barbadoes.

A Military Cook's Suicide.

A Halifax despatch of Wednesday says A terrible suicide was committed at the military camp on Macnab's Island at 5.30 o'clock this morning, the victim being Private Joseph Hill, of the West Riding Regiment. Hill was engaged as cook in the officers' mess on the island, and last evening was placed under arrest for some petty offence, but was not put in confinement, being what is known as a "prisoner at large." This morning he took a loaded rifle, placed the muzzle fairly in his mouth and pulled the trigger. The top of his head was blown off and the pieces scattered in various directions. The body was brought up to the city to-day. Hill was a young man.

Railway Enterprise in China.

A Wednesday's cable says: Chang Chi Tung, Viceroy of Kwangtung, has been transferred to the Viceroyalty of Liang Hu. It is believed that this transfer has taken place in consequence of the memorial in which he supported the construction of the Hankow Peking Trunk Railway. The railway will now be begun shortly under Chang Chi Tung's direction, a Chinese syndicate with a capital of 60,000,000 teels having been formed to carry out the scheme. Li Hang Chang, the elder brother of Li Hung Chang, has been appointed Viceroy of Kwangtung.

THE TEXAN FEUD.

"Jaybirds" and "Woodpeckers" Make Things Interesting.

A Houston, Texas, despatch of Saturday night gives the following additional particulars of the feud reported Saturday: Capt. Reichardt left here for Richmond last night with 24 militia men. Two gentlemen who arrived here at 11.35 last night from Richmond reported that the "Woodpeckers" crowd (Negroes) were in the Court House surrounded by the other faction, but no more fighting had occurred. The town was crazy with excitement, the women and children being at home while the men were down town. There was but one light burning in the whole town, and that was at the hotel. The riot was precipitated by a "Jaybird" walking through the town with his Winchester. He was jailed. The fighting soon began. About 75 shots were fired. Sheriff Garvey and ex-Sheriff Blakely, who were killed, were "Jaybirds." All was quiet at midnight.

A Richmond, Texas, despatch says: Since the fighting last evening things have been extremely quiet. The county officials, who are among the "Woodpeckers," retreated to the Court House, carrying their wounded, and still occupy it, supported by th Houston Light Guards. The wounded in the Court House are Judge Parker, now a member of the Legislature, and Deputy Sheriff Mason, shot badly through the shoulder. Parker was shot beneath the shoulder blade and through the groin. The presence of the military will preserve the peace, but the "Jaybirds" are in possession of the streets and no warrant has been sworn out or arrests made. Henry Frost, a leader of the "Jaybirds," who received four bullet wounds, is fast sinking. The "Jaybirds" are undoubtedly prepared for trouble at any moment, while the opposition has been materially weakened by the loss of two leaders. There is a panic among the people here, chiefly the Negroes, and nearly a hundred have left by rail to-day, never to return. Volney Johnson, one of the "Jaybirds," was shot in the jaw with a Winchester and the ball is now somewhere in his neck, but he was walking on the streets this afternoon ready for anything that might arise. A distressing feature is the arrival here of relations of parties who have been killed or badly wounded. A squad of State rangers was here yesterday, but was powerless to check the fight, though making every effort to do so. It is said that Frost, after he was shot down, raised himself on his arms and killed ex-Sheriff Blakely with his Winchester.

PERTURBED JAPAN.

Great Loss of Life by Earthquakes—Floods and Riots.

A San Francisco despatch of Sunday has the following: The steamer City of Sydney, from Hong Kong and Yokohama, which arrived this evening, was expected to bring details of the earthquake at Kumamoto, news of which was cabled from Yokohama on July 30th. One cablegram gave the loss of life at 3,000, while another stated almost the entire town of Kumamoto, with a population of 38,000, was destroyed. Full details had not been received when the City of Sydney left Yokohama, but the newspapers of that city of August 2nd indicate no such loss as given by the cablegrams. Several late telegrams to Yokohama gave the loss at twenty to thirty killed. The Japan newspaper Jiji Shimpo says, however, that by a great earthquake at Kumamoto on July 28th many hills have been rent, houses demolished, and people killed and wounded in the city independent of the surrounding villages. Another shock has been felt, and the inhabitants are fearing further disaster. The people have been seized with superstition on account of the hills being broken open.

The floods having subsided in the various districts of Japan, a fairly accurate estimate of the damage done is obtained. Nine hundred and thirty houses were destroyed by being washed away or broken up by colliding together. Forty-one persons are known to have lost their lives.

The Overland China Mail learns, July 6th, that the rioters in the Fohien Province of China had fled before the approaching troops. Before leaving they burned their boats. The attack on the Chin Chu villages is confirmed. For the loss of four or five of their countrymen last year the rioters revenged themselves by slaughtering between 400 and 500 inhabitants of the Chin Chu villages, including women and children.

BEFORE.

Who in his sanctum sits up late,
And strives, with sentences of weight,
To set to right affairs of state?
The editor. Admire him!

Who deeply molds the public thought?
For money who can ne'er be bought?
Who always for the right has fought?
The editor. Respect him!

Who notes what great men do and say,
And files obituaries away
When they shall die, to print next day?
The editor. Revere him!

Who gives us cure for cough or cold,
Who suffers patiently and long
And seldom uses language strong?
The editor. Don't chide him!

SHAWSL.

How the Average Woman Effects Her Evenings on the Veranda.

The average woman over 40 is never so content as when hugging herself in a shawl on a hotel piazza, says a correspondent of the Boston Gazette.

Shawls to the right of us,
Shawls to the left of us,
Shawls all around the house
Hug without question.
Chuddas of brown or gray,
Blue, white or cafe au lait;
And each old girl will say
Hers is the best one.

On the slightest pretext a woman will give a little shudder, seize her shawl, and, enveloping herself from waist to ears in it, will settle down like a cat in a feather bed. The white chudda seems to be the most popular, and after dusk it is a wise man that knows his own wife, though it is immaterial for the moment which is which, for women in shawls are all alike; they shiver and hug their elbows, and answer in monosyllables; and if their shawl for a moment slips from their shoulders they are like clipped poodles or wet hens—disgruntled and whining.

How to Manage a Man.

A man never stoops to the means employed by women; he is broader, more liberal, he applies himself to the things which belong to the day, the hour and the object for which we live. Whoever heard of a man losing his temper because his suit would not match his complexion, or fume because six button gloves had been sent when he had ordered seven? What man would faint on Broadway because the clasp that held his hosiery gave way and wriggled on the sidewalk? None! Yet I saw that happen to a woman recently. Yet men are very much like children. Humor them, and they will do your bidding. Make them believe they are always having their own way; don't let them see the silken net you have woven about them, and they will blandly obey your will; but once let them believe they are captive and no puny woman's power will avail against their superior strength.—Marie Jansen in New York World.

Economy in Food.

Farmer Sawyer, of Wallingford, had quite an experience last winter with his cattle. His stock of hay ran out, and being unable to get more in time he gave the cows some of the dry leaves he had collected for bedding, and he was surprised to see that they appeared to enjoy them. The leaves went so well that he concluded that he wouldn't get any more hay for a while, and, in fact, leaves were the only thing that the six cows and two horses lived on during the last half of the winter. While eating hay the cows had given 12 quarts of milk weekly, yielding five pounds of butter. After being put on diet of leaves the quantity and quality of milk increased until they gave 15 quarts of milk, yielding seven pounds of butter. Mr. Sawyer intends to use nothing but leaves during the winter hereafter, as the leaves can be had for the trouble of collecting them, and are better than costly hay or grain.—Meriden Republican.

Character of the Black Bass.

If you want a real good argument any day touch up the black bass issue among the local fishermen. Some of them say that he is an enemy to all sport, a mean, low-lived, vicious specimen of the tribe of fish who sleep in the mud all winter and is worm-eaten all summer. Fish Commissioner Stanley says that the black bass is a splendid mannered, high bred fish, a fighter it is true, but an honest fighter, and one of the best food fishes that swim the streams of Northern America. He says that the stocking of ponds with the fish was wise, and that in years to come more sport will be realized with this fish than the sporting men of rod and line have yet dreamed.—Lewiston Journal.

Anything But That.

Miss Cynthia Mushroom—Now, papa, do be careful at dinner, and don't mortify us before Mr. Stuyvesant Sturtevant.

Mrs. M.—Yes, Phineas, do mind your manners and remember all them little points in that book about etiquette that I've been reading to you.

Mr. M.—Well, that's all right. You kin go ahead and arrange things to suit yerself, but I'm darned if I eat pie with a fork for anybody.

SCOTLAND'S PRIDE.

The Greatest Bridge in the World—A Cantilever Triumph.

The bridge across the Firth of Forth at Queen's Ferry, Scotland, now approaching completion, is a work of such magnitude and presents so many points of novelty that it has attracted the attention of the whole engineering world. In 1804 a surveyor published designs for a bridge across the Forth at the same spot, and with spans of the like magnitude. That, however, was to be a suspension bridge, with chains like the cable of a fifty-ton yacht, and the total weight of iron was estimated at 200 tons, as contrasted with 50,000 tons of steel in the present structure. While a bridge of 1,700 feet in span was thus conceived of nearly a century ago, it may also be said that the cantilever principle of construction can be found in Egyptian and Indian temples built before the introduction of the arch. An eminent engineer says that the cantilever was in all probability invented by some intelligent savage, who, wanting to get across a stream too deep to ford and too wide to jump, utilized the projecting branches of two opposite trees as cantilevers or brackets, and connected them by a short independent piece of timber, and so formed a cantilever and central girder structure.

The true principle of construction and the nature of the stresses may be illustrated in a simple way. Two men who sit on chairs extend their arms, which they support by grasping sticks butting against the chairs. This represents the two double cantilevers. The central girder is represented by a short stick slung from the arm of each man, and the anchorage by ropes extending from the other arms to two piles of bricks. When stresses are brought on this system by a load on the central girder the arms of the men and the anchorage ropes come into tension, and the sticks and chair legs into compression. In the Forth bridge we must imagine the chairs to be placed a third of a mile apart, the men's heads to be 360 feet above the ground, the pull on the arms 10,000 tons, and the pressure on the legs of the chairs on the ground 100,000 tons. As regards size and weight no existing bridge at all approaches the Forth bridge. There are two spans, each 1,700 feet long; the width of the bridge at the piers is 120 feet; there is a clear headway for navigation at high water of 150 feet; the deepest foundation below high water is 89 feet; the highest part of the bridge above high water is 360 feet, and the depth of water in the centre of the channel is 210 feet. With this depth the bridge could never have been built had it not been for an island in the middle of the Forth. The train weight that will be put upon the bridge will be small compared with the wind pressure needed to be overcome, and to resist wind the lofty columns over the piers are 120 feet apart at the base and 33 feet at the top. As furnishing an idea of the enormous force which the cantilevers are capable of resisting it may be said that a pull of 45,000 tons would be needed to tear asunder the top ties. The greatest pull from passing trains can be only 2,000 tons. The bridge is looked upon as a railway necessity. Indeed, it will furnish the missing link in a great chain of communication throughout the United Kingdom. When we read of such structures, and know that trains reach a speed of sixty miles an hour, we cannot but smile at what the staid old "Quarterly Review" said in 1825: "We trust that Parliament will, in all railways it may sanction, limit the speed to eight or nine miles an hour, which is as as great as can be ventured on with safety."

How and when to Drink Water.

According to Dr. Leuf, when water is taken into the full or partly full stomach, it does not mingle with the food, as we are taught, but passes along quickly between the food and lesser curvative toward the pylorus, through which it passes into the intestines. The secretion of mucus by the lining membrane is constant, and during the night a considerable amount accumulates in the stomach; some of its liquid portion is absorbed, and that which remains is thick and tenacious. If food is taken into the stomach when in this condition it becomes coated with mucus, and the secretion of the gastric juice and its action are delayed. These facts show the value of a goblet of water before breakfast. This washes out the tenacious mucus, and stimulates the gastric glands to secretion. In old and feeble persons water should not be taken cold, but it may be with great advantage taken warm or hot. This removal of the accumulated mucus from the stomach is probably one of the reasons why taking soup at the beginning of a meal has been found so beneficial.

TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS.

A Young Student's Cheap Trip to England

Two hundred dollars is a large sum to a poor man and a small sum to a rich man, says the Youth's Companion. But in the matter of money everything depends on the way it is used. Some men will get a vast amount of amusement, recreation and refinement out of a few dollars. Other men will spend large sums, and be unhappy or unblessed by the spending. Having occasion to put the matter to a practical test, a young student who lately went to Europe with just $200 is ready to tell what he got for it for the benefit of any who may be blessed with so moderate a sum, and still hesitates to go abroad for fear of not getting enough for the money. This philosophical traveller says:

"I went over, intermediate cabin passage, for $35 from Boston to Liverpool, by one of the finest Cunard steamers. The intermediate passage was not equal to first cabin it its table fare, but I had more fun in other ways. When I reached Liverpool I went to a plain hotel, where I could dine a la carte, or go to the sideboard and help myself, and generally did, and spent three days in the city at very moderate expense. I then went on to London, stopping one day at the Duke of Devonshire's estate, Chatsworth. Once in London I determined on one of the several ways of spending what money I had left. I procured lodging and breakfast and dinner at a cheap boarding-house in Bloomsbury, about ten minutes' walk from the British Museum. I had a Bædeker's guide book, and with its help I mapped out a number of famous places where I could go sight-seeing at very little expense. While on my tramps in the city I would go for a lunch into some restaurant where meals were served from some joint, or into the nearest coffee stand, where I often obtained all I wanted for eightpence and sometimes for sixpence. When I had to use the railways I always went third class. This was not so comfortable as second or first class, but more interesting in many ways on account of the people I met, and that is half the good of travelling at all. When I had occasion to ride I always took a 'bus if I could. This was a never-failing source of amusement to me. I saw more to remember from the top of an English 'bus than from any other place during my whole visit in London, and it was a very cheap source of instruction. The hansom cab was an expensive vehicle, costing a shilling, while the 'bus fares were usually very reasonable, and on some lines, at certain hours of the day, absurdly cheap for the distance. By selecting the right day and hour for visiting many places of interest I succeeded in seeing them for half price or for nothing. There are many places of interest in and about London where, on certain days of the week, admission is free. On certain other days it is sixpence or a shilling. By consulting my 'Bædeker,' and planning a little ahead, I saved many small items in this way. I was also content to do a large amount of walking; and, indeed, in this way I not only saved riding fares, but often saw curious and even rare sights which I should have missed if I had been in the habit of riding to and from points of interest. I spent seven weeks in London, and visited nearly all the large places of note. St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, Parliament buildings, National Gallery, the Tower, the museum, where I went almost daily, the bank, where I did not go so often, nearly all the suburbs on the west side, the parks and art galleries, the Thames and Chelsea, Lord's cricket grounds and the Zoological Gardens. In many of these places I spent much time in special study, and went frequently, especially to the museums and churches, on the principle that as I had confined my trip abroad to one city I would know as much about it as possible. Getting back to Liverpool I still had money enough for first-class cabin fare to New York, and paid £10, or $50, for my return passage. In the time I was abroad I saw and enjoyed $200 worth at least. My board cost me about $55. My travelling, counting going and coming, was $115. The remaining $30 went for sundries, clothing, amusements, washing and keepsakes of the trip. But if any one can get more out of $200 abroad I wish they would write me and let me know how that I may try it again."

The Spinal Cord Mending.

Dr. Chauncey Biggs, of Bellevue Hospital, has a case of much interest to the medical fraternity. On the 8th inst. H. W. Benedict rode from Fifty-seventh street to Forty-seventh street on a Third avenue surface car. At Forty-seventh street he jumped off. He jumped on the wrong side, and was knocked down and run over by an uptown car. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was discovered that his spinal cord was fractured. As a rule, the patient does not survive long under these circumstances, but Mr. Benedict is getting along so well that Dr. Biggs hopes the column will knit, and that the patient will recover.—New York Star.

Height of Great Sea Waves.

Carefully repeated experiments made by an experienced English navigator at Santander, on the north coast of Spain, showed the crest of the sea waves in a prolonged and heavy gale of wind to be 42 feet high, and allowing the same for the depth between the waves would make a height of 84 feet from crest to base. The length from crest to crest was found to be 386 feet. Other estimates of the waves in the South Atlantic during great storms give a height of 50 feet for the crests and 400 feet for length. In the North Sea the height of crest seldom exceeds 10 feet and the length 150 feet.

Work of Electricity.

There are now in use in the United States more than 5,650 central electric stations for light and power. There are 210,000 arc lights and 2,600,000 incandescent lamps. There were 59 electrical railways in operation in March last, and 86 roads in process of construction. The increase of capital in electrical investments during 1888 was nearly $70,000,000. These are very significant figures, and they point unmistakably to the course of future inventions and discoveries.

"NOTHING FOR OLD MAIDS."

The Mistake the Two Spinster Boggs Made

An elderly lady once remarked to a pretty girl that it was a very serious matter for a young woman to have a sweetheart. The girl answered that it was a far more serious matter not to have one. Certainly the two Misses Boggs, who have committed suicide at Point Pleasant, W. Va., agreed with the young lady. The two sisters were well-to-do. There was no reason why they should die by their own hand, or die at all, apparently. But they killed themselves, leaving a pathetic note, signed by both their names, saying there was "nothing in life for old maids."

It is a melancholy story, but the suicide was founded on a gigantic misapprehension of life. There is just as much here below for an old maid as for anybody else. Suppose they were without husbands? Husbands are not always what the old or young maiden fancy paints them. No more are wives always satisfactory. Socrates is credited with saying that whether one marries or does not marry, he regrets it. If the Misses Boggs had married, they might have got husbands whom they would have had to commit suicide to get rid of. Women have done the like, more than once. But the gravest possible mistake one can make is to take for granted that his personal love, personal comfort and happiness play a very large figure in the plan of this universe. Whoever pursues these aims alone finds they invariably elude him at last, like Will o' the Wisp. If the Misses Boggs wanted children, there was a world full of forlorn, homeless babies, many of them quite as sweet and pretty as any possible Bogge' babies would have been. How much they could have added to human happiness by adopting four or five little waifs and giving them home and education! Then there was the whole world of ideas before them—study, travel, science, art and music. Humanity stumbles blindly and painfully on, seeking always the better way in everything, thankful always to people who show it the better way. All of us owe it to the race to give some part of our time to aiding the rest. In philanthropy, in helping mankind to prosperity, to better, wiser, sweeter ways of living, there is work enough for a million single women, heaven knows!

It is sometimes necessary to pass through a sea of troubles to find at last that the only genuine happiness is found in giving happiness to others. Exactly in proportion as men lose sight of the "miserable aims that end in self," by a mysterious law friends, happiness and hope will drift their way. It is indeed:

A miserable, petty, low-roofed life,
That knows the mighty orbits of the skies
Through naught save light or dark in its own cabin.

How the Shah Keeps Accounts.

Nasr-ed-Deen, like many other potentates, is fond of money, and is supposed to possess a colossal fortune. He pays small salaries to his servants and dignitaries if the money comes out of his own pocket—that is, out of the legitimate revenues of the country—but he pays at least promtly and fairly what he agrees to pay. After deducting what he deems right for army, administration and household purposes he puts the balance away every year into his private treasury. Once the money—which must always be coin—has been dumped into his vaults no power on earth can induce the Shah to give the slightest portion of it back again or to touch it for any purpose whatsoever. When he is compelled to borrow money from the Armenians he pays usurious interest sooner than go to his strong box and take from its illimitable treasures the smallest sum.—Cosmopolitan.

Dwellings for the People.

There is in London a corporation, composed of men and women, called the Ladies' Residential Dwelling Company. This company has already erected dwelling-houses in Gower street and Sloan Gardens for the use of educated women who are obliged to earn their living and to live in lodgings. It is now proposed to build a block of these dwellings in Hampstead. These buildings are arranged in sets of flats, renting from 10 to 25 shillings (from $2.50 to $6.25) per week, or from £2 to £5 per month. There is a cooking range set in each suite, but there is also a large general dining-room connected with each house, in which dinner is served after the work of the day is finished.

Faded Footlight Flowers Bloom Again.

"And, doctor, can you make this bloom again?" asked Father Time, pointing to a specimen of the vintage of 1840.

"I was once a footlight favorite, and men showered me with pearls and diamonds. Oh, can I be young again," she exclaimed with all the fervor of a maiden of 62 summers.

"You shall be queen of the May," responded Dr. Brown-Sequard, as he proceeded to his laboratory and slaughtered a fresh guinea pig.—After the New York World.

ALL competent authorities, prominent among them being F. F. Roberts, M. D., Professor of Chemical Medicine at University College Hospital, London, Eng., say "Bright's disease has no marked symptoms of its own, but takes the symptoms of other (so-called) diseases." ERRATIC WATCHES CURBED.

How the Effects of Electric Magnets Have Been Neutralized by a Bright Idea.

Electricity is now applied to a majority of the watches now made in this country. It used to be that a valuable watch would suddenly lose all self-respect and run like a race-horse on one day and a tortoise on the next. No one could tell what it was. Big prices were paid to the jewellers by unhappy watch-owners who hoped that the wizard of the balance wheel and mainspring could repair their timepieces. As electricity became more popular the irregularities of watches became more marked. But before the watch trade grew desperate a bright mind solved the mystery. He made an experiment, applying the battery to a fine watch, and then tried the effect of the dynamo upon the electrified movement. As one poison counteracts another's effect, so one battery equalized the other's effect. The magnet and the watch movement were made friends, and now a timepiece can mingle with the battery in a familiar way and feel no evil effects from the association.

Mrs. Gladstone.

Margaret F. Sullivan in New York World.

Her figure is tall, shapely and impressive; her carriage is a little too rapid to be entirely graceful; her costuming is—is English, which requires no elucidation. Despite deficiencies in externals, which a French modiste would have no difficulty in abolishing—for Mrs. Gladstone would be a charming subject for a dressmaker of taste—she would be singled out in any company as its most distinguished woman.

The face is uncommonly long even in England, very high in the forehead, and very strong and gentle, equally devoid of romance and of pedantry. The eyes are large, liquid, well-shaped, dark blue, and meditative. The silvering hair is parted in the usual way, and combed in natural waves down either cheek, as in the familiar portraits of noted women forty years ago. Her mouth is well proportioned to the other dimensions of her face, and her voice is low and vibrant with cordiality toward those she addresses.

"Death has so many doors to let out, life," sang an old time poet. In those days they had not discovered remedies that shut these doors. How different is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, from the old time doses. Consumption or lung scrofula, is one wide door that it shuts, if taken in time. Don't waste a moment, then lest life slip through that open door. It is guaranteed to cure in all cases of diseases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded.

There's a blessing in the bottle on whose label we can read
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the woman who has need
Of a remedy for troubles none but women ever know.

As they think of years of suffering that were theirs before it came,
Bringing them the balm of healing, and they bless the very name of this wonderfully, and deservedly, popular remedy for the various ills woman is heir to. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

An Unfortunate Sequence.

An 11th, (the 6th half-yearly) dividend of 6 per cent. per annum has been declared for the half year ending August 31st, inst., and will be paid Sept. 1st.

The body of an unknown young man was found lying on the G. T. R. track near Glencoe Saturday night. The head was decapitated from the corpse, and it is supposed the man was walking on the track when he was struck by a train and his head cut off. There was no clue to his identity and the remains were interred Sunday.

Rev. Mr. Wilson preached on "Christian Liberality" in the Presbyterian church Sunday morning. The sermon was an excellent one and had the uncommon feature that there was no begging for money for any particular scheme of the church. The rev. gentleman took for his text in the evening "Behold I stand at the door and knock."

The death occurred Wednesday morning of Hugh P. McMillan, son of Peter McMillan, of Aldborough, at the age of 28 years. This is the third death in the family of Mr. McMillan during the past year, and a daughter is not expected to recover. Deceased was a brother of J. P. McMillan, of the firm of McMillan & McLean, Glencoe. The funeral took place on Thursday.

The high school opens this term with bright prospects before it. A good staff of teachers has been secured and everything points to a most successful term. The school did not make as good showing at the late departmental examinations as could be wished, but the reasons for this are not hard to find. The closing of the school for two weeks during the small-pox scare had a bad effect, and the many changes in the teaching staff could not have been otherwise than detrimental to the best interests of the school. However, it starts this term with a full staff of excellent teachers, and there is not the least doubt but that it will take a high place among the high schools of Ontario at the next examinations.

Though the Johnstown disaster occurred more than two months since, the interest of the public in so remarkakle an event has not ceased to be active. H. S. Goodspeed & Co., of New York, have just issued a complete and richly pictorial history of the event, which is a work of the deepest interest and power. No reader will care to lay aside this thrilling narrative unfinished. In the world's horrible records of evil wrought by the untamed forces of nature, few catastrophes have been more heart-sickening. The fearful loss of life, the vast waste of property, the great interruption to business, destroying the complex machinery which fed so many thousands and contributed to the interests of the whole land are hard to match. Death and ruin take a thousand shapes, but rarely have they assumed a guise so horrible as that in which they rushed down on the people of Conemaugh Valley. The record cannot fail to be of perennial interest, and to stir the hearts of all who read it for the next generation to come, for such a catastrophe, mercifully, comes but once in a century, if so often. Enough time has now elapsed to enable the proper verification of the facts to be made, and a studied statement to be given to the public worthy of so startling a subject. Any hurried and hap-hazard narrative of an event which stands so unique in our history, is far from doing it partial justice. The author has given us in this book a record both vigorous and accurate, and every reader should have the work in his hands. The book is an octavo handsomely printed and bound, and contains 522 pages, embellished with forty-eight fine full page illustrations. Agents are wanted. H. S. Goodspeed & Co. pay all the duty.

Steve Brodie, the foolhardy bridge-jumper, now threatens to float over Niagara Falls, and the Kingston Whig suggests that he be locked up as a lunatic. No, no! Let him float. Ten to one he will never come out alive. In that case his fate will prove a deterrent to other cranks and notoriety-hunters. Lock him up and he will be regarded as a species of martyr, and will have a host of imitators. Men like Brodie are never missed.

In a few days the great Industrial Exposition, which is to be held at Toronto from the 9th to the 21st of September, will be in full swing, and visitors will be flocking to it from all parts of the country. The entries show that the exhibits in all departments will be larger and better than ever, and a long programme of special attractions for every day of the Fair has been published. Several new buildings have been erected during the present year and many new features introduced. Excursions are being organized from many distant points in the United States, the Maritime Provinces and the Northwest, and there will be two special cheap excursions from every point in Ontario. The annual success of this great show is something remarkable; the people appear to justly take a pride in it, and make it the occasion of their annual holiday outing, and there is every probability that this year's show will be away ahead of all others, both in extent and quality of the exhibits, as well as the attendance of visitors. Over 700 horses and 600 head of cattle have already been entered, and every foot of space in all the buildings has been applied for. The great dog show will be one of the interesting features of the Fair, and the firework displays will be grander than ever before.

Milburn's Aromatic Quinine Wine is distinctly superior to any other as an appetising tonic and fortifier.

Man's Ideal Wife.

To hear the men a-talkin' in their sweet unself ish style
Bout the way a woman acts, who adores em without guile,
Is enough to make a woman just despair of bein' a wife,
For to satisfy her husband she must give him up her life.

For she mustn't be too handsome, nor particularly plain,
For if pretty she'd be flirtin', and if not, she'd try to gain
(By shriekin' and assertin' through all the days and nights)
Continual truth and justice and other fancied rights.

Then she must have serpent wisdom, yet be harmless as a dove,
Have common sense in plenty, yet be like the saints above—
As innocent and ignorant of all wickedness on earth
And believe the yarns he tells her of his doings from his birth.

Of course she makes her clothing, which must next to nothing cost,
Though the neighbors mustn't see that her dress in style has lost.
She will cook to great perfection and be a thorough nurse,
And tend her babes, and never ask to have a private purse.

She'll grieve to see her gracious lord a-workin' long and hard,
And grant he needs a constant change, his precious health to guard;
And many comforts she'll be willin' to always do without,
But they're purchased for his benefit, with great delight, no doubt.

Just fancy, when this ideal wife dies wearily and worn,
How afflicted he will show himself, for weeks be quite forlorn,
And declare to all who knew her she was bounded by his love,
A very perfect woman gone, to wait for him above.

SOUP ON DRAUGHT.

How the Magician of the Kitchen Pleases His Patrons.

How they manage to get up so many different kinds of soups in the small restaurants is puzzling. According to an investigation it is done thus: Here comes a waiter with an order for vegetable soup. The cook lifts the lid of a big boiler of clear soup, made by boiling bones and scraps of beef, mutton, chicken, veal, etc. Out of this boiler the cook dips a bowlful of clear soup, and into it he pops in quick succession a little from each pot of boiled vegetable he is saving for that day. There is your vegetable soup. Is it consomme? From a big pitcher he pours into the clear stock some brown thickening fluid. Is it macaroni? A pot of boiled macaroni is near at hand, and he forks a few strings into the bowl. Is it ox-tail? A big tin of condensed ox-tail soup stands on a handy shelf, and a spoonful lends its flavor to the stock. Is it chicken? He thrusts a pair of tongs into the boiler and brings up morsels from the depths until enough scraps of chicken are found to pass muster. Is it tomato? A squirt of weak but thick tomato catsup does the business. Is it rice? Some of the rice pudding is available. Roast lamb and roast mutton come from the same joint at its touch, and, by aid of an unctuous salad and some jelly, so will roast venison at a pinch. Roast rib or roast loin from the same piece of beef depends altogether on his carving. The veal is veal, or it is chicken for salad, or it is turkey for fricassee, or it is rabbit for stew, or it is lamb for pie, just as he desires. The plain old cod, too, if boiled, is turned into boiled halibut, or haddock, or bluefish, and if baked becomes baked halibut, or bluefish or haddock, at his simple touch. With the aid of a few biting sauces they become almost anything one can name in the way of fish.—Baltimore News.

The Blood Orange.

The blood orange is a mere variety of the sweet orange, obtained by cultivation, and appears first to have been raised by the Spanish gardeners in the Phillippine islands, from the capital of which—Manila—it together with the well-known cigars formed at one time one of the chief articles of export. On its first appearance in Europe it excited a considerable sensation, and in the last century very high prices were demanded for the trees which bore the wonderful fruit. None, however, now are brought here from Manila, the supply being derived almost entirely from Malta, where great pains and attention are bestowed upon their cultivation. It was for a long time supposed, and the idea is not yet quite extinct, that the blood oranges were produced by the grafting of the orange with pomegranate, but there is not the slightest foundation for this belief.

A Young Sporting Man Leaves $80,000 to His Mother.

Frederick Brown, a well-known sporting man, of Washington, who died in Saratoga on Sunday, made a will leaving his mother $80,000. This amount he has won from the bookmakers in the last year. At the last meeting of the Jockey Club in 1888 here he "went broke," saving from the wreck only a diamond ring, which he pawned for $40. Borrowing $10 he started with this capital and won $6,000 during the spring meeting. He followed the horses to Monmouth, Sheepshead and Saratoga and won right along. He deposited $17,000 of his winnings in a Saratoga bank. Brown was a young man of good habits and well liked.—Capital.

GREENNESS IN NEW YORK.

There Are More Trees and Shade Here Than Any Countryman Would Believe.

"If I go home and tell my wife I've been sleeping under blankets ever since I came to New York, she won't believe me," said one man to another on an elevated train yesterday, "but it's a fact, nevertheless. I'm stopping with relations on the west side, between the river and the Park, and maybe that's made it somewhat cooler, but, as far as I can see, almost any part of New York is cooler than up in the State, where I live, especially at night.

"Then there's another thing about New York that would surprise country folks who think the city in summer is just one step this side of the bad place; that's the trees. I remember reading in the story books about the poor city children that never saw green grass or trees from year's end to year's end, and didn't even know that flowers grew anywhere except in shop windows. Well, I've been around New York pretty considerable, and it kind o' strikes me that it would be all-fired hard work to bring up a child in the city and keep it from seeing trees and grass everywhere it went, and flowers, too. I'm goin' to tell my wife the next time she wants to get cooled off, and at the same time not lose sight of trees and grass and green things, to come right to New York. It beats the seashore all hollow."

The countryman was a little enthusiastic, perhaps, but there was a deal of truth in what he said. New Yorkers are so used to it that they never stop to think about it, but to a man coming here with preconceived ideas of the desert nature and terrible heat of city streets, the amount of shade and greenness about the city is surprising. It is hard for a person in New York to find a position upon any street corner from which trees, vines, or green grass are not in sight in one direction or the other. Of course, above Fifty-ninth street there is Central Park always in sight from any corner up to and beyond 110th street on either side of the city. Besides this, there is Riverside Park, from Seventy-second to 125th, Morningside Park, Mt. Morris Park, and other green breathing places below the Harlem, while the beautiful Boulevard, with its park strip in the centre and its four rows of lusty young elms, even now beginning to form a double arch over the street, West End avenue, with rows of young trees doing well on either side, Eighty-sixth street, with its little grassy squares and trees in front of every house, and other shorter stretches of tree-shadowed streets make it certain that even when this part of the city shall be closely built up there will be no lack of greenness and shade.

Below Fifty-ninth street there are nearly a dozen small parks, with more to come, but the singular thing, when noticed for the first time, is the frequency of trees along the built-up streets. It probably won't be believed at first thought, but it is a fact, easily verified by personal inspection, that from Fifty-ninth street to Grand street the Sixth avenue elevated railroad does not cross a single street on which trees are not visible to a passenger. In a few instances there will be only one or two scrubby little trees struggling for existence upon the curb; more frequently the trees are numerous enough and vigorous enough to arch the street. On Fifty-third street they are so near the tracks that passengers can almost reach out and touch them as the train rushes by. Besides the trees along the curbs, there are frequent glimpses of green from the centre of blocks, and sometimes trees tall enough to wave above four-story houses can be seen, showing that in back yards there is abundant greenness for private enjoyment.

There are also thousands of windows where boxes filled with flowering plants and vines are kept, and often there are glimpses of sunflowers and other hardy plants blooming in yards or in boxes upon roofs. Pleasantest of all are the vines that of late years have been freely planted in front of houses on residence streets. These have grown so thriftily that in hundreds of instances they reach a dense mass of vivid green from the sidewalk to the roof, sometimes spreading out so as to cover almost the whole front of the house. Two or three such vines illuminate beautifully a block of dull brown stone fronts.

Below Grand street the rule ceases to hold good that a passenger on the elevated can see trees on every street crossed, but it is largely because the streets are so crooked that often not over a block or two is in sight in any direction from the train. In the dry goods district trees are few, but toward the river, wherever people live, there is generally at least one tree in sight from every corner, and from Chambers street, where the City Hall Park comes into sight, down past St. Paul's and Trinity, Bowling Green and the Battery, there is always something green upon which to rest the eye.

There are fewer trees in proportion to population on the east than on the west side of the city, but even on the east side they grow at frequent intervals, and thrive in the most closely built districts. There will be more of them, too, when the new small parks are made.—New York Sun.

On Time.

Some people are always in a hurry and generally always behind hand. The two go together; for hurry is the child of a state of mind rather than of a train of circumstances. The methodical man is never in a hurry. He moves along in his orbit, as Goethe says the stars do, "without haste and without rest." He knows what is first to be done, what next, and how long each item to be attended to will require. He sees in an exigency what can be omitted or deferred, and what must be done according to the programme he has made. If he is due at a certain train he is there on time with five or ten minutes to spare. If a certain task is to be done by a certain date, the work is ready a little in advance of the date.—Exchange.

Poor Creature.

A.—How is your pretty cousin coming on?

B.—I regret to say that her chances in life are slim.

"Great heavens! Is she so dangerously ill?"

"She is not ill at all. Her chances in life are slim because she is engaged to be married to a dude."

A report is current in Chicago that the Northwestern & Milwaukee Railway systems are to be amalgamated.

SARAH ALTHEA HILL.

The Stormy Career of the Woman Who is Now Judge Terry's Widow.

Sarah Althea Hill, whose stormy career in California has given her national notoriety, was born in this old French town just forty-nine years ago. She comes of good stock, her father being Samuel Hill, a prominent attorney, and her mother Julia Sloan, daughter of a wealthy lumber dealer. She had one brother, Hiram Morgan Hill, and her parents both died in 1854, leaving the two orphans an estate of $40,000. She is related to some of the best families in the country, among them the Wilkins, Sloans and Rodneys. The girl had good opportunities for acquiring an education. She attended school at Danville, Ky., and finally graduated from St. Vincent's Convent in this town. She had a governess in the person of Miss Barral, a sister of ex-Congressman Hatcher. Her grandfather, Hiram Sloan, was her guardian, and he appears to have held a slack rein. The young ward developed a spirited temper, and soon after reaching legal age made her money fly. She grew up to womanhood in much her own way, and was noted for her beauty and temper. Sarah was a girl of more than ordinary personal beauty. She was plump, of medium height and possessed a lovely complexion. She was fair, but not a pronounced blonde. She was scheming and ambitious to excel in personal charms. These traits made her unpopular among her girl companions. It was said of her, too, that though she was a spendthrift in some things, she worshipped money and gave her attention mostly to those who possessed it. She is remembered by her friends here as something of a flirt, and at one time she is said to have had three engagements to marry on her hands. The hero of one of these engagements, Mr. Leanders, is a prominent politician residing in Southeast Missouri, and another resides in St. Louis. Her conquests in that section of the State were numerous during the time she held sway. She was fast, but her name was never tarnished with scandal. In love affairs Miss Hill was tyrannical, and more than one of her lovers had to suffer under her iron rule and eccentric whims. To show how cruel she was to her lovers the case of the one she really loved will suffice. He was then a young man, but is now a Missouri politician of national fame. They were engaged to be married and one night attended a hop. Sarah Althea became angry at her escort, and when the ballroom was entered she went upstairs and never came back until time to return home. The young man was angry and determined to break the engagement. Sarah Althea heard of it, summoned him into her bewitching presence, and the old infatuation returned so strong that he determined to swallow the insults, but Sarah had heard that he had told his friends that he intended to break the engagement. She determined on revenge. She never looked lovelier than on the night her luckless lover answered her call. He was powerless before her and pressed his suit with more energy than ever. She said nothing until he was ready to leave, and as he stopped for a good-night kiss on the threshold she turned her head and, with her eyes blazing, said: "Mr.——, you can go. We will cry quits. I don't want to see you again." The young man almost fell down the steps and never saw her afterwards. Now the story goes that Sarah Althea was really in love with this young man and expected to win him back. In this she failed, and in September, 1870, disgusted and broken-hearted and with only the wreck of her fortune, she started for California. A young uncle, named W. Sloan, accompanied her to the Pacific coast. He was wealthy and took his handsome niece to his mother's home. Sarah and the old lady did not live in harmony, and Mr. Sloan gave his niece a fine suite of rooms in a prominent San Francisco hotel. It was there she met Senator Sharon. Her brother, Hiram Hill, was a reckless youth, and followed her to California, where he married a wealthy woman of Spanish blood. Sarah Althea has never returned to the home of her childhood.—Cape Girardeau (Mo.) Special to Philadelphia Press.

The City of Berlin.

Frederick the Great worked hard to beautify this town of his choice, but it cannot be said that, with all his efforts and all the energy of recent years, it is a town which strikes a stranger familiar with London or Paris as one of grandeur or even of dignity. To begin with, there only exists one church of architectural interest—interest, because the beauty of the Klosterkirche has been destroyed by additions made about the middle of the present century. As for the cathedral, that is a late, domed edifice, no larger than a decent parish church in this country. This poverty is unique. Look where you will over Europe and you will not find a single town of capital importance so void of that crowning ornament to a city, a fine ecclesiastical building. The defect cannot be exaggerated. Such buildings are the durable record of a city's life; each weather-beaten stone has an interest no less human than scientific, no less romantic than artistic. We have our St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, the Parisians their Notre Dame, Vienna its St. Stephen's, Rome its St. Peter's; but there are no such sermons in stone to be read in Berlin, no building to be admired for its beauty or revered for its age. Conceive Paris without Notre Dame. The effect is nothing short of robbering French literature of Victor Hugo! Nor is Berlin much better off for secular buildings. None of them save an inconsiderable fragment of the old Schloss date earlier than the 17th century, and the bulk of the old Schloss is a decaying plaster faced pile of that unfortunate period. The palaces of the late Emperor William and of the Emperor Frederick as crown prince were built, the former some 50 years ago, the latter 30, and, though both insignificant in size compared with Buckingham palace, may be admitted to compete with it in point of style.—Macmillan's Magazine.

THE CHERRY.

The Past and Present Culture of this Fruit—Its Classifications.

Downing separates the cherry into two classes—first, the Bigarreaus and Hearts, and second, the Dukes and Morellos. These amount almost or quite to distinct species. The Hearts and Bigarreaus, being strong and vigorous growing trees, are somewhat tender in many sections of country, especially in the level, fertile west, and are therefore not so generally cultivated, though as a rule the fruit is of fine quality. According to Dr. Warder, the Hearts and Bigarreaus are not entirely reliable except on soils where the American chestnut is an indigenous growth, or at least successful when introduced. The Dukes and Morellos are more hardy and fruitful, this class embracing varieties like the Kentish, which are quite universally popular. Although in some sections a profitable fruit, the cherry has scarcely held its own in point of popularity along with other classes of fruits during the last quarter of a century. This is perhaps partly due to the overshadowing popularity of the strawberry and other small fruits coming into competition with it, by reason of their ripening at or near the same season. In some particulars, however, especially for culinary purposes, the cherry is not likely to be entirely superseded by any of its best of rivals. The late Dr. Kirtland, of Cleveland, O., made the improvement of the cherry, which succeeds admirably in that section, the specialty of his life work. In this way he gave to the world a number of valuable varieties. More recently new introductions are being made from abroad, through the energy and perseverance of Professor Budd and others, with encouraging prospects. We may hope from this source to obtain varieties directly and indirectly which will prove more hardy and valuable, especially north of the present limit of cherry culture, as intimated above, very little, if any, effort has yet been put forth in the improvement of our native species, of which Professor Gray mentions at least four. The arts of horticulture, aided by the hand of time, may yet subjugate to the uses of man some or all of these now untamed species. The cherry succeeds well on dry soils. In orchards, where there is ample room for large trees, and in climates where it is not subject to the bursting of the bark, standards with four or five feet of clear trunk are to be preferred. For door yards, where shade and ornament are taken into account, standards of the free growing sorts are the most suitable. For fruit gardens of limited extent, and in localities where the bark of the trunk is liable to burst, the dwarfs or low standards are most appropriate and profitable.

Weariness.

A tramp knows what it is to be leg-weary, a farm laborer to be body-weary, a literary man to be brain-weary, and a sorrowing man to be soul-weary. The sick are often weary, even of life itself. Weariness is generally a physiological "ebb-tide," which time and patience will convert into a "flow." It is never well to whip or spur a worn-out horse, except in the direst straits. If he mends his pace in obedience to the stimulus, every step is a drop drawn from his life-blood. Idleness is not one of the faults of the present age; weariness is one of its commonest experiences. The cheques that many a man draws on his physiological resources are innumerable; and, as these resources are strictly limited, like any other ordinary banking account, it is very easy to bring about a balance on the wrong side. Adequate rest is one kind of repayment to the bank, sound sleep is another, regular eating and good digestion another. One day's holiday in the week and one or two months in the year for those who work exceptionally hard usually bring the credit balance to a highly favorable condition; and thus with care and management physiological solvency is secured and maintained. But a physiological fortune is as good a thing, or even a better thing, than a money fortune. Stored resources, well invested, keep the mind easy and the body youthful. If, however, a man have not these, but only enough of strength to go on steadily from day to day, he should watch carefully against excessive weariness. A feeling of prostration is the dark thunder cloud that portends a change in the atmosphere. Health, like weather, may "break," and when once it is broken nobody knows when the barometer will mark "set fair" again. Weariness, coming on in the ordinary course of work, without any special and temporary cause, is nature's demand for an immediate holiday. The horse is tired. He does not want the whip, but a month's run in a quiet and abundant pasture. As nothing in the world can properly satisfy hunger except food, so no drug or stimulant of any kind except rest can restore the weary to energy and health. The doctor's tonic is a very good thing in its way, but it will no more act as a substitute for rest than a glow worn's light will serve the same purpose as the moon.—Hospital.

He Took a Fit.

A gang of men were at work on a city street when a slight, beardless youth laid down his pick, and approaching the foreman said to him:

"Can I take a fit, sir?"

"Take what?" asked the foreman.

"A fit—I feel one coming on," replied the young man, without emotion.

"Why certainly," said the foreman.

So the young man walked over to a bit of grass under a leafy tree—it was a a new street in the suburbs—and had a fit.

Then he went and washed his face, came back to his place in the line, and took up his pick and struck into work. After the day's work was over the young man said to the foreman: "You don't mind my having fits?"

"No—I guess not if you do a fair day's work."

"Well, you see, I used to work for a butcher, an' he wouldn't let me take fits—said it interfered with business—an' I thought you might feel the same way about it."

And that young man works hard with pick and shovel and takes a fit once in a while as you or I might take a drink of water.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE NET BREAKS.

A Moment of Horror for Monsieur Peynaud and 5,000 People.

Monsieur Baptiste Peynaud, who dives from a tower at Rockaway Beach, L.I., said to be 150 feet high, into a bignet stretched below, broke through the net Friday afternoon. Peynaud started to make the jump at 2 p.m., with the usual formal preparations. More than 5,000 spectators were on the shore and in numerous boats, large and small. The net into which the dive or fall is made is about thirty feet long and fifteen wide, and is made of good, stout cordage. In the centre is a piece of heavy canvas about six feet square. When Peynaud dives he tries to land as near the centre of the canvas as he can. This ensures an equal strain on all parts of the net. The net is stretched eight feet above the shallow water at the shore. It was getting to be low tide at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon, and the water below the net was about eight inches deep. Peynaud mounted the tower as usual and when he got to the top, gave the same dramatic look about him. After bending over in the narrow opening in the platform at the top a minute or so, and looking intently at the net to gauge his jump, his body straightened itself and he shot downwards like an arrow. When he had descended 50 or 60 feet the spectators could see that his body was slowly turning, so that he could land in the net on his back, with his head towards the tower. He fell on his back, but his aim had been bad, and his body struck half on the canvas and half on the netting. The cords in the netting parted with a snap, a prolonged rip was heard, and the people turned pale and closed their eyes to shut out a horrible scene. Peynaud rebounded in the air two or three feet, came down again feet first, and slid through the rent in the net. As he did so, however, he grasped the loose shreds of netting on each side, and slowly let himself down into the water, where he stood with a look of blank amazement on his pale face. He stared at the top of the tower, at the hole in the net, and then at his feet, and seemed to wonder what had happened to him. He quickly recovered himself, however, and made his customary graceful bow and wave of the hand.

Facts About Coffee.

The pleasures of coffee are by no means dissipated in the warm season, when "ho coffee is not needed as a means of defying the discomfort of cold weather. Cold coffee is a delicious beverage when well made. Coffee ice made of strong coffee frozen in a freezer and served in cups with whipped cream is a dainty desert, or a convenient part of the afternoon tea menu; coffee soda is a peculiar summer drink, and few people accustomed to the morning cup of coffee make any difference on account of the weather in this most important feature of the breakfast table. An expert in coffee maintains that the best coffee is made in the old-fashioned tin coffee-pot. "Don't give me any new patent arrangement for making coffee," he says, "the old tin pot is the only kind of cooking utensil that preserves the aroma and the full flavor of the coffee."

After the coffee has been boiled and settled pour it in good strength upon a cup half filled with cream and hot milk. Most true coffee epicures have a beverage prepared with full strength that will give a delicious aroma and a true but delicate flavor to a cup of rich cream and boiled milk. Rather peculiarly the average American drinks about the same amount of coffee now that he did eighteen years ago. In 1870 the average consumption for each person was 7½ pounds; in 1888 it was 7⅞ pounds, showing that the taste for coffee neither increases nor decreases.—Boston Journal.

The Care of the Finger Nails.

The half-moon, which is esteemed so great a beauty, if carefully attended to, will increase in time, and even when it has been almost obliterated will grow to be very beautiful, says Medical Classics. Many people think that pushing the skin back from the nail will show it more, and that by this practice the delicate hem, as we call it, which holds the upper and under skins together, is totally destroyed, and the ends of the fingers have an ugly yellow growth encircling the nail instead of the delicate framework which nature intended. Then the way in which the nail is cut can totally change the shape of the fingers. By cutting the nails close at the sides and keeping the corners from adhering to the skin, hang-nails can be avoided. Where the nails are thin and inclined to break, frequent oiling is necessary, and the nails should never be polished except when some oily substance is used beside the powder. This keeps the nails more pliable, and no matter how thin they are, if properly treated they are no more liable to break than thicker ones. Another thing that is bad for the nails is polishing them too roughly. They should be lightly touched and not rubbed until they become heated. This is one cause of white spots coming on the nail and marring its beauty.

A Trick Worth Trying.

Baker Brothers, of Candler, Georgia, have invented a novel way of catching owls or night hawks. They have set up a long pole near the fowl house. The pole is about sixteen feet high with the top end sawed off smooth and a little steel trap is set on top of the post, fastened by a string to the post below. Notches are cut in the post by which it is easy to climb. On a moonlight night the owls when they are around are likely to light on something near the fowl house. The other night an owl was heard not far off and, thinking that he would be likely to come for a chicken during the night, the brothers went out after supper and set the trap on top of the pole. Before they went to bed the family heard a fluttering in that direction and, going out, found that they had trapped an owl that measured four feet five inches from tip to tip.

Brodie to Go Over Niagara Falls.

Steve Brodie has fully decided to attempt what no man has done and lived—float over the American Falls at Niagara. He will leave New York for Niagara to-day and devote some time to making himself familiar with the dangers he must encounter. The falls are 166 feet high. The compensation for the terrible risk Brodie will take in addition to the fame to be won by the undertaking is a purse of $1,500, contributed by hotelmen and railway men.

PIGEON FLYING.

Methods of Sending the Birds by Mail—An Important Traffic.

Pigeon flying is one of the delights of the Black country, and a Birmingham (Eng.) paper gives a curious account of it. It is a passion with the workingmen, and it takes some of them completely away from their work. With the majority, however, it is no more than the ordered pastimes of the first day of the week. It has developed quite a new branch of railway traffic in the district. It is the practice of flyers to send their birds in baskets, addressed to the station master at a particular station, with the request that he will release them, mark on the label the time they were released and return the basket. What is most singular is that this is regularly done. An important traffic has grown up in this way, with a tariff for pigeon baskets and returned empties. Railway companies at first set their faces against it, but finally took a more enlightened view of their own interests and of the wants of their customers. They were probably influenced by the consideration that the officials rather liked the work. In cloudy weather porters have been known to feed birds three days before setting them free. The only inconvenience is that, where a bird fails to reach its destination, the obliging official is sometimes accused of being "got at" by a rival flyer. This suggests a certain demoralizing tendency in the pastime, and the suggestion may be confirmed by the revival of a well-worn anecdote. An aged penitent, who had loved pigeon flying not wisely but too well, was assured by his ghostly comforter on his deathbed that they would both meet in a better place with wings to their backs. The dying man suddenly forgot his anxieties in the ribald offer to "fly" the parson for a sovereign when they arrived.

A Clever English Rascal.

The cleverness of an English rascal has excited the envy of all the rascals in Paris, who, with typical Parisian egotism, have long claimed to be the cleverest rascals in the world. The English rascal in question was a professional London pickpocket. Shortly before the French exposition opened he bought a small hotel in Paris on the instalment plan. The purchase price of the hotel was 60,000 francs, and the first and only instalment which the Englishman paid was 2,000 francs. The Englishman bought a few pieces of cheap English furniture for his new house, equipped an English bar, and then advertised far and wide for English boarders during the exposition. His prices were so low that he soon filled his house. Every one of his lodgers was warned by a placard over his bed that the landlord would not be responsible for the loss of any valuables which had not been deposited in the hotel safe. Of course the safe deposits increased with the popularity of the hotel, and both reached high water mark two days before the second instalment of 2,000 francs on the purchase price of the hotel fell due. There was then 35,000 francs' worth of British jewellery and bank notes in the safe. The pickpocket landlord stole every sou of it. He concealed his plunder in his quarters in another part of Paris, dyed his hair, shaved his beard, put on a French suit of clothes and began picking pockets at the exposition. He was caught by the police with his hand in the pocket of an English member of Parliament, and was locked up. A police investigation led to a revelation of his history and the recovery of the jewellery and money which had been given to him for safe keeping.—New York Sun.

Restaurants in Sweden.

A traveller gives the following interesting description of a railroad restaurant service in Sweden: "We entered a little dining-room, around which were arranged little tables covered with snowy linen; in the centre stood a large table, one end spread with the usual diversified collection of the 'smargasbord'; at the other were piles of plates, knives, forks and napkins. The soup is brought in and placed on the central table; each one helps himself, and, taking it to one of the small tables, eats at his leisure. The soup finished, you serve yourself with fish, roast meats, chicken and vegetables in quantity and variety as you choose, and return to your table. The servants replenish the supplies on the large table, remove soiled plates, and bring tea, coffee, beer or wine, as ordered, to the occupants of the small tables, but each one must serve himself from the various courses, ending with pudding and nuts and raisins. There was none of the hurry, bustle and crowding usually encountered in a railway restaurant, but plenty of time was given for a quiet, comfortable meal, with no necessity for bolting your food. For this abundant and well cooked dinner the charge was 40 cents—tea, coffee, beer and wine being extra. Your word was taken without any questioning regarding the extras as you paid for them and your dinner at the table from which the coffee was dispensed."—Exchange.

English as She is Spoke.

Julian Hawthorne's tastes run to the romance about girl's names. He has five daughters, whom he has named respectively Hildegarde, Gwendolin, Gladys, Beatrice and Imogen. The English way of pronouncing these names is unique and not quite so pretty as the spelling way. They are "Hilker," "Gunnell," "Glads," "Beeritch" and "Moken." Queer language, that English, as the English speak it.—Washington Gazette.

HUMORS OF THE TARIFF.

It Cost Uncle Sam About $15 to Collect Three Cents.

After two days' work by the clerks of three or four departments of the New York Custom House and some incidental labor on the part of the Deputy Collector having charge of dutiable goods coming into the country through the mails, Henry Zimmern, of No. 37 Maiden Lane, New York, was enabled, upon payment of three cents duty and a penalty of like amount, to recover an article of personal adornment that was sent him by a friend in Germany and arrived in New York on Aug. 14th.

That article was a brass ring valued at 12 cents, dutiable under the customs laws for three cents. Why Mr. Zimmern wanted a ring of this material, or whether it was a gage of his early love, or possibly an heirloom in his family, Acting Collector McClelland does not know. The only fact he takes official cognizance of is that the ring came inclosed in a letter, that it owed a duty of three cents to the Government, and that, no matter what might be the result, that amount must be collected.

The amount of red tape through which this innocent brass ring passsed before it reached its owner is hard to specify. When the deputy collector at the post-office discovered it in an envelope he and his staff of clerks had to fill out seizure papers in quadruplicate reporting the fact to the Collector. One of the clerks of the latter had to acknowledge the receipt of the documents, send copies to the Surveyor and naval officer for their information, and indorse upon the third an order to the Appraiser to make an examination of the seized article. The fourth copy was carefully filed in the Collector's office for future reference.

This was the work of the Collector's office, but there was more to be done before the Government could get its three cents. The official in the seizure room had to be instructed in writing to turn the ring over to the Appraiser; the Appraiser had to report the result of his examination to the Collector, and the latter had to acknowledge the receipt of the report, and so finally when the owner called for his property and planked down his three cents there had been expended, according to the opinion of experts in the Custom House, at least $15 in clerk hire, stationery, messengers' salary, etc.—Buffalo Courier.

"The Christian Buddha."

The United States Department of State has received from the legation at Pekiln China, an account of the death and extraordinary life work of the Rev. J. Crossett, an independent American missionary in China. He died on the steamer "E, Dorado," en route from Shanghai to Tien-Tsin, on June 21st last. In speaking of Mr. Crossett Minister Denby couples his name with that of Father Damien, the Belgian missionary who died on the island of Molokai, and says: "Mr. Crossett's life was devoted to doing good to the poorest classes of Chinese. He would go out on the streets the coldest nights and pick up destitute beggars and convey them to refuge, where he provided them food. He also buried the dead at his own expense. He was known to the Chinese as the Christian Buddha. He was attached to no organization of men. He was a missionary pure and simple, devoted rather to charity than proselytism. He completely sacrificed himself for the good of the poorest of the poor. Let this American, then, be enshrined along with the devoted Belgian in the annals of men who loved their fellowmen."

Absence of Mind.

"Never was so put out in all my life as I was yesterday," remarked Jones at his club the other day. "Just fancy! I returned home at the usual hour, lit the gas, and was about retiring for the night when I took a notion to smoke a cigarette. Hunted high and low, but not the sign of a match could I find. In a rage I put out the light and went to bed."

"But why didn't you light your cigarette by the gas?" asked someone.

"Great heavens!" cried Jones, in comical despair, "if I'd only thought of it."

How to Clean a Baby's Nails.

Every mother knows how difficult it is to clean the baby's finger-nails, says a writer in Medical Classics. By folding some tissue paper into a sharp point, and, when using it, calling the attention of the baby to something else, this simple task can be easily performed. The paper is so soft that it does not hurt the tender flesh, yet it is sufficiently firm to remove every particle of dirt.

EGYPTIAN CHICKENS.

How They Are Hatched by Millions in Rude Incubators.

The Egyptian chickens are smaller than the American variety and the eggs are only about half as large as those laid by the speckled hens on Uncle Sam's farm. The Egyptians are, however, far in advance of us in the science of raising chickens, says Frank G. Carpenter, and the incubating establishments of the country hatch out eggs by the millions every year. At a hatching establishment near the pyramids the farmers trade fresh eggs for young chicks, and the rate is two eggs per chick. Another artificial egg hatchery turns out 500,000 little chickens every season, and the oven crop of chickens in Egypt amounts, according to figures furnished me by the Consul-General, to more than 20,000,000 of chickens a year. We have about $200,000,000 worth of money invested in the fowl industry in the United States, an amount so large that all the money of Jay Gould could not equal it, and still we have to import more than 16,000,000 dozens of eggs every year. If America would adopt the Egyptian hatching system we could sell eggs instead of buying them, and our farmers might buy little chickens to raise at a price of 20 cents a dozen. More than 20,000,000 of little chickens are sold each year in this way in Egypt, and there is a regular business in chickens just about old enough to walk.

The incubators are rude, one-story buildings, made of undried bricks, so arranged that the eggs are laid upon cut straw in racks in rooms, around the ovens, which are kept fired in during the hatching season. The outside walls are very thick and are built so they retain the heat, and the only thermometer used is the blood of the boy or man who attends the fires. By long practice these men learn just how hot the ovens ought to be kept, and they replenish the fires as the weather demands. A small amount of fuel is needed, and the temperature of the oven is about that of 98 degrees above zero. The fire is built up for eight or ten days before the eggs are put in, to thoroughly warm the hut, and after this time it does not go out during the season, which is from March until May. The eggs are turned four times a day while hatching. The whole outfit of an establishment which hatches over 200,000 chickens a year does not, I am told, cost more than $25, and one man runs the whole machine, keeping the fires, buying and turning the eggs, and selling the chickens. There are, in this incubator, twelve compartments, each 70 feet long, 60 feet wide and 16 feet high, and each of these compartments will hold 7,500 eggs at a time, or 90,000 eggs in all. It produced last year more than 230,000 chickens and did the work of more than 20,000 hens.

By Rail to Jerusalem.

The British consular agent at Jaffa in his last report on the trade of his district states that a concession for a railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem has been granted by the Sultan to Mr. Joseph Navon, an Ottoman subject, for seventy-one years. It is stated that a company has been formed in England and France to carry out the scheme, and that the engineers are soon expected to undertake the work. The carriage road between Jaffa and Jerusalem has been greatly improved. The government sold last year the income from the toll of the road for £2,085, as compared with £1,812 the year before last, which shows an increase in the traffic. The Jewish colonies in Palestine are greatly improving; one of them, which is called Richon le Zion, has planted about 2,000,000 vines, all promising well. The colonists are great laborers; nearly all their land is cultivated. The greater part of them are Turkish subjects, and all subject to the laws of the country.—London Times.

Nothing Like Getting Used to It.

A few years ago the colored brethren established a church near the residence of our good old friend Robert Wolters. At first the noise disturbed the old gentleman much, and thinking the best way out of the trouble would be to buy them out he made a proposition; they hooted at the offer. Time went on and they began to figure up the price offered by Mr. Wolters for the building against the cost of a new edifice elsewhere in town. It was developed that the price offered would build two houses like it. A committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Wolters and the chairman said: "Mr. Wolters, we have come to accept the offer you made us last year for the church." "Church? Nonsense! I've got used to the fuss now and couldn't sleep a wink without it. No, no, I don't want it. Go on with the meeting."—Schulenberg, Texas, Messenger.

What We Must Wear.

Another threatened innovation is in frock coats. Nobody wears frock coats nowadays but elderly gentlemen and country brethren from way back. But it is not the recent frock coat with which we are threatened—the genteel garment, whose skirts come down well below the middle thigh—but a substitute for it closely resembling the bobby coat which Thomas and James wear when they go out with the coach and the horses. This frock coat is now worn to a considerable extent in England, and that it will at least be offered in New York is a foregone conclusion. Its distinguishing feature, of course, is its short skirts, which reach nearly to mid-thigh, and present an appearance quite devoid of the dignity we are wont to associate with full-skirted garments.—New York Mail and Express.

How to "Make Coffee."

Dr. W. Junker, the African traveller, says: "Any European who believed that the decoction of coffee-beans which had been tasted at home deserved the name of 'coffee' is soon convinced of his error after sojourning for a while in Turkey, Egypt or Arabia. He will, indeed, at first be somewhat surprised always to find some sediment in his cup, which he is apt to overlook until he has swallowed some. But he will soon learn to sip the aromatic liquid carefully from off the sediment. The proper way to prepare coffee is as follows: The beans, which should, of course, if possible, be of the very best quality (genuine Mokka), are carefully examined, and all damaged ones picked out, constituting then what is known as el-bunn es-ssafi. Immediately before use the requisite quantity is freshly roasted and powdered, which latter is preferably done in a wooden mortar. The powder should be quite fine like flour. Water having been brought to a boil in a suitable kettle or vessel, a certain quantity of the powder—a small spoonful for every small cupful of coffee to be drawn from the vessel—is added, the whole stirred, and the vessel replaced on the fire until the liquid boils and foams up. It is then removed and the coffee served."

Nutmegs.

The nutmeg is the innermost kernel of the fruit of a small tree that grows about thirty feet high. It is a native of the East Indies, but it is cultivated in other tropical lands. It has a small yellow flower. The fruit is small and peachlike, but with a smooth surface, and turns yellow when ripe. The exterior, a thick, fleshy husk, dries up and cracks, disclosing the nut. The outer covering of this nut is what we know as mace. It is red at first, but turns to a light brown when dried. Next comes a hard, shining shell, and inside that is the nutmeg. The tree bears about the eighth or ninth year from the seed. The mace is taken off and dried in the sun for one day, and for eight days in the shade, then dampened with sea water and pressed in bags. The remainder of the nut is very thoroughly dried, when the shell is broken and the nutmegs assorted, the best ones being exported. They are first pickled in lime-water, then left to sweat, and finally packed for shipment. The Penang nutmegs, the best, are about an inch long, pale brown, corrugated on the surface, with red streaks in the gray interior.—London Standard.

Watch Screws.

It is asserted that the smallest screws in the world are those used in the production of watches. Thus, the fourth jewel wheel screw is the next thing to be invisible, and to the naked eye it looks like dust; with a glass, however, it is seen to be a small screw, with 260 threads to the inch, and with a very fine glass the threads may be seen quite clearly. These minute screws are 4-1,000th of an inch in diameter, and the heads are double; it is also estimated that an ordinary lady's thimble would hold 100,000 of these screws. No attempt is ever made to count them, the method pursued in determining the number being to place 100 of them on a very delicate balance, and the number of the whole amount is determined by the weight of these. After being cut the screws are hardened and put in frames, about 100 to the frame, heads up, this being done very rapidly by sense of touch instead of by sight, and the heads are then polished in an automatic machine 10,000 at a time. The plate on which the polishing is performed is covered with oil and a grinding compound, and on this the machine moves them rapidly by reversing motion.—New York Star.

The Hebrew Oath.

In the city court this morning in the case of Charles Freeman against Charles Goldman for the recovery of $25, the orthodox Hebrew oath was administered by the Jewish rabbi. To take the oath the witness has to wash his hands and put on a Talith, or prayer cloak, and while swearing to take and hold in his hand a tora, or the five books of Moses, written on parchment, for the use of the house of worship. The party must swear by the name of Jehovah, and, looking at the word, he shall swear: "I swear by Adonai," and concludes his oath, "So help me God to future happiness." A small casket contains the ten commandments and is held in the left hand, a strap attached being bound about the arms, and another such casket is strapped on the temple. The rabbi administered the oath to several witnesses before court adjourned for dinner.—Utica Observer.

She Spat on Her Bait.

We had long since voted her the prettiest girl in the boat. This would have been an offset for poor luck at fishing if she had only known it, but we weren't saying a word for fear of spoiling her, when by and by she looked up to the grizzly old captain and asked: "Captain, shouldn't I spit on my bait to bring luck?" "Guess you should," he replied. "Lemme put on a fresh shrimp and then you can spit." "Real hard?" "Yes." "All the spit I can?" "Yes." She held the hook within three inches of her nose, twisted her tongue three or four times and then gave a "huchoo!" We saw something fly overboard, heard a scream of despair and next moment the prettiest girl fell in a heap in the bottom of the boat. She had thrown both plates of false teeth out of her head into 20 feet of water.—New York Sun.

It is said that Sir Charles Russell's fees in the Maybrick case amounted to 1,100 guineas; 200 guineas was the fee marked on his brief, and he received 300 guineas as a "special retainer, and a daily "refresher" of 100 guineas.

TESTS made in London have shown that the value of coal wasted in smoke from the domestic fireplaces in that city amounts to $11,282,500 annually, while the aggregate waste of unconsumed carbon is $13,000,000 a year, and the damage to property caused by the smoky atmosphere is put down at $10,000,000. The effect upon human life and health of an enormous volume of hydro-carbon and carbonic-oxide gases pouring into the atmosphere daily in, fearful to contemplate, and science could do nothing more practical than to bend its energies to the solution of such a great economic problem.

FARM TOPICS.

Repeated experiments show that the cost of producing a pound of poultry does not exceed five cents, provided the bird is sold as soon as it reaches maturity. When it reaches a certain stage of growth the increase in weight is slow, and the expenses will be higher. During warm weather the cost is lessened, as but little food is required to repair waste of tissue, the bird being then able to pick up a portion of its food, but the cost of fowls if confined is somewhat larger.

The bottom of a hill in a valley is undoubtedly richer in vegetable matter than the sides, unless the latter have been recently and heavily manured. But it is a fallacy to draw manure at any season on a side hill with the notion that it will wash down. We have tried that repeatedly, and the manure never fertilized much, if any, below the line where it was drawn. Undoubtedly rains washed over the land and the manure on the soil below, but the valuable properties of the manure were deposited where it lay, while the deodorized water passed on below. It is doubtless to this tendency for water saturated with manure to sink, that running streams and large bodies of water owe their power to clense themselves. The nitrates are heavier and sink to the bottom. Hence the mud from the ponds and running streams becomes such valuable manure in many cases. It contains more of the fertilizing elements than the water above it has contained.

Weeds are likely to escape in the latter cultivation of the corn, and other weeds spring up after cultivation is ended. It is these weeds which foul the land for future years. The weeds in the corn field are neglected during the hurry of grain and hay harvest, threshing, hauling manure, and preparing the ground for wheat. But even better than is the scythe are the sheep. Let them have the run of the corn fields during the autumn. They like the shade of the rows. They will nibble off the lower blades of the corn, but this is in no wise an injury to the crop. The sheep will also find every weed and bunch of grass. Their scent is sharp, and they will discover weeds that would be overlooked. These are very few weeds indeed that will not be cropped by sheep, especially of the Merino breed; they crop so close to the ground that they will hardly start again. The spring calves, if not too strong, may well be put with the sheep. Unless unusually large, they will not damage the corn, and will get considerable feed which would otherwise be wasted.

Taking up and potting geraniums and other bedding plants which farmers' wives and other amateurs wish to preserve, should be done before the advent of cool, frosty weather, in order that some root growth can be made before winter. As generally managed, the work is deferred to the latest possible moment, and then the plants are kept in a hall-way or on a porch until the snows of early November alarm the owner, and they are taken in. This treatment gives little or no opportunity for the plants to make any progress in their new position. The cold nights and occasional cold days keep the temperature of the soil in the pots much lower than it should be. Newly potted plants require to be kept, for at least two weeks after potting, in a room where the temperature is above 55° How to get a geranium with roots sixteen inches long into an eight or nine-inch pot is often a puzzle to the amateur, but is easy when one learns how. First put in an inch of broken crocks for drainage then cover with a little coarse earth. Take the plant in the right hand with the roots hanging down, insert the roots in the pot so that the end of most of the longest ones rest on the earth, give the plant a twist, lowering it a little at the same time, shake in some fine soil with the left hand, and repeat the operation until the roots are all in. The turning of the plant distributes the roots and "takes up the slack" or surplus length. After a few trials the experimenter will be able to it do nicely without cramming or crowding the roots. Do not keep newly potted plants too wet.

One clause of the Liquor License act sets forth that on and after the first day of May, 1889, the windows of bar rooms of hotels, saloons, or any other licensed places where liquor is sold shall not be covered by blinds, artificial frosting or anything that shall tend to obscure the view of the public; also, that a light shall be kept burning in all such places from 7 to 11 p. m. during the prohibited hours. Any licensed dealer violating this resolution shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $10 for the first offense and $40 for the second, with costs in each case. Furthermore, the act provides that barrooms shall be kept closed from 11 p. m. till 6 a. m. that gambling devices and games of chance are prohibited; gamblers or loafers shall not be permitted to lounge about the premises; that liquor shall not be given to boys under 16; that liquor shall not be sold to habitual drunkards.

Just doon at Wullie Nelson's door,
Pit in wi' mighty oaken planks
An' gude gravel too galore.

O, ye poor wee daft bit callant
They're twa crossin's gran' an' new Pit in by mony hard days work
An' dollars no' a few.

An' will they pit twa muckle gates
Tae swing up tae the sky
Tae fill wi' awe an' wunner
The weary passer by.

Na, na, but Ditton's wife an' family 'ill come
Frae every quarter o' the toon
An' cross an' cross thegither these
A' wi' well keepit shoon.

TIMELY WISDOM.

TIMELY wisdom is shown by those who keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry on hand. It has no equal for cholera, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, dysentery, colic, cramps and all other summer complaints or loosening of the bowels.

A Boston paper, in a fit of enterprise, had two of its reporters disguised as beggars and sent out to ascertain how that class of society fared. It is thought that their success was so great that they will remain in the business.

SAFE AND RELIABLE.

I HIGHLY recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for curing cholera, cholera morbus, colic, cramps, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all summer complaints. It is safe and reliable for children and older persons.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say, that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which outstrips mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

Wallacetown

Sept. 4.—The following pupils from the Wallacetown public school are attending your high school at present:—T. H. McColl, L. Tesky, M. Sutherland, G. Blackwood, A. McKee, E. Connell, T. Stidwill, A. McCallum, D. Cameron, R. W. M. Gunn and D. B. McPherson.

Dan. Curtis is confined to his room at present.

Jno. L. Pearce sold 750 pounds of honey in St. Thomas last Saturday. He intends shipping some to Halifax, N.S.

Mrs. McCrank and Mrs. Stidwill, who have been ill for the past few weeks, are able to be around again.

Thos. D. McIntyre left for Glencoe last week.

Miss Annie Lyons and Geo. Clay are attending the model school in St. Thomas.

Some unknown persons broke into the house of Dr. Ruthven on Monday night. It is not known whether any articles were taken or not.

E. McIntyre left for Buffalo last week.

It is reported that the Presbyterians here will shortly erect a brick church.

We are sorry to lose A. D. Urlin, our worthy storekeeper. For the last twenty years he has conducted business amongst us and during that time has been almost indispensable to the community.

We are going to lose one of our fair maidens of the west end before long.

McGregor & McCallum had an operation performed on the knee of their blood horse, Western Wilkes, last week.

The Brantford trainer of Schleihauf Bros'. trotter has skipped for parts unknown. The horse has not been found.

Mrs. Siften, of Coyne's Corners, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. J. L. Pearce.

Mr. Bolton is very low with typhoid fever.

Eagle.

Sept. 3.—Miss Annie Lang left yesterday to resume her position as teacher in St. Clair county, Mich.

Sam. Robinson had a narrow escape while threshing the other day. While feeding the machine the glove of his right hand caught in the cylinder. Fortunately the glove slipped off, but the forefinger was split open, exposing the bone. It was very painful but he expects to have it all right for working in a short time.

Master Hector Lang left on Saturday to attend the model school at St. Thomas for the term.

A harvest home dinner will be held on the church lawn at New Glasgow at one o'clock on Friday.

A meeting for polling sub-division No. 5 will be held at the school house here on Saturday evening next.

Iona.

Luke Brown is recovering from his severe illness.

Mrs. Walter Currie is visiting her father, H. Garbutt, Wallacetown.

Miss Lizzie McIntyre has returned from a visit to friends in Brantford.

Miss Belle Wilson is visiting friends in London.

Miss Black, of Yarmouth, is the guest of Mrs. Wm. McLandress.

Rain is badly needed here. Fall seeding is much retarded owing to the hardness of the ground, and it is becoming difficult to secure water.

The prize lists for the Southwold and Dunwich fall exhibition are being distributed. The fair will be held on Saturday, September 28th, and promises to be away ahead of all previous exhibitions.

Shedden.

The Shedden and Lawrence baseball teams played at the latter place last week. Score, 8 to 5 in favor of Shedden.

Only one sale—a vacant lot—was made at the sale at Olver's hotel last week.

Farmers are having a hard time preparing the ground for fall wheat, owing to the very dry weather.

Business is rather dull here at present.

Visitors—G. W. Brown, of Aylmer; Miss Mary Bowlby, of Talbotville, and Miss T. Ellison, of St. Thomas.

Highgate.

Mr. James Moorehouse is very low; not expected to recover.

Mrs. Thomas McMacMackon is recovering nicely from injuries received some time ago by falling down stairs.

The new brick block is progressing and will be ready for use this fall.

Thieves are at work in the neighborhood. Several sets of harness have been stolen of late. No clue to the culprits as yet.

Farmers have commenced to market their new wheat. Price for same being from 80 to 85 cents.

Messrs. McMackon Bros.' heading factory, together with about $2,500 worth of stock, was consumed by fire on Saturday. The fire is said to have caught from the engine while the hands were at dinner. The Cumberland mills' fire engine done good work and was the means of saving the balance of the stock. Loss, about $3,500; partially covered by insurance as follows: $800 on factory and $1,000 on stock. A number of hands will be thrown out of employment.

Iona Station.

Messrs. Clark & McTavish are purchasing hogs in this vicinity. They have shipped several car loads from here already and intend shipping again on Wednesday.

Mr. Campbell, of St. Thomas, has rented his store here to a Mr. Kipp, who intends keeping a general store and also buy grain.

Mr. McNeil received 9 cents for his July cheese.

J. R. McCallum is building a large brick cellar for roots.

Rev. Mr. Haviland, of Waterford, preached in the Baptist church on Sunday and intends to be here again next Sunday.

Rev. Mr. Urquhart, of Cowal, preached in the school house Sunday night.

Miss Bella Morrison is visiting friends at Highgate and Ridgetown.

Mr. Duncan McIntyre has his driving track in first-class shape and is training his Lapidist colt, and would like to have a brush with some of the roadsters around.

A. Galbraith and John Kerr intend starting for the Northwest on Tuesday to visit their brothers, who are in business out there, one at Moosomin and the other at Portage la Prairie.

West Lorne.

Mr. Vanloon has returned from Port Dover, where his wife died and was buried.

Miss Jennie Palmer has returned, after a visit to Owen Sound, Sault Ste. Marie and Detroit.

Mr. Ryan, father of Joseph Ryan, night operator, spent a few days visiting his son here.

Rev. Mr. Irwin and wife have returned to their home at Nile.

Edward Hood is very ill.

Our barber, Mr. Ryckman, has quit his business here and gone to Ridgetown.

The Board of Health met here to consider the advisability of allowing Mr. Thomas to stir up the ashes of the burned small-pox house. Mr. Thomas has posted notices forbidding constables or any person else trespassing on his property. The Board of Health replaced the notices with others forbidding Mr. Thomas or any one else trespassing.

The Usual Result.

It is not to be denied that a good sewing machine is one of the most important appurtences of the modern household.

We thought we had a good machine until one day the agent of the New Home presented himself at our door and proceeded to deliver an oration upon its characteristic merits.

"But," we answered, "our machine suits us well and we do not care for another."

The agent, however, begged the privilege of leaving one of his machines with us "for the ladies to try."

The request was not unreasonable, so we granted it, but more to oblige the agent than anything else, for we really did not want the machine, and had not the remotest idea of buying it.

The machine once in the house, it was natural that the ladies should look it over; they did so, and as a consequence fell in love with it. They say that, without the the slightest wish to decry or disparage any other machine, this, all things considered, is, in their opinion, the most desirable one to be had.

This unrivalled machine is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Co., Orange, Mass., and 28 Union Square, New York.

FOUR MEN HANGED.

The New York Murderers Meet Their Fate this Morning.

HOW THEY FACED DEATH.

A NEW YORK despatch of last night says: Packenham and Nolan were hanged at 6.55 a. m. on the Franklin street scaffold, and Lewis and Carolin on the Leonard street scaffold at 7.03 a. m. A number of visitors called yesterday to pay their farewell visit. The two faithful Sisters of Mercy, who have been unwearying in their ministrations to the murderers, came in the forenoon at 11 o'clock and remained with them until 7 in the evening. Father Prendergast and Father Galinas arrived at that hour to assume the charge of the men until death should relieve them. Pat Nolan's sister and the two men cousins, who have called on him several times since he was sentenced, were with him yesterday. A young man also came to see him. The women broke down and sobbed hysterically, while Nolan looked at them curiously and puffed a little faster on his cigar, which he chewed nervously. "You don't do any good by crying," he said at last, "for that won't help things any." Later a message was brought to gray-haired Packenham telling him that his children were coming and he stepped briskly up to the wire netting of the cage. His son and daughter entered the corridor. He cut their visit short, telling them not to grieve for him and to take warning by his gloomy fate. Their sobs echoed along the walls of the corridor as they withdrew. In the evening, a little before 10 o'clock, young Robert Packenham, who had come from his farm work to see his father on the vigil of his death, returned to the prison and a still more affecting interview than that of the morning took place between them. Under-Sheriff Sexton was obliged to lead the boy, who was sobbing, away. After supper the condemned men were taken to the yard for a last taste of air and recreation. They ranged themselves along the wall of the prison, and as if they had no connnection with the dreadful ordeal of the coming day. By midnight the men were in bed and asleep. At 4.30 o'clock, the men were busy arranging their last toilet. Nolan paid particular attention to the arrangementof his necktie, while Lewis spent most of his time in blacking his boots. Packenhan and Lewis shook hands with night-keeper Orr and bade him good-bye in voices devoid of tremor. At 5 o'clock the march to the chapel was commenced, Father Prendergast leading. For three-quarters of an hour the group remained in the chapel, the priests busy with the religious rites. After mass had been said the men were returned to the cage, where breakfast was served. It was a bountiful meal, and all the men partook. It was arranged that Packenham and Nolan, both being tall and of a size, were to be hanged together on the scaffold which had been erected on the Franklin side of the prison. Carolin and Lewis were to be hung on the gibbet on the Leonard street side of the jail. At 6.54 the condemned men emerged from the jail accompanied by the priests. Father Prendergast supported Packenham and Father Galenas walked alongside of Nolan. The procession brought up with Father VanRenselaer. The arms of the condemned men were pinioned and over the shoulder of each was with its long streaming ribbon flapping in the wind. Packenham's face was of a ghastly pallor, but his step was firm. He looked unflinchingly into the faces around him. Nolan hardly appeared to realize his position. There was a half-defiant look in his countenance, and he cast his eyes up at the cross-beam from which two ropes dangled with something akin to curiosity. The rope around his neck, with the knot pressing against his left ear, seemed to chafe him, for he moved his head uneasily once or twice in his brief walk to death. Nolan took his place under the rope hanging nearest the Franklin street walk. Packenham was four feet away from his companion and next the prison. Both men turned and grasped the priests by the hands, wringing them fervently. The traps were then sprung and the bodies of the murderers were

SMOKED, LAUGHED AND TALKED

THE BLACK CAP

JERKED INTO THE AIR.

With the rebound came the sound of the falling weight plunging to the ground. For an instant there was not a movement, and then a tremor passed through the frame of Nolan. His legs were drawn up slightly and his chest heaved faintly. Packenham remained motionless for fully 30 seconds, and then came a violent trembling from head to foot. His body swayed from the hips downward for half a minute and became still. At the expiration of four minutes there was a mighty throe almost together in the suspended murderers. Packenham's pulse had gone up to 96 and then sank rapidly to 50 beats a minute. Nolan's pulse at the fourth minute was at 70, but it became weaker and weaker, and at the expiration of five minutes was no longer perceptible. There was a slight muscular contraction then in Nolan. As his body swung round a tiny stream of blood could be seen trickling down his neck; the rope had abraised a small sore in his neck. At 7.10 o'clock both men were pronounced dead, but were permitted to hang fifteen minutes longer. While this scene was being enacted preparations were being made for what proved to be the most shocking spectacle that has ever taken place within the walls of the Tombs. The hanging of Carolin and Lewis in several aspects is probably unparallelled. Two minutes after 7 Carolin and Lewis with the priests came through the door. Lewis walked unsteadily the first dozen paces, but quickly recovered himself. Carolin had the butt of a

CIGAR BETWEEN HIS LIPS,

and was puffing vigorously, blowing great clouds of smoke into the faces of the attending priests. He glared at the men of God as he turned around and felt the rope touch his shoulder. Spitting the cigar stump from his mouth he broke out into blasphemy that horrified the spectators. Atkinson had just pinioned his legs when he spoke. Looking sullenly at the three priests he suddenly exclaimed, "I die an innocent man, —— —— it. I didn't do this thing." Lewis, who had then been pinioned, half turned his head, and addressing his companion said: "What's the matter with you anyway? Why don't you die like a man?"

"I WILL DIE LIKE A MAN"

shrieked Carolin, his face turning perfectly livid. "I will die like a man, an innocent—" The words were scarcely out of his mouth before Atkinson had clapped the black cap over the murderer's face. The assistant hangman covered Lewis' face at the same moment. Atkinson gave three deliberate raps with a perceptible interval between them. The sound of a blow came from within the box and the weight fell. Instead of bounding up as Packenham and Nolan had done, the miserable wretches went into the air with so little force that there was scarcely any rebound at all. Lewis immediately began to struggle in the most sickening manner, throwing his legs about so violently as to kick off his slippers, then he began to gurgle and choke, the rasping, wheezing sound came from under the black cap, for fully ten seconds his body turned and swayed, and the contortions were so painful that half a dozen men turned away their heads. The poor creature was slowly strangled. Carolin's body was violently contorted also, but he uttered no sound. The weight fell at 7.03 o'clock, and at 7.10 both men were dead. The four bodies hung for half an hour and were then cut down and put in plain coffins. All the murderers were strangled, but the deaths of Packenham and Nolan were comparatively painless; that of Lewis was agonizing.

ANOTHER GREAT WRECK.

Two Trains Collide, Killing Three and Wounding Twenty Persons.

A Petroleum, W. Va., despatch of Friday night says: A terrible collision occurred about 11 o'clock this morning between Petroleum and Silver Run tunnel, in which three men were killed and over twenty wounded. The accommodation train coming west crashed into a special train occupied by railroad magnates on a tour of inspection. The cause of the wreck is said to have been conflicting telegrams. The one received by the conductor and engineer of the accommodation ordered them to pass the special at Petroleum, while the special train, engineered by Capt. Rowland, is said to have had orders to pass the accommodation at Silver Run. The trains came together with a crash at the curve east of Petroleum. Both trains were running rapidly, and when they collided the special train and the engine, tender, and baggage car of the accommodation went over the cliff in one indescribable mass. James Layman, engineer of the accommodation, one of the oldest engineers of the Baltimore & Ohio Road, was crushed to death. Alex. Bailey, fireman, was also crushed in the wreck of the engines. Cephas Rowland, also one of the oldest engineers of Parkersburg, was caught under the wreck and received injuries from which he connot recover. John Fletcher, fireman on the special, was crushed to death. The special car, occupied by officials on an inspecting tour, was smashed into smithereens. Roadmaster J. A. Hunter was badly injured, with several others, including George Douglas. In the accommodation train were many passengers, all of whom received a terrible shaking up, and about twenty of them were more or less injured. R. J. Malley, trackmaster of Parkersburg, and a member of the City Council were badly injured. J. Rose, baggagemaster of the accommodation train, was also seriously hurt. Many of the injured passengers were hurried off on trains going east or west, and it was impossible to get their names.

A Freight Train Crashes Into Another Freight—The Casualties.

A last night's Elmira, N. Y., despatch says: As a Lehigh Valley freight train, east-bound, was backing into a switch just west of Big Flats, about 10.30 last night, an Erie west-bound freight crashed into the centre of the train, badly smashing several cars of each train and derailing many others. Both tracks were blocked, and all the passenger trains during the night had to be sent around the wreck over the D. & L. R. The Erie train, No. 2, running at a high rate, crashed into the caboose and made a wood pile of several cars. The engine turned over and slipped partly down a twenty-foot embankment. Andrew Wallace, of Hornellsville, was buried under the wreck, and his scalp was nearly torn off. He was also badly burned and scalded and may die. Fireman Chas. Kimball, of Hornellsville, had an arm broken. His face and arms were badly scalded. The express car overturned and was smashed, but did not go down the embankment. Two expressmen crawled out of the car, slightly injured. The train consisted of a smoker, two day coaches, two empty excursion coaches, and two sleepers, well filled with passengers, who were tumbled about by the shock. Two passenger cars in the middle of the train were partially telescoped, but the passengers escaped with slight bruises. The wreck took fire from the engine, burning freight and wreckage, and consuming the express and baggage cars. The contents were mostly saved.

Swindling Uncle Sam.

A Boston telegram says: The complaints of ill-treatment and swindling upon the part of United States consular officers in the Maritime Provinces practiced upon American sailors who have been unfortunate enough to apply to them for aid or advice have been continually received by the State Department for some time; but it is only recently that the authorities took any action in the matter, the result being the catching of Consul Alfred W. Hart, of Canso, N.S., in a scrape that may interfere materially with his future liberty. Numerous complaints against this man led recently to Inspector Coogan, of the secret service, being sent to investigate, resulting in the discovery of a wholesale system of robbing American sailors and defrauding the Government on bills contracted to supply shipwrecked crews. He will be at least dismissed, if not prosecuted, is the latest from Washington.

The bill conferring the right of suffrage to women on the question of licensing the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in this Commonwealth has passed the Senate on its final stage by a majority of 5. —Boston "Temperance Cause."

A TERRIBLE WRECK.

An Express Train Jumps the Track at a Trestle.

