THE GOLDEN SIDE.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
—If we would only stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er falters,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright, Though the winter storm prevail.

Better to hope though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are lifted!
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart, And hands that are ready and willing,
Than to snap the delicate, minute threads Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve, and wonder.

Interesting Tale.

MR. ARUNDEL'S DAUGHTER.

BY ANNA MASON.

I was about to take a journey to Philadelphia to transact business for the firm of Van Dyck & Co., to which I had just been admitted as a partner, after serving a term of years as a book-keeper.

My father, having reached those balmy days when easy-chair and slippers woo with irresistible force, and being well off in this world's goods, had decided to retire from business, leaving me to occupy his place in the firm.

Thus, at the age of twenty-four, with good health, a tolerable personal appearance and fine business prospects, I had as fair a start in life as one could ask.

In Philadelphia, aptly termed "The City of Brotherly Love," as I thought, when I had partaken of its hospitalities, resided an old friend of my father, who had not seen me since my childhood.

By letter it was arranged that on my arrival I should immediately repair to Mr. Arundel's house, he insisting on receiving me as his guest, and make his acquaintance, and that of his family.

The exact time of my coming was not fixed, and thus it happened that early one February evening I reached their house, to find it brilliantly lighted, and myself a little unexpected.

Mr. and Mrs. Arundel, both of whom I at once liked, extended to me so cordial a reception, however, that I could but feel myself welcome.

Our young people have company this evening, remarked Mr. Arundel; who seemed to be a very pleasant and jovial gentleman. Had we known before to expect you, it should not have been so.
Your first evening should have been a quiet one, passed in our midst, devoted to breaking the ice and getting comfortably used to us.

Never mind, interrupted Mrs. Arundel's cheerful voice. I trust we shall succeed in making Mr.
Van Dyck feel at home with us as it is. Our laughter and her young friends propose to entertain us this evening with some private theatricals, which I hope Mr. Van Dyck will not feel too fatigated to witness.

To be sure not! to be sure not! exclaimed Mr.
Arundel, heartily, before I could reply. We'll give our young friend Arthur, here, plenty of time in which to rest before the play begins, and he can receive his introductions later. So, my boy, we'll have a cup of tea, and let John show you to your room at once.

Nearly an hour later, after a careful toilet made with thoughts of the daughter who had been mentioned, I descended to the parlor, and found it pretty well filled with guests seated as expectant spectators while a subdued murmur of voices was audible from beyond the scarlet curtain which hid the back room from view.

Come here, Arthur. Take a seat by me, said Mr. Arundel. The play is about to begin, I believe.

Even as he spoke a bell tingled, and the curtain was clumsily swept aside. It disclosed a small but beautifully constructed stage, and a background of scarlet drapery.

The play which followed was by no means remarkable. I remember there being a fair protagonist, a dark and handsome lover with a guitar and velvet cloak, and a brilliant and beautiful rival to the fair lady, who, disguised as a waiting-maid, wove her spells about Sir Eustace.

The play wound up with an elopement, in which the rival escapes with the false lover, leaving Lady Alice to a broken heart.

Alas and shalows as was this plot, the play was rendered in the most spirited manner. The part of Lady Alice was played with touching pathos, by a lovely girl with fair hair and gentle eyes, dressed simply in white.

Mr. Arundel pointed her out to me.
That young lady is my daughter Julia. She is called very pretty, he added, a little complacently.

And merits the praise, I assented, warmly. But who is the dark one—the bewitching Elsie? I confess I've fallen in love with her.

Mr. Arundel laughed so heartily that there were several cries of "Hush!" ere he replied: That young lady is my daughter, Miss Elsie Arundel, very much at your service. She's a sad hoysen, I assure you, Arthur.

Perfectly bewitching, at any rate, I murmured.
In fact, I could not keep my eyes off the tall and dazzling beauty, who, in short skirts, high-heeled slippers, velvet bodice, ruffled apron, and a captivating bit of head-dress, was so bright and bewitching that almost it seemed Sir Eustace might be pardoned for faltering in his allegiance.

