POETRY.

Grown Wiser.

I used to watch her girlish head Beast over work, the sunlight stole
To touch her wayward hair, and spread A soft encircling aureole.

She looked so slight, so innocent!
I thought at twenty-one or so,
With all-sufficient self content,
I knew so much she did not know.

For men grow old in knowing, taught
By evil things as well as good;
My life was in the world, I thought,
And here in gentle solitude.

But now, at twenty-four, there lies Such wisdom won of joy and pain,
Deep shining in her quiet eyes,
As I may never more attain.

I might not learn it, if I would,
This strange sweet thing she understands;
It came to her with motherhood
And tiny touch of baby hands!

He opened the sitting-room door, Advanced and kissed us affectionately; when he remembered the fact of our existence, James was very fond and proud of us. He was in evening-dress, and was looking very well. He was small, fair, with fine aquiline features and little white hands, of which he was proud.

"Where are you going, my pretty girl?" asked Elsie.

"Going to the opera, ma'am," he said.

"The governor gave me a polite note of invitation from madam this morning.
The fact is, madam's daughters are glad to get your nice little brother to hold their opera-glasses and fans and to behave pretty to them."

You consorted boy! I dare say they won't even look at you."

"I wish they wouldn't. Medusa, the eldest—she was christened 'Olivia,' by mistake—has taken a fancy to me because I am such a sharp lad. So she puts up her eye-glasses and stares at me, and I hear her bawling out to some friend or other that little Verney is a great pet of hers. And she thinks it is the freedom of good breeding."

"What a horrid woman!" cried Elsie.

"Yes, she is not exactly what you would call nice. But she is rich, you see; so all the youth that would be golden if it could be at her feet, and I among the throng."

"Oh, James, surely you would not marry her?"

"My sagacious and lovely Elsie, you are right. I would not; though half the needy young men in London would say it was a case of our grapes, and the other half would call me a fool.
But, for all my appreciation of wealth, I own I should think it an act of deplorable folly to tie myself to a woman like that for the sake of a few thousands that, sooner or later, I shall get without her."

"You have plenty of modest self-confidence, my dear brother," said I.

"Yes, I believe I have," said I.
"Where's mamma?"

We paused, then Elsie said slowly:

"Don't mount the tripod, or you will upset my nerves, and Medusa will bowl me over at a glance."

"I really mean what I say. Read this: we got it yesterday," and she took our mother's letter out of her desk and gave it to him.

He read it through quite calmly, while we sat with our eyes fixed on him to watch its effect; and then he looked at us.

"I see you expect me to destroy my only dress coat by flinging my arms about violently and gasping for air. I am sorry to disappoint you; but the fact is, I am sorely even surprised.
And you may be as indignant with me as you please; but I rather admire her for it. Fancy her having the nerve to leave her without a home!" added I impatiently.

"I should think, on the whole, 'poor Elsie' must be glad to be out of it. She must have known it could not go on for ever. You may think yourselves lucky that it is only concerning Elsie; if she had staid here much longer it might have been right rope dancing in England."

"James, I should not have thought it possible that a man could talk so of his mother!"

"But I mean nothing but what is complementary. I think she has more spirit than any woman I know—even than you. What does surprise me is to see so much indignation in Elsie.

who once, I believe, talked of—may I say it?—going on the stage."

"That was a very different thing," began Elsie, quickly. "I was obliged to earn my own living, and I naturally thought of the thing I believed, and still believe, I could do best. But I gave it up directly when you all opposed it, and took to a profession I detest —and you know best whether it was simply weakness which made me give way."

"Heaven forbid that I should name
'weakness' in the same breath with my Amazonian sisters!" said he, with mock terror. "Well, I must be going; I shall take the train at Earl's Court.
Why don't you open the folding-doors?
I thought you always had them open in summer-time."

"Yes, we do generally," said I carelessly.

"Well, let us open them now," and he stepped forward.

"Stay! I think we have a little surprise even for you. We did not mean to 'upset your nerves' by telling you; but, as you are a prying, inquisitive person, without even the politeness to say, 'I hope I don't intrude,' we will be as open as the day."

