THE ROMANCE OF A DOG.
Mr. Jack Shipley, lately in hand stood pensively regarding a rather dirty terrier that crouched at his feet.
"I declare the wretched beast won't leave me," he exclaimed. "Dogs are like men and women, give them half an inch and they howl for several yards. If I hadn't stopped to pick this quadruped with my walking stick he would never have followed me home."
The small dog gazed up at Mr. Shipley and whined dolefully.
"Looks like Rosetti Robinson reciting one of his poems of passion," continued Jack. "I wonder if the little fellow is as much of a poet as I am. My canine friend would you like to eat something?"
The small dog emitted a brief but joyous bark and frisked about the doorstep.
Jack Shipley laughed good naturedly.
"You're a smart dog, aren't you? Well, you shall have your dinner while I am dressing for mine," and Mr. Shipley entered his kitchen establishment, still followed by his dog.
"Look here, Banks," he said to his imported man servant, "I have invited this little beast to dinner. See that he gets what he wants, and when you kick him out don't kick too hard!"
Banks looked at the dog with anything but favor.
"I'm blest," he remarked, "if I see as low a gent like Mr. Shipley can bring such a disagreeable pup into his nice clean room. I s'pose I must holler harder, but I s'pose to give Christen food to a filthy brute what are of no particular breed as I can see?"
Jack Shipley went out to dinner, and in the delights of dining the cynical philosophy which he effected forgot all about his canine acquaintance. When he returned late at night he found the usually placid Banks strangely agitated.
"If you please, Mr. Shipley," cried the valet, "you remember that 'ere dawg you brought 'ome this evening?"
Mr. Shipley remembered.
"Well, sir, 'ere dawg is an 'oly terror. Would you believe sir, when I tried to put 'im 'out 'e point blank refused to go, and 'id 'isself under the sofa. I called the butler to 'etch 'im, but poor Buttons 'onky caught 'is teeth. 'The murderous animal came aigh biting the boys' and 'hoff. 'Ere comes now, looking as if nothing 'd appeared. Yab! You varmint!"
This last ejaculation was addressed to the 'oly terror, who was sitting in a half shy, half friendly manner toward Jack.
Mr. Shipley was in an excellent humor. He had worsted two society dowagers and a Vassar graduate in as many duels of repartee and had found the most inveterate female flirt in New York to discuss the statistics of Chinese immigration for forty consecutive minutes. These were triumphs and the victor felt accordingly.
"So you have developed a vein of obstinacy?" he remarked to the dog.
"Good! I like obstinate creatures. You shall stay with me as long as you wish, but first you must be washed. Banks, tell somebody to wash you 'y 'oly terror, and conduct him to my apartment in the cellar. I'm off to bed!"
When Banks entered his employer's room on the following morning his countenance bore distinct traces of offended dignity.
"That 'ere dawg, sir," he began. "It took 'every servant in 'ouse to 'old 'im while 'e was being washed. Finally I 'ad to do the washing myself. When 'e was pretty clean we tried to shut 'im into the cellar, but 'e wouldn't have hit that way, and haway 'e goes upstairs and curls himself 'oon your very doorstep!"
Shipley opened the door, and sure enough there was the dog.
By jove, said Jack, the washing has improved you wonderfully, old fellow. He has some bread after all, Banks. Irish terrier I verily believe.
So saying, he caught the dog by one ear and lifted him several feet from the ground. The dog showed his teeth but uttered not a sound.
Irish terrier sure enough, said Shipley, sitting him down. Looks thoroughbred and has pluck enough to tackle a bull. My small friend you are quite a revelation. Banks! breakfast for two!
During breakfast Mr. Shipley glanced through the morning papers. He was not a careful reader and avoided all long articles. This morning he scanned the 'Lost' column interestingly and found the following notice:
Strayed—A rough haired Irish terrier, answering to the name of 'Blarney'. The finder will be liberally rewarded.
Address Minerva B., No. 999 West Shinarump Street.
Shipley looked at the dog who was munching a chicken bone.
"I wonder if this is Minerva B.'s Irish terrier," he said. Then suddenly and almost in a whisper he ejaculated, "Blarney!" The dog dropped his chicken bone and came to attention, with both ears rigidly erect.
"Blarney!" muttered Shipley again, and this time the terrier fairly leaped into his arms.
"What a great thing a newspaper is," thought Jack, as he finished his coffee. "Now, I presume I am bound by courtesy, not to speak of honesty, to inform 'Minerva B., that the beloved 'Blarney' has been found. 'Minerva' is probably a spinster of pet loving proclivities. Only an old maid would advertise over such a name as 'Blarney'. Your young and gushing miss prefers 'Violet' or 'Maudie'. Do I speak correctly, 'Blarney'?"
"Blarney" blinked both eyes, as if in duplicate assent.
Shipley's letter to 'Minerva B.' informed that personage that a dog answering to the name of 'Blarney' and resembling the 'Blarney' she had lost was to be seen at the residence of Mr. John Van Tromp Shipley. If 'Minerva B.' could send any one to identify the terrier, immediate restoration would be made. Meanwhile the suppositions 'Blarney' was in good hands.