But when the disguise of the French waiting-maid was thrown aside, and Elsie appeared resplendent in scarlet satin, with train of velvet and rich lace, her dark hair clustering in short thick curls above her noble brow, surmounted by a diadem of diamonds, her eyes sparkling, her cheeks glowing with excitement, I exclaimed aloud:

Glorious creature!
She may have heard, for she turned and smiled on me.

Miss Elsie is radiantly beautiful, said I to Mr.
Arundel.

Do you think so? Well, perhaps you are right.
You see she's younger than Julia, and a tawney.
She's developing rapidly, no doubt.

Mr. Arundel seemed shaking with uncontrollable laughter. I was disgusted. He had called that exquisite creature by an odious name.

Miss Julia is evidently her papa's favorite, I thought to myself, somewhat bitterly.

Here come the young ladies themselves, said Mr. Arundel, the play being over. Very fine actresses you make, my dears. He then presented me.

Miss Arundel held out her hand half timidly Miss Elsie looked at me with her large blazing eyes, then said, heartily: I noticed you from the stage, Mr. Van Dyck, and I knew at once I should like you. I played my best to please you.

I was a little disconcerted by this charming candor; but every one laughed, and Miss Julia asked:
Are you sure you didn't fancy Mr. Van Dyck the hero of the play, and so make such an effort to fascinate poor Sir Eustace?

You've guessed it exactly, replied the frank young lady. You see, Mr. Van Dyck, she went on, addressing me, sister Julia has been flattered till she expects all the attentions; but I claim you.
The daring girl had actually taken my arm.

Ran away with Mr. Van Dyck, if you please, Elsie! cried Miss Julia, blushing, but joining in the general laugh.

You may have a dance with your conquest, if Mr. Van Dyck chooses to be regarded in that light, seconded Mr. Arundel.

I've certainly no objections, I retorted, laughing.

In another moment Elsie and I were whirling about the dizzy waltzes.

Every one is looking and laughing at us, remarked my eccentric partner, as if I danced like an elephant.

Impossible! exclaimed I, deprecatingly. Your waltzing is the very essence of grace—the poetry of motion.

At any rate, I've had enough of it. It is lovely in the conservatory; let us go in there and get cool by the fountain.

I followed her lead willingly enough.
Isn't this delightful? sighed Elsie, as soon as we found ourselves alone, dropping her somewhat dashing manner, and looking up at me with a languid, almost timid glance.

She caught my admiring gaze and smiled, revealing dazzling teeth.

Here's a seat among the roses for you Mr.
Van Dyck. The water from this fountain is as cool as ice, and as sparkling as diamonds.
Let me fill this goblet for you; I'll be Elsie, cupbearer to the gods, and you shall be the glorious Apollo. I'll take care not to stumble, to be banished from my Olympus. I'm in paradise, Mr. Van Dyck!

Your allusions are classical, fair lady; but are you in earnest in saying you're in paradise?

Of course I am, monsieur, with the handsomest gentleman in the company all to myself, and I a younger sister.

Here Elsie, half kneeling, presented the goblet with a bewitching grace. Judge me not too harshly, kind reader, when I admit that my heart beat rapidly. I was young and susceptible.

I've no accomplishments, went on my charmer. I can't play the piano, nor sing, nor dance like sister Julia; but—here she paused, and looked at me half defiantly—I can play billiards!

As a right of Mr. Van Dyck, retorted I, by no means at risk from my self-possession.
O dear! I'll tell papa you called me that.
Did you call me that? I asked, dully.

No, I never call gentlemen dear; but I must be very pleasant.

Try to be more, then, sweet Elsie! I exclaimed, enthusiastically, enraptured by her engaging candor.

Elsie made no reply but to drop her head till her cheek touched my hand. I was intoxicated. I believe I bent down and kissed her.