"Why, what have you got in there?
Six young ladies hung up by the hair?"

"Come and see, and don't make a noise."

She opened the door and went in.
He followed, and I came last, whispering "Hush!"

The gas was low, but not too low for the invalid to be plainly seen. He was lying with his white face turned a little to the wall, as placidly as ever.
For once James was unmistakably surprised. He looked from the bed to us and exclaimed—

"Guinevere—Elsie—what the—"

Then, stopping short in his speech, he went forward to examine our strange guest more closely. No sooner had he been over him than he started back, crying—

"By Jove, it's young Baruch!"

And I fancied I saw the color come into the white face on the pillow; but in the dim light I could not be sure.

We dragged James back into the sitting-room, and shut the doors again.

"Who is he?" "How did he come here?" We asked each other sharply.

"Never mind who he is yet; how did he come here? repeated James impatiently.

"Come down-stairs and we will tell you," said I, struck by a new fear of being overheard.

We told him the story as shortly as we could.

"By Jove! Talk of mamma being rash! You must be mad. What will people think of you?"

"Who are people? We have hardly any friends, and they know us too well to think ill of us. Nobody else need know that we have been guilty of the crime of saving a man's life."

"But people will know. Young Baruch, too!"

"Who is 'young Baruch'?"

"Why, the Baruch, the only Baruch the man who has put all the city in a ferment, the man whom all London is talking about, the man who tried to set the Thames on fire, and failed."

"Will you leave off talking parables, and explain? We know nothing of the talk of 'all London' or the city. What has he done? Is he a thief, or a madman, or what?"

"He has been called both, and a good many other names besides. He is a son of Sir Gordon Baruch, the member for Sharnon. His father put him with Burton Payne, on the Stock Exchange to keep him out of mischief.
But, instead of chaffing the junior clerks, drawing caricatures on the office blotting paper, and drinking the office sherry with the governor, as a well-connected young man has every right to do, he took it into his head to work Burton Payne, a weak, shilly-shally sort of fellow, who keeps going by having a dip into everything and shuffling out at the right moment, happened to have some papers upon a French irrigation project—a great unwieldy concern, never likely to pay, in my opinion.
Well, young Baruch found these papers, and an evil spirit put it into his head to read them; and another, worse than the first, persuaded him to go into the subject thoroughly. He did so; the thing took his fancy; he got leave of absence from Burton Payne, who was glad to be rid of him I should think, and off he went to the south of France to get a practical knowledge of the thing. He took with him a crack engineer from Paris to whom the thing was new—mark his 'outeness; and then, after talking to peasants, proprietors, and Heaven knows who, and making himself pretty well-master of the subject—then he sends for the French engineers, promoters, etc., who are interested in the matter, and bears what they have to say. All this on his own account, mind. He must be badly off for ways of spending his pocket-money!

"Well, then back he came to London.
Burton Payne had forgotten all about the Crau and the Durance and the Bouche du Rhone and Baruch himself by this time. But our young speculator fastened on him like an octopus.
Payne found himself for the first time forced to go into the subject. He is a weak sort of man, as I told you, and your interesting invalid has the most persuasive tongue in the world; he is so perversely in earnest, well, Baruch persuaded him to throw himself into this project in a manner quite contrary to his usual cat's-paw tactics.
The young one did everything, wrote first-rate prospectuses, and believed himself all he said in them.

"At first the thing looked well.
Baruch's fire and steadiness carried all before them. A company was formed; shares at a premium. But there was one great obstacle—Burton Payne himself. No one trusted him; and, you see, he was the ostensible mover of the thing, though it was pretty well known who pulled the strings. But this clever young Baruch is only a lad, without any influence in the city. The Stock Exchange wouldn't take the thing up; the shares fell; it was evident that it wouldn't work. Burton Payne was delighted to shuffle out of it; but the failure nearly drove Baruch mad.
Meeting after meeting was held, and at last share-holders received their money back. Burton Payne looked glad; over that part of the business. Baruch stood with his face as white as a sheet; somebody tried to chaff him. He looked up and said between his teeth, as if he did not know he was speaking aloud, 'I'll do it yet, in spite of the whole-Stock Exchange!'