This letter finished and dispatched by a messenger, Mr. Shipley snatched forth in the direction of his club. He had hardly gone half a square when he found that the irrepressible 'Blarney' was at his heels. So he took 'Blarney' into a store and bought him a complement collar, after which they visited the club together.

When Jack and 'Blarney' returned from their stroll they found Banks waiting for them. "If you please, Mr. Shipley," said that faithful domestic, "there's a lady in the front parlor what claims as 'ow she knows this 'ere dawg."

"Indeed," mused Jack. "Then Minerva B.—has arrived. Tell the lady I will see her immediately."

During this dialogue 'Blarney' had casually wandered up stairs and entered the parlor, where there straight way issued suppressed screams of delight and the sound of rapturous carresses.

'Minerva' has found her lost darling, said Jack. "I suppose I shall have to go up and explain his residence here. It's a nuisance, and I should like to spinster, but the sooner one takes a pill the sooner the nasty taste is gone. Here goes for the old maid!"

However, when Mr. John Van Tromp Shipley entered the parlor he was utterly taken aback. On a sofa, with both arms around the truant terrier, sat a young girl—she prettiest and freshest young girl Jack had ever seen in or out of society. She rose blithely on his appearance and said with a smile, "Mr. Shipley, are you not?"

Jack bowed and within the next two minutes became hopelessly entangled in his account of 'Blarney's' finding.

"It was so good of you to take care of him," cried the young lady, hugging 'Blarney' a little closer. "Do you know, when I got your letter I felt sure you must be some benevolent old man, who went about playing the fairy godfather and doing all sorts of good things."

"That is odd," said Jack, who was patting 'Blarney's' shaggy coat affectionately. "I thought that you were some elderly female who had lost one of her menage of peas. I am afraid the name signed to your advertisement had something to do with my misapprehension."

'Blarney's' pretty mistress laughed gaily and Jack could not help thinking that her laugh was like a song.

"But Minerva is really my name," she said. "Minerva B. I am usually called 'Minnie', however, which just so reasonable to propagate the doctrine that a law against murder does not diminish the number of murders, or that a law against immorality does not make society purer, as to maintain that the prohibition of the liquor traffic will not enormously lessen the sum of crimes. Give us such a law for five years, and no intelligent man will take his pen in hand to write, 'Prohibition does not prohibit.'—Canada."

The supreme Court of the United States has decided that wholesale liquor dealers cannot, by law collect for liquor sold to retailers doing business in Prohibition states.

Dominion Parliament.
OTTAWA, JUNE 13.—In reply to Mr. Flinn in the house today, Hon. Mr. Dowl said that the major general commanding had made a report setting forth the result of his investigation into the charges against Lt. Col. Worsley and Lt. Col. Murray of the Halifax district. The major general did not make any recommendation as to the dismissal or retention of those officers. The report was still under the consideration of the government.

In reply to Mr. Somerville, Hon. Mr. Foster said that James Robinson of the Dominion Savings bank, St. John, had been superannuated at an allowance of $418 per year. He had been appointed to the position in the Savings bank at $1,100 per year.

The balance of the afternoon was taken up with a consideration of the Criminal Law bill in committee.

After recess Mr. Somerville of Brant resumed debate on the Redistribution bill, strongly opposing it. He (Somerville) concluded by moving an amendment that redistribution should be confined to the present in those provinces which made it necessary by the census.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Allen and Dupper in the opposition side and Mr. Mills of Brant moved the adjournment of the debate.

