Peterborough (Mr. Stratton) whose trust and guarantee company, of which he is the master mind, and which he directs and controls, and which would not proceed in a transaction of this kind without his consent, knowledge and direction, is responsible for assisting them in getting illegally a loan in order to raise the necessary deposit to place with the government before the certificate could be issued. I say that Mr. Calvert, who was then Liberal whip, was also to blame and directly responsible for getting this certificate through the Treasury Board. The next hon. member who was directly and primarily responsible for the loss attendant upon the Farmers' Bank is the Minister of Finance himself. Impelled by these unseen influences and in the face of all these warnings, the Minister of Finance cannot escape the responsibility. And yet the Minister of Finance does not show any desire to assist the poor unfortunates who lost their money as shareholders or depositors by appointing a Royal Commission. Is it because forsooth that he or his department, or some of his political friends might be publicly censured for their share in starting this wild concern upon its riotous career? The shareholders have unanimously expressed a desire at their meeting in Toronto for a Royal Commission, and one of their arguments was that a Royal Commission would not be hampered by the strict rules of evidence, and by the strict rules of procedure that obtain in a court of law. There have been one million dollars squandered in the last four years., That money has gone somewhere and the depositors and shareholders and the general public want to know where that money has gone. All the parties who had any share in connection with the promotion and flotation of the Farmers' Bank can, if the Royal Commission be appointed, be put on oath, and all the facts elicited. That Royal Commission would assist the curator to ascertain the facts, and it might probably secure information which would enable the poor people to recover some of their money. I do not wish to go into the personal aspect of the relations between the Trust and Guarantee Company and the Farmers' Bank, but I believe that if the officers of the Trust and Guarantee Company were placed in the witness box before a Royal Commission it would be found that their loans to the Farmers' Bank were illegal and the securities would have to be returned to the curator of the Farmers' Bank and so a large amount of money would be available to relieve the depositors and shareholders from part of the loss they have suffered. I am sure the members of the House will agree with me that the defence of the Minister of Finance in this matter was about the weakest case he has ever made in this House. He told us that the incorporation of the bank was not objected to by the opposition. Why should it? Presumably the men were respectable individuals, and no one would object to the incorporation under ordinary circumstances, and besides it was not Mr. Travers who was asking for the incorporation, it was the provisional directors. Let it be remembered however, that it was Mr. Travers alone who was asking for the certificate. The point was made by the Minister of Finance that the notes that were actually discounted by the subscribers were eventually paid and hence the bank was not wrecked on account of lack of capital. But I submit the answer to that is quite clear, and it is that the bank had been granted a certificate to do business when it was in a crippled condition and the promoters of the bank were forced into speculation and illegal operations in order to try and retrieve the fortunes of the bank, and when the minister says those notes were eventually paid and consequently no capital lost to the bank, I submit that statement is completely answered by the fact that because of the crippled condition of the bank at its birth the manager was forced to engage in illegal speculation which brought loss and ruin to the innocent shareholders and depositors. The Minister of Finance also spoke of the high character Mr. Travers had at that time, but reasonable inquiry on the part of the minister would have disclosed that Mr. Travers had no substantial standing in the community in which he lived. It did not take the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) 24 hours to find out that he would have nothing whatever to do with Mr. Travers. On a Monday morning Mr. Travers' agent came to the member for London, and asked him to be a provisional director and subscriber for stock, but the member for London refused and he went straight into the first branch bank he came to and made inquiries about Mr. Travers, and he decided on the information he then obtained to have nothing to do with the institution. How very easy it would have been for the Minister of Finance to do as the member for London did, and thus prevent the loss, which subsequently fell so heavily upon the shareholders and depositors. I can only explain the opposition of the Minister of Finance to the granting of a Royal Commission of investigation on the ground that he believes that there is something which might come out which would prove to be detrimental to his department, or detrimental to the other members who were connected with the promotion of the bank and the granting of a certificate. If the government refuses a Royal Commission the government must accept the full responsibility for its course. The people of this Dominion, whether financially interested in the Farmers' Bank or not will condemn the refusal of the government to grant a Royal Commission in order to have this whole sad affair thoroughly investigated.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). I would not speak on this question were it not for the evident attempt on the part of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) to make political capital out of this most unfortunate affair. We on this side agree with our hon. friends opposite that a great wrong has been done to many people in the province of Ontario, and we sympathize with the people who lost their money just as sincerely as they do. We have an impression that if it were only to protect the poor people who have lost their money in this transaction we would not have had two days of the valuable time of this House taken up in the discussion of this matter unless they hoped to make political capital out of it. I intend to discuss the matter for a short time along this line. My hon. friends have for two or three months, in fact, ever since the failure of this bank, by insinuation, innuendo and finally by direct statement, attempted to convince the people of this country that the Liberal party in some way or other were responsible for this unfortunate failure. We had hardly assembled until an attempt was made to prove that the Premier himself was in some way connected with it and had received a contribution from Travers, the manager of the bank, in the form of the first bill that was issued. That was exploded by the Premier reading the letter that he had sent to Travers, and we heard nothing more about it. Next we had an attack by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce), in a notice of motion which he gave to this House on the 23rd of January, in which he stated:

I beg to give notice that to-morrow I will move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, to wit, the receipt by ministers of the Crown of gifts of money in the form of testimonials and of the reported contribution to such testimonials or testimonial of a sum of money by one William R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, now in liquidation, said Travers having been convicted and being now under sentence of six years' imprisonment for having falsified returns to the government and for theft of the moneys of the bank.

My hon. friend was not able to prove this insinuation, and all he could do was to quote headlines from such papers as the St. John 'Standard' and the Saskatoon 'Capital.' Next we had a number of notices of motion and questions on the Order Paper by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), and finally we have a debate which has been continued for the last two days. I do not intend at this late hour to go into the details of the case. It is all so simple, it is so easy for hon. gentlemen opposite to be wise after the act, and it is so difficult for people to foresee all these things that I am surprised that my hon. friend from North Ontario would make the ridiculous and wild statements which he has made here to-night, to the effect that the loss which has been entailed upon these poor people can be directly laid to the fault of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Why does he not go back further than that? He must admit that there was only a hundred thousand dollars out of the total of $250,000 of capital stock which was not actually subscribed. That is only $100,000, and what has become of the $1,250,000? Of course, we know it has been lost due to speculation. That is public property and has been for months. My hon. friends come back and say that the Minister of Finance is directly responsible. Some of them go so far as to say that he is directly guilty of the loss of this monev. Why does not the hon. member for North Ontario go back further and say that the House of Commons is responsible? If the House of Commons had not incorporated the bank it would not have been possible to have stolen this $1,250,000. But, I am getting away from the point that I want to discuss. All the facts of this case have been so thoroughly discussed and placed on 'Hansard' that I would only be repeating if I were to undertake to discuss them at length. The fact is before the House that the affidavit of Travers bore the names of the very respectable gentlemen who were the first directors of the bank. I would like to ask my hon. friends if there is one of them who would have considered that Lieutenant-Colonel R. McLennan, of Cornwall, Lieutenant-Colonel James Munro, Mr. Allan Eaton and Mr. Robert Noble, not to mention their bosom friend at that time, one Dr. Beatty Nesbitt, were such characters that it was the duty of the minister to have sent detectives up and down the country to look into their antecedents, their previous history and their records, before he should grant that charter? There is not a man sitting opposite who would not have done exactly what was done with the documents in their possession. It is true that the minister did receive an intimation from Leighton McCarthy that there was trouble about a certain sum of money before the certificate was issued, but he also received notice from Mr. McCarthy that his clients, having received their money in full, there was no further trouble. Mr. McCarthy asked the minister to return to him the documents and papers in connection with the matter. Then the certificate was issued, the bank commenced doing business and unfortunately stole from the people of this country something like $1,250,000. When the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) was addressing this House last evening, he made use of these words:

We have been told—I do not remember whether in this House or outside of it—that the person who was chief whip in the Liberal party in this House at that time introduced Travers to the Finance Minister. It has been established that, shortly afterwards, that chief whip made a loan from this bank—stated by some to amount to $5,000, but, I believe, stated by himself at $3,000, and that loan was charged up to commissions. Something occurred we have not learned yet.

The Finance Minister never would have acted as he did upon the facts we have and no more; there are other facts we have not got yet. The people of this country have a right to know the whole of these facts.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friends say 'hear, hear.' I say 'hear, hear,' because I will give you the whole of the facts.

Mr. BOYCE. All of them?

Mr. CARVELL. Yes. I think that even the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) will admit that, when I have given him all the facts that are set forth in the document in my hands. This was followed by an article which appears in the Ottawa press of this afternoon and which is as follows:

Mr. Crothers of West Elgin declared that at the meeting of the Treasury Board, at which the certificate was granted, there were only three present, and not a quorum. 'Sir Richard Cartwright was not present or the certificate wouldn't have been issued,' said he.

The manager of the bank was introduced by the then chief Liberal whip, and we find that the chief whip a few days afterwards obtained a loan of $3,000 or $5,000 from the bank, which was afterwards charged to commissions.

My hon. friend from North Ontario reiterated that statement. He used the word 'commission.' I do not know what is the source of that word 'commission' but I must say that in the absence of some evidence to the contrary it must have originated in the imagination of some hon. gentlemen opposite who are anxious to make political capital out of this unfortunate transaction. Now, we have had this information for the last two months. It remained for the hon. member for North Ontario to-night to come out flat-footed, bold and open and make the charge which he has made against a former whip, and now a member of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. I think it would have paid my hon. friend from North Ontario to have made some inquiries into the facts of this transaction as far as that gentleman was concerned, before making the violent and vicious attack which he has made upon him to-night without the least foundation in fact and without having made the least attempt to verify the charges and insinuations that he was making. If my hon. friend from North Ontario is—I will not say mean enough, because that, I presume would be unparliamentary—but my hon. friend from North Ontario in making the charges which he has made against a former member of this House, and who now occupies an important position on the Transcontinental Railway Commission, has not done himself justice. let alone making those statements without first trying to find out some of the facts with reference to the matter. If my hon. friend from North Ontario were half as anxious to do justice in this case as to make a vicious, unwarranted, unmanly attack upon a man occupying an important position——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CARVELL—He would have taken some means to have verified this information.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the word 'unmanly' is not parliamentary.

Mr. CARVELL. I will take it back, and I will call it the most manly act which the hon. gentleman has done that I have known since he has held a seat in this House. I propose now to give to the House the whole transaction between Mr. Calvert and the Farmers' Bank, and I have here a statement which I shall read and put on 'Hansard.' I have the original notes, the original letters, all the documents in connection with this matter, which I propose to give the House.

In the first place the certificate was issued on the 30th November, 1906. Almost three years later, on the 9th July, 1909, Mr. Calvert borrowed from the bank the sum of $3,000 and gave his demand note for that amount as follows:

Toronto, July 9, 1909.

$3,000.

On demand after date, I promise to pay to the order of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, three thousand dollars with interest at six per cent, at the Farmers' Bank of Canada.

W. S. CALVERT.

On the lefthand corner of the note, in the handwriting of W. R. Travers, are these words: 'Loan W. R. T.' Then there is this stamp: 'F. B. of C., L. 160, Tor., Ont.'

Mr. LALOR. No endorser?

Mr. CARVELL. No, sir.

Mr. LALOR. Is it usual for a bank to lend money without an endorser?

Mr. CARVELL. I can only tell the hon. gentleman that I get money without an endorser.

Mr. LALOR. I can tell the hon. gentleman——

Mr. CARVELL. Probably your credit is not as good as Mr. Calvert's. I tell my hon. friend that I get money from the Bank of Montreal without an endorser. Now remember that that was on the 9th of July, 1909. On the 22nd of July, or only fifteen days afterwards, Mr. Calvert paid back on that note $750. The endorsement is as follows: '$750 paid on account 22nd July, 1909, and that is initialed 'H'. That went on until the 9th of August, 1909, three weeks later, when Mr. Calvert borrowed $200 more, which was paid him by means of a check, and that brought the principal of the note up to $2,450. That remained as it was until the 1st December, 1909, when the interest was added to that amount of $2,450, and that brought the total amount to $2,510.82. And on that date a new note was given as follows:

Mr. SMYTH. Where did you get that information?

Mr. CARVELL. From Mr. Calvert. I have the original documents here—no copies:

Toronto, Ont., Dec. 1, 1909.

$2,510.82.

On demand after date, I promise to pay to the order of Farmers' Bank of Canada, twenty-five hundred and ten dollars and eighty-two cents with interest at 6 per cent at the Farmers' Bank of Canada here.

W. S. CALVERT.

Mark, again, and I hope my hon. friends opposite will take a note of this. It is in Travers' own handwriting: 'Loan W.R.T.'

Mr. SMYTH. How do you know?

Mr. CARVELL. Because I have Travers' handwriting here, and I compared the two. That was on the 1st December, 1909. On the 3rd January, 1910, or one month and three days afterwards, Mr. Calvert paid on that note the sum of $1,000, and on the 30th of June, 1910, or about six months later, he paid another $1,000. The endorsements on the back of this note are as follows:

$1,000 paid on account, 3rd January, 1910—R

$1,000 paid on account, 13th June, 1910.

That brought the amount down to $568, and on the 30th June Mr. Calvert gave another note. But in order to make the matter complete, perhaps I should first read this letter dated June 16, 1910. On that date the following letter was addressed by Travers to Mr. Calvert:

The Farmers' Bank of Canada,
General Manager's Office,
Toronto, June 16, 1910.

W. S. Calvert, Esq.,

C/o the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 14th instant received, inclosing not for $568. and I now have the pleasure of returning your old notes cancelled.

July 9, 1909, $3,000.
December 1, 1909, $2,510.82.
The latter being a renewal of the former.

Yours truly,
W. R. TRAVERS.
General Manager.

That was followed by a note dated June 30, 1910, for $568, as follows:

Toronto, Ont., June 30, 1910.

On demand after date, I promise to pay to the order of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, five hundred and sixty-eight dollars with interest at 6 per cent per annum until paid at the Farmers' Bank of Canada here, for value received.

W. S. CALVERT.

Again marked in the handwriting of W. R. Travers is the word 'renewal' and also the letter 'L', which I presume stands for loan, 'W. R. T.' There was no endorsement on that note, and it was finally handed over to the Trust and Mortgage Company, and on the 27th of December, 1910, Mr. Calvert received the following letter:

Toronto, Dec. 22, 1909.

W. S. Calvert, Esq.,
Comnr. Transcontinental Railway,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Re Farmers' Bank. We beg to notify you that we are the holders for value of your note as follows:—Date, June 30, 1910, for $568 and interest, due on demand.

This note is drawn in favour of the Farmers' Bank of Canada and by them endorsed to us. Please provide for payment at maturity on presentation of the note.

Yours truly,
JAMES J. WARREN,
General Manager.

That was paid by Mr. Calvert on the 31st December, 1910, and at that time the amount was $585.04. Mr. Calvert has therefore paid the total amount of $3,200 which he borrowed, and $133.04 in interest, and the statement which I have here, and which I want to have on 'Hansard', is as follows:

Farmers' Bank certificate issued November 30, 1906.

Mr. Calvert borrowed on demand note for business—

July 9, 1909, demand note..	$3,000 00
July 22, 1909, paid on account.. ..	750 00
Balance..	$2,250 00
August 9, 1909, received by check..	200 00
Balance due bank..	$2,450 00
January 2, 1910, paid on account.	$1,000 00
June 13, 1910, paid on account..	1,000 00
December 31, 1910, paid on account	585 04
Amount paid as interest..	$ 135 04

There is the whole transaction so far as Mr. Calvert is concerned. I would like to ask my hon. friend—and I am not saying this for the purpose of annoying anybody—if it would not have been more manly on the part of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) and the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) to have gone to Mr. Calvert and have taken some means to find out the details of this transaction without advertising to the world that Mr. Calvert had received $3,000 from the Farmers' Bank for introducing Travers to the Minister of Finance in order that Travers might obtain the certificate? I leave it to the sense of justice and manhood of my hon. friends to say whether it would not have been more manly on the part of these hon. gentlemen to have taken that course, rather than cast these insinuations broadcast for the purpose of aspersing the character of a man who occupies an honourable position and who stands as high in the esteem of the public as any hon. member on that side. Would it not have been more manly to take that course than to try to besmirch his fair name with insulting insinuations and statements without verification? I can only say that if the Tories had been as anxious to see justice done in this case as they have been to bring Liberals into discredit, they would not have allowed Dr. Beattie Nesbitt to escape when he could have been arrested as well as not. I wish to lay these documents upon the table of the House for investigation by any hon. gentleman who wishes to look them over.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I do not intend to offer any excuse for making some observations, even at this late hour, in connection with the failure of the Farmers' Bank and giving some reasons why I deem it my duty to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). The evidence already offered before the House, both by the speeches which have been delivered and by the return which has been laid upon the table of the House, to my mind is sufficient to convince any hon. member of this House who is disposed to look at that evidence in a fair and impartial manner that this transaction is one of the most iniquitous and indefensible in the financial history of this country. I have the special reason for taking part in this debate that the transactions of this bank were carried on in two branches in the riding which I have the honour to represent, and I have personal knowledge of the misfortune, the loss, and the misery entailed upon some of the people of my riding through the notorious transactions of this bank. Why, Sir, during the past four or five weeks, we have seen most strenuous efforts put forth on the other side of this House by hon. members supporting the government, and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) especially, to convince the farmers of this country that that hon. gentleman took a special interest in their welfare and that he had carefully guarded and protected and advanced the interest of the farmer by the recent bargain he has made with the United States. But I venture to say that by his conduct in connection with the granting of a certificate to operate the Farmers' Bank, in the course of its two years' operation, he has made it possible for that bank to rob the farmers of this country of more thousands of dollars than they will be able to make from the reciprocity transaction in their lifetime. I paid very close attention to the remarks offered by the hon. Finance Minister himself, and also to the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in answer to the charge made by the hon. member for Halton in support of his amendment now before you, and I must say that, never, during the ten years I have had the privilege of occupying a seat in this House, have I listened to a more lame defence—if it could be termed a defence at all—than has been offered on this occasion. It is not a defence; it is not even a reasonable excuse, for the conduct that has characterized the Treasury Department in this matter. As I view the evidence that has been offered before this House, there are certain facts that are admitted or are proven beyond any controversy; and upon these admitted or well-proven facts, it appears to me, there is no good reason why the motion of the hon. member for Halton should not be granted. The evidence has established, and no one would undertake to contradict it, that this bank has failed, has ignominiously failed, and that it has entailed loss and hardship upon some of the people of this country that no man can picture in words. That fact stands out clear and beyond dispute. A second fact is patent—that this failure has been caused by reason of the Bank Act not being in fact complied with, and by bad management. I do not think that any hon. member of this House would question that that is the fact. The third point that is made perfectly clear that the possibility of bad management and the possibility of evading the letter and spirit of the Bank Act was through failure to discover a fraud. These are the three facts that appear to me to be established beyond any question by the evidence that has been offered here.

These facts being admitted, the only question remaining for solution is: Where does the responsibility and blame rest? The Finance Minister says that he is not responsible; that he has been deceived. He admits that he has been deceived, but he lays the blame at the door of the manager of the bank, Mr. Travers. The people of this country who have been defrauded out of their money, who trusted this bank, say that they have been defrauded just as the Finance Minister says that he was defrauded. But they say not that it was Mr. Travers who defrauded them, though he has been the direct means, but that it was the act, or want of action, on the part of the Minister of Finance that made it possible to rob them. And there is a fair, square issue between the hon. Finance Minister and the people who have been defrauded by the transactions of this bank. And, if there is one reason more than another why a royal commission should be appointed, and why a royal commission should be desired by the Finance Minister, it is that it will duly try that issue; and if, as he states, he is perfectly innocent and did his duty in connection with this matter, then the royal commission will establish that position for him and free him from any responsibility or any charge.

But if, on the other hand, the royal commission in its investigation of the affairs of this bank, its incorporation, and the granting of the certificate, should arrive at the conclusion that these people could not have been robbed but for the carelessness and negligence of the Finance Minister, then I can understand why the minister would not want a royal commission to be appointed. Sir, in the answer of the Finance Minister to the various speeches that have been made in the support of the motion for a royal commission, the only reason given why this motion should not carry and a royal commission be appointed, so far as I can understand it, is that all the material facts to enable any one to pass a proper judgment upon this question, are now before this parliament. That, it seems to me, is begging the whole question. It has been declared upon the floor of this House during this debate that there is evidence, important and material evidence, to fasten the responsibility for this crime—I cannot call it anything else—to fasten the responsibility for this matter where it properly belongs, that is not yet before this parliament or before the country. I am assured from a source that I deem to be perfectly reliable that in addition to the evidence offered by the leader of the opposition, there is more evidence, and perhaps more important evidence, evidence going to the very root of this transaction, evidence that would be a help to the people who have lost their money, evidence to show where the money of which the people have been robbed has gone to. That is what the people of this country are anxious to find out. Everybody knows that they have been robbed, everybody knows the money has disappeared, everybody knows the money has gone somewhere, but the question is, where, and the only answer is an echo. The evidence will be forthcoming, I have no doubt, if this royal commission is granted, to establish where that money, or a very large proportion of it, has gone.

Mr. MILLER. Does the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Halton ask for an investigation that would show where the money went to? Does it not merely ask that the matter of issuing a certificate be inquired into?

Mr. PORTER. I think if the hon member had read the resolution he would not have needed to ask the question at all. It is plainly given in the resolution itself.

Mr. MILLER. I think not.

Mr. PORTER. I thoroughly believe that the evidence will show where a very large portion of this money has gone. I do not underake to say that any hon. member in this House, any one who has been mentioned, or has not been mentioned, nor do I undertake to say who are those outside the House, who have received this money. But certain it is that somebody has it, and this royal commission would have the effect of unearthing that person or those persons who have it, and enable the people to know what has become of their money.

Now the hon. the Finance Minister and the right hon. the Premier have urged as a reason for not granting this royal commission that the courts are already seized of this matter, and are able to make a full and complete disclosure. I take direct issue with those two hon. gentlemen. The courts are only seized of the individual cases that are before them upon information of some individual, and the very moment in the investigation of these particular cases that counsel on either side asks a question that is not directly pertinent to the issue that is being tried, that moment the court will head off the investigation, and counsel will be told that that is not within the purview of this court. Let me go further. If it is true that Mr. Travers practised a fraud upon the Finance Minister or upon the Treasury Board, and if the Finance Minister and the Premier are anxious that that fraud should be investigated and everything in connection with it made known then why has not the Finance Minister, or somebody in his department, laid an information in connection with that fraud, and then the court could have gone on and investigated to the fullest extent. But nothing of that kind has been done, the courts are not seized of that matter, and it is utterly impossible for them to make an investigation and ascertain the facts.

Now it has been argued by different speakers on the government side of the House that a royal commission can do no more than the courts are doing. Now what can a royal commission do more than the courts of the land can do? Let me summarize. The courts of the land cannot determine whether fraud was practised upon the Finance Minister by Mr. Travers, or whether the Finance Minister, by his negligence and carelessness, practised a fraud upon the people of the country. The courts cannot determine that, but a royal commission can. A royal commission can ascertain who received this money and where it has gone; the courts of justice cannot determine that, because there is no proceeding before them which would enable them to investigate to that extent. A royal commission can determine whether there is anything wrong with the machinery of the Bank Act by which corporations or individuals may obtain charters or whether the Bank Act is not sufficiently clear and strong to prevent such persons from practising fraud upon the Minister of Finance or upon the Treasury Board. But a royal commission having power to bring before it witnesses, documents and all the evidence that can be procured, will be conditioned to offer suggestions and advice in regard to the line of amendment of the Bank Act, that would be of material benefit, and a great advantage to the commission who are considering the revision of the Bank Act. These are reasons why it appears to me that this royal commission should be granted. I can quite understand from the experience of the government with royal commissions why they should not court an investigation by such a tribunal if they can possibly avoid it. There was an investigation by a royal commission into a department of this government not so very long ago, and the results of that investigation were most disastrous to the good name of this government and of that department. After all, the granting of a royal commission asked for by this motion would be very largely an investigation of another department of the government, the Department of Finance. If the facts already disclosed were all the facts, they would seem to me to be an absolute justification for anybody to characterize the conduct of that department as being not only negligent but wilfully negligent in connection with this matter.

If that is so I can understand the Finance Minister not wanting an investigation such as is asked for here. In the time I have been in this House, I do not know of a single case where the Prime Minister has undertaken to defend a Minister of his Cabinet where he has been so lamentably weak as he was in his effort to defend the Minister of Finance. He could not offer a defence of that conduct, he did not pretend to defend what had been done, but he endeavoured to draw the attention of this House away from the real question at issue, and to send forth over the country the idea that this motion was such that it would not produce any good results or any results that would be of advantage to this parliament or to the country. He laboured the point, he went over it two or three times, reducing it down to a single point, and then whittling off that point by saying even if evidence was given on that point it would be of no advantage to parliament or to the country. He had no defence, the conduct of the Finance Minister and the Treasury Board was indefensible. If it were defensible, every member in this House knows that with the astuteness and ability of the Prime Minister he would have offered a better defence than he did to-day. But the right hon. gentleman contented himself with the observations I have just referred to. The Finance Minister was good enough to say that he sympathized, he deeply sympathized with the unfortunate people who had lost their means in connection with the transactions of this bank. It is too late in the day for the Finance Minister to offer his sympathy. Sympathy is a good thing, it is a noble sentiment in any misfortune, but when the sympathy is offered by the very man who has made it possible to inflict the injury upon the person with whom he is sympathizing, the sympathy comes with very poor grace, it is gratuitous and will not be received with any kind of favour by those people who have been injured.

Speaking of the evidence of fraud that was in his possession, reference has been made to the fact that the letter of Mr. McCarthy was withdrawn or returned to him on the 7th day of November and that the meeting of the Treasury Board at which this certificate was granted was not until November 30. Those two facts being proved, if Mr. McCarthy's letter and exhibit had been returned to him, then it was impossible that they should have been before the Treasury Board on the 30th of November. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) yesterday asked whether the endorsement on the writ and Mr. McCarthy's letter were before the Treasury Board and the answer, as I recollect it, was that no doubt the whole matter was generally discussed. The Finance Minister could not say at the moment what particular document or matter was discussed.

In the face of all that written evidence that he or his deputy had returned the documents to Mr. McCarthy on November 7, he knew perfectly well, or if he did not he should have known when he made that answer yesterday, that those documents were not and could not be before the Treasury Board on November 30.

The Minister would have the House believe that he was very anxious that no step or proceeding should be taken in this matter unless he was assured that everything was perfectly legal and right. He takes the precaution to send a letter to the Minister of Justice asking for his legal opinion on this question. This bank was applying for incorporation. It filed in connection with the application for a certificate what the Finance Minister thinks now were necessary and sufficient documents. That was on one side, but the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) had raised objection on the other side, and Mr. McCarthy had raised objections backed by a petition in writing by sending to the Minister a copy of the endorsement upon a writ giving all the particulars. There were the two positions. The bank with the evidence in support of its application and the opponents of the application with the evidence in support of their objection. With all this in his possession what does the Finance Minister do? He writes to the Minister of Justice for his legal opinion, and he gets a reply from the deputy Minister. You will notice that this reply is dated November 28, 1906. Mr McCarthy's documents had been withdrawn on the 7th. The letter of the Minister of Finance is of the same date. It will be observed that when the Finance Minister wrote to the Minister of Justice for a legal opinion he did not have and could not have the evidence that he had before in opposition to the application of this bank, yet he writes and incloses certain documents. The letter of the Deputy Minister of Justice shows clearly what these documents were He says:

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, and of the inclosed papers, being the application from the Farmers' Bank of Canada for a certificate to commence business, under sections 13-17 of the Bank Act, and papers in support thereof.

Now, it is remarkable to say the least that with the evidence in support thereof, and with the evidence in opposition thereto, the Minister of Finance who is anxious to obtain a valuable opinion upon the whole case, withheld—because I cannot term it in any other way—withheld the evidence in opposition to the application and simply inclosed the evidence in favour of the application. That such was the case, and that the Department of the Minister of Justice understood it perfectly well let me read the next sentence of his letter:

You ask me to advise you if on the papers submitted such certificate may legally issue.

Well, the deputy Minister of Justice had not a blessed thing before him, but the evidence in support of the application, and the Minister of Finance has declared to this House that these documents were the documents required by the Bank Act, and were sufficient for him and he sent these documents along to the Deputy Minister of Justice, and upon these papers submitted, which are all in favour of the application and are in compliance with the requirements of the Bank Act, he asked: Can I issue this certificate? What sort of an answer could he have expected, but the answer he got. The Deputy Minister of Justice wrote:

In reply, I have to state that the statements in the statutory declaration of Mr. Walter R. Travers are sufficient, if they are accepted.

Apparently the Deputy Minister of Justice had in some manner or other been advised or had heard of there being some evidence in opposition to this certificate being granted, and he very carefully guards his action, and his advice by reciting in his letter that upon the evidence submitted, if you believe that evidence he says to the Finance Minister, then you may issue the certificate. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is asking too much of any hon. member of this House, I think it is asking too much of the people of this country to believe that that written evidence discloses all the facts in connection with this transaction. I will not put it stronger, but I think I am perfectly justified in putting it thus strong: That there must be back of this, something that a royal commission would unearth, and which I think the people of this country are entitled to have uncovered, and the fullest disclosure made of it. The Minister of Finance said that it was not possible now that any relief could be obtained; the certificate having been granted, the bank having gone into operation, these frauds had been perpetrated, the people had lost their money, and there was no redress. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if before he granted that certificate he considered what the consequence of improperly granting that certificate might be. If he did consider, it would have occurred to him at once that the very thing that has happened here might happen unless he exercised the care that in his position he should exercise, and unless he safeguarded the interests of the people of this country. And in view of the fact that he did not make such inquiry, that he did not exercise the power and authority he possessed, and that he entirely ignored or overlooked the rights of the people, I say to put it mildly, that the Minister of Finance for that alone deserves the censure of the people, at all events of those who have lost their money. Now, Mr. Speaker, I intended when speaking upon this matter to call attention to one or two particular cases which have arisen in the constituency I have the honour to represent. Inasmuch as so few illustrations of the wrong-doing of this bank have been so far offered to the House, I think I would be justified even at this late hour in mentioning one or two of these cases which

I know from my own personal knowledge. In one case a widow whose former husband was an employee on one of the railways was killed in a railway accident, and she was left with two small children, four years and six years old respectively, absolutely penniless. An action was brought on behalf of the widow to recover compensation from the railway company, and the litigation was successful, and the railway company paid $2,500 as compensation. A cheque from the railway company came to my office on a Saturday, and the widow was written to to come in for the cheque. She came in on Monday a little before three o'clock in the afternoon, and when I handed her the cheque I said: You ought to put this money in some bank where it would be safe until you find an opportunity of investing it. I advised her to put the money in the Bank of Montreal. Her answer was that the manager of the Farmers' Bank had heard in some way or other that she was getting this money, and he came to her house and asked her if she would not deposit it in the Farmers' Bank. She said she had promised him to do so, and that she must keep her word with him. I handed the cheque over a few minutes before three o'clock, and she carried it three blocks down the street to put it into the Farmers' Bank. The Farmers' Bank was closed for the day in less than fifteen minutes afterwards, and the doors never opened again, and the widow lost her money. And, Sir, all this misfortune was brought on her by the want of caution, to put it mildly, of the Treasury Board in granting that certificate to the Farmers' Bank. Let me give the case of two farmers for whose welfare the Minister of Finance is always so solicitous. These two neighbouring farmers in the township of Sydney had purchased their farms two or three years ago, paying a high price as the land there is very valuable. Last year the Canadian Northern Railway Company came along, and ran through these two farms, and expropriated the right of way, and in due course the compensation was paid to the farmers by the railway. The local solicitor for the Canadian Northern railway who is also the solicitor for the Farmers' Bank, issued cheques to these farmers for $750 each upon the Farmers' Bank, and they took the cheques over to the bank, and it was then after banking hours, and the cash was locked up. They left the cheques there on deposit until the bank opened next morning when they were to come and get the money, but the next morning came and the farmers came, but the bank was closed and has never opened since, and the money they received as compensation for their land was stolen in this way. In view of all these facts is there any possible justification or reason why the government ought not to grant the motion that has been made by my hon. friend from Halton? It surely cannot be on the ground of expense, it surely cannot be on the ground that the people of the country do not want it. What is the reason? If there is any good and bona fide reason, why it ought not to be granted, then, for heaven's sake, let somebody on the government side of the House get up and tell us what it is.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, I regret that the debate yesterday was not listened to by me; I was absent but I have had the pleasure and privilege of reading the speeches of both sides and possibly I have obtained more good from that than if I had been present and listening. There is very little left for me to say. One of the points in connection with the matter is that the government seem to have given up their love for royal commissions. I cannot say what has come over the spirit of their dreams. They have always been very ardent supporters of royal commission until the present moment. Mr. Courtney, who has distinguished himself on one royal commission, I have not the slightest doubt, would be perfectly willing to act upon another royal commission to investigate matters in connection with the Farmers' Bank and possibly the scope of the inquiry might be enlarged so as to take in general matters in connection with the banking system of the country in view of the necessity of the new bank law which is to be brought in.

The county that I have the honour to represent was unfortunate in having three of these branches located in it, one at Dunsford, one at Kinmount and one at Lindsay. The depositors there have lost upwards of $106,000. Therefore it is needless for me to say to this House and the country how deeply these localities are affected. I may say that it was in the town of Lindsay that the final collapse of the Farmers' Bank was brought about by the exposure made there during a trial which had been instigated by this man Travers. He secured the arrest of three young gentlemen in connection with one of the banks for warning customers of the Farmers' Bank that in their opinion their money was not safe in that institution. He had these men arrested and after long preliminary proceedings the trial came on and the exposure was made showing that Travers was the real criminal instead of the three young gentlemen that were sought to be implicated. It was as a result of that trial and the exposure which took place that the doors of the Farmers' Bank were closed.

In supporting the motion for this royal commission I do so on these grounds. The charter was obained in the ordinary way; that counts for nothing. Following that was the issue of the certificate and if all the conditions prescribed by the Bank Act necessary for the issuing of the certificate were complied with, then the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the government have nothing to fear from the granting of a royal commission and, in furtherance of the same idea, the government are in no wise responsible for anything in connection with the Farmers' Bank. But, if the government did not take due precautions, if the government have been negligent, if the government have been more than negligent, if they have committed a blunder—and we are told that a blunder is worse than a crime —then I say that it is the duty of the government not only to grant a royal commission, but, I go further and say that the people who were the victims of this failure have a very just claim against the treasury of this country for the loss that they have sustained. We find that the certificate was not properly obtained. More than that, the Minister of Finance admits that he was notified by Mr. McCarthy to investigate the information which had been furnished him. The Minister of Finance says that Mr. McCarthy withdrew his objection. Will the Minister of Finance say that Mr. McCarthy withdrew the facts of the case? What were the facts of the case? That notes were being given for subscriptions to stock and that subscriptions to stock had been raised in that way. These were the charges that were made to the Finance Minister. The mere fact that Mr. McCarthy had been settled with and that this settlement had removed his objection did not remove the facts of the case at all. In other words, Mr. McCarthy's statement shows that fraud was being perpetrated in a certain case and it was the duty of the Minister of Finance to see if fraud was being perpetrated in other cases. He should have ordered an investigation into the matter. Had he done so the true condition of affairs would have been discovered, the certificate would not have been issued and these innocent people would not have been swindled. I shall not take up the time of the House further than just to present briefly this view of the case. It has been well argued all through. I support the motion of my hon. friend calling for a royal commission in order that there may be a full investigation into the affairs of the bank with the view of ascertaining, as has been said, where these funds have been disposed of and how they have been disposed of and of ascertaining still further whether some of them may not be honestly and fairly reclaimed in order to lighten the burdens of the poor people who are the victims in this transaction. I support it also in order that evidence may be obtained which will be of great assistance to us in moulding the new Bank Act, and still further I support it on the ground that I am satisfied that if a royal commission is granted the matter will be brought home so closely to the government and the negligence of the government in issuing this certificate will be so clearly shown that the people concerned will have a just claim against the government for the loss that they have sustained.

Reference has been made to the negligence of the Ontario government in not capturing Beattie Nesbitt. I may say as one who has more or less acquaintance with that gentleman that the moment I saw his name as president of the bank I warned every friend that I encountered to have nothing whatever to do with the institution. I do not see what is the cause of this government's being so solicitous about saving Beattie Nesbitt. They were not always so. Is there not something else behind this refusal to grant a royal commission, and if the government are true to their former objection to and suspicion of Beattie Nesbitt I should imagine that they would use their influence in order to secure this royal commission so that Beattie Nesbitt may be properly exposed. All the evidence that we have is from newspaper scraps, police court records and even the records of superior courts and localized references. A cohesive statement cannot possibly be obtained from such sources as these, and a commission is necessary in order to give the members of this House and the people of the country an opportunity of forming a correct conclusion as to the facts in connection with the whole case. In other words, the evidence submitted thus far is simply scrappy. We have no systematic history, no systematic report, no systematic record of the matter at all. I shall not detain the House farther as it is late. If the fraud perpetrated had been traced up and discovered at the beginning the certificate would not have been secured, the organization of the bank would not have been permitted, and this loss would not have been inflicted upon the public. Let the government issue this royal commission. I maintain still further and I am prepared to stick to the position that the government is morally bound. if not legally, to recoup the people who have been swindled all over the country.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I am very reluctant to prolong this debate and would not think of doing so but for some observations made last night by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) and the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden). I do not intend to discuss at all the disposition which we ought to make of this motion by our votes. In that respect I have nothing to add to what has been said by my hon. colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. I think that they both have shown conclusively that no advantage can accrue to any one in this country by the carrying of the resolution moved. But with regard to the other subjects which have been discussed, and especially with reference to the charges made of inattention to duty or negligence on the part of the Treasury Board and particularly on the part of the Minister of Finance, I want to say a word. I speak with the more freedom on that subject as I am not, and never have been, a member of the Treasury Board. I do not know the way in which the business transacted by that board is carried on except to the extent to which, in common with other members of the government, I see the results of that business in the reports from that board to the Privy Council. But with reference to the manner in which this granting of a certificate to the Farmers' Bank was carried out and with reference to the circumstances, which, it is said, called for some additional investigation or inquiry by the Treasury Board and especially by the Minister of Finance, it seems to me that the reasoning which has been advanced by the hon. member for East Hastings and the hon. leader of the opposition was pressing the case against the Minister of Finance and against the Treasury Board far beyond anything which the facts would justify. I say nothing with reference to the unfortunate difference of recollection which exists between the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and my hon. colleague, the Finance Minister, as to the substance of conversations which took place between them. But they were speaking, it is to be remembered, of occurrences which took place some four years and more ago. I think I am saying only what every man on this side would say with me, that there is no member of this House on either side who is held in more universal respect than my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), and I am certain that every one who heard what he said or has read it in 'Hansard' is convinced that my hon. friend felt to be true every word he uttered. I certainly do not in the least degree doubt what he has said in that respect. I do not think it is possible to reconcile the statement of that hon. gentleman with that of the Minister of Finance. All I can say is that I give equal credence to what my hon. colleague has said and I believe that each of these hon. gentlemen spoke, to the very best of his recollection, the exact truth as he remembered the conversations in question. But it does not seem to me that we need, if we were sitting as jurymen trying to decide what the facts may be, come to any conclusion in our own minds with regard to the difference of recollection which exists between these two hon. gentlemen, because if every warning which the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) says he gave the Minister of Finance actually took place, just as the words were repeated before this House, it does not carry the matter certainly any farther, and in my judgment does not carry it as far as what afterwards came from Mr. Leighton McCarthy and the information given by the writ of summons, a copy of which was sent the Minister of Finance.

It is with reference, in the first place, to the contents of that writ of summons and the letters of Mr. McCarthy and the observations with regard to these circumstances which were made by my hon. friends the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for East Hastings, that I want to say a word. Most of us, perhaps every one of us, has some acquaintance with writs of summons and the endorsements thereon, and many of us—at any rate those of us who are lawyers—know something about the way in which such charges or allegations of fact are prepared. It is the business of the lawyer, when his client comes to him and instructs him to institute legal proceedings, to examine carefully the statements his client makes and put upon paper the legal result or the summation of what his client has told him, in the form of legal phraseology, for endorsation on the back of the writ. When a writ of summons is issued, in Ontario at any rate, no verification of the statement made upon it is required from the person sueing or from the attorney by whom that writ of summons has been issued. So long as the allegations are not scandalous, irrelevant or impertinent in their character, the lawyer is at perfect liberty to frame his charges in exactly the language he may see fit to use, and I need not say that it is but ordinary prudence on the part of any practising solicitor, in preparing a writ of summons, to cover if possible all the ground that may by any chance be open to him and not leave untouched anything there may be even a hint or a hope of his being able to prove when the case comes to trial. I do not mean for a moment to say that no one should take otherwise than as serious the charges made in any legal document which may come to his notice, but I do want to impress upon every one that no one reading the lawyers allegations upon a writ of summons or other legal document is bound to accept those statements as being statements which necessarily will afterwards be established by proof. Let me give an illustration which may come home to most of us. There is probably no member of this House who has not seen an election petition. Fortunate is the man who has not seen his own name figuring upon such a document. Now any one who has read the ordinary election petition, which is prepared by the petitioner's solicitor and which, bear in mind, is not allowed to be put on the files of the court until it is verified by the sworn statement under oath of the petitioner who seeks to unseat his successful antagonist—no one who has ever read the general allegations therein made of fraud and wrong-doing with which every election petition bristles, will fail to understand just how much information is to be had from such a document and how much confidence is to be placed in it.

The way in which an election petition is ordinarily prepared is by the solicitor—if he does not utilize some printed form that has been given to him for the purpose—sitting down and taking up seriatim the clauses of the Controverted Elections Act and charging that the sitting member has, by himself or by his agents, with or without his own knowledge and actual consent, been guilty of breaches of each one of these sections. That is a much longer story than it would be if the decalogue were taken and a man were charged seriatim with having broken each and every one of the ten commandments. And just exactly as much dependence is to be placed upon what is called the 'special endorsement,' if you please, on the back of the ordinary writ of summons. I make no point of the circumstance that the allegations in the writ of summons are not verified by affidavit. I think that experience has demonstrated that the requirement of an affidavit verifying the statements in an election petition is the merest form and farce; and, although there is an affidavit there, none the less every election petition contains wholesale charges of fraud, charges of corrupt practices, charges, it may be, of perjury and personation for which, when the case comes to be investigated, even after, it may be, weeks of trial, it is demonstrated, there never was any shadow of foundation in fact. Now, when I look at the endorsement upon the writ of summons, a copy of which was sent to the Finance Minister in connection with this matter, I find in it, I think, just the same sort of wholesale declamation that is ordinarily to be found in the average election petition. It is all very well now, in the light of subsequent events, in the light of the knowledge which, years later, has become public—it is all very well now for any one to single out a few lines here and a few lines there in this long averment of wrong doing and fraud on the part of those organizing this bank, and say: Look at that; is not that a specific allegation which should have put any one reading it upon his guard and which was the most distinct possible warning to him that this was all wrong? If the writ had been issued making one specific charge, I grant it would have been a circumstance to which considerable attention would have been drawn. But when there is, as there is here, literally a volume of general averment of fraud of every kind and description, I think the very wholesale nature of these charges would at once lead one to think, this is the kind of action in which, very probably, the plaintiffs have but little to go upon and are seeking by some possibility to find something illegal or wrong in the course of the organization of this proposed institution.

Mr. PORTER. May I ask the Minister of Justice a question? Does he think Mr. Leighton McCarthy to be a lawyer who would endorse a writ as this writ is endorsed without having some evidence upon which he believed the charge to be established?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I think I may answer what I understand to be the question of the hon. gentleman in the Irishman's fashion, by asking my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) if he never prepared a writ of summons in the course of his legal practice that he would not be willing to swear to the truth of? I say it is an every day matter in ordinary practice for a solicitor to endeavour to cover every possible ground of objection which will support his case.

Mr. PORTER. The minister has asked me a question, and I will answer him by saying: 'I never did to my knowledge, prepare a writ to go out of my office, when I did not believe I had evidence to support the charge made. And I do not believe that Mr. McCarthy would do so either.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. Under the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to accept the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Porter's) statement. Now, I say, any ordinary business man reading the allegations with which this writ of summons is replete, could come, I think, to no other conclusion than that here was an action in which, for some reason or other—probably for good reasons if you please—plaintiffs who had subscribed to certain shares of stock in this bank rued their act, wished to get out of it, and had gone to a lawyer to advise them and to issue a writ beginning a suit to relieve them from their responsibility. That is the purpose of the suit and what I should consider the material allegation in this long narrative of charges of every kind of illegality and fraud is the statement that the subscriptions of these particular individual plaintiffs were procured by misrepresentation and fraud. Now that is not, at all events, so uncommon a thing in ordinary business affairs as to excite much suspicion. I have known—and I should be quite able on very short notice to show to any hon. gentleman interested—cases reported in the law books—where men who had subscribed for sums of greater or less size for the building of a church were afterwards sick of it, tried to get out of it, brought suit to be relieved, or defended suits that were brought against them to collect. It is not at all an uncommon thing for a man who has appended his name to some subscription list, whether for shares in a proposed company, for shares in a bank, or to an application for life insurance, to seek to get out of his contract, and, in so doing, to charge that there had been grave misrepresentations or frauds inducing him to give his name to the agent who had canvassed him. That is the nature, speaking in a general way, of this suit which was brought. They have gone on to specify particular misrepresentations which, whoever sought their subscription is said to have made to them, and they have also added what I have spoken of as these general charges of irregularity and infraction of the provisions of the Bank Act in different specified matters and in further matters that are not specified.

Well, that writ having been issued, and a copy of it having been given to the Minister of Finance, some days later the solicitor for the plaintiff tells the Minister of Finance: My client's claims are satisfied, I am not proceeding further with this suit, and I withdraw any objections which I have made to your acting in this matter of issuing the certificate to the Farmers' Bank, just as you would have done if I had never intervened in the case. But that is not all. This action is disposed of by the court, is formally dealt with by a judge of the court, his judgment is upon record and his judgment and the decision do—what? Not declaring that the allegations are established, not declaring even that there was any attempt to prosecute the action to a hearing, or to make good these charges of fraud, but on the contrary, showing on its face that the action is dropped, and being dropped, is dismissed out of court. Now, do not let me be misunderstood as seeking to convey the impression that the formal judgment of the court indicates at all that the charges have been disposed of. I am not pretending anything of that nature. The judgment speaks for itself, and is quite distinct. The action is formally dismissed because it is not being further prosecuted, because no proof is being offered in support of the charges which have been made in the writ. And the reason for it all is made plain upon the face of the judgment, the reason for it is simply that these nine or ten subscribers, or whatever number they may be, have been relieved of their subscriptions, not that they have been bought off, as it has been put in the course of this debate, not that they received hush money, not that they have done anything which is discreditable, but simply that some one has come forward and said: I will take your place, transfer your rights to me, I will buy your shares, I will pay you back the money you have paid in, and I will relieve you of the matter out and out. That is all they wanted. They have brought the suit, they have gone to a lawyer only to be rid of their subscriptions, some one comes to them and says: Very well, you are not content with your proposed investment, I am; you have no confidence in this institution, I have; I will take your place, here is your money back. There was nothing immoral, nothing wrong or reprehensible in their saying: Very well, that ends it so far as we are concerned. No more is there anything wrong, or suspicious, or in any way reprehensible in the man who had handed them back their money and bought out their rights, saying: For my part, I am content, I do not want this suit to go any further. It may be I have no evidence of the truth of these averments, but whether I have or have not, I, having bought out those plaintiffs' rights, now standing in their shoes, and being content with the position of affairs, say that this suit is to stop, I am not going to invest any more of my money in it. And taking that position, going before the court and stating that it is not proposed to substantiate these averments, the court deals with the matter by declaring accordingly that the action is dismissed. Now, in that state of matters how can it be argued that the whole matter of this suit, and of whatever information, or warning, or ground for suspicion the statements in the writ beginning that suit might have caused to the mind of any reader, was not absolutely at an end, withdrawn, put an end to as completely as though it had never existed? If one wanted to dwell upon the letter of the thing, the suit is disposed of by the court dismissing it, that is the form it takes, that is the actuality and the substance of it. But in those circumstances I think the argument that is attempted to be made by the hon. member for East Hastings, and to a less strong extent by the leader of the opposition, is one that is not well founded.

Now, I want to say one word upon the connection of the Department of Justice with this matter, in which some hon. gentlemen, and especially the hon. member for East Hastings, find ground for additional grave suspicions. Apparently it is thought to have been a suspicious circumstance that the Department of Finance should ever have referred to the Department of Justice in this matter. Well, I am very sure that hon. gentlemen opposite who have themselves been in charge of departments of government, would never seek to convey any such impression to the House. I will admit that when I first took charge of a department of government as Postmaster General, having as I thought, enough legal knowledge to attend to any legal difficulties which arose in connection with the business of that department, it seemed to me there was no sense in my referring to the Justice Department. I thought I could be my own lawyer, and I tried it for some little while, until I found that was not the course of business. It is very well, I think, that it is so. Our statutes put upon the Minister of Justice the obligation, the duty, of advising other departments of government and no minister other than the Minister of Justice, though he may be a better lawyer than the Minister of Justice is, ought to be expected to take the responsibility of determining for himself legal questions when there is a proper official of the government appointed for that duty. It was the ordinary course of business for the Department of Finance to refer to the Department of Justice the question whether or not the papers which were presented in this matter were regular and in form, whether the requirements of the Bank Act seemed to have been sufficiently complied with on the face of these papers. That is just what the Department of Justice was asked for, and nothing else. There was nothing extraordinary, nothing out of the ordinary course of business, in the answer to the Finance Department in that respect being limited to the one question whether or not the papers which were presented in this case seemed to be regular, and whether or not, upon the face of them, the requirements of the Bank Act had been complied with. Exception seems to be taken by some hon. gentlemen to the wording of the answer which was made over the signature of the Department of Justice. I cannot remember at this moment whether the matter in any way came before me personally; I suppose very likely it did not. In the ordinary distribution of the daily business of the Department of Justice, it is only in the case of matters upon which there seems to be some advantage in a consultation between the deputy minister and myself, that I would know personally anything of a reference from another department of the government. This matter was largely of a formal character, requiring simply an examination of the provisions of the Bank Act, with the papers in question before the lawyer who made the examination, and the verification of the fact that the requirements of that statute had been met. The deputy Minister of Justice writes in reply what my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) considers a very careful letter, as though for some reason or other something on the face of the papers excited some suspicion in the mind of Mr. Newcombe, and he was guarding himself at the expense of the Finance Department, instead of doing his duty as he would have done if he had seen any reason in the world for calling attention to something specifically. He writes:

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, and of the inclosed papers, being the application from the Farmers' Bank of Canada for a certificate to commence business under section 13-17 of the Bank Act, and papers in support thereof.

And then the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) breaks off the reading of the letter to make this observation:

He is very careful to repeat their question, he takes no responsibility.

The letter proceeds:

You ask me to advise you if on the papers submitted such certificate may legally issue.

That repetition of the question propounded every lawyer who has ever drawn an opinion for a client or any other correspondent knows is simply the ordinary custom of the profession. I am astonished at my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). It is the commonest thing in the world for the lawyer who is preparing an opinion to state on the face of his opinion, even although it is but a repetition in so many words of the letter, in which is asked the opinion, what that question is; and so Mr. Newcombe has, in this instance, pursued only the ordinary everyday practice which certainly prevails in his method of discharging the duties of his office in taking the course which he did. He proceeds in reply:

I beg to state that the statements in the statutory declaration of Mr. Walter R. Travers are sufficient, if they are accepted, to show compliance with the statutory provisions, and that the evidence thus afforded is such as the Treasury Board may lawfully accept under the Act, and thereupon issue to the bank a certificate under section 14 of the Act.

The presence in that letter of the phrase 'if they are accepted,' is seized upon here as indicating in the mind of the writer some question of whether those statements ought to be accepted. I have not referred to Mr. Newcombe in the matter; I do not suppose that at this day he would have any recollection independently of the papers of the circumstance of writing the letter in question. I speak of the words which he has used simply from my general knowledge of the way in which such legal opinions would be framed either in the Department of Justice or in the law office of any ordinary practitioner, and I say that to my mind there is nothing in the least degree remarkable, nothing in the least degree worthy of comment in the language which Mr. Newcombe has chosen in which to express his opinion. He was not pretending to pass upon the truth of the statements in the papers that were submitted to him, he was not asked to do so, he was simply saying in so many words: That is for the Treasury Board, it is for the Treasury Board to say whether or not they will accept these papers as evidence sufficient to their minds upon which to act under the provisions of the Bank Act. The Bank Act does not require an affidavit, it requires simply that the board shall be satisfied by affidavit 'or otherwise' that all the requirements of this Act and of the special Act of incorporation of the bank have been complied with. It might well be that the board would be satisfied without any affidavit. They might be satisfied by the evidence of documents other than affidavits. They might conceivably be satisfied by statements verbally made, although I doubt if there has been any instance in actual practice in which the board have been satisfied without verification of details on affidavit or statutory declaration. But in this case what Mr. Newcombe was saying was plainly, simply: I pass upon the legality of the papers, I give you my opinion that the requirements of the Act have been met so far as the face of these papers is concerned. I say nothing one way or the other about the contents of the papers, as to that the Treasury Board is to be the judge. It may be that the board will not accept these papers as sufficient evidence under the statute; it may be that the board will call for affidavits from somebody else. This is from the general manager. It may be that they will ask something from the president, it may be that they will make further inquiries or it may be that they will not do so. Upon all that Mr. Newcombe was not purporting to express the slightest opinion one way or the other. The use of the expression 'if they are accepted' simply indicates that he was not expressing any opinion one way or the other upon that point.

In reference to this whole matter—I do not mean by that what has taken place in this House yesterday and to-day, as much as the failure of this bank and the circumstances of fraud and of crime which have surrounded its operation—I can readily understand how any man, even if he were a man of very different make-up than I think my hon. friend the Finance Minister is, would feel greatly troubled under the heavy weight of responsibility, although what he did was done for the best in the ordinary course of business and in the exercise of his very best judgment under the circumstances as they appeared to him at that time. I can understand how any man placed in the position in which he is now placed, after the event, when it is so easy forevery one to be wise, and especially under such attacks as have been made upon him here in the course of this debate should go away with a feeling of great discomfort that perhaps if he had done something different, if he had acted in some other way than that in which he did, the fortunes and the property of many people might have been saved; but speaking for myself, at any rate, and I think speaking for the majority of the members of this House, I have only to say that I cannot see in the circumstances which have been disclosed here anything in respect of which he should have any feeling of self-condemnation or anything upon which it can be properly said that he has in the very least degree forfeited the confidence which we as members of this House have always felt in him.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). While my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) in the speech which he has just closed was expounding what he believed to be the law upon this subject, I could not but think of the lines of Shakespeare:

> In law what plea so tainted and corrupt,
> But being seasoned with a gracious voice
> Obscures the show of evil.

I have the utmost respect for the legal opinion of the Minister of Justice. At the bar of Ontario he was a shining light. He brought to bear upon the investigation of those cases with which he was entrusted high talents; but I am constrained to the opinion that since he has become Minister of Justice these great talents and that bright intellect have been clouded and warped by contact with the political squabbles of the day. We have seen time after time where the Minister of Justice has allowed his legal opinions and his legal judgment to be swayed by the political exigencies of the matter before him. And, Sir, there never was a case in which that is more clearly shown than in the frantic, laboured and almost hysterical effort of the Minister of Justice to evade the law, to get around the facts, in order if possible to put out a helping hand to aid the Minister of Finance in the desperate position in which he finds himself. Then again, the lines of Shakespeare in 'Macbeth' come to my mind in connection with the facts of this case as we have them now and which absolutely condemn the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board. Sir, they are the blots that will not come out, and though the hands which bear the blots be washed and washed and washed, and though he cry: 'Out! out! damned spots!' the Minister of Justice cannot wash out these spots by any such specious argument as he has presented to-night. The hour is late and I shall have to deal briefly with the facts of the case, but I shall attempt to show the position which this country and this government has to face in connection with this deplorable matter. Let me say at the outset that I must confess that in a matter of such great consequence to this country and of such great pith and moment to our commercial interests, I never saw displayed such laxity, such lofty and supreme indifference on the part of the ministry as I have seen to-night. For the most of the day and into the night when the Treasury Board and the ministry has been under scathing criticism and charged with the most serious neglect, we have been treated to empty benches opposite, and for the most of the time not one member of the Treasury Board has been in his place. That is the kind of lofty indifference that the government shows to grave accusations of this kind, accusations of a character that have galled the government so badly that not one member of it has been able to stand up in his place and offer even a semblance of defence to the charges. And, Sir, what is the question before the House? Under our banking laws, which we all supposed were the most stable of any civilized country in the world, which we believed were a guarantee of good faith and soundness in our banking institutions, there was constructed this financial ship called the Farmers' Bank, which was launched upon the stormy waters for trading purposes. But, Sir, that ship could not leave port to embark upon its trade unless it had sailing orders, and the sailing orders for that commercial ship had to be given by the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board, and before the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board could issue letters of marque, the law provided that they had to be satisfied in every respect that the conditions of the law had been fulfilled and that that financial ship was seaworthy, well captained, well manned and provisioned, and fit to undertake the commercial voyage for which she was intended. But, Sir, what of the owner of a ship who sits in his comfortable counting house and sends to sea a vessel he knows to be unseaworthy, which goes down and carries with it human lives, and freight amounting to a million or two of dollars. What of his responsibility? I put this case to the Minister of Justice: If the Minister of Finance or the Treasury Board knew that the Farmers' Bank was not properly equipped to do business, that there was the merest suspicion of fraud in connection with it, and if the Minister of Finance allowed that bank to go before the people of Canada with the stamp of government approval, to open its doors and to receive deposits, I ask the Minister of Justice if, by all law, and by all reason, and by all common sense that can be applied, the Minister of Finance, and the Treasury Board and the government are not responsible for all the evil that results from the issue of that certificate? And what is the principle involved? I may be wrong in my conception of what the certificate authorizing a bank to commence business means, but my belief is—and I invite the Minister of Finance to correct me if I am wrong—that the issue of this certificate is the stamp of government approval upon the institution, which, the moment the certificate is granted is empowered to open its doors, and by virtue of that certificate and that certificate alone to say to Tom, Dick or Harry, Martha, Jane, or Mary: You can put your whole fortune in this bank, and it is as safe as in any chartered bank in Canada. The Minister of Finance does not dissent from that proposition; he cannot dissent. The sign of a chartered bank in Canada, and the opening of its doors have always been, and they are to-day an invitation to him who passes on the street to come in and transact business without any fear of being robbed. Well, Sir, the Minister of Finance was entrusted with no small duty, and no small responsibility in connection with launching this bank upon the commercial sea. The Farmers' Bank received that certificate, the Farmers' Bank failed, the failure brought misery to thousands, and a grievous cry has gone up from the people, a cry that rends the heart of any one who feels, a cry that can only be satisfied by this government granting that which the cry demands, a full and thorough investigation into all the circumstances attending the issuance of the certificate to the Farmers' Bank

Is there any other answer that would suit the people? Can the people be held to be silenced, can the widow who has lost every cent in the world, and the man who is unable to work, absolutely shorn of his strength, unfit by age or illness to bestow his work upon anything that will be productive of results? Shall you make the answer to the children who are deprived of their bread by this lamentable failure, as the Minister of Finance has made answer, that it is a formal matter, a very deplorable circumstance, but one which cannot be helped? Or, shall you tell them, in the language further of the Minister of Finance, that there is a police court in Toronto before which evidence is being given concerning criminal acts in connection with the affairs of this bank? No, Sir, I say a thousand times no. Public opinion will not be satisfied until the Crown says: By virtue of the authority that is vested in us, there is something wrong here, we will investigate in the most concise, in the most thorough manner, every incident in connection with that bank, and we will at once issue a royal commission. The certificate granted to this bank was granted on the 30th day of November, 1906. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice has said there are certain circumstances in connection with it that call for a great deal of criticism, and a great deal of explanation at the hands of the ministry. Explanation as to it is absolutely wanting and a reply to the questions which have been propounded with respect to it is absolutely wanting. The facts and the letters in connection with the matter have been so fully gone into and placed upon 'Hansard' that I am not going to refer to them except cursorily. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice attaches no importance and argues that no importance is to be attached to the writ of summons which was filed by Mr. Leighton McCarthy. Well there again his statements bear a show of reasoning. We know that writs of summons in themselves are not documents which, outside of any other evidence, amount to very much as evidence of facts. But I will not refer for a moment to the writ of summons. I will refer to the letter that accompanied the writ of summons, and ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice what they think of it. At page 3, Mr. McCarthy's letter of the 19th October, appears the following passage. This is Mr. McCarthy, an ex-member of this House, a government supporter, one who gave the Minister of Finance pretty loyal service for his party, and this is a gentleman whom the minister knew, whose word he could trust and whose sincerity he had no reason whatever to doubt:

> I have received information that the alleged subscribers for shares paid a large sum of money in cash and have signed notes for other large sums of money, and that the persons professing to act in the name of the bank have transferred notes and received the proceeds, and that a deposit either has been made or will be made of the cash received and the proceeds of these notes, or sufficient amount to make up $250,000.

Apart from any writ of summons, there is a direct statement of fact throwing light on the whole transaction in writing and signed by a gentleman whose word the Minister of Finance could not deny, putting before him a charge which he could not overlook, and which the Minister of Finance never paid the slightest attention to, and disregarded. Leave out the writ of summons, says the Minister of Justice, but will the Minister of Justice leave out Mr. Leighton McCarthy? Did the Minister of Finance ever get from Mr. Leighton McCarthy a statement or explanation of that paragraph in his letter? Did the minister ever get Mr. McCarthy to disprove the grave charge to which he had appended his signature that this deposit was made up out of borrowed money? Why is the Minister of Finance so silent on this subject? He has not one word to say, and he answers me with a smile. A smile! A smile! This wreck involves the loss of millions of dollars of the money particularly of farmers, widows, old men and women, and when it is brought home to him that he received notice in writing from one of his own followers that the very conditions upon which alone he could issue this certificate had been falsified, the minister smiles!

Well, let us go a little further. One of my hon. friends behind me reminds me of the sympathy that the minister has always shown for the toiling masses as against the knights. I wonder how much money of the knights went into the Farmers' Bank, and what proportion of the money of the toiling masses as against that of the knights went into that bank? But, when it comes down to the actual, concrete question as to whether the money of the toiling masses has been fraudulently disposed of, has been stolen by virtue of a certificate over his signature, he laughs, he smiles from his place in the House and makes no explanation when I confront him with the absolute written notice that the minister had before him when the certificate was issued. I want to say with regard to the Minister of Justice that there was a writ of summons, and that the writ of summons did make certain charges. What else was there, may I ask the Minister of Finance, accompanying that writ of summons? There was an affidavit sworn to in the high court by William Laidlaw, K.C., of Toronto, swearing to facts upon information, some of them on personal information, some of them on personal knowledge, some upon information and belief as a result of personal interviews with some of the subscribers, that the subscriptions were false and fraudulent, and the Minister of Finance had before him this evidence, this sworn affidavit of Mr. Laidlaw testifying to these facts. Does the minister deny it? It is rather a serious condition of things when a man of such high standing as Mr. William Laidlaw, K.C., of Toronto, a lawyer well known throughout the length and breadth of Canada, and known to the Minister of Finance, pledges his own oath to the very facts contained in the writ of summons.

File that in the Department of Finance, put it under the nose of the minister, and it is absolutely laughed at as he laughs at the charge I now bring to his notice. That affidavit was filed before the certificate was issued. It accompanied a copy of the endorsation on the writ, and what does the Minister of Finance do? He carefully keeps that evidence from the Treasury Board. In order to bolster himself up for some reason or other, some sinister reason or other-- because there is one, if not more than one, and it is bound to come out, royal commission or no royal commission—in order to justify himself he pretends to submit the correspondence to the Minister of Justice for his opinion. But in submitting that correspondence, he carefully removes from the file beforehand the writ of summons, the affidavit backing it up and everything else which would give the minister any suspicion that any one had made any objection to the granting of the certificate. Then the Minister of Finance stands up and justifies forsooth the issue of that certificate on the ground that he had submitted the whole matter to the Minister of Justice and got the opinion of the deputy minister that he could do so. The Minister of Justice differs with his colleague about the position into which the latter has got. The Minister of Finance told us that all he had to do was to look at the statutory declaration of Travers. But the Minister of Justice did not say anything of the kind, and he rather rapped his colleague over the knuckles. He quoted from the Act to show that the Treasury Board had to be satisfied by affidavit or otherwise. Well, the Finance Minister had the declaration of Travers, and he also had the affidavit and the letters from one of his former supporters in this House, absolutely disproving the allegations made in that declaration. Yet in spite of these, he issued that certificate and put the bank in the position of being able to prey upon the public. I must confess that I never heard of a minister of the Crown in a more unenviable position. But says the Minister of Justice, no importance is to be attached to this writ. He forgets, however, that there was a judgment following that writ. The action was settled, but how was it settled? It was not simply withdrawn but was settled by the defendants giving up those notes and documents which they had fraudulently obtained. Did he take any cognizance of this? Yes, he did, because the Deputy Minister of Finance referred to it in one of his letters. He referred to Judge Anglin's judgment, and that judgment proved the existence of claims made in the writ of summons, proving that this was a fraudulent organization, proving that the deposit made with the government, which can only be made in money, was raised by way of loan, to the extent of $80,000 or more, advanced by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton), as President of the Trust and Guarantee Company. That the money was being illegally raised was proved by the very settlement of the action itself, if not proved by the previous affidavit and by the statements of Mr. McCarthy which were never withdrawn. The Minister of Justice did not help the Minister of Finance as much as the latter thought he would. Instead of bringing comfort to the soul of the latter, he must have brought anguish, because he put the whole responsibility upon the Treasury Board. Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, said that this declaration of Travers could be received if it was acceptable. Then I find that the Minister of Finance has a qualm of conscience, and does not accept the declaration. Why? There can only be one reason. He has got the declaration and he says that it is sufficient under the Act. In order to bolster that up he refers it to the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Justice says: yes, it is enough if you believe it. But two days later what did he do? On that 30th of November he does not believe the declaration because he writes that most peculiar letter of the 30th of November to Mr. Travers. He wants something more than the declaration, and he is satisfied with the merest, shallowest pretense of a letter from Travers saying that the money was all contributed in cash and none borrowed. Taking the word of Travers putting himself in the hands of Travers, absolutely tieing himself to Travers when he has, at his hand so many other avenues of information to pursue. What could we have done if he had displayed that keenness and alertness which he is wont to display? I am not minimizing the acumen or ability of the minister. I regard him as shrewd and keen, and with a particularly polished acumen when he has to deal with questions of political expediency. What could he have done? He knew Mr. Laidlaw, why did he not ask him to come to Ottawa and find out if he had sworn to what was false? Why did he not send for Mr. McCarthy and question him about the statement of facts in his letter? Why did he not send for some of his other friends, such as the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton), with whom I believe he was talking a good deal at that time about the certificate. Why did he not confer with him? Why did he not confer with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) who had warned him about these transactions? He had only to cross the floor of the House to question that hon. gentleman.

The Minister of Finance admitted that he had conversations at that time with the hon. member for Halton. This House of Commons was sitting on that day, that Friday, the 30th of November, 1906, and all the Minister of Finance had to do was to walk across this floor and say to the hon. member for Halton that he was going to issue that certificate that day and ask whether he had anything further to tell him with reference to it. Why did not he do it? Did he see Mr. Osler? If not, why did not he speak to that hon. gentleman about the matter? There were many avenues open, but the Minister of Finance ignored them all and pursued his own way. And on that day, in the space of a very few hours, all these transactions went through: first, the letter to Travers saying he would meet him at one o'clock or at five o'clock; second, the reply from Travers to the Minister of Finance; then the meeting—or alleged meeting—of the Treasury Board, and the minute of that meeting; then the drawing up of the certificate; then the return of the cheque for $250,000 less the deposit of $5,000 as security for circulation; then the letter inclosing the cheque, the delivery of that letter and the obtaining of the receipt from Travers for the $245,000;—a very hurried transaction for the Finance Minister to engage in on a busy parliamentary day, especially when the facts of which he had had notice and the evidence in support of which he had before him, were so strongly indicative of something being wrong in connection with this matter.

Now, that certificate having been issued, Travers went away. Why was there so much need for haste on that day? Why was all this thing 'railroaded' through on that day in so hurried and unceremonious a manner? Was there a suspicion that the Canadian Bankers' Association were on to the job and were coming down the very next day? Had the secretary of the Canadian Bankers' Association not telephoned the Minister of Finance that that letter was on the way that day?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BOYCE. Did the secretary of the Canadian Bankers' Association not telephone the minister about the transaction?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BOYCE. I simply say that I accept the words of the Minister of Finance that the secretary of the Canadian Bankers' Association did not telephone him that day that the letter was on the way. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as I would say to a jury in connection with all the circumstances of this case: With substantial evidence, with fact linked, with fact making a chain that is absolutely complete by which knowledge is brought home to the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board of all the irregularities in connection with this transaction, the greatest suspicion arises from this haste by which all these things were done in one day which under ordinary circumstances would have taken weeks or at least a week, and done the very day when, in a city only three hours distant, and from which a letter could have been received that very day, a protest was prepared and sent from the Canadian Bankers' Association against the issue of this certificate. We have no evidence as to whether that letter, which is a very vital point in the case, was received on the 30th of November, 1906, or not. The minister has not given us any information about it. He has been taunted with that letter; and I say there is a very strong suspicion that it was in the hands of the minister before Travers left for Toronto that night with the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton). I say there was a strong suspicion that the minister thought he ought to get that certificate back. There was a strong suspicion that the minister tried to get it back and failed—tried to get it back and failed. Does the minister pretend to say, standing here as a responsible minister of the Crown, that, having delivered that certificate, and having received, either before that certificate was delivered or immediately after, the protest of the Association of Bankers which association is contemplated by the Act as auxiliary to the minister in his administration of the Bank Act, protesting against that certificate being given and asking that it be delayed—does he mean to say that, even though the certificate had been delivered, he was doing his duty to this country and to the people who might be defrauded and cheated if he did not demand the certificate back? Did not he go and demand the certificate back?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BOYCE. Then, I ask if ever there was witnessed in any deliberative body such a lamentable exhibition of feebleness of explanation as that which has been given by the Minister of Finance;—that he did, on this 30th of November, 1906, in the most hurried manner possible, deliver the certificate authorizing the Farmers' Bank to prey upon the farmers and the poor of this country, and on that night or the following morning—that night, I believe, before Travers left for Toronto, while the certificate was still in the capital—he received a written protest from the Canadian Bankers' Association, and yet he never went and demanded that certificate in order to prevent the people of this country being defrauded by it. What explanation can the minister or his government give of that? Does he pretend for a single instant that the power of this government is so miserably small, so inadequate, that, a certificate of that kind, having been obtained, to his knowledge, by fraud—he having had laid before him the protest that the most highly credible authority recognised by the Bank Act—he could not go down and replevin that certificate by the sheriff, or by fifty Dominion police if necessary? What did he do if not that? Did he do anything? Sir, he did nothing towards revoking, cancelling or suspending that certificate of the Farmers' Bank. That night the minister knew, from the most authoritative source possible, that it was an improper certificate to grant. That night he had power to revoke it, to cancel it, to suspend it, to recover it. That night, the full force of this government—if necessary, the full force of parliament—because parliament was sitting—might have been used. That night, or two or three days afterwards if necessary, a special Act could have been passed cancelling that certificate or revoking the charter of the bank for fraud.

The minister knows that, but he did absolutely nothing towards cancelling that certificate. He, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, and I suppose all the other ministers, will stand up in their places and by their vote against the motion will say that the Minister of Finance was entirely blameless when he did nothing whatever to protect the people of this country from the ruin and misery that followed his inaction. The minister will not deny that the issue of that certificate to the bank incorporated under the Act is a representation to the public that the government has put its seal of sanction upon that bank as a bank. I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not in his place; but I would ask the Minister of Finance whether the Minister of Justice assents to this proposition, that not only was it in the power of the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board, but it was their bounden duty, just as soon as representations were made after the issue of the certificate, to take proceedings forthwith, either to compel a return of the certificate, or to take such action as would render it inoperative. Does not the Minister of Finance think himself that after receiving from the Canadian Bankers' Association that protest, the certificate should not have been issued?

Now a word as to the contradiction between the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Halton. The hon. member for Halton states that he spoke to the Minister of Finance, and that the Minister of Finance said to him that he had seen Travers, and that Travers had said that the money had been paid in cash. The Minister of Finance says, first, that there was no such conversation, secondly, he has no recollection of it; thirdly, when I asked him if his memory upon that point might not be treacherous, he said, yes, it might be. Now I put this to the Minister of Finance, is not the word of the member for Halton absolutely borne out by the exchange of letters between Travers and the minister on that date of November 30, 1906? Did the minister not, by that letter, put it up to Travers as to whether the money had been paid in cash or not, and did not Travers, by the letter which the minister got from him, deny, and say that the money was not paid in cash, and is that not the strongest corroboration of the word of the member for Halton? I think it is an entire vindication of the member for Halton. But the Minister of Finance takes umbrage at the member for Halton repeating in this House what he the minister, thought was a private conversation. I do not think myself that anything relating to a matter of such importance as this ought to be treated as privileged. But the minister is not always so keenly sensitive about private communications and their publication. Not long ago when the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket) wrote to the Minister of Finance a personal letter——

Mr. FIELDING. No, the letter has not 'personal' marked on it, it is an ordinary public letter.

Mr. BOYCE. The letter, according to the principles laid down by the minister in this House, with regard to letters of that character, was personal, and was surrounded by that cloak of privacy which the minister has thrown about letters, at any rate, coming from members on his side of the House. And what did the minister do with that letter? He handed it over to another member of this House who read it in the House and put it on 'Hansard.'

Mr. FIELDING. No, it was from the clerk; it had been laid on the table.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I say the minister had no right, upon his own statement of the privileges that surround such a letter as that, to put that letter on the table without leave of the member himself.

Mr. FIELDING. Then I cannot put anybody's letter on the table without his leave——scores of letters, without anybody's leave?

Mr. BOYCE. Well, nothing was done after the certificate was issued authorizing the Farmers' Bank to transact business, nothing was done between the 30th of November and the 1st of January, 1907, except that the bank was preparing to do business. And during all that month the bank was gathering in money from the farmers, from widows, from aged men, and the government took no proceeding whatever to prevent fraud. Why, in a month Travers could have been prosecuted, and have been undergoing the sentence of a court for the fraud he had practised upon the Minister of Finance. A whole month went by, and nothing was done by the Treasury Board, although the facts were plain before them. The government did absolutely nothing, while that bank was getting into position to carry out the fraud they had so successfully inaugurated. The minister does not deny that the government were deceived. The Prime Minister last night repeated over and over again that the government was deceived. The knowledge of that deceit was brought home to the minister. It might be a disputed question as to whether it was brought to his knowledge before the 30th of November. But after that date, a month went by and the bank had commenced to do business. Does the minister say that during the whole of that month he was powerless, and could do nothing. I have not heard the minister say that. I wonder whether the minister will say it now. Will the minister say that during that month, while the bank was preparing to do business upon a certificate fraudulently obtained, it was utterly impossible for him to do anything? The Minister of Finance went to the Minister of Justice and got some little authority in a letter upon which he built up authority to issue that certificate. But did he go to the Minister of Justice when he ascertained the real facts to find out if he could cancel that certificate? The correspondence does not show that he did and I say if he did not he was not a vigilant minister, the Treasury Board was derelict in its duty and the government of this country absolutely neglected that fostering care which it owed to the people of Canada. I do not charge that the minister assents to that proposition by his silence, but I do implore him, if he dissents from that proposition, to make it known as part of his defence because it is a cogent circumstance to those people who have been miserably robbed and cheated out of their all by the consequences of what he did. I hope, if only for his own sake, that he will get up and say that it is part of his defence, that during that time he could not for certain reasons take any steps to recover that certificate.

A word with regard to the warning received by the minister as it appears in his speech last night. The position taken by the minister is most extraordinary. Does he recollect that last night he took the ground: Why of course I was justified in dealing with these men, the proposed shareholders were well known men. He read a list at page 5422 of 'Hansard.' Then again when my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) rose in his place the minister said at page 5423:

Mr. FIELDING. Of course, I am not seeking to make any point against my hon. friend, but I am simply showing that when Mr. Travers came to the Finance Department he came under these excellent auspices.

Excellent auspices! After having quoted from the list of names of proposed shareholders, in reply to the member for London who said:

I had no stock in the bank and they had no right to use my name.

The minister said:

Mr. FIELDING. I accept my hon. friend's statement without hesitation, but what I say is that all these names were those of highly respectable men and calculated to give Mr. Travers strength when he came to deal with the government, and my hon. friend's name was among them, and it was one calculated to give the application some strength. I now come to the names of the provisional directors in that application. They are as follows:

Lt.-Col. R. McLennan of Cornwall, Ont.
Lt.-Col. Jas. Munroe, M.P., of Embro, Ont.
Allan Eaton, Esq., of Mount Nemo, Ont.
Robt. Noble, Esq., of Norval, Ont.
W. G. Sinclair, Esq., of Zimmerman, Ont.
A. Groves, Esq., M.D., of Fergus, Ont., and N. M. Devean, Esq., W Beattie Nesbitt, M.D., and John Gilchrist, Esq., of Toronto, Ont.

All these gentlemen were at that time apparently the associates of Mr. Travers.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker,

Mr. Travers came to us buttressed.

Buttressed by these good names. That, Sir, is part of the hon. gentleman's defence in the House. How does it go before a jury of the Canadian people? The minister says that he was justified in depending on such names, yet some of these very men swore they have paid nothing for their shares and have not benefited by the operations of the bank.

Let me take the names in the statement before the minister and the affidavit of William Laidlaw, filed in his department. What does it say: William Noble was one gentleman who buttressed Travers, Noble whose name was entered in the prospectus as one of those who had consented to be a director, who had subscribed to shares to the amount of $10,000, whereas he had only subscribed to $3,000. Colonel Munro was represented as a subscriber for $10,000 whereas he had, in fact subscribed to the amount of only $1,000. Major Thomas Beattie who was represented by the prospectus to have consented to act as a director, had not subscribed for any shares and refused to be a director or to allow his name to be used in any way in connection with the bank, and it is alleged that the names of several persons were used by the directors who had not subscribed for any shares or given any authority for such publication. That is the way the minister buttressed himself up and buttressed Mr. Travers up. When the minister made that statement last night he made it in absolute forgetfulness of the fact that in his department there was absolute evidence that these men disclaimed the interest in the bank which had been attributed to them in the prospectus. Did the minister know that? Was it not the minister's duty to look and see before he allowed Travers to be buttressed up by names of men who themselves disclaimed and complained about the fraud practised on them.

I ask the minister another question. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this House whether in its judgment the Minister of Finance was just playing quite fair with his colleagues on the Treasury Board when he was the only one responsible to the people of Canada for what took place in this matter, that on him alone will rest the responsibility for the issuing of that certificate. He has five colleagues on the Treasury Board, and in all this iniquitous transaction, with all these facts condemning it, he kept that information back from his colleagues on the Treasury Board, and yet seeks to place the responsibility on the Treasury Board. He did not go to the board and say: Colonel Monroe says this, Leighton McCarthy says this, Mr. Henderson of Halton tells me this, and the affidavit of William Laidlaw says this. Does the minister pretend to say that if he had done so his colleagues would have said: Go ahead and issue the certificate, never mind the affidavits, never mind what you have been told or anything contained in these affidavits or any other affidavits. I say it was not a fair position for the minister to take or to ask his colleagues and parliament to occupy in connection with this matter.

What was the nature of the transaction between Travers and the hon. gentleman? It is apparent to any reasonable mind that there was some reason why the Minister of Finance, disregarding all the evidence issued that certificate, and after the issue having ascertained it was fraudulently obtained, took no steps to withdraw it. One is led to the conclusion that there was some motive which actuated the minister, and if not some motive, some influence. Does not the minister think that the circumstances require investigation? The hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) pointed out that the Minister of Finance was not now as favourable to commissions as he used to be. He did not shrink from issuing a royal commission under the guise of an investigation into insurance companies, when the only object of it was to endeavour to drive from public life the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) one of the most brilliant minds in this Dominion. But when a royal commission is asked for now which it is believed will expose the absolute feebleness, if not worse of the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board, he dares not issue it. Dare he in the light of all the facts grant that royal commission? He dare not. I say it unhesitatingly to the minister across the floor upon my responsibility as a member of the House, that the minister shrinks from granting that commission for fear of the disclosures which may follow. The minister has had a better opportunity of knowing all the facts surrounding this matter than any other member of this House, and yet he comes to the House to make a defence which any 10 year old school boy could make. Surely the reasons which influence the Minister of Finance to hurry so much and to show himself so helpless in the issue of the certificate are worthy of being inquired into. What meetings did he have with the present member for West Peterborough (Mr. J. R. Stratton), and Mr. Travers?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to be constantly answering questions and interrupting, but on this occasion it would be unfair to the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stratton) if I should not say that I never in my life had a word with the hon. member for West Peterborough on this subject.

Mr. BOYCE. I gladly accept the word of the Minister of Finance, and I will put the proposition in another way—when that certificate was delivered on that afternoon of the 30th of November, 1906, to whom was it delivered, does the minister know?

Mr. FIELDING. It was in the hands of my deputy, I presume he delivered it to Mr. Travers. Mr. Travers was here for the purpose of getting it, and I take it for granted it was delivered to him.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the minister, who is so fair about giving answers, answer another question? Did he have interviews with any one else in connection with Mr. Travers about this certificate?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot recall that I had. If my hon. friend will mention any particular person I will be able to answer more definitely; but I cannot recall any interview with any person on this subject except as stated in the House during the debate.

Mr. BOYCE. One is irresistibly forced to the conclusion that there was some influence at work which forced the Minister of Finance to absolutely disregard the warnings he received, and which rendered him helpless to resist. And, after having found that the certificate was obtained by fraud, and not having taken steps to cancel it, does he not think that he should take the responsibility? Well, the certificate being issued the branches of the Farmers' Bank opened in different towns, the traps were laid, and the hard earned savings of the farmers wrested from the soil by the sweat of their brow, poured into that bank. The money of the widow, the money of the aged, the money of the orphan, the money of the poor, went into that bank and the Minister of Finance knew it and took no action. The bank failed, and misery, ruin, and destitution followed. I say that the cry of the widow, the cry and the groan of the weary and the sick and the aged who have had their all swept away by this criminal negligence, is the cry that comes from the province of Ontario and through the Dominion of Canada right up to this parliament and into the interior chamber of the Finance Department. And that cry will continue. and the burden of the groan and of the destitution it carries with it will increase until the Minister of Finance and this government realize their responsibility and grant the investigation which justice demands. Look at the sort of defence which has been put up by hon. gentlemen opposite. Two supporters of the government whose constituents are affected by the failure of this bank say they are in sympathy with an investigation, but that because of the nature of the motion moved by the hon. member for Halton they are obliged to vote against it. There is practical sympathy from public men for you. And, there are two other defenders of the government, one from the Northwest and one from the far east and it would seem as if the Minister of Finance had put up members whose constituents are not affected; at all events it looks suspiciously like it. But, no defence has been given to the charges, no reasonable excuse has been given for the refusal of this royal commission, and if the government desire to save themselves from the severest criticism that can possibly be laid at their doors, and relieve themselves from the reproach and condemnation which must lay upon them, if full inquiry by royal commission be denied, they will, without hesitation and without any further parley, accept the motion of my hon. friend from Halton, grant the royal commission, and fully investigate this matter.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Henderson).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 139) for the relief of George Addison Brown.—Mr. Thornton.

SUPPLY — ALIEN LABOUR LAW ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I desire to briefly call attention to the conditions at Sault Ste. Marie in reference to the administration of the alien labour law. I shall first quote an article from the 'Evening News,' published at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, and Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, under date Wednesday, March 15, 1911.

ELECTRICIANS' PROTEST FOREMAN'S DISMISSAL.

Men say Newcomers are Getting the Pick.

Dismissed Official was Old Employee and Popular.

Immigration Officials are asked to make Overtures with Department to stay Influx.

As a protest against the dismissal of 'Jack' Wilson, foreman of the electrical engineers employed by the Lake Superior corporation, the entire staff of 22 struck yesterday, and have not yet returned to work. Wilson has been in the service of the corporation for a number of years and is popular among the workers, who regard him as an extremely capable official. In his stead W. Shumaker has been placed, and the ire of the men was raised in consequence.

'It is not this case alone that has prompted the walkout,' said one of the men this morning to the 'Evening News.' 'For a long time there has been a steady importation of help from the American side, and as soon as the old employee has initiated them into the requirements of the different posts the Canadian is let out. Every Canadian at the plant now feels that his bread and butter is in jeopardy, and it was decided to make a demonstration of disapproval when Wilson was let out.'

Shumaker was communicated with this morning over the 'phone and in reply to the question as to whether there had been a walkout, said: 'I am not aware that anything of the kind has taken place.' Asked if it would be incorrect to state publicly that a walkout had occurred, he replied that it would, which is in contradiction to the statements of the men who have left their work.

Inspector Armstrong, senior official of the Dominion immigration service at Sault Ste. Marie, stated this morning that there had been a number of persons applying to him within the past few days asking if overtures could not be made to the department at Ottawa with a view to insuring their positions, which they stated were being daily filled up with men imported from the American side.

Another despatch from the Sault under date March 14, states:

This morning twenty-six electricians employed by the Lake Superior Corporation in rail mill went on strike, alleging that the management had dispensed with the services of electrician, J. Wilson, yesterday without cause. It is not yet known to what extent the strike will affect the operations of the mill. Strikers have not yet shown any disposition to return to work.

This is only the culmination of a long series of grievances which have been in existence at the towns of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton. These grievances both now and in past years have been due to the fact that the Canadian Alien Labour Law has been laxly administered if there has been any attempt to administer it at all, and by reason of the lax and gravely inefficient administration of that law at the Sault there have been hundreds of importations into the towns of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton of Americans in violation of that Act to the displacement of the working men of Canada, who are thus deprived of their wages and the bread and butter of themselves and their families. This is not the first time I have had occasion to make complaints about the conditions at Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton. I know of my personal knowledge that the Labour Department has on record that there have been continued importations of labour men from the American side in violation of the Alien Labour Law, and that no proceedings whatever have been taken by the Labour Department to check them. The Alien Labour Law, as I understand it, is both reciprocal and retaliatory; reciprocal in that it will admit imported labour upon the same conditions as the United States will admit imported labour from Canada, and retaliatory in that it prohibits and penalizes the importation of contract labour to the same extent as contract labour going into the United States from Canada is penalized. Our Alien Labour Law professes to prohibit the importation of the sort of labourers who are coming in by hundreds to the towns of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton and displacing Canadian workmen. The Minister of Labour knows because it has been on the records of his department and of this House for three years at least, that this is daily occurring, and three years ago a remedy was solemnly promised by the government. At the present moment this grievance is marked; it may be said that a crisis has arisen and the newspaper report which I have sent over to the Minister of Labour points to only a small amount of the dissatisfaction that exists. It is a pity that with an Act on our statute-books which is apparently workable and for the enforcement of which the government has appointed an officer—I think I am right in that?

Mr. KING. On that point the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BOYCE. Then, although three years ago it was shown beyond question that there had been steady and constant violations of the law the minister has not yet appointed an officer to enforce it. I gave him and his predecessor in office more credit for vigilance than they deserved. I regret the acknowledgment of the minister that after the promises and the pledges made by his predecessor in the Department of Labour no official has been appointed to administer the provisions of the Alien Labour Act. Let me refer the minister to the report of the proceedings of the House on July 6, 1908, where at page 12156 of 'Hansard' for that year he will find the following petition:

To the Hon. the Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

The petition of the undersigned citizens of the town of Sault Ste. Marie, in the province of Ontario, most respectfully showeth:

1. That by reason of close proximity to the international boundary your petitioners are more than usually alive to the fact there is no rigid enforcement of the provisions of any law in force in Canada to restrict the importation and employment of aliens, and that in consequence industries here suffer by the employment of foreign labour.

2. That your petitioners are aware of, and will draw to your attention, the fact that across the border the law is rigidly enforced, and that on that side of the line drastic and prompt measures are taken to immediately deport any Canadian citizen who goes across to look for work and that in that respect your petitioners believe that the powers of the United States customs and immigration officers are exceeded.

3. That in the opinion of your petitioners the present Act is not capable of giving prompt and adequate remedy which will meet the conditions which your petitioners know to exist, and your petitioners believe that more drastic and less cumbrous legislation should be enacted so as to enable prompt action to be taken by way of deportation of any aliens or foreigners seeking to enter Canada to work therein under contracts made out in Canada, and so as to meet the condition of the things and the methods in which the law in the United States is enforced against Canadians.

4. Your petitioners further would draw to your attention that there is no immigration inspector or other officers located here whose duty it is to see that the provisions of the Act in force are enforced and the consequence is both from the nature of the Act itself and from its non-enforcement, that the Canadian workmen are not adequately protected against foreign labour.

5. Your petitioners therefore pray:

I commend to the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) who at that period was not in charge of the department, the remarks which I had then the honour to make in support of that petition, and I also commend to him the answers of his predecessor in office, the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, which are reported at page 12159 of the 'Hansard,' 1908. Speaking on July the 7th, 1908—in answer to my remarks upon the subject—the Hon. Mr. Lemieux said:

Mr. LEMIEUX. I thank my hon. friend for bringing this matter up this evening. His remarks as they appear in 'Hansard' will serve me to-morrow as a brief for the Minister of Justice. It is true that practically the administration of the labour law is in the hands of the Minister of Labour, but when these cases are taken to the Attorney General of Canada, that is the Minister of Justice, he acts jointly with me. My hon. friend says we should have a law similar in its effects to the law in the neighbouring republic. I believe in retaliatory measures, we should favour the doctrine of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth.

These were the words of the present Postmaster General: 'Ay eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is Christian.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the Mosaic law as well as the law of the Postmaster General. During the same debate the Postmaster General used this language further:

I have no doubt the remarks of my hon. friend which have been made in a fair spirit will have weight. I shall communicate with the Minister of Justice and see what better provision can be made to render the law more pliable and more effective in protecting our own people against the alien labour.

That was on July 7, 1908, and here we had a direct and definite promise by a minister of the Crown that the remarks made to, and the grievances, and the petition, which were laid before the House in a fair spirit as he says, should form a brief for the Minister of Justice to take prompt action next day to render the law more effective in protecting our own people against alien labour. I ask the Minister of Labour whether anything has been done to carry out the pledge of his predecessor thus solemnly made. Has there been any attempt to amend the alien labour law so as to make it more pliable, and so as to protect the Canadian working man, his wife and family from the terrible effects of the importation of alien labour to the town of Sault St. Marie or at any other point on the Canadian border.

My hon. friend himself admits that nothing whatever has been done in reply to that earnest petition to appoint an officer to enforce the provisions of the law. Why has that not been done? This is not a mere temporary grievance. It is a permanent grievance. It is one that has existed from day to day and from year to year since that time. There have been, I understand, constant importations of labour in violation of the Alien Labour Law, which have been brought to the notice of the minister and the minister has done absolutely nothing. I am now asking what he proposes to do. Does he not think that after three years it is high time something should be done to carry out the pledge made by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), then speaking as Minister of Labour, to render more efficient the protection of the workingmen of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton and elsewhere along the border. The hon. Postmaster General then promised that he would have our labour law applied more effectively and made something else besides a law in name only. I have said that the labour laws in the two countries are either reciprocal or retaliatory. The Postmaster General takes the more drastic view. He says they must be considered as retaliatory and believes in the doctrine of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Well, I believe in the application of that doctrine laid down by the Postmaster General. I believe he should put an end to the conditions that have existed since July, 1908, as appears by the clipping from a newspaper I have referred to. I say that our Alien Labour Law should be treated as retaliatory and why? Because the Alien Labour Law on the other side of the line is administered in that spirit. We have heard a great deal lately about reciprocity in trade products, but if there ever was an example to show how that reciprocity will work out in favour of the United States against Canada, it will be found in the condition of things under the Alien Labour Law. We have the same law here as they have in the United States, the same reciprocity, and the same power of retaliation. How does our law work out? No attempt whatever is made to stop the importation of alien labour from the United States; but let a Canadian citizen go across the line in search of work, and he is promply arrested and detained and deported under the Alien Labour Law of that country. I have here a despatch from Hamilton of March 9, a Canadian press despatch:

Alfred Stiles, a well known cutter, who left this city last week to accept a position at Terre Haute, Ind., was stopped by immigration officers at Detroit, and sent back to Canada with a warning that if he set foot in the United States again within a year he would render himself liable to imprisonment.

If that is not retaliatory law I do not know what is. What I want is to have our law administered in the same spirit. But hundreds of Canadians have been displaced in the factories and workshops at Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton by Americans imported in violation of the Act, and no steps were taken to have the aliens deported. It is now three years since this matter was brought to the attention of this House, and since the Minister of Labour solemnly promised a remedy. I earnestly commend it again to his attention and ask him to get to work and put in force our Alien Labour Law, even if it be necessary to appoint 20 officers in order to protect our Canadian workingmen and their wives and families.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). I am obliged to my hon. friend for having brought up this matter if only because he has given occasion to make a little clearer what is the nature of the laws of this country respecting the entry into Canada of aliens. Frequently the Department of Labour is charged with being indifferent in the administration of our laws regarding the admission of aliens. This attack is made regardless altogether of the fact that the Department of Immigration and other departments of the government have also a great deal to do with this matter. In fact the greater part of the work of restricting the entry of aliens falls within the scope of the Department of the Interior, and the immigration officials. It is only that part of immigration which has to do with contract labour that comes within the purview of the Alien Labour Act. My hon. friend has said that at Sault Ste. Marie he does not think there is any inspector for the purpose of enforcing this law, and left the impression that the Department of Labour was indifferent in this matter. I may inform him that within the last few weeks officers of the Immigration Department have been very active at Sault Ste. Marie in refusing admittance to a large number from the United States. My hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) will be able to inform my hon. friend more particularly on that point; but I do happen to know that within recent days he has received complaints from the management of the company at Sault Ste. Marie about the rigid manner in which our laws are being enforced and admission refused to a large number who came from across the line. My hon. friend read an article from the 'Evening News,' of March 15, respecting the dismissal of one of the employees of the Sault Company. I shall just quote the words of that article, because on it my hon. friend has largely based the complaint he has made.

Mr. BOYCE. That is only a public illustration of what is taking place, and it does not necessarily apply to all the conditions that exist there.

Mr. KING. At any rate my hon. friend introduced his remarks by quoting this article, and it is as he says a public illustration. It is as follows:

As a protest against the dismissal of Jack Wilson, foreman of the electrical engineers employed by the Lake Superior Corporation, the entire staff of twenty-two struck and have not yet returned to work. Wilson has been in the service of the corporation for a number of years and is popular among the workers who regard him as an extremely capable official. In his stead Shumaker has been placed, and the ire of the men was raised in consequence.

I contend there is nothing in that article on which my hon. friend can found a charge as to the laxity of administration of the Alien Labour Act. All it states is that an employee of many years service, who was popular with the men, was dismissed and somebody else put in his place, and the employees to show their resentment at his dismissal, had gone out on strike.

As respects the administration of the Alien Labour Act, my hon. friend will realize that there are two methods which might be employed. One would require the federal government to take action every time that Act was violated; the other would leave it in the hands of the parties themselves to take immediate action. As the law stood originally, before any action could be taken, the assent of the Attorney General had to be obtained. A number of complaints were made that inasmuch as the Attorney General of the Dominion had to be consulted before the law could be put into motion, the delays were such as to render it practically ineffective.

Mr. KING.

Mr. BOYCE. Has the minister not received reports and complaints from Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton that the provisions of the Act had been violated.

Mr. KING. I shall answer that in a moment. Complaints were made that inasmuch as parties were obliged to send their complaints to Ottawa there was too much delay, and the labour organizations, particularly of British Columbia, which were specially interested, asked that the law should be so amended as to render it unnecessary for the workingmen to come to Ottawa for redress. That seemed very reasonable, and in 1901 the law was amended in such a way that those who complained of its violation could make their complaint either before the Attorney General of the province, or a judge of the county court, and, on getting the consent of either, could take immediate action. I would like to read the section of the law in that particular. In the first place, the clause which sets out the offence in the broadest terms, as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership or corporation, in any manner to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist, encourage or solicit the importation or immigration of any aliens or foreigners into Canada, under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or immigration of such alien or foreigner, to perform labour or service of any kind in Canada.

The penalty fixed for the violation of the section is a fine not exceeding $1,000, and not less than $50, which amount may be 'sued for and recovered as a debt,' or——

Such sum may also, with the written consent . . . . . of a judge of a superior county court, be recovered upon summary conviction before any judge of a county court, being a justice of the peace or any judge of the sessions of the peace, recorder, police magistrate or stipendiary magistrate, or any functionary, tribunal or person invested by the proper legislative authority with power to do alone such acts as are usually required to be done by two or more justices of the peace, and, when recovered, shall be paid to the Minister of Finance.

In other words, the provisions of the law have been made such that any party, anywhere in the Dominion who feels that this the broad clause which I have read is being violated can immediately take action of his own initiative to secure the enforcement of the provision. And not only is that the law, but there is a further provision which says that in the event of it being shown that the law has been violated and a fine imposed, the party who has been instrumental in bringing about the prosecution may be awarded a part of the fine imposed. I have here a communication received only a few days ago from Judge

Fitch, of the District of Rainy River, not far from where my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) resides:

Mr. BOYCE. Quite a long way.

Mr. KING. Of course, the distances are considerable in this country. Judge Fitch says:

I to-day found the Johnson-Carey Company, railroad contractors, guilty of a breach of the Alien Labour Law and fined them $500. From the evidence, this company has not been paying any attention to this Act, but I do not imagine we will have much more trouble in the future. I would be obliged if you would advise me as to the disposition of the fine. Will it be paid to the clerk of the peace or to the Dominion government? I would recommend that the informant, Ed. Oleson, who laid the information and hired a solicitor, should receive $200.

As Minister of Labour, having authority under the Act so to do, I have advised the Minister of Finance that, under the circumstances, half of this penalty—a greater amount than that named by the judge himself—should be paid to the informer. And, I think, as the judge has stated, that this company, having learned what the law is and having seen that it is possible for any person to put it in force in a summary manner, will be careful to observe the law in the future. This is only one of a number of cases. I have here quite a number of similar communications received during past years from magistrates and others informing the department of convictions under the Act. The department has, in every case, recommended payment to the informant part of the penalty imposed as a result of the conviction which he has been instrumental in obtaining. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce), if he reflects, will feel that, on the whole, this is a more effective way of securing compliance with the provisions of the Act than for this government to have one or two officers whose business it is to watch possible violations of the law along a border of between three and four thousand miles between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Mr. BOYCE. No.

Mr. KING. There is a difference of opinion——

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. King's) predecessor in office admitted that it was not so. I quoted the speech the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) made on July 7, 1908.

Mr. KING. I listened to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) read. I think that in the statement which the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) then made, he said he would refer the matter to the Minister of Justice to ascertain his opinion whether the law could be made more effective in that particular. I understood from my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) that he did this, and the conclusion, apparently, was that the law in its present shape was likely to give the most satisfaction to the public generally. I have nothing more to add, except, possibly, to refer to the expression of my hon. friend as to 'lax administration' of the law. As I have already pointed out, the administration of the law is in the hands of the interested parties. If it is being laxly administered, that is because those who have opportunity to get redress under it do not seek to avail themselves of that opportunity. It is not due to any indifference on the part of any department of the government. We have received a good many communications on the subject. The hon. gentleman asked me as to communications from Sault Ste. Marie. I am informed that a communication from Sault Ste. Marie was received this morning, and one or two others may have been received within the last two months—parties writing to be informed as to the manner of proceeding under the Act.

Mr. BOYCE. Can. the hon. minister (Mr King) tell me from whom the communication was received to-day?