O, to this k o' the folly of that evening!
I confessed my love to the fascinating beauty.

You don't think me rude and forward, then, as papa does—as they all do? she asked.

No, Elsie, I adore your simplicity and frankness. What joy to pass through life with you!

O, really, Mr. Van Dyck? And Elsie needed close to me.

I thought I was in my mis. She was shaking with laughter.

Please don't be angry Mr. Van Dyck. I really say you very much; but I cannot marry you.

And why not?

Papa wouldn't believe in such sudden love for one reason.

But I'll make him believe it! Hark!
They're calling to me!

So they are, said Elsie; and she actually kissed me, of her own accord, ere we went back to the parlors, where our reappearance was greeted with much merriment, and was made the subject of more sly jokes than good taste seemed to me to warrant. Elsie took it very coolly.

Did Mr. Van Dyck propose to you? asked Julia.

Of course he did. You see, Mr. Van Dyck, I made a bit of a mistake in my proposal.

Could I have my ears? How had my idol come away!

The guests shortly after departed, and when good night had been spoken we all retired to our rooms.

Elsie passed my hand when no one observed us, and whispered:
Dream of me, dear—!

It was long before I slept that night for excitement. I lay awake, haunted by the vision of a dazzling creature in scarlet satin, varied now and then by another vision—that of a fair like little lady in white, with great gentle eyes.

I was frightened, too, at the thought of my own precipitancy, and very doubtful as to what my father would say to Elsie as my wife. I could not deny, even to myself, that she was forward and bold.

It was, as may be imagined, with very mixed emotions that I descended to the breakfast room the next morning. Mr. and Mrs.
Arundel greeted me cordially, and soon Miss Arundel appeared, looking very fresh and sweet in her white morning dress, with clusters of sweet geranium blossoms in her hair and at her throat.

I was more impressed by her than I had been the evening before, and wondered how I had failed to appreciate her extreme beauty and loveliness.

We were enjoying an animated conversation when the door opened, and a tall youth of fifteen or thereabouts entered the room.

My son Fred, Mr. Van Dyck, said Mr.
Arundel.

The lad advanced and seized my hand in a hearty clasp, and—no!—could it be? The dark eyes, the saucy smile, the clustering curls had all belonged to my Elsie of last evening.

If any doubts remained, they were dispelled by a burst of laughter, in which all were joining.

We don't I fear, meet as lovers this morning, Mr. Van Dyck? queried the impressible youth. Nevertheless, you need not look daggers at me. Come now, confess that I took you in capitally. You never dreamed Elsie was Fred?

Indeed, no, I agreed, joining in the laugh, although it was at my own expense.

I never was so completely sold.
I shall teach Julia how to manage such affairs, continued the elated Fred.

She has much to learn yet. No one ever proposed to her on an evening's acquaintance.
I'll be bound. Don't look so chop-fallen, old fellow; I dare say I'd be as big a fool over as pretty a girl. Rouge and a satin gown add greatly to my beauty.

O you puppy! cried his father, in an interval of choking laughter. Have done with your nonsense, and take your seat at the table. Had I dreamed you would have carried your joke so far, I'd not have humored it.
Mr. Van Dyck will think we have broken all the rules of hospitality.

Not at all, I murmured. I enjoy a good joke. My polite answer was made despite agonies of mortification. My smile was intended to disarm the suspicion that I might be chewing the cud of bitter meditation; beneath it my soliloquy was, What a precious fool I've made of myself!

Silently I determined to leave the society where I had enacted so sorry a part at the earliest opportunity.

I'll take Mr. Van Dyck in town, announce de Master Fred. He shall benefit by my roving and billiards, after all. It will be better for you, Mr. Van Dyck, than to leave you to Julia's music and croquet, which often prove snarls to the unwary. As to her enbroinery, that's even worse, for into it she weaves hearts!

Don't be so silly, Fred, suggested Julia blushing deliciously.