The house adjourned at 11:10 p. m., Ottawa, June 14.—The speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Mills of Brant resumed the debate on the Redistribution bill. He said that he was in favor of the English parliamentary system, and it was because he was so that he was opposed to the present measure. If the bill was adopted he would not say what would be the consequences. The result might be serious, if they attempt to establish one political party in permanent supremacy over the other, which was now proposed. Such an attempt was a violation of the constitution and at defiance with English practice. The spirit of the practice in the other country might be adhered to. He did not consider it a large cities should have full representation according to population. The city always had the floor of parliament a larger representation than was shown by its actual representation. If the cities had their full representation according to population they would be able to control any legislature that could be got together. Dealing more closely with the bill before the house he said that there was such a thing as preserving the organism of the state and in a like way maintain the organic life of the country and what was peculiar to them. He was not there to discuss the propriety or impropriety of what Mr. Wood said. What he had to do was to consider the measure that was before them. He was not there to appeal to the political prejudices of one party or another, but instead that they should adhere to the English constitutional system. The whole country was injured by the act of 1882. It was not merely the liberal party who suffered, it was quite possible, he said, for both political parties to have met in conference and decided every change that was necessary to the readjustment between Atlantic and Pacific Provinces.

Mr. McDonald (King, P. E. I.), said that the bill was the first time that gerrymandering was introduced in the maritime provinces. It was already introduced in P. E. I. by Mr. Davies and his political friends who did so to keep themselves in power in provincial matters. He (McDonald) concluded that the redistribution in that province was as fair as it was possible to make it. Under the circumstances to make a fair redistribution it was impossible to adhere to county lines. The 1851 government in their redistribution bill did not stick at breaking county lines, but duly even crossed township lines to secure political advantages. He would not designate such a party by the name of government, one held power by a majority of one. He held up a map to show how the provincial government had gerrymandered the province. There was a township broken up in the present bill before the house. The bill all through was a fair and just one. He would never consent to the breaking up of the township lines.

Mr. Yeo was opposed to the breaking up of county lines. It was not with a view of equalizing the population that this was done.

Mr. McLean showed that by dividing the city of Charlottetown Mr. Davies could have been easily gerrymandered out of his seat. That was not done. There was no other way of dividing the island, if representation by population was adhered to, than the way it was proposed to do it. The bill was a fair one, as far as the island was concerned.

It being six o'clock, the speaker left the chair.

Mr. Davies started out by a reference to the constitutional aspect of the question. He believed in the proposition before the house, that the redistribution in the present instance should be confined to those provinces which made it absolutely necessary by the recent census. He complained that while that representation was allowed in New Brunswick and elsewhere, it was taken away from P. E. I., and counties, cut and carved up with a view of the better election of government supporters. The people of those counties had been working together for thirteen years. The gerrymandering which took place between counties in Nova Scotia, as regards to population did not seem to justify the cutting up of the county lines for representation purposes, and why was not the same system followed in P. E. I. and it was with the idea that himself and his friend (Yeo) would be legislated out of the house. This was the first time that the gerrymandering was introduced in the maritime provinces.

After some remarks from Mr. Perry against the bill, the house voted on the amendment, which was lost by 29 to 95.

The house then divided on the motion that the bill be read a second time, which was carried by 97 to 69.

The house then went into committee on the bill.

woolly face of the dog, closely pressed against the boy, smiling cheeks of its owner, appeared at the window.
Jack looked after them until they disappeared from view at a street corner.
Then entering the house again, he rubbed his hands and exclaimed delightedly: "That's what I call a liberal reward, indeed!"

"Our dog, as the Shipleys called 'Blarney', has never since been brought face to face with the question of sleeping in the cellar, but on the contrary enjoys all the luxuries which its owners, Banks, the butler, Buttons and the rest of the house, are able to bestow upon him."

Temperance.
NEWCASTLE W. C. T. U.

A meeting of the W. C. T. U. is held in the Mission Hall every Tuesday afternoon, commencing at 3 o'clock. Visitors from other Unions or any who are interested in the Temperance cause are cordially invited.

A LITTLE WONT HURT.
Sometimes the devil comes to a boy or young man and says, Come, let us go and drink a glass of beer. It won't do you any harm but will make you feel good. Boys, if you ever hear these words, or any like them, don't answer. Yes, for it is a false prophet speaking to you.

"Oh, mamma, said a bright nine year old boy, did you hear the fire bells ring early this morning? Yes, my dear, where was the fire?"

"Why, mamma, said the boy the 'City Hall' was burned down, and a young man who had been put in the lock up for disorderly conduct was burnt to death. He was a real nice, kind man. He thought last night that he would drink a little liquor, only enough to make him feel good, but it made him real drunk and he got into a scuffle with some fellows and was arrested. The officers think that in lighting his cigar toward morning a spark fell on something in his cell that kindled very quickly and so the building was burned and the poor man with it. He shrieked dreadfully to be let out, but they could not help him, for it was too late. People are so sorry that he was burnt, for he was a very kind-hearted man, and he was only a little tipsy."