Mr. KING. From Mr. Denman, correspondent at Sault Ste Marie of the Labour Gazette writing on behalf of others. A reply is being sent to Mr. Denman explaining the procedure and asking him to inform the parties that any one who lays information against a violator of the Act and obtains a conviction will be entitled to one-half the penalty which may be imposed. I think that if my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) will take into account the fact that it is only that part which has to do with contract labour that is administered by my department, while the general law respecting immigration comes under the Department of Immigration and has regard also to the effective means being taken by the Department of Immigration to administer its part of the law, he will find that there is really no ground of complaint.

RECIPROCITY—OPINION FROM SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina). I desire to bring to the attention of the House a telegram I have received concerning action taken at the convention of the rural municipalities of Saskatchewan, which has been in session in Moosejaw for the last few days. This association consists of representatives of the various municipalities from one end of Saskatchewan to the other, and is an exceedingly representative body. The telegram is as follows:

Moosejaw, Sask., March 16, 1911.

W. M. Martin, House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Reciprocity agreement endorsed unanimously to-day by two hundred delegates at convention of Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities held at Moosejaw.

JAMES SMITH.

As yet I have to find one solitary man in the province of Saskatchewan who is opposed to the proposed reciprocity agreement.

PUBLIC HEALTH — CONDITIONS AT GROSSE ISLE.

Mr. S. BARKER (East Hamilton). I desire to call the attention of the government to a matter of importance—I think it may be said, of urgent importance. I have a memorandum here from a gentleman of very high reputation in the country, well known to every member of the government, and, I think, to almost every member of the House. It is as follows:

It is considered by gentlemen whose opinion is entitled to respect that dangerous conditions exist in the quarantine station at Grosse Isle. In view of the possible outbreak of a fresh cholera epidemic in Europe, they say there is cause for alarm in view of the fact that last autumn a cholera case was allowed to pass the quarantine station and reach Quebec. The facilities at Grosse Isle do not permit proper inspection to be made there. If a ship arrived with a case of contagious disease on board the victims have to be taken ashore in a small tug and all sorts of dangers are likely to result. Considering the enormous expenditure for useless wharfs, why is not the wharf at Grosse Isle extended so as to allow ocean steamships to approach and discharge their passengers?

However that may be, certainly, I think this should not be allowed to pass without serious attention from the government. I recollect that last year there was some rumour about a cholera patient arriving and being allowed to go as far as Quebec or some such point. If that occurred in one case, it might possibly occur again. I hope the government will take pains to consider what is stated here and provide a barrier against the danger referred to.

HEALTH CONDITIONS IN OTTAWA.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). In view of the alarming reports presented by Dr. Hodgetts with regard to the unsanitary condition of the city of Ottawa, I would like to know something more as to the authority under which he was acting—it seems he is acting under the Conservation Commission—according to what principles he is acting, and when he was induced to take action. I have referred to this question once before, many weeks ago, from information that I had received, when I spoke pretty strong on the subject. I have watched the action of those who ought to be interested, and who I think are largely responsible, and it has seemed to me as a medical man that very little was being done which ought to be done to improve the unsanitary condition of the city of Ottawa, and to protect the health and lives of the members who, for the time being, reside here, and of the citizens as well. I said at that time, speaking as a medical man, that I had reason to believe that the medical health officer was absolutely useless, and that there was imminent danger to the health and the lives of the people of this city in consequence. I said that because of the number of people who live temporarily in Ottawa during the session of parliament, I thought it was imperative on the government to take some action, to insist upon the city doing its duty, and that some constituted authority ought to be empowered to take the work in hand, and do that which the city authorities were failing to do. I based my argument for this upon the ground that the Dominion government are spending large sums of money in the city of Otawa to ornament it, and to help improve the city generally, and from certain supplies furnished to the country, one of which was a supply of water for these buildings and for needs in event of fire. I was told then that it was not the duty of the government to act, that they had nothing to do with the matter, and perhaps in one way they had not. But at any rate, week after week has passed, during which hundreds of cases of typhoid fever have developed, accompanied with many deaths, and we have gone so far as to make an analysis of the water two or three times, which analysis has disclosed the fact that the city water is unhealthy, which must be known by every person without an analysis. The very fact that so many cases of disease have started up, and could be traced to no other source, was strong presumptive evidence that the water was the source of the trouble. In the 'Citizen' of this morning I find a report by Dr. Hodgetts, in which he says:

Acting on the reports made by the officers now engaged in the work of the collection of information for the Commission of Conservation, I have personally visited some of the premises reported to be in an unsanitary state. I find conditions existing in some of the homes where privy pits are in use to be of such a disgraceful character as to warrant my drawing your immediate attention to the same. They are a menace to the persons living in the immediate vicinity and, if allowed to continue, the untreated excreta of typhoid patients which have been deposited in these sometimes overlooked privies and, in some instances, even thrown upon the ground, cannot fail to be a source of infection and will, with the approach of milder weather, prove a ready means of spreading the disease.

Where such a relic of mediævalism (privy pit) is in use and becomes the receptacle of the excreta of a typhoid fever patient, it is imperative there should be thorough and careful disinfection of the contents; and for this purpose the health department should exercise the greatest vigilance by systematically performing the necessary services, for if left to the individual householder, it is found the work is never properly performed.

The conditions to which your attention is directed are such as to call for immediate action by yourself and the local Board of Health.

He goes on to give a list of houses.

Accompanying this communication is a list of houses in which typhoid fever has been reported and where the officers of the commission find privy pits in use. Similar lists will be sent you from time to time. A copy of this letter is being forwarded to His Worship, Mayor Hopewell.

The list of houses mentioned contains fifteen names on Stirling, Lauretta, St. Patrick, St. Andrew, Church, Water, Victoria, LeBreton, Murton and Wellington streets. The second letter, dated March 13, was as follows:—

Having examined a portion of that section of the city situated along Cave creek in order to ascertain the sanitary conditions, I am of the opinion it is necessary that immediate attention should be given the same.

Instances are many where outside closets are discharging directly into the creek, and in one case the back portion of the house is built over the creek, and all the excremental matter is deposited in the creek down an outside closet. From this house the creek flows under other houses in process of construction.

Again, the creek has overflowed into back yards carrying sewage with it, and in the floor of a shed of one house I found several inches of frozen sewage with masses of human excreta embedded therein. A more disgusting sight I have never seen in any city; and with the advent of spring the condition will not improve.

As it is now, Cave creek is simply a sewer of the crudest and most dangerous type, and drastic measures should be adopted forthwith whereby its pollution will be prevented.

I find that water is being taken from Lazy bay at a point not far distant from the mouth of Cave creek and sold to residents in the vicinity. If the sale extends to residents within the city limits, the practice should be prohibited.

It is possible you are already aware of the condition indicated above through your sanitary inspectors.

He goes on to speak of the conditions in other respects. Now when we know that that condition has continued for weeks in the city of Ottawa, which has nominally a board of health and a medical inspector at the head of it, and when attention has been pointedly drawn to the condition through the press of Ottawa day after day, and week after week, and that up to the last few days nothing has been done, the situation seems to me beyond comprehension. I think the government has been very remiss, their attention having been drawn to it over and over again, and they have practically said, what can we do?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This government or the government of Ontario?

Mr. SPROULE. The government of the Dominion right where we are located at the present time, and which is paying to the city a large amount of money to help defray the expenses of the city, to adorn it, and to make it more healthy and attractive than it is and for the water supplied. This is the place where we have our Inland Revenue Department, where we have our analytical chemists, where we have our experimental farm, where we have professional men who are specially qualified to look into these things, and to make a report to the government. This is the city where the Dominion government has so much at stake, with two or three thousand civil servants employed doing the work of the country, and all dependent upon the government for their subsistence, and the government, which has entirely neglected these things, is in my judgment not doing their full duty, and we are right in drawing attention to it. I want to ask under what authority, or by what means, or under whose instructions, Dr. Hodgetts is acting? I am told that it is under the authority of the Conservation Commission. I did not know whether the Conservation Commission had authority delegated to them to institute such an inquiry or appoint a medical inspector to inspect the city. If it is done under the Conservation Commission, the Conservation Commission is under the government and the Conservation Commission has been in existence ever since the commencement of the session of parliament. Why could not the government have acted earlier. Why could they not have taken the action that they have done within the last few days, six or ten weeks ago? It was quite apparent then, as it is to-day, that something was wrong, that there was practically no board of health of any value or medical health officer worthy of the name.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Whose fault is that? Are they not appointed by the Ontario government?

Mr. SPROULE. It is the fault of the city council. They have the power and duty to appoint this local board of health, and to see that the local board is doing its duty. But, with the fact made evident to us that the board is not doing its duty, is it not strange that the government has taken no action until within the last few days. I would like to know under what authority they are acting now, how they propose to carry on the inquiry that is taking place, and what they propose to do regarding it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has asked a question with regard to the authority of Dr. Hodgetts, and by whom he has been appointed. Dr. Hodgetts is in the employ of the Conservation Commission. One of the objects that the Conservation Commission has to deal with is the health of the people, but I understand that under the law his work will be confined to making investigations into the public health and giving advice. I presume that is what he is doing in this case. I do not understand that he would have any authority to carry his recommendations into effect. I understand that that is a matter entirely for the local board of health. My hon. friend sought to find fault with the government because we had not taken action earlier. He has read a long report as to the condition of different houses and privies in various places in the city of Ottawa. This government has no power over that. It is a matter entirely for the local authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. Had the government not power to appoint Dr. Hodgetts two months ago?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Dr. Hodgetts is simply going to investigate, that is all.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a valuable part of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He cannot give orders; he cannot have his recommendations carried out. He has no authority over the matter; all he can do is to investigate and advise, and that, I take it, is what he is doing. I do not know how it is in the province of Ontario, because I have not read the Health Act, but in the province of New Brunswick, whose Health Act is largely the same as the Ontario Act, the appointment of the boards of health rests to a very considerable extent with the provincial government. They appoint the provincial board of health and the provincial board has the control over the local boards of health. I think that my hon. friend, instead of finding fault with this government, if he wanted to find fault with anybody, would perhaps have done better if he had sent a communication to the government of Ontario, urging that they should see that their authorities on the provincial board of health took active measures to see that the necessary steps were taken in the city of Ottawa. My hon. friend says that the local board of health is useless. Well, we have no control over the local board of health, no power to interfere with it in any way. It is very true that the government is a large consumer of water, just the same as the citizens of Ottawa are large consumers of water. There is nothing I see that we could do immediately which would ensure a better water supply than we have. To get another source of water supply for the city of Ottawa would cost a great deal of money. That is for the local authorities to attend to. I would suppose that they would feel that it would be right to tax the people for the purpose of going to any reasonable expense in order to get a pure and good supply of water, but that is not something that the government can do. We have endeavoured to protect the health of the members of this House, the members of the Senate, and the employees of both Houses of parliament by sterilizing the water. We have gone to considerable expense, and I believe that the report which I read to the House yesterday shows that the water which is being supplied and which is being sterilized as absolutely free of sewage bacteria. It is reported by the pathologist to be entirely safe for drinking purposes, while he also reports that the water which comes from the taps unsterilized as not safe for drinking.

I have thought that it would be well for us to consider what we could do in the near future to have a better supply for drinking purposes in connection with the buildings and the departmental buildings as well in case no effective steps are taken within a reasonable time to get a pure water supply for the city of Ottawa. I have thought that we might bore down for an artesian well upon these grounds. I believe that in the vicinity of Ottawa they have some very fine springs of pure water, and that they have got a good supply by boring. I am now having inquiries made by the officials of my department, who are in communication with the officials of the geological branch of the Mines Department, with the view of having all the information possible to guide us in regard to the matter, in order to see if we would be justified in boring a thousand or two thousand feet in the hope of getting a pure supply of good water which would be absolutely safe for drinking purposes. That matter is now under consideration. We are not blind to the fact that we ought to do what we can to give the members and employees of the House and the employees of the government a pure supply of drinking water, but I do submit to my hon. friend that there is nothing more that we can do. We have taken the necessary steps to purify the water for drinking purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is quite proper and I have made no adverse criticism of that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the analyses that we have had made we have brought the matter to the public attention, and impressed upon the municipal authorities the fact that the ordinary tap water is unsafe for drinking purposes. I really do not see how we could have done anything more than we have done.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. member for St. Antoine division, Montreal (Mr. Ames), has asked me to inquire of the Minister of Public Works when he may expect a return which was ordered on the 13th of December last, in reference to public buildings. He is anxious to have it before certain estimates are placed before the House.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a matter that I wish to bring to your consideration and to the consideration of this House. I do it because I see that the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) is in his seat. It is a matter that has been brought up already in this House by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). It is with regard to an article that appeared in the 'Globe' of date Saturday, March 4, of this year. At a meeting at Woodstock, in Ontario, the hon. member for North Oxford, in addressing the people, there spoke as follows. The speech is so good I shall read it all:

With regard to reciprocity, he noted that very little had been heard about the consumer's interest. He did not believe the reciprocity agreement being negotiated would affect the price to the consumer adversely. That might seem strange, as it was supposed the farmer would get a better price.

He was addressing, I understand, an aggregation of men who were more or less engaged in manufacturing. He went on to say:

He could not see that manufacturers would be touched very much, as few articles manufactured in Canada were affected. He was sure the Bain and Woodstock wagon companies would compete in the world's markets even with 2½ per cent reduction in the tariff. He thought the manufacturers opposed reciprocity because of what might follow, the 'thin end of the wedge,' but he had been assured——

This is what I want to bring to your notice:

—he had been assured by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding that nothing of the sort would follow. They had gone as far in the farmers' interests as they would.

As a farmer and a representative of farmers, I want to emphasize that point that one of the most aggressive members on the Liberal side of this House, one of the strongest supporters of the First Minister and his government, in a public meeting gives his word as a member of this House to the people of Woodstock, a manufacturing centre, that he has the word absolutely of the First Minister and the Minister of Finance that the farmers' interests would not be conserved any further than was done by this agreement. He goes on to say:

It would be foolish for us to think of tinkering with the tariff or putting it on an unstable basis.

He was talking to manufacturers.

Therefore, the present government, in his view, would not tinker any more with it unless to make some minor adjustments.

This matter was brought up by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), and the First Minister in reply said:

With regard to the other question, I think my hon. friend had better wait until the hon. member for North Oxford is in his seat.

This is the first opportunity I have had of bringing the matter before the House when the hon. member was in his seat. I hope that he will reply to me either that he is misreported in this Liberal newspaper or that he will repudiate this statement. From a farmer's standpoint, I hope he will not say the statement is correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can relieve my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) from answering the question of my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell). I can answer him now. There is no doubt whatever as to the attitude of the government. It has been defined on this floor more than once, the last time it was defined was only two or three days ago, when the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question put to him with regard to the speech of President Taft and that answer will give all the information which my hon. friend wants. The Finance Minister was questioned as to the speech delivered by President Taft, at Atlanta, especially to the following extract:

When we entered upon these negotiations, I asked the Secretary of State and his commissioners to offer free trade in everything, but this Canada could not grant us, because she has a protective system and she was afraid of the competition of our better-organized industries.

To this the Minister of Finance replied:

That statement may be entirely correct, and I have no doubt is, as to the instructions that the President gave to his officials. But as to what actually occurred in the conference, the matter did not advance to a position which would enable these gentlemen to make such a formal offer in that way. At the very earliest stage in the negotiations we certainly gave them to understand that we could not undertake to have any free trade in manufactures, speaking generally.

This is the position of the government. We have undertaken to have reciprocity in natural products, not in manufactured products. At the present time our policy is before the House to have reciprocity in natural products, and I shall be very glad if we have the assistance of our friends that far in favour of the farmers. I doubt very much if we will, but we will see what we will do afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the Prime Minister missed the meaning of my hon. friend's question. A supporter of my right hon. friend goes to a rural constituency and says he has the authority of the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance to make that definite statement. What my hon. friend wants to know is whether the member was authorized by the Prime Minister or Finance Minister to make that statement. I have noticed a tendency this last few years on the part of members on the government side to make announcements in various portions of the country of what will be done, and what will not be done. That is permissible, to a certain extent on the part of members of the government, but it has obvious disadvantages when the government authorizes lay members to make governmental utterances. If the statement of the hon. member for North Oxford is correct this was apparently done in this instance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The statement made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was quite consistent with our policy, it was nothing new, and he had perfect authority, not only he but every member of the Liberal side, to make that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance authorize the member in question to make that statement?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have answered that already. It is perfectly true. The hon. member for North Oxford and every Liberal member had such authority, he was not kept in ignorance of our policy in this matter and knew it well. He only stated what is our general policy.

Mr. HUGHES. In view of what has transpired, is he not going to withdraw the Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will have to explain his logic, I do not understand it. The farmers want reciprocity. To that extent, they are immediately justified. Does he object?

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). I do not believe the farmers of the west are being justly used by the government in this matter. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) was very prompt to rise this afternoon and to read a telegram and state that he had not received intimation from a single person in the west that they were opposed to the reciprocity agreement. I venture to say that if the farmers of the west are informed that by the passing of this reciprocal agreement, there will, as the member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) states, there will be no hope for many years to come that there will be a reduction in the tariff on the articles they use, then you would soon find the farmers of the west adopting a different attitude, and sending a different kind of telegram. The farmers of the west are being misled, and only one side of the story is going out to them through a paper called the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' edited by a man who is here at the present time lobbying with the Liberals in this House. It is easy for him to make a strong appeal through that journal to the Conservative members of parliament to vote for the government on this particular question, but I wonder if the 'Guide' will tell the people the actual fact: that this government does not intend to reduce the duty on agricultural implements. If the farmers knew that we would be getting a different kind of resolution from the various associations, and this resolution, I venture to say, has been prepared by Mr. McKenzie, the editor of that 'Guide' and Mr. Hunders, his associate in the west, who is the president of the Grain Growers' Association. They have been decimating this resolution at all these meetings, and every day I get in my mail a copy of the resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. STAPLES. Yes, I admit it, but just wait a minute. It is the same resolution all through word for word, syllable for syllable, and it is sent out by that association to the farmers. I tell you, Sir, that if the farmers knew that this government was not going to make any reduction in the duty on agricultural implements there would be a different kind of letter and a different form of resolution coming to the members of this House. We have at last succeeded in getting from the Prime Minister an admission that he is not going to change the tariff, but after all his remarks to-day are not very different from those he addressed to the deputation from the Manufacturers' Association some time ago. The farmers of the west will find, I believe, that they are not going to get out of this agreement what they had expected.

Mr. NESBITT. A word of explanation—I was very correctly reported considering that I was just speaking offhand without any notes. I did say that I had discussed the matter with the minister, and that I could assure them—pretty nearly as stated in the paper—that there would be no further reduction.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That you had the assurance?

Mr. NESBITT. I do not want the hon. gentleman to put words in my mouth. I did not know until this afternoon that my speeches were of such great importance. But at all events I said I could assure them there would be no further reduction in the tariff at present, and so far as the other part of it is concerned, I was speaking simply about the tariff and not about any other matter in reference to the farmers.

Mr. KING. The hon. member for Dauphin in his remarks has certainly conveyed to my mind an entirely different impression as to the purport of the remarks of my hon. friend from that which the remarks of the hon. member for Oxford did at the time they were made. I heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nesbitt) make his speech, and I heard everything he said, and I think I can speak as to his words. Did I understand the member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), when he used the expression: 'The farmers' interests would not be conserved any further,' to quote these words from a paper, or are they his own words?

Mr. CAMPBELL. These are my own words.

Mr. KING. I thought that must be so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let me put the minister right. I said it seemed that if what this gentlemen said was correct, that the farmers' interests were not going to be conserved any further with regard to the tariff.

Mr. KING. Then it is simply—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. KING. The hon. member for Dauphin just interrupted me in the course of my remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER. Did not the hon. gentleman speak in reply to the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce)?

Mr. KING. I did with regard to alien labour.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, and it is on the same motion to go into Supply.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I, like my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples), have had some communications from the farmers of the west, and from all I can learn the farmers of the west have laid well to heart that the best method of accomplishing human progress whether in politics or anything else is by a step at a time, and they have also a great belief in the proverb that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I would ask the Prime Minister if his remarks also apply to the British preference.

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish the House to understand that on the motion to go into Supply, if questions are put to ministers it opens up the point whether a minister can speak more than once on the same motion. If these questions may be put the minister must be allowed to answer, and consequently you would have a minister speaking several times on the same motion.

Mr. FOSTER. We can stand it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the House must be willing that the rule should be broken.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

RECIPROCITY—RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN (Huron). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker I desire to place on record two communications which have been sent to me for that purpose. The first one reads:

Egmondville, Feb. 21, 1911.

Mr. M. Y. McLean,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—At the last meeting of the executive of the Seaforth Branch of the National Council of Agriculture the following resolution was passed unanimously:—

We, the executive of the Seaforth Branch of the National Council of Agriculture, desire to place on record our approval of the tariff agreement entered into between the government of Canada and the United States, believing that it will be a great benefit to the Canadian people. We, therefore, urge upon you as our representative to do all in your power to bring about its enactment.

Yours truly,
The Seaforth Branch,
National Council of Agriculture.
JAMES COWAN,
President.
THOS. G. SHILLINGLAW,
Secretary.

I may say that this association has a very large membership, and is composed of both Liberals and Conservatives, and all of them, I think, are farmers. This communication I have also received:

Brucefield, March 9.

A non-partisan meeting of the farmers of this vicinity was held to discuss the reciprocity agreement, and although the chairman invited United States.

To a large and enthusiastic audience several of the local farmers spoke in favour of the agreement, and although the chairman invited any who might be opposed to it to express their views, no one responded.

The following resolution was then moved by Mr. Byron Waldron, and seconded by Mr. Jno. A. McEwen, and carried unanimously:—

That we, the farmers of this vicinity, hereby wish to place on record our hearty approval of the reciprocal arrangement between the government of this country and that of the United States, believing that if adopted it will be of very great benefit to the people of Canada.

ALEX. MUSTARD, Chairman.

Mr. DANIEL (St. John). As the reading of resolutions appears to be in order, I wish to direct the attention of the House to the following:

St. Stephen, March 13.—The parish of Dufferin, in which is located one of the best of the prospective winter ports of Canada, has an energetic Board of Trade, which held a largely attended meeting Saturday evening, and passed unanimously the following resolution:—

Resolved, that the Board of Trade of the parish of Dufferin, particularly desires to endorse the position of those, both Liberal and Conservative, who, believing the country's welfare to be greater than party, are opposing the proposed reciprocity treaty with the United States.

First, because we believe the proposed agreement is hostile to the best interests of the agricultural and labour interests of Canada, as well as against the commercial and manufacturing centres, on which the farmers depend so largely for their best markets, and labour depends so largely for its employment.

Second, because it lets free into the Canadian market, in ruinous competition with the Canadian farmer, the surplus farm products, not only of the United States, but also the Argentine Republic, Denmark, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Sweden, Switzerland, Japan and other countries, in which owing to the low wages, the cost of production is far less than in Canada, and because the agreement does not provide for free entry of our farm products into those countries.

Third, because it would reverse the fiscal policy by which Canada has been establishing at home a more profitable market, thus realizing one of the great purposes of the fathers of confederation, and because it will nullify the work of years in developing trade with the mother land and thus retard the grandest ideal of all patriotic Canadians, imperial unity and the growth of imperial power within the empire.

Mr. BLACK. Where is that from?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not from Hants.

Mr. BLACK. Never mind, I am asking the question.

Mr. DANIEL. This parish is in the county of Charlotte, N.B.

Mr. TALBOT. It is a printed document?

Mr. DANIEL. A county represented by my hon. friend opposite, and it is, I presume, inhabited principally by fishermen and farmers.

Mr. CARVELL. And controlled mainly by Mr. Ganong, the late Conservative member.

Mr. DANIEL. If the people there support the Conservative party, that shows their very good sense. I offer this as a sort of antidote.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CROSBY. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to read a resolution which will no doubt be of some interest to this House. I take it from the Montreal 'Star' of March 16th:

Kentville, N.S., March 15.—After a long discussion the Board of Trade at an early hour this morning passed a resolution protesting against the proposed reciprocity agreement on the ground that it would cause disturbance in Canadian trade, hamper Canada's freedom in developing her own resources, and diminish Canada's position as a unit within the British Empire.

That is from a town in King's County represented by the hon. the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), and a county which has very seldom sent a Conservative to this House or even the local parliament. Only a few weeks ago, whether owing to the operations of the Minister of Militia or not—he knows best himself—they succeeded in electing a representative to the local legislature who was a Liberal. I have therefore something to warrant my saying that this resolution at least must have been passed by Liberals. Therefore, while there may not have been any very strong disposition on the part of the government to withdraw the reciprocity agreement, I am sure there will be no difficulty about their doing it now. If there be any part of the Dominion which could be benefited by this agreement, it would be that particular section. In fact it has been said by a great many that the fruit interests there and throughout the eastern part of Canada at least would be benefited. That resolution comes on from a centre which has always been accustomed to elect Liberals both for the Dominion parliament and the local legislature.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Can my hon. friend give me any names?

Mr. CROSBY. I have only what I find in the newspaper.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very meagre. With regard to that, I would like to say that a meeting of the Kings County Board of Trade in Kentville—not the Kentville Board of Trade—was held the other day at Kentville at which people from every portion of the county were present and a great many speeches were made. I am sorry I have not the newspaper here, but a resolution in support of the reciprocity proposals was moved and a vote taken of 87 in its favour and 2 against. I think that more correctly represents the feeling in Kings county than the result of the meeting to which my hon. friend has referred and of which I have had no report whatever. The hon. gentleman has mentioned the fact that, very recently, in Kings county a by-election was held for the provincial legislature. And I may say, in parenthesis, I believe my hon. friend was quite anxious because I happened to be absent from the House during that time, taking part in that election—doing my duty, as the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) pointed out, as one of the citizens of Kings county. It is quite true, the country of Kings was carried by the Liberals by acclamation on that occasion, and one of the reasons why it was carried by acclamation was that, a few days before nomination day, the full text of the reciprocity proposals now before this House were published from one end of that county to the other. I had the pleasure of speaking throughout the county at some ten or twelve meetings, and took occasion to read to the people the text of the proposal, and to point out—and they did not require very much argument—the advantages which would accrue to them from this reciprocity arrangement. I had not intended to refer to this matter on this occasion, but, as my hon. friend mentioned it, I thought that, perhaps, it would be better to go a little further. A little later on, I shall hope to have the full report of the meeting which he has quoted as having taken place at Kentville. I have here, in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' a full report—two or three columns—of the meeting of the Kings County Board of Trade to which I have referred. But I may have occasion later on to refer to this matter again, and I will not detain the House now by speaking of it further.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). As the reading of resolutions seems to be in order, and as the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), is in his place, I would like to read one more, especially as it concerns a part of the country to which he made strong reference on the 23rd of February last. He will remember reading an editorial from the Summerland 'Review' setting forth, the minister presumably intended to show, a reliable expression of the opinion of that district, an opinion favourable to the reciprocity agreement. Now, I ask leave to read a resolution which will show how the case is regarded in the particular part of the country of which he spoke:

Summerland, B.C.,

Martin Burrell, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to submit for your consideration the following resolution which was unanimously adopted at a joint meeting of the Summerland Farmers' Institute, Fruit Growers' Association and Agriculture Association, held here recently:

Resolved, that the above named associations strongly endorse the resolution passed by the Associated Boards of Trade regarding the tariff on fruit, a copy of which herewith follows, and that a copy of said resolution be sent to Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Senator Bostock, Hon. Clifford Sifton and Mr. Martin Burrell, M.P.

I do not think it is necessary for me to read the resolution referred to, because I have already put it on 'Hansard' twice. It is a strong resolution deploring the effects of the reciprocal proposals as regards the fruit industry. I wish to specially call the attention of the Minister of Customs to this as showing the absolutely false position he took before this House, in presumably, giving the impression that the editorial which he read expressed anything but the sense of the editorial writer himself.

Mr. B. B. LAW (Yarmouth). I desire to call attention to a resolution of the Yarmouth Board of Trade.:

Whereas, the reciprocal trade arrangement recently drafted by representatives of the United States and representatives of Canada is now before the parliament of Canada for ratification;

And whereas, in the opinion of this Board of Trade the ratification of said arrangement and the amendment of the customs tariffs of both countries in accordance with the schedules to said proposed arrangement will establish between Canada and the United States, not only a more liberal trade policy than heretofore, which must have many advantages, but will promote and encourage the commercial interests of both countries and strengthen the friendly relations now happily prevailing between them, and thus add another safe-guard to the peace of the empire by further promoting the union of Anglo-Saxon nations for their common interests;

Therefore resolved, that this Board of Trade place on record its approval of said trade arrangement, and of its hope and desire that it may be ratified both by the Canadian parliament and the American Congress, believing that its ratification will effect a marked increase in the prosperity of the people of Canada.

Further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and to B. B. Law, M.P., at Ottawa.

Yarmouth, N.S., Feb. 13, 1911.

This resolution was passed unanimously by the Board of Trade of Yarmouth, one of the most influential in the province, and composed of both Liberals and Conservatives.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), stated—I do not remember whether he said he had not met or that he had not heard of a single man in Saskatchewan opposed to the reciprocity pact. Of course, if he meant that he had not met such a man, I could well understand it, because while a resident of Ottawa, he is not likely to meet very many men at this distance from his own province. But, if he meant he had not heard of a man resident in Saskatchewan who was opposed to this reciprocity pact, I beg to call his attention to a press despatch in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of March 5, which purports to give an account of a meeting, not of any manufacturing concern or of any board of trade, but of no less an association than a Grain Growers' Association, and that in the province of Saskatchewan:

Fleming, Sask., March 5.—A largely attended meeting of the Fleming Grain Growers' Association here Thursday night strongly condemned the proposed reciprocity treaty, and passed a strong resolution against the proposed ratification of the agreement. It was stated that the Canadian wheat would lose its reputation in the markets of the world, trade would be transferred from the Canadian lines to United States roads, and that it would be detrimental to the best interests of the empire commercial relations.

I commend this to the attention of the hon. gentleman for Regina, who, apparently, is not conversant with what is going on in his own province, and would also draw his attention to the fact that there are some Grain Growers' Associations that do not allow their thinking to be done by another set of men. It is true that there are resolutions cut and dried, manufactured, as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples), said, sent out to the local associations throughout the west and passed as a mere matter of form —we all know how easily that is accomplished. On the other hand, there are associations composed of intelligent men who do their thinking for themselves, who are not going to be dictated to by any other set of men, but pass resolutions in accordance with their own judgment.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Is not Fleming situated on the boundary between Manitoba and Sackatchewan, and would not these men be mostly residents of Manitoba?

Mr. ROCHE. Are the residents of Saskatchewan very different from the residents of the province of Manitoba, just across the boundary line between the provinces? This letter is dated Fleming, March 5, and Fleming is in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence that it was a Saskatchewan man?

Mr. ROCHE. That is a silly question.

Mr. ROCHE.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CROTHERS.

Mr. CROTHERS. A few minutes ago my attention was called to the reading last night by the hon. member for Carleton, N. B., (Mr. Carvell) of a few sentences from some newspaper purporting to give what I had said the night before with reference to the members of the Treasury Board who were present when the question of issuing a certificate to the Farmers' Bank was up. It will be remembered by hon. gentlemen then present, that the Minister of Finance had stated that there were present at that meeting of the board, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the Minister of Finance himself. The sentences the member for Carleton read last night made me say that notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance had said, the Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright had not attended that meeting of the Treasury Board. They are in these words:

Mr. CARVELL. This was followed by an article which appears in the Ottawa press——

I presume he means the Ottawa 'Free Press'.

——of this afternoon, and which is as follows:—

Mr. Crothers, of West Elgin, declared that at the meeting of the Treasury Board, at which the certificate was granted, there were only three present, and not a quorum. 'Sir Richard Cartwright was not present, or the certificate would not have been issued,' said he.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not say anything of the kind, and if my hon. friend from Carleton had taken the trouble to look up in 'Hansard' what I did say, he would have found it very different. On page 5483 I used these words:

We have been told that there were present on that occasion Sir Richard Cartwright, the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), and the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding). Well, I do not believe that Sir Richard Cartwright had his attention called to the facts, or he would certainly not have consented to the issuing of this certificate.

So I did not contradict the Finance Minister, I would not for a moment question a statement of fact made by the Finance Minister that Sir Richard Cartwright was present at that meeting of the Treasury Board. What I did say was that I did not believe his attention had been called to the facts of the case, because if they had, I do not believe he would have assented to the issuing of the certificate.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Dominion Lands and Parks—salaries of the outside service, $370,000.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Before explaining the details of this vote, I would like to be permitted to place before the committee some facts and figures in regard to the work done under this vote during the past and previous years. As the committee is aware, the administration of Dominion lands has a very important influence upon the increase of population and of the productive wealth of Canada. Therefore, it is a matter of great interest to the country to know the results which have been reached by the expenditure of this money. I am sure the committee will be gratified to know that under the vote for Dominion lands during the calendar year 1910, there was the largest amount of land settlement in the prairie provinces that has ever taken place in the history of Canada. The number of individual entries for land were 52,072, besides 18,352 pre-emption entries. In all therefore, there were taken 70,424 separate entries for land. These 70,000 entries represented a total area of 11,617,600 acres. It may interest the committee to know that the amount of land in the three prairie provinces which passed to individuals last year on conditions of residence and cultivation, was almost equal to the total area of the 23 countries which constituted the western peninsula of Ontario, an area of 11,840,000 acres. It may be of further interest to know that in this corresponding area in the western peninsula of Ontario, there was, at the census of 1901, a population of 1,313,000 people, a little short of one-fourth of the total population of the Dominion at that time. That is to say, under the operation of the Dominion Lands Branch of the Interior Department last year, an area of land passed into the hands of individuals on conditions of residence and cultivation, equal to the 23 counties constituting the western peninsula of Ontario, including York and Simcoe.

This area, judged by the standard of the western peninsula of Ontario, is capable of supporting at any rate over a million and a quarter of people. The conditions of cultivation which are attached to the entries of which I spoke, without the fulfilment of which conditions the title to the land cannot pass to the individual, applied to 2,500,000 acres, that is to say the government of Canada entered into contracts with 52,072 people last year to bring under cultivation 2,517,020 acres of land, the condition being that the title should not pass unless that amount of land was cultivated. It may further interest the committee to know that this area of cultivation under contract is very nearly double the total area of the province of Prince Edward Island. Last year there was put under contract to cultivate 2,517,020 acres of land while the total land area of Prince Edward Island is 1,397,760 acres.

The rapidity of the increase of settlement is also, I assume, a matter of some interest. While the individuals making entry during 1910 were 52,072, in the year 1909 the individuals making entry were 40,408. Five years ago the number of individuals making entry was 34,503; five years before that, in 1900, it was 7,764 and five years before that, in 1895, it was 2,326. In the three periods of five years each the number of entries has practically doubled in each period and during the last period, while the number of entries has not been actually doubled, the amount of land entered for has been more than doubled and the amount of cultivation contracted for has increased fourfold.

It may also be of interest to the committee to be informed as to the result following the passage of the Land Bill of 1908, which placed at the disposal of homestead settlers all the land not then alienated in these prairie provinces without regard to whether it was comprised within odd or even numbered sections. By the Act of 1908 the lands which had been held under reservation for the purpose of aid to railways or such other purpose as might be through fit were made available to homestead settlement without distinction of number or place.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). That was not in the railway belt?

Mr. OLIVER. Not in the railway belt of British Columbia. I am not speaking of that; I am speaking entirely of the three prairie provinces. That feature of the Bill of 1908 was that in a certain area of Saskatchewan and Alberta a pre-emption privilege was allowed for reasons which were set forth at that time. Within that area a homesteader was entitled, when entering for his free homestead, to enter also for an adjoining quarter-section as a pre-emption upon which he should pay a price, and upon which he would do cultivation duties and in regard to which he had to establish residence. I need not perhaps repeat that the area of country extending, roughly speaking, for a distance of 400 miles along the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway between Moosejaw and Calgary —I do not wish to be understood as saying extending from Moosejaw to Calgary, but for a distance extending 400 miles along the railway between these two points—up to the passage of the Bill of 1908, contained very little settlement. For one reason or another it had not proved attractive to settlers. I am not able to give the number of homesteaders who were settled within that area up to that time, but those who are familiar with the conditions will, I am sure, agree with me that the number, as compared with the area under consideration, was comparatively small. Since the adoption of the principle of pre-emption which took effect the 1st September, 1908, there have been taken within that area, as the result of the provision of the Act of that date, 46,066 pre-emptions representing a total area of 7,370,560 acres upon which, in order to earn title, cultivation was required amounting to 2,303,300 acres. It may be of interest to the committee to know that the area taken in pre-emtions since the 1st September, 1908, in a district which up to that time had not been considered favourable by settlers, is more than equal to the total area of that part of the province of Quebec which lies south of the St. Lawrence river extending from the western limit of the province to a point south of the city of Quebec, containing altogether twenty-two counties. In a little over two years under the pre-emption provision of the law of 1908 an area of land was taken up in that particular part of the northwest which hitherto had not been considered attractive to settlers equal to twenty-two counties of the province of Quebec, and I think I am safe in saying the twenty-two counties in the province of Quebec which contain the greater part of the presently occupied agricultural area, at any rate, that which is most densely peopled and most profitably worked. The area of the twenty-two counties is 6,508,000 acres, as compared with 7,370,560 acres taken under pre-emption and entry since September 1, 1908. In connection with these pre-emption entries there were taken of course an equal number, 46,066 of homestead entries. Some of the homestead entries had already been taken, but there were taken after the first of September, 1908, in connection with the pre-emption entries not less than 46,000 homesteads representing an area of 6,400,000 acres, and calling for cultivation to the amount of 1,200,000 acres. That is to say in that one area of the Northwest under the special provision of the Act of 1908, an area of land has passed to actual settlers under conditions of residence and cultivation that is more than double the total area of the twenty-two counties of the province of Quebec which contain the major portion of the population of that province.

Another feature of the Act of 1908 which was looked upon with some doubt by a number of the members of this House was the purchased homestead provision. Under this provision a man who had exhausted his homestead right became entitled to acquire 160 acres of land within the pre-emption area under conditions of residence and cultivation equal to those required in the case of an ordinary homestead, and in addition he was required to pay the sum of $3 an acre. It was suggested at the time by those who were opposed to this provision that to allow the settler to acquire an additional homestead at such a low price would tend to unsettle the conditions existing throughout the greater part of the prairie country. It was declared by a gentleman who had some right to speak with authority, a member representing a constituency in the province of Manitoba, that such a privilege would be bound to be a serious detriment to the already settled sections of the country. However, the provision was agreed to and went into effect with this result: While 46,066 pre-emptions were taken, only 3,726 purchased homesteads were taken, an area of 596,160 acres, calling for cultivation to the amount of 186,300 acres. The fears which were expressed at the time of the injurious effect of this provision have not been realized. The acquirement of a matter of 3,726 purchased homesteads in the pre-emption area has not injuriously disturbed existing conditions of settlement in the older settled portions of the prairie provinces, while it has at the same time afforded opportunity to the man who had already exhausted his homestead right, and for one reason or another desired to take another chance at fortune, an opportunity on reasonable terms and was availed of in 3,726 cases. The operation of the provision, I think, justified its adoption by the House, and has not at all borne out the objections that were urged against it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many of those 3,726 purchased homesteads were acquired by men who, having already acquired homesteads, say in Manitoba, had perhaps without a due appreciation of the law, fraudulently acquired new homesteads in other provinces by taking what were really false oaths, as subsequently ascertained by the officials of the department.

Mr. OLIVER. None of the 3,726 purchased homesteads would come into the class mentioned because the man who had exhausted his homestead right by coming into the purchased homestead area had the right to take another homestead under these conditions. The cases mentioned by my hon. friend are not within the law, and are not included within this number. They are cases where men acquired their homesteads and afterwards illegally acquired other homesteads not in the pre-emption area, and having acquired the second homesteads illegally, thereby placed themselves under penalty of the law. In many of these cases we have taken a lenient view, and have sometimes cancelled the fraudulent entry, and sold them the land at a price which would take away the clean profit that they would have made if they had got the land on their first fraudulent entry. Within the pre-emption area the price at which the land can be purchased is $3 an acre. When we find a man who has secured fraudulent entry outside the purchase homestead area we charge him a price over $3, sometimes $4, or sometimes more. In no case that I know of have we demanded a price on the actual valuation of the land. We may have been more lenient than we should, but we cannot be accused of having dealt unfairly by these people. Some of them possibly may have had a misunderstanding, but whether or not we are inclined to deal leniently rather than harshly with them. Of course, if a man puts himself within reach of the criminal law he takes his chances, and if he is punished he has no ground of complaint.

Mr. HUGHES. I notice that some have been punished for fraudulent homestead entry and some have not, and I trust the minister will be careful to see that all are uniformly dealt with. It is not fair of course to let one man who makes a fraudulent entry go scot free and to put another fellow in jail for doing the same thing. Even handed justice should be dealt out in all these cases. One man should not have the right to buy himself off and the other fellow who cannot do so be sent to prison. I do not know what the details are, but I would impress this on the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. This department has nothing to do with the administration of criminal law. In some cases prosecutions have been entered under the criminal law, which is under the administration of the province. Our compromise with any man in regard to the ownership of the land does not relieve him from the operation of the criminal law if any one chooses to invoke it against him.

Mr. HUGHES. It might mitigate the offence.

Mr. OLIVER. It might, but we have nothing to do with the criminal aspect of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Some years ago a man who had had a homestead in Manitoba asked, through the legal column of the Winnipeg 'Free Press', the Liberal organ, whether he could take a homestead in one of the western provinces, and the answer was that under the law he had a perfect right to take a homestead in Saskatchewan or Alberta after having taken one in Manitoba. The minister knows as well as I do that the farmers of the Northwest, particularly the pioneers, have not much time to read the newspapers; they do not know anything about the quibbles of the law, and when they hear that the government organ gives such advice, and when they act upon it, they certainly ought to be treated as leniently as possible. Now, there is no doubt that in many cases where perjury has been committed and a second homestead taken or it may be a third, the government has been very lenient and has taken care that certain individuals should have the privilege of buying these homesteads at prices below the real value. I believe in that leniency myself, but I point out to the minister that I know of three cases in my own constituency, and about them I have spoken to the minister, where the men are the worst Tories or the best Tories, just from the point of view you look at it, and who are unfortunate enough to be illiterate, but who relied absolutely upon what was expounded as the policy of this government in the Winnipeg 'Free Press', and perjured themselves it is true —I do not excuse that for a moment—but thinking they had to comply with some quibble or some phraseology to get what they thought was their right, they did apply for a second homestead. These three men are languishing in jail to-day, and at the same time I could name to the minister off hand a dozen staunch Liberals who have committed the same perjury, but who to-day are freemen and have their homesteads and have been granted their patents. I do not wish to mention the name of any man who has not the right to come here and answer me, but I say this is a fact, and I say it is absolutely unfair to give one man, because he is a Liberal and has a political pull with some one in this House, rights and privileges that are not extended to the Conservatives who support me. I do not believe for a moment that the Minister of the Interior knows of these facts; I think he is too big to do anything of the kind. I do not want to throw a bouquet at him by any means, but I can tell him that his department is and always has been absolutely rotten in that particular regard, and I want him to know it. I ask him to guide himself by that knowledge. I will hand to him if he asks for them the names and he may rest assured that the facts are as I state them. I have three men languishing in jail for doing what dozens of Liberal heelers and government supporters have done in the last ten or fifteen years in the Northwest, and who are to-day freemen. These men are in jail because they would not support my opponent last election; there is no other reason. The man who sent the information to the department against them is the man who put in a petition against me and accused me of every crime in the calendar. As was ably said by the Minister of Justice to-day, the fact is that a man who has been chosen by the people of his constituency is open to some scallawag getting up and accusing him of every crime in the calendar, and there is no possible law by which that individual can be punished. This man to whom I refer, who petitioned against me, tried time and time again in the office in Dauphin to break the laws and perjure himself and get a second homestead, but the officers of the Interior Department there knew him; they knew the circumstances, and they would not permit such an infraction of the law. The same man went to Saskatchewan and entered for a homestead, stayed there for a year or two, and perjured himself to the knowledge of the Minister of the Interior, or at least of his department, and after a year or two his homestead was taken away from him. Was he prosecuted for perjury? Not much. He was too good a Liberal; he was the petitioner against my election.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is this man?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I shall not mention his name. I want to appeal to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to put in practice what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has brought to his attention. While leniency is a good thing, and we all approve of it, especially where there is illiteracy and want of knowledge, let that leniency not be onesided, let it be fair, let the poor, illiterate Tories—and there are some illiterate Tories, but not as many as there are Liberals—get a fighting chance to make good. I could go on and tell the minister about two of those cases in Dauphin—boys who hardly can write their names—who were told by the Liberals that the 'Free Press' said that they could go and do this if they went into another province. They went and did it and are now in jail. One is an old man married to an invalid wife, a bedridden woman, with no money and nothing to keep her except the charity of the people. The other is the son, the sole support of his parents, and he is in jail. Why? Because he is a Tory and voted against Burrows—nothing else.

Mr. TURRIFF. I can hardly believe that any such state of affairs exists such as my hon. friend depicts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You ought to know.

Mr. TURRIFF. I cannot believe that any man is treated by the Department of the Interior in a different way, in any shape or form, because he is a Liberal. During the five or six years that I was in charge of that land department, I never knew of a case of that kind. I have now been a member of this House for seven years and have had a good many complaints to make to the Minister of the Interior for being so absolutely strict in carrying out the regulations in such an arbitrary manner—not giving away a little, not giving little concessions to settlers that in my judgment should be given. But I can say this, that I have never in one single instance in my own constituency, in the last seven years, got one bit of consideration for any one Liberal or Conservative, or for any Liberal more than Conservative, in any shape or form, and I do not believe that any such partiality exists in the west to-day. I do not believe that any Liberal in any part of the country can get any consideration which is not coming to him fairly, because I have not been able to get anything for any of my friends, Liberal or Conservative, in the way of extension of time or any little considerations of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES. That must have been a sad disappointment.

Mr. TURRIFF. In some cases it has been, because there are cases in which I think consideration might be given to the settler and nobody would be hurt. But I can say, absolutely, that not in a single case has anything been given a Liberal in my constituency that would not be given a Conservative.

Mr. NEELY. I wish to add my endorsation to what my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has said. The hon. member for Dauphin has stated that homesteaders are treated differently, according to their political views and opinions. Well, I think I have had as much to do in the matter of corresponding with the department in behalf of homesteaders as my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) and probably somewhat more in recent years—since, at least, the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has had charge of that department. Some seven or eight years ago the Humboldt constituency had hardly any homesteaders, hardly any people at all. At present there are many thousands of homesteaders in that constituency, and I have never known one single case in which a man's political affiliations were taken into consideration, so far as his treatment by the Minister of the Interior or the Department of the Interior is concerned. I have the same complaint to make as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), and that is that sometimes the regulations of the department are administered too strictly. I have also the complaint to make that, in my judgment, some of those regulations are in themselves too severe. In some instances they go possibly beyond the spirit and intent of the Dominion Lands Act. But I have this to say, in justice to the Minister of the Interior and his department, that I have never known one case in which a man got consideration because he was a Liberal or was refused consideration because he was a Conservative. I have written the Department of the Interior in the matter of dealing with homesteads, not about a few cases, but about hundreds of cases, and I do not know that any man from the west has had a larger correspondence along this line than I have had. That is due simply to the fact that Humboldt constituency has been actively homesteaded during the time I have resided in it; and in all that time, in no instance, to my knowledge, has any man been given any more consideration because he was a Liberal than he would have been given if he had been a Conservative. I want to say further, that, in my opinion, it is not a fair statement to make in this House, without sufficient and positive proof, that any man is refused consideration because he is a Conservative. There may be occasions when my hon. friend thinks Conservatives were hardly dealt with by the department; but in such cases it was not because they were Conservatives but because they broke the law. My hon. friend tells us of a man who had gone to jail, but he gave himself the reason. It was because he had perjured himself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What about the other ones? Some got off.

Mr. NEELY. The hon. member for Dauphin is a public man, he was elected as a representative of his constituency and as a representative of the people of Canada. If he knows of any case where men, who are not in jail, ought to be in jail——

Mr. STAPLES. The minister knows it and admits it.

Mr. NEELY. They were tried and acquitted.

Mr. HUGHES. Never acquitted.

Mr. NEELY. If my hon. friend knows of men who ought to be in jail and are not, who have committed crimes for which they should be in jail, it is his duty as a public man to lay that information before the department. And I will guarantee that, inside of twenty-four hours, the Minister of the Interior will institute an investigation and will carry out the spirit and the letter of the law.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. NEELY. My hon. friends opposite should not be too severe on the officials of the department or the department itself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was not either, was I?

Mr. NEELY. It is known that my hon. friend has even taken steps himself, on certain occasions, to lead even officials to do what was not in the best interest of the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My hon. friend is a liar, absolutely a liar.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) will realize that that language is not allowed. It will be necessary for him to withdraw those words.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call him a liar, and I refuse to take it back.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think I can hear any other point of order than the one I have raised.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He had better talk of his honesty? Where is the capital of Saskatchewan? What does it cost to vote for it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Dauphin will realize, I am sure, that he has spoken hastily, and also that his words are not parliamentary. I think that will be sufficient to cause him to withdraw them.

Mr. HUGHES. But, previous to that point of order there is one which the Chair did not raise. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), was out of order in making the statements he did concerning the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), and it is his place first to withdraw his declaration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I said goes. He is absolutely a liar. But if it is not parliamentary, I take the word back. But he is absolutely a liar.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is distinctly out of order. Such a breach of order must be——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will not take a word back, he is a liar, first, last, and all the time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Inasmuch as the hon. member has refused to withdraw, unless he will, even at this moment withdraw, it will be my duty to report the matter to the House for such action as it deems proper and desirable. I will still give him an opportunity to withdraw, for he, himself, must realize very clearly how unparliamentary his expression is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a hard task, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw something that is absolutely true.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is no withdrawal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member must obey the rule and withdraw the expression.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will withdraw the expression, at your order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Now, you had better make that man withdraw—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If there is a point of order with regard to any previous expression, let the hon. member state the point of order, and I will hear it.

Mr. HUGHES. I raised the point of order. The hon. member for Humboldt, in charging the hon. member for Dauphin with seeking to induce an officer of the Crown, an officer in the service of this government, to perform an illegal and criminal act, is unparliamentary.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) to use the terms attributed to him by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). Had I understood so, I would have called the hon. member to order myself. But, the point of order having been raised and the charge made that these words were used, I will allow the hon. member for Humboldt to state whether they were correctly understood or not, and to make his explanation.

Mr. NEELY. I did not use those words. I said, and I repeat what I said, that the hon. member for Dauphin himself—

Mr. HUGHES. Did he sell the capital of Saskatchewan?

Mr. NEELY. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) perhaps has something to say. I will give him an opportunity to say it. I am not cowardly enough to make insinuations—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) must confine himself, at this time, to an explanation of the point of order.

Mr. NEELY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) is interrupting me while I make my statement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Chairman, why don't you call this gentleman to order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not realized that any breach of order has been made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I rise to a point of order. Do you, Mr. Chairman, deem the word 'cowardly' within the rules of debate in this House?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not heard the word 'cowardly' as attached to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton.

Mr. NEELY. I said I was not cowardly enough to make insinuations across the floor of this House. If I have anything to say to any man, I will not be like some hon. members, but will make my statements openly and plainly. I only ask that any man in this House who has anything to say about me shall say it openly—let him make a statement and then we will be able to deal with the matter. Now I did not say my hon. friend from Dauphin had compelled any official to do any illegal act. I said that my hon. friend from Dauphin had made the admission or the statement—

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is absolutely false.

Mr. NEELY. Excuse me, you do not know what I was going to say yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should at least wait until the statement is completed.

Mr. NEELY. That in connection with a certain transaction, a firm with which my hon. friend was identified in connection with a certain transaction by which that firm obtained a grazing lease—I will put my statement plainly—in the Northwest—that it cost that firm a certain amount in order to induce an official of the department to obtain this grazing lease from the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Where do I come in?

Mr. NEELY. I have a stenographic report in which the hon. member for Dauphin, in his election campaign, made that statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, you have just heard the statement he has made, that he has a stenographic report. I demand that here and now. I believe his statement——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to do that, but the statement is not completed. I will ask the hon. member for Humboldt to understand that a point of order was raised with regard to certain expressions that he used. He has the right to explain, but I think an elaborate discussion of some other circumstances would hardly be in order. I will ask him to make his explanation as concisely as possible.

Mr. NEELY. I am not making an elaborate explanation. I am explaining that I did not make the statement that the hon. member for Dauphin, or some other hon. gentleman said I did, and on which they raise the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If that be the case, if the hon. member for Humboldt denies having used the words attributed to him by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, his denial must, under the rules of the House, be accepted. In that case, unless another point of order is raised, the hon. member may proceed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As I understood the remarks of this gentleman from Humboldt, they were to the effect that I had admitted doing something that was illegal and wrong. That is what I understood. My protest was unparliamentary, and, Mr. Chairman, you know that I am always ready to express my regret to you for falling from grace. When I say that, I say all that is to be said. No man alive—that has been my religion—no man alive can come to my face and say to me: You did a mean thing or a crooked thing. That is my religion. And this member from Humboldt cannot do it anywhere outside of this House, and he can't get Jim Jeffries to do it outside of this House, but I will give them some of the fairest sport they ever had. Is it a fair thing that a creature of circumstances like the member for Humboldt—if that language is parliamentary—can get up and say here under your protection something that he cannot say anywhere else in God's wide world? What he said is absolutely, first, and all the time, false. It was the 'Free Press, the Liberal newspaper of Ottawa——

Mr. NEELY. I rise to a point of order, I have the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the point of order is correct. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), rose to the point of order, the point of order has not been stated explicitly, and if he will explain the point of order I will listen to him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state it again. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) said I had admitted that I had been guilty of an infraction of some law or other. I say that is an absolute untruth—if that language is parliamentary—and he must withdraw it, and withdraw it unconditionally.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) certainly made a statement in regard to certain actions of the member for Dauphin; I did not myself hear that the words used were unparliamentary. But if the member for Dauphin denies having done the act attributed to him, by the member for Humboldt, his denial must be accepted.

Mr. NEELY. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a very strange thing that I am called upon to deny a thing before I have said it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I again rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Neely) must be allowed to complete his withdrawal. The hon. member made a statement with reference to a certain act by the member for Dauphin, the denial of the member for Dauphin must be accepted. That is the rule of parliament, irrespective of what the hon. member for Humboldt may believe. When he has once charged an act to the member for Dauphin, which that hon. gentleman denies, it is that parliamentary acceptance of the denial that the member for Humboldt is asked to give.

Mr. NEELY. Well, if the member for Dauphin says he never made the statement on the platform in his constituency in the last Dominion election, that he or his firm spent a certain amount of money in order to obtain the consent of an official of the department to obtain a grazing lease in the west, then of course I will accept the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I am quite ready to make the statement at any time, but that is not my point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is correct. The particular statement that the member for Humboldt made, not any modification or explanation of it, if the hon. member for Dauphin denies it, that denial under the rules of parliament must be accepted. It is simply a withdrawal of that particular statement in that form, and not in any other.

Mr. NEELY. I have no recollection of stating anything that the member for Dauphin did until a moment ago. I did not elaborate or make any statement, and the hon. gentleman's denial, and his emphatic language towards myself as to the truth of my statement, were altogether out of order, because I had not stated what the nature of the offence was. It is only the last time I was on my feet that I did so, that I made the explanation. The hon. gentleman cannot deny what I had not said. I made the statement the last time I was on my feet as to what the particular thing was that I charged the hon. member with. I say again that if the hon. gentleman states that he never made these statements on a public platform, I will take his word for it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has just stated that if the member for Dauphin denies having used the words attributed to him, or the statement, he, the member for Humboldt, accepts that denial.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not going to have the onus put on me. I have risen to a point of order. The member for Humboldt stated—I do not know the exact words, but the meaning was that I had admitted having committed some crime for some reason or other. I rose to that point of order. What object would I have had, if he had not made a statement of that kind, questioning my truthfulness, in rising to a point of order? I surely had some incentive to get on my feet in something that he had said. I absolutely insist on fairplay, I expect to get it, I always do get it. I absolutely insist that the hon. gentlemen take back that statement in the form he made it, that I had admitted having done something that was not within the law, to obtain something for myself or somebody else.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is somewhat unfortunate that the question has been mixed with other questions, and that the memory of members, as well as of the Chairman, is not as clear as it was at the moment. But the general rule remains, that when a member of this House attributes a certain act to another member which that other member denies, his denial must be accepted. It is now unfortunately too late to recall the exact words; in my memory they appeared to be in this form, that the hon. member for Dauphin had admitted urging the officials of the department to do some act not in the best interests of the country.

Mr. NEELY. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. But I do not recall the word 'illegally' being used or implied. But even in that form, if the member for Dauphin denies, then the member for Humboldt must, under our parliamentary rules, accept the denial.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have not withdrawn anything yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that under all the circumstances the expressions of the member for Humboldt would be fairly considered a withdrawal of that statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I just want to say this, and say it so that you will understand it, and the House will understand it, and if it gets beyond the confines of the House, that everybody will understand it—I have never in my life made a statement that, by myself, in any way personally, as came out in the 'Free Press' article that was read by the member for Humboldt, I had bribed, or got any one to bribe, any high official of the Department of the Interior to obtain any concession, whether right or wrong. I want to say emphatically that any one, whether it is the Free Press, or any one else on its behalf, the member for Humboldt, or any one on his behalf, or on behalf of the Minister of the Interior—I am sorry to drag him into it—says a thing like that about me, he lies, and lies by the clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. NEELY. Well, Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend denies ever having made any such statement I accept his denial. I am quite prepared to apply the whitewash brush and put my hon. friend on a pedestal. He tells us that he has never been guilty of doing anything wrong, and never did any harm.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg your pardon, I am not going to be misinterpreted, Mr. Chairman. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may raise a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The member for Humboldt has just said that I claimed I have never done any wrong. I want to say again that he had better revise his text before he makes this statement. I am frail, like yourself, Mr. Chairman. I do wrong thousands of times, but I have my regrets with regard to those wrongs.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member for Humboldt may proceed with his remarks.

Mr. NEELY. I will ask you to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ALBERTA ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Alberta Electric Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On section 14: right to acquire and operate coal mines,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see any objection to giving the company these rights. I think the Canadian Pacific railway are operating a coal mine at Bankhead in the Rocky mountains. I do not see any special reason why a railway company should not operate a coal mine or coal mines, because they are the largest consumers of coal.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is in error, I do not think the Canadian Pacific railway are operating the mines at Bankhead.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a subsidiary company.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think the Canadian Pacific railway are operating any coal mines anywhere, neither is the Canadian Northern, although I do not know if they have authority to do so. I wish to repeat most emphatically the objections I offered once before to this Bill. In my judgment the linking together of authority to mine coal and to transport it by rail is detrimental to the best interests of coal mining, and of the consumers of coal who would be affected by this charter. I wish on behalf of the people of Alberta to register a most emphatic protest against the granting of these powers in this charter. What has been alleged to be a precedent is not a precedent, but if we pass this charter then we will establish a precedent which will no doubt have an injurious effect in the future.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not aware that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior had expressed an objection to this section. Of course he speaks largely for the section of the country affected, and his views are entitled to very great respect, but it seems to me it is impossible to prevent a railway company from operating a coal mine if it wants to. What difference does it make whether the Canadian Pacific railway operate a coal mine in their own name, or through another company, the stock of which they have acquired. I understand the Canadian Northern have acquired coal fields at Brazeau, and I do not know that it makes any difference whether they operate those fields in the name of the Canadian Northern or another company. There might be advantages in having another company for financial reasons, for the raising of the money on bonds or stock of that company, but if they control the subsidiary company it is about the same thing as if they were all under the same name.

Mr. OLIVER. That point was under discussion when the Bill was up before, and while no one will pretend that the same men who constitute a railway company may not also constitute a coal company and thereby work in unison to the detriment of the public, the reason this company wants this authority to handle coal incorporated in their charter is in order that the two interests shall be interwoven so that the companies cannot be dealt with separately by controlling legislation. Everybody realizes that there must be controlling legislation as to transportation, and most people recognize that there will have to be controlling legislation in regard to coal mining. If the coal mining interest is legally a separate interest it can be dealt with by controlling legislation very much more conveniently and satisfactorily than if it is united by legislation with the transportation interests. Certain special privileges must be given to transportation companies, or they cannot carry on their business. There is no special privilege required for the carrying on of a coal mining business. But when the coal mining business is put under the same legislative authority, and given the same legislative privileges as a transportation company, then there is a danger that it will escape from future legislative control. That I am satisfied this company is seeking, and it would certainly be to the detriment of the public. It is in the interests of coal mines and of the capital invested in them that there should be an absolute separation of interest between transportation and coal mining so that the man who owns the coal mine shall get a square deal in the matter of transportation, and it is just as much in the interests of the consumer that there should be actual competition in the producing of coal that the railway company should stand in the position of a common carrier in dealing with the coal mine operator at the one end and the coal consumer at the other. No matter what the private interests of the individuals who constitute a railway company may be, we know that we have the right of legislative control which we can exercise if they are separate legal entities in a manner that we cannot exercise it if they are not separate.

Mr. HERRON. I am not positive whether or not the charters obtained by other railway companies give them the right to operate, but it is well known throughout the west that the big companies do own coal mines and I think operate them to a considerable extent. The Canadian Pacific railway are operating the Hosmer coal mine, although perhaps not very successfully. The Canadian Northern railway have acquired coal rights all along the foot-hills in fact, between my town and Calgary, and I think the Grand Trunk Pacific have been purchasing or acquiring coal mining rights, although I am not positive about that. The Minister of Railways the other evening said that in the near future parliament would have to interfere with those companies, and take from them the rights they have acquired under their charters to operate coal mines. For that reason I take it for granted that they all have these rights in their charters. In that case I do not see why we should start now to make a precedent in the case of this company and take away the rights they are asking for, and not give them a fair chance to be on a level with other railway companies operating in the western country. That is all I have to say and I do not think there is any more to be said. Other companies have this right, and I do not see why this company should not be put on an equality with the others. It would be a great accommodation to the people if this right were conferred on this company which may serve portions of the country where other larger railroads are not likely to go.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to know if this were agreed to in the Railway Committee, because if so it would influence me very much.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am instructed by the Minister of Railways that this section was agreed to as a compromse. There was a clause in the Bill allowing the railway to operate a telephone company, but that was objected by the province of Alberta, and an arrangement was made between the province and the promoters of the Bill by which the railway company relinquished its right to the telephone clause which had been passed by the Railway Committee, and in consideration thereof the province of Alberta agreed that this section should be allowed in the Bill. A distinct arrangement was, therefore, made, and if this clause is stricken out then the railway company will have nothing in return for its abandonment of the right to operate telephones. It is pretty well understood that in matters appertaining to their particular departments the ministers in charge are supposed to know more than others and their opinion carries weight. The Minister of the Interior is assumed prima facie to know more about a matter pertaining to his department than would the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Railways is supposed to know more about a railway matter than would the Minister of the Interior, and in connection with this principle I quote what the Minister of Railways said this day week, 'Hansard' 5181:

Mr. GRAHAM. I think we had better let it pass. It was explained in the committee pretty fully. In the west the railway companies practically all own coal areas, and operate them in connection with their traffic. It may be that in the years to come we shall have to cancel all these rights by legislation if they are abused. If it should happen that the coal companies and the transportation companies should put their heads together so that where you reduce the freight rates they will add them to the price of coal, it might be necessary to pass legislation in Canada similar to what has been passed in the United States, prohibiting coal companies and railway companies from being one and the same people.

We, therefore, have the authority of the Minister of Railways that in his judgment this is a proper clause to pass, he being at the time perfectly aware of the arrangement made between the parties.

Mr. CARVELL. My recollection is that when the Bill left the Railway Committee it contained the telephone clause, but that the coal clause had been stricken out in the committee. It was discussed to a certain extent in the Railway Committee, and on a vote being taken the telephone clause was left in, and the coal clause rejected. I cannot understand how the Bill gets to this House in its present shape, and in the absence of so many members from Alberta who are interested in the matter it seems to me that the Bill should go back to the Railway Committee for investigation. It is a most remarkable thing that everything we did in the Railway Committee seems to be reversed. In the absence of further light I am still of opinion that the telephone clause should remain, because I do not believe in a monopoly in telephones, and as to the coal matter on general principles I would be opposed to it.

Mr. HERRON. Mr. Chairman, is there a clause (j) added to section 7 in the reprint?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a paragraph (j) subparagraph of clause 7.

Mr. McCRANEY. My recollection is that when this Bill left the Railway Committee it contained the telephone clause, and did not contain the coal clause, and I do not understand how it now comes before us in its present shape. I am informed that subsequently there was an arrangement for an exchange of clauses, but I would like to be satisfied as to whether the matter came up again before the Railway Committee, and whether it endorsed that arrangement?

Mr. NORTHRUP. This day week the Bill was in the committee, and I quote from 'Hansard' page 5179:

On section 12,
Mr. DOUGLAS. I move that section 12 be stricken from the Bill.
Mr. GRAHAM. Does Mr. McCarthy agree to that?
Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.
Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCRANEY. That refers to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole House, but I have been referring to the Railway Committee. Whatever arrangement was made it appears to have been made after the Bill left the Railway Committee and under these circumstances it is proper that the Bill should go back to the Railway Committee. We are creating precedents and these precedents should be carefully considered by the Railway Committee which is responsible for railway legislation.

Mr. BARKER. I do not understand the argument that when the Committee of the Whole House has approved of a clause you have to send it upstairs to a standing committee to get that approval confirmed.

Mr. McCRANEY. I do not understand that the Committee of the Whole House passed on this.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, this day week.

Mr. NESBITT. The Committee of the Whole House ordered that the Bill was to stand over for reconsideration, and that is why we are reconsidering it to-night. In the Railway Committee we inserted the telephone clause and struck out the mining clause, but there appears to have been an arrangement made afterwards between the representatives of the province of Alberta, and the promoters of the Bill to transpose the clauses, and that is what the hon.

member (Mr. Northrup) refers to when he reads from 'Hansard' what was done in this committee the other night. I stated then that I did not like the legislation, but that I was a long distance away from where the road was going to be built, and when the parties agreed I did not see any reason why I should dissent. At the same time I am opposed to the legislation, and would prefer that this Bill went back to the Railway Committee. If the Railway Committee should agree, I personally would not object to it going through, but I think it ought to be reconsidered by that committee.

Mr. BARKER. In the Committee of the Whole House the Bill was agreed to as it now stands. Why should we send it back to the Railway Committee, which is only a portion of the House, for approval, when the whole House agreed to it?

Mr. NESBITT. For the very simple reason that this is a very material change, and that the Railway Committee did not consider it. This change was not proposed by the province of Alberta. That province did not propose to insert the coal clause and strike out the telephone clause when the Bill was before the Railway Committee. It is only because the Railway Committee did not have the opportunity to consider the Bill in the shape in which it now is, that I ask that it be sent back to them.

Mr. McCRANEY. With regard to what the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has said, this House has not yet disposed of the matter. The reason we have a Railway Committee is to have these things considered at greater length than they are likely to be considered in this House. The Railway Committee ought to have before it any arrangement made between the representatives of Alberta and the promoters of the Bill. We will only be doing justice to the promoters of the Bill if we send it back. If there were a majority in this House in favour of striking out this coal clause, the reverse of the arrangement which had been arrived at between the promoters and the representatives of Alberta, those who want to see the coal clause in, would still think that the Bill should go back to the Railway Committee. I think that the Railway Committee is the proper body to discuss these matters before they come into this House.

Mr. OLIVER. What is remarkable in connection with this Bill is that it comes from the Railway Committee in a certain form and then is altered in the Committee of the Whole House in the absence of the promoters. I want to urge upon my hon. friend that this is a matter of too serious importance to be dealt with in that way. It should be dealt with on the responsibility of those whose business it is to take the evidence and ascertain what merit there is in favour of this measure. That is the business of the Railway Committee. If that committee should see fit to insert this clause I would waive any objection, but I do not think it is fair to the country or the House that an attempt should be made to have a clause inserted in the Committee of the Whole House after the Railway Committee have struck it out. This has been alluded to as a compromise. A compromise on what? The railway company ask for telephone privileges and a coal mining right. Is it a compromise that they be allowed a coal right instead of a telephone right? What is there to show that they should have either right?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Other companies have the same right.

Mr. OLIVER. Other companies have not the same right, so far as my knowledge goes, or ought not to have been given that right if they have it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I was present in the Railway Committee the other day when a similar Bill, proposed by an hon. member on your right, Mr. Speaker, had a similar clause in it, and that clause was passed.

An hon. MEMBER. What Bill was that?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). It was a Bill proposed by the hon. member for Brant, and had coal rights in connection with a coal mine in the United States.

Mr. NESBITT. I opposed that very Bill in the committee, but it was voted on and carried.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That is right. You are just confirming what I said.

Mr. CARVELL. I want to give the true state of affairs in connection with that Bill. That company was not authorized to mine coal or enter into the business of a coal mining company.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Yes, it was.

Mr. CARVELL. It was simply for the purpose of producing coal and distributing it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). What is the difference?

Mr. CARVELL. The reason given by the promoters of the Bill was that they were connected with a steamship line across Lake Erie, and the only way they could make the road a success was to operate the road in conjunction with that steamship line, and it could not be operated successfully unless the company had the right to produce the coal and distribute and sell it. That was a very different proposition from giving a railway company the right to mine coal and go into a general business.

The Lehigh Valley and various companies were mentioned and discussed and the distinction drawn between the Bill referred to by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) and the American companies. This Bill seeks to place this company in the same position as the Lehigh and other big American companies. It gives the right to the company to do the business of transportation and coal mining as well. That is quite different from the matter mentioned by the hon. member for North Ontario. Again the question was raised in the Railway Committee that they might create a monopoly by giving this company the right to purchase, sell and distribute coal, but it was proven to the committee that all the territory which would be covered by this proposed railway was now covered by three other railways. The railway mentioned by my hon. friend was an electric road, and the cases are not all analogous.

Mr. TURRIFF. There is no objection to this railway going into the coal mining business if it does it through a subsidiary company. That is the way other companies are doing, but you put a clause in allowing this company, which is not a steam railway company but an electric railway company, to enable it to go into the coal mining business. The main object of a clause is for promoting purposes, and the arrangement made in the way of a compromise, as I understand the matter, was not made by the Railway Committee, but by the Committee of the Whole House and between two or three members of the House. For my part I am opposed to either clause. I am opposed to giving this railway company the right to go into the telephone business in Alberta. The government of that province own the telephone business, which they purchased; and they do not want other companies to go into that same business. Just the same in the coal mining business.

A great deal of disadvantage may, and does, come to other miners of coal who have not a railway. Put this company on exactly the same footing as other coal miners. They will still have the advantage of having the railway, if they care to take the necessary steps, to go into the coal mining business. To that we can take no exception. But I do take most strenuous exception to any more railway companies being allowed to compete with the coal mine owners who have not equal privileges. This is a most unreasonable clause, and I do not see why its removal should be objected to. These parties can, if they wish, secure a charter, either from the local government or under the Dominion Companies Act, giving them all the powers they want for mining coal, but let that coal mining charter be separate from the railway charter, especially seeing that this is to be an electric railway and is not supposed to be going into the coal hauling business.

Mr. OLIVER. I have agreed with my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff), with regard to the attitude taken on this Bill, but I have to disagree with him on one point he mentions—that this company was not incorporated to go into the coal business. I had not the advantage of reading the charter before, but I find that it is certainly a very remarkable one—it is a blanket charter, covering the whole of the coal bearing area of southern Alberta. If ever there was a charter brought into this House with the deliberate intention of creating a monopoly in the mining and transportation of coal, this is that charter. The works of the company are set out in nine separate divisions.

(a) From a point at or near the city of Calgary to the town of Banff in the Rocky Mountain Park.

(b) From a point at or near the said city of Calgary south of the Bow river, through or near the Thigh Falls, to the city of Medicine Hat, crossing the Bow river at a point between Little Rolling Hills and Grand Forks.

Mr. McCRANEY. All coal lands

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, all coal lands.

(c) From the said railway between Calgary and Medicine Hat, at a point in or near Long Coulee, to the city of Lethbridge.

Everybody knows whether Lethbridge is a coal mining centre or not.

(d) From a point on the said railway between Calgary and Medicine Hat at or near Expanse Coulee to the town of Taber, thence westerly to the city of Lethbridge, thence to the said railway between Calgary and Medicine Hat, at a point on the said railway at or near Long Coulee.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). That is the route of the railway.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is the route of the railway. If it has any purpose, it is to gather the coal area of southern Alberta into one merger under colour of a railway charter.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Could not they do that under a separate charter?

Mr. OLIVER. Not to the same advantage..

(e) From a point on the said railway between Calgary and Medicine Hat, at or near the Thigh Hills, to the town of Macleod.

(f) From a point at or near the city of Calgary to the town of Carbon and thence to the Red Deer river at or near the junction of the Knee Hill creek.

Another coal area.

(g) From a point at or near the city of Lethbridge to the international boundary line at or near the point where the south branch of the Milk river crosses the said international boundary line.

(h) From the city of Medicine Hat to the town of Wood Mountain, in the province of Saskatchewan.

(i) From a point at or near the city of Calgary to the town of Brooks, passing through or near Windermere, Strathmore and Bassano, with power to construct branch lines from the said lines of railway in the districts known as the Canadian Pacific irrigation blocks.

I cannot prophesy what would be the result of the passing of this charter but the Bill carries its purpose on its face, and that purpose undoubtedly is to create a monopoly in the production and transportation of coal in the whole of southern Alberta. They apply to this parliament for a charter to build these lines, which, if they were built, and not under any special privilege, would, of course, be of advantage in the development of the coal mining industry. But when to the privileges of a railway company are added the privilege of conducting a coal mining business in that country, anybody can see what advantage there is to the mine that is connected with this proposed octopus railway as compared with a mine not connected with that railway. It simply puts the men who own the transportation and a few mines in a position to put the other miners out of business. Mr. Chairman, this is a most serious consideration. When I heard the matter brought up first, I thought it was possibly a mere accident that the clause regarding the mining of coal was inserted in the Bill, but, on careful consideration of the Bill, I must say I consider this measure an attack on the welfare of the southern part of Alberta, and, that being my view, I feel bound to confess that while, if that provision were withdrawn, I would say it was a meritorious enterprise, yet, so long as that provision remains in the Bill I would say it is entitled to all the opposition that any friend of Southern Alberta can give it.

Mr. HERRON. How about the Galt Co.? They have been operating coal mines from the earliest days of that country and operating a railway also, yet I have heard no objection. I have not their charter under my hand, but I have always understood it was both a steam railway and a coal charter. What is the difference between a railway company owning a coal mine, and a coal mine company owning a railway? We have been been putting through railway charters—doing it right along—in the part of the country in which I live.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Galt railway was chartered many years ago. It was the first railway, outside of the Canadian Pacific railway, to operate in that country, and the first company in western Canada to operate a coal mine. They have done very good work in the past, and they are doing good work now.

Mr. HERRON. And there have never been any complaints.

Mr. TURRIFF. I have never heard any complaints about them. But they are in a different position there from the coal mining companies in the Crowsnest Pass, for instance. I may say also that I understand, the Galt Railway Company have sold out their railway, so that they have now only the coal mine as a separate work from the railway. Last year, I heard complaints from a mine owner and operator in the Crowsnest Pass. He pointed out that one of the mines was connected with one of the large railway companies, and that mine could always get the large, open, steel cars to load their coal, while the other mines had to take the box cars. That is not a very big matter, but it may easily mean 10, 15 or 20 cents of an addition on every ton of coal shipped, which is a profit in itself. Not only that, but if the railway company is interested in a coal mine, I do not care how the commission tries to prevent it, the railway company and their officials are bound to give the advantage to the mine in which they are interested. That is all we want to obviate. Let this company have their coal mining rights, but let it be a separate and distinct company; and if we have done wrong in the past many years ago by authorizing some company to operate railways and coal mines, the time has come when we should do it no longer, and the time will come shortly when those railway companies that now operate coal mines will have to be dealt with separately, and the interest will have to be separated. In the meantime there is no reason why we should allow this company which professes to be mainly an electric railway company, the right to operate a coal mine.

Mr. HERRON. Deal with them all alike. The minister suggested that the other evening, and I agree to that.

Mr. TURRIFF. So far as I am concerned, they all will be dealt with alike in the future. I will never support again a railway charter, in this House or any other house, that carries with it the right to operate a coal mine. Take another point in this Bill. The capitalization for the enterprise is $10,000,000. This company might very easily utilize the half of that capital, or all of it, in coal mining enterprises, that would be easy to accomplish under this charter. So there is no good reason advanced, except that it has been done in the past, why the House should authorize this company to acquire and operate coal mines; and I hope the good sense of the company will see that that clause is not allowed to remain in the Bill.

Mr. McCRANEY. There is another consideration I would like to see discussed by this committee. I would prefer hearing the discussion carried on in the Railway Committee, but as the Bill is not being referred there, probably we have to discuss these matters in the House.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Is the hon. gentleman opposed to the clause?

Mr. McCRANEY. I will be obliged to oppose it unless it is referred back to the Railway Committee.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). And what then?

Mr. McCRANEY. Then I will probably oppose it. We are in the habit of granting railway companies other powers than those merely of building and operating a railway, powers, for instance, with regard to the acquisition of water-powers, the building of telegraph and telephone lines, all those powers which are used incidentally by a railway company. Here we have the right given to a railway company to mine coal, a purpose that is not in any sense incidental to or necessary in a carrying company. The point that strikes me is this, that if we give this company the right to mine coal, it has a right to carry its own coal as free as it has to carry gravel, that is necessary on its own road, or its necessary iron, or anything else. Some time there may be an application before the Railway Commission to fix the rates for carrying coal from one point to another. The coal which is mined and owned by this company will be carried free, the cost of carrying must be paid by some person, and I submit to this House that it is altogether likely that the cost of carrying coal belonging to this company will be put over on other coal companies, because coal must pay the cost of its carriage. If this company is allowed to mine coal and to carry its own coal, the Railway Commission may not require any separate account to be kept of the carrying charges of this company's coal, and there will be difficulty in properly apportioning the rates of carrying coal from one point to another, and as between other coal companies and this railway company.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Did not the hon. gentleman support an identical clause in the Bill presented by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) in the Railway Committee the other day?

Mr. McCRANEY. I do not remember having expressed myself one way or the other, but as I was in the Railway Committee at that time, I am ready to take the responsibility of saying that I did support it. I have no recollection of it to-day. I remember some discussion about it, and for reasons which were given to the Railway Committee at that time, and which were considered by them as sufficient, the thing went through.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). How does the hon. gentleman reconcile that with his present position?

Mr. McCRANEY. The special circumstances, which I need not go into here, were considered by the committee, and were not the same as we find in this Bill.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I happen to have the Bill under my hand to which I referred in my question, Bill (No. 106), clause 11. The clause gives the company power, for the purposes of its undertaking of buying, selling and dealing in coal or lumber, and other commodities.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend's memory was half as good as it ought to be, he would know, and he does know, that lumber and other commodities were cut out of the Bill; and the hon. gentleman is not quoting the section that passed the Railway Committee, and he knows it.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). If the hon. gentleman will have patience, I will tell him that the passage in the section referring to coal and iron was maintained in the clause, and it was on my own motion that lumber and other commodities were struck out, and the reference to coal and ore still remains in the charter. Now I simply rose to emphasize the inconsistency of the hon. gentlemen who oppose this clause in this Bill. It seems an extraordinary circumstance that if the Bill is proposed by an hon. member on the government side, it may contain a clause that is broad enough to include the purchasing and selling of coal, and which would be detrimental to the public interest, according to the arguments advanced by the member for Saskatoon; but because it is proposed by another hon. member of this House, it meets with his disapprobation.

Mr. McCRANEY. I hope my hon. friend is not suggesting that because the one Bill was proposed by a member on this side of the House, and the present Bill was proposed by an hon. member of the opposition, that that fact changes my point of view.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I asked the hon. gentleman how he reconciles his present position with his conduct the other day, and I cannot account for it on any other ground. The clause in the Bill having for its sponsor the hon. member for Brantford, is broad enough to include the purchase of coal mines and selling or dealing in coal, another clause gives the right of selling and dealing in coal or ore. That is comprehensive enough to include coal mines, the company could purchase coal mines and deal in coal mines; if they can purchase coal, they can purchase coal mines. Consequently, it would be very entertaining and would be a matter of information to the House if the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) would explain and reconcile his two positions.

Mr. McCRANEY. I would like very much indeed to do it before the Railway Committee, but I am afraid there is not time now in two minutes to do it here.

Mr. OLIVER. What section is my hon. friend quoting from?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell), has it before him.

Mr. CARVELL. No, you had better state it; I cannot find it here.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Section 111.

Mr. CARVELL. What Bill?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Bill (No. 106).

Mr. CARVELL. Oh, I beg your pardon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What time is it now?

Mr. NESBITT. In so far as I am concerned I am not subject to the accusation that I was inconsistent. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that the two Bills are different.

Mr. CARVELL. It is only the difference between buying coal and dealing in coal.

Mr. NESBITT. Of course, the hon. member for North Ontario says that 'dealing' means that they cannot buy a coal mine as well as coal mined. Probably he is right. I would not like to dispute that. This road was running through the southern part of Ontario where every little town and village is served with railways that have as good connections as they could get with coal mines.

SUPPLY.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Dominion Lands and Parks—salaries of the outside service, $370,000.

Mr. OLIVER. When the committee rose at six o'clock, if the discussion then proceeding has ceased, there was some consideration of certain cases in which persons who had transgressed the law were suffering the penalty. I do not wish to enlarge on this particular side of the question more than to say that in so far as I am aware, and in so far as the intent of the department is concerned, we wish to deal even-handed justice between man and man. We do not want to give one man different treatment from another man. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) said that there were cases in which men had transgressed the law and had not been prosecuted.

That is the fact. He said that there are cases in which men have transgressed and have been prosecuted, that in some cases men's entries have been cancelled, and they have been given no consideration, and in other cases men have been allowed to purchase at a price. Each case rests upon its individual merits. We cannot pretend to deal with all the cases alike, because if we did that, it would not be the fair way to deal with them, the merits being different under different circumstances. I had the opportunity of making inquiry regarding the cases of which my hon. friend spoke in the interval between six and eight o'clock, and I think the committee will agree with me that these are flagrant cases. One of them is the case of J. A. Cathers. This gentleman had three homesteads, and he has been sentenced, not by the Department of the Interior——

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). In what province?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say what province they were in, but the last case, that which got him into trouble, occurred in Saskatchewan. It was not in Manitoba, and was not in the constituency of the hon. member for Dauphin. John Boyd had four homesteads, and Sam Boyd had two homesteads. Another of the family, William Boyd, had four homesteads, and I understand that proceedings are now pending against him. I cannot give any information as to the details of these cases at the moment. Of course, the papers could easily be brought before the House on an order, but I think the committee will agree with me that when a man has secured his fourth homestead he is not in a position to claim very favourable consideration. He is not in the position of the man who has had one homestead, and who might in some way or another have erred as to his rights with regard to a second. I think it is fair to assume that the cases in regard to which the discussion took place were exceedingly flagrant, and it would not have been fair to the law-abiding citizen, the law-abiding settler who wanted a homestead to have overlooked such flagrant cases. In the present condition of the country where there is a demand for land, and where honest men are honestly trying to get the best homesteads they can, it is not fair to them to allow a man who is not entitled to a homestead to get one, or, if he gets one unfairly, to retain it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the particulars with regard to all these cases. I believe that Cathers, the man spoken of first by the minister, had perfect liberty under the law to take two homesteads.

Mr. OLIVER. Very likely.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well then, it is scarcely fair to say that he had three homesteads. Having complied with the law the first and second time, he very likely was under a misapprehension when he took the third homestead. I am giving him the benefit of the doubt. It is only one homestead more than he should have taken under the law, as I understand it. I realize that it is a most difficult thing for the minister to know exactly how to get rid of this immorality with regard to the homestead law without doing some injustice to some one, but I think that probably in this case that I spoke of, owing to the family circumstances, the ignorance of the men, their illiteracy and the fact that over a thousand of the best citizens of Dauphin constituency and Tisdale, where this infraction of the law occurred, have signed a petition asking for leniency, I think the minister would not break the heart of any man in this house, and would not hurt his system of running business if he did show leniency in this case.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the committee does not misunderstand the position. This department has not the power to put a man in jail for breaking the law; the responsibility for administering the criminal law does not rest with us, in this case it rests with the province of Saskatchewan, and if a conviction has been secured, then leniency in the case does not rest with the Department of the Interior, but with the Department of Justice.

Mr. LAKE. Did the department prosecute in his case?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say, but it it very likely did. That is one thing and the administration of the law is another.

Mr. BARKER. You could ask for leniency.

Mr. OLIVER. The department could ask for leniency, but the circumstances as laid out in the statement given to me are not such as to give good grounds for the Interior Department to ask for leniency. The punishment is awarded by an authority over which this department has absolutely no control and leniency in the case is the prerogative of another department of this government than the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When a petition is sent to the department signed by the best class of people in the district who knew this man intimately asking the Minister of Justice for leniency, does the Minister of Justice consider such a petition without referring to the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. It is his prerogative and his duty to do so. It is his duty and not mine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it be fair to ask whether in the event of the Minister of Justice referring such a petition to the Minister of the Interior he would suggest that leniency be shown?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it would be fair to ask me, but I have no hesitation in saying, and I take the responsibility of saying to the House that charged with the burden of administering the law in regard to homesteads in that northwest country fairly as between man and man, in the case of such apparently flagrant violation of the law, if the matter was referred to me for my opinion, I would certainly say I could not recommend leniency in that case.

Mr. LAKE. May I call attention to a case in which there appears to have been discrimination. I brought the case to the attention of the minister in 1907. An order in council is published granting a homestead on payment of $5 an acre to the man whose case I called to the attention of the minister. This man homesteaded in 1902. In 1907 charges were made that he had not been four days on his homestead during the whole time. It was charged that this was his third homestead, and I read to the House a letter in which that charge was made. I subsequently sent a similar letter to the Department of the Interior. There were many applicants for that homestead. The minister decided that cancellation should not take place and cancellation apparently did not take place. The man retained his homestead, and now I observe this notice in the 'Canada Gazette':

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL.

The Minister of the Interior submits, under date the 28th September, 1910, that Mr. John Bradley made homestead entry for the north-west ¼ of section 36, township 21, range 8, west of the 2nd meridian on the 30th October, 1902, and has made application for patent.

The minister states that a report has been made by an officer of the Department of the Interior showing that forty-two acres have been broken, of which thirty were under cultivation at the date of such report. The homesteader has also erected buildings valued at $575 and made other improvements to the extent of $65.

It is shown that Mr. Bradley was not entitled to make entry for this land, having already exhausted his homestead rights.

Thereby proving the contention I had made in the House:

The minister, however, recommends, in view of the valuable improvements which have been made, that authority be given for the sale of the quarter-section in question to Mr. Bradley at the rate of $5 per acre, payable one-fourth in cash, and the remainder in three equal annual instalments, with interest at five per cent per annum.

The committee submit the same for approval.

F. K. BENNETTS,
Asst. Clerk of the Privy Council.

It will be observed that the order in council does not say that Mr. Bradley has performed his necessary duties, it simply calls attention to the improvements which he has put upon the land and is entirely silent in regard to the residence. Therefore, we may take it for granted that the duties have not been done and he has not performed the necessary residence duties, although I have always understood from the minister that the residence duties rank first of all, and that except in the most exceptional cases they are never allowed to be waived. I have seen other orders in council in respect of men who had already exhausted their right of homestead, who had got illegal entries to homesteads, but in these cases it has generally been stated that the minister is satisfied that the second entry was made through ignorance or some such reason as that. In Mr. Bradley's case that is not stated. In all other cases I have noticed it has been stated that all the residence and other duties have been carried out, so we now have one particular case in which illegal entry was made, and in which the minister in his order in council does not even claim that the illegal entry was made in ignorance or by mistake; yet without the fulfilment of the necessary duties that man is given a patent for his land on payment of $5 per acre. It seems to me that is quite as bad a case as the others to which reference has been made, and it would appear as if there had been discrimination in this case. I shall not charge that until I have heard what the minister has to say in respect of it.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not recollect the case and certainly as my hon. friend states it it does look as if this man had got consideration to which he was not entitled. I can only say that if that is the fact I am very sorry for it, and it was not a matter of knowledge or intent on my part. I can assure my hon. friend that as he has called attention to this case I shall take more care in future that such a thing shall not occur again. I shall take the best care I can to prevent it, because I feel that the very foundation of our success—and I think the House will admit that we have won some measure of success in settling that western country—is that there be a feeling of confidence in the fair dealing of the department as between man and man. No harder blow could be struck at the success of our settlement policy than the suggestion that one man is treated differently from another.

Mr. LAKE. Upon whose recommendation would such a matter be decided?

Mr. OLIVER. Sometimes it is on the recommendation of the agent, sometimes the homestead inspector, and sometimes the inspector of agencies, and if there is any question about the case the papers come to me and I go as fully into it as possible and give it the best judgment I can on the evidence before me. If Mr. Bradley has had special consideration I have to accept the blame, but I assure my hon. friend that it was not intentional on my part and possibly the fact that residence is not specified escaped my attention. I can hardly think that the case went through without the residence being actually before me, but if it has I regret it and so far as I am able I will guard against it in future.

Mr. TURRIFF. Apparently the reason Bradley was allowed to purchase the land when possibly the homestead conditions may not have all been fulfilled, was because he was not entitled to an entry, and he was sold the land at $5 an acre so that it was a sale. When he was not entitled to an entry they may not have thought it necessary to insist on the usual homestead residence. This appears to be one of the hundreds of cases that come up, where a man has lived on land for some years, performed a lot of residence, done much improvement in the way of cultivation and buildings, and then it comes to the knowledge of the department that he is not legally entitled to an entry and the question arises what it is best for you to do. In such a case, there is nothing that the minister can do that will not work injustice to somebody, and so you have to consider what it is best to do that will inflict the least injustice. When I was commissioner I had to decide hundreds of such cases.

Mr. LAKE. Did you not decide that residence must be done in every case?

Mr. TURRIFF. To get a homestead patent, but this was a purchase at $5 an acre, and the man was not entitled to a homestead.

Mr. LAKE. He was there since 1902.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, but the homestead entry was cancelled and he lived on it so long.

Mr. LAKE. It was never cancelled and he never lived on it.

Mr. TURRIFF. No doubt he had done so many improvements that whoever decided the case thought the minimum of injustice would be done by allowing him to purchase the land at $5 an acre. I never heard of this case before, but I can easily see that that is what actuated whoever was deciding it.

Mr. LAKE. It is a very flagrant case and it occurred in my district, and I brought it to the attention of the House at least twice, and I think three times.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The point is: has a man who makes a false affidavit entering for a homestead and who is only a resident there for a month, any more right to be sent to the penitentiary than a man who makes the same false oath and through some influence can hold the land for a number of years, and then is allowed finally to pay $5 an acre for land which may be worth $20. This man only performed four days' residence in five years. That is a point I would like to know something about.

Mr. OLIVER. This government has no responsibility for sending any man to jail.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The department has.

Mr. OLIVER. The settlement that was made with Bradley for his land does not in any degree prevent Bradley from going to jail if any one can prove the charge against him.

Mr. BRADBURY. Who prosecuted in the other cases?

Mr. OLIVER. I presume the Department of the Interior did.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). If the department is robbed have they not the right to prosecute?

Mr. OLIVER. They have if they please, but in this case they did not apparently consider they were being robbed. I emphasize the fact that we were not compounding any felony in dealing with these men for the land they are in occupation of now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In other cases the department thought it was necessary to prosecute and did prosecute. In this case they have known for years that Bradley committed perjury and instead of prosecuting him they have rewarded him by giving him the land at a great deal less than its value. The minister has the evidence under his own hand, it is in his power to prosecute, and he ought to prosecute and not make fish of the one and flesh of the other.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why prosecute in the one case and not in the other?

Mr. OLIVER. Because in the estimation of the department the cases were not on all fours. I have not in my mind the very case referred to, but I presume that in the opinion of the department the cases were not similar. But whether we prosecute or not has no bearing on the liability of the man who broke the law. It was not any law of the department that he broke.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He robbed the department.

Mr. LAKE.

Mr. OLIVER. We have nothing whatever to do with the criminal law and are not bound to enforce it in any way. Any one who thinks that the criminal law has been violated by this man is at liberty to set in motion the machinery of justice and let justice take its course.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not like to be on my feet so often and appear so pertinacious, but I would like to know why, when the minister has the evidence in his department that this man Bradley, as is affirmed by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) to-night, took at least three homesteads some four or five years ago, and did not conform with the law in any particular at all as far as residence goes, and perjured himself in making the entries—I would like to know why this man has been protected by the officers of the Interior Department and not prosecuted. Instead he gets a presentation of three-quarters of that land and gets for $600 or $800 a homestead worth $2,400 or $2,500. If the minister will say that he will inquire fully into this matter and prosecute this man, if he finds the allegations against him to be true, I have nothing more to say. But if the minister is not going to do that, I shall have a great deal more to say.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not wish to stop my friend's flow of oratory at all, and I cannot give any guarantee as to what action I shall take until I know more of the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL. All I ask is that the minister will inquire into it, and if he finds the facts as represented that he will prosecute.

Mr. OLIVER. There may be extenuating circumstances which my hon. friend is not aware of. I have told him that I shall have the case investigated and take such action as the facts may warrant me in taking, but I cannot bind myself to take any definite action at the moment.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understand the hon. minister to say that it is not the duty of his department to prosecute in these cases.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not the responsibility of this department to prosecute, but it is the privilege of this department to do so, if it thinks the case sufficiently flagrant to warrant prosecution.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You really put the responsibility on the province?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not put the responsibility on the province. That is where it belongs.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If it belongs there why is it not left there in every case? What I do not understand is why the Minister of the Interior or the Department of Justice found it necessary to prosecute some of these men and put them in jail, and not prosecute others, but leave their cases to be dealt with by the province. Why not deal with every case or with none?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that I can give any further explanation. The cases differ in degree and we deal with each on its merits, and we do not pretend to be infallible. To suggest that we should deal with all cases in exactly the same way is not a wise suggestion.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not say that, but all these parties have perjured themselves, as I understand.

Mr. OLIVER. There may be extenuating circumstances in one case and not in another. The hon. member for Dauphin has been pleading extenuating circumstances in the cases of men who have been convicted, and there might be such circumstances in other cases. No doubt we commit errors, but the policy of the department is to treat all men equally and give each man what is coming to him as we understand it. It is certainly not our policy to treat men differently because of their political opinion. When I was a private member I had a great deal of business with the Interior Department on behalf of my constituency, and I never was asked what were the political views of the men for whom I was acting. I never asked the question myself of any of my constituents, nor did the department ever ask me the question. Since I have had charge of the department. my instructions to the officials have always been to deal with every man according to the merits of his case without regard to his political views. That is one of the reasons why there has been a very considerable measure of success with the administration of the department. It is because the people feel that they are getting a square deal.

Now, if I may be permitted, I wish to say a word to my hon. friends on my right who criticise the actions of the department from the opposite point of view from that of my hon. friends on the other side. The same principle applies exactly. We want to create the impression in the public mind of absolute fairplay between man and man in all the dealings of the department. Those who were members of the House when the Bill of 1908 was introduced will remember that the late Hon. Thomas Greenway, who was a member of the House at that time, criticised the Bill quite severely because it was, as he said, 'too wooden' in its operation;—that is, it did not leave enough discretion to the department to administer the law so as to meet all the variety of cases that can arise. His criticism was perfectly sound and had very good foundation. But he was dealing with conditions as he had known them in years gone by, and condtions had changed. The Bill of 1908 was framed to deal with conditions as they then were—and, even more especially, as they were going to be. When there were two or three thousand homestead entries in a year, it was possible for attention to be given to individual cases, and for all the cases to be carried, as might be said, in the heads of the officers of the department and full consideration to be given according to the actual merits of each case. But with thirty, and forty, and fifty, and sixty, and seventy thousand entries a year, that kind of treatment becomes an absolute impossibility. Under such conditions, a rule must be laid down, and that rule must be followed; otherwise, there can be but one result—confusion and dissatisfaction. Now, it must be admitted that in laying down a rule, you do work hardship in some cases. But my view is that, if we work hardship in some cases—and we alleviate hardship as much as we can—the main point we are striving for is to create confidence in the public mind that there is a square deal for every man in the transactions of the department. And the results show that we have attained it in a very remarkable degree. It is not conceivable that the occupation of the land would have gone on as rapidly as it has during the past year or two if the people had not had full confidence that they were being dealt with on the merits of their application, and without regard to any other consideration whatever. I think it is one of the greatest tributes that could have been paid to the administration of any government that, when, from time to time, we opened for occupation, townships here or there throughout the west, people came by the trainload from the United States and from various parts of Canada in order to take their places in the line to secure their turn in entering for that land. Men stood in line for twenty-four hours, for forty-eight hours,—some, I believe, for seventy hours—

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Women, too.

Mr. OLIVER. Women, too,—in order to get their choice of the land. They would not have done that if they had not thought at anyrate that when they got to the counter they would get a square deal. I think that the actual facts have justified the administration of the department to a most remarkable degree. While we have not been able to meet all possible cases that arose upon their actual merits, we have certainly been able to create in the public mind that confidence which is the very foundation of all success in administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister (Mr. Oliver) has just told you and this committee, Mr. Chairman, that his prime desire has been to create the impression in the minds of the people that fairplay is his object. He has gone on to point out that at various land agencies, as land was thrown open, the crowd stood for hours with a desire to have the pick of the land, and that every one who took his position was allowed to pass through the doorway in his turn, and, at the counter, got fairplay. There is no one on this side who would criticise that for a moment. The government, possibly, could not, even if they desired, under the present law and in the open, do otherwise than give entry to every man in his turn. We are not criticising that point. The point we are criticising is that, when the time comes for these people to apply for their patents, the same fairplay is not given by the officials of the department to one as to another. The hon. minister has expressed regret that such things had occurred as were brought to his attention by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). I will tell the minister how he could remove from the public mind a great deal of the fear that such things can exist. If he were to cleanse his department in the west to some degree; if he would remember that the Conservatives of the west have a suspicion—or a superstition or whatever he likes to call it; it is stronger than either, it is a conviction —about certain appointees of his government that they are not inclined to show fairplay to those tainted with Conservatism, he would do something to realize the wish he has expressed. I refer to such men as Mr. Seale, one of his homestead inspectors—(I do not know that 'Inspectors' is the proper word, but the minister will know what I want to get at). Why did Mr. Seale get that appointment? For no other reason on earth that any Tory in the west can elucidate except that in 1904 he was the returning officer for Dauphin, and, at the eleventh hour he made the Dauphin election a postponed election. Immediately after that he got the appointment at $100 a month from the government. He never served the government in his life except in the way I am suggesting, and in that he was serving only a part of the people and not the people as a whole. Then, go further west, and right in the home town, I think, of my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) is Mr. Duggan.

Mr. NEELY. A good man, too.

Mr. STAPLES. A handy man.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not saying anything against Mr. Duggan personally, except that my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) says he was a very handy man. He was the returning officer for Selkirk at 1904. He had never served under the government in his life. He had been previously to that a bartender in Selkirk. He served under Leach, in what is called among the Conservatives of Manitoba the Thin Red Line outrage, where hundreds of Conservatives were debarred from voting, and their franchise was stolen from them; and the Conservatives believe that was the reason he got employment under this government. I could go on and instance other cases. But this is what I want to point out to the minister, that if he wishes the people on both sides of politics in the west to believe in his good faith—as perhaps we all do, in his personal good faith—but I mean in the good faith of his department in its administration of the land laws, the sooner he gets rid of these excresences, the better for the country.