Breakfast proceeded pleasantly enough, and every one seemed bent on making the feel at home, and in dispelling any disagreeable impressions I might have received from late events. They succeeded so well that before the meal was over I felt quite at ease.

Somehow I didn't leave in such hot haste as in my first moments of chagrin I had determined, but lingered on from day to day.
When at last I did take my departure, it was with the understanding that I should return soon and claim my bride. Dear little Julia said good by with smiles quivering on her lips and tears starting to her sweet eyes.

Master Fred shook hands heartily in promising that he'd give up, once for all, tending his future brother-in-law about the beautiful and too fascinating Elsie.

Mail Robber Arrested.

An important arrest was made in Boston on Saturday of the principal in the extensive mail robbery which were committed some time ago between Chicago, New York, and Boston. A former mail clerk was arrested about six months since, and convicted as being the direct person by whom the robberies were committed; but it was at the time evident, by his own confession, and by the facts which appeared at the trial, that he had an accomplice who was really the head. On Saturday a man whose name is probably Robt. L. Dudley was arrested as this confederate. The particulars of the search and the arrest are briefly as follows: After the packages of letters were secured the contents were removed and handed over to the chief, who is supposed to be Dudley, who acted as bunker of the concern. He would then visit places where he was unknown, under an assumed name, and establish himself in business, until he had obtained a standing in the community, when he would force an endorsement on the stolen draft and obtain the cash for it. It was recently ascertained that a man answering the description which the officer had obtained of Dudley had been stopping at the Revue House in Boston under the name of Percell.
Letters which began to arrive for him were therefore detained till called for. At halfpast ten Saturday morning Mr. Percell did call, was recognized and arrested. He at first denied all knowledge of the affair and made considerable bluster about being arrested. He had hired a house in Mattapan for the summer season and furnished it in fine style. It is believed that his operations have amounted to from $50,000 to $75,000. He was brought before United States Commissioner Hallitt Saturday afternoon and committed.

Do you think I am a fool? a violent man asked the late Rev. Dr. Bethune. Really, replied the doctor, I would not have ventured the assertion, but now that you ask my opinion, I must say that I am not prepared to deny it.

AMOUNT OF FORCE DERIVED BY THE E
FROM THE SUN'S HEAT.—An interesting calculation has been made of the amount of force infused to the earth by the sun's heat. According best investigations that have been made, the received in one minute enough heat to raise temperature of five and a half cubic m water one degree Centigrade. If, now, we pare this with the work done by a given of heat, as utilized in a steam engine, it is found that the heat sent to the earth in the rays during the space of one minute is abo as much work as would be done by two steam engines of one hundred horse-power working continuously for the space of four and years.

What becomes of this incalculably gr amount of power is worthy of consideration; we begin to realize the nature of the proble the future scientists when we reflect that by fa larger part of this heat force expends itself the earth in actual work, only a small portion being radiated into space. Of course the accomplished, such as the maintenance of the perature of the earth, ocean, and atmosphere stimulating of animal and vegetable life, etc be the equivalent of the power retained b

A comic heroic scene took place lately in of the foreign restaurants in London, which a sensation among the diners there. A swell had ordered what should have been a dinner, but which turned out an utter failure complained vainly; the bill (the only thing had been cooked) was at length brought in, at once paid without remonstrance, an extra tuity being given the waiter to induce him to his master, who at once came up smiling, wh his conversation, his customer threw himself his arms. "Farewell, my host!" he pathet-exclaimed, "I have dined here once; we never to meet again!" and precipitately said shouts of laughter, leaving the host per-flabbergasted.

Legal Quibbling.

What is the legal meaning of the v "either?" This question was ably and gra-ly argued in the costly English Court Chancery the other day. A certain test left property the disposition of which was fected by "the death of either" of two per-One learned counsel contended the "either" meant both. In support of this he quoted Richardson, Webster, Chas.
Dryden, Southey, the Story of the Crucifix and a passage from Revelations. The ed Judge suggested that there was an song in the "Beggars' Opera," known to which took the opposite view:—

"How happy could I be with either, Were I either dear charmer away."