ONLY TWO PERSONS ESCAPE INJURY

A Knoxville, Tenn., despatch of last night says: A horrible wreck occurred on the Knoxville, Cumberland Gap & Louisville Railroad, at Flat Gap Creek, 22 miles from here, at 10.30 this morning. The train was the first to go over the new road, and carried a select excursion of the City Council, the Board of Public Works, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, and the very flower of the business and professional men of Knoxville. The train of two cars left the track at a crossing, and the rear car went down a trestle. Only one man was uninjured. It was impossible to obtain medical aid for a long time, and until 4.30 p. m., when the train reached Knoxville, scanty attention was rendered. Many had to be brought back on flat cars, and the last part of the journey was made in a driving rain. Three men died from their injuries, and others cannot live. The dead are: Judge George Andrews, the most prominent lawyer in East Tennessee; S. T. Powers, a leading merchant, and former President of the East Tennessee Fire Insurance Company; and Alex. Reeder, a leading politician. The injured are: Alex. A. Arthur, President of the Chamber of Commerce; Isham Young, President, and Peter Keern, member, of the Board of Public Works; John T. Hearn, editor of the Sentinel; W. W. Woodruff, a leading wholesale merchant; Charles Seymour, attorney; Alexander Wilson, assistant chief engineer of the Knoxville, Cumberland Gap & Louisville Road; County Judge Maloney, Aldermen Barry and Hockings, Gen. H. S. Chubert, of the Governor's staff; A. J. Alberts, a wholesale merchant; Rev. R. J. Cook, Professor of U. S. Grant University; City Physician West, Judge H. H. Ingersoll, H. B. Wetsell, W. B. Samuels, C. Abbie, Capt. H. H. Taylor, S. McKelden, Ed. Barker, R. Schmidt, J. F. Kinsella, W. A. Park, one of the train crew, J. B. Hall and Philip Samuels, aged 10. Out of 56 persons on the train 41 were severely injured. The most intense excitement and sadness are apparent here to-night.

A Knoxville, Tenn., despatch of Friday says: When the relief train arrived here last night from the scene of the accident over 100 carriages were in waiting. The scene as the wounded and dead were being taken out on stretchers was a ghastly one. There was a great dearth of doctors, and many of the injured had to wait several hours for attendance. It is feared that this fact, together with a drenching rain, will render the after effects very serious. Seymour and Barker will lose their legs. There is little chance for Ald. Barry. In the wreck he was thrown against the window and his abdomen filled with powdered glass. With this exception all the others may recover, unless the explosion brings on complications. It is believed the wreck can be attributed to the condition of the road. Two years ago Knoxville subscribed $225,000 towards the construction of the road, and the contract expired to-day. It was to show the city authorities that the road was completed that the excursion was given.

A SEAFARING CRANK.

A Venturesome Sailor Rescued Just in Nick of Time.

A Gloucester despatch says: The schooner Martha Bradley arrived to-day from Grand Bank, having on board Capt. Charles T. Rogers, of the boat Nickel Odeon, who was picked up on the western edge of Grand Bank, August 10th, in a helpless condition. Rogers is 39 years old, a native of Duxbury, and a jeweller by trade, although he followed the sea when young. He sailed from Boston for Paris in his eighteen-foot Nickel Odeon on July 3rd, having taken on board all necessary equipments. He enjoyed favorable weather until the 8th, when he struck a gale from the northeast lasting 72 hours. When it abated he found himself on the Georges. By July 28th he had become so blind from the sun's glimmer on the water that he could not see his compass, and steered by the sun for three days. For the last fourteen days his boat drifted around at the mercy of the wind and sea, the mariner being nearly exhausted as well as almost blind, and spent most of his time lying in the bottom of the boat. When found his condition was such that he could have lived but a short time had he not been rescued. He could neither stand nor feed himself. Since then his health has improved, but he is still very weak. His eyesight has been partly restored. He leaves for home to-day.

The Struggle in Hayti.

A special received via New Orleans, dated Port-au-Prince, says the Haytian gunboat Defence has just come in, bringing the body of General Dardignac, Legitime's Commander-in-Chief, and the news that the whole of the south is lost to Legitime. The fight is now entirely between Port-au-Prince and the rest of Hayti, and people engaged in business see some reason to hope that the end is near. The loss of Dardignac is serious, but the loss of all the important cities in the south is disastrous to Legitime. Hippolyte announces that he will not storm Port-au-Prince.

PREVENTION of disease is both rational and scientific. If one knows the causes of most diseases, and can remove that cause, the diseases must disappear. Prof. Wm. H. Thompson of the University of the City of New York, says: "More adults are carried off in this country by chronic kidney disease than by any other one malady except consumption." The majority per cent. of all diseases are caused by unsuspected kidney poisoned blood. The late Dr. Dio Lewis in speaking of Warner's Safe Cure, said over his signature: "If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble, I would use Warner's Safe Cure."

—Two people were talking science the other evening when the germ theory came under discussion. "Just to think we are composed of germs!" he exclaimed. "Why, then, we are all Germanes," said she. "Yes," said he, "except the Irish, and they are Mickrobes." After that the conversation changed.

HER SENTENCE COMMUTED.

Mrs. Maybrick will Spend Her Days in a Prison Cell.

PUBLIC OPINION ON THE CASE.

A last night's London cable says: The Queen has commuted the sentence of death against Mrs. Maybrick into one of penal servitude for life. The decision was announced to the unfortunate woman last evening. Sir John Puleston, expressing a natural and kindly interest in the prisoner, endeavored in the House this afternoon to obtain from the Home Secretary an expression of opinion, but Mr. Matthews laid down the principle that the advice tendered to Her Majesty under such circumstances could not be made a matter for question in the House. It is understood that what governed the Home Secretary in recommending the prerogative of mercy to the Crown was the doubt as to whether sufficient arsenic had been administered to Maybrick to cause his death, and as to whether death really came from arsenical poisoning. The opinion of the judges whose advice was sought by Mr. Matthews, and who studied the evidence, was that Mrs. Maybrick had given her husband poison with intent to kill. The result of the trial is, therefore, that Mrs. Maybrick is held by the law of England as guilty of adultery and of having endeavored to poison her husband, and for these crimes she must undergo imprisonment for life. The Home Secretary distinctly states that petitions for release or commutation will not be considered. The Home Secretary has arrived at the conclusion that the trial had been so conducted that as to the guilt of the prisoner the doubt remained which under the law of England made capital punishment impossible. The practical result of the agitation of the Maybrick case will be the creation of a Court of Criminal Appeal.

Touching the Home Secretary's decision in the Maybrick case, the Times says: "We shall hardly be wrong in saying that his decision will be received by the large majority of the public with relief. The case against Mrs. Maybrick was and remains a case of terribly strong suspicion, but suspicion which, after all, it is said, just misses moral certainty."

The News says: "The Home Secretary's decision is avowedly based upon the somewhat singular ground that though Mrs. Maybrick undoubtedly administered arsenic to her husband he may conceivably have died of something else."

The Standard says: "Mr. Matthews has commuted the sentence of death passed upon Mrs. Maybrick at the Liverpool assizes into one of penal servitude for life. The decision will be received with little surprise, and on the whole with a good deal of relief. If for no other reason, we should welcome Mr. Matthews' decision because it removes the faintest shadow of an excuse for the silly and offensive agitation of the last ten days. It would be too much to hope that even now this senseless clamor will be completely silenced. Sentimentalists and busy-bodies, who have so boldly advertised themselves at the expense of the unhappy woman, will be reluctant to retire to their original obscurity."

The Newcastle Chronicle hopes to see Mrs. Maybrick free. One step has been gained.

The Cardiff Western Mail says the commutation will be accepted with a feeling of relief, but it considers the decision a compromise.

The Sheffield Telegraph approves of the commutation, but would have strongly disapproved of the liberation of the prisoner by a free pardon.

The Nottingham Daily Guardian is surprised at the decision, holding that no middle course was open.

The Bradford Observer says that the cry will be that Mr. Matthews is illogical, that Mrs. Maybrick should be hanged or liberated.

The Observer considers the decision just.

The Bristol Times and Mirror considers that decision illogical, and likely to bring trial by jury into discredit.

UNHAPPY CHINA.

Terrible Loss of Life by Earthquakes and Floods.

A Sunday's San Francisco despatch says: The steamer Oceanic, which arrived to-day from Hong Kong and Yokohama, brings advices to August 10th of further details of the bursting of the Yellow river embankments in the Province of Shantung July 22nd. The destruction is widespread. The breach in the river is over 2,000 feet in length, and a swift current swept through, flooding to a depth of twelve feet a large extent of the country lying adjacent. Many houses were washed away, and a despatch from Chefoo states that the number of persons drowned is too great to be counted. Ten districts are already submerged, and it is feared many more in the low-lying country south will suffer a similar fate.

The latest advices concerning the earthquake at Kumamota, July 28th, place the number of killed at eighteen and the wounded at nineteen. Fifty-two dwellings were demolished. A telegram received on the 30th July states that fifty-three shocks had been experienced and that they continued to be felt. The inhabitants were sleeping in the open air. The same earthquake was felt in the Province of Clukugo. Considerable loss of life is reported, but no particulars have been received.

Ocean Parasites.

Everything is said to nave its parasite, and the cable at the bottom of the sea is no exception. Cables have been taken up from a depth of a mile and a half with the hemp covering badly eaten away, and at a depth of over half a mile strong currents of the ocean have rasped the armored wires on the rocky bottom. Experience has not yet determined the full lasting qualities of electric cables. Specimens have been taken up which show no signs of deterioration after having been in the water for more than 35 years. Water, and especially salt water, seems to be a preserver of insulating compounds.

THE GRASP OF LIGHTNING.

Terrible Experiences of a Lineman in New York.

A New York despatch says: On the west side of Eighth avenue, just above Thirtieth street, a line of eight or nine Brush electric light wires runs through several ailantus trees growing along the curb. The top of one of these trees was killed some time ago by being set on fire by the current. About 8 o'clock to-night Policeman Maginley saw the dead branches again ablaze. He telephoned to the Brush station for a lineman, and Patrick Driscoll and an assistant were sent around. Driscoll had no gloves, and the policeman advised him not to fool with the wires without them. He laughed at the caution, and climbed up the tree, fixing himself in the lower branches and using a small rope to fling over and break off the branches that touched the wires. As he did this, stray flashes of electricity darted about his hand, framing it in fire. McGinley was scared and called to him to come down, but he paid no attention. A few moments later the policeman heard a cry, and looking up saw Driscoll lying on his back upon a number of wires, with both hands reaching up and grasping another wire. Maginley ran to the nearest box and sent out a fire alarm to get a ladder. When he got back to the tree a crowd of people were shaking it as hard as they could, trying to shake down the line-man. Not seeing the wisdom of adding a broken neck to the injuries that Driscoll had already received, the policeman drove the crowd back and told them to leave the tree alone until the firemen came. Driscoll's assistant climbed the tree, and, sitting on a branch, kept hold of Driscoll to see that he did not fall. The line-man was apparently dead. He had not moved or spoken since he received the first shock. When the truck came the firemen pulled him out from among the wires in short order, and by the time they had him on the ground he was conscious. He was taken at once to his home, and the doctor soon reported that he was doing pretty well for a man who had spent fifteen minutes in close communion with a live electric light wire. His worst injuries were on his hands and forearm, which were burned to the bone. His hands may be permanently crippled.

HUSBANDS FOR TWO.

A Queer Scene on Board the Switzerland.

A Philadelphia despatch says: The eight taps by which 4 o'clock was announced upon the bell of the Red Star steamship Switzerland as she lay in the dock yesterday afternoon had hardly died away when the sharp twang of the dinner gong reverberated through the ship, and the steward marched through the vessel fore and aft, crying: "Come to the weddings! Come to the weddings! Come on, everybody! Two weddings in the second cabin!"

There was a rush of stewards and stewardesses, officers and crew and the few straggling passengers who had not yet left the ship, and the cabin was crowded when Magistrate Ladner tied the double nuptial knot and made husbands and wives of two immigrant couples.

Among the 210 immigrants who were shipped at Antwerp by the Switzerland were two young girls who attracted the attention of the stewardess, and at her instance the Immigration Inspectors informed them that they would not be permitted to land unless they should first find husbands for themselves. The girls were Maria Mayer, who came from Elberfield, Germany, and Pauline Volz, whose home was in Friedburg, Germany.

Among the steerage passengers was also Frederick Behle, who came from the home of Miss Mayer and was bound for Detroit, which was the destination of that young woman. Upon finding that she was refused a landing Behle stepped forward and informed the Immigration Inspectors that he was a friend of Miss Mayer and had come with her from her home. He said that he was willing to marry the girl.

Miss Volz was quickly rescued from her embarrassing position in a quite similar manner. Peter Michael, a shoemaker, who lives at No. 39 Washington avenue, presented himself on board the Switzerland, and said he had come to claim Miss Volz as his wife. He came from her native place to New York a few weeks ago.

With this solution of the trouble in sight Immigration Inspector John J. S. Rogers went up to Clerk Bird, of the Orphans' Court, and procured a pair of marriage licenses. When he returned to the steamship Magistrate Ladner was summoned, the double marriage ceremony was performed, and the two couples left the ship rejoicing.

The First English Woman Journalist.

It is related as a curious and interesting fact that Mrs. E. Lynn Linton, the well known novelist, was the first English lady journalist, says the New York Star. It is now many years since she determined to trench upon the province of the male journalist, and began contributing to a monthly paper. Her contributions were gladly accepted, and her example nerved other literary ladies to venture into the journalistic arena. Mrs. Linton lives in a flat at Queen Anne's Mansions, at a giddy height, which commands a very extensive view of London housetops. She is a very industrious writer, but her marvellous facility spares her that painful, anxious toil which with other writers is the first condition of turning out good work. Mrs. Linton's memory of literary personages is remarkable. She still recollects Robert Southey, who was a near neighbor of her father in Cumberland; and bears Walter Savage Landor—who was, it may be said, her literary foster-father—in affectionate remembrance. Singularly enough, Mrs. Linton spent some years of her life in the house at Gadshill, rendered famous by Charles Dickens' association with it. Charles Dickens, by-the-bye, was her editor, and had the very highest opinion both of her literary merits and—no mean thing in writers—her reliability.

READING FOR THE LADIES.

The Gorgeous Dresses Worn by the Ladies at the Royal Wedding.

WHAT THE QUEEN AND PRINCESS WORE.

The bride wore a dress of white satin, with a train measuring some three yards in length and untrimmed, save for a bordering of satin folds. The front was completely covered with the finest Brussels lace, and a chatelaine of orange-blossoms fell over the folds at one side. In her hair she wore a wreath of orange blossoms, under a veil of finest Brussels, the design of which matched that on her dress. In the front of her bodice she wore one spray of orange blossom and a sprig of heather which the Earl of Fife had taken to her that morning at Marlborough House. Her ornaments were pearls and diamonds. A high collar finished the bodice at the back, but was open V-shape in front, showing a necklace consisting of one row of beautiful pearls under the folds of the bridal veil. Her sleeves were of lace, unlined, through which the beauty of her arms could be discerned. Her bouquet consisted of white moss roses and maidenhair fern. Her eight bridesmaids were in pink of the precise shade of a moss rose, a reposeful and quiet tint. The materials of their dresses were silk and crepe-de-chine. The bodices were V-shaped, both in front and at the back. Sashes of pink moire ribbon were brought from under the right arm and tied at the back, where they fell to the very edge of the dresses. These were made with short trains. A small cluster of pink moss-roses was fastened in each bridesmaid's hair, at the left side. They carried bouquets of pink moss-roses, wore pink stockings, and shoes with paste buckles. The bridesmaids were: The Princesses Victoria and Maud of Wales, the Princesses Victoria and Louise of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, and the Countesses Victoria, Feodore and Helena Gleichen.

Her Majesty marked the occasion by introducing more white into her invariably sombre toilet than she has ever done before. The Queen's train and bodice were of the richest black brocade, opening on a front of a black silk grenadine, embroidered in a design of flowers in white silk. Her veil was of magnificent white lace, edged with a deep hem embroidered with a thicker version of the design, and some white tulle was also used to trim the bodice. Looking exceedingly bright, happy and well pleased, the Princess of Wales wore a dress of gray satin, the color of the feathers of a dove's breast. The bodice and train were backed and brocaded with silver, the design being oxeyed daisies and marguerite foliage. The front of the skirt was draped with flatly sitting folds of grey tulle wrought with silver in a closely-woven, most effective design. The bodice was made with a high collar softly faced with silver-wrought tulle, which was carried in folds down either side of the open front, and caught with a series of diamond stars, getting gradually smaller towards the basque. Her Royal Highness wore a splendid diamond tiara in three divisions, in the centre of each of which was one immense deep-colored sapphire, the largest in the front of the tiara, and those at each side of scarcely less proportion. A collar of diamonds and three rows of loosely-hanging single stones with pendants completed her jewels. She carried a small bunch of dark red roses. The shoes were of satin, matching the dress, with high Louis Quinze bows. Princess Christian wore a dress of exceedingly handsome silver grey brocade, the design raised in satin from a silk surface, and the edges of each flower outlined with embroidery. The front of the dress was of satin, with flowers wrought with grey pearls and a faint tracery of silver. Chains of pearls were used to trim the front and stomacher, and Her Royal Highness wore many magnificent diamond ornaments. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) wore a gown of white brocade, the design outlined and mixed with silver and gold. The front was of silk, with silver and gold ornaments. In her hair were many diamond ornaments and a high white osprey aigrette, in which sparkled many brilliants. Princess Henry, of Battenberg, wore a most effective dress of the prettiest and most becoming shade of heliotrope, the front of a paler hue, with diamond ornaments. The Princess Mary (Duchess of Teck), was gowned in bodice and train of brocaded velvet, the velvet design being raised in the deepest tint of mauve from a ground of satin many shades paler. The front of her dress was made of alternate stripes of puffed satin and of shimmering cut-steel and bronze fringe. The bodice was cut square, and trimmed with China crepe of the pale mauve shade, caught with passementerie of cut steel and bronze. The Duchess wore in her hair two bands of single stone diamonds and several stars. She also wore a collar of brilliants, from which hung several pendants. The Princess Frederica of Hanover's costume was of white silk strapped in a peculiarly effective way with bronze-green velvet. It was made with a high collar, beneath which two straps of velvet were brought to a point and fastened with a quaint device in brilliants. The elbow sleeves were also strapped with velvet, as was the front of the dress, each strap having a diamond ornament, for which it formed a most effective background. The Marchioness of Salisbury wore a dress of olive-green velvet, with a tablier of exquisite old point lace. The elbow sleeves were faced with lace and the open bodice bordered by folds of the palest blue and the palest pink satin, both softened by intervening frills of lace. Lady Salisbury had no ornaments in her hair, which looked wonderfully picturesque, arranged in silvery simplicity. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. Maria, Marchioness of Ailesbury wore a perfectly-cut bodice and train of purple velvet. The sleeves were slashed and the front trimmed with silk of a curious shade of pink, which harmonized in a subtle sort of way with the concealed pink of the purple. The Marchioness wore few diamonds, but those of perfect shape and color. Madame de Falbe's jewels were wonderful, her necklace of large single stones being supplemented by collars and pendents not easily surpassed. Her dress was of white corded silk, the skirt turned back with broad revers of pale peach-blossom color overlaid with some unique Flemish point lace. Peach blossom ribbons tied at one side of the waist fell carelessly to the hem, one or two being veiled with lace to match that on the revers. In her hair Madame de Falbe wore a peach-aigrette, with one large diamond and several smaller ones around it. Countess Spencer's dress was of cream-colored satin, richly embossed in a quaint way, giving it the semblance of thickly executed silk embroidery. The bodice was made with a high collar, the back of which was thickly embroidered with gold, the design being continued in points down the side seams below the shoulders. The front of the gown was a mass of gold embroidery. Lady Spencer wore a high tiara of diamonds and many magnificent diamond ornaments. Lady Randolph Churchill's dress was of cream-colored silk, with a full frill of yellow lisse crossing the front from the right shoulder to the left side of the skirt hem. Her one ornament was a diamond star, which was arranged most effectively just in front of her head above the forehead, her hair being dressed low. The Duchess of Manchester wore a beautiful yellow silk trimmed softly with deep folds of chiffon. Her tiara was one of the most imposing worn, although closely rivalled by that of her daughter, Lady Gosford. The ladies in attendance on the Princess of Wales could not have arranged their costumes to tone better with her lovely one of dove-grey and silver had they given the matter more thought than is probable at so occupied a time. Miss Knollys' dress was of robin's egg-tinted satin, draped with silken gauze the same shade. In the bodice were arrange a few pink and dark red carnations with their own grey leaves, a bunch of which Miss Knollys carried. Her companion wore a Princess dress of dark biscuit color, brocaded with sprays of pink roses opening over a front of pleated rose pink silk. Miss Knollys had diamond stars in her hair.

An Indian Hospital.

Lady Roberts' officers' hospital in India is progressing very favorably. It was opened on the 15th April, 1888, and from that time until the end of the season it was fully occupied, as it has been since it was opened this year. The house at Murree was originally bought for a "home in the hills" for the lady nurses of the Punjab circle, who required change and rest. Fortunately, it is large enough to admit of its being used in part as an officers' hospital; four rooms have been set aside for this purpose, and are most thoroughly appreciated. At Kasauli a "home" has been built for the lady nurses of the Sirhind circle, but as nurses have not yet been provided, and it is not therefore required for this purpose, it has been prepared for the reception of sick officers, and is under the charge of a qualified lady nurse, Miss James. The proposed increase in the number of nurses has been postponed by the India Office authorities for a time, a very short time only, it is to be hoped. Meanwhile Lady Roberts trusts to be able to supplement the Government nurses by employing two or three more qualified nurses at stations where they are much needed. Lady Roberts has been appealed to constantly to send nurses for work in hospitals, and to take care of sick officers, and also to open hospitals in other hill stations, but want of funds prevents anything more being done at present.

A Queer Canal.

The strangest canal in the world is one I never saw mentioned in any book or newspaper. It is a canal sixteen miles long between Worsley and St. Helens, in the North of England, and is underground from end to end. In Lancashire the coal mines are very extensive, half the country being undermined, and many years ago the Duke of Bridgewater's managers thought they could save money by transporting the coal underground instead of on the surface. So the canal was constructed, the mines connected and drained at the same time. Ordinary canal boats are used, but the power is furnished by men. On the roof of the tunnel arch are cross pieces, and the men who do the work of propulsion lie on their backs on the coal and push with their feet against the cross-bars on the roof. Six or eight men will draw a train of four or five boats, and as there are two divisions in the tunnel boats pass each other without difficulty.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

New Terrors to War.

With smokeless and noiseless powder, such as it is claimed has been invented in England, in the wars that are to be death will take on still more terrors. The first notice of the presence of an enemy will be in the sudden sinking down of men as though smitten by a pestilence. The sentry will die at his post and give no sign. The sun will shine down serenely while the battle rages, and no canopy will obscure the butchery. Battles will be silent executions, save when trumpets sound and furious men shout or wounded men moan. There will be nothing to kindle the battle ecstacy; no booming of hotly worked guns will give notice where the battle is sorest. With the battle clamors and the battle canopy driven away, it will require more nerve to be a valiant soldier than ever before. The soldier will not only have to face the danger in sight, but also to contend with the terrors that his imagination will paint him. —Salt Lake Tribune.

R. A. GUNN, M.D., Dean and Professor of Surgery, of the United States Medical College, editor of Medical Tribune, author of "Gunn's New and Improved Hand-book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," speaking with reference to Warner's Safe Cure, said over his own signature: "I prescribed it in full doses in both acute and chronic Bright's disease, with the most satisfactory results. * * * I am willing to acknowledge and commend thus frankly the value of Warner's Safe Cure." If you are gradually losing your strength, have extreme pallor of face, puffiness under the eyes, persistent swelling of the joints, abdomen and legs, unaccountable sharp pain in the heart, shortness of breath, begin taking Warner's Safe Cure without delay.

Five hundred veterinary surgeons in Great Britain have signed a paper condemning overhead check reins as painful to horses and productive of disease. It distorts the windpipe, and is liable to cause paralysis of the muscles of the face, apoplexy, coma and inflammation of the brain, all these resulting in shortening the life of the horse.

THE RUSSIAN EMANCIPATION.

Effects on the Country of Setting the Serfs Free.

After a trial of a quarter of a century, the Emancipation art is now acknowledged to have utterly failed. The reports of Russia officials, of statistical professors at Moscow, such as Jansen, and the Nihilists with Stepniak at their head, all alike agree that the misery of the rural class is greater than even in days of serfdom; cultivation is at the lowest ebb, the yield is wretched and less than in any other European country. Each peasant must plow, sow and reap as his neighbors do. The three-field system of corn, green crops and fallow, which was abandoned in all good agriculture long ago, goes on with disastrous results. As the lots are changed by the Mir at their pleasure, after every year, the temporary owner does not care to manure, etc., or in any way to improve his land. Although the rent is sometimes as low as 2s. an acre, yet the peasant cannot live. Agriculture is a business requiring capital, knowledge, and a sufficient amount of land to enable different crops to be grown, so that if one fails it does not mean starvation, for another may succeed. The Russian peasant has none of these qualifications. The peasant proprietors can neither pay the money owing to the Government for their land, nor even the State and communal taxes, and are flogged by the hundreds for non-payment. In one district of Novgorod fifteen hundred peasants were thus condemned in 1887. Five hundred and fifty had already been flogged, when the inspector interceded for the remainder. Widespread famine is found over a great part of the country; usurers, the bane of peasant proprietors in all countries, are in possession of the situation; the Koulaka and Jew "mir-eaters" supply money on mortgage, then foreclose, and when the land is in their own possession get the work done for nothing as interest. These "bondage laborers," as they are called, are in fact slaves, and are nearly starved, while the small pieces of land are often reunited into considerable estates, and their new owners consider they have only rights and no duties. Meanwhile, as forced labor is at an end and free labor is of the worst possible kind, the old landowners can get nothing done; thay have tried to employ machines, bought by borrowing from the banks, and are now unable to repay the money. The upper class has been ruined with no advantage to the peasant. "The wasteful culture of the cottier," as Stepniak calls it, "on these small plots is so bad that the general welfare of the country," says Prof. Jansen, "is in danger by the small yield of the soil." In spite of the philanthropic intentions of the Czar, he is believed to have aimed at diminishing the power of the nobles as much as of improving the condition of the peasants. He succeeded; the nobles in many distaicts are entirely ruined, and there is nothing now between the unlimited power of the autocrat and his 90,000,000 subjects, five-sixths of whom are peasants. —The Nineteenth Century.

Fruit Eating.

Some people are afraid to eat fruit, thinking that fruit and diarrhœa are always associated, when, if they understand the true cause of diarrhœa they would know that it was caused by eating meat. In hot weather meat putrefies very quickly, and during this process alkaloids are formed which are very poisonous, acting as emetics and purgatives It is true that fruit eaten green or between meals will interfere with digestion and cause bowel troubles; but use fruit that is perfectly ripe at meal-time, and only beneficial results will follow. Acids prevent calcareous degenerations, keeping the bones elastic, as well as preventing the accumulation of earthly matters. Fruit is a perfect food when fully ripe, and if it were in daily use from youth to age there would be less gout, gall-stones and stone in the bladder.

A John L. Sullivan Cure.

For "Black Eye," according to the N. Y. Medical Times, there is nothing to compare with the tincture or a strong infusion of capsicum annuum mixed with an equal bulk of mucilage of gum arabic and with the addition of a few drops of glycerine. This should be painted all over the bruised surface with a camel's hair pencil and allowed to dry on, a second or third coating being applied as soon as the first is dry. If done as soon as the injury is inflicted, this treatment will invariably prevent the blackening of the bruised tissue. The same remedy has no equal in rheumatic, sore or stiff neck.

Who Brown-Sequard Is.

Dr. Brown-Sequard is an American. His father, Capt. Edward Brown, of the American navy, was a Philadelphian and married a French woman on the Island of Mauritius named Sequard. He and his descendants took the name Brown-Sequard. The distinguished scientist, whose elixir of youth is making a sensation, was their eldest child. He was educated in France, but was afterwards a professor at Harvard and practiced medicine in New York for some years subsequent to 1873. He married twice, his first wife being Miss Fletcher, of Boston, a relative of Daniel Webster.

Equivocal.

"Augustus," said Mrs. Henpeck, severely, "I see a woman down in New Jersey has been convicted of being a common scold. I should like to see any brute of a man try that on me!"

"But you are no common scold, Maria," responded Mr. Henpeck with a sigh. And Mrs. Henpeck is still wondering what he meant.

THE MESSENGER BOY.

A Word for a Much-Ridiculed and Useful Individual.

The district messenger boy long since took his place in the repertoire of the paragrapher, with the bannana peel, the mother-in-law and the stovepipe, says the Omaha World-Herald. Ever since he came into existence he has been a favorite butt of the comic writers and artists. He is represented as the embodiment of laziness, and they portray him as stopping to play games or read dime novels on his way to deliver messages marked "important." It is all so. The messenger boy will admit the testimony and waive examination. But hear his defence. How would you like to be taken from school at the age of 10 or 12 years and made to run errands every day in the year? How much would you hurry on a day like Monday, for instance, if they sent you with a letter from a silly clerk to his sweetheart? If you were 14 years old and had to run errands all day would you not stop to look in a window at papers you never otherwise had a chance to read? If the only words ever spoken to you all the long day were words of undeserved reproach or injunctions to "hurry," would not the independence of your American boyhood resent such treatment? Would you feel like hurrying if a sudden breeze brought to you the glorious scents of the country? Would you hurry if passing an old beech tree you heard the sharp staccato "ponk, ponk" of Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker? Now, wouldn't you stuff the message into your pocket and go out into the street in search of a sizable pebble to chuck at him just for luck? Of course you would if you ever were a real American boy. And dawdling along a paved street you come across some boys on their bicycles. You haven't one yourself, but what more natural than that you should stop and wonder if you ever will own one of the shining spinners? Your run may, perchance, take you off through Hanscom Park. There are cool, delightful dells and soft mossy banks there, and you may loll around and watch the white clouds go kiting overhead, and away out westward you can see a drove of cows knee deep in a rain pond, peacefully chewing the cud and crackling their tails at the bothersome flies. And for a moment or two you actually forget that you are boy number steen-eleven, and are carrying a message from a love-stricken clerk to his dulcinea. But you come back to a realization that top time and kite time have vanished for you. You are not 14, you are 40, as far as the pleasures of boyhood are concerned. You are working to help the family out of the hole, and the fun of youth is as far past you as it is past the crusty lawyer who scolded you for carrying a story paper in your pocket. You merchant, lawyer, agent, who are reading this, how does it strike your case? Were you made to work while other boys played? Put it to yourself, and the next time you call a messenger boy, look him squarely in the face and try to imagine yourself forced into the daily grind of work and robbed of the treasures which should be the heritage of American boyhood.

A Cure for Sleeplessness.

The abuse of the eye is the crime of the age. I am prepared to demonstrate that at least nine-tenths of the prevailing sleeplessness of which we hear so much is due to nervousness directly traceable to the optic nerve. We are wearing our eyes over books and desks and types, and the effect shows itself not only in the appearance of the organ itself, but in its retroactive effect on nerve and brain. I have discovered a remedy for sleeplessness, and for the reason that I have never known it to fail I am fortified in my opinion that the whole trouble arises from overstrain of the eyes. Take a soft cloth—say a piece of napped towel—and fold in it two small pieces of ice at a proper distance apart to exactly cover the eyes when the cloth is laid across them. Theh lie down, adjust the cloth with the ice over the closed eyes, and you will be asleep in a very short while.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Death from Tight Lacing.

A verdict of death from tight lacing is, perhaps, still to be sought among the curiousities of law. But a Birmingham jury have come near it in a verdict of death from pressure round the waist. The victim was a poor servant girl who died after a fright, and her death was attributed by medical witnesses to the fact that she was too tightly belted to enable her to stand the wear and tear of any sudden emotion. She was a notorious tight lacer; her collar fitted so closely that it was impossible to loosen it at the critical moment, and under her stays she wore a belt so remorsely buckled as to prevent the free circulation of the blood.—St. James' Gazette.

BEWARE.

To flirt with her may seem no sin.
One's apt such follies to defend;
It's funny how such things begin,
But often funnier how they end.

—Snaggs—What are you doing with all those maps? Raggs—I'm getting ready to go on my vacation. Snaggs—Oh, I see; so you got those maps to see where to go? Raggs—No; to see where not to go.

"Promise me, Mary," the dying man said,
"You will see that my grave is kept green.
"Why, I can't promise that," was the sobbing reply,
As sadly she wiped her roriferous eye,
"But I'll see, John, your urn is kept clean."

—First little boy—Is your father fond of fish? Second little boy—Yes, very; he has C. O. D. printed on his business cards.

PAPER PENCILS.

A Process by Which Pulp May be Substituted for Wood.

One of the difficulties which have stood in the way of the substitution of paper pulp for wood in the manufacture of pencils has been the toughness of the paper covering, and its consequent resistance to the action of a knife. By a new process, which has recently been patented, the molecular cohesion of the paper is modified in such a manner that it can be cut as easily as cedar wood. The paper is first of all made into tubes and a number of them are placed in a frame at the lower end of a cylinder. The substance which is to be used as a marking material is placed in the cylinder while in a plastic condition, and sufficient pressure is then applied to force it into the hollow centres of the paper tubes. After the completion of the process the pencils are gradually dried at increasing temperatures during a period of six days, and they are then plunged into a vessel of molten paraffin wax, which has the effect of modifying the texture of paper pulp as described.—Manufactures and Industries.

Intellectual Women.

"I do believe those women,
Who for years and years and years,
Keep polishing their intellects,
To ornament their biers"— should again call the attention of their sex to the remedy especially provided for the correction of their physical ailments by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo. It is called "Favorite Prescription." Women of intellect for years and years and years have used it and pronounced it the best corrective of all "female weaknesses" that can be had anywhere. Ask your druggists for it. Full directions for using. Guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded.

No Camel-Drivers Wanted.

The law that prohibits the landing of certain kinds of undesirable immigrants at our ports is apt to work harshly at times in New York. For example, a few days ago two Arabs were found at Castle Garden, one of them named Ben Josef and the other Mohammed Ben Abdel Hirmir, who had come here to seek employment as camel-drivers. The penniless Arabs were in despair when told that we have no such industry as camel-driving in New York, and that they were unwelcome guests in the land of the star-spangled banner. The collector gave orders that they should be sent back across the ocean in the ship which brought them here. Surely this was hard upon the Arab camel-drivers.—New York Sun.

A Lesson in Grammar.

"I cough! He coughs! They cough!" And why need they cough! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure coughs colds, and all lung diseases.

Buy it and try it, there's virtue and worth

And more acute symptoms will cure.

A Safe Cordial.

The Rhode Island State Board of Health Bulletin says: No one who, fatigued by over-exertion of body and mind, has ever experienced the reviving influence of a tumbler of milk, heated as warm as it can be sipped, and with or without a teaspoonful of sugar, will willingly forego a resort to it. The promptness with which its cordial influence is felt is indeed surprising. Some portion of it seems to be digested and appropriated almost immediately, and many who now fancy they need alcoholic stimulants when exhausted by fatigue will find in this simple draught an equivalent that will be abundantly satisfying and far more enduring in its effects.

Merchants and others requiring display cards or other printing for the fairs should send in their orders to the ENTERPRISE now, and avoid the rush consequent upon the approach of fair week.

Considerable dissatisfaction is expressed by some citizens at the removal of the telegraph and express offices to the Leitch block, owing to the extra distance they will have to travel in order to get to it.

The workmen at the Dutton sewer have had poor luck with the job. It is said the contractor lost money in constructing the outlet and since they started putting in the tile on Main street they have made but slow progress owing to the earth caving in.

The remains of the young man who was killed at Glencoe last week have been identified as those of Wm. B. Jaynes, a former resident of London, but who had been working in Detroit lately and was on his way to visit his parents in London when killed.

The high school board has issued a circular urging the necessity upon pupils of commencing their studies in the school at as early a date as possible as classes are now being formed for the various examinations. An elaborate annual announcement will be issued shortly.

J. D. Henderson, of Bell & Campbell's office, St. Thomas, met with a bad accident while turning into the livery stable Tuesday. The horse shied just as it was entering the stable, running the buggy against the door and upsetting it. Mr. Henderson was thrown out and severely bruised, but received no serious injuries.

The 9 in our date has come to stay. No man or woman now living will ever date a document without using a 9. It now stands at the extreme right, 1889. Next year it will move up a peg—1890—and there it will stay for 10 years. It will then move up to the third place—1900—and rest there for 100 years.

The postoffice was removed on Tuesday to Leitch's drug store in the Leitch block, and is being put in a more convenient shape. The American express agency has been transferred from O. L. Soules to A. J. Leitch and has been removed, together with the telegraph office, to the same place. Miss Hyndman, of London, takes charge of the telegraph office.

While W. Hicks was digging a trench for a tile drain across Main street at the mill on Monday the earth caved in on him burying him up to the neck. He was promptly extricated from his uncomfortable position not much the worse. He had a narrow escape from being completely buried, however, as he had been stooping down in the trench just before the accident occurred.

Civic holiday was observed on Friday in Dutton. Most of the sporting class went to the races at Glencoe, while the others enjoyed the cooling breezes of Lake Erie at Port Stanley and Tyrconnel and report having had a pleasant day. In the evening the Foresters' band enlivened the town with several well played selections. The band is making excellent progress.

Dutton merchants are now receiving their fall stocks, but the only intimation some of them give to the public that they have such goods to sell is by blocking up the sidewalks with numberless packing boxes of all sizes and shapes, calling forth much profanity from unfortunate pedestrians who happen to run against them. Put your boxes away out of the road and advertise in the ENTERPRISE if you wish to do a good season's trade.

It was announced from the pulpit on Sunday morning that the last service would be held in St. Andrew's Church on Sunday next, after which the building is to be pulled down in order to use the brick for inside work on the new church. St. Andrew's Church is the oldest one in the village, having been erected about twenty-five years ago. After next Sunday, and until the new church is completed, service will be held in the Victoria Street Methodist Church.—Glencoe Transcript.

The corner stone of the new Prasbyterian church, Glencoe, will be laid by Rev. D. J. McDonnell, of Toronto, on Monday, Sept. 9. The ceremony will be performed at four o'clock in the afternoon, after which the ladies of the congregation will give a free lunch. In the evening an intellectual programme will be carried out, in which Hon. G. W. Ross, Dr. Reome, M. P., James Armstrong, M. P., Robert Ferguson, M. P. P., Robert Boston, warden of Middlesex, and other prominent gentlemen will take part.

The Elgin Model School opened at St. Thomas on Monday. Following is a list of the attendance.—Mary L. Potts, St. Thomas; Clara Moore, Tyrconnel; Jessie Rothwell, Dutton; Ethel Rothwell, Dutton; Annie Leverington, Sparta; Kitty Bray, Mapleton; Josie F. Wallace, Corinth; Abbie S. Morrow, New Sarum; Isabella Turner, West Magdala; Mary A. Nash, St. Thomas; Nina McPherson, St. Thomas; Hattie McNally, Aylmer; Jane Brighty, Aylmer; Edith Sanders, St. Thomas; Sara King, St. Thomas, Emma Kelly, St. Thomas; Clara McLean, Frome; Annie Lyons, Wallacetown; Emma Matheson, Union; Jennie Davidson, Union; Hincks Miller, Aylmer; Hector Long, Eagle; Arthur Voaden, Talbotville; Wm. Blewett, St. Thomas; Ervin Baker, Springfield; George Clay, Wallacetown; Walter Calk, Iona; Maude Wickett, Aylmer. Of these four hold 1st-class non-professional certificates; twelve hold 2nd-class and twelve 3rd-class. Thirteen were prepared at St. Thomas Collegiate Institute; 8 at Aylmer; 6 at Dutton, and 1 in the Eagle public school.

Dutton merchants get some queer customers once in a while. Last week a colt, evidently looking for the latest improvements for the benefit of horses which have been made in farming implements, walked into the shop of Sifton Bros. and showed a decided aversion to leaving; and a day or two ago a large steer coolly walked in at the back door of W. H. Nelson's jewelry store and out at the front, taking a good look at the various articles displayed in the show cases on the way. Having left his pocket-book at home, however, the animal did not make any purchases.

MOCCASIN TRACK HUNTING TOTEM OF HEALTH

An exchange gives the following recipe for making a good town: Grit, push, snap, vim, energy, churches, schools, colleges, morality, enterprise, harmony, advertising, cordiality, cheap property, healthy location, talk about it, help to improve it, advertise in and read your own town papers, patronize its merchants, faith exhibited by good works, honest competition in business, help all public enterprise, elect good men to office, speak well of its public spirited, enterprising citizens and be one of them yourself. Remember that every dollar invested in permanent improvements is that much on interest. Always cheer on the men who go in for improvements.

Frank Gardner was charged at the St. Thomas police court Monday on an information lodged by Chief Fewings, with peddling jewelry without a license and was committed to jail for 15 days in default of $10 fine. Gardner is believed to be the man who, with the half-witted Fred. Dorsman, robbed the stores of J. O. Lumley, of Iona, and J. C. Macdonald, of Duart, some months ago, and for whose arrest $100 reward is offered. He is accused of committing a robbery at Fargo and disposing of a portion of the tweed stolen to a Mr. Johnston, of Fargo. The tweed is now in the possession of Detective Heenan, who, with the chief, is working on the case.

The Dorchester Township thistle inspector is making things lively for some of those who are not attending to the cutting of the thistles. In some instances, says a correspondent, it is quite a hardship. A couple of farmers came before one of the most dignified J. P's in the country on Friday afternoon and were fined $5 and costs, amounting to $8.85 and $8.25 respectively. A widow, who had her thistles cut once during the season, and supposed everything was all right, was almost mulcted in one of the above named sums. Were the same authority exercised in other municipalities it would be to the advantage of the farmers and country generally.

Many are taking advantage of the special offers to new subscribers offered last week. This week we commence sending out sample copies, which will reach every resident of the township of Dunwich and Aldborough and part of Southwold and Orford. We wish to double our circulation during the next two months and want every one with a little spare time to canvass for subscriptions. Write for particulars. The ENTERPRISE, which has been enlarged and improved during the past year, will be made still more interesting to the reader, and will not take a second place to any local paper published in the Southern Counties. Subscribe at once and induce your friends to subscribe.

A meeting was held in Rodney Saturday afternoon for the dispatch of business in the Reform interest, and although the meeting in round numbers was not as large as might have been expected, yet the prominent electors were present, representing the township generally, Mr. Daniel Laing in the chair, and Mr. J. J. Stalker acting as secretary. The following were appointed chairmen of the several polling divisions: Polling sub-division 1, Arch. Campbell; 2, Dugald Shaw; 3, J. J. Mistele; 4, Arch. McColl; 5, Wm. Mowbray; 6, H. S. McColl; 7, Alex. McColl, jun.; 8, W. H. McLean; A. D. McGugan, secretary-treasurer. A meeting will be held in polling division No. 5, Eagle, on Saturday evening next, Sept. 7, to examine voters' list and other business.

The present drought should induce our citizens to make some provision for securing a sufficient supply of water for drinking and other purposes. A great many wells are now dry, and the water in others entirely unfit to drink. There is no reason why every one should not secure a supply of water sufficient for ordinary needs by simply sinking wells to a good depth; as for water for fire purposes, it does not seem to be worthy of thought by the villagers at all, there is so little said about it, but this could be obtained at a small cost by digging a few wells in the vicinity of the mills, where an abundance of water could be procured and by means of piping along Main street, with power supplied from the mill or a stationary engine and pump, the water could be used in case of fire at almost any part of the town.

THE BRAIN (from a photograph.)
In Healthy Condition. With Paresis Lesions.

There are many well known men confined in our Asylums who but a short time ago were prominent among our business and social circles.

Why are they there?

Paresis!

Did it come on at once?

Not at all. It was a gradual but positive growth. They overtaxed nature. The drain on their vitality, their nerve powers, their brain tissue, was too great, and they gradually but surely sank under it. The things they did to bring this sad end about are precisely the same things that are being done by thousands of men and women to-day. It is not necessary to name them. They all end disastrously unless checked or regulated.

Prof. Phelps, of Dartmouth College, knew this fully when he began his experiments which resulted in the discovery of the wonderful Paine's Celery Compound. He realized that paresis (consumption of the brain) was our great National weakness. He knew that the brain and nervous system must be fortified to meet the great strains which modern life bring upon it. He saw that men were becoming debilitated and women weakened by the pressure and demands of life, and he sought and discovered the remedy Paine's Celery Compound, if rightly taken, will renew the brain and build up nerve tissues as fast as they become exhausted. It is not a narcotic. It contains no drugs, no nostrums. It is perfectly pure. It is absolutely harmless. The high character of its discoverer guarantees this, and the indorsement of the medical and chemical professions prove it.

R. train when he slipped under the wheels, his left leg being severed below the knee joint. He was conveyed to his home where Drs. McLay and Welford amputated the leg above the knee joint. He is now doing well.

A sad case of poisoning occurred in Caledonia the other day, resulting in the death of Elizabeth Wallace, aged 9, the only daughter of Mr. John Wallace, who works on the G. T. R. Mrs. Wallace went to a neighbor's house to assist in housecleaning, and while there the child got hold of some cheese with strychnine on it, which had been placed in a cupboard for mice. She put it in her mouth, but did not eat it, and soon complained of feeling ill. Although everything was done to relieve her, she died within an hour.

I would like to tell the little people how to make something pretty. Take a bottle holding about three pints, of round shape, with a long neck, such as an old beer bottle; get mamma to give you one of her old stockings (cotton), cut off the foot and gather the leg closely and tie well; put your bottle in this, stretching it quite tight, and tie around the top of the bottle, or rather an inch from the top; now, with a stick, poke the rest of the leg inside the bottle. The stocking leg should be as long inside of the bottle as it is outside. Wet the outside and fill the bottle with water, roll it in timothy seed, taking care to have the seed adher evenly all round; hang in a warm, sunny place, and fill the bottle with soft water twice a day; wet the outside at the same time, but be careful not to wash the seeds out of their places, and in a few days your bottle will be covered with a beautiful green moss; but you must keep the stocking moist or the seed will not grow.

RUSSIAN EMANCIPATION.

It Is a Failure After Twenty-five Years' Trial.

After a trial of a quarter of a century the emancipation act is now acknowledged to have utterly failed. The reports of Russian officials, of statistical professors at Moscow, such as Jansen and the Nihilists, with Stepniak at their head, all alike agree that the misery of the rural class is greater than even in the days of serfdom; cultivation is at the lowest ebb, the yield wretched, and less than in any other European country.

Each peasant must plough, sow, and reap as his neighbors do. The three field system of corn, green crops, and fallow, which was abandoned in all good agriculture long ago, goes on with disastrous results. As the lots are changed by the mir at their pleasure after every year, the temporary owner does not care to manure, &c., or in any way to improve his land. Although the rent is sometimes as low as two shillings an acre the peasant cannot live.

Agriculture is a business requiring a capital, knowledge, and a sufficient amount of land to enable different crops to be grown, so that if one fails it does not mean starvation, for another may succeed. The Russian peasant proprietors can neither pay the money owing to the Government for their land nor even the State and communal taxes and are flogged by hundreds for non-payment.

In one district of Novgorod 1 500 peasants were thus condemned in 1887. Five hundred and fifty had already been flogged, when the inspector interceded for the remainder.

Widespread famine is found over a great part of the country. Usurers, the bane of peasant proprietors in all countries, are in possession of the situation. The Koulaks and Jew "mir eaters' supply money on mortgage, then foreclose, and, when the land is in their own possession, get the work done for nothing as interest.

These "bondage laborers," as they are called, are, in fact, slaves, and are nearly starved, while the small plots are often reunited into considerable estates, and their new owners consider they have only rights and no duties.

Meantime, as forced labor is at an end and free labor is of the worst possible kind, the old land owners can get nothing done. They have tried to employ machines, bought by borrowing from the banks, and are now unable to repay the money.

The upper class has been ruined, with no advantage to the peasant. "The wasteful culture of the cotter," as Stepniak calls it, "on these small plots is so bad that the general welfare of the country," says Prof. Jansen, "is in danger by the small yield of the soil." In spite of the philanthropic intentions of the Czar, he is believed to have aimed at diminishing the power of the nobles as much as improving the condition of the peasants. He succeeded. The nobles in many districts are ruined, and there is nothing between the unlimited power of the autocrat and his 90,000,000 subjects, five-sixths of whom are peasants.

WIT AND WISDOM.

"I'll have yez to undhersthand that Oi have the lah on my side," said a Swampoodle citizen during a quarrel with a neighbor. "And, if ye have, ye can kape it; it's meself that knows the po lice on this bate."

"Clara, dear, I want to show you my new engagement ring before you go." "It's very pretty, but remember the stone is loose." "Why, how do you know that?" "Didn't Mr. Rigsby tell you I wore it for a month or two?"

Houlihan—"Phwat's the matter, Teddy—surely you're not goin' back to Oireland?" Rourke—"Bedad, Oi am! I thought this was a free counthry, but the descindants av thim bloody English seem to have as much to say here as anyone else!"

So Sudden.—They were climbing up the mountain side, and coming to a steep place he deemed it proper to assist her, and turning said: "Please give me your hand." "Oh!" she replied with a blush, "this is so sudden. You must ask papa."

Editor—I'm sorry, Squaggs, but you'll have to go. Foreman—I'd like to know what I've done. Editor—Well, I wrote about that gallant old war-horse, Col. Bilger, and you set it up that gallous old saw-horse. It's your place or my life, and I want to live.

Cholly—"Aw, I've a gweat scheme, don't you know, to pwevent twousers fwom bagging at the knees." Gussie—"Ah, tell a fellah, won't you? I'll tweat if you do." (After the treat.) Gussie—"Now, my deah boy, how does it work?" Cholly—"Take them off when you sit down."

First Old Lady—Conductor, raise this window; I shall smother to death! Second ditto—Conductor, lower this window, or I'll freeze to death! First O. L again—Conductor, will you raise— Irate passenger (interrupt)—Conductor, hoist that window and freeze one of those old women to death; then lower it and smother the other one! silence in the car.

Mrs. Briske—"Johnny, did the doctor call while I was out?" Little Johnny (stopping his play)—"Yes'm. He felt my pulse an' looked at my tongue, and shook his head and said it was a very serious case, and he left this prescription and said he'd call again before night." Mrs. Briske—"Gracious me? It wasn't you I sent him to see; it was the baby."

Have You a Mother?

Have you a mother? If so, honor and love her. If she is aged, do all in your power to cheer her declining years. Her hair may have bleached, her eyes may have dimmed, her brow may contain deep and unsightly furrows, her cheeks may be sunken; but you should never forget the holy love and tender care she has had for you. In years gone by she has kissed away from your cheek the troubled tear; she has soothed and petted you when all else appeared against you; she has watched over and nursed you with a tender care known only to a mother; she has sympathized with you in adversity; she has been proud of your success. You may be despised by all around you, yet that loving mother stands as an apologist for all your shortcomings. With all that disinterested affection, would it not be ungrateful in you if in her declining years you failed to reciprocate her love and honor her as your best, tried friend? We have no respect for a man or woman who neglects an aged mother. If you have a mother, love her, and do all in your power to make her happy.

THE ETERNAL CITY.

Modern Improvements Obliterating Many Characteristic Features.

Since 1870 the aspect of Rome has considerably changed. The old narrow winding streets are a thing of the past, and are replaced by large, wide thoroughfares. Blocks of the old house have been knocked down and large modern palazzi have sprung up in their stead. The narrow Corso of old times will soon be no more, as it is gradually being widened by half again its original width. The charming Villa Ludovisi, with its beautiful trees, shady walks, and sparkling fountains, has been turned into a new quarter, with wide streets and large houses. The gate of Porta Pia, where the breach was made in 1870, and outside of which there was nothing but vineyards and fields, will soon, instead of being the limit of the town, be in the center, because houses are springing up now to a good two miles outside that gate. The waste ground and fields all round St. John Latern are no more, a new suburb having sprung up there.

The Tiber also is being widened and an embankment is being built on each side, and handsome new bridges cross the river at different points. The widening of the Tiber is necessitating a slight change in one or two of the old monuments, such as the Bridge of St. Angelo, to which will have to be added another arch; and the Temple of Vesta runs some risks of being tampered with; but it is hoped that, as just at that point the river curves, by doing so makes it sufficiently easy for the width to be effected on the opposite side, that advantage will be taken.

What Thing Have Ye That Wake?

What thing have ye that wake for us that dream?
What hour that is more fair than hours that seem?
What pleasure that shall vanish not in pain?
What bliss to come that shall not pass again?

In dreamland ways lie all things fain and fair;
There music lulls the sorrowing heart of care;
There she, whom love may name not, silent stands,
With eyes unwondering and imploring hands.

The touch of lips that here shall never meet;
The strange, fair blossoms flowering at our feet;
Voices, well loved, that stir the heart to tears
With thought of old and unreturning years.

There, song so sad in triumph that we weep
That its whole joy shall pass; there, perfect sheep,
Long rest laid heavily on aching eyes,
That weary of the sunset and sunrise.

What thing have ye that wake for us that dream?
Long life and little laughter. Ye that deem
The crown of life sad wisdom and despair.
We know this only, that our dreams are fair.

HERBERT BATES.

She Meant the Other Mr. Jones.

He had never seen a telephone—you can see how old the story is. He had never seen a telephone, and his friend was showing him how it worked. It was in his office. He called up his house and his wife came to the telephone.

"My dear, Mr. Jones is here, and I have asked him to come up to dinner."

Then he turned to Mr. Jones and said:—"Put your ear to that and you'll hear her answer."

He did, and this was the answer:—"Now, John, I told you I would never have that disagreeable wretch in my house again."

"What was that?" spoke out Mr. Jones. Women are quick. A man would have simply backed away from the telephone, and said no more. She took in the situation in a second when she heard the strange voice nd quick as a flash came back the sweetest kind of a voice:—

"Why, Mr. Jones, how do you do? I thought my husband meant another Mr. Jones. Do come up to dinner. I shall be so glad to see you."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Quail.

In those wonderful days when the Spring is new,
And the grass grows tender and sweet,
When bright in the sunshine and bright in the dew
Waves the delicate green of the wheat,
When the blades of the corn rustle soft in the breeze,
Ere the first small ear is set,
With an eye to the future, their needs the quail sees,
And bravely he calls for more wet,
"More wet! More wet! More wet!"
The wise quail calls, "More wet!"

When beautiful Summer in golden array
Steals over the meadow and plain,
And turns the green grasses to sere brown and gray,
And gilds all the tall, bending grain,
But touches with bronze just the tips of the corn,
And the full ear does not forget,
The quail sees the need of a harvest some morn.
And calls to the farmer, "Mower, whet!"
"Mower, whet! Mower, whet! Mower, whet!"
The wise quail calls, "Mower, whet!"

When glorious Autumn with Summer joins hand,
He finds the fair meadow all shorn,
And of all the bright host that once camped on the land,
Stands only the rusty, brown corn;
But he hears the birds tell of some wonderful deeds,
And of, oh, such a bountiful treat!
For the wise old quail kept watch of their needs
And called them to gather more wheat!
"More wheat! More wheat! More wheat!"
The wise quail called, "More wheat!"

A Mad Dog.

HAMILTON, Sept. 12th.—Pedestrians on King street were startled the other morning by the appearance of a dog apparently suffering from hydrophobia. The brute was followed as it ran by an ever increasing mob, which, however, wheeled to the right-about when the dog turned suddenly and charged in an opposite direction to that in which it had at first been going. P. C. Ford arrived on the scene just when the panic was at its height, and drawing his revolver put an end to the dog's sufferings by shooting it through the brain.

WONDERFUL ALUMINUM.

The Metal of Which Every Claybank Is a Mine.

Aluminum, the metal of the future, of which so much has been said in the past few days, was discovered by Prof. Wohler in 1828. While seeking to settle in his own mind the question as to what were the component parts of common clays, and while fusing a mass of the yellow mud at a white heat under the blow pipe, he accidentally obtained a single minute globule or bead of what was to him, and the rest of the scientific world at that time, a new metal. Subsequently, by various chemical tests, he proved the drop to be the precious aluminum. He surely did not consider his discovery of grave importance, otherwise he would have given it more attention than he did; as it was, it appears that he did not experiment with the aluminum idea in view again for something like eighteen years. In 1846 he rediscovered it in a mixture of chloride of aluminum and common salt. This time the metal was obtained in quantities sufficient for more extensive examination. It was found to be a white metal between the color of zinc and silver, but with a more blueish tinge than that found in the last named metal.

Its specific gravity is from 2.5 to 2 67 according to purity, that of the average grade being about 2½ times heavier than water. It is four times as light as silver; in other words, a coin the size of a silver dollar made of aluminum would weigh about the same as a 20-cent piece in silver. It has great rigidity and tenacity; is nearly as hard as iron, but can be wrought into wire as fine as spider webs after being thoroughly annealed.

By being subjected to the goldbeater's art, a piece of aluminum the size of a dime may be beaten into a sheet several feet square, so great is its tenacity. Only two metals known can be rolled into a sheet as thin as it can, and they are gold and silver. When it does at last come into general use, and the advent of that era will not be retarded much by the man whose death furnishes the text for this article, it will be used for everything and put to every purpose to which iron, steel and wood are now put. Its adaptability to shipbuilding is very apparent.

Great steamships, the size of the largest Cunard's with the same tonnage and the same number of exposed linear feet, if constructed of aluminum from keel to the top of the masts, instead of drawing from 18 to 26 feet, would not draw more than four or five. In the days of the future aluminites deep water conventions will be useless assemblages.

It holds the polish the best of any metal known, there being but few elements that will cause it to tarnish or turn black. Rust, too, is a quality unknown to this wonderful white metal. Boiling water will not affect its lustre, which is retained for an indefinite period in any atmosphere. It will withstand a far greater number of acids than gold or silver will. Strong nitric acid ravenously attacks silver, but has no effect whatever upon aluminum. Gold or platinum will be ruined if plunged into a bath of sulphuret of potassium or melted nitre; aluminum comes out bright and shiny as if from a bath of pure cold water.

One of Gladstone's Reminiscences.

One of Mr. Gladstone's conversational advantages is that he has known every celebrated person for fifty years, and has endless reminiscences of all of them. On one occasion at a dinner party somebody was illustrating the Duke of Cambridge's remarkable command of damnatory rhetoric. The Duke has a fierce temper, and at a review one day he made a forcible observation about a certain officer's eyes. The officer promptly requested him to confine his objurgation to his own eyes. "Yes," said Mr. Gladstone, "but the Duke of Cambridge is mild compared with his uncles. I remember the old Duke of Cumberland, who was famous for his habit of garnishing other people's remarks with his own oaths. When the first bill for the abolition of Church rates came before the House of Lords, the Duke was asked to express to the Archbishop of Canterbury the wish of the majority that he should move its rejection. Off went the Duke with this commission. Presently he returned, and in a loud voice, for he was rather deaf, exclaimed:—"The Archbishop says he will be devoted to everlasting fire if he does not work the rejection of the bill." It need scarcely be said that the language which his Grace Cumberland professed to quote from his Grace of Canterbury has been somewhat softened.

A New Political Catechism.

Teacher—"We will now hear the first class in politics. What are politics?" Pupil—"Politics is the science of seeming to help another to get there, and getting there yourself." "What is an office?" "The one thing needful." "How can an office be secured?" "By putting yourself in the hands of your friends." "What do you understand this to mean?" "Make the office your friend, and keep your hand on the office." "Should a man seek office?" "Not if he doesn't want it." "What is a legislature?" "A place where the corporations purchase their privileges." "Is this the only business transacted by a legislature?" "Oh, no; the members go there to get re-elected." "Explain the protective tariff?" "It is a compact under which the people agree to starve rather than eat the fruit that hangs over the wall between themselves and their neighbour's garden, in order that Farmer Jones down at the Corners may get a big price for his apples." "What is patronage?" "The cornerstone of government. It is the stone that is given to those who ask for bread." "What is an election?" It is the people's 'amen' to the prayer formulated by the bosses."—Boston Transcript.

An Expensive Hanging.

A man named Neel has been sentenced to death for murder at St. Pierre, Miquelon, a small French possession off Newfoundland, and President Carnot having refused to interfere he is awaiting his execution. Such a crime having been unheard of in the colony no provision had been made for capital punishment. After much delay a guillotine was improvised out of an axe and a window sash, no other instrument being legal, but when this was done, nobody could be found to volunteer as executioner. At the Governor's request the French Minister of Justice has sent the Algiers executioner to perform the gruesome business. His trip across the Mediterranean, France and the Atlantic, and his incidental expenses are to be paid by the colony, which has a population of not quite 6,000 people. It is estimated that the total cost of the executi will be close upon a thousand dollars, nearly seventeen cents per head of the population. A pretty expensive hanging that looks very much like the mountain coming to Mahomet, instead of vice versa. A cheaper and quite as satisfactory a method of carrying out the law would have been to have sent the murderer to France.

PERSONALS.

Constantine, heir to the Greek throne, is in his twenty-second year. He is a very handsome young man and has a most fascinating manner. He is extremely fond of military matters, but has devoted a great deal of time to the study of literature. He can read and speak English, French, German, Russian and Danish. His mind is very active and he is more of a thinker than appearances would indicate. His habits are rather better than those of the majority of young men who hold anything approaching his rank in Europe.

The Emperor of Russia has not only dismissed his brother, the jovial Grand Duke Alexis, from his office of Lord High Admiral of the Russian Fleet, but he has exiled him to Siberia, where he is to remain for an indefinite period. This catastrophe has been brought about by the scandal which arose from the friendship that existed between the Grand Duke and the second wife of his cousin, Prince Eugene de Leuchtenberg, who, by the way, is the sister of the late General Skobeloff. The lady has been ordered to quit Russia, and her complaisant husband, Prince Eugene, has been sent on a cruise round the world in a Russian man-of-war.

Germany and Austria.

Germany and Austria are drawing closer together. If the report be true that the representatives of the two countries have agreed to a modification of the Austro-German treaty, which provides that joint action shall be taken when the vital interests of either nation are threatened, there is not much left for the separate Governments to do except for each Government to take charge of local interests. So long as an open attack upon one was the only course for joint action, either Government might refuse to move until the territory of the other was invaded. But "vital interests" may be threatened from a distance and in a hundred ways. The concentration of troops by Russia in any particular locality might be held to be a threat upon the vital interests of the nation more directly exposed. Bismarck is certainly leaving nothing undone the doing of which will make the German Empire secure. The danger is that Europe will be divided off into two camps—German and anti German, with a show of strength so nearly equal that battle will be the only test of superiority. But with England and Italy acting with Austria and Germany it would go hard with that strange combination of autocracy and democracy—the Russo-French alliance.

The Queen's English.

According to an Eastern exchange the English language is threatened with another new word of barbarous coinage—the word "elixired"—to describe in the past tense the operation of administering the Brown-Sequard elixir. Go ahead, gentlemen. Fill the vocabulary with slangy abominations. If a man kills himself he suicides. If he has gone somewhere and remained over Sunday he has Sundayed away from home. It will not hurt him any worse, nor add to his general domoralization, to be elixired also. The English language has no rights nowadays that anybody is bound to respect. Let the word-butchers keep on.—[Chicago Tribune.

A Sea Voyage for the Queen.

The London correspondent of the Manchester "Courier" writes: "I hear that there is every reason to believe that the Queen will go on a long sea trip before long, her Majesty having more than once been urged by her physicians to do so for the benefit of her health. America has been suggested as her destination, but I think it far more probable that she will go to India, and make a short tour of her Eastern dominions. So far, however, nothing is settled. The scheme is simply under consideration, but since the Queen herself has taken kindly to it, it is pretty certain she will try the effects of a sea voyage."

So many rogues are indicted now that there are hardly any left to go bail.

German Opinion of Britain.

Those who had already half erased the name of England from the roll of the great Powers now find that they have been reckoning without their host. The Anglo-Saxon energy and toughness have often prepared pleasant surprises for those who were disposed to treat them with contempt. If the English Government will now favor a rapprochement to Germany and her allies with greater decision, and if, by the development of its incomparable fleet, it gives a warning to both friends and foes alike that the English people must be reckoned with in fair weather and in foul, England's position as a world power will be secured more firmly than ever.—[Berlin National Zeitung.

His Conspicuous Ability.

A storekeeper was boasting in the presence of a customer "that he could secure a quarter of a pound of tea in a smaller piece of paper than any other man in the country." "Yes," said Zedekiah Dryasdust, who chanced to hear the remark, "and you'll put a pint of rum in a smaller bottle than any other man that I ever see, anyway."

Liver and Lights.

Two gentlemen walking along the streets, observed some workmen taking the windows from a house which they were about pulling down and which the tenant had left the day before. "What tearing work," said one, "they are making with that house!"

"Yes," said the other, "yesterday the liver went out and now they are taking out the lights."

The generally accepted theory that a warm summer follows a cold winter, and vice versa, has been examined by Science with the aid of temperature records made in the same place, under the same conditions, twice a day for forty years. Science cannot find any rule on the subject, and comes to the conclusion that no estimate can be formed in regard to the character of a coming season merely by knowing the character of the past season of any greater value than could be gained by mere guessing.

A Judge of the United States Supreme Court is slapped in the face by a desperado, who is immediately shot by a Deputy Marshal of the United States. The Judge, who has taken no part in the affair whatever, is accused by the desperado's wife of murder, is arrested on a warrant issued by an obscure Californian Justice of the Peace and is now out on bail. This queer chapter of incidents is the result, not of peculiar American laws, but of peculiar American manners. In theory the same things might happen to an English Judge, but they never will.

The idea of making Queen Victoria a Colonel of German Dragoons has struck a good many people as rather odd; but it is said that female officers were quite common in the British army about a hundred and fifty years ago. At that time, it is said, persons who had a pull on the Government were in the habit of christening their daughters by masculine names, getting them commissions in the army, and drawing the pay for the service which the girls did not perform. Colonel Victoria, of course, does not draw pay, but is content with the military glory which goes with the title.

The skippers and water-wise men on the upper lakes are said to have been afforded reason lately for reviving an old belief that Lake Superior has a tide. The Sault Ste. Marie News describes a somewhat unusual movement of the water at the canal there: "The water, all of a sudden, began to lower, and one could almost see it go down until it was fully three feet below its usual stage. Almost at once it began to rise, and kept going up until it reached a point a foot higher than the normal depth. And so it fluctuated more or less all day, causing no end of trouble to boats, and giving rise to the usual speculation on the part of wise people. The rapids were a sight when the water lowered. The shoal places were high and dry, and the jagged rocks that lie in wait for the Indian canoe unmasked, so that their true shapes were learned." Scientists have a fair chance of airing their knowledge on the question, but meanwhile that comet, Encke, of Professor Wiggins', reported to be keeping unpleasantly close to our earth, may have something to do with it. Encke should be warned.

Has France Anything to Avenge ?

In a remarkable article contributed to the last number of the 'Nineteenth Century' Prof Greffcken argues that France has no reason to complain of the terms exacted by Germany after the last war. On the contrary, although he professes to think that the accounts of the two countries were settled by the peace of Frankfort, he evidently feels that the cession of Alsace-Lorraine and the payment of a billion dollars constitute but meagre compensation for the losses territorial and pecuniary sustained by Germans at the hands of Frenchmen during the last 350 years.

It is well to keep separate the questions as to the reasonableness of the money indemnity required by Bismarck on the one hand, and the restitution of territory no less imperatively demanded on the other. We would not deny that France in 1871 was better able to pay one billion dollars than she was at the close of the Napoleonic wars to pay two hundred millions. Nor can it be disputed that a billion of dollars seems but a moderate sum to take from an opulent nation numbering nearly forty millions, compared with the $226,000,000 which between 1806 and 1813 Napoleon squeezed from Prussia, although he had reduced her population to 4 600,000, and her annual revenue to $9,000,000. The crushing effect of an exaction can be accurately measured by the degree of elasticity exhibited after the removal of the strain. It took Prussia thirty years to recover from the prostration caused by her conflict with Napoleon, whereas three years after the peace of Frankfort France was more prosperous than ever.

The extortion of Alsace and a section of Lorraine is not so easily justified. It is true enough, as Prof. Geffcken says, that ever since the time of Francis I, France has interfered in the affairs of Germany. He forgets to add that in the majority o instances the interference was solicted or applauded by Germans. Up to the peace of Westphalia in 1648 French armies fought on German soil in defence of German liberties; and without their aid the Protestant princes, including the Elector of Brandenburg, could never have sustained themselves against the Catholic might of Austria. The interpositions of Louis XIV. and Louis XV. are less excusable, but even for them it may be said that they never lacked Germans allies. Nor should it be forgotten, as regards territorial acquisitions, that both in the three Bishoprics of Metz, Toul, and Verdun (obtained in the middle of sixteenth century), and in the Duchy of Lorraine (not finally annexed until the middle of the eighteenth), French was the language of the people. Only in the case of Strasburg and of Upper and Lower Alsace (incorporated with France not summarily, but gadually during the seventeenth century) was the principle of nationality distinctly violated. And even Strasburg and Alsace have during the last two centuries become thoroughly and passionately French.

Here we touch the essence of the crime involved in Bismarck's seizure of Alsac Lorraine. It was a sin against the enlightened conscience of the nineteenth century, a transgression of the principle of nationalities, a refusal to recognize the right of peoples to decide for themselves with what nation they desire to be incorporated. Not what a Bourbon despot did two hundred years ago, but what the political morality of our own day sactions, is the question to be answered by the ravishers of Alsace Lorrain. Do the Alsace-Lorrainers wish to be Germans or Frenchmen ? How would they reply to that inquiry if it were put to them at the ballot box ? That is the fundamental, crucial query which Prof. Geffcken shirks. No one, indeed, knows better than he that the German empire cannot afford to recognize the principle of nationalities, invoked in vain by the Poles of Posen and by the Danes of Sleswick.

The elephant has more muscles in its trunk than any other creature possesses in its entire body, their number being, according to Cuvier, no less than 40 000 ; while the whole of a man's muscles only number 527. The proboscis or trunk of the elephant, which contains this vast quantity of small muscles, variously interlaced, is extremely flexible, endowed with the most exquisite sensibility and the utmost diversity of motion.

One of the penalties which Great Britain pays for her long coast line is the immense loss of life and property along the coast in spite of the number of lighthouses provided for ships and the excellent lifeboat system. For the year ending June, 1887, the latest official figures give 4,224 casualties to vessels around British coasts and 645 lives were lost. The figures show an increase over the preceding period. The most dangerous coasts are the east coast of Ireland and the west of Scotland and England.

ANNUAL HOLIDAY Bible Competition.

$21,000.00 IN CASH

And Other Rewards to be Given Away.

An Extended Review of the New Bible Competition of the "Ladies' Journal"

No. 24.

For over five years past a series of Bible Competitions have been in progress in Toronto, Canada, which have created great and widespread interest. Many of the leading men and women of Canada, in fact of the world, have taken part, as well as thousands of others in all grades and conditions of life. Rewards to the value of half a millon dollars have been distributed to the successful.

More than two hundred and fifty thousand persons have received prizes since the inauguration of this system, ranging from a fine brick house and lot to one thousand dollars in cash, as well as magnificent pianos, organs, silver tea sets, gold and silver watches, guns, silk dresses, books, &c. Over thirty-five thousand people have voluntarily testified to the value of the rewards received, and to the fairness with which the prizes have been distributed, The Editor of THE LADIES' JOURNAL has conducted twenty-three similar enterprises and can't afford now to fail to keep his promises. He announced, recently, that no more competitions would be offered, but owing to the clamorous appeals of thousands of his subscribers and prize winners, he is really compelled to go on. This competition will be open to the end of November, closing with the last day of that month, but those of our readers who wish to take advantage of these most magnificent offers should do so now.

Fifteen days will be allowed for letters to reach LADIES' JOURNAL from distant points, and whenever they are mailed, if they bear the postmark of the 30th Nov., or earlier, they will be eligible to compete.

Do not forget that each person competing must send one dollar for a year's subscription to LADIES JOURNAL, a sixteen page family monthly, which alone is worth the subscription price asked. Any person can compete any number of times and the paper will be sent to any desired address.

Immediately at the close of the competition, the names and addresses of the winners will be published in the LADIES' JOURNAL —The December issue—so there will be no waiting.

Don't delay sending in. Do it now. If you are not in time for the first rewards you may be for the middle, and if not for the middle you will be in time for the consolation. If you delay all the prizes may be taken up, but if your answer is correct and your letter reaches LADIES' JOURNAL office in time, you will certainly get something, as there are over 2000 prizes offered, and the sooner you answer, the more certain you will be of success.

ALL THESE PRIZES WILL BE GIVEN SURE, but don't run away with the idea that everybody who competes is sure to get a prize. Every prize offered will be given, of that you may be absolutely certain, but remember, first come first served in each of the divisions, so hurry in your answers.

HOW TO SEND MONEY.

By registered letter is the best, Post-office order is almost equally efficient, American one dollar bills are taken at par. Don't send stamps of any kind, unless you add six cents extra for the discount. Address, Editor LADIES' JOURNAL, Toronto, Canada.

We have only space to give the following four testimonials from thousands, from college and university professors, clergymen of all denominations, school teachers members of parliament, mayors of cities, a Lieutenant-Governor, down to boys and girls of all ages, and people of all grades and conditions in life :

Dear Sir,—The Piano arrived all right yesterday, and appears to be a very good instrument Will you please except my best thanks for such a handsome prize. It seems to be quite a wonder among the Londoners, so many have said to me that saw your competitions, but did not believe any one ever got the handsome presents, that they were all a hoax. I invite everyone to come and see my piano, they will then see for themselves. It is a reality. Many intend to try if they can be as fortunate as I have been. I have always had great faith in your promises and now I will have more than ever since winning such a handsome prize. for which I again thank you. Yours truly, C. W. NELLES. I hope to continue well doing. London South, 22nd Feb., 1889.

The Piano won by my son Benson in Bible Competition No. 6, and which came to us a year ago, proves to be in every respect a superior instrument. The tuner, a Toronto gentlemen. says its tune and finish are complete. A large number of people during the year have called at the manse and examined and tried and are surprised at its excellence F. SMITH, Pastor of St. Andrews Presbyterian Church, Markham, Ont.

Geo. Black, No. 41 East Ave. St., Hamilton, Ont., expresses himself as greatly pleased with the Piano he won in a recent Competition.

Our citizens have been very successful in THE LADIES' JOURNAL Bible Competitions. Several have received valuable gold and silver watches, handsome silver cake baskets, gold rings and brooches, books etc. Among the number are the following :—

Mrs. A. L. Vanstone, Organ, 10 stops $250; M. Mozetta James, Silver Tea Service, $100 ; Mrs. John VanNest, W. J. Heard, Fred Bray, Amanda Bond. Thos. Sheridan, each a Ladies' Gold Watch, $90 ; Mrs. W. R. Bond, Mrs. Thos. Sheridan, Minnie Werry, Mrs. Wm. McKowan, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. J. H. James, Mrs. Wm. Jewell, Mrs. M. Deyman, W. W. Tamblyn, M.A., each a Silver Watch, $30. Total $1,000.—Bowmanville Statesman.

A Great Cry for More Women has been going up from the far west for a good many years. But the cry is not for pale, haggard, debilitated women. The pushing western men are not anxious for beauty, but they need healthy wives. A great cry for health is continually going up from thousands of women, young and old, all over the earth. Countless remedies have appeared in answer. A few have succeeded, and none hold a higher place than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a sure cure for all those peculiar "weaknesses" and distressing ailments peculiar to the sex.

Names exclusively for the fair sex constitute a nomenclature.

When everything else fails, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.

Get well and stay well. But how shall we do it ?

Listen my friend, and the secret I'll tell,
Though, for that matter, there's no secret to it,
As many a man understands very well.
If you're low-spirited, gloomy, depressed,
If nothing tastes good and your nights bring no rest,
If your stomach is foul and your mouth seems much fouler,
And so cross you become that they call you a "growler,"
Be sure that the trouble is due to your liver,
And the blood is as sluggish as sometimes a river
Becomes when it's filled with all manner of stuff.
Clear it out and the current runs smoothly enough.

Go to the drug store and get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the great blood purifier and liver invigorator. It is a sure cure for the low spirits and general depression a man feels when his liver is inactive and his blood impure. This remedy makes a man well.

The newest occupation for woman is said to be that of superintendent of weddings. The superintendent, who is usually a youngish woman, is installed in the house of the bride to be some little time before the ceremony. She selects the trousseau, advises what is latest and finest in underwear, buys the material and designs, and makes or superintends the making of the gowns, knows all about stockings, boots, gloves, laces and handkerchiefs, sees to the millinery and jackets and wraps, tells the bride's mother and sisters what to wear, dictates to the bridesmaids, thinks of everything, and lets the engaged couple enjoy themselves with unanxious minds.

BRONCHITIS CURED.

After spending Ten Winters South, was Cured by Scott's Emulsion.

145 Centre St., New York, June 25th, 1888.

The Winter after the great fire in Chicago I contracted Bronchial affections, and since then have been obliged to spend nearly every Winter South. Last November was advised to try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites and to my surprise was relieved at once, and by continuing its use three months was entirely cured, gained flesh and strength and was able to stand even the Blizzard and attend to business every day. Some Thoughts of Childhood.

Childhood is the glad springtime of life. It is then that the seeds of future greatness or startling mediocrity are sown.

If a boy has marked out a glowing future as an intellectual giant, it is during these early years of his growth that he gets some pine knots to burn in the evening, whereby he can read Herbert Spencer and the Greek grammar, so that when he is in good society that he can say somethat nobody can understand. This gives him an air of greatness with those he comes in contact with, and makes them respectful and unhappy while in his presence.

Boys who intend to be railroad men should begin to look about them for some desirable method of expunging two or three fingers and a thumb. Trying to pick a card out of a job press when it is in motion is a good way. Most job presses feel gloomy and unhappy until they have eaten the fingers of two or three boys. Then they go on with their work cheerfully and even hilariously.

Boys who intend to live irreproachable lives and be foremost in every good word and work should take unusual precautions to secure perfect health and longevity. Good boys never know when they are safe. Statistics show that the ratio of good boys who die, compared to bad ones, is appalling.

Thera are only thirty-nine good boys left as we go to press, and they are not feeling very well either.

The bad ones are all alive and active.

The boy who stole my coal shovel last spring and went out into the grave-yard and dug into a grave to find Easter eggs is the picture of health.

When I was a child I was different from other boys in many respects. I was always looking about to see what good I could do. I am that way yet.

If my little brother wanted to go in swimming contrary to orders I was not strong enough to keep him out so I would go in with him and save him from a watery grave. I went in thousands of times that way and as a result he is alive to day.

But he is ungrateful. He hardly ever mentions it, but he remembers the gordian knots that I tied in his shirts. He speaks of them frequently. This shows this ingratitude of the human heart.

Ah, what recompense have wealth and position for unalloyed joys of childhood and how gladly to-day as I sit in the midst of my oriental splendor and costly magnificence and thoughtfully run my fingers through my infrequent bangs, would I give it all, wealth, position and fame for one balmy, breezy day when I stood knee-deep in the luke-warm pool near my surburban home in the quiet dell, and meek-eyed polly-wogs to squirt up between my dimpled toes.—Bill Nye.

In this climate there are usually a few nights of sharp frost, which destroy the tender plants, and after these, follow several weeks of the most perfect weather, in which such plants as survive the early frosts bloom in the greatest luxuriance. By protecting beds or single plants from these first frosts, the enjoyment of the garden may be greatly prolonged. The protection required is very slight. Newspapers will answer, as will common cotton cloth, sheets or any such fabric. On one occasion having on hand a lot of the Southern cane Arundinaria which were too short for fishing-rods, and were sold for a low price, we used them for frames. These were put together, fastening where they crossed with small copper wires to make hexagons or octagons for beds; others fastened together near the top and spread below to form tent frames, made very light frames. Those to cover beds were held above the plants by forked stakes of suitable height, and all were covered with newspapers, fastened on by pins. It took but a short time to make these shields, and not a flower was injured. On one occasion on being obliged to meet a sudden emergency with some plants, the hardiness of which we were uncertain, brush, the tops of roadside bushes, were stuck in the soil of the bed, and salt hay scattered loosely over them. The branching brush seemed to bear the weight of the hay.

S' iad ag ol do'n abhainn tha aluinn,
Si ruidh air straidaibh na cathairach.

The number of "fashionable weddings" chronicled and commented on by the newspapers seems steadily on the increase. Of course the record is generally made by the parties themselves or by some fool-friend of the family. The whole thing as a rule, is in abominably bad taste and is for the most part affected by the nouveaux riches or by ambition nobodies who would wish to be proclaimed to the would as rather important personages. Timothy McSausage, Esq., led to the altar the witching, winsom daughter of Reginald Poole V. Rag-bag, Esq., of the romantic Castle of Cloots. Presents many and costly. The happy pair, etc., etc. Is it not time that sensible people were leaving such vulgar tomfoolery alone?—Ex.

A Profitable Crop.

In the localities where it succeeds no crop pays better than clover seed. It is the second crop on the same land, and whatever it produces is so much clear gain. The preceeding crop of hay or pasture is presumed to pay interest on rent of the land and something besides. The best clover seed, as we used to grow it, was made by closely pasturing the field with sheep. These would eat down the clover and all weeds or grass, and their droppings on the surface undoubtedly helped enrich the soil. There was, perhaps, another reason for the superiority of pasture fed clover seed over that cut for hay, in the fact that sheep ate closer to the ground than any mower could mow, We have often noted the fact that lodged clover, where the mowing machine passed over it without cutting closely, grew a poor yield of seed afterward. Yet if the clover had been closely pastured this richest soil would probably have produced much the best seed.

It is an excellent plan after pasturing down a mowing clover to sow on it a liberal top-dressing of gypsum or land plaster. There's little danger that the second growth will be too rank, and the extra amount of moisture which the gypsum will draw to the clover plants will be most favorable to the development of seed, mainly by helping to counteract the extreme heat which often shortens the clover growth in August. The yield of clover seed varies largely. Sometimes it does not fill well from large growth, and occasionally, though rarely, a small growth of straw will surprise the farmer by its product of seed. We believe that when extreme heat occurs at the time of blossoming the seed is blasted.

Although the seed crop is sometimes lost, the second growth of clover is still a profitable crop. If it is found that the seed is a failure, which may be determined by examination while still green, it is cut somewhat earlier and makes the best and sweetest hay, especially valuable for ewe sheep and milch cows. It is at this time too that the clover root makes greater growth than during any previous stage. Though every particle of the top be removed from clover, there is an increase in available nitrogen in the soil after its growth, which is something that does not follow in growing anything else.

In growing clover seed some seed is necessarily spilled upon the ground. We do not call this lost. It is not wasted, but remains in the soil for future years, coming after every plowing, and by its growth perpetually enriching the land where it has once been sown. This is perhaps the best of all the gains from the clover crop, and it is only to be secured by making the growing of clover seed a principle feature. It pays to buy clover seed to sow; but it pays twice or thrice over for the farmer sowing to grow it, wherever it is possible to do so. It not only makes the land richer for the present, but with good management will make it better forever after.

CONSTANT CARE.

CONSTANT care is necessary against unexpected attacks of summer complaints. No remedy is so well known or so successful in this class of diseases as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Keep it in the house as a safe guard.

Peasant (after having thoroughly thrashed a stubborn ox)—See, now, if you were not so obstinate we might live together like brothers.

THE WASHINGTON TREATY is one of the important topics of the day, but more important still to a sufferer from catarrh is the question, what remedy shall I use? Try Nasal Balm. It never fails. Mr. John Kelly, Combermere, says:—Nasal Balm has helped me more than I expected it would. I have not felt so well in nine years. I am sure it will make a permanent cure.

"Why, how is this, my dear sir?" enquired the doctor; "you sent me a letter stating you had small-pox, and I find you suffering from rheumatism?" "Well, you see, doctor, it is this," said the patient, "there wasn't a soul in the house that knew how to spell rheumatism."

A CORRUPT SYSTEM.

BAD blood may corrupt the entire system and cause scrofulous sores, swellings, ulcers, salt rheum, erysipelas, sore eyes and skin diseases, as shingles, tetter, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters purifies the blood and cleanses, tones and strengthens the entire system.

A single scratch may cause a festering sore. Victoria Carbolic Salve rapidly heals cuts, wounds, bruises, burns and all sores.

Clara—What a terrible noise that wagon makes? George—Yes, it's dreadful, isn't it. Clara—What makes it groan so, George? George—It is filled with green apples.

RELY ON THIS.

DEAR SIRS,—I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for the last three years, and can always rely upon it as a speedy cure for diarrhœa and all summer complaints. I can recommend it highly and I wish you every success.
MRS. W. FOWLER.

"Do you think I am a simpleton, sir?" said a fiery Scotch laird to his new footman. "Ye see, sir," replied the canny Scot, "I'm n'lang here, an' dinna ken yet."

The common sense treatment for Catarrh is Dr. Carson's Catarrh Cure. Give it a trial and rid yourself of that unpleasant and dangerous disease. Sold by all druggists. One dollar per bottle. Six bottles for five dollars.

A defendant walked into court with an enormous bludgeon under his arm. Judge—Why have you brought that bludgeon here for?" "Defendant—"I was told in the summons, your lordship, to come provided with my means of defence. I first thought of bringing my axe, but then I fancied this would do."

For all derangements of the Bowels, Liver and Kidneys, there is no medicine like Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It purifies the blood, tones the system, and regulates all the vital organs. Sold in large bottles at fifty cents.

THOROUGHLY TRIED.

HAVING given Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry a thorough trial, I do not hesitate to say that I believe it is the best remedy in existence for all summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, colic, etc.
MRS. R. S. WAITE,

A new baby came to a home on Charlotte Avenue and the little three-year-old Harry brought in a playmate to rejoice with him over the new sister. After looking at it a minute, the little visitor said: "Why don't it laugh? Our baby does." Little three-year-old looked at baby and then at his playmate with marked disapproval and replied: "Our baby knows better than to laugh at nothing."

IT DON'T MATTER.

HOWEVER old, obstinate or chronic your case may be Burdock Blood Bitters has cured so many seemingly incurable cases that it is well worth a trial in yours Cases of dyspepsia, scrofula, liver complaint, etc., of twenty-five years' standing have been cured by B. B. B.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

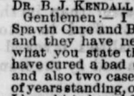
The Most Successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Read proof below.

STREETSVILLE, P. Q., May 3, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gentlemen,—I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure for Spavins and also in a case of lameness and Stiff Joints and found it a sure cure in every respect. I cordially recommend it to all horsemen.



Very respectfully yours,
CHARLES J. BLACKALL.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

ST. THOMAS, P. Q., April 22, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gents:—I have used a few bottles of your Kendall's Spavin Cure on my colt, which was suffering from Influenza in a very bad form, and can say that your Kendall's Spavin Cure made complete and rapid cure. I can recommend it as the best and most effective liniment I have ever handled. Kindly send me one of your valuable books entitled "A Treatise on the Horse." Yours respectfully,
L. F. WILKINSON.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

FORT ELLICE, MAN., May 10, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gentlemen:—I always keep your Kendall's Spavin Cure and Blister on hand and they have never failed in what you state they will do. I have cured a bad case of Spavin and also two cases of Ringbone of years standing, on mares which I bought to breed from, and have not seen any signs of disease in their offspring. Yours truly,
D. J. O'KEEFFE.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors.

DISTRICT DASHES.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

West Lorne.

Sept. 5.—Mr. and Mrs. Run and daughter, of San Diego, California, who have been visiting at Mrs. Skinner's, left for Rochester last week. Mrs. Skinner accompanied them.

Edward Hood, who has been sick for the last month, is very low. Slight hopes are entertained for his recovery.

The Argyle House on last Thursday evening presented a gay appearance, and large numbers of young men could be seen wending their way towards that quarter from all parts of the town. The gathering was in honor of D. Teetzell, who had resigned his position as principal of the public school here and was about to take his departure. After partaking of the good things provided Geo. Bracken read an address and Dr. Eaton presented Mr. Teetzell with an elegant album. Mr. Teetzell replied in a suitable manner, and the rest of the evening passed pleasantly and all departed after wishing Mr. Teetzell many happy returns and pleasant wishes in his new field of labor.