Mr. TURRIFF. In reference to the remarks of the Minister of the Interior as to complaints made by myself and others in regard to the administration of the lands, I only want to say that I for one have never suggested for a moment that there was any discrimination between man and man on the part of the minister or of the department, because I do not think there is, I never knew of any, at all events. But what I have maintained before the minister himself on many occasions is that while you may be giving all hands the same deal, that deal may be a hard one, and unnecessarily hard. In my judgment there are many cases where leniency could be shown to a settler that is not shown, and that makes it harder for him. Where you have 60,000 or 70,000 homesteaders in a year, forty-nine out of fifty of them go there for the purpose of making a home, for the purpose of fulfilling the conditions. Out of so large a number there are many who find it difficult to fulfil all the conditions of the law at the present time. Owing to the tremendous demand for land, they are forced to go away forty or fifty miles from a railway to make an entry. They go out there with a small means, and travel long distances, they have to haul their goods, their coal and provisions forty or fifty miles, may be, then a prairie fire burns up all the field. They may not be able to spend the winter there, and have to go on further. In many cases a man goes to make a homestead entry, he has a wife and children, and in my judgment great leniency should be shown to him. Where circumstances warrant it, an extension of time should be granted for going on their lands. That is not going to hurt anybody, cannot hurt anybody. In my constituency there are cases where I have applied for these little extensions of time, and for other considerations of one kind or another, many that the minister himself never sees, and the officers write me that they regret that under the regulations of the department it is impossible to grant the request. Now I do not claim that there is discrimination, I know there is not, but I claim that some consideration might be shown with advantage to the settlers. The object of the Homestead Act is to settle up the country, we want settlers, and we want to keep them there. But there is many a good man who finds himself in a difficult situation because, especially of late years, there is a percentage of men who make homestead entries, and who are not bona fide homesteaders, and on their account bona fide homesteaders, who are at a disadvantage as to means perhaps, have to go further and have to suffer. I think the minister could well show greater leniency in many cases to the settlers than he does now, and nobody would be hurt, and nobody would have a right to complain.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Turriff) that a good deal of leniency should be shown to the homesteader in western Canada. I sympathize with him as fully as any person, because I took up a homestead in western Canada in the early days, and went through all the hardships. Now here we have two cases. One is that of a man named Carruthers, who went to work and took up two homesteads. He was entitled to these two homesteads, but he went a little further and he took up a third homestead, and he took a false affidavit in order to get this third homestead. I am told by my hon. friend from Dauphin who knows the man very well, that he is a good Tory. The department finds out that this man is a good Tory, they also find out that he has done something wrong, and they go after him and send him to jail for a year or two. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan tells us of another case under the very same circumstances. He is entitled to two homesteads, and he goes to work and takes one more homestead that he is not entitled to. This man turns out to be a good Reformer, and the department allows that man—I do not say it is because he is a Reformer, but it looks a good deal like it—allows that man to buy his homestead for $5 an acre, and he does not have to go to jail. Now the hon. minister told us that in many cases where they got mixed up in their homesteads some were charged $2, some $3, some $4, some $5 and some $6. I would like to know according to what standard the minister charges $2 to a man who should pay $3, $4 or $5 for those lands. He also says that he has no right to prosecute these men. I think if there is any man in Canada who is responsible for the land of this country it is the Minister of the Interior. If Canada is being robbed of her land, if it is not the minister's duty to go after the people who are robbing Canada, I would like to know whose duty it is. I would like the minister to tell us by what standard he charges one man only $3 and another $4 or $5 for the same land.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be hard to make a general statement that would cover the questions my hon. friend has asked. If he mentions an individual case I would be able to give the reasons by which we arrived at our conclusion in regard to that case. But to give him any general statement that would be a definite guide to the conclusions we have reached in cases which differ so tremendously in character, would be a very difficult thing to do.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). In what way will they differ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are some cases where a boy takes land and he is under age, there are some cases where a man has done a great deal of improvement, another man has done residence and not much improvement, there is another case where the department may have had reasonable grounds for believing that the man acted in ignorance; there are nearly as many differences as there are cases. In these circumstances I do not think I can give my hon. friend any very full details. He was in error in one thing. We do not sell at $3 per acre unless in cases outside of the pre-empted area, for the reason that I have already stated. Within the pre-emption area the standard price is $3. Therefore, in settling such a case outside of the area we must reasonably charge more than $3; otherwise it will be practically extending the pre-emption area over the whole country.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). The reason I mentioned $3 was that the minister had spoken of $3 before six o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but that is inside of the pre-emption area, but in cases outside of the pre-emption area we naturally have to charge more.

Mr. LAKE. I see that outside of the pre-emption area a man named Charles R. Duxbury was given his land at $3 an acre, the statement being that he had failed to perform his residence duties. There the minister recommends a sale at $3 an acre.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not the same case as that in which a man has committed perjury in order to get a homestead. I might explain to the committee that there are cases where a man has fulfilled in a reasonable measure his obligations as to residence and cultivation, but for some reason which seems to the department to be sufficient, is not able to complete his residence so as to entitle him to the patent. The committee is aware that we cannot issue a patent unless and until the man is able to swear, and to bring two other witnesses to swear, that he has completed his duties in every particular. If a man is short of his residence and the circumstances are such that it is not possible or practicable to complete his residence and he stands in danger of losing the time he put in and the improvements he has done on his land, we cancel his entry and sell him the land, and in some cases we sell it to him at one dollar per acre.

Mr. LAKE. The reason for his failure to perform the residence should be stated in the order in council. It generally is in these cases, is it not?

Mr. OLIVER. Sometimes it is, and I suppose it should be in all cases. I want it to be understood that if we sell at $1 an acre, as we sometimes do, it is because there has been a substantial fulfilment of the requirements but not a legal fulfilment of the requirements. We sell at that minimum price because the statute absolutely prohibits the issue of a patent unless the evidence is there that the duties have been fulfilled.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two along general lines in support of the remarks of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I think I would not be doing justice to the administration of this department if I did not repeat some of the things I said before six o'clock as to the impartiality with which the department is administered. I have probably written, not a few hundreds, but a few thousands of times, in behalf of homesteaders and settlers to the Department of the Interior, and my most serious criticism of that department is that to my mind there is not sufficient leniency shown to the homesteader and settler. As to discrimination between man and man or as to any consideration of political views and opinions, I have never seen anything of the kind in any single case. The only case that has ever come under my personal observation where the department held a court investigation, was the case of a warm personal friend and supporter. There was some doubt as to whether or not he had actually fulfilled all the requirements of the law as to the residence duties. There was no question about his cultivation duties, because he had broken some 140 acres out of a quarter-section and had cropped this land for a number of years. But, there were contradictory statements of the neighbours. This man, who is a good, substantial citizen, although he claimed to have performed sufficient resident duties on his homestead was not able to furnish absolutely conclusive proof thereof, with the result that what, to my mind, was a very severe sentence was passed upon him. He was asked by the department to go back upon the homestead and perform his residence duties over again. I have brought that case to the attention of the department, I do not know what their action will be, but I am free to say that it is the only case of a court investigation that has come under my personal investigation. The man is a Liberal, a supporter of mine, but that had absolutely nothing to do with the consideration of his case. The witnesses whom he called, while giving it as the best of their knowledge and belief that he had performed sufficient residence, were not able to give days and dates, with the result that he did not obtain his patent when he made application for it, and, as a result of the investigation, he is compelled to go back upon the land. But while taking this position and while defending the administration of the department in so far as the question of partiality and impartiality is concerned, I am free to say that there are some features of the Dominion Lands Act and some features of the administration of the Act, that to my mind bear somewhat heavily upon the homesteader. Mind you, that with all the authority and responsibility of the Department of the Interior and of the government in connection with the public lands of western Canada, neither the department nor the government should view or consider themselves in the light of proprietors. Neither the department nor this government are the proprietors of our western lands; they are simply the administrators. The lands belong to the people, and while a certain standard must undoubtedly be maintained, the rules and regulations of the department should be so framed as not to make the required duties too burdensome, too onerous, and too much of a hardship to the individual homesteader or settler. Men go thirty or forty miles away from the railway, and in days gone by many men have gone 150 miles, and even more, and homesteaded under our homestead regulations and laws.

These men who have to transport over those distances their furniture, the lumber with which to build their houses, their supplies from the nearest market and their produce to the nearest market, are entitled to every consideration, and the homestead conditions, instead of being such as to make it difficult for these men, the honest men, the sincere men, who desire to live on the land, ought to make his duties as light and easy as possible. Western members realize the great difficulties with which homesteaders are confronted. Men of some means who take up homesteads or purchased land can obtain for themselves even in their homestead days many of the comforts which they have enjoyed in the older parts of Canada or in other countries, but many of those who go into western Canada have but limited means and perhaps large families, and the struggle that some of these homesteaders pass through in the three years before they obtain their homestead patent has in many cases been a thing pitiable to consider. It is this aspect of the homesteader's life that I am bringing to the attention of the minister. The officers of the department ought to be imbued with this spirit of the homesteaders' life and every rule and regulation laid down by the minister for the direction of his officers and for the administration of the Lands Act should have in consideration this feature of the settler's life.

I wish to point out one or two features of the present administration of the homestead rules and regulations which I think might fairly be considered. Take for instance the homestead year. The law says that the homestead year is a year from the date of entry or from the commencement of residence. There may be cases where men have put in their residence and where the six months does not correspond absolutely with either of these periods. To my mind the spirit and the intention of the Dominion Lands Act is that the man puts in six months' residence in each of three consecutive periods of 12 months is fulfilling the spirit of the law. I wish to call attention to the case of the man who performed his residence duties by living on purchased land. I suppose that that provision was put in the Dominion Lands Act to enable the man who wished not only to homestead but to purchase land to make his selection of which land he would live upon, whether it would be on the homestead or on the purchased land. What we want in the west is settlers, men who will settle on the land and will cultivate it, not speculators, not men who take up a homestead in order by hook or by crook to lead the department at the end of three years to believe they have performed sufficient duties to entitle them to patents. We want actual settlers and if a man resides on purchased land instead of on his homestead, and fulfils his residence and cultivation duties faithfully, even if he has only paid 50 cents an acre on that purchase land, surely he has fulfilled the requirements of the Act. The department does not hold that view. I cannot understand how it is possible to make an arbitrary decision as to what constitutes ownership of land. I do not think that the payment of 95 per cent or 99 per cent of the purchase price constitutes ownership any more than the payment of 5 per cent. So long as the man who has sold the land is content to give a contract for that land to the purchaser and is satisfied with the way in which the purchaser is living up to the conditions of that contract it would appear to me to be a fair proposition that the department would leave that question to be settled between the man who sold the land nd the man who purchased it.

I quite realize that the regulations are made fairly strict in order to prevent fraud on the part of those who would obtain patents for land without having performed sufficient residence, cultivation and other duties, but there is a possibility of leaning too far in the other direction, and, for the sake of hunting down the guilty, making the innocent man suffer. My view of the administration of the Lands Department is that it would be better to let one guilty man escape than to have 99 innocent men bear a heavy burden simply to prevent the one guilty man from getting away with a homestead quarter-section without having performed sufficient duties.

I simply wish to impress on the minister that the spirit of the administration and of the rules and regulations of the department should be one of sympathy with the homesteader, and that where it is possible to show leniency, leniency should be shown in the interpretation of the law.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite accept the criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Neely), and I appreciate the spirit in which it is made. I would not wish to think that a department so closely affecting the life of the western country was not the subject of consideration by those who have western interests at heart, and, of course, if a thing receives consideration that consideration cannot by any possibility always be favourable. I agree with my hon. friend that it would be a mistake for the government to consider itself as proprietor of the western lands. It is only the administrator of the lands in trust for the people of Canada, and particularly for the people who are going to become the occupiers. No man in this House and few outside of it know of their own knowledge the condition of the homesteader, the difficulties he has to overcome, and what might be called the tragedy of homesteading better than I do. No one has greater sympathy for the homesteader than I have, but in administering this trust there must be consideration of its purpose which is to secure not only the cultivation but the occupation of the land. That is the principle underlying the homestead Act. It is not enough that the land shall be occupied, or cultivated temporarily; the purpose is to secure permanent residence and any administration that lost sight of that ultimate purpose would not and could not be satisfactory. There is properly an insistence upon residence on the land because that is the main condition of the ownership of the land without payment of a price. It is of little account to the people of Canada if the land once passes out of public ownership, though every acre of it were brought under cultivation, unless it becomes in fact as well as in name a land of homesteads with citizens in occupation of these homesteads. Every consideration is given to the man who by his conduct indicates that he intends to become a permanent occupant of the land. The best evidence that the law and administration is satisfactory to the vast majority of those who are in occupation of the land is the fact that their numbers are increasing from year to year The man who makes the complaint is the man who is not willing to fulfil all the conditions that are imposed upon him, and this man is in an insignificant minority as compared with the large majority of settlers who find the regulations absolutely satisfactory to them, and who become owners of the land and establish citizenship in the country. It is essential that there shall be continuity of settlement, and the man who holds a homestead without occupation of that homestead is not doing what is fair by his neighbours, who depend upon his being on his land to keep up the good of the neighbourhood. It is because of this that the law is framed as it is, and that we have insisted more strongly in recent than in former years upon fulfilment of the actual conditions. In justice to the legitimate settler who is on the land and fulfilling his duties his neighbour must do the same thing. It is true we do extend leniency and that we consider the requirements of individual cases, but it is also true that when you do grant leniency outside the ordinary routine you at once raise the question of discrimination, and those who have not required any leniency to be extended to them are apt to consider that the man who gets it is getting an unfair advantage. The large majority of cases where men have needed leniency and have not got it are due to the objections of their neighbours. The department, of its own motion, has hardly ever cancelled a man's entry; every cancellation is made on the application of some other man who says he wants that land. The difficulties we have in administration are not difficulties between the government and the settler, but between settler and settler. What we have to guard against more than anything else is to allow the idea to get into the minds of settlers that one can get an advantage which the other cannot. I find that people will quarrel more about the trifling advantage which one man in a settlement is supposed to have got than about something of real importance to the whole community. There will be more letters written to the department complaining that some men have got a little extra advantage than there would be if a real hardship were inflicted on the whole settlement. The very complaint which my friend from Qu'Appelle has made with regard to this man Bradley is an evidence in point. Bradley paid $5 an acre for his land, he did certain duties, he paid what other people have paid, but my hon. friend thinks there has been some discrimination in his case—it could not have been a very great discrimination—and he thinks that a serious wrong has been done. I am not prepared to say that everything was right, even in that very case, but a thing of that kind will reflect more discredit on the department than possibly anything else which has occurred; and that is simply due to the fact that we dealt with that case leniently. My sympathy is absolutely with the settler. The administration of our land should be absolutely in their interest. But when leniency is asked, that means discrimination, and discrimination means a grievance in the minds of those who do not require leniency and consequently do not ask for it.

Mr. TURRIFF. In order to illustrate what I mean by a little more leniency being exercised on certain occasions, let me give one case I had to deal with. Two men, father and son, made homestead entries at a sub-agency and got their receipts. It is true that printed on the receipt in red ink were the words that the receipt was not absolute until the case was reported to the head office. But these men were foreigners, Frenchmen, who did not read English. The son could not speak English at all, and the father very slightly. The entry was made at the sub-agency of Weyburn. No doubt the sub-agent told the men they would have to wait until the papers went into Estevan before they would be absolutely certain that they would get their homestead, but these men did not understand English and they thought they had an absolute entry. The son got a homestead and the father, who had homesteaded already, purchased a pre-emption and paid $160 beside the $10 fee. They went out and broke up thirty acres and built a shanty before they became aware that one of these quarter-sections had already been entered. That quarter-section was the homestead which the son had improved. They did not speak English and consequently could not be made to understand. They came back to Weyburn and went to a lawyer, and the lawyer wrote to me. I went to the department and the case I put before the department was simply this. They said: We will give up the land if we get paid for the work done. That is usually what is done. The government in granting the re-entry, would make the man pay for the improvement, but the son said: My father and I live together, we must homestead close together, and there is no use of my going twenty miles further and taking another homestead unless my father can go there too and purchase a homestead alongside of me. The department insisted that under the regulations the $160 paid on account of the purchased homestead could not be refunded for a year, and in spite of all I could do—and the father was a good supporter of mine—I could not get the department to allow that $160 to be refunded at once or applied on another purchased homestead. The father could not get his $160 back and could not take up another purchased homestead until he got it back, so that he and his son were prevented during a whole year from getting another entry. These are the regulations, no doubt, but it is a simple case in which the department should exercise leniency in administering these regulations. I do not think there is any regulation on earth that should compel a man to stay idle a whole year because $160 of his money is in the hands of the government and he cannot get it back. That is a case in which I claim the regulations work absolute injustice, and all I ask is a little bit of common horse sense applied to each individual case, and have each case dealt with on its merits. That man should have been allowed to have his $160 credited on the second purchased homestead even if the son and the father were both absolutely in the wrong. I am not saying that they were, for it is quite possible that the sub-agent made a mistake, but even if they were, leniency should have been exercised and the regulations should not have been allowed to interfere with a bona fide settler settling on his land.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Can the minister give offhand any information as to what extent these irregularities in making application for homesteads, to which the applicants are not entitled, have been carried on? I do not think they can have been to any great extent.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid there has been a good deal of it, but of course all the cases we have dealt with have been published in the 'Gazette' and the number is not very large. I am afraid, however, that there are a good many which have not come to our attention. There is, I am afraid, carelessness in dealing with these matters, and a lack of consideration on the part of people in many cases which is not creditable. I introduced the purchased homestead preemption in the Land Act of 1908 in order that a person who had exhausted his homestead right could get legally another chance, and that no doubt did relieve the situation to a very great degree.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We have been dealing so far with the applicants for homesteads whose irregularities got them into trouble, and in some cases into jail. This year I have had a number of cases similar to the one of which I intend to give as an illustration to-night. And I am not presenting this case because I have had any trouble with the officials of the department. On the contrary in everything I have had to do with the department, I have found the officials very courteous. They have never in any way refused recognition or consideration. But this is a case in which the officials to my mind have not given very satisfactory explanation to me, or to the parties for whom I have been trying to get an explanation. As I said, we have thus far been dealing with the applicant. But there seems to be in the case which I wish to put on 'Hansard' a fault on the part of the department. In the first case, the applicant is at fault, and the applicant has to suffer. But in the case to which I wish to refer, the department is at fault, and yet again, the applicant has to suffer. That does not seem fair. They call it an error. Well, let me read this case which I have referred to. Here is a letter addressed to myself and dated Cartwright, December 31, 1910.

Re S.W. 5-37—9 W. 2nd.

Mr. Elijah Owens of this place has called to see me with reference to the above lands. It appears that he went west in the early part of the year and after a great deal of trouble and expense homesteaded the above quarter. The Land Office received his money and issued their usual interim receipt, &c. Subsequently Mr. Owens was informed that the south half of this quarter was patented on the 31st of December, 1907, to the Canadian Northern railway, and advised that if he was not satisfied with the eighty acres left, his entry would be cancelled. His main grievance is that the Land Office should have known of this and prevented him from taking the land after having incurred the expense necessary to homestead. Mr. Owens advises me that his travelling expenses locating the land amounted to $50. He had five acres broken on same at $4 per acre, making $20. He paid an entry fee of $10; his whole expenses being $80. You will see that this means quite a loss to Mr. Owens, as he does not want an eighty acre farm and will have to abandon same.

Now, I claim that in this case, the department made a mistake. Mr. Owens went to a great deal of trouble to go west and homestead this quarter-section. He did his breaking and fulfilled all the requirements; but later, was informed that half of this quarter-section had been patented to the Canadian Northern railway. The minister (Mr. Oliver) being familiar with the west will know that eighty acres will be practically of no use to the man and that it will be better for him to give up the quarter, and all that he asks is that he be refunded his expenses, because of the error of the department. And here is the answer of the department.

Ottawa, January 20, 1911.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the letter to you from Mr. John D. Loughlin, in re S.W. ¼ of 5-37—9 W. 2nd, I beg to state that there is no provision in the Dominion Lands Act under which the department would have authority to grant the compensation asked for by Mr. Owens——

I think that is along the lines on which hon. gentlemen opposite have been talking. It is pretty hard to get over the explanation made by the minister that you must have some law, and hold to that law, or somebody will be saying that you have been partial. I quite understand that.

—on the ground that he was granted entry for the above described land in error, the south half of the quarter-section having been patented to the Canadian Northern Railway. Mr. Owens has been advised that if he did not wish to retain the available 80 acres as a homestead his entry would be cancelled and a refund of the entry fee would be made to him. I may state that under section 15 of the Act authority is given to cancel an entry which may have been granted through error.

With regard to compensating Mr. Owens for the breaking performed by him, I beg to state that under the practice of the department a homesteader who obtains entry for land upon which improvements have been made is called upon to pay to the department the value of such improvements, which amount the minister may in his discretion pay to the person who placed same upon the land. If, therefore, the breaking——

I call special attention to this.

—mentioned by Mr. Owens is upon that portion of the said S.W. ¼ of 5 which is available for entry, the value, if any, of the improvements would be collected should re-entry be granted.

Now, the minister (Mr. Oliver) made use of some splendid sentiments about justice between man and man, and said, as I understood him, that all cases were considered on their merits. That is the way I think they should be considered. Here is a case that, I think, should have been treated on its merits. As I said, I am not finding fault with the officials of the department; but I wish to bring this case, as I promised I would do, to the attention of the minister. Here is a case in which a man not only went to the trouble and expense of making a journey and taking up land, but also of doing some breaking on the land. And he has lost the opportunity of getting his quarter-section. I believe that Mr. Owens should receive back from the department that $80. I understand the department to say that they have no fund from which they could make such a payment. But they have all the funds there are in connection with the government; and, if the error is theirs, if, in the first place, you are going to say that the man who makes an error, has to suffer the penalty, why should not the department, when it makes an error, suffer the penalty? This is a sample of at least three or of four cases that I have had during the present session. I believe this is a case to which the minister should give some consideration; and I do believe that Mr. Owens should receive back his $80. Even then, he will have suffered a loss.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt, this gentleman has suffered a hardship, and because of the error of the department. It is also a fact that provision has not been made for dealing with such a case, and, therefore, we are limited in our dealings to just exactly what has been done. We could collect the amount of the improvements from any subsequent entrant and pay them to the gentleman who made the improvements. But we should have no warrant for dealing with travelling expenses, and I think myself it would be very doubtful policy to go so far as to pay travelling expenses in such a case. It might be argued that Mr. Owens had incurred travelling expenses looking over land, but there was other land in that part of the country as well as the land he took. His expenses might be arranged in some way that, if he took another homestead we could give it to him without incurring travelling expenses or something of that kind. I am satisfied it would not be possible, under the circumstances, to meet the demand for travelling expenses.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They might be cut out.

Mr. OLIVER. We must admit that we were in fault. If it were possible to give the gentleman a consideration—as sometimes has been done—as I say, there is no fund from which to draw, but sometimes where we have wronged an individual in that way we try to make it up to him should he take a subsequent entry by some consideration in the matter of duties or something of that kind. But that is the only way that the regulations allow us to deal with it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Could not that be changed? Is it a fair regulation?

Mr. OLIVER. It may be that it would be proper to make a change to meet such cases. But there have been very, very few of them, and the loss is not a very serious loss. If the gentleman is taking land elsewhere, we might meet his wishes in some way in regard to fulfilment of duties, or in some other way that would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the minister take this letter and write me as to what will be done?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before this item carries, I would like to bring to the notice of the minister some details in the Auditor General's Report of last year. I have referred to two of the employees of the department, and have suggested to the minister that if he wanted the confidence of the general public he had better let them go.

In the Auditor General's Report, K—53, I find a reference to one R. E. A. Leech. He is put down here as an inspector of agencies at Brandon, with a salary of $3,000 a year and expenses. Is that the same Leech that is famous in Manitoba, or infamous, according to the point of view, since 1904, who is called the Thin Red Line Leech?

Mr. OLIVER. I think this gentleman has been called the Red Line Leech?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Might I ask how did a gentleman with a nickname of that kind come to be appointed by a government that is desirous of getting the confidence of the public?

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman was appointed before I became minister, I found him in the position, and I must say that I have found him a very efficient and faithful servant.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am glad to know that the minister finds him efficient and faithful. But there are one or two things concerning him I wish to mention. He has a salary of $3,000 a year. Then there is an item for board, lodging and horse feed, $1,073.15. Would the minister tell me what is meant here by horse feed?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not offhand give my hon. friend the detailed information. I understand that Mr. Leech's accounts are now before the Public Accounts Committee, and I am sure that every detail possible will be arrived at by that committee. In a general way, I can answer the question about horse feed. Mr. Leech's duties require him to visit the different land agencies in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In addition he is from time to time employed in taking evidence in questions of the fulfilment of homestead duties, and in many such cases he has to drive to the locality in which the investigation is held and requires to have a horse.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see an item for livery, $287, which does not seem to be in harmony with an item for horse feed. Then he charges for fares, $1,350, and pullmans, $379. Besides getting a salary under which presumably he is able to board himself, he is being paid between $4 and $5 every day in the year over and above his salary. Then there are other accounts for postage, telephones, rents and so forth, a number of small items, all charged up to the government. Here is another item, material and labour on a shanty, $141. What shanty is that, might I ask the minister? That is not where you lodge him, surely, when he is at home?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer what the shanty was for, I will make inquiries.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be interesting for the committee to know whether you are going to have any more shanties built.

Mr. OLIVER. These accounts are all before the Public Accounts Committee, where there is every opportunity of threshing them out. It is possible this shanty may have been some temporary erection in connection with some land rushes that took place when special arrangements were made for taking care of arrivals.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In looking further, I find letters in regard to this same man written by the Auditor General which show that he does not have the same confidence in Mr. Leech which is now expressed by the minister. On K—126, I find a letter written from the Audit Office in Ottawa, dated February 22, 1910, signed by J. Fraser, Auditor General. Referring to Inspector Leech's travelling expenses. He says:

I have before me the expense accounts of Mr. R. A. E. Leech, inspector of agencies, for the period included between April 1 and October 31, 1909, and would ask your attention to the following remarks thereon:

1. In no instance does Mr. Leech make use of return tickets on the railways, but charges single fare in all cases. While on some of his trips, which are of a roundabout nature, return tickets could not well be made use of, still there are others on which a saving might have been made by the purchase of return tickets. For instance, there are about twenty trips between Brandon and Winnipeg for which $4 each way is charged. The return fare should be only about $6.70, which would have made a saving of $1.30 on each round trip. Again, on a trip to Ottawa and return, $33.80, the ordinary single fare, is charged each way. The regular return ticket from Winnipeg to Ottawa, however, is $59.45, so that a saving of $8.15 might have been effected on this trip. There are other trips on which, I think, return tickets might have been advantageously made use of.

I would make the suggestion to the minister that if there is any doubt in the mind of the watchdog of the treasury, the Auditor General, that any employee of this government is not absolutely honest in his accounts, a very much better method to follow than that at present followed would be to compute for a certain time the average expense and have an arrangement made with the different railways so that passes could be had and the average passenger rate paid straight from the government to the railway companies, thus removing any inducement in the way of an official who was mistrusted by the Auditor General to bring any onprobium on his name either rightly or wrongly.

3. With reference to livery hire, it appears that Mr. Leech is under a misapprehension with respect to the necessity for vouchers. He states that, according to his information, livery vouchers are required only when the bill amounts to a considerable sum. In the November statement no single charge is for more than one day's livery hire, the highest for which is eight dollars. Eight dollars, however, would represent a very heavy day's drive, or the drive of a day and the good part of a night. I am advising Mr. Leech that sub-vouchers are required for all payments for livery hire.

4 and 5. With respect to meals on dining cars, Mr. Leech informs me that when he commenced work for the department and for some time afterwards, the price of meals was $1, which only required the keeping track of the number of meals in connection with his expenses. When these rates were changed by the railway companies it was only for the purpose of increasing their charges, and now it is a very poor meal one can get by limiting the price to $1, but as it is more convenient he has adhered to the old plan, although the meals have cost him considerably more.

To conclude, I might say that I have instructed Mr. Leech to bear your remarks very carefully in mind in future, and to make out his accounts in accordance therewith. I trust the explanations given with respect to the accounts already rendered will prove sufficient.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

W. W. CORY, D.M.

The Auditor General.

I made the suggestion to the minister that something should be done to provide that no such even indirect charge be brought against an official of the government as is contained in this letter of the Auditor General, and I would like to know how he takes my suggestion before I go on if he has anything to say.

Mr. OLIVER. No; I do not know that I have anything to say. I was rather of the opinion that this letter of the Auditor General is not a charge against Mr. Leech. It is a certain direction as to how his accounts were to be made out. I do not think it throws any implication upon Mr. Leech's honesty in regard to his accounts.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He says that there are overcharges.

Mr. OLIVER. In that letter.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Not in that letter, but as you go along.

Mr. OLIVER. I followed the letteer and I did not find anything that would reflect on Mr. Leech's honesty. He is not considered to be as careful in the transaction of business as he should be, and the Auditor General points out how he should carry on his business so as to be less expensive, but there is no imputation of dishonesty.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Perhaps the minister will read another letter from the Auditor General, dated March 11, 1910. It is headed:

Mr. CAMPBELL.

INSPECTOR LEECH'S EXPENSES, INCONSISTENCIES BETWEEN FARES CHARGED AND TRANSPORT ORDERS ISSUED.

I would like the minister's special attention to this, because I think it is very important. The letter I read a moment ago was answered in a certain way by the Deputy Minister. This one is not answered and I would like the answer to-night.

Audit Office,
Ottawa, March 11, 1910.

Sir,—I beg to call your attention to certain inconsistencies between the fares charged by Mr. R. E. A. Leech, inspector of agencies, in his expense accounts and the amounts paid the railway companies for tickets supplied to him on transportation orders.

Order No. 1036 is for a single ticket from Calgary to Edmonton, delivered Mr. Leech by the Canadian Pacific railway ticket agent at Calgary on October 15, 1908. Order No. 1361, dated October 16, 1908, is for a single ticket from Edmonton to Regina, delivered Mr. Leech by the agent of the Canadian Northern railway. This order is stamped by the Canadian Northern Railway at Edmonton on October 23, 1908. On referring to Mr. Leech's accounts for the month of October, 1908, it would appear he arrived in Calgary from Banff on October 15——

That is the day that he got the ticket from the Canadian Pacific railway agent.

—that he remained in Calgary until the 17th, on which date he left for Brandon direct, charging in his account a single fare ticket from Calgary to Brandon. He returned to Calgary again on the 19th, and on the 21st went back to Brandon. On October 23, the date on which the order was stamped at Edmonton, Mr. Leech appears to have been at Medicine Hat, on his way from Calgary to Brandon.

We, on this side of the House, recognized his capacity for taking care of personation, but we did not know that he could be in two places at one time in his own person.

Order No. 1041 is for a single ticket from Calgary to Edmonton, delivered to Mr. Leech by the Canadian Pacific railway agent at Calgary on April 27, 1909. Mr. Leech's expense account shows that while he was at Calgary on April 27, 1909, he left on that date for Regina and did not go up to Edmonton.

Surely this is something that the minister ought to take into consideration.

Order No. 425 is for a single ticket from Regina to Prince Albert, supplied Mr. Leech by the agent of the Canadian Northern railway on May 10, 1909. Mr. Leech's expense account shows that he arrived in Regina from Brandon on May 10, that he stayed in Regina until the following day, when he left for Winnipeg. He does not appear to have gone to Prince Albert at this time at all.

Surely that is something else for the minister to take into his consideration. The department was paying his way into a different point at the same time as he had a ticket to go somewhere else, both tickets being paid for by the people.

Order No. 2152 is for a single ticket from Regina to Prince Albert, supplied to Mr. Leech by the agent of the Canadian Northern railway at Brandon on July 21, 1909. According to Mr. Leech's expense account he arrived in Brandon from Arcola on July 16 and remained at Brandon until July 23——

The ticket he had got from Regina to Prince Albert was dated July 21.

—on which date he went to Winnipeg. He does not appear to have been at Prince Albert any time during the month of July.

Another case of personation. I am glad to notice that the nod of the minister is so emphatic that he must agree with me that Mr. Leech is an adept at impersonation.

Order No. 444 is for a single ticket from Regina to Prince Albert, delivered Mr. Leech by the agent of the Canadian Northern railway at Regina on July 30, 1909. From his expense account, Mr. Leech appears to have arrived in Regina from Banff on July 30, and to have proceeded the same date to Brandon, and not to Prince Albert.

He had a ticket for Prince Albert for which the people paid at the same time as he had obtained a ticket presumably for himself to go to Brandon.

Mr. Leech should have to explain why he issued transportation orders in his own name in the above cases, when his expense accounts show that he was travelling in a totally different direction. It is probable that the tickets supplied on the transportation orders in question were not for his own use, but for the use of other officials. If such was the case the name of the official using the ticket supplied should have been endorsed on the transportation order, or still better, the transportation order should have been issued, not in Mr. Leech's name, but in the name of the official actually using the ticket. A full explanation of the circumstances under which each order was issued should be furnished by Mr. Leech.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. FRASER, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of the Interior.

That letter was written from the Audit Office, March 11, 1910, and as far as I can learn no answer has yet been returned to it. I would like an explanation now.

Mr. OLIVER. I notice there is no answer in the Auditor General's Report to that letter. The reason is that there was some delay in answering and the answer which should have appeared in the Auditor General's Report was too late for insertion. I have here a copy of the answer to that letter and I shall place it on 'Hansard.' It reads:

Dear Mr. Fraser,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, in which you draw attention to the fact that you have never received a reply to your letter of the 11th of March last, relating to certain transportation orders issued by Mr. R. E. A. Leech, inspector of Dominion Lands agencies, which appear to conflict with his expense accounts. In reply, I beg to say that you will doubtless recall that in the year 1908, Mr. Leech was placed in charge of a general seed distribution which was conducted in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. It was originally contemplated to bring employees of this department from various Land Offices to assist Mr. Leech in his work, but owing to the unprecedented demand for seed grain of that year and the extent of the work involved in distributing it to needy settlers, it was found necessary to employ a great many temporary men to assist in various capacities. Some of them were sent out on special trips to various points and in such cases were given transportation orders by Mr. Leech in his name or the tickets were secured on Mr. Leech's order and given to them. In no instance, however, were such orders used except on government business.

I understand that Mr. Reid of your office lately called on Mr. Leech and went into this matter fully. I presume that probably you have his report ere this.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) W. W. CORY.

Deputy Minister.

John Fraser, Esq., Auditor General.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is satisfactory, except that the department had to be jogged five or six months after and asked for a statement with regard to it. I shall read another letter from Mr. Fraser with regard to the same Mr. Leech, with reference to his sleeping and parlour car charges:

Audit Office,
Ottawa, March 14, 1909.

Sir,—In my examination of the accounts of Mr. R. E. A. Leech, inspector of agencies, for the seven months included between April 1 and October 31, 1909, it appears to me that the charges made by him for accommodation on sleeping cars and on parlour cars are considerably in excess of the advertised rates for such services. I inclose herewith a statement showing the various charges made by him, the correct amounts, as nearly as I could determine them, and the apparent overcharges. In making out this statement, I have been guided, as far as possible, by the amounts advertised by the transportation companies. In other cases, however, I have been guided by the charges made by other officials for similar services. In a few cases it was difficult to determine whether the trip was made during the day or by night. In such cases I have been guided, as far as possible, by the charges for meals on the dining cars, as during the night these cars are not open. The amounts allowed by me, in the column headed 'correct charges' are subject to modification. Mr. Leech, however, should be asked to justify each charge made by him and to refund any overcharge.

When the Auditor General seriously makes a statement of this kind and absolutely says that Leech has been overcharging the department, I think it is time for the department to seriously take the matter into consideration and ascertain the facts. Either Mr. Fraser or his clerical staff is incompetent, or Mr. Leech is dishonest. In saying that I do not wish to say anything detrimental to the capacity and capability of the Auditor General and his staff.

Mr. OLIVER. That letter is replied to on the following page as follows:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 10, 1910.

Dear Mr. Fraser,—Referring to your letter of March 14 last, with reference to the accounts of Mr. R. E. A. Leech, inspector of Dominion Land agencies, relating particularly to the sleeping car charges, I beg to say that I am now in receipt of an explanation from this official. He says, in effect, that he has always found it difficult to determine whether all the charges are in accordance with the sleeping car schedules. He has only recently been able to borrow a Canadian Pacific railway official sleeping car schedule, but even from this he has not been able to determine the rates in many cases. Those which the schedule shows plainly, however, indicate that his charges are correct, except a charge made on April 7, Winnipeg to Nokomis, $4. In this case the through rate, as shown on the schedule, is $3, but if the trip had been broken or sleeper had been engaged, say from Winnipeg to Elkhorn and then from Elkhorn to Nokomis, the cost would have been $4.

I inclose you herewith a statement from Mr. Leech showing you the charges as he has been able to verify them from the schedules, but the schedules are somewhat intricate, and he has only given figures where there was no question as to what the charge should be. I trust you will find the explanation satisfactory.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
W. W. CORY, D.M.

The Auditor General.

There follows a statement of affairs made by Mr. Leech, taken from the schedule and compared with the schedule of fares and Mr. Leech makes the assertion that the correct fares have been charged.

Mr. STAPLES. What authority had Leech to issue those orders to any other individual? It seems to me that he takes a great deal of authority upon himself. In Manitoba, to our dissatisfaction and discomfort, he took on himself authority to do what he saw fit with the voters' lists. Now, I understand he takes authority to issue to other agents travelling orders which I am led to believe are simply from a little book of coupons on which the ticket agent issues tickets. It would only take an hour or two to get an order from the minister to issue these transportation orders. Mr. Leech manages to carry on things in a high handed way and apparently he has some hold on the government which enables him to do just as he pleases, and in his case the government dare not say their souls are their own. He draws a salary of $3,000 a year which he augments to $7,000 by other expenses. I believe the government could get a competent and honest man to discharge Mr. Leech's duties for a far less salary. And yet, the government goes on employing him from year to year notwithstanding that all these doings of his have been brought to their attention. It is time the minister should call a halt on Mr. Leech and investigate his transactions.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Leech was a commissioner with full responsibility to see that the seed grain got out and no technicality in regard to the issue of transportation or anything else was to stand in his way. It was a case of delivering the goods, and Leech delivered the goods in time, to the satisfaction of the people, and to the very great benefit of the country at large. He could not have done so had he been hampered by a requirement to appeal to Ottawa for issue of transportation when it was required. It is true that Mr. Leech is an expensive official. It is true he has a high salary and that his travelling expenses are very high, but I do not think they amount to more than is paid to other men in private life who are engaged in duties that are not any more responsible and that are not discharged with any greater ability. Although I did not appoint Mr. Leech I want to say on his behalf that his services as inspector of Dominion Land agencies, and in the position we have frequently placed him in as acting as a sort of court in case of dispute as to homestead duties, and particularly in the administration of the seed grain distribution, have been eminently satisfactory so far as my knowledge goes, and I take this opportunity of saying so.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He charges a dollar fare from Brandon to Winnipeg and there is no such fare.

Mr. OLIVER. Are you complaining that he does not charge enough?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He charges 50 cents too much each time.

Mr. LAKE. The Canadian Pacific Railway folder gives the charge from Brandon to Winnipeg at 50 cents, and every time Mr. Leech charges double the legal fare.

Mr. OLIVER. I know he is an expensive man.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He is worse than that, he is a dishonest man.

Mr. OLIVER. That can be threshed out before the Public Accounts Committee better than here and it is open to my hon. friend to prove Mr. Leech's dishonesty if dishonest he is. He is certainly at their mercy to make what they can out of him in the Public Accounts Committee, and I assure them he gets no protection from me.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If he travels by night in a pullman car from Brandon to Winnipeg the fare is two dollars, but in the day time the fare is 50 cents, and he apparently charges one dollar.

Mr. STAPLES. If the department had the public interest at heart they would have asked Mr. Leech before now to supply the names of the persons he employed in this case of emergency. The minister says that Leech was able to deliver the goods, and we all know he is a pretty handy man at delivering the goods, particularly on one occasion when he delivered the goods to the electors of Manitoba.

Mr. OLIVER. That was the time he failed to deliver the goods.

Mr. STAPLES. He did not fail to erase the names of electors who were entitled to vote.

Mr. NEELY. What is the matter with your law in Manitoba?

Mr. STAPLES. The law is all right, but this Dominion official was all wrong. It is time the government took means to inquire into this man's actions more closely and that his services were dispensed with. That is my opinion of the honesty and efficiency of that gentleman no matter what the opinion of the Minister of the Interior is.

Mr. LAKE. The Auditor General's report makes out that in 83 trips during 7 months there was an overcharge made, and Mr. Leech only attempts to explain 23 of them. Until he has cleared himself of the charge that he has been systematically over-charging and putting the balance in his pocket Mr. Leech should not be allowed to act in the semi-judicial capacity he is constantly called upon to fill.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the hon. minister how it was that Mr. McLean, who is employed in Winnipeg at $5 a day, was sent out just a month before the last local election in order to distribute scrip and was paid $10 a day extra. I cannot find out where he was distributing any scrip at all, but he was supposed to be a heeler for the Liberal party at the local election. It was in October that he was out doing that work, and he should have been paid at the end of October or in November. But he was not paid until the 1st of March following. By delaying payment, the item never appeared in the Auditor General's Report until a year and a half after the work had been done. The result was that the government were paying this man $5 per day in Winnipeg while he was absent from his work, and $10 a day besides for working in the local elections of Saskatchewan and Alberta. And at the same time this man meets Leech who was travelling all over the province, and the stubs of the tickets will show that while he gave certificates say from Calgary to Edmonton, he was travelling from Calgary to Regina. The inference to be drawn is that he had a lot of political workers going around the country and paid by the department at Ottawa. It is all very fine for the minister to say to us: you can go before the Public Accounts Committee and prove what you say. But how can we prove it? Leech will swear that these men were employed to run out and examine somebody's farm or something of that kind. The Act was illegal, it was defrauding the country in an underhand way, and the Minister of the Interior must have instructed Leech and McLean to do that kind of work. Then the minister held the payments over from October until after the 1st of March. Why did he not pay the men at once? I ask the minister now to explain that transaction and clear it up if he can. Then if it should come before the Public Accounts Committee, we will have the minister's statement, and see if Leech and McLean will confirm it.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to Leech and the tickets he issued to other people in his own name, I can only say that the case was one of urgency. A great deal of work had to be done in a short time, and it was important, not only to the individuals concerned, but the country at large, that it should be done. Mr. Leech tried to exercise his judgment in these matters, and I am prepared to stand right behind him in that transportation. I do not wish to be understood that I am going to stand behind Leech in any investigation that shall be made in the Public Accounts Committee into all his financial transactions with regard to his own expenditures. If dishonesty can be shown against him, he will have to take the consequences; but so far as the issue of special transportation was concerned at the time of the issue of seed grain, I take the full responsibility. It was a case of urgency. Leech had full authority, and I have every confidence that what was done was done in the interests of the public. With regard to W. J. McLean, whatever there may be against Leech as being a political worker, there is no such charge against McLean. Mr. McLean was an old employee of the Hudson Bay Company, over 70 years of age. On account of his knowledge of the Indian language and character and his general desire to be employed, we gave Mr. McLean this particular work of paying the Indian treaty money and taking evidence with regard to half-breed scrip in the far northern country north of Prince Albert. The ordinary time of the year for paying treaty money was in that month. McLean was paid by the two departments because he was working for the two. He was paid by the Indian Department for his work in paying out the treaty money, and by the Interior Department for taking evidence with regard to halfbreed scrip. The idea that Mr. McLean could under any circumstances be valuable politically is utterly preposterous.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister has let the cat out of the bag. McLean is no political worker, but during the month before the local elections he was sent out with this treaty money. It was not so urgent months before to pay this treaty money, but it became very urgent within two or three weeks of the election. McLean did not go out to buy votes, but here are a lot of electors in a local election who want their claims settled, and McLean was sent out to pay them. Is it not astonishing that for months previously the minister would not settle this claim, and just a month before the elections he sent out a good honest old gentleman, whom no one would suspect of being a political leader. He sent him out to get the evidence and see who had claims. Some of the claimants he did not pay. He did not pay until after the election, and then went out to find all those people who had claims. He did not mention politics, of course, but there was a man guiding him around who was known as a political heeler. The minister knows better than that. He says it was very urgent and that they had to be settled just then. Of course it was urgent to carry the election.

Mr. CARVELL. Did the Indians have votes in the election?

Mr. REID (Grenville). What about the halfbreeds? Have they not votes? They got scrip just the same as the Indians. The minister fixed the whole scheme and sent McLean just to get votes. He sent Leech out with seed grain of course, because of course that was necessary, but Leech was sent out when the local elections were going on. The minister should get up and acknowledge that the whole thing was a political scheme from start to finish. The men delivered the goods, there is no doubt about that; but they delivered them with money taken from the people of this country, illegally as I claim. The minister can ease his conscience by saying that he did not go out himself buying votes; but it was an act he would not do in his private business, though in a public matter of this kind it is easy for him to settle his conscience if his conscience is at all pliable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With regard to the items referred to by the Auditor General in his letter of transportation issued by Mr. Leech to some one else, I can readily understand that it might be absolutely justifiable under the circumstances the minister has just cited in the case of the distribution of seed grain, though I do not see why a man could not buy his ticket and charge it up to the department in the manner usually followed. But I have yet to learn—and I would like the minister to note this—of any part of the Northwest provinces which sow at the end of July or in October. Why, then, should grain be distributed for seed purposes at these dates? The minister will find that of these five cases only two were in April and May when seed grain possibly could have been used, and the others in July and October. The reason the minister alleged surely cannot be the correct one.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to other times of the year, of course the same justification does not exist. I do not pretend to justify Mr. Leech issuing transportation under ordinary circumstances. But, as I have already said, so far as the seed grain distribution is concerned, I must stand by him in that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not finding fault with that, but these are absolute charges brought by the Auditor General against this man Leech. One of these dates, as I have said, is October 23. There is no seed grain distributed then, unless it be winter wheat, and there was none grown in that part of the country at that time. And July 23, and July 30—you don't sow anything then.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no seed distribution at that time. I will inquire of Mr. Leech as to these. And, in the meantime, if the Public Accounts Committee are sitting on Mr. Leech, I can only advise them to go at him and find out for themselves. In the other cases, we will try to find out his explanation.

Mr. ROCHE. The minister is placing too much emphasis on the investigation about to take place before the Public Accounts Committee. I believe that all that has been done so far is to move for the papers. Whether there will be an investigation or not will depend wholly upon the character of these papers. But, with the charges contained in the Auditor General's Report, the minister should not have satisfied himself with a waiting action by the Public Accounts Committee, but should have investigated the accounts and had Mr. Leech on the carpet to make an explanation. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has referred to the fact that Mr. Leech could easily have verified the charges by looking up a Canadian Pacific railway folder. But if we are to take Mr. Leech's word for it, we must take into consideration how difficult it is for him to secure one of these folders. Here is this great transcontinental line with its immense business; and Mr. Leech is in Winnipeg——

An hon. MEMBER. In Brandon.

Mr. ROCHE. Yes, but he goes to Winnipeg sometimes in an election. And he would have us believe that it was three months before he could secure a folder, and then he had to borrow one. Mr. Cory's letter replying to the Auditor General is dated June 10, and begins 'Referring to your letter of March 14.' That is, it took until June 10, for this explanation to be forthcoming. And it proceeds:

I beg to say that I am now in receipt of an explanation from this official. He says, in effect, that he has always found it difficult to determine whether all the charges are in accordance with the sleeping car schedules. He has only recently been able to borrow a Canadian Pacific railway official sleeping car schedule, but even from this he has not been able to determine the rates in many cases.

How puerile that explanation is. It is ridiculous that we should be told, as a lot of intelligent men, that for three months he could not secure a Canadian Pacific railway folder in order to find the accuracy of these charges. I think an explanation should have been demanded of him by his superior officer, the Minister of the Interior, long ere this. In these large expenses, in addition to a large salary of $3,000 per annum, there is a chance, with a gentleman who does not bear the most enviable reputation, to get in small graft, and even large graft, by overcharging his expenses, unless the vouchers are forthcoming for everything expended. Mr. Leech's head office is in Brandon, but he appears periodically in Winnipeg, and usually at the time of an election. In the last provincial election he had business that kept him almost constantly, I am informed, in the city of Winnipeg. He used to be the provincial organizer for the Liberal party in the province of Manitoba, and it was understood that because of his services in that capacity that he was given his present position. No doubt, his knowledge of political affairs in that province was valuable to his party. I believe that in the provincial election in Saskatchewan, his services were needed, espcially in Regina. But he is not the only official who interests himself in that way. At page K-56 of the Auditor General's Report, we find the name of Mr. Ostrosky, who receives $100 a month and expenses, and who is a most active political agent. He came into my constituency during the late election and went through securing naturalization papers for the Galicians at no expense to them, of course, the money, no doubt, coming from the political party in whose interest he was acting. Now possibly the Minister of the Interior may be entirely ignorant of those circumstances. But whoever is responsible, this gentleman at any rate, who is an official of the Interior Department, has been very active during election time. I draw this to the attention of the minister so that he may make inquiry into the circumstances himself. He has expressed himself more than once in this House as being opposed to his officials taking part in elections. But in regard to Mr. Leech's expenses, I hold that the Minister of the Interior should long ere this have made a personal investigation into the charges made against Mr. Leech, in view of the correspondence that we read in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not for a moment throw responsibility on the Public Accounts Committee for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Interior Department. It is quite proper, as the hon. gentleman has said, that the accounts which are investigated by the Auditor General should be investigated by the department, and I propose to see that that is done. I merely offered the suggestion to hon. gentlemen that by the Public Accounts Committee they had an independent means of arriving at all the facts in regard to these accounts.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is now midnight, and it will take us hours to get through with Mr. Leech. I would ask, therefore, that the government allow us to adjourn.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.52 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 20, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend the Interest Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to remedy certain grievances which at present exist, more particularly in the western provinces, where there is a great deal of buying and selling of land. For instance, if a farmer wishes to increase the amount of a loan on his land, he is at the mercy of the company which has made the existing loan, and if he desires to pay off the loan, he has to pay the bonus stipulated in the mortgage, which is sometimes very excessive. This measure is proposed for the purpose of remedying these grievances, and making it easier to conduct business in the buying and selling of land in the west.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 138) for the relief of Gertrude Maud Grant.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Bill (No. 140) for the relief of Mary Hamilton Johnston.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 141) for the relief of Dalton Mabel Stapleton.—Mr. Tolmie.

ANGLO-AMERICAN ARBITRATION TREATY.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are taken up, I notice that a good deal of interest is being exhibited at the present time in the suggestion of Sir Edward Grey as to the desirability and the possibility of obtaining an arbitration treaty between England and the United States. As this would appear to be a matter of very great and far-reaching importance, in which I have no doubt Canada as well as the mother country and the United States is interested, equally with all other civilized countries in the world, I would like to ask the government if they have had any communication with the Imperial government or with the United States government on this subject, and if so, if they have anything which they can communicate to the House and through the House to the country?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government has received no communication whatever, either from the Imperial authorities or from the United States on this very important subject; but I have no hesitation in adding that if it were in the power of Canada in any way to help towards such a laudable object, we would be only too glad to do so.

THE GOVERNMENT'S TRADE POLICY.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked the Prime Minister a question which you, Sir, cut off, so that he could not answer. It was in connection with a matter brought up by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), that is, a speech made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), in regard to which the Prime Minister said:

> The statement made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was quite consistent with our policy, it was nothing new, and he had perfect authority, not only he but every member of the Liberal side, to make that statement.

I asked the right hon. the Prime Minister, what I would like to repeat now, whether his remarks also applied to the British preference?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that our policy is generally well known; but if it needs to be further explained, it will be in the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. STAPLES.

Mr. BLAIN. If I understood correctly the Prime Minister's statement in reply to the hon. member for Dauphin, it was that every Liberal member had the liberty of making the statement, it being the policy of the government. Would not the members of the opposition have the same liberty?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes; and I would hope they would avail themselves of it.

Mr. FOSTER. This suggests the question: About what time may we expect the Budget speech to be delivered?

Mr. FIELDING. The House has been occupied so long in a discussion which has taken the form of a Budget debate that we have not been able to reach the Budget proper. It will be brought down, however, at an early date.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. NEELY.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the patience of the House for a few moments on a question of privilege. In a somewhat heated incident which occurred in the House on Friday afternoon, of which the member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) and myself were among the chief actors, a statement was made by the member for Dauphin which I did not catch at the time, but which I find reported in the public press of the country, and also in the Unrevised 'Hansard. As this statement, or insinuation, contained in a certain question asked by the member for Dauphin, reflects very seriously on my honour as a member of this House, and has been sent broadcast throughout the country, I think it only fair that it should be taken into consideration. On page 5669 of 'Hansard' appears the following statement:

> Mr. CAMPBELL. He had better talk of his honesty? Where is the capital of Saskatchewan? What does it cost to vote for it?

And on the next page the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), referring to some remarks which I had made in reference to the member for Dauphin, made this statement:

> Did he sell the capital of Saskatchewan?

At the moment there was so much confusion in the House that I did not catch the words of the member for Dauphin, and I did not know that he had made use of such words until I saw them in the columns of the public press on the following day. I did catch the word 'honesty' but the rest of the statement I did not catch; and as it reflects very seriously upon me, as a member of this House, I rise to a question of personal explanation and privilege. If the House will pardon me a moment, I should find it necessary to explain to some extent what my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) referred to. As many hon. members know, it was my good or ill fortune to be a member of the first legislature of the province of Saskatchewan; and one of the first important questions that came before that legislature was the question of the location of the capital. It so happened that the majority of the supporters of the government of that province came from the northern part of Saskatchewan; and in the west it is well known that the two chief competitors or rivals for the honour of being the capital were the cities of Saskatoon in the north and Regina in the south. I am free to say that, on the part of many of us, our personal inclinations were in favour of Saskatoon; but when we came to Regina and the question came to be decided, we discovered that the government intended to deal with it as a government measure and had decided to make the capital where it had been for many years, in the old city of Regina. Some of us had even gone so far as to express publicly I was not one of them—our preference for the selection of Saskatoon, but as the government had made the choice of Regina a government measure, we decided to support the government rather than insist on our personal preference, and I personally have no regret for the action I then took. In the debate in the provincial legislature a certain member of the opposition twitted government supporters with having supported the government measure against their own sentiment and suggested that coercion had been used by the First Minister of Saskatchewan in order to compel them to do so. He also went so far as to make the insinuation that possibly the first minister, or some one on his behalf, had used other means to induce his followers to support it. But upon being challenged by the first minister to make good his insinuation, he refused to make any charge against any supporter of the government and the incident closed so far as the House was concerned and no reference was made to it afterwards. The opposition press of the province, however, took up the insinuation and published it broadcast. That insinuation was to the effect that the government of Saskatchewan or its prime minister, or some one on his behalf, had used other means than persuasion to influence certain members to support the government in its location of the capital. In the general election which followed, these insinuations were not believed by the people, and the men who were subjected to them were returned to parliament. It would appear that a lie has sometimes a long life, and these slanderous insinuations were again brought to life in the debate on Friday last by the hon. members for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) and Dauphin (Mr. Campbell). It has been my privilege to serve the constituency of Humboldt not only in this House, the short time I have been here, but during the first term of the legislature of Saskatchewan, and I want to say to my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), who has repeated the insinuation, that, so far as I am personally concerned, if he can adduce one particle of proof that, in my public capacity as a representative of the constituency of Humboldt, either in the local legislature or this House, I have ever done anything or cast a single vote for financial reward or hope of financial reward or from any other motive than a sense of public duty, I shall forfeit my seat in this House. I want to go further and say that if, as the representative of the people, he can find one single instance in which I have rendered a service to a constituent of mine, as a public man, for financial reward or hope of financial reward, my seat is vacant in this House. I did make a certain statement with reference to the hon. member for Dauphin on Friday last, which he denied. That statement was that he had said a certain thing in the last local election in the province of Manitoba. He denied having made that statement and I accepted his denial. I accepted it as an acceptance due from one hon. member to another. And to-day I appeal to the hon. gentleman, as an appeal from man to man, that he should either withdraw the insinuation he made or let me know—and I think it is only fair that I should know—what foundation he had for making it. As I have done him the credit of accepting his denial, just as I would accept the statement of any member of this House, I appeal to him either to accept the denial that I make of the insinuation he cast upon me or furnish some proof of it.

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL (Dauphin). I have listened very carefully to what has been said by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely). There is no man in this House who regrets an incident such as that which occurred on Friday night more than I do. But while I say that, I wish the House to understand that I do not consider myself in the least degree responsible. We all regret instances of that kind. We all at times, under provocation, are apt to forget what is due from one to the other, and are apt to make statements off the bat which are perhaps too emphatic and not capable perhaps of being proven to our satisfaction. The speech just made by my hon. friend from Humboldt gives the answer to the question that he propounded to me. What I said on the floor of this House contained no specific charge against the hon. member, but of course he is at liberty to put on it what interpretation he chooses. He has himself admitted—and I do not propose to adduce any other evidence than what he has himself given with regard to the innuendo—that it was stated on the floor of the Saskatchewan legislature that other means had been used to persuade members from the north of the province to vote for the choice of Regina as a location for the capital of that province instead of Saskatoon. That was my authority for making the remarks I did. It was stated, under flaring headlines, in the newspapers in the northwest, that some influences had been brought to bear, not party or political influences, but others, to induce members to deviate from their loyalty to the town in their own part of the country, Saskatoon, to which they were pledged to give their support in the question of whether Regina or Saskatoon should—

Mr. NEELY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) is wrong. No man was pledged.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What pledges a man, Mr. Speaker? Is a promise given to a friend not a pledge? I leave it to 'Hansard' to say whether the hon. member (Mr. Neely), in his remarks a few moments ago, did not state that some had made a promise to their friends, and, for my part, I consider a promise made is a debt unpaid.

Mr. NEELY. I did not say anything of the kind; I said they had expressed sentiments in favour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was careful not to interrupt the hon. member when he was speaking. I have the desire that every member of this House has, to have every member, regardless of his party politics, appear at his best; and that is the reason I did not interrupt him. But we have from him now an interruption of my words. I do not desire this House to ask for me, and I do not intend to give them, an interpretation of my words. I am quite willing to accept the interpretation put upon my words by the hon. member for Humboldt. At the same time, I want to tell him, when he gets up in this House and says that the facts of the case do not bear out the interpretation that he himself put on my words, I am quite willing, as a member of this House, to accept his word frankly and freely. I think that that is all that is necessary to settle the matter.

PRIVILEGE—VALUATION OF THE YACHT 'WANDA.'

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). It is not often that I rise in this House to a question of privilege,—I do not know that I ever have done it before. I would wait for the motion which is expected within a short time to bring forward the matter to which I wish to speak, but, as I have to refer to a past debate, I might be ruled out of order. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) on Thursday last, as will be seen by referring to page 5584 of 'Hansard,' speaking when I was not in the House, spoke of a matter that had taken place in the Customs. I have the return before me, but if hon. members will refer to 'Hansard,' they can trace the whole transaction showing that it was carried out in the ordinary course of the business of the department. Yet it was placed before this House in a light that is unfair,—I need not use a stronger word—unjust, very unfair and very unjust, to the officers of my department. I, therefore, on their behalf, wish to bring the matter before the House. The case referred to was that of a yacht that had been bought by Mr. Travers—or, rather, not bought, but received by him as a gift, and, as a gift, of course, unaccompanied by an invoice. The usual course was followed. There had to be a valuation by one of our appraisers duly qualified for that purpose and that was done. Mr. Travers wrote to Mr. Calvert to ask him if he would bring the matter before the commissioner. He had a conversation with the commissioner, and, subsequently, he wrote a letter to the commissioner. I will not take up the time of the House by reading the whole correspondence, as it is given in 'Hansard,' at the page already referred to, but I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon. members on this side, to go through the whole matter so that they may see how very, very unfair and unjust the hon. gentleman was in the remarks he made at that time and the conclusions he sought to draw from the facts he gave. This was an ordinary transaction. The hon. member (Mr. Sharpe, Ontario) makes the point: Why did not Mr. Travers write to the Customs Department himself? Why did he ask Mr. Calvert, the Liberal whip, to do it? There is not a week passes but members of parliament bring matters before my department with reference to their constituents, and sometimes with reference to those who are not their constituents. The hon. member (Mr. Sharpe, Ontario) is surrounded by those who have done the same thing. They bring these matters to our department, and they are examined into, their representations are heard, and then the department does what it considers to be right in the matter. That was what was done, and that is all that was done in this case. The hon. gentleman from North Ontario omitted reading the letter from Mr. Travers to Mr. Calvert in which he asked Mr. Calvert to have the departmental machinery to be used in making valuations put in motion, at least that letter is not in 'Hansard.'

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Was that letter in the return brought down?

Mr. PATERSON. I think it was. It is in the papers before me which purport to be a copy of that return.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I think I read the whole correspondence.

Mr. PATERSON. I refer hon. members' to show that that letter is not there. The hon. member (Mr. Sharpe, Ontario) said:

Not only did Mr. Calvert exercise his influence with the Finance Department in connection with the passing of this certificate through the Treasury Board, but he exercised his influence with the Customs Department on behalf of Mr. Travers. I moved for a return the other day in connection with a pleasure yacht which Travers had transferred from the register at Detroit to Brockville. Mr. Calvert seems to have been under some obligation and Mr. Travers wrote to him, August 18, 1909, just when everybody was clamouring for an investigation, when the insurance department of New York State was asking for an investigation into the affairs of the bank. Mr. Travers was doing everything he could to stave off that investigation. Instead of writing direct to the Customs Department we find him writing to Mr. Calvert as follows:

Then, after reading that letter, the hon. gentleman comments as follows:

That is about a month after the loan to Mr. Calvert. Travers writes to him asking him to get his boat passed at a low valuation. Mr. Calvert writes to Mr. McDougald, Commissioner of Customs, on the 19th of August, after having a personal conversation with that gentleman. His letter reads:

Then he reads the letter sent by Mr. Calvert and comments further in the following words:

So you see Mr. Calvert, the Liberal whip, had personally interviewed the Commissioner of Customs with a view to getting the boat through the Customs at a low valuation, and actually suggested the valuation. If the Minister of Customs were here I would ask if that is the way the Customs Department is managed. This transaction came to light by accident, and I would ask how many entries are made through the Customs Department on the advice of the Liberal whip. It is an extraordinary circumstance and the Prime Minister should take cognizance of the matter.

It was not necessary to appeal to the Prime Minister to take cognizance of a matter passing in the Customs Department. Any charges made or insinuations thrown out the minister of the department is quite competent and willing to deal with.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) was not in his place. That was the reason I appealed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. PATERSON. It was not necessary to appeal to the Prime Minister. The matter came to my notice the next morning in a paragraph in the newspaper. I was asked if I had seen the very extraordinary charge made—very unjust.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I rise to a point of order. When an hon. member rises to a question of privilege, is he not confined to a personal explanation? I do not think he has the right to use a question of privilege to make an attack on another member of the House. I want an opportunity to reply, to justify what I have said.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has sat long enough in this House to know the custom of the House in relation to questions of privilege I assume that he will observe the rules of the House.

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly. As I explained, had it not been that it was necessary for me to refer to a past debate, I should have waited for the motion that is soon to be presented to the House. Then he reads another letter. Then we have a letter from Mr. Farrow. The commissioner wrote that the only way to have a valuation of the boat made would be for one of our special officers, appointed as an appraiser, whose duty it is to make valuations in all parts of the west of machinery to go there and make an examination. I have to ask my hon. friend a question. He says the boat was valued at $1,600, by our Dominion appraiser Mr. Boughney. I have here a communication from the collector of customs at Brockville, whose duty it would have been in the absence of the special appraiser to make this appraisement. The collector at Brockville says that he was aware of the valuation that he approved of it, and that the boat was not worth any more. The hon. member says:

The valuation is interesting. I am informed that the boilers and engine alone for scrap iron would be worth several thousand dollars. It is a most expensive yacht, and it is valued on the suggestion of Mr. Calvert at the low sum of $1,600. Mr. Calvert suggested $1,000 or so,——

And that is not an ingenuous statement.

—and the Customs Department being in an accommodating mood split the difference and made it $1,600. That matter should be taken cognizance of by the leader of the government. Mr. Calvert had been the instrument in securing the passing of the Farmers' Bank certificate; he was the instrument in having the yacht 'Wanda' passed the customs at one-twentieth of its true value. Why did not Mr. Travers deal direct with the Customs Department instead of using the Liberal whip to secure the valuation of a boat worth thousands and thousands of dollars at $1,600. The Customs Department through the influence of the Liberal whip was defrauded out of hundreds of dollars in duty.

One of my deputies has sent me the following extract, within the last two or three minutes:

The former Liberal Whip, Mr. W. S. Calvert, now a member of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, had introduced Mr. Travers to the Minister of Finance. He had also used his influence with Hon. Wm. Paterson, Minister of Customs, to have Mr. Travers' yacht 'Wanda' passed through the customs at the low valuation of $1,600.

I need scarcely say that I knew nothing of the transaction whatever as my officer writes me. He says:

Dear Mr. Paterson,—I wish to call your attention to above quoted extract from the 'Mail and Empire' of Friday last re Travers' yacht.

Yours respectfully,
R. R. FARROW.

I find from reference to correspondence that you were not in Ottawa until the 26th August 1909, upon which date you returned to the city. Departmental letters re yacht are dated 24th August, 1909.

Of course I have not to deal with this comment from a newspaper. This paper has often in the past and will probably in the future make comments which would not be called complimentary to me, and which in this case are absolutely unjust, but I have to do with an hon. member of this House making charges so serious as this which involves the reputation, and as you can see, absolutely the position of an officer of the Department of Customs. The hon. member says he does that on information. The officer cannot question a member of parliament whose statement is privileged, but I have a right to ask, and I do ask on behalf of my officer that that hon. gentleman be just enough to these men to give me the name of his informant. Then we will trace it out. It needs no royal commission, it will be attended to, but I ask him and I think the House will agree with me that in justice to these men if not to myself he should give the name of this informant who can be talked to outside of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister give us the particulars of the yacht, her size, dimensions and engines?

Mr. MADDIN. If the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) gives the name of his informant will the minister deal with him as diligently and expeditiously as he did with those officers of the Customs Department in Cape Breton who broke the regulations of the Customs Department by taking part in municipal elections and which I have brought to his attention time and time again?

Mr. PATERSON. In reply to the leader of the opposition this memorandum is handed to me signed by John McDougald, commissioner of customs and R. R. Farrow, assistant commissioner. An insinuation was made because Mr. McDougald was addressed by Mr. Calvert and the letter was written by Mr. Farrow. I am informed that Mr. McDougald had gone on his holidays and in the regular course of correspondence the letter came to Mr. Farrow and he answered it. The memorandum which has been handed to me reads:

This appraisement was made by J. C. Boughner in the usual course.

Mr. Boughner is a Dominion appraiser appointed under the Customs Act especially for appraisement of machinery, for which purpose he visits from time to time ports in eastern Canada where there are no regular appraisers.

There is no appraiser at Brockville. The collector acts there as appraising officer in the absence of a regular appraiser.

In this instance, Mr. Boughner conferred with the collector in making the appraisement. The collector states that he considers the appraisement of $1,600 a proper valuation, and that the vessel is not worth any more.

Mr. Boughner received no instructions whatever, directly or indirectly, from the officers of the Customs Department as to making a low appraisement.

There was no invoice, and the valuation was left to the appraiser's judgment. He maintains that his appraisement was fair and reasonable.

The yacht is 25 tons gross register, 17 tons net register; built of wood in 1892; with steam engines of 13 horse power. At the time of appraisement in 1909 the hull and engines were 17 years old; boilers 14 years old.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Any person who listened to my remarks the other night would know I was not reflecting at all upon the personal integrity of the Minister of Customs. Every one who has the acquaintance of the Minister of Customs knows perfectly well that he would not be a party to this, but I do reflect upon his department, and until there is an investigation granted, that reflection stands. My information, and I have it from a good source, which I am willing to disclose at a proper investigation——

Mr. PATERSON. No, but I want it now.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). And if the minister will grant a royal commission to investigate this I will disclose the names and circumstances connected with the whole discreditable transaction. In my opinion the whole affair shows a most improper and discreditable state of affairs in the Department of Customs, and I am willing to stand by what I said, and to give the information in detail if a royal commission is granted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to observe that my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) does not impute any wrong action to the minister, whose perfect integrity he acknowledges. He says that if anything wrong has been done it has been on the part of the officers of the department, Mr. McDougald to whom Mr. Calvert's communication was addressed, or Mr. Farrow. All the members who were in the House years ago, and hon. gentlemen who have been in the House for some time know that while the government is blessed with a very good civil service the government has no better officers than Mr. McDougald and Mr. Farrow and that their integrity is absolutely above reproach.

Mr. PATERSON. The position of the appraiser is at stake on this point. He has taken an oath to do his duty. He is charged with having placed a valuation upon a boat which is one-twentieth its value. The hon. gentleman says that he has information to that effect. I say that this officer has the right, through me, to say to the hon. gentleman who makes this statement that he must give the name of the informant, and give it now if he wishes to be fair.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). In reply to the Minister of Customs, I know of no authority which says that I must give it now, and I shall refuse to give it now. I will give it at any proper session of a royal commission that may be appointed to investigate this whole transaction.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) how soon I may expect an answer to an order for a return passed by this House a month ago in regard to the appointment of fish wardens in Victoria county in 1906-7 and in 1909-10. Also, I would like to learn when I may expect the return of the amount of fish bounties paid in the south riding of Cape Breton that I inquired about at the same time.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember exactly the returns for which my hon. friend is asking. I was under the impression that they had been brought down. I will take a note of them, and I will give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

Mr. MADDIN. I might say to the minister that the whole work in connection with the Victoria county return would not take two hours of any clerk's time, and it is now a month since the order passed this House. I hope the minister will realize that it may greatly facilitate the passage of his estimates to have questions of this kind answered promptly.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when we will be able to get the return to the order of the House in reference to United States cruisers on Great Lakes. That was asked for about a year and a half ago.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will make inquiry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) when we may expect the report of the North West Fishing Commission.

Mr. BRODEUR. I expect it to be brought down to-morrow. I made inquiries this morning about the printing of it, and I was told that the printing was so far advanced that we may be able to get it to-morrow. As soon as we get it I will be very glad to lay it on the table.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ALBERTA ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Alberta Electric Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have been informed that the promoter of the Bill has agreed that the clause relating to the company doing business in coal shall be stricken out. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HERRON. On behalf of the promoters of the Bill I am authorized to say that they are prepared to have clause 14 as it now stands in the Bill removed.

Clause 14 dropped.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals, if the department has any policy with reference to these coal clauses in railway charters. Is it the disposition of the minister to oppose coal clauses in railway charters? I think the committee is entitled to an announcement of some principle or policy from the department with reference to that question.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult sometimes to lay down a policy which is applicable to all conditions, for the reason that members from various parts of the country where the interests are so diverse always imagine that they make out a special case if they wish any special clause inserted. I believe that the larger railway companies have the right to deal in coal. Up to the present time in Canada it has not had any effect in so far as I know, but, as I have pointed out in the committee, as our coal mines are taken up we might very well find ourselves in the position of the United States where they have a combination of coal mining and transportation companies which might be a menace, and which might have to be removed. On principle, I may say, unless a strong case is made out or there is some special reason,

I think it is better not to have the two combined.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

LA BANQUE DU CANADA.

On the order for the House to go into committee on Bill (No. 123) to incorporate La Banque du Canada.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that the Bill stand over. The hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Bill is not here at the present time, and there may be some discussion about it.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 133) to incorporate the Alberta-Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Rutan.

Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Canadian Inter-Mountain Railway Company.—Mr. Goodeve.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ST. JOHN HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. DANIEL:

1. How many cubic yards of material has the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company removed under their Beacon Bar contract in St. John harbour, and at what cost?
2. What quantity has been removed since March 31, 1910, to the present time and at what cost?
3. How many square feet of area under this contract has been dredged to a depth of 32 feet, L.W.S.T.?
4. How long at present rate of progress will it take to finish contract?
5. Is it the intention of the department to require employment of more dredges of capacity of 'Cynthia,' or greater, to hasten completion of this work?
6. Is the dredging work being done at outer berth in Rodney Slip done as part of Beacon Bar contract, and at same prices?
7. If not done as part of Beacon Bar contract and at the prices of that contract, at what prices is the work being done?
8. Were tenders called for the dredging at Rodney Slip? If not, why not?
9. How many cubic yards of material has been removed from this locality, Rodney Slip, and how many more have to be removed to complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. 1,573,604 cubic yards; cost, $621,585.69 to date.

Mr. GRAHAM.

2. 979,263 cubic yards; cost, $386,819.84.
3. 240,000 square feet.
4. This will depend upon the rapidity with which it is decided to proceed with the work, and the amount of the appropriation which may be granted by parliament. This must necessarily depend also upon the completion of negotiations now pending between the city of St. John and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for an exchange of lands where the improvements are being carried on. An unexpected and regrettable disagreement has arisen between the city and the company which may retard the progress of the work.
5. Not at present.
6. Yes.
7. Answered by No. 6.
8. Not for this special work, it being considered that it could properly be done at the price mentioned in the existing contract with the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company for dredging on the western side of the harbour.
9. (a) 27,785 cubic yards removed, (b) 67,980 cubic yards to complete.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON ALCOHOLISM.

Mr. AMES:

1. Is it the intention of the government to send, or assist in sending, delegates to represent the Dominion of Canada at the International Congress on Alcoholism, to be held in London this summer?
2. If so, how are representatives to this congress to be named?

Mr. KING:

1 and 2. No.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE BANK ACT.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. On the Synoptical report, dated March 21, 1905, from the curator of the Yarmouth Bank, what action was taken by the government and with what results?
2. What are the names of the directors of the bank, the parties prosecuted, the charges, the penalties and punishments in each case?
3. What action was taken and what prosecutions were made, if any, in the case of the Banque St. Jean, the Banque St. Hyacinthe and the St. Stephen Bank?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. Following the synoptical report of March 21, 1905, the Department of Justice instructed counsel to institute proceedings against the cashier, who was found guilty and sentenced to a term of imprisonment of sixty days.
2. John Lovitt, president; S. A. Crowell, vice-president; Augustus Cann, N. B. Cann and J. Leslie Lovitt. In addition to the case against the cashier criminal proceedings were instituted on the information of a shareholder against the president and vice-president for the making of false returns. A conviction was obtained against the president, which was set aside by the Supreme Court (en banc) of Nova Scotia. As a result of the proceedings, in the case of the president, the attorney general of the province discontinued proceedings against the vice-president.

3. In the case of the Banque St. Jean, prosecutions were entered into against P. H. Roy, president; P. I. L'Heureux, and P. Beaudoin, for the making of false returns. The president was found guilty and sentenced to five years imprisonment. On the report of Colonel F. W. Hibbard, K.C., who represented the Department of Justice; the cases against Messrs. Beaudoin and L'Heureux were dropped. In the cases of the Banque St. Hyacinthe and the St. Stephens Bank no criminal prosecutions were entered, there being no allegation of criminality in these instances.

For a copy of all orders in council, contracts, reports, declarations, profiles, plans, correspondence and other documents and papers touching the claims of McDonald and McLellan, or of Ronald R. McDonald, for construction of the Intercolonial railway, from about the eighteenth mile east of Grand Narrows to the twenty-second mile east of Grand Narrows aforesaid—Mr. Borden (Halifax).

GRAND FALLS—ST. JOHN RAILWAY.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that, whereas by legislation enacted at the session thereof held in the year A.D. 1910, the legislature of the province of New Brunswick authorized and empowered the Lieutenant Governor in Council for the said province to guarantee the principal and interest of the bonds of any railway company which would build a line of railway from a point on the line of the National Transcontinental railway at Grand Falls, in the county of Victoria, to the city of St. John, in the said province of New Brunswick, a distance of about two hundred and twenty miles, to the extent of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) per mile upon certain conditions therein set forth, one of such conditions being that no such agreement should be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds unless and until the parliament of Canada should enact legislation authorizing the entering by the government of Canada into an agreement with such company or with the government of the province of New Brunswick, for the leasing of the said line of railway when completed, with its appurtenances and rolling stock, and for the operation, maintenance, upkeep and repair by the said government of Canada, as a part of the government railway system of Canada, for a period of ninety-nine years, and for the payment by the government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick, or the government thereof, each year during the said term of ninety-nine years of forty per centum per annum of the gross earnings of the said railway, as or in the nature of rental therefor; the amount of such rental to be applied in payment of the interest of the bonds so to be guaranteed and the surplus, if any, to be paid to the said company.

Now, therefore, it is expedient that His Excellency the Governor in Council be authorized to enter into a contract with any such railroad company and the government of the province of New Brunswick as aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway with its appurtenances and rolling stock, when completed and equipped with rolling stock, and for the operation, maintenance, upkeep and repair by the said government of Canada, as a part of the government railway system of Canada, for a period of ninety-nine years, and for the payment by the government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick, or the said company, each year during the said term of ninety-nine years, of the forty per centum per annum of the gross earnings of the said railway, as or in the nature of rental therefor;

Provided, however, that the said contract shall be entered into only upon the condition that the said railway be constructed upon plans and specifications to be approved of by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and shall be up to the general standard of the said National Transcontinental railway through the said province;

Provided further, that His Excellency the Governor in Council shall be authorized to enter into a contract as aforesaid for the operation of the said road in sections, when completed and equipped as follows:

1. From Fredericton to Woodstock.
2. From Fredericton south a distance of fifty miles.
3. Each twenty-five miles thereafter, until the line be completed and equipped from Grand Falls to St. John.—Mr. Graham.

Mr. GRAHAM. This resolution refers to a proposed line of railway 207 miles long running from the city of St. John to Grand Falls. I may say that one of the first deputations that I listened to after becoming a member of the government was a large deputation from this part of the Dominion urging that steps be taken to secure the construction of a line of railway through the rich St. John valley. If I remember correctly, what was promised at that date was the granting of the usual subsidy, which I think was done at the following session of parliament. Although this is one of the oldest sections of the Dominion, and said to be one of the richest, it seems to have had difficulty in getting railway facilities. Several attempts have been made, but they have not hitherto been brought to a successful conclusion. So urgent is the necessity for this line, and so much has its need impressed the minds of legislators, both in the Dominion and in the province, that they are desirous of arriving at an agreement to provide the long sought for accommodation. The provincial government has passed an Act, which is referred to in the resolution, providing to grant a guarantee of the bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile for the construction of the road if the Dominion government will undertake its operation. That seemed to be a fairly equal distribution of labour. This resolution is to provide that the Railway Department may have power to enter into negotiations for the operations of this railway on its completion under the terms outlined in the provincial legislation. I understand that a company has already offered to undertake the construction of this line on the terms indicated in the provincial legislation and outlined in this resolution. If the committee will allow me, I have some details, which I propose to give. The line will extend from St. John to Grand Falls to connect with the National Transcontinental a distance of about 207 miles. It will follow the River St. John to Fredericton a distance of 74 miles, and thence go to Woodstock a distance of 62 miles. From that point to a short distance below Andover it leaves the river, going between that and the International boundary line, a distance of 45 miles. Then it is proposed to cross the river going on the eastern side from Andover to Grand Falls, a distance of about 25 miles.

I need not point out that in this section there is a lot of agricultural production. It has been noticed in this House on one or two occasions that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) takes great interest in potatoes, an interest accounted for by the fact that the section through which this road is to run, including the constituency he represents, is a great producer of potatoes. Last year along that line, there were something like 150,000 barrels carried out of that territory, and carried under conditions which compelled the farmers to draw them from five to fifteen miles. After better railway facilities are offered, this production no doubt will be doubled and perhaps trebled or quadrupled.

This matter is not new. It has been discussed already on several occasions when the subsidies were granted. The necessity for the line is acknowledged by everybody, but the question is how to work the line practically. It is proposed that the government should have power to enter into an agreement to operate this line, retaining sixty per cent and handing over forty per cent to the provincial government or the company. It is assumed that a certain standard of road will be required. That standard is outlined in the resolution as the general standard of the National Transcontinental through New Brunswick. That might mean a great deal and it might not mean very much. One part of New Brunswick might be very difficult for railway construction and another very easy. At one point I believe the construction of this line will not be very heavy. I am told that surveys have been made recently, and the estimate runs from $31,000 per mile to $49,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include bridges?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. We must lay down some standard, and as this might form part of a through line before many years, it ought to be built to a fairly good standard at least. In the first place we are offering to operate it at sixty per cent of the gross revenue; and in order to keep the cost of operation down to a reasonable point, it is necessary that we should have a fairly good standard of road. I think there will be no difficulty working out that part of the problem. While, owing to physical difficulty, it may be found very expensive to arrive at a very high standard, I think there will be no difficulty in coming to terms for a standard to be adopted for that particular section. Although there is a grade of four-tenths of one per cent on eastbound and six-tenths of one per cent on westbound trains, it might be necessary to have a grade of one per cent or more than one per cent on some parts of this line. When we say, therefore, the standard of the Transcontinental, it does not mean that we must adhere strictly to a four-tenths of one per cent on the eastbound traffic or six-tenths of one per cent on the westbound, because the physical conditions might make that impracticable if not impossible.

The other point is the initial equipment. It will be necessary to put in the contract something as to initial equipment, but the initial equipment in a road of that kind need not be such an extravagant item. For the first two or three years, the traffic will not be so heavy that it will require an extraordinary amount of rolling stock, and the company or the government offering to operate it and supplying rolling stock after the initial equipment will come in for a larger share of expense as the years go by. But the initial equipment—I do not wish to be held to these figures—roughly speaking, will cost probably a quarter of a million dollars. This amount will probably supply all that will be necessary for this line during the first year or two.

There is another point in this connection. There is a road now recently constructed through a territory that ought to produce good traffic. I refer to the Interntaional railway, which runs from St. John to St. Leonards on the St. John river, twelve miles from Grand Falls. This International line now being completed running from the Intercolonial at Campbellton, will be within twelve miles of the St. John Valley road when completed. It might be assumed that running rights could be secured over this line from the Grand Trunk Pacific for that twelve miles. The question is being considered also of the International railway being operated as a government railway. I am not sure that that will be done; but if it should be, the government railway would have a line from Campbellton through to St. John in addition to the other. The government railway would then have one loop line all around New Brunswick. I am not sure if our New Brunswick friends would consider that as a good thing, but it would be a good thing for the government railways. These are the main features. I am not proposing this as a great money maker, but rather as a means of providing the people of St. John valley with the railway communication for which they have been asking for so many years.

Mr. CROCKET. It must be apparent to any one familiar with the facts in connection with these proposals that the adoption of this resolution in the terms here stated will simply amount to a refusal on the part of this government to co-operate with the government of New Brunswick in the effort it is making to provide the people of St. John valley with this much-needed railway. To any one who is not aware of what has occurred, it might be otherwise. A brief recital of the facts, however, will expose the real meaning of this resolution.

I need not refer to the great public necessity which exists for and demands the immediate construction of this railway, because that is admitted by the First Minister, the Minister of Railways, the Minister of Public Works and by the unanimous vote of the legislature of New Brunswick. It is sufficient for this discussion to mention the recent agitation which has stirred the people of the St. John River valley from the county of Madawaska to the city of St. John. That agitation broke out spontaneously so soon as it was learned that this government had committed the crime—if I may be permitted to quote the language used by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) in this connection—of ignoring the claims of St. John valley in connection with the location of the National Transcontinental in New Brunswick, and carrying that railway across the province from Grand Falls to Moncton through a wilderness and unsettled country, which the officers of this government in official reports have described as unsuited for agricultural development.

That agitation culminated in a large and influential delegation, representing every settlement, town, village and city in the St. John valley, waiting upon the government of the province of New Brunswick in the spring of 1909, and seeking its assistance for the building of a railway for the people of the St. John river. That delegation asked the New Brunswick government to undertake to promote legislation to guarantee bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile for the construction of this line of railway. It was suggested that, if the government would give its undertaking in that behalf, the Dominion government could be induced to agree to take the road over on completion and operate it as part of the Intercolonial railway system upon the basis of the Dominion government paying forty per cent of the gross earnings as rental of the railway. The premier of the province of New Brunswick, Hon. Mr. Hazen, at once assured the delegation that he and his government were prepared to engage to promote legislation along these lines, and would do so, if the consent of this government could be procured to taking over and operating the road under a long lease upon the terms stated. A delegation shortly afterwards came to Ottawa, I think, on the 16th of April, 1909, and waited upon a committee of the Executive Council, composed of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). I had the privilege of being present at the hearing of the delegation. I heard the case as it was presented to that subcommittee of the Council, and I heard the Prime Minister's reply. I may say that the principal spokesman on behalf of the application was Mr. J. H. Barry, K.C., now Mr Justice Barry, of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. There were other speakers, including Hon. Mr. Fleming, Provincial Secretary of New Brunswick, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and Mr. Foster, president of the Board of Trade of St. John. Others also urged the government to the acceptance of the proposition. The Prime Minister, in replying to that delegation, stated that the government were very much interested in this matter, that they had heard, before the delegation proceeded to Ottawa, of what had taken place in the province of New Brunswick, had considered it to some extent, and had appointed the committee I have already named, for the purpose of receiving the delegation and hearing their representations. He stated that the proposition was a definite proposition which the government would have to consider. He stated, with regard to the subcommittee, that they had themselves, talked the matter over, and intimated that all three, himself, the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, were favourable to the acceptance of the proposition, but that it would be necessary for them to submit the matter to Council. Mr. Barry, in presenting the case, urged upon the government the necessity of a very early reply, setting forth as a reason the fact that the New Brunswick legislature was then nearing prorogation, and if legislation were to be passed at the session it would be necessary to have the reply at a very early date, within a day or two. In fact it was suggested that the delegation should return with the reply that day. The Prime Minister spoke in very favourable terms, and, while he stated that it was impossible to give a reply that day, he intimated that a reply would be given within a few days, and went so far as to suggest that if the delegation could wait over a few days, the reply of the government would be forthcoming. Every member of that delegation returned to the province of New Brunswick, feeling asssured that the decision of the government would be favourable. The people of the province waited patiently for several weeks without any intimation being received from the Dominion government. Not until the 28th of April was a word of any kind received. On that day an intimation came from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell); the government seems to have chosen that extraordinary medium to communicate with the provincial government with respect to a definite proposition that the provincial government had submitted to them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman pardon me? My recollection is that the provincial government never, except through the delegation, communicated with the Dominion government.

Mr. CROCKET. The proposition submitted was the proposition of the provincial government, submitted by the delegation of which I have spoken, one of whose members was the provincial secretary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe I am right in saying that the Dominion government never had a communication directly from the provincial government on this subject.

Mr. CARVELL. And perhaps, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) would allow me to correct him before he reads the telegram, by saying that that was sent by me not to the provincial government—I never wrote or telegraphed to them in my life—but to J. J. F. Winslow, secretary of the St. John Valley Railway Company, and in reply to a telegram from him.

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) states that there was no communication between the provincial government and the federal government on this subject. The provincial government's proposition was submitted by the delegation to which I have referred, and in the way in which I have stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will pardon me again—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to correct my hon. friend. He says that I stated that no communication passed between the federal government and the provincial government. What I said was that the provincial government had not communicated any proposition to the federal government.

Mr. CROCKET. I understood what the Minister of Public Works stated. I have said two or three times that this proposition was the proposition of the provincial government and was communicated to the federal government through the medium of this delegation, one of whose members was the provincial secretary, Mr. Fleming. However, this government did not do the provincial government, or the St. John Valley Railway Company, or the delegation, the courtesy to communicate with them in any way from the 16th of April—notwithstanding the statement made by the Prime Minister—until the 28th of April, when the following telegram was received by Mr. Winslow, secretary of the St. John Valley Railway Company, from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell).

Before the Dominion government can give a positive answer, they require information as to details of proposition. They suggest the local government pass legislation authorizing guarantee, subject to condition that Dominion government make satisfactory agreement to operate.

Now, the committee will observe the suggestion of the hon. member for Carleton—and I suppose, the suggestion of the Dominion government—communicated to the provincial government in this extraordinary way, through the medium of a private member of the House, a bitter opponent of the provincial government, was that this government required further details. Now, I happened to be present, not only at the hearing of the delegation to which I have referred, but at the meeting of the delegation in the Russell House before the case was presented to the committee of Council. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was present. The mode of procedure was fully discussed by the delegation. The advice of the hon. member for Carleton and of others was asked; and the case was presented precisely as had been advised by the hon. member and others, the hon. member for Carleton himself joining in the presentation of the case.

Notwithstanding the statement of the Prime Minister that this committee was aware before the delegation came here of what had taken place, and had appointed a committee to receive the representations of that delegation, I did not hear the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Railways, or the Prime Minister, ask any member of that delegation one single question with respect to standard of construction or anything of that nature. All information was vouchsafed to the committee of council that was asked for by the members of the government at that time, and it was not until April 28, several days after this delegation had been here that information was conveyed to those interested in the construction of this railway, that any further details were required. The legislature at that time had arranged for prorogation on the following day, and the suggestion that the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick should pass legislation before any intimation of any kind was received from the Dominion government as to whether they would entertain this proposition at all, being so crude and thoroughly unreasonable, was, of course, not acted upon. The matter then stood in abeyance six or seven weeks. No further communication was received by the provincial government or the St. John Valley Railway company from this government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend remember the date of the prorogation of the provincial legislature of that year?

Mr. CROCKET. The legislature prorogued the day after the message was received, April 29. Then, on June 9, Premier Hazen addressed a letter to the president of the St. John Valley Railway Company, who had acted as chairman of the delegation, asking if he had received any word from the premier or any member of the government in regard to the matter, and intimating the desire to know at as early a date as possible if the Dominion government was willing to accept the proposals made by the delegation. Referring to the request submitted through a private member, Mr. Hazen stated that his government concluding, in the light of this communication, that a conference was desirable, had appointed a committee to take the matter up with a committee of the St. John Valley Railway Company and of the Dominion government, at such time as might be mutually convenient. The president of the St. John Valley Railway Company thereupon wrote the Minister of Public Works, and the latter replied on June 19. With the minister's usual politeness, he expressed his exceeding regret that this invaluable suggestion of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) had not been acted upon, and as to the New Brunswick Premier's intimation that a committee of the executive council——

Mr. PUGSLEY. How would it do to read the letter?

Mr. CROCKET. I shall do so. It contains many choice and characteristic passages which the minister and his friends will recognize. It reads:

Office of the Minister of Public Works,
Canada,
Ottawa, June 19, 1909.

Dear Mr. Winslow,—
Re St. John Valley Railway.

I am in receipt of your favour of the 15th inst. inclosing copy of letter from Mr. Hazen to the mayor of Fredericton, dated 9th inst.

You ask if it is possible for me to inform you if the government of Canada 'is willing to accept the proposition made by Mr. Hazen, as Premier of the province, to the effect that the New Brunswick government would guarantee the bonds of the road if the government of Canada would undertake, on its construction, to operate it as part of the government railway of Canada and to pay to the province 40 per cent of the gross earnings.'

So far as I understand the matter, no denite proposition has yet been made by the provincial government.

Altlhough I myself heard the Prime Minister state in the presence of the Minister of Public Works that was a definite proposition which the government would have to consider.

And I think it is a matter for regret that the suggestion contained in the telegram of Mr. Carvell, M.P., quoted in Mr. Hazen's letter was not acted upon. In that telegram Mr. Carvell stated——

And he quotes the telegram which I have just read.

If the requisite legislation had been passed, the provincial government would not have been in a position to submit a definite proposition to the federal government which, from the reception given to the delegates by the Prime Minister would, I think, you will readily believe, have received most sympathetic consideration. By omitting to do this a year's time has been lost.

However, that was not done, and the important question now to consider is how best to facilitate the early commencement of this most important undertaking. As to the holding of a conference with the Dominion government at present, I would point out to you that the Finance Minister is in England and several of the other ministers are also absent, so that there will be no opportunity of having a full meeting of government for some time. The suggestion contained in Mr. Carvell's telegram not having been acted upon, the matter has not been further considered by the federal cabinet.

As if it were necessary that there should be a full meeting of the Dominion cabinet in order to consider the standard of construction of the railway. The Minister of Public Works stated that the Finance Minister and several other members of the cabinet were absent; but the Minister of Railways was here, the Minister of Public Works was here, and other members of the cabinet. The Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways, had they been so disposed, could, either of them, surely, have conferred with a sub-committee of the New Brunswick government with reference to the standard of construction of this railway. The suggestion that there should be a full meeting of the cabinet in order to consider a matter of this kind seems to me utterly absurd. The minister continues:

Being sincerely desirous of assisting the construction of the railway by every means in my power, I venture to make a personal suggestion for the consideration of your company and that of the provincial government. It is this—that the government make a definite proposition engaging to obtain legislation authorizing the guaranteeing of bonds for such amount as will be necessary to ensure the construction and equipment of the railway from Grand Falls to St. John on condition that the Dominion government shall agree to operate it as part of the government railway system on a long lease, and to pay to the province 40 per cent of the gross earnings.

The proposition, of course, should contain a description of the character of the road to be built. For instance, as to the grade, which should not exceed four-tenths of 1 per cent; as to the bridges, which should be of steel; the culverts, of masonry; the rails to be at least 80 pounds per yard; and generally, as to the road being up to the standard of a first class trunk line.

You will readily understand that the railway must be built to a high standard with the most favourable grades obtainable, so as to reduce the operating expenses as much as possible, in order to warrant the government asking the approval of parliament of the operation of the road for 60 per cent of the gross earnings in view of the fact that it takes, upon an average, all of the earnings of the Intercolonial to pay the operating expenses.

Of course, if the operating lease were made, the Intercolonial would have to engage to keep the roadbed and rolling stock in proper repair and to make necessary renewals from time to time.

I think you will agree with me that the quickest and best way to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the question is for the provincial government to make a definite proposition along these lines. Then the responsibility will be upon the federal government of either accepting or rejecting it, or if it is thought advisable, suggesting modifications in the proposal.

Again assuring you of my earnest desire to co-operate in every way possible to secure the early construction of the long talked of St. John Valley railway,

I am, yours very truly,
(Sgd.) WILLIAM PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the matter with the letter?

Mr. CROCKET. I will proceed to point out what is the matter with the letter. It sounds very nicely, there is no question about that, and runs very smoothly, but it is also very transparent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the way we want the Valley railway to run. We want it well built.

Mr. CROCKET. The House will observe the requirements which the Minister of Public Works insisted upon for the construction of this railway which he was so anxious to facilitate. He laid down there a specification which he must have known it was simply impossible for any railway contractor or company to comply with with a $25,000 per mile guarantee and the usual federal subsidy of $6,400 per mile. This specification which was suggested by the minister is a higher specification than was ever demanded for the construction of any railway in Canada except the Transcontinental railway. He actually prescribed for the construction of this railway, which was to be a branch of the Intercolonial railway, a specification equal to that of the Transcontinental railway, insisting on a four-tenths of one per cent grade.

Mr. DANIEL. Both ways.

Mr. CROCKET. Six-tenths running west and four-tenths running east. He insisted that the rails be eighty pounds to the yard. The specification, as I have said, is higher than that for any other railway in this country with the one exception that I have stated. It is a higher grade than the grade of the Canadian Pacific railway between Montreal and St. John. It is a much higher grade than the Intercolonial railway of Canada of which this was to be a branch. Does anybody who knows the Minister of Public Works suppose that he perceived that such a specification as this was necessary for the operation of this railway as a branch of the Intercolonial railway or for the purposes of Transcontinental traffic? Let me answer out of the mouth of the Minister of Public Works himself. The minister was at one time premier and attorney general of the province of New Brunswick. He occupied that position in the month of March, 1907. While the legislature was in session at that time, as a result of the insistent demands which were made by members representing the various districts along the St. John valley, and in anticipation, no doubt, of an early general election, the minister got into very speedy communication with Mr. D. D. Mann of the firm of Mackenzie and Mann and he produced and read with characteristic earnestness and optimism to the legislature of New Brunswick a telegram which he had received from Mr. Mann and which will be found in the debates of the New Brunswick legislature for the session of 1907. This is Mr. Mann's telegram which was read by the Minister of Public Works on that occasion:

Ottawa, Ont., March 20, 1907.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, L.L.D.,
Fredericton, N.B.

Would suggest you take legislative authority to make arrangements guaranteeing our bonds not to exceed fifteen thousand dollars per mile. Will promise to have matter thoroughly investigated by our engineers and will enter into contract, providing we find route satisfactory from engineer's and traffic standpoint. The contents of this message can be used at your discretion.

(Sgd.) D. D. MANN.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

A few days afterwards an Act was passed authorizing the Governor in Council to guarantee payment of principal and interest of first mortgage bonds of the Canadian Northern railway or such one of the companies controlled by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, and forming or intended to form part of their transcontinental system, as may be authorized to construct and operate a line of railway from Woodstock or from Woodstock to Centreville and down the valley of the St. John to a point at or near Westfield to the extent of $15,000. That railway was intended to be operated as part of the Transcontinental Railway system, and yet by the terms of the Act drafted by the minister himself the only specification laid down was that of a first-class line of railway to be ironed with rails weighing not less than 67 pounds to the yard with bridges of steel and superstructures of stone and concrete. That provision is found in section 16 of the Act. Sixty-seven pound rails with no specification as to gradients or curves was considered sufficient by the Minister of Public Works as the specification of a Transcontinental railway in 1907, but a specification of four-tenths of one per cent was requisite in the minister's mind in 1910 for a railway which was to be operated as a branch of the Intercolonial railway. Why, Mr. Chairman, did the minister conceive and insist upon such a specification as that in connection with the St. John Valley railway? I cannot help but think that the minister concluded that such a specification would render impossible the construction of that line of railway upon the terms proposed by the New Brunswick government, and that he would thus block the government of New Brunswick in the efforts which they were making to bring about the construction of that railway. The cost of such a railway as that specified by the minister and later by the government was so great that no company could possibly build it with a guarantee of $25,000 a mile plus the usual federal subsidy of $6,400 per mile. Did the minister know that? I think the minister was possessed of that information at the time. It was certainly available to him on the records of this House. In the 'Hansard' of 1907-8, page 12,664, will be found a statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals of the cost of the Transcontinental railway through the province of New Brunswick. The statement which the minister then made is as follows:

Location.	Miles let.	Estimated cost per mile.
Moncton to near Chipman..	50.00	$ 41,995
At Chipman..	8.55	83,570
Chipman to Intercolonial railway crossing..	39.05	32,573
Intercolonial railway crossing to mile 164..	66.40	45,341
Mile 164 to Grand Falls.. ..	31.80	110,172
Grand Falls to New Brunswick boundary..	60.88	51,130

Mr. PUGSLEY. That $110,000 a mile section includes a tremendous viaduct?

Mr. CROCKET. I think there was some extraordinary expenditure in connection with a portion of this section. That was the estimated cost as submitted to the House by the Minister of Railways in the session of 1908. There are 256·68 miles from the New Brunswick boundary to Moncton and the average cost per mile estimated by the minister in 1908 was $60,830, while the average estimated cost of the line from Grand Falls to Chipman was $62,695. During the present session I put a question on the Order Paper which was answered by the Minister of Railways on the 22nd February last as to the present estimated cost of these sections. The reply of the minister was as follows:

The present estimated total cost per mile by construction contract divisions is as follows:

Contract No. 1, extending from the city of Moncton westerly for a distance of about 50 miles is estimated to cost $49,190 per mile.

Contract No. 2 from the west end of contract No. 1 to Chipman, a distance of about 8 miles is estimated to cost $89,710 per mile.

Contract No. 3, from Chipman westerly to crossing of the Intercolonial railway, a distance of about 39·7 miles is estimated to cost $35,333 per mile.

Contract No. 4, from the Intercolonial railway crossing westerly to Tobique river, a distance of about 67 miles is estimated to cost $46,920 per mile.

Contract No. 5 from the Tobique river westerly to about 2½ miles west of Grand Falls, a distance of about 31·5 miles is estimated to cost $133,518 per mile.

Contract No. 6, from 2½ miles west of Grand Falls to boundary between New Brunswick and Quebec, a distance of about 67 miles is estimated to cost $46,484 per mile.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does that prove what a road down the St. John Valley will cost?