"I was there—can't tell you what a sensation it made. He left the room at once, of course, and then there was a hubbub. There were bets made, and little as I think of the scheme, I should be inclined to back him. It is not the horse so much that I like, but the jockey looks like going. I beg your pardon, ladies, for the slang. At any rate, he has got a name for pluck and dash that will be useful to him.
And then suddenly he disappeared.
We heard he was abroad. And now he turns up—here! It takes my breath away."

"When you have got your breath back, I want you to make us a promise," said I.

"Well, what is it?"

"Only not to say a word about this to any one, and not to come here again for a fortnight. In the mean time we will send him away. You have taken a weight off our minds by letting us know what sort of man we have to deal with. He is a brave fellow, and worthy of all the care we can give him."

"You need not ask me to hold my tongue. I am not quite a fool. I will be back in a fortnight to hear how you have managed. And now I must be off as fast as I can; I am late already.
Goodbye, you plucky and little ones;
I confess!"

And so he went.

That night Elsie and I lay awake talking of the invalid and his strange story; and, when we were at last silent, we lay awake still, thinking of him.
Were "hero" and "City-man" really not incompatible terms?

CHAPTER III.

The next day Elsie went to draw at the British Museum. I walked part of the way with her, and reached home at about four o'clock. On opening the sitting-room door, I was startled to see our invalid sitting on the sofa. He rose and came quickly toward me, holding out his hand. His face was lit up by such a strong expression of passionate gratitude that my eyes fell. He began to speak of thanks, stammered, and broke down.

"Pray sit down; I don't think you can be very strong yet," said I.

"I shall never be strong enough to thank you."

"And, after all, my sister and I have no right to any thanks, but must pass them on to Maynard, our servant, and a purse, who took care of you between them," said I. I was anxious to lessen his sense of obligation, and to put our rank hospitality in the light of a matter of course; besides, the apparent suddenness of his recovery had roused suspicion in me. "Maynard tells me the doctor called while I was out.
Was he not surprised to find you so much better?"

"Yes. He said I might get up. So I did; and Mrs. Maynard taught me to walk again, for at first I felt rather unsteady."

"Yes; and I don't think I ought to tire you so much with talking at first.
Perhaps, if I pull down the blinds and leave you a little while, you will go to sleep."

"No, please don't, or you will make me feel that I am in the way. Won't you—practise?"

Then he knew that this was my usual practicing hour! He answered my thoughts.

"Your music has given me the sweetest of dreams lately, and I should like to dream again, if you will not let my presence disturb you."

So I played softly, without much attempt at effect beyond such expression as comes by itself, the andante movements in Mozart's Fantasia-Sonata in A. And, when I glanced at my quiet patient to see if he was asleep, I always found his grave dark eyes fixed upon me. Not caring to play longer under this consciousness, I got up when the piece was finished, feeling that the blood had risen to my cheeks. He assured my thoughts again.

"I am afraid I have offended you by my rude stare. But I have been struck by a resemblance in you to another lady I know, the lady to whom I am engaged, and I have been trying to find out where it lies. Please accept my apology. You have been playing soft music, as most suitable to an invalid's ears; will you now play something stirring, to remind me that I must leave Capua?"

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., APRIL 27, 1894.

A New Street.

We understand that arrangements are completed between the owners of property for the opening up of a road between Main street near Mr. Vaughn's store, to College avenue west of J. W. Caldwell's new house and just east of the school house. This will be hailed by the people of Wolfville as a great improvement and convenience to the town. The necessity for such a street has for years been apparent. The grade is an easy one and will make it a desirable way over the hill south. The land for the street will be given to the town, although it takes a valuable lot off the street, owned by Mr. J. F. Herbin. Very fine building lots will be found on this street, and the promoters of the scheme have kept in view as well the future needs of this growing town in the way of a fine and convenient avenue between what has become the leading sections of the town. Wolfville has grown into the necessity of more than one street. We are glad to find our citizens abreast of the times.