On Friday afternoon the scholars of the public school, not to be outdone by their elders, presented Mr. Teetzell with an address and a gold-headed cane, which shows more than words can tell the esteem they held for their late teacher. After giving all of his scholars, to whom he has endeared himself during his stay here, some good advice as to their future he bade them an affectionate good-bye and departed with the well wishes of all his numerous friends for Jarvis, where he has been engaged to teach in the public school.

Aldborough council met in the town hall here last Monday.

Sept. 10.—Peter McLean has arrived home from the copper mines of Michigan.

Mrs. P. Lindenman returned home from Detroit after a month's visit.

A lively runaway took place on the street to-day, and but for the timely effort of Wm. Ford, who leaped in the rig and stopped the horses, something serious might have happened, as a little boy was in the rig hanging on to the lines.

Wm. Ford was badly hurt by a horse sinking the calk of his shoe in his foot.

Jas. Munholland has gone to Oil Springs to visit his son, Harvey.

Rev. Mr. Carey, of Tilsonburg, preached in the Baptist church, morning and evening, on Sunday last.

Jas. Bowlsby is at home from St. Thomas, he having resigned his position as clerk there.

The suit of the Board of Health vs. Jas. Thomas was tried Tuesday before Squires McGregor and Thompson. Thomas owned the house and lot which was occupied by the Welch family, who were afflicted with small-pox. After the disease abated the house was burned down and the lot kept under quarantine. The defendant enquired of the doctor as to whether the latter thought it would be dangerous to go on the place, and he said not, so they went in to pick fruit, and the Board of Health charged them with trespass. J. H. Greer, the chairman of the Board of Health, appeared for the Board; Fred. Wickett, of St. Thomas, for the defence. After an argument the J. Ps. reserved their judgment for a week.

Fingal.

Sept. 10.—Steve DeLacey is removing from our village.

The foundry will shut down this week for the fairs.

Over $50 was realized at the peach festival at Dr. Marlatt's Tuesday evening of last week. A very pleasant time was spent.

There were two births in the village last week, one at L. Neeley's and one at P. Brady's. Mr. Neeley's child died the day it was born.

Rev. Mr. Baker, of Mount Salem, conducted the services in the Baptist church on Sunday.

Rain is badly needed.

LONDON PRESBYTERY.

The Presbytery of London met Tuesday morning in the Park Avenue church, London, with a full attendance of ministers and elders. The moderator, Rev. James Ballantyne, of London South, occupied the chair.

After opening devotional exercises the Rev. G. A. Brown, of Belmont, was elected moderator for the ensuing six months.

A call was presented from Melbourne and River Station in favor of F. C. Simpson, licentiate, offering $800 and manse with one month's holidays.

Rev. Mr. Murray brought up the question of the necessity of forming a second congregation in St. Thomas. He expressed surprise that the people of St. Thomas had not moved in this matter. The question had been before Presbytery for twelve years. He moved that a committee consisting of the Home Mission Committee, Rev. W. H. W. Boyle and D. K. McKenzie be appointed to attend to the matter.

Mr. McKenzie said that the only difficulty was the unwillingness of the people in the east end to bear the expense of establishing a new congregation.

Rev. Mr. Sutherland intimated that a call in favor of Rev. Alex. Urquhart, of Dunwich, from Kincardine and Bertie, had been received. The congregations were cited to appear for their interests on Wednesday, Sept. 25th, at St. Thomas at 11 a.m.

An overture from North and South Westminster, asking that they be represented by two elders instead of one, was read. The Presbytery declined to entertain the petition of the congregation.

N. Phelps and J. Liddel returned from their trip to Algoma yesterday.

The eight-year-old son of John McGregor, farmer, Ekfrid, fell off a fence on Sunday and broke his leg above the knee.

A man named Moses Depew attempted to get on an express at the road crossing west of Tilbury Monday night, while the train was in motion. He was thrown down and fatally injured.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—$2,100 will buy 3 houses and 6 lots. Houses pay $210 per annum in rent; lots are worth $90 each. Plenty of water; good garden ground. Only one-third of the money to be paid at time of sale. Apply to F. A. HUMPIDGE, Dutton.

Five more ten-wheel fast passenger locomotives have been ordered for the Michigan Central Railroad. The first ten-wheeler was placed on the Michigan Central two years ago, and gave such good satisfaction that five more were ordered. These are now all at work, and when the additional five recently ordered are received there will be no road in the country better equipped than the Michigan Central for passenger business. One of the new locomotives easily does the work of two of the former, besides being much safer than a double-header.

The Charm of Life.

Tell me not that advertising
Is at best an empty dream,
For its charms are more surprising
Than its base traducers deem.

And whichever way thou turnest
Thou wilt find upon the whole,
Those who advertise in earnest
Soonest reach the wish'd for goal.

Would'st thou, then, a lesson borrow,
Wouldst thou know the royal way?
Advertise, then, so to-morrow
Finds you richer than to-day.

Advertise, then! No retreating!
Let the senseless croakers rave;
While your heart with hope is beating
They will find oblivion's grave.

Printer's ink will lead the battle—
Printer's ink—the balm of life—
Printer's ink—no din, no rattle—
Leads the van against the strife.

Advertisers oft remind us,
We can make success sublime—
Make our "pile" and leave behind us
What defies the touch of time.

Seeing which, perchance another
Struggling man, with weary brain—
Some non-advertising brother
May with wisdom try again.

Advertise then! Up and doing!
So avert a meaner fate;
And the wiser course pursuing
Learn to advertise and wait!

HIS FIRST TIGER.

A Newspaper Man's Adventure in Cochin China—Tigers at the Window

Correspondence "Pall Mall Budget:" At the entrance to the river of Saigon, the French capital of Cochin-China, and forty miles from the city, there is a lonely telegraph station, where the English cable from Hong-Kong and Singapore, and the French cable to Tonquin, touch ground. As I am interested in telegraphy, and I have a circular letter of introduction from Sir James Anderson, the managing director of the Eastern and Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, I determined to pay these exiled electricians a visit. And then I learned that twelve years ago an operator had shot a tiger that came to the veranda and looked in at the window while he was at work, and that three months ago another had been killed in a more orthodox way. So when the next steamer of the Messageries Maritimes picked up her pilot at 4 a. m., off Cape St. James, I tumbled with my things into his boat and rowed ashore as the ship's sidelights disappeared in the distance and the lighthouse began to grow pale in the sunrise.

A WATCH IN THE NIGHT.

Next morning an Annamite hunter who had been sent out by Mr. Langdon, the Superintendent of the Station, to look for tracks, returned and reported that he had built a "mirador," and we were to make our first attempt that evening. At 5 30 that afternoon we started, Mitt (that was his name or nickname) walking and running ahead, and I followed him ona pony. We were on a small rising ground, dotted with bushes, in the middle of a rough tangle of forest and brushwood. I looked everywhere for the "mirador," and, not finding it, I yelled an inquiry into Mitt's ear (for he was stone deaf) He pointed to a tree fifty yards away and I saw how marvelously he had concealed it. He had chosen two slim trees growing four feet apart, behind these he had planted two bamboos at the other corners of the square, and then he led two or three thickly-leaved creepers from the ground, and wound them in and around and over a little platform and roof, till he had made a perfect nest of live foliage. The floor was about twenty feet from the ground, and it looked perilously fragile to hold two men. But it was a masterpiece of hunting-craft. In response to a peculiar cry from Mitt two natives appeared with a little black pig slung on a pole, yelling lustily. The "mirador" (or "mechan," as I believe it is called in India) overlooked a slight depression in which an oblong pond had been constructed for the buffaloes to wallow in, as these ugly brutes can not work unless they are allowed to soak themselves in water two or three times a day. By the side of this Master Piggy was securely fastened, neck and heels, to his infinite disgust. Then the two natives took themselves off with their pole, Mitt gave me a "leg up" into the "mirador," which shook and swayed as we climbed gingerly in, and we arranged ourselves for our long watch. A soft cap instead of the big sun-helmet, the bottle of cold tea, and the flask put handy, half a dozen cartridges laid out, the rifle loaded and cocked. "The rest is silence." Till 10:30 we sat side by side like two stone Buddhas. Then five wild pigs came trotting down to the water to drink, which was an intensely welcome break in the monotony. At 11:30 Mitt made signs to me to go to sleep for a while and he would watch. At 12:30 he woke me, and immediately fell back in his turn fast asleep. The rest, and the consciousness that I had no longer the sharp eyes of my companion to rely upon, made me doubly attentive, and I watched every twig.

A SHOT IN THE DARK.

Suddenly, in perfect silence and without the slightest warning, a big black object flashed by the far side of the little pool. It was like the swoop past of an owl in the star light, like the shadow of a passing bird, utterly noiseless and instantaneous. Every nerve in my body was a-thrill, every muscle stiff with excitement. Slowly I put out my left hand and grasped my sleeping companion hard by the leg. If he made the slightest noise we were lost. Like a trained hunter he awoke and lifted himself into a sitting position without a sound. Rifle to shoulder we peeped through our peeped-holes. A moment after a blood-curdling scream broke the stillness, followed by yell after yell of utter terror. It was the wretched pig who had woke to find himself in the clutches of the tiger, and the effect on nerves strained in silence to their utmost tension was electrical. I shall never forget that moment. The tiger was there before me, he had the pig in his grasp, in another second he would probably be gone. And I could see nothing, absolutely nothing. It was pitch dark in the depression where he was standing, and I might as well have fired with my eyes shut. Stare as I would, I could not distinguish the least thing at which to aim. And all the time the pig was yelling loud enough to wake the dead. Suddenly I saw the same black shadow pass up the little incline for a dozen yards. The pig's screams dropped into a long howl. My heart sank. Had the tiger gone? No, for an instant afterwards the shadow shot down the slope again and the yell broke out afresh. The situation was agonizing I could hardly resist the temptation to fire both barrels at random into the darkness. Do I see something? Yes, the black mass of the pig, spinning head over heels on his ropes like a butterfly on a pin. And just above him a very pale faint curved line of white. It is the white horseshoe of the tiger's chest, and the inside of his forelegs, as he has turned for a moment in my direction. Now or never. A last glance down the almost indistinguishable barrels, and I press the trigger. The blinding flash leaps out, the answering roar scares even the terrified pig into silence, and a blue veil of smoke, hiding everything, hangs before us. Mitt turned toward me with interrogation or reproach in his eyes, and shook his head doubtfully.

For two minutes we sat and listened. Then a long, hard-drawn breath, expelled in a painful heavy sigh, came out of the bushes on our right. I never heard a sweeter sound in my life. It meant that the tiger was hit so badly that he could not get away at once, and evidently hit somewhere about his lungs. Every two minutes for half an hour this sobbing sigh was audible. Then it ceased, but no matter. If he was hurt as badly as that we should get him for certain. So I lighted my pipe and tried to wait patiently for daylight. It was so long in coming that I began to think the sun had over-slept itself, but at last at 5 o'clock we climbed down, and stretched our cramped limbs; the coolie arrived at almost the same minute with the pony, the two natives returned with their pole, and we started out to reconnoitre. First, as to the pig. Instead of being half eaten, as we supposed, he was all right except for five long scratches down one side, where the tiger had evidently put out his paw and felt of him with a natural curiosity as to what he was doing there. Just behind him were two deep footprints. That was all. No blood, no tracks, and we looked cautiously round without seeing a sign. Fifty yards away there was a stretch of grass three feet high where he was very likely to be hidden.

A TERRIBLE MOMENT

Where could the tiger be anyway? Mitt and I walked over to the edge of the grass and looked carefully all along it for tracks. That moment came near being the last for one of us. While we were peering about the tiger suddenly sat up in the grass not ten feet from us, and, with a tremendous roar, sprang clean out into the open. He was so near that it was out of the question to shoot. If I had flung my rifle forward it would have fallen on him. I could see his white teeth distinctly and the red gap of his throat. I remember even at that moment wondering how he could possibly open his mouth so wide. Mitt and I were perhaps ten yards apart, and the tiger leaped out midway between us. Instinctively the Annamite made a wild rush on his side and I on mine. The tiger had evidently walked just far enough into the grass to be hidden and then lain down. His presence there took us so completely by surprise that we were helpless. I may as well confess that my state of mind at that moment was one of dreadful funk. If the tiger had been slightly less wounded than he was, it is perfectly certain that in another instant he would have killed one or the other of us. We had not the remotest chance of escaping him by running away. But his first spring was evidently all he could manage, for he turned immediately and sneaked back into the cover. Mitt fired into the moving grass after him, in spite of my shouted protests, tearing a piece of skin off his flank, as we afterward discovered. We took five minutes to recover from our scare, and then, as the beast was practically helpless, we followed him through the grass. After a hundred yards, his growls brought us up short again. I sent Mitt up a tree and he reported the sight of his head. So I beckoned him down, climbed up myself, pulled up the rifle after me, and there I could distinctly see the tiger about seventy yards away, sitting on his haunches with his back toward me. I aimed at his spine behind his shoulders, and when the bullet struck he simply got up and turned half round, giving me a splended chance. My second bullet struck him in exactly the right place, and he made a grab with his mouth where it entered, then spun round three or four times like a terrier chasing his tail and fell in a heap. At this moment the three other men who had not gone home after all, arrived on their ponies, so we walked carefully up to him in line. There he lay, or rather she for it was a very fine tigress, a little under eight feet long, and very beautifully marked.

Scythe Song.

Mowers, weary and brown and blythe,
What is the word methinks ye know
Endless over-word that the scythe
Sings to the blades of the grass below?
Scythes that swing in the grass and clover,
Something, still, they say as they pass—
What is the word that, over and over,
Sings the scythe to the flowers and grass?

Hush, ah hush, the scythes are saying,
Hush and heed not and fall asleep;
Hush, they say to the grasses swaying,
Hush, they sing to the clover deep!
Hush, 'tis the lullaby Time is singing—
Hush and heed not, for all things pass.
Hush, ah hush, and the scythes are swinging
Over the clover, over the grass!

ANDREW LANG.

By The Sea.

O golden glory on sea and land,
O crimson twilight and azure sky,
While, far out, beyond the shining sand,
The sea-birds shoreward hurrying fly;
They dipped their wings in the Northern sea,
Till, tired at last, there are wondering back
To build their nests in the dear old cliff,
And fly once more o'er the homeward track.

I catch the gleam of their flashing wings,
I hear the greeting from hearts content;
Ah, that my song were as free from pain,
And my life as free from days ill spent.
The sweetest songs are the songs of home,
When voices we love take up the strain;
If a chord be lost, the dearest song
Is never the same to us again.

Then veil your glory, O crimson sky,
A day is dead, and a great white stone
I roll on its grave, lest its restless ghost
Might vex my soul with its ceaseless moan.
I have buried deep the "might have been,"
The restless longing for what may be,
I have said a prayer and shed my tears,
And left the grave by the tossing sea.

—GOOD HOUSEKEEPING.

Minnesota's law imposing imprisonment upon every one found guilty of drunkenness the third time is said to be working well in its three months of enforcement and to be "diminishing drunkenness." Before concluding that the best method of treating intemperance has at last been found, it would be necessary to know where the police look for the intoxicated persons, or whether it is only the suppression of drunkards in the streets that is being effected.

Some people are alarmed lest a serious accident may be the result of the racing in which the Atlantic greyhounds are now indulging. They may take some comfort from Mark Twain's statement in "Old Times on the Mississippi," that accidents were rarer upon the racing steamers than upon others. His theory was that the men upon a racing boat were always upon the alert; nothing was done in a perfunctory way, and there was not the least danger of an engineer or a man on watch falling asleep.

The British Columbians are to be congratulated on their salmon catch. On the Fraser river alone they have caught and packed 276,000 cases of salmon this year. This is a larger yield from one river than all the rivers put together have yielded in any previous year. It is expected that the rivers other than the Fraser will add 120,000 cases to the return. Thus the province will have produced in 1889 400,000 cases of salmon, against 170 000 last year, 107,000 in 1885, 249 000 in 1882, and 37 000 in 1879 The total value of the catch is $2,500,000.

ALL ABOUT ELECTRICITY.

In a paper read by Mme. Teries at the Woman's Congress in Paris, she said of the women of Sweden:—"They are bank clerks and managers, even professors in boy's high schools, working jewellers, watchmakers and engaged in every sort of wood carving. The education of nearly every Swedish girl who is not born to fortune is in a great degree industrial."

When the shah of Persia visited Faance and England he took along a chaplain to perform the religious ceremonies prescribed by the koran, paticularly the fasts, his imperial majesty being too much attached to the good things of the table to observe these himself. Why not is this fasting by proxy a good arrangement? Why not auction off the privilege of doing penance and thus help those in straightened circumstances to a chance to earn an honest penny. And to carry the idea a little farther, why not let presidents have a professional hand shaker? It would be a great relief to the official arm. —[New England Farmer

An inquest was held in New York upon the body of a drowned man supposed to be one Engel. The jury decided that he had committed suicide. An insurance company paid Mrs. Engel $250 and she went into widow's weeds, placed wreaths on the drowned man's grave and mourned him for six weeks. When at the end of that time Mr Engel calmly walked into the house of mourning, his appearance caused as much consternation as did that of the amiable Mr. Quilp on a like occasion. In fact Mrs. Engel tried to get him arrested, for what offence does not clearly appear. Perhaps she regarded his disrespect of the coroner's verdict as a a contemps of court.

JERUSALEM'S PATRIARCH.

A Talk With the Mighty Potentate of the Greek Church.

JERUSALEM, July 12.—I have just had an audience with one of the highest religious functionaries of the Oriental world. The Patriarch of Jerusalem has charge of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and as the head of the Greek Church in Syria, Palestine and Arabia he is to his people the Pope of the East. There is no king in the world who appears in such splendor upon state occasions as the Patriarch of Jerusalem. He wears cloth of gold, and his great hat is covered with magnificent diamonds, emeralds and rubies. His bishops who march with him have crosses of diamonds hanging to their necks, and their dresses are of gold and silver brocade, and the mitre and other church implements are of solid gold and silver. In the treasury of the Greek Church here there are jewels which would make the treasury of many a palace commonplace, and the rich men and the kings of the world have for generations been giving to this collection, thinking that in so doing they have been buying their way into heaven.

The Patriarch of Jerusalem lives in one of the biggest and best mansions of the Holy City.

As we approached the residence we were met by several priests in long black gowns which fell in full folds from their necks to their feet, and in tall, round, black caps, with capes falling down upon their backs. These put their hands to their foreheads as we entered and motioned us to come in. We then ascended a wide stairway at the sides, on which were brass railings, and at the top of which stood more priests similarly attired Here we were taken into a great hall where the portraits of the Patriarchs of the past looked down upon us out of gold frames, and then on into a second grand salon in which were a number of Turkish soldiers and church dignitaries, and at the back of which in a chair of state sat the Patriarch himself. He rose as he saw us and moved towards us. Tall, broad-shouldered and well formed, he is one of the finest-looking public men I have ever seen.

He had a magnificent head, well set on a pair of broad shoulders; large, intellectual eyes, a big, straight nose and a long, patriarchal beard of sable silver. His high forehead was bordered with a black cap of fine cloth, which rose for full six inches above it, and from the back of which fell a cape of the same color, forming a striking background to his strong, intelligent face. He wore a long, full gown of some fine sack cloth, and he had two gorgeous gold medals about his neck, each as big as the palm of your hand, and between these hung a cross of diamonds. He met us in the middle of the salon, shook hands with us and conducted us to a divan at the right of his chair of state. We then chatted through the interpreter, the Legation addressing him, according to etiquette, as "Your Blessedness."

There was then some talk about the Greek Church as to its extent and doctrines, and while this was going on a liveried servant brought in a silver tray containing a golden bowl filled with silver spoons, several glasses of water, and two cut-glass dishes, one of which contained a brown mixture and the other was filled with preserved oranges cut in small slices and floating in a molasses-like syrup.

Lifting one of the silver spoons out of the gold holder, I dipped it into the orange preserves, conveyed some to my mouth and then dropping the spoon into another dish reserved for it, took a sip of the water. The preserves were delicious and the water was good.

STRANGE COURT FORMALITIES.

Then there was a little more talk about the Greek Church and a second servant came in with another tray more gorgeous than the one preceding. Upon this were wine glasses filled with a liquor the color of the dark moss rose. It was flavored with peppermint and it had the rich, oily strength of age. Though scarcely more than three thimbles full, it brought a pleasing warmth to the whole frame five minutes after it was drank and the doctrines of the Greek Church fell on my ear like the poetry of Moore. This liquor was followed a few moments later by a third waiter who brought in Turkish coffee, served in little cups of fine china, each the size of the smallest egg cup. The coffee was as thick as Vermont molasses. It was sweet and delicious and was served without cream.

Coffee in Jerusalem is the same as champagne in China. After the coffee is served the caller can politely terminate his visit. We sipped the aromatic liquid and then telling the patriarch that we doubted not that he was fatigued with his labors of Holy Week, we arose to say good-by. Before we did so the Turkish generals bade their adieus and to each of these he handed an Easter egg from a basket which sat on a table beside his chair. The Turks grasped his hand before he could let go of the egg and bending low, imprinted a kiss on his fist. They then, with many crossings and salaaming, bowed themselves out. We said good-by shaking hands with "His Blessedness" and receiving from him a present of a Bethlehem egg. My egg lies before me as I write. Its ground is the same red as the colored eggs of the American Easter, but this red is covered with etchings and on one side there is a rough picture of Christ ascending to Heaven, with the cross in the background and with the Virgin Mary holding her hands in adoration. On the other side in a wreath of olive branches are the figures 1889, and around the top are etched the letters:

B-O C-K-P-E-C. X-P-H C T-O-C Z.

Palestine is perhaps the best known country for its size on the face of the earth. It is only fourteen miles from Jerusalem to the Jordan, and it is about thirty-five miles from Jerusalem to the sea. It is not more than three times as long as it is broad, and the distances and numbers, which are so large in the Scriptures, are very small when viewed with the naked eye. Bethlehem is, in reality, about seven miles from Jerusalem, and it can not be more than two miles from the site of Solomon's Temple to the top of the Mount of Olives. The valley of Jehosophat is little more than a ravine, and the valley of Khedron runs into it. The villages of Palestine are quite as curious as Jerusalem in their architectural structure. There is one just above the pool of Siloam, on the edge of the Mount of Olives, which is a fair type of the whole. It consists of houses of one and two stories, built half of stone and half cut out of the rocks against which they stand. There is no chance of any man going around to the back of his house in Siloam, and it is a village without back yards. It makes one think more of the cave dwellers or of the Pueblo Indians than of people whose history is as old as time.

The rosary business is one of the great industries of Jerusalem. There are hundreds of stores here which sell nothing else, and some of the keepers of these are as big rascals as you you will find on the face of the globe. One of these rosary merchants told me that the American pilgrims from the United States had bought $1,000 worth of beads from him and I saw other merchants selling olive wood to them in great quantities. A curious feature of the church trade in Jerusalem is the candle selling. There are scores of stores which sell only candles for the burning about the holy sepulchre, and for use on the day when the miracle of the holy fire is performed by the Greeks. After they have been once ignited they blow them out and carry them home. Their superstition is such that they believe that the flame really comes from heaven and that the candles reignited will burn before their altars and will preserve them from harm.

The candle-sellers do their business even in the Church of the Sepulchre itself, and the court in front of the church is filled with rosary peddlers. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre is of vast extent. A half-dozen denominations and more worship within it, and Christ's tomb stands in a marble oblong building in the rotunda under a dome not quite so big as that of the Capitol at Washington. The scenes in and about it have been so often described that I will not attempt them here. FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Blackberry Blossoms.

From a thicket in the corner of a zig-zag fence
Where the succulent pokeberry stalks uprear,
With sassafras and sumach in a wild growth dense,
The blackberry blossoms through the brown rails peer,
With dewdrops shining on their long, white sprays,
Where the yellow bee buzzes and the red-bird flies,
They marvel at the world and its new-found ways
With innocent wonder in their wild, sweet eyes.

Magnolias are white,
And roses are bright,
And many there be that love them;
But with dew-besprinkled faces
And wildwood graces,
Oh, the blackberry blossoms are above them.

When the pine boughs are swinging in the soft May breeze,
And bumble bees are boasting of their spring-tide gain,
And the mockbird is singing out his happiest glees
To the cotton-tailed rabbit in the bend of the lane;
They lean their faces on the moss-grown rails
And listen to the melody the mockbird weaves;
While the lizards go a-darting with their trembling tails
Like slim long shuttles through last year's leaves.

Chrysanthemums are fair,
And orchids are rare,
And many there be that love them;
But with dew-besprinkled faces
And wildwood graces,
Oh, the blackberry blossoms are above them.

In Fly-Time.

There is no house, however watched and tended,
But flies roam here and there,—
No place, howe'er so well by screens defended,
These insects do not share!

The air is filled with humming—buzzing—flying—
If they were only dead!
The heart of housewife for deliverance crying
Would then be comforted.

Let us be patient! These fly-time afflictions
For a brief space arise,
To disappear amid the maledictions
We care not to disguise.

Where do flies go! To climes where other mortals
Their fly-papers spread out,
And quickly set wide all the fly-trap portals,
The enemy to rout?

Perhaps they do—but there's no diminution;
Next season finds us still
Poor victims in the usual distribution,
Against our wish or will.

And though at times, all wearied with vain smiting
And with our lips compressed,
We've sworn to give up all this useless fighting
And give the flies a rest;

We will take courage and dismiss this feeling—
Unceasingly wage war;
A life-long battle with the enemy now sealing
Our hatred evermore.

Drunkenness in England.

The return which has just been published of the convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales during the four years from 1885 to 1888 inclusive is not particularly cheerful reading. The total convictions decreased during the first three years, falling from 154 601 in 1885 to 139,492 in 1887. But in 1888 there was a sudden rise to 156,809, a number which happily does not necessarily mean that about six persons out of every 1,000 not only get drunk, but disgrace themelves in such a manner as to be taken before a magistrate. We may take comfort from the reflection that there are repeated cases of the conviction of the same person.

In Wales the proportion is about one conviction to every 157 people, the high ratio being partly accounted for by the figures for the county of Glamorgan, where there were 3 743 cases out of a population not quite 100 times as great.—[London Daily News.

THE BLUE-GLASS EXCITEMENT.

Brown-Sequard's Elixir Recalls One of the Funniest of Medical Crazes.

The St. Louis "Globe Democrat" recalls one of the funniest medical crazes of the century. In 1876 Gen. Pleasanton published a work fully explaining his theory as to the infallibility of blue glass for invigorating and retaining or restoring health. In a subsequent edition he added a list of testimonials from grateful patients who professed to have derived immense benefit from the treatment, and also the full text of the specification for his patients. His book was entitled "Blue Ray of the Sunlight and of the Blue Color of the Sky in Developing Animal and Vegetable Life, in Arresting Disease, and in Restoring Health in Acute and Chronic Diseases of Human and Domestic Animals." The general adorned the frontispiece with a rather unfortunate quotation: If this theory be true it upsets all other theories." The converse seems to have been very satisfactorily established. A full record of the general's military experience is also given, apparently as somewhat of a guaranty of good faith.

The author's first experiments were on grape vines. In his greenhouse he substituted blue for white glass in every eighth row and succeeded in producing grapes so fine that all others were rendered insignificant beside them. In 1869 he treated some hogs to a similar dose and some little pigs grew and thrived so well that a royal road to a fortune in hog-raising seemed to have been found. Next he tried the effect of blue glass on an Alderney ball calf, which grew six inches almost as by a miracle and became a veritable Saul among the little calves on the estate. From hogs and cattle the descent to poultry was short and easy, and a chicken-house was fitted with just the right proportion of blue glass. The result was as foreordained. The young chicks were ready for the broiler almost as soon as they emerged from the shell, and those that escaped the usual and proper spring-chicken route to oblivion grew into splendidly developed and plumaged birds.

It needed not implicit belief in Darwinianism to induce the general to apply his experiments to men and women. Architects would be required to so arrange buildings as to insure the introduction of the elixir-like rays so that the owners and occupiers might enjoy the marvelous advantages, and "mankind will then not only be able to live fast, but can live long and also live well."

Judged by the fact that the blue-glass craze, general as it was during the years 1876 and part of 1877, died out quietly and has long since been decently interred, some of the testimonials as to its efficacy form very funny reading. They show that if all the writers meant what they wrote Gen. Pleasanton invented an elixir to cure not only every ailment, but to supersede surgery and obsterics. In fact it must have been omnipotent. A man with varicose veins was able to throw away his silk stockings after sleeping in a room a few nights with blue glass in the windows. Typhoid patients, after a day or two, arose like giants refreshed and dismissed their physicians. A bald-headed lady was delighted to discover an embryo crop of hair after seven days' treatment, while another grateful recipient enlarged on the marvelous effects of blue glass on his ancient mule. This once gay and festive quadruped had been deaf for ten years, its limbs were stiff and it was in a very bad way; but after blue glass was inserted in the stable window Jack braced up, could hear the word "oats" if only whispered, could kick its owner across the yard, and generally act like a vivacious 3-year old.

Excitement ran high and the craze traveled north, south, east, and west. The wildest stories of cures were circulated. Men heard of objects of public sympathy getting cured almost without money and without price and entirely without trouble, for never was there so passive a treatment recommended, nor one less hampered with directions as to what should and should not be eaten and what habits or vices must be abandoned. The demand for blue glass was such as the most ardent enthusiast never anticipated. It gradually and finally dawned upon the credulous public that they had made themselves ridiculous, blue glass became a drug on the market, and people who were sick or who wanted to grow young again looked elsewhere for remedies and elixirs.

Ramming Ice-Floes.

No stronger vessels than those of the Dundee whalers are built; they are from four hundred to one thousand tons displacement, have powerful, well-secured engines to resist the shock of ramming or stoppage of the propeller by ice, and are built with an eye to the easy and rapid replacement of rudder, propeller, and propeller-shaft if damaged, these parts being carried in duplicate. Above all other considerations, they possess strength for ramming as well as resistance to lateral pressure when nipped.

Another very important feature is that the bow shall have considerable inclination, which permits the vessel, when ramming very heavy ice, to lift slightly and slide on it, thus easing the shock and assisting the cutting action of the bow with the downward crushing weight of the ship. In this way it is possible for these steamers at full speed to ram ice over twenty feet thick, and receive no immediate incapacitating damage.

If the ice is not too heavy, the shear-like rise and fall of the bow is repeated several times as the vessel steams powerfully ahead until her headway is checked. The difficulty then is to extract the ship from the dock she has cut by her advance: the floes press on her sides, cakes of ice and slush fill her wake, and there is nothing but the ice-hampered propeller with which to overcome her inertia and draw back out of the nip. Frequently this is insufficient, and the ship may be crushed.—[Popular Science Monthly

Death from Tight Lacing.

A verdict of death form tight lacing is perhaps still to be sought among the curiosities of law, but a Birmingham jury have come near it in a verdict of death from pressure around the waist. The victim was a poor servant girl who died after a fright, and her death was attributed by the medical witnesses to the fact that she was too tightly belted to enable her to stand the wear and tear of any sudden emotion. She was a notorious tight lacer; her collar fitted so closely that it was impossible to loosen it at the critical moment, and under her stays she wore a belt so remorselessly buckled as to prevent the free circulation of the blood—[St. James' Gazette.

MAN'S RESPONSIBLITY.

The Rev. Thomas Dixon, of New York City, in Dr. Lorimer's Pulpit.

His subject was "Individual Responsibility,' the text for which was as follows:

"So, then, each one of us shall give an account of himself unto God.'—Rom. XIV., 12.

"Christianity,' began Mr. Dixon, "is still labouring under the curse of Paganism. How many men and women in this enlightened age still believe in signs, and tokens, and luck, and fate. How many, even of those present, still have an idea that what is to be will be, and that all their trying can not change their fate. It is the old curse of the Pagan gods which still hangs over us and makes us trust to chance to get into heaven.

"And thus, because of these petty beliefs which even the more enlightened of us often hold tenaciously, do we allow trifles to mold and influence our whole life. This belief in fate and destiny, that God has selected certain ones to be saved—not so common now as it once was, thank heaven—I have heard likened to an illustration in which Pasteur sees hundreds of patients suffering hydrophobia all about him. They have come from all quarters of the globe to their only savior. Their groans as they linger in the great scientist's laboratory bespeak their sufferings. Pasteur enters. He selects five of the many victims. 'I will save you. The others can go,' he says, and turns his back upon all the others.

"This is some persons' idea of a merciful God. But I do not believe that God immortal could have sent a single soul forth into this world with the intention that it should perish. If I could find grounds for such a belief in my Bible I would renounce my mission, go back to my native State, shake hands with my old Hardshell Baptist brethren and say, "Yes; it's no use trying."

"But, on the contrary, I hear this book proclaim, 'Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' I hear the word proclaim, 'For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son,' I hear, 'Knock and it shall be opened unto you.' And would aught but a demon mock the world by asking it to knock at a door which was locked and the key buried in the nethermost space? No, my friends, the door will open to all who knock.

"And if the good is held out to all who will, so is the evil to all who will not. Man, and man alone, is responsible for his refusal or acceptance of salvation, nor can he escape the responsibility on any plea.

"The agnostic pleads, 'I do not know.' If he does not know that is his own fault. The knowledge is within his reach. The man who wants light can have it. If there is one thing more clearly set forth than all others it is that every man is responsible to God for his own life and character.

"The three great forces of life are innate power, or will, circumstances, or environment, and the supernatural. Can we escape individual responsibility on the plea of circumstances? I think not.

"It is often said that man is the creature of circumstances. This is, in a measure, true, but only secondarily. Man is also master of circumstances. I know that the tiger draws his variegated stripes from the jungles he inhabits, that climatic influences make race distinctions, but I know of no law that excludes the individual from personal responsibility. I can, if I will, change my circumstances.

"And here comes in the will power. Men say they can't when they can. When a man has chosen to eliminate the word 'impossible' from his vocabulary then he has commenced to work miracles. William Lloyd Garrison was opposed and threatened when he first raised his voice against slavery in Boston, supposed to be the very centre of humanitarianism. But he said 'I will be heard,' and he was heard. He was heard among the artillery that shook the world. Old Douglas Jerrold was told that he was dying. 'What, dying! I must not die now! I will not die!' He grasped Death by the throat and held it at bay for three years. How different is this from the man who died simply because he thought he was dead. He had been condemned to be shot. At the last moment a reprieve arrived and he was fired at with blank cartridges, but he fell over dead. He had lost his will power.

"God has given every man the faculty of changing his environments, of changing his evil circumstances to the good, of triumphing over obstacles. Milton's blindness gave the world a glimpse of paradise lost, Bedford jail gave the world Bunyan's 'Pilgrims' Progress.'

"'God made me what I am, hence He is to blame for my evil,' some cry. But, my friend, God did not make your character. He gave unto your hands the instrumentality of making that immortal part of you good or bad. If a man has a will he is absolute and responsible. Will is but the power of choosing between good and bad, the right and the evil.

"'But why did God make evil?" Evil is the dark side of good, like the shadow made by the sunshine. "But couldn't God make man incapable of doing evil?" He did make such creatures, but we call them horses and cattle; we do not speak of them as men. They are not human. They can do no evil, nor can they do good. When the possibility of bad is destroyed, so also is the possibility of good excluded. Anything moral must have the power of choice. It is not moral unless it is free."

To illustrate this power of the free moral agency, the preacher recited the following anecdote with much force:

"It was on a high mountain slope. The long train of passenger coaches was winding slowly up the mountain side. Suddenly the engine whistles down brakes. In an instant every brakeman is at his post, and, though the cause is totally unknown to all but the engineer, the train is brought to a standstill in almost a twinkling. The passengers are alarmed. What can be the matter? Heads are thrust out of the car windows, and there, far above on the same track, is a wild freight train dashing down upon them at breakneck speed. The oncoming train seems to almost leap from the track as she comes to deal death and destruction to an army of human lives. There is no time to be lost. The train is now quite still, the engineer shouts to the fireman to uncouple the engine and jump for his life. The throttle is thrown wide open, and then he jumps for his life. He has sent his engine to meet the wild freight. You can see it now as it tears up the track faster than the wild freight is descending. The two meet. You can see them leap high up in their fearful struggle, and then fall in hideous ruin, but the train is saved. The great iron ribs of the engine are crushed and broken, its steel lungs are ground to pieces. There has been a terrible combat, but the passengers are saved, the flight of the wild freight is stayed.

"And the people forgot even the number of that engine. There was nothing of the moral nature to the act of the engine. It could not choose; it could only obey. And to the engineer with the brain and the will a monument was reared."

CLOSE WORK WITH A SAURIAN.

Man and Alligator Sank Together, but the Reptile Came Up Bound.

The following are the particulars of an adventure Mr. H. Abbot, of indigo and racing fame, met with some years ago:

It was in the rains and we were up at Tewarreh Factory vats, when the jamadar told us that there was a huge alligator under the bridge of the river. Sending for a gun and a couple of bullets, we went up to the bridge, and, sure enough about twenty yards off, there was an enormous "ghurial," some twenty feet long, with his head just visible above the water. A well-directed shot caught him between the eyes, and the brute mortally wounded plunged into deep water, rolling over and over, and was carried by the tide down toward the bunga low, which was a quarter of a mile off. Running to the vat-house, Abbott seized a long rope lying there, and rapidly made a slipknot in it, and, declaring that he was not going to lose so lovely a skin, kicked off his boots, and just as he was—in socks, breeches,, and shirt—giving me and a lot of natives the other end of the rope to hold. He got well into the middle of the stream and was quietly treading water while we were all anxiously watching when suddenly within two feet of the swimmer the alligator plunged straight up out of the water snout foremost, as alligators generally do when hit in the head. Without the least hesitation Abbott flung both arms right around the snout, and a regular rough-and-tumble ensued.

JUMPED INTO THE RIVER,

Presently the brute's whole body appeared. Abbott calmly mounted him evidently trying the while to disengage the slip knot, which had now got tight round his own arm, and to shove it over the brute's head. Then the alligator started swimming and we followed down the bank, when, just as we were opposite the bungalow, he pulled dead up, brought his tail out of the water, and with a fearful side sweep capsized Abbott, snapping at him as he fell. Then came another fight such as I never wish again to see, the pair eventually disappearing beneath the water. We hauled away at the rope, thinking it was still attached to Abbott, when unexpectedly we saw him come up a few yards from the bank evidently almost senseless. A Rajpoot peon jumped in and dragged his master up the slope. He was bleeding awfully, and was a gruesome sight—shirt in ribbons both hands badly maimed, and the right foot completely crushed. He came to at once, and only said. "The rope's safe over his nose;" and so it was, sure enough: for the natives to whom I had thrown the rope were now busily engaged in hauling the defunct saurian on shore.

ARMS AND CHEST TORN ALL OVER,

I never saw a man in such a mess; and to add to the horror, down to the edge of the river, just as we had dragged up her half killed husband, rushed his young wife, wringing her hands, and naturally half out of her wits with terror. While she was standing over him, and the servants were carrying him to the house, he started singing, "Home they brought her warrior dead." A nice time of it we he had out in a jungle, with no appliances to tie the severed arteries, and with a patient who would insist in trying to get out of bed to see how the skinning of the alligator was getting on. We tried to hire kahars, but the whole country was under water, and they refused to budge from home; so we put him into a shampony and took him into the Doctor at Muzafferpore, taking from 10 on Tuesday till 7 the next morning to do the twenty miles.

England's Drink for Thirty Years.

An important document has just been issued, showing the consumption from 1856 to 1888 of tea, coffee, cocoa, and chicory, of alcoholic beverages, and of tobacco, compared with the increase of population.

The non-alcoholic drinks—namely, tea, coffee, cocoa, and chicory—have taken a tremendous leap upward, continually advancing, with only some four fluctuations of no great moment. In 1856 the consumption was a little more than 100,000,000 pounds; in 1888 it rose to about 247,000,000 pounds. The amount consumed per head of population had almost doubled meanwhile. In 1856 it was 3 64 pounds; in 1888 it was 6 58 pounds. The only considerable decline was in 1861 and 1862, co-incident with a decline in the consumption of wine and spirits. This return does not include mineral waters, the consumption of which is known to be very large.

Turning to British and foreign spirits and wine, we observe that in 1856 the consumption was 1.26 gallons per head; in 1876 it rose to 1.83 gallons; but in 1888 it had fallen to 1.29 gallons, or practically to the same level of thirty-two years ago; but during the last twenty years a gradual and steady diminution is observed. The liquor which has fluctuated the least is the national beverage, beer. In 1856 it was 22 6 gallons, in 1888 it stands at 26.8 gallons, and with no material ascent or descent during the interval. The population was set down as 27,000,000 in 1856, and, moving regularly, expanded by an unbroken series of accents to 38,000,000, at which it stood in 1888. There has been an increase during the same period in the amount of beer consumed. The 17,000,000 barrels which quenched the national thirst in 1856 rose finally to about 27,500,000 in 1888, reaching the maximum of over 30,000,000 in 1874, and thence descending in 1877 to something very near the figures at which they finally stand, appearances being in favor of a steady increase.

The main facts developed by the diagrams are these: That the consumption of spirits is steadily decreasing, but that with respect to beer, its position is as firm as ever it was, and we may fairly anticipate an increase rather than a diminution in its use.—[Licensed Victuallers' Gazette.

The Reason Why.

THE STARFISH.

How This Queer Animal Works Destruction to the Oyster-Beds.

Oyster farmers are experiencing their usual trouble with the starfish, says a Norwich (Conn.) letter to the New York "Tribune." A starfish is a unique instrument of destruction. The body is depressed and divided into rays like a star; the upper surface is studded with rough knobs, between which are the openings of many minute tubes for the passage of water in and out of the body. On the external edges of the rays are stiff spines, which serve as protections, and at the end of each ray is a small reddish eye speck. The mouth opens in the stomach cavity. It is very flexible and will admit large mollusks with the shell, the hard parts being ejected after the soft portions are digested.

A Norwich man picked up a beautiful specimen at Watch Hill a few days ago, but in lacked that sponge-like elasticity for which they are noted. He tipped up the stomach and out tumbled a big clam, shell and all, measuring four inches in diameter. The fish measured but five. But the most peculiar thing about the starfish is its great power of regeneration of lost parts. If one of the arms or rays becomes broken off the fish will grow another; if four of the five are lost it will live to reproduce them all; but if the five meet with destruction the fish dies.

The walking stomachs drift leisurely along the shore devouring all the accumulated garbage, but always pointed for one particular spot—an oyster bed. Armed with a natural saw and syringe they march upon the bivalves, cut a small opening in the shell and inject a fluid which stupifies the oyster and renders it an easy prey. When once they arrive destruction is swift, and hundreds of acres of oysters are destroyed before their presence is discovered.

Young stars live on "jingles" until they are able to cope with an oyster. These are small shells, about the size of a man's thumb, which are planted by oystermen for oyster spat or seed to adhere to, and to lose them means the loss of a season's crop. At six months a star-fish is big enough to tackle an oyster. The advancement from "jingles" to healthy bivalves is always characterized by a fight, old farmers say. Many are the battles that they have witnessed in shallow water when the sea was smooth and the water clear. The young starfish lacks experience and the oysters make it rather uncomfortable for them by catching their rays between the shells and pinching them off.

One old fisherman tells of a fight between a big oyster and a little fish which he saw last season. It was a fight "to a finish," and one the like of which he never saw before. The young starfish approached the open oyster and slowly settled down upon it. The shell sprang together with a snap and the fish, which had settled upon it with five rays, bobbed suddenly up with only four. The oyster again dropped his blinds and awaited a second attack. He didn't have to wait long. Slowly the fish began to drop until he was again astraddle of the oyster when a repetition of the former round occurred and he now had three rays instead of five.

Three times more this scene was enacted and then the fish keeled over, dead.

The army of oyster pirates has arrived in Connecticut waters, and the sound oystermen in the vicinity of Stamford are bemoaning their fate. They have come 1,000,000 strong and are sawing away at a terrific rate. But the battle is not a one-sided affair by any means. Dredges are busy at work, raising both the starfish and the oysters. The former are put into barrels and killed by steam, while the oysters are replanted. When life has been boiled out of the starfish they are shoveled back into the sea for other species of the wet world to feed upon.

But this method of destroying the destroyer is not a satisfactory one; it is altogether too slow. Every oyster farmer holds his views of how the dread enemy can be exterminated, but they prove impracticable.

Man's Knowled e of God.

We ourselves, in the sphere of relations—in the related world—can speak of God's manifestations only in broken, diverse, incomplete phrases. Far beyond us God is, yet He is near to us in all that is—in our selfhood, in power, in cause, in truth, goodness and beauty, in all high ends which we can seek; He is at our door, even dimly in our hearts. But this Being can never be grasped in one conception, or treated as if He were the term or beginning of a mathematical demonstration. He is, no doubt, one and supreme. But He has endless relations—endless, just because He is God. He is the ground of all, in all, through all, yet somehow not there—not in His supreme essence, not in His selfhood, not as God. But in looking up to Him as the ground of all relations, we cannot formulate God in one conception, in one idea of the so-called reason. The only philosophy and the only religion worthy of the name is that which looks beyond pure formulæ of the mere intelligence or thought, and finds God in the breadth of experience, history, human life, yet, in Himself, utterly transcendent of all that in these we can know, feel, or name. Not the definitely Known God, not the Unknown God is our last word, far less the Unknowable God, but the ever-to-be-known God. We are not God, and when we form, or attempt to form, an idea of Him, we do not create Him. As Bossuet well said: "Si l'homme avait pu ouvertement se declarer Dieu, son orgueil se serait emporte jusqu'a cet exces; mais se dire Dieu et se sentir mortel, l'arrogance la plus aveugle en aurait honte."—"Knowing and Being," by John Veitch, L. L. D. (Blackwood).

Well Certified.

A new schoolmaster had just been posted to the regiment, and he had the reputation of being rather a scientific man, well up in some branches of study which army schoolmasters do not always take up. In the orderly room. The colonel was seated at the table with the Adjutant standing by.

Adjutant—"The new schoolmaster's come to report arrival, Colonel." (Enter schoolmaster.)

Colonel—"Well, sir, come to join, eh? That's right. I hear that you understand all about plane trigonometry, eh?"

Schoolmaster (very unsteady on his legs)—"Yeshr—got fushclash 'tificate for it."

Colonel (unobservant)—"And you've studied military surveying, too, I believe?"

Schoolmaster—"Yeshr—got fushclash shtiffcate for't."

Colonel (looks up quickly)—"I think you've been drinking, sir."

Pleading for the Shark.

The author of "On Blue Water," a man who had sailed much in tropical seas and had many opportunities for studying the nature and habits of fish, treats the common belief that the shark is a man-eater as a superstition. Man does not have his dwelling in the water, and it is only rarely that, by accident or design, he exposes himself to the attacks of the shark. It is not likely, therefore, that he was intended to be the natural and preferred food of the fish. The writer referred to above says that he had never conversed with any one who had seen a living man attacked by a shark. He gives an amusing account of a meeting between a black sailor and a shark, which makes it appear that this fish is a great coward in the presence of man.

His ship, an English one, was lying in Bombay harbor. An enormous white shark lay sluggishly on the surface of the water only a few feet from the ship's side. The sailors were making such remarks as "He's got his eye on us for supper," and when this opinion was doubted, they challenged the incredulous to put a foot in the water within the shark's reach.

A negro made a bet of a pound of tobacco that he would jump into the water just as he was. The bet was taken; and, without removing any of his clothing, the man jumped from the rail plump upon the monster's back. The fish was large enough to have swallowed two men, but his fright overcame any longing for human flesh. The narrator says:

"I have seldom seen anything so scared as that shark was; he plunged off, half his body out of the water at times, leaving a wake like a paddle-boat behind him, which could be traced for three or four hundred yards, where he dived, and never showed himself alongside our ship again."

This instance would, perhaps, be met with the objection that sharks show a preference for white men to feed upon. This common notion has been adopted from observing that the colored South Sea Islanders spend much of their time in the water, wholly indifferent to the sharks which swim around them. If the shark is really partial to white victims, he probably selects them from sight, not from taste. The whiteness of the body attracts his eye more quickly than dark objects would, and he makes for it with a blind rush.

When the shark once gets a taste of human food, he no doubt experiences unusual delight, and from that time on is a ferocious man-hunter.

The case is much the same with the shark as with the tiger. Not one of a thousand of either of these creatures stands any chance of ever tasting human flesh, and before having done so they both stand in mortal fear of the face of man.

Without Price.

In villages among the mountains of Virginia and Pennsylvania, where habits of life and thought have remained almost unaltered for two centuries, an odd custom still prevails which may be new to our readers. Prescriptions for the cure of different ailments—weak eyes, scrofula, consumption, cancer and hydrophobia—have been handed down in the same family from one generation to another.

These prescriptions are never known to more than one person at a time, and it becomes his duty to make the remedy and give it away. According to popular superstition, if he imparts the secret or takes money or any recompense for the medicine, its virtue is gone. Many of these lotions and cordials possess undoubted efficacy, having been originally distilled from simples and earths by men who were forced to go to Nature for cure, and who came to understand some of her resources better than we do.

A similar superstition exists among the Hungarian peasants, with regard to the amulets which they wear to protect them from lightning, poison, or sudden death. The amulet must be given; as soon as it is sold it becomes worthless.

The same idea formed the basis of the custom among the ancient Irish of baking a cake at every meal for the possible guest who might chance to come in. When the meal was finished, too, a few crumbs were thrown out of-doors and on the hearth for any invisible creature, whether good or evil spirit, who might be hungry.

These superstitions seem ridiculous to our shrewd modern sense; but the truth underlying them is as old as humanity and will live as long. It is, simply, that we owe a part of our talents, our wealth, our strength, in short, of every good thing God has given us, to our brother and that as soon as we begin to barter it for our own advantage, the virtue goes out of it.

The selfish child or man, no matter how rich he may be in genius, knowledge or money, will find life grow poorer and barer every year. He has not paid the tithes to his brother.

A special blessing follows even the earthly fortunes of the man who is generous in heart as well as in deed.

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord," and the Lord repays all such debts with a great interest.

Dahomey's King.

The King of famous Dahomey is dead, and as his successor must prove before he ascends the throne that he is a brave and great man, the young aspirant is looking around for adventures. At last accounts he had gone hunting for King Tofa of Porto Novo, declaring that nothing less than the head of that potentate would satisfy his ambition. King Tofa was at peace with all the world, but his country is suddenly plunged into terrible commotion simply because his head is wanted across the border in Dahomey. The French are now busily engaged in Porto Novo helping the King to keep his head on his shoulders. It is such puerile quarrels as these that are playing the mischief with the West African trade and keeping a long stretch of coast in an uproar.—[N. Y. Sun.

She Had Enough.

"Mamma," said Bridget O'Flynn, who has social aspirations, "it's myself that wants a ridin' habit." "Well, it's yourself that won't get any. Begorra, you've got ridin' habit enough as it is, takin' the horse cars twice a day as ye do at foive cents ivery thrip."

Mrs. Remey is a widow of 45, her husband having died about eleven years ago. Hunt is a bachelor. The case will come on for trial at the Elgin Fall Assizes.

Our merchants have decided to not put goods out in front of their stores in future. This will be a big saving of work as well as a saving in goods, as the sun and dust destroy most of the fabrics usually put on exhibition.—Tilsonburg Liberal. Why cannot our Dutton merchants make an agreement to the same effect?

Frank Garner, the miscellaneous burglar, was released from the county jail at St. Thomas on Monday morning, after serving his sentence for peddling jewelry without a license. He was immediately re-arrested on warrants charging him with several burglaries, and the police magistrate remanded him for a week to stand his trial.

While George Stricker, of concession 4, Aldborough, was digging gravel on J. K. Kirkpatrick's farm at Wardsville on August 28, he found three feet from the surface a human skeleton. The bones were large as if of a tall person, but were in a space of two or three feet in length, as if the body had been cut in pieces before being buried. The teeth were perfect and sound. There was also some charcoal with the bones as though the body had been partly burned. The skeleton is at John McGregor's farm at Wardsville.

A man, claiming to be Bob Donnelly, of Biddulph notoriety, with his wife and his children, the youngest being but a few weeks old, found lodgement in the police station Wednesday evening. The man and woman were both beastly drunk and incapable of taking care of themselves, and the whole party looked as tough as they make them. They were kept in the cells all night and were allowed to go in the morning on promising to leave town. It is needless to add that the man was not Robert Donnelly, as that person is living quietly in Glencoe at present.

The corner stone of the new Presbyterian church at Glencoe was laid on Monday afternoon by the Rev. J. H. Macdonnell, M. A., B. D., of Toronto, in the presence of about 800 people. After the usual formalities an adjournment was had to the old St. Andrew's church building, where a supper was given by the ladies, four tables, running the entire length of the church, being filled no less than three times before the large gathering had been waited upon. A platform having been erected in front of this church the rest of the evening was taken up with addresses by James Armstrong, M. P.; Dr. Roome, M. P.: Robert Ferguson, M. P. P.; Mr. Sutherland, of Napier, a number of visiting clergymen and by Rev. Mr. Macdonnell, who made the speech of the evening. The offertory amounted to about $180, which, with other collections realized by the sale of badges, etc., will bring the total proceeds of the day up to about $250. The plans of the new church show a building of the finest architecture, large, roomy and such as would be an ornament to any city. Its cost when completed will be in the neighborhood of $12,000.

J. C. HERTEL, MERCHANT TAILOR

When will we be able to walk quietly along the streets without having our ears assailed with oaths, curses and blackguardisms which proceed from the foul mouths of a few toughs, who seem to take delight in stringing out the most obscene language to be found in man's vocabulary. It would not require much effort to stop this and the benefit to everybody would be immense. A night spent in the lock-up would effectually cool them off. "Scottie," as he is familiarly called, has been distinguishing himself in this line lately, partly because he does not know any better, partly because he is generally overloaded, but principally because the poor fellow is teased by youths and children who ought to have more sense. Scarcely a night passes but what he is tantalized almost beyond endurance by youngsters who seem to take a delight in listening to his abusive talk. If he was left alone there would be a great deal less profanity used.

Matthew W. Brown, who is wanted for the same crime here, pleaded guilty at London Friday to the charge of obtaining money on false pretences. Brown forged the name of the Dutton stationmaster to a bogus bill of lading for a consignment of hides, and induced Mr. Joseph Elliott to give him $20 for the goods, which Brown said were on the way. He was remanded for sentence. On being sent to gaol the report gained currency that Brown was suffering from leprosy. Drs. Brown, Smith, Waugh and Hodge examined the prisoner and pronounced his malady to be psoriasis, a disease resembling leprosy, from which he had suffered for fifteen years. The disease differs from leprosy in being neither infectious nor contagious, and this man had suffered from it for fifteen or twenty years, while neither his wife nor any of his family of three children were affected with it. It is probable that the authorities will make an effort to have him removed from the jail to some place where he can be properly treated.—St. Thomas Times.

THE LATE PROF. PHELPS.

The above is a portrait of the late Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth College, He was a strong, able man, who stood high in the literary and scientific worlds. It is not generally known, but it is, nevertheless, the truth, that Prof. Phelps was the discoverer of what is known to the Medical Profession and Chemists universally as Paine's Celery Compound, unquestionably one of the most valuable discoveries of this century. This remarkable compound is not a nervine, an essence, a sarsaparilla or any devised article, but a discovery, and it marks a distinct step in medical practice and the treatment of nervous complications. It has been freely admitted by the best medical talent in the land, and also by the leading chemists and scientists, that for nerve troubles, nervous exhaustion, insomnia, debility, senility and even the dreaded and terrible Paresis, nothing has ever been discovered which reaches the disorder and restores health equal to this discovery of Prof. Phelps

Paine's Celery Compound is now being prepared in quantities, and can be procured at any reputable druggist. An attractive bunch of celery is to be found on every wrapper. It has become specially popular among professional men, mind workers, ladies burdened with exciting social duties and frequenters of the leading clubs.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Winnipeg had a $12,000 fire Friday night.

Hon. S. Prowse, of P. E. Island, has been made a senator.

Walker's grain warehouse at Kincardine was burned Friday. Loss, $2,000.

Bodies continue to be taken from the debris at Johnstown at the rate of two a day.

Many farmers in Quebec Province have such abundant crops that their barns will not hold them.

The strike of the London tailors is ended, the employers accepting 10½ hours as a day's work.

Four million acres of land in Northern and Central Minnesota is about to be opened for settlement.

Forest fires in the Sierra Nevada mountains have swept away Central Railway bridges and snow sheds.

Disease has broken out amongst the cattle at Squirrel Creek, Man., one man having lost seventeen head.

A blue jacket in H. M. S. Swiftsure at Victoria, B. C., fell from a mast and had his brains dashed out on the deck.

Junior County Judge Lane has been appointed judge of the County Court of Grey, vice Judge McPherson, deceased.

Andrew Kennedy, a young brakeman on the C. P. R., fell between two freight cars at Medicine Hat, sustaining fatal injuries.

Henry Hall, a Woodstock colored man, has been committed for ten days by the Windsor magistrate on a charge of trespass on the M. C. R.

Ex-Attorney-General Clarke, of Winnipeg, while en route to the Pacific coast on a C. P. R. train, died from the bursting of a blood vessel.

John Crose, a young man who apparently belonged to St. Marys, jumped from the steamer Athabasca near Owen Sound Friday morning and was drowned.

F. W. Gessevein, the wealthy tool manufacturer of Brooklyn, was shot dead in his office Friday morning by an old man with whom he had a dispute about a patent.

Jas. Black, who is said to have furnished the dose of laudanum which caused the death of J. B. Davidson, of Ridgetown, was censured for so doing by the coroner's jury.

William Jennings, of Elmwood, has been summoned to appear before Squire Pool, of Comber, to answer a charge of using abusive language to Night Operator J. C. Lowther of the M. C. R.

Alfred, the sixteen-year-old son of Jas. Gadsby, of Stratford, suicided by the revolver method on Thursday evening, rather than face a charge of robbery of which he claimed he was innocent.

The Comber people are now dependent on Leamington for their water supply. When the M. C. R. engine from that place arrives there crowds of people may be seen coming out of the woods with their buckets to be filled from the engine tank.

W. W. Disher has instituted an action against the Bell Telephone Company at St. Thomas for refusing, as common carriers, to send a message delivered by him in their branch office in St. Thomas. It appears that a dispute existed between Mr. Disher and the manager of the office, Mr. G. W. Morgan, as to whether plaintiff was entitled to pay 10 cents additional for a talk with Aylmer. Mr. Disher declined to pay the amount, and the manager stated that he would forbid him to use the wire until such time as it was paid.

A sad accident occurred on th efarm of Mr. Geo. Eveland, about three miles southeast of Vienna, on Wednesday afternoon. An old lady, Mrs. Margaret Pace, 74 years old, in company with her nephew, was setting fire to some brush piles in the field, and it appears that Mrs. Pace's clothing caught fire and burned her so badly that death must have ensued very quickly. She was found by her nephew about five in the afternoon, dead, with her clothing almost burned off and her body horribly burned.

The Amherstburg gas well is down over 1,150 feet, and salt water was struck at that depth. The contract is for a dry hole 1,300 feet, and the company have instructed the contractor to keep agoing. The expense of rimming out the hole and casting out the Atlantic will be heavy on the contractor. A meeting of the shareholders will be held Monday to see "what they are going to do about it." As the company are men of considerable sand, they may decide to go to China or put down another hole.

Messrs. J. Farley, barrister, J. A. Robinson, barrister, and W. Armstrong, mining engineer, left Tuesday morning for Lawrence to experiment on a farm which they have bonded there in consequence of samples of coal having been brought to town which it is alleged were unearthed while sinking a well. The coal was, it is stated, found at a depth of seventeen feet under the hard pan. Another well was sunk in a different part of the field, and at the same depth a layer of coal was again struck, 'tis alleged. The company express their intention of sinking a shaft should to-day's experiments warrant further explorations.—Times.

Jurors for 1890.

The county selectors of Jurors, consisting of Judge Hughes, Sheriff Brown, Mayor Morse, Warden Godwin, County Treasurer McCausland and Clerk of the Peace Donahue, met Monday and drafted a list of the number of jurors to serve at the Assizes and General Sessions in Elgin during 1890. The grand jurors for superior courts number 60, and for inferior courts 60; petit jurors for superior courts 120, and for inferior courts 120, a total of 360. The jurors will be selected as follows:—From St. Thomas, 54; Aylmer, 18; Port Stanley, 6; Vienna, 6; Aldborough, 48; Dunwich, 42, Southwold; 42; Yarmouth, 60; Malahide, 42; South Dorchester, 18; Bayham, 18; Springfield, 6. Total, 360.

Queen vs. Henry Davis, seduction under the Charlton Act.

It wasn't Tooth Powder.

I was told yesterday a rather amusing story at the expense of Mark Twain—and the same story is already a standing joke in society. Not long ago the humorist was travelling in the country, and stopped one evening at a house presided over by an elderly woman. He was shown to a room somewhat bare of ornament and furniture, yet he slept until morning. When morning came and he rose he became mindful of the fact that, although he had provided himself with a tooth brush, he had forgotten his tooth powder. He consoled himself with the thought that there must be tooth powder lying somewhere about. After a brief search he discovered something in a small box on the mantle which certainly resembled tooth powder. At any rate he used it vigorously on his teeth, and found it satisfactory. When he got down stairs he apologized to his hostess for using her tooth powder. She appeared surprised. "What tooth powder?" she inquired, blandly. "It was on the mantel," Mark replied. "On the mantel?" she repeated. "Yes, in a small box. It was excellent," he declared. "Good gracious!" she ejaculated, "that wasn't tooth powder!" "What was it?" asked Mark, now slightly alarmed. "Why, that was auntie!" said she. It seems that "auntie" had been cremated.

The best soil for plants in pots is to be found in well-rotted turf, or at least sufficiently rotted to destroy the life in the roots of the grass, then the coarser the better, as the growing plants will consume it as wanted. The provident gardener or amateur will always have a pile of sods in some out-of-the-way place, where it will decay and be ever ready for potting purposes. Some of the best rose growers in our country use nothing else for their young roses, and there can be nothing better; others, in piling up the sods, alternate the layers with stable manure. This makes a good compost, but is a congenial home for worms and grubs which are destructive to the plants. For the best results use sod only, and make an occasional application of some reliable concentrated plant food, but use in moderation.

Mr. Nelson Kumer, of con. 8, Malahide deposited on our table on Tuesday five serpent eggs. They were about the same shape as a hen's egg and about the size of a bird's egg. On opening one with a knife a live snake, of the milk snake species, about nine inches in length, and quite lively, was seen. The remainder of the eggs were given to J. E. Richards, druggist, and many citizens view them daily while in course of incubation.—Aylmer Sun.

After the Lambton county council had adopted the report of the committees appointed at the last meeting of the council affirming the necessity of building a house of industry, it was decided that the Steadman farm, three miles south of Wyoming, should be selected as the first choice, and in the event of failure to come to terms with Steadman, the Cassidy farm was to be the second choice. The warden and clerk were authorized to complete the purchase at once.

Mr. Rochester, a farmer living near Lawrence Station, a few days ago took to St. Thomas a good specimen of hard coal, which had been, it is alleged, found on his farm under the hard pan at a depth of seventeen feet. A company was formed for the purpose of experimenting and developing the coal find, and the farm of Mr. Rochester and adjacent property has been bonded. It is expected that the work of making the preliminary shaft will be commenced next week.

TOPICS OF THE HOUR.

The women of Berlin use daily 202 kilos of face powder, 117 kilos of rouge, 61½ of coloring matter for eye brows, 50 of lip pomade, 29¾ of glycerine, 15 of cold cream A kilo or kilogram is equal to 2 1-5 pounds.

The alleged discovery that the United States did not purchase any territory from Russia below 54° 40' north latitude, and that, therefore, the seizure of vessels in the neighborhood of the Aleutian Islands was made outside of the territory conveyed them by treaty with Russia is a mare's nest. It is on the coast of the mainland that Russian possessions terminated at 54° 40', but in the longitude of the Aleutian islands which are included by name in the treaty and have always been recognized as a portion of Alaska. Canada's sufficient claim is that neither Russia nor the United States can by the law of nations exercise functional rights more than three miles off the coast of her land territories. There should be no shifting of the ground.

It was Max O'Rell, we believe, who said that the favorite amusement of English children was to keep a map of the world upon which to mark off in red all the fresh acquisitions of Great Britain to her possessions. We are afraid that few English or other British children, old or young, take so much trouble to keep themselves acquainted with the march of British Empire. Professor Seeley said that England seems to have acquired half the world in a fit of absent-mindedness. Since the publication of the "Expansion of England" the English have partly wakened to the import of the rapid growth of the empire in so small a world, but still there is great indifference and consequent ignorance. If British people generally, both old and young, kept themselves well informed regarding the extension of the empire they would soon find the study of maps of countries and of the peoples one of the most interesting possible.

The verdict of the Coroner's jury in the matter of the dynamite explosion at the works of the Hamilton company at Belæil should not be lightly passed over. The jury has determined that the company is responsible for the death of the two employes who were killed by the explosion, "not having taken the necessary precaution for the preservation of the men employed in their service." This is a severe reflection and carries with it a legal responsibility. No one assumes that the company would willingly and purposely imperil the lives of those who are employed at its works, but to the unfortunate victims it can matter little whether they are destroyed through intention or indifference. They lose their lives and their families are left unprovided for. It is a serious thing for companies employing men in risky duties to ignore the means of protection that should be thrown about them. Human life is held too cheaply at times, and many a useful life has been sacrificed and many a family thrown into misery and want through the lack of proper precautions being taken against what are termed "accidents."

The Sultan of Zanzibar has conceded to the British East African Company all the part of his territory now lying north-west of the Tana river, a district even larger than what was before conceded to this company. The importance of this concession lies in the fact that it prevents the German company from making trouble for the British company by annexing or claiming districts to the north of the English company's possessions, and particularly in the direction of Emin Bey's provinces. An expedition was sent out by the German company some time ago, which started from the coast north of the Tana river, ostensibly to rescue Emin Bey, but really to make agreements with native chiefs upon which claims to the territory could be made. The English company has completely forestalled the German company, and all the coast north to Abyssinia, excepting Somali land, is now under the protection of Great Britain. This concession secures to Great Britain the ultimate control of the Nile region and the Soudan if Egypt becomes a part of the Empire, as now appears probable.

The story of James McDermott is certainly a strange one. It is a long step from an Irish informer living on the money he obtained for placing the British Government in possession of secret information to a French count, living on the estates of the lady he married. But these odd things sometimes happen, even outside the novels. There seems to be pretty good proof that McDermott was an informer, notwithstanding his denials. He has been denounced as such by Fenian leaders on both sides of the Atlantic and he would not undertake to cross over to the United States now for fear of being "removed" by secret agents of the organization whose plots he betrayed. McDermott and O'Donovan Rossa were great friends at one time, and Labouchere, the Radical leader, declared that they are a pair of informers who have been selling their dupes to the British authorities. They both made threats enough against the British Government. This, however, is usually the way with informers. They make more threats than the others in order to throw the others off the track and make them believe that they are thoroughly in earnest. But all the while they are playing their own game.

Visitors to the Paris exhibition will be treated to something more than an ordinary diversion if they only keep their eyes open. It is announced that General Boulanger has made up his mind to go to Paris and deliver himself up to the authorities, but that he has taken precautions to prevent himself being seized before he reaches the capital. His arrival in Paris will produce a state of things and no mistake. But how will he get there without the authorities knowing of his coming, especially now that he has announced his intention? Once before he paid Paris a visit when he was supposed to be doing his duty as a military commander in another quarter. He went in disguise. Perhaps he will go in disguise again. What between getting out of Paris and getting into Paris without being seen the brave general is having an uncomfortable time of it. But he aspires to be president of the republic at the very least; at one time he had quite made up his mind to be dictator. To go to Paris in a spirit of defiance is the general's last chance. It is the only remaining card he has left to play, the object being to influence the elections on the 22nd of this month. If he wins he will be president. If he loses he will be packed off to prison. From present appearances he will not be president.

AUSTRIA'S DASHING EMPRESS.

A Royal Horsewoman who is Fond of Cantering Around the Circus Arena.

The Empress of Austria was not bred for the throne; it was her elder sister, who expected to leave a dukedom for an empire. Indeed, the affair had gone far enough for the papers to be ready to sign, and the young Emperor had come in person to the castle to see his bride. He was alone in the great historical hall, when the madcap Princess Elizabeth, not knowing any one was there, came into the room in a short white frock and her lovely curls reaching below her waist. She paused abashed on the threshold, making an enchanting picture, and burst into a rippling laugh as she fled. He gave chase, and an hour later was found romping with her in the rose garden. It is said that her sister in her rage spanked her, but in a few months was obliged to humble herself and address the despised child as "Your Imperial Majesty."

At this time she was of that peculiar freshness of beauty which always makes one think of things good to eat; childish, yet voluptuous, the type both men and women feel drawn to, wishing to touch, to kiss, to caress. The young monarch fell madly in love with her and overpowered all reason and counsel. Every influence was brought to bear on him; her youth, her lack of education, the unfitness of her temperament for the throne—he thought of nothing but her smile, her laugh, her lips. The sister was forgotten and he conquered.

Viennese society is the most formal, the most exclusive and aristocratic in the world and refused to accept this young hoden as its queen.

She felt stifled with the formality of the court—this select herd which felt itself so above the rest of the world, yet whose greatest amusement was vulgar gossip. The court geography she could never learn and the chase for scandal did not interest her. She preferred a mad gallop on her favorite horse, with the wind in her teeth and her hair flying behind her.

The infinite number of gossiping card-parties forming the only diversion of eight-barrelled Viennese society, which prefers gaming to dancing, found stories to circulate of the short-comings of their sovereign's choice; as she was both daring and indiscrete and scorned to conceal her mistakes. The Arch-Duchess, her husband's mother, tried in every way to ruin her, but could not succeed, for this wild girl was a good girl and her only missteps were against shame and snubbishness and bars to freedom of speech and originality of character.

She retired into a very small circle of intimate friends and mingled with the court as little as possible. She had a very large forest park inclosed with high walls. In this were bear-pits, cages for ferocious animals. Rare birds sung in the trees, and fine domestic breeds grazed on the lawns. It is said that she could subdue the most savage beast with a glance of her eye, and would walk the grounds with a lion or a tiger beside her, simply holding him by the mane. In the centre of the park was a clearing with a race course and also a covered amphitheatre. A court lady told me of hearing Her Majesty say many times how she would have enjoyed the savage sports of the Colosseum, the fights between wild animals, the great hunts of beast and men.

Here the Empress would ride for hours, changing her horses, exhausted from fatigue. Then, becoming more and more excited, would call her companions to the circus, where altering their costumes for more appropriate ones, a performance would take place never witnessed by any one outside this imperial stock company. The servants were turned out of the building, even out of the park, and the gates doublebarred. Grand Dukes were the grooms and clowns, and the Empress of Austria the queen of the arena. All this is, of course, the barest hearsay. For years it was kept so quiet that many members of the intimate court circle did not dream of its existence, and it is only during the last few years that rumors of it have reached the outer world—itself long a thing of the past.

She could ride all day without fatigue, sleep on the ground, refresh herself with a bit of black bread and a dash of sour wine at a peasant's hut, and then climb mountains till her attendants were almost dead with fatigue. I speak of her always in the past time, for everything is changed now; the grief over her domestic tragedy has left her much broken, she does not care for society, and can desire no diversion from her old pleasures; she is nervous and trembling.

She has been one of the most individual woman in Europe, but as her greatest powers were her physical beauty and endurance, the loss of them leaves her most helpless and unhappy. In her family life she has been a noble character, deeply wronged in many ways.

Indian Remedies.

A large and particularly ignorant class of quacks advertise themselves as "Indian" doctors, and claim to have learned secrets of the healing art from the aboriginal inhabitants of this country, and to be able to effect cures by means of remedies obtained from roots and herbs, where all others fail."

Without enlarging upon the falsity of the idea that vegetable remedies are always harmless, we would say that the Indians have no particular medical skill, but, like other savage tribes, depend principally upon incantations and magic to drive off disease. The Indian medicine-men do not employ medicine, as we understand it, at all, but trust for their reputation to their power to work upon the superstitious fears of their ignorant followers. In this respect the modern Indian doctor is about on a par with his savage colleague.

The subject of the Indian pharmacopœia has been investigated by several competent persons, and they have found that the remedies used by them are of the simplest kinds, and that none of them are particularly novel or superior to those already in use by the white men.—[Popular Science News.

Prince Arthur to Visit Canada.

OTTAWA, Sept. 19.—It has been arranged that H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, who is commander-in-chief of the Bombay division of the British army in India, shall return to England in March next. He will travel home via China, Japan, and Canada, passing through Ottawa, and probably making a short stay at Canada's capital. Prince Arthur's return to Canada will be welcomed by none more heartily than by the residents of Ottawa. H. R. H. is a lieutenant-general in the army.

BRITISH NEWS.

Forty thousand persons visited the shrine of Knock on a day of week before last.

Mr. Walker, the contractor for the Manchester Ship Canal, believes in "teetotal" navvies.

The oldest public house in England is "The Seven Stars," at Manchester. It dates back to the time of Edward III.

A Mohammedan mosque has been built in Woking, England, and a Buddhist temple has been opened in Paris. There are about 300 Buddhists in Paris.

The 111-ton gun is being tried at Shoeburyness with a projectile weighing nearly a ton, but with 190 pounds of powder. The concussion is less than from the 81-ton gun.

Prince Henry of Battenberg may soon become Duke of Inverness, the title of Duke of Kent, which his mother-in-law desired for him, being vigorously opposed as exclusively royal.

The British Museum has paid 37,000 marks for the prayer book which the late Louis of Bavaria ordered from Frantz Fleschutz. It is adorned with copies of the decorations of the famous so called "great church treasure."

The authorities at Eton and Harrow have given instructions that the pupils at these schools shall not wear the brown "untanned" leather boots with ordinary attire, as they do not consider them becoming or dignified. Perhaps that marks the beginning of the decline of the tan shoe.

A landed proprietor in Westmoreland, whose fields are celebrated for their mushrooms, has this season put up the following amusing notice:—"Those who gather mushrooms on this property are requested not to take them all away, but to leave some for the owner, who is very fond of them."

The British colonies are to hold an intercolonial conference in Australia, in which Canada will take part. The purpose is "to promote the closer relations of the Canadian and Australasian colonies." The Hon J. J. C. Abbot, the Government leader in the Senate, will be the Canadian representative.

Since the British Parliament assembled in February, 278 divisons have been taken. Sir Richard Temple voted in all but one, and General Goldsworthy in all but seven. During four of these, however, he was addressing his constituents. Last session the two hon. gentlemen were bracketed at the head of the list.

The explanation of the Queen's apparently inexhaustible supply of Indian shawls, one of which is her regular wedding present, is that early in her Majesty's reign one of the Indian princes, in consideration of his having a large and valuable territory ceded to him, bound himself to pay an annual tribute, which included three pairs of the finest Cashmere shawls, and twelve perfect shawl goats.

The commercial spirit is spreading among British aristocratic ladies. Titled bonnet makers are quite an established institution; so by way of being original, and at the same time making a profit, two fair sisters of an aristocratic family proposed starting a flower-shop. By the way, it is calculated that during the London season the average amount of money spent daily in flowers is £5,000.

A novel cause for unpleasantness occurred at the Duke of Richmond's house at Goodwood not long ago between the host and one of his most distinguished guests. The latter gentleman had made baccarat a regular feature of the evening, telling the host that it was "Homburg whist." On the last night he found out that he had been hoaxed, and expressed himself in language strong enough to strain his relations with his guest very seriously.

The steel pen trade at Birmingham is reported as buoyant, the average weekly production exceeding 160,000 gross, something that would give an aggregate annual product of 1,198,080,000 steel pens. In her Majesty's Stationery Office, one year, the consumption of steel pens was about two millions, as against half a millions of quill ones. In the London clubs the proportion of quill pens used is larger than that in the Government offices.

A curious exploration is now being undertaken in a vast region of Scandinavia, which has practically run wild for nearly a hundred years, when whole villages, as well as homesteads and farms, were deserted on account of an epidemic. The tract has been bought by a London syndicate, who have commissioned Sir H. Pottinger, one of the pioneers of Norwegian travel, and Mr. J. Sargent, tha well known Oxford "coach," to report upon this almost forgotten territory.

Here are two stories of a well-known English prelate whose name (says the "British Weekly") may be guessed. To a man who had been bothering him for promotion till he lost temper he said, "Dear Sir.—If it were to rain rectories and shower vicarages I should present you—with an umbrella." To another he said, "My Lord, when I write you you answer me on miserable scraps of paper." "Very well, sir; next time I reply to you it shall be on foolscap."

A tin vessel in the shape of a top, with a big neck, has been picked up at Deerness, Orkney. The case was painted red, sealed with a common cork, and was neatly got up. Painted in white letters round the top of it are the words, "A message from God inside. Kindly open." The message consists of the international Gospel card, on which is printed the flags of twelve different nations. On one side is a text from John iii. 18, printed in twelve different languages. There is also a booklet of eight pages entitled, "He is drowned; I was saved."

Modern Foolhardiness.

The experimentalist, sensationalist, or whatever he is, who is constantly seeking to cross the ocean in a small boat, has become a nuisance as great as the man who tries to run the Niagara whirlpool or to go over the falls. What point is there in endeavoring to cross the Atlantic in a little boat when there are now large steamers by which to make the trip pleasurable? After a thirty-eight days' exposure, in which time he had only reached the outer edge of the Grand Bank, the latest of the foolish smallboat adventures was picked up, half-dazed, more than half blinded by the glare of the sun upon the waters, cold, wet and nearly famished. "Captain" Rogers, as he calls himself, although he is a captain without crew, was very glad to be rescued after fourteen days of helpless drifting on the ocean in the boat which he was unable to steer, his provisions spoiled and his strength exhausted.

MENACED WITH JOHNSTOWN'S FATE.

Cities and Towns in Scotland Which May Be Wiped Out by Flood.

Considering what a widespread shock was caused by the catalyptic catastrophe at Johnstown, it is not at all pleasant to find, from a recently printed Parliamentary paper, that a considerable part of Scotland is exposed every hour of each successive working day to a calamity which would be so terrible in its results that the official who foretells its possible occurrence declares that it is impossible even to imagine what those consequences might be. Running across Scotland from southwest to northwest is a waterway well known as the Caledonian Canal, formed by linking together a series of locks, and containing in its source an exceptional number. Now, the state of the cast-iron gates of these locks is in many cases so bad that the Superintendent of the canal, who was commissioned to report specially upon them, declares emphatically that a serious danger exists, so long as the lock-gates remain in their present condition, of a most terrible accident. But let me quote in his own simple and unexaggerated words: "Past experience has taught us," he writes, that a cast-iron gate cannot stand against the slightest touch of the iron stem of one of the heavy steamers which now pass through the canal. Accidents have happened, and may and will happen again, owing to a mistaken signal or the failure of an engine to reverse; and the results would be most disastrous."

Then he goes on to give an example of what might occur. "I will instance," says he, "the case of a steamer striking one of the lock gates at Callochy. This would immediately let down upon the valley of the canal, to Fort Augustus, the whole surface of Loch Oich, about two square miles, with a depth of 18 to 20 feet. Nor would this be all. Loch Lochy, with about ten square miles of superficial area and a depth of 8 to 12 feet, would follow and what the consequences might be it is impossible even to imagine." A similar accident occurring at Dochgarroch "might bring down upon the town of Inverness upward of 25 square miles of water of a depth of 17 to 20 feet." Now I have no wish whatever to be an alarmist, but I think that such statements ought to be widely published without delay. So plain, in fact, are the assertions made by Mr. John G. Davidson, the Superintendent of the canal, that they need no comment from me. But some Scotch member of Parliament should call immediate attention to a warning which has already been lying unheeded on the table of the House of Commons for some five weeks.

Little Moccasined Feet.

Two little moccasined feet I heard—
Heard while I reveled in fancies quaint—
Treading unsteadily through the room,
Pattering soft in the twilight's gloom
There by the door. As the curtain stirred,
Soft came the sound of her laughter faint—
Clear as the ring of the tinkling chain,
Sweet as the nightingale's sweetest strain.

Two little moccasined feet that brought
Thoughts I'd been seeking an hour or more;
Seeking in vain, for my fickle muse,
True to her sex, would her gifts refuse.
Giving the caller the smile she sought,
Kissing her flowery lips o'er and o'er,
Up to my lap then I lifted her—
Muse who inspired without demur.

Wonderful moccasined feet were they,
Guiding me into Elysian fields;
Wonderful, too, was that baby hand,
Leading me thither to fairy land;
Potent as well were her eyes blue gray,
Casting the spell that a siren wields.
Where was there ever a muse like this,
Bringing a charm with her baby kiss?

Two little moccasined feet—ah, me!
Where will they stray in the coming years?
Shall it be in a time less fair,
Marring her life with a cloud of care?
God give her strength for what is to be,
Robbing her sky of its rain of tears,
Leading the trend of her simple life
Far from the world and its vulgar strife.

How Cheap Gloves are Made.

It may, perhaps, interest readers to know some of the secrets of cheap glove-making. My facts relate to Bohemia, from which country many cheap gloves are imported. Before the introduction of the glove sewing machine, which took place about 1870, a simple apparatus was in use consisting of two brass plates, in which the stitches were incised, holding tightly together the leather parts of the glove, while the needle of the sewer followed easily these incised stitches. It was easy work, not at all injurious to body or eye, and an industrious and quiet girl could, without any exertion, sew two pairs of gloves a day, for which she received from 2½ pence to 3 pence each, equal to about 5 pence to 6 pence a day. Very poor wages. But the money was earned in a comfortable way.

Let us now compare what progress these girls made in the golden era of machinery. The poor sewers are never in a position to acquire the requisite sum to be owners of these machines. The district to which I refer is a poor, mountainous part, the men mostly miners of an imperial silver mine, with daily wages of 16 pence. The requisite machines are owned by middlemen, called factors, to whom the glove manufacturer from all parts of Austria send their unfinished gloves for sewing. These factors are proprietors of a certain number of machines—from twenty upward to a hundred—which are fitted up in workrooms, most of them very indifferently suited for the purpose. The poor girls from the neighboring district have often to walk a distance of eight miles to find work in such workrooms. They leave their miserable cottages at 4 A. M. to begin their day's work at 6 A. M. After a hard labor of twelve hours on a complicated machine, and after having passed another two hours on the way home, their whole earning consists of 7 pence. Including the hours she loses on the road, she works ninety-six hours a week for 3 shillings 6 pence, her body continually bent over a most complicated machine, her eyes watching leather, thread, and needle incessantly, her foot moving continually, amid the rattle of many machines, in a most sickly atmosphere. This is how cheap gloves are made.

PEARLS OF TRUTH

We seldom confide a secret; it escapes us.

Men must be taught as though you taught them not.

God created the coquette as soon as he had made the fool.

Necessity is the argument of tyrants, it is the creed of slaves.

All men that are ruined are ruined on the side of their natural propensities.

Every right act and true thought sets the seal of its beauty on person and face.

Only command persons, and you may be pretty sure that a good number will obey.

Reflect upon your present blessings; not upon your past misfortunes, of which all men have some.

There is no beautifier of complexion or form or behavior like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us.

There are a good many real miseries in life that we cannot help smiling at, but they are the smiles that make wrinkles, and not dimples.

To believe aright is much; to act up to one's beliefs is more; while he who does both joyfully manifests the spirit of truthfulness.

Be cheerful, and seek not the external help, nor the tranquility which others give. A man must stand erect, not be kept erect by others.

There is but one secret of contentment, and that is to take your present circumstances as a boundary that for a moment cannot be passed and abide quietly within it.

One of the best means of saving power is to rest just before getting tired. A human being may work up to the point of fatigue without injury; but the moment exhaustion supervenes, that moment a debilitated state sets in which cannot be recovered from readily.

An act of kindness, a word of sympathy, may render the whole line of life different from what it would otherwise have been. There are crises in many a life when the course it shall take for weal or for woe depends upon a slight influence—almost a single word. How careful then should we be that our influence may at all times be in the right direction!

As manhood and womanhood open up, discrimination is necessary between what ought to be remembered and what it were better to forget. One good general rule which holds through life is to forget as speedily as possible the evil which we see around us and even within us; for evil, like a plant, thrives in the light and withers in the darkness. Brought into open view, talked about, and stored in remembrance, its tendency is to reproduce itself.

ARE THERE MONSTERS IN THE SEA.

A Defence of Those Who See Sea Serpents.

A writer in the London Standard, apropos of the reported appearance of another sea-monster, argues against the disposition too lightly to dismiss the sea-serpent as an absolute myth. Of late years, he says, there has been a growing tendency to place more credence than was at one time done in tales of sea-monsters appearing in untoward places, and at inconvenient times, to seafaring men of much credulity. No doubt the stories of the sea-serpent and the like were many of of them proved to be little better than sailors' yarns, spun for the amusement of greenhorns, and there has been a proneness to place in the same category. At the same time unless everything like evidence is to be dismissed as fable when it does not fit into the preconceived notions of the theorist, it is idle to pretend that all the reports are due either to optical illusion or to deliberate fraud. Most of the men who have put their observations on record are notoriously of good character, keen eyesight, and so long familiar with every appearance which the surface of the sea presents, that it is simply shirking the question to suppose that they must have been deceived, or were attempting to deceive others. Unless evidence which would be unhesitatingly received in any Court of law is to be rejected, on no other ground than that it does not fall into line with settled notions, there are reports which cannot be disposed of in this easy manner. These appearances have been so frequent and so minutely described by trustworthy men familiar with every object likely to be mistaken for what they reported, that, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, we are bound to consider the "sea-serpent" as still a possibility. It is no argument to declare that the zoology of the ocean is now too well known to admit of the existence of being overlooked. In reality, the sea is only beginning to be explored. Its greatest depths have been reached in only a few isolated places, and even then the dredge, or the sounding apparatus, has only been able to bring up a few of the minuter forms of life. A reptile 50 feet long is not likely to be captured in this manner. Yet many of the forms brought up were types hitherto only known by the remains in very ancient rocks. The fossil species of ichthyosaurus and plesiosaurus may, no doubt, have vanished if, indeed they were deep-sea animals. But it is not too much to suppose that there may still exist, in the unfathomable caves of ocean, brutes quite as marvellous as any that lived in the boyhood of the world. At all events, if the truth is ever to be known, the way to advance it is not to denounce every tale, until ship captains remain in their cabin when the look-out reports a "sea-serpent," afraid that if they report it they would run the risk of being ridiculed as fools, or branded as liars.

ALL THESE STORIES

Plenty of men are eager to volunteer their services for exploratory enterprises, no matter how hazardous the undertaking. When Nansen announced his plan for crossing Greenland most people said he was either mad or tired of life, but about fifty men were anxious to share the perils of the trip with him. Before De Long sailed to his fate on the Jeannette several hundred men and one woman expressed their wish to go along with him to the North Pole. Stanley was simply overwhelmed with the applications of adventuresome fellows who wished to take part in his last expedition, and he was compelled to disappoint about 2,000 of them. Exploring is a business to which many feel called, but few, after all, are chosen.

HOW SHALL WE PROTECT OUR FORESTS?

BY R. W. PHIPPS.

In answer to this question, I will mention the different methods which appear to me most feasible.

AROUSING PUBLIC OPINION

Each State or Province should employ a competent official to obtain information on the subject, and circulate it by means of pamphlets generally called Forestry Reports. With these, two things are advisable, first, that they be written in an interesting style, for mere dictionary statements on the subject would simply be left unread; next, that they be widely distributed and among proper persons, not merely sent to officials or prominent men, on whose shelves they are likely to remain unread. An excellent method is that of obtaining, from some well-informed person in each locality, the names of all he knows likely to read with profit such a book, and sending one by post to each on his list. In addition to this, it will greatly aid if the forestry official be able to address, during each year, many communications to the press throughout his State or Province. In addition again, addresses delivered at many points each year will be found of great service.