Mr. CROCKET. We will come to that right away. The average estimated cost under the statement of the Minister of Railways in 1908 of the Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick was $62,695 per mile, while under his statement given on February 22, 1911, the average estimated cost was $71,923 per mile. The Minister of Public Works asks if that will show the cost of a railway down the St. John Valley, and my answer is, not necessarily. But I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the position this government took with respect to the location of the Transcontinental railway through New Brunswick. One of the reasons assigned for turning down the St. John Valley route and accepting the central or back route so called, was that the construction of a railway down the St. John valley would be very much more expensive than by the route selected by this government. It may be quite true as the Minister of Public Works suggests that the cost of a railway down the St. John valley would not be shown by the cost of a railway across the province of New Brunswick, but if we are to rely upon the official statements of this government the St John Valley route was a more expensive route when built up to the standard of the National Transcontinental railway than the route which was chosen by this government.

Mr. CARVELL. What is the object and what is the value of these statements in view of the fact that there is a bona fide offer now to build this road for the bond bearing guarantee and subsidy?

Mr. CROCKET. We will discuss the question of the bona fides of that offer which has again brought my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) into the limelight in a rather unenviable aspect. There is the fact. If the St. John Valley river route is or was a cheaper route than the route selected by the government for the National Transcontinental railway, then this government has been guilty of grossly misleading the people of New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I dislike interrupting my hon. friend, but I have no doubt my hon. friend is in close communication with the government at Fredericton, and I would ask him if he has observed the report of that survey that has been laid on the table of the local House. Has the hon. member got the estimated cost as made up by the provincial engineer?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY That will be of great value to us.

Mr FOSTER Has the minister not seen it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have seen the newspaper report but not the original.

Mr. CROCKET. I have here a return brought down by the government in the session of 1906 on a motion of mine for the correspondence and report upon the two proposed routes in the province of New Brunswick. The return states, dealing with the question of relative cost of the two routes:

The section between Grand Falls and Edmundston being common to both routes. On the back route the final location line will be shorter than the preliminary by at least six miles, whereas the location will lengthen the river route say five miles, making the back route some 28 miles shorter than the river route. The difference in bridgings and minor structures will be very great. The river route crosses the St. John river twice, calling for 3,000 feet of bridge, and as it also crosses all the lateral drainage of the country close to the St. John river, all the minor structures will be larger and more costly than on the back line. The earth work on the back route will be considerably lighter than on the river route. On the whole, I am of the opinion that the difference in cost between the two lines will not be less than $1.500,000.

That is the statement made in the report of Mr. Lumsden to the government with respect to the location of the Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick, and if that report is to be relied upon, the St. John river route was stated by this government to be more expensive than the central route. Yet the specifications which the Minister of Public Works prescribed for the construction of this railway in which he was so sincerely and earnestly interested was a specification equal to that of the National Transcontinental. Aside however, from this comparative statement of the cost of these alternative routes there is further evidence of knowledge on the part of the Minister of Public Works that the specification which he was prescribing was an impossible specification. In the New Brunswick legislature in 1907 the Minister of Public Works referred to a telegram which he had received from Mr. Parent chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, stating the cost of the St. John Valley railway as shown by the surveys which had been made by the Transcontinental Commission, and this statement will be found on page 104 of the debates of the legislature of New Brunswick of that year. He said:

> This will not be a cheap route or easy to build, for I have in my hands a telegram from the chairman of the National Transcontinental Commission who states the cost of a railway down the St. John river valley from Woodstock to Chipman will be $44,500 a mile.

So that the Minister of Public Works had that knowledge at the time he prescribed this specification as to the survey between these two points.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a long way below $62,000.

Mr. CARVELL. Is the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) aware that his own engineer said it would be only $40,000.

Mr. CROCKET. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) need not be impatient; I intend to refer to that. If that was a correct estimate which was referred to by the Minister of Public Works in the New Brunswick legislature, then it was a cheaper line than the route which was selected for the Transcontinental railway; and if that was so, this government grossly deceived the people of the province of New Brunswick when they selected the back route for the reason—the untrue reason—that it was a cheaper route than the St. John Valley route. But, taking the figure which I have just quoted, $44,500 a mile, that is between $13,000 and $14,000 a mile more than the Minister of Public Works knew to be available to any company undertaking the construction of his line under the New Brunswick legislation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend suggest that the company has not put any of its own money into it, and is to build it entirely with the government guarantee and the Dominion subsidy?

Mr. CROCKET. Will the Minister of Public Works explain to me how any company which is required to give a first mortgage to the provincial government to secure it with respect to a guarantee of $25,000 a mile is to make up the difference between the amount available from the guarantee and subsidy and the cost of the construction of the railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend very quickly Under the lease to the Intercolonial railway it is agreed that no matter what the operating expenses may be there shall be from year to year 40 per cent of the gross earnings paid over to the company, and I say you cannot have a better financial basis on which to raise money.

Mr. CROCKET. Well, I think that will surprise some of the financiers of the country—that a company, which has no more interest in this proposition than a contract to construct the line and hand it over to the Intercolonial railway for a rental equal to 40 per cent of the gross earnings and to apply that rental to the payment of interest on the government bonds, can find it possible to turn three or four million dollars of private money into the enterprise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, only to the amount of $1,000 a mile. All above that goes to the company.

Mr. CROCKET. The company has to pay sufficient of its rental money over to the provincial government in order to keep down the interest on the bonds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And that is limited to $1,000 a mile.

Mr. CROCKET. And what about the earnings per mile? If the Minister of Public Works can find financiers who will accept a proposition like that, to raise sufficient money to pay the difference between the cost of construction and the moneys that will be available under the guarantee and the federal subsidy, he will be doing the people of the province a great service. It will be surprising, I think, to the financiers of the country if such a proposition can be made to go in this country. I have referred also to the proposition which the Minister of Public Works put through the New Brunswick legislature in the session of 1907. After the passage of that Act, the firm of Mackenzie & Mann sent engineers over this route, and they communicated to the Minister of Public Works the fact that that railway could not be built for the amount of the guarantee plus the federal subsidy, estimating the cost of the line at $40,000 a mile at least exclusive of bridging; and they informed the Minister of Public Works that they could not entertain the proposition at all unless the guarantee were increased to $30,000 a mile. Will the hon. minister deny that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think they wanted some other conditions imposed, which were met by the government operation. For instance, they wanted interest provided for during the first few years of operation. But fortunately this government saves the company from that and from loss in respect of that.

Mr. CROCKET. I am quite correct in the statement I have made, that they estimated the cost as at least $40,000 per mile, exclusive of bridging the St. John river, and asked that the guarantee of the bonds be increased from $15,000 to $30,000 a mile, and furthermore, that for the first seven years of the operation of the road, the province should pay any deficiency which might arise in the earnings of the road necessary to pay the interest on the bonds, which does not look as if that firm at least looked for much surplus over and above the amount required to pay the interest on the bonds. For the next three years any deficiency paid by the province would remain a debt by the company to be repaid by the issue of further bonds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, the government has to pay 40 per cent of the earnings over to the company, no matter what the operating expenses may be.

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister of Public Works had the statement of Mr. Mann that the road could not be built for less than $40,000 per mile exclusive of bridging, and that it was necessary that there should be a guarantee of $30,000 a mile. That estimate was based, not on the specification of the Transcontinental railway system, which called for a grade of four-tenths of one per cent, with 80-pound rails, but on the specification prescribed by the Minister of Public Works in the Act which he had passed by the New Brunswick legislature in the session of 1907, namely, 67-pound rails, with no specification whatever as to grade further than that it should be up to the standard of a first class trunk line. Now, my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and the Minister of Public Works are very anxious to hear something about a recent proposition which has been made to the government of New Brunswick for the construction of this line. I suppose they refer to the proposition of their good and useful friend, Mr. Thomas Malcolm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The proposition I referred to was that of Mr. Malcolm on behalf of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.

Mr. CROCKET. There is something rather peculiar in the manner in which this communication became known. A member of the provincial opposition speaking the other day at Fredericton was the first to give it to the world. It seems that he had in some way received a copy of this letter which had been addressed by Mr. Malcolm to Mr. Hazen, the Premier of New Brunswick. The letter was marked 'private'.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not the letter. There was no word 'private' on the letter.

Mr. CARVELL. Only the envelope was marked 'private.'

Mr. CROCKET. I will read the letter as it appears in the official report of the New Brunswick legislature:

Campbellton, N.B.,
Feb. 25, 1911.

Dear Sir,—On behalf of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company, the charter of which has been granted by parliament with power to construct and equip a railway from Quebec to St. John, I hereby offer to enter into a contract to construct the portion from Grand Falls to St. John, the line when so constructed and equipped to be leased to the government of Canada and operated as part of the Intercolonial system, pursuant to the proposed legislation which the Dominion government has submitted to parliament.

The provincial legislation would, of course, have to be modified so as to conform to the proposed Dominion legislation as to lease, &c.

As I understand it, the bonds would be guaranteed as each ten miles are completed.

I am prepared to give the necessary security for payment of interest on the bonds during construction of each section until completed, and its operation assumed by the Intercolonial.

As you know, I have just completed the International railway, and my plant is now available to enable me to commence work at once, and complete the various sections with all possible speed.

If your government is disposed to enter into a contract with my company, I shall be pleased to meet with you and discuss the details of the agreement.

Awaiting a reply, I am yours truly,

(Sgd.) THOS. MALCOLM.

The Premier, Mr. Hazen, replied as follows:

Fredericton, N.B.,
March 2, 1911.

Thomas Malcolm, Esq.,
Campbellton, N.B.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favour of the 25th ult., marked 'private,' which has been forwarded to me from St. John.

As soon as the Act of last session authorizing the government of New Brunswick to give aid to the construction of the St. John Valley railway has been proclaimed and the resolutions, of which notice has been given in the House of Commons at Ottawa, have been discussed and disposed of, I will be very glad to meet you and discuss the details of any proposition which you have to make. I am,

Yours very truly,
J. D. HAZEN.

Does the Minister of Public Works now say that that letter was not marked 'private?'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will say exactly what Mr. Malcolm tells me. He addressed a public official letter, of which that is a copy, and which was not marked 'private,' to Mr. Hazen at St. John; that, as Mr. Hazen might be at Fredericton when the letter arrived, he wanted it to reach him personally, and therefore he wrote the word 'private' on the envelope, not on the letter; that Mr. Hazen, in replying to the letter as marked 'private,' referred to the envelope; and that Mr. Malcolm at once notified Mr. Hazen that the letter was not intended to be private and that he could make public use of it.

Mr. CROCKET. We have heard the minister's statement, and we have also heard the first paragraph of Mr. Hazen's letter in reply to Mr. Malcolm, in which he states that the letter was marked 'private.' I cannot see that it makes very much difference whether it was marked 'private' in the way the minister states or on the letter itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would make this difference. A charge has been made against Mr. Tweeddale, of Victoria county, that he read a private letter in the legislature. The letter itself was not marked 'private,' a copy of which he says was sent to him by the hon. member for Carleton to use in connection with the Bill of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company, but was a public document. Therefore it would not it seems to me, be objectionable for the hon. member for Carleton to send a copy of that letter to a member of the legislature of New Brunswick.

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. CROCKET. We have the statement of the premier of New Brunswick that the letter was marked 'private.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. The premier of New Brunswick will not tell you that the letter was marked 'private.'

Mr. CROCKET. The premier's letter says, 'Your letter marked 'private' which has been forwarded to me from St. John.' And furthermore, we have this,—a letter written by Mr. Malcolm, under date of March 6 to Mr. Hazen, acknowledging receipt of Mr. Hazen's letter:

Dear Sir,—Please accept my thanks for your favour to my letter of the 25th ult. Although marked 'private' it was intended for you to use in council if you wished to do so.

So, if the Minister of Public Works has correctly repeated what Mr. Malcolm stated, then Mr. Malcolm's statement is at variance with what Mr. Malcolm himself wrote in his reply to the New Brunswick premier. There is another statement from Mr. Malcolm, which, is perhaps, later than the statement the Minister of Public Works has made in regard to the making public of this communication. Mr. Hazen telegraphed to Mr. Malcolm on the date on which Mr. Tweeddale made use of this letter in the legislature, and this is Mr. Malcolm's reply to Mr. Hazen's telegram. It is dated Montreal. I suppose Mr. Malcolm had been in Ottawa, and, no doubt, was in close conference again with his friend the Minister of Public Works—

Montreal, March 17.

Mr. J. D. Hazen, Premier.

Message received. I furnished Mr. Carvell with a copy of my offer, he having charge of Bill now before parliament, to amend Act relating to the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. I know nothing about its being circulated in New Brunswick, your telegram being first intimation I had of it.

THOS. MALCOLM.

The statement has been made in the New Brunswick legislature that this letter which Mr. Malcolm had addressed to Mr. Hazen had been circulated throughout the county of Carleton before it was read in the New Brunswick legislature. I think this correspondence disposes of the question whether this was intended as a private communication or not.

Now, Mr. Malcolm's offer he says, was made on behalf of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. The Minister of Public Works states, and so does the hon. member for Carleton, that it was a bona fide proposition. But it is pretty difficult for me to believe—and I think it will be pretty difficult for most people in New Brunswick to believe—in view of the facts, that this is a bona fide proposition. Here is Mr. Malcolm, on the 25th of February, before the New Brunswick Act is proclaimed submitting to the New Brunswick government a proposition to construct for a bond guarantee of $25,000 a mile and the federal subsidy of $6,400 a line of railway which surveys then showed would cost from $43,000 to $48,000 a mile without seeing or applying to see the plans and profiles or the estimates. So far as Mr. Malcolm's proposition is concerned, it is to build from Grand Falls to St. John. The estimate of the New Brunswick government engineers is $43,000 a mile by one route, and $48,000 a mile by the other route. It it rather singular, to say the least of it, that Mr. Malcolm, before the Act of the New Brunswick legislature, authorizing the guarantee of bonds for this railway had been proclaimed, while this resolution was standing on the Order Paper of this House, which resolution, I propose to show, was a rejection of the New Brunswick offer as embodied in the New Brunswick Act—should have communicated such a proposition as that before any of these things had occurred without even waiting to learn the result of the surveys. He says he does so on behalf of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. That company was incorporated by Act of this parliament in the session of 1900, that is eleven years ago. The company was authorized to construct a line of railway from Connors station on the Temiscouata railway to a point on the Intercolonial railway at or near St. Charles Junction, or a point on the Quebec Central railway at or near St. Anselme, or a point on the Grand Trunk at or near Chaudière Junction, a distance of 130 miles. It was incorporated with a capital of $900,000. Eleven years have elapsed and, up to the present time, not one tap has been struck on the construction of that railway—

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman is in error.

Mr. CROCKET. I examined the railway report. With the exception of a mile or two reported as under construction at the present time. With that exception the company has done absolutely nothing except get its charter amended and enlarged. The company came back in 1903 and got an extension of time. In 1908, having made another default, they came back, and, as a premium for their default, I suppose, obtained power to add another alternative to their original route and build another new line from one of these termini to a point in the State of Maine. They obtained another extension of time in that year. In the session of 1909, having done nothing, the company came to this parliament again and obtained power to build another line, from Connors station down the River St. John to the city of St. John—a further premium, I suppose, for their further default. The Act of 1909 required them to spend 15 per cent of their capital stock within two years after the passage of the Act, which was passed on the 16th of June, if I remember the date correctly, and to have the entire railway completed—all of these several lines being treated as one—within five years. Now, they come, having nothing done, asking for a further extension of two years. And, notwithstanding that they have received these added powers, their capital stock remains at the original figure of $900,000, which would require the expenditure of but $135,000 on all these three lines in the next two years to save their charter under the 15 per cent clause.

I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works and the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) how that company can fairly be expected to undertake the construction of this line under the terms quoted. They have bonding privileges to the extent of $35,000 per mile; they must give a first mortgage to the government of New Brunswick to the extent of $25,000 a mile. I cannot see how it is possible that they should undertake the construction of that line on these terms with any possibility of carrying it to a successful completion, involving, as it does, the raising of nearly $4,000,000 in addition to the amount realizable from the government guarantee and the federal subsidy—this company with a capital stock of $900,000.

Furthermore, I understand that they have given notice of legislation to obtain extension of time and an increase of capital stock. The Bill submitted to this House contains no reference to capital stock, so that they expect, with capital stock standing at $900,000, to build such a line of railway as this mentioned in this resolution. It seems to me an entirely novel thing in railway construction in this country for a railway company, without having plans or profiles or taking any trouble to consult the estimates, to submit a proposition to build a $48,000 per mile road for $30,000 or $31,000 per mile.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Malcolm said he had been over the ground himself, and he had sent an engineer over the entire route and examined it with the view of constructing the railway.

Mr. CROCKET. That may be like other statements which the Minister of Public Works has made with regard to Mr. Malcolm. But Mr. Malcolm knew that the government of New Brunswick were conducting a survey of this line, that the survey was complete and available to any who choose to apply for the information, yet, as I understand it, Mr. Malcolm submits this proposition before that Act is proclaimed, while this legislation is standing on the Order Paper—which I will show is a rejection of the New Brunswick legislation—without having examined the plans or profiles or even applying for any information respecting them.

If the people of New Brunswick can be induced to think that Mr. Malcolm was acting in good faith when he made that proposition, they are very easily persuaded. For my part I believe that it is a pure bluff made for the purpose of enabling the Minister of Public Works to give some excuse for the terms of this resolution, and in anticipation of this debate.

Mr. CARVELL. Why do you not call the bluff?

Mr. CROCKET. The government of New Brunswick is not in the bluff business. In addition to this extraordinary standard, the Minister of Public Works has taken care to insist that the government of New Brunswick or the contracting company must also provide the rolling stock. I submit that that is most unreasonable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only the initial rolling stock.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Malcolm is in this position with respect to his offer that—if these estimates are to be relied on which have been made up by Mr. Maxwell and his associates appointed by the New Brunswick government, according to which the road is estimated to cost $48,800 a mile from Grand Falls to St. John—his company is in the position of having to build a line of railway which will cost over $10,000,000 out of a fund which will not exceed $6,000,000, so that the company would require to raise $4,000,000 aside from the bond guarantee and subsidy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does the hon. gentleman arrive at these figures?

Mr. CROCKET. I took them from the report Mr. Maxwell submitted to the New Brunswick legislature, I took them from the official report of the survey made to the New Brunswick government which was tabled in the legislature the other day. That statement shows that the cost of the railway from Grand Falls to St. John, including all bridges, 207 miles at $48,830 per mile would be $10,107,626; from Grand Falls via Perry Point to St. John, 210 miles at $43,980 per mile, $9,237,390; at $25,000 per mile under the New Brunswick bond guarantee plus $6,410 per mile, would not give more than $30,000 per mile, when you deduct the commission and the discount on the bonds, so that we have $10,000,000 by one route and $9,250,000 by another route, with a little over $6,000,000 available in this way, and yet this good friend of the Minister of Public Works desires to raise the difference of nearly $4,000,000 for the purpose of constructing this line and passing it over to the Intercolonial to be operated under a 99 year lease. If that is a proposition which the Minister of Public Works expects the people of New Brunswick to take seriously, he will be mistaken.

With regard to the rolling stock, why should this government insist upon the New Brunswick government or the construction company providing the rolling stock? Has that ever been done before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the provincial statute that is provided for.

Mr. CROCKET. The Canadian Pacific railway has taken many railways over under long leases, and I understand it is their invariable practice to provide the rolling stock and equipment upon a basis of 60 per cent to 40 per cent similar to the terms in this resolution. What has this government itself done with regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific? Hon. members are aware that under the terms of that contract, the government leases that road to the Grand Trunk Pacific for a period of 50 years. What was the provision in that Act. It was that the lessees, the Grand Trunk Pacific, should provide the rolling stock? Did the government say, after building the line and passing it over to the Grand Trunk Pacific to operate under a 50 year lease, that the lessor should provide all of the rolling stock? No, the lessees are required to provide it. Yet when they come to consider this proposition from the New Brunswick government, the government which is to take this road over and become lessee insists that the New Brunswick government shall provide the rolling stock in addition to providing the railway, and that this government shall simply take it over and operate it It seems to me that that is a proposition which could not have been made for the purpose of expediting the construction of this railway. Why should this government refuse? I understood the Minister of Railways this afternoon to say that the initial equipment was a matter of small concern, probably not more than a quarter of a million dollars. If it is such a bagatelle as that surely the Minister of Public Works and the members of this government would not allow this proposition to fail by refusing to contribute even so small an amount as that towards the securing of this railway which they have stated is a matter of such urgent importance to the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the hon. member will read section 10 of the New Brunswick Act he will see that the New Brunswick government demands from the company just what we have included in this, that is they must provide the initial rolling stock before they can bond the road.

Mr. CROCKET. I shall refer to that, and perhaps the minister will get more light on it than he seems to have at the present time. In addition to what I have said with respect to the rolling stock, the Intercolonial railway have now rolling stock valued at $19,000,000 or over $13,000 per mile upon a mileage of upwards of 1,400 miles. Then they have railway workshops erected at a cost of millions of dollars to this country, where locomotives and cars are manufactured. What objection could there be, if this government are really desirous to construct this railway, to their equipping it with rolling stock to the extent of $250,000? If the road is operated as part of the government railway system it will become an important branch. Can not the Intercolonial railway run their rolling stock from Moncton on the St. John Valley railway just as easily as they do upon the Canada Eastern railway? I am going to ask that this resolution be altered so that the government of Canada will at least do some little part besides paying the subsidy in the effort that is being made to secure the construction of this line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has the attention of the hon. gentleman been called to section 10 of the Act passed by the New Brunswick legislature at the instance of the New Brunswick government?

Before any of the company's bonds shall be guaranteed, the company shall provide in a manner satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by a deposit in money or other sufficient security, or by a deposit of part money and part security, in addition to such mortgage, for the payment of the interest on such bonds during the construction of the said line of railway, and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment passed and approved by the government engineer.

Mr. CROCKET. My attention has been called to it, and I propose calling the attention of the minister to that and other sections of the Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. CROCKET. Those were the terms that the Minister of Public Works deemed it to be his duty to insist on as the condition of this government entering into the consideration of this project. I think I have shown that there were conditions, which the minister must have known would have rendered impossible the construction of this railway, but he did not find the New Brunswick government quite so easy as he thought. They pushed the matter to the extent of passing an Act at the last session of the legislature. My friend from Carleton found that the matter was getting so warm in his constituency and the Minister of Public Works found it so warm along the St. John river that it was necessary that something further should be done in the matter. So a letter was procured from the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) which my hon. friend read at a meeting in the constituency of Carleton. The Prime Minister's letter simply stated that he would stand by the specification as prescribed in the letter of the Minister of Public Works, and insist upon the equipment of this road being made by the government of New Brunswick or by the railway company. Then the New Brunswick legislature took that proposal for what it was worth, they had the Act of last session passed in the terms prescribed by this government, except with respect to the rolling stock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And tied their own hands, did'nt they?

Mr. CROCKET. I am going to show that this resolution misquotes the legislation that was passed in New Brunswick, and is an attempt to deceive the members of this House and the people of the province of New Brunswick. Section 11 reads:

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed, unless and until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway, to the amount of not less than $6,400 per mile, and authorizing the entering, by the said government of Canada into an agreement with such company or corporation and with the government of New Brunswick aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway, when completed, with its appurtenances and rolling stock and for the operation, equipment, maintenance, upkeep, and repair by such government of Canada as part of the government railway system of Canada for a period of 99 years and for the payment by the government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick or the government thereof, each year, during the said term of 99 years of 40 per cent per annum of the gross earnings of said railway.

The committee will observe that the condition as there set out requires an agreement on the part of this government to lease that road for a period of 99 years, not only to lease it upon completion, but to operate, equip, maintain, upkeep and repair. This resolution which the Minister of Railways has read deliberately omits the word 'equipment' and is a false statement of the legislation as passed by the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. It is simply impossible that the construction of this road can be advanced if this legislation passes the House in its present form, because the government of New Brunswick has prescribed as one of the conditions of the guarantee that there must be an agreement for the leasing and for the equipment and operation of the railway.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It says maintenance, operation, upkeep and repair.

Mr. CROCKET. There is another section No. 16 setting forth the specification in the terms of the minister's letter. That section concludes with this proviso:

And such contracts——

That is the contract for the construction and operation of the road.

Provided that such railways shall be equipped by the said company or by the government of Canada with proper and sufficient rolling stock.

So there can be no question as to what the position of the New Brunswick government was upon this matter. Then Mr. Hazen in his speech in the House in introducing this legislation stated that it was most unfair to call upon the province of New Brunswick not only to guarantee bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile for the construction of the line, but to insist that it should equip this road with rolling stock for operation by the Intercolonial railway. The position of the government was made clear in that respect. Yet this legislation, which purports to be an acceptance of this proposition, is actually a rejection of the offer of the New Brunswick government as embodied in that legislation. I am going to move, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution be amended, and I cannot see what possible objection can be made by any member of this government to the insertion of a word in the preamble of this resolution which will convert it from an untruthful into a truthful preamble. I am going to move:

That the proposed resolution be amended by inserting the word 'equipment' between the words 'operation' and 'maintenance' in the fifteenth line of the preamble and by striking out the words 'with its appurtenances and rolling stock when completed and equipped with rolling stock and for the operation' in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh lines and substituting in lieu therefor the words, 'when completed with its appurtenances and rolling stock and for the operation and equipment.'

So that the resolution will truthfully set forth the legislation passed by the New Brunswick legislature and conform to the provisions of the New Brunswick Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend think it possible, in view of section 10 of their Act, which says in so many words that they will not guarantee the bonds unless the company provide the initial equipment——

Mr. CARVELL. They cannot guarantee the bonds.

Mr. GRAHAM. They cannot guarantee them now under the Act. Does not my hon. friend think that he will be absolutely preventing this government from doing anything if he introduces these words?

Mr. CROCKET. I have read section 11 of this Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. Read section 10.

Mr. CROCKET. Section 11 of this Act contains the condition set forth in the resolution before the House, and I ask any member of this committee to follow the reading of the preamble of this resolution with the reading of this section.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Read section 10, which provides for guaranteeing the bonds.

Mr. GRAHAM. It simply nullifies the whole thing if you do that.

Mr. CROCKET. This is section 11.

Mr. GRAHAM. Read section 10.

Mr. CROCKET (reading):

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed unless and until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway——

——that has already been done.

—to the amount of not less than $6,400 per mile, and authorizing the entering by the said government of Canada into an agreement with such company or corporation and with the government of New Brunswick aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway, when completed, with its appurtenances and rolling stock and for the operation, equipment, maintenance, upkeep and repair——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not that provide—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CROCKET. How can the government of New Brunswick under that legislation guarantee the bonds of this company unless that agreement is entered into with this government under the terms which are there stated, one of the terms being that the government shall undertake to enter into this lease and provide for the operation and equipment of the railway? The preamble states the conditions untruthfully and insists that the government will take it over only when the road is equipped with rolling stock, which is contrary to the terms of the New Brunswick legislation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has intimated that he wishes to close before six o'clock.

Mr. CROCKET. I think that I have been pretty indulgent to the Minister of Public Works this afternoon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All right.

Mr. CROCKET. I propose, therefore, to move the amendment which I have already read that the word 'equipment' be inserted in that way, and that the other words that I have read be substituted for the words that appear in lines 26 and 27. Then that resolution will conform precisely with the legislation as it has been passed by the New Brunswick legislature. If the government do not accept that legislation then the whole matter is off, because the legislation of this parliament and the legislation of New Brunswick are at variance. and no work can be gone on with. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) seconds the motion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite sure that the words of the resolution which provide that the government shall maintain, operate and keep up the railway under this lease for ninety-nine years means the providing of the necessary equipment. All that has to be provided by the company is the ini tial equipment. My hon. friend has called attention to section 10 of the New Brunswick Act and also to section 11. I say they both provide very clearly that the company must provide the initial equipment. If the company does not do that the provincial government cannot guarantee the bonds. Take section 10, which provides that:

Before any of the company's bonds shall be guaranteed, the company shall provide, in a manner satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by a deposit in money or other sufficient security, or of a deposit of part money and part security, in addition to such mortgage, for the payment of interest on such bonds during the construction of the said line of railway, and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment passed and approved by the government engineer.

When that condition is fulfilled, and not until then, has the provincial government any power to guarantee the bonds, and, Sir, these are the words, not of this government, not of the member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), or myself, but they are the words of the government of New Brunswick which they have introduced into the statute and asked the legislature to enact. Then, section 11, which my hon. friend relied upon, provides that:

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed unless and until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway to the amount of not less than $6,400 per mile, and authorizing the entering, by the said government of Canada into an agreement with such company or corporation and with the government of New Brunswick aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway when completed with its appurtenances and rolling stock——

Mr. CROCKET. Read the next word.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So, Sir, the legislature has provided——

Mr. GRAHAM. They have tied it up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have tied their hands. Perhaps they did it because they thought they would prevent the government operation of this St. John Valley railway, which is the last thing in the world that the government of New Brunswick wants.

Mr. CROCKET. Does not this resolution omit the word 'equipment' from the preamble?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the point. We are speaking now of the initial equipment.

Mr. CROCKET. Is not the condition set forth in the preamble of the resolution taken from section 11, and is not the word 'equipment' omitted?

Mr. PUGSLEY No, it provides in the first place just as the legislature of New Brunswick, at the instance of the provincial government, has provided: that the company must provide the initial equipment. Then, when the initial equipment is provided the company becomes the lessee; it agrees to operate the road for 99 years, and after the initial equipment is once provided by the company the company has nothing more to do with it. The company must provide the initial rolling stock and the government must provide for the upkeep of the road and the rolling stock during the whole term of 99 years.

Mr. CROCKET. Then, what is the object of omitting the word 'equipment?'

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no object.

Mr. CROCKET. Then why not accept the amendment?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The thing is so plain that any man who wishes to understand it can understand it. What the government ask the company to do is to provide for the initial equipment. My hon. friend says it is unfair for this government to require the company to provide the initial equipment, but the provincial government is requiring the same thing. The provincial government has tied its hands and provided by statute that it cannot guarantee one of these bonds until the company provides the initial equipment, and then it is the railway and the rolling stock which are to be leased to the government of Canada. Whatever rolling stock the government of Canada puts on the road after the initial equipment is its own rolling stock, but section 11 provides that the company is to lease its rolling stock with the road to the government, and that is of course the initial rolling stock which is to be provided by the company. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) said that the provincial legislature has required certain things, and has excused itself for making these stipulations because of a letter which I wrote to the president of the railway company and which was afterwards confirmed by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) should have called attention to the fact that in the letter which I wrote to the president of the company I stated that if these terms cannot be agreed upon by the provincial government, then a conference should be held and a modification considered. I held out a hand to the provincial government and gave them an opportunity to say that if they thought these terms too onerous, if they thought it would not be possible to get the company to build and provide the initial equipment for the road, then let them come to the federal government and suggest such modifications as they might require. I have here a letter which I addressed to Mr. Chestnut, who was the president of the railway company, and I have a letter which Mr. Chestnut addressed to Mr. Hazen, premier of New Brunswick, in which he referred to an interview he had with me, and in which I told him that if the provincial government regarded these conditions as too hard, then the proper thing for the provincial government to do was to ask the legislature to provide that the specifications and conditions should be left to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I left a way open there for negotiations, and after recess I will read that letter. The provincial government was so anxious to prevent government operation of the St. John Valley railway that they had asked the legislature to absolutely tie their hands so that no matter what modification the Minister of Railways might be willing to make, no matter what change in the situation he might be willing to agree to, the provincial government would not be able to act. It is the most extraordinary action I ever knew a government to take, they being one party to a proposed bargain, we being another, and we suggesting certain terms, they declined to ask the legislature to leave it to them to negotiate; they declined to ask the legislature to allow reconsideration of the conditions, but they asked the legislature to tie their hands so that unless the conditions were complied with in the minutest particular they could not guarantee the bonds. But, Sir, they will be obliged, if they want this road built (as they know now from the report of their own engineer), they will be obliged to go back to the legislature and ask that modifications be enacted, or they will never get a road such as the people of the province of New Brunswick are demanding, and which is necessary for the progress, prosperity and development of that beautiful St. John river valley.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before recess I was speaking of the equipment of this railway. I would like to understand clearly what my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) desires by his amendment. Is it that it may be made more clear that the Intercolonial railway is to provide for all equipment after the initial equipment?

Mr. DANIEL. I expect my hon. friend from York, to be here in a moment; but I understand that in wishing to insert the word 'equipment' in the resolution, his idea is that it will then devolve upon the Intercolonial railway to provide the rolling stock and to operate the railway after its construction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If that is what my hon. friend desires by the amendment, I may say that the provincial statute will not permit that to be done. But that, as I understand, was not the substance of the amendment. I understood that he wanted it to appear clearly by the resolution that after the initial equipment, which will probably cost not more than $1,000 a mile, making the total cost about $200,000, or, as the Minister of Railways said, about $250,000, the Intercolonial railway should be bound to furnish the additional equipment that should be required from time to time. I may say to my hon. friend that that is the intention of the government in using the words, 'operation, maintenance, upkeep and repair.' The Minister of Railways intended that that should include all repairs to the rolling stock, all additions to the rolling stock, the furnishing of the cars, locomotives and equipment necessary to operate the road during the whole term of the lease. This, of course, would be increased from time to time as the business of the road increased.

Mr. DANIEL. What is meant by initial equipment?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To enable it to pass the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of New Brunswick. Under section 10 of the New Brunswick statute it is provided that before any of the bonds shall be guaranteed, the road shall be fully completed and provided with the initial equipment, and that is to be passed and approved by the government engineer. After that is provided satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, the Intercolonial railway takes charge, operates, and provides all the equipment, all the renewals, all the repairs to the rolling stock and everything, including maintenance, which shall be required during the term of the lease.

Mr. CROCKET. The last clause of section 10 is: 'and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment passed and approved by the government engineer.' Then, the minister lost sight of the last clause of section 16: 'and such contract (for the construction of the railway) shall also provide that such railway shall be equipped by the said company or by the government of Canada with proper and sufficient rolling stock.' So that while section 10 has this provision with respect to equipment, section 16 provides that that must be provided either by the company or by the government of Canada. That is the position of the provincial government. The position of this government, as I understand it, is that the rolling stock must be provided out of the provincial guarantee either by the company or by the provincial government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; that the initial rolling stock shall be provided by the company; then, by the lease to which the Dominion of Canada will be a party, the Intercolonial railway shall provide all the rolling stock which shall be required after that during the whole term of the lease.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister will see that the company, having available only the $30,000 provincial guarantee and the federal subsidy, must not only build the road, but equip it if this government does not accept the offer of the New Brunswick government as embodied in the statute.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily. I understand that they will have available $35,000 of a bond issue, of which $25,000 shall be secured by a first mortgage and $10,000 by a second mortgage; also $6,400 a mile of Dominion subsidy; also capital stock to the amount of $900,000. If they can finance the undertaking, they have plenty of securities to place with capitalists for the purpose of raising the necessary money to provide the initial rolling stock.

Mr. CROCKET. That would require the company to raise at least $2,000,000 of their own funds in addition to the guarantee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. I do not see why they could not furnish the initial equipment under such a favourable lease as the Dominion government propose to enter into with them. The provincial government absolutely requires that this initial rolling stock shall be provided by the company, because it has to be provided before the bonds are guaranteed. The provincial government is to guarantee the bonds as each ten miles are finished. The Intercolonial railway is not to begin the operation until certain sections of the road are provided with the initial rolling stock by the company. I was asking my hon. friend what he desired by his amendment.

Mr. CROCKET. The purpose of the amendment is to make this resolution conform with section 11 of the New Brunswick Act, which provides that the provincial government can guarantee no bonds until this government agrees to lease the road upon completion, and makes an agreement for its equipment, operation, maintenance, upkeep and repair. This preamble leaves out the word 'equipment,' which is in the New Brunswick Act, and which must be in the agreement before the Lieutenant Governor in Council would have authority under this section to guarantee the bonds. I certainly think that this government ought to undertake to provide the initial equipment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is absolutely clear that the provincial Act does not admit that, because it provides that the initial equipment must be furnished before the bonds are guaranteed.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. minister says that the Act will not let him. I can give him the assurance that if this government will undertake to provide the initial equipment and the rolling stock, the New Brunswick Act will be very quickly amended if it is necessary. The New Brunswick legislature is now in session.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then the hon. gentleman admits that under the New Brunswick Act, as it now stands, we cannot provide the initial equipment. In that Act the provincial legislature says that they cannot guarantee the bonds unless the company provides the initial equipment. That is the statute we are trying to confirm.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why leave out the word 'equipment.'

Mr. GRAHAM. It will conflict, because they say the company will provide the initial equipment, and that the New Brunswick government will only guarantee the bonds on that condition. I am quite willing to amend the resolution so as to provide that after the company has furnished the initial equipment, the lessee will provide all the equipment necessary from that date on. That will hurt no one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The word 'equipment' has some meaning as it is in the New Brunswick Act. When you recite the New Brunswick Act, I do not see the justification for leaving it out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not profess to give the exact words of the Act, but only its effect. Take for instance, section 9. It says: The guarantee is to be a guarantee bonds secured upon the railway franchise, stations, right of way and all rolling stock.

Mr. CROCKET. There would be some rolling stock in connection with the construction of the road.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, because the construction is done by a contractor.

Mr. CROCKET. But there must always be some rolling stock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not owned by the company. That would be the contractors' rolling stock. What I asked my hon. friend was to make clear what it was he wanted by his amendment. If he wants the Intercolonial railway to provide the initial rolling stock, I say that that is not contemplated by the provincial statute. I say also it would not be fair. The hon. gentleman has quoted the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company leasing the National Transcontinental railway, and he says that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is required to furnish the rolling stock. So it is, but the government leases its road to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for fifty years at a rental of 3 per cent on the cost and gives the road the seven first years of operation absolutely free of rental.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Longer if they do not make a rental.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, three years longer if they do not earn the rental. Is that the case here? No. From the very day the road is finished, from the time each section is finished, the government is authorized to enter upon its operation and not have it free of rent. No, whether the company's road earns the rent or not, whether the operating expenses are cleared or not, out of the total gross earnings the government is bound to pay to the province of New Brunswick, for the purpose of providing interest on the bonds the very large percentage of 40 per cent of the gross earnings of the road. So far from any criticism being made on this government or myself or on my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), and the other Liberal members from New Brunswick, who induced my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways to make this agreement we ought to receive the thanks of every man interested in the construction of the railway along the valley of the St. John. This government only agreed to this liberal arrangement because we realize that we have in that portion of the province of New Brunswick a section of country which, I do not hesitate to say, for richness and fertility of the soil, for the opportunities it affords for supporting a large population, is not surpassed by any part of the Dominion. It is only because the government felt that that section of country, which had been settled so many years, and was absolutely without railway accommodation, was entitled to that accommodation—it was only because of the strong feeling which my right hon. friend, the First Minister, and the other members of the government have with respect to the claims of the people of that section, that the government considered itself justified in making this most liberal arrangement. To show you that we made a most liberal arrangement, let me say that in Ontario where the Grand Trunk have many lines leased, they have scarcely ever paid more than thirty or thirty-five per cent of the gross earnings. I asked Mr. Hays of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway if, in case an arrangement could be made with the provincial government, his company would undertake to operate the road. He said that they would consider its operation, but only on the basis of seventy per cent and thirty per cent. Here however, we have an agreement by this government undertaking that from the very first day the various sections are open to traffic, the government will pay over the large proportion of forty per cent of the gross earnings. I am almost afraid to mention what is the liability this government is undertaking. It is impossible to state that accurately, but I am rather inclined to the view that in addition to the subsidy of $6,400 per mile, the government, during the first five years operation of the St. John Valley road, will be obliged to incur a liability of at least $1,000,000. That means an expenditure for the benefit of the people along the St. John valley of at least $200,000 a year. After five years something will begin to come in, the increased earnings will be large, and no doubt the government will then be able to pay over this amount, and probably sixty per cent will cover all the operating expenses of the railway, but the offer is a most generous one on the part of this government. When it was announced that we had agreed to pay forty per cent of the gross earnings, my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), who was formerly Minister of Railways told me, that he was utterly surprised that we had made such a liberal arrangement. I explained to him that it was only by reason of the great importance of the road, and of the very strong desire the government had to give the people of St. John valley this railway accommodation that we agreed to this most liberal treatment.

I want to go back a little over the history of this St. John Valley railway. I am not going back beyond the year 1909. The hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) referred to what took place when I was premier of New Brunswick, and sought to secure the construction of this road through Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. But that is ancient history. The people of St. John valley have waited so long for this road, they are so vitally interested in securing its early completion that they do not care what any public man of New Brunswick did or said even four years ago. They are tired and sick of political and party squabbles, and to a man they are united in a demand that all political differences shall be sunk, all party spirit voted down, and that all public men of the province shall unite in securing the early construction of this railway. What they want is that we on both sides shall earnestly strive and bring to bear our best judgment and ability in order to secure the early construction of the road. I shall begin, not in 1907, but in 1909, when a delegation composed of the directors and principal stockholders of the St. John Valley railway and other people interested in that line came to Ottawa.

They interviewed my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and a number of his colleagues, of whom I was one. And I remember the president of the company was Mr. C. Fred. Chestnut, then mayor of the city of Fredericton. They submitted their proposal and said that the government of New Brunswick had stated to them through the Premier that that government would be willing to get authority from the legislature to guarantee the bonds to the extent of $25,000 per mile, provided this government would, through the Intercolonial railway, operate the road upon the basis of paying to the company, or to the government of New Brunswick, 40 per cent of the gross earnings. It is true, as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) that the Prime Minister expressed himself in the most sympathetic manner when they got through their presentation of the case, and stated that his answer would be given to them at as early a date as possible. My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) says that the Prime Minister stated that this was a definite proposal. I was present, and have to take issue with my hon. friend on that point; and I am satisfied that his memory does not serve him rightly with regard to what took place on that occasion. My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was there also. I can only say that I have no recollection of the Prime Minister having made that statement.

Mr. CARVELL. How could he?

Mr. PUGSLEY. And, as my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) says, how could he?

Mr. CROCKET. If the minister will allow me—is he not aware that the St. John 'Telegraph' contained a report of the proceedings before the government on that occasion, telegraphed from Ottawa by their Ottawa correspondent in the course of which it was stated that the Prime Minister described the proposition as a definite proposition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say is that I have not seen any such report so far as I now recollect, and I have no recollection of the Prime Minister making the statement attributed to him. And he could not make the statement, because there was no definiteness in the proposition; there was only the broad statement that the provincial government would guarantee bonds at $25,000 a mile, provided the government would agree to operate the road as part of the Intercolonial. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) as a reasonable man, not see that the question of operating and of the percentage which would be paid would, in justice to the people of Canada for whom this government speaks and acts, necessarily be the most important question? Could the government afford to have the road built with rails of 40 pounds to the yard? Could it afford to have the road built with wooden bridges, with curves shorter than are suitable for profitable railroad operation, with grades unsuitable for a first-class road? Surely, the hon. gentleman must see from his own statement that there was no definiteness whatever in their proposition. This interview took place on the 12th of April, and he said that this government actually waited until the 18th of April before giving a reply.

Mr. CROCKET. I see that nothing was done until the 28th of April.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, the 28th: That is just sixteen days after the interview. Surely my hon. friend cannot be serious when he suggests that sixteen days was a long time for the government to take to consider a question of such enormous importance as this, one which may involve this country in a liability of at least a million dollars in the first five years of the operation of the road, before the traffic reaches the proportions to which we hope it will grow in the not distant future? I think that every reasonable man will see that if the government waited sixteen days, that was not an unduly long time to wait. Now, what took place then? My hon. friend from Carleton, as I understand, in response to a request from the secretary of the company, Mr. Winslow, wired that he had seen the Prime Minister—if I remember correctly—and that the Prime Minister suggested that the provincial government should have legislation passed, and then submit their definite proposition to this government, and the government would be prepared at a very early day to give them an answer. I understand that, upon that telegram being received, a delegation of the people from the St. John valley waited upon the premier of the province, Mr. Hazen, and he promised to introduce legislation in the session of 1909, leading the people to believe that he was going to introduce the legislation providing for the guarantee. But, at the last moment, he declined to do so, for reasons, as I suppose, best known to himself.

The matter then went over. Later on, a communication was made from the president of the company to me, and I wrote the letter of June 19, 1909, to which my hon. friend has referred. I would ask any hon. member of this House, I would ask the people of New Brunswick, and especially those in the St. John valley, to read that letter and see whether it was a proper letter for me, as Minister of Public Works, to have written. I suggest that a definite proposition should be made: I suggest that the road should be built to a high standard—I said in a general way that it should be built up to the standard of the Transcontinental, making it a first-class trunk line; I indicated a four-tenths per cent grade and rails of 80 pounds to the yard, bridges of steel and the roadbed of a first-class line. I did that because I was not then prepared, and am not now prepared to advocate the countenance by this government of the granting of any aid to this road, or entering into any contract with the company which may engage in the construction of the road, which does not provide not merely for a local railway, but for one which, in the future, may be part of a Transcontinental line which will bear the traffic of the fertile west to the great port of St. John for shipment to the markets of the old world. That is the ideal I had before me, and that is the reason I was anxious to have the road built to a high standard. In that letter, I suggested that if the provincial government made their proposition and we did not accept it, then I would suggest that a conference be held so that modifications might be agreed upon. The provincial government did not act upon that suggestion, and I desire to say now, and to make a statement, which, I am sure, will strike the House as extraordinary, that the government of New Brunswick which has professed to be so anxious to secure the construction of this St. John valley railway has never directly communicated with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Railways or myself, the member of the government representing the province of New Brunswick, with regard to its construction: every communication has been made through third parties, either officers of the St. John Valley Railway Company or the members of a delegation. Later on, when it came to the winter of 1910, Mr. Chestnut, the president of the St. John Valley Railway Company, who had been taking a very great interest in the line, and had done everything possible to secure its early construction, came to see me in Ottawa. And just a few days ago, I received a letter from Mr. Chestnut which is marked 'personal'. Mr. Chestnut speaks as a man who was mayor of Fredericton. He was, and I believe he is to-day, president of the St. John Valley Railway Company. He, as much at all events as any other man, has taken a hearty interest in this project. He has been several times to Ottawa with reference to it, and has done everything he could to facilitate the undertaking and secure the construction of the road. And, allow me to say, Mr. Chairman, I go into this matter somewhat in detail, because there is a determined effort on the part of certain public men in the province of New Brunswick—I am afraid on the part of the government for which my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) presumes to speak to-night when he ventures to give the assurance to the Minister of Railways that the government will amend its Act upon his suggestion, and on receiving word from him, to place the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and myself and this government in a false position with regard to this matter.

Therefore it is that I venture, even although I may weary the House, to go somewhat into detail in connection with what took place.

On March 13 of this year Mr. Chestnut wrote me as follows:

Hon. William Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Possibly you may remember that the St. John Valley Railway Company sent me to Ottawa, in February of last year, to see you in connection with the possibility of bringing about a modification of the standard, of the proposed road, which would be acceptable to the provincial government. Also to discuss other matters bearing upon the same project. This, of course, was before Mr. Hazen brought down his legislation.

Let my hon. friend mark that Mr. Chestnut came to Ottawa as the president of this company for the purpose of interviewing me in regard to modifications with reference to the standard, and this was before the provincial government had brought down their legislation of last year. Mr. Chestnut says:

This, of course, was before Mr. Hazen brought down his legislation.

You presented your views to me so frankly, and fairly, that I asked for and obtained, your consent to communicate the substance of my interview with you to Premier Hazen, which I did upon my return to this city.

At Mr. Hazen's request I left with him a memorandum, setting forth what I understood your views to be, in regard to the points then under discussion.

I am now inclosing herewith a copy of said memorandum with the thought that it may, even at this date, be of some interest to you. Especially so perhaps when it is considered that this information was in Mr. Hazen's hands before his Bill re the St. John Valley Railway (section 16, part 2, fixes the standard) was introduced. Also in view of the fact that the local government press now try to make it appear that the federal government fixed an impossible standard. Which of course is ridiculous.

Yours respectfully,
C. FRED. CHESTNUT.

There is the letter from the President of the St. John Valley Railway Company which was organized by leading citizens from all the counties along the valley of the St. John from almost its upper waters down to the city of St. John.

Mr. CROCKET. Can the minister state whether Mr. Chestnut interviewed him at Ottawa before Mr. Carvell read the letter the Prime Minister gave him? I think it was on the 25th of January.

Mr. CARVELL. No, this would be after.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is on February 14, 1910, that he writes to Mr. Hazen. Let me read this letter which Mr. Chestnut, as President of the St. John Valley Railway Company, wrote to Mr. Hazen.

February 14, 1910.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, Premier,
Fredericton, N.B.

Dear Sir,—Having recently had an interview with the Hon. Mr. Pugsley at Ottawa concerning the St. John Valley Railway project, the local directors of the company suggested that I lay the substance of the same before you, which I will now do.

I said it had been intimated to me that you thought the standard outlined by him in his letter of June 19, 1909, was unnecessarily high and if adhered to might have the effect of holding up the proposition. As a consequence you would not care to incorporate such a standard in the local legislation as it might be charged that you were more or less responsible for such a result if it occurred.

He stated he had no such fear, but to meet your objections he suggested that it could be provided in your legislation that the standard should be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The minister's evident desire is to bring about the construction of a road of a high standard so as to enable it to successfully compete for transcontinental traffic and handle the same economically. He apparently has not the slightest doubt as to the possibility of obtaining a satisfactory road for the proposed guarantee of bonds and the double subsidy. His idea is that when the necessary legislation is secured the company would advertise for proposals. If this is done he is confident that a reliable concern will easily be found willing to undertake the work and complete it, up to the required standard, for the guarantee and subsidy. Further he stated that the federal government was prepared to get authority at this session of parliament to lease and operate the proposed road under the terms which have already been suggested by yourself, if the provincial government would bring down the necessary legislation at the approaching session of the local House.

Finally he stated that if the local government passed legislation guaranteeing bonds to the extent of $25,000 per mile under the proposed terms, he was willing to accept the responsibility if it was then found impossible to bring about the building of the road.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) C. FRED. CHESTNUT.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister on that occasion inform Mr. Chestnut that the government would be prepared to modify the conditions as laid down in his letter of June 19, and not to insist on a Transcontinental railway standard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I told Mr. Chestnut was that if the standard was objectionable to the local government, then let the provincial government ask the legislature to pass a law giving them authority to guarantee the bonds, but to leave it to the Governor in Council to determine as to the conditions. That would leave the way open, as I explained to him, for negotiations between the two governments. I told him that all this government wanted was to secure the construction of a road up to a high standard. If it was found impossible to do that we were prepared, as the Minister of Railways had told me, to discuss the subject of modifications. The point I want to make is that on February 15, before Mr. Hazen had brought down the legislation in the provincial legislature, he was informed by Mr. Chestnut, the President of the St. John Valley Railway Company, that I had stated that in order to get over the objection which the premier of the province was making, it would be better that he should ask the legislature to provide in the Act that the specification should be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That would leave the matter open.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister at that time intimate to Mr. Chestnut that the government would be prepared to modify the conditions as laid down in the letter of June 19?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I said to Mr. Chestnut that we had in mind, just as Mr. Chestnut says in his letter, to secure the building of a road up to a high standard, up to the general standard of the Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick, but that if in any part there were physical difficulties which made it reasonably necessary to depart from that standard, I was sure the Minister of Railways would give favourable consideration to any request the provincial government might make.

Mr. CROCKET. Anything in writing to that effect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing in writing, but I have Mr. Chestnut's statement to Mr. Hazen of what I suggested to him and Mr. Chestnut conveyed that information to Mr. Hazen. Although they had that intimation from me, what does the provincial government do? They ask the legislature to pass a law, to be found in the statutes of 1910, consisting of three parts. The first part provides for the making of a survey. That has only been completed and the report filed with the provincial legislature in the last few days. Part 2 provides that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may guarantee the bonds of the railway company up to the amount of $25,000 a mile, but it provides by section 16 that:

The specifications for said railway and the contract between the Lieutenant Governor in Council and such company, for the building of the same, shall require and call for the construction of a first-class trunk line of railway with grades not to exceed four-tenths of one per cent and to be ironed with steel rails weighing not less than 80 pounds to the yard, and shall provide that the bridges shall be of steel superstructure with substructure of stone or cement, culverts to be of masonry or concrete, being the description of the character of the road as set forth in a letter from the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works of the Dominion of Canada, to the secretary of the St. John Valley Railway Company, dated the 19th June, 1909, and approved by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada, in a letter addressed to Mr. F. B. Carvell, M.P., dated January 28, 1910, and the said line of railway shall be built up to the before mentioned specifications and standard and shall be constructed subject to the inspection by and shall be built to the satisfaction of the provincial engineer or such other engineer or engineers as the Lieutenant Governor in Council may from time to time appoint to inspect the same.

The point I wish to make is that although I told the president of the St. John Valley Railway Company to say to Mr. Hazen that if they objected to the standard they should leave it to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to decide before entering into a contract to guarantee the bonds, and that he should then come to us and suggest what modifications he desired, but with that knowledge the provincial government asks the legislators not to leave that opportunity to determine afterwards as to the specifications, but to tie their hands, to tie themselves hand and foot so that they could not assist any railway unless it was built up to this very high standard. That, Sir, is the legislation that was brought down. They provided under it, that the company must give a guarantee for the payment of interest upon the bonds for the whole line of road until the whole line is completed. They imposed upon them the very hardest possible conditions.

Mr. CARVELL. And pay it in money too.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And they had to pay that in money. Then they passed part 3, and part 3 provides for a road not up to this high standard, but it provides for a road which may have the Intercolonial grades, which may begin at a point on the Canadian Pacific railway up the St. John river and which may end at another point on the Canadian Pacific railway, this being simply a connecting link between one point on the Canadian Pacific railway and another point. They provide that it may be an electric road, they do not provide for any security in so far as the bonds are concerned, except what may be the security of the company itself, and they provide that all they would be obliged to do, in so far as interest is concerned, is to make provision for the payment of interest until certain sections of the road are completed.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, when you find a government having legislation enacted with respect to a road that is to be built up to the high standard, that is to be followed by operation by the Intercolonial railway and therefore with behind it all the credit that belongs to the government and the people of Canada in connection with the operation of this road, when you find that they impose stricter and harsher conditions upon the company even than they do with respect to the building of what may be termed a second class road as railways are to-day, considered, and when you find that it may even be an electric railway, what inference would you draw from their conduct? Would it not be that they were determined, by hook or by crook, to prevent Intercolonial operation in the St. John Valley? Would you not infer that they were doing this in the interest of the Canadian Pacific railway or some electrical company which was desirous of developing electrical energy? That is the inference which everyone must draw. That is the inference which the people in that part of the valley of the St. John are drawing to-day and, having drawn that inference, I believe that when the opportunity comes of expressing their opinion they will express it in no uncertain terms.

Now, as I have said, the provincial government have tied themselves hand and foot in so far as this legislation is concerned in connection with Intercolonial operation, they have refused to ask the legislature to give them power to negotiate, they have refused to give themselves the power to ask for any modification of the terms, but they have passed the hard and fast, cast iron provision that is contained in part 2 of the Act. They themselves appointed an engineer to make a survey, a very competent, a very experienced engineer—Mr. David F. Maxwell. The hon. gentleman has not read Mr. Maxwell's report to the committee. I do not believe that either my hon. friend or the provincial government would have derived much comfort from the report, because I see that this report, made by a gentleman of their own selection, made by a gentleman whom they themselves had appointed, confirms to the fullest extent, the wisdom of the course which I and my colleagues took, in insisting that this road should be built up to a high standard. That report shows that a road to the Transcontinental railway standard between Grand Falls and St. John with the exception of a comparatively short distance where there would be a grade of one per cent, like the single pusher grade at the Tobique upon the Transcontinental railway, would only cost a little over $3,000 per mile more than the second-class road which the government provided for by part 3 of this statute. In other words, the report of Mr. Maxwell shows that the people will be able to secure a road having practically all the grades up to the standard of the Transcontinental railway for a little over $3,000 per mile more than they would have to pay for a second-class road with grades equal to the grades on the Intercolonial railway as proposed by part 3 of this Act, passed by the legislature at this last session.

Mr. CROCKET. That is on the proposed road to St. John?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the minister aware that Mr. Maxwell in his report states that if connection is made with the Canadian Pacific railway at Westfield or Welsford a transcontinental grade is absoluetly out of the question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might say to my hon. friend, and I say it with all sincerity, that in so far as the people of the St. John Valley are concerned, they are determined to have a railway extending right down to the city of St. John. They are determined that the road shall not be a mere branch, a mere appendage of the Canadian Pacific railway. They want competition and they are clamouring for government ownership and government operation.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister, in 1907, provided for connection at Westfield and Welsford.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is true, because that was the suggestion of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. But things have moved a long way ahead since 1907. I have learned a great deal also with regard to the necessity of extending the Transcontinental railway down the valley of the St. John, more than I knew in 1907, and speaking with the knowledge that I have of the city and the people of St. John and of the people along the valley of the St. John and having in view the great developments which have already taken place during the last two or three years and which are going to take place in the near future at the port of St. John, the people of St. John and the people of the St. John valley will not be contented with any line up and down that magnificent valley that is to be a mere branch or appendage of the Canadian Pacific railway. They want a line that will be a part of a through Transcontinental railway, that they are determined to have and that they will have unless their efforts are thwarted by the provincial government, my hon. friend, and those who may be acting with them. Let me read what the chief engineer appointed by the provincial government says in this report which were tabled only two or three days ago and which my hon. friend has not thought necessary to favour the House with. Speaking as to the section from Fredericton to St. John he says:

> Having in mind the shortest route by which the city of St. John and the great developments for transportation purposes likely to be undertaken at Courtenay bay could be reached, and as in order to reach such point involved the crossing of the St. John river at some point, it was thought desirable to deflect the line here—that is at Evandale—and cross over to the left bank at the head of the 'Mistake,' so called; thence the line crosses Gorham creek and enters the valley of Kingston creek, passing through the village of Kingston, Kings county, to the Kennebecasis river, crossing same near the Gondola Point ferry; thence by the left bank of the latter river through Rothesay, Renforth and Torryburn, and enters the city of St. John at the head of Courtenay bay, a distance from Fredericton of 71 miles, which in final location might be slightly reduced and make the total distance from Grand Falls to St. John, 207 miles, the shortest possible route for a railway line that can be got for a continuous low grade between Grand Falls and the city of St. John.

Then he says:

> On the division of this line between Fredericton and St. John, at no point has it been found necessary to rise with a grade to so great an elevation as 100 feet above the sea level in the distance of 71 miles, so that the question of grades here does not seriously affect the cost.

I may say that the line by way of Westfield would be 85 miles from Fredericton to St. John or 14 miles longer than the line which the engineer of the provincial government favours. In closing the report Mr. Maxwell says:

Section 37 of the Act authorizes the Lieutenant Governor in Council in case of the construction of this road either under part 2 or part 3 to make provision for running rights over the same or any part thereof, for any through line of railway making connection with the port of St. John or the port of L'Etang, St. Andrews or other port in the county of Charlotte.

Let my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) listen to these words of the chief engineer appointed by his friends the government of New Brunswick to make this survey:

In view of this important provision in the Act it would not be advisable to construct a railway along the valley of the St. John river, and particularly below Woodstock, except as specified in part 2 of the Act——

And part 2, as my hon. friend knows, is that which provided for the transcontinental standard.

—as the difference in cost of construction of two lines of railway, one built to the standard Transcontinental four-tenths of one per cent grade and the other built to the standard Intercolonial grade of one per cent, would not be at all proportional to the real value of the respective roads for transportation purposes.

And yet, in the face of the report made by this engineer appointed by the provincial government, my hon. friend says that because we are insisting on the same standard as that approved by the provincial government's own engineer, we are, therefore, endeavouring to block this undertaking. The engineer goes on:

A glance at the map of eastern Canada and the northern part of the state of Maine shows that only one divide exists between the St. Lawrence and the St. John rivers, and that when that divide or summit has been once overcome, the way to the seaboard for a railway, so far as grades are concerned, is made easy.

The National Transcontinental railway on its way from Quebec city to Moncton has already surmounted this St. Lawrence divide and has entered the watershed of the St. John river before reaching the New Brunswick boundary, and continues to follow the same for some miles east of Grand Falls or until it leaves it and climbs over into the watershed of the Miramichi river by what is known as the pusher grade.

The importance, therefore, of the St. John valley as a road for a great highway cannot be over-estimated, and the proposition to build a railway along it is not merely local, but national in both scope and character, and the time is now within reasonable distance when more than one transcontinental railway entering this valley, either by the National road now building, or by what may be a shorter route across the state of Maine and making an ocean terminus at St. John, must of necessity traverse some portion of the line now under consideration, as it is the existence of this peculiar physical feature of this country that makes possible a railway of this character, and what must eventually make of the port of St. John one of the few great shipping ports of the world.

I need nothing more than the report of their own engineer in which he advises that no other standard but the standard of the National Transcontinental railway shall be adopted down the valley of the St. John, to entirely justify the position we took when we insisted that the road should be built to that high standard so that it would be capable of forming a part of a transcontinental line. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) says that this road cannot be built to the standard of the National Transcontinental railway. Let me call his attention to what Mr. Maxwell says in the summary report published in the 'Gleaner' which is the accredited organ of the provincial government. He says:

Grand Falls via Perry Point to St. John, including all bridges, 210 miles, $9,237,390, equals $43,980 per mile.

Now, what is it going to cost to build from Andover to St. John, not up to this standard, but up to the standard of the Intercolonial? He says:

Andover village via Centreville, Lakeville, Woodstock, Fredericton, Gagetown and Perry Point to St. John, 185 miles (Intercolonial grade), approximate, including all bridges, $7,467,319, equals $40,370 per mile.

Therefore, the only difference per mile of getting a road all the way from the point of connection with the Transcontinental line at Grand Falls down to the port of St. John, by way of Perry Point, including the bridge across the St. John, another across the Belisle, and another across the Kennebecasis at Perry Point; the difference between this road built up to that standard, except for a short distance up in Victoria county, and a road built according to the inferior standard is only $3,600 per mile. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, if in view of what their own engineer says, and in view of the fact that there is only a comparatively small difference in cost, whether or not this government has been wise in insisting upon the road being built up to the standard of the Transcontinental railway? My hon. friend refers to an offer made in 1907 to guarantee the bonds for $15,000 per mile. At that time when I was premier of the province we insisted upon a road which would be first-class and capable of forming a part of a trunk line, but the province to-day has agreed to guarantee bonds for $10,000 per mile more than we agreed to guarantee then and with that guarantee of $25,000 per mile, and with the Dominion subsidy of $6,400 per mile I say that the people of New Brunswick are entitled to more than a second-class road; they are entitled to a road of a high standard, a road which would be capable of forming part of a transcontinental system. But, we have something more definite than that before the people of New Brunswick. We have a proposition made in clear and express terms by Mr. Thomas Malcolm, on behalf of the Quebec & New Brunswick Railway Company, to enter into a contract with the provincial government provided they will guarantee the bonds as each ten miles are completed. He asks nothing beforehand; he does not ask one dollar from the provincial government until he has built the road section by section; he does not ask for progress estimates in respect of each section, but he is willing to wait until each section of ten miles is fully completed and its proper proportion of rolling stock installed before he will ask the provincial government to guarantee one cent of the bonds that the legislature has authorized them to guarantee. He offers them to build and equip this road for the guarantee of $25,000 per mile with the addition of the Dominion subsidy of $6,400. My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) says he does not believe that is a sincere offer. And why does he say so? He says, that Mr. Malcolm should have waited until the provincial government proclaimed the Act. Well, I am unable to see that there is any reason in that, because the Act is upon the statute-books for any one to read, and Mr. Malcolm had the right to presume that when the survey was completed the Act would be proclaimed. Anyhow, the proclamation of the Act would not alter its language. But, says the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) Mr. Malcolm did not wait to see the surveys and the reports. Well, I have it from Mr. Malcolm that not only himself but the chief engineer of the International railway went over the St. John Valley route, and an experienced railroad man can tell with reasonable certainty what a line of road would cost. We find that Mackenzie & Mann simply made a flying survey in 1907 and their estimate of cost is substantially the estimate that Mr. Maxwell, the engineer of the provincial government, made after a most careful examination of the route.

My hon. friend says there is another reason, that is, that the offer of Mr. Malcolm was circulated in the province of New Brunswick, and was read publicly by Mr. Tweeddale, the member for the county of Victoria, which he says shows that the offer was not bona fide. Mr. Malcolm has explained that that letter was in no sense private, but that it was a public offer, which could have been and should have been brought down to the legislature; which the provincial government had no right to conceal from the legislature. That offer was dated the 25th of February, and it was not until three weeks later, or more, that Mr. Tweeddale read a copy of it in the House. Mr. Malcolm has explained how Mr. Tweeddale came to get it. There is an application now pending before the Railway Committee of this parliament to amend the charter of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. That Bill is in the hands of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), and Mr. Malcolm thought it would be desirable to show to the committee as a reason for getting the time extended, that the company was prepared to build the St. John Valley road, and he sent a copy of the letter to the hon. member for Carleton. Now, the hon. member for Carleton had a perfect right, if he chose, to send a copy of a public letter to any member of the provincial legislature, especially on a subject in which the people of New Brunswick are intensely interested. It seems to me that there is nothing in that which should impugn the bona fides of Mr. Malcolm. But my hon. friend says that the charter of the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company was granted in 1900, and nothing has been done upon it. My hon. friend did not tell the House that it was only during this last year, a comparatively few months ago, that Mr. Malcolm acquired a controlling interest in this charter; so he has informed me.

Mr. CROCKET. He was a member of the original company, was he not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If he was, he was only nominally so.

Mr. CROCKET. I may say that he was, and that his associates were the Hon. Senator Costigan, and a clerk in the post office here, Mr. Bertrand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events, Mr. Malcolm has informed me that he has acquired a controlling interest in the charter. Now, who is Mr. Malcolm? He is a gentleman who has recently constructed, as contractor, the International railway, which is 113 miles in length, extending across the province of New Brunswick from Campbellton at the head of the Bay of Chaleurs to the St. John river at St. Leonards. Everybody who has seen that road will say that it is a first-class road. It is not up to the standard of the Transcontinental railway, but it is, I suppose, up to the standard of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. DANIEL. How much did it cost a mile?

Mr. PUGSLEY. According to the report of the inspecting engineer, it cost $23,737 a mile.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the minister the standard of construction of that railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not, but I may say that I have been over the road myself, and it is a first-class road in every respect. The highest grade is one and one-half per cent, but that does not occur very often.

Mr. CROCKET. I examined the report of the engineer, and also the contract. The maximum grade is 80 feet to the mile, which is more than one and one-half per cent, the minimum curvature is 10 degrees, and the weight of rails 56 pounds to the yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I think the 80 feet to the mile refers to the grade coming out of Campbellton; elsewhere it is not more than one and one-half per cent. The government of New Brunswick has asked the legislature for authority to have a railroad built with Intercolonial grades up the valley of the St. John.

Mr. CROCKET. I think there must be some mistake about the cost of the International railway, because I find in the preamble of the Act of the New Brunswick legislature it is stated to be $27,339 per mile so that there must have been some misrepresentation at that time or some mistake now on the part of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad that my hon. friend has called attention to that. That was the estimate of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, the chief engineer, made practically at the commencement of the construction of the road, and I think it is very creditable to Mr. Malcolm that, through his economy, his great experience as a railway builder and his ability to organize his construction gangs, he actually constructed the road for $4,000 a mile less than the estimate of the chief engineer. Engineers allow for all contingencies, such as accidents, unfavourable weather, strikes, and so forth, and when you get an experienced railway contractor, who has a large and efficient plant, and who knows how to handle his men, it is often possible for him to make a great saving, and bring the actual cost below the estimate of the engineers. Mr. E. V. Johnson, the inspecting engineer, in his report of his final inspection of the International railway, says that 'the road has been completed, the track laid and the road fully ballasted with good gravel throughout,' and that 'all structures are of substantial and permanent character, bridges being steel girders on massive concrete substructure.' Then he says:

I have now to report the line as in excellent shape throughout and completed in accordance with the contracts.

This report is dated the 17th of December, 1910. There is also the report of the chief engineer who also makes the statement that 'the railway is completed in accordance with the contracts, and is in excellent condition throughout. Then, I have been favoured with a copy of the report of a gentleman whose name would carry great weight with the hon. member for York, that is, Mr. P. S. Archibald, formerly chief engineer of the Intercolonial railway, who made an inspection of this road.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister agree with me in the weight that should be attached to him?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Archibald is an experienced and very reliable engineer, and I would place great reliance on his statement. He speaks of the road as a good road. What did my hon. friend say was the weight of the rails of the International railway?

Mr. CROCKET. The contract specifies 56 pounds to the yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but he laid a very much heavier rail than the contract called for. Mr. Archibald's report says that they are steel rails, first class, and 67 pounds to the yard. Then my hon. friend says: But these rails are to be 80 pounds to the yard. So they are, but that will only add about $500 or $600 a mile to the cost. It only means a few additional tons per mile, some 18 tons, as between 67-pound and 80-pound rails. If it should fall to the lot of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) to travel over the International railway he will be astonished at the work done for the money this road cost, $23,000 per mile. There are rock cuttings, stream diversions by the mile, work of the very hardest character.

Mr. CROCKET. You should have given him work on the Transcontinental.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be. Some people work on a railway and make money; others work on it and lose money. A great deal depends on the experience and judgment of the contractor, and I am prepared to say that Mr. Malcolm is as experienced, able and reliable a contractor as is to be found in the Dominion. He built a portion of the Bangor and Aroostook railway, away in the northern part of the state of Maine, which is a marvellous success. He built the Temiscouata railway from Edmundston up to its point of junction with the Intercolonial. He has done railway building on the Canadian Pacific railway in the west. It would be difficult to find a man with larger experience and better judgment as a contractor. He made an offer to build this road; he knows whether he can build it or not, and he made a straight business offer. He said to Mr. Hazen in his letter: If you will agree to guarantee the bonds of the road as each ten miles of it are finished, and as that proportion of the equipment is furnished, and if you will comply with the conditions contained in the resolution now before the committee, I will undertake the construction of this road and its initial equipment. More than that, I will give you security for the payment of interest upon every bond which you guarantee until the various sections are finished and the operation of the road is taken over by the Intercolonial. That surely is a business-like straight offer; and if the provincial government has any desire of securing the construction of a first class road, such as recommended by its own engineer, and of saving the province from that possibly enormous liability which must be incurred unless they accept this agreement which the Minister of Railways is asking from this House authority to enter into, they will accept Mr. Malcolm's offer, requiring from him, of course, all reasonable conditions, and all reasonable security.

Then my hon. friend says that the offer cannot be bona fide for another reason. It is impossible for Mr. Malcolm to carry it out. But what does he say to the proposition to build a second class road from Andover to the city of St. John which would cost $40,000 per mile, or $15,000 per mile more than the bond guarantee, with no provision for operation, and without having the government of Canada back of the company so far as the operation is concerned? Then he asks: What can there possibly be in this for a company which would enable it to finance a dollar beyond the Dominion subsidy, and the guarantee? I may say that if part 2 had been passed by the legislature as the provincial government sought at first to have it passed, providing that 40 per cent of the earnings should go to the province, even after the interest on the bonds were paid, there would have been nothing in it for the company. Would you believe it that when they introduced the Bill, with part 2 in it, they provided that before the company would be allowed to enter into a contract, they must pay the cost of surveying, some $20,000, and give security, and that after the road was built and the government began to operate it, every dollar of this 40 per cent would go into the provincial treasury, and the company would not receive a dollar? My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) knows that my statement is correct. I read the Bill over, and although we were prepared for almost anything on the part of the provincial government in order to prevent the Intercolonial from operating the road, yet we were amazed that any one would have the audacity to submit to the legislature a proposition of that kind. They asked the company to pay $20,000 cost of survey and give security before they could enter into a contract for the construction of the road for which, when it would be operated by the Intercolonial, all the moneys the Intercolonial paid were to go into the purse of the province and the company was never to have the opportunity of getting a single cent. That was changed on the representation of the leader of the opposition who pointed out the utter absurdity and injustice of such a proposal; and now, after the interest on the bonds is paid, whatever surplus there is of the 40 per cent will go into the treasury of the company.

Mr. hon. friend asks what that amounts to. Let me tell him. This road is to traverse a section of country which is more fertile than any traversed by the Intercolonial unless it be some of those valleys like the beautiful Sussex valley and those magnificent marshes up in the county of Westmorland and some other parts of New Brunswick. It will traverse a country settled for a hundred years by thrifty, industrious farmers, with a fertile soil capable of producing many hundredfold beyond what it produces to-day. In my opinion, in the course of a very few years the earnings of that road ought to be as great at all events as those of the Intercolonial. I look forward to a time in the not very distant future when trains of the Grand Trunk Pacific destined for the port of St. John will leave the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific at Grand Falls and come down the valley of the St. John to the terminus to be built at Courtenay bay. Or the road will cross the river at a place called Evandale and go down to St. John by Kingston and join the Grand Trunk Railway by a branch from Chipman at 23 miles from St. John, and utilize that part in connection with the Transcontinental. Does my hon. friend know what the gross earnings of the Intercolonial were to the 31st of March, 1910. They were $6,220 per mile. If, in the course of a few years, the gross earnings of the St. John Valley line reach this sum, the 40 per cent which will be paid over to the province will equal $2,488 per mile. After paying the $1,000 per year interest on the bond guarantee, that will leave a surplus of $1,488 per mile to the company. In other words, the 40 per cent of the gross earnings would pay the four per cent on $60,000 per mile, or on $35,000 per mile over and beyond the interest on the bonds guaranteed by the government. In view of the fact that the Intercolonial will operate this road section by section as completed, I know of no better proposition for capitalists. I do not wonder that Mr. Malcolm and his associates should be willing to risk their money; I do not wonder that the contractor should be willing to risk his plant and services in order to secure the construction of this road and the benefit which will come to this company in the years to come as the result of this government entering into this long lease for the operation of this road on those favourable terms. Remember that the 40 per cent on the gross earnings is not limited to five, ten or twenty years, but is to last for the long term of 99 years.

No matter how large the earnings may be, during the whole of that period of ninety-nine years, the government is obliged to pay to this company, and the province of New Brunswick, this magnificent percentage of forty per cent on the gross earnings. The company will not spend a dollar upon repairs, to renew the rolling stock, provide new locomotives and cars as they are required, and all the time the company will receive this forty per cent upon the gross earnings. Out of that it will pay $1,000 a mile, leaving whatever surplus there may be towards paying dividends upon any additional securities the company may issue.

Now, I apologize for taking so much of the time of the House. I have done it, as I have said, because of the position taken by certain gentlemen in this matter. This government has gone great lengths, lengths for which there is no precedent so far as this government is concerned, to secure the construction of this road, both by the subsidy of $6,400 a mile, and by the agreement to operate and pay this large percentage of the gross earnings. I should have thought that, instead of being criticised, we should have been thanked by every man who desires to see this important enterprise undertaken. The attempt has been made to make us appear the enemies of the road, because we have insisted upon this high standard. It is a matter of the greatest possible gratification to me that, out of the mouth of the very man, who, of all others, is qualified to speak, and does speak, for the provincial government, our action is justified, he having reported that it would not be advisable to build a railway down the valley of the St. John river upon any other standard than the one which we have chosen and insisted upon, and that is the standard of the Transcontinental railway in New Brunswick.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not my intention to follow and reply to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) in all the various deviations he has made in discussing the subject before you, Mr. Chairman. He has discussed many things, but I notice that he has had very little to say regarding the amendment before the committee. So far as the hon. gentleman has attempted to show the great need of this railway to the people of St. John, and has spoken in admiring terms of the great fertility and the beauty of that country and its great adaptability for farming and fruit growing, I endorse all he has said, and think with him that it is high time that these people should be supplied with something like proper railway facilities. At present, they have no railway facilities whatever; practically the only transportation they get is in the summer time by means of the St. John river. The question before you has been dealt with quite fully from the point of view of the amendment by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket), and it will not be necessary for me to go over the ground he has so well covered. But the fact is, leaving to one side the legal technicalities and the verbiage thrown around the case this evening, the question simply comes down to this: Will the government equip this road with rolling stock or will it not? The Minister of Public Works, in speaking of the initiatory movement in this matter, spoke of the visit of the delegation from New Brunswick to Ottawa and their seeing the government. He stated that a definite proposition had not been made. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) said that the Prime Minister could not possibly have stated that it was a definite proposition that they had before them. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) stated that he had certainly seen such a report of the remarks of the Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman was entirely right. I have here the report of the statement of the Prime Minister, and I will read it to show that the statement of the Minister of Public Works, like so many of his statements, was not so entirely surrounded as it should have been with that necessary element which we all desire to see in the case in statements made in this House. This is how the Prime Minister is reported in the 'Daily Telegraph' of St. John, in its issue of April 17, 1909:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made the reply for the government. He declared emphatically that he was in favour of the construction of a line of railway down the valley of the St. John which he knew as one of the most fertile and most productive valleys of Canada which stood in need of a railway. He declared that the government of which he was the head favoured the construction of railways wherever they were needed in Canada. He thought there was no need for him to argue that point, as the government had shown its policy by the appropriation of generous grants of money for railway building.

He was glad to be able to say that the Dominion government had failed to recognize the claims of the St. John Valley railway, which the delegates were now urging, and that the evidence was that the government last year had placed in the list of railway subsidies provision for a double subsidy for any line of railway which might be built down the valley of the St. John. That subsidy would stand and would be given as aid when the line was built. The delegation now came with a further proposal, that on the province guaranteeing bonds of the company which was to build the road, the government should have it operated by the Intercolonial and turn over to the company forty per cent of the gross profits. Sir Wilfrid said that was a proposal of a definite kind which would have to be carefully considered.

This is exactly what my hon. friend from York said—that the Prime Minister had stated that this was a definite proposition that was made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a little different—'a proposal of a definite kind.'

Mr. DANIEL. Is not that a 'definite proposal'?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not say a word about the details, the specifications, standard or anything.

Mr. DANIEL. If the minister can see any real difference between the two statements, he can see more in it than I can.

It might be found on consideration that it was the best arrangement or it might be found that there could be a better arrangement . . .

But there is the fact, the Prime Minister received this delegation here, heard their proposal, assented to it, and received it as a definite proposal on behalf of the provincial government. When the Minister of Public Works made public his ultimatum I can assure you that the people of New Brunswick looked upon it as a severe backset to any hopes they might have had of getting that railway built. They looked upon it then and look upon it now as evidence that so far from helping this thing along the minister was doing his best to prevent its accomplishment. He insisted on a standard which was not carried out even upon the National Transcontinental going through the province of New Brunswick. He insisted on a four-tenth per cent grade, which is a higher standard than the National Transcontinental has going through New Brunswick. Yet this was a railway which was to be made part of the Intercolonial, which does not approach that standard, but has grades of 1 per cent and even 1½ per cent on parts of its line. It looks as if the minister had tried to prevent this thing going through, that he insisted on such a high grade for this railway that it became almost impossible to hope for its construction. The matter is well understood in New Brunswick. I saw the other day in the public press a notice of a meeting at Gagetown, in Queens county, on February 27, at which the following resolution was adopted:

First, resolved that the meeting express their gratification and hearty concurrence in the legislation passed last winter providing for the guarantee of bonds to the extent of $25,000 per mile in aid of the construction of the St. John Valley railway, and express their preference to have the said railway operated by steam and under the management of the Intercolonial railway if possible. If not, then by some substantial railway company, with transcontinental connections.

Second, that the Bill introduced in the federal parliament by the Minister of Railways may be so amended as to provide and guarantee that the Intercolonial railway management will take the road over when completed for the running of trains, and put on their own rolling stock for all purposes required.

Third, that should the local government fail to find a company willing to construct the said railway aided by the bond guarantee and Dominion subsidy, then we would heartily approve of them undertaking the construction of the said railway and completing it ready for the running of trains, beginning its construction and securing its completion within reasonable time.

Fourth, that as citizens of the St. John Valley we desire again to express how keenly we feel the want of transportation facilities, and that we are relying on the good offices of both the provincial and Dominion governments in their united and hearty co-operation to secure to us this much-needed railway.

So far as this meeting is concerned, its views are plainly expressed.

Mr. CARVELL. That meeting wanted Intercolonial railway operation.

Mr. DANIEL. The resolution speaks for itself. This government has made a proposal to build a railway to Hudson bay, and I presume that road will be constructed at the expense of the Dominion. The Dominion government is a wealthy government. New Brunswick is a small province, as we all know, and the provincial government are very much put to it to find means enough to carry on the ordinary business of a province. The Dominion government will doubtless construct the Hudson Bay railway. The province of New Brunswick has given a larger subsidy than it has ever given towards any public undertaking of this kind. The minister has spoken of the great feritility and value of the valley of the River St. John. It has always suffered from want of railway facilities. It would appear to me that it should be the endeavour of this government to assist the province in every shape and form in the laudable desire it has to build this railway and give this most fertile province of New Brunswick something like the railway facilities to which it is entitled. That is all that the people there are asking. The people of New Brunswick are taking a tremendous load upon themselves in offering $25,000 a mile to build this line, and all this amendment asks is a slight change whereby there will be placed in this Act the word 'equipment,' so as to carry out the intention of the government of New Brunswick. I think the minister would be doing the right thing towards the province which he especially represents if he would accept the amendment which has been offered by my hon. friend from York, and arrange it in such a way as that the section will read as amended. It appears to me that we would be doing something which he, as a representative of New Brunswick, ought to be glad to do, and which would certainly facilitate this matter by making the proposal acceptable to the people of New Brunswick. It would show that this government were trying to help this project along all they possibly could. I certainly have very much pleasure in seconding the amendment which my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Crocket) has moved.

Mr. CARVELL. In view of the very able and lucid statement of this proposed railway legislation by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), it will only be necessary for me to spend a very few moments indeed in discussing it. I offer no apology for speaking on this question, because, perhaps, I have been more intimately connected with every move concerning this matter made during the last two years than any other hon. member of the House. I know what is required perhaps more intimately than any other man except possibly the minister himself. I have taken a great interest in it because the road, when constructed, will pass through my country for a distance of about fifty miles, and, having my ideas with regard to the work not only in my constituency but in six or seven other constituencies in New Brunswick, I feel its importance. I am fully justified in doing every thing which reasonably can be done in order to secure the construction of this great work. I shall not weary the House with an historical review of this question, and I am only going to refer to one thing. About two years ago now, a number of meetings were held in different parts of the province to talk the railway up and down the river St. John. This railway has been discussed and talked of and legislated upon for at least 25 years to my own recollection, and I do not know how far back of that. On two occasions work has actually commenced. I think that about 20 years ago work was commenced at Fredericton and five or six miles were graded. Through failure to make the necessary financial arrangements they were unable to proceed. About fifteen years ago another company was organized, and they commenced construction near Woodstock, they spent about $50,000 at different places and failed there also. The present agitation was started two years ago. A delegation from counties all along the river waited upon Hon. Mr. Hazen at Fredericton on the day before the legislature met in 1909. The night before they met the premier, I received a telegram from a gentleman at Woodstock telling me that the premier was going to ask them to go to Ottawa and see what could be done there. I wired back telling him what had been done; I told him that a subsidy had been voted during the previous year for a road all the way from Grand Falls to St. John and I cited to him the statute where it would be found. Next day when they met the premier he asked them to give him a fortnight he said: if you will get the federal government to agree to operate this road when constructed, and pay 40 per cent of the gross earnings back to the company or the government we will guarantee the bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile. The result of the proposition was the monster delegation of thirty or forty people from all parts of the country which has been referred to by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) and my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel). Very shortly after the delegation went away the Conservative papers of New Brunswick commenced to harp upon the statement that the premier told the delegation that they had made a definite proposition. I never could understand the object for doing so, I never could see why there was so much importance attached to it. You will find that statement in the letter written by Premier Hazen to Mr. Chestnut. The premier said it was a definite proposition. I was present at the meeting, and I know the whole transaction. This delegation met in a room down in the Russell House, about half past nine in the morning, I was sent for, and when I got down there they were all sitting around the room, and they were having a good straight fight among themselves.

Mr. GRAHAM. New Brunswicker like?

Mr. CARVELL. New Brunswicker like. The whole delegation, with the exception of Hon. Mr. Flemming, who was representing the local government, wanted to ask the government to operate this road from Grand Falls to St. John. The Hon. Mr. Flemming refused to do it, and would not go north from a place called Centreville in Carleton because he said it was unfair to compete with the existing line of the Canadian Pacific railway, and he would never agree to it unless he could not help it. The situation was such that it was apparent nothing would be done, and Mr. Flemming immediately telegraphed to Mr. Hazen at Fredericton and got a reply in which he consented to the proposition being made. That is all that took place, the only thing we discussed and the only proposition put before the government was whether or not they would agree to operate the road from Grand Falls to St. John and pay to the government of New Brunswick or the company forty per cent of the gross earnings, operating the road as part of the Intercolonial railway,

We went before the government with that proposition, and the answer was given, I think, almost word for word as read by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) a few minutes ago from the 'St. John Telegraph.' If he can get any comfort out of it, all right, I find no fault. There could have been no kind of definite proposition except this one as to whether this government would operate the road and pay forty per cent of the gross earnings. Nothing was said about grades, guarantees, steel bridges or iron.

Mr. CROCKET. Nothing was asked.

Mr. CARVELL. It never got to the point where it could be asked. It would not be possible to make a definite proposition about the road, and the Minister of Railways objected because there was not something more definite.

Mr. CROCKET. He certainly did not make that objection to the delegation.

Mr. CARVELL. He certainly did.

Mr. CROCKET. I was there and my recollection is that nothing of the kind took place.

Mr. GRAHAM. I made the objection, and I was not very popular for doing so.

Mr. CARVELL. I was present too, and I do not believe the premier said what my hon. friend from York says he did.

Mr. CROCKET. The 'Telegraph' says he did.

Mr. CARVELL. That is not always right. However, a good many more important things have happened since then. The legislature was in session and a delegation of 25 or 30 of the most determined men I ever saw went to Fredericton and they went so far as to call on the provincial secretary to resign his seat if the government did not put the legislation through that year, and they got that promise, but two days afterwards the legislature prorogued, and there was no Act passed. Then some funny things commenced, and we began to get letters from Mr. Hazen, not through the Minister of Railways, and not through the premier, but through Mr. Chestnut the president of the railway company, which had been created by the legislature for the purpose of building the road.

Mr. CROCKET. And the chairman of the delegation that waited on the government.

Mr. CARVELL. No doubt, and a perfectly reliable gentleman he is, and a man who is as anxious to have this road built as the Minister of Public Works or myself, and a good deal more anxious than the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel).

Mr. CROCKET. You want to monopolize all the sincerity in the province.

Mr. CARVELL. In my letter read by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) I said that after the letter of the Minister of Public Works of the 19th of June no answer came back, no new proposition was made, no effort by the local government to get the federal government to change the specifications.

Mr. CROCKET. Did not the letter of Mr. Hazen suggest that a conference be held; did he not submit that proposition to the president of the railway company, and did not the Minister of Public Works refuse to accede to that?

Mr. CARVELL. No, he did not. My recollection is that the Minister of Public Works stated that until Mr. Hazen was prepared to go into details and state what kind of grades and curvatures he would provide for, there was no necessity for an interview. He invited Mr. Hazen to give something more definite, but Mr. Hazen has never done so. The next step was a letter written by the Minister of Public Works telling Mr. Hazen through Mr. Chestnut that if he thought the standard was too high, he ought to ask the legislature to give him the power to decide on these details, but in the face of that he deliberately placed on the statute-books of New Brunswick, chapter 6 of the Acts of 1910, which not only does not give him the right to have this road built, and operated by the Intercolonial railway, but actually prohibits him from doing it. We have section after section which binds Mr. Hazen hand and foot and makes it impossible for him to sign an agreement that can be worked out. And now, my hon. friend's friends in the province of New Brunswick have the effrontery to advertise in every Tory newspaper and on every platform in the province that the Minister of Public Works and myself have been deliberately planning and scheming to prevent the construction of this road. A year ago, when at Woodstock, I read Sir Wilfrid Laurier's letter agreeing to operate this road as part of the Intercolonial, and stated that I knew a man who would build the road for the assistance was offered, I was laughed at by every Tory newspaper in New Brunswick. But to-night I repeat the statement that the road can be and will be built unless Mr. Hazen and the Tory party of New Brunswick prevent it from being built, and it will be built and operated by the Intercolonial railway, and the people of that section will be getting the railway facilities they have been praying for since I was a boy. In order to show how completely Mr. Hazen and the Tory party of New Brunswick have prevented themselves from being in a position to sign this contract, I wish to point out that section 11 provides:

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway to an amount of not less than $6,400 per mile.

Now, at that very time there was federal legislation in force, chapter 63 of the statutes of 1908, providing for the subsidies to railways, and this railway among others, and the very first clause reads:

1. The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway—not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated—which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile.

That is the standard clause in the railway subsidy Act for the last ten years, and if you take that Act as it stands, unless Mr. Hazen changes the condition of section 11, he will be prevented from signing the contract even if all other things were ready. The local legislature says that the government cannot guarantee these bonds until the federal government actually passes legislation agreeing to pay $6,400 per mile, but this government cannot do so because their standard subsidy Act says that the cost of the road must exceed $21,400 per mile before they can give a subsidy of $6,400 per mile.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the hon. member any doubt but that the subsidy of $6,400 per mile would be payable in this case.

Mr. CARVELL. Not a particle. But owing to the manner in which Mr. Hazen has tied himself down he cannot sign the contract until the legislation is changed.

Mr. CROCKET. You are getting very technical.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, and I can tell you that if ever there was a piece of technical legislation put through any parliament it was the legislation regarding this railway which was put through the legislature of New Brunswick, because everything was done that human ingenuity could do in order to try and prevent having this railroad built and operated as part of the Intercolonial railway. When they made that proposition two years ago, they had no idea that this government would accept it, and there was nobody more surprised than the Tory party of New Brunswick when the Prime Minister's letter was read a year ago, and from that day to this they have never ceased to try to concoct some scheme to make it impossible to carry it out, and to enable them to build a road not up to the standard of the Transcontinental or even of the Intercolonial railway, but simply a cheap branch line to be controlled and operated by the Canadian Pacific railway. That is the whole transaction. Why, when we came to Ottawa two years ago to meet the government, the Hon. Mr. Flemming came along, and his whole fight was against building a road through the centre because it would compete with the Canadian Pacific railway. He wired to Mr. Hazen to get his consent. The night before, this same Mr. Flemming travelled all the way from Fredericton to Montreal in a private car of Sir William Van Horne. I do not say that Sir William Van Horne influenced him, but when he got to Ottawa, he was the most rabid Canadian Pacific railway man I ever met, and he has continued to be so down to the present time, and that is really at the bottom of the whole transaction. I do not blame the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; they are only following a good business proposition. I blame my hon. friend and his friends in the province of New Brunswick for being willing to barter away the rights of the people of that province in order to give this monstrous corporation a grasp on that part of the province for all time to come. The people of New Brunswick blame them too, and they will find that the people are not half as innocent or as ignorant as my hon. friend and his friends think they are. That is all I have to say about the historic part of this matter. My hon. friend wants this committee to adopt an amendment of his. I have applied that amendment to the resolution before the committee, and I want to read it as it would appear if his amendment were adopted. The whole trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite seems to be over the equipment. The morning after the Minister of Railways tabled his notice of motion about a month ago, the St. John 'Standard,' the leading Tory organ of the province, and the Fredericton 'Gleaner,' the next leading Tory organ, came out with identical editorials on this question, and the gravamen of their charge was that the federal government were trying to prevent the construction of this road on account of the equipment. When I read these two articles I could not understand what they meant, and I at once went to the laws which the Tory government themselves passed, and I found that in section 10 they deliberately provide:

Before any company's bonds shall be guaranteed, the company shall provide, in a manner satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by a deposit in money or other sufficient security, or of a deposit of part money and part security, in addition to such mortgage, for the payment of interest on such bonds during the construction of the said line of railway, and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment passed and approved by the government engineer.

I also find that by sections 11 and 16 they provided for equipment; and this thing has been going on ever since in the province of New Brunswick. I am surprised that my hon. friends bring it up here in view of what has taken place in the last fortnight. Now, I will read the enacting part of this resolution, with the amendment as proposed:

Now, therefore, it is expedient that His Excellency the Governor in Council be authorized to enter into a contract with any such railroad company and the government of the province of New Brunswick as aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway when completed, with its appurtenances and rolling stock, and for the operation, equipment, maintenance, upkeep and repair by the said government of Canada, as a part of the government railway system of Canada, for a period of ninety-nine years, and for the payment by the government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick, or the said company, each year during the said term of ninety-nine years, of the forty per centum per annum of the gross earnings of the said railway, as or in the nature of rental therefor.

Mr. CROCKET. Does not that conform precisely with the terms of section 11?

Mr. CARVELL. No, it does not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what respect does it not?

Mr. CARVELL. If you make this amendment, then you will be absolutely out of court, because section 10 says that until the road is equipped the government cannot guarantee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what respect does this not conform to section 11?

Mr. CARVELL. I will tell my hon. friend frankly that I have not read section 11 very carefully.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have.

Mr. CARVELL. I will read section 11:

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed unless and until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway, to the amount of not less than $6,400 per mile, and authorizing the entering, by the said government of Canada, into an agreement with such company or corporation and with the government of New Brunswick aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway when completed with its appurtenances and rolling stock, and for the operation, equipment, maintenance, upkeep and repair by said government of Canada, as part of the government railway system of Canada, for a period of ninety-nine years, and for the payment by the government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick or government thereof, each year during the said term of ninety-nine years of forty per centum per annum of the gross earnings of the said railway as or in the nature of rental therefor.

Whether the amendment complies with section 11 or not does not make any difference, because section 10 provides that there must be equipment, and without equipment Mr. Hazen cannot sign the contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then the contention of the hon. gentleman, as I understand it, is that the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for York is perfectly consistent with section 11, but section 11 is not consistent with section 10?

Mr. CARVELL. That, I think, is pretty logical, and that is only one of the circumstances by which Mr. Hazen and the Conservative party have tried to prevent themselves from being in a position to sign the contract. If there is no equipment, how is there going to be any rolling stock to be leased to the government, for which section 11 provides? My hon. friend from York this afternoon said: Oh, there will be some rolling stock. If this road is constructed as all other roads are, by contractors, there would not be a wheel of rolling stock when the road is completed. What is the use of all this discussion about rolling stock? My hon. friends ignore the fact that a competent railway man goes to the province of New Brunswick and agrees to build this road and put on the rolling stock. There is nobody asking for this amendment. This parliament will be in session probably two months longer; the legislature of New Brunswick is in session; if Mr. Hazen thinks that is vital to the construction of this road, let him change his legislation and put the burden on us to see if we will not before we get through.

Mr. CROCKET. Does my hon. friend object to this government providing the initial equipment?

Mr. CARVELL. This government has nothing to do with it. It is a company which is going to build the railway.

Mr. CROCKET. Under an agreement on the part of the company that this government is to take it over.

Mr. CARVELL. That has nothing to do with it. The hon. gentleman spoke about making the poor government of New Brunswick provide the rolling stock, and he dilated on the poverty of that government and the richness of this.

Mr. CROCKET. I do not remember any remark of that kind.

Mr. CARVELL. Every other hon. member does. The poor government of New Brunswick, he said, were forced to provide the rolling stock. But who asked that government to do it? They put it in their own Acts that the company should provide the rolling stock. Take the letter, it has been almost insinuated that something unprofessional, something unfair has taken place, that I gave away something to the leader of the opposition in the New Brunswick legislature. I have no hesitation in telling the whole story. For three or four weeks there has been a notice on the Order Paper that application was to be made by the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company for a renewal of a charter, and that order stands in my name. I noticed frequently two of my hon. friends opposite holding down the front bench in the Railway Committee and wondered what was troubling them because as a rule they do not bother that committee very much. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) asked me when this Bill was coming up, and I said in the ordinary course. Not long afterwards the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) asked me to name a day and he said that he had some amendment to propose. I immediately wired Mr. Malcolm that some of our friends opposite from New Brunswick were opposing the Bill for some reason or other. I met him in Montreal and he gave me this letter, marked copy, and signed by himself, and he told me he had submitted it to Mr. Hazen, and that he had agreed to enter into a contract according to the terms of the resolution of the Minister of Railways now under discussion. I wanted an opportunity to make this letter public before the Railway Committee, and I notified the leader of the opposition in New Brunswick to get copies of all documents in connection with that matter. I did not give a copy of this letter as my object was first to get all the information possible from the New Brunswick government about this proposition. Notice was given in the local house on the 2nd of March, but the First Minister there gave an evasive answer, stated that there was a good deal of correspondence had with different people, and promised to bring down the papers at some future time. About a week ago I went home and gave a copy of the letter to some of the prominent Tories in Woodstock and I said to them: That is what your government has to meet, and I want to know what it is going to do about it. A copy of that letter was sent to Mr. Hazen on a Saturday and on Tuesday the leader of the opposition moved that it be brought down. Not receiving the letter, on Wednesday night he made it public. I take full responsibility for its publication. It was not marked 'private'.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Hazen says it was.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. gentleman will produce that letter, he will find it is not marked private.

Mr. CROCKET. I read a letter from Mr. Malcolm this afternoon in reply to a letter from Mr. Hazen in which Mr. Malcolm referred to the fact that this letter was marked 'private.'

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend can take what comfort he likes from that. I am giving him the facts, and if he does not accept my version let him produce the letter to Mr. Hazen. There is no reason why my hon. friend should make any trouble in this House or bother his head at all about this matter because this equipment is not coming out of the poor government of New Brunswick or the federal government but out of the contractor or the company. If Mr. Malcolm is willing to put up the money for the equipment, that is his affair. I do not think the people of New Brunswick will lose much sleep or trouble themselves much about who provides the equipment so long as the equipment is provided and the road operated. Therefore I can see no reason why we should adopt this amendment. All the resolution provides is that this government shall have the right to enter into a contract to operate the road for a period of 99 years, when completed and equipped with the initial rolling stock. It is only a question whether parliament will give the Minister of Railways that power or not. If it does, this government will be in a position to carry out the very thing they have been asked to do. In every letter, every resolution, every discussion from beginning to end, the New Brunswick government have asked the company or somebody else to provide the rolling stock. If my hon. friends can induce the government of New Brunswick to change their legislation calling on the company to provide rolling stock, we will be in a position to meet them. My hon. friend had better have legislation introduced into the New Brunswick legislature amending the specifications and changing section 16 and section 11 about the subsidy.

Mr. CROCKET. Are not those the specifications laid down by the Minister of Public Works and approved by the First Minister?

Mr. CARVELL. They follow very closely the specifications set forth in the letter of the Minister of Public Works. But a year ago my hon. friends knew that the Minister of Public Works was prepared to reduce those specifications if it was thought necessary. But they hid that letter away and did not make it public, and it never was known until the Minister of Public Works made it known here to-night. It will be a surprise to the people of New Brunswick to learn the true facts.

My hon. friends opposite complain that the standard is too high. All right we will change the specifications. All we want is to have the road built and then have it operated by the Intercolonial, and we are passing legislation to have that brought into effect. It is then for the government of Mr. Hazen to say whether they will change their legislation and put themselves in a position to meet us and have the road constructed. If they will change that legislation and comply with this resolution, if they will guarantee those bonds and sign the contract, the road will be in construction inside of a month and built inside of two years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I shall not go into the historical matter on which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) have spoken, though the latter promised he would not indulge in anything of the kind. I am afraid, however, that he lapsed very far from his pledge before he got through. He spoke of the shackles imposed by the government of New Brunswick. Well, the only shackles they imposed were due to the fact that they accepted literally the proposition of the Minister of Public Works and the right hon. the First Minister and put that in the form of a statute. They simply accepted the offer made by this government in the very terms in which that offer was made. I do not propose to deal with the question of this private letter. Mr. Hazen and the gentleman who wrote it say it was private. The Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Carleton say they know better and that it was not. We will let that matter stand as it is. Nor will I deal with the very interesting distinction made by the Minister of Public Works between a 'definite proposal' and a 'proposal of a definite kind.' We will leave that as it is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Like Sir Charles Tupper's statement that he could not understand the man who said he could not understand the difference between 'an offer of unrestricted reciprocity' and 'unrestricted offer of reciprocity.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is much more clear that the distinction the minister is trying to make to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It always puzzles me.