Do you see boys, that when the tempter said to him, a little liquor won't hurt you, it was a false prophet speaking to him.

Instead of having a good time as he expected, he suffered greatly and died a drunken death. Drinking a little liquor does not always end so badly as that, but it is very apt to be followed by a miserable and unhappy life.

WORKING OF THE YEAST.
As a physician Dr. Bayard, acknowledges that the drunkard is insane, and that the state has a perfect right to restrain him and confine him in an infirmary. What a saintly and solemn system of government, to be able to deprive a large part of the revenue from the manufacture of liquors, and then providing asylums at the public expense to secure the victims of its own misgovernment. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure,—may not be a good motto for a physician, but it is a good motto for a government. It would be just so reasonable to propagate the doctrine that a law against murder does not diminish the number of murders, or that a law against immorality does not make society purer, as to maintain that the prohibition of the liquor traffic will not enormously lessen the sum of crimes. Give us such a law for five years, and no intelligent man will take his pen in hand to write, 'Prohibition does not prohibit.'—Canada.

The supreme Court of the United States has decided that wholesale liquor dealers cannot, by law collect for liquor sold to retailers doing business in Prohibition states.

Dominion Parliament.
OTTAWA, JUNE 13.—In reply to Mr. Flinn in the house today, Hon. Mr. Dowl said that the major general commanding had made a report setting forth the result of his investigation into the charges against Lt. Col. Worsley and Lt. Col. Murray of the Halifax district. The major general did not make any recommendation as to the dismissal or retention of those officers. The report was still under the consideration of the government.

In reply to Mr. Somerville, Hon. Mr. Foster said that James Robinson of the Dominion Savings bank, St. John, had been superannuated at an allowance of $418 per year. He had been appointed to the position in the Savings bank at $1,100 per year.

The balance of the afternoon was taken up with a consideration of the Criminal Law bill in committee.

After recess Mr. Somerville of Brant resumed debate on the Redistribution bill, strongly opposing it. He (Somerville) concluded by moving an amendment that redistribution should be confined to the present in those provinces which made it necessary by the census.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Allen and Dupper in the opposition side and Mr. Mills of Brant moved the adjournment of the debate.

The house adjourned at 11:10 p. m., Ottawa, June 14.—The speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Mills of Brant resumed the debate on the Redistribution bill. He said that he was in favor of the English parliamentary system, and it was because he was so that he was opposed to the present measure. If the bill was adopted he would not say what would be the consequences. The result might be serious, if they attempt to establish one political party in permanent supremacy over the other, which was now proposed. Such an attempt was a violation of the constitution and at defiance with English practice. The spirit of the practice in the other country might be adhered to. He did not consider it a large cities should have full representation according to population. The city always had the floor of parliament a larger representation than was shown by its actual representation. If the cities had their full representation according to population they would be able to control any legislature that could be got together. Dealing more closely with the bill before the house he said that there was such a thing as preserving the organism of the

I am proud of my thirteen-year-old friend. I think he showed himself to be a very brave and valiant little fellow. And all this time, excepting the name by which I call him.

Of course Jack was 'skylarking.'

But, unless some care is taken, a boy may 'skylark' himself into trouble.

That is what Jack came near doing when he stole his sled from the fore and hind legs of a horse.

'But the cop' (by which I understand a policeman) was a perfect right to slide on that hill.

So if horses came in the way they did so at their own risk.

However, that is not what this story is about.

They were playing 'Tag,' my Jack and the doctor's son. Playing with all their might and main,

I suspect. Jack's sturdy knickerbockers look as if they could make good time when it comes to run.

He rushed after the doctor's son, and the doctor's son 'went for him.'

'Round about and round about

And round about they spin,'

and Jack was 'it.'

Close to the big front door they sped. Up the steps and into the vestibule they tumbled. Jack would have seized the doctor's son had not that youngster burst open the inner door and whisked into the hall, slamming the door in his pursuer's face, and shouting,

'Tagged you last!'

Jack thrust out an eager arm just as the portal closed. Bang!

The long glass panel crushed his hand. Clatter, clatter, clatter, rattled the broken glass.

His sharp edges—oh, his cruel edges—tagged Jack's wrist unmercifully.

Money goes fast under almost any circumstances, but one way of getting it is by putting it on a horse.