DISTRIBUTION OF TREES.

Young saplings, obtained in the forest, are very inferior to nursery grown plants. The forest sapling has generally two or three long roots, which cannot be obtained in full extension or carried or planted if they were; they must be cut, and the chance of growing risked. Then many of them are grown in the shade, and will not stand the open sun. On the other hand, the nursery sapling, two or three times transplanted, as it should be, gets a more bunchy and fibrous root each time, and naturally grows far better, when placed in its ultimate position. Very small trees, especially evergreens, can be, indeed and often are, taken from the forest, and planted in the nursery, when after two transplantings, they will have excellent roots. But when obtained from seed, or when young from large nurseries, the work is far more easy and certain. When one goes for trees to the bush, though saplings apparently be countless, it is surprising what trouble it will take to find what is wanted, and to get fair roots then. Again, in our settled country, cattle are often made so free of the bush that young trees are hard to get in any case. For all these reasons, if the farmer had available, when he was ready, some thousands of good well-rooted saplings of the kind he wishes, he would often be willing to plant and care for them. Therefore, I consider that a large government nursery, where trees might be obtained free of cost, would be one of the greatest inducements to land-owner's to plant. It will not do to say that he who wants trees should buy them.

There is an inducement needed here, or the work will not be done. The work is national; it is the nation desires the farmer to plant the trees; it was the fault fault of the nation that he was ever allowed to obtain public land at first, without an agreement to retain a certain portion in trees. Few should be in a better position to say than I, as I have now for seven years been examining the subject; and I am strongly of opinion, that under a system of free saplings, twenty times as much planting would be done as at present. Instead of free nurseries, governments sometimes grant orders on nurserymen. With careful and earnest supervision either plan would answer. The great point is—Free distribution of young trees.

SETTLING FRESH WOODLAND.

The great error of the original settlers was taking hill and hollow, mountain and valley, indiscriminately for settlement. The result is that many mountain tops were cleared, farmed, and ruined, for the soil washes away, and in a few years nothing is possible but to desert it, and go elsewhere. That the mountain should be wooded and the sloping valley cropped is the very A. B. C. of forestry, and this should be secured by saying to the settler, "You cannot have such a lot; it is a mountain top; it must stay in wood; and if you take such another lot, you must agree to keep such a part in wood, and to keep cattle out." This may seem harsh to the settler; but in the end it would be far better for him. If there is one lesson more than another, which over-clearing has taught America, it is that people should not be allowed to enter the wood land to hack and hew as they please. There are now millions of acres of deserted and worn-out farms in the Eastern States and Canada which were simply the elevated ridges, fit with care to bear timber forever, but not fit for farms, as the earth washes off. It is hard for the settler in a forest to know the elevation, but the survey should have regulated matters. I wish it to be understood that here I speak from my own experience. When, over thirty years ago, with no one to guide us, many of us entered the forest, we cleared much land which never should have felt the axe and is now worthless, or very near it. This is not proposed in the case of the ordinary rolling land of the country nor where there are merely a number of small hills, but where thousands of acres form the water-shed of a mountain range, they should remain in wood.

FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Forest reservations of twenty or thirty miles square should be left at those places, found in most countries, where the sources of many streams arise, that the rivers which pass thence through the rest of the country may be preserved. These will form reserves where timber may grow to be thinned (not cleared) at maturity. They will also give shelter where birds and animals otherwise in danger of extirpation, may still live; and as the country around is cleared they will be invaluable for Summer resorts. These would, if cared for, remain beautiful remembrances of the pristine forest, full of sylvan glades and delightful groves retaining the undergrowth, the wild flowers, the deep leaf bed, the pleasant freshness of the virgin forest. In that state they are most valuable preservers and distributors of moisture.

But if left without care, fire will here and there turn the hills to the barren clay, cattle will destroy the under growth, and the whole scenery appear dry and desolate, compared with what it was and might still have been. Two things, then, are here necessary:—Prevent settlement there, and appoint care-takers.

REMISSION OF TAXES ON WOODLAND.

It would greatly assist in preserving a considerable amount of forest throughout the country if taxes on woodlands, where the country is sufficiently cleared, were in all cases remitted; and if in the same connection some stipulation were made that cattle should to a proper extent be excluded, very great benefits would follow. For it may be here remarked that a wood dried up and hardened, its undergrowth destroyed by cattle, is of very little value climatically compared with one where the forest bed is preserved. Neither will it remain a store of fuel, for there being no young trees, the forest must ultimately die. There is no doubt, however, that many of these woodlots are allowed to decay because it is intended to clear them up, and that, if the remission of taxes induced the owners—as it in most cases would—to keep them as permanent forests, much better care would be taken of them.

FREE CLAIMS.

In prairie countries sections of land have been given free to settlers, on condition that a certain number of acres, generally ten, be planted with trees and kept in good condition for a certain period. This has been tried for years in the States, but frauds are said to be perpetrated under it. I have myself found, when at the great private nurseries in the west, where the young trees were procured, that it is always a practice to purchase the worst, the culls, in fact, for tree claim lots. The system was nevertheless valuable, but needs to be carried out in good faith, by competent and firm inspectors. The prairie lands, both of Canada and the States, urgently need tree planting and will give good returns. Plantations of miles square have been grown for eight years in Kansas by railroad companies, and with good paying results. Yet, even with this successful example before their eyes, settlers plant little. When I saw them they were four and six years old, yet, still the prairie for hundreds of miles was comparatively treeless, though all admitted the benefits of trees. I should recommend, in prairie countries, while the soil is yet in government hands, that many millions of young trees be planted and cared for under government appropriations, cultivated to keep down weeds for a couple of years, and the prairie close by ploughed to prevent fire running to the trees. In this we should not wait for experients long. It is necessary to plant four times as many trees as needed, to allow for thinning and by planting different varieties it would be easy so to arrange them that even if three-fourths failed we should still have a forest. But three-fourths would not fail. This would cost millions of dollars, it is true; and it is equally true that it is a matter in which, above all others, millions should be spent. If, when I first saw the prairie States, between thirty and forty years ago, an appropriation of ten millions of dollars had been given to plant trees and care for the groves then existing, those state would, I am well assured, be more valuable by a thousand millions of dollars now. Can nations not afford such sums? Let us think of the sums they are without exceptions ready to spend in war; and then answer. But that, it may be said, is to preserve national life. So is the other. Every well informed student of history is aware that in all the past, as the forests of a country were destroyed beyond a proper proportion, national life weakened, and by the time, when, as examples show us, the treeless desert had overspread the ground, the nation was dead.

PRESERVING TIMBER FORESTS.

The preservation of these has been little thought of in America, and the lumberman, on condition of paying the authorities a certain amount, has been too often allowed to cut at his pleasure. No care has been taken to replant forests. In Europe, on the other hand, the wood-buyer is carefully instructed as to what portion he may clear or thin, while as soon as the ground is ready it is again planted or the gaps filled. Two reasons for the American practice existed: first, farm land was needed. This reason is not now valid, as the pine land now left is very largely too poor for agriculture. Second and chiefly, the timber could be sold. Matters have now come to pretty much the following condition. This generation, say for thirty years, will have timber enough, though they will have to use much wood hitherto thought unfit. After that, there will be little good pine and not much good hardwood in our present forests; what is obtained will be brought from British Columbia and the forests of the Southern States, while the generation following will exhaust these. Considering the well-known benefit of keeping a large section of the country in forest—benefits which it is not the province of this paper to state—I would earnestly urge the people of America to consider how much more advantageous it would be at once and decidedly to say of certain large portions now in forest, "These shall not be cleared for settlement—these shall be sacred to the tree." Once this determination is arrived at the rest is easy. Nothing is more simple than to introduce and maintain a method of forest preservation, if populations demand it, and governments fulfil their desires.

It is often said, "We have a large proportion of forest land." But most of this is not good forest. Much has been overrun by fire, much culled of every good stick by the lumberman. But nearly all of this might be renewed, and made good permanent forest, if the means were used.

I will close this paper by stating what is done in Ontario for forest preservation. Much forestry literature has been for years circulated by the local government, and with good affect. A money bonus, half paid by government and half by the township, is given for the planting of lines of trees, in good condition after three years, in every township which chooses to adopt the law. Over fifty rangers half paid by government and half by the lumbermen, are kept in the woods during the summer months to prevent fires, a very valuable measure. An arbor day has been instituted, with excellent results.

Finally, the answer to the question, "How shall we protect our forests" is: "Spend more money in their preservation, and be less eager to make money by cutting them down."

The Very Thing.

Juvenile Customer (doubtfully)—"I'm afraid you haven't any ribbon of the kind I want. Mamma said I must be sure to ask for mouse color." Salesman (equal to the emergency, producing a bolt of fiery red ribbon)—"That's what this is—crushed mouse color. How many yards."

Slumper: "Just got back from Kansas, have you? Well, how does the land lie out there?" "Slimper: "Not half so bad as the boomers do. Lend me a dime, will you?"

How to Select a Wife.

Good health, good morals, good sense and good temper, are the four essentials for a good wife. These are the indispensables. After them come the minor advantages of good looks, accomplishments, family position, etc. With the first four, married life will be comfortable and happy. Lacking either, it will be in more or less degree a failure. Upon good health depends largely good temper and good looks, and to some extent good sense also, as the best mind must be effected more or less by the weaknesses and whims attendant on frail health. Young man, if your wife is falling into a state of invalidism, first of all things try to restore her health. If she is troubled with debilitating female weaknesses, buy Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It will cure her.

An ugly complexion made Nellie a fright,
Her face was all pimply and red.
Though her features were good, and her blue eyes were bright,
"What a plain girl is Nellie!" they said.

But now, as by magic, plain Nellie has grown
As fair as an artist's bright dream;
Her face is as sweet as a flower new-blown,
Her cheeks are like peaches and cream.

As Nellie walks out in the fair morning light,
Her beauty attracts every eye,
And as for the people who called her a fright,
"Why, Nellie is handsome;" they cry.

And the reason of the change is that Nellie took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which regulated her liver, cleared her complexion, made her blood pure, her breath sweet, her face fair and rosy, and removed the defects that had obscured her beauty. Sold by druggists.

The Book of Lubon.

A Man Without Wisdom Lives in a Fool's Paradise. A Treatise especially written for Diseases of Man, containing Facts For Men of All Ages! Should be read by Old, Middle Aged and Young Men. Proven by the Sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, because written in language plain, forcible and instructive. Practical presentation of Medical Common Sense. Valuable to Invalids who are weak, nervous and exhausted, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, critics, and the people. Sanitary, Social, Science Subjects. Also gives a description of Specific No. 8, The Great Health Renewer; Marvel of Healing and Koh-i-noor of Medicines. It largely explains the mysteries of life. By its teachings, health may be maintained. The Book will teach you how to make life worth living. If every adult in the civilized world would read, understand and follow our views, there would be a world of Physicial, intellectual and moral giants. This Book will be found a truthful presentation of facts, calculated to do good. The book of Lubon, the Talisman of Health! Brings bloom to the cheek, strength to the body and joy to the heart. It is a message to the Wise and Otherwise. Lubon's Specific No.8, the Spirit of Health. Those who obey the laws of this book will be crowned with a fadeless wreath. Vast numbers of men have felt the power and testified to the virtue of Lubon's Specific No. 8. All Men Who are Broken Down from overwork or other causes not mentioned in the above, should send for and read this Valuable Treatise, which will be sent to any address, sealed, on receipt of ten cents in stamps. Address all orders to M. V. Lubon, room 15 50 Front Street E., Toronto, Canada.

Nothing is Right.

The village of R—— was dissatisfied with its postmaster. Several petitions were forwarded to Washington, and as they were not immediately acted on, it was determined that the big man of the town should proceed to Washington and lay thecase before the postmaster-general.

The big man of the town lived on the interest of his money. He was called "Judge." Most of his letters came addressed to "Hon." So and So. He ran a church and a school, always headed every subscription, bossed the Fourth of July, dictated the policy of the village trustees, and was the only man who subscribed to a New York daily paper and talked stock.

The big man had never been nominated for governor, but that was because he did not want office. It was pretty generally understood that he could have a cabinet position any time he desired, and that somehow he influenced all the political appointments in six counties.

"Gentleman," said the big man, as he swelled up, I will go down to Washington and arrange this matter. You can rest easy."

If he had told us that he was going down to Washington to secure an act of congress to remove the Bunker Hill monument to Chicago we should have had faith in him. He departed. The band was at the depot to honor his departure, and the few citizens he deigned to shake hands with at once gained five pounds in avoirdupois. The train had hardly moved before our big man began to decrease in size. There was a general in the car; also a millionair; also a senator. No one knew our big man or paid any attention to him. When he reached Washington his hat was a whole size too large for him. When he was put in a back room on the fourth floor his chest measure decreased two inches.

The name of our big man on the hotel register caused no commotion. There was no rush of cards to his room. If the administration knew of his arrival it didn't call. In the lobby he heard men addressed as "Senator," "Colonel," "General," "Judge," and so on until he felt that his coat was too large for him. Next morning, when he started out to call on the postmaster-general, no band played. There was no send off. No one in Washington knew if he was our big man or our cobbler, and no one seemed to care. Every rod he travelled seemed to produce a shrinkage. He had always supposed that he was a bigger man than the Capitol building. One glance satisfied him that he made a mistake.

Our big man intended to talk very plainly to the postmaster-general. He would look very severe when he inquired why this thing was thus.

He inquired his way to headquarters, but had no sooner reached them than he found himself weak in the knees. His hat was now two whole sizes too large, and his vest would have pinned over two inches. He half hoped that the P. M. was out, and he was gratified. The P. M. was not out, but the Hessian who took his card and looked him up and down in a suspicious way soon returned to say:

"Very busy, sir. Leave your papers and call again. Call next week or the week after."

"But I have no papers, and I am Mr. Smith, of Smithville," protested our big man.

"Yes, but the postmaster-general is very busy—very busy. Have to call again, sir. We never heard of you, sir—never heard of you or your town. Better make your written application for the post-office and mail it.

Our big man returned home. He was wabbling in his clothes. He had paper in the lining of his hat to keep it from falling over his ears. His heels and toes had an inch play in his shoes. His lordly stomach had wilted away, and his autocratic bearing had gone hence. Our big man had met the enemy and he was theirs. He had travelled beyond the confines of our village, and his greatness had melted away like September frost—New York Sun.

Try McGill's 25c. tea and coffee. The best value in town.

German Professor (in lecture-room)—"Herr Richardson, you are sleeping." Richardson (rousing himself)—"I was merely talking a nap, sir, while we were waiting for the verb."

"What's your name, sis?" asked Cholly of the pretty waiter girl. "Pearl, sir." "Ah, you're the pearl of great price, no doubt." "No, sir, I'm the pearl before swine."

LOST.

WORDS BY WANDERER—AIR, "O, WHERE, O, WHERE HAS MY LITTLE DOG GONE."

O, the Dutton post-office has vanished from sight
And I fear 'twill never be found,
I have travelled all day, and now tis night,
The alarm bell I surely must sound.
O, where, O, where is the post-office gone,
O, where, O, where can it be,
With its arms extended and feelers all on,
O, why does it not embrace me?

With an office so small in a city so great
No wonder the search has been vain;
I feel so depressed, so sad is my fate,
And comfort where shall I obtain?
O, where, O, where has the post office gone,
O, where, O, where can it be,
My very best glasses I'm going to put on
And perhaps the lost treasure I'll see.

But the way is so long each side our Main Street.
Where I for the office must seek
There's a look of despair on each face that I meet
My courage and hope have grown weak.
O, where, O, where is the post-office gone,
O, where, O, where can it be,
Powers locomotive it must have on
And the result with sorrow I see.

My friends, my distress I cannot make known,
My suffering no words can express,
But the day will sone come when they'll have to atone
And each one bend the knee and confess
That the Dutton post office is always "At Home"
To those who are willing to see,
And ne'er from the path of duty doth roam,
Forever just so may it be.

Church Rules.

Dress hard all morning, such is fate—
Then enter church some minutes late.

All eyes will then be turned on you—
And will observe that bonnet new.

Let humble modesty wreath your face—
And take your seat with faultless grace.

Let all your thoughts be fixed on high—
And re-arrange your pea green tie.

Think how religion's prone to bless—
And criticise your neighbor's dress.

Let all your heart be filled with praise—
And notice Mrs. Simmon's lace.

Put from your mind all thoughts of sin—
And re-adjust your new gold pin.

Think of how good religion proves—
And smooth out your buttoned gloves.

Catch well the precept as they fall—
And don't forget your new lace shawl.

Think of the sinner's awful fate—
And notice if your bonnet's straight.

Pray for the influence divine—
That lady's basque—mark the design.

Let tender peace possess your mind—
And criticise that hat behind.

Reflect on Christian graces dear—
And fix those curls behind your ear.

Let your heart warm with silent prayer—
And view that horrid green silk there.

Reflect upon your wicked ways—
See that your chain is in its place.

Think of the peace the good shall find—
And wonder who are sitting behind.

Think of the burdens Christians bear—
And notice those strange ladies there.

The last words hear with contrite heart—
And fix your bustle before you start.

Growing Winter Grain.

In grain-growing countries such leading points as early or late sowing are far from being settled. While the majority of the best farmers agree in sowing their grain early, there are others who find, or think they find, enough benefit from sowing as late as their fathers did in a year when the weather was favorable, and are very loud in their assertions of "I told you so." However farmers may differ as to the time of sowing their grain, there are some points on which all will agree—the superiority of drilling in the seed over sowing broadcast, and the importance of thoroughly preparing the soil. On some newly-opened Western farms the visitor will be surprised to see the drills of the most approved patterns. The sensible farmer knows that it is poor economy in buying farm machinery to purchase any but the best. If one could be convinced of the superiority of drilled over broadcast seed, let him visit a field seeded in each way soon after the work is done. In the latter case some of the seed is buried so deep that it will be late in coming, if it sprouts at all, while in other parts of the same field a portion of the seed is exposed to the drying influence of the winds, the attack of birds and other enemies. So important is the use of the drill that it is not uncommon for farmers to form clubs for the joint purchase of them and other farming machines. Where there is a public spirited and forehanded farmer in the neighborhood, he can make a good investment of his funds by purchasing such machines and letting them to his neighbors at a fair rate. If machines are owned by individuals they will be more likely to be kept in good order than when owned by clubs.—American Agriculturist for September.

A long-winded artillery captain had his pocket picked in Denver recently, and his companions speak of him as "another rifled bore."

GOOD ADVICE.

TO be healthy and have lots of life and vim, be careful in diet, take plenty of sleep, and regulate the bowels, bile and blood with Burdock Blood Bitters, a sure cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, all blood humors, scrofula and all broken down conditions of the system.

CHOW-CHOW.

Sing a son of ten cents,
A tumbler full of rye,
Quite a lurid case of joy,
Plain to every eye.
When the jag was over,
Closed the wild carouse,
Wasn't that a doleful sight
In the station house.

A single scratch may cause a festering sore. Victoria Carbolic Salve rapidly heals cuts, wounds, bruises, burns and all sores.

A Born Grumbler.—"I am the unluckiest man living. Here I find a piece of money, and it is only a nickle. If any one else had found it, it would have been a quarter."

It can do no harm to try Freeman's Worm Powders if your child is ailing, feverish or fretful.

Mr. Gladstone is going to write a magazine article on "Pigs." Mr. Bismarck once wrote an article on "American Hogs" that created a furore in Chicago literary circles.

All ages and conditions of people may use National Pills without injury and with great benefit.

Mindful, perhaps, of Artemus Ward's dictum that it was a good thing for a comic paper to publish a joke every now and then, the Scotland Yard detectives have caught a forger.

UNRESTRICTED RECIPROCITY

may be of inestimable advantage to Canada or it may be a mere "fad," as its opponents call it, but no one can deny that Nasal Balm, has done more for sufferers from catarrh than any other remedy known. Mr. Thomas Roche, Rochefort, Ont., says:—I have suffered severely from catarrh, and never got any relief until I used Nasal Balm, I never thought I could find so sure a cure. It is a pity all afflicted with catarrh do not know of and use this wonderful medicine.

Old Lady (looking at antique furniture)—"A very unpleasant smell comes from this furniture, boy." Boy—"Yes'm, that's the varnish. That lot only came in this mornin', marm."

AT DEATH'S ROLL.

MY little boy had diarrhœa and came very near dying. After the failure of everything else we used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry which caused a quick cure, and I know of two others who were cured by the same remedy.

FREEMAN C. AMON,
Hillier, Ont.

Prima Donna (proudly)—"If that is the Prince of Wales at the door, tell him that the queen of the operatic stage has no desire to associate with mere princes." Maid—"It is not the prince, madam; it is a soap manufacturer."—"Oh! admit him."

The common sense treatment for Catarrh is Dr. Carson's Catarrh Cure. Give it a trial and rid yourself of that unpleasant and dangerous disease. Sold by all druggists, One dollar per bottle. Six bottles for five dollars.

"Did that lady buy anything?" asked the jeweler of his new boy, as the lady in question left the store, apparently in a temper.—"She did not. She asked me for an old-gold breastpin, and I asked her if she took this store for a junk-shop. Then she went out."

WHEREAS.

WHEREAS much disease is caused by wrong action of the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and blood, and whereas Burdock Blood Bitters is guaranteed to cure or relieve dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney complaint, dropsy, rheumatism, sick headache, etc. Therefore, Be it Resolved that all sufferers should use B. B. B. and be restored to health.

Johnny Dumpsey—"Say, Willie, didn't you ever think you'd like to be a pirate when you grew up?" Willie Popinjay (contemptuously)—"No! Pirates is played out. I want to be a member of some big trust, or a boodle alderman, or something of that sort."

For all derangements of the Bowels, Liver and Kidneys, there is no medicine like Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It purifies the blood, tones the system, and regulates all the vital organs. Sold in large bottles at fifty cents.

Wife—"John, my housekeeping allowance won't sufflce this week. You'll have to help me out about $5." Husband—"Is that so? What's the trouble?" Wife—"Oh, it won't happen again, but I have been trying some of the dollar dinners the newspapers are full of."

A FACT WORTH REMEMBERING.

MR. JAS. BINNIE, of Toronto, states that his little baby when three months old was so bad with summer complaint that under doctors' treatment her life was dispaired of. Four doses of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cured her.

"You would be sorry to lose your sister, wouldn't you, Jimmy?" asked the visitor suggestively to the little boy who was entertaining him in the parlor. "Nope," replied Jimmy. "I guess I could stand it, Mr. Hankinson; maw says I've got to wear short pants till after she's married.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

ON THE SURFACE.

SKIN diseases appear on the surface and are often humiliating to the sufferer from them. From two to three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters will cure salt rheum, erysipelas, shingles, tetter, nettle rash, eczema, boils, pimples, or blotches, at the same time restoring the general health.

Philadelphia has a Colonel New and Chicago a Major Old, and now where does General Average hang out?

A LINE FROM GLADSTONE.

MY little son aged two, was seized with diarrhœa, followed by piles, two doses of Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry gave relief and half the bottle completed a cure. [MRS. J. A. MCINTYRE. Gladstone, Man. This medicine is a specific for all summer complaints of children or adults.

Wallacetown

Last Thursday evening about 10 o'clock the inhabitants of this village were disturbed by the cry of fire. The fire was noticed in the direction of the sawmill and was found to be in a pile of saw dust. It was noticed by Misses Gunn and McGill, who were at Mr. Henry's well getting water, and they ran over and extinguished it. Had the fire been allowed to burn five minutes it could not have been put out as a strong south-east wind was blowing at the time and it would have swept the whole village. Schleihauf Bros. have a night watchman at present.

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church, of this place, purpose giving meals on the fair days in the vacant store of Miss Parker, opposite Miss McCrank's. They were very successful last year and the visitors may depend on getting a good meal.

Aldborough.

A quiet wedding took place at the residence of A. D. Gillies on Wednesday last, when his daughter, Miss Jennie, was united in the bonds of matrimony to Neil Taylor, of Belmont. The pleasing ceremony was performed by Rev. G. A. Francis. The young couple left for their home at Belmont, followed by the best wishes of the many friends of the bride.

Quite a number from here are attending the fairs at Toronto and Detroit this week.

The winners of the Montreal Witness "Dominion Prize Competition" have just been announced. The competition, concerning which we notice some writers request that it should be made annual, or at least repeated, was a capital device for stimulating patriotism and native literature at the same time. Tales and sketches were asked for from all school children, illustrative of pioneer life in Canada. The Northern Messenger, a small paper published at the same office, was offered as a prize for the best tale in every school in the Dominion. A prize of greater value, Macaulay's history in five volumes, was sent to the writer of the best tale in each county, and a set of Parkman's works was the reward of the best in each province. The judges appointed to award these prizes were men of recognized ability, the judge for the province of Ontario having been Mr. Wm. Houstan, Parliamentary Librarian, Toronto. Finally a Dominion prize, a splendid type-writer, was awarded by Lord Lorne. The Dominion prize has very curiously been taken by a young lady outside the Dominion, the Witness having, in view of its numerous readers in Newfoundland, counted that province, for the purpose of this competition, as though it had been a part of Canada. No one will be jealous that our little sister province has carried off this honor. The winner is Miss May Selby Holden of St. John's, whose portrait and autograph appear in the Witness with her tale. The second honor is awarded by Lord Lorne to Norman L. Cook of Gay's River, N. S., whose production also appears, as will many of others. The other province prize winners are: Miss Ellie Ladner, Kamloops, Yale Co., British Columbia; Miss Lizzie McLaren, Woodnorth, Dennis Co., Manitoba; Miss Mary Ann McPherson, River Charlo, Restigouche, New Brunswick; Miss Abigail Smith, Harwich, Kent Co., Ontario; Benj. Howard, Summerside, Prince Co., Prince Edward Island; Victor Morrill, Stanstead, Stanstead Co., Quebec. Following is the name of the County prize winner for Elgin Co.—Arthur E. Leitch, Dutton. Those who took school prizes were: Elgin Co.—Arthur E. Leitch, Dutton; Dama Munro, West Lorne; Hector Lang, Eagle; Howard Lamand, Eden; Bertie M. Mitchell, Straffordville; Miss Daisy Gesner, Highgate; Miss Daisy Caran, New Sarum; Harry Haves, Springfield.

A PRINCE OF ROUGES.

How a Swindler of Plebeian Birth Became the Intimate of Nobility and Even of Royalty.

I have been requested by the chief of the Vienna police to warn Americans against one of the most dangerous and successful swindlers ever set loose on an unsuspecting community, says a Vienna correspondent of the New York Tribune. It is but a year ago that he issued forth from the penitentiary here on the completion of his term of six years' imprisonment with hard labor, to which he had been sentenced in 1882, and already every capital of Europe is again ringing with accounts of his extraordinary exploits, his victims including even royal and imperial personages. At the present moment he is believed to be in the United States or on his way thither, his object being to exercise his profession in a new and rich field and to escape the pressing attentions of the European police. His real name is Charles Hoffmann, which he occasionally transforms into Baron von Hoffmann, Chevalier von Hoffmann, or Baron Henry de Courtier, the latter being his favorite alias. He describes himself as either an English or Austrian colonel, a statement which is borne out by his military carriage and appearance. He dresses with quiet elegance, is tall and powerfully built, with black hair and a thick gray mustache. His age is about 47 and he is married to a charming Russian princess, whom he has deserted after squandering to the last cent her once considerable fortune. The chief of police here adds that the pseudo "Colonel de Courtier" speaks English, French, German, Italian, and Russian without the slightest trace of any foreign accent.

His history is indeed a strange one. Born in 1843 at Prague as the son of a respectable glass-dealer named Hoffman he made his way to England in 1859, after his father's death, and in a very brief space of time spent every penny of his portion of the inheritance. In 1865 he made his appearance at Carlsbad, where he figured as a member of Queen Victoria's bodyguard of gentlemen-at-arms, every one of whom bears the rank of colonel. His fasinating manners, the fortune he appeared to possess, and the rank which he claimed in the British army proved sufficient to capture the heart and the hand of a princess, a wealthy and beautiful young Russian widow. Shortly after his marriage he took up his residence on his wife's estates in Russian Poland, and lived there with great splendor for several years. Cards and every other kind of extravagance soon made enormous inroads into his wife's fortune, and in 1872, after selling every portion of her property for which he could find a purchaser and mortgaging the remainder, he deserted the princess and moved to Berlin. While there he acquired several hundred thousand dollars as a negotiator of more or less fraudulent foreign railroad contracts, but spent the money as fast as he made it. He insinuated that he was in constant and confidential intercourse with Prince Bismarck, and that he was frequently employed by him for confidential political missions. Although this was believed to be the case at the time by his victims, and proved to be a source of material support to him in his swindling operations, yet it has since been discovered that the chancellor did not even know him by sight. Berlin at length became too hot to hold him any longer, and in 1875 he took up his residence in London, where he described himself as the nephew of Baron von Hoffmann, who at that time held the post of minister of finance of the Austro-Hungarian empire. It was due to a belief in the existence of this relationship that he was made an honorary member of several of the very best London clubs, where the insouciance, liberality, and sangfroid with which he lost large sums at cards soon won for him a host of friends of the highest rank, including even the heir-apparent, a number of whose letters were found among his papers at the time of his arrest in 1882. It is probable that his losses at cards were intentional and that he was shrewd enough to perceive that money spent in that manner would enable him considerably to extend the field of his swindling operations "en grand." That the investment was of a profitable nature is shown by the enormous extent of the frauds which he perpetrated in London and by the fact that his acquaintances of the card table not only invited him to their houses and country-seats, but also presented him to their bankers, and even went so far as to furnish him with letters of recommendation to the British representatives at foreign courts.

Hence it happened that he was frequently to be met at the tables of the English ambassadors and ministers in continental capitals, whose leading citizens can scarcely be blamed for having accorded their confidence and consideration to a man whom they knew to be treated with such marked cordiality by her Britannic majesty's envoys. So favorable was the impression which he created both at Rome and and at Lisbon that King Humbert conferred upon him the cross of a cavalier of the order of the Crown—the same which George M. Pullman possesses, while the Portuguese sovereign made him a knight of the order of Christ. During one of his visits to Brussels he became acquainted with the late Crown Prince Rudolf of Austro-Hungary, who conceived a great liking for him. Foresseeing the advantage of an intimacy of this nature, Hoffmann announced his intention of presenting to the archduke a magnificent yacht as a wedding gift. The plans of the latter were duly submitted to Prince Rudolf and approved by him; and Crown Princess Stephanie's chamberlain, Admiral Count Bombelles, was actually in correspondence with Hoffman respecting the date on which her imperial highness was to christen the yacht, when suddenly the prospective giver of the latter was arrested in this city on charges of forgery and fraud of the most extensive kind. A few weeks later, June 26, 1882, Karl Hoffmann, the friend of the British and Austrian heirs-apparent, the honored guest of English ambassadors and envoys, the husband of a princess, and a knight of several royal orders was sentenced to a term of penal servitude for a series of frauds unparalleled since the days of Robert Macaire.

This is the illustrious stranger, then, who under some alias is now about to honor the United States with his presence with a view to business.

SCIENTIFIC AND USEFUL.

Sealing-wax, or a mixture of asphalt and gutta-percha melted and thoroughly incorporated with each other, will mend hard rubber.

Papier-mache articles should be cleaned with soap and warm water, and finally polished with a little sweet oil in which half the quantity of bee's-wax has been melted.

Lavender-water, a most useful adjunct to the toilet, is made by adding an ounce of the essential oil of lavender and two drachms of ambergris to a pint of proof spirit of wine. Place in a quart bottle, and shake the mixture long and well. It should not be used for a day or two.

Berlin-wool-work, especially the lighter colours, is very apt to catch the dirt; but it may be cleaned by dipping and agitating it in a soapy lather. It must on no account be rubbed or wrung; and, when the dirt has been extracted bs this means, it must be well ruised in plenty of water hung to drip, and then pulled into shape and stretched to dry.

The Italian Admiralty have recently carried out a number of experiments with a view of testing the comparative merits of castor-oil and olive oil for lubricating purposes on board ship. From the results obtained, they have given orders that henceforth all exposed parts of machinery are to be lubricated exclusively with castor-ofl, while mineral oils are to be used for cylinder and similar lubrication.

One often reads pathetic stories of pet birds that die simultaneously with or shortly after their child-owners. It sounds pretty; but the simple prose of the matter often is that the owners infected the birds. Canaries and other songsters will catch scarlet-fever, measles, diphtheria, or almost any other human disease, and, if left in the sick-room, they are almost sure to be infected. Pet cats and small dogs, too, are often sacrificed in the same way; and in their case there is also the risk that they will go out and become the unwitting instruments of disseminating disease.

Cherry stain: Mix tegether, by stirring, one quart of spirits of turpentine, one pint of japan, one pound of Venetian red ground in oil, and two ounces of dry burnt umber. Apply with a brush, and wipe off with a cloth; finish with one coat of shellac and two coats of varnish. A thin solution of permanganate of potassa in hot water will make a good walnut colour. Apply several coats, allowing plenty of time for drying between each coat. Boiled oil may be used as a polish. If a little turpentine is added to the oil, it will work easier. A very fine mahogany stain is made by boiling eight ounces of fustic in one gallon of water. The old rule is to streak the wood before it is quite dry with black stain to produce the grain of mahogany.

We have in the case of electrical waves along a wire a disturbance outside the wire and a current within it; and the equations of Maxwell allow us to calculate these with perfect accuracy and give all the laws with respect to them. We thus find, says Mr. H. A. Rowland, that the velocity of propagation of the waves along a wire, hung far away from other bodies and made of good conducting material, is that of light, or one hundred and eighty-five thousand miles per second; but, when it is hung near any conducting matter, like the earth, or enclosed in a cable and sunk into the sea, the velocity becomes much less. When hung in space, away from other bodies, it forms as it were, the core of a system of waves in the other, the amplitude of the disturbance becoming less and less as we move away from the wire. But the most curious fact is that the electric current penetrates only a short distance into the wire, being mostly confined to the surface, especially where the number of oscillations per second is very great.

A method of treatment for foreign bodies in the stomach, which appears to be practised with almost uniform success in both England and on the Continent, consists in the administration simply of large amounts of potatoes, to which the diet should be restricted. Potatoes, as is well known, are composed of nearly twenty per cent. of carbohydrates, eighty per cent. of the solids being starch and cellulose. On account of this large amount of carbohydrate, a great portion will resist the action of the digestive juices. The cellulose and other carbohydrates increasing greatly in volume from imbibition with water lead to an accumulation of an immense amount of indigestible residue; consequently the intestinal tube is, throughout the entire time of the administration of this food, filled with large masses of non-absorbable matter. The folds of the intestine become obliterated, and fixation of the foreign body in the intestinal tube is thus avoided. It seems that from five to nine days, or even longer, are required for the evacuation of the foreign body; and in every case which does not seem desperate a trial of this simple plan of treatment should precede precede resort to gastrotomy. In fact, at a recent meeting of the Vienna Medical College Professor Billroth said that since the introduction of this procedure gastrotomy for foreign bodies should become an obsolete operation.

An Adventuresome Lady.

It is reported from Milan that the Baroness Cautoni, a young lady of nineteen, celebrated for her beauty as well as for her startling originality, has announced her intention of undertaking a journey into the interior of Africa. She will be accompanied by a relative, an elderly lady belonging to the Austrian aristocracy, and attended by several male and female servants. An officer in the Italian army has undertaken to lead the expedition, and is already busily engaged in making arrangements. The party will set out on November 1, and the tour will last for a year. After a call at Aden, Massowah will be visited, and thence the Baroness with her followers will penetrate into the interior of the continent.—[N. Y. Post.

Surprise Gowns.

Surprise gowns, says the London "Court Journal," are the latest thing of the moment. The one included in this trousseau had two aspects, a pretty, tender green cashmere, with a rather plain skirt, and a double-breasted jacket to match. When, hey! presto! the two fronts of the skirt open and are fastened to a button at the back, showing a pink silk skirt very boldly embroidered in black and gold, and also the revers. The jacket turns back also to show a waistcoat and linings equally resplendent. Armed with such a gown the wearer is ready for any emergency.

A Big Rattler.

Capt. Whitney of Whitneyville is an old snake hunter, but he had an experience the other day that caused him more alarm than all the snake fights he has ever had before. He had promised Miss Ione and Miss Bertha Stone and Leonard Eaton a day in the mountains when huckleberries were ripe, and last week all four of them started to Marsh Creek. They climbed the mountains near Asaph Run and picked berries until the sun had almost hidden itself behind the Bad Eagle Mountains. They were returning down the steep hillside and on a direct line with the place where they had left their horses and wagons. It was not far from the base of the mountains, when suddenly the party heard the loud rattle of a snake. The reptile was soon discovered and it proved to be a monster in size. It was coiled up and ready for a hard fight, but three huge stones dropped on its head put an end to its existence. It measured five feet and seven inches in length, was ten inches around the body, and had seven rattles. While these measurements were being made the rattles of another snake was heard close by. Its hiding place was under the stone on which Capt. Whitney was standing, and its death followed in short order. It had about the same size as the first one killed, and had the same number of rattles. The party was in a rocky ravine, a very uncomfortable place to meet a rattlesnake. They were just leaving it when the rattle of a third snake was heard.

The party retreated rapidly, and for some distance away they heard the continuous and defiant rattle of what seemed to be a hundred snakes. Capt. Whitney is 66 years of age, and is one of the best known snake hunters in Tioga county. When he lived at Corning he spent many days in the mountains hunting the reptiles, and he has captured many rattlesnakes alive with a piece of cord. He says during this last experience he was scared for the first time.

Boulanger's Extradition.

The law of extradition between nations is what two or more nations agree to make it. There may be no extradition law, or one that will surrender an alleged offender on any ground upon which he might be arrested and held to answer in the country in which the offense was alleged to have been committed. Usually, however, it is only the graver classes of crimes for which extradition is provided. The conviction of General Boulanger for treason will raise a question in England as to his right of asylum as a political refugee. The crime of which the French Senate has found him guilty is in itself a capital offense in all countries. But treason is, unlike murder, theft, arson or forgery, in a measure a political offense. The most famous patriots have been at one stage of their career declared guilty of the crime of treason. Boulanger claims that the September election will dissipate the charge the Senate has made against him. Of course the election cannot determine the question of guilt or innocence, but one may define the view the people take of the acts which the Senate has declared to be treason. In the present sensitive condition of European politics a demand upon the English Government for the surrender of Boulanger might add to the chances of a general outbreak. If war occurs, probably it will not be long before France and Russia will be engaged against the triple alliance, with which England is now reported to have cast her fortunes. If a demand for the extradition of Boulanger and his associates, Dillon and Rocheforte, if refused, as it probably will be if made, the French will construe it as an unfriendly act. Should the September election show an increase in the strength of the Carnot Administration, a refusal to surrender a man whom that Government has declared guilty of treason might not be taken in good part.

Honors Won by a Bright English Girl.

Miss Mary Louisa Worley is the daughter of a medical man residing in London. No sooner were her school years over than Miss Worley began to look to college as the field for the further development of her powers. She did not, in the first instance, aim at Oxford or Cambridge, but directed her attention by preference toward the examinations of the London University. Strong evidence was afforded from the outset that the young student would do full justice to the admirable intellectual training she had received.

In that exacting and difficult examination, the London Matriculation, Miss Worley not only passed, she came out third on the list, and as an inevitable result she was immediately awarded an exhibition and the Gilchrist scholarship. But not content with the honors that London could bestow upon her, a year later, viz., in 1884, she tried for and won a scholarship at Girton College, Cambridge. This energetic young lady now pursued double academic career. In 1886 she graduated in classical honors at London University, and did the same thing at Cambridge in 1888 To be practically bachelor of arts in two universities would have satisfied the ambition of most persons, but not so with Miss Mary.

There still remained one more attainable height. To become a London master of arts was the last and greatest victory, for Miss Worley passed the examination so brilliantly that she took the first place, and at the same time won the gold medal for classics. Miss Worley has resolved to devote her exceptional talents to the profession of teaching.

Advice Good, But Unnecessary.

A middle-aged coloured woman who occasionally worked for a lady in a certain American city one day informed her employer that she could not do any more work for her, as she intended "gittin' mah'ied."

"Indeed!" exclaimed the lady. "So you are going to be married?'

"Yes'm, I is, fo' sartain."

"Well, I hope, Rosa, that you have given the matter careful consideration?"

"Yes m."

Finding her in a receptive mood, the lady thought it an excellent time to give some advice on the subject of matrimony, and she improved the occasion. Rosa listened patiently, and then said,

"Dat's so, lady—dat's so! I tell yo' dis gittin' mah'ied ain't no trifiin' business! I'se been mah'ied fo' times already myself, lady, an' I knows dat w'at you done say is a solemn fac.'

The Hay-Field.

Is any season so blithe and merry,
So gay with flowers, or so sweet with song,
As that of the rose and the ripened cherry
When nights are tranquil and days are long?
The earth has forgotten her time of sadness,
The silence and shadows have passed away;
There is nothing but universal gladness
Among the hay.

This is the season when lads and lasses
Are up betimes in the sunny field;
When the swish of the scythe lays low the grasses,
And the passing hours new pleasures yield.
The time of the festive sweet hay-making,
When the sporting laugh and the joyous word,
And the song of grateful love partaking
Are all day heard.

Why should we squander the days in sighing
That the things which are lovely do not stay?
That the dancing grasses so soon are dying?
Let us be merry amid the hay.
There is time enough for the coming sorrow,
There is wealth of beauty around us yet
Let us use to-day and leave to-morrow,
Nor God forget.

Blue and bright is the sky above us,
Sweet with the flowers is the scented air;
All things whisper that God doth love us,
All sounds woo us to happy prayer.
The forest glades are with joy-songs ringing,
From morn to night of the happy day
Let human voices to Him be singing
From fields of hay.

Though far away are the days of childhood,
Of glad light-heartedness, careless mirth,
There is pleasure still in the field and wild wood,
And joy for all dwellers in God's fair earth.
What does it matter that we grow older?
The best shall come when we pass away;
And we learn a lesson, that makes faith bolder,
From fields of hay.

Nothing is coming that need oppress us;
Let us raise in triumph a trustful song:
God is our Father, and he will bless us—
His love makes summer the whole year long.
Though skies should darken and flowers be failing,
Though life be stormy and days grow dim,
God's power and mercy are aye prevailing;
We trust in Him.

Unanimous.

Could anything be more ludicrous than the position of an anonymous author, a poet at that, being forced by circumstances to abuse his own book! Coleridge once found himself in this ridiculous predicament, and in "Grattan's Reminiscences" the story is told as related by the poet himself to Mr. Grattan. "Lyrical Ballads," the joint work of Wordsworth and Coleridge, had just been published anonymously, and though poorly received, it had made a good deal of noise.

"A few days after its publication I dined at Mrs. Barbauld's, and sat beside 'many-tomed' Pinkerton, as he was called, from the number and variety of his writing. We talked a good deal together, and I found him very amusing and full of general information. When we retired to the drawing-room, he led me to a recess, having taken up a copy of the 'Lyrical Ballads,' which lay on the table. 'Pray, sir,' said he, 'have you read this thing?'

"'I have looked into it. Do you know the author?" echoed I, resolved not to be caught.

"'No,' said Pinkerton; 'but I never read such utter trash as his book, particularly an extravagant farrago of absurdity called "The Ancient Mariner." Don't you think it insufferable?'

"Coleridge: 'Intolerable!'

"Pinkerton: 'Detestable!'

"Coleridge: 'Abominable!'

"Pinkerton: 'Odious!'

"Coleridge: 'Loathsome!'

"Pinkerton, 'Sir, you delight me. It is really delightful to meet a man of sound taste in these days of our declining literature. If I have a passion on earth, it is an abhorrence of these "Lyrical Ballads," of which every one is talking, but most especially this "Ancient Mariner."'

"Coleridge: 'Hush! not a word more! Here comes our hostess! I know she is acquainted with the author, and she might be hurt.'

"Pinkerton:—pulling Coleridge by the button, taking a huge pinch of snuff, and speaking in a whisper—'I'll tell you what, sir; we mustn't let this matter drop. Let's fix a day for dining together at the Turk's Head. We'll have a private room, a beefsteak, a bottle of old port, pens, ink, and a quire of foolscap. We'll lay our heads together and review this thing; and if we don't give it such a slashing, such a tearing, such a—'

"'If we don't!' said Coleridge.

"'It is a bargain?'

"'Most certainly!'

"'Done!'

"'Done!'"

Not to be Fooled Again.

A shepherd once, to prove the quickness of his dog, who was lying before the fire in the house whree we were talking, said to me in the middle of a sentence concerning something else: "I am thinking, sir, the cow is in the potatoes." Thouh he purposely laid no stress on these words, and said them in a quiet, unconcerned tone of voice, the dog who appeared to be asleep, immediately jumped up, and leaping through an open window, scrambled upon the turf roof of the house, from which he could see the potato field. He then (not seeing the cow there) ran and looked into the farm yard where she was, and finding that all was right, came back to the house. After a short time the shepherd said the same words again, and the dog repeated the out look; but, on the false alarm being a third time given, the dog got up, wagging his tail, looked his master in the face with so comical an expression of interrogation that he could not help laughing at him. On which, with a slight growl, he laid himself down in his small corner with an offended air, as if determined not to be made a fool again.

WOMEN BARRED.

A Movement to Exclude them from Funerals in the Future.

A new departure in the conduct of funerals is that of excluding from the burial services all female relatives and friends of deceased, an idea that is gaining a considerable foothold among prudent people. A recent advertisement among the local death notices contained the following: "Male members of the family only are invited to attend the funeral."

The funeral was that of a wealthy lady living in Philadelphia, who stated previous to her death that she wanted no ostentation at her funeral, and desired that it should be attended by no women, for it might, in case of bad weather, subject them to risk of contracting diseases that possibly might prove fatal. This is one example of quite a number that have recently occurred in that city.

In New York most of the funerals were attended only by the male members of the family of the deceased, and in the European countries this scheme has for a long time been in vogue. According to the opinions of the prominent undertakers the day is not far distant when the mourners at all funerals will be confined to a few male members of the family of the deceased.

"The custom in vogue of a large concourse of friends and relatives attending funerals is a very foolish one," remarked a well-known undertaker. "Male members of the family only should accompany the hearse to the burial-ground. Ladies should not be taken to the burial-ground for more than one reason, either in good or bad weather. Its subjects them to a great nervous strain to see the body of some member of their family or some relative lowered into the ground, and time and time again I have seen ladies faint from their nervous excitement.

"Sometimes there is a hitch in the dropping of the coffin, so that considerable difficulty is occasioned in getting it straightened out. Accidents of this nature are very prolific of nervous prostration, and women should not be submitted to them.

"It is a striking fact that half of our funerals take place on stormy days, when it is positively dangerous for any man, not to mention ladies, to stand for a long time on the wet ground until the interment is finished. This city is, however, getting to be somewhat enlightened on the subject of funerals. A few years ago there were forty or fifty carriages to every funeral, but now this number is reduced to about eight. Of course, the more people who attend funerals the better it is for the undertaker. His business is advertised, and he comes in for the burial of those who are taken sick and die because of the exposure at the burial-ground. But we undertakers have sympathetic souls, like other classes of humanity, and I, for one, advise all my patrons to have the funeral ceremony at the house, and then let only a few gentlemen of the family accompany the body to the cemetery."—[Philadelphia Paper.

"Are you fond of autographs, Mr. Mushroom?" asked the aesthetic young lady of the practical visitor. Chinese Sacred Narcissus.

Oriental Lily, or Joss Flower.

This beautiful variety is grown by the Chinese, according to their ancient custom, to bloom at the advent of their New Year. It is highly prized and called by them "Joss Flower," or "Flower of the Gods." The bulbs are specially grown by a method known only to themselves, whereby they attain great size and strength, insuring luxuriant growth and remarkable profusion of bloom, in a very short period. They are generally flowered in shallow ornamental bowls containing water, the bulbs being surrounded by bright colored pebbles to prevent them from toppling over when in bloom.

The flowers, which are borne in clusters on tall spikes, are white with a golden yellow center, and deliciously fragrant. The bulbs bloom in six to eight weeks after planting.—The Steele Bros. Co'y, Toronto, Bulb Catalogue. Send for it.

THE SPEAR IN WAR.

Its Long and Bloody History About Over—Now Useful in the Hands of Cavalry Only.

It is just four years since Osman Digma promised his army of fuzzy-headed Hadendowas that their spears should drive the bayonets of their enemies into the Red Sea. Soon after there came, as the Mahdi's Lieutenant no doubt thought it, the fulfilment of the promise, for Baker Pasha, advancing to the relief of Tokar, was overwhelmed by the rush of the Arab spearman, and 2,000 of his troops were killed. Then Sinkat fell, and soon after Tokar surrendered. But, on a sudden, the tide turned, and at El Teb our young troops, fighting hand to hand with the Soudanese, once more restored to the bayonet the prestige of supremacy. Leaping out of their pits the Arabs came rushing on to our square—"as magnificent a spectacle of courage as the world had ever seen," said Col. Fred Burnaby—fearless of death, shouting and brandishing their spears. Nor did the steady volleying of our Martinis stop the impetuous onset, for the gallant enemy would not be gainsaid. They came right on through the storm of bullets and crossed their spears with British steel. It was a tough fight and a fair one, but the bayonet gained the day.

Once and again, after this, the same sharp lesson has been taught. At Abu Klea, exactly as at Tamanieb, the Soudanese tried hard and bravely

TO RUSH OUR SQUARE.

At one point, in spite of a withering fire, they actually did penetrate it, but, as before, the hand-to-hand fight of bayonet against spear that ensued ended in the victory of the former. At McNeill's zareba the fighting was as close, but the bullet and the bayonet foiled the great cross-handed sword and lengthy spear.

Now at Toski the same old tale has been told.

The majority of the Arabs, in all these fights, were armed with only theirs pears and swords, and the disproportion in the killed on the Nile—fifteen hundred against seventeen—proves the fatal superiority of arms of precision, when held by cool and disciplined soldiers, over the weapons of past days, the ponderous Crusader-fashion sword which the Soudanese carry, and the lance which, till gunpower was invented, was the most formidable weapon of war.

Once recognized as a formidable weapon, two varieties came into existence, the heavy stabbing "assegai," as the Zulus call it, and the lighter one with keener head for throwing. Among savage nations these are still in vogue. The South American carries both. All over Africa it is the chief equipment of the warrior, varying from the needle-pointed javelin of some of the equatorial tribes to the broad paddle-blade heads of the ponderous spears of others.

These races, however, are all foot soldiers; and it is only when we turn to nations of horsemen that we meet with "the lance" such as Europe recognizes. Without exaggerating it into the preposterous length of the Macedonian "sarissa," we have elongated it beyond the proportions of most of the spears of antiquity, and proved it, in our own Lancers' hands, and in those of the famous Bengal Cavalry, a terrible weapon indeed.

In Homer we read how Achilles thrust Hector through the neck with his spear, "a pole heavy with bronze," and the early Persians added a sharp spike to the butt end, so that it could be used either way. The Greek lance was a light missile, scarcely nine feet long, and was the chief arm of their cavalry, and from them was borrowed by the Roman horseman. But the Roman spear par excellence was the short, heavy pilum, which, with the broadsword, only two feet long in the blade, won so many victories for the Legions and established the wisdom of the saying that "the people who shortened their weapons lengthened their boundaries." The Gauls are described as fighting with a ponderous club-like spear, while in Illyria the soldiers carried a fine slight javelin, which they called their "spits." Ancient Germany and Spain also had their characteristic lances, the one massive like a mace, the other a mere reed for lightness. Thus alternating between the heavy and the light, we find the same arm everywhere in use by infantry, while the cavalry carried almost invariably the longer "lance," which still holds its own even in these days of firearms. In India, a country of unrivalled spearmen, the mounted lancers have always been conspicuous in battle, and her Majesty has no finer soldiers than the "Irregular Horse" of Hindostan. Arabia is another country famous for the skill of its spearmen, and travellers never weary of telling of the dexterous feats, the terrific appearance, of the mounted Bedouins.

Historically, the spear is very important, for time after time, in the annals of Asia and Europe, it has turned the scale of battle; how it flashes through all the courtly records of chivalry and glitters in the story of half a hundred nations; how romance delights in it, the knightliest of weapons and the most beautiful; and how sober history itself takes fire from these sharp steel points of the Asiastic hosts twinkling all along the vexed boundaries of imperial Rome, kindles at the glinting onrush of Macedonian and Scythian, and brightens into the very poetry of war when Saracen and Crusader meet, and the sunlight strikes of their pennoned lances all down the embattled line. From one exquisite and fatal form to another it has passed from country to country, always elegant, always deadly, and to be seen to day in the perfection of its peculiar grace when the irregular cavalry of India take the field with their fluttering lances. Terror hovers above them as they pass into action, and history seems to roll back for centuries with the wild cry of their unrivalled spearmen, Sikh and Jat, Pathan and Mahratta, as they sight their foe and lower their lance heads to the level of death. It was at the points of these same spears, shod with steel from the valleys of the Nerbudda and the Taptee, that Sivaji founded the Maratha dominion in India, shattering the hated Mohammedan supremacy, and stretching the authority of the Peishwalik from sea to sea. It was at the points of these same spears that in our greatest campaigns in India we often carried off victory, and the history of our Bengal cavalry telling how again and again they held the scale of the day's fortunes, and again and again turned it in our favor, is as brilliant a record as ever soldiers earned.

In Egypt, as we have learned at such frequent cost, the Soudanese thoroughly understand the use of the ancient national arm, and do not hesitate to oppose the spear to the bayonet. It is a desperate weapon, indeed, in the hands of such brave men as Wad-el-Njumi commanded, but the pitiless fire of our rifles gives the gallant fellows but little chance of coming to the close quarters in which alone their spears can be deadly. The Zulus, when they rushed in on the camp of the Twenty-fourth at Isandlawana, sung first.

A VOLLEY OF THE LONGER ASSEGAIS, and then closed with the stabbing one, and, getting into the middle of our men before they could form, slew as they pleased. So, too, when the troops of Hicks Pasha and Gen. Baker let the Arabs get among them, the massacre was rapid and complete. At El Teb they tried hard to do the same, but the Highlanders would not have it, and the line of British steel kept the host outside the square till the guns and rifles, pouring in their shells and bullets, compelled them to retire. At Abu Klea, again, the tactics were similar. The enemy, "by a cleverly executed movement, also disappeared from view," and then suddenly reappearing close to our troops, flung themselves headlong against our square, hoping to force their way into it, and in the melee that would thus ensue to find the opportunity for effective use of their headed spears. The sight must have been a most imposing one, and calculated to shake the steadiest nerves, as the two masses, 5,000 men in each, suddenly burst out from their covert, and with their wild cries of "For the Faith!" came at racing speed upon our guns, brandishing above their heads, as they rushed to death, the spears which their leader once told them where to drive the British bayonets back to the Red Sea.

It was a gallant effort. But the day of the spear as a weapon for hand to hand combat is past, and not even all the courage of the Khalifa's men can avail to restore it to its old pre-eminence in war. For light cavalry it still remains without challenge the most effective arm but if Hector holds a rifle Achilles has no chance of reaching him with his "pole heavy with bronze."

The Congo.

Some interesting particulars of affairs on the Congo are given by a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, showing that with the development of commerce on the great river slavery is fast dying out. Boma and Macadi, up the Congo, to which ports vessels from Liverpool are now plying direct, are becoming the chief ports from which produce is being shipped, and the facilities at these places are gradually but surely drawing the ivory trade away from Zanzibar. On the higher reaches of the Congo, Tippoo Tib, who up to quite recently has been held up to execration as a slave hunter, is now the principal means of diverting the ivory which hitherto, was taken to Zanzibar and other ports on the east coast. The King of the Belgian's little State has now its officials at the very spot where the Arabs collect the ivory. Instead of making raids on villages and killing hundreds of natives to obtain slaves to carry the ivory to the east coast, the Araba can now sell it to the Congo Free State as Stanley Falls, where a regular ivory market at present exists. The Arabs, not requiring carriers, have no need of slaves, except for domestic purposes, and the heinous traffic is gradually expiring. The road from the Upper Congo at Niangwe and from the Tanganyika to the east coast is a difficult one, and often ivory carried by slaves took one or two years to reach the coast by that route. In the neighbourhood of Stanley Falls, the former slave dealers are forming themselves into a peaceful colony under Tippoo Tib, who has seemingly discarded his old slave raids and is employing his energies in ruling the people. It is the belief that the Tanganyka Zanzibar route will ere long be entirely superseded by the Congo route. This is the tendency at present, and when the Congo railway is completed the Congo route will be more used. Matadi, can be reached by ocean steamers, and from Matadi, which is at the foot of the cataracts, the railway will start. Belgian, French, and Dutch houses are now established at Stanley Pool, and are buying the ivory there which formerly found its way by caravans to the Angola coast.

CARRIED BY SLAVES,

A MAGNIFICENT RIVER

running paralled with and to the west of the Congo has lately been discovered. The river, the Lomami by name was found to be easily manageable and with a good depth. The Lomami will allow of the navigable Congo system being brought into direct communication with Niangwe, the chief Arab settlement in the high Congo, the navigable river being only at a distance of three days' march from that town. The communication between Niangwe and Stanley Falls by the Congo is almost impossible, owing to the many falls and rapids, and the Lomami will form a further means of extending protection and bringing civilization to regions which have suffered much from the Arab raids for slaves.

Settling the Preliminaries.

Sounds of dire conflict came from the barn and Mr. Kajones went hastily out to see what was the matter.

"What are you doing, Willie?" he demanded, as soon as he could make himself heard.

"We're settlin' the preliminaries of a world's fair we're a goin' to hold in this buildin'," yelled Willie in a voice that rose above the din. "Bobby Scampleford calls his dog New York an' I call mine Chicago, and we just writ the word "exposition" on a bone and throwed it down between 'em. Chicago is climbin' all over him. Good deg. Tennyson's Wise Words.

"At the risk of provoking a smile at our simplicity," writes Dr. J. M. Buckley in the "Christian Advocate," we will relate that long years ago, when we thought that great men, if they speak at all, always speak words of wisdom, we followed Tennyson, who was accompanied by a lady and two children, about South Kensington Museum for two hours and a half, hoping that he would speak. At last he made signs as if he were about to do so. Hoping to hear some criticism of a painting we listened intently, and these memorable words fell from the lips of England's Poet Laureate:—'You take care of the children while I go and get some beer.'"

PERSONALS.

The youngest admiral of the English fleet is Sir Geoffrey Hornby. The eldest is Sir Provo Wallis, who is 98 years old. It is just eighty-five years—just the year before Trafalgar—since he first went to sea. And it is seventy-six years and three months since he fought in that famous sea fight between the English Shannon and the Chesapeake, of Boston—the latest fight between England and her American offspring.

Edna Lyall, anthor of "We Two," "A Knight Errant," and other semi-religious novels, is named in reality Ada Ellen Bayley. She is an English woman and has considerable means apart from the earnings from her novels, which have a prodigious sale. She spends much of this money in charity, and the earnings from one of her books last year went into the purchase of a chime of bells for the village church near which she lives.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe lives a peculiar existence at present. She eats very little, confining her diet almost altogether to bread and butter and fruit. She sleeps well in the day time, but is apt to be wakeful at night. At times she seems to have a momentary return of her old brilliancy, but as a general thing is mentally apathetic. She is fond of being in the open air and can walk about a little with a cane. Her tenure of life is considered remarkable by her physicians, who say she has the strongest vitality of any woman they have ever known.

The most extravagant instance of literary relic worship on record is said to be that of an Englishman of letters, who wears constantly around his neck a portion of Shelley's charred skull. It is enclosed in a little gold casket. The bones of Victor Hugo are being turned into money, for among the relics exhibited to sight-seers at his former home is a huge tooth, with this inscription below: "Tooth drawn from Victor Augo by the dentist on Wednesday, Aug. 11, 1871, at Vianden, in the gardens of the house of Mme. Koch, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.'

Pasteur is described as a modest, unassuming man, a trifle below medium height, with a slight limp in the right leg. His grey hair is short and his beard, also grey, is short cropped. His face wears a look of intense thought, which does not relax, even when a smile comes to light it up. As is but just, Pasteur's popularity is great in Paris, and when he stood at the entrance of the institute that bears his name, and with his favourite grandchild, a tiny little girl, standing by his side, welcomed the representatives of the universities of every land come to pay homage to the greatest scientist of his time, there broke forth from the ranks of lusty-throated students cries loud and long of "Vive Pasteur!"

Maud Howe, the daughter of Julia Ward Howe, has written a novel for the "Ladies' Home Journal," which paid her $1,000 for it, and it is to appear shortly. She writes under her maiden name, but she is in reality Mrs. John Elliot, the wife of the decorative artist. There is a romantic story connected with their marriage, by the way. When the Howes were in Rome some ten years ago they became acquainted with the handsome young American artist, who was copying old masters there, and when he fell sick of the Roman fever with no one to look after him, they, with their usual kindness, nursed and cared for him, and were rather amused when the susceptible boy fell in love with the handsome Maud while she was putting cold bandages on his head. She was engaged at the time to Porter the celebrated potrait painter, whose picture of her had made both sitter and artist famous, but they never married; the engagement was broken and Porter married another very pretty girl. Three years ago young Elliot came back to America with commissions from some rich Chicagoans, and found Miss Howe free and becoming known as a novelist. His passion had not waned a single shade, and he persuaded her to think of him more seriously than she did of the pretty, clever boy she had nursed through the fever in Rome.

All the World's a Stage.

The scene is bright, the actor gay,
With a mask of golden gladness;
(Oh! breaking heart, thy part well play,
We reck not of thy sadness.)

Dark Tragedy! Fair Comedy!
Oh! neck and neck thy race is;
Night's curtain falls on Death and Life,
In this play of "Masks and Faces."

While laughter shines within the eye,
The tears are heavy at the heart;
Real is the smile, or real the sigh?
On this world's stage each plays a part!

Fair Comedy! Dark Tragedy!
Oh! neck and neck thy race is;
Night's curtain falls on Life and Death,
In this play of "Masks and Faces."

Convention of Wheat Growers.

Circulars have been issued calling a convention of wheat growers to be held in St. Louis, in October, for the alleged purpose of considering "new systems of business and the combinations against them." The declaration that they are seeking protection from the exactions of trusts and pools is taken by some to mean a purpose to attempt to form a trust to control the production of wheat and "to secure better prices for the same by a systematic regulation of the supply and demand." Almost any movement among farmers to discuss their interests, and induce intelligent and united action in meeting burdens imposed upon them by combines, trusts and monopolies is in a pertinent direction, and hopeful of results; but the idea of a federation or trust to control production and regulate the price of wheat is chimerical. No movement among farmers, however manifestly in their interest, has been able to command any thing like the united support of the farmers in any considerable locality. If there were a combination in Canada, for instance, among the wheat growers to increase the price of their product by reduction of acreage, the men in the combine might put a certain percentage of their wheat land into other crops or allow it to lie idle, but the wheat growers outside of the trust would plow all night to add to their acreage and take advantage of the supposed opportunity.

Sensations of a Man Who Got Into the Embrace of a Devil-Fish

"We were lying about half a mile off the beach at Barbados, overhauling the standing rigging," said James Gillis, able seaman, "when the mate ordered John Webb, an apprentice boy, and myself into the yawl, which had been covered and brought around to the port side, that some painting might be done just abaft the mainmast. It was a terribly hot day, with the water very warm and the men having little energy. The paint was lowered down to us, and while I used the brush the boy held the yawl in position. We had been at work for about a quarter of an hour when the boy suddenly yelled out in affright, and as I turned to him he declared that he had seen a horrible-looking object pass under the boat, and so on under the ship. There are plenty of strange creatures floating about in those waters, and a patch of sea-weed will sometimes assume a queer shape. I laughed at the boy's fears, but at the same time saw how pale and frightened he looked.

"'What's wanted below there?' called the mate as he leaned over the rail, having heard Webb's cry of alarm.

"'I—I saw something go under the boat, sir.'

"'O, you did. Well, if you bawl out again you'll feel something go under your jacket."

"I began work again, and had been at it only three or four minutes when the yawl heaved away from the ship two or three feet, and at the same instant the boy screamed out again. His voice had scarcely reached my ears when something flashed before my eyes, something caught my arm and pulled it down and pinned it fast to my body, and in five seconds more I knew what had happened. A devil fish had flung one of his arms about me. Webb was screaming at the top of his voice, and, as I got a look at him, I saw that two of the beast's feelers were clutching him. The arm or feeler which had reached me pinned my arm to my side as if in a vise, making a clean wrap around my body, and the extreme end of the feeler crept up along my neck and face. Talk of pain, I never felt anything like it. The teeth of a bull-dog couldn't have hurt worse. It was a burning, biting, blistering sensation, as if a live coal had been laid on the flesh. I added my yells to those of Webb, but before any one came to the rail I was jerked to my knees in the boat, and saw that the creature's object was to pull me overboard. I heard the boy go down and thrash about, and then three of the men came to our assistance.

"The devil-fish had outwitted himself He had gone under the ship and fastened to her bottom or keel, and as soon as he began pulling on us, he of course pulled the yawl close against the ship's side. That closed the gap, and he could not pull us overboard, although I think he would have upset the yawl, for we were both down on her starboard side and she was almost on her beam ends when the men jumped down. They began to cut and slash and hack with their knives, and after two or three minutes they had us free—not of the arms, but of the creature. We were hoisted on board howling and groaning, with the feelers still biting, and they had to be cut from us almost by inches. Webb got it far worse than I did, as he wore a thin cotton shirt and was barefooted. He was bitten on one foot, both hands, and across the breast, and it was a long two weeks before he was on deck again. His face swelled up until one eye was closed, and the poison made me ill for many days. Wherever one of the cups or suckers took hold, the skin was entirely taken off, and it seemed as if pins had been stuck into the raw flesh. A native doctor brought me some herbs of which to make a poultice, and, though that relieved the pain and helped me to get around again, it was months before my face was entirely well.

"The devil-fish minded the loss of his three arms for only half an hour, at the end of which time he clutched the empty boat, half-capsized her and swam twice around the ship as a defiance to the crew. Two or three musket balls were fired into him, and he sank out of sight to be seen no more during our stay."—[N. Y. Sun.

The Astonished Drummer.

The Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., the manager of the Congregationalist publishing house and Sabbath-school work, and one of the busiest men in Boston, is an off-hand, approachable man with a bright, winning face, easy manner, and personal magnetism that contribute much to his success. He has none of the outward signs of the clerical calling, but looks more like a business man. He travels nearly all of the time, and he says that in the cars he generally passes as a drummer, and is recognized by the fraternity as one of their number. On going into Minneapolis one Saturday evening a smart young fellow approached in a free and easy way:

"Going to stop over Sunday?"

"Yes," replied the doctor.

"Stop at the Blank Hotel, I suppose?"

"No, I am going to stop with a friend."

"Come round to the hotel to-morrow afternoon and we'll have a racket. Quite a number of the boys will be there."

"But to-morrow is Sunday."

"I know it, and that's why we can have such a good time."

"O, I think that we fellows who are travelling all the time ought to keep Sunday," said the doctor.

"Yes," assented the drummer, good-naturedly, "but I'll bet you won't!"

"I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll go to church to-morrow if you will!"

"I'll do it! Where shall we go?"

"To the First Congregational. It's the best church in town."

"All right. I'll be there, but I'll bet you won't!"

The drummer was there according to his promise, and could hardly believe his eyes when he saw his friend of the night before ascend to the pulpit. Dr. Dunning tried to find him after the service, but he had fled. —[Lewiston Journal.

Apt Quotations.

One of our Sunday-school teachers on a recent occasion told her pupils that when they put their pennies in the contribution box she wanted each one to repeat a Bible verse suitable for the occasion. The first boy dropped in a cent, saying: "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." The third and youngest boy dropped his penny, saying: "A fool and his money are soon parted."

Penbaugh (very pompous): "Well, this is a very serious case, and I desire to get to the root of the matter at once." Bowles. "Most hogs do."

FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE.

Over One Hundred Persons Killed at Antwerp — Five Hundred Injured — The Bourse—and Other Buildings on Fire—The City Enveloped in Smoke.

A terrible catastrophe, the consequences of which are as yet incalculable, took place at Antwerp recently. At a quarter-past two a terrific explosion was heard even so far as Ghent. The whole town was shaken, and immediately afterwards it seemed as if a rain of glass was falling over the surrounding country. There is not a whole window in Antwerp. The magnificent stained glass windows of the cathedral were also destroyed. The townspeople were panic struck. It was first supposed that an earthquake had taken place, but suddenly the sun, which was shining brightly, was obscured by an impenetrable cloud of smoke tinged by the red glare of a great fire. It was near the port, and just behind the dry-docks, that the catastrophe took place, in a powder magazine belonging of Mr. Corvillan, merchant, who had recently purchased forty millions of old cartridges, intending to sell the powder. His work people, over a hundred in number, more than half of them being women, were occupied in the task of opening these cartridges when the explosion took place. To what it was due there is very little hope of discovering, for not one of Corvillan's employes has yet been found alive. In fact, not a single corpse has been found intact. It was not only in the Corvillain factory that lives were lost. A large number of persons were also more or less severely wounded by pieces of glass, and the roofs of several houses fell in for a great distance. All around the ground was strewn with cartridges and debris of all kinds. All was not over yet, however. A few minutes after the explosion a vast sheet of flame leaped up into the sky, and it was seen that the petroleum warehouse not far from the powder magazine was on fire. Even in broad daylight the blaze of 40,000 barrels of petroleum on fire was visible at a distance of over 30 miles, at Brussels. Then the Maison Hydraulique, of Antwerp, which furnishes the motive power for all the cranes and other machines of the port, suddenly gave way and became a heap of ruins. Everywhere in the streets were wounded persons, and at frequent intervals one came across parts of the human frame, such as legs and arms. The petroleum mart is, as I wire you, still ablaze, and the heat is so great that it is impossible to approach within several hundred yards of the conflagaration. The spectacle is terribly superb, and there is nothing in recent history that can be compared to it save the scene which Paris presented during the last days of the Commune and the great fire in Chicago. The fire has spread in all directions. City warehouses in which from 20 to 25 thousand barrels of petroleum are stored are on fire, as are many of the vessels in the docks. The Scheldt resembles

A RIVER OF FIRE

The whole of the garrison and a large part of the male population of the town are aiding the firemen, but their efforts are simply useless. It is impossible even roughly to estimate the number of persons killed, but suppositions range for 200 to 400, while there are certainly a thousand persons injured. The latest information is that there are 150 half burned corpses in the hospitals. The population is in a state of panic, for though the fire at present is confined to the neighborhood of the port, it can scarcely be prevented from gaining the town were the wind to turn to the north. With regard to the material damages it is needless to say that they are enormous. When Corvillain sought permission to erect his cartridge manufactory the city authorities opposed him might and main. The Provincial Council, however, were less far-seeing, and accorded Cordillian the authorization he asked for.

The fire is still raging. Many soldiers are dropping from suffocation. I have ascertained that the disaster is really the outcome of political bickering between the town council and provincial council. The former is Liberal and the latter clerical. The latter only granted permission to Corvillian to locate the powder factory in such a dangerous position to annoy the town council. This disclosure causes intense indignation. Explosions are constantly occurring, and ships are going farther back in the Scheldt to avoid the flames. The King has telegraphed an expression of sorrow and a request for hourly information.

Too Modest to be Honest.

"Are you the editor of the paper?'

"I am. What can I do for you?"

"Well, I just thought I'd step up and see how you are. My wife and I are going to Cape May to-morrow."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; but I wouldn't have anything said about it in print, of course. My name is Simpkins—Azaria Simpkins."

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Simpkins, I'm sure."

"Now don't go to puttin' anything into the paper about our going away. We start at four o'clock, and I reckon we'll be gone pretty near a month. I need the rest, and Mrs. Simpkins was getting kind of run down. Of course I know how anxious you newspaper men always are for an item, but we're plain people and don't want any notoriety. My wife always likes to see 'Simpkins' spelt without a 'p,' but the old-fashioned way is good enough for me. Well, I know an editor's time is valuable, so I'll say good-day. If I come across any murders or anything while I'm gone I'll let you know about them."—[Washington Critic.

A Pudding Philosopher.

A night or two ago a matron had occasion to reprove her little boy aged six and a half years—for some unusually mischievous nonsense.

"I am afraid," she said, "that you will not go to heaven."

"I'm sorry," said the small criminal "but I've been to the circus and a party this week, don't you know, and of course one can't take in everything."

For a long time this youthful thinker has been putting pennies into a toy savings bank for the benefit of the little negro children of the Congo Basin. And the other day his mother caught him in the act of painting his baby sister black all over with ladies' shoe-polish. He was just putting on the final touches when the mater familias entered. She said: "Mamma, we have given so much money to the black people that I thought we might as well keep it in the family. So I have fixed up the kid to suit. Put a nickel in the slot and hear it squall.

The new standard of buying wheat adopted by the Millers' Association of Ontario came into effect yesterday. It has already been given in these columns.

The air is full of rumors of weddings shortly to take place. No less than five are said to be booked for the next few weeks, mostly from Dutton and vicinity.

Jas. Black and Annie McCallum were married at the residence of Jno. Ferguson, Eagle, on Wednesday. The happy couple have our best wishes for their future.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be dispensed in Knox church, Dutton, on Sunday, October 20th. Rev. W. H. W. Boyle, of St. Thomas, will preach and assist the pastor.

LOST—In West Bay City, two notes, one for $100 and the other for $50 made by parties in this section in favor of John Sutheriand. The public are cautioned against purchasing these notes.

Lionel E. Shipley, ex-warden of Middlesex and ex-president of the Provincial Fair, whose name is well-known to nearly every resident of Western Ontario, died at his home in Lobo on Sunday.

John Riely, an Indian, was arrested Friday night on the charge of assaulting and wounding a native woman on the Muncey reserve. Squire Torrence tried the case at Melbourne on Saturday.

Hockin & Pool have received a consignment of dry goods, per S.S. Etruria, from Liverpool. These goods, being purchased direct from the manufacturers in England should command the attention of every buyer.

TO THE FARMERS OF WEST ELGIN.—A. P. Campbell, of Southwold, offers special prizes for colts the get of Sum and Substance, as follows :—1st prize, steel plow, value $16; 2nd prize, $10; 3rd prize, $5. The prizes are to be awarded at the Wallacetown Fair.

Judging from the amount of goods being received by Hockin & Pool they must intend doing a very large trade this fall. Their two stores are packed from cellar to garret with new goods.

We acknowledge the receipt of a press badge for the Southern Counties Fair to held in St. Thomas from Sept. 24th to 26th. The fair this year is expected to surpass any previous exhibition of that association.

Jas. Bake's auction sale of farm stock, implements, household goods, etc., was postponed from Saturday, Sept. 7th, to Saturday, Sept. 21st when all will be sold without reserve, as Mr. Bake will shortly leave for London.

Geo. Williams, of Fingal, has entered an action against the Huron and Middlesex Fire Insurance Company to recover $1,925, the amount of insurance and interest held by him on property, which was destroyed by fire.

We often hear of horses finding their way to pound but there is generally some one driving them. J. M. Jackson's horse, however, visited that institution on its own hook last week and gave Joe Marr no end of trouble to get him out.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—$2,100 will buy 3 houses and 6 lots. Houses pay $210 per annum in rent; lots are worth $90 each. Plenty of water; good garden ground. Only one-third of the money to be paid at time of sale. Apply to F. A. HUMPIDGE, Dutton.

The editor is at the Toronto Exposition this week. He is to be shown there as the only editor in the world who never told a lie. His absence explains why the paper is so good. While he is away a few brilliant fictions have been worked in.—Plaindealer. Rats!

Detective Heenan has recovered one of the pairs of gloves sold at Essex Centre by Frank Gardner, who confessed to the robbery of J. C. McDonald's store at Duart. The $100 reward offered for Gardner's arrest will be equally divided between Detective Heenan and Constable James Philpott, of Iona.

Rev. T. Wilson united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the residence of A. J. Leitch, Esq., last evening, Mr. Angus McWilliam, of the Dunwich planing mills, to Miss Colena McIntyre, niece of Mr. Leitch. The happy couple will take a trip east before settling down, and have the best wishes of their numerous friends.

Mr. John Vowels, of Southwold, met with a painful accident Wednesday. He was at work on the farm of Mr. Begg, and was assisting in loading hay, when he lost his balance and fell from the load to the ground, a distance of sixteen feet. One of his ribs was broken, penetrating the lung and causing inflammation, and he is at present in a low condition.

The St. Thomas police appear to be determined to put a stop to the practice of insulting ladies on the street, which some of the young men are in the habit of doing. Albert Haines was run in on Sunday evening for the offence, but the magistrate let him off with a reprimand, saying that the next offender would be punished to the full extent of the law.

MOCCASIN TRACK HUNTING TOTEM OF HEALTH

A writ has been issued in the Queen's Bench division of the High Court of Justice, on behalf of Michael McNulty against John P. McLean, claiming damages for false arrest, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution. The case arises out of the arrest of McNulty a few weeks ago on a charge of stealing cattle from McLean, on which charge McNulty was acquitted.

Frank Gardner was arraigned at the County Judge's criminal court Tuesday and pleaded guilty to the robbery of J. Macdonald's store at Duart. He pleaded not guilty to the robbery of Risk & Crosby's store at Highgate, but subsequently withdrew the plea and pleaded guilty to receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Sentence was reserved on both charges.

What do you think of your paper? Can you suggest any improvement in its pages? Why should not subscribers "speak their minds" concerning the merits or demerits of their paper? Some new ideas might thus be suggested that would add to its attractions as a popular weekly; and in any event it would be of interest to know just how subscribers regard our efforts to furnish them with interesting reading matter from week to week.

The anniversary services of Court Nelson, I. O. F. were held in Knox church on Sunday morning last. Some 72 members of the order marched to the church and listened to an appropriate and impressive sermon preached by the Rev. Thos. Wilson from the text, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widow in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted before the world," James 1, 27. The church was crowded.

There are a great many people who send a copy of the ENTERPRISE to friends and pay postage. They pay fifty-two cents in postage, and beside their trouble fifty-two times, the paper always goes several days after publication. By paying us $1 they are saved postage and trouble, and the paper leaves promptly at the hour of publication. The ENTERPRISE is the best letter to send to a friend. It gives all the local news and never fails to go. People generally neglect to write letters and have more bother over correspondence than the cost of a paper. Balance 1889 for 25 cents.

In ordering Clothing this fall you will consult your own interests by looking through my stock and will find that a more complete range in every particular you will not run across anywhere.

J. C. HERTEL, MERCHANT TAILOR

McGregor & McCallum, of Wallacetown, say that the stock of Western Wilkes has gone up 50 per cent. since the Provincial Fair at London as a colt by him took first prize for yearling carriage, and another yearling took first prize as roadster. Schleihauf Bros., of Wallacetown, exhibited a yearling by the same horse that was a general favorite with all except the judges; the colt that took first prize in the road class was sired by a coach horse. They were hooted for not taking breeding into consideration. Don't fail to see these colts at the local fairs.

A meeting of the Reformers of the Township of Dunwich was held in Leitch's hall, Dutton, on Saturday last. In the absence of Dr. Leitch, president of the township, Daniel Black, Iona Station, was chosen chairman and J. D. Blue secretary. After the chairman called the meeting to order and stated the business the following chairman were appointed: Ward No. 1, Dugald Blue; Ward No. 2, Harry Garbutt; Ward No. 3, Robert Hine; Ward No. 4, Jas. Duncanson; Ward No. 5, Duncan Thompson; Ward 6, John Carswell; Ward No. 7, W. J. Mitton; Ward No. 8, M. C. Leitch.

An attempt was made to burn Schleihauf Bros.' sawmill at Wallacetown on Thursday night. A pile of chips and shavings had been made against the side of the building and was burning freely when it was fortunately noticed by a couple of ladies, who extinguished it with a pail of water. The attempt to burn the mill, following so close upon the fire which destroyed the building last winter gives rise to the suspicion that the other fire was also the work of an incendiary. Every effort should be made to find out the scoundrels and if caught they should be given the fullest punishment the law allows.

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Primus, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheefully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. DOW, Burlington, Vt.

Paine's Celery Compound

is a unique tonic and appetizer. Pleasant to the taste, quick in its action, and without any injurious effect, it gives that rugged health which makes everything taste good. It cures dyspepsia and kindred disorders. Physicians prescribe it. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

Cowal, Nov. 1, 1888.

The Methodist Church.

The financial meeting of the St. Thomas District was held in the Methodist church, Union, on Tuesday evening. There was a good attendance of both lay and ministerial members of the district. The meeting was opened by devotional exercises at 5 o'clock; the meeting, however, was only fairly organized when a pleasing interruption took place. The young people of the congregation had prepared a sumptuous repast for the guests in the lecture room. This produced a happy result upon lay and ministerial deputations alike, enabling them to return to work with such zest that within two hours a vast amount of work was accomplished.

The domestic missions of the district claimed first attention. These are West Lorne and Iona. To these $390 and $418 respectively were recommended to assist them for the current year. The important Indian missions at Muncey and Oneida, as well as the Mount Elgin Institute, are under the direct control of the Central Mission Board.

The following scale of assessment in aid of the Superanuation Fund was unanimously accepted:—St. Thomas, First Methodist $146, Grace church $55, Centre $56, Port Stanley $51, Fingal $54, Talbotville, $48, Shedden $37, Iona $23, Dutton $43, West Lorne $16, Alvinston $45, Melbourne $42, Muncey $2, Oneida $1, Mount Elgin Institute $6.

A plan for the holding of missionary anniversaries was made, and it was agreed that each pastor should be responsible for holding an educational anniversary on his charge.

An animated conversation took place in regard to the spiritual condition of the district, resulting in the formation of a plan for holding "four days" evangelistic services at the following places:—

St. Thomas Central—Deputation, Revs. Shepherd, Scott, Hamilton and McAlister.

Fingal—Deputation, Revs. Whiting, Staples, McAlister and Medd.

Iona—Deputation, Revs. Aylesworth, Whiting, Middleton and Hamilton.

Alvinston—Deputation—Revs. Annis, Whiting, Mason and Hamilton.

West Lorne—Deputation, Revs. Annis, Mason, Hamilton and Medd.

Dutton—Deputation, Revs. Kershaw, Mason, Staples and Locke.

The time of holding the meetings to be fixed by the pastors of the charges concerned.

On motion it was decided to hold the annual meeting in May at Grace church, St. Thomas. Thanks were given the Rev. Mr. Parsons and wife and to the young people of Union for the unique reception they extended to the delegates and their friends.

The Sabbath School Convention held in the same place on Wednesday was one of the most profitable and enthusiastic the district ever had. There was a large attendance at each of the three sessions, the church being completely filled at the mass meeting of the children in the afternoon. Rev. W. W. Shepherd presided with great ability throughout the convention. After devotional exercises, led by Rev. L. Mason, two subjects were discussed at the morning session, viz., "The best method of conducting a Sabbath School, and "Difficulties and how to overcome them." The first topic was committed to Sunday school superintendents, the plans presented by Mr. W. H. May, of the Central church, Mr. W. B. Whiting, of Muncey, forming the base of discussion. The second subject was ably introduced by Rev. Mr. Medd, and was followed by a vigorous discussion.

The afternoon children's mass meeting was a pleasing feature of the day. Children's songs, led by Mr. Josiah Long, were inspiring. Excellent addresses were delivered to the children by the Rev. W. H. McAlister and Mrs. Parsons. Mr. W. H. Way was also called upon by the chairman, but gracefully declined, as the allotted time had been occupied so well. Two subjects engaged the attention of the convention for the remainder of the afternoon session: 1st, "How best may we obtain the co-operation of the parents?" A very effective address was given on the subject by Rev. Mr. Staples, of Shedden, followed by a warm discussion, after which "The best time and method for the preparation of a lesson" was thrown open for general discussion.

The evening session was opened by devotional exercises, led by Rev. R. Whiting. Addresses were delivered by Rev. James Whiting on "The pastor in relation to the Sunday school," and Rev. J. W. Annis, M. A., on "How to secure the best results in Sabbath school work," after which the question drawer was committed to Rev. R. D. Hamilton, whose apt and earnest replies met with general approval. The interest and enthusiasm of the meeting was sustained unflaggingly to the end of the chapter.

Motions of thanks to Rev. Mr. Parsons and the Union people for their hospitality, to Mr. Josiah Long and his choir for their superb singing, and to the chairman for his great urbanity, were unanimously given, and a most pleasant meeting was brought to a close by the doxology and benediction.

A match for 100-yard foot race is to take place in Aylmer Sept. 30, for $100 a side, between John McRae, of Glencoe, and Fred Frigell, of Tilsonburg.

Dunwich Council.

Minutes of a special meeting of the municipal council of Dunwich, held in clerk's office, Dutton, on Monday evening, Sept. 23rd, 1889.

All the members present.

Moved by D. McLean, seconded by H. Garbutt, that in the suit of Sellars against this municipality the reeve be instructed and authorized to offer to have the matter submitted to arbitration, failing in which he procure such witness as he may deem necessary and instruct council to defend the action. Carried.

The entertainment in the Baptist church at new Sarum Tuesday night was signalized by a brutal fisticuff encounter between two young men named Warden Norton and Robt Covill. The dispute arose over a young lady and the first blow was struck by Norton at the church door, after which the combatants went outside. Messrs. Elliot and Johnston, who attempted to act as peacemakers, were more or less bruised, and a general scrimmage ensued in which at least one lady took part. The church authorities will ventilate the facts before a magisterial tribunal.—Times.

At the St. Thomas division court last week John McKillop, of the Dominion hotel, sued Thomas Kelly to recover $32.67. McKillop testified that Kelly had brought a cheque for 33 cents from the Car Wheel Works. McKillop read it $33 and cashed it for that sum. On presenting it at the Molson's Bank he became aware that it was for 33 cents. Kelly testified that he handed the cheque to McKillop, whom he owed an account of $2 or $3, and the latter handed him $30 with the remark, "Take this and blow it in." Acting upon McKillop's advice literally, he proceeded to "blow it in," treating all and sundry, with the result that the next morning the cash was all gone. At the court he swore that he knew that the cheque was for 33 cents, but thought that McKillop had given him the money to have a "blow out." "Well, if Mr. McKillop chooses to give a man $30 to have a "blow out" I don't see that I have any right to interfere," replied the judge and gave a verdict for the defendant.

The Tables Turned.

CHAPTER I.

"ho is this letter from, Jenkins?"

"I don't know, sir. The man who brought it is waiting in the front office for an answer. He looked like a working-man dressed up in his Sunday clothes."

Mr. ohn Barnett, solicitor, cut open the envelopo carefully, as was his habit, took cut he nclosure, and read:

MOREDUN HOUSE,

ELDERGATE, Friday, 6 A. M.

DEAR SIR—I am in great trouble. Mr. Monkton was found dead in the library last night about nine o'clock. The cause of death was heart disease. Could you come down here to-day and remain till after the funeral, and advise me with regard to the funeral arrangements and other things? It is a great deal to ask, I know; but you see I have no right to interfere in these matters, as I am no relative of Mr. Monkton's, and I do not know what to do. You were always his chief friend as well as his legal adviser. I am afraid of his brother coming here when he hears of the death. I enclose notices which I will thank you to get inserted in the various newspaper.—I send this letter by our gardener, who will bring back your reply truly.

KATHERINE ASHLEY.

Mr. Barnett appeared very much affected on reading this letter. Mr. Monkton is dead, Jenkins," he said. "Found dead in his library last night. How very sudden! He was here only two days ago, looking as well as ever I saw him.—This letter is from Miss Ashley. She wishes me to go to Eldergate to-day; but Mr. Morgan is coming here in a short time, and I have to go out with him relative to some business which will detain me, I expect, till late in the afternoon. I will not be able to get to Eldergate till the six o'clock train.—I have nothing particularly pressing for the next few days, have I?"