Mr. CROCKET. On which side was the minister then?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the right side.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Let us come down to the question really before us. The Minister of Public Works has told us of the fertility of the St. John valley and how important it is that it should be afforded the railway communication which it is due. We all agree to that. We all agree that the progress and development of the St. John valley will be very greatly enhanced by the carrying out of the proposal which is made a matter of controversy to-night. But it is a remarkable thing, it seems to me, that the Minister of Public Works should assure us that the production of that valley would be increased not merely a hundred fold but many hundred fold by the construction of this railway, and yet that he should balk so much at an expenditure of $250,000 for the provision of rolling stock. And it is a remarkable thing that my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) should agree entirely with the very proper view of the Minister of Public Works with respect to the St. John valley, and yet should regard adherence to the particular form of legislation in vogue in this parliament as of much more importance than the construction of that railway. For that is the argument he seriously put forward—I am assuming that he put it forward seriously. The government of New Brunswick, he says, have rendered it impossible that the railway should be constructed, because, forsooth, we have been accustomed to enact grants of subsidies in a particular form in this parliament. I think he will see, on reflection, that that is not a very weighty argument.

Mr. CARVELL. Then, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), propose that this parliament should pass a special Act providing a subsidy of $6,400 a mile for this railway regardless of the cost of construction?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say that if the road is of the importance attached to it by the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., parliament may well do that and nobody would be much hurt by it. The hon. member for Carleton himself has said that the road would cost so much that the subsidy to be paid would be $6,400 per mile. Then he calls attention to the nature of the New Brunswick statute which requires a subsidy to the amount of not less than $6,400 a mile, and says, because some technical and more or less frivolous distinction might be drawn, by reason of the very wording of this section, this road is to remain in abeyance forever.

Mr. CARVELL. That is what will happen.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what will happen—assuming the hon. gentleman's argument to be correct—unless this parliament is willing to put legislation on the statute-book that will provide $6,400 a mile. Then, so far as I am concerned, I am ready and willing to support legislation of that kind. But I may sav, if I am to judge by the utterances of the hon. member for Carleton and the Minister of Public Works, they are not willing to go that far for the purpose of bringing about the construction of this railway in the St. John valley. However, the hon. member, perhaps, can explain himself if he likes in the very peculiar and difficult situation in which he finds himself by reason of his somewhat unguarded utterances in that respect.

But, let us come to the real question. The real question, as my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) put it very tersely and forcibly is this: Is the government of Canada prepared to spend $250,000, the amount named by the Minister of Railways and Canals, in providinig rolling stock for this railway? It has been pointed out that if you follow the analogy of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the government of Canada should provide the rolling stock for this road. No attempt to meet that argument has been made except by declamation and the somewhat heated and excited utterances of the Minister of Public Works and the member for Carleton. But, apart from that, let us come down to the real aspect of the situation created by the proposal of my hon. friend from York that these resolutions should be amended. I say that the recital contained in the resolution submitted to this committee is an incorrect recital, and I challenge contradiction of that statement. It correctly recites the New Brunswick legislation with the exception of one word, and it leaves out that word 'equipment.' Then, when you come to the enacting part of it, you will find in 'Hansard' to-morrow that the resolution as proposed to be amended by my hon. friend from York is in exact accordance with the New Brunswick legislation, and that the legislation proposed by the Minister of Railways and Canals is not in accord with that legislation. I make that statement and challenge contradiction, for I have compared the two very carefully. I followed the hon. member for Carleton as closely as I could—not to embarrass him, but that I might understand his argument—and, if there is anything in his argument, or in that of the Minister of Railways and Canals, it is that section 10 modifies the construction of section 11, and, therefore, the Minister of Railways and Canals was justified in departing, as undoubtedly he did, from the language of section 11 when he framed his resolution. If there is anything in the long and wearisome argument made on that side with respect to this matter it amounts to that and nothing more. I am open to correction or interruption if any hon. gentleman does not agree with me. Let us see if there is any contradiction or inconsistency between section 10 and section 11 taken in conjunction with other parts of the statute.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Section 9,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have looked at these sections pretty carefully, and I think I understand them as well as one can understand them in the brief time I have been able to spend on them. Section 10 reads:

> 10. Before any of the company's bonds shall be guaranteed, the company shall provide, in a manner satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by a deposit in money or other sufficient security, or of a deposit of part money and part security, in addition to such mortgage, for the payment of interest on such bonds during the construction of the said line of railway, and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment passed and approved by the government engineer.

Not a word in that inconsistent with section 11 which has been put on 'Hansard' by the hon. member for Carleton. Section 11 is embodied in the terms of this resolution, if the resolution be amended as proposed by my hon. friend from York. What was the object of section 10? Simply this, that, inasmuch as the 40 per cent could not be received by the government of New Brunswick until after the road had been completed and was earning the revenue, therefore during the intervening period it was required of this company that some provision should be made for the payment of interest. It is absolutely consistent and not in the least conflicting with a word to be found in section 11. What is the general intention of this statute with regard to the equipment? A great deal of light is shed upon it by reference to the concluding words of section 16.

> And such contract shall also provide that such railway shall be equipped by the said company or by the government of Canada, with proper and sufficient rolling stock.

What then is the whole scope of the legislation? In the first place, by section 10 provision must be made during the period antecedent to the operation of the road for the payment of interest upon the bonds guaranteed by the government of New Brunswick. That is plain and simple.

Mr. CARVELL. Do not sections 10, 11 and 16 provide that before the government of New Brunswick can guarantee bonds rolling stock must be provided by somebody?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The government of New Brunswick intended that until rolling stock should be provided provision should be made for the interest on those bonds, a most businesslike proposal from every standpoint. After the road should be equipped with rolling stock and should be in operation, then they looked to the revenue derived from the operation of the road for the reimbursement of the interest payable on the bonds, but until that had been accomplished they insisted by section 10 that provision for the payment of that interest should be made. There is nothing in that provision inconsistent with section 11 or section 16.

Mr. CARVELL. Does not that provide that some one must provide rolling stock?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Section 16 left it entirely open as to whether the rolling stock should be provided by the company or the government of Canada, as I understand it. Therefore section 11 very properly uses the word rolling stock, because if the rolling stock had been provided by the company the lease must necessarily carry the rolling stock as well. It was possible under the provision of section 16 that the rolling stock under the contract as eventually agreed to would be provided by the company; therefore it was absolutely necessary in section 11 to use the words rolling stock in connection with the lease, because after the company provides the rolling stock it is not only the road but the rolling stock as well that must be leased with it. It seems to me that if you take sections 10, 11 and 16 and construe them in the ordinary commonsense, businesslike meaning of the words, you have not the slightest difficulty from beginning to end. There is not a word in section 10 that conflicts with section 11, there is not a word in section 11 that conflicts with section 16. Because it is open under section 11 to the possibility that the company may provide the rolling stock, therefore you find in section 11 the provision that the road when leased shall carry any rolling stock with it if that rolling stock shall be provided before——

Mr. CARVELL. Why do my friends object to rolling stock being provided?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am discussing the question as to whether the Minister of Railways has properly recited the legislation of the province of New Brunswick? It must be apparent to any one that if this proposal is to be carried out it cannot be carried out by provision of one kind in the legislation of New Brunswick and of a different and inconsistent character in the legislation of this parliament. What I am endeavouring to emphasize is that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) makes this resolution thoroughly consistent with the New Brunswick legislation, while the resolution proposed by the Minister of Railways is not consistent with the New Brunswick legislation, for the reasons to which I have alluded, and which were dealt with in detail by the hon. member for York.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend is so anxious to have this portion of the resolution conform with the statute of New Brunswick, why does not the member for York go further and ask to amend the resolution as to the question of standard and specifications?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Because, as I understand the situation, there is no need—

Mr. CARVELL. There must be an amendment——

Mr. CROCKET. The New Brunswick statute specifies the standard as the Minister of Public Works does, the National Transcontinental grade in New Brunswick.

Mr. CARVELL. Does he not admit that if this legislation goes through as proposed to be amended by himself, it is even then necessary for the legislature of New Brunswick to change their legislation before they are empowered to sign the contract? Why does he not try to make the whole thing harmonize?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not desire that my hon. friend shall interpose with a controversy with the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) who is perfectly well able to take care of himself as my hon. friend knows. I am pointing out to hon. gentlemen opposite, especially to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, that their recital is an untrue and incorrect recital. The operative part of their resolution does not follow the operative part of the legislation of New Brunswick, and the road cannot be built unless the legislation of this parliament and the legislation of New Brunswick are made to conform. I challenge the contradiction of the statement that the resolution proposed by the Minister of Railways and Canals does not conform to the legislation of New Brunswick. Therefore, I send back to hon. gentlemen opposite their own words that their action in this respect may well bear the implication that it is not the bona fide intention of the government of Canada to bring about the completion of this road; otherwise they would see to it that their own legislation is conformable to and consistent with the legislation placed on the statute-book of New Brunswick by the government of that province for the purpose of bringing about the construction of that road which is a matter of vital interest not only to the valley of the River St. John, but to the entire province of New Brunswick.

Mr. GRAHAM. I might draw attention to the point of order that the hon. gentleman's motion, if it means what he says it does, involves an additional charge on the revenue of Canada. If it does not mean that it would not mean anything. I find that after being pressed pretty hard by the Minister of Public Works, and the member for Carleton, New Brunswick, in trying to meet what I thought was the desire of the people of New Brunswick to help this railway line, I have got into a hornet's nest. I am not so sure I would have done what I did, for I thought I was acting pretty liberally as the head of the Department of Railways, if I had known that two prominent members of the opposition had intended to obstruct this legislation. I expected to have their hearty support, but they have obstructed it at every point, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has also been drawn into the question. Let me point out one thing.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the Minister of Railways and Canals state that I have been attempting to obstruct the passage of this resolution? I am surprised to hear a statement of that kind coming from a minister of the Crown.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will put it in another way.

Mr. CROCKET. I have been endeavouring to secure the passage of the resolution in a manner that would bring about the construction of this road and make it conform to the legislation of New Brunswick.

Mr. GRAHAM. I should not use the word 'obstruct'; in place of it I will use the word 'oppose.' We might as well understand that the legislation of New Brunswick from start to finish implies and states in every paragraph relating to it that the company was to provide some rolling stock and equipment. In every paragraph where it is mentioned it states that. My hon. friend says: No, you supply the equipment, and he pretended to state this afternoon what cannot be found in their statute from start to finish. They demand, not this House, not the Minister of Railways, but the provincial government of New Brunswick, in their statute that the company getting this contract shall provide the initial equipment. I will take some clauses not yet mentioned to show that the New Brunswick government, in every part of this Act, acted upon that assumption. Take clause 27 if you like:

> Before any such guarantee shall be given, the payment of the said bonds and interest thereon, shall be secured by a trust mortgage, made and executed by the said company to a trust company, to be approved of by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and covering all the said line of railway and its appurtenances.

Mr. CARVELL. That is part 3.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the second class.

Mr. GRAHAM. But the same principle applies to both roads, they were to supply the initial equipment at least and the mortgage in either case, either upon this road, or upon the one horse road, as my hon. friend calls it, was to be secured on the rolling stock in accordance with the Act passed by the legislature of New Brunswick. Let me go back a little further and come to clause 16. I agree with the leader of the opposition; I say in this regard that sections 10 and 11 are not consistent one with the other. I agree with the leader of the opposition to the extent that my argument is largely that. I admit further that I take the responsibility, in so far as I have to, for the use of the word 'equipment' not being in the resolution, because we cannot say in one clause that the company shall provide the initial equipment, and in the very next clause that the government shall do it. Let me proceed a little further. Take clause 16. I shall not put it on 'Hansard' because it has been read. This clause fully accepts the Transcontinental railway standard, practically the standard outlined in the letter of the Minister of Public Works. The government of New Brunswick accepts that standard, and put it in their statute, Upon what ground does my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) ask this House to say that that standard should not be adopted when the government that he speaks for accept it and make it part of their statute?

Mr. CROCKET. My amendment does not ask that the standard be changed.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, but the hon. gentleman's argument was devoted for an hour to an attack upon this government for adopting a standard that the government of New Brunswick have accepted and have adopted and put in their statute. Then, the matter of the standard is wiped out; there is no complaint on that ground.

Mr. CROCKET. That is because this government insisted upon it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, the government of New Brunswick does not always take the advice of this government. Clause 16 says:

And such contract shall also provide that such railway shall be equipped by the said company or by the government of Canada, with proper and sufficient rolling stock.

That is inconsistent with the whole tenor of the statute? Why? The government of New Brunswick say first that the 'initial equipment' must be provided by this company. Compare that with the language in clause 10 which I shall read in a moment. Undoubtedly the government of New Brunswick expected that this government, when we came to operate, would supply any additional rolling stock, but to use the word 'equipment' in that regard unqualifiedly was not proper legislation, it was not consistent. and this House should not pass inconsistent legislation merely to make it conform with what we might consider to be inconsistent in some other legislation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Suppose we assume that my hon. friend's argument as to the meaning of the word 'equipment' in that respect is correct—I do not agree with him in his contention as to that—but if his argument is correct, is not that the best reason why we should insert that word?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is my argument why we should not do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You require the word 'equipment' in the restricted sense to make it conform with the legislation of New Brunswick.

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has forgotten or missed the few words with which I introduced my argument on this point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I have not.

Mr. GRAHAM. My contention is that the legislation of New Brunswick is inconsistent one clause with the other, and we should not make ours wrong because theirs is wrong. In our legislation we are meeting the desires of the New Brunswick legislature because that is what is in every portion of their statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister did not get my point.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not agree at all that we should make our legislation conform with theirs if theirs is wrong, or inconsistent—I do not mean wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you purport to recite it you ought to recite it correctly.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are not purporting to recite it; we are purporting to recite the meaning of it. Before I get through I think I will show my hon. friends that we are anxious to meet that situation, so that there will not be the vestige of an excuse for the government of New Brunswick not guaranteeing these bonds and entering into a contract. I have pointed out what I mean about clause 16. Now I will go back to clause 11:

No such agreement shall be entered into with any company or corporation for the construction of the said line of railway or for the guaranteeing of the said bonds, and no such bonds or debentures shall be guaranteed, unless and until the parliament of Canada shall enact legislation authorizing the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of the said railway, to the amount of not less than $6,400 per mile, and authorizing the entering, by the said government of Canada into an agreement with such company or corporation and with the government of New Brunswick aforesaid, for the leasing of the said line of railway, when completed——

Mark the words:

—with its appurtenances and rolling stock.

If this company were not to provide rolling stock why was it put in clause 11 that they must have that rolling stock or the bonds would not be guaranteed? That meant that the company must first furnish the initial rolling stock. That is what they say in section 10 and that is what was in their mind. They thought that as the business increased the operating company must furnish additional rolling stock. They provide in section 10 for initial equipment and then, in the next clause they provide for equipment which overlaps everything. In clause 10 we find a provision that will carry out their idea of initial equipment by the company and of additional equipment by the government of Canada. I think that no reasonable person could take any other meaning from looking into all the circumstances of the statute. I have read section 11 which says that they contemplated that this company must have rolling stock. Let me look back at section 10 and see if it is not based on the same idea:

Before any of the company's bonds shall be guaranteed, the company shall provide, in a manner satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by a deposit in money or other sufficient security, or of a deposit of part money and part security, in addition to such mortgage, for the payment of interest on such bonds during the construction of the said line of railway, and until the same shall have been fully completed and provided with the initial equipment——

It means exactly the same and coincides with the other clause, except that the use of the word 'equipment' shows that the government had it in their mind that it would be reasonable to expect that the company should supply the initial equipment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is there in that which is inconsistent with the idea of the government supplying it. The point of that is, that until the road is in operation and earning a revenue there must be some provision made for the payment of interest,

Mr. GRAHAM. They are going to release this money every ten miles, and consequently the section cannot mean what my hon. friend says it does. What they meant to say undoubtedly, and what we are willing to provide for, is that, when the road is completed and the government takes it over, as additional rolling stock is needed the government of Canada will provide it for the increasing trade. I cannot see that their legislation means anything else. To put the word 'equipment' in in two places and to say in one place the company must supply the initial equipment, and in another to say that the government of Canada must supply the equipment is conflicting. I believe the government of New Brunswick never intended it to mean anything else than that the initial equipment should be supplied by the company, and the company agrees to accept that. I am, therefore, prepared to agree to an amendment, and I think every reasonable man will accept it, which will cover what I think the government of New Brunswick had in its mind and will be what I believe to be reasonable, and that is to add after the word 'operation' in line 16, the words: 'Including the supply of additional rolling stock from time to time sufficient to handle the traffic as it may increase.' That means that the government of Canada in leasing this road shall agree to supply additional rolling stock from time to time sufficient to meet the needs of the traffic. Surely that would make it plain, and be fair, and it will I believe place in this resolution exactly what I believe the New Brunswick government had in its mind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The meaning of the legislature can only be found in the construction of the language used, and in my opinion it is utterly impossible to get any such meaning out of section 10 as that which the Minister of Railways has placed upon it. It is perfectly consistent with section 10 either that the equipment shall be supplied by the company or the equipment shall be supplied by the government of Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would the hon. gentleman think it reasonable that the government of New Brunswick should suppose that this government would supply the equipment as the road is being constructed?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not dealing with suppositions. I am dealing with the language of the statute. There is not one word in section 10 inconsistent with the provision in section 16, that the road may be equipped either by the company or by the government of Canada with proper and sufficient rolling stock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does the hon. gentleman make of section 9 which provides that the company shall give a mortgage upon its railway and rolling stock to secure the bonds which the province is to guarantee?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not wonder at the Minister of Railways who has not had the advantage of a training in the construction of statutes making an argument of that kind, but I am surprised at the Minister of Public Works who is an able and experienced lawyer, making such a suggestion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You won't answer?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will answer very quickly, and the answer is that this statute looked to two possibilities in respect to equipment, one possibility was equipment by the company and the other possibility was equipment by the government of Canada, and it was absolutely essential that both in sections 9 and 11 they should include rolling stock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the provincial government was in no way concerned in having the company provide the initial equipment why should they expressly provide that the mortgage for their security should cover the rolling stock?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Because if the rolling stock was there it was businesslike to provide that they should have a lien upon it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend think that the company would provide that initial equipment just for fun?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)? Certainly not; but in the progress of the negotiations the arrangement might have been that the company would provide the rolling stock, or, that the government of Canada would provide the rolling stock, and it was perfectly reasonable and consistent that the term 'rolling stock' should be used in sections 9 and 11. I should not think that the Minister of Public Works, who is a lawyer of well-known ability and experience, would put forward such an argument seriously. Section 10 had simply one thing in mind, and that was that the province of New Brunswick should have reasonable provision made, before this road was in operation, for the interest upon those bonds, and hence the wording of that section. It was absolutely immaterial, so far as that clause was concerned, in that aspect, whether the equipment should be provided by the company or by the government of Canada. What they were concerned with was chiefly that until the road was in operation and until revenue was being earned from it, some provision should be made for the payment of the interest on these bonds. The Minister of Public Works would himself have used about the same language as section 10 is couched in, to meet the same conditions.

Mr. CARVELL. I want to point out to my hon. friend from York that the object of the proposed amendment is to meet the contention which is put forth in the province of New Brunswick for the last three or four weeks, to the effect that they could not build this road on account of the little bit of equipment that is required. They say, if you get rid of the equipment, we can do it; but they are not touching the really important parts of this resolution. If my hon. friend were sincere, and wanted to make this conform to the legislation of New Brunswick, he would cut out the whole of the latter part of the resolution, which reads as follows:

Provided, however, that the said contract shall be entered into only upon the condition that the said railway be constructed upon plans and specifications to be approved of by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and shall be up to the general standard of the said National Transcontinental railway through the said province.

Section 11 of the Provincial Act provides that there can be no grade higher than four-tenths of one per cent. As the legislation stands, the government of New Brunswick could not sign a contract for a road with a higher grade than that.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that not the general standard of the Transcontinental?

Mr. CARVELL. No, it is not. The general standard is four-tenths of one per cent going east and six-tenths going west, where practicable; but if that is not practicable, the grade going west can be as high as one and one-tenth. When Mr. Hazen and his friends passed this legislation, they particularly located the road to run from Grand Falls to Andover, from Andover to Centreville, from Centreville to Lakeville, and from Lakeville to Woodstock. Now, it is a physical impossibility to build a railway between Clearview and Woodstock on a four-tenths grade, except at a cost of probably $100,000 a mile and by lengthening the road 8 or 10 miles. Therefore the government of New Brunswick will be compelled to change its legislation if it hopes to have the road built. My hon. friend from York is not sincere when he says he is moving this amendment to make it conform to the legislation of New Brunswick. He knows that he is not. He is only moving it for election purposes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not in order to question the sincerity of any member of the House.

Mr. CARVELL. If the Chairman wants me to withdraw that, I will do so, and I will say that if my hon. friend is sincere in wishing to change the unimportant part of the legislation, why does he not move to change the important part, and have a vote upon it? He dare not do it.

Mr. CROCKET. I will leave the sincerity of my hon. friend and myself in this matter to the electors of the counties of Carleton and York.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, may I ask your decision on the point I raised a few moments ago?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point raised, as I understand, is as to the power of this committee to introduce a word which might have the effect of imposing an additional burden on the people. The resolution has been brought down on the recommendation of the Governor. By it power is given to the government to enter into a contract for the operation, maintenance, upkeep and repair of a certain railway. A part of the proposed amendment is to introduce after the word 'operation,' the word 'equipment.' It would seem to me that this would mean an additional burden on the people, and therefore would come within the rule forbidding a private member moving an amendment or bringing in a motion involving an additional expenditure. But I am willing to hear the opinion of experienced members of the House on the point before ruling.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not sure that the rule applies where a resolution has been introduced and an amendment proposed. When a resolution is brought in by the government, it is obviously not incapable of amendment, and I think I have seen authority that it may be extended in such cases.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My view is that the resolution may be amended, but only in the way of reducing the burden on the people, as in Committee of Supply a private member can not move to increase an appropriation, but can move to reduce.

Mr. CROCKET. I was quite aware of the rule which precludes a private member from introducing a resolution or amendment which might entail a financial burden on the people; but I do not think that precludes a private member from moving an amendment to a resolution brought down by the government even though it may have the effect of possibly increasing the expenditure. I certainly can recall instances in which amendments of that kind have been moved in this House. For instance, when the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill was before this House, amendment after amendment was moved to change the route of the railway, adding possibly to the expense that might be entailed. The first part of this amendment seeks to amend the preamble of the resolution. It is simply only for the purpose of converting an untrue preamble or recital into a true preamble or recital. I submit that the amendment is perfectly in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the amendment of the hon. member had been divided into two parts and that down to line 15 stood alone, I presume I could accept it, it being merely a recital, but in the enacting part, lines 26 and 27, it appears to be in a little different position.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), thinks he knows of occasions when a money resolution was amended so as to extend it——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not contradict my hon. friend, but I have no such recollection. The spirit of the rule is that no charge shall be laid upon the public except upon the initiative of the Crown, and it would surprise me if precedent could be quoted to the effect that the rule had been extended in the way suggested. It will strike every member of the committee that if the object of the amendment is to extend the charge upon the people, it would certainly be out of order. I have listened all afternoon to this discussion, and would observe to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) that when the resolution provides for the leasing by the government of the road with its 'appurtenances and rolling stock' in my humble judgment that is the same as 'equipment.' I cannot see any difference.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Have we been sitting here since three o'clock discussing a matter without knowing that it was out of order?—discussing it from three o'clock until 11.20 and the Prime Minister raised no objection before? If we had known that you, Mr. Chairman, intended raising an objection of that kind, it could have been settled at three o'clock this afternoon. You have allowed this——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must interrupt the hon. member. The point of order has been raised by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) within the last fifteen minutes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But the amendment was handed to you this afternoon. Surely you as chairman should know whether it was out of order——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is at liberty to address himself to the point of order. That is the subject before the Chair and not the conduct of the chairman.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But, on the point of order, I have been under the impression that when an amendment is placed in the chairman's hands he should know whether it was in order or not. In that way, we should be prevented from losing hours and hours, perhaps days, in a discussion over a resolution that could not be voted on. In other words, the Prime Minister, who is leading the House, I should think, would have raised the objection at the time, and not allowed the whole day to go by. I think it is the duty of the Prime Minister to have shown us at the start that he intended to raise this objection. There is no doubt that if the Prime Minister says he will withdraw his opposition as to this being out of order, we can take the vote. But, as he has raised the point of order, the vote cannot be taken. There is some object in preventing the vote being taken. I think it is unfair that we should be here all day, and, at a quarter past eleven, the Minister of Railways should raise a point of order simply to escape a vote.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No authority has been quoted to me to show that the amendment is in order. I have had handed to me by the clerk a ruling of Speaker Kirkpatrick on a subject closely allied to this, and reported in Desjardin's 'Speakers' Decisions:'

Amendment ruled out of order because its effect would have been to increase the burthen on the people beyond that recommended by the Crown.

The House, according to order, resolves itself into a committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of land, or scrip redeemable in land, to the members of the enrolled militia force actively engaged in suppressing the half-breed and Indian outbreak in the Northwest.

The question being proposed, that the said resolutions be now read a second time; Mr. Watson moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Carey, that all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out, and the words 'recommitted to Committee of the Whole House, with power to amend the same by providing that any member of said enrolled militia who has located a homestead and pre-emption shall, in lieu of the grant hereinbefore mentioned, be entitled to get his pre-emption free,' inserted instead thereof.

Objection being taken to the said proposed amendment on the ground that it was in effect increasing the burthen beyond that recommended by the Crown,

Mr. Speaker said: 'That the point of order was well taken, and that the motion in amendment could not be put.'

It appears to me that this is sufficiently close to the present case to be applicable, and that the spirit of the rule with regard to increasing public burdens without the recommendation of the Crown applies to the proposed amendment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The authority which I had in mind is to be found in May's 'Parliamentary Practice', page 564:

The committee is not bound by the terms of the provisions which the ministers of the Crown have inserted in the Bill; and any member may propose an increase of the grants specified in these clauses, or to extend the application of the provisions of the Bill, whatever may be the cost resulting therefrom, so long as the power conferred by the royal recommendation is not exceeded.

That is the question here.

Acting on this principle, when, in 1812, a committee was considering a message from the Prince Regent, recommending, in general terms, provision to be made for the family of Mr. Spencer Perceval, amendments were permitted for increasing the provision proposed by the minister; and this practice has been supported by rulings from the chair, though, on the last occasion, not without remarks which deserve careful consideration.

I knew I had seen something of the kind. But there are other authorities later in the book which seem to point in the other direction. But what I have read is what I had in mind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling would be that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CROCKET. In accordance with your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, I move that the preamble of the resolution be amended by inserting the word 'equipment' between 'operation' and 'maintenance' in the fifteenth line thereof.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am willing to hear any objection on the point of order, if any member desires. It appears to me that it is in order to make this amendment as being in the preamble, the recital, and not in the enacting part.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I move that between the word 'with' and the words 'rolling stock' in the twenty-seventh line the word 'initialled' be inserted. That conforms absolutely with section 10.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. In order that we may remove the last vestige of misunderstanding, I would move to insert after the word 'operation' in the same line, the words 'including the supply of additional rolling stock from time to time sufficient to handle the traffic as it may increase.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You would have to get the assent of the Crown to that.

Mr. GRAHAM. His Excellency, I think, understood this to be the meaning of the resolution. I do not think it will require the consent of the Crown, it is simply to make the meaning plain.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the proposed amendment involves an increase without the consent of the Crown, I would not be prepared to consent to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Better go to the telephone.

Mr. GRAHAM. The operation really means the addition of that rolling stock, but in order not to have a misunderstanding it is better to have this inserted. There is one other amendment, that the figures '50' in the phrase 'from Fredericton south a distance of 50 miles' be changed to 40. The reason for this change is that if we leave it at 50 miles it might be that we could not enter into arrangements to operate that section until a bridge was constructed, which might cause delay.

Amendments agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 150) to authorize the government of Canada to acquire by lease a certain line of railway in the province of New Brunswick.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. MACKENZIE KING.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Before the orders of the day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. In the 'Mail and Empire' of March 15 there is an article under the following heading:

MINISTER'S DENIAL IS PROVED FALSE.

Mr. King declares Berlin Board of Trade did not denounce reciprocity. Record disproves it. Return in Commons shows that he was informed of board's action.

Then appears the following:

Special to the 'Mail and Empire.'

Ottawa, March 14.—Another return of resolutions and correspondence respecting the reciprocity agreement was brought down to parliament to-day by Hon. Mr. Fielding. Among the resolutions opposing the agreement was one passed by the Board of Trade of Berlin, on January 13. It will be remembered that during his speech in condemnation of the government's policy Mr. Lloyd Harris (Brantford) mentioned that the Berlin Board of Trade had adopted such a resolution. He was at once contradicted by Hon Mackenzie King.

The file of correspondence brought down today includes the resolution to which Mr. Harris referred. It also includes a telegram from Mr. M. W. A. Lochead, secretary of the Berlin organization, apprising the Minister of Labour of the action of the board and an acknowledgment of its reception sent in reply by Mr. King. The resolution itself reached Ottawa on January 14 and Mr. King wrote to Berlin saying that he had laid it before Sir Wilfrid Laurier and that the premier had promised to give it due consideration.

There is such a semblance of truth in that article that I am afraid the public will not be able to discern the amount of error which it really contains. The statement I made to the House when the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) spoke the other evening was entirely and absolutely correct. I refrained from drawing the attention of the House to this article until my hon. friend, who has been absent for the last few days, was in his seat; and as he is in his seat to-day, I now draw the attention of the House to it. When my hon. friend was speaking, he made reference to an article which appeared in the Toronto 'Globe' and which led him to believe that the Berlin Board of Trade had, a day or two previous, passed a resolution opposing the agreement which is proposed and which is now before us for consideration. The hon. gentleman, along with others in this country, got his information from a report sent out erroneously by the secretary of the Berlin Board of Trade, and which appeared in several papers, but in particular in the London 'Free Press', under the following head:

The Berlin Board of Trade unanimously oppose pact.

Then it goes on:

At a recent meeting of the board this resolution was reaffirmed.

Referring to a resolution passed while the negotiations were under way, and before the present agreement was made known. This article, which appeared in the London 'Free Press', was copied into other newspapers, and also a despatch was sent to the Toronto 'Globe.' It was this despatch which led my hon friend and many others to believe that the Berlin Board of Trade had reaffirmed the resolution they had passed at the beginning of the proceedings; and it was to this alleged reaffirmed resolution, which he supposed to relate to the proposed agreement now under consideration, that my hon. friend referred. My hon. friend is in his seat and acknowledges that in that statement I am quite right. I understood him to refer to the resolution that was supposed to be reaffirmed, but which in fact was never reaffirmed; and it was because I knew he was in error and would not intentionally make an error that I corrected him. The Berlin Board of Trade did in fact pass a resolution when they were afraid that the manufacturers of that town were going to be seriously affected by the reciprocal agreement. That resolution was forwarded to me and I presented it to the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister will recall that I spoke of the importance of considering the weight to be attached to an expression of opinion of that kind coming from a manufacturing centre like Berlin.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the hon. gentleman a copy of that resolution?

Mr. KING. I have. It is as follows:

That in view of the agitation now being carried on in the United States in favour of a reciprocal trade agreement with Canada, obviously for the purpose of enlarging the markets for the manufacturers in the United States at the expense of Canadian industries and of Canadian workingmen.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KING (reading):

And in view of the present agitation in the prairie provinces for a reduction in the Canadian tariff.

It is hereby resolved that we, the members of the Berlin Board of Trade are very strongly opposed to any reciprocal tariff arrangement between Canada and the United States which would mean the lowering of the present Canadian customs tariff, as we are convinced that any such reduction would be injurious to Canadian interests. That this board is of the opinion that the Canadian tariff must be so framed and maintained as to continue to encourage the investment of capital in Canadian enterprises and to transfer to the workshops of the Dominion the manufacture of many of the goods which are now imported from other countries, and notably from the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KING (reading):

That this board is further of the opinion that while our tariff should be primarily framed for the protection of Canadian manufacturers and other Canadian interests, it should nevertheless continue to give a preference to the mother country and also to any other part of the British Empire with which reciprocal preferential tariffs can be arranged, and recognizing always that under any conditions such preference should continue to afford adequate tariff protection to all Canadian interests.

That was the resolution passed.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the date of that?

Mr. KING. That resolution was on January 13. I have here an article from one of the Berlin papers which explains what took place on February 24, which was the time at which Mr. Lochead, secretary of the Berlin Board of Trade, sent to the London 'Free Press' and one or two other papers the statement which led them to believe that the Berlin Board of Trade had reaffirmed the resolution it had passed at an earlier date. I have verified these facts, and they have been given to the public and never questioned, so I will read from this statement:

Unfortunately Secretary Lochead's letter has placed the Berlin Board of Trade in a wholly false light on the question of the tariff agreement, and at the same time has played into the hands of a newspaper that is exploiting the question for political purposes.

In the first place the Berlin Board of Trade did not pass a resolution opposing the tariff agreement. The resolution quoted was passed while negotiations were pending and before any agreement had been reached, and therefore before it was known that the interests of all Berlin and Waterloo county industries had been carefully protected.

In the second place, the Board of Trade did not reaffirm the resolution passed at the annual meeting in January, as stated by Secretary Lochead in his letter. . . .

According to the minutes there were but six members of the Board of Trade present at the meeting. The motion arose out of a complaint made by several members of the board that proper publicity had not been given to the reciprocity resolutions passed at the annual meeting in January. A motion to reaffirm was, it is true, submitted, but after lengthy debate it was decided that it would be improper for half a dozen members of the board to undertake to reaffirm on behalf of the whole board a resolution which had been passed at a general meeting at which 150 members were present, and when the members had no information as to the text of the tariff agreement before them. It was also argued that, since by the terms of the agreement, not one Berlin industry could be shown to be prejudicially affected, and that as the purpose of the original resolution was the protection of local interests, to reaffirm the original resolution would be inadvisable. The motion above quoted was then adopted as a compromise between the contending sections of the Board of Trade council.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that an editorial of the newspaper?

Mr. KING. No, it is a news item headed 'Board of Trade Council did not reaffirm the reciprocity resolution.'

Mr. BLAIN. What newspaper?

Mr. KING. The Berlin 'Telegraph,' of February 27 last. So, what I said the other evening in reply to my hon. friend is absolutely correct, and this item which appears in the Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' and which says that my denial proved false is wholly incorrect. I think the facts I have given the House are sufficient to bear me out in my statement.

Mr. HARRIS. I accept the explanation given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. King). I made the statement on the floor of the House in perfect good faith, having read in the Toronto 'Globe' a report to that effect. Since that item appeared, a copy of the Berlin 'News-Record' has been sent me. That paper gives the date of the passing of the resolution as January 12, and on the 13th the secretary telegraphed to the minister the gist of the resolution asking him to place the contents before the Prime Minister. That was acknowledged. But the end of the paragraph states this:

To make its position stronger, the Board of Trade, since Hon. Mr. Fielding laid the terms of the proposed pact on the table of the House, has ordered copies of the original resolution to be sent to the leading newspapers of Ontario, thus showing that the board considered that it covered the ground well and was opposed to the pact.

I presume the explanation made by the minister is in connection with this last statement by this newspaper. That was probably at the meeting where the six members were present. However, I am not familiar with the details, and only wish to say that the statement I made on the floor of the House was made in entire good faith.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CROTHERS AND THE FARMERS' BANK CASE.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). I rise to a question of privilege. Referring to remarks made by myself on the 15th of this month when the affairs of the Farmers' bank were under discussion, the Ottawa 'Free Press,' in an article on March 17, in a leading editorial, has the following:

In order to bolster up his case for an investigation into the incorporation of the Farmers' Bank, Mr. Crothers with the idea of showing that 'something was held back' revamped the story in distorted form of a purely ordinary business transaction which Mr. Calvert had with the said bank.

I shall not read the whole of that article, as it would not edify the members present nor improve the fragrance of 'Hansard.' What I did say on that occasion, as will be found at page 5486 of Unrevised 'Hansard,' was as follows:

We have been told—I do not remember whether in this House or out of it—that the person who was chief whip in the Liberal party in this House at that time introduced Travers to the Finance Minister. It has been established——

I think, perhaps, that word 'established,' was a little too strong. I would not use it if I were speaking now, but I did use it then.

It has been established that, shortly afterwards, that chief whip made a loan from this bank—stated by some to amount to $5,000, but, I believe, stated by himself at $3,000, and that loan was charged up to commissions. Something occurred we had not learned yet.

The difficulty seems to be about the statement that this loan was charged up to commissions. My statement was founded on the report of the police court proceedings, as reported in the Ottawa 'Citizen,' and the Ottawa 'Journal,' of February 18, which report was in concurrent terms and was as follows:

Travers had a personal conference with Hon. Mr. Fielding, being introduced by W. S. Calvert, then Liberal whip. Mr. Fielding asked Travers if he had paid anything to Calvert for the latter's friendly interest, and Travers was able to answer truthfully that he had not. Later Calvert was lent $5,000 without security, which was charged to 'commissions' on the bank's books. This loan, later, was repaid in full.

The proceedings were reported in the 'Evening Telegram,' of Toronto in these words, this being part of the cross examination of Travers under oath:

'What took place between you and Calvert in the delay in getting the certificate?'

'We took it down to Fielding, and we had 15 or 30 minutes interview with him.'

'Did he assist you?'

That is, Calvert.

'Yes, he said all he could for us.'

Travers swore he never paid Mr. Calvert anything at any time.

'Did you loan him any money?'

'Not then, but I did some months afterwards.'

'How much?'

'About $5,000 or $6,000.

Travers said that all had been paid back but $560, and he had heard this was paid since the failure of the bank.

The statement I made that this $3,000 or $5,000, whichever it was, had been charged up to commissions was based on these reports of the proceedings in the police court in Toronto as evidence coming from Travers under oath, and not made without any foundation whatever as charged in this article.

INVESTIGATION INTO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE SOREL NAVAL SHIPYARDS AND ACCUSATIONS AGAINST THE MEMBER FOR RICHELIEU.

Mr. P. E. BLONDIN (Champlain). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I desire to request certain information from the hon. the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), and with that end in view I will ask permission to read a letter which I have this moment received:

Sorel, March 20, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Blondin, M.P.,

This is to inform you that I have been dismissed by the department from St. Joseph de Sorel. It happened on Friday evening when my presence card was taken from me.

I immediately spoke to the chief, Mr. Papineau, who told me that he knew nothing about the matter. I also saw Mr. Badeau, head of my department, who also professed ignorance on the subject. This means that the timekeeper has taken upon himself to dismiss me on the order of Mr. A. Archambault, assistant to Mr. Oscar Champagne, at present in Ottawa.

Ask Champagne why he dismissed me.

Yours truly,

A. SENECAL.

That Mr. Senecal is the witness, Andromique Senecal, who came here last week and gave evidence in the investigation now being carried on concerning Marine Department matters at Sorel.

I wish to inquire of the minister whether he gave orders to any one in the department to dismiss that witness, and also if it is his intention to permit attempts at intimidation of witnesses and thus to prevent us from obtaining, in the course of this investigation, independent evidence free from all constraint.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, I may say that I have given no orders for the dismissal of Mr. Senécal. I will also inform my hon. friend that very far from preventing witnesses from stating the truth, the Marine Department is anxious to do all in its power to make the investigation thorough in every way.

I should add, however, that I understood from the witness himself when he gave his evidence here that he had left the government service.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) yesterday called attention to two returns which he said had not been brought down, one relating to the appointment of fish wardens in Victoria county, from 1906 to 1910 and another as to the fish bounties paid in the south riding of Cape Breton at the same time. I must inform my hon. friend that on February 28 last I laid before the House the return concerning the fish bounties. The other report is being prepared by the officers of my department. The hon. member will see that he has asked for the name, length of service and amount paid to each of these wardens. Owing to the demand for the length of service, the return involves more than a few days copying, as it is necessary to look into all the reports and records of each of these guardians. If my hon. friend does not insist on the length of service, I may get the return to-morrow.

Mr. MADDIN. I had no notice of the return having been brought down, and on five or six occasions I called at the office of Mr. Polkinghorne and inquired for the return. I must say in justice to Mr. Polkinghorne that on none of these occasions was he in the office. With regard to the fish wardens, I asked a similar question in the House in 1909 for the year 1908, and the information was furnished concerning about 125 appointees, as an answer to a question, in a very few days. The additional years would only multiply the work by four, and I trust that the minister will let me have that return as promptly as possible as I am quite interested in having it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to call the attention of the government to a number of returns not yet brought down and which were moved for some time ago. These returns are as follows:

The others are of a more recent date, but I have given the orders and addresses which have been moved for up to the 6th March. The Prime Minister will know that there are some of them which involve greater delay than others, but in so far as these others are concerned, I would think that they might have been brought down before or at least that they might be brought down at a very early day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that some of these orders have already been complied with; for instance that with regard to the boundaries of Manitoba, I believe that everything there is up to date on the question has been brought down already. Then, I think that all the resolutions and communications in regard to reciprocity have been brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. They have been brought down in instalments from time to time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then there are some which take a very long time. For instance, I notice that amongst the returns asked for is a return of the regulations of Great Britain with regard to the taking of the census. It will take some time to get that. Then there is another return, moved for by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), with regard to certain regulations in the United States touching trusts. We cannot get that except by very long and tedious correspondence. At all events there are some of these returns that can be brought down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not depending on my own information. I made an application to the proper officers of the House for a statement of all the returns which have not yet been complied with. It may be that some misapprehension has occurred. Undoubtedly, certain documents have been brought down that would be included in this list. I might say that in so far as the return with regard to matters touching the census are concerned, I had a personal conversation with my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who told me that if the order were literally complied with it would take a very long time, and he suggested that the purpose might be attained by bringing down the return in a very much simpler and abbreviated form. I at once assented to that being done and said that if we required more information we would inform him of the fact.

Mr. FISHER. I may say that the chief census officer is engaged in the preparation of what my hon. friend asks for, and it will be ready in a few days.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to the return relating to the Atlantic Fisheries the reports were brought down some time in December last, giving all the pleadings before the Hague Tribunal and the award. After that, the papers in reference to the settlement of the question of litigation were brought down on my own motion, and these are all the documents I know of.

SUPPLY—STATEMENT IN 'GLOBE' RE DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to an article published in the 'Globe' newspaper yesterday, which reads:

GOVERNMENT TO FORCE OPPOSITION'S HAND.

Attempt to Delay Passage of the Reciprocity Agreement.

To Concentrate on Supply Vote.

Continuation of Present Tactics Might Necessitate Appeal to Country.

(Special Despatch to The Globe.)

Ottawa, March 19.—With the ending of the fiscal year less than two weeks away, and a very small percentage of Supply for the coming year voted, despite the persistent efforts of the government, and with the obvious obstruction of the opposition, particularly during the past two weeks, it has been decided by the government to devote most of the balance of the month to endeavouring to get Supply, leaving the less urgent matter of passing the reciprocity proposals over until next month.

The article goes on to say:

The government will, by attempting to force Supply during the next two weeks, compel the obstructionists to clearly show their hand, and in the event of a continuation of the present tactics and a refusal to pass an interim Supply Bill, if found necessary, it might be that an appeal to the country would be found necessary to solve the deadlock. The issue in that event would be clearly defined, and although it would be obviously unjust for the opposition to force an appeal to the country before another session, when the Redistribution Bill could be put through and the west given its proper representation in new members, the onus would lie with the opposition, and the government would not fear the result.

Further on it says:

It is probable that Supply will be the first order of government business for the next two weeks, with probably one day in each week given to the continuation of the debate on reciprocity. The developments of the two weeks, with the government's determination to keep the House sitting late unless some progress is made, should serve to put the situation clearly before the people of Canada.

I would like to point out that the article says that the less urgent matter of passing the reciprocity proposals will be left over until next month, and it concludes in these words:

It may be noted that during the past two weeks the business of legislation and the voting of supplies has practically not been advanced a single step. It may also be asserted with assurance that the government has no intention of either dropping or modifying its reciprocity proposals, and will use every endeavour to have them passed by the House as speedily as possible.

These two statements seem to contradict each other. Now, as every one in the House knows that article is absolutely untrue, and the 'Globe,' with its usual indifference to truth, evidently pays no attention to what transpires in this House. I have gone through 'Hansard,' and counted up the columns occupied by Liberal members and Conservative members respectively, to see exactly who has been guilty of obstruction, if there has been any obstruction. On the 28th of February, when the discussion on reciprocity was resumed, there were 80 columns taken up by the Liberals and none by the Conservatives. On the 2nd March reciprocity was again up and there were 54 columns taken by the Liberals and 29 by the Conservatives, while on the matter of the health of Ottawa nine columns were taken by the Liberals, making 63 in all for the Liberals that day. On the 23rd of March the questions before the House were: the garnishment of civil servants' salaries and the Hague Tribunal, and on that day there were 32 columns taken by the Liberals and 44 by the Conservatives. On the 6th of March the subjects under discussion were the Lanctot matter, Ottawa's health, the Hague Tribunal and Supply, and on that day 42 columns were taken by the Liberals and 29 columns by the Conservatives. On March the 7th reciprocity was again before the House, and there were 43 columns taken by the Liberals and 40 by the Conservatives. On March the 8th reciprocity was again before the House, and there were 68 columns taken by the Liberals and 27 by the Conservatives. On March the 9th reciprocity was again discussed, and there were 53 columns taken by the Liberals and 48 by the Conservatives. On March the 10th the Minister of Railways brought in his annual statement, and he and his Liberal friends occupied 67 columns, as against 19 columns by the Conservatives. On March the 13th the Georgian Bay canal was discussed, and there were 39 columns occupied by the Liberals as compared with 19 occupied by the Conservatives. On March the 14th the question of the capitalization of the railways introduced by the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean), was before the House and including a speech by the member for North Cape Breton on reciprocity the Liberals occupied 33 columns that day and the Conservatives 47. On March the 15th and 16th the question of the Farmers' Bank was under discussion and the Liberals occupied 73 columns these two days as compared with the Conservatives 142, that being a field day for the Conservatives. On March the 17th several matters were before the House including the question of health, the question of the speech made by the hon. member for North Oxford, alien labour, and the reading of resolutions in regard to reciprocity, after which the House went into Supply. Yesterday, the resolution of the Minister of Railways was before the House and the Liberals occupied 46 columns and the Conservatives 33. A summary of this from and including the last day of February up to date gives 687 columns of 'Hansard' filled with speeches from the Liberals and 549 columns occupied by Conservative members. If we exclude the discussion on the Farmers' Bank, and every one will admit that the members on this side were justified in bringing that up, then the Liberals have occupied 614 columns to 407 by the Conservatives. During all this time we have only had an opportunity of discussing reciprocity on portions of five days, and while the Conservatives have filled 162 columns of 'Hansard' on the question of reciprocity the Liberals have filled up 335. In view of these figures it is up to the 'Globe' newspaper to apologize, although I do not expect that it will. This article in the 'Globe' accuses the opposition of obstruction, and it says that in consequence of that obstruction the government may be forced to go to the country. It looks to me as though the government were paving the way to go to the country as they know that the longer these proposals are before the people the more obnoxious they become. At all events the figures I have given prove that if the government do decide to go to the country and deprive the west of the extra representation to which it is entitled the onus and fault and blame will rest on the shoulders of the government and not on the opposition.

RECIPROCITY—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to a statement made referring to me by the member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), in his speech on reciprocity on the 14th instant, when I was not present in the House. He said:

> I received from a member from the west this afternoon some evidence that seems to me very striking. In the great province of Saskatchewan they have 51 members local and Dominion, and I am told on the authority of an hon. member from that province that out of the 51 there is only one man who is opposing this pact and that man is the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in this House. All the rest are in favour of the agreement.

The hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) has been already taken to task by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), because of a serious misrepresentation of that gentleman's attitude made in the course of the same speech, but his statement regarding me has been quoted outside of this House where the hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) is not so well known as he is inside or I would not take the trouble to call attention to it. He had no warrant whatever for making the statement he did. I have so far refrained from expressing any opinion one way or the other. When I have a statement to make I will make it myself, and will not ask the hon. member for North Cape Breton to make it for me. He is one of the last men in the House to whom I would make that request. This is a matter of immense importance, and while the government supporters had no difficulty in endorsing the proposals the moment they were laid before the House and the country, and the moment they heard the barest outline of them, or even before they heard it at all, I have felt it my duty to carefully weigh every bit of information available before coming to a decision. That information has been meted out to us in a most niggardly way. It has had to be dragged out of the government item by item like drawing teeth. The House has a right to complain of the meagre information supplied, in such marked contrast to that supplied to Congress by the American government to enable them to study the question from every point of view. In some respects we are even now dependent on information supplied by the American government which our government should have supplied. But we want more information still than the American government has supplied, and along lines which it was not necessary for them to give. We want information in regard to the trade and prices in Australia and New Zealand, and the other British colonies and in Argentine and the other favoured nations which are to have free entry to our markets which is denied to us in their markets. I am justified in saying that no one in the House has yet had the information necessary to enable him to make a satisfactory study of the full effect of the agreement. It is only within the last few days that important statements have been made on the subject by the Prime Minister, and the Finance Minister which alter in a material degree the bearing of this whole question; and while it will no doubt still further add to the satisfaction of such manufacturers as are endorsing these proposals—and there are many of them—it will on the other hand be received with bitter disappointment by those farmers who are also supporting it in the hope of getting a square deal.

On Friday last the attention of the House was called by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) to a report appearing in the 'Globe' newspaper of a speech delivered at Woodstock, Ontario, by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). The hon. member for Dauphin used these words:

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a matter that I wish to bring to your consideration and to the consideration of this House. I do it because I see that the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) is in his seat. It is a matter that has been brought up already in this House by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). It is with regard to an article that appeared in the 'Globe' of date Saturday, March 4, of this year. At a meeting at Woodstock, in Ontario, the hon. member for North Oxford, in addressing the people there spoke as follows: The speech is so good I shall read it all:

'With regard to reciprocity, he noted that very little had been heard about the consumer's interest. He did not believe the reciprocity agreement being negotiated would affect the price to the consumer adversely. That might seem strange, as it was supposed the farmer would get a better price.'

He was addressing, I understand, an aggregation of men who were more or less engaged in manufacturing. He went on to say:

'He could not see that manufacturers would be touched very much, as few articles manufactured in Canada were affected. He was sure the Bain and Woodstock wagon companies would compete in the world's markets even with 2½ per cent reduction in the tariff. He thought the manufacturers opposed reciprocity because of what might follow, the 'thin end of the wedge,' but he had been assured——'

This is what I want to bring to your notice: '—he had been assured by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding that nothing of the sort would follow. They had gone as far in the farmers' interests as they would.'

As a farmer and a representative of farmers, I want to emphasize that point that one of the most aggressive members on the Liberal side of the House, one of the strongest supporters of the First Minister and his government, in a public meeting gives his word as a member of this House to the people of Woodstock, a manufacturing centre, that he has the word absolutely of the First Minister and the Minister of Finance that the farmers' interests would not be conserved any further than was done by this agreement. He goes on to say:

'It would be foolish for us to think of tinkering with the tariff or putting it on an unstable basis.'

He was talking to manufacturers.

'Therefore, the present government, in his view, would not tinker any more with it unless to make some minor adjustments.'

This matter was brought up by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), and the First Minister in reply said:

'With regard to the other question, I think my hon. friend had better wait until the hon. member for North Oxford is in his seat.'

This is the first opportunity I have had of bringing the matter before the House when the hon. member was in his seat. I hope that he will reply to me either that he is misreported in this Liberal newspaper or that he will repudiate this statement. From a farmers' standpoint, I hope he will not say the statement is correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can relieve my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) from answering the question of my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Campbell). I can answer him now. There is no doubt whatever as to the attitude of the government. It has been defined on this floor more than once, the last time it was defined was only two or three days ago, when the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question put to him with regard to the speech of President Taft and that answer will give all the information which my hon. friend wants. The Finance Minister was questioned as to the speech delivered by President Taft at Atlanta, especially to the following extract:

'When we entered upon these negotiations, I asked the Secretary of State and his commissioners to offer free trade in everything, but this Canada could not grant us, because she has a protective system and she was afraid of the competition of our better-organized industries.'

To this the Minister of Finance replied:

'That statement may be entirely correct, and I have no doubt is, as to the instructions that the President gave to his officials. But as to what actually occurred in the conference, the matter did not advance to a position which would enable these gentlemen to make such a formal offer in that way. At the very earliest stage in the negotiations we certainly gave them to understand that we could not undertake to have any free trade in manufactures, speaking generally.

This is the position of the government. We have undertaken to have reciprocity in natural products, not in manufactured products. At the present time our policy is before the House to have reciprocity in natural products, and I shall be very glad if we have the assistance of our friends that far in favour of the farmers. I doubt very much if we will, but we will see what we will do afterwards.

The statement made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was quite consistent with our policy, it was nothing new, and he had perfect authority, not only he but every member of the Liberal side, to make that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance authorize the member in question to make that statement?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have answered that already. It is perfectly true. The hon. member for North Oxford and every Liberal member had such authority, he was not kept in ignorance of our policy in this matter and knew it well. He only stated what is our general policy.

It may be added that this is in accordance with the answer given to the manufacturers' deputation by the Prime Minister in January last.

During the last few days I have received resolutions from different grain growers' associations in the following terms—they are all alike:

1. That the reciprocity agreement before the House of Commons be ratified during the present session.
2. That agricultural implements be placed on the free list during the present session.
3. That the British preference be increased to fifty per cent of the general tariff at the present session.

If the grain growers had been aware of the government's pledge to the manufacturers, they would not have passed these three resolutions, because the last two are incompatible with the first, and they must accept the alternative between them. If the members of the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan had been aware of the Prime Minister's statement that the present government had gone as far in the farmers' interests as they would, and that they would not tinker any more with the tariff, unless to make some minor adjustments, they also would not have added to their reciprocity resolution the clauses calling for a downward revision of the tariff and an increase of the British preference, because if the reciprocity agreement passes, it precludes a reduction of the duties on manufactured goods.

In regard to the period for which the government's pledge not to reduce the tariff holds good it must not be forgotten that in the exchange of letters that took place between the American and Canadian representatives it is expressly stated that while either party is free hereafter to make changes it is hoped and expected that the arrangement will remain in operation for a considerable period. The Minister of Finance has stated that the government are in honour bound to make every endeavour to carry out the understanding contained in the correspondence.

At the great farmer's delegation which was heard in this House on the 16th December last the memorial on the Customs tariff was presented by Mr. McCuaig with the remark that it was the most important of all the requests presented that day.

The arguments used by nearly every speaker on its behalf were levelled at the undue protection granted to the manufacturers and the burden thus imposed upon the farming community. Mr. R. McKenzie, secretary of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association and editor in chief of the 'Grain Grower's Guide,' in the longest and most exhaustive speech made on the subject touched on no other point and from beginning to end confined himself to a reasoned demand for the reduction of the excessive protection now enjoyed by the manufacturers. Under this agreement it now appears that almost the sole benefit to the farmers is that they are to be allowed to sell their products in a free market, but they must continue to buy their implements and all the necessaries, including such natural products as coal, coal oil and lumber, in a highly protected one. It seems impossible to believe that Mr. Mackenzie, who has for weeks been in such close touch with the government and the Liberal members, has been in ignorance of what has now come to light. Yet the 'Grain Grower's Guide' has so far given no intimation of it to the farmers of the northwest.

In the reciprocity negotiations we were informed that the Canadian commissioners would not even listen to the offer of the Americans for any reciprocity in manufactured goods. The farmers delegation specially asked amongst other things for free trade in agricultural implements, machinery, vehicles, illuminating fuel and lubricating oils, cement and lumber. The only concessions they get in regard to any of these items is a reduction in the duty on agricultural implements and cement, so small as to be of practically no material advantage to them. And the condition attached to the so-called reciprocity in natural products—which by no means includes all natural products—

Mr. SPEAKER. I have allowed communications, telegrams, &c., concerning reciprocity to be read on the motion to go into supply; but as the House has referred the reciprocity resolutions to the Committee on Ways and Means, I do not think that a specific discussion of the reciprocity question can be in order at this stage.

Mr. LAKE. I have no intention of entering into a specific discussion of the question at all, but I am merely making a statement of facts very much along the line of those made in the House on a resolution to go into supply. I do not intend to argue the question from any point of view but wish simply to make what I understand to be a statement of the facts:

And the condition attached to the so called reciprocity in natural products—which by no means includes all natural products—is that the present government will positively not tinker any more with the tariff for a considerable time to come unless to make some minor adjustments. At this session the government has turned down the proposals of the opposition for government abattoirs and chilled meat system, for the government operation of terminal elevators, and for a substantial reduction of the duties on agricultural implements.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that the government had turned down the proposition of the opposition for a reduction of the duties on agricultural implements. Is that the policy of the opposition which has been turned down by the government?

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman may draw what conclusions he chooses in regard to that matter, the fact still remains that the government turned down a resolution on that subject. I firmly believe that for a time advantages will accrue to the farmers of the northwest from the free entry of their grain and cattle into the United States market. It will give better competition for these products and they will be better assured of getting their true value. It must not be forgotten, however, that both countries have a surplus, and the price of the whole is finally fixed by the value of that surplus in the Liverpool market.

It is true that it has been generally expected that the democratic party now coming into power in the United States would have materially reduced or taken off altogether the duty on food products and raw materials whether this agreement had been entered into or not. But apart from that I have from the first been favourably disposed to the pact both on account of the free entry of our grain into the United States, and also from the belief that it was a step which was certain to be followed by a reduction of the present high protection on manufactured goods.

On the other hand the principle laid down by the government that the measure must be accepted or rejected as a whole now appears in the view of the government's latest statement to involve the acceptance of their now declared policy that there shall be no further substantial reduction of the duty on any manufactured goods. This is a policy I will not accept. It changes the whole situation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must admit that he is now discussing reciprocity, and that cannot be done except in committee.

Mr. LAKE. I have just but a couple of minutes more when I shall conclude.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is allowed to do that, every other member can do the same thing.

Mr. LAKE. I am merely making a personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must submit to the rule of the House and not discuss anything which has been referred to in the committee except in committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend is violating the rules, there have been at least a dozen others who have been guilty of the same violation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have said that on the motion to go into supply, telegrams and resolutions might be read, but no one could enter into a specific discussion of the question of reciprocity which has been referred to the committee. I am in the hands of the House. The older members know what the custom is in a matter of this kind.

Mr. LAKE. I wish merely to say a few words with regard to the statement made by the right hon. the Prime Minister the other day and also to ask for some information from the government with regard to this most important question. The right hon. the Prime Minister states that every Liberal member was aware of the government's policy in this respect and knew it well. I presume they were informed in caucus. They kept it well to themselves, for though I had strong suspicions that it might be so, I had up to Friday last no positive information. Nor, I am sure are the people generally aware of this condition, especially in the northwest.

It therefore appears that Liberal members and the Liberal press have been trying to have this matter rushed through before all its phases and all its significance have been thoroughly before the people.

It cannot become effective before the American Congress has dealt with it, which will not be for some time yet. In the meantime the government should compile further statistics in regard to the prices of the various commodities dealt with both at Canadian and American centres and also at the principle points in the British colonies and the favoured nations which may come into competition with our farmers in the Canadian home markets. Also statistics should be compiled in regard to the exports of those countries to other nations as well as to Canada, and such further information which will give parliament and the country generally a clearer understanding of what they are doing. In the meantime the valuable discussion which has been taking place in the House should be continued from time to time by those who have information to impart. This is too big a question to be decided without the fullest investigation.

Mr. FOWKE. May I ask a question?

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is out of order.

Mr. FOWKE. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) opposing the reciprocity agreement because it does not provide for reciprocity in manufactured articles?

Mr. LAKE. I have made a definite statement, and the hon. gentleman can take what comfort he likes from it.

RECIPROCITY—RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. FOWKE. I should like to present a resolution moved by the Oshawa fruit growers and the letter accompanying it:

Dear Sir:—The following was carried unanimously Friday, March 10, at a largely attended meting of our co-operative company: That the Oshawa Fruit Growers, Limited, heartily endorse the fruit schedules of the reciprocity agreement negotiated by Messrs. Fielding and Paterson and that we as farmers and fruit growers are strongly in favour of the adoption of the agreement without change unless it be to broaden its scope of free trade.

Yours truly,
Elmer Lick,
Secretary.

I should like to explain that this co-operative society embraces hundreds of the leading agriculturists of the county of Ontario and the adjoining county of Durham and includes also the horticulturists of that large district.

Mr. REID (Grenville). May I ask the hon. gentleman was not there another resolution passed by certain parties in Oshawa?

Mr. FOWKE. If so, I never heard of it.

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). I would like to put on record a statement of the employees of the Hamilton Cotton company as follows:

The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Premier, Dominion of Canada,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—We, the undersigned employees of the Hamilton Cotton Company, wish to place ourselves on record as strongly opposed to any change in the tariff relations between Canada and the United States.

We would respectfully call your attention to the fact that the working people of Canada, generally, have been for some years more prosperous people of the United States, and we working people of the United States, and we firmly believe that any change in the fiscal policy of the country will be detrimental to the interests of the working class and have a tendency to lower wages and increase the cost of living.

This is signed by the employees of the Hamilton Cotton company, each one giving his street address. I have also a statement from the request of the employees of Brandram-Henderson, Limited, a large manufacturing concern, with branches in Montreal, Halifax, St. John and Winnipeg. Their petition is as follows:

We, the undersigned employees of Brandram-Henderson, Limited, would greatly urge that there be no reduction made in the present tariff rates, as we feel sure that if the government makes any reduction it would be very bad for the city workingmen of Canada, as we chiefly depend on the manufacturers of Canada to gain a livelihood.

This is signed by John E. Doyle, Fred Robinson, and other employees of the company to the number of forty-eight. I have also one from the Daughters of the Empire claiming to represent 10,000 women in Canada:

Moved by Mrs. H. S. Strathy, seconded by Mrs. E. F. B. Johnstone, resolved, that this Order fears that the proposed reciprocity agreement with the United States of America will, if ratified, tend to weaken the ties that bind Canada to the British empire, of which we are proud to form a part, and will also tend to destroy our Imperial ambitions and firm determination to assume our share of the responsibilities of the empire.

That the detrimental tendency and ultimate effects of the proposed agreement upon the empire and upon Canada are vastly more important than any temporary financial benefits which may be secured.

That this order earnestly hopes that the government, parliament and the people of Canada will put aside all party, sectional or individual advantages, and carefully consider the inevitable effect of the proposed agreement upon the great, broad, vital interests of Canada and the British empire.

February 22, 1911.

I have also a resolution adopted by the Brantford Board of Trade, as follows:

At a general meeting of the members of the Brantford Board of Trade, held on Tuesday, March 14, 1911, convened to consider the reciprocity pact now before parliament, the following resolution was adopted:

That, whereas the conditions at present prevailing in our Dominion are satisfactory in so far as agriculture, commerce, industry and transportation are concerned;

And whereas interprovincial and inter-Imperial trade are on a fairly prosperous and developing foundation under existing fiscal arrangements; therefore,

Resolved, that in the opinion of the Brantford Board of Trade, our material, national and empire interests will be best served by keeping entirely free of reciprocity entanglements with the United States at the present time. We, therefore, strongly protest against the ratification of the proposed agreement.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Prime Minister, Mr. R. L. Borden, Hon. Wm. Paterson and Lloyd Harris, M.P.

I have another resolution adopted by the United Empire Loyalists:

Resolution adopted by the United Empire Loyalists Association at Toronto on the 23rd day of February, 1911.

Resolved, that as it was the desire for a united empire which actuated our ancestors in laying the foundations of all our institutions as they exist to-day, and which led them and their descendants, with their French Canadian compatriots, to preserve this land with all its latent possibilities throughout the fierce and bitter, but successful, struggle of 1812-14;

In the firm belief that an inter-Imperial preferential tariff would not only be in keeping with our feelings of loyalty to the unity of the British empire, but that it would be much more to the commercial benefit of Canada than reciprocity with any foreign nation, and in the confident assurance that a preferential tariff will soon be given to us by the United Kingdom if Canada stands as she does to-day;

We, the United Empire Loyalists Association of Ontario, for these reasons, sincerely deplore the tariff agreement recently made by the representatives of our government at Washington, and we pray parliament not to ratify the same;

Resolved also, that copies of this resolution be sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada, and Mr. R. L. Borden, K.C., M.P., leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition at Ottawa.

W. Napier Keefer, president; Wm. Hamilton, hon. secretary; Nina M. Clarkson, hon. asst. secretary.

Mr. E. N. RHODES (Cumberland). In view of the fact that the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Fowke) read a resolution from certain people in Oshawa, I think it well to place on 'Hansard' the exact terms of a resolution passed by a very influential body of men, the Board of Trade of the town of Kentville, in the constituency represented by the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden). I believe that resolution was referred to in the House, but the exact terms of it do not appear in 'Hansard.' It is as follows:

Whereas the adoption of the proposed reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States would substantially reverse the policy which has brought Canada to her present prosperous and enviable position and cause widespread disturbance in her trade and injury to many interests, and jeopardize the commercial and political status of the Dominion,

And whereas it would hamper Canada's freedom in developing her own resources in her own way and by her own people,

And whereas it would check the growth and development of trade between the various provinces and parts of Canada with each other and between Canada and the empire, and would diminish Canada's position and influence as a unit within the British Empire.

Therefore, resolved that this Board places itself on record in protest against the adoption of such reciprocity agreement.

This resolution was passed after a discussion of several hours. The meeting was held after ample notice was given, was largely attended and was presided over by the President of the Board of Trade who happens to be one of the most influential and best known fruit men of the Annapolis valley. I believe that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) referred to the fact that a resolution had been passed by the Board of Trade of Kings county, but that resolution was passed prior to the resolution which I have just read, and my information is that it was passed at a small meeting of which ample notice was not given, and there was no discussion. If I am credibly informed, the matter is to be reintroduced for discussion by that board, when we shall know the real views of its members.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statement I made the other day as to the action taken by the Kings county board of trade was absolutely correct. The meeting was not a small meeting. The vote was carried in favour of reciprocity by 87 to 2, which would not indicate a small meeting. Also, it was held in daylight and the vote was taken in daylight. The vote on the resolution to which my hon. friend (Mr. Rhodes) refers was taken between one and two o'clock in the morning, and in the dark —a deed of darkness. The only fruit grower or farmer, or man directly interested in fruit-growing, the principal industry of Kings county, was the president. The meeting was called ostensibly to transact other business, but, in the course of the evening, the secretary of the Tory party of Kings county——

Mr. HUGHES. A fruit man.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, a lawyer, not a fruit-grower and not interested in fruit growing—the secretary of the Tory party brought in the resolution, and it was seconded by my former opponent, Mr. Webster, another lawyer. The discussion was kept up until the electric light service of the town, which is a partial service, had ceased, and no vote was taken. I am credibly informed that at the time the meeting dispersed, so far as could be seen in the darkness, there were only 8 people left in the room.

Mr. RHODES. I do not know that it is material whether the resolution was passed in daylight or in darkness, I cannot see that the question of light or darkness would affect the hearing of those at the meeting, but my information is that this resolution was passed unanimously and I have that authoritatively from the secretary.

Mr. BLACK. There were just six left and they were in the dark.

Mr. STRATTON. I desire to present a resolution from the Cheese Board of the county of Peterborough, asking for the adoption of the proposed agreement regarding freer trade relations between Canada and the United States.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I desire to present to the House a resolution passed by the Board of Trade of Peterborough as follows:

I have the honour to inform you that I have received instructions from the president of our board to notify you that at a special meeting of the board held Tuesday, the following resolution was duly moved, seconded and carried nem. con.:

That in view of the great change in the fiscal system that will be brought about by the putting in force of the reciprocity pact.

Be it resolved that this Board of Trade memorialize the government that the reciprocity Bill be not put into effect until the people have had an opportunity to express their views on it at the polls, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the government at Ottawa, and also to our representative in the House of Commons.

Mr. STRATTON. How many were at that meeting?

Mr. McCRANEY. I beg to call the attention of the House to a resolution passed on the 18th instant by the Central Saskatchewan Consolidated Boards of Trade at Saskatoon:

Saskatoon, Sask., March 19.—At a representative meeting of the Central Saskatchewan Consolidated Boards of Trade held here last evening the following resolution was moved and unanimously carried:

That the Central Saskatchewan Consolidated Boards of Trade desire to go on record as heartily and from purely a national standpoint endorsing the attitude of the provincial government towards the reciprocity agreement, and that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and George McCraney.

Members of both political parties voted in favour of the motion.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to a report of a speech delivered by him in Boston on October 27 last, as reported in the Montreal 'Star':

Any proposals the United States may make for reciprocity with Canada will receive careful consideration from the Dominion government, but the attitude of the Canadian people is to let well enough alone. . . . The predominant note in public affairs in Canada to-day, is contentment with its present lot and hope that the future may bring forth closer relations with the mother country.

I was somewhat amused the other day when the Minister of Militia was listening to the Prime Minister making light of this cry, 'Let well enough alone,' applauding the Prime Minister's utterances. At the time this extract came into my mind. Is that a correct report of the speech delivered at Boston on that occasion?

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course the minister has already spoken on this resolution. With the consent of the House the minister can speak again.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I feel greatly flattered to observe that the hon. gentleman from York not only reads my speeches made in Boston, but watches my countenance to see how I accept the views expressed by the Prime Minister of this House.

Mr. CROCKET. Denouncing those which you expressed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, not at all. Since the question has been put I may say that I had the honour of being invited to address a meeting of Canadians in Boston some time ago, and although I cannot remember exactly the remarks I made, the impression I endeavoured to give was very much on the line of this quotation. I do not think I used the words 'Let well enough alone,' but I had no idea at that moment that the authorities of the United States would accept a treaty with this country on the lines which the ministers who went to Washington were able to secure. I had in view that which I had for the last 15 or 20 years believed to be in the minds of the United States that no treaty would be made with this country which did not include free trade in manufactures, and from that point of view, I thought, and I still think, it would be advisable for us to remain as we are. But, Mr. Speaker, I never was foolish enough and, representing a county such as mine, I would not be wicked enough to refuse to accept from the United States an open market for our agricultural products in that country, the greatest blessing which could possibly be conferred upon the producers of natural products, particularly agricultural products and fruit in this country.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would call the attention of the House to the following despatch:

Mr. W. A. Shepherd, member of the Council of the Consolidated Boards of Trade of Saskatchewan, asserted to-day that all the boards of trade in that province were opposed to reciprocity, as were also a majority of other people.

Mr. McCRANEY. I would call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this Mr. Shepherd is a member of the Consolidated Board of Trade whose resolution was read by me.

PROCEDURE OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been very much interested by the play of argument on the question of this reciprocal arrangement, by the deft reading of resolutions and extracts from papers. It is a thing which in my experience is novel in the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. One would have been astonished 10 or 15 years ago to have an episode like this take place. What I am asking myself and would like to ask the first Minister and the Speaker is, what kind of a House we are going to have if this irregular mode of procedure is allowed to go on. Mr. Speaker seemed to have had a hazy idea that in going into supply we ought not to be allowed to take up and discuss the question of reciprocity, the reciprocal pact which has been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. In that I believe he is correct, but the reading of every one of these resolutions and all the discussion we have had for the last half hour, which might go on for 55 hours so far as any objection from the Speaker or the House is concerned, is clearly a violation of the rule which the Speaker laid down. I am not at all censuring or attempting to censure the members who have been engaged in this interesting form of discussion. It has brought out many points. I just end as I began, by asking whether or not we propose to allow the House to drift into this irregular method of proceeding. If so I do not know what will become of us as a deliberative body, and I do not quite see how we shall ever get through with the business.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) are appropriate, I thank him for having brought the attention of the House to the matter, and in future I think we should endeavour to keep within the rules and practice of the House as we find them in the books.

GRAND TRUNK TRAINMEN'S STRIKE.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to call the attention of the House to the conduct—I can hardly say the action—rather the inaction—of the government, particularly of the Department of Labour in connection with the regrettable strike on the Grand Trunk railway during the past year of the conductors and trainmen. Briefly, to explain the situation, I believe that in the month of January, 1910, a demand for an increase of wages was presented by the men to the company. The company having declined to accede to the demand, an application was made to the Minister of Labour that a Board of Conciliation might be appointed. When that application was received at the Department of Labour two courses were open. Two Acts were on the statute-books under either of which the matter might have been referred. On the one hand, there was the Conciliation and Labour Act and, on the other hand, there was the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. Under the Conciliation and Labour Act, if the matter were referred by the very words of the statute, the minister had the power, in case the Board of Conciliation failed to effect its object, to order an arbitration with a consequent award, and even under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act there was a clause, section 5, by which, if application were made, the minister still had the power to refer the matter not under that Act, but under the Act of Conciliation and Labour, known as the Mulock Act, and so secure the operation of a Board of Arbitration with a consequent award. It is well known that at the time feelings were strained between the men and the company, and I venture to think that at this first stage the department would better have served the purpose which it is intended to serve had it referred the matter in such a way that an award might have been obtained and a settlement of the unhappy differences between the parties secured. However, the matter was referred, under the Industrial Disputes Act, to the arbitrators. The Hon. Wallace Nesbitt was named by the company, Mr. O'Donoghue was named by the men, and Mr. Atkinson was named by the department. This board sat first in the city of Montreal in the month of May, and finally completed its meetings in the city of Toronto in the month of June, the result being a majority and a minority dissenting report, Mr. Nesbitt dissenting from the opinion of the other two arbitrators. With regard to the conduct of the government, there is no evidence whatever before us to show that up to that stage the government had endeavoured to secure an arbitration in the one statutory way in which such a thing could have been expected. On the 22nd of June, not an award, but majority and minority reports were made by this Conciliation Board. When these reports were made the report of the minority conciliator, Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, was very strong and was sufficient to have called the attention of the government to the public responsibility which rested upon it. I shall only read the first sentence of Mr. Nesbitt's report, and I read it from the 'Labour Gazette' of July, page 91, in which he says:

> In this matter there seems to be no possibility of conciliation. The parties are absolutely apart on principle, and both present their case with clearness. In my view the only remedy is for the parties to submit their differences to some person whose decision will govern, or to three parties, the majority to govern.

I merely read the opinion of Mr. Nesbitt for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that even up to the 22nd of June when this report was made the Department of Labour apparently had never thought of the principle of arbitration. On the 22nd of June their attention was specifically called to it by Mr. Nesbitt, and one would have thought that of all courses which would have commended themselves to the government, that is the one which they would immediately and persistently have followed. However, although this report was made on the 22nd of June and the parties were notified, and although the men declined at once to accept the report and the Grand Trunk railway, after the men had so declined, intimated that they would accept it, no attempt whatever was made by the department to secure any arbitration. The strike did not begin until the 18th of July. Practically a month elapsed. There is no evidence of any kind in the correspondence and documents brought down to show that the department at any time in this interval had taken any step to secure arbitration. There is, however, on the 21st of July, a letter from Mr. Charles M. Hays, to Mr. King, Minister of Labour in which he says:

I have your letter of July 20——

When for the first time arbitration was suggested by the government.

I have your letter of July 20th suggesting arbitration. What you propose is what I offered Messrs. Berry & Murdock in my letter of July 8th. It is also what I proposed in my letter to you of July 13th, to which in yours of July 15th you replied: 'I regret that it does not seem to me that I have the requisite authority to take either of the courses you suggest, nor do I believe it would be in the public interests to do so.' While your attitude appears to have changed, I infer from the report statement of the views of Messrs. Murdock & Berry, as contained in the morning papers, that they maintain the same position they have taken from the beginning.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) CHAS. M. HAYS,
President.

Apart from the fact that the department might have thought of referring this matter to arbitration, apart too from the fact that Mr. Nesbitt in his report had suggested it, there was this singularity that both parties all along had been in favour of arbitration. The Grand Trunk railway were in favour of arbitration, the men were in favour of arbitration, and the principle had been accepted by both. The only difference between them was as to the tribunal to whom the differences should be referred to. It is not a part of my duty here this afternoon to stand in judgment between the men and the railway company, but the men, on the one hand, contended that the two arbitrators to whom the matter should be referred were two gentlemen on the other side of the line who had acted with regard to similar matters in dispute with a number of American railways, and who had standardized the rates in the States. The men were in favour of arbitration, but insisted that these two arbitrators should be appointed. On the other hand, the Grand Trunk was equally in favour of arbitration, but insisted that the matter be referred to a board composed of experienced railway men with the obligation of abiding by the result of the finding. If ever there was a case in which the department, which is supposed to act the part of conciliation, which is supposed to prevent strikes and to put an end to them as soon as possible in case they do occur, in which one would think that the wisdom of referring the matter of arbitration would occur at once, it was in such a case as this and, in spite of the fact that both parties desired arbitration, and the only difference was as to the composition of the tribunal, a difference which might have been settled by an appeal to the Minister of Labour and which might have been settled by the exercise of the law provided by the government, no suggestion whatever was made of arbitration until after the unhappy strike had commenced.

Now, in view of these facts is not one justified in saying that no general demand had been made for arbitration? For six months the difference had existed between the company and the men and for months it had been acute. For months the Conciliation Board had been sitting and nearly a month lapsed from the time it gave its report until the strike actually occurred. Yet during all that time not one finger was raised, not one suggestion was made by the Minister of Labour in favour of arbitration even although the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company says that he himself suggested this arbitration to the minister on the 13th of July. As soon as the strike had really commenced the suggestion was then made by the Minister of Labour that there should be arbitration. On the 20th of July the minister writes to each of the parties concerned pointing out that it is rendered imperative in the public interest that means be found to affect a settlement of the difficulties and the speedy resumption of work in all branches of the company's service. The answer, it must be admitted, was not very satisfactory. The men promptly declined the suggestion and the Grand Trunk replied that they had offered this before and that the men had refused. The letter of the 21st July of Mr. Hays which I have read, states that he declines to accept the proposition made by the government. But, nothing was done by the government then. Having written that letter to both parties the government seemed to think all had been done that should be done and until the 27th of July, so far as one can judge from the correspondence, nothing practicable seems to have been done by the government other than the writing of letters. Then, it apparently began to dawn on the minister that something really must be done, and he wired to Messrs. Murdock and Berry representing the men, again suggesting arbitration, and asking them to consult the head authorities whom they represented to obtain, if possible, their consent to arbitration; the matter to be referred to some persons who would be mutually acceptable. I think it must be said to the credit of the men that on receiving this appeal from the minister, which was based on grounds of the public interest and in view of the loss which the strike was causing, within 24 hours a reply came by wire which was followed by letter, accepting the proposition of the minister and offering to refer the matter to the arbitration of some parties mutually acceptable. Mr. Hays, however, took a different position and on page 96 of the report we have this reply as follows:

Montreal, Quebec, July 24, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa.

Your telegram of the 23rd received, while as you know from the many conferences urging your action before the strike took place and from our offer repeated and urged upon the committee we were desirous of arbitration and so avoiding the existing trouble. The time for such action has now passed and it is only necessary that we should have the protection to which we are entitled to enable us to resume the full operation of the road.

CHAS. M. HAYS.

We have now come to the 24th of July, when the first genuine appeal was made by the government to both parties, and the men accepted the offer of arbitration, and the president of the Grand Trunk declined, stating the strike was over and that all the Grand Trunk wanted was sufficient protection for their property to enable them to resume the operation of their road. It must be admitted that if the statement of Mr. Hays were true, it amply justified the position he took. The strike had commenced on the 18th of July and by the 24th of July according to him, the strike was over, and if that were so, he would be justified in saying that having beaten the men, all he wanted was protection for his property to resume operation of the road. But, the question arises whether this telegram of Mr. Hays to the Minister of Labour was true or not. No one in the world should better know the truth of the statement than the president of the Grand Trunk, and had the government no evidence to the contrary, they might act upon it, but the first thing it was the duty of the government to do, was to ascertain what was the real truth. It happened that owing to the absence of the Prime Minister, Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce, was acting Prime Minister, and recognizing the gravity of the strike and the injury to Canadian trade, Sir Richard Cartwright on the 26th of July, two days after Mr. Hays had declared the strike was over, sent a telegram to all the collectors of customs in the province of Ontario asking reports from them as to the manner in which business was being carried on. This is the telegram:

Ottawa, July, 26, 1910.

Confidential and urgent. Please inform me by wire immediately, not later than noon Wednesday, if possible, extent to which business in your locality is being affected by present strike, to what extent is fright being moved.

Then a letter was sent by Sir Richard Cartwright on the 27th of July to Mr. Hays, after all the answers to this telegram had been received, and that letter reads:

July 27, 1910.

Dear Mr. Hays,—I am inclosing for your information copies of telegrams received this morning by the commissioner of customs in reply to a wire sent last night to the collectors in the several towns and cities of Ontario, asking for information as to the extent to which business is being affected by the present strike. You will observe that the replies cover virtually all of the important localities in the province on the Grand Trunk Railway system, and that, without exception, they go to show that up to the present little or no freight has been received or sent out by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, also that in some localities industries are being obliged to close down, while in other localities which are fortunate enough to be served by two roads, the facilities of the other roads are proving inadequate to the demands upon them.

The government has been carefully considering the whole strike situation, and whilst it is the wish of my colleagues and myself to cause you as little embarrassment as possible, we cannot but feel, in view of the situation as disclosed in these messages, all of which are from an official and strictly impartial source, as well as from many other urgent representations, that it is eminently desirable that some settlement of the present dispute should be immediately effected, and that if this cannot be brought about by a conference between the parties, the matter should be left to arbitration as already suggested by the government.

I very much hope that you may find it possible to co-operate with the government along the lines suggested in its endeavours to deal with the critical situation which has arisen, through the interruption of operations over a large part of your company's system.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) R. J. CARTWRIGHT,
Acting Prime Minister.

I shall not read all the answers that came in from the 60 or 70 collectors of customs. The Minister of Trade and Commerce having said in his letter to Mr. Hays that the trade of the country was paralysed, that little or no freight was moving on the Grand Trunk, that many industries had closed down and others would be compelled to close down, I shall quote a few sample bricks from the replies sent to the Department of Trade and Commerce. The first is from Trenton and it reads:

Trenton, Ont., July 27, 1910.

John McDougall,
Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

Little inconvenience from strike apparent here to date. Have Canadian Pacific railway and boat connection with Montreal and Toronto, and Merchants' needs supplied in that way. No freight moving on Grand Trunk railway. Loss trifling so far and will not suffer for ten days yet.

ROBERT FRASER, Collector.

That, I think, is about the most favourble of all the replies, and that says:

No freight moving on the Grand Trunk.

The next is from Owen Sound:

No Grand Trunk freight trains moving; Grand Trunk not receiving freight and freight sheds actually closed and business badly affected.

The next is from Orillia:

No freight has been moving since the 18th July. The material cleared here has been merchandise that was on hand. The customs revenue affected by strike would be in the neighbourhood of $1,000.

The next is from Woodstock:

No freight moving on Grand Trunk railway; local business not affected so far.

The next is from Windsor:

Wabash passenger and freight trains leaving Windsor as usual, no interference. Grand Trunk passenger trains leaving Windsor as usual, no delay. Grand Trunk local freight handled by Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central railways. No freight leaving Windsor by Grand Trunk with exception of six car-loads of horses by Canadian express to Fort Erie. Two freight trains from east to Windsor over Grand Trunk since strike was inaugurated.

I will not occupy the time of the House in reading these 60 or 70 communications from the various collectors of customs; but in going through the return brought down by the Minister of Labour, I find, in addition to these telegrams from collectors of customs, that about 100 pages are filled with protests from mayors of various municipalities in the province of Ontario. The first is from Mr. Patterson, mayor of Brockville, dated July 27, urging the government to renew the effort to bring about conciliation; another from Mr. H. A. Currie, mayor of Collingwood, to the same effect; another from a wholesale firm in Hamilton; another from Kincardine, from the mayor; another from Walkerton, from the mayor; another from Peterborough, from the mayor. There are probably 60 or 70 additional communications, bearing date the 27th or 28th of July, from mayors of municipalities and from presidents of boards of trade throughout the country, protesting that business was paralyzed by the strike, and stating that no freight was moving on the Grand Trunk. Therefore the fact is uncontradictable that the government knew on the 27th and 28th of July, if they could place any reliance on the words of their own collectors of customs and on the words of the mayors of various municipalities, and the presidents of various boards of trade, that the strike was continuing, that practically no freight was being moved on the Grand Trunk, and that trade was being paralyzed throughout the country. Now I think I am justified in saying that at such a time as that, when an appeal had been made to the government for arbitration, when one side had consented to arbitration and the other side had declined simply and solely on the ground that the strike was over—though the government had in their possession incontrovertible evidence that the strike was not over—the premier and the Minister of Labour might well have used the big stick on the president of the railway to insist on a settlement of this matter by reference to arbitration; and yet nothing of the kind was done.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the big stick?

Mr. NORTHRUP. That is an American expression, and as the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues have had more experience with the people of that country than I have had, I would hardly venture to instruct him in the American vernacular. The late President of the United States used that expression very frequently.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend used the expression without knowing what it means.

Mr. NORTHRUP. There is no doubt as to the meaning of the expression. The government has a certain power which it can exercise over railway companies and other corporations which are continually asking favours of the government, to compel them to do what is right, and that power is what the late President of the United States described as the big stick. I do not go so far as to say that the government of this country has power to compel railway companies to do what is wrong; but I think their power is irresistible when it is exercised to compel a railway company or any other corporation to do what is right, provided they have public sentiment at their back. The only reason the president of the Grand Trunk gave for declining arbitration was that the strike was over; but in face of all these telegrams which came to the government between the 24th of July and the 28th of July from all parts of the province of Ontario, I think the government would have been amply justified in saying to the president of the Grand Trunk: You have made a statement which is not justified by the facts; the only reason you give for refusing arbitration has fallen to the ground, and we insist on arbitration taking place now. Various gentlemen throughout the country who took an interest in this matter also wrote to the government. I find in the correspondence a letter from Mr. Mills, who is connected with the Mutual Assurance Company of Canada, and one from Mr. Trowern, Secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, eminently shrewd, practical business letters, calling the attention of the Minister of Labour to what he might and should do; and I venture to say that the real solution of all these difficulties as suggested in these letters. That is not merely in an arbitration between the men and the company. If a strike takes place, it is the people of the country who have to foot the bills. It means an enormous loss to the people who are doing the business of the country. It is the duty of the government to protect these people; and therefore, instead of having simply an arbitrator for the men and another for the company, the only fair way would be to have an arbitrator for the railway company and another for the men, another for the agricultural interests, another for the mercantile interests, another for manufacturing interests, thus constituting a board sufficiently large and representative to command the confidence of all parties, and then by legislation to have it declared that the finding of that board should be absolute and final. If something of that kind had been done in this instance the country would have been saved an immense loss which has resulted from this unfortunate strike. But nothing of the kind was done. Not only prior to the strike was nothing done to prevent it, but during the continuance of it nothing practical was done to bring it to an end. At last towards the end of July an appeal came from Messrs. Murdock and Berry stating that they had seen Mr. Hays and nothing could be expected from him, and praying that the Minister of Labour would come to Montreal and see if he could do something. Then for the first time the Minister of Labour took some action. He went to Montreal; and it is a curious fact that Mr. Hays, who on the 24th of July had said that the strike was over, is found three or four days later negotiating for a settlement of the strike. The strike was settled on the 29th or 30th of July.

Mr. KING. On the 2nd of August.

Mr NORTHRUP. The settlement was practically agreed two or three days before. The Miniser of Labour (Mr. King) did go to Montreal and meet the Grand Trunk railway authorities and the men, and an agreement was come to. I need not weary he House with the terms of this agreement save as to one item, on page 341 of he return, the agreement is set forth, and n it there is this clause:

> The company will put back as soon as possible the men other than those who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation used towards the new men.

The men declined to accept that condition. They said very naturally that if the company was only bound to put the men back as soon as possible, there was no limit to the delay. It might be months or years or never, so that although the men and the company had agreed on the terms, the agreement could not be made operative simply because the men said: We must have some definition as to what you mean by putting the men back as soon as possible. Failing to agree, the men left Montreal. The Minister of Labour (Mr. King) and the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), however, continued their good work, and I give them full credit for what they did at that time; and after two or three days an arrangement was come to, and this wire was sent to Mr. Murdock and Mr. Berry, and also a letter from the minister over his own signature a few days later. The telegram will be found at page 336 of the return. This was the wire sent to James Murdock, representative of the general committee of the Grand Trunk railway and Canadian Pacific railway:

> Confidential. Mr. Hays has given Borden and myself an understanding that the men will within three months from this date be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions. All men referred to in agreement signed by both parties. We understand by the men, all men referred to in agreement signed by both parties. In accordance with our understanding with you, I shall expect to hear by wire immediately that the strike has been declared at an end. I will confirm this wire over my own signature.
> MACKENZIE KING,
> Minister of Labour.

On that telegram being received by the leader of the men, the strike was, on the 2nd August, called off. Immediately felicitations began to be exchanged between the department and the men over the happy results of the negotiations whereby the men immediately, or within three months at the latest, were to be returned to their former positions. Unfortunately as time went on, the men began to find that these felicitations were rather premature. The men were refused their old places, and put into inferior positions. In fact to such an extent was that done that it seemed almost as if Mr. Hays was in a jocular mood when he said he would put the men back, for that is what he really did. He put the conductor of a limited on an express train and the conductor of an express train on a local. At all events complaints were rife as to the manner in which the Grand Trunk railway was failing to keep its agreement with the men. Unfortunately the department did not seem able to do anything. It seemed to content itself by merely writing a letter now and then protesting to the Grand Trunk railway that the company was not doing what was right by the men, and it suggested that Judge Barron might be appointed to investigate the complaints. The Grand Trunk railway, however, refused to accept any such proposition, and Mr. Hays wrote this extraordinary letter which will be found on page 468 of the return. The Minister of Labour (Mr. King) had written Mr. Hays urging on him to carry out his agreement, and on the 10th of November this extraordinary refusal was received from Mr. Hays. The House will remember that the agreement was that the men should be put back in their old positions within three months. Mr. Hays writes as follows:

I have yours of November 9. In the opinion of the officers, our undertaking to re-employ all who were not found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct has been complied with.

Here is the extraordinary feature of this letter:

In the interests of good discipline and public safety it is imperative that the officers of the company shall be the sole judge as to the proper qualifications of the employee and his fitness for the duties assigned him. It would, therefore, in our opinion, be prejudicial to the public interests to leave to an outside party, positively unacquainted with the railway service, the determination as to the fitness of any one for our railway service. That responsibility can only be assumed by the proper officials of the company.

So we find this extraordinary state of affairs, that when the president of the Grand Trunk railway had agreed with two ministers of the Crown that he would put the men back within three months and when the men relying on that assurance, had resumed their work, and when the Grand Trunk railway had failed to put the men back, the president of that road, in reply to an appeal from the minister to carry out his agreement, gave as a reason for not doing so that the company had the right to decide as to the fitness of the persons to be reinstated. But the company had been satisfied with these employees. The company had not discharged any of them. The men had gone out voluntarily to the regret of the Grand Trunk railway, and yet after the company had promised two ministers of the Crown that within three months it would restore these men to their positions, its president dared write to one of the ministers refusing to carry out his pledge and giving as the reason that his company had the right to decide who were and who were not fit for the positions. If ever there was an opportunity for the ministers to use the big stick, to exert their authority to say to this railway magnate: You cannot break your agreement in that way, you cannot break faith with these men, who accepted this agreement on the faith of ministers of the Crown—if there ever was an occasion, it was this; and the ministers who would fail to assert their dignity and compel this railway president to carry out the promise he had made to them can hardly expect to command the confidence of this House.

After that letter had been sent on November 10, the Minister of Labour acknowledged it. One would have thought that there would have been an outburst from the Minister of Labour, one would have thought that after the Minister of Labour had received this letter stating such a wilful, deliberate breach of faith, which put the ministers of the Crown in the position of having given a pledge to the men that was not being carried out, the minister would have sent to Mr. Hays such a letter as he would not easily forget. What did the minister say:

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 12, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge and thank you for your communication of the 10th inst. in reply to mine of the 7th, in regard to employees in train and yard service of the Grand Trunk Railway Company who have not as yet been taken into the company's service.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Chas. M. Hays, Esq.,
President G.T.R. Co.,
Montreal, Que.

Now, am I not justified in saying that no genuine, sincere, honest effort was made by the government to secure the return to their places of these men, when, in the face of such a breach of faith as I have just pointed out on the part of the president of the Grand Trunk railway, the minister, instead of teaching him a lesson he would remember to his dying day, wrote thanking him for his communication? A minister who appreciated his position would have notified the authorities of the railway that, if their president was a man who would deliberately make an agreement with a minister on which the minister intended to act and did act, and on which some 3,000 men had acted on the statement of the minister, and afterwards would try to put a lie in the mouth of the minister, then, for all time to come, he would decline to do business with a man who had so failed to appreciate his position, and the position, dignity and honour of a minister of the Crown.

Now, the question arose afterwards as to what position was really occupied by the minister at the time this agreement was made. I have read the telegram sent by the Minister of Labour to the men stating that an agreement had been made by Mr. Hays with him and Sir Frederick Borden. Now, let me read you another letter. This is found at page 549 of the Return brought down. It is dated November 29, 1910, and was written by the Minister of Labour to Mr. Murdock. I will not go into the whole letter, but will read only a few extracts:

I have, of course, nothing to say as to the method taken by Mr. Hays. That is his own business. I feel, however, as stated at the interview with Mr Berry and yourself that it is eminently desirable that whatever course may be suggested by Mr. Hays should be followed by men who are seeking reinstatement, provided the course suggested is both feasible and honourable.

And further:

From communications which have been received, it would appear that an effort is being made in certain quarters to hold the government responsible for the non-reinstatement of all of the men involved in the recent dispute. This, as I am sure you will admit, is most unfair, inasmuch as the undertaking as to the reinstatement was given not by the government but by the company, Sir Frederick Borden and myself being in the position of witnesses to such undertaking.

Now, does the minister really appreciate the importance of that statement? First, a telegram is sent, followed by a letter over his own signature, to the men, that an undertaking had been given to them, the ministers. That undertaking is not carried out, and the men are protesting against it not being carried out. Members who sit behind the Minister of Labour are protesting on behalf of their constituents and pointing out that the men by hundreds are being discriminated against and a gross injustice done. When these protests come in, the minister writes Mr. Murdock stating that the agreement was made not by the government, but that 'Sir Frederick Borden and myself' were 'witnesses to the undertaking.' Could there be a flatter contradiction of what the hon. gentleman himself had wired the men? Witnesses! How could they be witnesses? There must be two parties to an agreement. The men were not there; they had gone away, refusing point blank to be parties to the agreement unless the term 'as soon as possible' were defined. Then the minister intervened, and an agreement was made, as truly said by wire in the first instance, between Mr. Hays on one side and Sir Frederick Borden and the Minister of Labour on the other, that so and so should be done. And afterwards the minister writes that he is a witness.' It is perfectly obvious why he wishes to be regarded only as a witness. If the agreement were admitted to be made with the ministers, as the minister stated in his telegram and in his letter, then the ministers were responsible for the carrying out of the agreement, because they were parties to it—the men could not be, for they were not there. The ministers and the railway company were the only people there, and therefore, as stated in the telegram, the agreement was made between the railway company and the ministers. And this meant that it was the duty of the ministers to see that the agreement was carried out.

I wish to make my remarks as brief as possible, so I will not go over the almost endless correspondence between the parties representing the men and the individual men, with regard to the hardship, the injustice done them by the Grand Trunk authorities in refusing to reinstate them. To put the matter briefly and taking the case that was least injurious to and most favourable to the men, a man was put in this position: If the Grand Trunk authorities decided not to re-employ him, he was compelled to bring his evidence and go before the very official under whom he had worked and prove that he was innocent. It was the first time in the history of British jurisprudence when a man was asked to prove his innocence, instead of being held innocent until proven guilty. And this proof he had to bring before the official who had dismissed him, and dismissed him, as appears in many cases, without rhyme or reason. To prove himself innocent meant thereby to prove that the official who had dismissed him was wrong. Talk about appealing from Philip drunk to Philip sober! Here was a case of appealing from Philip sober to Philip sober, and attempting to prove that he had been wrong in the judgment he had given. And if, after trying to prove his innocence, the judgment of this unusual court was against him, he was at liberty to appeal along up the line, and if he succeeded in reaching Mr. Hays, Mr. Hays would be willing to hear him. Is it any wonder that dissatisfaction arose among the men? At last, so much dissatisfaction arose that the government suggested that Judge Barron be appointed, and offered to pay his expenses if he were appointed. But after the president of the Grand Trunk refused to have any person appointed, on the ground that the railway company had the right to decide who were the persons to have in their employ, suddenly, the Grand Trunk did employ Judge Barron. Now, I have nothing but the most profound respect for Judge Barron personally. I doubt if any man could be found more likely to act rightly and judiciously in this matter than he. And I am delighted to see that the men themselves gladly accepted his appointment. But was it fair to Judge Barron, and was it fair to the men? The government offered to bear the expenses so that he might be impartial. Yet, as it turns out, after all, despite his official position, so far as he is acting in this matter, he is as much the employee of the Grand Trunk as any trainman in their service, If he is appointed by the Grand Trunk to do certain work, and paid by the Grand Trunk for doing that work, he is an employee of the Grand Trunk. Now, I desire again to guard myself; I would not be misunderstood or misinterpreted as having cast the slightest slur upon Judge Barron. But one can see the effect upon the feelings of the men when they are applying for re-employment under conditions that they consider most unjust and unfair, when, after having been out not for only three months, but for five or six months, they have to go before a man who is paid by the employer who has refused to take them back and give them the bread and butter, which, perhaps, they absolutely need for themselves and their families.

A return was brought down subsequent to the first return. I wish it were possible for me to read the whole of this return to the House, it is so interesting in many respects. But I will venture to read only a few scraps from it.

I find a letter dated December 6 from Messrs. Murdock and Berry representing the men to Mr. Hays from which I shall read a few extracts to show how the situation struck the representatives of the men in December, a month and two days after the men should all have been taken back.

Paragraphs forming basis of settlement were signed and agreed to on July 31, but it was not until August 2, about 6 p.m., that we received from the Minister of Labour a definition as to the intended application of paragraph 1, quoted above. At 6 p.m. on the evening of August 2 we received from the Minister of Labour as the assurance of the sub-committee and undersigned, the following telegram, which was later ratified by a letter over the personal signature of the minister, and read as follows:

'Confidential. Mr. Hays has given Sir Frederick Borden and myself an undertaking that the men will, within three months from this date, be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions. We understand by the men all men referred to in agreement signed by both parties. In accordance with our understanding with you, I shall expect to hear by wire immediately that the strike has been declared at an end. I will confirm this wire by a letter over my own signature.'

When the sub-committee and undersigned received the telegram quoted above over the signature of the Minister of Labour, they were pleased to give the necessary instructions with a view of calling off the strike, and from that hour have worked consistently and honestly with a view of bringing about the mutual feeling of co-operative interests and regard between employer and employee so desirable in railroad operation.

It was with mingled feelings of surprise and regret that the employees found on November 2 some 270 men still out of the service, many of whom the employees believed should have been returned to service within the expiration of ninety days from August 2.

It was, of course, recognized that some individuals on the line who had been on strike might have been indiscreet in their word or action during the trying days of the strike, but it was not believed that there could have been very many men on the entire line who could be charged with having committed offences as described in the first paragraph of the agreement signed on July 31. Another matter of surprise with the employees was the fact that some of the men who had been kept out of the service were amongst the most reliable and conservative of the old employees who had gone on strike, and in numerous cases it was found that these men who were now being kept from re-entering the service were looked upon as among the best citizens of the localities in which they live. It is further in evidence that in Western Ontario a much larger percentage of men were being kept out of service than in other parts of the system.

As you are aware, this matter was taken up with the officials of the Dominion government early in November, as the employees and the undersigned have looked to and believe they are justified in expecting that the officials of the Dominion government should see through to a proper conclusion the agreement that they made with yourself in reference to the definition of the words 'as soon as possible.'