In pronouncing judgement the Judge sentenced entirely from the argument of counsel. "Either" meant one of two did not mean "both." Though occasion-in poets and some other writers the meant both, it did not in this case before Court.

A Rich Man.

When people talk about millionaires, they usually mention Rothschild first, but there is a man in England by the name of Ward comparison with whom any Rothschild is pauper. This man Ward inherits a vast property, with accumulated investments and taxes, which give him an enormous income.
He has the most magnificent house in London, the finest collection of art, and the finest con-seats in the Kingdom; his wife is celeb-for her beauty, and her display of diamonds at the recent festival given by the Empress of Austria, in Vienna, made all the other ladies the Empress Queen and Princesses, look poor. What the income of this British Cro-nus is we have never seen any statement of, but a Manchester paper gives an account of his annual profits derived from his coal mines, which amount to the enormous sum of £1, 900,000. So the income from one source alone of this extraordinarily wealthy person not much short of twenty five millions of dollars a year.

A gentleman read somewhere that the Chinese tell the time of day by examining the pupil of a cat's eye, and he began to consider a cat around with him in his overcoat pocket, with the intention to yank her out by the tail whenever he desired to ascertain the hour. But he carries a watch now. As from the fact that the cat used to yowl, spit, and charge around in an uncomfortable manner in his pocket, the first time. Bun-dragged her out to examine her eyes, and clawed furrows an inch deep in his face, and carried on so generally, that he thought better to drop her and hunt up a place where they sold arnica plaster and salve.

MR. C. J. M. BELLEW ON EMIGRATION TO CANADA.

At an entertainment given to about 2000 women of the labouring class, by the Rev. Father Nugent in the League Hall, Liverpool, on Wednesday night, the 28th ult., Mr. C. J. M. Bellew, the eloquent eloquist, who had that day returned from America, was the principal speaker. Mr. Bellew, who was received with loud cheers, said:

My countrywomen, my friend Father Nugent has called upon me to address you, and as you have heard, I have only arrived this very day from America, full of fatigue and thoughts of the great country from which I have come, and utterly unprepared to face such a meeting as this. In fact, for the last four months I have done nothing but face meetings, perhaps two or three times as large as that which I now see before me, and I thought that, on returning to England, I was returning to rest. This is the beginning of it (laughter.) However, there is no rest so sweet to any man, whose heart is in the right place, as the rest of feeling that he may perhaps do some little good to a good cause for his own labouring countrymen and countrywomen. (Loud applause.) And as it has been my privilege and opportunity to observe something of the condition of America and Canada, and more particularly of the Catholic condition of those two countries, I am sure my remarks will not be out of place if I just give you one or two ideas that have struck me as I have travelled along there. Now, my countrywomen, you know it is common here, and especially in Ireland, to say that you must emigrate to the United States. Only last Saturday week, when I left New York, the emigration agent in New York told me that during that one week alone, in the port of New York, no less than 10,000 emigrants had landed. But allow me to draw your attention to another dominion, the Dominion of Canada. In America you have immense opportunities, but just let me tell you that you have also immense expenses. In Canada you have immense opportunities, but in Canada you have small expenses and cheap living. (Loud applause.) We think of the United States of America, and justly, as of a very great and almost boundless country, but I question whether there is one person within these walls now that will not be astonished almost when I say that the Dominion of Canada is as large as the United States of America. That is a fact that people do not have in mind, and that great dominion, belonging to this country, only wants opening up, only wants cultivation, only wants that which you can carry out into it, to make it become one of the greatest appanages of the crown of England. (Loud applause.) At the present moment there is an endowment being made by Sir Hugh Allan, of the great Steamship Company of which you may have heard, the "Allan" Line, plying to Quebec and Montreal, to carry out the Pacific Railway to run straight through Canada, the object being to open the highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific through thousands of miles, and bringing into cultivation thousands of millions of acres that at present lie uncultivated. How is that to be done? How is it even to be carried out? Why, by one means only, and that is emigration. (Applause.) When I was lately in Canada, at the seat of the Government in Ottawa, some of the senators and members of the House of Commons there were pleased to give me a supper, at which various speeches were made and toasts given; and as I left the room that night one of the senators of Ottawa said to me, "Now, Mr. Bellew, when you return to England, don't forget to speak on behalf of Emigration to Canada." I have not forgotten it, by God's help. (Loud applause.) I would now, however, in my way, upon the very first day of my landing in England, to be able to come forward here and speak on behalf of that cause. (Applause.) Now, women, listen to me. In Canada, at this very moment while I am speaking, there are three or four great commercial gentlemen met together there for the purpose of building large cotton mills a few miles away from the City of Montreal. A gentleman who lived in the United States for upwards of forty years, conducting the largest cotton mills in the country, and who is in Canada at present, told me that in the whole country he never saw such water power as he brought to bear upon those mills, if they are built. "But," said I to him, "how are the immense mills you propose to build to be worked?" "By emigration," was the answer. By emigration! (Loud applause.) And one of the greatest mistakes—I speak it fearfully—one of the greatest possible mistakes made in Ireland, and in this country is the mistake of supposing that it is more difficult to emigrate to the United States than it is to emigrate to Canada. It is a mistake, for this reason—though in the United States you seem to earn larger wages, yet in Canada you can live for a very much smaller sum of money; and, in addition to that, let me tell you something you are not perhaps aware of. I believe I address here, as a multitudes, Catholics. (Applause.) I am very glad indeed to know that this movement has the support of Protestants. (Loud Applause.) Let us go together, hand in hand, in this matter. But in Canada you, as Catholics, have advantages which you cannot possibly have anywhere else upon the whole of that great continent.