"No, sir; I don't think so."

"Then I will be able to wait over at Eldergate till after the funeral, as Miss Ashley wishes. I will give you a note for the man. I don't know when I got such a shock."

The note despatched, Mr. Barnett sat down to think over matters. Mr. Monkton and he had been friends of many years' duration, and having been often at Moredun House, Mr. Barnett was well acquainted with Miss Ashley, who was orphan niece of his friend's late wife. Mr. Monkton had no family of his own, and Miss Ashley had lived at Moredun House for the past ten years. Her aunt, Mrs. Monkton, had died a few years before. By the terms of Mr. Monkton's will, which Mr. Barnett himself had drawn, the latter knew that he, along with Sir Andrew Dawson, a wealthy neighbour of Mr. Monkton's, was appointed an executor, and a joint guardian of Miss Ashley until she should attain the age of twenty-one. This she would not reach for nearly three years yet; and in the interval, some arrangement must be come to with reference to her.

"I hope that brother of Monkton's doesn't come upon the scene, for he is a thorough scoundrel, if ever there was one," he said to himself. "He will give us some trouble, if he can. However, he need not try to dispute the will; although I believe he would do it in a minute, if he thought he had the ghost of a chance."

Here Mr. Barnett's meditations were interrupted by the entrance of his client Mr. Morgan, who had come to keep his appointment; and in a short time both left the office together. It was after five in the afternoon when Mr. Barnett returned.

"Confound Morgan!" he said to Jenkins, who was his head-clerk, and who had waited behind the others, in case of anything being required. "I could not get away earlier. It will be after ten before I get to Mr. Monkton's house, for I will have to wait till the eight o'clock train now. I must go home first, I shall not be back at the office till Wednesday; but if there should be anything particularly pressing I might take a run up.—You can let me know how things go on, Jenkins."

"All right, sir," answered Jenkins; and then Mr. Barnett departed.

He left Euston Station at eight o'clock en route for Eldergate, which was distant from the Metropolis about two hours' journey by rail. Mr. Monkton's carriage was in waiting at the station, and he was soon being driven up the avenue to the house.

Mr. Barnett followed the loquacious old lady into the room, where supper was immediately brought in. "I am surprised to see you, Mrs. Crawford," he said. "I did not knew you were here. Miss Ashley did not mention you in her letter this morning."

"Because she didna ken I was coming. I'm staying in London wi' my son Peter now, and I came down her this morning on a visit by chance. I found everything at sixes and sevens, and that puir lassie greeting like to break her heart; so I just stayed on till ye would come."

"You were quite right. I would have been here earlier, as I told Miss Ashley in my letter, but I was detained.—But I need not keep you out of your bed, Mrs. Crawford; I can attend to myself. I know the way to my room. I have been often here before, you know."

"Oh, I'm in no hurry," said Mrs. Crawford. She had dismissed the servant, and had herself waited to attend to Mr. Barnett's wants. He had scarcely begun to do justice to the supper, however, when she suddenly bent forward and whispered almost into his ear: "He s here."

"Who is here? Whom do you mean?" asked the solicitor, almost dropping his knife and fork in his surprise.

"Who should I mean but Henry Monkton, of course? Came here in the middle o' the afternoon, and intends waiting till after the funeral, he says. But he may spare himsel' the trouble, for onything he'll get, I hope."

"But how did he come to hear of his brother's death so speedily It will not be n the newspapers till to-morrow.—Miss Ashley surely did not send him notice?

"No; she didna. She s ower frichted for him to do the like o' that. She's keepit her room ever since he came, or else she would hae been waiting here to see ye. But ye'll see her in the morning right enough. He met Blake the gardener by accident at the London station this forenoon, and got the news frae him. He has a gude stock of impudence to come here at the present time, when he kens brawly he daurna hae showed his nose had his brother been living.—Dear, dear! sic a change as his death will mak in this house!—What's to become o' that lassie? Surely he would mind her in his will."

"Was he supposed to have been long dead before he was found? Who was the first to discover him? Was it Miss Ashley?"

"Ay; she was the first. He had gane into the library at seven; and Miss Ashley, who had been out at her tea at Sir Andrew Dawson's, came home about nine o'clock. When she went into the room, he was sitting dead at his desk."

"What had he been doing? Reading, or what?"

"He had apparently been looking over some papers and letters, for there were a lot lying about the desk. The doctor believes he hadna lang been dead when he was discovered."

"Well, well. I must see after things in the morning. It is a little awkward Henry Monkton being here. Who has charge of the keys of Mr. Monkton's private drawe s Miss Ashley, I presume!"

"I hae got them just now. She wasna fit to look after anything. I locked some o' the drawers mysel' since I came."

"And the papers that were on Mr. Monkton's desk, what was done with them?"

Preceded by Mrs. Crawford, Mr Barnett made his way to the library. This had been his dead friend's favorite room, where he spent most of his time. The top of the desk was strewn with letters and documents of various kinds, among which Mr. Barnett discerned a small bundle of titles, part of those connected with the purchase of Moredun House. He got a newspaper, and bundled all the papers together.

"We will put them in the safe till to-morrow, when I will look them over," said he. "His will must be in the safe or in one of the drawers of this old cabinet."

"Dear me, I thocht ye would have had his will," said Mrs. Crawford. "When I made my will, though gudeness kens I hadna much to leave, my lawyer, Mr. Simpson, tell'd me that it was usual for lawyers to keep their clients' wills."

"So it is; but Mr. Monkton liked to keep his own, and his titles and other documents also. But the will won't be difficult to find, for I have an idea where he kept it. I will go off to bed now. I shall see Miss Ashley in the morning, and Mr. Henry Monkton too, I suppose. He has not been interfering in the house in any way since he came, has he?"

"No; he has keepit himsel' very quiet. He said ye would look after things when ye came. He didna want to meddle wi' onything."

"I am glad to hear he is so peaceably inclined. You know the reason of his last quarrel with his brother, I daresay?"

"'Deed I do. I ken that Henry Monkton has been a ne'er-do-weel a' his days, and that his brother was aye ower gude to him. He paid his debts ower and ower again; and to think that after a', he would try to rob his brother o' his ain money behind his back.—I reckon Mr. Monkton caught him in the very act o' helping himsel' to his money out o' the safe."

"Yes; and after that he ordered him out of his house, which he should have done long before. But, as you say, he was far too good to him. They have never spoken since. Were you in the house when Henry Monkton arrived? He did not come till the afternoon, I think you said?"

"No, I was out when he came,"

"How is he looking? Does he seem sorry at hearing of his brother's death?"

"He was looking kind o' strange like, I thocht, and he seemed kind o' startled when I came into the room where he was. I don't think he had heard me coming till I opened the door. He was civil enough, though I dinna ken when I saw him behave sae weel. But of course he could hardly act any other way and his brother lying a corpse i' the house."

"Where is the body? In Mr. Monkton's own room?

"Yes. Miss Ashley's is next to it. The housekeeper is sleeping wi' her, in case she should feel eerie. Young people are aye feared for death, ye ken. Yer room is a' ready for ye, Mr. Barnett."

"Thank you. I know my way, Mrs Crawford," he said, taking the bedroom candle from her hand as they stood together in the hall. "Good-night. I am sorry to have kept you up so late on my account."

He went slowly up the stairs and along the corridor towards the room he was wont to occupy on the occasions of his visits to Moredun House. As he passed the door of the room where lay the dead body of his friend, so lately instinct with life, a feeling of awe crept over him. A stillness as of the grave seemed to hover in the air. What a strange thing was this which men call death!

. . . . . .

Next morning, when he came down he found Miss Ashley in the breakfast room. She was a slight fair-haired girl with a very pretty face. She wore a dark-blue morning gown. Her eyes looked heavy and bore the traces of recent tears. She greeted Mr Barnett with outstretched hand. "Oh, it is such a relief to have you here!" she said. "I did not know what to do; and Mrs Crawford was not here when I wrote to you. She would tell you that Henry Monkton came yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes. I expected to see him at breakfast. Is he not going to appear?"

"I do not know. He was up early, and has gone out somewhere, the housekeeper says. But we will not wait for him. Mrs Crawford is having breakfast in her own room."

"I expected Henry Monkton would have been trying to act the master here," said Mr. Barnett; "but Mrs. Crawford informs me he has shown no disposition to do so—that he has left everything for me to arrange."

"She told me so too. He seems to have altered for the better. We could scarcely blame him even if he did assume the mastership in the house; he is Mr. Monkton's only near relation."

"Yes but how did he behave towards him Not as a brother should, certainly. Had been n Monkton's place, I would never have borne with him so long."

"Uncle was very patient with him. I believe he way ooked on him as a mere boy, who would grow wiser in time. And he was only eight years younger than uncle, after all. He must be somewhere about forty six."

After breakfast, Miss Ashley went upstairs. Left alone, Mr. Barnett decided that he would wait until he had seen Henry Monkton, before beginning his work in the library, and went out into the garden to smoke. He was in the full enjoyment of his cigar when a step coming down the garden path caused him to turn round. The comer was Mr. Henry Monkton, who held out his hand with apparent friendliness. H was a tall sallow-complexioned man, n bad-looking, with a restless look in his black eyes. He had a moustache, but no beard. Saving in his complexion and his restless looks, he had a great resemblance to his dead brother.

The solicitor took the offered hand, and bade him good-morning in as friendly a tone as he could muster.

"I have to apologise for not appearing at breakfast," said Mr. Monkton. "I had a headache, and went out to walk it off. I am going in now.—I believe you came last night?"

"Yes. You were in bed, I think. I saw no one save Mrs. Crawford,"

"She would keep you in talk at anyrate. How her tongue does go! I never can make out half she says. Confound these poor relations, always cropping up!—Have you seen Miss Ashley this morning? She was not very well yesterday."

"I saw her at breakfast. She has gone to her room now. You would be sorry to hear of your brother's death?"

"I have good reason to be sorry. a better brother man never had. I am afraid I was a sore trouble to him. I am glad, however, that our last quarrel was made up before he died; I should never have forgiven myself otherwise."

"Then you have seen him lately?" asked Mr. Barnett in surprise, which he did not attempt to hide.

"I saw him in the city on Tuesday, and spoke to him. He had been at your office. He was rather stern at first; but he had always a warm side to me, bad as I was."

Mr. Barnett doubted Mr. Monkton's statement very much, but did not tell him so. He only remarked: "It must be a great comfort to you now as things have happened.

"Yes; it is a comfort, as you say.—Will you be good enough to have a look through my brother's papers and arrange them if they need arranging? You understand such things. He would have liked you to do it, I know." He spoke as though conscious that by his own wicked conduct in the past he had forfeited all right to interfere in his brother's affairs.

Mr. Barnett, although wondering not a little at the position Henry Monkton was taking up, wisely refrained from making any remark. He merely said: "I was just waiting to see you before I began.—I will go in now;" and left Mr. Monkton standing alone.

Before he could begin his work amongst the documents, the arrangements for the funeral required to be seen to, and the afternoon was pretty far advanced also when he at length set himself down to work in earnest He first of all opened the safe, took out the papers which he had wrapped up in the newspaper the previous night, and placed them on the desk in the middle of the floor.

"I had better find the will in the first place," thought he. "I can't understand Henry Monkton's behavior at all, so different from his usual style. One would think that he already has an idea how the will stands, or he would be acting differently. He must have come down here simply in a fit of bravado, and with the intention, perhaps, of deceiving the people around by a pretence of regret for the brother he has lost. He can't cheat me, however, with his hypocritical talk. I wonder if he knew that the will was in his brother s possession, or if he thought I had it?—Here is a bundle of titles; the will may be amongst them. I have seen Monkton take it out from one of these drawers before, I think. This one is half empty. Some of these papers on the desk probably have been kept in it."

He sat down and unloosed the piece of pink tape with which the documents were tied together and scrutinised each carefully. "It is not amongst these at anyrate," he said, laying them aside and taking out another smaller bundle. "Nor here either," he added, after glancing over this second lot. "After all, it may be in that old cabinet or in this desk; but I should think he would not keep anything but letters or things of that kind in either of these two places."

He happened to turn round after closing the drawer, and the bundle lying on the desk attracted his attention. He unwound the newspaper which enveloped its contents and scattered the papers loosely over the desk. A slight scrutiny convinced him that they consisted chiefly of letters and circulars of one kind and another, some of them dated many years back. These he paid little attention to. Then came part of the Moredun House titles, which, together with some leases, formed the remainder of the documents before him. He looked these over and then placed them in the drawer he had already examined. The rest of the safe was mainly taken up with business books used by Mr. Monkton before his retirement from business as a merchant. The safe was not a large one, yet t took Mr. Barnett some time to examine thoroughly all it contained. He had just made up his mind that the document sought for was not there, when he was summoned to dinner.

He had anticipated no difficulty in finding his late friend's will; but the looking for it promised to be a more tedious business than he had expected, although he had no doubt of finding it ultimately. Hours passed, and still he search went on unsuccessfully. By ten o clock both cabinet and desk had been thoroughly overhauled, unless there were some secret drawers which he had failed to discover. There was no other place in the room where Mr. Monkton would be likely to keep the will, that he could see. Could it by any chance be in his room up stairs? If it was not discovered there, the conclusion seemed inevitable—that the will was lost.

Baldness Would be a Calamity.

In Elbert county, on the Savannah river, lives a negro who goes by the name of "Sheep Jess." His hair and whiskers are perfectly white and almost cover his head and face, leaving only small patches of dark skin around his eyes and nose, and are a perfect imitation of sheep's wool. His hair (or wool) grows rapidly, and his wife shears him every two weeks, thereby realizing enough wool to supply Jess, his wife, and five children with stockings the year round, and sells enough socks to supply them with sugar and coffee. His wife has nearly enough of the finest part of the wool saved to make cloth for a suit of clothes for Jess next winter. He is about 35 years old.

Remember Lot's Wife.

Within the space allotted to the varied and interesting exhibits from Roumania, at the Paris exhibition, one comes suddenly upon an obelisk of singular and almost weird aspect, which invariably, at first sight, is something of a mystery to the beholder.

It is eighteen or twenty feet in height, and consists of a tapering, four sided shaft, set upon a simply, yet symmetrically, built pedestal five or six feet square by about five feet in height. In short, the structure resembles a mortuary monument, and is suggestive of cemetery memories.

It is the appearance of the material from which the monument is made, however, which piques curiosity. At first glance it seems to be semi-transparent, and one wonders whether there may actually be marble in Roumania of that peculiar tint.

From another point of view, it even resembles alabaster, while from others, one might easily mistake it for a pillar of ice. In fact, it was not till the writer had walked completely around it, that the secret of its composition came out—from a very homely test.

The usual crowd of sight-seers was surging past. A vivacious French party of six or seven persons came forward, and at once exclaimed, "Ah! que c'est beau!" how beautiful! in a quick, appreciative fashion.

Then they fell to wondering what it could be made of. They covertly scratched it, shrugged their shoulders, shook their heads and looked puzzled.

At length, one bright-witted girl of the party rubbed it with her moistened finger and touched her tongue.

"Sel!" she cried. Whereat they all laughed heartily, and moved gaily away.

Scarcely had they disappeared, when a less voluble party of five darker-browed and olive-tinted Spaniards—two senors and three senoritas—appeared upon the scene.

"Mira! mira! Que bonito!" they exclaimed. And then they, in turn, were possessed by the same curiosity to ascertain the object and the material of the monument. And again it was one of the young ladies who, having surreptitiously touched it with a wet finger-tip, penetrated the mystery.

"Bah! Sal! she cried, with an odd little twist of her lace-clad shoulder. Whereupon one of the senors politely doffed his hat to her, while the other, striking a serio comic attitude, exclaimed:

"No olvide la esposa de Lotto!" Remember Lot's wife! and they went on, laughing.

The monument is a pillar of pure rock salt rom the salines of Roumania, designed to illustrate and represent that industry.

Across the Wheat.

You ask me for the sweetest sound mine ears have ever heard?
A sweeter than the ripples' plash or trilling of a bird,
Than tapping of the rain drops upon the roof at night,
Than the sighing of the pine trees on yonder
mountain height;
And I tell you, these are tender, yet never quite so sweet
As the murmur and the cadence of the wind
across the wheat.

Have you watched the golden billows in a sunlit sea of grain,
Ere yet the reaper bound the sheaves, to fill the creaking wain?
Havd you thought of snow and tempest and the bitter wintry cold
Were but the guardian angels, the next year's bread to hold,
A precious thing, unharmed by all the turmoil of the sky,
Just waiting, growing, silently, until th storm went by?
Oh! have you lifted up your heart to Him who loves us all,
And listens, through the angel-songs, if but a sparrow fall,
And then, thus thinking of His hand, what symphony so sweet
As the music in the long refrain, the wind
across the wheat?

It hath the dulcet echoes, from many a lullaby,
Where the cradled babe is hushed beneath the mother's loving eye.
It hath its heaven promise, as sure as heaven's throne,
That He who sent the manna will ever feed
His own;
And, though an atom only, 'mid the countless hosts who share
The Maker's never ceasing watch, the Father's deathless care,
That atom is as dear to Him as my dear
child to me;
He cannot lose me from my place, through all eternity.
You wonder when it sings me this there's nothing half so sweet
Beneath the circling planets, as the wind
across the wheat!

Lieutenant Kutin, of the Austrian Artillery, has invented a new explosive, to which he has given the name of crasit, and which is said to have the greatest penetrating power yet discovered. It is safe to handle, and does not decompose under atmospherical changes. In the course of some experiments made near Vienna the other day, a crasit shell went clean through the 5 inch armour-plate of a brick tower, and blew the tower itself into a wreck.

A few days ago, while one of the nurses employed at the Belvidere Hospital, Glasgow, was walking a pathway leading to one of the wards, the ground suddenly gave way under her feet, and she sank up to her armpits, being completely wedged in by the subsiding toil. On assistance being obtained she was with some difficulty extracted, when it was found that the soil continued to subside. Further examination brought out the fact that the woman had actually been suspended by the arms over the mouth of an old pit over 160 feet deep. Twenty years ago, when the hospital was in course of erection, the pit was searched for but in vain. It seems that the orifice had been merely covered over with wood, which, in course of time, had become rotton, with the result described.

JOHN G. WHITTIER, ON HIS EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

Friend, whom thy fourscore winters leave more dear
Than when life's roseate summer on thy cheek
Burned in the flush of manhood's manliest year,
Lonely, how lonely! is the snowy peak
Thy feet have reached and mine have climbed so near!
Close on thy footsteps 'mid the landscape drear
I stretched my hand thine answering grasp to seek,
Warm with the love no rippling rhymes can speak.
Look backward! From thy lofty heights survey
Thy years of toil, of peaceful victories won.
Of dreams made real and largest hopes outrun.
Look forward! Brighter than earth's morning ray
Streams the pure light of heaven's unsetting sun.
The all-unclouded dawn of life's immortal day.

Climbing the path that leads back never-more.
We heard behind his footsteps and his cheer;
Now, face to face, we greet him, standing here
Upon the lonely summit of Fourscore.
Welcome to us, o'er whom the lengthened day
Is closing, and the shadows deeper grow,
His genial presence like an afterglow
Following the one just vanishing away.
Long be it ere the Table shall be set
For the last breakfast of the Autocrat.
And Love repeat, with smiles and tears, thereat
His own sweet songs, that time shall not forget,
Waiting with him the call to come up higher.

A Land of Wild Fruit,

Canada is a land of wild fruit. The earliest settlers did not even trouble themselves to grow any fruit-bushes, but contented themselves with the wild strawberries, gooseberries, and currants. These they found abundantly to hand. Delicious little wild raspberries grow there that invite picking, and the Indian wild strawberry jam is a gift that every one who goes to stay in the bush brings home to friends in town. The bleaberry or huckleberry, with which all readers of American books are familiar, is larger than our whortleberry, but not so rich in flavor; while the quantities of all these fruits make the picking of them little trouble and worth the exertion.—[English Paper.

The Prussian Princess, sister of Emperor William, who is about to be married, is having made for her thirteen pairs of very splendid garters. She does not mean to add all the set to her trousseau, though among them is that traditional pair of new and blue stocking supporters said to bring brides luck, and this one is the thirteenth, made of pale-blue silk and clasped with buckles set with large diamonds. Another pair will be put away with the rest of the Hohenzollern collection of garters in the museum at Berlin, and the rest will be distributed among the nobles who attend the Greek Prince, her husband. This is a relic of a very ancient custom that survives nowhere now save in the reigning family of Germany. In franker and ruder ages it used to be the privilego of the best man, when the bride was about to retire with her attendant maidens, to unfasten her garter and keep it as a trophy. There was always somewhat of a dispute about it, custom requiring that the groom should resist the attempt and that the best man should insist upon his privilege. With the growth of more refined manners this custom naturally fell into disuse, and the only relic of it is in the comic opera of "La Jolie Parfumeuse," and in the marriage customs of the German royal family. The form it takes with them, however, is that the Princess should have prepared thirteen pairs of garters, all of them having buckles with her initials set in diamonds, and of these she wears one pair herself, bestows one pair on the reigning sovereign and distributes the other among her husband's attendants, the eleven of the highest rank getting this bridal favor. There is a very curious collection of these royal garters in the Berlin Museum, some fifty or sixty in all, many of them extremely rich and handsome and some very queer ones from the past generations of princesses. Some of those deposited in the reigns of Frederick William III. and IV. are marvels of elaborate needlework and bullion fringes and are buckled with the finest jewels.

MAHDIST DERVISHES.

Something About the Warriors Encountered by English Forces on the Sands of Egypt.

They are Arabs of Pure Blood Known as "Jellabs," and Until Recently Dealers in Slaves.

England, it seems, is constantly at war. To protect her vast empire, on which the sun never sets, requires the incessant expenditure of millions of money and thousands of priceless human lives. At present the readers of the papers see accounts of contests waged on the hot sands of Egypt between Gen. Grenfell's forces and the dervishes. Just what a dervish may be perhaps very few can tell. A writer in the "Saturday Review" gives some interesting facts in regard to England's African foes.

"It has been more than once pointed out here," he says, "that the so called dervishes are no more or little more dervishes than any other African Moslems. As a fact, every follower of Mohammed is a 'dervish' in some sense or other of the word. Your donkey boy in Cairo or at Zagazig, or, in short, anywhere throughout the length of the land, is a dervish—belongs, that is, to some sect or section, more or less fanatical, of orthodox Mussulman faith. Some of these sects are more popular in one place than in another. The Rufayeh, for example, are the most common in lower Egypt, but others are almost equally numerous. An immense multitude of the Saidieh order used to prostrate themselves of their sheik's horse at the annual doseh or treading, now abolished. Many of these men were waiters at hotels and servants in private families. The great Ahmedieh order, which especially affected the cult of Byumeh, is perhaps the most numerous in all northern Africa, but new cults, and with them new orders, are constantly invading the old, both in Arabia and Egypt. We hear less now than formerly of the Wahabees, who at one time threatened to overrun not only Arabia but Persia and even India.

The present Mahdist movement is somewhat of the same kind in the tenets of its votaries, but differs essentially from any of the sectarian divisions of lower Egypt. The Mahdist dervish belongs to a wholly different class from the Saidieh or Rufayeh Egyptian who makes your bed, or minds your horse, or rows your boat. He is an Arab of pure blood, whiter than the average European, handsome to a high degree, with pronounced features, sometimes almost Jewish in type, and an air of pride and probity coupled with a politeness and general superiority at first sight most engaging and deceptive. He is known among the dwellers in the Nile valley, not as a dervish, but as a jellab—pronounced in Egypt 'gallab'—a term which means a merchant, and, for reasons only too good, has of late years denoted a merchant of one commodity only—namely, slaves. The slaver on the Nile received sad blows and discouragement during the reins of such viceroys at Baker Pasha and Gordon, and took to honest merchandise, such as ivory, feathers, henna, senna, and the hides of antelopes and leopards. During the short but prosperous period indicated the jellabs might have been seen in Nubia or at Assouan with their cargoes, and it was difficult to connect these noble-looking fellows, with their regal manners, their exquisite robes of white cashmere, and their scarfs of priceless needle-work, with the stories you heard from the people around, who still stories of craft, oppression, rapine, lust, and cruelty for its own sake, such as would make both a hearer's ears to tingle. These are the men whom the present turn of affairs has rendered desperate. By their own doing they have closed the legitimate market they once enjoyed and their fanaticism has grown as their wealth has shrunk, while the countless negroes whom under Ismael Pasha they were enabled to carry into Egypt are now at a mature age, able to retaliate on their old oppressors and to revenge the woes of slaughtered fathers and outraged mothers upon the remnants of the hated jellabs.

"To speak of these black troops as 'natives' is somewhat incorrect. A few, a mere handful, are of a second generation from those originally imported; but the bulk of the 'Soudanese regiments' are slaves imported by those very Arab traders, and remember personally or by tradition of their elders how they came into the Egyptian house of bondage, what horrors of torture they underwent at the hands of these lordly jellabs, and how, finally, after undergoing and surviving, while thousands perished beside them, these horrors, they were seized by connivance of the Egyptian government, and, under the name of liberated slaves, were put into training for the army. The supply of these soldiers is not, as some authorities seem to think, inexhaustible. Mr. Stanley took away with him a good contingent; another contingent has perished at Suakin and on the Nile; but of those that remain it may safely be said that for war in so hot a region, and especially against the slave-dealers (whom we dignify as 'dervishes' above all others dervishes), they are most useful and may eventually be of further use as showing an example to the fellah soldier.

"The great drawback to their employment is their inherent savagery. They are reckless of the lives they have with such difficulty preserved; and when they come hand to hand with their former masters the unhappy jellab has but a poor chance. When at Suakin last autumn, they were ordered to charge a trenchful of dervishes, they went forward with reckless fury, outstripping their European officers, and, occupying simultaneously both ends of the trench, literally raked it from end to end with their fire, leaving

NOT A SINGLE MAN ALIVE.

How far they are to be depended on before other troops we have no means of knowing. The few Egyptian regiments who were led to dire defeat by the ex-khedive's son in the Turkish and Russian war were largely composed of these black slaves, then newly imported by the jellabs, hastily drilled, led by Turkish or Egyptian officers, and exposed to the one elemental condition of which they had previously known nothing—intense cold. They had been parboiled under the equator and roasted in the desert, but snow and frost were too much for them. They had moreover, no special grudge against the Russian—on the contrary, if they had been long enough in Egypt they could not bu have learned to hate the Turk.

"Their Moslem fanaticism, if it has ever existed, had not had time to grow; and, unlike the jellabs, the soldiers of the czar had never injured them. With the soldiers of Sir Francis Grenfell it is different. Their own recollections of early life—what they have heard from their comrades—what has been told to them by the unhappy refugees on Nubian territory or by the 'dervishes' on the unresisting villagers of the Upper Nile after the fall of Khartoum—these and many other considerations which it is not very easy for the English traveler to fathom make the black soldier an implacable foe to the white-faced jilleab who murdered his mother and burned his village and subjected himself to every indignity and bodily torment that the most refined system of cruelty could invent.

"The triumph of the negro soldier may not last long. How far the conscript fellah will be able to take his place is a question which the experience of the future can alone solve. At present all the betting is against him. True, he is very obedient to English officers, regular and punctual in his regimental duties, scrupulously sober—a point in which he far excels his sable comrade—orderly, clean, and considering the miseries of his lot—torn from his family and his farm and condemned for no fault of his own so what he looks upon as penal servitude for an indefinite period—wonderfully cheerful. Soldierlike he is not and never will be. He and his ancestors have stooped over the black soil for too many generations to make it possible for him to stand as upright as the drill-sergeant would have him. As to fighting, he might do wonders behind walls and especially in protection of his native village. On the hated 'Jebel,' the stony land where no water is, unlike the negro he is out of his element."

Learned in the Law.

An Old Man found a Rude Boy up one of his apple trees and desired the young marauder to come down, speaking to him with pleasant words which are sweeter also than the honey comb. "I prefer to remain in the Band-wagon," replied the Boy, who held the Ace. The Old Man then threatened him with personal violence, but the young scapegrace told him to go to grass, as it was written in the Spelling-book. "Then," said the Old Man, whose patience was soon gone, "I will visit you with the extreme penalty of the Law." Whereupon the saucebox tauntingly told him to go ahead and draw his bill, and he would soon see how much meat there was on a woodchuck in December. The Old Man, nothing loath, at once engaged the services of an Able and Learned Lawyer, who was also a jurist, and was distinguished in the columns of the local press for his matchless Forensic Eloquence; while on his part the Rude Boy, by pledging a portion of the fruit of the Tree which he occupied, was able to secure for the defense a Pureminded and Honorable Counsellor, whose fair fame as an Attorney and spotless reputation as a High-minded Advocate had never been called into question save by those who had dealings with him. The Old Man, who was Rightful Owner and was possessed of the Tree by Descent, Purchase, Escheat, Alienation, and Forfeiture, had his claim strengthened by his Lawyer, who put in additional claims as Riparian Owner, Freeholder, Tenant by Courtesy and Right of Discovery. In re the Defendant, the Rude Boy, merely put in a claim of Naked Possession and claimed Title by Occupancy. The Old Man went for him on writs of Ouster, Trespass, Waste, and Subtraction, to which the R. B. replied by charging Disturbance of Tenure. The case was called and put off, and set down and adjourned; it was referred to the Master to take Proof; it was postponed, decided, and carried up; it was reversed and remanded; it was stricken from the Docket with leave to reinstate, and withdrawn with leave to amend; it was argued in Chambers and surcharged for rejoinder, and was just on the point of being rebutted for demurrer in Trover with misprison of alimony when the Old Man died, without issue, leaving the Rude Boy in possession. His own Attorney, however, requested him to come down, to which he replied that he had learned a little law by this time; whereupon his Advocate, reminding him that "a little learning was a dangerous thing," took a large-sized Rock of irregular shape from his pocket, knocked the Boy clear out of the orchard at the first shot and assumed Possession by Villainage. "My name is Dennis," cried the Dying Boy; but I wonder why the Old Man didn't do that?" "Because," replied the High-minded Advocate, "he had a chump of a Lawyer who didn't know how to play the winning cards when he held them." So saying he took off all his client's clothes, examined his teeth to see if they were filled, and sold the Cadaver to a medical student with the right if reversion of the bones to himself after the student got through with him. Thus do we see that it is easy enough to make an honest living at the practice of the theory of law, if you only knew how to put the kink in the lariat.—[Burdette.

Suspending the Judgment.

There are few powers of mind so necessary to discover truth as that of suspending the judgment. All scientists must exercise it, or their work is valueless. We demand it in the court-room and the jury-box, and usually insist upon it when any very serious charge is brought against a man's character. But in ordinary daily life it is not so. The most crude and unproved statements are put forth without any apparent sense of injustice. We hear that such a one is gloomy and discontented, and another frivolous and vain; that one man is supposed to be tricky in business and another supposed to neglect his family; that one woman is extravagant and fickle, and another selfish and inhospitable. Daily and hourly are reputations thus stained and good names tarnished always needlessly, and often unjustly. However such impressions may have been gained, if they were dealt with as the astronomer would deal with his, if they were subjected to careful and patient investigation before they were proclaimed, many of them would remain unspoken, and much injury and sorrow be prevented.

A man who was charged in a Brooklyn Police Court with annoying women on the street said that he had "merely looked at them." The Court sternly remarked that men were not allowed to look at women so strenuously in Brooklyn, and fined him $5. As the offender came from Boston, it is possible that he put too liberal an interpretation upon Holmes' saying, that every man is entitled to at least two looks at a pretty face.

A NEW WRINKLE.

Pads for the Face and Cork Feet for Short Men.

Hollow cheeks and wrinkles are very awkward things, says the Pall Mall Gazette. Ladies do their best to prevent their appearance. The clever ones seem to be able to warn off the wrinkles, but hollow cheeks completely baffle their skill. A gentleman who lives at Islington is providing ladies whose cheeks are hollow with small pads. These pads are attached to natural or artificial teeth by means of tiny gold springs. The price of a face pad is a trifle heavy, like everything else guaranteed to improve the personal appearance. A pair of pads cost something like $20. The maker of the face-pad said that gentlemen as well as ladies are wearing them. One gentleman had never looked anything but cadaverous until he took to the pad. Now his cheeks are rounded like a cherub's, and he looks ten years younger. The curious thing about the face-pad is its inflexibility. It is made of the same material as the case of a set of artificial teeth.

There is no need for the small person to be overlooked on account of want of stature. It is possible to add as much as four inches to your statute by a boon, designed for the elevation of the lowly. The invention is an odd and ingenious one. Instead of tacking six inches on to a person's heels, a pair of entirely false feet, made of cork, is put into the shoes. When the wearer gets into them he or she is raised according to the inches of cork. Of course, in this invention the original foot is made to combine with the cork one under the leather in such a manner that the line of demarcation is not perceptible. The size of the foot is sacrificed, it is true, and a larger boot is necessary with the cork "elevator" than would be the case naturally, but fancy having four inches added to your height!

A Gentle Hint.

An English railway Company has fitted its carriages with electric lights conveniently arranged for reading, for which the passengers pay a penny per half hour by dropping that coin in a "slot." In some of the sleepers on the Pennsylvania Railroad there is a still more convenient arrangement, an electric reading lamp, which allows the passenger to indulge in that lazy man's delight, the luxury of reading in bed.

"Things are Seldom What They Seem."

While the above is, in the main, true, still there is an exception to the general rule, as is the case in many instances. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Pellets, which are not only all they seem, but more. In torpid liver, indigestion, sluggishness of the bowels, biliousness, and headache, the relief afforded by their use is wonderful.

Hints for the Fall.

Many farmers think that August and September are the proper months to sow rye. Sown at these times it gives cuttings for soiling in the fall. If sowing has been neglected, it is regarded by some good farmers as an advantage to sow rye in the fall, even as late as November, or as long as the ground can be worked. The grain sown thus late does not sprout in the fall, but starts very early in spring, and the crop is much earlier than from any spring-sown seed.

Do not wait until cold storms point out where repairs are needed. Make them at the first opportunity, and if an opportunity does not occur soon, make one. A large share of the food of an animal is expended in producing heat. If we keep the animal warm by other means, the food goes toward fattening it.

We often urged the need, in a treeless pasture, of some shelter to afford the animals protection from the excessive heat of the sun. If this shelter be of a more permanent character, with a roof and sides, it will break the force of a driving storm. The cold storms at this season are especially injurious to young animals.

Horses should come into winter quarters in good condition, and should have extra food. Many continue to turn out their horses until much later than this, when one cold, stormy night will cause them discomfort, when caught out in a driving storm. As soon as they are home rub them dry, and blanket, giving some extra feed.

Cows require care to prevent them from falling off in the quality of their milk. Bran, ground oats, flaxseed meal and cotton-seed meal are among the kinds of food that increase the quality of milk.

Pigs should be kept in growing condition and fattened early. City buyers like small pork.

Many fruit-growers find, when their orchards come into bearing, that they have planted too many varieties of winter apples which ripen at the same time. It is a mistake to set many new varieties in an orchard planted for profit. There are enough of well-tested marketable kinds. Any experimental planting should be done on a small scale. A large number of kinds, ripening at the same period, will result in having numerous small lots. At first there will not be enough of some kinds to fill a barrel; two kinds should never be mixed in one barrel, and these fruits must be used at home. For late apples we may have varieties of the colors, red, yellow and green. The retailer knows that the color of a fruit affects its sale. Trees will be selected and ordered this fall, and these points should be borne in mind, as they will have an influence upon the ultimate success of the orchard. In gathering apples, pick and handle them gently.

"An Old Settler" writes to say that he has reached the conclusion "we are to have an early fall and a long, cold hard winter," and figures it out as follows:—"In the first place try the skin of any of your fruit. You will find your apples, peaches and grapes, and all your fruit, for that matter, which is home-grown, with a thicker and tougher skin than you have seen for several years. That is one of the indications. That is the way nature takes care of her products. Last winter apples and other fruits were so thin-skinned and tender that it was hard to gather them without bruising, if you will remember, and we had an extraordinary mild winter. Corn is another of nature's signboards. The ears this year are protected by a thicker and stronger husk than I have seen before for years. Wheat and rye straw are tougher, hay is wirier and the seed pods are better protected than usual. These are old farmer's signs."

Almost daily the cable brings news of the betrothal or approaching marriage of some sprigs of royalty bearing the titles of prince of this, duke of that, or princess of the other. Now we have no doubt the young people and their pa's and ma's are infinitely interested in such events, but rise to remark that the people of this continent don't care a continental whether they marry, remain single, or go fishing. What do we know or care to know about the social doings of the Prince De Limburgercheese or the engagement of the Princess Bourbon-Chow-Chow. In these days they possess neither power nor money. Their titles do not amount to a rap, in many cases are but nominal ones, while nine-tenths are as poor as a country editor. The Yankee dudes at the European end of the wires should be interviewed by J. L. Sullivan.—Ridgetown Standard.

An Dachaidh Bhuan.

Air dhombhi seallt uinn air saoghal truagh,

ON THE SURFACE.

SKIN diseases appear on the surface and are often humiliating to the sufferer from them. From two to three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters will cure salt rheum, erysipelas, shingles, tetter, nettle rash, eczema, boils, pimples, or blotches, at the same time restoring the general health.

A soldier, writing to his girl, wound up his epistle as follows, "Heaven preserve you from your affectionate Fritz."

The common sense treatment for Catarrh is Dr. Carson's Catarrh Cure. Give it a trial and rid yourself of that unpleasant and dangerous disease. Sold by all druggists. One dollar per bottle. Six bottles for five dollars.

Editor—Have you ever appeared in print before? Young Poet (proudly)—Yes, a hundred times, for certain! Editor—Ah! but I don't mean visiting cards, you know.

WHEREAS.

WHEREAS much disease is caused by wrong action of the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and blood, and whereas Burdock Blood Bitters is guaranteed to cure or relieve dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney complaint, dropsy, rheumatism, sick headache, etc. Therefore, Be it Resolved that all sufferers should use B. ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

West Lorne.

Sept. 18.—Mrs. Clark and daughter, of St. Thomas, who have been visiting Mrs. Partridge, returned home last Tuesday. Miss Emily Brooks accompanied them.

Mrs. Dugald McPherson and son, Colin, are in Chatham at present visiting relatives.

Hugh McCallum, tailor, is at Detroit, where he is in the hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright stopped over here for a few days on their way from Toronto to their home in Windsor.

Miss Kate Crowley is very ill and slight hopes are entertained for her recovery.

Geo. Greer has left for London, where he has secured a situation in the C. P. R. freight offices.

Miss Eagan arrived in town last week and is now to be found presiding over the millinery department of Lindenman & Co.

Our streets have lately been the scenes of some very disgraceful disturbances. Hardly a night passes but some drunken rowdy is to be seen tearing up and down the streets, swearing and threatening to run things his own way generally, and when any resistance was offered a free fight would generally occur. We have a good lock-up here and if the police would only do their duty some of these characters would be given a chance to cool themselves off in the same, and perhaps it would do them some good.

Highgate.

Highgate is to have two more brick blocks next season.

Mr. D. McGregor, who has just returned from his trip to England, Scotland and France, is looking hale and hearty.

Mrs. McMackon has fully recovered from injuries received by falling down stairs.

Mr. Soules spent one day at the Chatham Fair. He thinks Highgate can beat 'em.

It is reported that Messrs. McMackon Bros., manufacturers of heading and staves, are about to dissolve partnership.

James Moorehouse is still lingering, but is not expected to last many days longer.

Archie Ferguson has purchased a new sight for his livery stables and is busy getting it in shape for business.

W. L. Soules refused $300 for his trotting mare.

Farmers are very busy seeding.

Wheat ranges from 80c. to 85c. according to weight.

Muncey.

The Agricultural Society will hold its annual show on Wednesday and Thursday, October 23rd and 24th, when the following gentlemen are expected to be present and deliver addresses on the first day of the fair:—W. F. Roome, M. P.; James Armstrong, M. P.; Mr. Casey, M. P.; D. M. Cameron, ex-M. P., and Jas. Gamble, Esq. Mr. Dodds will act as chairman. The Society intend to put a substantial board fence around the show ground, which will be completed by that time.

Fingal.

Sept. 25.—Mrs. Newland, whose illness has been previously announced in your paper, died on Sunday and was buried on Tuesday.

There is considerable sickness in the village at present and the doctors are busy.

Chas. Couse is building a new front to his store.

T. W. Hughes, principal of the Fingal public school, left for Ann Arbor to study medicine on Saturday last. His place will be filled by Mr. Buckhart, of New Sarum.

Wallacetown.

Duncan Forbes, for 34 years a resident of this village, passed peacefully away Monday afternoon, aged 84 years.

John Rose, of Chicago, and his niece, Miss M. McKellar, of St. Thomas, are visiting friends here.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church are making extensive preparations for "feeding the multitude" on the days of the fair. Hot meals will be given both days of the fair in the same place as last year.

Mr. Dromgould lost a horse from inflammation which he valued at $1,200.

George Ruthven, who until four months ago lived his life here, is saying good bye to hosts of friends, whose best wishes go with him as well as hopes that he will add another to the not small number of "youths" who have gone forth into the world from this small hamlet and by their talents and perserverance are making their marks. George goes to Trinity College, Toronto.

Mrs. R. Gunn is still very ill.

West Town Line

A. P. McMillan is at the St. Thomas fair, in the interest of the Campbell & Manson fanning mill. He will also attend the Iona, Wallacetowu and Rodney fairs. Any one wishing to buy one of these mills can see him at the above places.

A VISIT TO MOROCCO.

Cities Which Recall the Vanished Glorie of the Moors.

An interesting though somewhat difficul journey is the overland route to Tetuan, a port on the seaboard of Morocco, some distance from Ceuta, and about forty-five miles from Tangier in a tolerably direct line. But forty-five miles mean a good deal beneath an African sun and over such roads (if one may call them so) as are to be found in the Empire of Morocco, and even the most practiced horseman does not often show himself very enthusiastic about sightseeing on the morning after his arrival. The best plan is to order your horses over night, start with the first gleam of daylight, and get over as many miles as possible before the sun is high in the sky. When the heat of the day comes you may camp in some shady spot while emptying the lunch basket which you have brought with you, and start again in the afternoon, reaching Tetuan about nightfall. The town is already so far advanced as to contain one hotel, kept by a native Jew, which, although somewhat of the roughest, is by no means to be despised in such a region as Morocco.

Fatiguing though it is, the trip is enjoyable enough for any man in good health who is not afraid of "roughing it" a little. In fact, the journey is now frequently made by ladies likewise, who bear the strain of it as manfully (or rather womanfully) as their brothers or their husbands. It is true that the first few miles of the route—where it traverses a flat sandy plain cut up by vagrant brooks and a ternating between ankle-deep dust and knee-deep mud—form a rather unpromising commencement. But when once you are past this and fairly in among the bold, ridgy hills beyond, the picturesqueness of this strange region begins to assert itself in earnest.

On a sudden you find yourself picking your way along a deep, narrow, winding gully, walled in on either side by the high earthen dikes of the Moorish gardens and plantations, which are created with a formidable hedge of prickly pear, whose thick, fleshy bosses are unpleasantly suggestive of the flat heads of a coil of writhing snakes. No fear of theft here, for the most expert and daring marauder that ever stole an orange would scarcely be "hardened" enough to make his skin proof against the leveled bayonets of this terrible cordon through which (to quote the forcible language of an Eastern proverb "an elephant could not break nor a serpent wriggle."

From this gully you emerge all at once into a wide stretch of grassy upland, on which are gazing apparently unattended, (for neither man nor boy is anywhere to be seen,) a herd of the small, shaggy, wild-looking cattle peculiar to Morocco, with a sprinkling of sheep and goats. This smooth firm turf is just the thing for a good stretching gallop, and away you go accordingly at full speed, rejoicing in the fresh morning breeze and the brightening sunshine. But it is not long before you have to pull up again, for now there arises in front of you a steep, slippery incline, on the summit of which stands out against the warm, blue sky a small pointed boulder of gray stone. While you are wondering how it came there and what kind of antiquarian monument it can be, the stone suddenly gets up and begins to walk away, and then you perceive, that the supposed monument is only a Moor in his gray mantle and pointed hood.

From the crest of this ridge your path decends by a steep zigzag into sheltered by an overhanging cliff and shaded by several tall palm trees. You begin to think that it is the very place for the European residents from the coast towns who will be pouring out into the country for their Spring holiday not many weeks hence, carrying with them the tents which are to house them on the hillside all through the warm, bright months of April and May, when the annual rains are over. But the sharp hiss of a snake that goes wriggling away into the long, rank grass from under your horse's very feet somewhat modifies your admiration of this "eligible Summer resort," and you go forward down the hill at a brisk pace.

The town of Tetuan itself, when you finally reach it, is certainly well worth seeing. In the first place, it is peopled to a great extent by pure-blooded Moors of the old Granada stock, who are a vast improvement upon the mongrel breed of Northwestern Morocco, in whose veins the blood of Arabs, negroes, Berbers, and Spaniards runs promiscuously. Many of the houses, too, have preserved their ancient nationality as fully as their masters. You find here tesselated pavements, and shady court echoing the plash of tiny fountains, and fretted niches, and carved gateways, and pillared arcades, and turrets inlaid with glittering mosaic of all the colors of the rainbow—a panorama worthy of the Alhambra itself.

And in truth the thoughts and wishes of these descendants of Spain's ancient conquerors are still fixed as firmly on their lost home upon the banks of the Xenil as when Boabdil El Chico (whose brief and disastrous reign closed the Moorish dynasty of Granada) looked his last upon it in 1492. I can well remember how, in 1859, two Moors from Tetuan—a father and his only son—came to visit the Alhambra. The youth pressed eagerly through the gatewayand stared around him with childish curiosity; but the old man, when he saw the forsaken palace where his forefathers had once sat enthroned as lords of all around them, burst into tears, and turned silently away without ever entering the place to visit which he had come so far.

But the fierce Moorish spirit does not easily abandon itself to a sorrow without hope. Through the blackness of his hereditary grief breaks the lurid gleam of an expected vengeance, to be wreaked in full measure when that great day shall come in anticipation of which many of these men still treasure up in their houses at Tetuan the keys of those which their ancestors inhabited in Granada, hoping to return thither in triumph when the "dogs of Spain" have been driven out. How unquenchably strong is this hope, or rather belief, (for it is nothing less,) was shown to me by a very singular proof only the other day, when a friend of mine wished to purchase from an aged Tetuan Moor a chest of antique Moresco workmanship which one of his forefathers had brought thither from Spain when the last of the Moors were expelled, in 1526. But although the old man seemed ready enough for a "trade" with regard to any other article of personal property, he turned a deaf ear to all offers for his beloved chest. "My ancestor brought it from our ancient home in Granada and we will carry it back thither when these unbelieving dogs are swept away," said the old Mussulman, with a fierce gleam in his keen, black eyes; and then shall the prophet's holy name be heard once more in the halls of the Alhambra."

One might have thought that the capture of Tetuan itself thirty years ago by the "unbelieving dogs" in question would have given a death blow to these visionary hopes; but to all appearance it has done nothing of the kind. The conquering Spaniards, indeed—who were naturally proud of the sole military success which they had achieved for two generations—trumpeted as a great exploit the capture of a ruined fortress manned by and thousands of cheap cotton handkerchiefs adorned with a staring picture of the storming of Tetuan, were sold that Summer in the market-places of Seville and Madrid. But the conquered Moors were sufficiently consoled by having the captured town so speedily restored to them, and doubtless boasted that the "infidel curs" had given it up because they dared not keep it.

The journey inland to Fez—which, although nominally only the second city in the empire of Morocco, is practically the first—is a much longer and harder one than that to Tetuan. In actual distance, indeed, the city lies less than 100 miles from the coast, but the roads (as might be expected in Morocco) are in such a state as to suggest their having been laid down by an earthquake and smoothed over by a volcanic eruption. The first part of the route, which traverses the northern mountains, is picturesque and enjoyable enough. But, when once the hills are left behind, you come fairly out upon the great central plain, where the hot, south winds from the desert have full play, while the cooler northern breezes from the distant Mediterranean are shut out by the great ridge of the Atlas, and there you soon find to your cost that, even at its northwesternmost extremity, Africa is Africa still.

But the ancient city itself is well worth a visit, although falling somewhat short of the glowing descriptions given by sundry enthusiastic tourists, who, being doubtless utterly weary of the long journey thither, were naturally anxious to make out that they had been fully repaid at the end of it. In the days when it was the capital of an independent and powerful kingdom, before Morocco conquered and annexed it, in 1548, it had probably a far greater show of outward splendor than at present, when its chief title to renown is derived from the red "Fez" caps which took their name from the original seat of their manufacture.

The tiny stream of the Pearl River separates the so-called "Old City" from the New, although in point of universal dirt and decay there is really very little to choose between them. The streets are extremely narrow, and the high, flat-roofed buildings, projecting in front like the wooden houses of Chester and other old English towns, shut out what little daylight there is to be had. As in the great Mohammedan towns of Asia, each street is occupied solely by the craftsmen of one particular trade, so that if you happen to want a tailor or shoemaker or a barber, you know exactly where to find him. The provision markets of the city are numerous and well supplied, and among the chief local manufactures may be noticed slippers, sashes, woolen cloaks, silk handkerchiefs, red felt caps, fine carpets, earthenware, coarse cloths, and saddlery.

Among the many mosques of Fez only two are really worthy of mention. That of El-Caroobin is chiefly famous for its "300 columns" and its two fine fountains of polished marble. That of Muley Edris bears the name and contains who founded Fez itself in 793, and who is still revered as a saint by its fanatical inhabitants. So great, indeed, is his sanctity in their eyes that his mosque has the somewhat questionable honor of serving as a recognized asylum for all criminals (even those of the worst class) who, once within its hallowed walls, are safe from the grasp of the law—a privilege which, in such a country as Morocco, must at times leave barely standing room within the sacred precints.

The Sultan's palace has probably gained much in the estimation of modern travelers by the fact that hardly any of them have ever seen it, the interior being, as a rule jealously guarded from the prying eyes of "unbelieving Franks." It is surrounded by high walls, (which, however, are almost as ruinous as those of the city itself,) and the gates are kept constantly barred and watched by soldiers. But this precaution is on a par with that of the Gothamites who barred their turnpike gates to keep out the snow and locked up their cellars lest the thunder should turn the beer sour; for a boy of ten years old might scramble with ease up the broken battlments or creep through any of the countless gaps that yawn in every part of them. And when you do get in, there is nothing particular to be seen except a vast number of courtyards opening one out of the other, like the ivory balls carved by the Chinese, some of which are still unfinished, while others are fast crumbling to decay. Being particularly dirty and unwholesome, and rather difficult of access into the bargain, Fez is, of course, a holy city, and was for a time (while the route to Mecca was obstructed) a place of pilgrimage for all the Western Arabs. But it once had a far higher title to renown in its celebrated schools of which carried the fame of Moorish learning through the whole civilized world at a time when the vaunting Spaniards were still sunk in the grossest ignorance and barbarism. What Padua afterward was to Italy, what Leyden was to Holland, what Oxford and Cambridge are to England, Fez was to Northwestern Africa, and its inhabitants boasted with just pride that the renown of its learning had drawn students to it, not merely from all the Mohammedan States of Africa and Spain, but likewise from every part of Christian Europe.

But this is all over now. The supremacy of Moorish learning, like that of Moorish conquest, has passed away never to return. Christendom has been pushing onward while Islam has stood still, and by the immutable laws of nature the Western tortoise has long since left the Moslem hare behind. The once famous college of Fez still exists, and within its crumbling walls a few "learned Mohammedan doctors" still keep up a faint semblance of teaching. But their instructions are almost exclusively confined to the Koran itself and its Mussulman commentators, and the few students whom they draw together serve only to make more crushingly manifest the utter collapse of this Moslem university's ancient greatness.

Nor, in truth, is this to be regretted. It has done its work of handing on to its successors the torch of knowledge, and all that it can do now is to refrain from clogging the living world of the present with the dead traditions of the past. The Moors of pure descent who form so large a portion of the motley population of Fez still cling to the hope of a political millennium of conquest and vengeance in Spain at the very moment when Spain is extending her eager hand to conquer and annex Morocco. But such dreams come ages too late, for the greatness of Fez died with its last King, 300 years ago, upon the fatal field of Alcazar.

DAVID KER

Michael O'Brion.

Nearly thirty years ago three business men of Charlestown, Mass., shared the expense of building one of the finest blocks in that city. Among the workmen employed by them was a hod-carrier, Michael O'Brion, whom the casual looker-on would possibly not have remarked as differing from his fellow-laborers. One of the three partners, who spent much of his time on the premises, superintending the building, remarked one day to his associate, as Michael passed them with his hod of bricks:

"There goes a young fellow who'll some time be more than a hod-carrier."

"What makes you think so?" one of them asked.

"Oh, he keeps his eyes and ears open," replied the first speaker. "I've noticed he spends most of his nooning studying the masons' work instead of loafing with the other men. I've seen him handling the trowel and the bricks, imitating the motions of the brick layers. He's picking up the trade."

A few days later one of the bricklayers was taken sick. It was during the busiest buiding season, and it was found impossible just then to fill his place.

At noon Michael approached the foreman and said, respectfully, "If ye plaze, sorr, I think I could lay bricks."

"You never did such work, did you?" the foreman asked, shortly.

"No, sorr," answered the young Irishman, "but I've watched the men, till I think I could."

"Pshaw!" said the foreman, "watching and doing are different things. Keep to your hod carrying."

The observant partner chanced to overhear this conversation, and as Michael was turning away after the rebuff, he said to the foreman, "Let the fellow try it. I believe he can do it."

"Just as you say, sir," the foreman answered. "Here, Mike," he called, "I am willing that you should try your hand; so go ahead."

"Thank ye, sorr!" said Michael, "an' I'll do me best."

At the close of the day's work, the foreman said to him, "Well, Mike, you can lay bricks again to-morrow."

"All right, sorr!" answered the young man, pleased and proud at his success. "I'll never carry a hod agin," he said to himself.

During the next few weeks Michael gathered information on all sides. He borrowed a book on the subject and laboriously studied evenings, spelling out the words. He asked questions of the builders, who were nothing loath to impart what they knew to the pleasant young Irishman.

Ten years later Michael O'Brion was a master-builder; and to-day he is the owner of that very block where he began a hod-carrier and ended as a mason.

"That Irishman is a self-made man," his former employer said to the writer. "He's made his success by study and attention to what was going on about him, and by his courage and industry. He's had help from nobody, but he was ready for his opportunity when it came. And the more emigrants of his sort that come to this country, the better the country will be."

The Footpath.

In England one may walk through a county without troubling the high road. The winding by-road, with its bowery sides, is everywhere at our service, and everywhere, too, we find the footpath, crossing private grounds, perhaps, as sanctioned by some ancient right of way; edging the little river and passing it by the bridge, which is always to be found where needed; bordering the farmer's fields, leading from one hospitable gate or turnstile to another, and finding its way to every attractive point of view. England has been cultivated for so many centuries that scarce an acre appears which the hand of man has not put to some sort of service, while even in the most thickly-settled parts of Canada there are many tracts which are still almost in their primitive condition. Horses, too, are cheap with us and dear in England, so the English rustic is obliged to walk where the Canadian or American may ride if he will. But to explain why we have not so many footpaths as the English is not to confess ourselves satisfied with the want of them. Nor is there any reason why we should not have them in far greater numbers. It costs a good deal to make a road, but very little to make a footpath, for, of course, we need merely a narrow path which a well-shod and sensibly-dressed person can traverse with a moderate degree of comfort—not a gravel walk fit for slippers and muslin gowns. Often a couple of planks across a brook, a few loads of earth dumped in a marshy spot, two or three stones set, as steps against a wall or fence, and a little cutting away of tree branches and undergrowth, would open up a delightful tract of country which now is almost impossible of approach. Nor do we think that the farmer's or landed proprietor's interests would suffer by such trifling civilities paid to possible pedestrians. More persons would cross his property, but those who did cross would do it less damage. The path might keep even boys' feet from straying into less desirable directions, while those for whose especial benefit it was formed would, of course, be limited by its bounds. If even the rudest, simplest paths were thus generally formed in our rural neighborhoods their influence would at once be felt in the village itself as well as in the Summer colony. Ask any farmer's daughter why she does not walk more and she will answer, like the city woman, "Where shall I walk? The road is unattractive, the meadow and woods are always more or less difficult to cross and often impassable." More paths and simple bridges and stiles are what we need, alike in the interests of healthful physical development and of healthful growth in the sentiment for nature.

"Howton has some very strange ideas about dress." "You surprise me. Judging from his dress I imagined he had no ideas at all."

He Owns Up.

O hapless day! O wretched day,
That ever I should see!
Alas, the years have sneaked away
And all the changed but me!
Had I the power, I would remand
You to a gloom condign,
But here you've crept upon me and
I—I am thirty-nine!

Now, were I thirty five, I could Assume a flippant guise,
Or, were I forty years, I should Undoubtedly look wise;
For forty years are said to bring
Sedateness superfine,
But thirty-nine don't mean a thing;
A bas with thirty nine!

You healthy, hulking girls and boys,
What makes you grow so fast?
Oh I'll survive your lusty noise;
I'm touch and bound to last!
No, no, I'm old and withered, too;
I feel my powers decline.
Yet none believes this can be true
Of one at thirty-nine.

And you, dear girl with velvet eyes,
I wonder what you mean
Through all our keen anxieties
By keeping sweet sixteen.
With your dear love to warm my heart,
Wretch were I to repine,
I was but jesting at the start,
I'm glad I'm thirty-nine!

So, little children, roar and race
As blithely as you can
And, sweetheart, let your tender grace
Exalt the Day and Man;
For then these factors, I'll engage,
All subtly shall combine
To make both juvenile and sage
The one who's thirty-nine!

Yes, after all, I'm free to say
That I rejoice to be Standing as I do stand to-day
'Twixt devil and deep sea;
For though my face be dark with care.
Or with a grimace shine,
Each haply falls unto my share,
Since I am thirty-nine!

'Tis passing meet to make good cheer
And lord it like a king.
Since only once we catch the year
That doesn't mean a thing.
O happy day! O gracious day!
I pledge thee in this wine!
Come let us journey on our way
A year, good Thirty-nine!

Death of the Roses.

Crimson, pink and snowy petals
Fall around me, and the air,
Full of sweetest perfume, greets me
From the dying roses fair.

Oh, ye tender blushing roses,
Yielding spicy fragrance, sweet,
Fear not I will crush your petals
As they fall beside my feet.

For I love them and can fancy
As I see them helpless lie,
They had rather since they're fallen,
Choose their own sweet way to die.

I will let the gentle breezes
Kiss them as they pass along,
Let the little birds at twilight
Sing to them their even song.

Let the dew-drops give them moisture,
As they languish in their sight,
Let the stars look down upon them
In the silent hours of night.

Let them wither where they've fallen,
For by Nature's hand alone
They were formed, and by her nourished,
And she claims them as her own.

Thus shall your fair emblems perish,
Slowly fade away from sight—
Leaving each a sweet remembrance—
Blooming in the mem'ry bright.

For whene'er a rose is mentioned,
Memory of its sweetness brings,
Luscious fragrance, and like tendrils
Closely round the heart it clings.

So, ye dying roses fear not
For your falling petals sweet,
Fear not I will thoughtless crush them
As they drop beside my feet.

Nay, I'll look upon them, thinking
What a feeling of repose,
Could we, dying, leave behind us
Memories fragrant as the rose.

"Smith" in Thirteen Tongues.

It is a popular belief that Smith is the most common name in the English language. I am aware that when Fergus O'Connor's famous Chartist petition was investigated by a committee of the House of Commons another name containing the same number of letters was found largely predominating—but we will let that pass just now, and honor John Smith by doing him into thirteen different tongues, when he comes out thus:—In Latin he is Joannes Smithus; the Italians smooth him off with Giovanni Smith; the Spaniards render him Juan Smithus; the Hollanders adopt him as Hans Schmidt; the French flatten him out as Jean Smeet; the Russian sneezes and barks as he says Ivan Smittowski. In China he is known as Jovan Shimmit: in Iceland as Johne Smithson; in Tuscaroras you forget all about Pocahontas and Powhattan when you hear them call Ton Qua Semittia; In Wales they speak of him as Jihon Semidd; in Mexico he is Jantli F'Smitti; among the Greek ruins the guide speaks of him as Ion Smikton, and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Voe Self.

Profit on Physic.

Another instance of the immense fortunes made out of patent medicines well advertised has just been made public in the announcement that the proprietor of a certain medical specific has sold the right to make it to a British syndicate for a million pounds sterling, or say five millions of dollars. This is a lot of money. It seems to be bigger than it really is when it is borne in mind that it represents nothing but medicine. But behind this are the innumerable aches and pains and complaints of a hundred kinds for which people buy it and take it. What an army of complaining mortals they would make if they could all be got together each with a bottle of medicine in his hand, in the absence of any other weapon, setting out on a crusade to fight disease.—[Montreal Star.

Russian Taxation.

The burdens of the peasantry are very heavy. In Russia the superior classes enjoy many exemptions from taxation, and the public revenue is taken mainly from the peasant classes. The annual redemption money they have to pay to the State for their land is a most serious obligation, and between one thing and another the burdens on the land in a vast number of cases exceed its net return very considerably. Prof. Thun states that in 2,009 cases of letting holdings which had occurred in the province of Moscow at the time he wrote the average rent received was only 3 rubles 56 kopecks per "soul," (land share,) while the average taxation was 10 rubles 30 kopecks. Stepniak says that in the thirty-seven provinces of European Russia the class who were formerly State peasants pay in taxes of every description no less than 92 75 per cent. of the average net produce of their land, and that the class who were formerly serfs of private owners pay as much as 195.25 per cent. of the net produce of theirs. Land owning on these terms is manifestly a questionable privilege, and the moujik pays his land taxes as the Scotch crofter has sometimes to pay his rent, not out of the produce of his holding, but out of the wages of his auxiliary labor; but the Scotch crofter, under his system of individual tenure, has one great resource which is wanting to the other—he can always cut the knot of his troubles by throwing up his holding, if chooses, and emigrating. To the Russian peasant emigration brings no relief. He is born a proprietor, and cannot escape the obligation of his position wherever he may go. He may try to let his ground—and in many cases he does—but as we see, he cannot often get enough rent to meet the dues. He may leave his village, if he will, but his village liabilities travel with him wherever he may settle. He cannot obtain work anywhere in Russia without showing his pass from his own Commune; and since, under the principle of joint liability that rules in the Communistic system, the members of the Commune who remain at home would have to pay the emigrant's arrears if he failed to pay them himself, they are not likely to renew the pass to a defaulter. The Russian peasants are thus nearly as much adstricti glebæ as they ever were; they are now under the power of the Commune as completely as they were before under the power of their masters, and their difficulty is still how they can possibly obtain emancipation. Sometimes they will defy the Commune, forego the advantage of a lawful pass, crowd the ranks of that large body in Russia who are known as the "illegal men," and sometimes, we are assured by Prof. Thun, a whole village, every man and every family, will secretly disappear in a body and seek refuge from the tax collecter by settling in the steppes. The natural right of every man to the land is thus, in the principal country where any attempt is made to realize it, nothing but a harassing pecuniary debt.

Curiosities of Figures.

A problem that at a glance seems enough to tempt many a school-boy to spend a portion of his vacation in an endeavor to solve it, appeared recently in a Maine journal, and is as follows: Take the number 15. Multiply it by itself and you have 225. Now multiply 225 by itself and then multiply that product by itself, and so on until fifteen products have been multipled by the nselves in turn. The question aroused considerable interest among lawyers in Portland, and their best mathematician, after struggling with the problem long enough to see how much labor was entailed in the solution, made the following discouraging report upon it: "The final product called for contains 38,539 figures, the first of which are 1,442. Allowing three figures to an inch, the answer would be over 1,070 feet long. To perform the operation would require about 500,000,000 figures. If they can be made at the rate of a minute a person working ten hours a dap for 300 days in each year would be twenty-eight years about it. If, in multiplying, he should make a row of ciphers, as he does in other figures, the number of figures would be more than 523,939,228. This would be the precise number of figures used if the product of the left-hand figure in each multiplicand, by each figure of the multiplier was always a single figure; but, as it is most frequently and yet not always, two figures, the method employed to obtain the foregoing result cannot be accurately applied. Assuming that the cipher is used on an average once in ten times, 475,000,000,000 approximates the actual number."

Babylonian Exploration.

Prof. H. V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania's expedition to Babylonia, is back in Philadelphia with a large collection of antiquities dug up on the site of Niffer, one of the ruined cities on the Euphrates. Between two bricks in the wall of a temple the explorers found a duck's egg which must have been laid there at least 1,000 years before Christ. What are supposed to be the remains of the Tower of Babel are 180 feet high yet, and the bricks at the top bear the inscription:—"I am King Nebuchadnezzar." Prof. Hilprecht was compelled to prescribe for every sick Arab he saw, for the Arabs regard all Franks as physicians. The only drugs he had with him were camphor and quinine, but alternate doses of them seemed to fit every complaint. An Arab sheik whom he once tried to pay for his hospitality got angry and asked:—"Do you think I am a dog?" The Professor tried to tell the Arabs about the American railroads, and especially about the elevated railroads, with the result that he won among them the reputation of being a colossal liar.—[Buffalo Courier.

Cure Sentenne, the parish priest of Notre Dame, Montreal, severely criticized in his sermon on Sunday the celebration of Labour Day, which he said was a godless demonstration resembling the fetes of the French Revolution when the goddess of reason was the supreme ruler.

A person who takes cold easily, says medical contemporary, has a weak digestion, an irritable condition of stomach and, sympathetically, of mucous membrane in other parts of the body. The circulation is easily unbalanced, the blood having a tendency to leave the surface and to stagnate in internal organs. This condition is to be remedied not by local medication, not by "catarrh snuffs" or "pectoral balsams," but by careful study of the laws of health and obedience to them. To learn when and what and how to eat; how to dress, exercise, and rest; how to balance the circulation—these are the studies to be pursued if one wishes so learn how to avoid "taking cold."

THE FATE OF THE BRIG BEN HAMMOND.

How the Mystery was Solved.

In the month of June, 1854, the English brig ben Hammond, Capt. John E. Clark, passed through the Straits of Sunda on her way to the Indian Ocean, bound for Melbourne The crew, all told, numbered eleven people, and the brig had a miscellaneous cargo. She signalled "All well" when going through the straits, and that was the last heard of her for five months. Then a sailor named Charles Renfoe arrived at Sydney and told a very curious story.

About forty miles off the straits the brig fell in with a small sandal wood trader in a sinking condition. She was carrying a lot of natives from one of the islands of Sumatra to some port in Java, and had sprung a leak. The brig had either to stand by her or take her people off, and Capt. Clark decided upon the former course.

The brig had struck a log or some other floating obstruction while sailing at a fast rate, and had been badly damaged about the bows. This occurred in the early morning and it was just at sunset that the brig came up with her. The injured craft had been creeping in for the Java coast, but as wind and current were against her she had made very slow progress.

Her pumps were so small that they would not throw out what a quarter-inch hole would let in, and crew and passengers were badly rattled. It was a beautiful evening, with every prospect of continued good weather, and the first mate and five of the men went aboard of the trader to help him make repairs.

In the course of four hours they returned aboard with the news that the small craft was now tight and dry, and they brought with them several bottles of wine and some dried fruits as presents from her Captain.

Capt. Clark was a kind-hearted man, and as the men returned aboard he distributed one bottle of wine and a share of the fruit among the men. The brig and trader has been slowly drifting off before a light wind during the repairs, but now each hauled back to her course and they were soon separated. Renfoe had not been feeling well during the day, and he was the only man who did not partake of the stuff sent aboard. It was his watch below after midnight, and he had been asleep about an hour when he was.

AROUSED BY CONFUSION ABOARD.

Every man on watch below was suffering with cramps and vomiting, and he went on deck to find the same state of affairs prevailing. Captain and mates were down, as well as the men, and the man at the wheel fell to the deck and began rolling around just as Renfoe came on deck. While the brig had all plain sail on her the breeze was light, and, as the wheel was made fast, she took care of herself.

There was no doubt that the crew had been poisoned by the wine or fruit, though the trader must have been entirely innocent of any such intent after the services they had rendered. Recourse was had to the medicine chest, but nothing seemed to act as an antidote.

The agony of the men increased with time, and by three o'clock in the morning four of the foremost hands were dead, while the others were without hope. Renfoe was dazed and helpless, and he could do nothing but pity the poor fellows around him.

Half an hour after sunrise he was the only living man aboard the brig, and as he saw one after another pass away his feelings were wrought up to such a pitch that he almost lost his mind. He could not give a clear account of what followed. He could not say whether he deserted the brig that day or a week subsequently.

He did not remember whether he threw the bodies overboard or left them where they lay. Time was a blank to him for the next ten days, when he was picked up by a trader two hundred miles below the straits and twenty miles off the Java coast.

He was then afloat in the brig's yawl, and had neither water nor provisions. His talk was flighty and received little attention, and he was carried to one of the eastern islands and was there seriously ill for a month with fever. When he began to mend of that the particulars of the tragedy came back to him, but as the brig had not been seen by any of the traders his story was not believed.

He worked his way down to Timor and from thence across to Port Darwin, and he finally got ship from there around to Melbourne.

The Ben Hammond had been reported lost in the Indian Ocean, but her fate was considered a mystery. Vessels which had preceded and followed her had met with the most favorable weather, and there was much speculation as to what had brought about her loss. Renfoe's story explained and several crafts were sent out to search for the brig. She could not be found or heard of, and it was at last concluded that she had gone to the bottom.

A PORTION OF THE MYSTERY,

In the month of June, 1865, eleven years later, I passed through the Straits of Sunda on the English ship Prince John bound for the port of Melbourne. We had scarcely cleared the Java cape when it came on to blow a gale from the west. The gale increased to a hurricane after a few hours, and, although we kept the old ship afloat, she was driven along ways to the east.

We had a terrific wind and sea for fous days, and by that time our drift had carried us well down to the eastern end of Java. One morning, at about 9 o'clock, just after I had heard the Captain say that the gale was breaking, we were boarded by a sea which swept the ship from stem to stern We were lying to, you understand, with the usual watch on deck.

Three of us were carried overboard by the wave, but I did not see either of the others. I was whirled end over end and buffeted about until I thought I should drown before I had seen the surface, but after a time I was heaved up to daylight, and I had no sooner got my eyes clear than saw one of our quarter boats close to me. It had been torn loose by the same wave, and was floating right side up, but full of water. I got hold of it, and after resting a bit I pulled myself in and secured myself by a lashing to one of the thwarts.

The waves ran right over me at brief intervals, but the weight of the water held the boat down until she drove like a log, and she could not therefore upset as she turned broadside to the sea

It was, as I said, about 9 o'clock when I went overboard. At about 4 in the afternoon I sighted land to the north, and an hour later I found myself driving between two islands, half an hour later a current set me to the right, and I drove in for the land and brought up at the head of a bay or inlet half a mile long and not over two hundred feet wide. Hard aground at the head of this bay, with her bowspirit touching the trees on the shore, was the old Ben Hammond the long lost and almost forgotten brig.

I drove right in past her, and was heaved on the sands by the swell, and the first thing I did was to sit down and wonder whether I was really in my senses or had gone daft. There rested the old brig on an even keel, as ever, yards braced as they were left years before but the sails rotted and blown away, and many ropes broken and frayed and streaming in the wind.

MASTS STANDING AS PLUMB

I had heard of her loss, and had read Renfoe's story as related by the papers, and it took the pluck out of me to find her there. Indeed I was so awed and overcome that I did not dare board her that night, but made my bed on the sands and slept soundly till morning.

I had secured my yawl when I drove in and as I came to examine it next morning I found it almost free from injury, while the mast and sail and tiller were secure under the thwarts. By this time the gale was over, and I was surprised to see how far the water had fallen away from the beach.

My next move after inspecting the yawl was to board the brig. This was an easy matter, as the water at low tide did not reach her foremast. I was desperately afraid of facing a skeleton as I drew my head above the rail, and I made a lengthy survey before I dropped to the deck.

There was a great deal of litter about, and much of the exposed woodwork had begun to decay. A more lonesome sight one could not find. I moved slowly from stem to stern, and was relieved when no ghostly relic of the dead presented itself.

The brig had the old-fashioned fo'castle, and I noticed that the slide over the opening was secured. The cabin doors were also shut. I dreaded to make a further investigation, but hunger and peace of mind compelled me, and I finally entered the cabin. The medicine chest was upset in the main cabin and eating room, and the bottles scattered about the floor. There was a spread on the table, but it was black with mould, and, after a brief look, I had to retire until the fresh air could drive out the heavy odors. By and by I returned, and when I had looked into the berths and found no mouldering skeletons, a great load was taken off my mind.

I had, however, to examine the fo'castle yet, but, being encouraged by what I had failed to find in the cabin, I made short work of it. Not a body had been left aboard. Renfoe must have heaved the dead overboard before he left the brig, although he had no recollection of the act.

In the cook's galley I found everything in good order, and when I looked over the stores in the pantry everything smelled and tasted as wholesome as if only a week out of the warehouse. Within an hour from the time I boarded her I was eating a breakfast prepared in the galley and was feeling quite at home. When I had satisfied my hunger I opened up the hatches and and then turned to and cleared the deck of much of its litter. When things looked a bit more trim I went down and got the chart showing the Sunda Islands, and after a little calculation, I located my position as being, on the west side of Lombak Island. It was not the main island, exactly, but one lying so close to it that it went by the same name, and was separated only by half a mile of shallow water.

Lombak proper was inhabited, but for many years past the western end of the island has been avoided on account of a plague starting there and sweeping off hundreds of natives. It seemed strange that some of the trading craft had not entered the strait and caught sight of the brig and strange yet how the craft got in there. The chart made it plainer.

A westerly gale created a strong current through the straits, and one which made its influence felt several miles off the coast. In ordinary weather, with ordinary depth of water, the channel was dangerous to any sort of craft, manyledges and bars being shown. I suppose the brig's sails helped her along, and she got just the right slant at the proper time to carry her into the bay and beach herself. The spot was sheltered by the trees, and one would have had to be very close to see her.

I got hold of the manifest and also inspected the hold, and I found she had a valuable cargo, and one which had not been damaged $10 worth. There were four or five steam engines, a great lot of agricultural tools, furniture in the rough, wooden ware of all sorts, scores of cases of boots and shoes and dry goods, and enough in fact, to make up a cargo valued at £27,000. The brig was as dry as a bone, and after a little ventilation and disinfecting she smelled as sweet as a peach

I was a week aboard of her before I decided what to do. The small boat was in good condition, and I took on water and provisions, and one morning ran down the straits to the north for the Flores Seas, feeling quite sure of meeting some British vessel before crossing to Borneo.

I had scarcely left my island behind when I saw H. M. S. the Dragon bound to the East and by midafternoon was aboard of her. After sending me back with a guard to hold the brig, she returned to Surabaja, on the north coast of Java, and reported to the Consul, and within a month everything had been removed from the old Ben Hammond and she was left to decay. Her cargo insurance had been paid, but everything was recovered in such fine order that the loss was trifling.

Gypsy Religion.

When a gypsy dies, that is the end. Every member of the race has a horror of death, because no gypsy lives who has faith in a hereafter. They cannot be induced to contemplate it. No genuine gypsy ever accepted Christianity. Borrow, in his many years of Bible and missionary work among them, never claimed to have converted one. In all countries, as is true of a goodly number of other folk, they occasionally profess a sort of attachment to the ruling creed. For instance, we hear of a "gypsy exhorter" in Ohio, and the other day a good Bishop of Delaware was allowed to christen a gypsy child in a camp near Wilmington. But these little hypocrisies are all in the way of gypsy thrift. The entire race belongs to the lowest order of agnostics.—[Springfield Republican.

ENGLAND'S PREMIER.

Blakely Hall's Pen Sketch of Lord Salisbury.—An Amiable Host.

One might easily imagine that the Prime Minister would be the busiest man in England, but I do not think I ever saw a man who is so exactly typical of the Englishman of leisure as the Marquis of Salisbury. It is a favorite subject of conversation with him, and he gives all the credit for his extraordinary ease of manner to his abject devotion to method. He has reduced his duties and those of his subordinates to a condition of machine-like regularity.

The first time I ever saw the Prime Minister was one morning in St. James Park, when he was taking a constitutional. He is a tall, thick set, heavy man, 59 years of age, with a short neck and a bushy beard, He was twisting and snapping his fingers with some nervousness as he walked along, and I have learned since that this is his invariable habit. It is the only outward sign of what is said to be an exceedingly nervous temperament—a temperament kept in control by an iron will.

Two detectives followed the Marquis as he walked along. He detests their presence and has protested against them many tim but the Home Secretary is responsible for the safety of the Prime Minister, and he insisted that he shall be constantly accompanied by two of the mutton-headed members of the most dense and hopeless police force in the world when he goes abroad. The Irish agitators are the cause of it.

AN AMIABLE HOST.

The political side of the Marquis' character is well enough known. Socially he is an amiable host, and entertains lavishly both at Hatfield and in London. He is, above all, a serious man, and his quiet, reserved and almost sullen demeanor impresses one as being more or less affected at times. For instance, a short time ago, there was a tremendous reception given by the Constitutional Club in London. About 2,000 guests were present. They were of every conceivable rank, from ambassadors to commercial travellers, and the rush was so great that women's jewels and the orders of men were torn from them during their struggles to get to the doors and windows for air. It was a night of suffocating heat.

At 9 30, exactly on scheduled time, a team of bay horses drew a big state coach up to the main entrance of the club. A beefy and highly-impressive coachman sat on the box, and two slim and well shaped lackeys stood on the rumble behind. The police yelled: "Make way for the Prime Minister!" with intense emotion, the lackeys jumped to the ground, took off their hats, threw open the door and stood with their heads bared, and the Marquis lumbered heavily out and cumbersomely assisted a middle aged and old-fashioned lady to alight.

Then the Prime Minister and his wife entered the club amid terrific cheers. Salisbury wore court dress and the Order of the Garter. He looked neither distinguished nor important, but his reception was such a one as the Prince of Wales has not received for many years. What struck me most forcibly about him was the very evident manner in which he showed that he was prodigiously bored by the attention he attracted.

EXCEPTION TO THE RULE.

As a rule when an eminent personage is being cheered wildly by a thousand or two people in Europe, a society smile and a series of affable bows are forthcoming. It is part of the etiquette of greatness. But Salisbury neither smiled nor bowed. He stumped methodically into the building with Lady Salisbury on his arm, passed up the aisle, fought through the crowd of ambassadors, ministers and others to the supper room, made a twenty minutes' speech, bowed profoundly, took Lady Salisbury on his arm and strolled out of the building, taking the state coach precisely on the minute, as it had been ordered, and drove rapidly away.

I never saw but one other man receive the plaudits of the crowd with such an apparent lack of interest. That was General Grant in Washington during a big review. The Emperor William of Germany never shows the slightest emotion when the crowds are cheering him, but he looks over the people with an air of some curiosity and interest. Salisbury, being a nobleman and a man of vast wealth, has all of the high caste prejudices and mannerisms of the English swells. The same manner of utter and somewhat wearied unconcern which distinguishes the Duke of Portland or the Duke of Beauforte when a horse lands winner of the Derby and doubles or divides the duke's fortune, prevaded the Marquis of Salisbury.

From the highest to the lowest it is always the same thing among the nobility of England. It is not only that they wish to appear uninterested in what is going on around them, but they try to get a bit further than this and show that they are bored by any emotion whatever. It is the characteristic of the caste. I know no higher development in this particular form of self-repression than that which Lord Salisbury has attained.

PUNCTUAL PREMIER.

At a Cabinet meeting he is invariably the first to arrive and the first to depart. He listens to his advisers with studied quiet and entire courtesy and then makes a little speech, puts the responsibility where it belongs, delegates what action is to be pursued, closes his brand new blotter, pushes his fresh stick of sealing wax and newly-sharpened pencils aside and rises and departs. Apparently he is never hurried, and when the newspapers say with a thrill some morning, "The Premier yesterday had a long and exceedingly important consulation with the German Ambassador," the information is by no means as important as it seems to be. A long and important converation with the German Ambassador is something that the Marquis of Salisbury never has, because none of his conversations are long.

The Premier rises at 8 o'clock and invariably takes a walk before breakfast. When at his magnificent country estate he goes out in his park, and very often reels off three or four miles before taking his coffee. When in London it is his custom to have a sharp spin around Green Park, or even in Hyde Park, before the day fairly begins. It is here that he feels the presence of the Scotland Yard detectives most severely, for the Marquis is a rapid walker and the spectacle of two beefy and red faced bobbies plowing excitedly after him disturbs his equanimity and his quiet habit of thought. Like many other prominent political lights, from Bismarck and Gladstone down, the Marquis is a very light eater. He breakfasts at nine, and at least [illegible]s in the year the meal consists only of [illegible]ner of bacon and a poached egg. At luncheon and dinner he is apt to take a glass of light red wine, but as often as not he goes entirely without drink of any sort.

AN AVERSION TO SMOKING.

He has one hobby, and that is an intense aversion to smoking. Even his own sons never approached him when puffing a cigarette or a cigar. Unlike most public men, the marquis is invisible even to his secretaries or stenographers in the morning. From breakfast until 1 or 2 o'clock he is absolutely alone and it is at these hours that he indulges in whatever meditation characterises his life.

Nothing but a matter of the utmost stress can reach him before 1 o'clock. It is to be remembered, of course, that the system which he has introduced into the Prime Minister's office, for the first time, does away with a large share of the personal labor which men like Disraeli assumed. He has three personal secretaries, and their work is so thoroughly graded that only a very small proportion of the communications addressed to the Prime Minister are actually laid before him for consideration.

Lady Salisbury attends to all the social details of his life, and all the work that he does in the way of seeing people and attending to the actual business of his office is transacted in the course of two or three hours in the afternoon. As a rule, in London he lunches out and his favorite place is the Atheneum Club. It is one of the most conservative and the least conspicuous places in London, and the house rules are so thoroughly enforced that it is impossible for an outsider, even of the utmost distinction, to get within the club portals.

A foreigner who is well introduced may get as far as the reception room, but that is all. The Prime Minister almost invariably lunches alone.

WHY HE EATS ALONE.

This, I was told once by one of the ors of the Atheneum, is part of the etiquette of the club, since the mere fact of a man eating luncheon with the Prime Minister during exciting times may lead to unpleasant consequences. In the club, as well as in Downing street and at home, the Marquis invariable addresses the servants with the utmost courtsey. It is always:—"Please hand me this—" "I'll thank you for that." It may strike an American that such a characteristic as this is not worth noting. He may indeed, think it is a matter of course among E. glishmen of title, but it is not by a very large majority.

The aversion of the Marquis to being gazed at or noticed in the streets is so extreme that he very often emulates the Prince of Wales and takes a public handsome instead of the showy private carriage in which he is expected to drive. He divides his patronage in the most careful and exact manner. For instance, if four or five tradesmen compete for his custom he will purchase from each one of them for a week at a time. He insists upon paying his bills upon the first of the month, exacts the usual discounts for cash, and it is said that the fact that an account has run over for a month or so before being presented will go further toward upsetting him than the imminent probability of an outbreak upon the Russian frontier or a fresh twist in the Eastern snarl.

The Prime Minister's valet is not kept very busy as a rule, for Salisbury is one of the most methodically dressed men in England. He invariably wears a silk hat, a black frock suit, and, even in summer, he carries what is known as a Chesterfield overcoat. About one o'clock—half an hour or so before luncheon—the Minister's private secretary calls at Arlington street and starts the business of the day.

AN ELECTRICAL STUDENT.

After an hour with him, Lord Salisbury goes off to his luncheon, driving to Downing street immediately afterward. He is a keen and enthusiastic student of electricity and does a great deal of reading at night. His family is a happy and united one, and whenever Lady Salisbury goes to the theater without the Premier he is sure to go and fetch her personally after the play is over. He is a regular church-goer and a great crony of the bishops at his club, but the Salisbury of the church and of the home is a very different person from the Salisbury of the cabinet. It is said that that which his confreres dread most is the moment when the Prime Minister makes up his mind; for having once reached a conviction on any one subject, it is almost impossible to move him, no matter how plausible the arguments or how much evidence they may be able to lay before him.

BLAKELY HALL.

The Canals of Mars.

Through the agency of the Lick telescope the surface of the planet Mars has been mapped out with additional clearness. The canals, which can be very plainly seen, lie in the torrid and warmer portions of the temperate zone, and extend from the Northern to the Southern Ocean. They are, in general, 2,000 or 3,000 miles in length and over thirty miles in breadth. They are generally arranged in pairs 200 or 300 miles apart, and so exactly parallel that usually no deviation can be detected. They cut up the continent surface so there is no spot more than 400 miles distant from one of these markings. There is still much surmise as to whether these assumed canals are artificial or natural. It is argued that they cannot be artificial, because of their great width, but, on the other hand, it is equally inconceivable that the forces of nature could, by the laws of accident, have constructed such an intricate system of markings and observed an equal width in every case. The late Professor Proctor suggested that the canals are the diffracted images of rivers, produced by mists which hang over the river beds.

A Mystery Solved.

"What a curious engine!" she exclaimed, as she saw a dummy for the first time.

"Yaas," replied the old man, with little interest in the matter.

"I've always wondered why they called it a dumby," she continued

"Cause the engineer can't talk, he replied

"Oh, of course! What a goose a woman is anyhow."

EXTREMES OF HEAT AND COLD.

A Record of 133 in the Shade in San Francisco and 90 below in Russia.

Capt. R. E. Kerkam, signal officer at New Orleans is something of an enthusiast in his profession, and from the voluminous data in his office, is able to answer almost any sort of a conundrum a visitor may care to propound, so long as it relates to meteorological records.

"You have heard, no doubt," said Capt. Kerkam the other day to one of his visitors, "that the climate of Louisana is one of its weak points. Now, if you will look up the records you will see that the range of temperature here is one of the narrowest to be fonnd anywhere on this continent. Here are the extremes that have been recorded here, and though the range between them is not wide, it is wider than may be recorded again for thirty years. On Jan. 9, 1886, the mercury here fell to 15° above zero, and on June 22, 1881, it rose as high as 97°, giving a range between extremes of 82° but, as every Louisanian knows, the former figure is one to which the mercury is not likely to fall once in thirty years.

"Now if you compare this range—82°—with those recorded in other portions of the United States you would not find any less, except it might be at some of the seacoast stations in middle and southern latitudes on the Pacific.

"But when you come to look for wide ranges between the minimum and maximum temperature go into northern Dakota and Montana. What do you think of 169°?

"I was in that country from 1878 to 1881, and on Dec. 29, 1880, saw the temperature 59° below zero, and in July of 1881, saw it at 110°. These temperatures are from standard instruments used by the Signal Service, and to prove that the record is correct the stations at Fort Benton, M. T., and Pembina, D. T., recorded the same minimum temperature on the same day, making it appear as though there were a belt of country about 600 miles long and 150 miles wide along the forty-ninth parallel that has a temperature lower than that recorded elsewhere in the extreme Northwest.

In conversation with any Southerner regarding low temperature Bismarck, D. T., appears to be the zero of his calculations. If Bismarck has a temperature below zero, be it 10°, 15°, or 20° below, the cry is 'look out for a cold wave.' Now, in that stretch of country north and northwest of Bismarck, where the minimums occur, the temperature is invariably 10° to 15° lower than at the latter place.

"The summer temperature also appears to be somewhat higher along the forty-ninth parallel. At the time the maximum was 110° where I was located in July, 1881, Bismarck had but 102° as a maximum for the same date.

"These are the extreme occurrences of heat and cold in the Northwest, but the average range is probably fully 150°, and an additional range of 19° would not make much difference.