As a result of the efforts made to carry out the suggestions quoted from your letter of November 10 to the Minister of Labour, the great majority of your employees who had been kept out of service after November 2, made a direct appeal to Mr. Fitzhugh or yourself from the decision of the subordinate officer immediately in charge, and requested that Mr. Fitzhugh and yourself intercede in their behalf. The result of the appeals made directly to Mr. Fitzhugh and yourself, in almost every case, was that letters identically similar in language, except as to address, were sent to the individuals still out of the service, advising in each case that the records of the company showed that the individual who was making an appeal for reinstatement in his former position was ineligible for reinstatement, and that it would be necessary for him to prove that he was not guilty of acts of violence, disorderly conduct or the intimidation of new men, further intimating that it would be necessary for the applicant for position to produce evidence to the satisfaction of the superintendent of their divisions that they were not guilty, as cited above, before they would be eligible for re-employment.

The position taken would appear to be somewhat at variance with established precedents of British justice, which at least presumes a man innocent until he is proven guilty, and places the onus of furnishing proof upon the authorities or parties making the charges of guilt. This phase of the situation appears to be more than ever unusual, when it is understood that a great number of the men still out of service have not been charged, to their knowledge, with anything in the form of misconduct or acts of violence, but have rather, in many cases, been simply advised that they would be sent for, if required, and in other cases have been advised that they were being kept out of service because they had participated in the strike.

When it became apparent that satisfactory understandings were not to be forthcoming as a result of the Minister of Labour's efforts to bring about a settlement on these questions, it was deemed advisable to convene in Montreal the Joint General Committee that had dealt with this situation on behalf of your train service employees during the negotiations that took place before the strike and after.

Then follows an account of their interviews with Mr. Hays, and how unsuccessful and unsatisfactory the interviews were. The letter goes on:

When an attempt was made in the latter part of November to convene the General Committee men for consideration of the questions referred to above, it was found that certain officials on the line were disposed to strenuously oppose the committeemen's efforts in meeting for mutual discussion. This attitude was in some localities displayed not only toward the unemployed former employees, but also in the case of a number who had been returned to service, and were at the time employed.

Then came the threat at the end, and I am sure nobody could blame the men for making it:

If yourself and the other officers on the line are still insistently of the opinion that the terms of settlement have been and are being applied as intended, there would appear to be no other alternative before the employees and the undersigned than to take such means as may appear to be consistent and desirable, to insist on the government or the ministers of the Crown taking such steps as they may deem proper, looking toward the carrying out of the several agreements as intended.

Then there is an appeal by the men to the Minister of Labour, a letter from Messrs. Murdock and Berry, dated December 13, asking him to assist them in the position in which they are, and again the men's bitterness of spirit comes out.

It appears to the committee that the government can consistently lend its further aid in straightening out this matter when the fact is recalled that the unreinstated Grand Trunk employees who are asking for the carrying out of the agreement made, are placed in such a position on account of the fact that aliens or American citizens who are at present in charge of Grand Trunk affairs, have repudiated an agreement made with Grand Trunk employees and an undertsanding reached with ministers of the Crown.

It is insufficient for those American officials to hide behind the statement that they have carried out their agreement as 'acts are more forceful than words,' and the facts are that more than 200 reputable Canadian citizens who have not been guilty of any overt act are being wrongfully held out of service to satisfy the vindictive and retaliatory desires of officers in charge.

Mr. KING. Would the hon. member read the first part of that letter?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Certainly. It reads:

Dear Sir,—In further reference to conference held yesterday between the Premier, the honourable Minister of Railways and yourself with a committee of unreinstated Grand Trunk employees accompanied by the undersigned, at which meeting the facts in connection with the Grand Trunk Company's failure to equitably apply terms of settlement made when strike was called off were discussed.

The committee desire to assure you and through you the government that they deprecate the attitude taken by certain gentlemen (presumably well intentioned), whereby an effort is being made to hold the government responsible for the failure to apply the terms of settlement made.

We appreciate fully the assistance given both at the time of the strike, and since, by the government in its efforts to bring about on behalf of the Canadian public and the citizens of Canada, who were involved in the strike, a settlement, and an equitable carrying out of the terms of that settlement. It is definitely understood by the men interested and the undersigned that it is not on account of any failure on the part of the government that the present unfortunate situation obtains, but that the existing conditions are rather the result of the obstinate disregard for contract obligations on the part of Grand Trunk officials.

The assistance given so far in a conciliatory and mediating way by representatives of the government is much appreciated, but the committee would further request that if consistent the government should take further means, if possible, either by the appointment of a Royal Commisison or in some other consistent manner to enforce from the officials of the Grand Trunk an acceptable carrying out of the agreement made and understandings reached.

In the subsequent part of that letter they protest against the men who have repudiated the agreement made with the Grand Trunk employees and the understanding reached with ministers of the Crown. As I pointed out one can hardly relieve the ministers of the Crown from the responsibility that rested on them of seeing that the agreement made with themselves was carried out. The men seem to have acted with wonderful forbearance. They seem to be most grateful for any slight crumbs of service that fell to them from the Crown and certainly if ever there was a body of men, if one may judge from the correspondence as set forth by the Minister of Labour, who deserved to have him stand by them, it was the striking employees of the Grand Trunk railway in the late strike, and I think there is nothing more touching than the fidelity with which up to the last they stood by the minister and the reckless disregard of their interests by the minister whenever the mighty head of the Grand Trunk railway appeared on the scene.

Then there is an interesting correspondence between the men and Judge Barron. There is first a letter from the President of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and the vice-president of the conductors to Judge Barron dated January 5, from Toronto. They send a number of names to the judge, of men that they claim have been left off. They also send a number of names of men who were formerly conductors and who were reduced in position saying:

> Men who were formerly conductors have been started into service as brakemen and numbers of men have been continuously employed on inferior trains or in less preferable positions than those occupied prior to the strike.

They also promised to send him a further list. Judge Barron acknowledges that letter on January 10, and says this:

> I have now carefully compared your list with that sent me from Montreal. Your list contains 127 names of men, not given me by the Grand Trunk railway to investigate. I have no explanation for this great difference. But I would suggest for your consideration the propriety of every man who wishes to do so (and who has not yet done so) applying for a hearing under section 12, page 10, of the regulations governing employees, and then appealing to the general officers of the company, should the result of the hearing be unsatisfactory. The wisdom of doing this is that if delay arises in the decision for fifteen days, he thereafter receives his regular pay, and furthermore such action brings him within the sphere of my investigation should the railway not reinstate.

In so far as I can see from all the documents and correspondence brought down, that is the only insight we have into the jurisdiction of Judge Barron. We know he is appointed by the Grand Trunk, we know he is paid by the Grand Trunk, we know he received a list from the men and a list from the Grand Trunk, and that the list from the Grand Trunk contained 127 less names than the list supplied him by the men. Writing on the 10th January he points out the wisdom of a man appealing to the officer who discharged him, and then by regular gradations up to the head of the railway, this action alone bringing the man within the sphere of Judge Barron's investigation. Surely the minister must be willing to impose a little more on these men than he would like others to impose on him if he thinks that the gratitude which they expressed again and again in the early days of this case should be continued to the end when at the most all they get is a tribunal such as that, and when Judge Barron, in his own letter addressed to Mr. Murdock, the men's representative, pointed out that the only case in which he had the jurisdiction of a sort of Supreme court was when the men had exhausted all courts of appeal from the first man to whom he appealed, the man who had discharged him, up to Mr. Hays and when, if justice had not been done by Mr. Hays, he could appeal to him.

Now, there is a very long letter from Messrs. Murdock and Berry, and I will only read a few extracts from it. It is dated Toronto, January 13, 1911. This letter was addressed to Judge Barron on receipt of the letter to which I have just referred.

> We acknowledge herewith receipt of your letter of January 10, wherein you advise that the list which we sent to you some days ago contains the names of 127 men that are not shown on the list furnished you by the Grand Trunk railway.
> We are advising the employees generally at the several terminal points on the line whose names are not shown on the list given you by the Grand Trunk officials of that fact and suggesting to them that they should at once make necessary application for further hearings or undertake to ascertain in some way why their names have been omitted from the list furnished you.
> We note your statement that section 12, page 10 of the regulations governing employees would give these men their regular pay if decision was not given in their case within fifteen days, or that it might at least be contended that they should be paid if not reinstated within that time.
> We beg to advise that under past and normal conditions the apparent intent of the section you refer to, has been a dead letter to the extent that we never heard of its application in a single case, and we are firmly of the opinion that its intent would be equally ignored in the cases referred to.
> As you may possibly be aware, we have endeavoured to conform to any reasonable suggestion or requirement of the officials of the Grand Trunk, although we are satisfied that the contention made that men should appeal from the subordinate to the higher officials for reinstatement in the cases cited is unreasonable, and only brought forward for purposes of delay and excuse. As a matter of fact we hold numerous letters over the signature of Mr. Fitzhugh in which he says:
> I am in receipt of your letter of Nov. 18 requesting reinstatement in the company's service, and in reply, beg to say, our records show you deserted your post, and are, therefore, ineligible for re-employment.

There is no contention of disorderly or improper conduct, merely that you deserted your post, you went on strike and therefore you are ineligible for re-employment.

In the face of such contentions on the part of the higher officials of the Grand Trunk, it does appear as though there was an endeavour to technically evade the actual terms of settlement by the higher officers of the Grand Trunk, insisting on an appeal from one official to another when in no individual case any other result has so far been secured only a reference by the higher officials back to the officials making the original decision.

If we might be permitted to do so, we would like to draw your attention to two or three important facts in connection with men being charged and kept out of service. For instance, certain men who have been loyal employees of the company for many years have been refused their former positions on the contention that they could not write the necessary examination. We contend that in many cases this is unfair, as the company's officials knew full well for many years that those men were educationally unable to pass a written examination. Samples of such cases are in evidence in the case of Mr. Purtell and Mr. J. Cain.

It is not necessary that I should weary the House by reading the names given to the judge of men whom the company were bound to reinstate if they had not been guilty of disorderly conduct who were subjected to an examination which they could not pass, and therefore refused reinstatement.

Then, there is this letter, dated January 13, from Messrs. Barry and Murdock to Mr. Chas. M. Hays, and I will only give two or hree quotations from it:

We are advised that you have requested and authorized his honour Judge Barron, of Stratford, to commence investigations in the cases of some of the men who have not yet been returned to service.

On Dec. 3 last a sub-committtee, representative of the general committee for the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont, handed to you a list which contained the names of 268 men located at different terminal points on the line, and who had not at that time been returned to service. That list also showed the reasons so far as known by the committee and as given by your officials for keeping those 268 men still out of service.

As stated above Judge Barron now finds that the names of 127 men given on the list we handed you December 3 (copy of which have given the judge) had been omitted from the list which you had handed to him. There is apparently no explanation for the difference in the lists.

We are also advised by Judge Barron that he had been instructed that the investigations to be held are not to include Central Vermont men. It appears to us that this is entirely inconsiderate of the terms of settlement, which intended to apply to the Central Vermont as well as to the Grand Trunk railway system, and so stated.

One of the complaints of the men was that they had not been reinstated on the Central Vermont system. Then they go on:

We do not believe that when settlement was agreed to on July 31 it was contemplated that a great number of men would be kept out of service at the option of your officials, and without any apparent reason for so doing, except the general statement that the men had deserted their posts, and we are confirmed in our belief in this regard by one sentence in the telegram we received from the Minister of Labour on August 2, wherein he in referring to the understanding between yourself, Sir Frederick Borden and the Minister of Labour, said: 'We understand by the men, all men referred to in agreement signed by both parties.'

There is a letter of January 17 from Mr. Hays to Messrs. Murdock & Berry which reads:

Messrs. S. N. Berry, vice-president O.R.C.
James Murdock, vice-president, B. of R.T.

Dear Sirs,—Yours of January 12 duly received. As you have been advised, this company considers that it has complied with its obligations under the agreement to which you refer. Since you were not parties to the agreement, or present at the time it was entered into, we cannot concede your right to say what was intended or to place your own interpretation thereon. As to such of our former employees who may desire Judge Barron to look into their cases where such men are still out of employment have applied to their superintendents for a hearing and have not been satisfied as to the result of such application, there is no objection to their being heard by Judge Barron.

That was on January 17, and it will be interesting to note that from that date to this no step has been taken by the minister to bring to his senses this magnate of the Grand Trunk who not only in this but in other matters which the Minister of Railways will remember and understand, seems to have an hypnotic influence over this government, or some other influence which they either fear or perhaps love so much that they wish to have it extended and increased. In conclusion, I say that I believe this correspondence shows beyond all question that no effort of any kind, good, bad or indifferent, was made by the government to avert the strike by means of arbitration. It shows also that when the government had its choice of appointing a conciliation board under either of two statutes it chose the one which did not give the power to the minister to have an award made which would be binding on the parties. The evidence also shows that after the report was made by the conciliation board, and when the minority report by a gentleman of the standing in the country of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, pointed out that conciliation was impossible, although a month elapsed before the strike commenced, no effort was made by the government to secure arbitration, and Mr. Hays in his letter claims that not only had no effort been made by the government, but the suggestions made by him in that direction had been turned down by the Minister of Labour. Then, after the strike was on there is nothing to show that any practical effort was made by the department until the agreement of the 2nd of August. I give the department full credit for having made that agreement, which at the time was apparently satisfactory to both parties, and for having wired the terms of it honestly and fairly to the men, on the strength of which they abandoned their strike and returned to work. I do, however, think that the government will fail to command the best judgment of the House in not taking steps to enforce the agreement which they themselves had made with the Grand Trunk. When the men appealed to the ministers to see that the agreement made by them is enforced, the only answer they get is that the ministers made no agreement, and that they were simply witnesses to an agreement between the men and the company; the fact being, according to the letter of the company to the men, that the agreement was made between the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Militia and Mr. Hays as to the three months within which the men would be restored to their positions. Therefore, I submit that the responsibility and duty in all fairness and honour rested with the government to exercise every power in their possession to compel the president of the Grand Trunk to carry out the agreement he made with them, and not to have the pitiable exhibition that notwithstanding that the men had been assured on the word of the minister of the Crown that every one not guilty of acts of disorderly conduct would be restored to his position within three months, there are to-day 258 men still off the road. And Judge Barron, who is appointed by the Grand Trunk, and paid by the Grand Trunk, tells the men that in order that he may have jurisdiction under the rules laid down, the men must first appeal to the man who dismissed them, and then through the various grades of officials until they come to the president, and that then if they do not obtain justice he will inquire into their case. That is the position in which these innocent men are placed; men against whom no charge is made, men whom the Grand Trunk are in honour pledged to restore to their places. And, Sir, this agreement is violated with respect to these men without protest on the part of the Minister of Labour, who seems to be content, in his correspondence with this magnate of the Grand Trunk railway, to thank him for his kindness, although apparently he was badly snubbed. I beg to move:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and in place thereof the following be inserted:

This House expresses its regret that the government, through the Department of Labour or in any other way, wholly failed to make any intelligent effort to avert the late strike on the Grand Trunk railway, to put an end to it during its continuance, or to compel Mr. C. M. Hays, the president of that railway, to effectively carry out the agreement made with the government, on the faith of which when communicated by the Minister of Labour to the Brotherhoods concerned, the men at once offered to resume their service with the company.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY TRAINMEN'S STRIKE.

House resumed debate on motion for Supply and Mr. Northrup's amendment thereto.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) had moved an amendment to the motion to go into Supply to the effect that the House expresses its regret in three particulars: first, that the government, through the Department of Labour or in any other way, had wholly failed to make any intelligent effort to avert the late strike; second, that the government had failed to put an end to this strike during its continuance; and third, that it had failed to compel Mr. Hays, the president of the Grand Trunk railway, to effectively carry out the agreement made with the government. There are therefore in that amendment three distinct charges. First, that the government is responsible for not having effectively prevented the strike which took place on the Grand Trunk railway; second, that the government was responsible for its continuance or failure to terminate it; and third that the government is responsible for the alleged failure on the part of Mr. Hays to carry out the terms of the agreement.

I shall endeavour to deal with these charges in their order; but before doing so it may enable the House better to understand and appreciate the significance of the strike and the difficulty of dealing with it if I briefly outline its nature and true proportions. Let me point out first of all that this strike was but the culmination of a movement which started on this continent nearly two or three years ago, on the part of the organizations connected with the railways of the continent to bring about a standardization in the rates of pay and the conditions under which the men are obliged to labour. I say on the continent, because these brotherhoods have organizations not only in Canada and the United States but also in Mexico. They extend throughout the whole of North America. About three years ago they endeavoured to bring all the railways on the continent on to one plane as respects the conditions under which the workingmen are obliged to labour. That movement, which started in the western states, took up the greater part of the year 1909 in that section of the country. Then having succeeded in bringing about an equalization of conditions on the American roads, they endeavoured to bring a similar condition in western Canada and succeeded, so far as the Canadian Pacific railway was concerned. In 1910, these organizations endeavoured to bring into line the railways in the eastern states. Some 40 or 50, or perhaps 60 different railways were affected; and when these brotherhoods were able to bring about an equalization, making allowance to a certain extent for the different conditions under which men were obliged to work—when they succeeded in bringing into line the whole of the United States and western Canada, they next turned their attention to eastern Canada. In that connection there were two different railways to be considered—the Grand Trunk railway and the Canadian Pacific railway.

If hon. members have grasped the significance of what I have said, they will see that the dispute, which finally took the shape of a strike on the Grand Trunk railway, was but the culminating point of that movement which had been successful in every part of North America except in the Dominion as respects the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway. When that point is grasped, hon. gentlemen will perhaps hesitate before endeavouring to hold the government or any one responsible for the fact that that strike came on as it did with the force and effectiveness that characterized it. As I have said, there were only two railways left, after the railways in the eastern states had been brought into line. These were the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway. Under our law before any action can be taken in the nature of a strike, the parties are bound to submit their differences to a board. They applied for boards in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway, and these were granted in each case. The boards met simultaneously and reported in the case of each company. In neither case was the report wholly acceptable to the men, but I believe in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway, that company was prepared to accept the award of the Board of Conciliation, though the men were not. What followed? After the board had given its award in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway the men in the employ of that company expressed dissatisfaction at certain things, and then the Canadian Pacific railway company and the men came together and negotiated further and arrived at a settlement satisfactory to each. That left the movement then confined enirely to the Grand Trunk railway. The men had been successful on all the railways in the United States and western Canada and in eastern Canada, with the exception of the Grand Trunk railway, with which they had been unable to bring about a satisfactory settlement. One reason alone is sufficient to account for that fact, and that is that different methods of payment in connection with the two roads the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway, had been in existence. In the case of the Canadian Pacific railway the men were paid by the mile, and in the case of the Grand Trunk railway by the day. On practically all the railways in the United States, these organizations had been able to bring about a system of payment by the mile, and the object of the struggle in connection with the recent strike was to compel the Grand Trunk railway to change its system from a day to a mileage basis. The importance of that difference will be apparent when one considers what takes place as the roadbed and the rolling stock are improved. Where the payment is on the mileage basis, the better the condition of the roadbed and the rolling stock, the greater the run can be made, and the longer the run, the more the amount of wages. On the other hand, when payment is by the day, every improvement to the roadbed and the rolling stock calls from the men the expenditure of a greater amount of energy; they have to travel over a greater distance for the same pay. And as the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway have been improving their roadbeds and rolling stock, the result is that the men on the Canadian Pacific railway were getting a higher rate of wage relatively than those on the Grand Trunk railway. In some cases the difference was as high as 38 or 40 per cent in favour of the men on the Canadian Pacific railway as compared with men doing the same work on the Grand Trunk railway. It was this large difference in the rate of wages and this difference in the method of payment that caused dissatisfaction among the men on the Grand Trunk railway, and it was because this difference was so great that the Grand Trunk railway was not prepared to accede to the demand made on them at the outset nor the terms proposed later on.

My hon. friend in his motion charges the government with not having made any intelligent effort to avert the strike on the Grand Trunk railway; and in endeavouring to impress this on the House, he said there were two ways open to the government by which they could have averted that strike. One was to appoint a board under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and the other was to appoint a board of arbitration under the provisions of the Conciliation and Labour Act and compel the two parties to execute the award of that board and thus prevent the possibilities of a strike.

My hon. friend is a lawyer, and I am somewhat surprised that he should have made that criticism because he must be familiar with the laws which this House has enacted; and if he reads through the statutes he will be unable to find any law which gives the Minister of Labour power to compel an arbitration. This parliament has never seen its way to concede compulsory arbitration. And, in the absence of a statute of that kind, I am unable to see how the hon. gentleman could draw the inference he has attempted to draw that the minister had power to compel arbitration.

Mr. RHODES. With the permission of the minister, I desire to ask a question. Is there any question about the jurisdiction of this parliament to pass a compulsory Act? I ask purely for information.

Mr. KING. I do not think myself there is any question about it. I think that if this parliament decided that it was a wise thing to enact such a law, it would have full power to do so. When the matter was considered some years ago, a Compulsory Arbitration Bill was introduced by Sir Wm. Mulock, then Minister of Labour. That Bill was read twice, I think, in this House, and then copies of it were distributed throughout the country to labour unions and important companies with a request for their opinions as to a law of that kind; and they were pretty nearly unanimous in stating that they did not wish compulsory arbitration, but what they wished was compulsory investigation.

Mr. RHODES. Would there not be an interference with the right of contract if such a law were passed?

Mr. KING. So far as railways chartered by this parliament are concerned, I think certainly this parliament would have authority to enact a compulsory arbitration law. However, that is aside from the question. The point I wish to make clear is that there was not the alternative which my hon. friend has suggested. He has referred to some correspondence between Mr. Hays and the department as being rather extraordinary—he used that remark, I think, in reference to a letter written by Mr. Hays to myself. The line of argument he has taken is precisely that taken by Mr. Hays at the outset which, I must confess, I thought was somewhat extraordinary on Mr. Hay's part. For I felt that he could not but have the best legal advice, and I was unable to see how he could think that this government had power to compel arbitration. As I have said, the dispute was referred, first of all, under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. It was in January, 1910, that the men first presented their demands to the company. These demands were considered and negotiations took place between the parties until March 17, by which time they had discovered that it was impossible to reach a settlement by mutual agreement. The men applied to the department for a conciliation board. This board met for the first time on May 25, and on June 22 the board presented a report to the government. From June 22 until July 18, the parties continued their negotiations. The board's award was not taken as satisfactory to the men or by the company, but they used it as a basis in the effort to bring about a satisfactory settlement. So, from June 22 until July 18, the date when the strike was declared, the parties did their best to reach an agreement. My hon. friend says that during that interval, the government should have stepped in and compelled arbitration; and he says we should have do so as a consequence of a request which came to the government from Mr. Hays, pointing out that we had the power to compel arbitration, and that it was the duty of the minister to compel it under the circumstances. I will not weary the House by reading correspondence, but will refer hon. members to a letter which is on file, and which had been brought down, of July 13, in which Mr. Hays suggested that the department should take action under the Conciliation and Labour Act to compel arbitration. And I would refer hon. members also to my reply to Mr. Hays and my communication to each of the parties involved on behalf of the railway organizations. I took this position—and I think it is the only one that could be taken: The dispute had been referred under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. So, any reference under the Conciliation and Labour Act could only be in the nature of a second investigation. I held that it was never the intention of this parliament, when it enacted the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and made provision that railway disputes might come under that Act, or under the Conciliation and Labour Act, that such a dispute should be taken first under one Act and then under the other. That is, parliament intended to give the railway men an alternative to proceed under either of these statutes, and, the men having proceeded under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, they were not by law obliged to submit to a second investigation under the Conciliation and Labour Act. However, I pointed out to Mr. Hays that if it was an arbitration as commonly understood—that is, each of the parties agreeing to be bound by the award of some third person who might be called in—I would do my part to see if the men were willing to accept arbitration of that kind. I communicated with both Mr. Murdock and Mr. Berry, who were representing the men, and drew their attention to Mr. Hay's letter. What was the reply? In one letter, which I received, which was signed by Mr. Hays himself, he inclosed a communication from the men, and this had the following significant statement:

The committee have also carefully considered the suggestion contained in your letter in reference to arbitration, and they desire us to advise you that in their opinion the questions referred to (being the contentions of men employed in train and yard service in the eastern territory for standardization of wages and general conditions), have been very fully arbitrated already. First, for some eight days on the Baltimore and Ohio railway under the provisions of the so-called Erdman Act; later in the case of some ten or more properties by a submission of the entire question to two gentlemen experienced in these matters, to dispose of.

The committee are not inclined to believe that further arbitration should be necessary or that arbitration would bring out anything in the way of contentions upon either side that has not already been fully considered and passed upon.

Similarly, the letter which I received from Mr. Berry and Mr. Murdock in answer to the communication which was sent them transmitting Mr. Hays' letter, contained the following:

On behalf of the members of these organizations——

The Brotherhood of Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors—

—generally throughout Canada, and especially on behalf of the men employed in train and yard service on the Grand Trunk railway, we trust that it may be decided by the minister as unnecessary to apply the provisions of the Mulock Bill for the purpose of investigating this situation. The men on the line, generally, cannot believe that such action would conserve their interests, or the interests of the public, but would rather feel that any further investigation of the nature referred to would only tend to prejudice the situation unfavourably against them by causing further delay.

That was the situation. Mr. Hays had asked the government to try to bring about a second investigation under the Conciliation and Labour Act. I believed that an investigation of that kind could not serve any useful purpose, and, further, that it would be prejudicial; and I based that belief not only on my general knowledge of the situation at the time, but on the expressed opinion of the men themselves when Mr. Hays' communication was transmitted to them. I had no power to compel an arbitration. But had I tried to precipitate in any way this question of a further investigation into the difficulty as it was at that time, it would only have aggravated the situation and put the government in a position where it might reasonably have been held responsible for some of the trouble which might have ensued. All that it was possible to do, after the Board had presented its report was to offer the good offices of the government to the parties and to agree to meet any of the expenses which might be necessarily incurred in carrying out any proposal which either side might make and which would be agreeable to both. That I did in communications sent both to the company and to the men on every occasion; for example, in my letter to Mr. Hays I said:

I regret that it does not seem to me I have the requisite authority to take either of the courses suggested by you, nor under the circumstances do I believe it would be in the public interest to do so. If, however, either the company or its employees can suggest any way in which the good offices of the government can be further exercised towards mediating the present difficulties I shall be pleased to do my utmost to see that they are immediately placed at the service of the parties.

That was the standing offer which was kept before the parties at every stage of this dispute, that if either of them could suggest any way in which the government would lend its good offices to prevent the situation becoming more critical, the good offices of the government would be placed immediately at their service.

Take the parallel case of the dispute on the Canadian Pacific railway. There the board had given its award, which was not accepted by the men; the company and the men continued negotiations. Had I done what the member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) suggests I should have done in their case and said to the parties: You have been unable to get a settlement as a result of the investigation by the board, now the government wants you to arbitrate this matter, I would have been in a nice position, and the government would have been in a nice position if they had turned round and said: Thank you, we do not want any of your arbitration, we do not need it, and if they had subsequently shown that they did not need it by coming to an agreement, as they did, which is binding to-day. The Grand Trunk situation was precisely the same as that of the Canadian Pacific railway. There, too, the board's award was not accepted, they were still negotiating and for any third party to have gone in at that particular stage would only have been to make the situation worse than it was at that time. I would point out in that connection that the government on any occasion of this kind has to consider more than the immediate case. There is such a thing as precedent and particularly in dealing with these industrial disputes it is easy to establish a precedent which may lead to a great deal of trouble later on. My belief is that after a board has been appointed and has made an investigation the government should not interfere further between the parties unless there is something very exceptional to compel them to do so, because once the parties get the idea that government can be called upon indefinitely to lend its good offices they are not going to end their dispute or the negotiations at the first stage, they are always going to continue them until they have exhausted every possible means of gaining their end. So I feel in administering the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act that the government is on the right side where it refuses, unless the cases are most exceptional, to take any step as between the parties, after a dispute has been referred to a board, and the board has given its award on which they are to base their judgment.

I have in my hand a pamphlet signed by Mr. Lee, President of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. This pamphlet is an account of the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont railway strike as given by the president of this organization to the men who were concerned in the dispute. At page 5 of this pamphlet Mr. Lee sets forth the negotiations which took place between the company and the representatives of the men, after the award of the Board of Conciliation had been given. He points out that on July 16, there was a lengthy conference in the office of the president and again on July 18 another conference. He says:

> Mr. Hays replied shortly that he would meet the committee and officers at 11.30 a.m., the 18th, which was done, other officers of the company also being present. Mr. Hays at this conference stated that the company would definitely promise to put the eastern standard rates into effect January 1, 1913. This was not accepted and the conference was adjourned and resumed again at 3 p.m.

That was on July 18, the very day on which the strike was declared. The parties up to 3 o'clock that afternoon were negotiating together to see if it were possible to come to a settlement themselves. Mr. Lee goes on:

> Prior to the departure of the general committeemen a draft of a proposal of last resort was prepared and ratified which it was agreed should be submitted to Mr. Hays if it was finally concluded that a peaceable settlement could not otherwise be effected. After it appeared that Mr. Hays was indisposed to make any appreciable concessions, the proposition mentioned was presented to him, on which he expressed himself quite favourably and asked the opinion of other officers present as to the time it would take them to analyse it. They answered that it would take two or three days, but the attention of the officials was called to the fact that they had had several months to consider the men's demands, and that the committeemen were now out on the line getting ready to put a strike order into effect that evening and that the men were opposed to any further delay at that time. The president then stated that they would take until 5 o'clock to consider the matter and the officers and sub-committee were told to return at that time. Upon return the president handed Brothers Berry and Murdock copies of proposed terms of settlement as the company's ultimatum. The officials were informed that the terms offered were entirely unacceptable and, even if the officers and sub-committee were so disposed, they could not accept the offer as it was not up to the lowest basis, above referred to, fixed previously by the joint committee. Mr. Hays stated that the company would go no further and the meeting closed.
> It was now definitely realized that a strike was inevitable. Up to this time the sentiment in all parts of the Dominion was that the Grand Trunk Company could not consistently refuse to give the men the same rates and conditions as granted by practically all eastern railways. It was not believed that the company would engage in a strike.

That was the position the men themselves took in reference to this dispute. If, up to 5 o'clock on the afternoon on which the strike was declared, the leaders of that strike did not believe a strike would take place, wherein would the government have been justified, in the midst of these critical negotiations, with the example before them of the case of another railway company having negotiated with the same body in which a successful settlement had been reached, it had rushed in and tried to compel an arbitration which the men themselves had indicated would only help to precipitate an element of danger into the whole situation? I say if the government had taken the course which the hon. member in moving this resolution has suggested they should have taken, I think the hon. member might have brought in the resolution which he has here, and have very properly condemned the government for being too precipitous, too officious, and for preventing the parties themselves from coming together and effecting a settlement which might have averted the strike. So I say as to the first part of the resolution which my hon. friend has moved and which expresses regret that the government had not endeavoured in any intelligent way to avert a strike on the Grand Trunk railway, he is wrong in two particulars: he is wrong first of all in the method he suggests should have been taken by the government, for I claim that is a wrong method, and he is wrong in stating that no effort whatever was made inasmuch as when the demands of the men were presented these demands were made a subject of investigation by a board which was appointed by the government and then the government from the time the board's award was given up to the time the strike took place, held out an offer continuously to each side in the dispute to lend its good offices in any way that would be acceptable to the two parties.

There seems to be just as little ground for criticism of the government's action as respects the second charge contained in this amendment, namely that the government had wholly failed to put an end to the strike during its continuance. Just here I would call the attention of the House to a curious contradiction in the motion of my hon. friend. He wishes to condemn the government on every possible side, first of all for the strike, secondly for not ending the strike, and thirdly for not having had the agreement carried out. But he finds himself in this dilemma that to hold the government responsible for the agreement being carried out, he has in some way to make the government responsible for the agreement itself. So he is put in the curious position of being obliged to admit that the government did bring about a settlement of the strike when he tries to hold it responsible for not having the terms of the settlement fully carried out. On the other hand, when he wishes to make his denunciation wholesale, he says the government are to blame for not putting an end to the strike during its continuance. Follow the two clauses of my hon. friend's motion. He says that the government have 'wholly failed . . to put an end to it during its continuance', and he goes on to say: 'or to compel Mr. C. M. Hays, the president of that railway, to effectively carry out the agreement made with the government, on the faith of which . . the men at once offered to resume their service with the company'. Either one of these two clauses must be wrong, both to my mind are wrong but either of them is certainly wrong and it must appear so to every one who reads them. If the government did not put an end to the strike then the government can not be held responsible for the terms of an agreement that, according to the third paragraph of the amendment, it is supposed to have drawn up and as a result of which the men returned to work. On the other hand, if the government did draw up an agreement as a result of which the men returned to work, then the second clause of my hon. friend's amendment, namely, that the government did not put an end to the strike, falls absolutely to the ground.

Just a word as to what the government did do when the strike took place. It was the 18th of July when the men decided to go out. On the night of the 18th of July an order was issued from Montreal to all the railway trainmen and conductors from Portland on the Atlantic to Chicago, half way across the continent, and the whole Grand Trunk railway system throughout that entire distance, including something like 4,000 miles of railway, was completely tied up. The number of men who went out at that time totalled 3,450 and then, a day or two following, after the company had closed its shops at Quebec and other points, the total number who were out in consequence of the strike was 8,500. What was the situation on the morning of the 19th of July? Between 8,000 and 9,000 men were out, an entire railway system was completely tied up, not a passenger or freight train moving from one end of it to the other and this over something like 4,000 miles of railway system. That was a position to which the government could not be indifferent. I have already said that I do not think it the business of the government to interfere once the board has issued its award, unless the case is exceptional, but I contend that in this particular case the situation was exceptional. This was one of the first strikes of any magnitude that had taken place since this legislation was passed, and when it became apparent that the whole railway system of the Grand Trunk was going to be effectively tied up it became the duty of the government to do what it could to relieve the situation. My hon. friend, in suggesting what might have been done, said that he did not see why the government did not appoint a Board of Arbitration and place on that board merchants, manufacturers, working men and capitalists, so that all interests in the country would be represented. Now, the hon. gentleman knows just as well as I do that the government could have appointed a thousand boards and not one of these boards could have affected the situation one way or the other. The dispute had already been investigated. It could not have been referred to a Board of Arbitration without each party being willing that it should be so referred and being willing to abide by the award. The parties were not willing. The only step that was possible, in so far as I could see in the premises, was for the government to endeavour in some way to affect public opinion on the question so as to compel each of the parties to realize that theirs was not the only interest that had to be taken account of, that while they, as working men, or a railway company, might believe they could afford to fight over their own differences, the public also had an interest in the situation and the public was entitled to have its voice heard. So, on the day following the strike, I addressed a communication to each of the parties asking them if they could not see their way to refer this difference to arbitration. I pointed out that they had professed to be willing to arbitrate before the strike had taken place. I had my doubts as to the genuineness of their professions and my doubts increased when I gave them an opportunity to refer the matter to arbitration and they did not take advantage of it. That was the first step necessary to be taken and it was taken promptly. Each of the parties had asked if they would not agree to refer the dispute to arbitration, and I told them that in the event of their being willing to do so the government would bear the expense of the arbitration and assist in every way to see that it was faithfully and properly carried out. What were the answers that were received? The answer that came from the men was largely an evasive answer. The answer that came from the company was no less evasive. Each of them was unwilling to appear to be the first to give in by consenting to arbitration. I shall not delay this discussion by reading the messages that were exchanged on the one hand and the other, but I would point out to the House that what the department sought to do on that occasion was to let the public know who was responsible as between the two parties for the situation which had been created. That could be made apparent if one or the other was refusing what was obviously fair, and I felt that sooner or later the pressure of public opinion would make itself felt to such a degree that the parties could not longer stand out against it, and that very soon the strike would be terminated. That communication was sent to each of the parties, and as neither of them sent satisfactory replies I addressed the following letter on July 2 to each of them—to Mr. Hays on the one side and to Messrs. Berry and Murdock on the other:

Referring further to my letter of the 20th inst. and the replies received, I would respectfully point out that neither the reply from the president of the company nor the reply from the representatives of the general committee of the employees, answers the question it asks and which is, whether, as representing one of the parties to the present dispute, you will now be willing to refer the existing differences to arbitration, provided a board of arbitrators mutually acceptable can be secured, and the necessary expenses incidental to such board met by the government. This is a question to which the people of Canada who, at the present are being more largely affected by the existing dispute than either of the parties, have a right to expect a definite reply, and which, as a minister responsible to them, I feel it my duty to ask on their behalf. Will you kindly give a direct answer to this question at your earliest convenience, that the public may be able to judge for itself of the present positions and attitude of the parties on a matter which so vitally affects its interests?

That letter or telegram, for as a matter of fact it was wired, gives the keynote to the attitude of the government at that time. The government had made up its mind that it would find out for the people of the country who was responsible for keeping up this dispute, it was determined to give each of the parties an opportunity of entering into an arrangement which would afford a satisfactory way out of the dispute, and if either failed to take advantage of the opportunty its action could speak for itself. The answers to that communication will be found in the papers which have been brought down to the House. In brief, the replies that we received were also evasive. The committee that were dealing with the case of the men replied that they did not have authority to refer the matter to a board other than one of the nature which they had agreed previously to refer it to. Mr. Hays replied that he had nothing to add to his previosu letter. I continued to press for a definite reply, urging the obvious public grounds and in the course of another day or two one of the parties did finally consent to refer the dispute to a Board of Arbitration, this was the men. In their letter sent from Montreal on July 23, they give reasons which are well deserving of consideration and they say:

We recognize the special obligation to the public and regret exceedingly the inconvenience and loss to which public and private interests are being subjected, and with that recognition desire to advise you that we will be willing to refer the existing differences to arbitration provided a board of arbitrators mutually acceptable can be secured.

The strike took place on the 18th July, and by the 23rd July the government had succeeded in getting one of the parties to consent to have the differences referred to a board of arbitration. Had Mr. Hays been ready to take the same step at the same time there is no reason why the strike should not have ended then. When I received this letter from Messrs. Murdock and Berry, I at once communicated its contents to Mr. Hays, and I asked him pointedly whether, the other party having agreed to refer the matter to arbitration, he would not also agree to do so. In reply he said:

Your telegram of the 23rd received, while as you know from many conferences urging your action before the strike took place and from our offer repeated and urged upon the committee, we were desirous of arbitration and so avoiding the existing trouble, the time for such action has now passed, and it is only necessary that we should have the protection to which we are entitled to enable us to resume the full operation of the road.

CHAS. M. HAYS.

Had the government been indifferent, had the government been prepared to take Mr. Hays' word, the matter might have ended with that letter, but the moment that reply was received from Mr. Hays the government communicated with the customs officials throughout Ontario as to the movement of freight in their respective towns, and from all of whom replies were received stating that the Grand Trunk Railway system was practically tied up, that trains were not moving in some, that factories had closed down, and, in all, that inconvenience, loss and distress were being experienced. The government then took action as a government, and a meeting of the cabinet was called, and Sir Richard Cartwright, who was acting Prime Minister, in a communication pointed out to Mr. Hays that the reports of the government officers demonstrated that Mr. Hays' telegram did not correctly describe the situation. Sir Richard Cartwright wrote:

The government has been carefully considering the whole strike situation, and whilst it is the wish of my colleagues and myself to cause you as little embarrassment as possible, we cannot but feel, in view of the situation as disclosed in these messages, all of which are from an official and strictly impartial source, as well as from many other urgent representations, that it is eminently desirable that some settlement of the present dispute should be immediately effected, and that if this cannot be brought about by a conference between the parties, the matter should be left to arbitration as already suggested by the government.

Mr. Hays had refused the offer of arbitration, and the government came back at him and pointed out that he should accept arbitration at that particular stage, and Sir Richard Cartwright concluded:

I very much hope that you may find it possible to co-operate with the government along the lines suggested in its endeavours to deal with the critical situation which has arisen, through the interruption of operations over a large part of your company's system.

On that day the Minister of Militia was leaving for the maritime provinces and he agreed to take this communication in person to Mr. Hays so as to impress upon him how determined the government was that the strike should be ended and ended speedily. The Minister of Militia took that letter to Mr. Hays on July 27, and the same afternoon I received this telegram:

Messrs. Garretson and Lee held conference to-day with Mr. Hays without result. May I be permitted on behalf of the men on strike to request that as a minister of the Crown and representative of the people you come to Montreal and by further effort try and arrange an honourable settlement either by arbitration or negotiation.

JAMES MURDOCK.

As a result of that telegram, I left on the following day for Montreal, and the Minister of Militia and myself did our utmost to bring together the two parties with a view to a settlement. I point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) that instead of being indifferent and doing nothing to bring about a settlement, the government was as active as it could be from the moment the strike took place. The only step we could take at the outset was to bring all the pressure possible on each side to get them to agree to a joint conference or arbitration and the communications which passed between the government and the parties were the means of helping to focus public opinion on the situation, and enable the public to discover which side was right and which wrong in refusing to take advantage of the government's offer. In this way public opinion combined with the active intervention of two of the ministers, eventually succeeded in bringing about a settlement, and instead of the government being criticised by my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) he should have complimented it on its activity and success in ending the difficulty in so short a time. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) said that the government should have used the big stick, and although he did not define what he meant by that expression, his meaning apparently was that the government should have done all it could to compel the Grand Trunk railway to agree to a settlement on reasonable terms. But, if we are to judge by results, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) has plenty of evidence to show that the big stick was used, and used pretty effectively on that occasion. There is no doubt at all that Mr. Hays did not intend to settle that strike. I have no hesitation in saying that once the men went out on strike, it was the intention of Mr. Hays, no matter what the cost, to keep up that strike until he defeated the men. And that such was the opinion of the men themselves is evident from the statement in this same pamphlet sent out by Mr. Lee, the president of the organization, in describing the effort made to bring about a settlement. On page 6 he says:

The entire service was demoralized in the beginning, but before a great many hours enough strike breakers had been bought and borrowed to man a number of passenger trains and as usual the passenger service did not suffer badly after a few days. The freight service, however, was crippled seriously. The loss to the companies in revenue was enormous. Valuable freight contracts were lost, at least for the time. Mr. Hays, however, seemed to give little consideration to the immediate financial consequence of the strike, but appeared fixed in the determination that the men should be fought to the end.

Again he says:

He seemed as ever intent upon prolonging the strike indefinitely, regardless of cost, apparently with the view of eventually having the public interest itself to the extent of forcing the government to demand a resumption of the service.

He goes on to describe the efforts that were made by Messrs. Garrison and himself to bring about a conference with Mr. Hays with a view to settling the difficulty, pointing out that they were unsuccessful and that these efforts were finally broken off. The correspondence itself shows that the men saw plainly that the attitude of the company was that they were going to fight to the bitter end, no matter at what cost to the company or to the country; but the government made up its mind that the fight would not go on to the bitter end, but that a settlement of the strike would take place. So the efforts of the Minister of Militia and myself, during the two or three days that we were in Montreal, were devoted to bringing the parties together, and putting them in a position where each would be obliged to show exactly where they stood, so that the public might learn, if necessary, from us as ministers of the Crown, who were in the right and who were in the wrong. It was Thursday afternoon, I think, when we left for Montreal; by Saturday a joint conference had been arranged between the parties, and by Saturday night we had practically come to an agreement as to the terms of settlement except in one particular, and it took from Saturday night till Tuesday to get that one remaining question settled before the strike could be declared to be at an end. What I want to point out to my hon. friend is that by the action of the government, first, in offering arbitration and in bringing public opinion to bear on the situation, secondly, by actively intervening when requested to do so by the employees, and, thirdly, by bringing all the pressure possible to bear on the parties when we got them together, the strike was terminated inside of 15 days, instead of being continued over a period of time.

Now, I think I am right when I say that the efforts of the government to bring about a termination of the dispute were appreciated, not only by the public, but by the parties to the dispute themselves; and, seeing that my hon. friend thinks that no intelligent effort was made to avert the strike, or to end it after it began, it might be well for me to read some of the communications which were received immediately after the termination of the strike, to show that those who had to do with it and knew the situation took an entirely different view from what he does. For example, here is a communication from Mr. Garretson, president of the Order of Railroad Conductors. He was one of those who were present during the negotiations with Mr. Hays; in fact, he conducted the negotiations on behalf of the men. His letter is as follows:

Order of Railway Conductors,
Cedar Rapids, Iowa,
August 10, 1910.

Hon. William L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

I take this opportunity of expressing to you on behalf of not only myself and my associate officers, but of the organization at large, and more especially the Canadian membership thereof, the profound obligation under which we lie for the services of yourself and your associate minister in connection with the settlement of the strike upon the Grand Trunk and the Central Vermont railways. The ready recognition by you of the justification for the claims of the men on those properties and the exercise of personal and governmental influence toward securing a termination of the strike on those properties will not be forgotten by our membership, and I sincerely trust that those most directly affected, namely, our Canadian citizens, will in the future make that appreciation thoroughly apparent.

In conclusion, kindly accept my expressions of highest personal regard, and believe me, sincerely and gratefully yours,

A. B. GARRETSON,
President.

I believe that a similar communication was sent by Mr. Garretson to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence. Then, Mr. Berry, who represented the organization in Canada, in a letter dated Toronto, December 31, 1910, wrote as follows:

I inclose herewith a copy of minutes of Eastern Association General Committee, Order Railway Conductors and Brotherhood Railway

Trainmen, held at Buffalo, N.Y., October 18 to 20, inclusive, 1910. I would draw your attention to resolution on pages 9 and 10 expressing appreciation of action taken by the officials of the government, especially Sir Frederick Borden and yourself. This resolution had the unanimous endorsation of the meeting.

It will be observed that this letter is dated December 31, so that the feeling it expresses was not simply that which Mr. Berry entertained just at the moment after the strike was settled, but the opinion he continued to have up to the end of the year. The resolution referred to by Mr. Berry is as follows:

Resolved, that we express our full appreciation of actions of officials of the Dominion government in their untiring efforts to settle the strike, and we especially commend the efforts of the Minister of Militia, Sir Frederick Borden, and the Minister of Labour, the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who did so much toward restoring peace and harmony.

This resolution was passed at a joint meeting of the Eastern Association of General Committees of Railroad Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, held at Buffalo from October 18 to October 20. Then, in a communication from Mr. Barry, dated August 15, on behalf of the Canadian members, I find the following:

In conclusion, I wish to take this opportunity of expressing to you on behalf of myself, other officers of the Order of Railway Conductors, and especially our members employed on the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont railways from Portland to Chicago, and the Canadian membership in general, the profound obligation under which we lie for the services of yourself and your associate ministers of the Dominion government in connection with the settlement of the strike upon the above-named railways. I feel, and sincerely trust, that the ready recognition and untiring efforts of Sir Frederick Borden and yourself will not be forgotten by the Canadian citizens, especially our membership, and that they will in the future make that reciprocation thoroughly apparent.

Again thanking yourself and associate ministers on behalf of the membership of the Order of Railway Conductors, and with highest personal regard, believe me, sincerely and gratefully yours,

(Sgd.) S. N. BERRY,
Vice-president O.R.C.

Those communications speak for themselves. I might also quote from the official journals of these organizations. Here is the 'Railroad Trainman,' the official journal of the Brotherhood of the Railroad Trainmen, at page 797 of the September issue, I find the folowing with regard to the setltlement:

The settlement was effected principally through the efforts of the Minister of Labour, Mr. King, assisted by the Minister of Militia, Sir Frederick Borden, to whom full credit is given for their efforts in bringing about the settlement.

Also in the 'Railway Conductor' which is the official journal of the Railway Conductors Brotherhood, I find at page 718 the following passage:

Mr. WILCOX. What date?

Mr. KING. September, 1910. This is what that journal says:

In connection with this settlement the thanks of the Canadian membership and of our entire organization as well, are due and tendered to the Hon. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labour, and Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, for their untiring efforts on behalf of the men, for the influence they brought to bear on the Grand Trunk Railway management contributed in no small degree in producing a satisfactory result and ending the controversy.

My purpose in reading these resolutions is not in any way to record on 'Hansard' communications which one might be pleased to read concerning his own work, but I am forced to read them in view of the resolution moved. My hon. friend says that no effort was made by the government to put an end to the strike during its continuance. That is the charge which he brings against the government in general and the Department of Labour in particular. In order to reply, I feel it necessary to quote the words of the men themselves who, better than any one else and as well at any rate as the company itself, knew who had rendered them good service.

Not only did the parties themselves believe that the government had rendered the men a service, but the people of the country also. I have a telegram from my hon. friend's own constituency for I believe he is a resident of Belleville. I am not sure whether he is a member of the Board of Trade of Belleville, but on August 3, I received the following telegram from that body:

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa.

Executive Belleville Board of Trade thank you for effective work in settlement of strike.

W. B. DEACON,
President.
W. N. PONTON,
Secretary.

Will my hon. friend say that the board of trade in his own town was mistaken when it sent a telegram congratulating the government on its effective work?

Mr. NORTHRUP. They did not understand the facts then.

Mr. KING. I think my hon. friend does not understand them yet. Here is a telegram from the mayor of Hamilton, dated August 3:

Hon. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

The city of Hamilton appreciates your earnest efforts to settle strike and congratulate you on your success.

JOHN I. McLAREN,
Mayor.

Does my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) think that the citizens of his city were mistaken in their belief as to the nature of the services rendered?

Mr. BARKER. No doubt they congratulated the hon. gentleman on what they thought was a success. They do not think so now, perhaps.

Mr. KING. I am glad to have my hon. friend admit at any rate that they were sincere when they sent that telegram. I could quote very many others, but I mention only these two. Here is a communication from an important firm of wholesale grocers, representing the business interests of this country, and my hon. friend referred to the business interests. This communication also comes from the city of Hamilton:

Hamilton, August 4, 1910.

The Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

We beg to offer you our congratulations upon the success of your efforts in adjusting the differences between the Grand Trunk railway system and the trainmen. It is a great relief to the trade to have this matter settled because, instead of conditions improving, they were gradually getting worse, and had the strike continued for two or three weeks longer the loss to the trade would have been much greater. It may interest you to know that the extra volume of business that was thrown on to the Canadian Pacific railway resulted in a congestion of freight over their system that will take them from one to two weeks to clean up. The Canadian Pacific railway had practically arrived at the point where it was impossible for them to guarantee prompt delivery of goods; delays were becoming general and much longer in extent.

In view of the conditions that were becoming so bad the prompt settlement of this strike has been a great relief, and we thoroughly appreciate the prompt and aggressive way in which you kept at it. It is encouraging to the trade of this country to have a minister to so grasp the situation that realizes the necessity of prompt action in matters that concern the trade and commerce of this country.

Again congratulating you on the successful termination of this unpleasant difference.

We are, yours truly,
W. H. GILLARD & CO.
per H. C. Beckett.

My hon. frined referred to Mr. Trowern, the secretary of the Retail Merchants Association as a man of shrewd judgment. Well, here is a communication from Mr. Trowern, dated August 9, in which he says:

I wish to congratulate you on your success in bringing about a settlement of this unfortunate disagreement.

So I might go on, but I think these are sufficient to show the House that at the time the strike was settled, when the facts were fresh in the minds of the people, there was no doubt on the part of any one—either those concerned in the strike itself or the public most affected by it—as to the service the government had rendered in helping to bring it to a speedy termination.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the government not receive a good many communications complaining about its inactivity while the strike lasted?

Mr. KING. We had a sample of those this afternoon when my hon. friend was reading some communications which he said were sent in—telegrams from different Boards of Trade urging that something should be done; and when by chance I asked my hon. friend to read one, I found it began with these words: 'While appreciating your indefatigable efforts.' Most of the communications received were along those lines.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought it would be only fair to place those on record alongside with the compliments to the minister himself.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt about their going on record. If any can be found, I can trust hon. gentlemen opposite to see that they will all be given a place in the report. But if my hon. friend will look at the press he will find that in practically all the newspapers the government was credited with making every effort possible to bring about a termination of the strike. It was not possible, however, to settle that strike in a day. In the case of a dispute of that magnitude, with the interests involved, with the feeling existing, there is no agency under heaven which could have brought about an immediate settlement of the difficulty. When one considers the nature of the dispute, its magnitude and the bitterness of the parties, the miracle is not that it lasted so long, but that it did not last several months longer. So much for the second part of my hon. friend's resolution.

In the third part he charges the government with having failed to compel Mr. Hays, the president of the Grand Trunk railway to effectively carry out the agreement which he says was made with the government and on the faith of which the men offered to return to service. Well, as already pointed out, this third part of the resolution contradicts the second. He says that an agreement was made on the faith of which the men returned to work; but in the second part he says that the government failed to do anything to terminate the dispute. While I think that in this third part the hon. member is also mistaken, let me first draw his attention to its wording. He says:

To effectively carry out the agreement made with the government on the faith of which the men at once offered to return to service.

My hon. friend saw that it was necessary to make out a case in that connection, for he spent some time in the endeavour to show that the agreement was with the government and not between the parties. There I take issue with him. The agreement was not with the government, but was between the parties to the dispute, the Grand Trunk Railway Company on one hand and the organizations involved in the dispute on the other. They were the parties to the dispute, and they were the parties to the settlement. The government helped to bring about an agreement—brought the parties together and, through its representatives, assisted the parties in trying to reach satisfactory terms. But the agreement was an agreement between the parties to the dispute, and the best evidence of that is that one party is now saying that the other is not carrying out its agreement.

Mr. BLAIN. Was not the understanding with the Minister of Militia and my hon. friend (Mr. King) a part of the agreement? That is the part that my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) was complaining about?

Mr. KING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) likes to regard it as part of the agreement—

Mr. BLAIN. I am asking if it was not part of the agreement.

Mr. KING. The agreement would not have gone into effect if that understanding had not been given—I will say that. But the question of the understanding having been given is not the question in dispute.

Mr. BLAIN. Did not the hon. minister regard it as part of the agreement, though it was not written?

Mr. KING. I regard it as part of the settlement, certainly; but it is not that part that is in dispute at the present time. I will explain that situation a little more fully. I fortunately happen to have retained a paper which was used during the course of the negotiations, and by a reference to it I think I can make perfectly plain to the House exactly what took place in regard to these words to which reference has been made. I have stated that, on Saturday afternoon—about three o'clock, I think it was—my hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) and myself had succeeded in getting the company and the men to meet. Mr. Hays and his officers sat on one side of the board, and Mr. Garretson and Mr. Lee, representatives of the men, on the other. The Minister of Militia and myself, with the solicitor of the company, and Mr. Wainwright, the vice-president, watched the proceedings. We took little or no part in negotiating the terms of the agreement. The award of the Board of Conciliation was made the basis of discussion and the two parties debated every clause in that proposed settlement. They would get to a certain length, and then break up. But we would get them together again, to see if we could not get a little further. By about nine or ten o'clock, it was thought that a settlement had been practically reached. There were only three main questions to decide—first, as to the reinstatement of the men; second, the rate of wages; and, third, the rules of the company and the method of payment. As I remember it, Mr. Hays, as the representative of the company, had a draft made of what was the tentative agreement all were discussing, and typewritten copies were made in his office and brought up and made the basis of further discussion. Copies were handed to the men on one side; Mr. Hays and his officers had copies; and Sir Frederick Borden and myself were given copies. I have here the copy which I had at that time. I will read the settlement in full, because it will make plain the nature of the discussion:

The company will put back as soon as possible the men, other than those who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation used towards the new men.

The company will put into effect on May 1, 1910, the rates named in schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910, those rates to be embodied in the present schedules now in effect on this line, it being understood that those rates shall in no instance affect a reduction in any existing rate.

The company will on January 1, 1912, make effective on the Grand Trunk railway the rates of pay and the rules contained in the schedule or agreement on that date in effect on the lines of the Canadian Pacific railway east of Fort William.

Now, I have written in one corner of this document the words used by Mr. Hays to the men when he presented this schedule —'If I take the last two, will you take the first one?' In other words: 'If I give you rates of wages, to go into effect, May 1, 1910, in accordance with the schedule you want, and if I agree on January 1, 1912, to make the rules of my road similar to those of the Canadian Pacific railway at that time, will you on your part accept this clause which says that the Company will put back, as soon as possible, the men who are not found guilty of violence or disorderly conduct?' So, the question narrowed itself down to the acceptance by the men of the first clause on condition that Mr. Hays would accept the other two. The men asked Mr. Hays what he meant by 'as soon as possible'. They said: 'Do you intend to take all the men back? Mr. Hays said: 'Yes, as soon as possible'. 'What do you mean by that? Do you mean next week, or two weeks?' They wanted to change these words or have them left out altogether. In fact, I think that was the first suggestion they made—to leave out the words, and said that if these were left out they would accept. But Mr. Hays would not agree. Well, to make a long story short, before we broke up we had got this far—that the men would be willing to let these words go into the agreement if Mr. Hays would give them a definite meaning. First they wanted the words left out; then they wanted a definite meaning given to them; in the third place, they said: If you give them a definite meaning, we don't care whether they are in or not. And their last offer was—and I have Mr. Garretson's words written on the other corner—'Satisfy Sir Frederick and Mr. King as to the meaning of: 'As soon as possible.' They said: We will accept your first, provided you satisfy Sir Frederick and Mr. King what these words: 'As soon as possible' mean.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. KING. The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is here, and I think he will bear me out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite.

Mr. KING. In other words, on that Saturday night, an agreement had been reached between the two parties. The only question remaining was the meaning of the words: 'As soon as possible.' And the men stated they did not care whether the words were put in or left out, so long as something definite in the way of an assurance was given them as to their exact meaning. They went so far as to say: You will only have to satisfy Sir Frederick and Mr. King, and we will accept that as an assurance. It was not the government making an agreement for the men, or the government making an agreement with the company, but the company and the men making an agreement together, and doing so under terms in black and white, but in regard to the meaning of one of which terms Sir Frederick Borden and I were to stand as witnesses. And we stand as witnesses at the present time. But Mr. Hays would not give a meaning to these words on Saturday night, and because he would not give a meaning to them the strike lasted through Sunday and Monday and Tuesday, for it was not until Tuesday that we could get Mr. Hays to give a definite answer. Hon. members opposite state that we ought to have used the big stick. Did we not use it? I will tell my hon. friends how it was used.

When I left on Tuesday Mr. Hays had not given that assurance. I gave Mr. Hays to understand that unless he gave some meaning to those words 'as soon as possible,' I would see that the people of Canada knew why the strike was not settled, and that it was because he had not defined the meaning of those words 'as soon as possible,' the whole Grand Trunk Railway system was being tied up, and I gave him virtually six hours in which to decide whether or not he would give a meaning to those words. I left him on the understanding that I would come to Ottawa, and would see that the whole transaction from beginning to end was made public in order that the men and the government should not be put in a false light before the country and that the blame should fall where it was due, that there were these three words to which he would not give a definite meaning. I would never have made this statement public if it had not been that so much difficulty has arisen over these words, and that the government is being blamed in a way in which I do not think it should be. Had Mr. Hays followed out, as I think he should have followed out, the agreement at an earlier stage there would not be any occasion to mention this now. Mr. Wainwright came up to Ottawa on a train about the same time as the one on which I came and as vice-president of the Grand Trunk railway he gave me an assurance in the presence of two of my colleagues here that the president of the Grand Trunk railway would consent to giving to these three words 'as soon as possible' the definite meaning of three months which was the time Sir Frederick Borden and myself said we thought would be sufficient. That was exactly the position, and Mr. Hays yielded at this stage in view of a knowledge of the pressure that was being brought to bear on him by the government, and for no other reason. That strike would have continued for weeks and months probably, no matter at what cost to the country or loss to the men, but for the pressure which was brought to bear in that way. Just here I would say a word in behalf of Mr. Wainwright. If any man in this whole transaction is entitled to credit it is Mr. Wainwright. He had a very difficult position to maintain, but I think it was his good counsels and good actions which more than anything else were responsible in the last analysis for the company seeing the wisdom of accepting the settlement.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to place on the government the responsibility for the manner in which one of the terms of the agreement has been carried out. As I have said, the terms of the settlement stated that as soon as possible all those who had not been guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct should be restored to the company's service. The company does not deny having given that meaning to the expression 'as soon as possible.' What Mr. Hays says is that he has carried out that part of the agreement and that the men who are out at the present time, according to the statement of his officers have been guilty of some acts of disorderly conduct. It is one of the terms of the agreement entered into between the parties themselves that is causing the trouble to-day, not a part of the agreement to which Sir Frederick Borden and myself are witnesses, but another part, words that were perfectly agreeable to the men themselves, and which they were prepared to sign. The dispute that has arisen to-day is as to the 'as soon as possible' or the three months, but whether the men who are still out have been actually guilty of acts of disorderly conduct.

The government, to my mind, were not obliged to do anything further, certainly the government has never accepted in virtue of the agreement entered into between the parties, any obligation on its part to see that the terms of the agreement were carried out. Were that doctrine once admitted, this government and parliament would be opening the door to a wide obligation, that the government would become responsible for all that grows out of the actions of every person who performs an act on behalf of the government. That, for example, in the case of the Boards of Conciliation appointed by the government the government would become responsible for the way in which the terms of settlement effected by them were carried out, we would be assuming an obligation which I think would be going much further than this parliament ever intended to go, and I do not think that the government would be justified for one minute in admitting any obligation of that kind. However, the government has stood and still stands to do its utmost to further industrial peace, and when after the settlement had been made and three months had gone by, and some of the men had not been reinstated, with the information that this situation was likely to give rise to fresh trouble on the Grand Trunk railway, the government naturally, in the interests of industrial peace, offered to do and has been doing all in its power to awaken a consciousness on the part of one of the parties to the agreement to the necessity of discharging the obligations arising out of the agreement respecting the present dispute, and so the government has in many ways pointed out to the Grand Trunk Railway Company that it expected, in virtue of its being one of the parties to the agreement in the interests of industrial peace, that that great corporation should deal with its men in a manner worthy of a corporation carrying on business to the extent that it does. When my hon. friend says that nothing has been done but to send a letter occasionally to Montreal, I think he can hardly have read over all the correspondence, because he would see in it references to many interviews which have taken place not only between myself and Mr. Hays and other officers of the Grand Trunk railway in Montreal, but between Mr. Hays and the Prime Minister in Ottawa. I think that on two or three occasions the Prime Minister has himself spoken to Mr. Hays on this particular phase of the transaction. Mr. Hays is in a difficult position, I am prepared to admit that. His officers give him certain advice. He feels that, managing a great company, unless he pays attention to the advice of his officers he may not be able to carry on the organization as it should be carried on and so he has tried on the one hand, I think, to carry out the wishes of the government in the matter, and on the other hand to stand back of the officials whom he holds responsible for carrying on the affairs of the road in a certain way. The government gave him to understand clearly that if his officers were making misrepresentations to him, if the men were saying one thing and the officers another, the only fair way to do was to call in some third party and allow the third party to pronounce upon the cases. I made that suggestion first in a communication offering on behalf of the government to pay the expense of an arbitrator. I think the Grand Trunk railway should have accepted that offer, I think it was a small thing to ask a big company to do especially as the men expressed their willingness to do the same. One of the doctrines to which the managers of great corporations seem to hold most strongly is that they are going to manage their own business, and after all what the government was interested in doing was not to antagonize that corporation so that it would perhaps treat its men in a spiteful manner, but rather to facilitate the return of these men to the positions they formerly held. The government intimated that it did not matter what the method was so long as these men were given a fair chance of having their cases investigated. Judge Barron's name had been mentioned because he had acted as chairman of one or two boards in industrial disputes with great satisfaction to both employers and employed, and my hon. friend has paid him the praise which he merits in saying that he feels that in every way Judge Barron will be upright, faithful and trustworthy in the discharge of his duty, and that it would make little difference by whom he is appointed. Judge Barron has been appointed to investigate the cases of all the men still out in the United States as well as Canada, and the fact that he has been appointed at all, no matter by whom, the government or the Grand Trunk railway, it is pretty good evidence of the pressure which has been brought to bear on that company by the government. Judge Barron would never have been appointed, the cases of these men would never have been looked into, and instead of 200 men being out there would have been 500 or 600 if not more, were it not for the pressure that the government have brought to bear on the situation.

Mr. MADDIN. Who is going to pay Judge Barron for determining who has been guilty of misconduct amongst the strikers?

Mr. KING. I presume the Grand Trunk will pay him for his services. I think my hon. friend will be the first to admit that any man of honour will discharge his duty in an honourable manner irrespective of who pays him. I think that certainly members of this House who have the privilege of knowing Judge Barron will feel that no member of the judiciary is more likely to act in an honest and faithful way than he is and I believe the men have just as much confidence in him as we have. I think it would have been preferable had the company accepted the offer of the government to appoint Judge Barron to make this investigation, but a large company like this prefers to manage its own affairs and the company is determined as far as possible that it is going to conduct its business along its own lines. In the absence of compulsory arbitration you cannot prevent a practice of that kind being followed by a company. I cannot say that I am in favour of compulsory arbitration, nor can I say that I am altogether opposed to some measure of compulsory arbitration where the ends of justice and the public good can be ignored at the will of an individual. This dispute has made me feel that never again, if possible, should this country be brought face to face with a situation such as occurred here through the attitude of any individual or group be they capitalists or workingmen. I think the country as a whole is too important to allow its interests to be sacrificed. I would say to my friends amongst the workingmen and capitalists that if any occurrence of this kind takes place again they can expect, and I think they very naturally would expect, that some action may be found necessary which will prevent the possibility of any further recurrence if a method can be found that will prevent it.

My hon. friend (Mr. Northrup), in the third clause of his amendment, says that the government is responsible for not compelling Mr. Hays to carry out the agreement effectively. I shall answer him, not in my own words, but in the words of the men who are most affected, those who are still out and are members of the organizations that are affected by the agreement not having been lived up to in the way that they think it should have been lived up to. What do they say? My hon. friend read part of one communication this afternoon. Here is a letter signed by Messrs. Berry and Murdock representing the railway conductors and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen:

Windsor Hotel, Ottawa,
December 13, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour, Ottawa,

Dear Sir:—The committee desire to assure you and through you the government that they deprecate the attitude taken by certain gentlemen, (presumably well intentioned) whereby an effort is being made to hold the government responsible for the failure to apply the terms of settlement made.

We appreciate fully the assistance given both at the time of the strike, and since, by the government in its efforts to bring about on behalf of the Canadian public and the citizens of Canada who are involved in the strike a settlement, and an equitable carrying out of the terms of that settlement. It is definitely understood by the men interested and the undersigned that it is not on account of any failure on the part of the government that the present unfortunate situation obtains, but that the existing conditions are rather the result of the obstinate disregard for contract obligations on the part of Grand Trunk officials.

Mr. NORTHRUP. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. KING. December 13, 1910, at a period some six months after the strike had been settled. Here is a communication of a later date from Mr. Berry:

Toronto, December 31st, 1910.

I herewith acknowledge receipt of your favour under date of the 19th inst., which was delayed in Ottawa several days before being forwarded me. I wish to assure you that the untiring efforts of yourself, other members of the cabinet and members of the Dominion government are appreciated in full by me, and I trust, by the membership of our organization throughout the Dominion of Canada, as well as parts of the United States, where they have had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the actions of our government relative to the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont situation.

There is also a letter dated January 28, from Mr. S. N. Berry, vice president of the Order of Railway Conductors. In this letter Mr. Berry says:

I do not, of course, hold the government responsible for the enforcement of the settlement——

An entirely different point of view from that which hon. gentleman opposite are taking.

——but I incline to believe in view of the fact the men accepted the settlement as it was made, partly to relieve the public of suffering, we can consistently look forward to all assistance possible in having that settlement adhered to by all concerned. We recognize the great help you and other members of the government rendered to the men in connection with the matter, and we appreciate your desire that the settlement should in honour be carried out.

Then, on February 10, hon. members of the House will remember that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) asked me some questions in regard to the settlement. It appears that on February 7 that hon. member wrote to both the representatives of the conductors and trainmen's organizations and sent them a communication somewhat as follows:

I inclose a copy of questions I intend to ask in the House and would be glad to have your view of the situation. I have for a good many years endeavoured to advance the interests of railway employees where I could, and have been in close communication with the men at Allandale. The railway contention now is that although there was a settlement, the men who came back, came back as new men and were not restored to a claim on pension fund.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) HAUGHTON LENNOX.

That is addressed to S. N. Berry, Esq., 53 Beatrice St., Toronto. These communications were forwarded to me by both the officers of these organizations, without any knowledge on my part of their having received them. They sent them to me, thinking it important that I should be informed of all that had taken place. I will not attempt to read what was said in reply in full. but I will read what Mr. Berry and Mr. Murdock have said in part in reply to the communications of the hon. member for Simcoe. In a letter dated Toronto, February 27, 1911, Mr. Berry writes:

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

I hand you therewith copy of letter to me from Mr. Lennox, M.P., under date of the 7th instant. I fully intended to inclose a copy of this letter when sending you a copy of my reply to same.

I have no objections to matters of this kind being made public, as I trust all concerned, having nothing but the interests of the unreemployed employees of the Grand Trunk railway who participated in the strike, in view, when making inquiries of this kind.

I wish to assure you my desire is that politics be kept entirely out of this question, and I do hope that any gentleman interesting himself in this matter, does so from the view point that it is justice what we want and hope to get for those men.

I am, yours very truly,
(Sigd) S. N. BERRY,
Vice-President, O. R. C.

Mr. Murdock, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen sent me the following communication:

Grand Union Hotel, Montreal
February 20, 1911.

Hon. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I inclose herewith copy of letter this day written to Mr. Haughton Lennox, M.P., in answer to a letter that he sent me under date of February 7, requesting certain information, in the form of the following question:

He gives these questions and then adds:

It occurs to me that you might be interested in reading these questions which, I presume, you have heard heretofore, and that you might also like to see the answer that I have made to the questions as asked.

Very truly yours,
(Sgd) JAMES MURDOCK.

The letter to Mr. Lennox is rather long but this is the way it concludes. It is a communication sent in answer to the questions put by the hon. member from the other side of the House, and I think it correctly answers the third part of my hon. friend's amendment in which he expresses regret that the government has not tried to compel Mr. Hays to effectively carry out the agreement. Mr. Murdock in his letter says:

In conclusion, it might not be amiss——

Mr. BLAIN. Why not read the whole letter?

Mr. KING. Very well. I may say that the questions put to Mr. Murdock were in this form:

Was the settlement of July 31 last between the Grand Trunk railway and its employees in train and yard service:

(a) Intended and understood to put an end to all then existing disputes and difficulties.

(b) Was it understood that the men would be put back in the positions they held previous to the strike.

(c) Was it understood that the men would be reinstated.

This is Mr. Murdock's reply:

Montreal, February 20, 1911.

Mr. Haughton Lennox, M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of February 7, with which was inclosed three questions relative to the settlement of the Grand Trunk strike, has only just reached me, hence the delay in my replying.

I will answer your questions in order as given.

(a) Yes, most positively hoped for and understood.

(b) Yes, without reservation it was expected that the undertaking that Mr. Hays gave to ministers of the Crown on August 2 as to his intended application of paragraph 1 of the agreement made on July 31, contemplated that all men who had gone on strike and who had not been guilty of the commission of overt acts would be returned to their former positions, runs, seniority, standing, etc.

(c) Is answered in the reply given to (b).

I am indeed glad to know that yourself and other eminent and representative members of the Dominion parliament are taking such a commendable interest in the welfare of Grand Trunk employees who have not yet been returned to service, or who, having been returned to service, have not been conceded their former positions or runs.

I presume Mr. Murdock had read the debate which took place. I think my hon. friend asked me whether anything was said with regard to the pension, and in reply I said that pensions had not been mentioned, and Mr. Murdock says in this letter:

The question of pensions or of conserving the pension rights of the employees who had been on strike and who were by the settlement to be returned to service was not even considered as a factor in determining the basis of settlement. Representatives of labour and labouring men, generally, recognize the fact that pension schemes, provident fund arrangements and relief associations, inaugurated, fostered and maintained by railroad companies or large employers of labour, without the employees co-operative sanction to the formation of such concerns are usually found to be nothing more or less than a pre-arranged and contemplated outlay or investment on the part of the employer to test the loyalty of the men to themselves, as individuals, and to each other, in the event of just such trying negotiations as preceded the strike of July 18 last.

Organizations of labour in train and yard service have not considered it as a part of their legitimate sphere of effort to make representation to railroad companies or railroad officials as to the basis upon which pension allowances should be inaugurated or maintained, and in the case of the Grand Trunk strike and settlement the question was not given serious consideration by the employees. Any action that the Grand Trunk Railway Company saw fit to take in reference to the pension rights of employees prior to the Grand Trunk strike, they had an absolute right to take and maintain, and they are apparently disposed to exercise the same rights and privileges which they formerly enjoyed in this respect.

From every consistent and logical standpoint upon which the question of pension might be considered, it should surely be recognized that the mere fact of an employee leaving the service for a period of two weeks and thereby breaking a continued service of many years should not be sufficient to debar him from all rights to a pension fund, if that pension fund had been inaugurated and was maintained for the purpose of conserving in old age the rights of an employee who had given to the company many years of faithful service.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company's present attitude demonstrates conclusively that the estimate placed on the average railway company's pension fund has been well founded.

And now comes the conclusion, and it is to this in particular that I invite the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite.

In conclusion, I would suggest that the present attitude of Grand Trunk officials who have violated indiscriminately the first two articles of the terms of settlement is deplorable, but if I might be permitted to do so, I would suggest that some of the hon. gentlemen at Ottawa who are taking such an apparently deep interest in this situation, are, to use the expression attributed to you on page 3480 of 'Hansard,' under date of February 10, 'barking up the wrong tree.'

The agreement made when the strike was called off was under the circumstances equitable, and amply sufficient to conserve the rights and interests of all concerned, public, employer and employee. The deplorable conditions that have existed and that exist at the present time are wholly and solely chargeable to Grand Trunk officials disregard for contract obligations except as expediency suggests.

I trust that the information given above will be looked upon as satisfactorily answering the questions asked in your letter of February 7, at least to some extent.

In conclusion, it might not be amiss for me to advise you in case that I should be looked upon as politically biased, that I was raised in a family Liberal in politics always, but that I have personally voted for the past 18 years as opportunity afforded with the Conservative party. I believe, however, in giving credit where credit is due, and have been deeply disappointed to find that many eminent gentlemen like yourself are apparently disposed to place the responsibility for the failure of Grand Trunk officials to carry out their agreement on the shoulders of some one else.

I remain, very truly yours,

JAMES MURDOCK,
Vice-president B. of R. T.

In view of these several communications which speak for themselves it is not necessary for me to add anything further. It has been shown pretty conclusively that my hon. friend (Mr. Northrup) has no ground for the charges he makes in this amendment. It has been proven that as a matter of fact instead of being deserving of criticism and blame on the occasions to which he refers, the government is entitled to credit. If my hon. friend will consider the matter fairly, and if he will consider what is more important, namely, the significance of the discussion of labour matters in this House, he will, I believe, feel that it is at least due to the present situation that he should withdraw this amendemnt. I can say with confidence to hon. gentlemen opposite that in administering the Department of Labour I have tried as between labour and capital to be absolutely impartial; I have tried above everything else to keep the labour movement and labour questions out of party politics altogether, and I think hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will agree that such is the only attitude that can properly be taken if the cause of industrial peace is to be effectively furthered. Any attempt to make party capital or other capital out of an industrial situation is an extremely dangerous thing. In dealing with these labour questions and the strife between capital and labour you are dealing with a two-edged sword, and as these conflicts are likely to continue and to become more gigantic as the years go on, the only attitude which can in the long run be of service to working men or to capital is that the parliament of Canada should stand for the people of this country as a whole, see that fair play and justice are maintained as between the different parties and that no fear or favour be shown to one side or the other.

Mr. OLIVER J. WILCOX (North Essex). As a number of my constituents are interested in the question now before the House I desire to make a remark or two. I entirely concur in the motion presented by my hon. friend from East Hastings. I believe that the men have not been properly treated by the Grand Trunk Railway Company; I believe that the men have been deceived as a result of the agreement arrived at. In the city of Windsor which is one of the terminals of the Grand Trunk, out of 12 conductors who went out on strike one has returned to work and 11 are still without their positions. I know, as a matter of fact that not one of those men is guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct. I do not criticise the Minister of Labour for endeavouring to bring about a settlement between the men and the company; I think that was the proper thing for him to do, as I understand that the Department of Labour was created to assist the great toiling masses of this country in just such cases as this. Now, clause 1 of this agreement which was arrived at when my hon. friend went to Montreal at the request of the men, provides as follows:

> The company will put back as soon as possible the men other than those who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation used towards the new men.

The minister knew that under the provisions of that clause the men had absolutely no assurance that they would be given their positions in any definite time. The minister was quite willing that the men should accept that provision, which they refused to do. In a telegram dated Ottawa, 2nd of August, and addressed to S. N. Berry, vice-president of the Order of Railway Conductors, Windsor hotel, Montreal, the minister said:

> Mr. Hays has given Sir Frederick Borden and myself an undertaking that the men will within three months from this date be taken back into service, and within that time be placed in their former positions.

I had occasion about that time to meet about 300 of the men from Detroit and Windsor who met in the city of Windsor. They had nothing but words of praise for the minister up to that time for the part which he and the government had taken in this matter; but it is because he failed to see that the provisions of the agreement were carried into effect that they complain to-day. The minister has quoted a number of resolutions of boards of trade and communications from representatives of the men, all of which were addressed to him before the three months had expired within which the men were to be taken back to work. The 'Labour Gazette' makes this statement:

> A strike of the employees of the Grand Trunk railway system in train and yard services occurred on the evening of July 18, at 9.30 o'clock, as the result of a failure on the part of the employees concerned to agree with the company upon the rates of wages and rules which should govern their employment. The strike in question continued from the date above mentioned until the evening of August 2, at 7 o'clock, when it was announced that through government intervention terms of settlement had been agreed upon, as a result of which the strike was at once declared off and the employees again reported for duty.

The fact is that the men had a just cause to strike, and I believe the public sentiment of this country was with the men.

> From the reports in question it appeared that the demand which was presented to the Grand Trunk Railway Company in January, 1910, for a new schedule of agreement with the employees in train and yard services, was part of a general move by the railway conductors, baggagemen, brakemen and yardmen to secure the adoption of standard rates of pay and rules of employment obtaining on the principal railway systems of the eastern states, and of eastern Canada.

It would seem reasonable that the Grand Trunk railway employees would expect the same rates of wages as those of the Canadian Pacific railway. It would be reasonable to assume that a man engaged as a conductor or a brakeman or in any other position upon the Grand Trunk railway system should be entitled to the same rates of pay as a man in a similar position on the Canadian Pacific railway; and the men formally made their complaint to the company asking for a standardized scale of wages, and Mr. Hays refused it, on the ground that the earnings of the road should be standardized before the company could pay similar wages. He also stated that at some future time he might be able to pay the employees of the Grand Trunk system the same rates of wages as the Canadian Pacific railway paid. The third reason given was this:

The management will pay the same standard of wages as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as soon as the Grand Trunk Railway Company, through its relation with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, is in a position to participate in the higher rates obtaining on traffic in the Northwest, by reason of the completion of that road and the obtaining of through rail connections between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, which should be accomplished within two years.

I have always had the idea that the object of the government of Canada in constructing the Grand Trunk Pacific railway was to cheapen the rates of this country. It was to be a road which would be in competition with other roads in Canada and for that reason would be the means of lessening the rates. So I do not think either the men or the government or the public of Canada or any one else, took that reason very seriously. I can tell the minister that there are employees in the city of Windsor who have not yet received the positions to which they are entitled under the terms of the agreement which was entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and which provided that they were to be taken back in three months. It was through their trust in the honour of the Department of Labour that the men were willing to accept that condition; but I am of opinion that in that agreement the minister ran up the white flag, that he did not stand by the men. The voice was the voice of Jacob, but the hand was the hand of Esau. The men were looking for bread, but the minister handed them a stone. To-day they have not their positions, and it seems to me that they are justified in taking the position they do, in condemning the minister and his department for not giving to them that service which they had a right to expect from those supposed to be working in their interests.

Amendment (Mr. Northrup) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Maintenance and repair to government steamers and ice-breakers, $1,000,000.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The amount voted last year was $710,000, and the amount asked for next year is $1,000,000, but this is really not an increase in the expenditure, but results from our intention to pay under this vote a number of amounts which were last year charged to other accounts. We had in the service paid under this vote 11 ships, namely, the 'Aberdeen' the 'Champlain,' the 'Druid,' the 'Earl Grey,' the 'Lady Laurier,' the 'Lansdowne,' the 'Minto,' the 'Montcalm,' the 'Nelson,' the 'Quadra' and the 'Stanley.' Besides these there are several which were paid out of other votes. Let me give a list:

The 'Brandt'	$ 8,466 99
The 'Rouville'	11,950 89
The 'Frontenac,' charged to the St. Lawrence service	19,119 99
The 'Lambton,' paid out of construction	9,213 62
The 'Maisonneuve,' out of maintenance	8,745 64
The 'Newington'	25,641 75
The 'Reserve'	8,139 79
The 'Scout'	12,577 73
The 'Simcoe'	23,440 00
The 'Shamrock'	10,247 35
The 'Verchères,' paid out of construction	8,925 98
The 'Montmagny'	25,000 00
The 'Lady Grey,' out of the St. Lawrence service	60,000 00

Mr. CROSBY. The appropriations will, I suppose, be that much less this year in these other votes?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. How many boats have been in commission this year on the Nova Scotia coast, and what have they been doing? I understood that one of them at least would patrol the coast of Nova Scotia, which would be considerable advantage to the fishermen along that coast in their winter fishing; but I may have been mistaken. If one of these boats were to patrol the coast between Halifax and Canso that would be a great encouragement to our fishermen in the winter season. It will not suffice to have the boat remain in harbour until called for, because she might then very often be too late to be of any use. I would therefore urge on the government to have one of those boats set apart to patrol the coast in order to take care of our fisheries. It is a very rough coast. These boats are comfortable, well manned, well fitted for that purpose. If some were kept in commission it would be a great advantage to our fishermen. I have seen it stated that the United States have ten of their revenue boats patrolling their Atlantic coast during the winter, and in this connection a statement was published showing the number of lives and the amount of property saved by this service. I regret I have not these facts under my hand at the present time. If some such a service were established on our own coast our fishermen would carry on their work with much less danger and with much greater confidence.

Mr. BRODEUR. Some years ago, we had only one boat carrying on the lighthouse and buoy service at Halifax, but of late we have had two, the 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen.' Last fall, however, the 'Aberdeen' had to undergo some repairs to her boilers, and a new boat, the 'Montmagny,' was brought down from Quebec to replace her during the winter. This is a very strong and well equipped boat, and I think it must be giving satisfaction. These boats look after the lighthouse and buoy service primarily; but they have general instructions also to render assistance to the fishermen in case of dangerous storms. Besides, we have a small boat known as 'The 33' which was at Canso. A very serious storm prevailed there for some days, and it was feared that some of the fishermen who had left for the Banks might be overtaken. No loss of life occurred, but it was thought well that we should provide for a similar case, and so we kept 'The 33' in commission.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I desire, on behalf of my constituents, to thank the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the prompt way in which he responded to the call made by myself last fall that 'The 33' should be put on the service at Canso. The winter fishing has not been very extensively carried on in Nova Scotia, but it has been carried on to some extent for some years past. It is one of the most profitable branches of our fishery, for prices are good at that season and the haddock are on the coast. It was dangerous, however, because of the sudden squalls and snowstorms that arise in November and December, and even later. On the 6th of January last year, a serious situation was found to have arisen as a result of which a few of the fishermen lost their lives off Canso and Whitehead in one of these sudden squalls. A number of the boats were driven out to sea. But the marine department fitted out their boats at Halifax, and these scoured the water for two or three days and picked up most of the boats. These were in a sinking condition with ice and helpless. But, by the prompt services afforded by the department from Halifax, the lives of most of the men were saved. At the commencement of this season, the request was made of the department to provide protection by keeping a boat under steam and ready in case of sudden storm to go to the fishing grounds and help the fleet there. 'The 33' did that work during the past year and did it well, on two or three occasions, I am glad to say, rendering good assistance. The vessels engaged in the fishery protection service might very well be employed in this way during winter where winter fishing is carried on. It would give the men a great deal more confidence to go out into these dangerous waters so that they would go out on many days when they would not go without this protection. Most of these vessels are partly idle, and some of them entirely out of commission during the winter; but I believe that some of the officers are under pay, and so it would not cost a great deal of money to keep them in commission at certain ports on the coast where winter fishing is carried on. I hope the winter fishing will increase, and that it will be established at various places on the coast. In that case, this protection would be very important. I understand that similar service has been afforded in the United States during the past two or three years with good results in rescuing vessels in distress on the stormy coast of the New England States. This work could be done on the coast of Canada, especially the Atlantic coast, not only for the benefit of the fishermen, but for the coasters. I only rose mainly to thank the minister for the prompt way in which the department responded to the request of the fishermen of Canso last year, and I trust that the policy of the department will be to continue this work.

Mr. CROSBY. There is no doubt that whenever an application is made to the department, they have been very prompt in sending assistance to fishermen. I have not a word of complaint to utter on that point. On the western part of the coast of Nova Scotia, that is, Halifax and west of Halifax, the craft that go fishing are better equipped, more of the schooner rig, better prepared to take care of themselves, than the vessels that fish from points east of Halifax, particularly from my hon. friend's (Mr. Sinclair's) riding. I have not a word to say with regard to the promptness of the Marine and Fisheries boats in getting out, they are always ready and anxious to be of help, but I believe the time has come in the interest of the fishing industry, which is increasing rapidly and becoming very profitable, that such a patrol as has been suggested should be maintained. The boats employed in the industry are not of a class to withstand a heavy sea or to remain long in the open. The establishment of a patrol system would not cost a great deal, and as the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) stated, the additional cost would be slight compared with the encouragement to the fishermen. As the coast is a dangerous one, good comfortable boats should be employed for patrol purposes, and I urge on the minister to try and establish such a system during the next season.

Mr. BRODEUR. Some time ago we were informed that some fishing vessels had been caught in the ice in Lunenburg harbour. We immediately despatched the 'Stanley' to break the ice to release them in order that they might carry on their work. They were released, but it cost the government something as the 'Stanley' met with an accident. I thank my hon. friend for his expressions with regard to the wish of the department to do all in their power to help the fishermen. That has always been our policy and we will continue to do everything in our power.

Mr. JAMESON. Would the minister state what has been done to improve the life saving service in the Bay of Fundy?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have now two boats there instead of one, the 'Stanley' and the 'Lansdowne.' They are attached to the port of St. John, but they have instructions to place themselves at the disposal of the fishermen anywhere when required for their protection.

Mr. JAMESON. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said that a request he made to the minister last year received prompt attention and I have no doubt the suggestion I am about to make will be similarly treated. Winter fishing has been prosecuted in the Bay of Fundy for many years, many people are interested and high class boats are used in carrying on this very valuable industry. Although the boats are of a high class, it is impossible to guard against the perils of the sea, and in a number of cases recently, fishermen have been blown off the shore and have experienced great hardships attended in one or two instances with loss of life. I would suggest to the minister that as he has two of these ships in St. John, it would be advisable to transfer one across the bay to the eastern side and to station her at Digby where she would be available on short notice to the fishermen of Annapolis, Digby and Yarmouth counties. In that way a great deal of valuable time would be saved. With the boat at St. John it would be necessary to telegraph to that port and there would be considerable delay before she would reach the scene of the disaster. We cannot overestimate the courage and endurance of the men prosecuting the winter fisheries; it is practically their only means of securing a livelihood, and they have to battle against great hardships and difficulties and are to-day doing a very flourishing business. The ship could be safely accommodated at Digby as the port is open the year round, and it would not cost more than to maintain the ship at St. John.

Mr. BRODEUR. The two ships now in St. John are supposed to be attached mainly to the New Brunswick side. Unfortunately, I find that there has been a system in the department for many years by which the Bay of Fundy is divided into two parts for the lighthouse and buoy service. The Nova Scotia side is supposed to be kept up by the vessels from Halifax and the New Brunswick side by the vessels located at St. John. The department is considering the question whether it would not be advisable to put the Bay of Fundy entirely under the control of the St. John division. The control of the western part of Nova Scotia, and the eastern part of that province will be looked after by the boats located at Halifax. We have always divided the lighthouses situated on the Nova Scotia side from those on the New Brunswick side and we have had them looked after by the boats from Halifax. Of course, that is a drawback from the departmental point of view and if the committee should be of opinion that it would be better to re-divide the agencies it would be in accordance with the views which I hold. I do not know that there will be any feeling against it in the different provinces. I do not know what the people in Halifax would say if we should give the supervision of the lighthouse on the Nova Scotia side to the agency in New Brunswick. If that could be done it would, to a great extent, meet the views which have been expressed by the hon. member for Digby.

Mr. JAMESON. I cannot see what difficulty the minister would have to face. The fact that the agency at Halifax has been in control of certain work in the Bay of Fundy on the Nova Scotia side would seem to indicate a system which it would be better to get away from. Halifax is very remote from the Bay of Fundy as compared with St. John. St. John and Digby are both on the Bay of Fundy facing each other and ships from these ports will be able to cover the bay very expeditiously. I do not wish to refer to any matter which will suggest an unpleasant reminiscence but I remember that when the question with regard to the loss of the 'Hestia' was up the St. John agency had charge of the ships and there was considerable loss of time. I am sure that if one of these vessels had been stationed at Digby a great deal of time would have been saved. I think the minister will find he will be able to accomplish very admirably the work which he has in hand by making the change that I suggest. I hope the minister will take it into his serious consideration and that it will not be lost sight of because sometimes these matters which are brought up in the House, although they are very favourably received at the time, if we do not get a very solid expression from the minister, are apt to be side-tracked later on. We have not on this side of the House the same advantage that hon. gentlemen have who occupy seats on the other side with regard to approaching ministers. The only opportunity we have to approach a minister is on a formal occasion like this when estimates are up, or when we bring some matter up in the House, and we have to depend on the statement which the minister makes rather than upon any political pull or influence as supporters of the government. If the minister desires to improve the efficiency of the department there should be no reason why this suggestion should not be carried out.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have an agency in New Brunswick which controls the Bay of Fundy on the New Brunswick side and also looks after the lights and buoys on the north shore of New Brunswick. It is very far away and it is very difficult to carry out the work we have to do there. If we came to an arrangement such as that suggested we would, of course, have to transfer the supervision of the lights on the north shore of New Brunswick to the agency in Prince Edward Island. The agent in Prince Edward Island has charge of the lights in Northumberland strait on the island side, and he might more easily look after the lights on the New Brunswick side than the agent at St. John. As to the question of the Bay of Fundy, I am very glad that my hon. friend seems to agree with the views that I have expressed as to the possibility of putting the whole of the Bay of Fundy under the agency of St. John. If that meets with the general approval of the committee I would be very glad to take it into my serious consideration. My hon. friend says that this is the only occasion when hon. members can approach the minister. Let me tell him that the minister is always open to conviction and open to representation in every case and that all the members of the House will always be welcome to discuss with him public questions and especially any question which appertains to the administration of the department with which he is now concerned.

Mr. JAMESON. I am glad to hear it. Will the minister just say what committee he refers to when he speaks of the committee consenting to this?

Mr. BRODEUR. This committee.

Mr. JAMESON. I do not think there is any trouble here.

Mr. CROSBY. If I understand my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson), his desire is to have a boat placed at Digby during the winter season?

Mr. JAMESON. Yes, that is it.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not know that it will be an advantage to take the supervision of the lighthouses of Nova Scotia from the agency at Halifax and place the supervision of the whole of the western part of the province under the agency of St. John. My hon. friend wants to get a boat at Digby and no doubt he would like to have it come from St. John. I do not think it would make any difference to him whether it came from Halifax or St. John during the winter season. It would be of no advantage to Digby if the supervision of the western part of Nova Scotia were placed under the agency at St. John, if they did not send a boat over to Digby. I apprehend no difficulty about the whole of Nova Scotia being fairly well looked after from the port of Halifax. There is no place in the Dominion where the Department of Marine and Fisheries has more accommodation than in Halifax and it does not cost very much either. There can be no reason to suggest that Digby would be any better off by the fact of the agency for the western part of Nova Scotia being transferred from Halifax to St. John if they did not get a boat at Digby. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it would be well if the minister could see his way clear to place a boat at Digby because quite a large fishing business is done there. Its geographical situation is rather peculiar and sometimes in the great Bay of Fundy there are difficulties to overcome. These boats are always ready to render any assistance in the saving of life and property and it would be a great advantage to have one of them at Digby during the winter. I think the minister should consider how he could meet the views of my hon. friend from Digby whose request would also apply to the counties of Annapolis and Yarmouth, the county of Yarmouth being a very important one in the fishing business. I think that the placing of a boat at Digby during the winter season would meet the desire of my hon. friend from Digby.

Mr. JAMESON. Yes, it is a central point.

Mr. CROSBY. Therefore, I do not think there would be any great necessity for changing the agency at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend will admit that the lighthouses on the Bay of Fundy can be better looked after from St. John than Halifax.

Mr. CROSBY. I would not like to admit that without consideration. The coal is purchased from the Dominion Coal Company, and there is no place where you can get your supplies so easily as in Halifax, and no place so pleasant to come to and to remain in. Before the minister makes a change of that kind I would like him to take into serious consideration the disadvantage it would be to those who have been furnishing supplies for years. It seems to me that the demand made by the hon. member for Digby might be endorsed by the hon. members for Annapolis and Yarmouth. I can see no reason why, in the winter time, a boat should not be placed in the vicinity of Digby to render aid to shipping that might require it. I am quite sure that if the Halifax agency has a spare boat she would cheerfully be sent to Digby for the winter season.

Mr. BRODEUR. The department has not reached a decision with regard to the change, and I was simply wishing to get an expression from the committee with regard to it. I will take into serious consideration what the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby) has said.

Mr. JAMESON. I hope the minister does not lose sight of what I consider to be the chief point in this matter. I am not interested, as my hon. friend from Halifax is, in the maintenance of the agency there in its present status, but I am very much interested in seeing that one of the two vessels now at St. John should be placed at Digby. I mention Digby because it is a central point, lying between the counties of Yarmouth and Annapolis, which are largely interested in fishing. Digby has an excellent harbour and a vessel located there would be available for the needs of shipping in these counties. In the Bay of Fundy shipping is increasing, and the aids to navigation are increasing in importance and number, and we hope to see St. John one of the great national ports. I do not think that the status of the agency at Halifax or at St. John would be at all altered by stationing one of the boats at Digby, and my only wish to-night is to have an expression of opinion from the minister on that point regardless of whether he is to change the agency at St. John or Halifax in a minor way. I am not concerned at this moment with the convenience or profit of gentlemen living on shore. My concern is for the safety, welfare and comfort of those engaged in fishing and shipping on the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. BRODEUR. These two ships are mainly devoted to the lighthouse and buoy service on the New Brunswick side of the Bay of Fundy down as far as Grand Manan. They must be located at St. John for the present. Digby is connected with the Halifax agency, and those two boats are under the control of the St. John agency. When we come to the consideration of the question of dividing the agencies the suggestion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Jameson) will be considered.

Mr. JAMESON. Are we to conclude from the remarks of the minister that if it is not possible for him to make some such change as he suggests it will not be possible to place one of these boats at Digby? The hon. member for Guysborough was pleased to say that the minister had acceded cheerfully and promptly to a request he made last winter for a vessel for the purpose of assisting in saving life and property when such assistance was needed. I made a similar request to the minister on behalf of the fishermen of western Nova Scotia and the Bay of Fundy. If the minister can not have one of the vessels at St. John transferred to Digby will he make provision that some other vessel should be placed there? The hon. member (Mr. Crosby) has suggested that a boat for this service might be found at Halifax, and while I do not know how many boats are available there, yet, as the Bay of Fundy portion of Nova Scotia is under control of the Halifax agency the minister might be able to supply the needs of the people from that point. I appeal to the minister to have a boat stationed at Digby during the winter season so that the fishermen on that coast may have reasonable assurance that in the event of an accident they will at least have a chance for their lives.

Mr. BRODEUR. The situation on the Bay of Fundy is not the same as at Canso. On the Bay of Fundy, as my hon. friend is aware, we had formerly only one boat. We have two now; so that if anything should happen to the fishermen there, it would be only necessary to acquaint the agency at St. John of the fact, and these boats would be available. While they are primarily for the buoy and lighthouse service, they have instructions also to look after the protection of the fishermen. As St. John is not very far from Digby, I do not think there is the same difficulty there that there is at Canso, which is so distant from Halifax that it was considered advisable that a small boat should be placed there. If I saw the same necessity of placing a boat at Digby, I would certainly do it immediately; but in view of the fact that on the opposite side of the bay there are two boats which can be called upon at a moment's notice, I think the fishermen operating in the vicinity of Digby are sufficiently protected.

Mr. JAMESON. How many boats are at Halifax?

Mr. BRODEUR. Two.

Mr. JAMESON. As I feared at the outset, I am afraid the minister does not take very kindly to the suggestion I made, and it is perhaps as well that we should understand where we are in this matter. I do not agree with the minister that the fishermen on the Nova Scotia side of the Bay of Fundy are sufficiently protected by the boats at St. John, which is 45 miles from Digby. I do not know that these boats steam over nine knots an hour, and would mean several hours delay, and every person familiar with the conditions of fishing in the Bay of Fundy knows that such a delay might mean the loss of the lives of the people exposed to danger. The minister knows that the Bay of Fundy is a very tempestuous piece of water, and I would earnestly urge him to have one boat stationed on the Nova Scotia side of the bay if he can do so without disarranging the service of the very important branch which these boats are supposed to look after. I do not think the people of this country are concerned about the expenditure of a few dollars or a few thousand dollars when it comes to the saving of the lives of the inhabitants of this country. I believe that our fishermen are worthy of every care and attention that the government can bestow upon them. It is the duty of the department, apart altogether from the convenience of the service, to render these people all the assistance they can, and not to be niggardly in the matter of expenditure for keeping up boats for life-saving purposes. I cannot urge this too strongly on the minister. In view of the fact that he has made provision for the eastern part of the province, and the fact that he has two boats at St. John and two at Halifax, I think he might under the circumstances furnish one for the Nova Scotia side of the Bay of Fundy where there is more winter fishing than in all the rest of Nova Scotia. I thought this matter should be placed before the committee, and I trust that the minister will be able to comply with the request that I have made.

Examination of masters and mates, $11,400.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote provides for the maintenance of a staff of examiners for the holding of examinations for masters and mates at various points throughout the Dominion. The amount to be voted this year is the same as that of last year.

Mr. CROSBY. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that a very small amount is paid to the examiner at Halifax. As we have now a technical college there, the Dominion government might provide a substantial amount for an examiner and a teacher in that college. I have no doubt that a good arrangement could be made with the local legislature. I have always thought that the Dominion government should pay at least 25 per cent of the upkeep of those technical colleges, for the reason that navigatioin is a branch of education in which the Dominion government should be particularly interested. I do not think there is anybody in Halifax at present teaching navigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is one in the technical college.

Mr. CROSBY. Is the Dominion government making any arrangement to assist that teaching?

Mr. BRODEUR. The same education will be given at the naval college.

Mr. CROSBY. You may teach seamanship without teaching navigation, but if you are going to teach navigation at the naval college, that would obviate the difficulty.

Mr. BRODEUR. The training that is going to be given at the naval college will give an opportunity to the young men there to become educated in everything that they may require later on, after they have finished their service, if they should want to join the mercantile marine. It happens very often in England, and I suppose will happen here also. Outside of that, it is proposed to provide for schools of navigation at certain places for the purpose of giving lectures to masters and mates. We have not got as many masters and mates as we should have.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not know that the merchant marine men are taught in the navy schools in Britain. Am I to understand that a man serving on board a merchant ship may apply to the naval college and be educated there?

Mr. BRODEUR. He would have to enter as a cadet.

Mr. CROSBY. My hon. friend knows well that the mates on merchant marine ships, and those who aspire to be captains would not be satisfied to enter a naval college as cadets. What is required is some means by which our marine men may be educated in that line of navigation.