AN EXTRAORDINARY REVELATION.—A remarkable story is told in the London Record by a clergyman who signs his name and vouches for the truth of what he says. It seems that the minister of a certain parish died a year or so ago, appointing as his executors two friends both of whom were ex-catholics in the British navy. Among his effects was a bulky package sealed up carefully and endorsed, "Inviolably sacred: to be destroyed." After mature deliberation, the executors decided that as faithful trustees of what their friend had left behind him, they could not destroy anything without at least knowing what they were destroying. So they opened the envelope and found therein two documents, one of which was a deposition from a Pope permitting the decessor to retain his position as a clergyman of the Church of England, though actually a priest of the Church of Rome; the other document contained a list of clergymen in the same diocese or vicinity, who were in possession of similar dispensations, and consequently to be relied on for sympathy and co-operation in case of necessity. If this statement was not made by a well-known and responsible clergyman, it would be set down as an obvious attempt at imposition.

The reports of the displacement of Judge Pugh, the appointment of Mr. Offey in his place, and resignation of Hon. Mr. Crawford from the ranks of the Government as published in the St. John Telegraph, are stated by the Daily News and Tribune to be "incorrect" nothing of the kind having taken place.

BRAZIL.—The conflict between the clergy and recent societies in Brazil continues to agitate the country. The ministry are gaining support for their policy. In the house the Premier made a speech, defending Pius Maes, and promised that energetic measures should be taken to prevent the bishops and Jesuits from interfering with the society.

BALLOU'S MAGAZINE FOR JULY.—The July number of Ballou's Magazine is already issued, and contains a variety of brilliant stories and illustrations. Among the list of contents are:—The Pyramids of Egypt; Indian Life; English Inns and Club-Houses; Childhood; The Eleventh Hour; A Broken Voyage; Mr. Arundel's Daughter; Thole; A Song of Heaven; The Planet Jupiter; Master Freshly's Fourth of July—humorous views. Address Thomas & Talbot, 36 Broadfield Street, Boston.