"The Pacific coast is not usually a hot place, but exceedingly high temperatures have occurred in California on several occasions. On June 17, 1859, the temperature at San Francisco registered 133°, rising suddenly from 77°; a burning northwest desert wind prevailed for several hours, and at 7 P. M. of the same date, the temperature had again fallen to 77°. At Santa Barbara, on the same afternoon, a strong burning desert wind blew for a few hours, destroying all fruit, and animal life exposed to the hot wind died from the effect. The temperature at Santa Barbara is also said to have registered 133°. On the same day the temperature was 102° at San Diego and 117° at Fort Yuma, Cal.

"In June, 1887, from the 8th to the 12th, excessively high temperatures occurred in California, ranging from 93° at San Diego to 114° at Yuma, and 122° at Spring Valley. It is an interesting fact that ice formed within 600 miles of this temperature, at Cheyenne, Wy., on the same dates. During this heatedspell the daily maximum temperature at Fort Yuma did not fall below 103° and the mean for the month was 110°, the highest day temperatures ranging from 106° to 118° with minimums at night never below 77°.

"On July 17, 1879, in Onargla, Algeria, the thermometer registered 127.4°. At Werchojusk, Siberia, Jan. 15, 1885, the minimum temperature was 90.4° below zero."

An Unsuccessful Illustration.

A teacher was telling her little boys about temptation and showing how it sometimes came in the most attractive attire. She used as an illustration the paw of a cat.

"Now," said she, "you have all seen the paw of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?"

"Yes'em," from the class.

"And you have seen the paw of a dog?"

"Yes'em."

"Well, although the cat's paw seems like velvet, there is, nevertheless, concealed in it something that hurts. What is it?"

No answer.

"The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger, but what does the cat do?"

"Scratches," replied the boy.

"Correct," said the teacher, nodding her head approvingly. "Now, what has the cat got that the dog hasn't."

"Whiskers," said a boy on the back seat, and the titter that ran around the class brought the lesson to a close.

Quite Humorous.

"The Vesuvius is a funny name for a dynamite cruiser," remarked McCorkle.

"Funny?" asked McCrackle.

"Yes; lavable, you know."

A Level Headed Boy.

"Now, which of the great men of the past would you rather be, Robert?" asked the teacher, after a long and interesting talk on the celebrities of history. "None 'em," replied Robert promptly. "None o them Why not "Cause they're dead.

One of D. McKillop's horses kicked another while standing in Mr. Berry's stable last week, and broke its leg badly. The injured animal, a valuable brood mare, was taken home and an attempt made to set the fractured leg, but owing to the splintered condition of the bone, it could not be done successfully and the animal was shot.

The sewer will shortly be finished and it would be well for the pathmasters to see that the sidewalks are properly replaced as soon as possible, where they have been torn up by the workmen, and make the place as respectable as possible before the West Elgin Fair. Nothing gives such a good impression of the town to strangers as having clean streets and neat and attractive business places.

There is still a scarcity of good dwelling houses for renting purposes in Dutton, notwithstanding the fact that over eight new ones have been erected this year already. There is not a house it town to rent at any reasonable figure just now, the two or three vacant at present being either under repairs or spoken for. A few good, comfortable dwellings would be a paying investment for some of our capitalists.

This week we commence the ENTERPRISE sale and exchange agency, which will prove valuable to those wishing to buy, sell, rent or exchange village, farm or personal property. No charge will be made for advertising unless a deal is made. The list will be found on the first page of the ENTERPRISE, and we ask all who wish to make use of it to send in their orders not later than Tuesday noon of each week.

Arrangements have been made with the M. C. R. Co. to run a special train to Dutton on the second day of the Wallacetown Fair at a fare and a third. The special will leave St. Thomas at 11.15 a. m.; Shedden at 11.43, Iona 11.52, arriving at Dutton at 12, noon. Passengers may come by the local leaving at 6.25 a. m., Shedden 7.01, Iona 7.14, arriving at Dutton at 7.34 a. m. Passengers from the west will leave Ridgetown at 12.02, noon, arriving at Dutton at 1.57 p. m.

The annual concert in connection with the West Elgin Fair will be held on the evening of the first day, October 1st, when an extra good programme is promised. The I. O. F. band of St. Thomas, the Celebrated Bell instrumental quartette, and other talented performers will take part. The concert will be held this year on the commodious grand stand, which is extra firmly built and warranted to hold double the number for which seating accommodation has been provided without breaking. Don't miss it.

Hockin & Pool's millinery show room will be opened to the public on Friday and Saturday next, September 27th and 28th. From a glimpse which our reporter had of the various new styles it promises to excell all their previous exhibitions in quality, variety and style. A platform will be erected in front of the store on which the I. O. F. band, 13 strong, will discourse sweetest music on both evenings of the opening. No lady within 15 miles of Dutton should miss it. Remember the dates—Friday and Saturday, September 27th and 28th.

The Presbytery of London met Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock in Knox church, Rev. Mr. Brown, of Belmont, in the chair. The first business of the convention was the hearing of commissioners from Brene and Kincardine townships, and from Duff's and Chalmer's churches, Dunwich, anent the translation of Mr. Urquhart from the latter congregations. Rev. Mr. McNabb, Maitland Presbytery, presented the claims of Berne, supported by Messrs. Campbell and Henderson. Rev. Mr. Kelso, of Wallacetown, represented Duff's and Chalmer's churches, and was supported by Messrs. McMillan, Murchison, Campbell and J. Campbell. The necessity of having preaching in the Gaelic language was one of the main reasons urged by both congregations. Mr. Urquhart reviewed the reasons and decided to remain in his present charge.—Journal.

The outlook for a rise in the price of wheat is very poor. The local millers are now paying almost as high as the New York export quotations, to make flour to supply the local demand and as soon as the grain begines to move freely either the export price must go up or the local price fall, and the latter seems to be by far the most likely, in the opinion of all the leading financial journals of the United States and Canada, owing to the excellent crops in France and other European countries, which have hitherto drawn largely on the world's surplus.

A lecture and tea, under the auspices of the Mite Society, will be given in the West Lorne Methodist church on Friday evening, September 27th. Dr. W. H. Montague, ex-M. P., will deliver his noted lecture on "The Canadian's Heritage." None should fail to hear this well-known gentleman on this evening. Apart from the lecture the high reputation of West Lorne Methodists for providing excellent entertainments is of itself sufficient to guarantee an enjoyable evening. Tea and roast served from 6.30 to 8 o'clock; lecture to commence at 8. Admission, 20 cents.

At a meeting of the Dutton high school board held in the office of A.N.C. Black, on Saturday, the chairman, secretary and A. N. C. Black were appointed a committee to submit the question in dispute between the township of Aldborough and the board to Messrs. McDougall & Robertson, St. Thomas, for legal advice and to take such further steps as they deem necessary to compel said township to pay their portion of the cost of maintenance of the Dutton high school. An application of the principal for a grant of $200 for appliances was laid over. A number of accounts were passed and other minor business transacted.

The preparations for the West Elgin Fair, to be held at Wallacetown next Tuesday and Wednesday, are far more extensive than for any fair yet held. The officers and directors have worked with a will and have added new features to the programme almost every day for the past six weeks. The new grand stand, capable of seating 500 persons, which has been completed will be a valuable improvment. A new feature of the programme is a tug of war between the married men, headed by John McLaren, of Rodney, and the unmarried men, headed by John McKay, of Dutton. McMillan, the piper, of Crinan, will be on hand with his bagpipes, while the I. O. F. band, of St. Thomas, will furnish music in the daytime and take part in the concert at night.

It Made Mother Strong

"My mother has been using PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND for nervous prostration, accompanied by melancholia, etc., and it has done her a world of good. It is the only medicine that strengthens the nerves.' G. H. BEERS, Orbisonia, Pa.

"I am in my 64th year. Have been afflicted in several ways—could not sleep, had no appetite, no courage, low spirits. I commenced using Paine's Celery Compound, and felt relief from the third day after using it. I now have a good appetite and can sleep well. My spirits and courage are almost like those of a young man." S. C. KINKAID, D. D., Gonzales, La.

Paine's Celery Compound

Strengthens and builds up the old, and cures their infirmities. Rheumatism, indigestion and nervousness yield quickly to the curative power of Paine's Celery Compound.

A Perfect Tonic and Invigorator, It GIVES NEW LIFE.

"I am now 69 years old and have tried several remedies, but none had any effect until I used Paine's Celery Compound. I feel entirely different for the short time I have used it. I can walk nearly straight, sleep sound and well, and feel as though there was new life and energy coming into my whole system." H. MYLIUS, Cleveland, Tenn.

Paine's Celery Compound is of unequaled value to women. It strengthens the nerves, regulates the kidneys, and has wonderful power in curing the painful diseases with which women so often silently suffer.

THE WEST ELGIN FAIR.

AN ATTENDANCE OF 4,500.

Fair Weather, Large Exhibits, Good Attendance and Plenty of Energy, combined with Good Advertising, made it the best Show yet.

The annual exhibition of the West Elgin Fair Association, held at Wallacetown on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week was in every respect a grand success. The attendance during the two days reached fully 4,500; and the receipts will reach a handsome figure; On Tuesday the day opened gloomy, with good prospects of a heavy downpour of rain, which fortunately did not come until afternoon. From 9 o'clock in the morning until long after the usual hour of closing exhibitors were busy placing their goods in the drill shed, the managers having decided to keep that place open until 2 p. m. The secretary was kept busy making entries, most of exhibitors, as usual, leaving that important duty off until the last moment. The entries were larger in all classes than at any previous exhibition, and the large shed was completely crowded. In roots and vegetables the display excelled that of last year in quantity and, considering the poor season, in quality also. The display of potatoes was exceptionally large, some 64 entries having been made in this department. The sample was good, some of the White Elephant variety being especially admired for their size and smooth appearance. Some extra large cabbages were shown, one of which weighed 33 pounds. In grain and seeds the exhibit was the largest in the history of the society and the sample excellent.

The entries in live stock were far heavier than usual, that in horses being large in all classes, especially colts. The cattle exhibits very large in all classes except Polled Angus. The pens alloted for sheep and hogs were better filled up than ever before with stock of a finer class.

The show of fruit was comparatively small, although sufficient entries had been made to fill the alloted space twice over. The show of apples and pears was large, however, and the sample appeared to be very good, considering the season. Cheese was shown by the Wallacetown and Dutton factories. The exhibit of butter was unusually large and that of bread and cakes fair. There was a good display of honey, maple syrup and sugar. Only one exhibit of harness was made. A handsome feature of the exhibit in the drill shed, and one which attracted a good deal of attention, was the display of house plants and cut flowers made by J. L. Pearce, B. E. Sifton, Mrs. Geo. Docker and Wm. Pearce. A good number of paintings were on exhibition, some of which well worthy of praise, and others not being of a very high order of merit. In the ladies department the exhibit of fancy work, home manufactures, etc., was the largest in the history of the society, completely filling up the space alloted to it. This work also seemed of even a better class than usual, some expressing the decided opinion that it beat that shown at St. Thomas.

The concert in the evening was held in the drill shed, the weather being too cold to have it on the grand stand, as at first intended. The affair was a grand success, financially and otherwise, the receipts being over $25. Fine music was furnished by the I. O. F. band, of St. Thomas, and McMillan, the piper, of Crinan, Miss Bowlby also played excellent selections on the piano. Songs by the Bell Quartette, which was encored, Mr. McPherson and James Carruth were well given. Mr. Carruth also favored the audience with several Highland dances. The president, L. W. McIntyre, Esq., opened the concert with an address, delivered in his usual happy manner.

The sports in the horse ring Wednesday afternoon were well carried out and were watched with the keenest interest by the large crowd, especially the tug of war, between the married men, captained by John McLaren, of Rodney, and the bachelors, captained by John McKay, of Dutton, which was decided a tie after a long and hard pull, lasting five minutes. The other sports were not finished in time for a full list to be published in this issue, but it will appear next week.

There was a large increase in the number of exhibitors and visitors from a distance.

To the energetic efforts of the president and secretary and other officers, who have worked with a will for the past six months, and to an unstinted use of printer's ink, must the credit be given of the success of the exhibition.

J. M. Jackson exhibited three of the celebrated Bell organs and two pianos, one of them a Bell. These instruments are too well known to need comment.

Messrs. Sifton Bros., our popular dealin agricultural implements and machinery, had a fine exhibit from the best Canadian and American manufacturers, comprising the Brantford light steel binders and mowers, manufactured by the A. Harris, Son & Co., Brantford, the Wisner drills, cultivators, hay tedders and rakes, the Cockshut, Wilkinson and Ayr American plows, Gurney & Ware's farm scales, B. Bell & Son's cutting boxes, Coulthard, Scott & Co's disc and smoothing harrows, the Daisy churns and Bothwell pumps. Their exhibit as usual attracted the attention of every farmer at the fair, and numerous sales were made.

Messrs. Marsh & Kiefer, of the Dutton Iron Works, made an excellent show of their popular wooden pumps with iron, brass and porcelain cylinders and iron buckets. Their pumps are becoming very popular wherever introduced and their exhibit attracted a good deal of attention. Several new improvements added by them this year add greatly to their efficiency.

Dugald Campbell had a stand in the drill shed where he exhibited a large variety of electric appliances for the cure of diseases. He had a large number of home testimonials as to the efficacy of his remedies.

Roderick McKenzie, our well-known book agent, had a large display of books for which he is agent, among them "The Jesuits; a history of their open and secret proceedings from the foundation of the order to the present time," a book which, as its title states, tells all about the order about which there is so much discussion at the present day. No person should be without it when it can be purchased at their own homes by dropping a card to Mr. McKenzie at Wallacetown. He also had an elegant assortment of bibles, etc.

The "New Williams" sewing machines were shown by J. C. Hawkins, the St. Thomas agent. The points of superiority of these excellent machines are too well known to need comment, the elegant curtain embroidered on one of these machines which took first prize yesterday, speaking better than words of their work. These machines have taken first prize wherever prizes were awarded at fairs this year. J. A. McDonald, of Toronto, represented the firm at the fair. Any enquiries addressed to either him or the St. Thomas agent will be promptly answered.

The Manson Campbell fanning mills were exhibited by their general agent, C. J. Pilkey, of Chatham, and A. P. McMillan, the local agent. Their new bagging attachment was shown in operation and met with general favor amongst the farmers. These mills have been the most popular all over Ontario for the last 30 years. Those in want of the latest in this line should see Mr. Pilkey or Mr. McMillan, either of whom will be pleased to wait upon them.

James Miiligan, of St. Thomas, exhibited two large 6 octave Dominion organs, Dominion and Mendlesohn pianos, their music greatly enlivening the proceedings during the evening and the second day. Mr. Milligan showed us records of sales made to the leading gentlemen in St. Thomas and and other places, giving proof of the popularity of these well-known instruments. The Dominon pianos received first award and silver medal at the Ottawa exhibition this season. Call and see Mr. Milligan when in St. Thomas and he will be pleased to show you through his large showrooms.

TRAGEDIES OF MT. BLANC

THE YEAR 1870 WAS THE DARKEST IN THE MEMORY OF MAN.

A Party of Eleven Lost, Three of Whom Were Americans—The Dying Message Pencilled by a Baltimorean—A Bride's Sudden Disappearance in a Crevasse.

It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon after nine hours of as interesting a ride as I ever took—and I have covered a good deal of European ground since then—that we entered the village of Chamouni in 1870, and halted at our hotel. As we did so we noticed that something unusual had occurred. Groups of men and women were standing around in the little square in front of the village church all earnestly discussing some apparently important matter. Many of the women were weeping, and there was a shade of sadness on all the faces that attracted our notice. At first we attributed it to the war that was then raging only a few leagues away.

We were not long in learning the truth, however, for we had hardly descended from the diligence before the terrible announcement was made that eleven men had been lost on Mont Blanc. What it meant to the dwellers in that secluded village we can scarcely realize. And even upon us, strangers and sojourners for a day, it left an impression which the lapse of years has not yet effaced. An intelligent English gentleman, who had been at Chamouni some time, and was conversant with the facts,

TOLD US THE SAD STORY.

He said that on the previous Monday morning—this was Wednesday, Sept. 7—three travellers had started with three guides and five porters for the top of the mountains. Their names were John C. Randal of Quincy, Mass.; Dr. James C. Beane of Baltimore, Md., and G. M. Corkendale, a Scotch clergyman.

The three guides were the best and most reliable in the village, namely, John Balmat, Joseph Bretton, and August Cottet—all well known and esteemed by the professional mountain climbers of that time. The party had reached the Grand Mulets and spent the night of Monday there, setting the usual signal to inform the dwellers below of their safe arrival. On Tuesday morning they completed the ascent and reached the summit, spending the usual time there. On the afternoon of that day they were seen slowly descending the upper part of the mountain. They looked like flies crawling over a white sheet. All at once, he said, there seemed to be a veil thrown over them, and they vanished from his sight, never to be seen again. At first not much anxiety was felt in the valley, as slight snow storms are not uncommon at that season. But when night came on, and there were no signals set at the Grand Mulets, or any lights to be seen about the little hut where they should have spent the second night, fears began to take shape that some terrible catastrophe had taken place.

As soon as the people had partially recovered from the shock occasioned by a realization of what had occurred, the Maire of the village, who was also the chief guide, called for volunteers to go in search of the missing men.

HOW FORLORN A HOPE IT WAS

may be inferred from the fact he would accept no married men, neither any who were over 30 years of age. It was about 5 o'clock when these volunteers, thirty in number, with packs of clothing and provisions on their backs, coils of ropes and axes over their shoulders, and alpenstocks in their hands, gathered in front of the Maire's office to get their final instructions. They were to go up to a certain point that night, examine the ground carefully as they went; then proceed next morning to the summit and signal back what success, if any, they had had in their search for the missing men.

That night there came on, about 8 o'clock, a tempest of wind and rain, accompanied by thunder and lightning such as I have rarely listened to or witnessed except in the Swiss Alps. The next morning, looking from our hotel windows, we saw that snow had fallen upon the mountain sides far down toward the valley, and we instinctively felt that the efforts of the brave volunteers must have been fruitless, even if they themselves had not fallen a sacrifice to the fury of the elements. But about 10 o'clock that forenoon they were seen emerging from the woods, and were soon greeting their friends, yet with saddened faces. They reported that they had reached a considerable height when the storm suddenly overtook them—a storm not of wind and rain, as we had had it, but a fierce tempest of wintry sleet and snow. They had spent the night under the best shelter they could find—and small choice it was—and early the next morning had proceeded on their upward journey. It was not far, however, that they could go, for the snow had fallen in such quantities that not only were all landmarks and paths obliterated, but it was impossible to make any progress without momentary danger of being hurled into some abyss which could not be avoided because bidden of snow. They knew, also, too well, that no human being could have survived such a night and such a tempest at a point above that which they had reached.

And now, dear reader, you know why there was weeping and wailing that afternoon of Sept 7, among the women and children, aye, and men, too, of Chamouni. Eight of their best and bravest citizens had been wiped out of existence as suddenly as if the earth had opened and swallowed them up. Some of them left families and some aged parents dependent upon them for support. They were all very poor for the season had been bad for them. The French and German war had kept away visitors to a large extent, and everybody was complaining of the hard times; so a subscription amounting to upward of 1,000 francs was raised among the strangers who were there, and distributed by the Maire.

It was several weeks afterward that I learned the sequel to this terrible affair. A week or more elapsed before it was deemed practicable to attempt another search for the missing men, and then only with the bare expectation of finding and bringing down their lifeless bodies. There was no other hope.

Fifty of the most experienced mountaineers of the village were detailed for this purpose; and after a long and tedious search they came upon the stiffened corpses of several of the party, among which were those of Dr. Beane and Mr. Corkendale. They were in a sitting posture, as though they had sat down to rest, and so had perished. In the cold hands of Dr. Beane was found a note book bearing several dates, the last of which was that terrible night of Sept. 7. The record stated that they had been two days in the midst of a terrible snowstorm; that they had trouble with their guides and the party had become separated. They were conscious that they were lost, for the record closed as follows: "We have dug a grotto in the snow at a height of 15,000 feet. I have no hope of descending, my feet are frozen, and I am exhausted. I have only strength to write these words. I die believing in Jesus Christ, with the sweet thought of my family, my friendships, and all. I hope we shall meet in heaven." Dr. Beane was a highly esteemed young physician of Baltimore and had in his possession letters from prominent officials connected with the Smithsonian Institution. The object of his visit to Chamouni and of the mountain was mainly for scientific investigation. Mr. Randall, who perished at the same time, but whose body was not recovered, I believe, until some days after, was a well-known resident of Quincy, and I think was treasurer of the savings bank.

It is said that Mont Blanc claims at least one victim every year. But the year 1870 was pre-eminently its own; for this terrible affair—the worst that had ever been remembered at Chamouni—was not the only fatality of that season. The other was in this wise: During the previous month of July an English gentleman with his young bride visited Chamouni. The lady was very anxious to go part way up the mountain, so two guides and a porter were secured, and the gentleman, his wife, and a lady companion started on their upward way. Upon reaching the Grand Mulets they found the ascent so agreeable that they concluded to go on still further.

The gentleman and guides started on ahead for a short distance, in order to mark out a path for the ladies, leaving them in charge of the porter. They had gone but a short distance when they heard a succession of shrieks, and, upon hastening back to the spot they had so recently left, they found the lady companion standing alone and dazed with fright. The bride and the porter had disappeared forever from the face of the earth. As soon as the frightened woman could speak she explained that they were all stamping their feet upon the snow to keep them warm while waiting for the return of their male companions, when it suddenly gave way beneath them, and in an instant the bride and porter were gone from sight. They had been standing over a narrow but deep crevasse, the opening of which was hidden by the snow.

Those who have crossed the Mer de Glace will know what I mean. The treacherous crust had finally given way, and the snow falling in upon them, had forever shut them out from human sight and sound. Every possible effort was made but without avail, for these crevasses are sometimes hundreds and perhaps thousands of feet in depth though often not more than two or three feet wide at the top, which renders them all the more dangerous after a snowfall.

TO RECOVER THE BODIES,

I have heard people speak of the ascent of Mont Blanc as a pleasant summer day's jaunt. But I am quite sure they have never tried it; neither have I. The Mer de Glace was enough for me. There were at that time 300 men on the roll of guides at Chamouni, but a few only of that number were allowed or licensed to take any one to the top of the mountain. Those who know it best fear it the most. A fee of 100 francs—about $20—was paid to each guide who made the ascent.

Two porters to each guide are also required to carry the extra clothing, provisions, &c., of the party. The latter are paid considerably less than the guides, and none too much, for they share equally the peril and more than share the toil of the ascent. They are a noble body of men, bound together by very strong ties of sympathy and friendship.

WIT AND WISDOM.

Smart Attorney—You say the evening wore on; what did it wear on that particular occasion! Witness—The close of day, I presume.

They Go That Way—Hogan made the twelfth American balloonist who has lost his life while on a trip during the last fourteen years. It's the same as a man who smokes in bed, only a question of time, but it's fun while it lasts.

Gentle Sarcasm.—"Mrs. Mulligan," said Mrs. Ginty, "is it well yer falin the day?" "Yis, very well." "An' sthrong?" "Yis, quite sthrong." "Then praps it's able ye'd be to bring back the two washtubs yez borried last Monday."

Mrs. Jones—"What a lovely baby you have, Mrs. Smith! And don't you think it resembles it father strikingly?" Mrs. Smith—"I hadn't noticed it. Perhaps its nose is a little like Mr. Smith's,' Mrs. Jones—"Ah yes; such a healthy color!"

Father—My son, you must not dispute with your mother in that way. Boy—But she's in the wrong. Father—That makes no difference; and you might as well learn, my child, once for all, that when a lady says a thing is so, it is so, even if it isn't so.

Mistress (returned from her summer vacation, to her cook)—I hear that you have been entertaining your soldier lover here. Didn't I forbid you entertaining company in the kitchen during my absence? Cook—Yes, madam, but I took him to the parlor.

A little boy, hearing some one remark that nothing was quicker than thought, said he knew better than that; whistling was quicker than thought. Being asked to explain, he said: "In school the other day I whistled before I thought and got a licking for it."

Didn't know beans: Little Willie (to his sister's beau)—"You can't guess what I've got in my pocket, Mr. Blinker." Mr. Blinker—"No, I cannot guess. What is it, Willie?" Willie—"It's beans. Mamma said you didn't know beans, but I thought I'd try you."

The editor of a weekly paper in Germany poked fun at Bismarck for having knuckled down to the United States in the Samoan affair, and now the editor sits in jail on a year's sentence, and wonders if there is not such a thing as being altogether too funny for anything.

In her breach of promise suit against Chas. Ray, Hannah Jeffreys, a Hartford domestic, said he was the seventh chap who had promised to marry her and then went back on his word. It looks tough to toy with a girl's heart that way, but Hannah shouldn't get discouraged.

Sleep, Sleep, my Heart

Sleep, sleep, my heart
From life apart!
Pulse evenly, be calm, be cold,
Nor let the dream of days of old,
The alternating hope and fear,
The smile assumed, the ready tear,
The first sweet thrill, the fearful bliss,
The broken vow, the last mad kiss,
The mem'ry wake,
Thy slumber break.

Sleep, Sleep, my heart,
From life apart!
Thy day hath come, and now is past,
The hush of night hath fall'n at last,
The time to sleep,
To rest, not weep.

It is so still,
No voice doth thrill
Along my broken, silenced strings,
To stir the painful quiverings,
Heed not at all,
If any call!

Sleep, sleep, my heart,
From life apart!
It is so dark, from out the skies
No ray shall smite thy lidded eyes,
The sun of hope
Down yonder slope
Hath vanished quite,
It is the night!
The darkness falls that thou may'st rest
Hushed on oblivion's pulseless breast,
Forgetfulness
Thy sleep must bless,

Sleep, Sleep, my heart,
From life apart!
Let mem'ry not thy slumber break,
Nor hope allure thee to awake;
If, sleeping, thou dost joy forego,
So, sleeping, thou shalt miss the woe,
By happiness forgot, why! yet,
Forgotten, thou mayst well forget.

Sleep, Sleep, and rest,
This, this is best!
No more the pang of jealous doubt,
That murders peace, and casts it out,
The torture of the trust betrayed.
The agony of hope afraid,
The yearning stifled and repressed,
The passion rioting unconfessed,
The mad desires that plead, unheard,
The dream's fulfillment e'er deferred
Till love, denied,
Is crucified.

Sleep, sleep, my heart,
From life apart!
The passions spent,
Rest thou, content!
This death-like sleep, calm, cold, serene,
Better this than what has been,
And worse might be,
My heart, for thee.

CORIE DAVIS.

Front Gate.

An old and crippled gate am I,
And twenty years have passed
Since I was hung up high and dry
Betwixt these posts so fast;
But now I've grown so powerful weak—
Despised by man and beast—
I'm scarcely strong enough to squeak,
Although I'm never greased.

'Twas twenty years ago, I say,
When Mr. Enos White
Came kind of hanging round my way
'Most every other night,
He hung upon my starboard side
And she upon the other,
Till Susan Smith became his bride,
And in due time a mother.

I groaned intensely when I heard—
Despite I am no churl—
My doom breathed in a single word:
The baby was a girl!
And as she grew and grew and grew,
I loud bemoaned my fate;
For she was very fair to view,
And I—I was the gate!

Then in due time, a lover came,
Betokening my ruin,
A dapper fellow, Brown by name,
The grown-up baby wooin'.
They sprang upon me in the gloam,
And talked of moon and star?
They're married now and live at home
Along with ma and pa.

My lot was happy for a year
No courting night or day—
I had no thought, I had no fear,
Bad luck would come my way.
But oh! this morning, save the mark!
There came a wild surprise,
A shadow flitted, grim and dark,
Across my sunny skies.

A doctor, with a knowing smile,
A nurse with face serene,
A bustle in the house the while,
Great Scott! what can it mean?
My hinges ache; my back is weak,
My pickets in a whirl;
I hear that awful doctor speak;
It is another girl.

Baby "Foods."

It is stated on what seems to be good authority that food preparations for infants to the amount of $10,000,000 are annually sold in the United States. According to one of the speakers at the recent meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science, "most of these products are unwholesome," and the Government was urged to take some action. If the truth was told at Toronto, here is an evil of prodigious proportions, and energetic measures should be taken to make an end of it. The lives of thousands of infants are dependent on various prepared "foods" and it is of the utmost importance that these articles should be pure, nutritious and wholesome. The purchaser must accept them on faith, unless he can procure an analysis and make certain that the food he buys is what it purports to be. If a slaughter of the innocents is going on day by day, it ought to be not only known, but stopped.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Misunderstood the Second Syllable.

The young woman (on the platform of Eiffel Tower)—"Doesn't it seem strange to you, Mr. Spoonamore, that so little oscillation is noticeable up here?"

The young man (eagerly)—"Not at all, Miss Ethel. I have no doubt there is a great deal of it indulged in here, but it can't be seen from below. The elevation is too great. And now, Miss Ethel, you will—I am sure—you will pardon—"

The young woman (arresting his forward movement by a freezing look)—"I said oscillation, Mr. Spoonamore, not osculation." (After a depressing silence—"I think, Mr. Spoonamore, it is time to descend."

"A Face Like my Face Shall Receive Thee!"

A mountain lake, whose ever-moving wave
Reflects uncertainly the peaks of stone,
Like restless hearts which strive, in vain, to grave
Within their depths some glimpse of heights unknown.

And all around the silence of a prayer!
Those tall, white stems like holy tapers shine.
The pine trees' incense sanctifies the air,
And Nature's children worship at her shrine.

The place with tender adoration thrills,
Yet, floating here, I feel myself apart;
No love divine, no worship, grows and stills
The aching weariness of brain and heart.

My soul would kneel, but back to doubt is hurled;
I fail the calm of worship to attain:
This silent grandeur seems to fill the world,
Yet cannot dwarf the majesty of pain.

So on I drift, until with quick surprise
I grow aware a sudden shadow falls,
And startled, lift my weary, saddened eyes
As when some presence wakens and appalls.

Above me looms on high a rugged cliff,
Whose stately brow no foot of man has trod;
Majestic, grand, sublime, it stands as if
'Twere some vast altar to the Unknown God.

Some ancient words come slowly to my mind—
"The Shadow of a Mighty Rock," and lo!
"Thou art a Rock to hide me in!" I find
A God to worship whom I may not know.

Within this shadow restless doubt has died
But eyes that read no name the altar scan,
Till sudden springs to being from its side,
Clear-cut against the sky, the Face of Man!

O grand, still Face! O solemn, deep-set eyes
That see the mystery of life laid bare!
O silent lips that speak in mystic wise:
"Him whom ye worship I alone declare!"

My soul has wakened in Thy Holy Place,
Has seen Thy likeness and is satisfied.
Thou rock of God! Thou tender, human Face!
On Love's high altar Pain lies glorified.

Dainty But Dangerous.

Her enchanting little boot
From beneath her jaunty suit.
Ventured out.
That she knew its witching charm,
Without meaning any harm,
Who could doubt?

So I wooed the charming maid,
First enchanted, as I said,
By her boot.
Now, alas! I'm well aware
Boots and tempers seldom are Built to suit.

For our friendship ripened fast,
And before a year was past
We were wed.
Now both boots and other things
Recklessly she often slings
At my head.

A Broken Wing.

I walked in the woodland meadows,
When sweet the thrushes sing,
And I found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed the wound, and each morning
It sang its old sweet strain;
But the bird with the broken pinion
Never soared so high again.

I found a youth, life-broken
By sin's seductive art,
And, touched with a Christ-like pity,
I took him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the soul with a broken pinion
Never soared so high again.

But the bird with the broken pinion
Kept another from the snare;
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its compensation;
There are healings for each pain;
But a bird with a broken pinion
Never soars so high again.

Edison's Wonderful Phone.

The Americans who come home from Paris now on every steamer appear to have a much greater idea of Edison and a much better knowledge of what Edison has achieved in the electrical and scientific world than the stay-at-homes imagine. "The megaphone," said one of them yesterday, "in the magnificent exhibit which Edison made, and which, by the way, was the very finest thing in the American exhibit, seemed to attract more attention from the Frenchmen than did any other of the Edison exhibits, not excepting the graphophone, which is so well known on this side. Going into the American exhibit with a friend, you sent him to a point a half mile away and asked him to whisper certain words into the megaphone. As soon, it seemed, as the syllables had left his lips they came bounding over the wires to your ear so greatly magnified that what he spoke as a whisper reached you as a mighty roar, powerful, resonant, yet as distinct as if shouted at your side. The popular American topical songs, as rendered through the graphophone, attracted continuous and enthusiastic crowds."—[N. Y. World.

Work.

For work to be the promoter of long and valuable life, we must know how to perform it and within what limits. Like everything else, we must use without abusing it. Moderation is one of the most important elements in all value. When we carry a good thing to excess, it becomes an evil—and work is no exception. Overwork which exhausts the frame, depresses the spirits, and impairs the powers is as much an injury and a moral wrong as idleness—and both tend to premature decay. It is the same with work that is continuously distasteful and compulsory, and with work which is performed in a slovenly and inferior manner. Unless it is well and willingly done, it never carries with it that satisfaction and contentment which are essential to long life.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

The Dock Laborers' Strike—Suppressing Gambling at Monaco—Another Smokeless Gunpowder.

The dock laborers are all working quietly enough now, but it took them a few days to settle into their places again. Naturally they were irritated against the men who worked while their comrades were fighting for their rights, and frequent scrimmages were the result. On the other hand, the directors unduly favored the men who had stuck to them in their hour of need and gave them the preference on all occasions, and sometimes by means not entirely straightforward. Burns was equal even to this emergency, and, with a degree of tact rarely equalled in a struggle of this kind, he has succeeded in smoothing things over.

The strikes in England, however, are not ended with the laborers resuming work. The London tailors are still out, and the bakers of the Metropolis meet to-morrow to air their grievances in Hyde Park, and as Burns is to address them a resort to a strike is not improbable. The fear among the capitalists, however, is that success on this occasion will cause the strike leaders to organize a universal railway strike in England. It would be by far the greatest labor trouble that England has ever seen. The cab drivers of London are also talking of striking, and Burns has informed them that his services are at their disposal whenever they set about improving their lot.

The Young Men's Christian Association will be glad to know that the Dix Neuvieme Siecle of Paris publishes the statement that the British Government has taken the opportunity of the death of the Prince of Monaco to reopen the question of suppressing the big gambling establishment there. According to that journal the present Prince is a man of high principle, who is willing to give up the business provided he is assured of an annual income of 2,000,000 francs and if the Great Powers will guarantee the neutrality of his principality.

From Austria comes a report of the invention of another smokeless gunpowder. A correspondent telegraphs that it has greater carrying power than ordinary gunpowder, and creates a very thin transparent smoke which is so slight that immediately after firing one shot aim can be taken again. It has no smell whatever. During the manœvres at Bruck experiments with this powder were made in the presence of Archduke Albrecht and many officers of high rank, who all declared themselves satisfied with it.

THE EXPLORER'S ENDLESS TOIL.

The Great Benefit to Mankind of His Discoveries.

When Mr. Stanley was last in this country he expressed the opinion that many people did not sufficiently distinguish between mere travellers and competent explorers. Books of travel, he said, are often wanting in the qualities of minute and accurate description needed to make them specially important. The well-equipped explorer on the other hand collects, at the cost of an immense amount of drudgery, material that is most useful in various branches of science. Mr Stanley mentioned Burton as an example of a born traveller, and Speke as a great explorer.

The scientific results of Dr. Junker's recent explorations in Central Africa, just published, are a conspicuous example of the rare enthusiasm and perseverance which the best explorers bring to their work. All his route maps are based on observations taken every five minutes during his journeys. At the end of each five minutes he entered in his note book and at the end of each day he computed his average direction and the distance travelled. At nearly every camp he was able to take the bearings of distant hills to aid in correcting any error in his route surveys. The notes he had taken on the way were then copied in pen and ink into his journal. They include a great variety of information, such as the geology and vegetation of the country, the character and density of the population, the political boundaries crossed, and all the explorer could learn of the streams and rivers. When it is remembered that day by day for four years, during which Junker travelled some thousands of miles on foot, he kept up this laborious routine, it is easy to believe that wonderful patience and perseverance were not the least of the qualities he brought into play.

THE DIRECTION HE HAD MARCHED;

The great geographer Supan, criticising an inaccurate book on Germany's colonies, recently wrote that "he serves his fatherland best who tells the plain truth." German explorers certainly excel in the faculty of minute observation and accurate reporting. It is said by those who have visited the route which Wisemann and Pogge followed half way across Africa that every important feature of topography for about three miles on either side of their path is clearly and accurately shown, on their route may. The other explorer, Nachtigal, whose extensive travels in the Sahara and the Soudan made him famous, was marvellously painstaking both in the collection of data and in preparing them for publication. He was seven years writing out his great work; and it is a monument of scientific observation, and a worthy model for the study of all geographical writers.

A while ago Mr. O'Neill took over eighty observations to determine the longitude of Blantyre, and his further labours, carried out in the same toilsome and conscientious manner, have led to considerable changes in the position of places on Lake Nyassa which had been accepted by geographers as accurate. We often read the results of competent exploration with little thought of the immense labour involved in the earnest endeavour to attain the exact truth. Major Powell testified four years ago that with the machinery then employed in making the great topographic map of this country, it would still require about twenty-four years to complete it.

No explorer has surpassed Livingstone in conscientious devotion to his business, though, with better appliances, some explorers have achieved in some respects more exact results. The world has not yet seen in print, and probably never will, more than a third of the material he collected, and which he did not have time to prepare for publication.

The conditions surrounding the school life of a class of young women, three of whom have committed suicide within a few months, would surely form a very interesting subject of biological investigation. Still, she has spent no less than one billion of dollars upon pensions since the war of the rebellion and has upon her pension rolls half a million names.

The total coal consumption of the world is said to amount to upwards of 1,000,000 hundred weight per hour. Of this quantity about 240,000 hundred weight are required per hour in order to heat the boilers for stationery and marine engines, locomotives, etc. The production of pig iron absorbs 100,000 hundred weight and that of other metals 80,000 hundred weight per hour. The average hourly consumption of household coal is reckoned at 200 000 hundred weight, but the total production is estimated at 30,000,000 hundred weight to 33 000,000 hundred weight per diem, so there is a considerable margin.

Canada isn't such a bad place to live in after all. The records of climatic influences at work across the line, and which go to make the life of the average American anxious and unpleasant, fail to find anything like a parallel in Canadian history. It seems to have been the ancient idea that Canada was a frost bitten and snow bound country, but when it comes down to a question of actual experience, the much favored New Yorker can tell stories of much greater proportion as to the big snow falls he has seen in that country. For floods, rain and wind storms the United States has the preference every time. And to-day's telegraph advices tell of snow and heavy frost in Iowa.

The water in the river Ottawa is very low at present, and the steamer "Owens" recently went aground on a sawdust shoal at a place opposite the Parliament buildings, where there once was thirty feet of water at all times. What better proof could be given of the fact that the privilege given to the Chaudiere millers has resulted in obstructing the navigation of the river and in injuring the public interest? The restrictions upon dumping sawdust and refuse into the river are not sufficient. Strict prohibition is called for, both in the interests of navigation and of the health of the communities along the river. All our rivers should as far as possible be kept pure.

Dr. Brown-Sequard, according to a good authority, has been married three times, twice to American girls. He was born on the Island of Mauritius, formerly the Isle of France, a small island 550 miles east of Madagascar and about 2300 from Cape of Good Hope. His father, Edward Brown, who was a native of Philadelphia, was engaged in business on the island. His mother was a French woman named Sequard. The doctor saw the light in 1818, and all of his preliminary studies were made in Mauritius When he was twenty years old he went to Paris to complete his medical course and take his degree.

The London Daily Telegraph says that at Brighton the child of Major Talbot, a little girl of four years, with a charming English face and long blonde hair, was introduced to the Shah. His imperial Majesty was greatly struck with the youthful type of Anglo-Saxon beauty, so different, as he observed, from that of the dark, soft-eyed Persians. Taking up a pencil and sketchbook, he devoted half-an-hour to talking with the child and drawing her portrait, which he presented to the Major. The likeness is an excellent one, and shows that the Shah, who has never taken lessons in drawing, has great natural talent for that art.

The success with which the United States Government has revived piracy upon the high seas has apparently had the effect of inspiring certain descendants of the greatest of the pirates of old with the idea of reviving the industry of their fathers. A Spanish vessel has been captured by a band of Riff pirates, and six of her crew have been carried off into slavery. One hundred and fifty years ago such actions as this were as common as collisions at sea are now, and the name of the Riff pirates was as terrible to underwriters as icebergs or fogs are in these days. Will the Riff pirates be treated with as much forbearance as the United States Government pirates by the Great Powers? It not, why not?

Berezovski, the Pole who tried to avenge his country's wrongs by shooting at the Czar Alexander II., during that monarch's visit to the Paris exhibition of 1867, is now a white headed old convict in the French penal settlement of New Caledonia, off the coast of Australia. He is very tenderly treated by the authorities of the place, for his conduct has been unexceptionable from the very first day of his transportation. They allow him a room to himself apart from the other prisoners and he is at liberty to roam about the island as he pleases Being very fond of flowers, cultivating his little garden in his sole employment, and for recreation he reads the newspapers and magazines.

It is not impossible that Spain will take advantage of the casus belli with Morocco afforded her by the revival of the Riff pirates, and will undertake the conquest of the greatest of the once independent Barbary states. She has long wished to emulate the French conquest of Angiers, and although she is still very feeble, the years of peace which have followed the surrender of the Carlists must have strengthened her considerably. What good it would do treeless, sun-dried, ignorant Spain to conquer, treeless, sun-dried, ignorant Morocco is an abstract question, but Spain, once subjugated by the Moors, would not reason that out too closely if she thought she could now subjugate them and that an extension of territory and that unponderable thing called prestige could be gained by such a war.

Mountains seem to be falling on both sides of the world and crushing the poor people who have nestled in their shadow. The cliffs of Quebec, in which Canada's pride centres, and around which her heroic history clusters, have begun to fall, and have made themselves the grave of many. It will probably be at last felt to be necessary to stay the cliffs with further masonry, a precaution which it is now evident should have been taken before this calamity made Champlain street a place of fear and threatened the very existence of the city's chief ornament. From a mere money point of view, unless this is done a good deal of lower town property will become valueless and, without Dufferin Terrace, Quebec would cease to be Quebec. If the rock cannot be made secure the space under it should be cleared of people till it can be taken down.

In a recent interview with a newspaper reporter Captain Watkins, of the City of Paris, who has been in command of Atlantic steamships for about twenty-five years, said:—"The tremendous and rapid progress made in the construction of ocean steamers may be illustrated by this simple fact: If the first steamer which I brought across from Liverpool to New York had been loaded to her extreme capacity with coal she would not have been able to carry more than enough fuel to supply the City of Paris for one trip across the Atlantic.' Under present conditions each gain of an hour in speed means a very great increase in the consumption of fuel, the disproportion continually growing greater. It would seem, therefore, that the limit of speed has been very nearly attained, unless the fuel-carrying capacity of the liners is greatly increased.

The "Edinburgh Scotsman says: "Although the Duke and Duchess of Fife remained home on Sunday morning after their wedding, in the evening the happy couple might have been seen in an ordinary hansom driving rapidly towards a neighboring village church for evening service, unattended by any suite, the Princess in the quietness of Sunday dress, with a waterproof, and the Duke in ordinary, not to say shabby, morning attire. They had told the driver to wait the close of the service, but the man misunderstood, and so, the little simple village church service over, the Duke and his bride sallied forth with the other worshippers, and in the gloaming of a summer's evening walked quietly back to their house across the park hardly noticed.

The Americsn Workingman's Condition.

The company of American workingmen numbering fifty, who visited the Paris exposition and various European cities returned to New York by the City of Rome last week. The general results of their observations are succinctly stated by Mr. Thomson of "Detroit News:"

"As to the results of our observations, we have found that the condition of the American workingmen is vastly superior to that of their European brethren. We had all trades represented and the opinion is the same for each. We are probably more advanced in the use of machinery than anything else. Our millwright, for instance, who is manager of the Washburne Mills in Minneapolis, was surprised to find machinery exhibited at the Paris Exhibition as representing the highest advancement which he had already removed from his mills, as behind the time in America. Our representative of the iron and steel industry thinks there is no comparison between the condition of affairs in this country and Europe. The men are paid almost twice as much. The mills at Glasgow are at least thirty years behind those in the United States The representative of the printing interests believes the newspapers on the continent at least twenty-two years behind us. They are still using machines in the composing room, he says, which were in use when he learned his trade, a quarter of a century ago, and the workmen are, too, underpaid. Their work is also not so thorough. Their offices are so well lighted or as perfect from a sanitary point of view. We have returned satisfied with our home, and not one of us would consent to live abroad."

The Vanderbilt System of Railways.

Few persons have any conception of the magnitude of the interests covered by the above title, and very few even among the railway fraternity are aware of how fully this vast system occupies the field in which it is located; but if you will take a map and trace out, first, the New York Central & Hudson River; second, the Boston & Albany; third, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern; fourth, the Michigan Central; fifth, the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis (formerly the "Bee Line" and "Big Four") Railroads, you will be impressed with the wonderful foresight of the men who designed and executed the plan to operate under a uniform policy, and practically a common control, a system of railways that should furnish unsurpassed transportation facilities to the great commercial empire outlined above, and a trip over this grand aggregation will convince the most skeptical that the Vanderbilt System of Railways, of which the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad is the main stem, traverses the very heart of the business portion of this continent, touching, either directly or through its immediate connections, all the important commercial centers of the country, and offering to health, pleasure and business travel facilities that are not equalled by any similar institution in the world.

An edition of one hundred thousand copies of a very neat little pamphlet bearing the title at the head of this article has just been issued by the American Bank Note Company of New York, which contains much interesting information concerning this great system.

A Ridiculous Question.

"Do you enjoy good health?" asked Brown of his friend Jones. The reply of Jones was short, sharp and to the point. "Why of course I do, what fool doesn't?" Everyone enjoys good health when he has it. But some people do not have it to enjoy. Sick headache, biliousness, constipation, deranged liver, and a host of ills, real and imaginary, are their heritage. Thousands of persons cure and prevent these distressing complaints by taking Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Small, sugar-coated and easy to take; one a dose.

describes the condition of those persons who are said to be "going down hill," or going into decline." There is an indescribable weakness of the system, a general lack of vitality. They cannot tell what the matter is with them. They only know that they feel miserable in mind and body. They are gloomy and despondent. They have tried this and that remedy prescribed by their friends or the doctors. They have failed to receive any benefit from them. They reach the conclusion that there is no help for them and that they must die. Now the fact is that the trouble originates, in nine cases out of ten, in impure blood. There is poisonous, effete matter in it that ought to be got rid of. But how can this be done? Simply by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which acts on the blood and vaious organs of the body in such a way that the man or woman using it seems to be made over,—reconstructed. It is guaranteed to benifit or cure all cases of disease for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded.

THE IONA FAIR.

A LARGE CROWD AND FINE EXHIBITS.

The annual exhibition of the Southwold and Dunwich Agricultural Society, held at Iona on Saturday last, was by far the best that has been given by this society in point of attendance and exhibits. From an early hour in the morning until noon members were busy placing their exhibits in the drill shed, where the grain and seeds, dairy and horticultural products, roots and vegetables and ladies' work were shown. The exhibits in the former classes were not as large as on previous occasions, but samples were good. The display of canned fruit, honey and syrups attracted considerable attention from its superior quality. But it was in the ladies' department that the principal exhibit in the drill shed was centred. The work shown equalled, if not surpassed, the exhibit at many larger fairs in quality, quantity and style. The entries in this department numbered 372 and some of the principal exhibitors were, Mrs. John McVannel, Campbellton, 30 pieces; Mrs. A. Clark, Iona, 20 pieces; Mrs T. Hamilton, Iona, 30 pieces; Mrs. Alex. Black, Iona, 20 pieces; M. Silcox, Iona, 30 pieces; Arch. Graham, Iona, 26 pieces; Jennie Hamilton, Fingal, 17 pieces; Moses Lumley, Iona, 17 pieces; John Patton, Wallacetown, 25 pieces; Miss Waddell, St. Thomas, 33 pieces F. Else, Tilsonburg, 20 pieces; Mrs. H. Silcox, Iona, 17 pieces; Malcolm Campbell, Iona, 10 pieces; Dugald McColl, Iona, 18 pieces; Geo. Newton, Iona, 10 pieces; A. Silcox, Iona, 20 pieces; John Mills, Iona, 15 pieces; Daniel Black, Iona Station, 10 pieces; John Carswell, Iona, 18 pieces; Clark Bros., Iona, 5 pieces. The entries in horses numbered 135, and the show was excellent, all classes being well represented. Malcolm Graham, D. P. Graham, D. D. McArthur, Peter McNeil, Kerr Bros. R. McMillan, John Patton, W. Killen, A. P. Campbell, A. C. Campbell, A. McKirdy, Mungo McFarlane, Jas. Carswell and Edward McKellar being the chief exhibitors in this class. The cattle exhibit was also very good, some being exceptionally fine animals. Joseph Bobier showed a fine herd comprising two yoke of steers, 2 and 1 years old respectively, a fine thoroughbred bull calf, 8 months old, and others. Brown Bros., Angus Campbell, Dan. Black, D. McColl and Mungo McNabb were other large exhibitors. The animals shown appear to be improving each year, the farmers evidently recognizing the fact that well-bred cattle pay far better in the long run than scrubs. The exhibit of sheep was not as large as on former occasions, but was good as far as it went, J. Rogers, Mungo McNabb, Brown Bros. and Thos. Wooldridge being the exhibitors. Superior poultry was shown by A. Clarke, Junius Clarke, R. A. Watson, Alex. McBride, Cecil Claris, Moses Lumley, J. Burdon, W. J. Lodge, A. McCallum, Mrs. H. Silcox aud A. Glenn.

The judging on horses was ably attended to by D. Ferguson, Jno. Culver and Duncan Thompson; on cattle by D. G. Thompson, R. Hine, and A. A. McKillop; on sheep by John Kendall, Peter McNeil and Thos. Hamilton; on hogs and poultry by H. Braddon, H. Kipp and E. Locke; on grain, seeds and implements, by — Robertson, Chas. Waters and J. T. Kerr; on dairy and horticultural products by Mrs. Angus Patterson, J. J. Campbell, Mrs. J. R. McColl and Wm. Wallace; on home manufactures by Mesdames Colin Kerr, W. McLandress and N. McIntyre; on ladies' work by Mesdames S. Backus, Malcolm Graham, S. Pierce and Daniel Thompson.

Great credit is due to the president, W. McLandress, Secretary Black and the directors for the success of the exhibition, all having worked hard to that end for the past month or more.

The usual number of fakirs were on the ground, but the people were not so easily gulled as usual, and as a consequence the fakirs were completely disgusted with their poor luck.

"Punch and Judy" furnished considerable fun for the little ones.

The total attendance was over 1,600.

The finances of the society will be in better shape this season than for some years past, owing the larger receipts at the gate and increase in the number of members.

The Iona brass band enlivened the proceedings outside during the afternoon. Though small in numbers this band furnished excellent music.

Everything passed off quietly and orderly, there being no unseemingly rows.

The prize list is given in full in a supplement to this week's ENTERPRISE.

NEW NOVELTIES FOR THE LADIES.

HOCKIN & POOL'S FALL OPENING.

Friday and Saturday were the opening days for the fall and winter trade at Hockin & Pool's. From noon on Friday until a late hour Saturday the store was thronged with ladies looking for the very lateat novelties in millinery, fancy and dress goods, the one that did not find anything to suit her must have been hard to please indeed. The millinery showroom, which is again under the management of Miss Johnston, who has always succeeded in suiting the most fastidious tastes, was beautifully decorated with flowers, ribbons, laces and feathers, and with the many bright and handsome hats and bonnets presented a very pretty appearance. The I. O. F. band was in attendance both evenings of the opening and added not a little to its success.

The leading styles in hats for the autumn are the turbans and walking hats trimmed with velvet ribbon and stiff wings. Some very large hats are shown for the winter trade trimmed profusely with plumes, tips, ribbons, fancy tips and tinsel cords. One of the handsomest in this line is the Romantic, a magnificent black hat covered with velvet, trimmed with ostrich plumes and osprey spray, and a humming bird nestled at the side; the Pourtant, covered with black silk velvet, trimmed with brocade plush ribbon and bird of Paradise, and the Esclairmonde, covered with mahogony silk velvet and trimmed with mousse feathers to match are also very handsome hats. Toques will be largely used, covered with velvet in the new shades—Emerald, New Rose, Etna, Dahlia and Camelia—and trimmed with birds, wings, ribbons or tips. Pretty little French bonnets which will be worn by both young and old, are trimmed flatly with ribbons and aigrettes. A new idea, which is very effective, is to use color with jets. Some of the other leading American shapes are the Sconset and Pyramid, very odd in appearance, but pretty and pleasing when trimmed. The small shapes will be greatly favored this winter, one of which, the Cossac, promises to be very popular, owing to the facility it affords for wrapping up the head well, besides having a pleasing appearance. It would take too long to even commence to describe the various handsome and attractive styles shown. Suffice to say that all are remembered from the little tot in the cradle to grandmother at prices to suit everyone, rich or poor. The popularity of their millinery department is evinced from the fact that in the spring the sales of trimmed hats and bonnets more than doubled those of the previous year, and prospects are good for a still greater increase in this season's sales. The display was large and rich, the very latest styles of both low and high price millinery being represented, and this firm deserves great credit for the enterprise shown in placing before the people such an elegant variety.

CHOW-CHOW.

The season colder grows apace,
The winds begin to roar;
So, when you come into this place,
Please, mister, shut the door.

It's most too warm for fires yet,
They'd open every pore;
But frost has come mankind to fret,
So, mister, shut the door.

Don't leave it swinging while we sneeze,
And christen you a bore;
Unless you want to see us freeze,
Why, hang it, shut the door!

Don't make us shiver 'till we're blue,
And hanker for your gore;
Look here, we've said all we're going to on this subject, and the next thing you know we'll be over there wiping the floor up with you
Unless you shut the door.

The so called Canadian thistle, which is simply the common English thistle, has spread itself over the whole of the United States.

FROM BAD TO WORSE.

Scrofula leads to consumption. From three to six pottles of Burdock Blood Bitters will cure scrofula, salt rheum, erysipelas, boils, pimples, blotches, tetter, ghingles, scald head, sore eyes, and all skin affections, by cleansing the system and removing all impure matter that causes bad blood.

The time approaches when the extravagant youth realizes that he can't trade a linen duster for an overcoat.

CANNOT FAIL.

Mrs. John E. Thompson, of Shelburne, P. O., writes: My two children received great benefit from Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for Diarrhœa and summer complaint. I gave it according to direction and they soon recovered. Be sure and get the genuine.

"I knew a man," said Eli Perkins, "who was meaner than a dog. This man and dog went into a saloon rogether, but the man got beastly drunk while the dog kept sober and went home like a gentleman."

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

Munro McFarlane's bull, Earl, of Darlington, took the eye of cattle men. Thos Woolridge had a Hereford bull, the first of that breed that ever was there, and he really was a fine animal.

FOR HIS OWN USE.

The Charge Against Mr. Rogerson Dismissed.

At the St. Thomas police court Monday, Wm. Rogerson was charged, on complaint of Inspector McCausland, with violation of the Crooks Act in selling spirituous liquor at his booth on the fair grounds. County Attorney Donahue prosecuted and Mr. D. B. S. Crothers appeared for the defendant. Mr. Crothers objected to the information which was not in accordance with the statute. The magistrate noted the objection and the case was proceeded with. County Constable Fairbrother testified to the finding of a jug partly filled with wine at defendant's booth. The defendant swore that the wine was for his own use, he staying all night at the booth, and that he had not sold or given any away. The case was dismissed.

Winnipeg Real Estate Moving.

Winnipeg, Oct. 1.—Real estate men have been in a flutter of excitement for the past two or three days. There were a couple of capitalists in town, and they made several purchases which made people, and particularly real estate men feel that after all the bottom had not fallen out of Winnipeg very badly. The Clark block has been purchased by a Scotch capitalist for $8,500. Mr. John Dyke, the Dominion Government immigration agent at Liverpool, purchased the northwest corner of Main and Graham streets for $10,000. The McNee block corner of Main and McWilliam streets was sold on Saturday to Mr. A. M. Fraser, a London, Eng., barrister of means, who has been in the city some days. The property sold for $24,000 cash. Mr. T. E. Bradburn, a Lindsay gentleman has purchased the Lang estate on Langside street.

The Stratford Natural Gas Company has been incorporated. The capital stock of the company is $50,000. The company intend to begin operations at once by sinking a test well, as they have a most encouraging opinion from a very reliable expert that Stratford is favorably situated, and a very likely place to find natural gas in paying quantities.

The adjourned inquest in the Wallace case was resumed at Merlin on Monday by Dr. Bray, coroner, Mr. J. A. Walker appearing for the crown. Mrs. Wallace denied all knowledge of "rough on rats" being in the house, but other testimony was given calling this statement in question, and as the stomach sent to Toronto for examination had not come back, the inquest was further adjourned.

The Clinton New Era says: "A very sad accident happened on Wednesday morning, close to town, resulting in the instant death of Miss Kate Deeves, daughter of Mr. John Deeves, of Goderich township. When the morning train north on the L. H. & B. had reached the river bridge half a mile below Clinton, the engineer saw a young woman walking on the track just a short distance ahead of him. He at once reversed the engine and whistled, thinking that she would at once get off the track, but as she happened to be deaf she of course did not hear, and before the train could be brought to a stand the engine had struck her, killing her instantly.

As the section men on the Grand Trunk was returning home from their work at six o'clock on Wednesday evening, they found a young colored boy named George M. Rae, aged about 17 years, lying along side the track at the cross-road in the rear of George Patillo's residence at Patillo station. He was not dead when found, but died at midnight after being removed to Tecumseh. He remained unconscious from the time he was found till he died. It is not known how he came to his death, but it is supposed he was stealing a ride on a freight train and attempting to jump off was struck by the train. His right side was crushed in and his right arm was cut off above the elbow. It is said that deceased was in the habit of riding down on freight trains to Windsor to visit his mother, who lived in the vicinity.

THE IONA FAIR.

A LARGE CROWD AND FINE EXHIBITS.

The annual exhibition of the Southwold and Dunwich Agricultural Society, held at Iona on Saturday last, was by far the best that has been given by this society in point of attendance and exhibits. From an early hour in the morning until noon members were busy placing their exhibits in the drill shed, where the grain and seeds, dairy and horticultural products, roots and vegetables and ladies' work were shown. The exhibits in the former classes were not as large as on previous occasions, but samples were good. The display of canned fruit, honey and syrups attracted considerable attention from its superior quality. But it was in the ladies' department that the principal exhibit in the drill shed was centred. The work shown equalled, if not surpassed, the exhibit at many larger fairs in quality, quantity and style. The entries in this department numbered 372 and some of the principal exhibitors were, Mrs. John McVannel, Campbellton, 30 pieces; Mrs. A. Clark, Iona, 20 pieces; Mrs T. Hamilton, Iona, 30 pieces; Mrs. Alex. Black, Iona, 20 pieces; M. Silcox, Iona, 30 pieces; Arch. Graham, Iona, 26 pieces; Jennie Hamilton, Fingal, 17 pieces; Moses Lumley, Iona, 17 pieces; John Patton, Wallacetown, 25 pieces; Miss Waddell, St. Thomas, 33 pieces F. Else, Tilsonburg, 20 pieces; Mrs. H. Silcox, Iona, 17 pieces; Malcolm Campbell, Iona, 10 pieces; Dugald McColl, Iona, 18 pieces; Geo. Newton, Iona, 10 pieces; A. Silcox, Iona, 20 pieces; John Mills, Iona, 15 pieces; Daniel Black, Iona Station, 10 pieces; John Carswell, Iona, 18 pieces; Clark Bros., Iona, 5 pieces. The entries in horses numbered 135, and the show was excellent, all classes being well represented. Malcolm Graham, D. P. Graham, D. D. McArthur, Peter McNeil, Kerr Bros. R. McMillan, John Patton, W. Killen, A. P. Campbell, A. C. Campbell, A. McKirdy, Mungo McFarlane, Jas. Carswell and Edward McKellar being the chief exhibitors in this class. The cattle exhibit was also very good, some being exceptionally fine animals. Joseph Bobier showed a fine herd comprising two yoke of steers, 2 and 1 years old respectively, a fine thoroughbred bull calf, 8 months old, and others. Brown Bros., Angus Campbell, Dan. Black, D. McColl and Mungo McNabb were other large exhibitors. The animals shown appear to be improving each year, the farmers evidently recognizing the fact that well-bred cattle pay far better in the long run than scrubs. The exhibit of sheep was not as large as on former occasions, but was good as far as it went, J. Rogers, Mungo McNabb, Brown Bros. and Thos. Wooldridge being the exhibitors. Superior poultry was shown by A. Clarke, Junius Clarke, R. A. Watson, Alex. McBride, Cecil Claris, Moses Lumley, J. Burdon, W. J. Lodge, A. McCallum, Mrs. H. Silcox aud A. Glenn.

The judging on horses was ably attended to by D. Ferguson, Jno. Culver and Duncan Thompson; on cattle by D. G. Thompson, R. Hine, and A. A. McKillop; on sheep by John Kendall, Peter McNeil and Thos. Hamilton; on hogs and poultry by H. Braddon, H. Kipp and E. Locke; on grain, seeds and implements, by — Robertson, Chas. Waters and J. T. Kerr; on dairy and horticultural products by Mrs. Angus Patterson, J. J. Campbell, Mrs. J. R. McColl and Wm. Wallace; on home manufactures by Mesdames Colin Kerr, W. McLandress and N. McIntyre; on ladies' work by Mesdames S. Backus, Malcolm Graham, S. Pierce and Daniel Thompson.

Great credit is due to the president, W. McLandress, Secretary Black and the directors for the success of the exhibition, all having worked hard to that end for the past month or more.

The usual number of fakirs were on the ground, but the people were not so easily gulled as usual, and as a consequence the fakirs were completely disgusted with their poor luck.

"Punch and Judy" furnished considerable fun for the little ones.

The total attendance was over 1,600.

The finances of the society will be in better shape this season than for some years past, owing the larger receipts at the gate and increase in the number of members.

The Iona brass band enlivened the proceedings outside during the afternoon. Though small in numbers this band furnished excellent music.

Everything passed off quietly and orderly, there being no unseemingly rows.

The prize list is given in full in a supplement to this week's ENTERPRISE.

NEW NOVELTIES FOR THE LADIES.

HOCKIN & POOL'S FALL OPENING.

Friday and Saturday were the opening days for the fall and winter trade at Hockin & Pool's. From noon on Friday until a late hour Saturday the store was thronged with ladies looking for the very lateat novelties in millinery, fancy and dress goods, the one that did not find anything to suit her must have been hard to please indeed. The millinery showroom, which is again under the management of Miss Johnston, who has always succeeded in suiting the most fastidious tastes, was beautifully decorated with flowers, ribbons, laces and feathers, and with the many bright and handsome hats and bonnets presented a very pretty appearance. The I. O. F. band was in attendance both evenings of the opening and added not a little to its success.

The leading styles in hats for the autumn are the turbans and walking hats trimmed with velvet ribbon and stiff wings. Some very large hats are shown for the winter trade trimmed profusely with plumes, tips, ribbons, fancy tips and tinsel cords. One of the handsomest in this line is the Romantic, a magnificent black hat covered with velvet, trimmed with ostrich plumes and osprey spray, and a humming bird nestled at the side; the Pourtant, covered with black silk velvet, trimmed with brocade plush ribbon and bird of Paradise, and the Esclairmonde, covered with mahogony silk velvet and trimmed with mousse feathers to match are also very handsome hats. Toques will be largely used, covered with velvet in the new shades—Emerald, New Rose, Etna, Dahlia and Camelia—and trimmed with birds, wings, ribbons or tips. Pretty little French bonnets which will be worn by both young and old, are trimmed flatly with ribbons and aigrettes. A new idea, which is very effective, is to use color with jets. Some of the other leading American shapes are the Sconset and Pyramid, very odd in appearance, but pretty and pleasing when trimmed. The small shapes will be greatly favored this winter, one of which, the Cossac, promises to be very popular, owing to the facility it affords for wrapping up the head well, besides having a pleasing appearance. It would take too long to even commence to describe the various handsome and attractive styles shown. Suffice to say that all are remembered from the little tot in the cradle to grandmother at prices to suit everyone, rich or poor. The popularity of their millinery department is evinced from the fact that in the spring the sales of trimmed hats and bonnets more than doubled those of the previous year, and prospects are good for a still greater increase in this season's sales. The display was large and rich, the very latest styles of both low and high price millinery being represented, and this firm deserves great credit for the enterprise shown in placing before the people such an elegant variety.

CHOW-CHOW.

The season colder grows apace,
The winds begin to roar;
So, when you come into this place,
Please, mister, shut the door.

It's most too warm for fires yet,
They'd open every pore;
But frost has come mankind to fret,
So, mister, shut the door.

Don't leave it swinging while we sneeze,
And christen you a bore;
Unless you want to see us freeze,
Why, hang it, shut the door!

Don't make us shiver 'till we're blue,
And hanker for your gore;
Look here, we've said all we're going to on this subject, and the next thing you know we'll be over there wiping the floor up with you
Unless you shut the door.

Many young children become positively repulsive with sore eyes, sore ears and scald head. Such afflictions may be speedily removed by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old alike experience the wonderful benefits of this medicine.

Milburn's Aromatic Quinine Wine fortifies the system against attacks of ague, chills, bilious fever, dumb ague and like troubles.

Next to sunlight the incandescent light gives the best illumination for reading. All notions of the injurious effects of the electric light on the eyes are erroneous.

THE OLD RELIABLE.

In these days of humbug it is a relief to hear of something that can be depended upon. Wilson's Wild Cherry has been tested as a remedy for the cure of all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, for nearly twenty years, with such success as to earn for itself the title of The Old Reliable cure for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Asthma, Bronchitis and other affections of the respiratory system. See that you get the genuine, in white wrappers. Sold by R. A. Kirkland.

The belated straw hats show which way the fierce winds blow.

Never allow the bowels to remain constipated lest serious evil ensue. National Pills are unsurpassed as a remedy for constipation.

THE POWER OF THE PRESS.

From one end of the country to the other the press is making the wonderful curative properties of Nasal Balm, for catarrh and cold in the head. P. H. Munroe, Perry Sound says:—Nasal Balm, has no equal as a remedy for cold in the head, It is both speedy and effective in its results.

IN MANY FORMS.

Dyspepsia assumesmany phases all disagreeable to the sufferer, yet it takes no form which from two to four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters will not cure. B. B. B. cures dyspepsia, tones the weak stomach, aids digestion, sharpens the appetite and renovates the entire system.

twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP and take no other kind.

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS.

DISTRICT DASHES.

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

Highgate.

The Highgate gun club are making sad havoc among the black squirrels.

Highgate Fair, Oct 15th. We expect to down St. Thomas, London and Toronto.

John Smith intends moving from Ridgetown to Highgate in a few days.

Mr. James Moorehouse passed away very peacefully last Monday. The remains were laid to rest in the Methodist burying ground here on Wednesday. A wife and one daughter are left to mourn his loss. Our deepest sympathy is with them in their bereavement.

Mr. Soules and Mr. Mattise went out on a coon hunt the other night and brought home a valuable mare. Farmers had better lock their stable doors. The tempter should be liable as well as the tempted.

Wheat is commencing to move at last; price, same as last week, 80c. to 85c. according to weight.

West Lorne.

Mr. Geo. Greer, who has been filling a very important position in a freight office of the Canadian Pacific R. R., London, has returned home for a short time.

Mr. Edward Hood, who has been so very low, is now improving.

Mrs. Emily Brooks has returned from St. Thomas.

Misses Carrie Hill and Annie McPherson are now engaged in the millinery business of Mrs. Switzer.

Mr. Alex. McKee is here in the interests of the Massey Manufacturing Co., Toronto. Twenty-five carloads of lumber have been shipped by him during the past week.

Mr. John A. McKillop is on a trip to Kentucky for his health.

Mr. Arch. McKillop, sr., has returned home from the Northwest after a lengthy visit.

Mr. R. Ollett has removed his woodshop from the firm of Wm. Ford and will become partner with Edward Cahill, blacksmith.

Mr. John McCallum, tailor, has gone to Comber, where he has secured a good position.

Mr. John Stalker, Reeve of Aldborough, is on a trip to the North West.

Mr. Thos. Farr has left West Lorne for Missouri, where he will take up his abode.

A lively runaway took place here the other evening. A spirited team of horses belonging to Mr. J. Campbell took fright and dashed across the track at a rapid rate, colliding with another wagon. One horse was thrown down and the two wagons were piled almost directly on top of the animal. However, neither horses were hurt but the wagons were badly broken.

One of the most eloquent lectures that the people of West Lorne have ever had the privilege of hearing was delivered by Mr. W. H. Montague, of Haldimand, on Friday last, subject—"The Canadian's Heritage." The Ladies Mite Society provided all that could be looked for by way of roast and a pleasant time was spent.

Mr. Rigleman, of Buffalo, is here on a hunting tour for a couple of weeks.

Mr. J. A. Coleman and bride, of Hewett, were the guests of Mr. Fred. McPherson.

Mr. Alex. Robertson and bride, of Wingham Centre, were here on a short visit to his brother, Jas. Robertson, M. C. R. agent.

It is our sad duty to record the death of Miss Kate Crowley, which took place last week. Deceased, who had been ailing for but a short time, was a well known and highly respected young woman and she will be greatly missed by her friends.

An odd decoration for the hall is the now discarded warning-pan. Old warming-pans are burnished up and hung near the hat-rack. It is a sign of warm cordial welcome for visitors.

Queen Victoria has a remarkably fine head of hair for a lady of her age; but her son, the Prince of Wales, is quite bald. Had he used Ayer's Hair Vigor earlier in life his head might to-day have been as well covered as that of his royal mother. It is not too late yet.

Wilson's Wild Cherry has been prepared by Archdale Wilson & Co., Wholesale Druggists, of Hamilton, for nearly twenty years, for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Croup, etc. It has no equal. Take no substitute but get the genuine with white wrappers. Sold by R. A. Kirkland.

The left hand in France is universally regarded as that "of the heart," and is reserved for relatives and intimate friends and those toward whom the giver is well disposed.

Frank Wilkinson, grain buyer at Hamilton, says: "I used several medicines and found no relief until I tried Wilson's Compound Syrup, Wild Cherry." Less than one bottle cured him of a long standing and painful cough, with tightness of chest and short breath. Sold by R. A. Kirkland.

For all derangements of the Bowels, Liver and Kidneys, there is no medicine like Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It purifies the blood, tones the system, and regulates all the vital organs. Sold in large bottles at fifty cents.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

The Tables Turned.

CHAPTER II.

"Has Mrs. Crawford gone up-stairs to her room yet?" It was Mr. Barnett who spoke.

"No sir."

"Would you tell her, please, I wish to see her here in the library?"

"Very well, sir."

The servant departed; and in a short time Mrs. Crawford made her appearance. It was now Monday evening, and on the morrow the funeral of Mr. Monkton would take place. As yet, the missing will had not been found, although every likely and unlikely place had been searched, with the exception of the bookcases in the library, which Mr. Barnett was now engaged in examining. He had not up to this time mentioned to any one the fact of the will having disappeared. But for alarming Miss Ashley, he would have taken her into his confidence.

"Sit down, Mrs Crawford,' he said, addressing that lady. "Close the door, please; I do not want any one to hear what I am going to say."

"Dear me; I hope there's nothing wrong,' said she. "I was just thinking o' going to my bed. Miss Ashley is away up-stairs to hers, and Henry Monkton to his. What was it ye were wanting?'

"I will tell you directly.—Has miss Ashley said anything to you about Mr Monkton's will?"

"No; and I didna like to speak o' it to her, but ye'll ken about it?"

"Henry Monkton has not spoken about it either, has he?"

"Not to me; but I couldna hae tell'd him onything about it. I dinna think he has mentioned it to Miss Ashley. He is maybe feared in case he hears that he's no to come in for onything, He'll be wanting to keep on hoping as lang's he can."

The solicitor could not repress a smile at this last sentence. "I will tell you why I sent for you, Mrs Crawford.—I suppose you are not particular whether you get to bed for an hour or two yet?"

"Oh, no. If ye're wanting me, I can bide up brawly."

"I want you to give me a hand in looking through these bookcases. I have had some of the books down already. The fact is, Mrs Crawford, I can't find Mr Monkton's will; and I have searched every place that I can think of. I know he used to keep it in this room."

"Mercy on us! The idea o' that! canna find the will! Where can it hae gane, think ye?"

"I only wish I knew. It should be produced and read at the funeral to-morrow. If I don't find it, I will have to read from the draft; but Henry Monkton will probably demand production of the principal. It will be a fortunate thing for him if it cannot be got."

"Ay, I daresay; but we maunna let that happen. Miss Ashley is left something in it, I hope?"

"She is left everything, with the exception of some small legacies to the servants, and an annuity to his brother sufficient to keep him above want. You are remembered in it also. But if the will is not found, Henry Monkton will take everything, as his brother's sole heir."

"Will he, the vagabond! I wad be vexed to see't. Tell me what to do and we'll begin at ainee."

"Well, we will take down these books one by one, and see if the will is not by accident between the leaves of one of them, or it may even be at the back of the bookcase."

There was silence in the room for a considerable time while the search went on. Eleven o'clock struck. They were the only two awake in that large house. Mr. Barnett was the first to speak.

"Did Henry Monkton tell you that his brother and he were on friendly terms before the death happened?' he inquired. "He says he met him last Tuesday in town, and that they spoke to each other; but I can't believe it."

"This is the first time I've heard o' that; but I've spoken to Henry Monkton as little as I could."

"I asked Miss Ashley if Mr Monkton had mentioned it to her, and she said he had not. He would surely have told her if it had been the case."

"It's as likely to be a lie as no. I wadna trust that Henry Monkton nae farer than I could see him.—But what's this inside o' this big book? It's the will, I do believe!"

Mr. Barnett dropped the book he held and crossed the room to the side of Mrs. Crawford. "It is the will," he cried joyfully.—"Thank Providence! I was afraid it was lost altogether. I ought to have had you to help me sooner, I see. You have been more fortunate than I."

"Last Will and Testament of George Monkton, dated 5th April 1881," read Mr. Barnett from the back of document. "It must have got in there just as I supposed." He opened out the will and glanced hurriedly over it, and as he did so, the expression of his face changed. "There is some mistake here. This is not the will I meant. This one was revoked by another, executed some months later; in August, instead of April, now that I remember, but in the same year. This should have been destroyed long ago. I thought Mr. Monkton had burnt it."

"And what's the difference between that one and the other one?" asked Mrs. Crawford, not a little disappointed at hearing the will found was not the one sought for."

"The legacies to you and to the servants are the same. The difference is that Miss Ashley, instead of getting the remainder, gets only one-third. His brother succeeds to the other two. This will was drawn out and signed prior to the quarrel between the brothers. The one I want was executed after that time."

"I would be very sick sorry to see him get onything ava, much less two-thirds. We hae fand ae will at onyrate. The other may not be far aff. We'll finish what we're at, I reckon.—Is that will for nae use at a'?'

"In the event of us not finding the other, it will be. It contains a provision for Miss Ashley, which is one good thing. If there was no will she would get nothing. If the other is not forthcoming, we must act on this one."

"Do ye think Mr. Monkton would ken o' that will being inside the book?"

"No; I don't think he would. That book does not seem to have been disturbed for a long time. He must have thought he had destroyed it. But yet" —— The solicitor stopped short in his speech as a sudden thought struck him. "If it be true that his brother and he had become friendly again, he may have burnt the last will, intending to make a new one; or he might be aware of the existence of this one, which would do perfectly well," he said. "He may have even burnt the will on the evening on which he died.—Was there any appearance, Mrs. Crawford, of his having burnt any papers?"

"I heard the housekeeper say he had been burning some papers; but of course they might be some auld letters or things o' no consequence."

The door had opened, and a tall figure in white walked slowly into the room. Mrs. Crawford, almost fainting with terror, cowered down on the floor and clung to the tails of the solicitor's frock coat. Both were on the opposite side of the desk from the apparition, which advanced with noiseless tread into the centre of the room, and there paused, regarding them with a fixed stare. It held something in its right hand like a long blue packet. Mr. Barnett, his blood freezing in his veins, stood literally paralysed and incapable of motion. He felt his hair rise on his head. For the space of one dread minute he actually believed that the spirit of his dead friend stood before him. Then came a wild feeling of relief as he recognized the apparition. It was not the dead man in the spirit, but his brother in the flesh, whom he beheld. It was Henry Monkton in a fit of somnambulism.

There he stood, clad in nothing but his long night-shirt, his feet bare, his eyes wide open and unseeing, utterly unconscious of where he was or in whose presence. It was the first time in his life that Mr. Barnett had beheld any one thus walking in his sleep. The sight was to him something ghostly and terrible—a sort of life in death. What was that which he held in his hand?

Mr. Barnett stooped down and whispered his discovery of who the apparition was into the ear of the terrified Mrs. Crawford, who speedily recovered from her fright, and both together watched the movements of the somnambulist, who seemed uncertain what to do next. First he laid down the blue packet he carried on the desk, which the solicitor now saw to be a long envelope, evidently containing something. From this envelope the sleeping man drew forth a document, which he opened out and seemed to glance over, after which he refolded and returned it to the envelope. This he laid on the desk, left it there, and walked forward to the fireplace, where he stood for a minute or two leaning against the mantel-piece, apparently wrapt in thought. Struck by a sudden thought, Mr. Barnett bent across the desk, took up the envelope, drew out the document enclosed and hastily scanned it over. A single glance was sufficient. It was the missing will.

The Demon Steer.

George Wilson, a well-known cowboy, tells the following story, says the Cheyenne "Tribune":

There has roamed on the ranges adjacent to the Platte and Laramie rivers for these many years a mastodon wild steer whose aggressiveness and power make him the dread of every round-up outfit. This combative beef bears not a brand, but no "rustler" dares appropriate him.

The "demon steer," as the pugnacious brute is called, knows no fear, and with lowered head, glistening eyes and sonorous bellow will charge upon anything in his course. Time upon time he has been rounded up with his comparatively docile companions, but he invariably rushes past the line riders as if no such obstruction to his flight existed. Once a CY outfit determined to effect the capture of the big fellow, but after he had gored two horses and scared the wits from half a dozen riders the undertaking was abandoned.

This prairie terror only last season, in a fit of rage at those who dared to intrude on the peaceful solitude of the range, charged at midday into a camp, creating a panic, to which was ideal quietness the clatter incident to the stampede of the fabled bull in the china shop. There was a scattering of equipage and a disordered flight of the diners. One of these latter was so incensed that, contrary to orders, he sent a six-shooter ball after the massive steer, but the missile flew wide of its mark.

Wilson asserts that he will undertake to prove that the demon steer killed a large bear in a fair fight on the Sybille three years ago, and the cowboys will bet all their earthly belongings that the demon can conquer any bull in the Territory. The combat with the bear was a terrific affair. Bruin was forced to the defensive from the first, and for a time pluckily met the fearful onslaughts of the fighting steer, jarring the great form with blows from his paws. The activity of the steer was marvelous. He played 'round his antagonist as the sparrer annoys his foe, and at nearly every charge ran his long, sharp horns into the bleeding sides of the bear with the wicked "swish" which accompanies an effective sword thrust.

Wilson thinks the demon steer will die of old age. The man who attempts his capture takes his life in his hands.

No Bells on English Locomotives.

A paragraph has been going the round of the newspapers to the effect that in England locomotives carry neither headlights whistles nor bells, and that guards are stationed at intervals of a mile along all tracks, says an American railroad man. If this is correct the system of railroading must have been completely changed since last spring. Guards are only placed on the track when royal trains are scheduled, when by the way all ordinary traffic is suspended. As to headlights most locomotives carry two and some three, and on the crowded metropolitan tracks officials and experienced travelers can tell what is the destination of a train by the arrangement of these lights. Bells are not carried, but the curse of the railroad whistle can only be appreciated by a man who lives near the mouth of an English tunnel. One of the numerous Board of Trade regulations compels the engineer or "driver" as he is called, to blow the whistle before entering the tunnel or rounding a sharp curve. This whistle is very shrill and offensive to sensitive ears. On some lines it is always blown at a station in response to the guard's (or conductor's) signal to go ahead.

"The skeleton market at present," said a dealer in those gruesome commodities, "is very dragging You can get a first-class article now for $35, whereas the price three years ago was $65 and $70."

A SNAKE-LOVING FAMILY.

Scores of Rattlers in a Cave with Half-Breed Indians.

A party of sportsmen, while hunting antelopes in the Sierra Charrote a few days ago, made a most singular discovery, says a Texas correspondent of the Pittsburg "Times." Riding up a narrow gorge they caught sight of a gigantic rattlesnake trailing his hideous length along the side of the steep crag just above their heads. Several of the party fired at the reptile, but none of the shots had any effect beyond causing his snakeship to accelerate his leisurely movement, and by the time the party reached the spot the rattler was disappearing down a fissure in the rock.

A volley of shot was sent clattering after him, but none of his pursuers feeling courageous enough to follow him further, they had turned about and were making their way back to the horses, when a human head protruding from the gap where the snake had disappeared attracted their attention. The head was quickly followed by the body, and a most remarkable person stood gazing curiously after them. It was a man, clad from head to feet in a garment evidently made out of the tough, fibrous grasses of these parts woven together in a mat. This was secured about the waist by a belt composed of the pied, mottled skin of reptiles. This strange being's long, coarse hair hung about his face in straight, black, plaited locks, giving him a most weird, Medusa-like appearance. His features were of a brutish, cunning type, while the face was lighted up by a pair of coldly-twinkling orbs hardly human in their steady gaze, and which completed the suggestion of a serpent of his entire make up.

The hunters, amazed at this singular apparition, turned back and approached the man, who waited for them without any evidence of fear or desire to avoid a meeting. Mr. K., who was somewhat in advance of the others, called out to him in English, "Good morning," and was answered in Spanish, spoken with a guttural accent.

Mr. K. then began to converse in Spanish with the man, who responded briefly in a dialect of his own, composed of a mongrel Spanish and Apache Indian. When asked what he was doing down in that hole he informed the party that he lived down there and offered to show them his home. The gentlemen felt considerable hesitation about following the rattlesnake into such close quarters, and expressed as much, when the stranger declared there was no harm to be expected from the snake, but said there was another entrance to his abode that they might make use of if they preferred it.

He then showed them a large hole in the mountain's side which they had failed to notice for the bushes that well nigh covered it. They found themselves, on entering this hole, in a small, gloomy cave, in which they saw, as soon as their eyes became accustomed to the insufficient light, a woman and several children seated or lying about on skins. They were all dressed in the same rude garments as the man, to whom they bore a strong resemblance. They took very little notice of the hunters, exhibiting a sluggishness of movement that would have seemed to indicate drowsiness had it not been for their little glancing, watchful eyes that gleamed like diamond points in the dimness of the cave.

In obedience to some order of her husband the woman rose from her squatting position in one corner of the cavern, letting fall from her lap some object that glided swiftly away to one of the children, about whom it twined itself, and who affectionately clasped it in her arms. To the amazement and horror of the gentlemen, this object was the huge rattlesnake which had been their guide to this extraordinary place, so unreal and so uncanny as to cause them to ask themselves if it were not the creation of a dream.

The woman had lighted a torch, revealing the cave swarming with snakes of every description and size. They hung from rocky projections in the roof and sides of the cavern, hissing at the unwonted light, and glided about from one corner to another. One great slimy black monster lay across the throat of a sleeping infant, gently waving its horrid head above the child's mouth. An older child was eating something from an earthenware vessel, and a large rattler leaning from his shoulder would swing over and eat from the dish, while the child would strike it with its bare hand whenever its strange messmate seemed getting more than its share.

After lighting the torch the woman returned to her corner and the skin in which she had been squatting, and, catching up a snake that was laying near, dropped it into her lap as one might a kitten. The creature crawled up her body and finally settled itself on her bare breast, reaching up to her mouth as if to kiss her. This last exhibition of an intimacy forbidden by the prejudices of all ages and people was more than the party could stand, so they beat a hasty retreat from that joint abode of serpents and human beings.

A PLAGUE OF FLEAS.

Myriads of the Lively Insects Take Possession of a School in Troy, N. Y.

TROY, N. Y., Sept. 30.—Public School No. 9, which is located in the First Ward and near the river, has been closed within the past few days because the building was overrun with fleas. Where they came from no one knows, and the appearance of myriads of the insects in other places in the city seems to indicate that Troy is being visited by a plague. When the school was closed for the summer vacation none of the lively little insects were in the building. About two weeks before school opened for the fall term the janitor found the floors and walls covered with fleas. Large quantities of carbolic acid were sprinkled through the building, and this made three of the teachers sick and they left. A few days ago the Board of Education ordered the school closed. Twenty women were employed to scrub the building from top to bottom with soap and water. The school was opened again this week, and the school commissioners say the fleas have been exterminated.

In the Tree-Top.

BY LOUISE ESTELLE HOOK.

A strange place for baby's cradle! The wind's lullaby is not always gentle, and "when the bough breaks" what will become of poor baby! How many mothers have intrusted their little ones to the oak tree's airy nursery, do you think?

The oak stands just at the turn of the road, over-looking the field, and if it only kept a record of the guests it sheltered beneath its strong, outstretched boughs every summer, it would have a highly interesting visitor's book. In spite of all dangers, there are many cradles rocked in that tree top, and the good old oak gives the little one shelter and often food as well.

First we see the robins' nest, which they have built with such care from sticks and straws, plastered with clay and lined with horse-hair; but they were foolish robins to set up housekeeping there, for squirrels like oak trees too. It is a melancholy fact that squirrels and robins cannot live peacefully in the same tree; and the old oak could probably tell us of many a terrible battle between them if it had only taken notes at the time. But these robins may think that the highway running close by will be a protection to them, for their furry enemies are shy, and prefer to live in the woods, out of the reach of passers-by. At any rate, the birds have seen their pretty blue eggs hatch into ravenous little monsters with great yellow beaks, and are very happy and very busy feeding and keeping them warm, and as yet no squirrel has disturbed their peace.

But this cradle that we may see so easily, is not the only one in the oak tree. Close by the robins' nest grows a little brown ball, round and hard. It does not look as if it could be the home of any living creature, but in it are half a dozen or more tiny infants. They like their dinners of sawdust as well as the robins enjoy the fat worms their busy mamma brings them. Nobody brings any delicacies to these closely sealed balls; nobody rocks the cradle but the wind Nevertheless, it was prepared for these little white inmates by a careful, gauzy-winged mother, that looked like a wasp, and who, stinging the oak twig caused this little brown nursery to grow upon it. Then she laid some tiny eggs within, and, strange to say, they straightway began to grow larger, which is more than the robin's egg could do. The ball grew, too, till it was nearly as large as a cherry, and then the eggs within hatched into tiny, worms, which found the world a very crowded little place indeed, though well filled with nice sawdust to eat all day long. How astonished they will be when they eat their way out at last, and, arriving at the surface of their little globe, look around them at the great world of light and air that they never saw before! Then they will fly about in the sunshine, grown up gall-wasps, to make more oak balls for their little ones; but now they are snugly housed, and know nothing of the hum of life going on all about them.

Small as they are, these queer nurseries are not the tiniest to be found in the tree-top. Another winged creature goes flying about with a long piercer that looks like a sting, murmuring to herself, "I must find a leaf; I must make a place for my eggs." And then she thrusts the sharp piercer between the upper and lower surfaces of a leaf—just think how little space she has!—and finds it a capital place for her little ones. So the eggs hatch in the smallest possible room, as flat as a sheet of paper; yet the tiny creatures get more exercise than the baby-wasps. This we can see by looking at the leaf they live in; for it is covered with wavy lines that show where they are making tunnels inside as they crawl along, eating the green part of the leaf, but never touching the outer portion, else they come through into the air before they were ready to live there. That time will come by and by, and meanwhile the leaf is their world.