Rewards saving life, including life saving stations, $96,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is an increase of $56,000 in this item for the purposes of building some new life saving stations. We intend to build several new stations, which will cost $19,000. Then we are asking for $25,000 for motor boats and for the purpose of putting motor engines into some of our existing boats. The estimated price of a motor is $720. We are including in this vote the sum of $12,000 for the upkeep of the St. Paul and Sable Island stations, which are really life saving stations. These were formerly paid out of the vote for maintenance.

Mr. CROSBY. Where will the new stations be?

Mr. BRODEUR. At Victoria Beach, Nova Scotia, Grosse Isle, Magdalen Islands, Wolfe Island, Parkers Cove, Amherst, Cranberry head and Mud Island. It may be found advisable, when the commander has made his report, to make some changes.

Mr. CROSBY. How far apart are Victoria Beach and Parkers Cove?

Mr. BRODEUR. Ten miles.

Mr. JAMESON. I would suggest that there should be another station further down on Digby Neck or that the minister should take one of those proposed motor boats and put it down there. I think there is a station at Westport, and a long stretch of 45 miles to Victoria Beach. It is but 10 miles to Parkers Cove from Victoria Beach, so that there is an inequality there. If it be desirable to have a continuity of service covering the whole coast, better make a more equitable distribution. There is a place called Centreville about 15 miles below Victoria Beach, which would make it about midway between Westport and Parkers Cove. It might be possible to get some place which would suit better, but I think Centreville would be very suitable. Only a few months ago some fishermen were blown out from there clear across the Bay of Fundy to the New Brunswick coast, and were rescued only when in the last stages of exhaustion. A year or two ago several men were drowned near there simply because life saving appliances were not at hand. If the minister is going to put up these stations along the coast, he should do so with some regard to uniformity so that the coast will be covered and the fishermen given a fair degree of protection. It will not do to have life-saving stations within 10 miles of each other and then have a long stretch of 45 miles without any protection.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are not absolutely committed to these particular places, and I shall not fail to call attention of Commander Thompson to the representations made by my hon. friend.

Expenses of schools of navigation, $8,000.

Mr. CROSBY. I would like to have the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) take into consideration means of establishing at some central place in Nova Scotia, say Halifax, as I suggested before, a technical college, an institution in which our men could be educated in navigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have a school at Halifax. In fact, we maintain schools at Halifax, Yarmouth, Canso, North Sydney, Midland, Collingwood, Vancouver and Victoria. It is proposed also to establish schools at Lunenburg, St. John, Canso, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston and Toronto. These, with the ones already established, will bring the expenses of salaries up to $3,500. Capt. Lugard is in charge at Halifax.

Mr. CROSBY. What salary does he receive?

Mr. BRODEUR. For taking charge of the school, $250; but as my hon. friend knows, he is also examiner of masters and mates and takes charge of the investigation into wrecks. My hon. friend is aware that he is an absolutely well qualified man to take charge of this school.

Mr. CROSBY. Oh, yes. I have not a word to say against Capt. Lugard. But I think the school is not being carried on as well as it might be. That is not finding fault with Capt. Lugard, because he is not given sufficient salary to enable him to keep the school. Besides, he has to make examinations all over the province, I think?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. That is the reason I suggested something more. As the minister is aware, we are looking for masters and mates for our mercantile marine, and means should be taken to encourage young men to receive an education. I suggest that some one else should be appointed to help Capt. Lugard so that the work may go on even while he is absent. I am glad that schools are to be established at Lunenburg and Canso. Nevertheless, I think there should be a technical school at Halifax so that men can receive a thorough education to fit them to take charge of any kind of ship in any part of the world.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is in charge of the school at Collingwood?

Mr. BRODEUR. George C. Coles.

Mr. JAMESON. Last year, when a similar item was before the committee, I drew the attention of the minister to the desirability of establishing one of these schools of navigation at Digby. I pointed out that there were a number of young men, very estimable young men, who would like the opportunity of taking a course in navigation, but had not the means to leave home and take up residence in Yarmouth for that purpose. The minister will see that imposes considerable expense on a young man to leave home and locate in a town 70 or 80 miles distant where he must pay his living expenses while he takes his educational course. I see by the report of the Auditor General that the expenses of these schools of navigation last year amounted to $1,828.58. I think the minister took a vote of $8,000 last year for this purpose. Seeing that the committee and parliament were so generous to the minister, and seeing that there is such crying need for the extension of the system, I do not see why so little was done as to call for only this small expenditure. The minister said last year that he would take into consideration the suggestion I made to open a school of navigation at the port of Digby. It would seem that he did not find a special reason for opening that school. Did he ask for any report as to the necessity of the case, or was the matter simply overlooked?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is true, I am sorry to say, the people have not taken advantage of these schools as quickly as I thought they would. I am very anxious to have these schools established in different parts of the country. But the difficulty we experience is to find men to give these lectures. I do not know whether there is anybody in Digby whom we could secure. I will give the matter most earnest consideration, and will see to it that Digby is not forgotten.

Mr. CROSBY. I believe there are a number of competent men who could be got at Halifax, Lunenburg, and all over the province. But these men cannot be secured for a few dollars. I see that the minister has been running this part of his department very carefully—I do not say that he is not running the rest in the same way, but I think that a little money spent on these schools would be a great advantage. As I have said, we find it difficult to get masters and mates. Very often we have vessels in Halifax for whom it is very difficult to get men with certificates. If the minister will take the matter up and not be too careful in the expenditure, I think he could succeed. I think parliament would be better pleased to have this $8,000 spent than to have so much of it remain in the public treasury while we know that not as much is being accomplished as should be accomplished.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not our fault. The people do not seem to take advantage of these schools. Let me give an instance. Lately I tried to open a school in Montreal, but, though that is so large a centre, only two or three came to attend the course which was given there. We are trying to popularize the system we have introduced in respect to these courses of navigation, and I would be glad if the members would take up the question in their constituencies, and in every case where it is found there are people willing to follow the courses I would be glad to spend the money necessary to establish them.

Mr. CROSBY. I would be glad at any time to assist the minister at any time in that way. I am sure that in our province we could get many men competent and willing to do the instructing although, of course, that class of work should be well paid.

Mr. JAMESON. How often are the lessons given and how many students would be necessary for the establishment of a class?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no fixed number of students or number of lessons. The lecturer goes to a place, advertises the lectures, we pay the rent of the room and supply the necessary instruments and the students go there to hear the lectures. Generally the lecturer stays in each place about three months, after which time it is expected that those who have been following the courses, will be sufficiently qualified to pass their examination as mates or masters. The lectures are given about three times a week.

Mr. JAMESON. How many would be necessary for the opening of a school?

Mr. BRODEUR. We are not very particular in that respect. If there are five or ten people we would be glad to send a lecturer. If my hon. friend thinks that he can in Digby get ten men I will take the necessary steps to send a man there.

Mr. SPROULE. Were lectures given in Collingwood last year?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much money is paid to each lecturer?

Mr. BRODEUR. $250.

Mr. JAMESON. I do not want the minister to set a pace that we cannot live up to in the small towns. He told us if there were 5 or 10 students he would be willing to open a school. I cannot guarantee him that there will be ten or nine in Digby, but if he would place the number of students at 5 to start, I think there would be no difficulty in getting that number at Digby and increasing the number as time went on. Of course if after the school was started, there were not enough students to make it worth while continuing it, it could easily be dropped. As only $2,000 were spent last year out of a vote of $8,000, it would be well, where a few could be got together, to afford them an opportunity of hearing the lectures.

Mr. BRODEUR. I expect that in such a town as Digby, we would have not far from ten students. I shall report these facts to the captain in charge of the School for Navigation and urge upon him the advisability of putting Digby on the list of places where schools are maintained.

Registration of shipping, $2,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required to pay the expense of keeping a complete list of all vessels registered in Canada.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required to remove any wrecks or obstructions found in navigable waters. Immediately after a wreck is reported we bring the matter to the attention of the owner of the vessel and he is called on to remove the wreck. If he does not, we call for tenders and give the contract for the removal to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. CROSBY. It seems unfair that the Canadian owner who loses his vessel in a position where she is an obstruction to navigation, should be compelled to pay for her removal, while a foreign owner under similar circumstances is not required to do so, the department bearing the cost of removal. If a foreigner comes into our waters and by some accident loses his vessel and it becomes an obstruction to navigation, the Department of Marine and Fisheries has to remove it and there is no way of making him pay a cent, whereas, if the vessel owner is living in Canada, the department may go to him and say: You must remove this vessel or we will remove it and charge you for it. I do not think that is a very good law, and I think that both should be put on the same footing. The man who owns a ship in Canada should not be compelled to pay for the removal of the obstruction when the foreigner cannot be compelled to assume that responsibility.

Mr. BRODEUR. The expense which is incurred for the removal of a vessel is taken from the wreck itself, if an obstruction to navigation is caused by the presence of the wrecked vessel, a claim is made upon the vessel itself so that in that case foreigners are on the same footing as Canadians are. If a foreigner should come into this country we might collect from him, but in most cases we succeeded in having wrecks removed by paying a very small sum provided the wreck becomes the property of the man who removes it. We had a law passed last year for the purpose of giving greater power than we had before and which will have the effect of saving the department a considerable expenditure that we formerly had to bear. Foreigners and Canadians are exactly on the same footing.

Mr. CROSBY. Of course, you do not interfere with a ship that is not an obstruction to navigation. There are not so very many men, foreigners or Canadians, who would leave a ship that is worth anything, if she is worth anything, they are going to sell her. It is only in cases where a ship becomes of no value whatever and is an obstruction to navigation that the department intervenes. My hon. friend knows very well that he cannot go to a United States ship owner and say: You left one of your vessels in Sydney harbour, or some other place. I want you to come back here and take her out, or I will take her out and make you pay for it. He would find it very hard to collect the money. On the other hand, if a ship is owned by a person in Canada, he may go to him and say: I want you to remove that wreck.

Mr. BRODEUR.

If the owner does not remove it, he removes it and charges the expense to the owner. Where any craft becomes an obstruction to navigation it is the duty of the Marine Department to remove it and get all they can out of it. I do not think it is fair that they should come back on the person who happens to be the registered owner. Somebody may have a mortgage or somebody may have collected the insurance while the registered owner would be the man that the Department of Marine and Fisheries would come on for the cost of removing the ship.

Winter mail service, $7,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for a boat service for carrying the mails between Prince Edward Island and the mainlands at times when the winter steamers are held up by ice and cannot make a crossing. Each boat has a coxswain and five men. There are also boat house keepers employed on both sides of the straits. The expenditure depends on the severity of the winter, and it is, therefore, necessary to provide for meeting the cost of the service. This sum has never yet been expended. I do not think that we spent over $300 last year.

Mr. JAMESON. This has been a very severe winter, and I understand this service has been in operation. My hon. friend from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Fraser), who is not present, would like to have something to say with respect to this item, and if the minister would reserve that right when his estimates are up for further consideration, I think he would appreciate it.

Mr. BRODEUR. He may bring up the question on any item.

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you have this here? Does it not come under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of looking after the inspection of cattle on ships. We have regulations providing the space which shall be given to cattle on board ship, and how they shall be fed and treated during the voyage. This service appertains to the Department of Marine and Fisheries rather than to the Department of Agriculture. This is not for the inspection of the cattle, properly speaking, but to see that there are cattle men on board, and that the regulations are carried out. We have cattle inspectors at Montreal and St. John.

Mr. SPROULE. Then this does not properly describe it because it is not to inspect cattle, but to inspect the equipment for carrying the cattle.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, that would be more proper.

To continue the subsidy for wrecking plant in Quebec, maritime provinces and British Columbia, $30,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This amount is paid for the purpose of fulfilling the contracts which we have with three companies that maintain wrecking plants—the Davie Company on the St. Lawrence, $10,000; the Dominion Coal Company at Sydney, $10,000, on the Atlantic, and the British Columbia Salvage Company on the Pacific Coast.

To provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada, also for establishing and maintaining police and customs ports in the mainland or islands, as may be deemed necessary from time to time, $59,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Arctic,' under Captain Bernier, is engaged in this service. Captain Bernier's instructions were to try and make the northwest passage and before he left he expressed the belief that he would be successful. He will go to the mouth of the Mackenzie river, where it is supposed that American fishermen are carrying on whale-fishing operations, and he will collect fees from them.

Mr. JAMESON. Have customs ports been actually established by him in these northern waters?

Mr. BRODEUR. A customs port was established on the north shore of Hudson bay some years ago. In other cases Captain Bernier collects duty on the goods he finds in the ships and makes them take out fishing licenses.

Mr. JAMESON. What revenue has so far been derived from this service?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year he brought back $500. It is not so much the amount of money as the assertion of Canadian authority. As there might be dispute some day about these islands being part of Canada, we thought we should assert our sovereignty.

Mr. JAMESON. No one will object to proper expenditure for the purpose of asserting the rights of Canada in these northern waters, but my reason for asking about the revenue was to enable us to determine if possible how much actual work had been done in the way of bringing poachers to account. The minister has not told us how many American vessels have been overhauled and how many fines have been imposed. I do not know that the attempt to make the northwest passage will in any way strengthen the claims of Canada in these northern waters and islands, though possibly it may. It may also be that it will jeopardize the ship and possibly the lives of the crew, but the minister will have his own opinion as to that. I am informed that Americans are conducting fishing operations in that territory and that they have in many cases evaded the 'Arctic.' Of course, whether the one ship can prosecute a voyage of discovery and at the same time be in any way seriously effective in preventing poachers is another matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. The question of making the northwest passage was left largely to Captain Bernier's own judgment. Of course it would be ridiculous for us to force him to make it if he found it was impracticable or exceedingly dangerous. It is of great importance that he should assert the rights of Canada in this northern territory.

Mr. JAMESON. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. I believe that the fact that Captain Bernier took possession of these northern islands last year in the most formal manner will in the future serve the interests of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be desirable if Captain Bernier had any authority, but that is very questionable. It is five minutes past twelve and I think it is time to adjourn.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.06 a.m. Wednesday.

3. It is expected that the canal will be completed in 1913. It is estimated that the total cost of this canal including conservation works, will be $1,100,000. The first estimate made was incomplete, and was for a canal in which wooden structures were largely employed. This estimate was based upon preliminary plans, placing the cost at $328,000.

4. The proposed allotment of the 1911-12 appropriation for section No. 1, is for $40,000, and for section No. 2, $125,000; the expenditure for cement, bridges, engineering, &c., will be about the same as last year, and will be embraced in the allotment for those items for the canal in general.

5. For section No. 2—The York Construction Company, Limited. For bridges, the Hamilton Bridge Works Company, Limited. For cement in 1910, the Canada Cement Company. For section No. 1, not under contract.

6. The records do not contain such estimate.

7. All reports, papers and petitions were laid on the table of the House in a return prepared by the department on the 4th March, 1909. There appears to be no objection to a copy of these reports being furnished members of parliament on application.

8. Yes; several petitions were received, copies of which were included in the return.

Mr. WALLACE.

OWL'S HEAD LIGHTHOUSE, N. S.

* Mr. CROSBY:

1. When is it the intention of the government to commence the construction of the Owl's Head lighthouse at Owl's Head, N.S., and when will a lightkeeper be appointed?

2. Is it the intention of the department to consult members representing the county with regard to such an appointment?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. When the necessary information has been obtained. It has been found impossible to visit the place during the winter but a report will probably be obtained early this spring and plans will thereafter be prepared. A lightkeeper will be appointed when the buildings are completed, probably next autumn.

2. The department will always be pleased to receive any representations from the members representing any county.

DARTMOUTH, N.S., INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY WHARF.

* Mr. CROSBY:

1. Has the Minister of Railways received a petition from the people of the town of Dartmouth asking for the construction of a railway wharf for the Intercolonial railway terminus at Dartmouth, to be so constructed that it may be used as a public wharf?

2. Is it the intention of the government to so construct a wharf at Dartmouth?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes, a petition was received, signed by the mayor, the Board of Trade and the business men of Dartmouth, representing the citizens generally.
2. The matter is under consideration by the department.

SCHOONER 'CRISSIE TOOMEY.'

2. What amount of money was expended on her after she was purchased?
3. What amount has been expended on her since she was purchased up to the present date, and where is the vessel now?
4. What does the department intend to do with her during the coming summer?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. 23rd May, 1910; hydrographic survey work at Port Nelson, Hudson bay; $9,000 paid to Robert Moulton of Burgeo, Newfoundland.

4. Going back to Port Nelson.

BOATS OF MARINE AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT.

* Mr. CROSBY:

2. Have they all been in commission? If not, what boats have been laid up, and what have those that have been in commission been doing?
3. What boats have been patrolling the coast this winter and what parts of the coast?

Mr. BRODEUR:

1. 'Lady Laurier,' in the Halifax agency. 'Montmagny' in the Halifax agency, 'Aberdeen' in the Halifax agency until the 13th December when she was laid up for repairs.

2. All the boats have not been in commission. 'Aberdeen' laid up on the 13th December for repairs. Boats in commission were engaged as follows: 'Lady Laurier' lighthouse and buoy work in Halifax agency. 'Montmagny' lighthouse and buoy work in Halifax agency. 'Aberdeen' lighthouse and buoy work in Halifax agency until 13th December. 'Stanley' belonging to St. John agency was employed during February and part of March releasing vessels from the ice in Nova Scotian ports.

3. The steamers 'Lady Laurier' 'Montmagny' and 'Stanley,' have been moving along the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia during the present winter. The 'Thirty Three' was kept in commission at Canso until the end of January for the purpose of being available for the relief of fishermen in cases of emergency while the haddock fishery was prosecuted.

5. If register was filled in, what are the particulars?

Mr. BRODEUR:

'Tenno' formerly 'Wanda.'
1. Registered length 64 feet.
2. Steam.
3. Triple expansion. Three cylinders, 6 in, 10 in, 16 in, 9 in stroke.
4. The steamer was duly registered at Brockville on the 20th day of October, 1909.

PROPOSED ARBITRATION TREATY BETWEEN THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FOWKE:

Has the attention of the government been called to the recent speeches of Sir Edward Grey and President Taft in reference to a proposed arbitration treaty between the British Empire and the United States, and is the government prepared to express any opinion on the subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The attention of the government, and, it may be added, of the whole people of Canada, could not fail to be attracted to the proposition, now being discussed by Sir Edward Grey and President Taft, of a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States which would secure for them and their respective peoples the blessings of perpetual peace.

Whilst the government of Canada could have no direct voice in the negotiations, it can be safely asserted that there is no part of the British Empire where such a treaty would be more welcome than in the Dominion of Canada, which is so closely connected with the United States by geographical proximity and ever-increasing trade relations, and which is still more intimately connected with Great Britain by the strongest bonds of devoted allegiance.

LAND PATENTS.

Mr. STAPLES:

1. Has a patent been issued for S.E. ¼ of section 6, township 7, range 8, W. 1?
1. If so, to whom? If not, why not?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No patent has been issued.

2. By order in council of the 3rd November last, authority was given for the sale of this land. No payments have yet been reported on account of such sale, and therefore no action has been taken to issue a patent.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Has the contract for the Quebec bridge been let?
2. If so, is there a fair wage clause attached to said contract? If not, why not?
3. If so, what is the minimum rate of wages for all branches of trades in connection with the erection of the bridge?
4. Is it the intention of the government to decide before the work is commenced the rate of wages to be paid per hour in the erection of same?
5. What will be the attitude of the government in case of a dispute or discontent relating to wages and hours?
6. What will the government classify as a dispute?

Mr. KING:

1. No.

2. It is proposed that a Fair Wages Clause for the adequate protection of the labour to be employed on this work shall be embodied in the contract.

3, 4 and 5. It is provided in the Fair Wages Clause which formed part of a draft contract upon which tenders were invited for this work that all mechanics, labourers and other persons who perform labour in the construction of this work shall be paid such wages as are generally accepted as current for competent workmen in the district in which the work is to be performed, and if there is no current rate in such district then a fair and reasonable rate, and shall not be required to work for longer hours than those fixed by the custom of the trade in the district where the work is to be carried on, except for the protection of life or property or in the case of other emergencies.

It is also provided in the draft contract that in the event of a dispute arising as to what is the current or a fair and reasonable rate, or what are the current hours fixed by the custom of the trade, it shall be determined by the Minister of Labour, whose decision shall be final.

No schedule of the rates of wages to be paid in the erection of this bridge was inserted in the draft contract because, upon inquiry, it was ascertained by the Fair Wages Officer who visited the locality for this purpose that there was no work of a similar nature being carried on in the district upon which a schedule could be based.

6. On receiving any representations which are shown clearly to be made on behalf of workmen concerned, and at their instance, indicating that different views prevail as between contractors and the workmen 'as to what is the current or a fair and reasonable rate of wages, or what are the current hours fixed by the custom of the trade,' inquiry will be immediately made by the Department of Labour, and subsequent action will be guided accordingly.

THE NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE AND THE CORONATION.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. LAKE. About a fortnight ago, when the question of the coronation contingent was brought up, I asked how many men of the Northwest Mounted Police would be sent. Is not the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) prepared to make a statement as to the number and as to the method of selection?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is proposed, but not definitely arranged, to send 75 men and five officers of the Northwest Mounted Police.

THE CORONATION AND BANK HOLIDAY.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I see by the proceedings in the Imperial Parliament that it is the intention there to make the day appointed for His Majesty's coronation a bank holiday throughout the United Kingdom. Have the government given any consideration to the carrying out of a similar idea in Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to inform my hon. friend that the matter has not been considered.

THE SECRETARIAT IN LONDON.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the Prime Minister if he has thought to inquire whether there are any papers or information that could be given with reference to the Secretariat in London. He will remember that I spoke about it six or seven weeks ago, and he told me he would look up the matter and see if there was any additional information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that I had forgotten the matter. But I am to have an interview with the Under-Secretary of State this afternoon, and I will call his attention to it.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. PORTER. I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur.) with regard to a return to an order granted by the House on 27th February last, in regard to appointments to the fisheries service. When may I expect the return?

Mr. BRODEUR. The report was brought down a few days ago.

SUPPLY—ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered last year I called the attention of the House to the manner in which the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve had been secured. At that time I pointed out that the Indians at St. Peter's alleged that they had been practically cheated out of their reserve. I pointed out that the methods employed by the government agent had been anything but creditable to the government. The hon. Superintendent General of Indian Affairs (Mr. Oliver) replying to my remarks, said, at page 7071 of last year's 'Hansard':

I am sure the House will not expect me—at this stage of the session, would not wish me—to make a detailed criticism of the four hours' speech made by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) at the close of the last sitting of the House. My hon. friend is entitled to the credit, if credit it be, of having made the longest speech of the session. May I add my humble appreciation by saying that I believe never, since this chamber was erected, has there been delivered in its walls such a persistent and sustained tirade of unfounded assertion, of unwarranted insinuation; a tirade that, in its gratuitous inexactitude, is an offence against the privilege of parliament and an insult to its intelligence.

This is the language with which the hon. the Superintendent General opened within a three and one half hour's speech which was intended no doubt to destroy the force and effect of one of the most serious indictments ever delivered against the Indian Department of this country. After such a tirade of carefully prepared criticism of my humble efforts to discharge a duty which I felt imperative on me as a representative of the part of the country where this outrage occurred, I think I had a right to expect, and the House had a right to expect, that the hon. gentleman who started out with such a flourish of trumpets would have at least made good his reckless assertions; it was surely his bounden duty to demonstrate to this House the correctness of his bold and I think reckless statements in justification of the use of language verging on what would be considered unparliamentary, and which was certainly undignified and hardly worthy of a minister of the Crown.

You can read the minister's speech from end to end without finding one fair or intelligent argument to justify his opening criticism of my speech. Neither can you find one fair or one intelligent argument in rebuttal of the serious charges preferred against his department by the Indians, his wards. It is true the hon. gentleman has denied in a general way the correctness of those statements, but he failed to adduce one tittle of evidence to sustain his denial. He seems to expect this House and the country to accept his bald statement as against the sworn statements of dozens of the wards of this country, men who are living on the ground, who know the circumstances, I am sure I will be pardoned when I say, that I prefer to take the sworn statements of the men who suffered, and the men who knew what they were talking about, when they made these declarations, which formed the serious charge against the administration of the Department of Indian Affairs. The hon. Superintendent General, has demonstrated very clearly to me, that he was entirely ignorant of the real facts with regard to this scandalous transaction, and sooner than admit that ignorance he was advancing arguments to save the face of his department, arguments no doubt furnished to him by officials some of whom at least were very much concerned and interested in his success in convincing parliament and the country that there was nothing wrong in this surrender and nothing to investigate. But after an heroic effort sustained for three and a half hours by the hon. minister, and after his reckless statements he left unanswered entirely this serious inditement. Therefore we see clearly the unfair and uncandid methods employed by the minister to counteract the damaging effect of the serious charges made by his wards, the Indians of St. Peter's. That speech also shows how unfair the minister was in his opening attack on me at the commencement of his long and somewhat laboured speech.

In order that the House may understand the position to which I was referring last year which called forth this criticism from the hon. minister, and that the House and the country may understand that the minister failed entirely to meet these serious charges, and left this indictment standing as strong against the Indian Department as on the night on which I delivered my remarks, I wish to recall to the House a few of the charges to which I referred and which the hon. minister failed entirely to meet or to explain. For instance, I stated that the notices calling a meeting to consider the surrender of the homes of nearly 1,300 souls was posted in four or five places on the reserve and were not seen until Sunday about noon, the meeting being called for Monday at 11 o'clock, giving less than twenty-four hours' notice for this all-important meeting at which this band of Indians were supposed to decide whether they would surrender the reserve on which their grandfathers before them had lived. How does the hon. gentleman meet and dispose of this serious indictment? This charge was not made on hearsay evidence, it was made on the strength of sworn declarations from dozens of Indians, wards of the people of this country.

The hon. gentleman met this indictment in this way at page 7083 of last year's 'Hansard':

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend said last night that only one day's notice was given for the gathering of the band. My information in that regard, as I am sorry to say in so many other matters, is quite different, it is that some three or four days' notice was given.

The hon. Superintendent General, in face of the sworn statements from the country's wards which I submitted to this House, and which he had before him when he made his remarks, showing that only one day's notice was given for this meeting, has the temerity to make the statement I have just read from 'Hansard' without advancing one tittle of evidence to substantiate that statement. He contents himself, with saying that he was informed that three or four days' notice was given, then endeavours to lead the House to believe that ample notice was given of this all important meeting. The hon. gentleman's information no doubt came from the officials who were guilty of this contemptible piece of sharp practice. Here is one of the original notices that was posted calling that meeting. It is dated December 20, 1907. The meeting was called on Monday the 23rd, but while the person who issued this document, gave about three days' notice, it was not posted or seen until 24 hours before the meeting was held. I have many sworn declarations showing that this is one of the four notices posted up on the reserve and that not one of them was seen before Sunday about 11 o'clock, or less than 24 hours before this meeting was convened. When you consider that this reserve is about 80 square miles you can easily imagine, how many voters there were who did not hear of this meeting, advertised as it was by four small typewritten notices not more than four inches wide posted 24 hours before the meeting was called. Surely, in the face of this fact, which cannot be disputed fairly, I was justified in characterizing the method of calling this meeting a contemptible piece of sharp practice on the part of those who were guilty. Yet, the minister treats this matter lightly and asks the House to believe his bald statement that ample time was given, instead of the sworn statements made by his wards whom he is supposed, by virtue of his office, to protect, guide, and watch over. These men now allege that they were cheated out of their birthright by methods of this kind. I am sure I will be pardoned if I say I prefer to take the sworn statements of these men, to my hon. friend's statement, because I am satisfied that he is in total ignorance of the real facts, while these men are living on the ground and are suffering the awful consequences of the methods employed by his officials. I will quote here one or two declarations which I submitted last year to prove to this House that the hon. gentleman had this evidence before him when he rose in his place to speak and made the statement which he did regarding this transaction. I will quote from John Flett, one of the most intelligent Indians on St. Peter's reserve, and this is what he says about it:

Statutory Declaration.

Dominion of Canada, Province of Manitoba,
In the matter of the vote for surrender of the Indian lands in St. Peter's reserve, taken on September 24, 1907.

To Wit:

I, John Flett, of the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, Indian, do solemnly declare that I am a member of the St. Peter's Band of Indians; that the notices calling the meeting at which the vote surrendering the reserve was taken, were not posted up, nor did the Indians know anything about such a meeting until Sunday, the twenty-second day of September, A.D., 1907, just one day prior to the date of such meeting. The meeting was held on Monday, September 23, and duly adjourned until the next day, Tuesday, September 24, but at the time of such adjournment no notice was given that the vote would finally be taken on Tuesday. Many of the Indians did not see or hear about the notice, and in consequence were not present at the meeting, and did not have a chance of expressing their views or voting. I believe that had ample time been given and the matter properly explained to the band, that many who were at their homes would have turned out and voted against the surrender of their reserve; many of the young men of the band were away from home working at various occupations and did not know or hear anything about a vote going to be taken owing to the shortness of the time given. That I have been told and believe that some non-treaty men and some minors were counted amongst those voting for the surrender. That in my opinion the vote was most irregular and improper and was not taken according to the regular custom of our band.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, this 24th day of March, A.D., 1910.

(Sgd.) ROBERT G. McDONALD,
Commissioner in B. R., etc.

(Sgd.) JOHN FLETT.

I also wish to put on record a telegram I received at that time which was placed on 'Hansard' last year, and which was brought to the hon. gentleman's notice when he delivered that speech:

Selkirk, Manitoba, January 26, 1910.

G. H. Bradbury,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Band received one day's notice of meeting September 23. Notices, three or four posted on Sunday, September 22.

WM. ASHAM.

Then I have a letter from the same man inclosing this original notice which I have already presented to the House:

Dear Sir,—The inclosed is the original copy of the notice that was posted one day previous to the time of meeting for the surrender of St. Peter's reservation, effected September 24, 1907.

In face of these very clear and distinct sworn statements, which were before the hon. gentleman when he made his speech, I feel justified in saying that the minister could not expect this House and the country to take him seriously when he was speaking on this matter. Without any intention of being offensive, it was an insult to the intelligence of this House and the country to expect them to accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, and his flippant reply to such a serious charge as that which had been preferred against his department by his wards, the Indians of St Peter's. This is one of the charges that I preferred in my speech, and which the hon. gentleman characterized as a tirade of unfounded assertion and gratuitous inexactitudes. If the rest of the hon. gentleman's speech was as inexact and unfair as it was in connection with this charge, then I say that the hon. gentleman was unfair during the whole time of his reply to this very serious indictment. I desire to call the attention of the House to another of these charges. These are very serious charges; these are not charges to be dealt with lightly, to be passed over in the flippant manner in which my hon. friend dealt with them last year. When the hon. gentleman was replying to the charge that the Indians had been induced to vote by an offer of money, the statement I made being that just as the Indians were about being divided one of the agents said: You who want $90 go to that side, and the others go to the other side, my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) made the following interjection:

Mr. HUGHES. If I heard the hon. member for Selkirk aright, he pointed out that the call was not to those who were for selling the lands and those who were against it, but the call was for those who wanted the $90 to take one side, and those who did not want it to take the other side. I know the minister has overlooked that.

The hon. minister replying to that statement said:

Mr. OLIVER. No, I have not overlooked it. I can only say that I did not wish to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman, and question the validity of the statement he put forward. I am merely generalizing in order to save his feelings, and I may be pardoned, I presume, for again generalizing, and again saying that ofter a question such as that had been under discussion for so long a time, when it was a question of such importance, it did not matter what was said in regard to the vote. Those Indians knew what the vote was for, and they voted for or against with full knowledge of what they were doing, and why they were doing it. I do not wish to bring in personal matters, but my hon. friend followed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has seen fit to mention the name of Mr. Semmens.

Mr. HUGHES. I never heard of him.

Mr. OLIVER. If he had listened to the speech of the hon. member for Selkirk last night he would have heard of him, because it was Mr. Semmens who was said to have made this announcement. Now, the suggestion is that Mr. Semmens was a party to an impropriety in which the interest of the Indians was not preserved. Now, I may go, perhaps, so far as to say who Mr. Semmens is. I happen to know Mr. Semmens ever since 1873, when he was a Methodist minister in the city of Winnipeg, and at that time he was considered to be a young man of very considerable promise in the ministry, and ever since then he has devoted his life to the advancement and the betterment of the Indians.

It will be noticed how carefully the hon. gentleman evaded the serious charge made by myself and suggested in the question interjected by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. The hon. minister did not deny that charge; he contented himself with pointing out who the agent was—the Rev. Mr. Semmens, who had been guilty of an impropriety if nothing worse. To make this matter perfectly clear, I desire again to place on record one or two paragraphs from the affidavits which I submitted last session. On page 7059 of 'Hansard,' in a declaration by John Flett, he says:

Just as the vote was going to be taken, I heard Mr. John Semmens, Inspector of Indian agencies, state loudly in the Cree language to the Indians present: All of you who want $90 go to that side, indicating with his arm where the chief and councillors were standing. I am satisfied that these two statements, the one by Mr. Frank Pedley, and the other by Mr. John Semmens, influenced many to go on the side with the chief. The majority of the Indians did not know that they were voting to surrender their homes, as I am sure they did not wish to do. They were not asked the question: You that are in favour of surrendering the reserve, go to that side Many did not realize that the vote was whether or not they should surrender the reserve, I am satisfied that if the question had been stated fairly the vote would not have been carried.

On page 7062 this declaration is made by Wm. Sinclair, an educated Indian, who was used as an interpreter by Mr. Williams, the minister's agent, who was sent to Manitoba last year to make an investigation:

I am a member of the St. Peter's band of Indians, and that I was present at the time of the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve, and declare that when the vote was just about to be taken to decide whether the reserve should be surrendered or not, I heard John Semmens, inspector of Indian agencies, make a short speech in the Cree language, and said to all those present, that those wanting the $90 to go over there, indicating the place where they should stand who favoured the surrender.

In the face of these sworn statements, the hon. minister has endeavoured, more by insinuation or assertion than by argument, to leave the impression on the House that the charge which I made on the strength of these affidavits was unfounded; but he stated that out of consideration for my feelings he was only generalizing. The consideration of the hon. gentleman was wonderful. Perhaps he was only generalizing when he began his remarks with the attack he made on me. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that his methods deceive no one, not even himself, in his rather clumsy effort to cast ridicule upon my attempts to secure justice for the Indians and to discharge a very important duty which I owe, not only to the Indians, but to myself as a man. I believe every word that I stated in this House to be absolutely true. I believe that if I had not brought this case before parliament as the representative of that district, I would have been unworthy of the position I occupy as a member of this House for the county of Selkirk, in which this matter occurred. The hon. minister, in his attempt to minimize the disgraceful deception practiced on the poor Indians, did not dare to deny the serious charge that one of his officials, just as the Indians were to be divided for a vote, made use of the following language in Cree: 'All you that want $90 go to that side,' indicating where the chief and council were standing. The hon. minister evades this charge by pointing out who the official was, and stating that he was a Methodist minister and had the welfare of the Indians at heart. This, Mr. Speaker, is surely no answer to such a serious charge. The fact that an official is a Methodist minister does not lessen the seriousness of the offence against everything that was fair and decent. To my mind it rather intensifies the meanness of the trick played on the poor unsuspecting Indian to secure his consent to that vote. That the Indians were tricked into the vote by methods of this kind is to my mind beyond any doubt and it is beyond my conception to realize that a man in the position of Mr. Semmens should have lent himself to such a shady transaction.

But, Mr. Speaker, there may be an explanation of the action of this gentleman, and I think there is. The fact that the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Mr. Pedley, was himself present in charge of this meeting, would I submit suggest the probability that when Mr. Semmens spoke as he did he was simply carrying out part of a well-laid scheme arranged beforehand to secure the necessary votes to assure the surrender. I cannot think that Mr. Semmens ever made that statement as he did, and just at the physicological moment, without some distinct prearrangement and without some instruction from his superior officer. I am satisfied that this whole matter was arranged and that when Mr. Pedley went to Selkirk he went there determined to secure that surrender by fair or foul means, and he secured it to suit himself. But, Mr. Speaker, I intend later on to refer to the fact that while he secured that alleged surrender which seems to satisfy the minister, I contend that today there is no surrender of St. Peters Indian Reserve according to the true meaning of the Indian Act. During the hon. gentleman's long speech, he did not deny, and in fact he did not refer to the more serious charge which was supported by many sworn declarations, namely, that the Deputy Superintendent General himself just on the eve of taking the vote and a few minutes previous to the instructions given to his agents to which I have just referred, endeavoured to bribe the Indians by an offer of money. The meeting was in session and the Deputy Superintendent General stated:

It is time to take the vote. I have $5,000 here in my valise. If you agree to this surrender this money will be divided among you, but if you don't agree to the surrender, I will take my satchel and go home, and you won't get a cent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that there may be no misunderstanding I wish to refer to one or two of the declarations that I placed on record last year, and which were before the minister when he made his remarks. These declarations are so long that I will not weary the House by reading them all, but I shall quote from them a few paragraphs. William Asham, says, speaking at the meeting:

Now, soon after this, we were in the heat of a hot discussion in the matter regarding the surrender. Mr. Pedley during his speech at this time said I have $5,000 here, pointing to a satchel at his side. If you agree to this surrender this money will be distributed among you, but if you don't agree to the surrender, I will take my satchel and go home and you won't get a cent. Then we were told the time had come to take a vote.

You notice Mr. Speaker, how these two offers were arranged. First it was the $5,000, and then he says:

Up to this time fully half of the band present had not been able to get into the building, and did not hear what had taken place. The building being too small to take the vote in, we were asked to go outside. Then Mr. John Semmens, the inspector of Indian agencies, spoke loudly in Cree, saying, 'All you that want $90 go to this side, indicating where the chief and council were standing, the others go to the opposite side.' The crowd separated under great excitement, a great many not knowing what they were doing. After they were separated, some of them moving from one side to the other, not knowing what they were doing. Mr. Semmens and myself started to count the votes that were against, but when we got through counting we turned around to count the other side. I was told then that the other side was counted. I did not know who counted the other side, and they claimed they had a majority of seven. I was astonished to hear this, and sized up the two sides and satisfied myself that there were a larger number standing on my side than there was with the chief and council, but I had no opportunity whatever of counting the number that stood with the chief and council. I protested to Mr. Semmens, saying to him that he should not have said that you who want $90 go on one side, but you should have said you that want to surrender the reserve go to one side, and you that don't want to surrender the reserve go to the other side, then the people would have understood what they were voting for.

I declare that I consider the vote irregular and improper, as it was not stated fairly to the people, nor was it fairly counted as it was counted by different parties.

I would like the hon. minister to listen to this declaration from this man because it is very serious. He says:

When Mr. Pedley read the surrender that he had with him prepared, he read it in English, and fast, that even I who understood English, found it difficult to understand the terms of the surrender. This was not interpreted to the band in their own language, consequently very few, if any, understood the conditions of the surrender. I am satisfied that Mr. Pedley and the others came determined to secure the surrender. The surrender was all prepared without any consultation with the band, and they brought the $5,000 with them. Without this money on the ground, I am satisfied they never could have secured the support they did in favour of the surrender.

I wish to place on record another short declaration by William Sinclair, who is an interpreter and whom the government employed as such on several different occasions. William Sinclair says in the middle of his declaration:

I further declare that I heard Mr. Pedley say that he had $5,000 in his satchel which he would divide among the Indians, providing they would make a surrender of the reserve, if not he would take the money back.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.—Wm. Sinclair.

Declared before me in the town of Selkirk, in the province of Manitoba, this 22nd of January, 1910.—C. R. Smallman, commissioner.

Well, Mr. Speaker, judging from the manner in which the hon. minister dealt with the serious indictment against his department last year, I had good ground for feeling that he did not meet the charges fairly and that he begged the question from beginning to end. Especially in his opening remarks was the minister entirely unfair, and he failed to demonstrate during his whole speech any justification for the language with which he prefaced his remarks. That is a sample of the methods employed by the hon. gentleman in answering this indictment which is laid at his door, not by me, but by his wards, the Indians. It will be remembered that I made a statement last session regarding the signing of the receipts for the patents, and this is perhaps one of the most serious phases of the whole question because probably more hinges on it than hon. gentlemen in this House can possibly conceive at present; whether the minister does or not. I submitted at that time many declarations from reliable Indians showing that they had never received or even seen their patents and that they had never, knowingly, signed any receipt for the same. This fact did not, however, trouble the Minister of the Interior who is responsible to this House for the management of that important department. He contented himself by saying that he had laid on the table receipts for most of the patents duly signed. These receipts were no doubt sent to him by the agents who had been parties to this scandalous transaction; but it never seemed to dawn on the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, as the legal guardian of the Indians, that it was his duty to investigate the allegation made by dozens of his wards, and if forgery had been committed, as seems quite probable, it was his duty to punish those guilty, and to rectify the great wrong done these wards of the people.

Here I intend to submit one or two declarations simply to sustain this charge. They have already been placed on 'Hansard,' but I desire that there should be no misunderstanding as to the minister having had the facts before him when he made his speech last year. I refer to the affidavits on page 7408 of last year's 'Hansard.' The affidavits state distinctly that those who made them had never seen their patents and had never given any receipt for their patents. This matter was brought to the minister's attention from time to time before he made his speech last year.

I myself called his attention to what I considered an outrage on our Indian wards, and I confess frankly my surprise that the hon. the superintendent general (Mr. Oliver), who is responsible for the condition of affairs which exists on St. Peter's reserve, has not seen fit to take drastic measures in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of these serious charges. I requested last session that the hon. minister should have a thorough investigation made; and before I take my seat to-day I intend to give him another opportunity of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate this whole matter.

There is another charge I made which I wish to recall to the attention of the hon. minister. I said last year that the chief and four of his councillors had received more than 100 acres of land over and above what they were entitled to. The minister replied to that charge in the following language, as will be seen by referring to page 7094 of last year's 'Hansard':

My hon. friend last night said something about a man named Raynor who had a bill against the government for $500 which bill was not paid by the government and Mr. Raynor has not pressed for payment. I do not know anything about Mr. Raynor, who he is, or what he is, or on what ground he presented such a demand. All I know is that his bill was not paid, and, therefore, if Mr. Raynor bribed any of the Indians he bribed them at his own expense and at his own cost. My hon. friend explained that Mr. Raynor had got back the extra money that he had paid to the Indians, because the chiefs had got a certain proportion more land than they were entitled to under the terms of the surrender. That is to say that Chief William Prince got 20 acres more, and the several councillors a certain number of acres more in the neighbourhood of 20 apiece over and above what the terms of surrender called for. Chief William Prince was entitled to 212 acres by reason of his extra allowance as chief, and by reason of the number of members in his family, and he received actually 215·53, that is 3⅓ acres more than his allowance. Councillor Harper was entitled to 232 acres, and he got 233·16. Councillor James was entitled to 200 acres, and he got 206·88. Councillor Henry Prince was entitled to 168 acres, and he got 172·50 acres. John Prince was entitled to 136 acres and got 136 acres. The explanation is that in the laying out of the lands when the survey was made, the lots ran into one or two acres more than the allowance called for, and the block was allowed to go as it was surveyed. My hon. friend stated last night that these people received in the neighbourhood of 20 acres at least more than they were entitled to, and that this extra allowance of land was in some way, which he did not explain, used to repay Raynor the money that he said it was rumoured had been paid to the Indians.

Mr BRADBURY. The minister has given the amount of acreage. I would like him to tell the House how many of a family each man had.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Mr. OLIVER. Chief William Prince had two of a family, Councillor Harper seven, James William five, Henry Prince three, and John Prince one. My hon. friend said last night that these men got about an average of 20 acres apiece more than they were entitled to. The figures I have given the House are the figures given to me by the officers of the department, and I am sure my hon. friend will pardon me if I say I am rather willing to accept their figures than the figures he has given, and that I ask the House to do the same.

Last year, a day or two after the hon. minister had made these statements and had practically contradicted what I said, I came across a number of returns which the hon. gentleman had himself brought down. Among them was the report of the St. Peter's Indian band, among whom Mr. Pedley distributed that $5,000 that he promised after they had voted for the surrender, and I find that when I said these Indians had received about 100 acres of land more than they were entitled to, I was entirely too modest. The return proves that they received 174 acres more than they were entitled to; and I do not see any other purpose why that land was given these Indians than to make good the money which had been promised to them for betraying the trust reposed in them by the members of their band.

I wish to put on record the facts shown by the sworn return of J. O. Lewis, Indian agent. The minister said that Chief Prince had two of a family and got 215 acres. But the records of the band show that he had only one of a family and was entitled to only 196 acres, so that he got nineteen acres more than he was entitled to. William C. Harper, the hon. minister, stated had seven of a family, and had received 233 and two-thirds acres. William Harper, according to the sworn return of the Indian agent, had only two of a family and was entitled to only 152 acres, so that he received 81⅓ acres more than he was entitled to under the terms of the treaty. The minister stated that James Williams had five of a family, and had received 206 acres. James Williams, according to the sworn return, had only four of a family and was entitled to only 184 acres, so that he received 22 acres more than he was entitled to. Councillor Henry Prince, according to the minister, had three of a family and received 172 and one-half acres. According to the sworn return of the minister's agent, Henry Prince had only one of a family and was entitled to 136 acres, so that he received 36½ acres more than he was entitled to. John Prince, according to the minister, had one of a family, and received 136 acres. According to the sworn return, John Prince had no family. The fact is, he was a very old man, He received 16 acres more than he was entitled to. So, according to the minister's statement, these men got 962 acres of land amongst them, though they were entitled, under the terms of the treaty, to only 788 acres, so that hey received, as I have stated, 174 acres more than they were entitled to. They had already got nearly twelve times as much land as the ordinary Indian for agreeing to this surrender, and in addition to that they are given 174 acres, without authority. I do not know where the minister or his officials got the authority to give this extra 174 acres. Speaking on this question last year, the minister drew my attention to the fact that these men could not receive one acre of land without the vote of the band. I believe he was right. The band never voted to give these men 174 acres. Last session the minister made the emphatic statement that I was in error in this charge, and that he would take, and would ask the House to take, the statement of his officials in preference to the statement I made. In view of this fact, and of the statement I laid before the House, which, I presume, he has verified—I placed it on 'Hansard', on a question of privilege—he owes it to himself, and he certainly owes it to me, to make some explanation of how these Indians got these lands. When he speaks, I hope he will inform the House who gave authority to his agents to give these Indians 174 acres more than they were entitled to under the terms of the treaty.

Now, I have given these as fair specimens of how the minister has justified his virulent remarks regarding my speech last session. I may be pardoned, if I say that after three and a half hours of evading the charges made by me he has left unanswered the most serious indictment ever preferred against the Indian Department of this country, and that his speech—I do not mean to be offensive—was replete with misleading and inaccurate statements that are very difficult to reconcile with a desire on his part to be fair or frank in this matter. 'Inexactitude' would be a mild word for me to use if I were to attempt to characterize the speech the hon. gentleman made in reply to my speech of last session. The minister has not adduced any evidence in rebuttal of the charges of maladministration made against his department by the Indians—the men who have suffered through this transaction—many of which charges I laid before the House last year and supported with sworn declarations. I feel that the minister has begged this question almost in every case; and he still has the temerity to stand in his place and ask the House to believe that there is nothing in the statements that I have made, nothing in the sworn indictment laid at his door by his own wards, the Indians. The statements of the minister are not elevating, and not encouraging to the country, nor do they justify his opening, well-prepared criticism which, I am sure, the hon. gentleman himself could not expect to be taken seriously either by myself or by the country. It was the old trick, a little play to the galleries in the hope of drawing the attention of the House and the country away from the serious indictment he was endeavouring, as best he could, to evade or distract. After plenty of time to investigate and consider my remarks of last session, I wish to emphasize the absolute correctness of these charges made against the Indian Department. Every charge then made regarding the treatment of the St. Peter's Indians was supported by sworn statements which have since been verified by reliable men who were on the ground and knew the facts. But, instead of meeting these serious charges fairly and frankly, the minister responsible to this House for this outrage contents himself with hurling at my head his opening criticism, and then evades as many of the charges as possible, and denies the correctness of others, but in no case adducing any evidence to substantiate his denial, or in rebuttal of the sworn declarations of his wards which he asks the House to disbelieve. Surely, the House has a right to expect the minister appointed by this government as Superintendent General, the guardian of the Indians, to rather take the side of the Indians in a matter of this kind than to take the side of the men of whom the Indians complain and whom they blame for the transaction I have tried to lay before the House. The Indians state distinctly, in language more forcible than I am permitted to use in this House, that they have been practically buncoed out of a reserve worth a million and a half dollars. I do not think it is any exaggeration to state that that reserve is worth every cent of a million and a half of money, and the Indians have not one dollar to-day to show for it. I do not know what is to their credit, but I have not the slightest doubt that it is a very small amount. The Department of Indian Affairs is wholly responsible, and must accept the responsibility, for having allowed these Indians to be practically cheated out of that valuable reserve.

Now, I felt that I could not, in justice to myself, allow the hon. gentleman's speech of last session to go uncorrected. I felt that I owed it to myself, to my friends and to the country, to point out as clearly as I could, that the hon. gentleman had failed entirely to answer the serious indictment laid at his door by the Indians through me in this House last session. Therefore, I have taken up this much of the time of the House for that purpose.

I intend now to refer to another phase of this question which I believe is the most serious part—the question of the legality of the whole transaction. Last session I stated that I believed the surrender was illegally obtained, that clause 49 of the Indian Act had been violated. That section reads:

Except as in this part otherwise provided, no release or surrender of a reserve, or a portion of a reserve, held for the use of the Indians of any band, or of any individual Indian, shall be valid or binding, unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of 21 years, at a meeting or council thereof, summoned for that purpose.

This clause is very clear and bears out my contention of last year that it means that a majority of the qualified vote of the band must be secured to legalize a surrender, and that vote must be taken at a public meeting properly called for that special purpose, and not at two or three different meetings. The minister said in reference to this:

It is true that the surrender was carried by only a small majority; the vote, I am informed, was 107 to 98. But it was a majority of the voting members of the band who were present there, and the Indian Act recognizes that a surrender agreed to by a majority of the voting members of the band is a legal surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman says that the Indian Act provides that a majority present at the meeting may dispose of the Indian reserve. Now, if that is a proper interpretation of the Act, and if there were only 20 Indians present out of 289, would the hon. gentleman say that the majority of these 20 had a right to vote away the inherited rights of all other Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand the law, they would have the legal right, but I would not consider they had the equitable right. But I do not think that under the law, when there are 205 out of 289 present, they have not only the legal but the equitable right to decide.

The minister's contention is unwarranted, unbusinesslike, unfair, and far from the spirit or even the letter of the Indian Act. The Act distinctly provides that a majority vote of the male members of the band of the full age of 21 years must be secured to legalize the surrender of a reserve or any part of it, and also provides how that majority shall be obtained. In the case of the St. Peter's Indians there were 289 qualified voters, but according to the minister's statement there were only 205 present at the meeting, and after two days' active canvass on the part of the government and the open bribery already referred to, by the government's agents, they managed to squeeze out nine of a majority or less than 38 per cent of the qualified vote of the band, which was not sufficient to make it a legal surrender under the Indian Act. I am convinced that the surrender was not legal and would not stand the test of any properly constituted court in Canada. The minister talks about the equitable right to make the surrender. Let us look for a moment at this side of the question. There were absent 84 voters, nearly one-third of the total vote who had not been notified and consequently could not have known anything about the meeting. Fully 90 per cent of the absentees were the younger men, the backbone of the band and its most intelligent members. They were the support of their respective families, men who were away working on Lake Winnipeg in the fisheries, and some in the harvest fields and some in other parts of the province. They knew nothing in regard to this meeting which was called to vote away their birthright, their inheritance. That is one reason why I contend that this was an illegal surrender. Considering these facts and the further disgraceful fact that only one day's notice was given of the calling of this important meeting, and that nearly one-third of the qualified voters were not notified, and knew nothing about the meeting until weeks after it had taken place—and I am informed by many of these young men that had they been at the meeting they would have voted against the surrender as they were not in favour of it—the action of the department was entirely unjustifiable. Although I am not a lawyer I must take issue with the minister when he makes the assertion that he considers that the Indian Act gives his department power to accept a surrender with less than a majority of the qualified vote of the band. If the hon. gentleman is correct in his interpretation of section 49, the Indians would have no protection whatever against a dishonest or crooked Indian agent who could put up just such a scheme as apparently was put up on this occasion to rob the poor Indian of his inheritance by a snap verdict in favour of the surrender which apparently had been done in this case.

After close investigation of this matter I am firmly convinced that the St. Peter's Indians have not surrendered their reserve on the Red river according to the true meaning and intent of the Act, and further that everything that has been done to move the Indians or to alienate the land has been done illegally. The whole transaction was illegally and unjust, worse to my mind, even than the deporting of the Acadians by King George's men. There was perhaps some excuse for that cruel act, but there was no excuse for the cruel act which this government has perpetrated on this band of Indians except it may be that the friends of the government required these lands and they got them.

As is well known the titles of these lands have been withheld. In Manitoba we have a Torrens system, and when application is made for the title for land, the government on issuing the title guarantees every title they issue. The purchasers of this land made application to the Registrar General of Manitoba for Torrens titles and he refused to issue certificates. I have in my hand the report of the Registrar General to his minister giving the reasons why he refused to issue certificates on those transactions. It is as follows:

Winnipeg, Nov. 3, 1910.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 26th of October last referring to lands in St. Peter's Indian reserve, and to make the following report as to my reasons for delay in issuing certificates of title therefor to purchasers from the Indians.

One difficulty met with has been in regard to surveys, or more properly speaking, in regard to the plans which have been filed showing these surveys. I have reason to believe that representations have been made that this office has condemned in toto the surveys made by the Dominion government of this reserve as being entirely below standard; but such is by no means the case.

In 1909, when first we were asked to issue titles according to recently filed plans, these plans on being examined did not appear at all satisfactory, and consequently I obtained a report on them after an inspection had been made on the ground by a surveyor employed by this office. Referring to the parish lot surveys, this report has the following statement: 'In fact, with regard to the parish survey, I see no objection to its being used as a basis for the issue of titles, provided proper plans are prepared and filed.'

Referring to the survey of the rest of the reserve, the surveyor making this report draws attention to what appears to have been an incorrect retracement on the ground of the boundaries of the reserve at the southeast corner, but approved of by far the greater portion of the work done on the ground, adding: 'Except for the points referred to, the survey of the reserve outside the parish limits appears to be satisfactory throughout; but here again plans are far from satisfactory.' Summarizing, he says: 'The plans as a whole cannot in any sense be considered as completed plans of survey, but rather as sketch plans, prepared apparently rather to show ownership than to define boundaries.' Acting on this report, I have refused to issue titles until such time as proper plans are filed of the surveys made; and in all of the several interviews on the subject which I have had with representatives of the Indian Department, or applicants for titles, I have distinctly stated that with the comparatively small exception referred to, the surveys made are in themselves satisfactory to me, but that I do ask that plans properly representing those surveys should be filed before titles issue.

After such correct plans are filed here, I may find it necessary to ask the Indian Department to call in all patents issued according to the incorrect plans, and to issue new patents according to the corrected plans. As to this, however, I cannot speak definitely until I see the new plans.

Another difficulty is that the double question has been raised before me: Firstly, of the validity of the surrender itself; and secondly, of the validity of each separate purchase from the Indians. As regards the first of these, a caveat has been filed as the foundation of a test case before the courts to try the validity of the surrender; and until that caveat and test case are disposed of, I am prohibited from dealing with any of these titles.

On the second of these questions it is alleged that the dealing with the Indians in most cases has been of such a questionable character that in itself it amounts to fraud. Were such dealings with a white man, I could dispose of the question by serving notice upon the grantor in each case, and if he did not choose to act upon the notice and contest the matter, I would be justified in considering the transaction a bona fide one and proceeding accordingly; but in the case of an Indian, I am satisfied that such service of notice would be held by the courts to be of no effect whatever, and I would be left exactly where I am now with the question of fraud unsettled. If there were only a few isolated cases, even though dealing with an Indian, I would be disposed to make such inquiry as I personally could and act upon the result of my inquiry, taking whatever chances were to be taken; but in the case of this Indian reserve there are hundreds of these cases involving property to the value of a million or more dollars. If I issued certificates of title for this land, all these titles would be guaranteed by the province, and in the event of the titles being successfully attacked on either of the grounds mentioned the province would be liable to pay the whole present value of the lands, amounting to a million or more.

Under the circumstances, I decline to assume any such responsibility.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) W. E. MACARA,
Registrar General.

It is evident that the government itself is directly responsible for the tangle that exists relating to these titles. Although four years or more have elapsed since the surrender was taken the government has not yet filed proper plans of this survey. This fact makes it absolutely impossible for the Registrar General to issue certificates of title. The government, in its desire to assist its political friends to get hold of these Indian lands, wrote the following letter, which was published broadcast and which had the effect of frightening away the general public:

Ottawa, January 21, 1908.

In connection with Indians disposing of or pledging their holdings, I beg to say that no transfer nor pledge by any Indian will be in any way recognized by the department, and when it has been determined what land each Indian is entitled to receive, a patent for the same will be issued to such Indian, without regard to any claims by white men or others.

It is necessary to make this position of the department clear and as widely known as possible, as any recognition of rights by transfer would cause endless complications, and in order to prevent same it is incumbent on the department to issue grants only to the Indians found entitled to receive same.

F. PEDLEY.

In face of this letter and nearly a year before the survey was made or patents were issued the government officials were active in assisting the speculators who were buying lands to locate them by the use of the old parish plans. It was the use of the old parish plans that was the cause of the delay on the part of the Registrar General. He dare not take the responsibility of issuing certificates on those plans. The surrender was obtained on the 24th of September, 1907, and the land speculators began buying Indian allotments a very short time after, nearly a year before any survey was made or patents issued. The government through its agents at Selkirk, was apparently so anxious to assist the men who were getting the Indians' lands that they located and described these lands from the old parish plans, which act has really caused all the delay in the issuing of the titles by the Registrar General of Manitoba. After the new survey was made it was found by the Registrar General of Manitoba that the old parish plans did not fit in with the survey. So, he refused, and quite correctly, to issue certificates until a proper plan was filed, which has not been filed up to the present time, and as he pointed out it may make necessary the recalling of all patents that had been issued. Something over 400 patents—I think I speak advisedly and the minister can correct me if I am wrong—have been issued and apparently issued on plans that were improper and consequently he would likely find that the descriptions of these separate lots would be entirely wrong. The Registrar General points out that it will likely be necessary to ask the government to recall all these patents and to make them out under a proper survey. This state of affairs was brought about, as I have said before, by the government's anxiety to get the lands away from the Indians and into the hands of a few friends.

The government through its agents assisted the land speculators at every turn to get the Indian allotments and this fully a year before the patents were issued, although Mr. Pedley the Superintendent General had written the letter I referred to, warning the general public that the Indian had nothing to sell until his patent issued. After that letter was written and after it was published broadcast and after the public were frightened to invest a dollar, being told plainly the Indian had nothing to sell until his patent issued, in face of that, the government's agents with the three or four men in whose favour this deal was apparently intended, immediately went to work and in the face of that warning began to buy up these allotments through the assistance of the government agent at Selkirk, and some of them have become rich through this deal. I state now that the government has not dealt fairly with the men who were allowed to get these lands. It persuaded these men to take these lands and helped them to get possession of them and now when the government is itself, in a hole, it leaves these men in a hole and refuses to furnish proper plans to enable the Registrar General of Manitoba to give these men the titles to the lands they purchased. No doubt the government realizes the position they are placed in, and realizes too that this whole transaction is illegal. I understand the plan has been made for that survey and has been lying in the department for months completed, and has never been forwarded to the Registrar General that he might be enabled to grant titles to these men who secured these lands. I say that the minister is responsible for this delay in the holding up of these titles to all of these lands. That is another phase of this question which demands a thorough investigation. I see no other way to settle this transaction than the appointment by the government of a royal commission to go into the whole matter. There is another very important phase of this question to be found in the report of Chief Justice Howell, which no doubt the minister knows about. In that report Chief Justice Howell points out clearly to my mind that these Indians were the absolute owners of the old parish of St. Peters regardless of their rights as Indians. Under the Manitoba Act they were the owners of these lands according to Chief Justice Howell's report, if I understand it aright. To make myself clear, I had better read a few paragraphs from that report, and if the minister has not already read it, I would like him to listen. Chief Justice Howell says:

Pursuant to the commission above mentioned, I commenced investigation of the matters therein referred to by holding a first meeting at Selkirk, on the 24th day of December, 1906, in the presence of Mr. Clark, counsel for the Indian band and Mr. Heap, appearing for various claimants.

I have never said one word about these counsels that were employed, but I would like to ask the minister what Mr. Clark did to protect or save the Indians. He was appointed by the government and paid by the government something like $1,800 to protect the rights of the Indians and there is not a word of protest from Mr. Clark that I have found in all the correspondence, against this rascally transaction. I do not understand what his duties were, but if he had any duties in the shape of protecting the Indians, I am satisfied he failed entirely to look after their interests. The Chief Justice says:

Before reporting upon the various claims for patents to portions of this reserve, I think it well to consider the environment at the time of the treaty and also to discuss some points of law.

At the time of the treaty and for a long time previously, the territory along the Red river from Winnipeg northward, was divided into parishes by the church of England, the boundaries of each of which were well defined. Reference to volume 1 of H. Youle Hind's work, published in 1860, being a report of his own observations, will show at page 173, that at that date the parishs of St. Andrews and St. Peters were adjoining, and there was then no St. Clements.

It further shows that the southerly limit of the parish of St. Peter's was south of Sugar Point, and included all of the present town of Selkirk.

The evidence given before me established that at the time of the treaty the southerly boundary of the church parish of St. Peters was in the same place.

At that date the survey by the Dominion government of the Red river belt, north of Winnipeg had not yet begun. See Vaughan's evidence. So of course, when in the treaty the following language is used, 'beginning at the south line of St. Peter's parish, the church parish, and not the Dominion survey parish of St. Peter's must have been intended.' According to the language of the treaty then, the reserve should have its place at the beginning at the south side of Sugar Point, nearly a mile further south than its present boundary and including the fine lands of the town of Selkirk and the lands to the westward and eastward thereof.'

Then, Mr. Speaker, further on, the Chief Justice points out in the following language:

It seems to me clear that the south line of St. Peter's parish referred to in a treaty of 1871, does not correspond with the south line of St. Peter's parish according to the Dominion government survey, and in this respect, the terms of the treaty were not carried out.

Another paragraph later on, Chief Justice says:

It does seem to me that the limits of the reserve were settled ex-parte by the government without the concurrence of the Indians, at all events, there was no pretense before me of any participation in the selection by the band.

The Indians claimed before me that the southern boundary of the reserve should have been at Boilleau's lot, south of Sugar Point, nearly a mile further south than as ultimately fixed.

The report further on says, at the time of the treaty, the Manitoba Act, 33 Vic., chap. 3, was in force. Section 32 gives rights to parties under the sanction of the Hudson Bay Company, which rights were extended by 37 Vic., chap. 20, section 3, and the method of providing or ascertaining these rights was facilitated by 38 Vic., chap. 52, section 1, which seems to be retroactive.

It seems to me clear that the Manitoba Act applies to Indians, half-breeds and whitemen alike, and that if an Indian proves possession and title sufficient to come within section 32 of the Act and amendments, he is entitled to a patent, notwithstanding, the purity of his aboriginal blood. See Totten v. Watson, 15 U.C.R., 392.

The treaty provides that if there are any settlers within the bounds of any lands reserved by any band, Her Majesty reserves the right to deal with such settlers as she shall deem just, so as not to diminish the extent of land allotted to the Indians. The question at once arises as to the meaning of the term settler. Does it mean a mere squatter who has come to this country and has settled on the land prior to surveys, but after the 15th of July, 1870, the date of the transfer, or does it refer to those having rights under the Manitoba Act, above referred to?

The mere setting aside of a tract of land for an Indian reserve by the treaty could not deprive any person of a statutory right to any lands which he then had on any portion of the reserve.

The various members of the band who are in possession of their separate parcels, and owners nearly all claiming titles through Peguis or Princes, were recognized in the locality as separate owners and had their rights marked out as separate lots, fronting on the river by Vaughan in his survey commenced in 1873, completed in 1874. And following the variable practice of the department of the Interior in this country, which is well known to me, if this parish of St. Peter's had not been made a part of the reserve, it seems to me that patents would have issued to the occupiers of this land as in other parishes.

It is argued, however, that because of provisions of the Indian Act, these people lost their rights. However startling it may be, there was no Indian Act in force in this province at, or for some years after the treaty. It is further argued that because the Indians made a treaty, which provides that a reserve be set aside, beginning at the south boundary of the parish, they each individually, agreed to abandon separate and private property to the government so as to establish a reserve. In other words, by the law of estoppel, these wards of the government were prevented from setting up their individual rights against their guardian.

The Indians claim, and there is a good deal of evdence to support it, that at the treaty they were told that each was to retain his private property, and holdings and were to get a reserve in addition thereto.

Another paragraph, the Chief Justice points out the following:

The Indians claim that each is entitled to a patent under the Manitoba Act of the land occupied at the transfer by themselves of their ancestors, and that, therefore, the reserve was not originally large enough to satisfy the terms of the treaty.

It will be seen that this report of Chief Justice Howell points out clearly to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs first, that the boundaries of St. Peter's parish should be a mile farther south than they are. This, he points out, would include the beautiful town of Selkirk and the magnificent lands lying east and west for two miles on each side of the river. He points out, secondly, that the St. Peter's Indians own every acre of the old parish of St. Peter's and are entitled to patents for the same, as this parish was included in the reserve by the government wrongfully in 1874, as it was the private property of this band under the Manitoba Act. Chief Justice Howell points out to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, that after depriving the Indians of their rights as settlers to this magnificent estate, he proceeds to make a bargain, not with the band, but with the chief and his four councillors for the surrender of the reserve, and in doing so placed the following clause in the agreement:

The surrender shall release lands in the present reserve from all claims of the band and from each individual thereof, from all or any claims, under the Manitoba Act, or the Indian Act, and each member of the band shall sign a release to this effect when he receives his patent.

This is a phase of the question which I have tried to emphasize, in the earlier part of my remarks, by pointing out that these Indians declared that they had never signed any receipt for their patents or any release of their rights under the Manitoba Act. The band also claim that the terms of surrender were never explained to them in their own language, and that they did not know what they were doing. We have the affidavits of William Asham and other Indians which I have quoted to this House, and which state distinctly that when Mr. Pedley came to the reserve with the agreement of surrender all prepared, without any consultation with the band whatever, he arranged the matter with the chief and his councillors, who had been bribed to agree to the surrender—that he came there and read that surrender in English, and read it so fast that even those who understood English hardly followed it or grasped its meaning. This is a serious state of affairs, and something that this parliament ought to take cognizance of, and that in the interest of everything that is fair to the Indians, ought to be thoroughly investigated. I do not see how hon. gentlemen can contend for one moment that justice has been done or that any attempt has been made to do justice by the minister who is responsible for this outrage.

Now I wish to refer for a moment to a report made by the Rev. Dr. MacDougall. I want to say frankly that I hardly consider the report worthy of mentioning in this House, as I regard it as a fiasco. The hon. minister sent the Rev. Dr. MacDougall to make a report on what he found on the St. Peter's reserve. The hon. gentleman seems very fortunate in getting hold of these clerical gentlemen to pull his chestnuts out of the fire. I will read the instructions to the Rev. Dr. MacDougall:

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 27th September, 1910.

I am directed to request that you will be good enough to proceed to the St. Peter's Indian reserve and also to the new reserve set apart for these Indians at Fisher River, and ascertain the general condition of these Indians and the progress that is being made in the removal to the new reserve. The Department would like to be advised as to the number of Indians that have removed and what steps should be taken to facilitate further movements, and how such removals can best be accomplished and at what time.

I can tell what will facilitate removal—do justice to the Indians.

The Indian agent has been instructed to hold an election of chief and councillors for these Indians but no report has been received in connection therewith. It would be well to ascertain what progress has been made in this matter, and report.

This is another of the outrages that have been perpetrated on this band of Indians. They were practically taken by the throat by the Indian agent at Selkirk, as must have been reported to the Deputy Superintendent General or to the minister. They have refused to allow this band of Indians to have an election ever since that surrender was made—why? Because they realized that as soon as an election took place the chief and council, who had betrayed the band, who had sold themselves to the government to agree to this surrender, would be put out of office, and another class of men would be put in office, who would contest this surrender at every inch of the way. For that reason these Indians have been denied the right which they have enjoyed ever since they were a band of having an election every two or three years. In any case they were entitled to an election the year after this surrender took place, but they have never been able to secure consent to have an election since, so that those men who betrayed the band and who sold themselves to secure this surrender still hold office.

Referring to this report, I would like to ask why was it necessary to choose the Rev. Dr. MacDougall to find out how many Indians had been removed from the old reserve to the new? Why, we have two Indian inspectors in Winnipeg and one in Selkirk, the Rev. John Semmens, drawing $1,200 to $1,500 each per year, and one or two others drawing the same salaries. The Indian agent in Selkirk could have got that information, but the minister sent out the Rev. Dr. MacDougall to make an investigation. Dr. MacDougall went out first to the new reserve and held a meeting there. Every statement which I made last session was repeated to him in St. Peter's Indian Reserve by the Indians themselves. After holding the meeting in the new reserve, he ascertained that only 162 Indians out of 1,300 had been moved from the old reserve to the new, after an expenditure of $30,000 or $40,000 for legal expenses and building houses and moving those 162 people. In other words there were over 1,100 people yet in possession of the lands on the old reserve which had been wrongfully taken from them. But when Dr. MacDougall came back to Selkirk to the old reserve, I must give him credit for one thing. He acted fairly in calling a meeting. He did not do as the Deputy Superintendent General had done. He did not spring a trap on the Indians by giving them only 24 hours to come and vote away their birthright. He gave 10 days' notice that he was going to hold a meeting, and he held not one but two meetings. The first lasted over three hours. The Indians asked me to attend but I refused to go simply because I wanted to give Dr. MacDougall a fair chance. I met him and talked the matter over with him; and I said to him that I would not go to the meeting because I had every faith that he would give a fair and honest report of what took place. I did not go near the meeting, but two reporters from Winnipeg attended and made a full report of what took place. That report is in this House at present and will speak for itself. I am not going to read it, but I have a letter here from one of the Indians, Mr. William Asham. I have said before in this House, and my statement was ridiculed, that Mr. Asham is one of the most intelligent and eloquent Indians in Canada, and I do not believe that I exaggerated in making that statement. Mr. Asham knows what he is talking about, and he addressed this letter to myself:

St. Peter's, January 14, 1911.

Geo. H. Bradbury, M.P.

Dear Sir,—In the matter of Rev. John MacDougall visiting St. Peter's reserve last fall, held a public meeting with the Band of St. Peter's Indians, said that he was sent to hear the grievances in general, as well personal grievances, if there were any. Amongst other things, the following were the grievances that were laid before him:

1st. Rev. John Semmens, Inspector of Indian Agencies, was accused of saying in Cree language, just at the time when the vote was to be taken for the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve, 'Those of you that want $90 (ninety dollars) go that side,' indicating to where the chief and councillors stood. This matter was proved by the meeting before Mr. John MacDougall that such words were used by Mr. Semmens. Of course, without doubt, these words were misleading.

2nd. That a big percentage of the treaty Indians never applied for their patents, nevertheless the patents were issued, but the owners of same never saw them. Rev. John MacDougall, to satisfy himself, put the following question to the meeting, 'If there are any that never saw their patents let them stand up.' Although the attendance was rather small, quite a number stood up. This matter was also proved before Mr. MacDougall that it was really the fact of the case.

3rd. The curtailment of the privilege that the Indians of St. Peter's enjoyed for many years prior to the time of the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve. The Indians were allowed to have an election of chief and councillors every three years, being the term allowed by law (Indian Act). The present so-called chief and councillors are not recognized by the band of treaty Indians as chief and councillors, knowing that their term of office expired on the 4th day of July, 1908. The Indians of St. Peter's are fully aware if the election of chief and councillors had been granted when it came due, considerable trouble would have been avoided. This matter was also proved to Rev. John MacDougall.

4th. There were also a few personal grievances that were laid before him. There was a certain woman that laid her complaint. The following was to the nature of same. That her husband was blind, and it was only her that could do anything for the family. When the patent came she went to the Indian Office at Selkirk and asked for the patent. One of the so-called councillors defied her by saying, be damned to get your patent. At the time she didn't get the patent. She also went on to explain how she was roughly handled by the Indian agent.

Many more things could be added, but we think this will be quite sufficient and worthy for consideration.

We are indeed surprised to read an account of the report of Rev. John MacDougall, why not a word is said of the grievances that were laid before him. We can now understand, unless a proper commission is appointed, the truth will never be known.

Your Obdt. Svts,

WILLIAM ASHAM,
WM. SINCLAIR, his
mark.

I hardly know how to characterize a report of that kind coming from a man like the Rev. John MacDougall. I cannot believe that he edited that report of his own volition, but am inclined to give credence to a statement made in one of the papers that when he came to Ottawa the Indian Department claimed the right to edit his report before it was laid on the table. I have no doubt that Mr. MacDougall gave a full and fair account of what he found in that reserve, but that account we do not find in the document I hold in my hand and which purports to be the report of the Rev. John MacDougall. Mr. MacDougall heard from the men who had sent their allegations and affidavits down here what their grievances were. He told me himself, when taking the train in the town of Selkirk where I met him, that there could be no doubt that the Indians had been the victims of the white man's cupidity. I appeal to the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver), who is responsible, to remember that at one time this band of Indians was strong and mighty in the land, and they did not mete out the kind of justice to their white brethern that we are meting out to them to-day in this House.

Now, I would like to say a word or two regarding this band of Indians. They are the descendants of the band who were the first to offer the right hand of fellowship to Lord Selkirk's hardy settlers who landed in the Red River district in 1812, and were allotted land at Kildonan. The property of the settlers and their animals were safeguarded by these Indians. The word of Chief Pegeus and of Prince was the law all over that country, and the rights of the settlers were protected by this very band that have been treated in the manner I have shown by this government. During the first Riel rebellion, where do we find these men? Every one of them loyal to the flag. When Riel had Dr. Schultz a prisoner under sentence of death, this band sent word to Riel to release Schultz or they would attack the fort. Schultz was released, but was taken again a few days later, after Riel had been reinforced by French halfbreeds. But Schultz made his escape, and was kept in hiding among these Indians until he could get out of the country, which he did by the assistance of Joseph Monkman, a grand old native of the country. Later, when good men were needed by Great Britain on the Nile for the expedition sent for the relief of Gordon, among the best of the rivermen sent out from Canada were to be found twelve or fifteen of the St. Peter's band. And, later still, during the last Riel rebellion, some of the best scouts the government had were St. Peter's Indians. This band was loyal at all times, although tempted by those who were leading the rebellion against the Canadian government. These are the men who have been practically thrown to the wolves by this government; these are the men who have been deprived of their inheritance, and upon whom this government has allowed its officials to perpetrate what I believe to be one of the most rascally transactions ever perpetrated in this country in connection with the Indian Department. This transaction reeks with dishonesty to my mind, and I think that if the minister did not think so too we should have had a fuller investigation long ago. But he seems to be afraid to touch this question—afraid to let in the light. Surely it is the duty of the Superintendent General, as guardian of the Indians, to protect these men, to protect them even from themselves if necessary, and especially protect them from the public, and to take their side in such questions as this. I should not be required to stand in this House, and contend for the Indians; that is the duty of the hon. gentleman who is the guardian of the Indians. This matter has been brought before him in as forcible a manner as I am capable of doing. I am sure he has had plenty of opportunity to take the right course. I could tell the hon. gentleman of letters he has received from his old political friends, strong men, men occupying prominent positions in the city of Winnipeg who have verified a good deal of what I have told him to-day. So this is not a political matter with me. There is no politics in this; it is a matter of justice to the poor unfortunate Indians, men whom we ought to protect.

An hon. MEMBER. They have no votes.

Mr. BRADBURY. No, they have no votes. I contend that this treatment of the St. Peter's Indians is a blot upon the escutcheon of Canada. Up to the time this government came into power, it was the proud boast of Canadians every where that we had treated our Indians well, and that our Indians were satisfied. But now the cry goes up from this band for British justice. These men tell me in private conversation, 'This is not what we expected from Great Britain.' Many of these men do not realize the difference between Great Britain and this government. But there is a difference, thank Heaven! They appeal to-night for British fairplay, and that is all I am asking. I ask that this royal commission shall be granted. I have tried to be fair, I have tried to discharge my duty as the representative of the part of the country in which this transaction has taken place; and I now urge the government to grant this royal commission.

I move, in amendment:

It is the duty of the government forthwith to appoint a Royal Commission for the purpose of making a prompt, thorough and complete investigation in the negotiations which resulted in the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve, and into the said surrender and all circumstances connected therewith, and into the price or other consideration received by the Indians for lands allotted to them under the terms of the said surrender, and into the price or consideration received by the government for lands included in such surrender and afterwards disposed of by public auction, and into the locating of the said Indians on other lands and generally speaking into all matters and transactions in any way connected therewith or relating to the said surrender and everything leading up thereto and resulting therefrom.

And that counsel selected by the said Indians should be permitted to appear for and represent them before the said Royal Commission throughout the said investigation, and that the fees, charges, and any expenses of the said counsel should be paid by the government.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure it would not be the wish of the House to deprive my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) of his privilege of an annual speech on the St. Peter's Indian reserve. Still, it must have been with some disappointment——

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It ought to be made monthly.

Mr. OLIVER. The House has become very tired of it yearly, and it would be much more weary if it were made monthly. I say, it must have been with great disappointment that the House heard to-day that the expectation it had cherished for some time that the fact of my hon. friend having already had his speech published in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' was not going to relieve it of being burdened with that speech on this occasion.

Mr. BRADBURY. I did not want to deprive the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) of the opportunity of hearing it.

Mr. NESBITT. He published your speech too.

Mr. OLIVER. He was good enough to read my speech, or part of it, along with his own. I wish he had read more of it; for, I must say the more frequently he gives the House the benefit of the few remarks I was able to preface my speech with on that occasion, the more convinced I am of their aptness and appropriateness.

I am very sorry, and I am sure many members of this House are very sorry, that my hon. friend sees fit to recur to this matter in the altogether unfair and uncalled for manner in which he does. The problem of dealing with Indians and Indian lands in Canada is a very important one touching closely a very large number of important communities in the country. The government has to meet many difficulties in handling these matters, and when we are met by such absolutely unwarranted misrepresentation of facts and circumstances and motives as my hon. friend produced in this discussion the tendency is to prevent, so far as my hon. friend can prevent, the proper dealing with those cases.

Mr. BRADBURY. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to accuse me of misrepresentation; he has not demonstrated any misrepresentation.

An hon. MEMBER. Wilful misrepresentation.

Mr. OLIVER. I said unwarranted misrepresentation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the word misrepresentation is parliamentary. I suppose wilful misrepresentation would be unparliamentary.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say wilful, I said unwarranted misrepresentation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that is unparliamentary.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope to keep within the rules of parliament, but I must admit that in making adequate reply to my hon. friend it is exceedingly difficult.

Mr. FOSTER. You must have meant more than that.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is at liberty to give his own interpretation. I was trying to say that there are many important communities in Canada whose progress is seriously interfered with by the contiguity of Indian reserves while at the same time the advantage of the Indians is just as seriously interfered with by the situation of their reserves. The government are anxious to meet the wishes of the progressive people of the country and at the same time to protect the rights and interests of the Indians, but when a responsible member of parliament will, year after year, use his position as a member of this House for the purpose of making difficult a proper and satisfactory readjustment of such conditions, may I be permitted to say that he is not acting in accordance with the duties of the position which he occupies or the responsibility which he is expected to discharge to the people of this country in his capacity as a representative. I would think, with all due deference, that a member of this House could find some other occupation than to make difficult the proper and satisfactory adjustment of such a delicate and vexed question. I expect within a very short time to have to bring before the House a Bill to sanction a transaction for the surrender of an Indian reserve that is absolutely and altogether outside of the terms of the Indian Act, but the circumstances are such as to make it desirable, both in the interests of the Indians and of the white people concerned, that such action should be taken. But my hon. friend if we were to pay the attention to his views that he seems to think he is warranted in expecting, would prevent us from dealing with that case or other like cases.

My hon. friend demands the sympathy of the House for this particular band of Indians on account of the action that was taken by the government. He may appeal to the people of his constituency, to the people of the town of Selkirk, to the clergymen who minister to those Indians, to the Chief Justice of Manitoba, who negotiated the terms of surrender, to all the parties interested and concerned in this matter, and I am safe in saying he will not find one who will not say that the best interests of that band of Indians have been conserved by the transaction that was entered into and which he criticised so severely. How is it to the interests of the town of Selkirk, we will say, that an area of land adjoining that town, containing 80 square miles,—my hon. friend said 80 miles square, which is as near the fact as he generally gets—should be held from effective cultivation and development by the occupation of a band of so-called Indians? And how is it to the interests of the Indians that these men who, before the town of Selkirk was there, at the time to which he has alluded so effectively, were there, not as Indians, but as halfbreed settlers in the Red River valley, holding their rights in severalty, and discharging their duties as citizens of the country at that time. Those men who were in that position thirty years ago are to-day admittedly degenerates to a very large degree because of their continued residence under conditions which are not suitable to their better development. My hon. friend is the enemy of the Indians of St. Peter's when he insists that they shall retain their location under conditions which have caused their degeneration from a responsible and respectable body of citizens of Canada to the conditions which he himself pictures to the House, that they are absolutely irresponsible and unable to transact their own business in the smallest degree.

Mr. BRADBURY. I shall not allow the hon. gentleman to put words in my mouth which I did not utter. I did not state that I wanted the Indians to retain those lands. What I contend for, is that you have done an injustice to the Indians, that you have allowed them to be robbed of the valuable lands belonging to them, when your duty, as guardians was to take care of them.

Mr. OLIVER. I understood my hon. friend to insist that the people were being robbed of their lands.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. Because the lands were being sold?

Mr. BRADBURY. Because they were not being sold, they were just being taken from the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is very uneasy. I would like him to permit me to make my remarks. I did not interfere with him and certainly I think I had as much cause to protest as to the inaccuracy of the statements that he made as he has to protest against the inferences that I desire to draw. The Indians, he says, are being robbed. These Indians, in exchange for this reserve which they occupied to their own detriment a reserve of 48,000, are receiving a reserve of something like 74,000 acres of as good, or better land and very much better suited to meet their requirements, moral, social and material, than the St. Peter's reserve. Besides that they have got the full market price of their reserve at the time the reserve was sold. It is true that the land has appreciated in value since that time. So have town lots in Winnipeg, so have town lots in every city in the west, so have farm lands, but when my hon. friend suggests that because this land would only bring $5 or $5.50 an acre at auction four years ago and it was worth $20 or $25 an acre now, that therefore the Indians were robbed, he is trespassing upon the intelligence of the House, and he is not warranted in making such a suggestion. The Indians agreed to the disposition of their land at a certain time under certain conditions, those conditions were fulfilled, the Indians received the price for their land, they received a new reserve in exchange and I submit that the hon. gentleman is absolutely misrepresenting the facts when he uses the word 'robbery' in that connection.

My hon. friend laid some stress upon the conditions surrounding the surrender; that is that sufficient notice was not given of the vote that was to take place. My hon. friend knows—he knew when he said that to the House—that the question of surrender by the Indians on this reserve was under consideration by them for weeks and months before that time and that the matter was canvassed individually and collectively and the terms set practically before the meeting was held at all. Now, he knew that when he tried to make this House believe that the Indians had only one day's notice of this meeting.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but if he insists on making statements that are absolutely incorrect I have to set him right. I did not know that, and the hon. gentleman did not know it because it never took place.

Mr. OLIVER. Well then it is a question of fact between the hon. gentleman and myself, and I will put it to the House in this way: He knows, as I know, and he knew then, as I knew then, that Mr. Justice Howell was commissioned to negotiate with these Indians for the surrender of their reserve. He knew then, as I knew then, and he knows now, as I know now, that Mr. Justice Howell had carried on these negotiations for weeks and months before this surrender took place.

Mr. BRADBURY. Will the minister tell me who with?

Mr. OLIVER. With these very Indians.

Mr. BRADBURY. With the chiefs and council who were purchased to betray the band.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend admits that these negotations have been going on for that length of time. As to the allegation of bribery of the chiefs, there was a man named, I do not know what, who presented a bill to the department and the bill was not paid, but my hon. friend undertakes to make the House believe that the land that the chiefs got in some way or other paid this man's bill. Whether the chief got much land or little land, whether they got what was coming to them or got more or less according to the vote of the band, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that they got that land and that if they were like any other Indians I know of in the world they kept the land or they kept the price of it, and they certainly did not give it to this gentleman whom my hon. friend suggests received his money back in that way. The hon. gentleman is suggesting something that is utterly absurd as everybody in the House knows, and he speaks of this as an instance of bribery just as he speaks about the giving to the Indians of a reserve one and a half times as great as the one they had abandoned, besides the price of the one they had abandoned, as robbery of the Indians.

I do not know that it is worth while to consider the repetition that he gave of the allegation made last year in regard to Mr. Semmens or in regard to what Mr. Pedley said at the meeting. He is not prepared to accept Mr. Pedley's word and he is not prepared to accept Mr. Semmens' word.

Mr. BRADBURY. The minister has never denied that fact to the House, Mr. Pedley has never denied it, and there is no denial because Mr. Pedley wrote it in his own letters.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to what Mr. Pedley said to the Indians, when Mr. Pedley is alleged to have said: I have $5,000 in my valise; if you vote 'yea' you will get it, and if you do not vote 'yea' you will not get it, this is what Mr. Semmens says on oath:

Province of Ontario, county of York, to wit.

I, John Semmens, of the city of Winnipeg, province of Manitoba, inspector of Indian agencies, make oath and say:

1. That I have read the speech of Mr. Bradbury, member of parliament for Selkirk, Manitoba, delivered in the House of Commons on the 30th day of April, 1910, with reference to the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve, and with particular reference to the statements alleged to have been made by the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, as contained on page 7191 of the House of Commons Debates.

2. That I was present during the whole of the meeting referred to and heard what was said by the Deputy Superintendent General with respect to the proposed surrender, and in answer to the various questions by the Indians.

3. That the following statement which the hon. member said he was informed was made by the Deputy Superintendent General, namely, 'I have $5,000 here in my satchel; if you vote for this surrender to-night I will distribute this $5,000 amongst you; if you do not vote for this surrender, I will take my bag and go home, and you won't get a cent,' was not made by the Deputy Superintendent General as quoted, but as explained in paragraph five hereof.

4. That the document containing the terms of the surrender was read and interpreted to the Indians at the meeting referred to, and the whole matter was discussed and explained, the Indians taking great interest in the proceedings.

5. That during the discussion of the following cl[illegible] the department shall advance at the time of the surrender the sum of $5,000, to be repaid out of the first moneys received from the sale of the lands,' some one asked if the $5,000 would be distributed among the Indians if they did not surrender, and he was informed by the Deputy Superintendent General that this could not be done, as under the law the $5,000 would be paid only on surrender being given and in accordance with the terms mentioned in the surrender. The Deputy Superintendent General further explained that the law allowed the advance to be made at the time of surrender, and that whatever money was so advanced would be charged against the funds of the band.

(Sgd.) JOHN SEMMENS.

Sworn before me at the city of Toronto, in the county of York, this 17th day of January, 1911.—R. J. Gibson, a commissioner in H.C.J.

My hon. friend has the evidence on that point at any rate, and he will recall, I think, that the statement that Mr. Semmens said to the Indians: Those who want $90 go to one side and those who do not want it, go to the other side, was denied in this House last year, and if it was not denied then I, on the authority of Mr. Semmens, take the fullest responsibility for absolutely denying it now.

My hon. friend is anxious to have an investigation. An investigation of what? The facts are all here. The reserve has been sold, the purchasers' names are on the table of the House, the price paid is in the hands of the House, the Indians are receiving their money as it is paid in. What, I ask you, is there to investigate?—nothing except the unfounded allegations that my hon. friend has made, in support of which he has not been able to bring a scrap of evidence even at the third attempt before this House. When the sales by the individual Indians were made there was a question as to whether they were receiving payment or not. The law clerk of the Indian Department was sent to Winnipeg and he took up on behalf of these Indians the question of the sale and saw that the terms of the sale were carried out in each individual case.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the law clerk?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Williams, and the papers and particulars of all these cases have been laid on the table of the House.

Mr. BRADBURY. Where did Mr. Williams get his information? Was it not from the books of the men who got these lands and not from the men who sold them? He says himself that he saw the books of so and so, and so and so.

Mr. OLIVER. Why would he not see the book of so and so, and he saw the Indians as well.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Indians do not verify that.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend knows differently, why under Heaven has he not informed the House? Why has he not given us the benefit of the knowledge he has if he has such knowledge? He certainly has occupied enough time, and although time has been occupied the alleged facts have not been brought forward. I notice that my hon. friend questions the legality of the form of taking the surrender. I am not learned in the law any more than he is, and I do not know whether we were right in the form in which we took that surrender or not. I do not know whether we ought to have a majority of the whole of the members of the band or only a majority of those who were present and voted; but I do know that all the surrenders that the Indian Department are taking now or have ever taken have all been taken on the same principle, and I assume, therefore, that it has legal sanction, and, in all this succession of Ministers of Justice of Canada since we have been handling Indian affairs it was not left for my hon. friend—with his, may I suggest, perhaps somewhat limited knowledge of law—to find that they were all wrong and that he is the only man possibly right.

Mr. BRADBURY. Was the Department of Justice ever consulted as to the legality of this?

Mr. OLIVER. I assume so. I cannot imagine that such an important question as the validity of title to millions of dollars worth of land which would depend upon the validity of surrender would have been in doubt for all these years until my hon. friend made his marvellous discovery. I think we are safe in believing that the title of the land is secure so far as that feature of the case is concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister does not know really whether the Justice Department was consulted or not?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not. I do not know in regard to this particular transaction. Then, my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) was worried a great deal about the fact that the purchasers of these lands were not able to get Torrens titles, and part of the blame was laid upon the Indian Department for having furnished an incorrect plan. There is a difficulty about the plan and the difficulty is this: that the original survey did not accord absolutely with the original plan that was filed. When our surveyor made his survey he made a plan that did accord with the survey upon the ground. There was a conflict between the two plans and there was some difficulty about the registration on that account, but I understand that the difficulty—it was a mechanical difficulty so to speak—has been gotten over.

Mr. BRADBURY. If the hon. gentleman says that the plan was made for the new survey and filed with the Registrar General of Manitoba, he is incorrect.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, possibly he is incorrect, but I do know that the survey was made, and I do know that a plan was made which was in accordance with that survey, and I do know that that plan did not accord with the old original plan already filed, and I am credibly informed that the old original plan was not in accord with the actual survey on the ground. That was the mechanical difficulty that occurred and for which certainly this government was not responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister remember when the last survey was made?

Mr. OLIVER. It was made in connection with this transaction, I think, in 1907; the old survey was made in 1873. As to the attitude of the registrar of titles in Manitoba I have nothing to say. It is none of the business of the Department of Indian Affairs what the registrar of titles for Manitoba may see to be his duty in the matter of either granting or refusing these titles. That is a matter for the purchasers who are citizens of Manitoba to settle with the government of Manitoba. We have made a survey, and we have granted a title which enables the purchaser to transfer his rights. It is for those purchasers who desire to have their property placed under the Torrens title, to settle it with the Manitoba government; we have no responsibility for or interest in it. I do not think it is to the point that I should detain the House by going at any great length into this matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) has repeated, and repeated, and repeated, and I do not think he has given us any new material to-day that I recall beyond the statement of the Manitoba registrar; and his peroration. But I notice that he shifts his ground a little. Last year he was very strong on the point that these Indians should not have been given title in severalty for a portion of the reserve, but to-day he works himself into an agony almost because they have not been given titles to the whole of their reserve. He read what Chief Justice Howell had to say on that point. These people possibly had rights as individuals besides their rights as Indians, and the effort of Chief Justice Howell in making the transaction was to wipe out both their individual right and their Indian right in the one transfer, and hence the granting to them of a portion of the land in severalty, and hence the ground of the complaint that my hon. friend urged last year so strongly as to the morality of the transaction and as to its legality. This year he finds his strongest argument against the surrender of the land as Indian land, in the fact, as he asserts, that it was really half breed land and not Indian land at all.

I will not follow my hon. friend in his flights of oratory as to the merits of these people and as to their various achievements. I have already said that it is a matter of historic record that they were better men 40 years ago than they are to-day; that they have lost and not gained by their close association with civilization; that it is absolutely in their interest that they should be removed to another locality more suited to their mode of life, and where the temptations of civilization will not be constantly before them; that the conditions and terms upon which this arrangement was made have been absolutely according to law and according to precedent, except in its extraordinary liberality, and in the fact that it extinguished the half-breed rights as well as the Indian rights. The people of the town of Selkirk and the people of my hon. friend's constituency are beyond any question largely benefited by the arrangement which has been made, and by its being carried into effect. The Department of Indian Affairs, in this transaction, from beginning to end, has not had anything to conceal nor to apologize for. All information has been placed at the disposal of the Honse and of my hon. friend. We have asked on previous occasions, and we ask again, for the support of the House to this transaction on its merits as an act of sound public policy in the interest of the Indians of St. Peter's, and of the white people of Selkirk, and as the carrying out of a principle which is for the good of the Indians and the white people all over the Dominion of Canada.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). I venture to believe, Mr. Speaker, that an intelligent and unprejudiced jury, listening to the hon. minister, would convict him on his own statement, because his manner and words, as he followed my hon. friend from Selkirk, (Mr. Bradbury) bore all the earmarks of guilt. The evidence adduced by my hon. friend from Selkirk this evening, was brought to the attention of this House a year ago, and a portion of it, if I remember right, two years ago. No attempt was made a year ago to contradict that evidence and none has been made to-night. Let us see what a portion of that evidence is. The affidavit of William Asham will be found in 'Hansard' of last year at page 7055, a very lengthy affidavit, and I shall quote a portion of it. Speaking of the meeting to consider the advisability on the part of the Indians of surrendering St. Peter's reserve, Mr. Asham said:

> The meeting was held in an old schoolhouse on the reserve, too small to hold more than half of those present. Those present representing the government were Chief Justice Howell, Frank Pedley, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, S. J. Jackson, M.P., E. Raynor of Selkirk, John Semmens, Inspector of Indian agencies, J. O. Lewis, Indian angent, and Dr. Grain.
> When the meeting was called to order, Frank Pedley was selected to take the chair, and I was called in from the outside and requested by one of the gentlemen to act as interpreter. This I declined to do, stating that I wanted a free hand, but William H. Prince, one of the councillors, acted as interpreter, and interpreted parts of the proceedings.
> As soon as Mr. Pedley took the chair, I immediately stepped forward and asked if this was a public meeting. The chairman said, certainly. Then I said it was free for every one to express his opinion on the subject before the meeting, and Mr. Pedley replied, certainly. Mr. Pedley started to explain the conditions of the surrender, informing the meeting that he was sent there by the government to arrange for the surrender of the reserve. Mr. Pedley explained to the meeting what the government was willing to do if we would agree to surrender the reserve. One proposition he made was that the chief would receive 180 acres of land, and each councillor 120, and each Indian would receive only 16 acres of land. I immediately demanded the reason why the chief and council should receive more land than the ordinary Indian. Mr. Pedley replied that they were getting the extra land for their recognition. I then stated the only recognition they had was the coat they wore and the extra money they receive annually. I also stated that they were not entitled to one acre more land than the ordinary Indian would receive, but as the agreement of surrender was already prepared there was no change made at the time.
> I further declare that at least two-thirds of the Indians present did not understand the conditions as stated by Mr. Pedley. I, understanding the English language, did most of the talking against the surrender of the reserve, and after talking several hours back and forward, I demanded that a vote be taken. At this time there was no question that a large majority of the band that were present were against the surrender, and expressed themselves loudly at times to this effect. Mr. Pedley and the council and others interested refused to allow the vote to be taken that night and the meeting was adjourned until ten o'clock the next day at the same place.

At ten o'clock next morning the meeting was again opened by the same parties representing the government present. I was surprised to find that some of those who had supported me strongly against the surrender the day before had been changed during the night. What caused the change, God only knows, I don't. But after a great deal of talk we adjourned to have lunch. I was invited by W. D. Harper, councillor, to have lunch with him at his house. After lunch, sitting in the room with others, Harper slipped a piece of paper into my hand with the following words written in lead pencil by himself to this effect: 'What would you think if you were to be made equal to a councillor,' meaning, of course, that I would get as much land as a councillor if I would agree to the surrender. I stated that I could not possibly agree. Before going into lunch, James Williams, councillor, came up and giving me a nudge whispered, 'Go and see Chief Justice Howell.' I replied, 'No, I would not go near him.' After coming out of Harper's house somebody approached me and told me that Mr. Jackson the member wanted to see me, and I said I did not want to see him, but after a while Mr. Jackson edged his way into the crowd where I was standing and pulling my coat indicating that he wanted me to step out of the crowd. I did so with him, then he said to me: Mr. Asham, you are strongly opposed to the surrender. I said, yes. Then he said, what would you think if we were to make you equal with the council, and stated I will promise you to obtain a patent for the land in about six weeks. To this I replied that I could not possibly agree. I declare that if I had agreed I would have felt that I would be accepting a bribe to desert my friends who were protesting against the surrender.

Now, soon after this, we were in the heat of a hot discussion in the matter regarding the surrender. Mr. Pedley during his speech at this time said I have $5,000 here, pointing to a satchel at his side. If you agree to this surrender this money will be distributed among you, but if you don't agree to the surrender, I will take my satchel and go home and you won't get a cent. Then we were told the time had come to take a vote. Up to this time fully half of the band present had not been able to get into the building, and did not hear what had taken place. The building being too small to take the vote in, we were asked to go outside. Then Mr. John Semmens, the inspector of Indian agencies, spoke loudly in Cree, saying, 'All you that want $90 go to this side, indicating where the chief and council were standing, 'the others go to the opposite side.' The crowd separated under great excitement, a great many not knowing what they were doing. After they were separated, some of them moving from one side to the other, not knowing what they were doing. Mr. Semmens and myself started to count the votes that were against, but when we got through counting we turned round to count the other side. I was told then that the other side was counted. I did not know who counted the other side, and they claimed they had a majority of seven. I was astonished to hear this, and sized up the two sides and satisfied myself that there were a larger number standing on my side than there was with the chief and council, but I had no opportunity whatever of counting the number that stood with the chief and council. I protested to Mr. Semmens, saying to him that he should not have said that you who want $90 go on one side, but you should have said you that want to surrender the reserve go to one side, and you that don't want to surrender the reserve go to the other side, then the people would have understood what they were voting for.

I declare that I consider the vote irregular and improper as it was not stated fairly to the people, nor was it fairly counted as it was counted by different parties. When Mr. Pedley read the surrender that he had with him prepared he read it in English, and fast, that even I, who understood English, found it difficult to understand the terms of the surrender. This was not interpreted to the band in their own language, consequently very few, if any, understood the conditions of the surrender. I am satisfied that Mr. Pedley and the others came determined to secure the surrender. The surrender was all prepared without any consultation with the band, and they brought the $5,000 with them. Without this money on the ground I am satisfied they never could have secured the support they did in favour of the surrender. Immediately after the vote was taken, the treaty was signed, and they commenced paying the money out.

Now, I want to read a sentence from the original affidavit, made by the same man, Asham:

I am a member of the St. Peter's band of Indians. The notices calling a meeting at which the votes surrendering the reserve were taken, were not posted, nor did the Indians know anything about such a meeting until Sunday, the 22nd of September, 1907, just one day prior to the date of such meeting.