Our valued contemporary, the Bridge-town Monitor, completed its 21st year on the 10th inst., and to commemorate the event has issued a special issue containing portraits of the founders, the present manager, and leading citizens, buildings, etc., in the country. The paper is well printed on good paper and reflects the greatest credit on the publisher. The Monitor is one of the best journals in the Maritime Provinces, and deserves the success it has achieved. We extend our congratulations and best wishes for its continued prosperity.

We understand that Captain Taylor has sold the fine new residence which he erected last summer to Dr. Parker, of Halifax. This property is a very desirable one. The house which was built by Mr. D. A. Munro, is excellently planned and was constructed of the best of material in the most modern style, and does great credit to the mechanic. We are glad to see such men as Dr. Parker coming to Wolfville. Captain Taylor will probably build again in another part of the town.

Simpson, M. C. Smith, D. D. S., M. D., C. H. Miller, M. D., Rev. Robt. MacDonald, Executive Committee.

After a few short speeches, the entire number, accompanied by President Elliot of Harvard University, and President Hoveh, of Newton Theological Seminary, adjourned to one of the spacious dining-rooms of the hotel where an elaborate and sumptuous banquet was partaken of. At the close of this some stirring speeches were made. President Eaton first called upon Rev. Dr. Bogg for some account of the educational institution over which he presided in India. Dr. Bogg in responding briefly outlined the work in which he was engaged. A great demand for religious instruction had come soon after the great revival which had spread over the land some years ago, when 10,000 natives had been converted to christianity in a single year. In endeavoring to meet this demand an institution had been established in connection with which there are at present 120 students. Notwithstanding many difficulties referred to the work has been wonderfully successful.

Prof. McVane in responding to an invitation from the president referred very graphically to several incidents in connection with the college life at Acadia. Although twenty years had passed since he had been in Nova Scotia, the beautiful scenery of Wolfville and its surroundings was still fresh in his memory. He was glad he had gone to Acadia College, for had he never done so he would never have gone to Harvard. The two he thought made a good combination, much better than one alone even though that one were Harvard.

The next speaker was Prof. Tufts. The majority of these present had studied under Prof. Tufts' efficient guidance and it seemed as though the entire company were transferred to one of Acadia's class-rooms when he arose to speak. He received a great ovation. He prefaced the most important part of his speech with some remarks respecting Nova Scotia as a country. He said he believed it was one of the finest on the globe. On its mountains were large forests of excellent timber, while beneath the surface of many of these mountains were stored inexhaustible supplies of coal and iron. The valleys produced the choicest fruit, and the waters which surround her coast yield a harvest more valuable than that of the mines of Peru. In Nova Scotia collegiate education was of three types—that of Kings college was modeled after Oxford, England; that of Dalhousie after Edinburgh and Glasgow, and that of Acadia after New England. The constituency of Acadia had been largely peopled by New Englanders. Men trained in New England had occupied a prominent position on the teaching staff. Acadia received her support from the Baptists, of whom there were about 30,000. Not more than two among this number were worth $500,000, not over thirty were worth $100,000, while about nine-tenths were in moderate circumstances. During the past 20 years this denomination had raised for educational and missionary purposes about $200,000, which was a good sum considering their financial condition; but a debt had also been incurred to the extent of about $40,000. The authorities were anxious to wipe this debt out. In 1874 when he became connected with the college, there were only 32 students in attendance; now there were 110. The equipment of the college and standard of the work done had kept pace with this progressive age. He felt that good work was being done there on a very limited amount of capital. The increase in students and adoption of the elective system of studies in Junior and Senior years necessitated increased accommodation in the way of more class rooms. He hoped to see some steps taken to provide this. As Acadia had sent a large number of men to New England, he thought New England should in justice make some return for it.

Mr. Horr, of the Watchman, being present, was asked to say a few words. He said that he had become acquainted with many graduates of Acadia and found a large number of them had strong predilection for the ministry. He wondered if Nova Scotia was more religious than this country or if this was due to the influence exerted at the college. President Hoveh expressed great pleasure at being present. He said if he had a basket full of large, part of it went out towards men from Acadia, because Newton had received many splendid students from there. Her students had taken as high rank in scholarship with them as students from Brown, Waterville, or any other institution. He paid a very high compliment to Acadia's honored president when he said that he wished he was as good a teacher as President Sawyer. He felt Newton was indebted to Acadia and he hoped the time might come when that debt would be paid off.