But what is this loud rapping? The oak tree has a new visitor, and this time it is one who will make sad havoc in the nurseries that are the most carefully hidden. Bold, strong, and hungry, his red cap showing like a single of danger among the leaves, the woodpecker alights on the trunk, on which he can run as fast as you can on the ground, and taps to find out who is at home. Woe to the insect that answers the tapping!

Even if they hide in the crevices of the bark, or in the wood itself. Woodpeckers with his sharp eyes and sharper beak, will find them out and eat them. And, more than all, he will even take pains to prepare an attractive place for various insects to pass their infancy, that he may be sure of finding them at home. And this is how he does it:

He first drills a good-sized hole in the tree; then goes in serch of an acorn, and, finding one, pops it into this hole. Sometimes people have fancied that he was storing it away for his own use; but he does not mean to eat the acorn itself. He knows that there are those who will, and when he comes again, he will find many little grubs and worms, and many flies of all kinds, enjoying the feast he has provided for them. Then, you may be sure, the woodpecker enjoys a feast in his turn.

Yet, in spite of dangers, there are happy lives in the tree-top, and all the year round the good old oak stands by the road with outstretched boughs, ready to welcome every new guest and protect as well as it can the little ones committed to its care. The wind blows, but the branches are strong; the sun shines with fierce heat, but the leaves give shade; and when the rain falls it cannot harm the sheltered homes in the oak tree.

Who should join the militia?—All pickpockets, because they are accustomed to rifle practice; stokers, because they can stand fire; and shopkeepers, because they are practiced in counter-marching.

A dealer at a Birmingham sale a few days ago gave fifty-seven guineas for a pack of cards. The pack is said to be the only one of its kind in the world. Every card is specially engraved, and the pack comprises an exhaustive pictorial history of the principal events of the reign of Queen Anne, down to 1706. It includes the victories of Marlborough, the sea fights of Admiral Benbow, all the various changes connected with the Parliamentary proceedings of the day, and the conclusion of the treaties between England, France and Spain. The Queen of Hearts is a very well-drawn picture of Queen Anne herself, and the King of Hearts represents Prince George of Denmark, her husband. The Queen of Diamonds is Anne Sophia, Queen of Denmark; the Queen of Clubs is the Princess Royal of Prussia; and the Queen of Spades is the Princess Anne of Russia. The knaves were represented by leading politicians of the day.

THE CRUEL ROCKS.

Wreck of The Warship Lily on the Labrador Coast

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 28.—H. M. S. Emerald arrived here to-day with the survivors of the wrecked warship Lily on board. First Lieut. Hewitt gives the following story of the disaster:—The Lily went ashore at five o'clock in the evening on Monday, 16 inst. at a place called Point Armour, Forteau bay, on the coast of Labrador. She was bound into Forteau bay for her mails. At the time a very thick fog prevailed, and suddenly, without the least warning, the ship struck the rocks with considerable force. Breakers could then be heard all about the ship. The officers did not know exactly that they had struck. The ship commenced to pound heavily and make water rapidly. Three of the boats were lowered and started for the shore, but owing to the heavy surf they capized when close in, throwing them all into the water. All managed to swim ashore but two, who were drowned. One of the sailors then swam ashore with a line, and by this means a hawser was got to land between the ship and the beach. A ledge of sharp rocks intervened, with very deep water between the rocks and the shore, and over this ledge, which turned out to be a perfect death trap, the hawser passed. Four of the crew attempted to climb ashore by means of this rope, but before they could succeed the poor fellows were lifted by the heavy swell which was running and on the rocks beneath. Finding it impossible to land safely by this means a cradle was arranged on the hawser, and the first man to be sent from the ship in it was a West Indian named Sealey, who acted as musician on board. He met the same fate as the previous four, his dead body being found in the cradle next day. The Emerald happened to be lying in Forteau bay, which is about five miles from Point Armour, and in answer to distress signals sent a number of her men to assist at the wrecks and with their help the remainder of those on board managed to reach the shore in safety. About six o'clock next morning, shortly after the upsetting of the boats, when it was seen how unsafe it was to land, the cutter with the ship's papers, money, etc., was sent out to sea in charge of an officer, and remained there all night, landing safely in Forteau bay next day. When the fog lifted on Tuesday it was found that the Lily had struck on a reef about 100 yards from shore. The Sunday before there had been a heavy blow, and this caused a very heavy swell to roll in, which soon pounded in the bottom of the ship. With the help of the Emerald's men the wreck was stripped of all her spars, sails, and rigging, nothing being left but the lower mast. All the small arms were saved. The names of the ship's officers who were saved are Capt. Russell, Lieut. Hewitt, Lieut. Sharp, Paymaster Dunbar, Dr. Tait, Chief Engineer Morris, Gunner Healey. The men saved number 92.

DASHED TO DEATH

EDISON STUMBLED ON IT.

How the Wizard of Menlo Park Happened to Invent the Phonograph.

"I have never seen in print a true account of how Thomas A. Edison first conceived the idea of the phonograph," remarked an electrician who was at one time in the "wizard's" employ to a New York "World" reporter. "The phonograph is the wonder of the world, and one of the few inventions which envious rivals have not charged Edison with having stolen. In fact, even his bitterest rivals for fame, all of whom appear to harbor the idea that it is their duty to detract from his reputation for genius and honesty, as a rule concede that 'Edison did really invent the phonograph.' It is an interesting story how he came to invent it. Many years ago, when Edison was still at Menlo Park and working night and day for fame, he devoted months to perfecting the telephone, and undoubtedly did more than any other inventor to make it practical by introducing the carbon plate into the transmitter. While experimenting on diaphragms for the telephone Edison had constructed a number of small sheepskin drumheads to test their value as diaphragms compared with mental and other substances.

"To some of these sheepskin diaphragms he had attached a small metal needle, which was intended to project toward the magnet and assist in conveying the vibrations caused by the human voice. The sheepskin diaphragms did not fulfill Edison's expectations and he discarded them and, as usual with appliances he decides to be useless, they were thrown aside to be removed with other rubbish.

"His assistants soon discovered that by holding the sheepskin diaphragms in front of their mouths and emitting a guttural sound between the lips a peculiar noise approaching music could be produced. It was something similar to the alleged music produced by covering a comb with thin paper and humming a tune on it. In passing one of the men engaged in playing on a diaphragm one day Edison playfully attempted to stop the noise by touching the projecting metal pin with his finger, and no sooner had he done so than he gave one of his peculiar starts. 'Eh! What's that?' said he, which so astonished the performer that he dropped the diaphragm. 'Do that again,' said the 'Wizard,' and it was repeated, and again his finger touched the pin, to his evident delight. He went about for some time asking one after another of his assistants to hum or sing against the diaphragm, and finally he got them to talking against it, he all the time touching the pin lightly with his finger.

"'I have it,' said he, finally, and he retired to his den and commenced drawing diagrams for machinery, which his assistants speedily made, and a few days later the first phonograph was put together. It was a crude affair, the pin making an impression on wax, and it talked imperfectly, but it did well enough to show Edison that he was on the right track, and he rapidly improved it until now it is very nearly perfection. A hundred men might have felt the vibration of that pin attached to the piece of sheepskin, but it took an Edison to instantly realize that the vibrations might be made to indent a soft substance and be susceptible of reproducing the exact sounds of the human voice that caused the different vibrations. The phonograph was regarded as a toy at first, but it sold for $1,000,000 recently."

Hubby—"What kind of stuff do you call this?" Wife—"Why, my dear, that is angel cake." Hubby—"Umph! I suppose it must be. I knew it was never meant for a mortal."

MODERN ATHENS.

A School of Greek Specialists—The Home of Doctor Schliemann—The Beauty of the Rustic Greeks.

It will be surprising to many to know that Athens has an American classical school, and that the graduates of American colleges live here the year round and devote themselves to the study of Greek literature, Greek history and the Greek language. This school is supported by donations from Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Ann Arbor, the University of Virginia, Columbia College and several others of our great colleges, and it also receives support from a number of wealthy citizens of Americans who are interested in the classics. Its tuition is free, and the various colleges have the right to send such of their students as have taken high rank in the classics. It is presided over by competent professors, and some of the greatest collegiate men of the United States have been at its head. Prof. Merriam, of Columbia, has spent a year here, and during the past year Prof. Tarbell, of Yale, has lectured to and studied with the students.

It is not a large school, and its students seldom number more than eight or ten persons. It is a school of specialists, and it pays attention to nothing else but Greek and the classics. Last year it had eight students and among these were two young lady graduates of Wellesley College, Massachusetts. The Wellesley girls proved themselves fully the equals of the men in their work on the Greek poets, and they can patch up old statues, decipher inscriptions and direct excavation quite as well as their brothers. These students devote a part of their time to Greek architecture and they have done a great deal in settling some of the questions of Greek history.

Within a short distance of this American school is the home of Dr. Schliemann, the greatest Grecian explorer. It has a marble inscription on its front in Greek meaning "Palace of Ilion," and it is nearer to a Greek palace than any private residence I have ever seen—a great square, three-story structure of the purest pentelic marble. The edges of its roof are crowned with massive marble statues which stand boldly out against this bluest of Grecian skies. These represent some of the figures most famous in Greek history and poetry, and each of them is a work of fine art. In the front of the building are two porches or loges cut into the walls and looking out through great marble Ionic pillars. The ceilings of these are frescoed, and they make you think of some of the prettiest features of the architecture of Venice. The house stands even with the street, but on its right and its left are gardens, in which surrounded by rose trees. Bushes of roses climb over the winding marble steps that lead up to the mansion, and every one of the many rooms of the interior reminds one of old Greece. The whole house is floored with mosaic in small bits put together in the shapes of old Greek vases and figures. You find Greek columns in the halls, and the stairs of the building are marble. The whole house is frescoed, and many of the painting remind one of the wall of Pompeii. On some of the walls are verses in Greek characters from the old poets. A bust of Homer stands on the marble mantel of the ball room, looking out between Jupiter and Hera. There are busts of Minerva and pictures from "The Iliad." The library contains thousands of volumes, and its front windows give a magnificent view of the Parthenon.

Dr. Schliemann is infatuated with old Greece, and he wants nothing not Grecian about him. His servants have Greek names, and he never changes these, though the men may be different. It is Pericles who always opens the door, and Lycurgus lugs up the coal from year to year. He has two pretty children, and I saw throughout the house the paintings of Andromache, his daughter, and I looked at the photographs of his little boy, who has the name Agamemnon. His wife is, you know, a Greek lady. She is nearly a generation younger than her husband, and she was a girl studying at the great female school of Athens known as the Arsakion when Schliemann met her. She was the best student in her class, and when the learned doctor found that she knew "The Iliad" by heart the gossips of Athens say that he straightway proposed. She was beautiful, however, as well as learned, and her protrait, which I saw on the wall of the drawing-room, represents a very fine looking lady. She is said to be as fond of Greek as her husband, and at a children's fancy ball not long ago her daughter wore a dress like those shown in some of the figures discovered in the excavations to Troy. Dr. Schliemann is quite wealthy, and it is said that he owns property in different parts of the United States. He came from America to Greece, and he claims American citizenship from having been a resident of California when it was admitted to Statehood. He has not been in Athens during my visit, and he is, I am told, in Paris attending the Exposition.

The Polytechnic Institute of Athens contains the finest of Dr. Schliemann's discoveries, and I saw here a whole room filled with together with jewelry and other gold articles which, all told, must in the gold alone be worth several big American fortunes. These things were all found at Mycenæ, not many miles across the Gulf of Corinth from Delphos, and some archæologists suppose that under the present site of Delphi are works equally valuable. Delphi was offered to the French for excavation on condition that they would agree to a certain treaty with Greece. This treaty has, I am told, fallen through, and Delphi may yet be bought by Americans.

A number of American scientists are thinking seriously of making excavations here. If they get the grant of the Government, however, they will have to pay for the removal of the village, which now stands on its site, and this will, it is supposed, cost in the neighborhood of $100,000. At Delphi was the great oracle of the Grecian cult of Apollo, and it was here that some of the greatest of the Grecian games were celebrated. The Grecian oracles and their temples had great treasuries and the temple of Apollo had in the time of Pliny 3,000 statues. When Sully besieged Athen in '86 he paid his troops out of the treasuries of Delphi, and it may be that under this village there are pecks of gold cups and gold vases, to say nothing of historical relics and works of fine art.

Even in the country districts you will find people who are posted on the Greek poets and there are few Greek youths who have not read what we call the Greek classics. The country people of Greece are far different from those of the cities. It is outside of Athens that you find the picturesque costumes, and it is here that you see the fine Greek features of the past. The girls about Corinth have faces that remind you of some of the noted statues, and I have seen near Athens, girls who could pose for Minervas or for the goddess of love. I have seen several Apollos in petticoats and fez caps and I saw a face the other day which made me think of that of Achilles. The costume of the Greek farmer and that of one of the regiments of the Greek army here in Athens is the same. It may be called the Greek national costume and it is the queerest outfit you will find outside of Corea.

If you will take the tallest and leanest man of your acquaintance and put him in a short, round-about vest and white, ballet-girl skirt; if you will put a soft, red, rimless cap on the side of his head and let the long, black tassel of this fall down over his ear, and then clothe his feet in long, red slippers which turn up at the toes, you will have some idea of how these

GAUDY COUNTRY GREEKS LOOK.

You must make the vest gorgeous with brass, silver or gold embroidery and it must have long sleeves which hang down from the wrist. On the toe of each red slipper there must be a red tassel as big as a chestnut burr and of the same shape, and bright leggings must be wrapped tight round the shins. The white shirts must come to the thighs and they must stand up as though starched. They must be so many that the breadth of the bottom will be at least a foot thick and the wearer must flirt them as he moves with a gay and giddy air. If you would have him like a Greek soldier you must give a great belt and fill this with old pistols and knives. You must put a sword at his side and a gun in his hand. You must shave off all but his mustache and give him a strut like that of a drum major when the band is reviewed by the Major.

The women are different. Their costume is a beautiful one and they look bewitching. Tall, straight and well formed, they have large bright eyes, regular features and a wealth of brown or black hair, which hangs in braids down their backs. They wear in the fields a single gown of linen, which falls from their necks to their feet, and over this they have a long sleeveless sack of white wool bordered with stripes of black. I have seen some of them on fete days and I attended a great national dance near Athens. The girls had on their fine dresses and they came out in costumes of silks, embroidered with gold. Their heads were covered with fine silk veils, the ends of which were woven with stripes of gold, and were wound around their faces so as to frame them in silk. They had on the long skirts of the week day, but many of these were and on their breasts they wore great squares of gold coins, which, string above string, extended from one side of the body to the other. These gold coins were their fortunes, and each girl had thus on her person the dowry which she was to bring her husband in marriage.

There are no marriages in Greece without dowries, and every girl is expected to bring her share into the fund for the beginning of housekeeping. The dresses, which are embroidered, are made with a view to being used after marriage, and as soon as a girl is old enough to sew, she begins to work on her wedding outfit.

All of these Greeks are proud of their ancestry and their country, and you will find at Athens buildings put up by wealthy Greeks. Many of the best improvements of the city have come from such donations. They have as much interest in the welfare of their country as we have in ours, and many of them come back to Greece to spend their last days. When it is considered how many there are and how able they show themselves to be in all business undertakings, it is impossible to look upon the Greeks of to-day as an ordinary people. They are steadily growing in wealth, and though at present the country of Greece has a great national debt and its taxes are heavy, its credit as a nation is good and its government grows better from year to year. It will, of course, never take its old place as one of the great nations of the world, but there is no reason why it should not have a good rank among the nations, and indeed it ought to have this to-day.

FRANK G. CARPENTER.

A Wonderful Walled Lake.

Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye:—The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa and perhaps any State, is what is called the "Walled Lake" in Wright County, twelve miles north of the Dubuque & Pacific Railway and one hundred miles west of Dubuque City. The lake is from two to three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen wide at the bottom, and five feet wide on top. The stones used in its construction vary in weight from three tons down to a hundred pounds. There is an abundance of stones in Wright County, but surrounding the lake to the extent of five or ten miles there are none. No one can form an idea as to the means employed to bring them to the spot or who constructed it. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in width, composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted there at the time of the wall. In the spring of the year 1856 there was a great storm and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in the vicinity were compelled to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a grand surface of 2 800 acres; depth of water as great as twenty-five feet. The water is clear and cold, soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from nor where it goes, yet it is always clear and fresh.

Lawyer—Now, Mr. Costello, will you have the goodness to answer me directly and categorically a few plain questions? Witness—Certainly, sir. "Now, Mr. Costello, is there a female at present living with you who is known in the neighbourhood as Mrs. Costello?" "There is." "Is she under your protection?" "She is." "Now, on your oath, do you maintain her?" "I do." "Have you ever been married to her?" "I have not." (Here several severe jurors scowled gloomily at Mr. Costello.) "That is all, Mr. Costello; you may go down." Opposing counsel—Stop one moment, Mr. Costello. Is the female in question your grandmother?" "Yes, she is."

AT THE PUMP-SHAFT.

"I shall not be able to run my engine to-night, wife," said John McDowell, wearily resting his head on his hand.

Poor Mrs. McDowell dropped down in a chair that was near.

"Well, if you can't, you can't, John," she said, "and that's all there is to it, I suppose."

"No, it isn't all there is to it," he answered. "If I am not there to-night the company will have a man in my place to-morrow. But I can't go. I can hardly breathe here, and in that close, dirty engine-room I would smother. It Marvine, the boss, only knew I was sick he could get some one till I am well—if I ever am," smiling faintly. "Last night I could hardly walk around to oil the engine, and I thought morning would never come. I could not go to-night if my life depended on it."

"You must not give up, John," Mrs. McDowell said, a suspicious moisture appearing in her eyes. "We've had lots of trouble since the strike, I know, but you have not missed a night in years, and the company cannot blame you now."

"There are some things women don't understand, and that's one of them," John McDowell said. "I've worn myself out in the company's service, but let me miss to-night, and I'd be discharged just the same as if I were a new hand."

He had to stop to catch his breath. When he was a young man he had run a pump inside, and the steam and foul air had given him the "miners' asthma," and though he had fought it for years, it had conquered at last.

"Won't Carson run in your place?" She asked.

"Not he. It would be asking too much of the man, for no one knows when I will be out again. Is Alice in?"

"She's in her room. Shall I call her?"

He nodded his head. "She can cheer us both up," he said.

Alice, their only child, nearly eighteen years of age, who had left the room but a few minutes previous to the time when John McDowell decided that he was not able to run the pump engine that had been under his care for nearly twenty years, was not long in answering her mother's call. What was her parents' surprise to see her clad in a heavy woollen dress when she came in.

"Where are you going, child?" her father asked.

"You are too sick to work to-night, and I am going in your place," she answered, looking from one to the other.

"You!" exclaimed her mother, in unfeigned astonishment.

"Why not? Haven't I often been there with father, and learned how to run the engine? I know when to put tallow in the cup, and how to oil every part," she said, with determination in her eyes and voice.

"How about the walking-beam at the top, and the plungers at the bottom of the shaft?" asked her father, gasping a little.

"When they need oiling I can go down the ladder and oil them, as I often have when you were there."

"And carry your lamp and oil-can?"

"Yes, father; you have seen me do it more than once."

"No, Alice," said her mother, gently, "you cannot do all that, it would be far too much for your strength."

"But I have, I can, and I will, rather than have father lose his place," Alice said, emphatically. "You know we need the money, and as long as father is sick, be it a week, or a month, I can run his engine and draw his pay."

Mr. McDowell smiled in spite of his weakness. "Well, wife, what do you think?" he asked.

"The girl is right," she answered. "It will not do to have you out of work, and I see no other way but for her to take your place till you are well, if the company don't object."

"I will see to that to-morrow," Alice said. "I thought it all over while you and mother were talking."

"Suppose something unusual should happen?"

"Then I will run down to the slope boiler-house, and tell the men there. I planned it while I was changing my dress, and I don't want either of you to worry about me. It's half-past six now, and I must hurry;" and, after kissing her father, she tied a hood over her head and hastened out in the gathering dusk, leaving her mother bemoaning the fate that had decreed her only child to be a girl.

It was nearly a mile to the pump shaft, across a common of waste land, where rock and "herny" coal had been dumped, leaving but little room for the sparse vegetation and weeds to grow up in. Over this Alice walked, brave-hearted and confident, stumbling now and then in her eagerness. Dark shadows and piles of rock surrounded her, while to her left, barely to be seen in the approaching darkness, the mining town of Carbondale nestled in the valley.

The darkness was complete when she reached the pump-shaft. As she opened the door and stepped into the engine room, the day-engineer, who was waiting for her to come, greeted her with an exclamation.

"What be you a-doin' here?" he asked.

"I've come to run the engine," she answered.

"What! You! Who iver heard the loik o' that? Does yer father know eet?"

"Yes, sir. He's been sick for a week—"

"I know."

"—And to-night he's too sick to come out, so I came. I have been here often enough with him to know how to attend to his duties."

"To be sure, if he's willin', I am," he said, taking up his pail. "There's nothin' special only to keep her well iled."

"I'll do that."

"If you don't they can't blame me. I've always attended to my part, and—oh, well, good-night," and he banged the door behind him, and Alice was alone.

Alone. With twelve weary hours ahead of her, and the puff—puff—puff of the steam at regular intervals outside, and the pound—pound—pound of the cog-wheels, meshing into each other, inside, as her only company!

She took up the oil-can and went around the engine, with the lamp in her hand, oiling every part until she came to the walking-beam which carried the rods to the water-cylinders at the bottom of the shaft.

It came quite close to her, and then, with a savage grind, disappeared in the darkness, only to come back again, bringing with it the cold, damp air from the shaft, and a volume of water which she could hear rushing and roaring outside.

Back and forth it moved, approaching till it almost touched her dress, and then disappearing; but remorselessly the engine drove it on, with its steady puff—puff—puff, and pound—pound—pound, until Alice grew weary of watching and listening. Setting down her lamp, she walked to the greasy, high-backed chair and watched the ceaseless motions of the fly-wheel.

The steam whispered to her in the cylinder and through the pipes at each successive stroke, and the water roared outside, making the night dismal and dreary, but Alice was brave and determined, though once she climbed to the high window and looked out across the waste land to see if there was a light burning at home.

She did not see any; it must be late.

What, eleven o'clock! She had been there nearly five hours. It was time to oil the engine again, and with it the bearings and pins on the walking-beam.

She had left her lamp standing on they stone foundation out by the shaft, and by its dim light she oiled the guides and crank-pin. With the can in her hand she approached the walking-beam, going and coming on its long sweep. To oil the pins she would have to jump on it!

A misstep would be fatal; it worked close between the two walls of stone, pausing at the end of each stroke before beginning another. As it passed her, going one way, she saw the round hole in its frame, brightened by use, and fastened her eyes on it.

Quickly, as she had often seen her father do, she sprang forward; her foot landed lightly in it, and her hand clutched the angle in the iron above. Then the walking-beam started the other way, carrying her on its resistless course.

Out—out—out it went, till she hung over the yawning pit, and heard the water dripping on the rocks below; now back on its long, circular sweep.

Out once more, deftly pouring oil on the massive journals, hanging there as it stopped before going back.

One, two, three seconds, it seemed, as she hung there, till it moved again. She looked down into the darkness below, clinging tightly to the greasy iron, a quick, startled glance into the depths, blacker than night, but a small, yellow flame, far down, caught her eyes.

The walking-beam gave its accustomed jerk; back she came, her heart beating quickly, and jumped to the stone where her lamp was placed.

Who was down the shaft?

The shaft had long been abandoned, and was only used to pump the water from new workings on higher ground. Whoever was down there had come in that way, Alice knew, as there was no other way to go down but on the ladders from the engine-room where she stood.

Did their presence bode good or evil? She must see!

Had she hesitated she would not have been true to her father's blood. To find out what they were doing she would have to descend the ladders. She could not take her light with her as that would attract attention.

For a moment she felt a little doubtful about being able to take so perilous a journey in the dark, but only for a minute. Opening the small door at the top of the shaft she saw the first ladder leading down into the pit, and grasping the topmost round with both hands she began the descent.

After the second step she was in darkness blacker than night. Round after round she descended till she reached the first platform. It was a small affair; only a heavy plank nailed between the buntings, but reaching out she felt the next ladder, and then the next.

On the fifth platform she stopped and looked over its edge. About two hundred feet below her the small, yellow flame was visible, moving around now and then, but too far off to betray any one's presence. She must go down further.

She had nothing to guide her but the sense of feeling. The least slip or the faintest noise would be alike fatal to her. Cautiously and silently she felt her way, the water from the rocks dripping on her, and the rods from the walking-beam, now far above her, lunging up and down in their bearings within reaching distance.

She could almost feel the darkness, so heavy it seemed, and the monotonous drip—drip of the water was painfully distinct. Down, and still down, till the tenth platform was reached.

Here she made another cautious reconnoisance. The light was plainer, and she imagined she saw several dusky outlines of men moving around; but she must descend still farther to see what they were doing.

She had made the descent many times before with her father, by the light of a lamp, and the knowledge she had gained of the ladders and platforms served her now. There were twenty-three ladders in all, each twenty feet long. On the twelfth one was a broken round. Her calculation was right, and she passed it safely.

When she reached the fifteenth platform she stopped again. Looking over its edge she saw the light was brighter, and its glow disclosed the presence of three men.

They were one—two—three, she counted, platforms below her. Sixty feet! Nearly to the bottom, but still she could not make out what they were doing. She resolved to descend to the next platform.

The water, which far above was in drops, now came down in small streams, and its noise drowned all other sounds, save the beat of the plungers in the water cylinder. It silenced her cautious footsteps, and she reached the platform without attracting their attention. Her heart was beating quickly with excitement as she looked down. She was near enough to see them, and what they were doing.

They were,—she could hardly keep back a cry of affright,—one of them had a wrench and was unscrewing the nuts from the bolts that held the guides in which the rods ran! If they loosened them all it would disconnect the engine and the pump, and the rods, with nothing to hold them in place, would strip the shaft of buntings and ladders!

The strike! Revenge on the company! All this flashed through her mind as she watched them, petrified with fright. The mutterings of their voices reached her.

How many more bolts to loosen before they would accomplish their vile work?

She turned and ran up the ladder. Gaining the platform she looked down again. What could she do? Her eyes, accustomed to the darkness, saw the wrench steadily at its work, and their upturned, harsh-looking faces, while one man held a lamp above his head. There could not be many more bolts to take out; she must not stand there and see everything sacrificed to their malice.

She felt the hard beating of her heart. It almost suffocated her. Her breath came fast. Then, with strength augumented by despair, she shoved against the ladder below her. It moved, balanced, and slowly, gathering speed as it circled over, fell, crashing, crashing—and she closed her eyes—down into the midst of them!

There was a wild cry from the men; the sound of the falling ladder echoed and re-echoed against the solid walls of the shaft until it died away. The water was still dripping, and the rods were lunging up and down, but no sound came from below, save from the plungers.

Up, now up! Ladder after ladder, till the engine room was reached. Pausing a moment she looked down the shaft. It was totally black. No yellow spot!

Nothing! The walking-beam came out to welcome her, and the cog-wheels pounded savagely, but leaving it all behind, she sped out across the rocks to the boiler-house beneath the hill.

It was a rough path. She stumbled many times in her haste and excitement, till, with dilated eyes, breathing heavily, she dashed into the fire-room.

The two men working there, shovelling coal in the furnace doors, stopped and looked up in surprise on her sudden appearance.

"Do you know where Mr. Marvine lives?" she asked. "One of you go for him. Quick! quick! Bring him back, and as many men as you can."

"Is —," one of them began to say.

"Yes, three men are dead or dying in the pump shaft."

They did not hesitate after that.

"I'll go, Jim," said one; "I'm a good runner."

"Hurry, then! You must hurry," she cried. "Bring him, and a doctor if you can. Go! and oh, be quick!"

Turning she ran out, leaving the man called Jim gazing after her, while the other man started on a run for the town.

Puff—puff—puff! The engine was still going. Some of the bolts had held! Pound—pound—pound! The cog-wheel still had plenty of work to do; and the walking-beam was coming and going on its long sweep, as she entered the engine-room.

With cautious footsteps she approached the shaft, leaned over, and looked down into its black depth. The water was dripping, and the cold, damp air fanned her heated face. Shuddering, she closed the door to shut the darkness out, and walked to the greasy, high-backed chair standing by the cylinder. Sinking into it she closed her eyes.

My story is about told. This all occurred some twenty years ago. The three men were found in the bottom of the shaft, hurled there by the breaking of the platform.

Luckily the ladder did not hit any of them, and as the distance was not great they were not severely injured. They will never forget their terrible experience. The ladder struck in the midst of them, and carried them down with it.

Neither will Alice ever forget. During the several months that Mr. McDowell lived, she continued to run the pump engine, but on the day "shift," and, strange as it may seem, she kept the position after her father's death, showing that the company remembered its brave defender.

I have never seen her, but the story was told me by one who heard it from her own lips.

Life in Japan.

From an article in the September Century by the artist Wores we quote the following: "In Japan women have always held a higher position than in other Asiatic countries. They go about freely wherever they please, and the seclusion of the Chinese is wholly unknown to them. The schools receive as many girls as boys; and as a result of my observations I can safely say, without idle compliment that the former are brighter than the latter.

"By degrees, and under favorable conditions for general observation, some of the causes of the people's happy spirit of independence began to be revealed to me. The simplicity of their lives, in which enters no selfish rivalry to outdo one another accounts in a large measure for this enviable result. Regarding one another very much as belonging to one family, their mode of life is more or less on the same plane, and consequently a spirit of great harmony prevails. A very small income is sufficient to supply the ordinary necessities of life, and everything else is secured with but little effort. Household effects are few and inexpensive; and should everything be destroyed by fire or lost in any way, it is not an irreparable calamity. All can be replaced at a small outlay and life go on as before.

"The tenant upon renting a house is put to little expense to furnish it; indeed, he requires absolutely no furniture at all. The clean, finely woven mats which cover the floor serve as table, chair and bed; and as it is the universal custom to remove the shoes before entering a house, there is no danger of one's bringing with him the dirt from the streets.

"His bedding consists of cotton quilts, which are spread on the floor at night, rolled together in the morning, and stored away in the closet during the day. A few pictures (kakemona) and specimens of beautiful script decorate the walls, a few vases contain sprays of flowers, and a number of cushions on the floor complete the furnishing of a room. Yet it does not feel empty or cheerless; for the general arrangement of harmonious colors, the different woods employed in its visible construction, and the beauty of the finished workmanship, make a most harmonious and pleasing combination. Paint is never used to cover the wood, much less to substitute a false grain."

Monkey Discipline.

Few persons ever have a chance to watch the actions of monkeys in a wild state, and tame ones mimic the life going on about them to such a degree that we can never feel sure their actions are not a reflection of our own. Mrs Gordon writes of them in India:

They were really very like human beings. I was one day watching an old female who had a young one by her side to whom she was giving small bits of bread, which she had evidently just received from my cook-room, and with which she was regaling herself at the same time.

Occasionally the little monkey would endeavor to snatch a bit of the bread before the mother was ready to give it to him, when she would administer correction in the shape of a gentle box on the ear.

She was in the act of doing this when one of my servants happened to come out. At once her demeanor changed. She snatched the little one to her bosom with every appearance of maternal solicitude, and did not put him down again until the man had retreated.

D. M. Gow, of Sunfield, Eaton Co. Mich., paid us a call on Monday. He is spending a few weeks with his brother at his old home here, and expresses himself much pleased with the improvements made in the ENTERPRISE this year, and would not be without it on any account.

Although there has not been much talk of incorporation lately the matter has by no means died out in the minds of our citizens. The necessity of the measure is becoming more and more apparent every day and the time is not far distant when Dutton will surely be incorporated as a village.

Owing to the large increase in his merchant tailoring business J. C. Hertel has found it necessary to get more room and is now using the upstairs portion of his store, which has just been vacated by the Foresters, as a work room. This will leave a much larger space for display on the grand floor. Nine persons now find steady employment in his shop.

In the Aldborough-Dunwich school matter it is pointed out that if the county council have a defective by-law, they can possibly remedy the defect at next session. It is also said that the Ontario Government, having by payments made to the district, and by official representation at the opening of the school, recognized the district, will not go back thereon even if it is found necessary to pass a special Act to put matters right.

At the Elgin Fall Assizes Monday afternoon the interpleader suit of Cusack vs. Cameron was tried. This was an action arising out of a seduction case in which Miss Annie Cusack, of Wallacetown, obtained $1,000 damages for seduction against Alex. Cameron, of the same village. An execution was placed in the hands of Sheriff Brown, who seized certain chattels to the value of $400. Defendant's father, Peter, and Angus Cameron, now claim that the seizure was illegal and that the goods belonged to them, having been purchased from the defendant before he absconded to the States. Judgment was reserved.

The hopes of an abundant harvest and a consequent revival of trade, so generally entertained in the early summer, have not been realized. Wheat, which seemed sure to yield thirty or forty bushels per acre, returns but half the amount, and that of an inferior quality. The fruit crop was almost destroyed by the June frost, and more recently the drought in Ontario has materially lessened the products of the dairy. In view of these facts it behooves farmers and retail merchants to buy closely and carefully, for the day of reckoning surely comes. There has already been too much credit given, and the only hope is in getting gradually nearer a cash or short date credits as a basis of trade. The curse of the credit system will be felt more than ever this year as many have bought on credit things which were not absolutely necessary, relying upon the prospects of good crops, and will find it very difficult, if not altogether impossible, to meet their payment this fall.

Victoria Carbolic Salve is a wonderful healing compound for cuts, wounds, bruises, burns, scalds, boils, piles, pimples, &c.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G.W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

A STRANGE COMPACT

It was a dreary night in the winter of 17—. Outside, a heavy fog filled the narrow unsavoury streets of the great English Metropolis, and the lungs and eyes of such unfortunates as chanced to be abroad. It even invaded the small wooden sanctums of the night watchmen, interfering with slumbers to which the inmates were both by age and office entitled. Across the river, in the dingy ill-paved lanes of the Borough, the fog seemed at its worst, a light warmish haze being the only indication of the presence of those shops which still remained open, and round which small ill-clad urchins with the most unmistakable intentions persistently hovered.

"A sweet night for footpads," muttered young Dr. Mostyn, as he disengaged himself from a chance recontre with a post, and felt his way along by tapping with his stout stick at the housewalls, a proceeding by which he had already severely damaged the legs of three of his suffering fellow-creatures and poked a large hole in the kitchen window of a fourth. "And now," he continued, talking to himself for the sake of company, "for home and supper and a fire. —Ah, and a patient or two, perhaps. Who knows?"

At this cheering prospect his spirits rose, and he banged mightily at the wall with his stick in consequence, until at length, coming to a small street on his right, he turned smartly down, and having made sure of his own door, knocked briskly at it.

"Who's there?" cried a shrill female voice in response.

"It's I, Bet," said her master. "Open the door, my good girl."

"Not if I knows it," was the cheering reply. "You take yourself off, young man, whoever you are. There's two bulldogs and three men with loaded guns standing by me, to say nothing"——

"Open the door, Bet!" roared her master through the keyhole. "Don't you know me?"

"Is it nine o'clock, or is it eleven?" propounded the damsel; "because if it's eleven o'clock, my eyes deceive me: and if it's nine o'clock, your voice deceives me. for the doctor said he'd be at home at eleven and not before; and considering the fog, I should say a good deal arter."

"Open the door!" said the surgeon sharply. "I'm back already because my patient's dead. Come; open at once!"

There was a creaking and shooting of bolts as he finished speaking; and the door being cautiously opened, discovered an angular woman of some five-and-thirty years whose nervous face cleared directly she saw her master. "I'm asking your pardon for keeping you so long, sir," said she; "but one never knows who's who; and judging by the noises and runnings, there's been rare doings round the corner to night."

"Anybody been in, Bet?" asked the surgeon, as, ten minutes later, he sat down to a carefully grilled chop.

"Not a soul," replied his hand maiden.

"And a nice person you would be to open the door, if an accident had arrived."

"Oh, I should have opened it at once," said Bet with decision. "Directly they used the word 'accident,' I should have opened it and chanced it."

Her master, smiling at her devotion, drew his chair to the fire, and having carefully filled a long clay pipe, fell to smoking with an air of great enjoyment and content. Then, thinking it extremely unlikely that he would be disturbed at that late hour, he dismissed his retainer to her quarters in a neighbouring house, and being left to himself, lapsed into a brown study.

It might have been the fog, or it might have been the unexpected death of his patient; whatever the cause, his thoughts took a very gloomy direction indeed, and he shook his head despondingly as he thought of his future prospects. His mood was not made more cheerful by the room, which was large and dark, and panelled with oak, and ornamented with battered oil portraits of dead and gone worthies, with whom he claimed some kinship more or less remote, who seemed to stare at him to-night in a particularly ghostly not to say wooden manner. Besides all this, he was in love; and he had no sooner built a magnificent castle—in the air and placed her in it, than an anything but airy landlord called for the rent, and the dream was spoiled.

He had been sitting thus for some time, nursing his woes and sipping a glass of hot cognac which he had prepared, when he was disturbed by a loud imperative knocking at the front door; whereat he snatched up one of the guttering candles and marched down the narrow stairs to open it. The feeble light of the candle, when he had done so, showed him a tall, strongly built man of middle age, whose naturally fine proportions were increased by the fog, which clung to them and exaggerated them. The surgeon noted that he was richly clad, and also that the embossed hilt of a sword protruded from the skirts of his coat, while his face, from some powerful emotion, was pale and drawn.

"Are you the surgeon?" asked the newcomer abruptly.

"At your service," was the reply.—"Come in."

The stranger obeyed, and waiting until the surgeon had secured the door, followed him upstairs.

"Examine me!" said he, taking off his laced coat and standing pale and upright before him.

"Unfasten your shirt," said the other, falling in with his strange humour and commencing a careful examination.

"Well?" inquired the stranger when he had finished.

"Sound as a bell and as hard as oak."

"Not likely to die suddenly?" suggested his visitor.

"No. I should think that that would be the last thing to happen to you," replied the puzzled surgeon.—"Why, what is the matter with you? Do you feel ill?"

"No; I feel hale and strong, capable of enjoying life with the best. I've never had an illness in my life. But for all that, I shall die at midnight."

"Of course," said the surgeon, somewhat provoked at all this mystery, "If you are going to kill yourself, you can speak with more authority as to the time than anybody else."

"I have no intention of committing suicide," was the stern rejoinder. "Nevertheless, at midnight my time expires. The manner of my death is unknown to me; but I shall never see the lifting of this dreadful blackness, which on my last night upon earth has fitly interposed itself between me and the heaven I have renounced."

The surgeon, listening to this strange outburst, turned to the table, and filling a glass with brandy, handed it to his extraordinary patient. "'Twill put heart into you," said he.

"But not a soul," said the other; and shuddering convulsively, drank it at a draught; then placing the glass upon the table, he drew a purse from his pocket and looked at the surgeon. "Your fee?"

"Nothing. I know not what your trouble is; but I wish much that I could help you."

"I'm past all help," said the other sadly, moving towards the door; then pausing, as the surgeon took up one of the candles to light him down, he said in irresolute tones: "As you shall judge, if you care to hear?"

"By all means," said Mostyn heartily, as, replacing the candle, he poked the fire and drew up a chair for his visitor.

"Twenty years ago," said the latter, accepting the proffered seat and leaning towards the surgeon, "my circumstances were very different from what they are now. Young and strong, I had at the death of my parents rejected the bread of dependence offered me by relatives, and full of hope, had come to London to make my fortune. It proved to be harder work than I had anticipated; and in a very short while I was reduced to the verge of starvation. One dreadful night, of which this is the twentieth anniversary, I was half-crazed with poverty and despair. For two days I had not tasted food, nor did I see the slightest prospect of obtaining any. Add to this, I was deeply in love, though unhappily the interference of those who should have been our best friends kept us apart. As I crouched shivering in the garret which served me for a lodging, I think I must have gone a little bit mad." He broke off suddenly, as though unwilling to continue, and stared gloomily at the fire.

"Well?" said the surgeon, who had been listening with much interest.

"Have you ever heard of compacts with the Evil One?" demanded the stranger.

"I have heard of such things," replied the surgeon, on whose spirits the occasion and the visitor were beginning to tell.

"I made one," said the other hoarsely. "Crouched by the empty grate, which mocked me with its cold bars and white ashes, my thought turned, as though directed by some unseen power, to all that I had heard and read of such compacts. As my mind dwelt upon it, the subject lost much of its horror, until a gentle rustling in the neighborhood of the fire drove me with quaking heart to my feet. My fears, however, were momentary, and with fierce determination I called upon my unseen visitor to lend me his awful aid. As I spoke, the sounds suddenly ceased, and a voice seemed to cry in my ear: "Write, write!" I dragged a small table into the moonlight, which struggled through the begrimed panes of the window, and with my own blood and the miserable stump of a pen, wrote out the terms of an agreement with the Prince of Darkness, possessed, as I did so, with the horrible consciousness of something in the room watching me. I vowed that if for twenty years he gave me wealth and the possession of her whom I loved better than my own life, my soul should be the forfeit. If the next morning brought change of fortune, I should take it for a sign that he had accepted my conditions. I signed it, and swooned.—When I awoke from the sleep into which the stupor had merged, the sun was shining brightly into my foul lodging, and below was a messenger who brought me news of a large fortune which had fallen to me through the death of an uncle. God forbid that my rash vow should have had aught to do with it! Since then, everything has prospered with me. I married the woman I loved. We have a large family. I have kept my secret to myself. To-night at twelve, my time expires."

"The change in your fortunes was a mere coincidence," said the surgeon uneasily.

"Another coincidence for you, then," said his visitor, whose face was now livid. "In the morning, when I awoke, the agreement which I had left on the table had disappeared."

Mostyn rosé and, taking great care not to extinguish the flames, snuffed the candles.

"As I supposed my death would be a strictly natural one," continued the stranger, "I thought I would consult a surgeon, in order to see whether my heart was sound, or whether I was to die as I have said, in a perfectly natural manner owing to its disease. A watchman whom I met directed me to your door."

"Do you live in the neighborhood?"

"No—at Westminster," was the reply. "But having put all my affairs in order, and wishing that my dear ones should be no witnesses of my death, I have been roaming about the streets to meet it there."

"Alone?" queried the wondering surgeon.

"I—hope so," said the other shuddering.

"Be guided by me," said the surgeon earnestly, "Return to your home, and forget all about this mysterious compact you fancy you have made."

His companion shook his head and turned to the door.

"Are you going to roam about in the fog again?" asked Mostyn.

"Unless you will let me stay here," said the other, glancing at him wistfully. "You are not nervous?—you do not think I shall die?"

"You will die of fright if you die at all," said the surgeon sturdily. "But stay and welcome, if you will." And to avoid the thanks of his guest, he poked the fire until the resulting blaze almost caused the candles to snuff themselves out with envy.

For some time they sat silent. The streets were now entirely deserted, and no sound save the flickering of the fire disturbed the silence of the room. Then the surgeon arose and, upon hospitable thought intent, busied himself with the little spirit-case which stood on the sideboard; and after sundry most musical gurglings from the bottle as it confided its contents to the glasses, appeared in his place again with two steaming potations and a sugar-bowl. "Cognac," said he, "with all its fiery nature subdued, now in its tranquil old age."

"Thanks," said his visitor, taking the proffered glass. "The last toast I shall drink: Long life to you." He tossed off the contents, and again lapsed into silence, while the surgeon slowly smoked his long pipe, removing it at intervals in favour of the spirit he had so highly commended.

Half an hour passed, and a neighbouring church clock slowly boomed the hour of eleven. One hour more. The surgeon glancing at his companion to see what effect the sound had upon him, saw that his eyes were closed and that he breathed heavily. Rising cautiously to his feet, he felt the pulse of the strong sinewy wrist which hung over the side of the chair, and then, returning to his seat, sat closely regarding him, not without casting certain uneasy glances into the dark corners of the room. His pipe went out; the fire burnt low, and, seen through the haze of fog and smoke, the motionless figure in the chair seemed suddenly to loom large in front of him and then to be almost obscured by darkness.

For a few seconds it seemed his eyes closed. When he opened them the fire was out, and the figure in front of him still sat in the chair, though its head had now fallen on its breast. Full of a horrible fear, he glanced hurriedly at the clock and saw that it was just upon the stroke of four, then he sprang to the side of his guest and seized the wrist nearest to him. As he did so, he started back with a wild cry of horror, for some slippery thing, darting swiftly between his feet, vanished in the gloom of a neighbouring corner.

Ere he could recover himself, the man in front of him stirred uneasily, and rising unsteadily to his feet, gazed stupidly at him. "What's the matter?" he asked at length in dazed tones.

"Matter!" shouted the still trembling surgeon. "Why, it's four hours past midnight, and you are alive and well."

With a violent start, as he remembered his position, the stranger glanced at the mantel shelf. "Four o'clock!" said he—"four o'clock! Thank God, there was no compact!"—Then another fear possessed him: "Is it—is the clock right?"

"To the minute," said the surgeon, standing gravely by with averted head, as his visitor, heedless of his presence, fell upon his knees and buried his face in his hands.

As he rose to his feet, the old church clock slowly struck the hour of four, appearing to both the listeners to do so with an emphasis as unusual as it was welcome. As the last stroke sounded, the stranger who could even now hardly realise his position, threw up the window and extended his head. The fog had disappeared, the air was crisp and clear, and the distant rumbling of the early market-carts betokened the beginning of another day.

"How came I to sleep?" he inquired, closing the window and turning to the surgeon.

"I drugged your drink. It was the only thing I could do. You were in such a strange state of alarm that you would either have died or gone mad had I not done so."

The stranger extended his hand and caught the young surgeon's in a mighty grasp. "You ran a fearful risk! Suppose that I had died. My death would have been attributed to the drug, and you would have been accused of my murder."

"I chanced it," said Mostyn simply. "There was no time for consideration."

"It has been a strange business," said the other. "What could it have been that was in my garret that night, and what could have taken the agreement?"

"Rats," said Mostyn, smiling. "One of them frightened me terribly just now; but it would not have done so if I had not been in a very excited condition. The same state of mind, perhaps, though in a milder form, that you were in on the night you wrote your agreement."

"There were rats in the room, I remember," said the stranger; "but I never once thought of them.—You have saved my reason, if not my life," and he again grasped him by the hand. "You shall not find me ungrateful."

Nor did he; for, aided by his influence, the young surgeon rose rapidly to fame and fortune, which he shared in the most liberal manner with the girl for whom his poverty had long kept him waiting.

Advice to Dairymen.

The annual report of the dairy and creamery associations of Ontario has just been issued and contains a vast amount of interesting news for farmers. The proceedings of the dairymen's associations, both in eastern and western Ontario and the cream eries association, are reported at length and many questions relating more or less intimately to dairying and stock-raising are discussed by authorities possessing special qualifications for dealing with them. The reports of inspectors and instructors will be found of special value to almost everybody engaged in agriculture. They are replete with suggestions and advice. It may be useful to farmers about to embark in dairying to know that the dairying demands that the beef element in the cows shall not be considered or placed upon a basis with dairy production; that it must always be conducted in close observance to the laws that govern motherhood: that warm barns and comfortable quarters be provided for the cows; "speak to her as you would to a lady"; that the market should be carefully studied and production equalized, and that the dairyman should become a close and economic feeder of stock. Some valuable [illegible] facture of butter. There is more butter injured while in its cream state than at any other time. This is attributed to the neglect of butter-makers to properly ripen the cream. The defects in preparing and churning the cream are too numerous to mention. Dairymen are cautioned as to the salt they use. It is satisfactory to know there are Canadian brands of salt which are up to all the requirements for the manufacture of cheese or butter. The salt chosen should be clean and free from specs, even sized in grain, easily and throughly soluble dry and white, and the grains flat rather than cube shaped. Salt which has a yellow en grimy appearance or attracts moisture through from the air to appear wet should be avoided. These and kindred subjects are ably dealt with in the report.

The Sea Serpent Sighted.

"They have seen the sea serpent again," said Jenkinson, as he looked up from his newspaper. "Yes; do you know what vessel sighted it?" "Not exactly, but it was probably a Canarder."

Bishop Fowler, of San Francisco, predicts that China will shortly retaliate upon the countries that have excluded the Chinese. We have only gone half way by placing a duty upon them. Perhaps after all that famous legislator, Mr. Bunster, was right when he urged that legislation should not be aimed directly at the Chinese, but that it should be provided that men with hair more than seven inches long could not land.

The Bishop of Worcester lately attempted to prevent a clergyman of his parish from speaking at a Baptist chapel, but the clergyman spoke for all that, and the situation excites considerable interest.

HOW TO CONTROL HIM.

Man is a Stubborn Animal, but Can be conquered by Woman.

How to control man is a nice but not a difficult problem. The average man, and it is folly to waste time on one below average intelligence and culture, is mentally and morally amenable to improvement. He is a well-meaning, pig-headed, thoughtless creature, but he is fearless, loyal and responsive to goood influence. Civilization has made man a warring animal, aggressive and domineering. It was once a measurement of physical strength between man and man, now it is a measurement of brain against brain. Men, since time began, have heard themselves and that for which they stood reviled and abused.

Men are used to opposition. Antagonism spurs them on, rouses the fight. Antagonism only hastens the evil it would divert. Men are unused to kindness Admiration tickles them and praise bewilders them. The man who goes to battle mighty in the armor of his wrath is laid low when his enemy burns incense instead of powder. The foundation of matrimonial comfort must be laid at the very beginning. Nowhere is delay so dangerous. Solomon, to whom we are indebted, never said a wiser thing than "Whose ruleth his spirit is greater than he who taketh the city." Consequently a quick and exacting or a jealous, selfish or silly woman must lose the day and put up with an irritable and indifferent husband. Praise at the right time and for the right thing is the secret of power over a man. This praise, however, must not be thrown out indiscriminately or in solid chunks. It must be opportune and delicately minced and seasoned. One does not fish for crabs with a quarter of beef. Just as much as a crab can grasp at one time is the rule.

A woman must not only hold between herself and her lord the velvet shield of silence and patience, but she must encircle his neck with a silken lasso of diplomatic speech. Being unused to all flattery and praise, he is necessarily susceptible. Don't flatter a man on his personal appearance. The moment you make him conscious of good looks you have developed the poser or the masher. Assure him tenderly, however, that, though not an Apollo, his appearance suits you. Point out to him the weakness of other men, and tell him how grateful you are for his freedom from such faults. Hold up before him your ideal as reflected in himself. It will stir his plastic soul with gratitude and develop in him a mad desire to be what you have painted him. When he occasionally drops, gets cross, refuses a reasonable request, or comes home late, don't rail or weep because you have suffered. Simply look the patient martyr, betray no feeling save disapointment in this sign of his weakness. He will be consumed with regret and scramble back to the place of the pedestal.

The Golden Rod.

The King is here, the royal Golden Rod
Marsh'lling his hosts along the dusty ways.
In rank and file upspringing from the sod
To guard the roadside through the Summer days.

Down from the Sun he comes in royal state,
His hosts their yellow plumes toss in the air,
And all the fields aglow that but so late
Stood sear and dusty, hot and brown and bare.

Long live the King to fling abroad his gold
In every field and every wayside nook!
Hedgerows a-gleaming with his wealth untold
Along the river's brink and by the brook.

May it be long ere the great conqueror, Death,
Shall touch our Golden Rod with finger's grim,
And he shall bow before his frosty breath
And leave the sullen fields bewailing him.

And yet his heir he'll leave behind, we know,
To claim his fields. So set the bells a-ring.
Now while he rules and for his heir and so,
"The King is dead!" we'll cry: "Long live the King!"

Memories.

A world of fair and golden light,
A soft refrain upon the breeze,
A little bunch of roses white,
And all around sweet melodies,
One Summer day.

A balmy noon with sunshine fair,
A few swift-passing twilight hours,
A love-word whispered on the air,
A dreamy silence o'er the flow'rs,
One Summer day.

ale roses dying ling'ringly,
A leaden sky, one bright warm tear,
And dead to all save Memory
Is that which once was passing dear
One Summer day!

O sunlight glad, O flow'rets gay,
O twitt'ring songsters blithe and free,
Though golden hours shall hold their sway,
You ne'er can give again to me
That Summer day!

Treasures of the Deep

Some Danish speculators who have purchased divers ships sunk from time to time off the coast of Jutland have been rather lucky over their purchase. Some years ago the British steamer Helen sank off the coast, being laden with copper, all of which has now been recovered by the purchasers of the wreck, and recent examination has revealed the curious fact that the vessel has become disembedded from the sand, so that now all the machinery may be recovered also. Another ship, the Russian frigate Alexander Nevsky, stranded in 1868, and whence some years ago 20,000lb. of brass were recovered, after having been long silted up by sand, has been found free in 20 feet of water, and her machinery and fixtures are now to be recovered. On Christmas Eve, 1888, the British steamer Westdale sank off Thorsminde, laden with 2,000 tons of pig-iron, and, thanks to favourable weather, nearly the whole of this cargo has been recovered, as well as the entire machinery, and much of the fittings. Owing to fine weather, the wreck speculators in Jutland have reaped a golden harvest this summer.

LEMMON ESSENCES.

How They Are Manufactured in the Island of Sicily.

With three strokes of a sharp knife the cutter peels the lemon lengthwise and lets the peel fall into a tub under the chopping-block, says a Palermo letter to the London Times. He then cuts the lemon in two and throws it from the knife into a bucket. He works with wonderful rapidity, and fills from ten to twelve tubs with peel a day, and is paid 1½ pence a tub, weighing seventy-seven pounds. His left hand and right index finger are protected with bands of osnaburgs or leather. The fresh peel is soaked in water fifteen minutes before the essence is extracted. Peel that has stood a day or two remains soaking from thirty to forty minutes that it may swell and offer a greater resistance to the sponge in his left hand, against which he presses each piece of peel two or three times—simple pressure, followed by rotary pressure. The women employed in this work run a piece of cane through their sponges to enable them to hold them more firmly. The outside of the peel is pressed against the sponge, as the oil glands are in the epicarp. The crushing of the oil cells liberates the essence therein contained. The sponge, when saturated with the essence, is squeezed into an earthen vessel in the lap.

The peel is so thoroughly pressed that not a single cell escapes. This is ascertained by holding the pressed peel to the flame of a candle. Should it neither crackle nor diminish the brilliancy of the flame the cells are empty. This process yields, besides the essence, a small quantity of juice and feccia (dregs). The separation of the essence, juice, and feccia soon takes place if the vessels are not disturbed; the oil floats on the juice and the dregs fall to the bottom. These three products derived from the peel have no affinity with each other. As the essence rises to the surface it is skimmed off, bottled, and left to settle for a few days. It is then drawn off with a glass siphon, into copper cans, which are hermetically sealed. After the essence has been expressed a small quantity of juice is pressed from the peels, which are then given to oxen or goats, or thrown on the manure heap and well rotted, or they would make too heating a fertilizer.

The yield of essence is variable. The industry is carried on five months in the year. Immature fruit contains the most oil. From November to April in the province of Messina 1,000 lemons yield about fourteen ounces of essence and several gallons of juice. The essence is so valuable that the workmen are closely watched, for they are most ingenious in secreting it about their persons. Six men work up 8,000 lemons a day; two cut off the peel, while four extract the essence. Dealers sometimes adulterate their essence with fixed oils, alcohol, or turpentine, but these mixtures may be easily detected. The essence of sour orange mixed with the essence of lemon produces an aroma similar to that of the essence of bergamot.

Kentucky Colonels.

It is somewhat hard for an outside barbarian to understand why "colonels" are so plentiful in Kentucky. In the first place Kentucky furnished a great many soldiers, both to the northern and to the southern armies, during the war and naturally some of these soldiers are sure enough colonels by rank and service. Others who were minor officers or perhaps high privates, are now dubbed colonels by way of courtesy. Then we have a very few colonels who hold over from the Mexican war, and there are other colonels of Militia like the Louisville Legion who come by their titles honestly. The Governor of Kentucky has the privilege of appointing persons on his staff with the rank of colonel. These colonels are expected to look pretty and martial at the Governor's ball and to ride horseback when the governor heads a procession. The last duty frequently gives them great pain and anxiety. There are scores of those governor-staff colonels in this proud old commonwealth.

Some executives have been more lavish than others in the distribution of these gilded honors. That kindly old gentleman Governor Luke Blackburn, M. D., was fond of creating colonels. During his term he made some sixty colonels in the city of Louisville alone, if I remember the figures correctly. There are various reasons which entitle a man to this gubernatorial compliment. Col. Will Hays is a colonel because he is such a gifted poet, while Col. Albert Dietzman was given his title by Gov. Knott because he was the greatest business manager on earth.

I trust these facts will make it somewhat clearer to the wondering northerner why colonels are so plentiful in Kentucky. But there other reasons. Many prominent citizens are honored with this complimentary title simply as a recognition of their merit by the community. Thus every man who conducts a large distillery is ipso facto a colonel; for instance, Col. John M. Atherton, or Col. Tom Sherley. Every prominent railroad official is also a colonel; for instance, Col. Milton H. Smith. Every congressman is a colonel, as Col. Asher G. Caruth. Every man with government office is a colonel, as Col. George Du Relle. Every great editor is a colonel, like Col. Henry Watterson. The chief of the police department is a de facto colonel, as Col. Wood. Then there are other gentlemen who are colonels because no other title fits them. But the law on the subject is a little vague and has never been formulated by the legislature.

If a man has been a captain in the war never call him captain; call him colonel. He is entitled to this promotion twenty-four years after the war closed. The only men proud to be called captain are the commanders of steam-boats, the captains of fire companies, the conductors of railroad trains and the officers in a Salvation Army. The title of major is comparatively rare, and, therefore, is really more of a distinction than colonel. Only prominent people who have seen actual service wear the title; for instance, Major Ed. Hughes and Major J. Washington Wann. But still, if you call a Major a colonel he is not likely to get mad at you. By the observance of these few rules I have jotted down the stranger can get along in Kentucky without committing any serious breach of etiquette.—[Louisville Post.

A new heat motor has lately been introduced which operates without valves or exhaust, using the same air over and over again at each stroke, and except for a small amount of leakage would run indefinitely by the simple application of heat and the cooling medium.

The Tables Turned.

Quick as thought he snatched up the will found by Mrs. Crawford, which was lying beside him, thrust it into the envelope, and slipped the newly discovered one safely into his pocket. Next he leant over and softly placed the envelope with its new enclosure back where it had lain. It was but the work of a second or two; Mrs. Crawford watching him the while with bated breath, half suspecting what the envelope had contained.

The somnambulist, after standing in the same position at the fireplace for some seconds longer, returned to the desk, took up the will, went again to the fireplace and held the envelope and its contents above the now burnt-out fire as though about to drop them into the flames which he imagined he saw. Then he turned hurriedly and glanced towards the door, put his hand containing the will behind him, as if wishing to hide it from the gaze of some one, stood for a minute in that position, and then slowly walked out of the room, closing the door behind him. Mr. Barnett darted after him and followed him cautiously up-stairs. He watched him until he saw him go along the corridor and enter his room in safety; after that the solicitor retired to the room below.

"Mercy on us! Did ever ony mortal see the like o' that?" This exclamation burst from the lips of Mrs. Crawford as Mr. Barnett rejoined her in the library. The good woman had recovered the use of her tongue, and was inclined to laugh at her recent fears. "I really thought it was the dead man himsel'," continued she. "Eh, but he was awfu' like him, though!—What paper was that ye took? Was it the will, and had he got it after a'?"

"Yes; it was the will. Here it is, safe and sound. He may do what he likes with the one he has got. I will take care this one does not fall into his hands again."

"But how would he come to get it, think ye?"

"That is quite easily understood, Mrs. Crawford. Mr. Monkton must have had it beside him the night he died, and it would be lying among the loose papers on the desk. His brother, hunting amongst these papers on his arrival here, had found the will, read it, and knowing that if it were destroyed or put out of the way, he himself would be heir to everything, resolved to repress it. I remember you said he seemed a little confused when you entered the room. You had probably disturbed him while perusing the will. He has had it in his possession all along. The wonder is that he has not burnt it before this. Perhaps he could not make up his mind whether to destroy it or give it up. I can understand now his non-interference with things. He knew that the game was in his own hand."

"It maun hae preyed on his mind to a terrible extent, though. That maun be what caused him to walk in his sleep."

"No doubt. He seemed to be acting over again what occurred in this room when he found the will. You saw him look towards the door, as if he had heard some one coming, and then put his hand behind him, apparently to hide the will?"

"Ay, he just looked something like that when I saw him the first day standing by the fire. I'll no forget what I have seen this night in a hurry.—Ye're sure that's the right will now?"

"Yes; there's no doubt of it this time. It is dated 5th August, 1881, exactly four months to a day later than the other."

Mr. Barnett's supposition as to the manner in which Henry Monkton had got possession of the will was quite correct. He had found it on Mr. Monkton's desk amongst the other papers; and after reading it was unable to make up his mind whether to destroy it or leave it somewhere where it might be found by Mr. Barnett. Mrs. Crawford had disturbed him in the library before he had had time to read it, hence he hastily folded it up and carried it with him to his room till he could persue it at leisure.

"Full fifty times have I resolved to destroy this will and as often something has held me back The fire is still burning. I will be tormented no longer. I will consign it to the flames."

Not allowing himself time for reflection, he crossed the room quickly to the fireplace, and reading the writing on the envelope to make himself certain that it was the one containing the will, then thrust both envelope and its contents into the heart of the fire. With glittering eyes he watched the creeping flame speedily devour them. For some seconds the whole room was brilliantly illumined, and then came darkness. The incubus was removed; the will was gone for ever!

. . . . . .

Mr. Monkton's funeral was over. Dust had been consigned to dust, to await the final resurrection. The next act in the drama was the reading of the dead man's will, an event usually anxiously looked forward to by eager prospective legatees.

In the drawing-room after the funeral were assembled Mrs. Crawford, Miss Ashley, Henry Monkton. Sir Andrew Dawson, Mrs. Crawford's son Peter, who was a clerk in the City, and Mr. Barnett. Several of the principal servants were also present. Henry Monkton, in spite of his best efforts, could not wholly conceal his agitation. Miss Ashley appeared calm and composed. She was thinking more of the kind guardain she had lost than of what he had left bhinds him. Mr. Barnett, who had the will in h i docket, now rose to speak.

"You all know, of course that it is customary for the will of a deceased person to be read immediately after the funeral," he began, fixing his eyes on Henry Monkton, who quailed under their keen glance. "But before I say more, I wish to know, supposing the principal will not to be at hand, if I may be allowed to read from the draft which I have here? Draft and principal are precisely alike in substance."

No one spoke for some seconds. No one indeed, had any interest to speak save Henry Monkton. Miss Ashley was no relation to the deceased, and Mrs. Crawford and her son were but distant connections.

Mr. Barnett was about to resume, when Henry Monkton interrupted him. "What is the good of reading from the draft!" said he. "We must have the will itself. Where is it? Why have you not got it!"

"These inquiries, Mr Monkton, you are probably in a better positon to answer than myself. Have you no idea where your brother's will is?"

The question was put so direct that Henry Monkton lost his temper. "What do you mean?" he said in an angry tone. "How should I know anything about it? It is not likely I shall gain anything by it. You would take care of that while framing it, I'll bet."

Mr. Barnett, without taking notice of this innuendo, simply said: "Then you know nothing of the will? You have not seen it?"

"No; I have not seen it, if that will satisfy you; and now, kindly proceed. I suppose the upshot of all this is that there is no will?"

"Oh, no. You are mistaken; the will is here all right enough," Mr. Barnett said, producing it. "But I have to thank you for its restoration, as well as for its disappearance; I only got it last night."

Henry Monkton, amazed and confounded at the production of the will, which he could only conclude to be a later one then that which he had burnt, had not a word to say. He was however at a loss to understand the last sentences uttered by Mr Barnett. "I do not understand you," he said at length. "I have no connection with the will whatever. If it was ever lost, it is evidently found again. Be kind enough to leave me out of the matter altogether; I know nothing about it."

"My friends," said Mr Barnett, "look at this man. He comes down here, pretending regret for the brother he has lost, and with a lying story on his lips that his brother and he, who for a very long time had not spoken to each other, had become friends again a week to-day—three days before that brother's death. He finds his brother's will in the library, reads it, and seeing that he himself is left almost nothing, and that this innocent girl here inherits everything, resolves either to destroy or conceal it. In his policy, he does not assume the mastership here; he interferes with nothing, knowing well that he can bide his time; and this for the purpose of deceiving those around him into a belief that he neither expects nor desires to gain anything by the death of his brother. He intended, no doubt, to counterfeit surprise when no will was to be found. This will which I hold in my hand is the one taken from the library by that man. Up till last night at twelve o'clock, it was in his possession, at which time it found its way into my own."

Not one of the hearers was half so much astonished at hearing this speech as was Henry Monkton. Believing that he had burnt the will which he had found, he was amazed at what he heard. But he thought he saw an opening to prove the falsity of some part at least of the solicitor's statement.

"You will all observe," said he, rising and gaining courage, "that this gentleman accuses me first of stealing my brother's will, then, apparently, of restoring it again. This restoration, according to his story, would seem to have taken place last night at midnight. At that time I was in bed and asleep; he, for aught I know, was the same. I did not see him after dinner yesterday. The whole tale is a base fabrication."

"It is true. I have a witness here,—Mrs. Crawford, will you kindly tell what we both saw last night? Perhaps you will convince him."

"Deed, I'll soon tell, and no be backward either, said Mrs. Crawford; and she proceeded to relate in detail what she had seen: the white figure entering the library; her terror when she saw, as she thought, the apparition of her dead relative; the packet which it carried in its hand; how the figure turned out after all to be Henry Monkton himself, walking in his sleep; and how Mr. Barnett had succeeded in substituting the one will for the other.

The company heard the relation of the story with amazement. As for Monkton, he was simply stricken dumb. Every one in the room turned to look at him; he was pale as death. Aware that he occasionally walked in his sleep, he had no doubt of the truth of what Mrs. Crawford had just narrated, or of the fact that he had been tricked by the solicitor. He did not speak. Foiled by himself, by his own unconscious act, he slunk out of the room, and shortly after left the house.

An Irish Gentelman.

The seats were all full and one was occupied by a rough-looking Irishman. At one of the stations a couple of well bred and intelligent looking young ladies came in to procure seats, but seeing no vacant ones were about to go into another car when Patrick rose hastily and offered them his seat with evident pleasure. "But you will have no seat for yourself," responded one of the ladies with a smile, and with truest politeness hesitating to accept it. "Never ye moind that," said the Hibernian, "yer welcome to it. I'd ride upon the cow-ketcher any toime from here till New York for a smile from such gintlemanly ladies," and retreated into the next car amid the applause of those who witnessed the incident. Perhaps the foregoing hint to many ladies will show that a trifle of politeness has often a happy effect.—[General Manager.

Too Inquisitive.

Ludlow, who is waiting for his sweetheart to dress, is being entertained by her little sister.

"What beautiful curling hair you have," says Ludlow to the little girl; "does it curl naturally?"

"No," answered the little one, frankly: "Sister Lena does it up in papers for me every night."

"And does your sister Lena do her own up in papers too?"

"No she takes them off every night and lays them on the bureau and curls them the next morning."

TREED BY A WOUNDED MOOSE.

They Are Savage Customers When They Get a Hunter at a Disadvantage.

On coming to the footprints I found it was a moose that had been along there, and had kept our track, as easier than the deep, heavy snow. I followed along, making as little noise as possible, and found that he quietly fed at every tree he could reach; then I came to where he had lain down during the storm. I knew from this that he could not be a great distance off, and I went on slowly and cautiously. He kept the track most of the time, but would, when a good feeding tree was handy, get out in the deep snow, but soon got back again. In my moccasin feet I made no noise; the signs grew fresher, and it was not long before I came to where he had rested the night before. I fancied I could scent him. So I got down on my knees and crept along, and soon had the satisfaction of hearing the breaking of branches ahead of me. I had with me my short fowling piece, loaded for a deer, with three buckshot in it. The charge would have been good for deer at short range, but not for a moose, unless I could hit his neck bone or cut his jugular. So I worked myself along on the path as noiselessly as possible, and when within a thick clump of bushes I raised up to take in the situation. I had the satisfaction of seeing the moose within easy gun shot, but not on the beaten path. He was just reaching up his long head and nose to the top of a small tree, on the branches and twigs of which he was feeding. I had my snow shoes under one arm and the gun in the other. I dropped the shoes as quickly as I could and took aim at him, but he had either scented or got sight of me, for in a flash, before I could get my gun up, he made a jump, and was out of sight in the trees.

I did not believe he would go far, so I slipped my feet into the toe straps of the snowshoes, and it was lucky for me that I did not stop to fasten them on. I followed on his track and in a short time found he had got enough of the deep snow and crust and had stopped, with his head to me and his long ears projecting forward; he did not turn to run as I advanced on him, but kept his head bobbing, so that it covered his front neck and breast. As he stood facing me I could hit nothing but his face and forehead, and I waited for him to hold his head up long enough for me to aim under, and as I thought I had him right I let go at him. He was not more than fifty yards from me, and I could see in an instant what my buckshot had done for the moose. Just as I fired he must have thrown his head down again and got the charge in his nose and face. One shot went through his nose and lodged in the jaw, giving him the toothache; the other two struck him fair in the forehead between the eyes and flattened out on the bone.

My! wasn't he mad? It didn't take him long to take in the situation. He made for me at once, giving me no time for reflection or to reload; no time to climb a tree or to get behind one. There was nothing between him and me. All I could do was to turn and run. As I turned I noticed a few rods to my right a large cedar tree that had turned up by the roots and lay with its top at an angle some ten or fifteen feet up from the snow, and was high enough at the roots for one to crawl under. I made for it. It was a race for life. As I put my hands on the tree I realized in one more jump the sharp hoofs of the moose would be on me unless I could get over the tree. I dropped my gun, put both hands on the cedar (there were no limbs near the roots) and turned a sumerset over the tree and came down all right on the other side face to the moose. It was a close shave, for one of the snowshoes struck him in the nose as I circled. As I went over the shoes dropped off. When I landed in the snow the crust gave way and let me down nearly to my armpits. Before I could get my footing the moose was on the other side of the tree, but it was too high and too wide for him to get over. He rose on his hind feet and put his forefeet down on the bark hard enough to shake the dirt off from the roots, and his sharp hoofs cut through the thick tough bark to the solid wood. He would reach over and try to bite me, and the blood from his wounded nose spurted in my face. The two shot holes in his forehead did not bleed much, but I think they gave him a headache. He could not paw the snow from the tree, and I at once began to dig a hole to crawl under if he should get over on my side. This he soon did.

Finding he could not get over or under he took the way around the root. As he went round I went under and faced him on the other side, and I had to do it quick. When I got my head up he was on the other side, his head and neck well over, every hair on his thick, short mane bristling with rage. Finding he could not get at me on that side with his four feet, he turned round tail to, just as you have seen a mule do, and for awhile he made the snow fly in my face, and some of it hit hard. Then when he had trampled the snow down so that he had a good footing, he turned and came at the tree on the full jump. He tried this twice; the second time I thought he would get over, for his fore feet hung over on my side. But I did not hurry. I found I could go under as quick as he could go over or get round, so I watched him stamp and snort and kick and shake his head until a new idea seemed to strike him. He started off for the top of the tree and began to make his way back under the tree, but the limbs were too thick and too large for him to break, and before he had time to do much I was safely out of his way and could hold on and look at his efforts to get me down, when he started for me. I got on top of the log and walked out to where the timber was thick and heavy, and so high up that he could not get at me, and I fixed myself comfortably until he should have his mad out and go off and leave me, or until my neighbors should come up with the dog.

As I told you in the start, this moose was the biggest one I had ever seen. He had ten spike horns that seemed to be very tender, for I noticed as I stood over him that when he tried the shaking process on me he would strike with his feet and shoulders and bite with his teeth, but did not use his horns. He would stand up on his hind feet and reach up, take hold of a limb and try to pull it down; his eyes rolled so that nothing but the whites could be seen his lips turned up, showing his teeth, his mouth filled with foam and blood, and, as I have said before, every hair on his body and mane bristled with anger. I tell you he was an animal not to be handled and to be avoided with care. He was not disposed to let me down in a hurry, but kept watch of every movement I made. I could see my gun standing up in the snow and my snowshoes were all right below, but I did not dare make a start for them. When the moose got tired of his useless tantrums he would lie down or stand quietly right under me, and when rested get up and try the same motions.

How long he kept me up a tree I could not tell—it seemed a long time to me—when I noticed the moose in one of his quiet moods cock his ears forward as if listening, and I thought I heard the sound of a distant "hollo" or the barking of a dog. I raised myself up from my tiresome perch, and answered back with all my breath and vim, and my call was answered back, and soon I heard the welcome baying of my old hunting dog, "Pointer," who had struck the moose trail, and was rapidly coming up. As soon as the moose heard the baying of the dog he began to be uneasy, and started off away from the sound, and before I could get down from the tree he was out of sight.

It did not take me long to get on my snow shoes and recover my gun, drop in a big load of powder and ram down a ball, and take after the moose. I knew he would not go far after the dog came up, but I was anxious to get a shot at him before he came up, so I put my best foot forward, and I soon got a sight of him, the snow being so deep and heavy he could not go fast. The dog followed the trail around the tree, and so gave me time to come up to the moose. I did not want to shoot at his body, and followed behind within gunshot or him to turn his head or give me a chance at his neck, and as he turned out to his direct course to avoid a windfall he turned his head and gave me the shot I wanted, right behind his ear. The moose was mine. The dog came running past me just as I fired, and before my neighbors came up I had the moose bled and the "muffle" cut off. "Muffle," what's that? The hunter's prize, as the tongue of the buffalo is—the soft part of the nose and lips, which, when properly cleaned, boiled and cooked is as white as snow, and is better than calves' foot jelly.—[Minneapolis Tribune.

DIED IN A POOR-HOUSE.

A Prince Who Spent His Fortune and Then Lived by Bead-Beating.

Prince Demetrius Ivanovitsch von Chiwa died a few days ago in the poor-house at Hamburg. He was once the petted son of a wealthy family, whose ancestors were undisputed rulers of the province whence he came. After receiving a military education he founded a home in Paris, where, under the second empire, he played an enviable and important role. The Empress Eugenie was among the numerous admirers of the handsome prince, who spent money as lavishly as the emperor himself. But the dissolute life which he began to lead soon robbed him of his fortune and reduced him to beggary. At first he was particular as to the rank of those from whom he borrowed, and chose only men who were his equals in birth. The late King Ludwig of Bavaria was honored oftener than any other ruler with "letters for loans," which invariably began: "Most serene and mighty cousin." The flattery was successful in opening the purse of the demented monarch during many years. But this source of income was at last cut off, and Prince von Chiwa was forced to borrow from his inferiors, giving as security the expectation of a large sum of money from the emperor of Russia. The truthlessness of such a statement was soon discovered, compelling the unfortunate nobleman to resort to other means to secure a livelihood. About ten years ago he first appeared in the neighborhood of Hamburg. The white hair, the brilliant eyes, the military bearing, and and aristocratic features still enabled him to impose upon the innocent mistresses of boarding-houses. His imposition became so frequent and his acquaintance with the prison walls so intimate that he was made finally an inmate of the poor-house to escape further persecution. There he remained until his death.

Love With Circumspection.

"And you will never, never be mine?" gasped Jim Scott, of Collinsville avenue, East St. Louis, when Sarah Underwood shook her head and told him it could not be done.

"I am sorry—very sorry," she murmured, "but it cannot—cannot be."

"But tell me why, my dear?"

"Well, the fact is, Mr. Scott, I never assume such responsibilities personally. I leave them with papa. It saves annoyance in the way of breaches of promise, you know. Papa is in the next room; I am always glad to abide his decision."

Her papa consented, and Jimmy is laying plans for housekeeping.

Very Fine Linen.

One of the most delicate exhibits of long-skilled handicraft, at the present French exhibition, is from the linen looms of Ireland, in the form of damask napkins out of a set of two dozen doilies, made for a jubilee gift to Queen Victoria by a Belfast manufacturer.

These doilies are woven from the finest linen yarn which has ever yet been spun from flax fibre. The napkin is exhibited in its unbleached state, and also in its bleached and finished condition. Upon each is a strikingly faithful delineation of the factory from which it comes. The building is photographed, as it were, in the linen web.

One of these damask doilies, about sixteen inches square, contains three thousand and sixty threads of warp and four thousand and twelve threads of woof, and these threads, joined together, would extend a distance of more than two miles. Yet the napkin seems to be the merest figment of gossamer,—a fabric of lightest gauze, a thing one might blow away with a breath.

She Obiected to Metaphor.

"What is it that keeps you busy writing so late in your study every night?" asked Mrs. Pollywog of her husband.

"I am writing the history of my life."

"I suppose you mention me in it."

"Oh, yes; I call you the sunshine of my existence."

"Do I really throw so much sunshine into your daily life?"

"I refer to you as the sunshine of my existence because you make it hot for me."

A rise in the thermometer occurred immediately.

The smokeless powder that Austria is using makes such a fearful smell that it will have to be abandoned. At a recent practice shoot several men fainted from it.

PRIZE FIGHTING IN INDIA.

How They do the Knock-Out Act in the Far East.

Colonel L. T. Pearl, of the Sixty-eighth Light Infantry, who has been stationed at Mysore, British India, for the last five years, gives the following interesting account of how a boxing tournament is carried on in India:

It is almost needless to state that our life at Mysore proved very dull. I and my fellow officer were casting about for some relief from this interminable monotony, having tired of football, cricket and other old-country sports, when we were agreeably surprised one morning by receiving a polite invitation from the Rajah of the district to attend an athletic exhibition he proposed giving the next day.

At his Highness' palace we were received in a royal manner. After partaking of a liberal repast we were conducted by him to a large gallery overlooking the arena set apart for the exhibition. After seeing us carefully bestowed, he ordered the games to commence.

The professional Indian boxers are known as jatties, a name derived from the peculiar contrivances worn by them upon the right hand. This consists of a kind of cestus made of buffalo horn with four sharp knobs upon it, resembling exaggerated knuckles. Near the little finger is a fifth projection of greater prominence and keenness than the others. It is worn upon the right hand, between the lower joints and the main knuckles, the fingers being passed through a narrow opening below the raised points, of sufficient size to receive them when the fist is doubled.

If it were placed directly over the knuckles it is very evident that a blow directed with the full force of an athletic arm would, in all probability, crush the skull of the unfortunate at whom it is aimed. Placed in the manner described the wearer is obliged to be very chary in the deliverance of a full arm blow, as the concussion would be very likely to cause dislocation of the hand. Instead, therefore, of hitting in the usual style in vogue among English and American pugilists, the blows are delivered perpendicularly, and as the knobs are sure to make a deep cut and lay the flesh open to the bone, there is never any question as to who is entitled to the claim of first blood.

THE GLADIATORS.

In a few minutes two of these men stepped into the arena. They were magnificent specimens of manhood, neither very stout nor very muscular, but with well-knit, splendidly proportioned frames. Added to this was a natural grace and gentlemanly deportment.

Bowing low to the Rajah they took their places in the center of the ring and put themselves in position for the combat. Approaching each other they held up and crossed their left arms, then, quickly stepping back, they made various motions with their hands, or, as we would express it, "sparred for an opening." They shifted their positions with great activity, watching like hawks for an opportunity to deliver a blow, never once allowing their attention to be diverted in any manner. Several passes were made with lightning like rapidity, were neatly parried, and we were greatly puzzled to know which displayed the greatest amount of science, so equally were they matched.

At length one of them, assuming the offensive, pressed his antagonist backward a few feet and, quick as flash, delivered a stunning blow on the cheek which laid it open to the bone. Suddenly the wounded athlete ducked, and, grasping his antagonist by the legs, lifted him high in the air. The latter dealt him another blow, this time upon the crown of the head, but, nothing daunted, he threw his man, and as he arose struck him a terrific blow in the face, which tumbled him over in a heap. Like a cat he recovered his feet and closed with the other. Then followed a shower of blows which so disfigured the pugilists that their faces were hardly recognizable.

Not relishing such a gory spectacle, we requested the Rajah to compel them to desist. This he did reluctantly, seemingly surprised to think that we should so soon tire of an exhibition which he doubtless considered the very acme of manly sport.

Calling the boxers to him he tossed them a handful of coins, accompanying the gift with a few words of commendation for their pluck and skill. They bowed low and murmured words of thanks to the effect that for such recompense they would willingly fight every day of their lives.

FIGHTING WITH STAVES.

A young Hindoo now appeared armed with a weapon somewhat resembling a quarter-staff, about six feet long and two inches thick, upon each end of which was a wooden ball inclosed in a quilted cotton bag. Immediately following him came three others of his race bearing staves three feet in length and about an inch and a half in thickness. At a signal from our host the play began.

The three quickly attacked the newcomer, who defended himself from the blows they aimed at him with surprising agility and adroitness. So rapid were his movements that his front was always presented to each of his antagonists, and so dexterously did he handle his weapon, which was held at the center of the shaft, that every attempt to strike him proved futile. For several moments he acted on the defensive, and thus managed to tire out the attacking parties.

Observing this, he made a sudden spring at one of them, and striking him full in the face with the end end of his staff, felled him like an ox. With a quick, backward movement he dashed the other end of the staff at the head of one of his enemies who had come up behind, and gave him a blow on the temple that leveled him to the earth as though struck with a cannon ball. The remaining one, imagining he had now an excellent chance to disable the wielder of the staff, made a wicked lunge at him, which landed in his ribs and almost took away his breath. Recovering in an instant, the latter bounded toward his antagonist, all the while swinging his weapon with tremendous velocity. The wily fellow succeeded in evading it by ducking and dodging, but at last he miscalculated his chances. Raising his head, he received the covered end of the staff on his forehead, and, staggering about for a second or two, fell prone on his back, completely beaten.

The victor received the usual nod of approbation from the Rajah, and smilingly retired with those whom he had vanquished.

Thus ended a day's sports, and after partaking of a light luncheon, we bade our host good-by and returned to our cantonment.

Mr. John T. Morse, jr., has written for the American Statesmen Series a biography of Benjamin Franklin which will appear immediately.

Screw up the Nuts.

The wood-work of farm implements will usually shrink, more or less, after the machine has been used, and wet and dried. That small amount of shrinkage will loosen the bolts, rivets and clasps. A vigilant eye should be kept on all the nuts, as often as they become loose, only a trifle, they should be tightened with a wrench. When every nut is screwed tight the parts that are held together by bolts will begin to work and wear away. Then, if neglected, a nut or two will soon work off. Wagons and pleasure carriages should be examined frequently to see if every nut is turned up tight. Nuts that hold the clasps around spring bars and axle-trees are constantly working loose, and if they are not turned up with a wrench the iron will soon begin to wear and cut the wood away. The nuts on mowers, reapers, seed-drills, cultivators, and horse hoes should be examined several times during the season, to see if every one is screwed up tight. The loss of a nut may result in damage to the amount of many dollars or even loss of human life.

A friend recently invited me to take a ride with him in his carriage. As I have trained myself all through life to see harness, and everything else, is all right, I discovered that one bolt was missing, that by which the carriage body was held to the spring bar, and the nuts that hold one of the shafts to the axletree had also worked off. I showed him how easily that one little bolt, by which the carriage was drawn, could be wrenched off by a sudden start of his spirited horse; and how easy it would be to capsize carriage and riders; jeopardizing limbs and life. One cannot be too careful by way of watching the little nuts about vehicles and implements, to see that they are kept screwed tight. Sometimes nuts will work loose soon after being turned up tightly.

When a nut is disposed to work loose frequently, turn it up reasonably tight, and then with a cold chisel cut a little gash or two across the thread of the bolt, close up to the nut. Still another way to keep nuts from working off the bolts is to cut off the bolt close to the nut, and batter the end of the bolt with a riveting hammer. The bolt need not be spread so much that the nut cannot be turned off with the wrench. When rivets are inserted in lieu of bolts, as soon as the timber shrinks they should be drawn up tight with a riveting hammer. Keep in mind the ancient maxim: "For want of a nail, the shoe was lost; for lack of a shoe, the horse was lost," and so on, infinitum; "and all for the loss of a horse-shoe nail."

Hunter and Crossley made a decided sensation on Friday night at Kingston. Mr. Hunter opened the meeting for the young people by quoting three "B's" to be shunned by big boys—billiard-room, ball-room, and bar-room. If he could he would write in letters of fire over every bar-room door, "This is the way to hell." He ridiculed cigar-smoking, intimating that it was most delightful to see a fellow puffing as he went down street; "a little fire at one end and a little fool at the other."

Farmers are too apt to forget the inconveniences their wives are subjected to in the discharge of their duties indoors. They remodel and repair their barns, stables and farm implements as often as their own convenience and profit indicate, and buy new implements in the same way. They see the importance of it as they engage in their daily avocations. Are they generally as anxious that their wives should be equally accommodating in their sphere? Are not the labours of the latter often increased 100 per cent. for the want of a better cook stove, more tin pans, a better pump, easier access to the cellar, a more suitable milk-room, more paint on the floor, new paper on the walls, scrapers and mats at the doors, a new broom, an occasional ride in the open air, suitable domestic help, etc.? Farmers and their wives, being one flesh, ought always to remember and feel that their interests are one and the same; that they are equally responsible for the prosperity, success and respectability of the family, according to their relative circumstances and capacity.

Progress of Inventions since 1845.

In the year 1845 the present owners of the Scientific American newspaper commenced its publication, and soon after established a bureau for the procuring of patents for inventions at home and foreign countries. During the year 1845 there were only 502 patents issued from the U.S. Patent Office, and the total issue from the establishment of the Patent Office, up to the end of that year, numbered only 4,347.

Up to the first of July this year there have been granted 406,413, showing that since the commencement of the publication of the Scientific American there have been issued from the U. S. Patent Office 406,166 patents, and about one third more applications have been made than have been granted, showing the ingenuity of our people to be phenomenal, and much greater than even the enormous number of patents issued indicates. Probably a good many of our readers have had business transacted through the offices of the Scientific American, in New York or Washington, and are familiar with Munn & Co.'s mode of doing business, but those who have not will be interested in knowing something about this, the oldest patent soliciting firm in this country, probably in the world, Persons visiting the offices of the Scientific American, 361 Broadway, N. Y., for the first time will be surprised, on entering the main office, to find such an extensive and elegantly equipped establishment, with its walnut counters, desks, and chairs to correspond, and its enormous safes, and such a large number of draughtsmen, specification writers, and clerks, all busy as bees, reminding one of a large banking or insurance office, with its hundred employees.

In conversation with one of the firm, who had commenced the business of soliciting patents in connection with the publication of the Scientific American, more than forty years ago, I learned that his firm had made application for patents for upward of one hundred thousand inventors in the United States, and several thousands in different foreign countries, and had filed as many cases in the Patent Office in a single month as there were patents issued during the entire first year of their business career. This gentleman had seen the Patent Office grow from a sapling to a sturdy oak, and he modestly hinted that many thought the Scientific American, with its large circulation, had performed no mean share in stimulating inventions and advancing the interests of the Patent Office. But it is not alone the patent soliciting that occupies the attention of the one hundred persons employed by Munn & Co., but a large number are engaged on the four publications issued weekly and monthly from their office, 361 Broadway, N. Y., viz.: The Scientific American, the Scientific American Supplement, the Export Edition of the Scientific American, and the Architects and Builders Edition of the Scientific American. The first two publications are issued every week, and the latter two the first of every month,

FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS OF THE ENTERPRISE.

Iona.

Oct. 7—The quarterly meeting of the Free Will Baptists will be held on Sunday next.

Mrs. Galbraith and daughter, of Dresden, spent a few days with her mother here last week.

The apple crop is far behind that of last year in this section. Pickers and packers are busy at them now.