A correspondent of the "Telegraph" writes that the Douglas Gold Medal has this year been won by Mr. W. G. Gaunce, of King's County, and that Mr. E. M. Fenety has been awarded the medal of the Ammi Society.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN HUNGARY.—The London "Times" observes that the reception given to the Prince of Wales in Pesth lately furnished abundant proof that the feeling of admiration and liking for England has not died out in Hungary.

Why is it that Hungary shows such an unaffected good-will towards England? There is a ready answer traditionally given—that the two countries are very like each other; and the answer is just, though the explanation which usually accompanies it is, happily, less exact. We are told that Hungary, like England, is an aristocratic country, a country of large landed proprietors, passionately fond of horses and of sport. If this is all, that could be said of England, it would be a very different country from what it is. Hungary, like England, has much more. No country in Europe has advanced more rapidly during the last quarter of a century. No city in Europe, and very few in America, have made such strides as Pesth has made in the same time. For nearly two miles, if not more, the Danube has been embanked, and piles of counting houses and warehouses arise beside it as full of business and trade in their proportion as the warehouses and offices that front the docks at Liverpool. Wide corn plains stretch away to the horizon—stretch away, indeed, along the valley of the Danube until the Euxine is reached. Western Europe has long drawn a considerable portion of its corn supplies from those plains, and nothing but the cost of carriage hindered Hungary from becoming a dangerous rival to the wine-growers of the Gironde. But Hungary is not only more than a land of sportsmen; it is, also more than an agricultural and industrial country. Its political history since 1848 has been such as should reassure those who are inclined to despair of any country as degraded past redemption.

THE DAILY TRIBUNE.—The "Daily Tribune" of Saturday last has a terse and well written article on the "origin and history of the Academy of Music—the Gift Enterprise and the men who made it a success," and some capital articles on other practical subjects which interest the public. Its editor, Mr. Stewart, is most industrious in catering and writing daily to satisfy the insatiable appetites of the reading public, but he is equal to the task, and performs it, flow long his robust constitution will bear the strain, time alone will unfold. No one can form an idea of the amount of physical and mental labor required to conduct a daily journal, which has not a large staff of sub-editors and reporters.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.—In another column we have given a lengthy extract from a speech delivered by the celebrated orator, Mr. B. Bellew, on the advantages possessed by Canada, as a home for emigrants. The eloquent lecturer had only that day arrived at Liverpool from America, and everything was fresh in his memory. He spoke from observation and a knowledge of the country, and undoubtedly did justice to the Dominion of Canada.

Our contemporary the "St. Stephen Journal" has lately published some excellent leaders on the necessity of manufactures on the St. Croix, and pointed out the facilities possessed for such purposes. In unmistakable language our contemporary shows that these advantages, inviting as they are, are not improved as they should be. Want of space prevents our publishing the articles referred to, but we heartily endorse the "Journal's" views, which are applicable to other parts of the country.

The Hon. the Minister of Finance, is expected home this evening by train, and it is to be hoped, he will be privileged to enjoy the pure air of our salubrious climate, and the quiet retirement from the active duties of office, for a few weeks or months.

THE NEW DOMINION MONTHLY for June is well filled with entertaining and instructive reading. Published by J. Dougall & Son, Montreal. Price $1.50 per annum.

The property recently purchased by Mr. Odell is now occupied by the Messrs. McGrotty, who have opened the store with a large and select stock of dry goods.

We understand that Mr. James Bradley has purchased the large wooden building recently occupied by Miss McGrotty, and intends moving into it in a few days, and open the store with a selection of goods suitable to the season.

The refreshing rain of Sunday has had a beneficial effect upon the growing crops. The grass promises an abundant yield.

THE GRAND CONCERTS.—Several persons left here on Monday, in the "City of St. John," to attend the Grand Gift Concerts at St. John.