The last speaker of the evening was President Elliot. He said he had been much touched by what Prof. Tufts had said, as it recalled incidents in the history of Harvard ever since he became connected with her. Then Harvard's faculty only numbered 14 persons. Her great growth had come since the civil war, as a part of the general development of the country. He thought that Acadia, in sending many of her sons to New England, was only paying off a part of the debt the province owed this country, as Nova Scotia had been peopled more than once from New England. He had always admired those people whose convictions were so strong as to lead them to make sacrifices for them. As to the hope of any college in the future, that will depend upon the growing strength of the community in wealth, moral forces, etc. Harvard has grown that way and so will Acadia. Harvard depends on the character of the men she produces. That is what builds up a college. Prof. Broye is right in saying that each small college is a centre of intellectual life. These diffused small institutions are going to live. They will not be extinguished. They are more durable than any other human institution. Many state institutions in Europe have quickly collapsed. We can safely affirm the permanence of educational institutions. They are second only in stability to the church. His acquaintance with men from Acadia was very similar to that of president Hoveh. An excellent line of students had come from Acadia to Harvard and he hoped it would continue. None were more welcome to their graduate school than the graduates of Acadia. He liked them for another reason. They were apt to be Baptists, and the Baptists were the first in Mass. who recognized the right of independence in religion and who practiced toleration; and they were the first to suffer for this. On the water-gate at Chicago he had inscribed this short sentence, "Religious toleration the best fruit of the last four centuries." The Baptists had powerfully contributed to this.

Several letters were read from alumni in different parts of the neighboring country. Among which we remember those from President Scherman of Cornell University, Rev. W. B. Lockhart, of Manchester, and Rev. Robert MacDonald, of Warren Avenue church, Boston. All expressed deep regret that they were unable to be present. The last named K. D. C. the greatest cure of the age for indigestion.

Death of John W. Harris.

It is with deep sorrow that we record the death of Mr. John W. Harris. In a short time last week the ACADIAN stated that Mr. Harris was suffering from pneumonia. He was around town on Wednesday evening, but was taken ill during the night. From the first very little hope was entertained of his recovery, and the news of his death which occurred Sunday morning at half-past 3 o'clock was not a surprise. So great was his suffering that he had to be kept continually under the influence of morphia up to the last hour, although on Saturday he rallied sufficiently to transact some important business matters. The deceased was widely known and universally respected, not only by those among whom he lived, but also by hundreds who have been entertained at the American House, of which he was the past fourteen years the proprietor, and which he had lately disposed of. He was a kind neighbor and a good citizen, and will be greatly missed in the community. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, and was very largely attended. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Higgins, who was assisted by Revs. Deacon and Mr. J. Freeman. The remains were interred in Willow Bank cemetery. The bereaved widow and surviving friends have the sympathy of all.

The Musical and Literary entertainment in Acadia Villa Hall Wednesday evening was a brilliant success. The evening was beautifully fine and a large audience was present. The programme was long but exceptionally interesting and all must have been thoroughly pleased judging from the numerous encores the performers received. The bulk of the programme was furnished by a female quartet, of Windsor, composed of the Misses Dakin and Coffin. The singing by these young ladies was very pleasing and much enjoyed. The vocal duet by the Misses Dakin accompanied with their guitar and auto-harp, was simply beautiful and produced a burst of applause. As an encore they gave "Hear Dem Bells," which so delighted the audience that they had to appear the third time. Miss May Coffin's reading, "The Tay Bridge," was given in a highly creditable manner and received a hearty encore to which she kindly responded. A quartette from Wolfville, composed of Misses Fitch and Jones and Messrs Borden and Gilmore, with violin, piano, cornet and clarinet in concert, rendered two pieces which every one must have enjoyed. They received most enthusiastic encores both times. Prof. Tait was listened to with great attention while he gave "The Soul of the Violin," and also had to respond to an encore. The whole entertainment was first class. Those who did not attend missed a rare treat. A nice sum was realized and goes towards lessening the debt on the Methodist parsonage. After the concert the performers were treated to a lunch by Mrs. Patterson at "The Cottage."