Now, these affidavits were brought to the attention of the House a year ago. I think they were brought to the attention of the House two years ago also, but I am not quite sure. The minister has known for two months that this matter was coming up again. Now, the men who know best whether the statements of Asham and others are true or not are Chief Justice Howell and Frank Pedley. Frank Pedley has been in this city, I believe, for the last year. He was in the gallery while this matter was discussed a year ago, and heard these affidavits read. These affidavits have been looking the minister and Frank Pedley in the face for the last twelve months. I think it fair to assume that if either Chief Justice Howell or Frank Pedley were in a position to deny any statement made in these affidavits, we would have had their denial here. We have had no such denial. So, I think we may fairly assume that the statements set forth in these affidavits are absolutely true and reliable. If they be true, and considering the character of Indians—their incapacity, simplicity and improvidence—I think we may fairly assume that when Frank Pedley said to these Indians: There is $5,000 in my satchel; if you will agree to the surrender of this reserve I will distribute it amongst you—that was, in substance and in fact, a bribe to these Indians. And, in bringing on that meeting at one day's notice and conducting it as the evidence shows that meeting to have been conducted, I submit, this government, instead of protecting the Indians, as, under their oath of office they were bound to do, were conniving at the plundering of these Indians. Now, the minister did offer one little reason for desiring to remove these Indians from St. Peter's reserve. He told us a year ago, if I remember aright, that there was no demand or request from the council of the town of Selkirk, from any clergyman in Selkirk or any citizen of Selkirk, or from any one at all except the defeated candidate Mr. Jackson, that these Indians should be removed. It was not, therefore, a case of the white people finding fault with the Indians being in their neighbourhood. No request whatever was made, according to the minister's statement last winter, that these Indians should be removed except that of Mr. Jackson. We have the minister to-day, with a good deal of warmth giving us a reason why these Indians should be removed, that they were degenerating, deteriorating morally; that they were worse than they had been forty years before. Well, I have looked into the reports of some of the inspectors of Indian agencies, and, with your permission, I will read some extracts from some of these reports. I have here the reports made by the late Ebenezer McCall to the government, dated 31st July, 1900. Mr. McCall was appointed to this position by the Liberal government. He says, amongst other things:

> There seems to be a growing tendency among the Indians to attend divine service. Their interest in such matters was quite evident to me at St. Peter's.

That is where this band resided.

> During the time we were there paying annuities, when religious services were held every evening in the adjoining chapel. These services, I noticed, were all well attended, and were attentively and respectfully listened to. It is almost a quarter of a century since I first visited these reserves, and in that time I have seen some marked changes. Twenty-five years ago St. Peter's was nothing but a string of huts and tepees, scattered along the banks of the Red river. The people were living upon fish, and spent their time hunting and trapping small game. Their most pretentious vehicle was the Red river cart, whose creaking could be heard for miles crossing the silent prairie. To-day there are very few, if any, thatch-roofed houses. The buildings are shingled, well fenced, surrounded by gardens, with stables and storehouses adjoining. Twenty-five years ago the small house had but one room, in which all lived and slept, regardless of relationship. Now, the houses are divided into compartments. There has been an almost incredible advance made along the line of moral reform.

Although the minister tells us they had been degenerating morally for the last forty years.

> Nearly all are united by our ceremony of marriage. I had not a single case of drunkenness while on my rounds. The fact that there is so little drunkenness among them generally, speaks well for the Indians.

Now, I have reports from several other inspectors along the same line, showing the rapid progress made by these Indians. The latest I have is that of Indian Agent J. O. Lewis, dated August 1, 1906. Speaking of these Indians, he says, amongst other things:

> The St. Peter's Indians, as a class, are good labourers and expert with the ordinary implements of industry, handy men on boats and steamers. Last year one held the position of master on a large steamer, and another on a smaller steamer, while many hold subordinate positions. But whatever their success may be as wage-earners, frugality is characteristic of a few. . . . .Out of a population of about 1,300, there are not many drunkards, and the band may be said to be temperate.

These are some testimonials from officers of this government, appointed by this government, testimonials as late as 1906, showing that these Indians on the St. Peter's reserve were making rapid progress morally, instead of degenerating morally as the minister would have us believe.

Now, the facts as established by affidavits filed by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) show that St. Peter's reserve is a strip of land on either side of the Red river and somewhere about twenty-five miles from Winnipeg, extending up to the boundaries of the town of Selkirk. These inspectors tell us that it is all first-class land. This same man Jackson, Liberal member at one time, says in his report dated September 28, 1903, speaking of the land:

> It is all first-class land; rich, black soil of great depth.

A strip four miles wide on either side of the Red river within 25 miles of Winnipeg, a trolley car running five and six times a day from Winnipeg to Selkirk adjoining this reserve, a steam railway on either side of the river with trains two or three times a day, land the best in Manitoba—what was it worth in the year 1907? Was it worth $25 an acre? It could not be bought to-day for $50 an acre. About 40,000 acres of it dissipated, 21,000 of it given to these Indians, 15,000 acres of it sold; the Indians have sold the land for what they got patents, most of it at $5 an acre, some at $2 an acre. The government sold 15,000 acres at about $5 an acre, and when the costs of dissipating this reserve is paid very little if any money will be left to put into the treasury of the Indian fund. This parliament, recognizing the inability, incapacity, simplicity and improvidence of the Indians has constituted them wards of this government, making this government guardians of the Indians. It is the duty of a guardian to deal with the property of his ward just as a prudent and far sighted individual would deal with his own private business, but with even greater restraint. That is not a hard proposition in which to put a guardian, to say that he shall deal with the property of his ward as a prudent and far sighted individual would deal with his own private business. I ask, have the government in this case dealt with this property, which was the property of the Indians of the St. Peter's band, as a prudent and far sighted private individual would have dealt with his own private business? You all know that a guardian is not permitted to hand over the property of a ward to the ward, and if he did so and the money was dissipated by the ward the court would make him restore to the ward the property so handed over and dissipated. The Indian Act provides the circumstances under which the government may make a patent of land to an Indian. The process of making a patent is an elaborate one. Section 108 of the Indian Act and the following sections read:

108. Whenever any male Indian or unmarried Indian woman, of the full age of twenty-one years, makes application to the Superintendent General to be enfranchised, the Superintendent General shall instruct the agent of the band of which the applicant is a member, to call upon the latter to furnish a certificate, under oath, before a judge of any court of justice, by the priest, clergyman or minister of the religious denomination to which the applicant belongs, or by a stipendiary magistrate or two justices of the peace, to the effect that to the best of the knowledge and belief of the deponent or deponents, the applicant for enfranchisement is, and has been for at least five years previously, a person of good moral character, temperate in his or her habits, and of sufficient intelligence to be qualified to hold land in fee simple, and otherwise to exercise all the rights and privileges of an enfranchised person. R.S., c. 43, s. 83.

109. Upon receipt of such a certificate, the agent shall, with the least possible delay, submit the same to a council of the band of which the applicant is a member; and he shall then inform the Indians assembled at such council, that thirty days will be given within which affidavits made before a judge or a stipendiary magistrate will be received, containing reasons, if any there are, of a personal character affecting the applicant, why such enfranchisement should not be granted to the applicant. R.S., c. 43, s. 84.

110. At the expiration of the thirty days aforesaid, the agent shall forward to the Superintendent General all affidavits which have been filed with him in the case, as well as one made by himself before a judge or a stipendiary magistrate, containing his reasons for or against the enfranchisement of the applicant.

2. If the Superintendent General, after examining the evidence, decides in favour of the applicant, he may grant to the applicant a location ticket for the land occupied by him or her as a probationary Indian, or for such proportion thereof as appears to the Superintendent General fair and proper. R.S., c. 43, s. 85.

Thus the Indian Act requires that the Indian shall satisfy the superintendent that he is a man of good moral character, temperate in his habits and sufficiently intelligent to hold a piece of land in fee simple; that he has borne such a character and such habits for five years, and that must be certified to by a judge or a clergyman; then he is put on approbation and he has to live up to that standard for three years longer before the government will give him a patent to a piece of land as an enfranchised Indian. So he must have been a man of good moral character and temperate in his habits for eight years as certified to the satisfaction of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and even at the expiration of that eight years when he gets his patent there is a provision that he shall not have the power to sell, lease, or otherwise alienate the land except with the sanction of the Governor in Council. In the face of these provisions of the Indian Act this government issued patents to these Indians, according to the Minister of the Interior without taking the precaution made necessary by this statute, of lands amounting to 21,000 acres.

They issued those patents with the view of their dissipating that land and selling it to white men in a very short time. The Deputy Minister, Frank Pedley, in his report to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, tells him that no doubt in a very short time all those lands will be conveyed to the white men. We have this government, instead of guarding the property of these children of nature, conveying all of these 21,000 acres of as good land as lies under the sun, in anticipation of the Indians conveying it all away to white people in a very short time. Is there an hon. member within the sound of my voice who approves of that, who believes that, had these 300 male Indians been Galicians, Doukhobors or Hindoos, having the franchise and having 300 votes in that constituency, they would have been so treated? They had no votes, they had no friends, they had no influence at headquarters. Friends of the government desired to get their reserve at the nominal figure of $5 or $5.50 per acre, if I remember aright. They desired to get it, they did get it, and the Indian was paid, in so far as he was paid at all, as the evidence put on file by my hon. friend for Selkirk shows, in truck, by giving the Indian a dollar or two and an old wagon or a cow. When he comes back for the balance of the price of his farm he is told that he has been paid in full—the wagon was worth so much, the old cow so much, you got $2 or $3 in cash, and I do not owe you anything more. The area of 36,000 acres of land, 21,000 deeded to the Indians, and 15,000 sold, has been nearly all dissipated, and when the costs of the proceedings come to be paid in full there will be very little, if anything, left to put into the Indian fund. That is what the evidence seems to show. The evidence is uncontradicted you will remember, by the men who best know, if it be not true, uncontradicted by Chief Justice Howell. uncontradicted by Frank Pedley, and therefore, I think, believed to be true by every hon. member of this House. If it be true then I think we should have a full and fair investigation of this matter by a capable and trustworthy commissioner appointed by this government. We have never ascertained, in so far as I have been able to find out, the particular instructions that were given to the commissioner appointed by this government, namely, Mr. Justice Howell. I have seen what purport to be particulars of these instructions, but they are of the most general character. If I remember aright the Minister of the Interior admitted in this House a year ago that part of the instructions were given by him orally and not in writing, and I can well understand that, because I do not believe that the chief justice would have done what he did do on the meagre instructions given him in writing. I submit that the evidence shows that no sufficient reason existed for the attempt to remove these Indians from the reserve that they had occupied since the year 1871, away back to a new place on the Fish river. There were eight day-schools and five churches with clergymen on this reserve. Many of these Indians had expensive farm implements, binders, seed drills, a large number of cows and horses and here we have a meeting called on a day's notice at which about one-third of the male members of the band did not attend, only two-thirds present, half of them outdoors and the other half in the building, two-thirds of the Indians told by the officer of this government: 'I have in my satchel $5,000; I will not distribute it in case you vote in favour of the surrender, and if you do not I will take it home,' that statement under oath being corroborated by the man who is said to have made it—'those of you who want $90 stand over there; those who do not want $90 go over there,' instead of saying to these men: Those of you who desire to surrender your reserve and get a new reserve a hundred miles away on the Fish river, stand over there, and those who wish to remain where you have been living for forty years and enjoy the homes you have constructed here, go over to that side. The statement made to them, as I said a moment ago, considering their character, simplicity and improvidence cannot be regarded in any other light than that of a bribe. So, we have the officers of this government bribing the innocent, ignorant, incapable Indian to surrender his home of forty years and go away back 100 miles away to Fish river.

Mr. BRADBURY. They had been there for 100 years.

Mr. CROTHERS. I was under the impression that they had settled in 1871, but my hon. friend from Selkirk says that they have been there for 100 years. We must not forget that there were amongst these two hundred a number of scallawag Indians as distinguished from the better class of Indians, and you had a lot of toughs thus voting away the homes of men who were industrious and sober. It seems that this government had determined, by hook or by crook, to get rid of this St. Peter's band of Indians, that were living on that reserve although they had no good reason for it. I think I have shown to the satisfaction of every hon. member of this House that these Indians instead of having degenerated in the last forty years had rapidly improved morally and spiritually, if the reports of the inspectors of the government are to be believed rather than the statements made by those who really do not know anything about it.

They were among these Indians and they noticed the improvement they were making materially, morally and spiritually and they reported to the government that this band of Indians were rapidly advancing to a state equal to that of the white man. One of the inspectors says that among 1,300 of them there were very few drunkards. Why, Mr. Speaker, that is almost as good a character as we could get of 1,300 members of parliament. And still, the minister tells us that although nobody complained, although the council of Selkirk did not complain, although the clergymen who were going in and out among the Indians day after day in the five churches on the reserve did not complain, and although the teachers who were filling positions in the eight school houses on the reserve never suggested that the Indians should be withdrawn from the demoralizing influences of the white man, there was one single individual and one only, who, as it transpired afterwards had some personal interest in the matter, desired that efforts should be made to remove these Indians, and that one man was a defeated Liberal candidate. It seems to me we have made out up to the hilt a case for a thorough investigation so that the people of this country may know the true inwardness of the dissipation of the 40,000 acres of Indian lands, worth, I think I am putting it at a moderate rate, $25 an acre.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina). I desire at the outset to set my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) at rest by telling him that I have in my hand the affidavit of Mr. Frank Pedley, Inspector General of Indian Affairs, giving an absolute denial to all the charges made in this debate with respect to his action in connection with securing the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve. Before placing that affidavit before the House I desire to call attention to a few points in connection with this case as they appear to me. One argument used by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), is that the meeting was called on a very short notice, but. we have the evidence from the hon. gentleman's own speeches that the meeting was held on that reserve for a period of two days before the vote took place, and it would seem to be a most peculiar thing if the Indians on that reserve did not know that the meeting was going on. There is not so much doing on an Indian reserve that those living on the reserve would not know that a meeting was being held for the purpose of determining whether they would surrender their rights to their reserve and obtain another reserve from the government. The Indians certainly would be anxious to find out what the terms of the surrender should be. I should think it reasonable to suppose that the fact that a meeting for such a purpose was held on the reserve for two days would be ample notice to all the Indians as to what was taking place. Let me on this point read a clause in the affidavit of Mr. Pedley—I will put the whole affidavit on record later on—in respect to that meeting:

I do solemnly declare: That I was present during the whole of the meeting referred to and submitted the terms of the surrender clause by clause to all the Indians assembled, and each clause of the said surrender was carefully explained to the Indians both in the English language and in the language of the Indians by an interpreter acceptable to the Indians, and I firmly believe that every Indian present at that meeting thoroughly understood the terms of the surrender.

The said meeting lasted for two days and during that time a full discussion took place in which a great many of the Indians participated, and any Indian who desired to ask for information was given the fullest opportunity of doing so. On the day when the vote was taken it was decided by the meeting unanimously, just before the noon adjournment, that the vote should be taken at a certain hour in the afternoon of the same day. This was done, and out of a possible vote of 270 in the entire band there were 205 votes cast on the question of the surrender. The vote was counted by the Indian agent and the inspector of Indian agencies and was checked over by Wm. Asham, who was opposed to the surrender, and by one other whose name I do not remember. Not one objection was raised either to the vote itself or to the method of taking it.

I submit, in view of this evidence that there cannot be any honest objection taken to the method of conducting the meeting.

Mr. FOSTER. What did he say the majority was?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). He does not say in his affidavit, but I understand it was a close vote, 107 to 98, or something like that. It has also been argued that there has been no protection given to the Indians in connection with the dealing with these lands, but I would like to point out that in the original draft surrender it was proposed to permit no Indian to dispose of any particular parcel of land which he got as part of the terms of surrender without the consent of the department, and the Indians absolutely refused to surrender their rights at all with that clause inserted, and at the request of the Indians themselves that clause was struck from the surrender.

Mr. CROTHERS. Does the hon. gentleman think that it was a proper thing for the government to yield to the request of the Indians that that clause should be taken out of the agreement and that they should be allowed to sell if they thought fit. Would you do that with a child?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). If my hon. friend knew anything about western Canada at all he would know perfectly well that no town in western Canada wants to be along side of an Indian reserve.

Mr. CROTHERS. That does not answer the question.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). In dealing with a band of Indians in connection with obtaining the surrender of a reserve some inducement of some kind had to be held out to them to move away from the town of Selkirk. I do not know as much about the town of Selkirk as my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) does, but if I am correctly informed, every man in the town of Selkirk wanted the St. Peter's reserve moved away. I agree with the minister that as a matter of public policy and in the interests of the Indians as well as in the interests of the white people it was proper that the reserve should be moved to a part of the country more remote from the white settlers. I have here a letter written by Mr. Pedley to the Indian agent instructing him in respect to the issue of the patent to the individual Indians, and it shows that the government took every means to prevent any possible fraud upon these Indians.

This is dated January 21, 1908, and is addressed to J. O. Lewis, Indian agent at Selkirk. It says:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, in connection with the location of Indians on the St. Peter's reserve, in accordance with surrender given by them a short time ago, and in reply beg to say that action is being taken with as much expedition as possible to locate the Indians on the land to which they may be found entitled, and you should notify them that there will be as little delay in arranging the matter as possible.

In connection with Indians disposing of or pledging their holdings, I beg to say that no transfer or pledge by any Indian will be in any way recognized by the department, and when it has been determined what land each Indian is entitled to receive, a patent for the same will be issued to such Indians, without regard to any claims by white men or others.

It is necessary to make this position of the department clear and as widely known as possible, as any recognition of rights by transfer would cause endless complications, and in order to prevent same it is incumbent on the department to issue grants only to the Indians found entitled to receive same.

The representatives of the Indians and the department will deal with all claims to land in accordance with the provisions of the surrender.

My contention is that the department could not protect the Indians in any other way than they did, by enacting in their regulations with regard to this surrender that they would not recognize any assignment, and that every patent must be delivered direct to the Indian to whom it belonged. As a matter of fact, I think the department insisted on getting receipts from the Indians for their patents. My hon. friend from Selkirk says that some of these are forgeries. I believe that some 400 receipts from Indians were received, and some 15 patents are still uncalled for. If my hon. friend from Selkirk has any evidence of any Indian's name on a receipt being a forgery—and he has produced no evidence yet on this point—I will join him in asking the Minister of the Interior to prosecute the forger, and I have no doubt the minister will agree with us in that.

Mr. BRADBURY. I read a declaration in which a man stated that his own son was on Lake Winnipeg and that he went and asked for his patent, and he was told that it had not arrived yet. When his son arrived, he took his son to the Indian agent, and he told him he had not the patent. He went to a real estate agent, and found the patent in his possession with the receipt signed by another man for the son.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Whose declaration was that?

Mr. BRADBURY. It was signed by one of the Ashams, I think.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). That had escaped my notice. I was under the impression that the hon. member had presented no evidence of any forgeries. However, if my hon. friend can produce any evidence which will satisfy any legal practitioner, I will join him in asking the department to prosecute any man who forged an Indian's name.

Mr. BRADBURY. My hon. friend knows that the declarations produced here show that at least 50 men swore that they never signed a receipt for the patents. Who did?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). All I have to say is that I do not believe those declarations. The instructions to the Indian agent were that he was to get those receipts direct from the Indians, and the agent sent them in as coming direct from the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of Pedley's affidavit that my hon. friend read?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The 22nd of March, 1911. I may say, in justice to Mr. Pedley, that last year when this debate was before the House, he handed me an affidavit to be used in the debate; but owing to the fact that I did not address the House, the affidavit was not used, and I got this affidavit from Mr. Pedley to-day. With further reference to what the hon. member for Selkirk has said with respect to these alleged forgeries, I would like to ask him why these men who claim that their names were forged do not prosecute the forgers.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is very easily answered. Some of these men have applied to the government for assistance to prosecute these cases. One man applied to the minister for assistance to prosecute a man named Funk who, he said, had taken his land from him fraudulently, and the answer of the department was that they could not see their way clear to giving him any money for the prosecution. Consequently the prosecutions dropped, because the Indians could not afford to press them.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend knows that these prosecutions could have been carried on by the local government, in whose hands is the administration of the criminal law. I am also informed by the Minister of the Interior that no such application was made to his department by anybody. Two statements were made by the hon. member for Selkirk both last year and this year, which are to my mind the crucial part of this matter. One statement, made last year at page 7035 of 'Hansard,' was:

Pedley said: I have $5,000 here in my satchel; if you vote for this surrender tonight I will distribute this $5,000 amongst you; if you do not vote for this surrender I will take my bag and go home, and you won't get a cent. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he considers that bribery?

The other statement is to this effect, that the Inspector of Indian Agencies said: 'All you that want $90 go to this side,' and they were counted in favour of surrender. Both of these statements were contained in the affidavit or declaration of Wm. Asham filed by my hon. friend; and on these statements the hon. member for Selkirk and the hon. member for West Elgin based the contention that bribery was used. I want to point out to these hon. gentlemen that the giving of money in advance in order to obtain the surrender of Indian reserves is no new thing. I am informed that every year $50,000 is voted by this House for the purpose of obtaining surrenders of Indian reserves, and it is the custom to pay some small proportion of the money available at the outset for the purpose of binding the bargain, as it were, or beginning the completion of the surrender. Let me call my hon. friend's attention to section 89 of the Indian Act, which provides for this, so that it is not at all a bribe, but is provided for by the law of the land. Section 89 says:

With the exception of such sum not exceeding fifty per centum of the proceeds of any land, and not exceeding ten per centum of the proceeds of any timber or other property, as is agreed at the time of the surrender to be paid to the members of the band invested therein, the Governor in Council may, subject to the provisions of this parliament, direct how and in what manner and by whom the moneys arising from the disposal of Indian lands or of property held or to be held in trust for Indians, or timber or Indian lands or reserves, or from any other source for the benefit of Indians, shall be invested from time to time, and how the payments or assistance to which the Indians are entitled shall be made or given.

So that provision is made in the Indian Act itself for giving to the Indians at the time of surrender a small portion of the expected proceeds from the sale of these Indian lands. With respect to these two statements made by the hon. member for Selkirk last year and this year, the hon. Minister of the Interior read an affidavit of Semmon's, the Superintendent of Indian Agencies, denying absolutely that there was any foundation for any allegations. In the affidavit of Mr. Pedley, which I have in my hand, he makes no reference to the last statement, but I can assure hon. members, on my word as a member of this House that Mr. Pedley said to me there was absolutely no foundation for any such statement.

With respect to the $5,000 alleged bribe, as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) was pleased to call it, this is what Mr. Pedley says in his affidavit:

With reference to the payment of a sum of $5,000 to the Indians, referred to by Mr. Bradbury, I positively state that the Indians were informed by me that in case of a surrender of the reserve being taken, the department proposed to advance the Indians the amount of $5,000 in accordance with the terms of the surrender and as allowed by law.

The surrender itself provides for the payment of $5,000 on the acceptance by the members of the band. What bribery was there in that? The next clause of the affidavit says:

I did not use the words attributed to me by Mr. Bradbury, namely, I have $5,000 here in my satchel; if you vote for this surrender to-night, I will distribute the $5,000 among you. If you do not vote for the surrender, I will take my bag and go home and you will not get a cent.

Here is the last clause of the affidavit:

During the discussion of the clause of the surrender referring to the advance of the sum of $5,000, I was asked by some one if this sum would be distributed among the Indians if they did not surrender.

That was a very natural question. What other reply could Mr. Pedley give than the one he did?

To this I replied that this could not be done as this sum could only be paid on a surrender being given in accordance with the terms of the document providing for the surrender.

Surely that affidavit of Mr. Pedley with respect to those two statements, and also the fact that in the Indian Act there is a provision made for the advance of a certain sum of money, disposes, in the minds of all reasonable men, of the question of bribery altogether.

My hon. friend says that the Indians were badly used. Well, there were 48,000 acres in the reserve. Of these 21,000 were distributed among the Indians—180 to the chief, 120 to each councillor and 80 to each Indian. In addition 3,000 acres were set aside for hay lands for the use of the Indians, and the balance, 24,000 acres, were sold by public auction, and the proceeds used for Indian purposes. In addition the Indians were given a new reserve of 75,000 acres further north in Manitoba and that land was chosen for them by Dr. Grain and Ernest Rayner, of Selkirk, men selected by the Indians themselves. How can it be said that the Indians were wrongfully used?

It has been hinted that there was collusion in connection with the sale of the land put up at public auction. What foundation is there for any such insinuation? The sale was advertised in the usual way, in some five or six newsappers, the Toronto 'Globe', the 'Free Press', a Winnipeg paper and a Selkirk paper and another journal. It was advertised under order in council passed by the Dominion government in 1894; and for the purpose of my argument, I desire to call attention to that order in council because it has been alleged that the sale was not properly advertised. The order in council was dated May 8, 1894, and I believe a similar order was made on December 12, 1896. The order in council of May 8, 1894 reads as follows:

Advertisements should not be inserted in any books, pamphlets or periodicals other than newspapers published weekly or more frequently, and all advertisements should be limited to the maximum of six insertions in daily or weekly papers.

The sale of these lands was, therefore, properly advertised and there was a fairly large attendance at the auction. The lands were purchased by 24 different buyers—I do not know, nor do I care, whether Liberal or Conservative. Surely no one will say that there was collusion at that auction sale. Under ordinary circumstances collusion at an auction sale is very difficult. The lands were sold at an average price of $5.70 per acre. Compare that with prices realized for the sale of other lands in that district. In June, 1909, six months later than the sale of the Indian lands, certain school lands were sold in the same locality. Three-quarters of section 29, township 14, range 6, east first meridian, sold at $5 per acre at public auction; southeast quarter of section 29 was offered for sale at an upset price of $5, but there were no bids. Section 11, of township 14, range 6, one-half section sold at $5 per acre and one-quarter sold at $5.50 per acre. The fourth quarter was offered at an upset price of $5, but there was no bid. Three-quarters of section 29, township 15, range 6, was sold at $5 per acre. The fourth quarter-section was put up at the upset price of $5, but no bids were offered. The inspector of the school lands, in making his report of the sale of school lands in that district, said that these lands were very much inferior to other lands in Manitoba. I know it has been said by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) that these lands were worth at least $25 per acre. But I know where you can buy lands within 25 miles of the city of Winnipeg at $17 per acre to-day just as good as any land on St. Peter's Indian reserve. But in any event to say that the lands are worth $25 an acre to-day is no indication that they were worth more than $5.70 in 1908, because lands have increased in value by leaps and bounds in those few years. I know that lands have doubled in value within the last year and a half or two years at the most.

I have nothing further to say on this question. I merely rose for the purpose of putting at rest the allegations of hon. gentlemen opposite respecting the conduct of the Superintendent General of Indian affairs, Mr. Pedley; and although I have referred to a number of the sections of Mr. Pedley's affidavit, I think it but right that I should place it in its entirety on 'Hansard':

Province of Ontario, county of Carleton, to wit.

I, Frank Pedley, of the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, in the province of Ontario, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, make oath and say:

1. That I have read the speech of Mr. Bradbury, member for Selkirk, delivered in the House of Commons on the 30th day of April, 1910, with reference to the surrender of St. Peter's Indian reserve, and with particular reference to the statements alleged to have been made by me as contained on page 7191 of the House of Commons Debates, and I have heard the said Bradbury to-day reiterate the said statements.

2. That I was present during the whole of the meeting referred to and submitted the terms of the surrender clause by clause to all the Indians assembled, and each clause of the said surrender was carefully explained to the Indians both in the English language and in the language of the Indians by an interpreter acceptable to the Indians and firmly believe that every Indian present at that meeting throughly understood the terms of the surrender.

3. The said meeting lasted for two days, and during that time a full discussion took place in which a great many of the Indians participated, and any Indian who desired to ask for any information was given the fullest opportunity of doing so.

4. On the day when the vote was taken it was decided by the meeting unanimously, just before the noon adjournment, that the vote should be taken at a certain hour in the afternoon of the same day. This was done, and out of a possible vote of 270 in the entire band there were 205 votes cast on the question of the surrender. The vote was counted by the Indian agent and the inspector of Indian agencies, and was checked over by Wm. Asham, who was opposed to the surrender, and by one other whose name I do not remember. Not one objection was raised either to the vote itself or to the method of taking it.

5. With reference to the payment to the Indians of the sum of $5,000 referred to by Mr. Bradbury, I positively state that the Indians were informed by me that in case of a surrender of the reserve being taken, the department proposed to advance the Indians the amount of $5,000 in accordance with the terms of the surrender and as allowed by law.

6. I did not use the words attributed to me by Mr. Bradbury, namely: 'I have $5,000 here in my satchel; if you vote for this surrender to-night I will distribute the $5,000 among you; if you do not vote for the surrender I will take my bag and go home and you won't get a cent.'

7. During the discussion of the clause of the surrender referring to the advance of the sum of $5,000, I was asked by some one if this sum would be distributed among the Indians if they did not surrender. To this I replied that this could not be done, as this sum could only be paid on a surrender being given in accordance with the terms of the document providing for the surrender.

FRANK PEDLEY.

Sworn before me at Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, this 22nd March, A.D. 1911.—Wm. Graham, a commissioner, &c.

There is one point to which I intended to refer, and I will take a minute to do it—the question whether the surrender was legal or not; the question whether you require for a surrender a majority of the Indians living on the reserve and entitled to vote or a majority of those at the meeting and entitled to vote. I have made some inquiry since six o'clock, and I am informed that the opinion of the department is that all that is necessary is a majority of the men of the band present at the meeting and entitled to vote, and that in every surrender dealt with by the department, that has been the practice. The section referring to the matter is section 49, as follows:

> Except as in this part otherwise provided, no release or surrender of a reserve, or a portion of a reserve, held for the use of the Indians of any band, or of any individual Indian, shall be valid or binding unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of twenty-one years, at a meeting or council thereof summoned for that purpose, according to the rules of the band.

Surely that applies to a smaller number than a majority of the voters of a band. However, I am informed that it is the opinion of the Justice Department that it is a perfectly legal way to deal with the acres farther north in Manitoba and that surrender, and in my opinion the section means a majority of those present at the meeting and entitled to vote; if otherwise, the words at the meeting have no force or effect.

Mr. C. J. DOHERTY (St. Anne, Montreal). It is not my purpose to detain the House with any lengthy discussion of the questions that arise upon this motion. I do not know that I would have intervened in the debate at all if it had not been for the magnificent indifference the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) this afternoon exhibited as to what the law might be governing the rights of these wards of his. He told us that he did not know whether this surrender was legal or illegal, and it is a perfectly fair inference that he did not care whether it was legal or illegal, since he told us that he had not even taken the trouble to consult the Department of Justice. I have to congratulate the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) upon caring more about the legality of this transaction than the Minister of the Interior, for he tells us that, at all events, since six o'clock this evening, he did take the trouble to ask the Department of Justice its opinion of the legality of this surrender. And he tells us that, after the mature deliberation which the Department of Justice, of course, gave the question—a question of some little importance—between the moment when it was consulted and eight o'clock the department gave him the opinion that this surrender was perfectly legal, and therefore he is perfectly satisfied.

Now, I am not going into the question of the facts; I am not going to discuss the very contradictory evidence that has been put before the House upon the facts, except that on this latter point I have just one thing to say; and what I have to say is so obvious that it seems to me I should almost apologize for saying it. We have most absolutely contradictory evidence as to the circumstances under which this surrender was obtained. We have the evidence of people who, until something is shown to the contrary, ought to be considered as credible—large numbers of people—that false representations were made to induce this surrender; and we have the denial on oath of the persons to whom these false representations are imputed. In that state of affairs, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) says: This is a matter that ought to be investigated. And the answer of the government is: Why, the evidence is contradictory; therefore you should not investigate. If there could be a conclusive argument why you should investigate, it is to be found precisely in that. If there were no contradiction there would be no need of investigation; but the fact that this House is in the position of having before it absolutely contradictory statements with regard to the facts concerning this very important matter is precisely the conclusive reason why this House ought to investigate,— unless this House in regard to the facts, indulges in the same happy disposition as shown by the minister (Mr. Oliver) this afternoon, with regard to the law, and does not know and does not care what those facts are. But, as I stated, I would not have intervened in this debate if it had not been for the absolute indifference—I do not think

I should be exaggerating if I said, contempt—with which the minister disposed of the question this afternoon whether this transfer was legal or not. There are just two observations I would like to make upon this question of legality. So far as the minister is concerned, all that he knows about it is that, as he has informed us, it has always been done that way. Now, he has not told us whether the question ever has previously arisen whether the majority of the persons present at the meeting is the equivalent of the majority of the members of the tribe at a meeting, he has not told us whether that question has ever arisen or not, and whether the Department of Justice has ever passed upon the question or not. Of course, I am not in a position to know how many of these surrenders have been made, nor under what circumstances they have been made. But I feel quite safe in taking this position,—that no number of surrenders in which the question never arises, in which nobody ever raised the question, form any precedent for the determination of the question that now is raised. If we look at this statute, the first thing that we see is that the determination of the question is not left to the meeting. I quite agree that where you leave the determination of the question to a meeting of persons of certain classes, then the decision of the majority who are present at the meeting is the decision of the meeting, and governs so far as the decision of the meeting can govern. But it is to be pointed out that this statute is very careful not to leave the determination of the question to the meeting. It points out precisely what are the conditions precedent to the surrender of a reserve. And it is well, when we read this section, to remember that it is making an absolutely exceptional provision of law, a departure from a fundamental general rule,—namely, that a man cannot be deprived of his property without his own consent. I have no hesitation in laying down the proposition—certainly as regards the law of the province from which I come, and I think I can with as little hesitation authorize myself to lay it down as a proposition of the common law—that it does not matter how many owners there may be of a property, you cannot deprive any one of these owners of his property without his consent. This is a fundamental rule of the common law. This statute proposes to depart from that rule. Now, anybody who knows anything about the law—anybody who is not like the Minister of the Interior absolutely above the law and neither knows nor cares what it is—knows that when you come to interpret an exceptional disposition of the law, that is to say, a disposition creating an exception to the general rule, you have to give it the strictest possible interpretation, you have to keep it within the absolute limits of what the words used require. What are the words used?

Except as in this part otherwise provided, no release or surrender of a reserve, or a portion of a reserve, held for the use of the Indians of any band, or of any individual Indian, shall be valid or binding, unless—

Here is the condition precedent:

Unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of 21 years.

And then, while I do not want to attach too much importance to the punctuation, there follows a comma. There is the thing that is required and then the law goes on to say when and how that thing shall be done.

At a meeting or council thereof summoned for that purpose, according to the rules of the band,

So that the thing that is required is positive action on the part of a majority of the male members of the band; unless that is done no surrender shall be valid or binding. Not only must you have that done, but you must have it done at a meeting called in accordance with the rules of the band. The hon. minister interprets that as meaning that no matter how many people go to the meeting if you have a majority of the people at the meeting, you have complied with the law. The first answer to that is that it is not what the law says. The law does not say a majority of the male members of the band who are present at the meeting, the law says you must have the assent, the law is not contemplating voting, but you must have positive action on the part of a majority of the male members of the band, they must assent. A man who sits down and says nothing neither assents nor dissents, and what the law requires is the assent of the majority. It further requires as a protection to the people who may be deprived of their property against their will that that assent shall be given at a meeting held in the presence of the Indian Superintendent. Why? To prevent the possibility of people going around and buttonholing one Indian after another, and by one means and another, not in the presence of the superintendent his natural protector, inducing the individuals one by one to give their assent, until the assent of a majority of the members of the band has been secured. At a meeting is the additional protection added by the legislator who wants to protect these people whom he quite recognizes he is depriving, as individuals, of their distinct individual right to say each one whether or not he will part with his right in the reserve. This provision is twisted by his guardian against him to make it mean that he, the guardian, may claim a title in case he gets the assent of a majority of members of the tribe who choose to go to the meeting. This is not a question of election where people are called upon to choose between one man and another, or between one course of action and another; there is only one thing put to the Indian here, the law says the thing he is asked shall not be binding on him unless he, to the extent of a majority at all events, assents. When you come to consider that the purpose of this section is to provide a method whereby a minority of that tribe may be deprived of their property rights in the reserve against their will, which is in violation of every principle of the common law, I do not think I need add any reason for saying that this is a provision of law to be given the strictest possible interpretation. If you have 200 members of the tribe and 101 vote to surrender, the other 99 are deprived of their property against their will, without their consent. That is the law and you must bow to it, but here the department is stretching the law to mean that where you have 200 members of a tribe and you call a meeting which is attended by only 20, a majority of that 20 may grant a surrender, whereas if a majority of the members of the tribe stay away they do not assent and therefore the property does not pass. Under that interpretation if 20 men go to the meeting, and out of those 20, 11 assent and 9 dissent, the property of the other 180 members of the band is alienated. That proposition was put to the minister last year, and he said he thought that would be legal. He should have done as he did this year and say he did not know if it was legal or illegal. He thought it would be legal, but very inequitable. But he said in this case when there were present 203 out of 289 he thought that would be equitable. I would ask the House to consider what the legal position is if we are going to apply this doctrine. It simply is that the law means that the majority at a meeting can give away the property of the others who are not there when the minister thinks it is equitable, and the majority at a meeting cannot give away the property of the minority when the Minister of the Interior thinks it is inequitable. That is the interpretation the minister puts on the statute which parliament passed for the purpose of protecting the Indians. In other words, parliament went to the trouble of making a law which on its face apparently meant that it prescribed the conditions precedent to a valid surrender, while it only meant to say that it depends on what the Minister of the Interior for the time being may think about it. That is the most absolutely preposterous proposition to put before any intelligent man.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Looking at this transaction as the surrender of a reserve, while I have not found any authority interpreting a provision precisely in the words of this section, and have, therefore, to deal with the case as what the lawyers would call a question of first impression, I would have no hesitation in saying that if a man came to me with a title derived from a vote of that kind, if the Indians had vigilant guardians, I would never advise him to accept that title, although of course under such circumstances as we have here where the Indians have guardians who apparently consider that their first duty is to find a possible interpretation of the law which would work to deprive the Indian of his property without his consent I dare say the purchaser would be quite safe simply because the only protector of the Indian does not know the law or care what it is.

But there is more than that. The second proposition is absolutely startling. It appears by the report of Chief Justice Howell, it appears by the statement of the Minister of the Interior,—it is part of the justification of the minister for having conceded to the Indians individually portions of the property which was taken over in the surrender,—that these Indians, not as members of the tribe having a share in the reserve, but as individual citizens of Canada, settlers upon that property, were owners of particular portions of that reserve. I am not going back to Chief Justice Howell's report to show where that is. He puts it so clearly that it is not susceptible of dispute. There was a total vote at the meeting of 105 on the one side and 98 on the other, the majority in favour of the surrender being seven. It is stated by Chief Justice Howell and not questioned by the Minister of the Interior, that those 98 men owned particular portions of the reserve, just as I might individually own property, and their property has passed from them under that surrender when they voted that they would not surrender it because there were seven more Indians at that meeting who wanted to surrender their property than there were Indians who did not. So we have this provision made by the government to provide how you may surrender an Indian reserve, twisted to so operate that it will not only deprive those who happen to be in the minority at the meeting, but it will deprive the majority of the whole tribe who did not vote for it, of their share in the Indian reserve. But more than that, so careful of the interest of the Indian is his guardian that we have it twisted so that it will deprive, and it has deprived the Indian who owned, as I might or as the minister might own, a particular piece of property in the province of Manitoba, of his ownership in that property against his negative vote present at the meeting. I absolutely defy contradiction of that. Then, we are told that we are living in a civilized country. Why, it is fundamental; go away back to Magna Charta; one of the things they fought for was that no man should be deprived of his property against his will except by due process of law. Yet here are 98 Indians who have been deprived of their property. Let us condemn, as the minister condemns to satisfy the government, the men who did not go to that meeting and whose property was taken away from them in their absence; here are 98 men who went to the meeting and voted that they would not surrender their property, yet their property is gone from them, and this is a country where a man cannot be despoiled of his property without due process of law! It is a perfect disgrace. We heard the other day of certain relations of ours with some other countries being a blot on civilization. I say it is a blot on the vaunted civilization of this country and it is no answer to tell me or to tell the public that you have done better for the Indian than if you had left him there. You do not justify the thief. The thief does not justify himself by saying to me: I have taken your property against your will, but I am ready and willing to give you something better. These people owned their property or they did not own their property. The report of Chief Justice Howell called the attention of the government to the fact that these people owned their property as individuals. Chief Justice Howell's report and the meeting of the Indian tribe to which they went to vote against parting with it have deprived them of their property. Now, I may be told that they have signed deeds now by which they have consented to the surrender of the reserve. I dare say that is true; I do not question it. That was part of the plan. Chief Justice Howell does not put in question in his report the existence of those rights which the Indians had under the Manitoba Act. He does not for one moment suggest that the Indians should be told about the existence of those rights. He does not suggest, what must have been perfectly evident to any reasonable man, that these rights were not matters to be dealt with by the surrender of an Indian reserve, but he says that when the surrender is voted it would be well to have these Indians renounce their individual rights. So, the individual rights are sufficiently clear that it is quite recognized that the surrender of the reserve will not deprive them of their individual rights, and, therefore, it would be well to put them specially in the deed. I have not seen the evidence that that was put to these men at the meeting. Ninety-eight men voted against any surrender at all, voted that they wanted to keep their rights and, in the face of that positive affirmation, without colour of right in so far as these individual rights are concerned, this government has taken over their property because it has been able to get them to sign off some deed for which they were paid no other consideration than the considerations that were offered for the surrender of the Indian reserve.

The Minister of the Interior is indignant because my hon. friend from Selkirk talked about robbery. Well, I suppose the minister was right when we get down to technical things, robbery means stealing with violence. As far as I know there was no violence. If my hon. friend from Selkirk had called it larceny, had called it obtaining property by false pretenses, he would, perhaps, more correctly technically have described it. But, if taking a man's property without right, depriving him of his property in violation of the law, appropriating to yourself that which belongs to another man, may be properly described as robbery, then I do not know of any case of robbery more clear, more unmistakable, more indisputable, than this. We are told that we robbed the Indian for the Indian's good—a very convenient doctrine. I wonder how we would like to live under a law which would enable the government to rob us for our own good? My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) suggests that they practically do it now. Well, as far as robbing is concerned, he may be right, but as to how far it is for our own good I would be more disposed to question his statement. But, that is beside the question. In so far as that answer is made, all I have to say is that there is no right in the government of Canada to rob an individual for his own good any more than there is in me to deprive my neighbour of his property because I think I can do something better with it than he can do for himself.

I quite recognize that they have not described their act in taking the property as I have described it, but they have sought to justify it by saying that the Indians have got a better reserve, and the white people are happy to be rid of the proximity of the Indians. In such an absolutely clear case of legal spoliation it would be a pity to spoil it by adding anything to it that might be qualified as sentimental lamentation. Our friends on the other side are not very fond of sentiment in connection with any question, but for my part I cannot help expressing my endorsation of the words of the member for Selkirk, in so far as they point out that this transaction puts an end to our boast that under British government the aborigines get justice. We are bigger than they, more intelligent than they, more astute than they; they do not know they have a title under the Manitoba Act; they know probably even less about the law than the Minister of the Interior wants to know, and we profit by their ignorance, and we say we will gather them together, and by a vote of a minority of the tribe get them to surrender the reserve, and then we will take for ourselves their personal private property that belong to them under the Manitoba Act. And, we are proud of the achievement and we boast that the white man has been relieved of the Indian. The hon. gentleman from Regina said, in justification of this: There is not a white community in the country that would not be glad to get rid of the Indians in its neighbourhood, and that is given as an absolutely unanswerable conclusive reason for taking the Indians' property. Well, if we are going to do that let us say so, but let us not pretend that we are doing justice to the Indian, let us not pretend that we are administering his affairs justly as his guardians under the law. In the past Canadian parliaments made the law to protect the Indians, but this government has found a way to despoil him of his property in spite of that law. It is absolutely immaterial to me whether the new reserve is better than the old and whether the position of the Indian is improved or not; the great important question that arises is whether, in regard to the Indian or the white man, we Canadians are going to sit quietly by and recognize that the government of this country for the time being has the arbitrary power to deprive a man of his property because the government thinks it is good for him. I register my most energetic protest against such a principle. If the government are right in their proposition that it would be better for the Indian, better for the white man, better for the progress of the country, that the St. Peter's reserve and the private ownership of the Indians in that reserve should disappear, the government had within reach a means towards that end. Why didn't they come to parliament for legislation to authorize them to expropriate the property of these Indians in a lawful and regular way? Why did they not dare to submit to the representatives of the people the question whether or not there was a sufficient public interest at stake to justify special legislation providing for that expropriation. But, they did not dare to do that; they would rather twist the law and violate the law in the hope that people would not find it out. For my part I look upon this as a matter of very much greater importance than its effect on this particular tribe of Indians. Here we have the government standing forth unblushingly and saying: We have taken the Indians' property because he is better without it, and we have given him something for it, something which we knew that so far as he was an individual he would immediately squander, and we have given his tribe something better in the way of a reserve, and its all right and everything is lovely. I do not say it is proved that this thing may not have been done in that kind of good faith which people claim for themselves when they say: I deprive my neighbour of his rights, but it is all for his own good. I am not here to question that the Minister of the Interior may have thought he was doing this for the Indians' good. It is perhaps true of the minister, but so far as the department is concerned perhaps it is not true. There is a great deal of testimony to the effect that it is not true; there is a great deal of testimony to the effect that the surrender was not only illegally but fraudulently obtained from the Indians. I am willing to give as much credence to the men who deny as to the men who affirm, but I say it is precisely a situation where honest men investigate before they pronounce judgment. When you add to that the manifest illegality of the thing done, and its justification, not because it was legal—nobody cares in the government whether it was legal or not—its justification on the ground that it was better for these Indians to be deprived of their land, I must say that I have difficulty in understanding how hon. gentlemen are going to vote that there is nothing even to look into. I certainly shall vote in favour of an investigation into this matter which upon its face is manifestly illegal, and with regard to the good faith and honesty of which there is to say the very least, most substantial reason for doubt.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). It would be rather an unusual thing, if after the address we have heard from my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) there was no attempt on the part of the government to meet the position which he has placed before the House, and which he I am bound to say put with remarkable force and clearness. Is there any answer to the position my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) has taken and the conclusion to which he has come? If there is we ought to have it. If there is not, how in the world can we sit here and justify it. Does not that appeal to every one of us present, and I noticed that those who are here for the most part paid most particular attention to the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty).

They have heard his argument, his citation of law, his conclusion. My hon. friend is a man of fine legal training and of excellent legal repute, and it seems to me that his argument and his conclusions ought to call for an explanation on the part of the government, or an attempt at rebuttal of his propositions. That is the least that we could expect in a parliament; are we not to have that? If the position which my hon. friend has taken is tenable, I have never seen a government in a worse position before its own followers and before the House and the country. He has absolutely made the deduction from his argument that the government has been party to robbery. In the technical sense he calls it something different, but in the essence of it, he alleges that the government has taken away from men who have legal rights that which they possess by virtue of those legal rights, and has done it without process of law and without their consent. Now, you may call it robbery or larceny or whatever you please. The name matters nothing; the act itself is brutal, manifest and unjust. Is there no reply to that? My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior is not expected to make a reply. He does not know the law; he does not care a fig what the law is—he has told us that more than once. He told us that last year when it was put to him straight as to whether this was a legal thing or not, and up to this very hour he has shown that he cared so little about it that he has never asked for an opinion from the Department of Justice about it. He is not even so thoughtful as my hon. friend from Regina, who did take the precaution to get an affidavit from a responsible officer, the deputy minister, between the hour of adjournment and the hour he commenced to speak—an eleventh-hour affidavit, or worse. Well, it struck me, who am not a lawyer and have never been a judge and never expect to be, that where you have affidavits clear and explicit, on one side, and affidavits equally clear and explicit on the other side, a judge would not care to try a case on that kind of testimony. He would consider that it called for oral evidence under strict and close examination and cross-examination. Here we have, in the first place, a member of parliament, just as honourable as any other member of parliament, just as anxious to do his duty by his country and his constituents, and from his personal observation, his personal knowledge, and the information he has gleaned over two or three years during which this transaction has been more or less before the House and the country, giving us his positive views on the matter. He lives in the vicinity and knows the circumstances personally, and his version is that a great wrong has been committed. We cannot simply laugh at that and say there is nothing in it. That is not reasonable. Dozens of men, who have interests, who have knowledge and who have information, have made solemn affidavits, all of which are to the effect that there has been wrong-doing—that they have been wrongfully done out of their rights, in exactly the way the hon. member for Selkirk has described. Now, that ought to produce the impression that a prima facie case has been made out, and that it is something worth looking into. Then, the legal aspect of the matter has been brought out, and there is no answer to it. I do not believe that my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin), would contravene the legal conclusions which have been arrived at by my hon. friend from St. Ann's (Mr. Doherty). No man in the government does, and the minister himself, without the least solicitude, admits that he has never taken the trouble to get the opinion of the Justice Department upon the matter. Now, I want this much understood with reference to myself, and I think it is true with reference to my hon. friend from Selkirk, that neither of us holds the view that it is impolitic or wrong in itself to endeavour in certain circumstances to change the Indians from one reserve to another. The hon. Minister of the Interior tried naturally to make capital against the hon. member for Selkirk, by basing an argument on that. He said it was for the benefit of the Indians and for the benefit of the white men living near and for the public good that there should be a change of reserves. Granted that that is so; the opposition of my hon. friend from Selkirk is not because the reserve was sought to be changed to another locality, for the general good of both white people and Indians, but it is because in carrying out that which might have been a laudable object, it was carried out so that wrong and injustice resulted, and men and Indians were deprived of their property rights and of what should have been the real result of the sale or disposal of those 48,000 acres of land. The hon. minister thought he had made out his whole case when he said that 74,000 acres of good land for a reserve had been given to them in place of the 48,000 acres which they owned under him as their guardian.

You must go further than that. Granted that another reservation of 74,000 acres were given to them, and that they will be healthier and better on it, and that the public good will be better served, there is this element of injustice. They owned that 48,000 acres, they had a right to every dollar that land could be made to bring over and above expenses. To whom should the profit go—to the Indians or the speculators? The whole gravamen of the charge is that the guardian of the Indians caused proceedings to be carried on whereby the speculators got almost everything, and his Indian wards almost nothing. There were 48,000 acres of land. My hon. friend from Regina can talk about the value as long as he pleases, he cannot convince any one who knows the circumstances, that the land in that reservation, which is the choicest land in Manitoba, was not worth far more than the Indians got for it. Its location has been explained by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers). I myself have been there and know the situation. Let any one go there and look at the locality, and just consider what the land is worth. Take the testimony of my hon. friend's own office, and the general opinion of people who know anything about the locality. It is within 25 miles of a city of 150,000 people, which will shortly be a city of half a million. It has four channels of communication open from it to that city throughout the year with the exception of some part of the winter season. It has steam railways on each side, an electric railway and water transport throughout the season of navigation. Do you mean to say that that land, situated alongside the very considerable growing town of Selkirk, and within 25 miles of one of the greatest cities of the west, and with constant facilities for transport—do you mean to tell me that that land in 1907 was worth no more than $5.60 per acre? There is no use talking about any such price. It was worth at that time four times that price; and if the guardian had been faithful to his trust and had undertaken to get for his Indian wards all that could be got out of that land, instead of the small paltry sum which the Indians are to get, they would have been made rich by it. They had a right to that; the speculators had none. The guardian should have got that for them; but either through negligence or active participation, he enabled the speculator to get the profit and prevented the ward from reaping it. What happens? Persons who come to settle on that property and enter into active work of cultivating it must pay on an average from $25 to $60 an acre for it. So that my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) has not even the excuse of giving the land to the real tiller of the soil at the bottom price. Instead he has enabled speculators to get it at the bottom price, and then the speculators hand it over to the real cultivators at the highest price. But what have the Indians got?

My hon. friend made an argument against himself out of his own mouth. He says that the Indian in 1907 was much worse than was the Indian of 40 years ago. Although the evidence is against him, he must be judged by his own view. If that view be correct, all the more reason why the guardian should have been the more careful to look after his ward. Taking his own view, if the Indians have deteriorated during the last 40 years, and are, therefore, more like children and less like men, they should have had all the more the best care that their guardian could give them.

No man can read the story through—and I have read it through carefully—without coming to the conclusion that there was either callousness to any of the best rights and the best interests of the Indian on the part of his guardian, or there was absolute, open knowledge that the Indian was being dispossessed in order that the speculator might have the greater gain and profit.

I do not want to weary the House by a recital of what is in the evidence, but I would ask any man just to read over the facts and circumstances and see if he can come to any other conclusion. To get up here and read an affidavit, in which a man writes just what suits him and no more and swears just exactly what he wants to swear to, and cannot be cross-examined, is simply abusing our credulity. There is no use in reading an affidavit of that kind in order to convince level headed men that everything has been properly done. Why, in affidavit after affidavit and evidence upon evidence, the fact stands out that the Indian agents themselves made it easy to sluice that property from the Indians and hand it over to the speculators, and it was done through the passage ways of backstairs influence, and drunkenness and truck—any device that could be used in order that the Indian might be despoiled at the lowest possible price to the speculator. Why, the agent himself dabbled in this thing, and the guardian of the Indians knew it and knows it to-day. The agent of the guardian appointed to look after his wards dabbled himself in these lands, and the guardian knew it, and knows it to-day.

Yet the silly, inane proposition is put before us to-night that if the Indian has been cheated by fraud or forgery, he can prosecute. Let the Indian prosecute! All you need is to put that proposition before you and look at it with one eye and you can see it is absolutely untenable and untrustworthy as an argument.

Now, look at the outcome. There was the property of the Indians in the trust of the Minister of the Interior, worth at least $1,000,000 in 1907, and before the speculators get rid of it, it will have changed hands for pretty nearly $2,000,000. What does the Indian get out of it? He gets 21,000 acres given to himself, and the average that he got for 18,000 acres of this were taken by three or four land speculators was $5 per acre. And what became of the $5 per acre that he got? The men did not get it in many cases. There were cases in which truck and false accounts and trumped up accounts were part of the payment made to the Indian. The Indian agent knew what was going on, and never interfered; the department knew well, before they permitted the change, that these men would have no chance at all in the hands of the speculators. Why, you might as well turn untrained children into the arena of business, and expect them to protect themselves, as to expect the Indians, under certain circumstances, to protect themselves in the disposal of property. Anyway, all they got for that land was $5 an acre—that is, about $115,000. Where much of it went we could easily see from what I have already said. A great part of it was dissipated in that way—here to-day, to-morrow nowhere, and the Indian is left without the needed means of subsistence which he would have had if his guardian had watched over and protected him during that period. And what was done with the rest of the lands? Three thousand acres of hay land were kept, and it is there yet, maybe. And 15,000 acres were auctioned What is the use of us spinning cobwebs over that auction? An advertisement was inserted in weekly papers some four to six times, then absolutely dropped for a month, so that it might fade out of people's memories, and then, in midwinter, on the 16th of December, the land was auctioned off. And who got it? All but 1,000 of the 15,000 acres auctioned, went to these same three or four men who had collared the 18,000 in the first lot—speculators who were onto it from the first, and were into it at the last, and were both onto it and into it because of the facilities allowed them either by the inaction or by the action of the department. For that 15,000 acres, these men paid $5.68 per acre, which is somewhere about $85,000. But there is another side to that. So far, $32,000 has been taken out of that for expenses and yet only one-third of the band is transferred to the new reservation. Now, another point; what was the purpose in all this that the minister did or allowed to be done? His purpose was to separate the Indian from the white people in the vicinity of Selkirk? Are they separated? Two-thirds of the Indians are there to-day, and it is three years or more since these transactions were carried out. So, the minister has not separated them in reality. And to-day there is this sense of injustice, and this absolute injustice and wrongdoing which has been set forth by my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) without any answer being forthcoming.

Now, I do not know that there is much use in talking any longer about it. We have no real jury here, and we do not even get the attendance of one-quarter of those who are to decide the case. If a vote is called upon this question, men will troop in and vote. Because they have heard the discussion and understand the case of the Indians? Not at all. The jury as constituted here, is made up in large part of men who vote without hearing the evidence or without caring what the facts are. The bell rings, they come in and vote, and they vote the way the Minister of the Interior votes. There is not much encouragement for the wards of the nation to bring their grievances before the great tribunal, the King's parliament, when they find that scarcely a baker's dozen of the King's parliament are present to hear the presentation of their grievances and that, by and by, when the vote is taken, the verdict will come from men who have not heard the case and have not listened to the grievances. If there is any fault for that, the large fault lies with the government. For the government is supposed to act wisely, and above all, to act legally and justly. And if there are any people with whom they are particularly bound to act in this way, they are the helpless, the weak and the inefficient, and if with any class of that kind, with the Indians who once owned everything in this country and who have been driven by the incoming white population back upon their reserves. And now their reserves are taken from them without due process of law, and they are wrongfully despoiled of that which they ought to have. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) sent Mr. MacDougall up to make an investigation so that it could be said in the House: Rev. Mr. MacDougall has gone up there and made a thorough investigation, and this is his report. Was the Rev. Mr. MacDougall sent up there in order to hear the complaints of the Indians on their own reservation and report that to the minister? If not, what was the use of sending him up at all, and for what purpose did he go? Mr. MacDougall is said to be the author of a report made on November 10 last to the minister and presented to this House. Mr. MacDougall, as I know, and as is capable of proof, met these Indians in the school house on their reserve and, for hours upon hours, listened to their complaints. I have them here taken by the reporters of the three different Winnipeg newspapers, and all practically agreeing as to what took place. In these complaints they said they had been unduly deprived of their rights. They said that the meeting had not been legal. They declared that they had been dispossessed by the law, and asked for a royal commission from the father of the Indians, from the guardian of the Indians and from parliament which ought to look to their interests.

Does Mr. MacDougall give one word of all that, in the report which he hands to the minister? Not a single word. From his report you would not know that there was any dissatisfaction amongst the Indians except that they wanted a chief and an election to get a chief. If any body doubts that let him read the report. From it you would never guess that these Indians had asked Mr. MacDougall to ask their guardians to have a royal commission to look into their grievances, to make an examination and to report the facts. Yet that was the main plea they made to Mr. MacDougall. Is that the full report that Mr. MacDougall made to the minister, verbal and written? Would Mr. MacDougall counsel for hours with these Indians, have all their grievances placed before him and then come here and not report a single word of these conferences and the complaints and grievances brought and laid before him? Is Mr. MacDougall the stripe of man who would do that? I do not believe it, and therefore I do not believe this is the full knowledge and information that Mr. MacDougall imparted to the minister and his department. If it is it is not a truthful report, and I would be very sorry to imply that Mr. MacDougall would make an untruthful report.

With all these things before us will the minister allow me to ask him who can be injured and what can be injured if we appoint a good, true, honest business man to examine this whole thing and report? The minister is not immaculate any more than I am; he may be wrong in his interpretation of the law just as I may be. Working through officers, he may have been misled as any minister may be, but this is a most important matter and it involves a most important principle and touches the rights and property of the wards of the nation. Would it not be the wisest and best course to appoint a commission and let us have all the facts and the whole truth of this matter. Surely if the Indians have been defrauded we ought to see that they are righted. Surely if perjury and forgery and fraud has gone on in the guardian's offices to the detriment of his wards, we ought to know it, and the men guilty ought to be punished, and no punishment could be too great for men who would cheat Indians, the wards of the people. If the minister's statement is true that not a man in Selkirk or its vicinity, or in Winnipeg can be found to say that these transactions were wrong, what harm, what risk can come to the government from a commission? After what we have heard tonight I do not think any government should rest a moment until it has put machinery in operation to clear away from the department, and from the government, and this country, that which would be about the lowest, meanest, vilest blot upon its escutcheon, that it would cease to care for the rights of its wards, that it would allow them to be in any way infringed upon or to be in any way despoiled of that which belonged to them. Is it not worth a commission to settle that question once and for all? I wish to repeat there are many things that a man advocates, some for political purposes, some for other purposes, but it is not fair to assume that whenever a man in this House makes a plea for on interest, or a section, he is unworthy in his motives in making that plea. I believe that the motives of the hon. member for Selkirk in his plea are pure and honest. All the political capital that he could get out of it, he could have got out of it long ago, but there is this question of right, of absolute justice, and I believe that that is the impelling motive with my hon. friend. I have said before that I have looked into this question most minutely, and I cannot come to any other conclusion than that a wrong has been committed of a kind that should be the last for a government to commit, or for a parliament to allow to go without restitution. That wrong has been committed against the Indians of that reserve, but it is committed against the wards of the country generally.

I repeat that we should not involve this question with the others as to whether circumstances may not arise in which it is better that Indians should be shifted from the reserve they have and be placed somewhere else where it will be better for them and for the country at large. That question is not involved. The question that is involved in this case is simply and only, was it honestly, fairly, justly done. Has the Indian got his rights. or has he been despoiled of his rights?

Mr. J. P. MOLLOY (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, this subject has been so thoroughly discussed that there is little left to say upon it. Reference has been made to sales of school lands adjoining the St. Peter's reserve after the sale, and for the information of the House it may not be out of place to quote the prices of lands adjoining it during the last ten years. I have here a list of transactions furnished me by Mr. William Frank, a large purchaser of this St. Peter's reserve, who was charged with dishonesty in dealing with these Indians. I met him in Ottawa, and went into the matter with him and his statements were to the effect that his dealings and those of every other man whom he knew, with the St. Peter's Indians, had been fair and above board. I asked him as to the prices paid, and how they compare with other sales in the district and he furnished me with this list of transactions in which he was concerned:

January 20, 1911.

The following are a few of the land sales I have put through my office in the Selkirk district during the last eleven years.

Year 1899.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the southeast of 33 and the north ½ of the northeast of 28-13-6 east, 240 acres. Price, $175. This land is located two miles from St. Peter's Indian reserve, and is of first-class land.

March 21, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the southwest ¼ and the south ½ of the northwest ¼ of section 24-14-6 east, 240 acres. Consideration $144.85. Terms, one-third cash, the balance in one year at 6 per cent. Torrens title. This property is located 3¾ miles from St. Peter's reserve.

March 21, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the southeast of 23, and the north ½ of the northeast of 14-14-6 east, 240 acres. Consideration, $175. Terms, one-third cash, the balance in one year. 3¼ miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

March 21, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the northeast and the east ½ of the northwest ¼ of section 21-13-6 east, 240 acres. Consideration, $186, and the current year's taxes. 1¼ miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the west ½ and the southeast ¼ of section 4-13-6 east, 80 acres. Price, $60. Terms cash.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the east ½ and the northeast ¼ of 33-13-6 east, 80 acres. Consideration, $60. Terms cash. Two miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the northwest ¼ and the north ½ of the southwest ¼ of 13-14-6 east, 240 acres. Cost, $140. Terms cash. 3¾ miles from St. Peter's Indian reserve.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the southeast ¼ of the south ½ of the northeast ¼ of 21-14-6 east, 240 acres. Cost $160. Terms cash. Location, 1¼ miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the southwest ¼ and the north ½ of the southeast ¼ of 22-14-6 east, 240 acres. Cost, $160. Terms cash. Location, 1¾ miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

February 6, 1900.—Purchased from the municipality of St. Clements, the east ½ of the southwest and the north ½ of the south east ¼ of section 20-14-6 east, 160 acres. Consideration $100. Adjoining St. Peter's Indian reserve.

All the above properties were purchased in the fall of 1899, and in February and March of 1900, from the municipality of St. Clements. These lands had been bought in by the municipality some years previous for taxes and were not considered of sufficient value by the owners to redeem them for the tax sale, consequently in course of time the municipality became the owners. They offered these lands for sale in various ways, finally the late E. H. Taylor and myself made a purchase of the above lands at the prices and on the terms referred to.

In the years 1900 or 1901, the late E. H. Taylor, Mr. G. W. Walker and myself purchased from the municipality of Brokenhead about 5,500 acres, at a price somewhere between $1 and $1.05 per acre. These lands were originally in the municipality of St. Clements, but when the new municipality of Brokenhead was formed these lands were taken over by the new municipality and sold at the price above-named. These lands lie between 5 and 15 miles east of St. Peter's Indian reserve and north of the towns of Tyndall and Beausejour, north of the Canadian Pacific railway.

July 31, 1900. Purchased from Charles McKenzie, of Sarnia, Ontario, the southeast ¼ and the south ½ of the northeast ¼ of section 30-13-6 east; 240 acres. Price, $3 per acre. Terms, $75 cash, the balance in four equal annual instalments. This property adjoins the St. Peter's Indian reserve, and is a very excellent piece of land.

1900. Purchased from the late Thomas Hardy the southeast and the south ½ of the northeast of 25-13-5 east. 240 acres. Small improvements on the property. Twenty or thirty acres broken, and a small house and stable. Purchase price, $1,200, which included a team of work horses, which were afterwards sold for $400, leaving the price of the land at $800. This property adjoins the St. Peter's Indian reserve, also adjoins the farm of Sir Wm. Van Horne, and is only two miles from East Selkirk station.

June 11, 1901. Purchased from E. A. Taylor of Fort Worth, Texas, the northwest ¼ and the north ¾ of the southwest ¼ of 16-14-6 east; 240 acres. Total cost including title, $267.45. This property is within three-quarters of a mile of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

October 18, 1900. Purchased from George Knight, farmer, East Selkirk, the southwest ¼ of 7-13-6; 160 acres. Price, $480. Three and one-quarter miles from St. Peter's Indian reserve. This quarter is all excellent farming land.

July 12, 1899. Sold to the late E. H. Taylor the southeast ¼ and the south ½ of the northeast ¼ of section 1-13-6; 240 acres. Cost, $1 per acre. Location, three-quarter mile from Tyndall Station.

August 25, 1899. Sold for Senator W. E. Sanford of Hamilton, Ontario, the southeast and the outh ½ of the northeast of section 16-13-6 east; 240 acres. Price, $840. Terms, $84 cash, nine yearly payments for the balance. This property is within two and a half miles of Tyndall station, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, and about three miles from St. Peter's Indian reserve, and is one of the finest pieces of land in the Selkirk district.

October 28, 1899. Sold to Alloway & Champion, bankers, Winnipeg, the southeast of 21, and the north ½ of the northeast of 16-13-6 east. Sale price, $300. I had bought this property a few weeks before for $200, turning it over to the purchasers at a profit of $100. Location within two miles of St. Peter's Indian reserve.

The above are only a few of the many sales I have made in the last ten or twelve years. The last five or six years the market has been gradually working higher. At present the prices rule from $5 per acre upwards for all lands that are of fair quality.

The statement has been made that the Indian has been robbed of his land. Does the Indian own his land, or is the Indian the ward of the nation? Is he not being taken care of in this matter? The Indians who occupy the lands of St. Peter's reserve have been provided with a reserve which is larger in extent, and which is located in a place in which it would be more in the interests of the Indian to live. I believe as I stated before that the price paid for this land was a fair price having regard to its value at the time. Competition was not very keen because a great many people did not want the land. A great many people would not purchase any of it and there are those who are purchasing land who would not accept it as a gift because about 11,000 acres of it is nothing but low, swampy land. I mention this to bear out the statement I made last session as to the price of the land. This and other statements which have been made by me can be verified and the information upon which they are based cannot be disputed.

Amendment (Mr. Bradbury) negatived on division.

NEGRO IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to a matter respecting another race of people—I mean the negro. Representing a large number of this race of people, who are honest, law-abiding, good citizens, I was very much surprised, in common with my colleagues, who represent the adjoining county of Kent, to find an article on the front page of this morning's edition of the 'Citizen,' the leading Conservative paper of the city of Ottawa, to the following effect:

WOULD STOP NEGROES.

(Canadian Press Despatch).

Winnipeg, Man., March 21.—Officers of the Immigration Department left to-day for Emerson, on the border, to stop the entry into Canada of 165 negroes from Oklahoma, who intended to settle in Canada's Northwest. The railway company has appealed to Washington and Consul-General Jones has been instructed to go down and see that they get through.

If it is correct that the officers of this government have taken the steps to prevent the entrance into this country of these people on account of their colour, then I think it will require a very great deal of explanation from the department to justify it. Coloured people in my experience have been amongst the most loyal citizens of this country. They have been true to the British flag and I think they are worthy to be reckoned amongst the people of Canada. Surely, the large areas of this country are sufficient to entitle us to take in this class of people who have not the privileges of other classes. It has always been the boast of British institutions that unfortunate men will find a haven within our borders. Representing a large number of the coloured people, I certainly protest against any rule which would exclude them on account of their colour, and I think that before supplies are granted it is only proper that a statement should be made by the government, or by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), with regard to this important matter.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it will be necessary to have the consent of the House before the minister can speak again unless it is in answer to a question.

Mr. OLIVER. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the consent of the House to give my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) the information that he desires.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. OLIVER. I have noticed in the papers recently paragraphs of something of the nature of this one alluded to by my hon. friend from Essex. I have only to say that, in so far as these paragraphs state or have stated that the Dominion government has issued orders through its officials to prevent the entry of negroes into Canada, these paragraphs are absolutely and entirely incorrect. No such instructions have been issued, no such action is being taken. I would assume that the paragraphs are being circulated unjustifiably for illegitimate purposes. It may be, however, that they are being circulated on account of a misunderstanding or misapprehension of the policy of the department which I may be permitted to explain in a very few words. The immigration policy of Canada to-day is restricted, exclusive, and selective as compared with the former policy of indiscriminate immigration. We have exclusion officers stationed along the boundary between Canada and the United States and at our ocean ports, and under the laws and the regulations authorized by them, the exclusion officers take measures to prevent the entry of all persons who may be considered undesirable under our law, without any distinction of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude. I wish to have the matter thoroughly understood—in the administration of the exclusion provisions of the law there is taken into account the question of whether the proposed immigrant is ordinarily considered desirable or ordinarily considered undesirable. The immigrant ordinarily considered desirable is the man who wishes to go on the land, and if he does not want to go on the land the presumption towards him is not so favourable.

Mr. FOSTER. The presumption does not go so far as to say he is undesirable.

Mr. OLIVER. No, but there are many cases where the admission or exclusion of an immigrant depends on a strict or a lax interpretation of the law, so that if the immigrant is of what we would call the desirable class it may be that the restrictive desirable class then they are administered laxly, and if he is of the presumably less desirable class then they are adminstered more restrictedly. Beyond that there are no instructions to the immigration officers, but they are expected to act according to the instructions they have.

Mr. FOSTER. I know less now of the real circumstances of the case than I did before my anxious friend made his impassioned appeal before we voted any further supplies. I wonder if the hon. gentleman is thoroughly enlightened now after the minister's statement; for my part I cannot tell for the life of me whether these coloured people are to be allowed to come in or not. The only idea I have from the statement of the minister is, that he is above the law in that he winks at it if a man is going on a farm, but he stares at it in a very different way if the man is not going on the farm. If we have a law, and regulations framed under it, is the minister administering the law and regulations or is he not, and if he is will these coloured people be allowed to come in.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Their colour won't keep them out.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not been able to understand whether it will or not.

Mr. OLIVER. I was trying to explain what the Minister of Public Works said—these people will not be kept out because of their colour and neither will they be admitted because of their colour if they are otherwise undesirable.

Mr. FOSTER. What makes them undesirable?

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions are described in the statute and regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. That relieves me to some extent because the minister said at first that he would go outside the law if he thought it best not to let a man in, but he would keep a good way inside the law if he thought the man should come in. Now he says he administers the law and the regulations according to their text.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial railway, airbrake, improved triple valve, $7,150.

Mr. RHODES. Is this for passenger equipment?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). For freight as well. These cost about $5.50 each and this vote will do about 1,300 cars next year.

Mr. BLAIN. How many years to complete?

Mr. GRAHAM. Eight or nine.

Mr. RHODES. What are the other large roads doing with respect to these valves?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are all adopting them.

Strengthening bridges, $29,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. What bridges will be strengthened?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to strengthen the spans on a number of bridges. We took $61,000 last year and $20,000 of this is a revote.

Mr. RHODES. Is the work done by contract or day labour?

Mr. GRAHAM. We buy all the material by tender and contract, and then we do the work with our own staff.

Mr. BLAIN. How many years has this strengthening of bridges been going on, and is there likely to be any end to it?

Mr. GRAHAM. It will go on as long as we increase the weight of the rolling stock. The bridges were made to carry a certain weight, and as the weight of the rolling stock is increased, they have to be made stronger. It is possible that when we get through with this work we may have to make the bridges still stronger.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that the usual course?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. I was speaking to Mr. McNicoll only an hour ago, and he told me that his company the Canadian Pacific railway was strengthening a great number of bridges this year.

Mr. BLAIN. What is done with the old bridges?

Mr. GRAHAM. The wooden ones are of no use. The steel ones are not taken out, but are strengthened.

Mr. BLAIN. A few years ago, when Mr. Blair was Minister of Railways, there was some discussion as to what was done with the old steel bridges, and he said they were taken away and placed at other parts of the railway, perhaps on the branches where the rolling stock was not so heavy.

Mr. GRAHAM. Both systems are adopted. Where a bridge is so light that it cannot be strengthened, it is taken out. If we can use it on another part of the line, or on a branch, we do so. If we cannot use it, we scrap it.

To increase accommodation at Campbellton, $150,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Campbellton is where we had the very destructive fire. Up to the end of the present year we shall have spent there a little over $100,000. We are making a somewhat new departure here. The cost of the old station, with the freight and freight sheds which were burned, was about $76,000, and this loss is being paid out of the revenue of the year. So that the capital vote will only be for the increased accommodation above that. The new works will cost $327,000 all told. We are having a large modern yard, a new station, and a large engine house.

Mr. RHODES. If the value of the property which was destroyed is charged to income, then it will not appear as an asset.

Mr. GRAHAM. The cost of the new works charged to capital will be $327,000 less $76,000.

Mr. RHODES. That is, you have practically written off the value of the property destroyed?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does the minister propose to follow the same rule with regard to the loss by fire of the Sydney station?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, that will be paid out of revenue.

Chatham, diversion of line and branch to wharf, $300,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This branch is about 8¼ miles long, and it is to get rid of a grade down to the waterfront. The work was begun about two years ago. The contract was let to Morrison and Clark.

Mr. STANFIELD. What was the amount of the tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. $245,853.58. The total cost is estimated at $512,603.58, which includes the right of way, ties, ballasting, grades, and so on.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does that include the station?

Mr. GRAHAM. That appropriates $30,000 for the station building.

Air brakes to freight cars, $12,160.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is just following out what is necessary to bring the equipment of our cars up to the standard.

Mr. RHODES. Are there still cars on the Intercolonial railway not equipped with air-brakes?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it seems that there are quite a number.

Mr. RHODES. Will this supply all the rolling stock with air-brakes?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed that this will practically complete that work.

To exchange drawbars of freight cars, $2,000.

Mr. RHODES. Will this complete the equipment of your cars with modern drawbars?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. Last year we had a vote of $10,000 for the purpose, and we are now asking for only $2,000 of that amount. This will equip about 40 cars. We find it difficult to get the cars into the shop for the purpose.

Mr. RHODES. I would like to ask the minister if he can use that link and pin coupling on the main line of the Intercolonial railway? Where are those cars?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are in use mostly on the branch lines where we have lighter rolling stock. We cannot mix the cars and we have to use those practically by themselves, but there is quite a number still in use.

Mr. RHODES. Is there not some statute which requires that the cars shall be equipped with automatic couplers within a certain period?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Board of Railway Commissioners ordered that on the company lines, and we are trying to follow out that order, and are equipping our cars as rapidly as possible.

Mr. RHODES. Are you equipping yours as rapidly as the company lines do?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so.

Fredericton, to increase accommodation at, $25,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for a new station at the city of Fredericton. Practically all we have there now is a frame station of a very poor standard. This work would have been undertaken before but we had some discussion with the Canadian Pacific railway about a joint terminal. We could not, however, come to any agreement and propose to build a new station. $25,000 is the amount you are now asked to vote, but it is estimated that the cost will be about $42,000 with the adjoining freight sheds.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister aim at having stations uniform in design all along the line.

Mr. GRAHAM. I regret to say that this plan has not been adopted on the government railway. My own idea, if I were starting a new railway, would be to have the stations of a uniform style so that one could see at once that they belonged to the Intercolonial railway. The idea which has hitherto prevailed seems to have been to have the stations conform with the other buildings in the cities themselves.

Mr. LENNOX. From this time forward, the minister should adopt a uniform style of building whether large or small. If he began now, no doubt with the assistance of fires, it will not be very long before he would have uniformity throughout the line. On the Grand Trunk railway and other lines, they are building all their new stations on the same plan.

Mr. RHODES. Could the hon. gentleman give the cost of the stations at Pictou and Amherst?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not got the figures here.

Mr. RHODES. The reason I ask is this. I should like to impress on the hon. minister the necessity of having a permanent station in Fredericton which would be a credit to the capital of the province, and the Intercolonial railway as well. If I were disposed to criticise, I would be inclined to say that the amount we are asked to vote is perhaps not quite sufficient.

Mr. GRAHAM. The business at Fredericton of course is not likely to equal that at Pictou and Amherst, and the size of a station must be regulated by the amount of business it is expected to accommodate. I shall endeavour to have a building worthy of the capital of the province.

General protection of highways, $20,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are endeavouring to set an example in protecting the highways. We have put in gongs and other appliances at road crossings, subways and aqueducts, and are spending more money along that line every year. Last year we spent $10,000, and this year we propose to spend $20,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is the hon. minister picking out the worst crossings to protect?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are trying to.

Mr. LENNOX. I agree that there ought to be a great deal of generosity in the matter of protecting highway crossings, but I think that the suggestion just made should be acted upon. I think that the government should get a report as to the crossings that are most dangerous and most in need of protection, and not deal with them in a haphazard fashion. The government should employ two or three men if necessary to go over the whole road and report as to the crossings. The minister has said that in some cases he is putting in gongs, &c. That is a device probably better than nothing; but almost worse than anything else. He should aim at separating the railway crossings in some way from the highway in all cases possible at any reasonable expenditure. He knows that in many cases where you have to cross on the level, by the deviation of the highway a very little distance you can get a subway at very moderate expense. It is simply a matter of carrying sufficient strength across—certain beams across and perhaps building two cement piers or retaining walls, and does not involve any great expense. We should aim to have our government railway an example to other railways, until in Canada we shall have to some extent the same system as is followed in Great Britain of endeavouring to separate the highway from the railway. Twenty thousand dollars seems to me to be a very small vote for this purpose. Of course if the minister has no definite plan of judicious expenditure in the next year, there is no object in taking a larger vote. But, for myself, I would be disposed to be very generous in this matter.

Mr. GAUVREAU. May I ask the minister if this amendment is intended to include an expenditure on the subway of Rivière du Loup station which is so much needed?

Mr. GRAHAM. I may say to my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), that I think his amendment is small. We have our maintenance of way engineer, Mr. Burpee, to make reports, and those works that he recommends we are taking up first. Personally, I would feel like spending twice this amount. Possibly, in the supplementary estimates, I may ask for more money. To my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) I may say that we are having a report made on the Rivière du Loup and Chaudière and possibly we expect to get some money this year for construction. I am waiting for that report every day.

Mr. LENNOX. Without instancing the case which has just been referred to, I may say that the minister will see what I had in mind. He will be harassed by members representing the different ridings, each urging the construction of crossings within his own territory. But if the minister orders first a comprehensive investigation, he will be relieved of that difficulty.

Mr. GRAHAM. The condition at Rivière du Loup and Chaudière is particularly dangerous. People going from the station have to cross the tracks. I have visited it and came to the conclusion that we ought to have a subway for the protection of the public.

Mr. RHODES. Last year, the department took up the case of the Victoria street crossing in the town of Amherst. Is that covered by this vote?

Mr. GRAHAM. By a similar vote last year?

Mr. RHODES. Has the minister any data as to that?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no data here, but I can get it.

Halifax, to increase accommodation at, $82,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. The big item in this is for additional siding accommodation and remodelling the yards. The appropriation on this account last year was $52,650. There has been a standing demand at Halifax for increased dock accommodation, and I desire to say a few words on the subject now, because the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked about it several days ago. Some years ago, the government purchased the old Cunard property. It was considered cheap then, and is considered still more so to-day. In view of the constant demand, the chief engineer and the members of the board visited Halifax. It appears that larger ships are being run by the Canadian Pacific railway and the dock accommodation is altogether inadequate for their accommodation. In order that we might get an idea of some proper system, the board asked Mr. John Kennedy, of Montreal, an eminent harbour engineer, to visit Halifax. Mr. Kennedy did so, and has prepared a scheme; and I think it is no breach of confidence to say that I expect to ask the House to vote a certain sum of money to begin that scheme. The intention is to build one large dock and to enlarge another. This will afford early accommodation for the larger ships that are being built, and, year by year, it will develop into a larger scheme, including several docks. These changes are absolutely necessary, because not only the Canadian Pacific railway gets its traffic from these steamship lines, but the Intercolonial as well.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister might tell us how the amount voted last session was spent, and also what this vote is to cover.

Mr. GRAHAM. The amount voted last session, $52,650, was really spent remodelling Richmond yard, the outlying freight yards in connection with the city of Halifax. And the present vote is just to continue the work. The items of the proposed expenditure are as follows: Drop pit, $1,000; small tools, $1,000; remodelling yard and additional siding accommodation, $75,000; miscellaneous $5,500; total $82,475, and we are asking $82,500. I think it may as well be understood that, as years go by, if Canada is to develop these great ports on the east, larger sums will have to be spent every year in Halifax until we get yards sufficiently large to accommodate the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Pacific and possibly the Canadian Northern. These are not local works. The Intercolonial railway may be doing them, but they are not properly chargeable to that road, for they are great national works for the accommodation of the exports and imports of the country.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister will understand that I am not objecting to the expenditure, but I felt that as the items go through, it is better that we should understand what is to be done with the money.

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly. I feel that I am being helped by this.

Mr. CROSBY. I am glad to hear the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) say that as years go by Halifax will get something,—promise, if nothing else. The first time I had the honour of seeing and hearing the Minister of Railways, I thought I had met one of the finest men of this government.

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope the hon. gentleman has not changed his mind.

Mr. CROSBY. If not, it is not because the Minister of Railways has not given me sufficient reason to change my mind. And I think that many people in Halifax feel as I do. We in Halifax have been asking for accommodation for a great many years. One of the first acts of the minister after taking office was to visit Halifax. If the money spent on visits to Halifax, for I do not know of an engineer in Canada who has not been sent to Halifax to report, although there has not been very much spent in Halifax—

Mr. GRAHAM. The government have spent $4,431,947 in Halifax in connection with the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. CROSBY. On what?

Mr. GRAHAM. On terminals in Halifax. It has been going on for years. My visit to Halifax was to look over the work there in progress. I have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars there since I became minister.

Mr. CROSBY. It is easy for the minister to make statements of that kind. You have undertaken after some 60 years to make a new roundhouse, and to build up a concrete wall in order to prevent buildings and other things from tumbling on to the railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sorry Halifax is in that shape.

Mr. CROSBY. Yes, it is in bad shape. My hon. friend has not done much to put it in better shape. He has paid many visits, I have often enjoyed hearing his pleasant stories and seeing his pleasant countenance, and the new deputy is also very genial, a good second to the minister. After the deputy minister's visit some of the board of trade said among themselves. 'Well Graham was kind of slick, but now we are going to get a lot from Campbell; he is all right.' Yet the same condition prevails in Halifax to-day. Mr. Kennedy of Montreal was sent there to tell us how the docks could be constructed. We have plenty of men in Halifax who could tell that, we have been passing resolutions for years.

Mr. GRAHAM. You cannot build a dock on a resolution.

Mr. CROSBY. But my hon. friend thinks he can build one on good stories and talk. He toldl us he had bought the Cunard property to give better freight accommodation for Halifax, although he told me in the House that he only bought it because it was a bargain. He did not spend a dollar on it, but retained those who had the property as lessees from 1906 to the present time. The only thing he has done is to cheat the city of Halifax out of $100,000 taxes because we could not tax the government property. God knows we have enough down there that they do not pay taxes on. Halifax is one of the great Atlantic ports of Canada. Of course if Canada goes into reciprocity she will not need an Atlantic port, but I wonder what Canada would have done if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had entered the United States and not become part of the Dominion. You would be very glad indeed to vote a great deal of money to get these provinces in order to have outlets on the Atlantic. We hear a great deal of the Grand Trunk Pacific. We hear of their getting terminals in Portland and Boston, and building a great new depot in Providence, but we never hear of their acquiring property in St. John or Halifax. I am as anxious to see St. John get trade as Halifax, there is plenty of trade for all these ports if we take care of that trade. If the Intercolonial railway is to handle the traffic from Moncton to St. John and Halifax, it should be double-tracked on these sections, and there is much to be done to prepare it to handle that traffic. If this government had done what they should have done between 1904 and 1908 I would not be here. I did not want to come up here but the people in Halifax thought that although they had been sending up two strong supporters of the government the ministers had put them aside, and at last the people of Halifax put those representatives aside. I propose either to have something done or to be able to tell the people the reason why. Every year we are told something must be done in Halifax. We cannot go on from year to year, it must be done now. We had the Canadian Northern steamers coming to Halifax this winter without any dock accommodation at all. I think the minister has a desire to do something for Halifax, but when he gets away he forgets all about it. I think the railway would be better off if we had some man closer down there, even the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). We might get him past St. John sometimes. Of course, it is very difficult to get him to undertake any public works beyond St. John, but we might get him past St. John if he had charge of the railway. I really feel that the Minister of Railways does not give enough attention to the eastern part of the railway. Sometimes we hear men from Ontario saying that the Intercolonial is a millstone around the neck of Canada, and that it costs a great deal of money. I have heard some hon. gentleman sitting on the other side of the House say that they did not want to have anything to do with the province of Ontario. I never shared that feeling myself. We have a great deal in common with our friends of Ontario and the west. This road is a great advantage to Ontario as it is a great advantage to us, but we cannot get this advantage unless we have the necessary accommodation. The only terminal port of the Intercolonial railway is Halifax, and I say that without intending to cast any reflection upon St. John at all because when they go to St. John they have a competitor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend might elaborate that idea a little.

Mr. CROSBY. It would be a good thing if my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would elaborate his ideas a little, come down to Nova Scotia a little oftener than he does, and not hang around St. John and Courtenay bay so much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some hon. members think that we go too much to Nova Scotia.

Mr. CROSBY. When an Intercolonial railway train goes to St. John it hands its freight over to a boat that is usually controlled by the Canadian Pacific railway. That boat goes across to the old country, and comes back to St. John, but it does not hand its freight over to the Intercolonial railway; it hands it over to the Canadian Pacific railway. If the Intercolonial brings a load of freight to Halifax it goes on a boat not controlled by the Canadian Pacific railway and that boat brings a cargo back to Halifax and hands it over to the Intercolonial, because there is no other railway to take it. Therefore, the government should do something to provide better accommodation at Halifax. I am very proud to know that St. John has the Canadian Pacific railway. It is a great advantage to the port of St. John. Although we in Nova Scotia assisted largely in constructing and making the Canadian Pacific railway a success we have never benefited one iota from that road, while St. John has. The time has come when we need terminal facilities, and when we need to have the Intercolonial railway double tracked. I am not talking about the conditions that exist between Quebec and Moncton, I am accepting the conditions as they are, but the time has come when the railway should be double tracked from Moncton to Halifax and from Moncton to St. John. If it is to be done by the time the transcontinental railway is constructed to Moncton it should be commenced at once. There is no time to lose. The minister knows that we have not sufficient accommodation in Halifax for even a single road, but with the construction of a double tracked road it will be necessary to provide additional facilities, and put our road in such a shape as to be a credit to the Dominion. We have a port there which is a credit to the Dominion and we should be proud of it. Western people should be able to send their products down to our eastern ports, if not all the year around, at least during the winter season. The minister may think that I am taking up a good deal of time, but it is better for me to say what I have to say because I am compelled to say this in order that I may be able to say something when I go to Halifax. The minister knows that he can say something when he goes to Halifax, but the difference between him and me is that I have to live there all the time. He can get away and live somewhere else, but I have to do something as well as say something. I am sure the minister will support me in my effort to provide terminal facilities, and not only to provide terminal facilities, but to arrange at an early date for the double tracking of the Intercolonial railway from Moncton to Halifax. We have a railway running into Dartmouth. The local government have been trying to build a road from Dartmouth running eastward through Halifax and Guysborough counties and stopping perhaps nowhere, but they have not been able to get capital to build that road, and I do not think it would be possible for them to get the capital. They have been trying to build that road for I cannot say how far back, perhaps from a time before I went to Halifax at all. It strikes me that the government could make the Intercolonial railway a paying road and afford more accommodation to the people by having a terminal at Dartmouth. All they have to do is to start from Dartmouth with that road, construct it down through the eastern part of Halifax county, through Guysborough county, connecting with the Intercolonial railway at Canso, crossing on the Intercolonial railway ferry from Canso to Point Tupper, going down to Richmond county, into Cape Breton county, to Louisburg, connecting the Louisburg railway, coming back to Sydney and connecting with the Intercolonial railway again at Sydney thus making a loop of the province of Nova Scotia. If another company should build that road there is no doubt that the Intercolonial railway would have to take it over some day, and if that be so is it not better for the Intercolonial railway to construct it now and give the people the accommodation that they have been seeking for a long time? I put that propositon to the minister two or three months ago. I have not heard from him, but I did have an inkling that there was a possibility of the government taking it up. The Intercolonial railway skirts only one side of Nova Scotia and a great many of the people of that province are without railway accommodation. We have the Halifax and Southwestern railroad in eastern Nova Scotia, and while we cannot say that we are particularly proud of it yet it is better than nothing. I impress on the Minister of Railways that he should do something for Halifax and for Nova Scotia generally. I am not unmindful of the advantage to the city of St. John from the double tracking of the Intercolonial railway from Moncton to St. John, and also to Halifax. Although we treated the minister pretty well in 1908 when he came down there, I have no objection to his being treated better when the next election comes round if he gives us what we are entitled to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister no reply to make to the member for Halifax who spoke with such earnestness and good faith?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby), is pretty well able to take care of himself in any kind of company. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) evidently was not here when we discussed this vote at the beginning, and it is only part of the total estimated expenditure of $233,000 when we got through. All that the hon. gentleman from Halifax has said will receive the serious consideration of the government and it must be understood that the three transcontinental lines, the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern railway must get to Halifax as well as to St. John.

Mr. RHODES. What does the government propose to do with respect to the double tracking of the Intercolonial railway from Moncton to Halifax? We may spend millions upon millions upon terminals at Halifax but the money will be practically wasted unless we have a railway over which to carry the traffic. It is well known that on the present Intercolonial railway single track, not only do the gradients not conform to the standard laid down by the Grand Trunk Pacific but they are unusually heavy especially through the Westchester mountains. It is economically impossible to carry traffic at the present time over the Intercolonial railway to Halifax on a paying basis, and in any case a single line will not take care of the traffic. If it is intended sooner or later to double track the line a beginning should be made very soon. I am aware that the Intercolonial railway is double tracked from Moncton to Painsec but that is only a tithe of the way, and it is the portion of the road where construction is of the easiest character. The Minister of Railways endeavours to lead the House and the country to the belief that politics is largely eliminated from the Intercolonial railway, and while I am willing to believe that he is sincere in his attempt to exclude politics, yet, in the county of Cumberland just before the election of 1908, in the fall of the year, when the money was in a large degree wasted, thousands of dollars were spent on a survey for the proposed double tracking of the Intercolonial railway. The men in the field could not do competent work and they were hurried through the survey in order to cover the whole county. I am not a competent engineer, but my information is that it was not a bona fide survey. I should like to have a statement from the minister as to his intention with respect to the double tracking of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a very large project. There is no doubt in the world but that a great deal of the freight of the Canadian Pacific railway is taken to St. John and whether that will continue in the future or not I cannot say. The Grand Trunk Pacific will not be completed for two or three years and the Intercolonial railway at present can handle all the freight that the Grand Trunk Pacific can give it which will only be local.

Mr. RHODES. You cannot handle it on a paying basis.

Mr. GRAHAM. What local traffic there is can be handled. So far as the Grand Trunk traffic is concerned the Intercolonial railway has it for 99 years under contract. No person with a sense of responsibility would undertake to say offhand what it is proposed to do with respect to the double tracking of the Intercolonial railway. If the government is going to undertake to put the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern railway into Halifax and St. John, then the government will have to double track the Intercolonial railway, but that is a matter for consideration and discussion with these companies, as to whether an arrangement can be arrived at by which the government may do that, or whether the railways will do it for themselves. We have been giving that very point a good deal of consideration.

Mr. RHODES. I appreciate that the project is a big one but no matter how big it is there must be a beginning. I ask the minister what consideration has been given to the results of the survey made in 1908 just before the general election; was that survey made with a view to some systematic beginning towards this double tracking?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some railways have surveys made fifteen years before they build the line. The question of the better course to take in Nova Scotia is a difficult question to work out. There is a divergence of opinion among railway men as to what we ought to do.

Mr. RHODES. I hope, for the good name of the Minister of Railways, that the railway will not be run on political lines, and that when he decides which line to take, he will not do it in the month preceding the time of the next general election. A beginning has been made in double-tracking the Intercolonial railway to Painsec Junction, and that must be in view of some larger scheme.

Mr. CROSBY. We have a double track to Painsec Junction and also from Halifax to Windsor Junction.

Mr. GRAHAM. That accommodates the Dominion Atlantic.

Mr. CROSBY. It does, but has the government not taken into consideration the question of double tracking the Intercolonial railway from Halifax to Moncton? In the election of 1904 it was asserted that the work would be done inside of two years, and I do not think that candidates supporting the government would make that statement if they had not some authority to make it. I would like to know whether the government has come to that conclusion or not?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have said that we have that whole question under consideration, and it will take a good deal of consideration before we arrive at a decision.

Mr. CROSBY. Then I am to understand that the government has not arrived at a conclusion that they will double track the line from Halifax to Moncton?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have given my hon. friend the only answer that I can give.

Moncton—Locomotive and car shops with equipment and new freight yard and cut-off line, $200,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is the minister aware that the roof of these shops is in bad condition?

Mr. GRAHAM. The roof has been somewhat faulty, but repairs have been made to it.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is it now satisfactory to the workmen?

Mr. GRAHAM. My information is that it is satisfactory to the engineer?

Mr. STANFIELD. The information I have is that there are complaints from the workmen of leakages in the roof which are so bad that they have to put tarpaulins over some of the machines.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was some complaint of the ventilation of the buildings, but I think some improvement has been made in that.

Passenger cars, to equip with fire extinguishers and tool boxes, $6,400.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are equipping all our cars with these.

Mr. RHODES. Is this called for by the Railway Commission?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is called for by the orders of the Railway Commission to the railway companies, and we are trying to comply with them.

Rolling stock, $133,200.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for new rolling stock, including four switching engines, two baggage cars and fifteen tank cars.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any public competition for these?

Mr. GRAHAM. We invite tenders from the different car builders in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. Do you always accept the lowest?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, for this reason. Sometimes we get a low tender from one company which cannot supply the cars in time, and we usually divide up the work. Sometimes we get the cars constructed at the lowest price, and sometimes we get a number at the lowest price and a number at the next lowest price.

Mr. RHODES. What is the practice with respect to writing off each year for wear and tear of rolling stock, and also as to replacements of rolling stock which has previously been charged to capital stock?

Mr. GRAHAM. We lay aside every month $25,000 for renewal of equipment, so that we write off $300,000 a year on account of rolling stock. This year I am going to ask the House to let me have $100,000 more out of revenue, as we need rolling stock very badly. I am being urged by the board to ask for $200,00. It may be done.

Mr. RHODES. The answer of the minister would indicate that the government have no settled policy. At present he asks $130,000 a year. Later on he proposes to ask an additional $100,000, and some of the members of the Intercolonial Railway Board want him to take an extra $200,000 or $500,000 in all. What percentage does he write off this rolling stock each year for depreciation? Are cars which are otherwise good, but wrecked by railway accidents replaced from income account?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. What percentage do you write off for depreciation?

Mr. STANFIELD.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no percentage written off. Under the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, you have to keep the standard of your cars up. You start the year with a certain number of cars carrying so many tons, and at the end of the year you must have that same number carrying that same tonnage, and you must keep them up out of revenue. If the system we adopted two years ago had been adopted many years ago, there would have been no difficulty, but we are practically following the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not write off any percentage, but keep up the rolling stock out of revenue, so that it is always in good condition.

Mr. RHODES. The only way you can do that would be by keeping a record of the rolling stock and its condition.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is what we do.

Mr. RHODES. What is the amount expended on rolling stock from year to year?

Mr. GRAHAM. The average replacement of the present rolling stock will run about $300,000 per year, perhaps a little more. This year the road is in thoroughly good condition, and I want to make up for loss of time, and go further than the Interstate Commerce Commission would allow me to go, by providing rolling stock out of revenue.

Steamer 'Scotia,' new machinery for, $1,100.

Mr. LENNOX. How is this chargeable to capital account?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for a repair shop for our machinery to be put on the boat. It is all new. We never had it before. Instead of sending out pieces of machinery for repairs, we will make the repairs right on the boat.

Surveys and inspection, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not at present any vote to pay for a survey when necessary. If I want to find what a thing is going to cost, I have no contingent fund or anything of that kind out of which to take the money.

Mr. RHODES. Is this properly chargeable to capital?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. You have nothing to show for it.

Mr. GRAHAM. It will be for capital work. Suppose I wanted to double the track and find out what it will cost, I would take the money out of this vote.

Mr. RHODES. You might survey different routes and only chose one.

Mr. GRAHAM. On the Hudson Bay route, we have surveyed half a dozen routes, and we charged the cost to capital.

Mr. RHODES. But that is a new line.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am often asked to find out what a thing is going to cost, and have no contingent fund or anything out of which I can take the money, and have had to ask for it in the supplementaries. But I am now taking a more businesslike way.

Mr. JAMESON. There is a subject I would like to discuss, and which comes properly under this vote, but as the hour is late I would ask permission to bring it up at another stage.

Mr. GRAHAM. Any time my hon. friend pleases.

Sydney Mines, diversion, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We undertook this a year or so ago, but it was very strongly petitioned for as long ago as 1893. I find a very strong recommendation in its favour from the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). This will cost $539,000 when completed, but will give us a road straight to Sydney mines.

To increase accommodation and facilities along the line, $40,500.

Mr. GRAHAM. This includes a number of small improvements which are not put in as separate items. The vote taken last year under this head was $38,700.

Mr. STANFIELD. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) is not present. Will the hon. minister reserve to him the same liberty as has been spoken of?

Mr. GRAHAM. They can discuss anything they like on operation expenses.

Truro, to increase accommodation at, $57,200.

Mr. RHODES. The department did some work on a highway in the town of Amherst called Station street and really government property. I believe it was done under the supervision of the deputy minister, at all events, the ground was inspected by him before the work was got done. In Ontario that gentleman was known as 'Good Roads Campbell.' If he is to be judged by the roadway prepared in the town of Amherst under his supervision, he is liable to lose his reputation, for the work is a discredit to the department, and the money has been practically wasted. The gravel was dumped in odd quantities upon a flat surface—no system of drainage, no grading, no rolling. The road is in quite as bad a condition as it was before the work was performed. This is a serious inconvenience to all those who use the freight shed there. The revenue of the freight yards at Amherst, as the minister knows, is one of the largest on the Intercolonial, and every pound of freight has to be hauled over this terrible piece of road. I urge, in the interest not only of the merchants and citizens generally of Amherst, but of the Intercolonial itself that some systematic attempt be made to construct a decent road.

Mr. STANFIELD. What is this vote to be spent for?

Mr. GRAHAM. The amount required will be much larger than this. It will include a brick station with stone trimmings.

Mr. STANFIELD. What will it cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. Ultimately, $100,000. There will also be expenditure in changing tracks, new freight shed, removing of old freight shed, purchase of land, new electric light plant, water-supply—total estimated cost $250,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. Are the plans being prepared, and does the minister expect that work on the station will be begun this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. The plans are not prepared, but as soon as we get the money we will prepare the plans and will start work immediately.

Mr. STANFIELD. I wish to thank the minister for listening to my oft-repeated prayers both in and out of the House. I will not detain the House by telling how badly this station is needed, but, while I am on this subject, I would like to suggest that before the plans are completed the engineer should be sent down to look over the ground. The land owned by the government around the station is a disgrace to the Intercolonial and to the town. In completing the work, this low grade should be paved for the traffic over it is so heavy that ordinary gravel will not stand it.

Mr. GRAHAM. That will have to be looked into.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.23 a.m.