THE SHORE RAILWAY.—We will refer to this subject in future issues, and aid in our humble way, to forward the project; in the mean time, we invite letters from correspondents upon the matter. The fact is—railways are a necessity of the age, and the enterprise and energy of St. George, will not suffer the work to lag. The Dominion and Local Governments have given large subsidies to other sections of the country, and as St. George is a most important part, it can and will justly claim like considerations.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT SEA.

Wm. Wallace, seaman, of Black's Harbor, while reaving the Topsail halyards of the Schr. "Easter," John S. Maloney, Master, off Mistake Island and Seal Island, on 11th June in the afternoon, fell from the main topmast a distance of 90 feet, falling first on the galley, then on the pump, and then on deck, breaking his right leg in two places and injuring himself very much across the kidneys and cutting his head in two places. Capt. Maloney immediately tore away for Lubeck, and ran all night through thick fog and heavy sea. Next morning brought Dr. Higgins, of Lubeck, on board and had the wounds on the head dressed, and got some powders to quiet Wallace and wash to bathe his leg. He delivered him at the Hospital here on the morning of the 13th. Hopes are entertained that he may yet recover under the treatment of Dr. Gove, and kind care of Mrs. Day, the matrons.

NEW BUILDINGS.—The frame of Mr. J. Watson's house on Edward Street has been raised and boarded in. Mr. Edward Stinson's cottage on Parr Street is a similar state of forwardness; and Mr. Hugh Gurney's cottage on Sophia and Parr streets is also being boarded in.

WELL DONE!—The "Union Advocate," of Newcastle, Miramichi, has a large new Press driven by steam, and has also a great variety of job type of the latest style. We trust the "well done" will be supplemented by a corresponding amount of extra patronage. Such energy and enterprise commands success.

The St. John "Weekly Tribune" has been considerably enlarged and improved. It contains the latest news and telegrams, and a large amount of reading matter.

NEW CARRIAGE.—Mr. Clarke, of the Railroad Hotel, has recently added to his stock of vehicles, a handsome double carriage, finished in the best style, from the manufactory of DeWolfe & Son, St. Stephen. He has also added to his stock of horses, and is leaving nothing undone to prepare for visitors.

SPRING.
'Tis not the murmuring voice of spring,
That stirs my heart and makes me sing,
'Tis not the sunshine rippling o'er That floods with light my chamber floor, But 'tis that long, long years ago When all the world was blushing so, When hawthorns bloomed and violets grew My heart beat soft with love for you.
And now when spring-time comes again With rainbow wreath and pattering rain, Sweet hope,—nursed by the voice of spring, Says—sometime we may meet again.

A good story is told of Hon. David D. Buell, well known on the Pacific coast. One day he went to a bootblack's stand, and seated himself in the chair and elevated his feet. The boy stood on the sidewalk, looking in speechless wonder at the feet displayed. After sitting a while Dave spoke to a friend who was beside him, saying:

George, where the deuce is that boot-black? I've been here half an hour waiting to have him come to black my boots.

Here I be, sir, said the boy, coming from behind the boot.

I didn't see you, said Dave.

As a stout old lady got out of a crowded coach the other day, she exclaimed: Well, that's a relief, anyhow! To which the driver, eyeing her ample proportions, replied, So the ladies think, mum.

Why the Valve Jar is Superior to all Others for Preserving Fruit.

1. Because it is the only one in which the contents can be securely fastened, and cooked while thus secured, without risk of an explosion.
2. It is the only one that is Automatically Sealed, therefore, the only Self-Sealing Jar in the market.
3. It is so simple that no skill is required to use it successfully.
4. It is securely fastened when placed in the kettle, and being immersed, the fragrance of the contents is confined in the Jar, a more perfect vacuum produced and the handling of the hot jars entirely avoided.
5. It is well known that fruit jars which are closed with rigid fastenings burst by fermentation, and the effect upon the closet and surrounding walls is well understood by many housekeepers.
The Cover of the Valve Jar being a perfect safety valve makes an explosion impossible, and entirely obviates every difficulty that exists in other fastenings.