Our people showed their appreciation of real first-class music by attending the Forbitt concert at Kenville on Tuesday evening. Sixteen went by train and all express themselves as thoroughly pleased with the entertainment.

Miss May Coffin will remain a few days the guest of Mr and Mrs Wright at the parsonage.

Prof. Spinnay will give one of his popular concerts in Acadia Villa Hall next Wednesday evening.

[From Another Correspondent.] The Basket sociable held by Lily of the Valley Division, on the 18th inst, was a great success.

There was a large number of baskets for which there was a good demand, one selling for $2.75. The average price was about $1.00 each, amounting to $46.85. The circle only had three meetings, but under the able management of Mrs Borden the ladies realized over $20.00 from the sale of fancy articles.

The members of the Division wish to tender their thanks to the ladies for their kind assistance, and all who contributed to the success of the sale. The Division is very grateful to Mr Joseph Starr, who could not attend the sale, but contributed $1.00 to the funds.

Messrs J. W. & W. Y. Fullerton will start their steam mill very soon. This mill does a lot of work during the season. Frame and dimension stuff sawed to order and delivered, still having the same old crew everything is carried on with great success. They also have a finer and larger lot of logs than common this year. Their slaves take the cake. Lumbering was done by contract by James Long. Their mill is run successfully by Albert D. Schofield having been in their employ about five years and knows how to run a rotary and can do good work. Mr Fullerton gives employment to about ten men of our locality which they find very beneficial. The farmers and laboring class get a good many extra dollars by the way of milling for Mr Fullerton. We wish him success.

Mr Albert D. Schofield, during the big snow storm, went from his home (Sunken Lake) to Grand Pre with a pair of head yoke oxen and brought over a ton of hay. He started at 2 o'clock a. m. and got back at 4 a. m. next day; twenty-six hours on the road with a wagon, the storm was terrible for so long a drive with an ox team.

Thanking you, Mr Editor, for the space in your valuable paper, thinking you will hear from me again. Remains yours very truly, A MOUNTAINEER.

Death of John W. Harris.

With deep sorrow that we record the death of Mr John W. Harris. In a letter last week the ACADIAN stated Mr Harris was suffering from pneumonia. He was around town on Wednesday evening, but was taken ill during the night. From the first very little was entertained of his recovery, and news of his death which occurred Monday morning at half-past 3 o'clock was not a surprise. So great was his suffering that he had to be kept continually under the influence of morphia up to the last hour, although on Saturday he had sufficiently to transact some important business matters. The deceased was widely known and universally respected, not only by those among whom he lived, but also by hundreds who have entertained at the American House, which he was the past fourteen years proprietor, and which he had disposed of. He was a kind neighbor and a good citizen, and he was greatly missed in the community. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, and was very large. The services were conducted by Rev. De Hughes, who was assisted by Revs. Deacon and M. P. Freeman. The remains were interred in the new Bank cemetery. The bereaved wife and sorrowing friends have the sympathy of all.

Mr Thomas Foster has just completed an excellent boat, the Major O., which is equal if not superior to any on the basin. She was launched on Monday, and her trial trip proved her to be not only a beauty, but a good sailer. She measures 23 feet, water-line, and 7 1/2 feet beam, and was designed by Mr D. R. Munro. All the stock used in her is of the best quality and every effort has been made by the enterprising builder to make her first-class in all respects. Such a boat has been much needed in Wolfville, and we predict that she will prove a paying investment.

Moore's Arctic TREES!

Will have about 2000 more of these than we will require and will sell at 25c and upwards. I prefer them planted within a radius of five miles of our town to make it the Fruit Centre of the Province. All private persons here are put out about 1000 each this spring. Apply early to W. C. ARCHIBALD, WOLFVILLE.