Samuel Bell, late with A. D. Urlin at Wallacetown, is clerking for J. O. Lumley.

Mr. Beadie had several of his ribs broken the other day by the tongue of a wagon striking him.

Mrs. McTaggart and Mrs. McLandress are visiting friends in Lobo.

Mrs. F. A. Silcox is visiting friends in Chicago.

Rodney

Oct. 7.—J. J. McFie, of Highgate, is relieving M. C. R. agent W. D. Boyce, who is on a visit to his home at Windham.

W. M. Greer is erecting a new frame dwelling.

T. B. Patton has returned from a trip to Chicago and points west.

Jas. Taylor has returned home from the St. Thomas Commercial College.

West Lorne.

Oct. 8—The anniversary sermon of the I. O. F. will be preached in the Methodist church here next Sunday at 2 p.m. Revs. Scott and Carey will officiate. All neighboring courts are cordially invited to attend.

We are glad to notice that Miss Ethel Shippey, who has been confined to the house for the past few weeks, is able to be around again.

Mr. Jas. Tricker, formerly of this place, who has been living in St. Thomas, has returned here, having exchanged his city property for a farm.

Miss Kate O'Neil, of Tilbury, is home for a few days.

Mr. Colin McPherson is laid up at present, but we hope to see him around soon.

A valuable dog belonging to Mr. Alf. Partridge was poisoned lately, but whether accidentally or purposely is unknown.

Iona Station.

Messrs. Arch. and Alex. Kerr have returned from Moosomin, N. W. T. They report the average of wheat between 3 and 5 bushels per acre.

James Foster has returned from Dakota and he does not give any very encouraging news from that State.

John D. McIntyre is home from New Orleans. He is not feeling very well, having been sick with malarial fever.

Ronald McDonald is busy taking in wheat. He is paying 82 cents for 60 lbs. to the bushel wheat, but the most of it weighs 62 lbs. to the bushel, for which he pays 84 cents. He has sold several carloads of bran and shorts to the farmers.

Mrs. Jas. Brown left yesterday for Moosomin to visit her parents.

Thos. Burns is going to move his family to Windsor, where he has secured a position on the C. P. R.

Wallacetown.

The annual fair is an event of the past. Comment would be superfluous on my part, as you gave in the columns of your last week's paper an exceedingly fair account of the whole proceedings.

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church have every reason to feel gratified at their success in giving meals, having realized $118. The farmers belonging to the congregation have their thanks for so generously providing most of the eatables, enabling the Ladies' Aid to have a handsome sum to add to their bank account.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be dispensed in the Presbyterian church on Sunday. Rev. G. Sutherland, Fingal, will be present Thursday and Friday. Other clergymen on the following days.

The president and secretary of the West Elgin Fair have gone to Ridgetown.

Miss McCrank has gone to Blenheim on a visit.

"Noiseless powder" never has been much of a success. It has been known to speak louder than words when discovered on the lapel of a man's coat.

Wilson's Wild Cherry has been prepared by Archdale Wilson & Co., Wholesale Druggists, of Hamilton, for nearly twenty years, for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Croup, etc. It has no equal. Take no substitute but get the genuine with white wrappers. Sold by R. A. Kirkland.

Victoria Carbolic Salve is a wonderful healing compound for cuts, wounds, bruises, burns, scalds, boils, piles, pimples, &c.

A young Englishman, on a visit to Ireland during the shooting season asked his host if there were many of the neighboring landholders then at home. "Not a one faith," was the answer, "the country is swarming with absentees."

THE OLD RELIABLE.

In these days of humbug it is a relief to hear of something that can be depended upon. Wilson's Wild Cherry has been tested as a remedy for the cure of all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, for nearly twenty years, with such success as to earn for itself the title of The Old Reliable cure for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Asthma, Bronchitis and other affections of the respiratory system. See that you get the genuine, in white wrappers. Sold by R. A. Kirkland.

For all derangements of the Bowels, Liver and Kidneys, there is no medicine like Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It purifies the blood, tones the system, and regulates all the vital organs. Sold in large bottles at fifty cents.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

CANNOT FAIL.

Mrs. John E. Thompson, of Shelburne, P. O., writes: My two children received great benefit from Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for Diarrhœa and summer complaint. I gave it according to direction and they soon recovered. Be sure and get the genuine.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

Excellent

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Felicia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hauel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE

The Most Successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Read proof below.

STEELESVILLE, P. Q., May 3, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gentlemen.—I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure for Spavins and also in a case of lameness and Stiff Joints and found it a sure cure in every respect. I cordially recommend it to all horsemen.

Very respectfully yours,
CHARLES J. BLACKALL.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

ST. THOMAS, P. Q., April 22, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gents:—I have used a few bottles of your Kendall's Spavin Cure on my colt, which was suffering from Influenza in a very bad form, and can say that your Kendall's Spavin Cure made complete and rapid cure. I can recommend it as the best and most effective liniment I have ever handled. Kindly send me one of your valuable books entitled "A Treatise on the Horse." Yours respectfully,

L. F. WILKINSON.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

FORT ELLICE, MAN., May 10, 1889.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Gentlemen:—I always keep your Kendall's Spavin Cure and Blister on hand and they have never failed in what you state they will do. I have cured a bad case of Spavin and also two cases of Ringbone of years standing, on mares which I bought to breed from, and have not seen any signs of disease in their offspring. Yours truly,

D. J. O'KEEFFE.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors,

HOME LIFE AT SANDRINGHAM.

A Quiet Family World Behind the World of Dull and Ponderous Ceremony.

Royal personages, having all ordinary cares taken off their shoulders, though some extraordinary ones may be laid upon them, who have to take no thought for either to-day or to-morrow, but just to dress or submit to be dressed, to find every dainty meal a surprise because they have not a notion what is coming to the table, and to go through the day's round of driving out, showing themselves at public functions, and putting in an appearance at as many balls and other festivities as can be got into the day and a great part of the night, have very little opportunity of living their own lives and following their own occupations. The Prince and Princess of Wales are very much in this position, and it can hardly be said that Marlborough House is anything but a sojourning place for them during the London season, their true house being at Sandringham. The Prince loves the gay entrain of la vie joyeuse, seems never to be tired as long as there is any fun going on, can do with very little sleep, makes light of ailments when he has any and enjoys dainty meats and fine wines as well as any of the royal family, who are somewhat noted for robust appetites. This has always been a Guelph characteristic, and the late Prince Consort, with all his wonderful mental powers and high culture, was wont to sustain nature by good fare.

The Princess of Wales has never wandered in spirit from the early training and simple habits of her father's house. She likes to keep early hours when she can, which is but seldom, and if Her Royal Highness happens to be away from home when the family is at Sandringham the household knows what it is to have all lights out by half past nine P. M. and than some of the members are quite prepared for. There is something about the simple personal tastes of the Princess of Wales that reminds one of poor Queen Marie Antionette, who, amid all the dainty fare of a luxurious court never varied her own, but always ate a small piece of fowl and drank a glass of water, in which she was sometimes known to dip a plain biscuit. Possibly the beautiful lady knows the secret of good health, combined with a delicate complexion.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, as father and mother of a family, have always kept their olive branches well in hand. The Prince especially is somewhat of a disciplinarian, and his word is law to his boys and girls. The Princess has always taken the warmest interest in the education of her daughters, and both at Marlborough House and Sandringham has almost invariably been present by nine o'clock in the morning in the room where they received their music lessons. Her deafness is of course a great drawback to her own enjoyment of family life, but she is always cheerful and can hear the voices she is so accustomed without their being unduly raised.

It may almost be said that the Princess of Wales has no intimate friends—what woman in her position can have them?—and the Prince has never encouraged anything of the kind for his wife. Perhaps no one can less need intimates, for the Princess lives in the warmest affection with her own family, with her sisters, the Czarina and the Duchess of Cumberland, and with her brothers and their wives. A brisk correspondence keeps them all au courant with each others lives, and never is the Rose of Denmark so happy as when she can join her own people at Fredensborg, where, though life has its natural cares and sorrows, they cling more closely together as time goes on, and they recognize that there are no ties like the old ones. Fredensborg is but small, especially when the family is all gathered together, and the Princess of Wales and the Czarina have sometimes shared the same bedroom, and when stopping in Copenhagen, and caught in a shower, have often been seen under one umbrella. The Czar, too, is very happy among them all in little Denmark, and loves to get his young nephews and nieces about him and go on shopping expeditions with them.

It may be safely said that our Princess is as well known and as much beloved in Denmark as she is in England. The people know and see a great deal more of their royal family than we do of ours, for the circumstances of life throw them so much more together. The ladies of Copenhagen, and those who live in the pretty villas along the shores of the Sound, get quite familiar in which they say "Princess Alex" looks "so sweet." A Danish lady now in England said the other day:—"Oh, we are sure to see gray and silver gown the Princess wore at her daughter's wedding. She always wears anything pretty like that when she comes home." The interest felt about the said wedding by the loyal Danes is very warm indeed, and this lady, herself quite a young wife, carried away a few patterns of some of Princess Louise's trousseau dresses as utterly precious possessions, declaring that "everybody" would be "so delighted" to see them.

WITH THE CHARMING DRESSES

But to return to Sandringham, from whence we have wandered very far indeed. The red brick modern house, with stone facing, "built by Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, and Alexandra, his wife, in the year of our Lord 1870," occupies exactly the site of the old manor house. The furnishing is not after the latest notion—in fact, like that of Marlborough House, it is rather of the Philistine order, though curios of every sort and kind are artistically arranged and have their full "value." Still, the wheel of fashion turns tolerably fast, and we shall be landed back among the mahogany sideboards and big mirrors and rosewood tables and chairs and sofas in suites before we have thoroughly mastered the grammar of the new furnishing. The home is the setting or frame of the picture of family life, and besides that it is the centre of a very graceful and genial hospitality. The dining room is splendid, with its carved oak beams and wainscot, its solid oaken floor, with which the Turkey rugs form such harmonious tones of color, and the splendid tapestry of Spanish scenes and characters, which forms such handsome panels on the walls and was presented to the Prince of Wales by the late King of Spain, who died when life seemed fullest, before the birth of his baby son and the heir to his dominions.

At one end is a magnificent sideboard decorated with gold and silver plate and the merest glance testifies to the interest taken by Farmer George's great grandson in agricultural pursuits. But for his prize cattle he would not have so many trophies to exhibit. The great table runs the whole length of the room, and is profusely decked with flowers, and at night is lit by quantities of wax candles under pink shades. Luncheon makes its appearance punctually at one, or is served out of doors when the ladies join the shooting parties that are so frequent in autumn and winter, and dinner is at eight. Breakfast is in all great English houses a movable feast, but on the mornings of shooting days it is served at a number of small round tables, beginning at half-past nine. The antechamber to this noble dining room is sacred to the royal host in his capacity of sportsman, and boasts a large amount of ivory in the shape of gold mounted elephant's tusks, tiger skins and other trophies.

The drawing room is also a magnificent saloon, with in which giant ferns, palm and greenery are arranged to form a background to a group of lovely white marble figures, the well known "Bathing Girls" of Mme. Jerichan. Flowering plants according to the season conceal the pedestal, and in front there is a large white swan, possibly to help out the idea that their is water for the marble nymphs to bathe in. In the middle of the room is another beautiful piece of statuary, a Venus, blindfolded by Love, which stands out well above an erection of simulated rocks, kept green by judiciously planted lycopodium, with abundant clumps of fern and roses, azaleas, or whatever plants recommend themselves to the taste and judgment of the gardener. There are no pictures on the walls, but there is a big mirror over the carved mantelpiece, and most of the china in the room is delicate Dresden. The polished oak floor has some splendid Oriental rugs on it, and the window curtains are of soft chenille texture in such soft shades of color that they do not attract the eye. Of low and armchairs and comfortable sofas there are almost any number, and as many plump cushions as would furnish a Turkish divan. Most of these things are upholstered in a pale blue brocade, but it looks very homely to see that, except on special occasions, they are covered with chintz rather loosely made, and having bunches of pink roses on a white ground. The grand piano stands across one corner, and has a plush cover such as any of us might use for its unpretentiousness.

A CONSERVATORY OPENING OUT OF IT,

The cosey sitting-room where the Princess of Wales dispenses afternoon tea is well known to guests who have the privilege of being invited to Sandringham, and afternoon tea is more of a meal with the royal family than with most people, for in additon to teacakes and bread and butter and sweet cakes of many descriptions there are sandwiches and other viands very welcome to folks who have been long enough in the open air to have forgotten all about their luncheon, and would be ravenously hungry but for that oasis of food in what would otherwise be an arid waste of hours between the midday meal and the eight o'clock dinner. A few minutes before the hour strikes the Prince and Princess meet their assembled guests in the drawing room and make every one thoroughly welcome and at home, and there are probably no "jollier" dinners throughout the length and breadth of the land than those eaten round their hospitable board.

Prince Albert Victor, or "Eddie," as he is called at home, gives himself none of the airs and graces, nor is he referred to in the family as a young man whose future metier is presumably that of King of England. Perhaps his mother has a little penchant for her first born—most mothers have—but the Prince, "who wears his manhood hale and green," is "a sober man among his boys," and though he likes them to go out shooting with him and generally to share his outdoor pursuits does not countenance the utter liberty and independence so often affected by the youth of the period while still in his father's house. The Queen would like to see her eldest grandson married, and, as the late German Emperor William put it, "the succession assured," and the young man has been on pleasant, familiar terms with Princess May of Teck that very often "lightly ripen into thoughts of love."

Prince George is very much of a good humored, rollicking boy, a typical British tar at heart, up to all sorts of fun and frolic, and not only on the best of good terms with his elder brother, but also with his mother and sisters. It is wonderful how proud boys are of a pretty mother, and the young royals are no exceptions to the rule. Prince George's matrimonial projects have scarcely been discussed as yet, for it is not the custom in England to marry the younger before the elder, at all events among princes, unless there is some very cogent reason for doing so.

The uneventful yet happy and diversified lives of the three young daughters of the Prince and Princess of Wales can hardly be considered separately, for the sisters have been very loving to each other, though the eldest, Princess Louise, of course, was the first to become her mother's right hand and companion. The trio were educated by Mlle. Vautier and Fraulein Nodel, and, as befits the daughters of our Royal House, they have learned to be proficient in several languages at once, and will consequently be at their ease in every European Court. They are also very well read, not only in English but in French and German literature, and have decided musical talent and artistic proclivities. The Princess of Wales, like every other right minded English lady at the head of a household, has diligently taken her family to church—at Sandringham to the parish church; in London, not only to the Chapel, Royal, St. James, but also to Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair, of which the Rev. Teignmouth Shore is the incumbent, and it was he who was selected to instruct the Princesses in the principles of the Christian faith. Much attention has always been paid to the physical development of the three girls; they can fence, and generally make use of the muscles of their healthy, well grown frames; they also enjoy a romp among themselves, and are not ignorant of the pleasures of a blister fight in the seclusion of a bedroom they have recently shared together—at all events in Marlborough House. They thoroughly enjoy a country life, and, like their mother, have the cool hands that can make firm butter, which they have continually done in the dairy at Sandringham home farm, where the Princess of Wales has her pet Alderneys and all the dainties, and furniture her heart can desire.

The English are beginning to awake to a realizing sense of the advantages to be derived from lighting their river steamboats with electricity.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

How a Man Feels When a Swordsman Cuts Apples on His Head.

I once let a professional swordsman cut apples in two while I held them on my head and on the palm of my haud, and I'll never do it again, says a writer in a contemporary. The experience is too thrilling for the plain citizen who is not military in his tastes. I was with a show when the regular assistant of the swordsman went on a strike. The swordsman was in a dreadful frame as he thought of disappointing the crowd of spectators that night. He came behind the scenes at rehearsal and called for a volunteer. "I'll give $25 to the man who'll hold the apple for me," said he. No one volunteered, and I daringly put in my oar. "I'll do it if you give me a rehearsal." "No rehearsal," said he emphatically, "it will shatter your nerves so that you'll tremble like an aspen leaf when you come out at the performance."

So I went out when night came, the upper part of my body covered with a thin silk vest. It was cold, anyway, and I trembled abominably. He saw it, but said nothing to me. I held the apple on my extended hand, and it shook. I could feel it shaking, and felt ashamed, but I couldn't control the nervousness. I turned away my head; he made a few rapid feints, and I knew by the applause that the apple had fallen. I didn't feel the blade at all as it cut through. Then I knelt down and he put another apple on my neck. I knew this was really dangerous, for if his hand slipped he might decapitate me. I shut my eyes. In a second, which seemed an hour to me, I felt a thin cold line touch my neck, and there was more applause.

"In that instant I thought of Mme. Roland and the guillotine, and came near fainting. He told me to get up, and I followed him, feeling rather dazed, to the dressing-room. I thought I must be cut, the touch of the steel had been so plainly felt, but the looking glasss showed that there was not a mark on me. But I was awfully pale. The next night we go a regular man to hold the apple."

Man and Adder in a Well.

NEW LONDON, Oct. 10.—Orlando Brown of Waterford had been mowing roadside weeds, and athirst he went to drink at a wayside well. The well was dank and dark and slippery, and overgrown with tares, and as Orlando stooped to let his bucket down a stupid adder thrust its head from a crevice in the stone curbing and hissed at him. He stepped aside to seize a club, his feet flew from beneath him, and he slid down the shaft taking the adder along with him. The water closed over him with hissing bubbles and a plaintive plunk. Orlando wasn't gone long. He came up spluttering and wrathful, and the sight of the adder, which had betrayed him into the well, gliding across the water into the wall, did not aid to appease his anger. He made a grasp for the serpent but he didn't get him, and thoughtfully he climbed out of the well. He was so ireful that he went away without drinking.

His Waterford neighbors have had a great deal of sport over Orlando's exploit, but he replies to their gibes: "Well, I holed the derned beast, didn't I? and that's more than you would have done."

Two Kinds of Suspense.

A murderer under sentence of death had a number of influential friends who were exerting themselves to secure a respite from the Governor. The Sheriff believed in capital punishment, but he was a charitably disposed man and had been doing a good deal of running around for his doomed guest. One morning he returned from such a trip and went to the prisoner.

"Well," said the man eagerly, "what did the Governor say?"

"My dear sir, he hasn't said anything yet; he wants time to think."

"Great heavens, man! This suspense is terrible!" exclaimed the criminal, dramatically.

"Don't mention it," responded the Sheriff in a cheerful tone; "it ain't anything to what it will be if the Governor does'n't interfere."

Hints for Bald-Headed Women.

Now as to the treatment for incipient baldness, thin spots, and so forth. This is what an eminent physician said to a gentleman who consulted him for the first-named trouble:—

"Have you been accustomed to wash your head in soapy water?" asked the doctor.

"Yes, every morning," was the reply.

"Well, that is the cause of this bald place. Stop washing and begin brushing your hair. Use a bristle brush for fifteen minutes every morning and night. You may not notice any improvement for a year, perhaps not for two, but be assured you will have a fine crop of hair and never grow bald if you pursue this course."

A Russian inventor has introduced a curious and ingenious anemograph or recording anemometer, in which the same record indicates at the same time both the velocity and the direction of the wind.

A young woman of Southport puts the most deliberate method of suicide on record. She walked into the water and sat down. After a while she lay down, and the tide rose and carried her off.

The Afghan Ameer's method of vengeance on his rebel prisoners is pretty highly developed. One batch, numbering 300, were put to death three a day. One of the trio was always hanged dressed in yellow and green, another was dressed in black and brown from a gun, and the third was dressed in red and cut up with a sword.

Until the Shah went to Antwerp His Majesty had never heard a barrel organ. It so happened that an organ grinder stopped under the Royal windows and began to drone out dismally an air from the "Traviata." The Shah came to the window and listened with delight. The entire repertoire of the music mill was gone through, and, as a supreme and Asiatic sign of satisfaction, a gold piece of 100 fr. dropped at the feet of the organ-grinder. He immediately ran off to relate his good fortune to his companions in the trade—goodness knows there are enough of them at Antwerp! The next day they all assembled before the palace, and a discordant tempest of sound began. The "Cloches de Corneville" and the "Mascotte" struggled for the supremacy, and the "Brabançonne" tried in vain to accord with "En revenant de la Revue." But this time no more gold! The servants at the palace had to make a regular sortie against the disappointed musicians.

The Palace of Woods.

Not the most showy, but certainly one of the most interesting, features of the present exhibition at Paris is the Palais de Bois et Forets,—palace of woods and forests,—a large building with spacious salons, galleries, and balconies, built entirely of wood, in undressed logs, sticks and fagots, yet none the less very tastefully constructed, and not without considerable architectural beauty. The walls and ceilings are panelled with various sticks of the wood, showing different colored barks,—birch, beech, elm, pine, poplar, for example, producing pretty artistic effects.

Every kind of tree and shrub which grows in France, or in any of her colonies, is here conspicuously represented. If a parent, or teacher, desired to give his children a few days of most effective and pleasant instruction in trees and woods, here is the ideal place, for the entire structure appears to have been arranged for the especial purpose of giving lessons in tree botany.

The columns, beams and posts are each of a single log; and in every case the common name of the tree, together with its botanical name and the age of the specimen, are given on a tag attached to it. Moreover, there are specimens of the leaf, the flower, the seed, cone, or nut, easily accessible for examination; and examples of all the known parasites, insects and borers which infest and live upon it.

The different sizes to which the tree attains, at different ages, are illustrated by specimen sticks and logs. The forms of the branches and twigs are shown by numerous examples.

Next follow the uses to which the tree is put, as timber, or in manufactures, and the grain and fibre of the wood are exhibited, along with the tools best adapted for working it. Products from the fibre and the wood pulp, as seen in paper, or vegetable silk, linen, etc., are exhibited; also the extracts from the sap, the gums and resins which naturally exude from the tree, and the alkaloids which may be prepared from them, for medical uses.

Then follow the gnarls and excrescences which sometimes grow, abnormally, on each species of tree, and such examples as have been found of petrifactions of the wood.

Finally there are given examples of the kind of soil in which the tree flourishes best, and the geological or rock formation upon which it is found growing.

In a word, the "Palace of Woods," might very aptly be termed a palace for easy and agreeable botanical instruction.

Emperor and Lancer.

Busy men, accustomed to do business in a brisk, common-sense fashion, find official red tape so vexatious that it is no wonder they invent stories to make it ridiculous. The French have one of these, which is perhaps as good as any. When Napoleon III. was emperor, so the narrative runs, he sat one day at Longchamps, sleepily reviewing his army. Regiment after regiment passed, but nothing seemed to stir the emperor from his lethargy. At last, however, as a regiment of dragoons rode by, he suddenly fixed his attention upon the front rank.

"What is that lancer doing there among the dragoons?" he asked his chief of staff.

The chief of staff looked at the lancer, and galloped away to the division commander, while the emperor sank back into his customary impassiveness.

"The emperor demands to know why that lancer is among the dragoons?"

The general looked shocked; and called out sharply to the Colonel of the regiment:

"Colonel, what have you got that lancer among your men for?"

The colonel was dumfounded, and appealed to the commandant of the squadron: "What's that lancer doing here?"

"I don't know, sir," exclaimed the commandant of the squadron; and he called the captain.

"Look here, captain, why have you got that rascally lancer in your company?"

The captain pleaded ignorance. "I'll ask the lieutenant," he said.

By this time the inquiries began to be garnished with oaths and abuse. The lieutenant, apparently surprised beyond expression at the presence of the lancer, hurled question and imprecation all at once at the head of the orderly sergeant.

"What in the world is that lancer here for?"

Then the orderly sergeant rode up to the lancer himself, as if he were about to cut him through to his saddle.

"You villain! What are you doing here among the dragoons? The emperor is after you. You'll be shot at the very least.

"But, sergeant," the soldier stammered, "you know I've permuted, sir!"

Permutation in the army means transfer, by authority, from one corps to another.

"Permuted, eh?" said the sergeant, "Well, that won't help you now."

The orderly sergeant went to the lieutenant with the report that the man had permuted; the lieutenant told the captain, and the captain the commandant of the squadron, and the commandant of the squadron the colonel, and the colonel the general, and the general the chief of staff; and the chief of staff came to the emperor.

"Sire," he began, "the lancer has permuted."

"What lancer?"

"The lancer whom your majesty noted among the dragoons."

"Oh yes! He's permuted, eh!" said the emperor, sleepily. "Well, he looked like a good man. Let him have a medal!"

The Pope.

Will the Pope transport himself and the Vatican to England? It is said, on what may be taken as reliable authority, that this question, which to a large number of people will come in the light of a thunderbolt, is really being seriously discussed in influential Rome Catholic circles in London. Hitherto Spain has been the country spoken of as a new place of residence in the case of removal from Rome but it is understood that Senor Sagasta is by no means infatuated with the proposal. His Holiness is naturally disinclined to leave the mainland of Europe, but if Spain is impossible it is clear that France, and Germany, and Austria, and Russia, are each of them out of the question. And then what is there left but Great Britain?

A French woman invented one of the most original methods of dealing with a refractory child ever revealed to the public. She fastened on the hat of her eight-year old daughter, who had been naughty, a placard inscribed with the words, "Mademoiselle is a thief and a liar," and walked her through the streets. It took a policeman to rescue the lady from the mobbing of an indignant crowd.

Father Damien.

Whence came the inspiration that could move
To such grand sacrifice—such Christ-like love?

Not for the bauble, Fame,
Strove he whose honored name

Earth's bravest, noblest, reverent speak,
Still less for golden treasure did he seek;

But sought a kingdom fair,
And fadeless riches rare.

Strong, not to be denied, the call
Within his breast, "turn thou from all

The joys, rewards, this life can give
And, for my sake, 'mong lepers live.

'Mid scenes of dark despair, of death in life;
Of horrors unconceived; of brutal strife;

Shut out from all earth's happiness,
Shut in with utter hopelessness.

Lift, here and there, an atom of their load,
Guide these lost sheep into the homeward road."

His youth, health, talents, manly hopes, were weighed,
And all were freely on the altar laid.

Himself he chose to give—
With these he dared to live.

Shared their deep wretchedness,
Lived, died, their lot to bless.

"Than this hath no man greater love";
Few such exalted measure prove.

Our admiration of his lofty deed,
To emulation of his life should lead.

To heaven's highest heights attained,
Count not his loss—this he has gained.

HARRIET N. SWANWICK.

A Musical Family.

Of all the inflictions and punishments sore
We suffer from Adam the first,
A musical family living next door
Is certainly one of the worst.

Of course, they imagine their victims enjoy
The noises they make with a zest,
Because, if they didn't, they wouldn't destroy
A neighborhood's comfort and rest

One plays on a fiddle the dismallest tones,
Another one tortures a flute,
And one on a cornet belabors and groans
Till people get ready to shoot.

And—yes, on a banjo—now coming in style,
A maiden (alas! for her taste)
Goes "pinkety-pank," with as happy a smile
As if she was being embraced.

A tin-pan piano is pounded with might
By somebody screeching alway,
And all through the day and way into the night
These amateurs crazily play.

Their discords are more than a mortal can stand
When practicising one at a time,
But when they're a Wagner grand orchestra band
The nuisance is simply sublime.

A musical (?) family certainly should
An island have all to themselves,
Or torture their instruments out in the wood
To frighten mosquitoes and elves.

Art Strides.

Another immense stride has been made in the art. In the old days it was necessary to wait for the smoke to clear off before repeating a volley in order to take clear and effective aim. It is not so any longer. A perfectly smokeless power has been discovered and been tested with most satisfactory results at the manœuvers of the German army in Hanover. Emperor William in person, commanding the Tenth Corps, assumed a defensive position behind Elze, on the Alfeld railway. His corps used smokeless powder. Eight Schumann iron-clad towers armed with machine guns figured in the fight, the plan of which involved the retreat of the Seventh Corps firing the ordinary powder. The Berlin Post publishes a military report on the manœuvers, which is conclusive as to the necessity of smokeless powder henceforth for artillery and infantry. The corps using the smokeless powder got within 200 yards of the enemy without the latter being able to determine the distance. The latter were often taken on the flank and were unable to guess whence the fire came. If it had been a real battle, they would have been annihilated. The reports dilate upon the demoralizing and bewildering effect of the smokeless fire of the infantry upon their opponents and also refer to the increased certainty of aim arising from the absence of smoke, especially in the case of artillery.

The Gambling Mania.

A curious phase of the gambling mania is that furnished by the places at Calcutta and Bombay in India, where persons gather during the rainy season of the year to bet upon the amount of rain that will fall. In these cities the rainfall is not so heavy or continuous as in other parts of the peninsula, but the showers are frequent enough to afford ample scope for the gambling industry. The gambling establishments are arranged in this way: "On the roof of the gambling exchange is a ditch which holds eight sures of water. If a rain cloud bursts and the fall exceeds that amount, the overflow is discharged into the room in the building below. This decides the bets, those who wagered that it would rain winning. The bets are entered by the proprietor in a book, the commission being 5 per cent., and all transactions are settled at ten o'clock the following morning. A case of default is hardly ever known, as the gamblers are mostly men of means, who frequently bet thousands of rupees upon a single wager." If Professor Wiggins would visit India he might break the bank. But then, again, he might not.

Hudson's Bay is the hunting ground of numerous American whalers and sealers. The whales are plentiful and are easily caught. Nine of them fill a three hundred ton schooner. It is in the spring that the seals are captured. In order to get them some of the Americans winter at Marble Island, an island situated well within our district of Keewatin. Canadians will not grudge the Americans a few whales or seals. But really, if Behring's Sea is a closed sea how can Hudson's Bay be open?

DESPERATE DEEDS.

Detective's Story of the Terrible Crimes Committed by the Dacoits.

The "Indian Planters' Gazette" publishes the following as the narrative of a detective:—"Abdoola Khan was a notorious dacoit leader, and a fugitive from justice. He had a large following, all men of courage and daring like himself. The head quarters of his band was situated on the slope of a range of hills, well within the borders of an independent Native State. Here he was perfectly secure and free from molestation so long as he was permitted to occupy his mountain home. Abdoola's band made periodical raids into British territory and always returned laden with loot. I was received in a most amicable manner by the whole band, for my strength and activity made me a valuable acquisition to the fraternity. The chief himself undertook to initiate me, and teach me the stratagems of the profession, which, however, I was called on to put in practice before my tuition had progressed very far. But I was an apt pupil and soon learned the business. Preparations had been going on for about a month previous to my joining the dacoits to in British territory about eight miles across the border. The head man of the village had either been privately informed of, or suspected our designs, and had in consequence induced the authorities to strengthen a police outpost on our line of route. Our chief had heard of this counter-move, and a council of war was held to devise some stratagem to checkmate the police. I suggested that one of our number—the lightest man of the band, should be tied down upon a charpoy (cot) under the pretense of having hydrophobia and carried on our shoulders past the police outpost. The arms of the party could be concealed by the same means, as the police would be very careful in approaching a man suffering from such a terrible affliction. The stratagem was agreed to without a single dissenting voice, and I rose at once in the estimation of the chief and his men. I was known amongst the fraternity ever after as the 'ingenuity man.' The night selected for the adventure arrived. As arranged, one of the party was lashed down in a charpoy with all the arms, and covered over with a sutranjee, which was also tied down. This done the cot was hoisted on the shoulders of four men and borne off, followed by the remainder of the band disguised as cultivators. On nearing the police outpost we were challenged by the man on duty. In reply to his inquiries we told him that the man in the charpoy was

LOOT A PROSPEROUS VILLAGE

SUFFERING FROM HYDROPHOBIA,

and that we were taking him to a celebrated jogee who resided in a village some distance off (the one, in fact, we were going to loot!) to have him cured of the distemper. Here the patient became very violent and barked like a dog, and we were told to get him out of the way as speedily as possible. So we continued our journey without further molestation till we approached the doomed village, when we were again challenged by the watchman. We told him the same story as we had told at the police outpost, and asked the way to the house of the jogee. As the watchman turned to lead the way one of our men threw a gumcha over his head from behind and gagged him. Two others tied him up so that he could neither speak nor move. When all the arrangements necessary to ensure the success of the enterprise were completed, we commenced operations on the premises of the wealthiest man in the village—the money-lender or banker. We had just succeeded in forcing the door when he made his appearance, and seeing a number of armed men, rightly concluded the nature of our business. So without more ado he dropped on his knees and bowing his head till his face touched the ground begged to assure my lords that they were welcome to his poor tenement, and as the night was far advanced supposed the travellers would like something to eat and drink and a place to rest till morning." But his honied speech produced very little impression on a band of dacoits. For our chief immediately ordered the banker to be gagged while two men were sent into the zenana to keep the women quiet. In a moment the whole house, though breaking into an uproar, quieted down so that

YOU COULD HEAR A PIN DROP.

"Now," said the chief, addressing the money-lender, "we are not come here to beg for what you choose to give us, but to take all that we can find worth carrying away." "My lord," replied the money-lender, touching the ground again with his forehead, "I'm a very poor man, have mercy on me!" "Put on the thumbscrew," said the chief to one of his men. "I see we'll have to squeeze it out of him." The instruments of torture were accordingly produced, but the very sight of them had the desired effect. The money-lender, looking at the chief appealingly, begged to be released from his bonds and he would lead their lordships to where he kept his treasure. His request was complied with; and he took us into an inner room, and opening a large iron box brought out about three thousand rupees' worth of gold and silver ornaments which had been deposited with him as security of money lent. "Take this," he said to the chief, pointing to the treasure, "I'm a ruined man! That's all I have in the world!" and he emphasised the words by calling upon all his gods to bear witness that he spoke the truth. "It won't do," returned the chief, "we want money as well as jewellery." The banker joined his hands and pleaded for mercy, alleging that all his money was lent out on interest. The chief shook his head with a gesture of incredulity and called for the thumb-screws. This argument was irresistible. The money-lender yielded rather than submit to an acquaintance with

THE INSTRUMENTS OF TORTURE

and pointed out where the rupees were buried. The treasure was unearthed in a jiffy and taken possession of. We did not remain to count it, but judging by its weight we concluded the amount was not under four thousand rupees. 'Come boys,' said the chief, addressing his men, 'time flies,' and there is lots of work yet before us. We have pretty well cleared out our old friend the banker, and so will bid him a very good night.' Then turning to the money-lender the chief continued: 'Sorry, old fellow, that other engagements prevent us accepting your kind hospitality, but you may serve us in another way, don't make a row over this matter and rouse your neighbours. Remember we are masters of the village.' The victim reluctantly promised compliance, and groaning inwardly for the loss of his property, began to beat his forehead with his hands after the manner of Orientals when suffering from extreme mental agony. So we proceeded to the next most important house in the village, the liquor vendor. These two men had managed to enrich themselves on the poverty and dissipation of their neighbors, and their spoliation, therefore, excited little sympathy in the village. We met with no opposition or remonstrance in breaking into the house of the spirit vendor, and was not a little surprised to find, after exploring the premises, that all the men had mysteriously disappeared. The women were discovered huddled together in a corner crying, and in their terror were holding on to one another like grim death. We succeeded after a little persuasion in pacifying them. Then our chief inquired where the men were. One of the women, with apparent reluctance, pointed to a man

PERCHED ON A CROSS BEAM OF THE ROOF.

He was had down in a jiffy. But on being asked to point out where the money was kept, assured the chief that he did not belong to the house, but was himself a burglar who had come to steal, and on hearing the dacoits breaking open the door had mounted to the cross beam of the roof in hopes of escaping detection. Of course nobody believed this story, and the chief ordered an application of the thumbscrews until he was made to change his tune. But the poor fellow fainted from the effects of the torture, still persisting that he was a stranger to the place. It then occurred to our chief that probably the man might be telling the truth, and a closer search was made of the premises, which resulted in the discovery of the real Simon Pure. He was concealed under the bed. When dragged out of his hiding-place, more dead than alive with terror, and ordered to disgorge his ill-gotten wealth, he did so without a murmur. He had been an eye witness of the torture the burglar had suffered, and rightly concluded that resistance would be useless. Before leaving the house our chief presented the liquor vendor's wife with a gold bangle, in admiration of her tact and ingenuity in trying to shield her husband. She had seen the burglar mount to his hiding place when the noise of armed men were heard forcing open the door, and, notwithstanding the terror and sense of danger to which she must have been reduced, had the presence of mind in a critical moment, to take advantage of the circumstance to save her husband. The incident produced a lasting impression on every member of our band. As it was now past 3 a. m. we thought it

ADVISABLE TO BE MAKING TRACKS.

So, collecting our men, we made for the spot where the charpoy was concealed. Here a council of war was held to decide how we were to return to our mountain home without exciting the suspicion of the frontier police. I was called upon to exercise my ingenuity once more. But just at this particular juncture, what with the excitement of the last three hours, I felt myself quite out of form for devising stratagems, and said so. The chief suggested a smoke would clear my brain, and ordered one of the men to prepare the huble-buble. I accordingly sat down to smoke and think at the same time. A few whiffs set me all right again, so I get my wits to work and soon devised a means of escape from our present dilemma. This is what I suggested. The lightest man of the company to mount the charpoy as before—the arms and loot to be well packed around him, and the whole covered over with a sutranjee and tied down. When challenged by the outpost, pretend that the man, afflicted with hydrophobia, died before reaching the residence of the jogee, and that, being pious Hindoos, we were taking the body to the bank of a holy stream in the Rajah's territory for cremation. This story will keep the inquisitive police from approaching the cot for fear of pollution, and they will hurry us away. If we told the public guardians of life and property that the jogee effected a cure they might be curious enough to want to see the man and possibly examine him. This would not do. But a corpse they will not approach on any consideration. The plan was agreed to and proved a success. When all was ready for a start the charpoy was

HOISTED ON THE SHOULDERS OF FOUR MEN

and the funeral procession moved off. Two men in advance of the pretended corpse and the remainder in rear calling out, Hurry Bole! Hurry Bole! Ram Sunkur Hurry Bole! As anticipated, the man on duty at the police outpost, on learning the nature of the procession, ordered us to keep as far away from the thana as possible. This we did, but not without a pretended grumble at being turned off the Queen's highway and out of our direct road. Having passed the British outposts we were never questioned again during the remainder of our journey. On reaching our mountain home at dawn and comparing notes, the result of the night's adventure was found little short of fifteen thousand rupees! 'Not a bad haul for one cast, boys!' our chief remarked, as he stood contemplating the pile of treasure, 'and now let us from labour to refreshment.' Never were orders more promptly and heartily complied with. Hitherto, the excitement and success of the venture had made us forget the wants of nature, and now that it was over we felt both hungry and fatigued. So after a hearty meal, hastily prepared, most of us retired to rest for the remainder of the day. By evening exaggerated accounts of the dacoity had spread, like wild fire, all over the district. Two European police superintendents had been deputed to the spot to make inquiries. The watchman of the village, who had been gagged and tied up, told the sahibs that the dacoits numbered over one hundred armed men. This exaggerated story threw the police for a time completely off the scent, as Abdoola's Khan's band was known to not exceed 25 all told. Then commenced a searching investigation as to how the dacoits had entered and left the village. It was rightly concluded that such a large body of men could not travel far through a thickly populated district without having been seen or heard of by some one. The watchmen of the different villages for miles around were questioned, but no information was elicited."

Aerial navigation has reached this surprising stage of progress: At the late Parisian "Congress" on the use of balloons and carrier pigeons in time of war it was resolved that "aeronauts in time of war should be treated as belligerents if they were soldiers, but as spies if they were really spies." M. Janssens, of the Academy of Sciences expressed his belief that in the next century the problem of aerial navigation would be solved.

NOT HIS BOY.

But the Rude Youngster Got His Just Deserts.

"William!" he shouted, as he grasped the boy by the coat collar, "William, get up this instant and give your seat to the lady. Great heavens! that I should live to see a boy of mine sitting down and whistling while a lady is standing! What will your poor, old mother say when I tell her this? William," he continued, sadly and yet sternly, "I am going to teach you right here and now never to disgrace my name again."

Still holding the boy by the collar he backed up against the door frame and elevated one broad knee. The boy had just time to gasp, "I ain't no boy of yours!" when he found himself lying face downward across that knee, in the very vortex and maelstrom of one of the grandest and most symmetrical spankings ever administered in this or any other age. Those who witnessed the exhibition of agility and science were of the opinion that the old gentleman was well preserved for his years.

The performance was thorough, but it was also rapid. It was over before the boy had succeeded in repeating his original statement three times, in three different keys. Then the old gentleman sat the boy on the floor; and the conductor, who was evidently a man of deliberation, thought it time to interfere.

"Here!" he said, "you can't lick that boy if he ain't no relation to you."

"I never seen him before!" said the boy, between gasps.

"Great Scott!" cried the old gentleman, "does the young rascal deny his own father?"

Then he took out his glasses and oked at the boy, and his expression of astonishment was beautiful to see.

"Why, bless me!" he exclaimed, "that's so! Why, I thought it was my youngest boy, William. Dear me! I hope I haven't inconvenienced you, young sir. You'll excuse me, won't you?"

The boy said something that sounded like "police."

"Want to go to the police station" asked the old gentleman, benevolently, "Been carried beyond the street, eh? Well, we'll rectify that mistake at once." Grasping the boy once more by the collar, he stepped out on the platform, lifted him lightly over the rear bulwarks, and dropped him. The conductor smiled and rang a merry peal on his strap, the driver whipped up, the car flew rapidly up Broadway, the boy stood in the street, weeping and used language shocking in one so young, until he was nearly run over by a truck. And when the old gentleman stepped back into the car all the men touched their hats to him and six ladies arose and quarrelled with each other for the previlege of giving him a seat.

New York has its evictions as well as Ireland. A report says three weeks ago a family moved into the tenement No. 1,636 Avenue B. On Saturday they were dispossessed for non-payment of rent. With the baby very ill with cholera infantum and the others suffering from whooping cough they were huddled out on the sidewalk, where with their aged grandmother they prepared to spend the night. The police found them and took them to the station. The family's few belongings, a couple of barrels, a three-legged stool, a table, etc., remained on the sidewalk a whole day. Can it be that the Americans who sympathize with the Irish tenants have no sympathy for their own Thief Arrested.

The news was received with the utmost satisfaction by the community that he had terrorized; but the arrest of a disease that is stealing away a loved and valued life, is an achievement that should inspire heartfelt gratitude. Chilliness, cold extremities, depressed spirits, and extremely miserable sensations, with pale, wan features, are the results of disordered kidneys and liver. Arrest the cause at once by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a purely vegetable detective, that will ferret out and capture the most subtle lung or blood disorder. Druggists.

London's Lady Guide Association is successful.

When fragile woman sighs, deploring
The charms that quickly fade away,
What power, the bloom of health restoring,
Can check the progress of decay?
The only aids that's worth attention,
For pains and ills of such description,
Thousands of women gladly mention—
'Tis "Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

The price of this royal remedy, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, is but one dollar. Specific for all those chronic ailments and weaknesses peculiar to women. The only medicine for such maladies, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction or money refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper. Large bottles $1. Six for $5.

If you want to known something of the reel life of the Scotch people go to one of their dances.

Is This What Ails You?

Do you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, watery, and inflamed; ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking, or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; voice changed and nasal twang; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; is there a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility? If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Nasal Catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, a reward of $500 for a case of this disease which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists, at only 50 cents.

Joy Indescribable.

Day and night irritation, pain, burning kidney trouble, etc., made life to me miser, able. For the past four months have used St. Leon Mineral Water. It cured me quickly. Have travelled much and have tried many things, but have found nothing in the world to equal St. Leon. The flow of high spirits and joy it brings is indescribable.

It is said that the secret of the production of cheap aluminum has been lost by the sudden death of the proprietor of the works, Mr. Seymour. He used some unknown chemical at a certain moment of the action of the fusing and separation. All the employees were excluded from the room when he went through the mysterious process, and anxiety is expressed lest the secret died with him.

BRONCHITIS CURED.

After spending Ten Winters South, was Cured by Scott's Emulsion.

146 Centre St., New York, June 25th, 1888.

The Winter after the great fire in Chicago I contracted Bronchial affections, and since then have been obliged to spend nearly every Winter South. Last November was advised to try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites and to my surprise was relieved at once, and by continuing its use three months was entirely cured, gained flesh and strength and was able to stand even the Blizzard and attend to business every day. Dan. McAlpine has returned from Hutchinson, Kansas, where he has been for the past 7 months. He looks as though the climate of Kansas agreed with him well. He reports that building operations were booming there this summer, and that D. McLaws, an old resident of Dutton, is doing well in that line.

Wm. Hill, who was discharged frum jail, the grand jury finding "no bill" against him on a charge of committing an unnatural offence, has instructed his solicitor, D. J. Donahue, to institute an action against Walter Travers, of Talbotville, for $2,000 damages for false arrest and malicious prosecution.

A meeting of committees from the Aldborough council and Dutton high school board was held at West Lorne on Saturday last to try and arrange an amicable settlement of the difficulty between the two bodies in reference to the payment of the school rate for 1889. After discussion a committee was appointed to secure legal advice as to laying the points in dispute before the courts for settlement.

John W. Gibb, a liveryman of Amherstburg, offers $25 for the capture and conviction of John Decker. Decker hired a horse and saddle from Gibb on September 25th and has not returned it. He is supposed to be the same man who, on September 24, obtained a horse and rig from Lyon's livery, Detroit, and no trace of it could be found until Friday when Constable Harris obtained it in a bush near Edgar.

Miss Kate E. Clifford, sister of Mrs. F. A. Humpidge, died near Fingal, on Saturday, of inflammation. She will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, many residents of Dutton being amongst the number. The funeral took place on Tuesday and was largely attended by the relatives and friends of the deceased from London, Dutton and other places. The bereaved family have our sympathy in their sad affliction.

J. Carson, veterinary surgeon, of St. Thomas, entered his "Bay Nellie" at the West Elgin Fair at Wallacetown and when returning from the grounds in company with J. R. Lindsay, of Talbotville, the rig collided with another rig belonging to Mr. McCallum. Both Carson and Lindsay were thrown over the vehicle and were badly cut about the head and face. Mr. Carson was picked up unconscious. Dr. Ling was summoned and found that beyond the cut mentioned he had escaped injury.

There have been 98 appeals entered against the Provincial voters' list of the township of Dunwich. The court will sit at Dutton on Wednesday, Oct. 23. For the revision of the Dominion lists, the revising officer has thus far arranged the courts: Yarmouth, at Yarmouth Centre, on Monday, 18th; Malahide, at Summer's Corners, S. S. 13, on Wednesday, 20th; Bayham, at Straffordville, on Thursday, 21st; Vienna, at Vienna, on Friday, 22nd; Port Stanley, Saturday, 23rd; City of St. Thomas, Monday, 25th; Aylmer, Tuesday 26th; Yarmouth, at Sparta, Wednesday, 27th. Other courts will be announced as they are arranged for.

In the issue of the Chicago America for Oct. 3 Mr. Andrew Lang has a delicious paper entitled "With the Author's Compliments." It has a literary flavor that would have delighted the soul of Charles Lamb himself. Mr. Lang says: "Canvas-back ducks, Greek gems, rare first editions (as long as they are not the gift of the author), I can receive without regret and acknowledge without ingratitude," but in the case of a book with the compliments of the author, "one feels as if a friendly physician had conferred on him a box of pills." The cartoons, by Thomas Nast and his associates, in this number of America are especially clever.

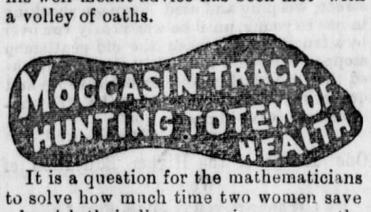
The storage batteries, with which two Michigan Central cars were equipped some time ago for electric lighting, are being removed and electricity will no longer illuminate those cars, at least for some time to come. The light was quite satisfactory to the Michigan Central and the passengers, but the company controlling the batteries are short of funds and will discontinue for the present in order to reduce expenses. The Michigan Central will try the Carburetter lamps, which have been adopted by the Pennsylvania system. The lamps use gasoline in a form which renders it safe and which gives a brilliant and steady light.

The services in connection with the fall communion of Knox church, Dutton, promise to be particularly interesting. Rev. Rob't. McIntyre, recently settled in Delaware, will preach on Thursday morning, Oct. 17th, at 11 o'clock and in the evening at 8 o'clock. On the following Saturday morning Mr. Alex. Wilson, brother of the pastor, will preach at 11 o'clock. On Sunday the Rev. W. H. W. Boyle, of St. Thomas, will preach at 11 o'clock and assist at the communion, also preaching in the evening. On the following Monday Rev. D. Kelso, of Wallacetown, will preach at 11 o'clock. The ordinance of baptism will be administered Saturday morning.

Elgin Fall Assizes.

The case of Meek vs. Township of Yarmouth occupied the attention of the Assize Court Friday afternoon and until noon Saturday, when his Lordship reserved decision.

Two-thirds of the cases were traversed until next court, Judge Rose having to open Essex Assizes at Sandwich on Monday. It seems too bad that at almost every court held in Elgin one-half the cases are never reached, and litigants are put to a great deal of unnecessary expense attending with witnesses. Two weeks should be set apart for the Spring sittings, as there is invariably a long calendar.



The suit of McPherson vs. Colter was argued, and judgment reserved.

Mr. Ashton Fletcher, the Crown Counsel, was highly complimented by the grand jury.

The following is a list of the cases postponed:—Sellers vs. Dunwich; W. Davis vs. Geo. McColl; Otto Jansen vs. J. M. Hamilton; James Hilliary vs. T. Kirby; Southwestern Loan Co. vs. Smith et al; J. Green vs. Geo. Draper; Rae vs. Hough; Neilson vs. Hough, and Lynchbury vs. Dunn.

The costs of the court were $1,064.50, distributed as follows:—Grand jurors, $195.10; petit jurors, $350; witnesses, $177.25; constables, $132.25.

Four or five boys between the ages of 14 and 18, residing in Port Stanley, style themselves the "Jesse James" gang. Each is armed with a revolver or pistol and daily they are shooting at marks here and there all through the village. At night they repair to an old barn at the edge of the village and, with a revolver on each corner of the table, indulge in card playing. Saturday one of the gang, named Going, was loading his revolver in front of Ead's store when it went off, the bullet passing through the fleshy part of the leg of Wm. Balkwill, Mr. Ead's clerk, who was standing by. Luckily it did not strike a vital part. Dr. Fothersill attended to the injury, which, no doubt, will lay the boy up for some time. After this surely some attempt will be made to prevent such parties from carrying firearms. Previous to this, when the lads have been spoken to by the local constable, his well-meant advice has been met with a volley of oaths.

It is a question for the mathematicians to solve how much time two women save who risk their lives running across the street in front of an omnibus, and then have to stand and wait for the other woman who was afraid to run.

The Safest

AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

THE BRAIN (from a photograph.)
It Healthy Condition. With Paresis Lesions.

There are many well known men confined in our Asylums who but a short time ago were prominent among our business and social circles.

Why are they there?

Paresis!

Did it come on at once?

Not at all. It was a gradual but positive growth. They overtaxed nature. The drain on their vitality, their nerve powers, their brain tissue, was too great, and they gradually but surely sank under it. The things they did to bring this sad end about are precisely the same things that are being done by thousands of men and women to-day. It is not necessary to name them. They all end disastrously unless checked or regulated.

Prof. Phelps, of Dartmouth College, knew this fully when he began his experiments which resulted in the discovery of the wonderful Paine's Celery Compound. He realized that paresis (consumption of the brain) was our great National weakness. He knew that the brain and nervous system must be fortified to meet the great strains which modern life bring upon it. He saw that men were becoming debilitated and women weakened by the pressure and demands of life, and he sought and discovered the remedy Paine's Celery Compound, if rightly taken, will renew the brain and build up nerve tissues as fast as they become exhausted. It is not a narcotic. It contains no drugs, no nostrums. It is perfectly pure. It is absolutely harmless. The high character of its discoverer guarantees this, and the indorsement of the medical and chemical professions prove it.

THE RODNEY FAIR.

A SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITION IN SPITE OF THE RAINY WEATHER.

The 35th annual exhibition of the Aldborough Branch Agricultural Society, held at Rodney on Saturday last was successful beyond the most sanguine expectations of the management. The fine weather during the first part of the week no doubt induced the farmers to make extensive preparation and they determined to come out in spite of the rain which fell during the early part of the day. The exhibits were all placed at an early hour, and the judging was got through with in short order, considering the amount of work to be done, everything being attended to in a systematic manner.

The exhibits in all classes were large, live stock being especially well represented. Two of exhibits in cattle attracted considerable attention owing to the fact that stock of their breeds had never before been shown here. These were the Hereford bull, shown by Thos. Wooldridge, of Dutton, and the Jersey bull, shown by E, J. Yorke, of Wardsville, both well-known breeders of thoroughbred stock. Space will not permit us to give as full a report of the exhibition as it deserves.

NOTES.

The prize list will be found in full in a supplement to this week's ENTERPRISE.

The Aldborough Branch Agricultural Society enjoys the distinction of getting up the best exhibition of any one township in Ontario. The officers know how to push it along.

The Foresters' band, of St. Thomas, furnished excellent music during the day.

The convenience of the train arrangements assisted materially in swelling the crowd of visitors.

The crowd of fakirs at this exhibition numbered about 50 and they fleeced without mercy the verdant and unsuspecting individuals who always profess to be too poor when asked to subscribe for the local paper that would warn them against such frauds and gambling devices. The old adage, "A fool and his money are soon parted," will suit these people very well. It would be more to the credit of the fair managers, however, if they would promptly run all fakirs out of town, instead of taking a paltry sum of money in exchange for the privilege of preying upon the green ones.

One farmer was too sharp for a pickpocket who tried to relieve him of his pile, compelling the scoundrel to fork over a ten dollar bill to save himself from prosecution.

Mrs. and Miss Macleod, formerly of Glencoe, left Edinburg on the 30th ult., on a tour round the world. They sailed with Mr. John Macleod in the steamer "Uranus," recently built for the firm of Macleod & Co., of Manilla, to which place they go direct via the Suez Canal and Red Sea. They purpose remaining a year with the family in Manila, returning by Japan and San Francisco across the American continent, calling at Glencoe, on their way to New York, en route for Europe again.

Sabbath School Association.

The Sabbath School Association convened in the First Methodist church, St. Thomas, Monday at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Claris in the chair.

It was decided to form one association for both the city of St. Thomas and Elgin Co., to be known as the County of Elgin Sunday School Association. The constitution was taken up article by article and adopted.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—President, Rev. W. H. Claris, Frome; secretary, Rev. R. Hamilton, Fingal; assistant-sectetaries, Messrs. S. Silcox and M. Leeson; treasurer, John Campbell, St. Thomas. The township presidents are as follows:—Aldboro', Rev. C. T. Scott; Dunwich, Rev. E. Middleton; Southwold, Rev. R. D. Hamilton; Yarmouth, Mr. Josiah Long; Malahide, Rev. Sowerby; Dorchester, Rev. J. Brown, Bayham, A. N. Gray; St. Thomas, W. E. Youmans. Executive committee—W. E. Youmans, S. Silcox, W. Rothwell, B. A.

The remainder of the session was spent in receiving reports from the county.

EVENING SESSION.

The session opened by devotional exercises, the choir of the church leading the singing. Mr. Claris then took up the subject for "Parental example and training." He stated the tendency of the times was for the parents to entrust the training of their children to Sunday school teachers, and in doing this they were neglecting their duty sadly. Parents sare not released from the responsibility of training by the Sunday school. The father is mostly responsible for the correct bringing up of the children. Parents, he said, should never show sympathy for a wayward child, in the presence of that child, when being disciplined by one of the parents for some misconduct. Parents should have some definite idea of what they wish their children to be, and then follow it out strictly. Training is not restraining. Correctness is necessary, but continual correction loses its force; there must be instruction besides. Teach the child to have faith in God, to love Him and not to regard Him as a tyrant. Also teach the child obedience; if necessary to secure this, use the rod. Show the child that you must be obeyed.

A discussion followed on ihe subject, in which quite a number took part.

Rev. M. Knowles took up the subject of "Vital steps in the teaching process." The speaker said that the Sunday School work was one of the most important movements of the age. The first step in the teaching process is the one the teacher takes himself. He must begin with himself before he can teach others. He must have a general knowledge of the Bible. The teacher must have a cultured heart. He must be able to accommodate himself to the capacity of the pupil. The second step is developing the scholar. First gain the confidence of the scholar and then he can lead them, and secondly secure the attention of the class.

Rev. Mr. Hamilton, of Fingal, was appointed delegate to the Provincial Association.

It was moved by Mr. Courtney that the County of Elgin Association raise the sum of fifty dollars for the next meeting of the Provincial Association; seconded by Mr. Scarlet.—Carried.

Local Legal.

McIntyre vs. Hockin. This action was brought by the plaintifi John Arthur McIntyre to recover from the defendants, Messrs. Hockin & Pool, merchants, Dutton, $200 for wrongful dismissal from their employment as a merchant's clerk. The action first came on for trial at the sittings of the County Court in June, 1888, before a jury, when the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for $166,17. The defendant being dissatiafied with the verdict, applied to the court judge for a new trial, who after bearing argument of counsel reserved judgment and subsequently on the 25th of March, 1889, gave judgment setting aside the findings of the jury, and directing a new trial to be had between the parties. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal and the case was argued before Justices Burton, Osler and Maclennan on September 5th last, when judgment was reserved. Judgment was given on Saturday last, dismissing the appeal of the plaintiff with costs. P. Moss, Q. C., and Macdougall & Robertson for the plaintiff (applicant.) James M. Glenn for the defendant (respondents).

The famous Balmoral choir, of Glasgow, Scotland, will visit London, December 10th.

Engineer Waters, of the M. C. R., had his foot badly crushed while running between Windham and Waterford Thursday.

Alfred Tolhurst and wife were badly injured by being struck by a train while crossing the M. C. R. near Tilsonburg on Monday.

The bankrupt stock of Wm. McIntosh, of Aylmer, valued at $7,742.06, was sold to James Leslie, of that place, at 66½ cents on the dollar.

Plans are out for fourteen new stations on the line of the C. P. R. between London and Windsor. The buildings are to be completed by January.

A STOLEN IDENTITY.

CHAPTER. I

Arlon Stassart was seated at his breakfast-table, absorbed in meditation. The coffee steamed unheeded in his cup, and the toast stood neglected in the rack, but he paid little attention to either. The room was silent, save for the low murmur of the Thames, as it flowed lazily along in the sunshine of a summer's morning, at the foot of the pleasant little garden that sloped imperceptibly down towards its bank. It was a comfortable room, with easy, low-built lounges, one or two well arranged bookcases, and a few etchings of great value, framed simply in oak, and disclosing vistas of the type of landscape so often found in Norfolk and Lincolnshire fens—long reaches of still water, with beds of silent rushes standing solemnly in their lonely watch, while here and there a waterfowl sails slowly across a cloudy sky. There were two photographs of rare excellence, representing faces of a dreamy Oriental type of feminine beauty, while the rest of the room was filled artistically with fans, plates, and embroidered hangings, that had evidently been the choice of a connoisseur.

But somehow the room, even on this bright summer morning, gave a somewhat sombre impression. There was but little colour in it, and that little was of a subdued and neutral tint. There seemed to be an indefinable feeling of underlying sadness displayed in the choice of the decorations, harmonising in a subtle way with the expression upon the face of its occupant. Yet nothing in particular could be pointed to as the cause of this generally sombre effect. Only all the ornaments seemed to have been chosen by one who unconsciously was possessed of a quiet melancholy that affected, unnoticed, all his surroundings. Arlon Stassart sighed almost imperceptibly, and glanced through the window at the shimmer of the river sparkled silently before him. Then looked again at an open letter that lay beside his plate, and read for the hundredth time the casual remark of the friend who had written to him: "By the way, do you remember the girl that came up to Oxford last summer term with the Kingsfords? She is going to be married to our friend Kingsford next month; he has just come back from South Africa, and they are going to settle down in London—somewhere in Kensington, I think."

Did he remember? What a mockery the question was! He smiled in a grim way to himself, as he thought of the unconscious irony of his friend Dundas's remark. Did he remember the girl who came with the Kingsfords? His thoughts wandered back to the bright summer days a year ago, the long afternoons on the river with her, while their boat slept peacefully under the shade of the willows, and the warm wind played a moment with her hair; the soft, cool summer evenings in some old college garden with her, while the colored lanterns cast fairy shadows from the trees, and snatches of music came floating toward them from the grey and crumbling hall; the dreamy delight of a valse, and the stroll through the cloisters afterwards, with the young moon sending strange shafts of light through the carved windows and sculptured pinnacles above them. Did he remember?

He had known a year before that she was going to become Kingsford's wife. Had she not told him so herself, in her quiet, calm way, that summer afternoon when he asked, and lost, all that seemed worth having in the world? He smiled bitterly to himself as he thought of that day; of his passionate pleading for her love, and her look of pitying sorrow when she told him she was betrothed already—that, indeed, she would be married as soon as her lover came back to England. Was it not absurd, he asked himself, that a man should be dying of a broken heart in the nineteenth century? Surely we had got over all this sort of thing in the present age. It was almost ridiculous!

But the remarkable fact remained, nevertheless, that Arlon Stassart, a young man of good prospects and intelligence, expecting shortly to be called to the Bar, seemed likely to come to an untimely end owing to misplaced affection. His friends had reasoned with him, expostulated with him, sought to distract him by various amusements, but to no avail. His soul refused to be comforted, and he had sunk into a solitary existence in a little cottage on the Thames, where he still pretended to be reading law, and only rarely appeared in society of any kind.

And here was another remarkable fact: Gladys Meredythe and Stanton Kingsford were actually marrying simply and solely for love. Both were openly and confessedly in love one with the other. Now this, in the present age, was really a remarkable coincidence, and yet, nevertheless, was an undoubted fact. And it helped to increase the already acute anguish felt by the unfortunate Arlon Stassart. His thoughts were becoming almost too painful for him to bear, and he determined to seek some distraction.

It was a bright summer's day; the river was cool and enticing. He looked at his watch; it was still early. "I will run into town and fetch that funny little Japanese fellow, Kotaro, for a day on the river with me," he remarked to himself. "He is sure to be interesting, and will not, at least, be as commonplace as the average British youth."

The "little Japanese fellow," be it known, was one Kotaro, whom he had known at Oxford, and who was now, like himself, reading for the Bar, but, unlike Stassart, inhabited chambers in the Middle Temple, and did some work. Stassart rang his bell, and a page boy, with a face like a cherub from a mediæval picture, came to the door.

"Raphael," said his master, "get the dog-cart ready in five minutes. I am going into town."

In five minutes the boy with a face like a cherub reappeared, and announced that the cart was ready. Stassart drove rapidly into London: found Kotaro poring over Roman law, and carried him off, not by any means against his will, to Richmond. There he directed Raphael to take the horse and cart back home, and to have dinner ready at eight o'clock.

"By the way, Kotaro, of course you will stay the night with me?" he said. "I have a spare room always ready, you know."

"I shall be delighted," said the Japanese.

"Very well. Raphael, you will see to it. You may go now. Now, Kotaro, let's find my boat, and we'll have a good row up the river."

Stassart kept a pretty little dingey at Richmond; it was pushed out from the boat-house, and the two young men stepped into it, Stassart taking the oars, while Kotaro settled himself, in an attitude of repose, amid the cushions in the stern.

Kotaro was aware of his friend's unhappy attachment, and had often tried to cheer his mind by Oriental reflections upon feminine beauty, the folly of confining one's attentions to one girl out of so many thousands, and the general insignificance of all womankind. But Stassart refused to be comforted by thoughts like these, and Kotaro, in his indolent Eastern way, was slightly troubled in his mind. To-day however, he was possessed with a great idea.

"My friend Stassart," he remarked, during the afternoon, while they were lying lazily on the bank under a shady tree, having tied up the boat just in front of them, "I know a doctor of my own country who could cure you of your melancholy and your love."

Stassart looked up with a mournful but half-amused smile. He liked Kotaro, chiefly because of his habit of prolonged silence which, in this distance had only been broken after an hour of apparently deep reflection, and also because of his quiet certainty upon various disputed points.

"Supposing he could, which I doubt, I hardly feel inclined to go to Japan upon an errand of that kind," he answered.

"You need not go to Japan," said Kotaro.

"Where, then, is this wondeful doctor?" asked Stassart.

"In London," replied the Japanese, "not very far from our own house. You shall see him this evening."

"But I don't want to see him," said Stassart. "He could not do me any good. The only person who could cure me," he remarked, with a sigh, "is Gladys Meredythe."

Whereupon the Japanese student smiled in a dreamy way, and said the remarkable words:

"If that is so, she herself shall cure you. The Mysterious Secret can cause even that to happen."

"If that is so," answered Stassart, incredulously, "the Mysterious Secret, as you call your doctor, will overcome the impossible."

"He can overcome it," said Kotaro, with much certainty. "You shall see him to-night. I will send him a message."

"If you like," replied Stassart carelessly, thinking that Kotaro was rather amusing with his air of quiet assurance.

The afternoon wore on, until at length it was time to return. When the two men reached Arlon's house in time for dinner, and were seated at their meal, Kotaro said to Raphael, who was waiting on table:

"Raphael, did not some one leave a message for your master this afternoon?"

The cherub-faced boy, without a blush, said "No sir;" the fact being that a message had been left, but he had forgotten to give it, and did not wish to betray himself.

The Japanese looked at the page, and said to him, "Raphael, you do not speak the truth. Tell your master who came this afternoon."

The cherub looked unhappy; then, braving it out, answered: "Please, sir, a foreign-lookin' man come this afternoon, and sez to me: 'Tell your master,' he sez, 'that Amida Sama will come to him this evening, and will cure him.' And I sez to him, 'Go 'long,' being as how I thought e' was makin' fun of you, sir. And I thought it was not worth while tellin' you, sir."

"You young imp!" said his master; "what business have you to think anything at all? I'll thrash you myself one of these days, if you are not more careful. Bring in the coffee."

When the boy had left the room, he asked Kotaro, "How was it the mysterious doctor happened to send that message this afternoon?"

"Because I sent him word this afternoon;" was the answer.

"But you did not telegraph or send a note, for you were with me all the time,' said his host, with a look of surprise.

"No, I did not," said Kotaro. "I sent him a thought-message. It was more simple."

"Do you mean——?" began Stassart, in a surprised tone.

"I mean that, when two people know each other as well as the doctor and myself we can communicate our thoughts by a mere effort of the will. Why, even your Western thinkers" (this with deep sarcasm) "are beginning to comprehend the possibility of what they call telegraphy. Have you not read "Phantoms of the living?"

"Yes," replied Stassart; "I think it is nonsense."

"So it is," replied Kotaro. "At least mostly; for the inquirers know not the principles and elements of the science they are trying to learn. But still they have begun to discover that mind is not bounded by matter; that is something."

At this moment Raphael announced that "Some one wished to see Mr. Stassart." The boy could not give his name, being unable to pronounce it.

"It is the doctor," said Kotaro.

"Bring him in here," said Stassart, "and fetch some more coffee and a bottle of Chartreuse."

The doctor appeared. He was apparently a man of middle age, unobtrusively dressed in European garments, with nothing striking in his appearance except his eyes, which had a fixed watching look about them, as if they were always waiting for some vision.

He said a few words in Japanese to Kotaro, who then introduced him to Arlon Stassart as Amida Sama. After a few formal preliminary remarks, the doctor said to Stassart:

"Well, Kotaro tells me you are not happy. Let me see what is the matter with you. Let me examine you."

Mechanically Arlon held out his hand for the doctor to feel his pulse. Amida Sama smiled, and pushed it away, remarking, "As if I could not tell without that! All I want you to do is to look at me."

Stassart did so, and their eyes met. The young man suddenly felt conscious of a strange sensation. He seemed altogether out of time and space. He felt as if he were in a great void, with nothing near him except the presence of the Japanese doctor, whose eyes seemed calm and fixed, as if in contemplation. He became conscious—if one may use a paradox—that he was rapidly becoming unconscious, and could make no effort to recover himself.

The spell was broken by the doctor saying in his quiet voice: "It is enough. I understand. You are in love, and your cure can only be effected by the woman you love."

Stassart laughed, saying, "If that is all you can do, doctor, I could have spared you the trouble of coming to me. What you say is true; but if she has refused to cure me, what can you do?"

The doctor looked at him gravely. "You do not know me yet," he said. "Come to my house."

Stassart hesitated at first; then decided to go. His curiosity was roused, and he wanted to see the abode of this doctor, with his strange confidence and assurance of manner. He called Raphael, told him to shut up the house and go to bed; then, taking his latch-key, he went out in the summer's evening with the two Japanese by his side.

CHAPTER II.

They walked on in silence till the doctor's house was reached. It was an old-fashioned building, of the Elizabethan type, but not remarkable in any way in its appearance. It was rather irregularly built, and a long wing on the west side seemed as if it had been constructed more recently than the other portion. The whole house was concealed from prying eyes by a high paling, inside which the thickly planted trees and shrubs formed a protecting screen of no small size. The doctor touched an electric knob outside the house, and the door immediately flew open, and the three men walked in. No servant was to be seen, and the door shut again of its own accord. They proceeded up an old oak staircase, under the light of a huge Chinese lantern that cast a crimson glow over their faces, and after passing through a corridor came apparently to a blank wall. The doctor pressed his finger against some spot which Stassart could not quite see, and, as before, a door flew open, admitted them, and then shut firmly of its own accord. Stassart now found himself in a lofty room, the ceiling and walls of which were decorated in Oriental arabesques, and which was lighted by lamps of carved brass-work of great rarity. Along the walls were hung some Japanese paper pictures inscribed with mystic characters, and apparently representing passages in the life of Buddha. The heavy and richly embroidered hangings and the soft matting that lay at their feet prevented any sound from being heard either inside or outside the room. But there was nothing specially remarkable in the room itself. It was fitted up in Eastern style, and that was all. There was only one thing that struck Stassart as noticeable, and that was the intense heat, which at first almost prevent him from breathing, but afterwards seemed to fill him with extraordinary vitality and exhilaration, so that his senses felt keener, and his whole being seemed to participate more eagerly in the enjoyment of existence. Amida Sama pointed to a divan, and begged Stassart and Kotaro to be seated. "I hope," he remarked to Stassart, "that you do not find the room too hot?"

"Not now," said Stassart; "but at first I confess I thought it stifling. But why do you keep up this temperature?"

"Because it is necessary for my experiments," answered the doctor, "and also because it stimulates the perceptions and increases the vitality of the mental faculties." Seeing that Stassart looked at him inquiringly, he went on: "Heat, you already know, is the main principle of life, and is necessary to a high order of existence. The great difficulty is always to procure heat, without at the same time causing it to be oppressive. Here, in England, you are not accustomed to what may be called pure heat: it is always mixed with moisture, or is rendered sultry by clouds or the thickness of the air. But in this room the air is rarified and heated at the same time; for I require the air to be pure in order that the disembodied soul may live, and not suffer from being dissociated from the body. For it is on this subject that I am now making experiments."

"What do you mean?" exclaimed Stassart, wonderingly, while even Kotaro expressed some surprise.

"I mean this," answered Amida Sama quietly: "that I have discovered a means of completely dissociating the soul from the body, so that it may be entirely unfettered by the bonds of the flesh."

"But that is impossible!" said Stassart. "That can only occur at death."

The doctor smiled. "If you will trust me entirely," he said—"mind, I say entirely and unreservedly—I think I can prove it to you in your own case."

Stassart's curiosity was thoroughly roused by the doctor's manner. Besides, the doctor had given no explanation of his method, and spoke about it as if he were communicating the most ordinary experiment in physical science. All this helped to impress the young man. But still he hesitated.

"But, Doctor, I do not know——" he began.

"As yet, no," was the answer; "nor can I tell you till I have seen first the nature of your soul. For with some, experiment is easy and safe—they respond readily to my commands; with others I can act only with difficulty and danger. But tell me," he said, as if changing the subject, "would you like to see the one you love?"

"Yes," answered the young man, eagerly, "it is my dearest wish. But I do not even know whether she is in London or in the country."

"That matters not," replied Amida Sama. "Look at me, and think only of her."

Stassart leaned back on the divan, and gazed fixedly into the doctor's eyes. Almost immediately he felt the strange sensation he had experienced when they first met. Again he seemed to be in a great empty space, with only those calm eyes gazing into his. He became for a moment unconscious and then——

Then his heart gave a great leap of joy, as he saw Gladys Meredythe. For he was looking into a room in an old country house, where the open windows, twined with trailing ivy, looked out on to a garden sleeping in the silence of a summer night. At one of the windows that opened out into the garden stood a young girl with her face upturned watching the stars. A smile of sweet contentment was on her lips as she murmured softly the refrain of a love song:

True love from o'er the sea,
Come back to me, come back to me!
True love from o'er the sea,
Come back, and make this loving heart thy home.

Then clasping her hands with a quick motion of pleasure, she exclaimed:

"Only a week to-day and I shall see him!"

Stassart felt as he looked at her a keen sensation of jealousy. He saw the expression of love on her face, and knew it was not for him. He almost wished the Japanese doctor had not been the means of recalling to his mind all his love and all his hopelessness. Then he felt his whole being dominated by the one idea: "If only she were mine! mine alone, with no one else to claim her!" Then again he seemed to become unconscious. For the fraction of a second he thought he saw the Japanese doctor watching a sleeping figure, while Kotaro looked on with awe struck interest. But he was not sure that it was not some passing fancy. When he came to himself he was lying on the divan, still gazing into the eyes of Amida Sama, and Kotaro was smoking a curiously-wrought hookah, whose fumes spread a subtle Eastern perfume through the pure air.

"Ah!" exclaimed Amida Sama, carelessly, as if Stassart had just quitted the room, "you have come back, then?"

"Well, Doctor," answered the young man, rather surprised, "I did not know I had been away. Have I been dreaming?"

"No, you have not been away; but your soul for a few moments left your body. Did I not tell you that I had discovered the means wherby this was rendered possible? You were sceptical, and I took a simple means of proving to you the truth of my assertion. Only I confess to you that I did not leave your soul entirely free, but recalled it before you were out of the sphere of my influence."

"What strange power, then, do you possess, that you are thus able to control the souls of men?" asked Stassart, in an awe-struck tone.

"I will explain to you," answered the Japanese doctor; "but do not think that it is anything very extraordinary. I confess I have gone a step further than some of my predecessors; but that is all. I am not going to claim for myself any magical powers. What I have done and what I have discovered is only a little more than some of your own inquirers into occult science have succeeded in producing. You have heard already," he continued, smiling a little at the wondering look upon the young man's face, "of the apparently mysterious results produced by what is called mesmerism, hypnotism, thought-reading, thought-transference, telepathy—call it by what name you will, the underlying principle is in all cases the same; that is to say, these effects are produced by a knowledge of the power of psychical over physical forces. The laws which govern their action are as yet imperfectly understood, although some of your savants can even now produce marvellous effects; but what is quite certain is that the soul and the body, the psychical and the physical sides of man, so closely interwoven in most conditions of our daily life, can under certain circumstances be partly, or even totally, dissociated, and can be made to act separately. You know that the body of a mesmeric patient is so dissociated from his actual self that you can beat it, stab it, and subject it to most acute pain, without the "self" of the patient perceiving or feeling it in the least. And why? Because the soul of the patient is under the complete control of the operator, who can give to it any personality he wishes. He can turn a devotee into a reveller, or a criminal into a saint, and the body will not be aware of any difference. Well, now, if this can be carried further, why can we not so totally dissociate body and soul that a man's self—his ego, his psychical side—can be made quite free, while his body lies like a useless skin that a butterfly has cast off as it emerges from the chrysalis? Some men have been able to do this in their own case: they have so worn out and suppressed the body by continual fastings, penances, and contemplations that at length their spirit has departed from it for a time, and has seen unutterable things. Think you that all the stories of the trances are false and empty fabrications? They may not in every case be true, but they point to the one great central fact—the dissociation of the soul and body."

The doctor paused a moment, as if to see whether Stassart was following his remarks, and, seeing that he was listening with the utmost attention, proceeded:

"I soon became able in my own case to dissociate my soul from its corporeal envelope, though it caused me many a fast and vigil, many a sore and bitter penance. I got myself into the state of the fakirs, the yonghis, the devotees of Buddha, who sit for years in one fixed constrained position, with hardly enough to keep themselves alive, while their soul wanders through the trackless paths of infinity in its awful contemplations. But this toilsome method did not satisfy me, and I sought some other way of breaking the links that bound my spirit to my flesh. And I found the solution of my difficulty in the exercise of the will in its fullest sense. I put my body into an hypnotic lethargy by the mechanical means adopted by the ordinary professors of the mesmeric art, but by the supreme effort of the will retained my mental faculties unaffected. I felt as men feel sometimes do in dreams; their body is asleep, while their mind is active in a world of its own creating. Then by a final exercise of volition my spirit escaped for a time from its earthly prison: I lived, acted and felt, unfettered by the clogging limitations of my flesh. After a time I found I could in this way quit and re enter my body at will, and my pleasures were enhanced a thousandfold. Only one thing I noticed, and that was that it was necessary for the successful performance of my experiment that the temperature of the air at the time I left or re-entered my body should be at least as high as the internal heat of the body itself; otherwise the mental faculties become dull and inert, and my self, or ego, seemed to lose a portion of its exuberant vitality. Now you will see," concluded the doctor, "how easy it is for me to perform the same experiment upon another man, provided only that his will is weaker than mine, or that he is taken, as it were, unawares, and before he has time to exercise it. I have only to put his body into an hypnotic lethargy, and then by my own power of will make his soul leave its physical habitation. For a short time I can control its actions, but of course it is impossible for me to keep my will fixed in the necessary intensity for more than a comparatively short space of time. That was why I controlled your spirit in its journey just now, and recalled it before the control was exhausted."

The doctor stopped speaking, and proceeded to smoke quietly from a scented hookah. Arlon Stassart remained silent. He was amazed and awe struck before this example of scientific daring, this illustration of the immense power of volition. He saw in this simple discovery tremendous possibilities of good or evil to those around him, and felt almost dismayed at the contemplation of the cool courage displayed by this quiet Japanese savant, who could take a man's soul out of his body, and replace it, as if he were merely performing a surgical operation. For some time he was absorbed in his thoughts; but at length, turning to Amida Sama, he said:

"What you have told me, Doctor, is extremely wonderful; the more so, I think, because of its simplicity, and from the fact that it is, after all, the logical outcome of recent researches into psychological phenomena so little understood among us. I am almost afraid," he continued, with a laugh, "to remain in this room. But tell me, Amida Sama, how do you propose to win Gladys Meredythe for me by the aid of this discovery?"

"Ah! there comes a slight difficulty," answered the doctor. "What I propose is simple enough in itself, if only the requisite preliminaries for the experiment can be arranged. I propose to transfer your soul—your self—to the body of her fiance—by the way, you have not yet told me his name—while his soul will inhabit your body. You will thus be free to approach your beloved as if you were her betrothed, and enjoy all the happy intercourse of lovers. Of course your actions, after you have once been transferred to the body of her lover, must lie entirely in your own hands, and that I must leave to you."

Stassart had already by this time become so much under the fascination of the doctor's teaching and disclosures that this astonishing proposition did not, at the time, strike him as very extraordinary. The only thing that made him hesitate was the difficulty of effecting the transformation between himself and Kingsford. He began to say so:

"But how are we to get Kingsford—for that is her lover's name—to consent to this proposal?" asked he.

Whereupon the silent Kotaro stopped smoking, and, deliberately laying down the stem of his hookah, began to laugh.

"What are you laughing at, Kotaro?" asked Stassart, rather angrily.

"Your Western simplicity of ideas," answered Kotaro, composedly.

"Of course Kingsford would not consent. But I think the doctor said consent was not necessary, if only he had the opportunity of controlling his patient's will, while the patient was not actively opposing his exercise of volition."

"If you will bring Mr. Kingsford her," the doctor remarked, as if he were talking about some interesting scientific attempt, "I will cause his soul to leave his body, and change its earthly habitation with yours."

Once again Stassart hesitated. Was it not, after all, rather an underhand piece of work, this contemplated change of identity? What would Kingsford's feelings be when he discovered the transformation? But; as to that, what were his own feelings now? What had he not suffered during the past year for his love of Gladys? Now, at last, was an opportunity to win and enjoy her love—the love he had so long and so vainly desired. What if he had gained it by assuming a false identity? She would think he was Kingsford, and would not discover that another self inhabited her lover's form. And Kingsford?—well, why should not he, Arlon Stassart, have happiness as well as her favoured lover? His passion urged him on; some lingering sense of honor held him back. He was yet undecided, when once again Kotaro broke the silence:

"Love in these Western lands," he remarked to Amida Sama, with the air of one who was stating an extremely interesting, though somewhat obvious, fact of philosophic investigation, "is greatly affected by the coolness and moisture of the climate. There is a lack of concentrated passion about it that renders it occasionally insipid. Now, Miss Meredythe——"

Here Stassart broke in, exclaiming, "Doctor, you shall make the experiment. I will bring Stanton Kingsford to your house before the week is over."

Amida Sama answered, with a mild air of benignant approval, "That is very good. It will be a most interesting experiment."

"Yes, it will," remarked Stassart, "d——d interesting;" and after a little while went home thoughtfully, with Kotaro smoking quietly by his side.

Don't Punish a Miserable Woman.

The action of the Chicago judge on Friday by which Mrs. Mary McDonald, who had shot her husband, was released, merits a word of commendation. The unfortunate woman was afflicted by a drunken husband who took away her money to buy liquor and whipped her when she resisted. During McDonald's last drunk he became involved in a quarrel with the poor little woman, seized the last of her earnings in spite of her struggles, and staggered towards the door to buy more liquor. Then, in sheer desperation, the miserable woman who had been abused and tormented beyond all endurance, seized a revolver and demanded the return of the money. Instead of yielding the big brute rushed upon the excited and almost crazy woman. She lost consciousness, and when she regained it found that she had shot and killed her husband.

Was the judge wrong in saying that no jury could convict her? If he was wrong in that opinion he was certainly justified in setting her free to save her from the jury. The case is cited because there are a good many like it, and the WORLD-HERALD wants the opportunity to say that justice should never be so misapplied as to punish a woman, who, after a long period of misery and abuse, at last turns on her tyrant and tormentor and in an insane moment ends all.—[Chicago Times.

Medical Education for Women.

The young women of Belfast who have been seeking a medical education at the university of their own city have been more successful than the young women of Montreal have been. Upon the application of a number of ladies, and, apparently without any urging on the part of the public, the medical faculty of Queen's College, Belfast, have decided, and, if the article in another column is correct, unanimously decided in favor of their admittance. They are apparently to enter the regular classes and take the full course, there being, so far as stated, no question made about the propriety of their being present at all lectures. The Medical School of Belfast College, like that of McGill College, is widely and favorably known. It is to be hoped the movement to secure to ladies the advantages offered by McGill College will not be allowed to drop. The public would like to know what, if anything, is being done or attempted in the way of raising the necessary funds.

"Burdette's" Choice.

My son, your brow is clouded; something has happened that didn't and don't agree with you? Were you neglected in the invitations? Didn't you get on any of the committees? Were you overlooked in the convention? Hasn't the secretary written you a personal letter asking your advice upon the campaign? Have you been coldly passed over for men of less ability? Do you feel that an intentional slight has been put upon you? Can't you see that everything is going wrong because you have not been consulted? Have you been directly snubbed by inferior people? I thought as much. At your time of life such things are liable to occur. They used to happen with me, now and then. You will grow wiser as you grow older, unless you take the other chute; then you will grow more foolish, and there is only one cure for an old fool, my boy—that is death. Ordinary death won't cure him either. "Though thou shouldest bray him in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." See how awfully dead he has to be killed! Smashing him only makes him worse.

But now, if any or all these slights have been put upon you, listen to me, my tender Telemachus. Don't show your sores. Oh, don't show your sores. They are not pleasant things to look at, nobody wants to see them, and they will heal much more rapidly and naturally and healthfully, if you don't expose hem. Keep them covered. Don't show them to anybody but your surgeon, and don't show them to him unless you have to. And don't look at them yourself. Leave them alone under the healing plasters of time and the cooling compresses of forgetfulness, and you'll be surprised, some day when you do happen to think of them, to find that they have healed by the first intention without a scar. Don't tell people when you are hurt; don't tell anybody how keenly you feel a slight when, perhaps, no slight was intended. Don't get yourself snubbed by people who never see you, and who don't know you and never see you, and never think of you. And if you really are hit, and hit hard, it belittles your manhood and it drives away human sympathy when you lift up your voice and howl on the streets. Keep quiet about it. Don't whine; don't yell. One day at the investment of Vicksburg—it was on the memorable 22d of May—during a lull in the desultory skirmishes that preceded the assault, while I was lying close to the surface of the great, round globe that we inhabit and wishing I could get a little closer to it, we heard a tremendous howling and shrieking, and down the dusty road from the front came a blue jacketed skirmisher on the trot, holding one hand up in the other, and the hand he was holding up had no thumb on it. It hurt like the mischief, I have no doubt, but it was only a thumb after all, and how the fellow was howling about it. He was a brave man or he wouldn't have been where he could have lost that thumb. But you would have thought it was the only thumb in the whole United States army and that no one else on the skirmish line had been hit that morning. So the soldiers saw only the funny side of the picture, and a perfect chorus of howls, in vociterous imitation of the man's own wails, went shrieking up from the sarcastic line of men who were waiting their turn to face death. In a minute another soldier came walking back from the skirmish line. He was walking slowly and steadily, never a moan fell from his compressed lips, though they were whiter than his bronzed face, and he held his hand against his breast. The silence of the death chamber fell upon the line in an instant, as the figure of the soldier moved along the road with the air of a conqueror. Halt a dozen men sprang to his side. Tenderly they laid him down in the shadow of a great oak; his lips parted to speak a message to some one a thousand miles away, and the line was short one man for the coming assault. He died of his hurt, but he died like a king. Oh, my boy! don't yell the lungs out of you over a mashed thumb, when, only three files down the lines, a soldier salutes his captain before he faces about to go to the rear with a death bullet in his breast. You can't help getting hurt. There isn't a safe place in the whole line. There are cruel people in the world who love to wound us: there are thoughtless, heedless people who don't think there are people who don't care, and there are thick-skinned people who are not easily hurt themselves, and they think mankind is a thick-nided race: in fact, the air is full of darts and arrows and singing bullets all the time, and it's dangerous to be safe anywhere. But when you do get hit—as hit you certainly will be—don't "holler" any louder than you have to. Grin and bear it the best you may. There are some people so badly hurt they must moan: do not forget your own hurt in looking after them.—[From Brooklyn Eagle.

Men Make Better Cooks.

Miss Julia Corson maintains that if in an average company you select at random a dozen men and a dozen women the masculine group will possess much the more knowledge of cookery. This declaration she backed up in a recent conversation with illustrations. Go into a restaurant, she says, with a number of men and women.

Unless there should be a chance to be in the company a woman who has travelled extensively and observed much, you will never go wrong if you entrust the selection of the dinner to the gentlemen. Lest some critic should reply that men are more used to restaurant and hotel fashions and feel themselves more at ease in ordering, Miss Corson is willing to go a step further.

If it is a case of ordering a nice little family dinner at home, not an average American family dinner, which consists usually of a roast and a pudding, but, say, a soup, fish and, perhaps, one side dish, the husband, she alleges, will commonly lay out the best bill of fare. If he is a club man or a man used to camping out he will cook it better than his wife; but whether he knows anything about the processes of cooking or not he will show more ability in planning a good dinner.

Being asked to define a good dinner, Miss Corson said that it must possess three qualifications; it must please the palate, satisfy the appetite and be easily digested. This culinary ability a man does not usually develop, she is of the opinion, until he reaches 36 or, say, 40 years of age. At this period of life she accounts for it in the theory that mature men pay more intelligent heed than do women to their food.

The average woman cares comparatively little what she eats, as is shown by her common neglect of herself when she has no man to provide for; while the man who is actively engaged in business knows that if he is not fully nourished his work will suffer.—[New York Mail and Express.
